CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

1. Definitions and Distinctions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1

[§ 1] Definitions and Distinctions.

A tort is "any wrong, not consisting in mere breach of contract, for which the law undertakes to give to the injured party some appropriate remedy against the wrongdoer." (Denning v. State (1899) 123 C. 316, 323, 55 P. 1000.) "Every person is bound, without contract, to abstain from injuring the person or property of another, or infringing upon any of his or her rights." (C.C. 1708.) "Everyone is responsible, not only for the result of his wilful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his property or person, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself." (C.C. 1714(a).) (See 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §1 et seq.; on distinction between tort and crime, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §4.)

Generalizations like the foregoing are obviously inadequate and of little practical value. Much of tort law "is an attempt to define what counts as a legal wrong in particular settings." (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §1.) In the Restatement, tort liability is analyzed according to the "interest" involved. Certain interests arising from human relations are given legal protection: "[E]very person has, subject to the qualifications and restrictions provided by law, the right of protection from bodily restraint or harm, from personal insult, from defamation, and from injury to his personal relations." (Rest.2d, Torts §1; cf. C.C. 43 [similar statement of "general personal rights"].) "Injury" is defined as the invasion of the legally protected interest; it differs from "harm," or tangible and material detriment, in that there may be injury, as by trespass on land, without any tangible harm. (Rest.2d, Torts §7.) The "actor" whose tort liability is in question is one who acts or fails to act, and whose conduct is in question, and is usually the defendant, but sometimes the plaintiff (as where the question is contributory negligence). (Rest.2d, Torts §3.)

The general language of C.C. 1714(a) has been characterized as a basic principle, and is invoked in support of many innovative decisions expanding tort liability. (See Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 111, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086; cf. Wilson v. Blue Cross of Southern Calif. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 660, 666, 271 C.R. 876 [no exception should be made to fundamental principle enunciated in that provision in absence of other statute or unless clearly supported by public policy].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

- A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.
- 2. Act as Tort and Breach of Contract.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 2

[§ 2] Act as Tort and Breach of Contract.

The distinction between tort and contract "is well grounded in common law, and divergent objectives underlie the remedies created in the two areas. Whereas contract actions are created to enforce the intentions of the parties to the agreement, tort law is primarily designed to vindicate 'social policy'." (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 C.3d 654, 683, 254 C.R. 211, 765 P.2d 373, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §271; Hunter v. Up-Right (1993) 6 C.4th 1174, 1180, 26 C.R.2d 8, 864 P.2d 88, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §264.) However, the same act may be both a breach of contract and a tort. Even where there is a contractual relationship between parties, a cause of action in tort may sometimes arise out of the negligent manner in which the contractual duty is performed, a failure to perform the duty, or an intentional act causing injury to an interest created by the contract. (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 511, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, infra, §739.) The importance of the distinction is that, although forms of action are abolished so far as pleading is concerned, a number of substantive and procedural issues turn on the nature of the action, e.g., statute of limitations, venue, attachment, damages, and bankruptcy. (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., supra; see Freeman & Mills v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C.4th 85, 94, 44 C.R.2d 420, 900 P.2d 669, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §166 [no tort action for bad faith denial of contract]; O'Neil v. Spillane (1975) 45 C.A.3d 147, 158, 119 C.R. 245, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §317, citing the text [undue influence that also amounted to constructive fraud]; Frazier v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1985) 169 C.A.3d 90, 100, 214 C.R. 883 [characterizing nature of action as tort in certificate of assignment accompanying complaint did not make irrevocable election to sue on tort rather than contract theory]; Mardula v. Rancho Dominguez Bank (1996) 43 C.A.4th 790, 798, 51 C.R.2d 63 [following Freeman; dismissing claim for tortious denial of contract]; 33 San Diego L. Rev. 137 [doctrinal classification; liability of contracting party to third person for negligent performance as distinct field of law]; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §19 et seq.; on recovery in tort for insurer's breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing, see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §241.)

The classification of contract and tort actions and the election to sue in tort, contract, or quasi-contract are fully discussed in California Procedure. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §134 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

3. Restatement of Torts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 3

[§ 3] Restatement of Torts.

(1) First and Second Restatements. The first Torts Restatement was published from 1934 to 1939 in 4 volumes. The Torts Restatement 2d is also in 4 volumes. Volumes 1 and 2 were published in 1965, Volume 3 in 1977, and Volume 4 in 1979. (See 65 A.B.A.J. 366; 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 35.)

The Torts Restatement 2d contains 14 divisions with numbered chapters, some further subdivided into topics. The Restatement rules are set forth in sections, which may be followed by comments, reporters notes, or both. The divisions are as follows:

Division One. Intentional Harms to Persons, Land and Chattels (§1 et seq.).

Division Two. Negligence (§281 et seq.).

Division Three. Strict Liability (§504 et seq.).

Division Four. Misrepresentation (§525 et seq.).

Division Five. Defamation (§558 et seq.).

Division Six. Injurious Falsehood (§623A et seq.).

Division Six-A. Privacy (§652A et seq.).

Division Seven. Unjustifiable Litigation (§653 et seq.).

Division Eight. Interference in Domestic Relations (§683 et seq.).

Division Nine. Interference With Advantageous Economic Relations (§762 et seq.).

Division Ten. Invasions of Interests in Land Other Than by Trespass (§817 et seq.).

Division Eleven. Miscellaneous Rules (§865 et seq.).

Division Twelve. Defenses Applicable to All Tort Claims (§887 et seq.).

Division Thirteen. Remedies (§901 et seq.).

(2) Third Restatement. In 1991, the American Law Institute determined that a Third Restatement of Torts was needed. It was decided to concentrate initially on the specific areas of tort law most immediately in need of study and to proceed by way of specific integrated projects. The new elements are in generally the same format as the earlier Restatements.

(a) The Institute approved Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability in 1997, and published the official text in 1998 in a single volume. This element, which is treated in the discussion of products liability (infra, §1428 et seq.), includes these chapters:

Chapter 1. Liability of Commercial Product Sellers Based on Products Defects at Time of Sale (§1 et seq.). Topic 1 of the chapter contains the liability rules applicable to products generally. Topic 2 sets forth the liability rules applicable to special products or product markets (component parts, drugs, food products, and used products).

Chapter 2. Liability of Commercial Product Sellers Not Based on Products Defects at Time of Sale (§9 et seq.).

Chapter 3. Liability of Sellers and Apparent Manufacturers (§12 et seq.).

Chapter 4. Provisions of General Applicability (§15 et seq.). Topic 1 concerns causation, Topic 2 sets forth affirmative defenses, and Topic 3 contains definitions.

(b) The Institute approved Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability in 1999, and published the official text in 2000 in a single volume. It includes these topics:

Topic 1. Basic Rules of Comparative Responsibility (§1 et seq.). (See infra, §1295 et seq.)

Topic 2. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors for Indivisible Harm (§10 et seq.). (See infra, §44 et seq.)

Topic 3. Contribution and Indemnity (§§22, 23). (See infra, §§103 et seq., 112 et seq.)

Topic 4. Settlement (§§24, 25). (See infra, §75.)

Topic 5. Apportionment of Liability When Damages Can Be Divided by Causation (§26). (See infra, §1183.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

5. Classification of Torts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 5

[§ 5] Classification of Torts.

The California Code of Civil Procedure classifies injuries as (a) to the person and (b) to property. (C.C.P. 27, 28, 29.) For venue purposes, these classifications are significant in determining whether an action is local or transitory. (See C.C.P. 395; Monk v. Ehret (1923) 192 C. 186, 192, 219 P. 452; Lucas v. Lucas Ranching Co. (1937) 18 C.A.2d 453, 455, 64 P.2d 160; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §710 et seq.)

The Restatement 2d classification is with respect to the conduct of the party committing the tort. Under this analysis, liability is imposed for (a) intentional acts (see infra, §381 et seq.); (b) negligent acts (see infra, §831 et seq.); and (c) ultrahazardous or abnormally dangerous activities resulting in liability without fault (see infra, §1414 et seq.).

I. INTRODUCTION
A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.
6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.
a. General Principle.

[§ 6] General Principle.

A tort, whether intentional or negligent, involves a violation of a legal duty, imposed by statute, contract, or otherwise, owed by the defendant to the person injured. Without such a duty, any injury is "damnum absque injuria"--injury without wrong. (Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179; Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 785, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352; Coleman v. California Yearly Meeting of Friends Church (1938) 27 C.A.2d 579, 582, 81 P.2d 469; Gill v. Mission Savings & Loan Assn. (1965) 236 C.A.2d 753, 755, 46 C.R. 456, infra, §1180; Galanis v. Mercury Int. Ins. Underwriters (1967) 247 C.A.2d 690, 695, 55 C.R. 890, infra, §865; Matthias v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 752, 753, 67 C.R. 511, infra, §865; Wynne v. Orcutt Union School Dist. (1971) 17 C.A.3d 1108, 1110, 95 C.R. 458, infra, §7; Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 814, 820, 131 C.R. 854, infra, §8; San Luis Obispo v. Abalone Alliance (1986) 178 C.A.3d 848, 865, 223 C.R. 846, citing the text; Roman Catholic Bishop of San Diego v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1556, 1564, 50 C.R.2d 399, citing the text; McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1011, 1016, 67 C.R.2d 516, quoting the text; see Daniels v. McPhail (1949) 93 C.A.2d 479, 482, 209 P.2d 19, infra, §1426 [maxim that "one must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another" does not create right or interest]; Shelton v. Westminster (1982) 138 C.A.3d 610, 618, 188 C.R. 205, infra, §247; Wilson v. Safeway Stores (1997) 52 C.A.4th 267, 273, 60 C.R.2d 532, citing the text [tort may be imposed by statute as well as by common law; violation of FEHA is "tort"]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §225 et seq.; 3, 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §§18.1 et seq., 20.4 et seq.; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §6 et seq.)

The concept of duty is considered most frequently in the context of negligence. (Rest.2d, Torts, Comment b; on duty of due care, see infra, §867 et seq.)

It has been said that the duty concept is "a shorthand expression of a conclusion, rather than an aid to analysis in itself," constituting the result of all the policy considerations leading the law to say that a particular plaintiff is entitled to protection. (Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 734, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008; Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 8, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, citing the text.)

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.
b. Illustrations of No Duty.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 7

[§ 7] In General.

The following cases illustrate circumstances in which no duty has been found to be owed by the defendant to the injured party:

Routh v. Quinn (1942) 20 C.2d 488, 491, 127 P.2d 1 [tax assessor not liable to purchaser at void tax sale for negligent computation of amount of tax; duty owed only to governmental entity].

Ahlborn v. Peters (1940) 37 C.A.2d 698, 707, 100 P.2d 542 [defendants not liable for failure to deliver will found by them after testator's death].

Roach v. Hostetter (1941) 48 C.A.2d 375, 379, 119 P.2d 749 [vendor of lots not liable to purchaser for subsequently requesting and obtaining from city a change in zoning ordinance covering tract].

Neuber v. Royal Realty Co. (1948) 86 C.A.2d 596, 611, 195 P.2d 501, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §649 [no duty owed by lessor to lessee's employee, where dangerous condition of premises was due solely to lessee's activities].

Luis v. Orcutt Town Water Co. (1962) 204 C.A.2d 433, 438, 22 C.R. 389, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §692 [no tort liability for failure to supply water to fight fires].

Duff v. Harrah South Shore Corp. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 803, 806, 125 C.R. 259 [alleged contractual duty of gambling casino to refrain from cashing gambler's checks in excess of specified limit held no basis for wrongful death action by widow when gambler cashed checks he could not cover and committed suicide].

Kinner v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (1976) 57 C.A.3d 724, 729, 129 C.R. 400 [no duty of construction lender to contractor-borrower to lend amount sufficient for contractor to complete construction project or not to lend at all].

Austero v. National Cas. Co. (1976) 62 C.A.3d 511, 516, 133 C.R. 107, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §309 [insurer's liability for bad faith failure to pay benefits under disability policy is to insured, not to wife of insured, who is not party to contract].

Zalta v. Billips (1978) 81 C.A.3d 183, 189, 144 C.R. 888, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §321 [no duty of attorney to present client in favorable public light].

In Wynne v. Orcutt Union School Dist. (1971) 17 C.A.3d 1108, 95 C.R. 458, plaintiffs alleged that their 10-year-old son was suffering from a progressively disabling fatal disease, that they informed his teacher and principal of it in confidence, and that the teacher, in breach of confidence, told the child, who then asked his parents about it. They alleged shock and sought $ 200,000 damages. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed; there is no duty on the part of a person informed of sad facts not to disclose them to another. (17 C.A.3d 1110.)

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

b. Illustrations of No Duty.

2. Schools.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 8

[§ 8] Schools.

In Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 814, 131 C.R. 854, plaintiff alleged in substance that he had recently graduated from a high school of defendant district; that the district and the individual defendants (superintendent of schools, board, and board members) negligently failed to provide him with adequate instruction and supervision and misrepresented that he was performing at grade level in basic academic skills; and that as a result he suffered a loss of earning capacity because of his limited ability to read and write. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The California Supreme Court, in cases opening new areas of tort liability, "has noted that the wrongs and injuries involved were both comprehensible and assessable within the existing judicial framework." But this is not true of the educational malfeasance alleged here. "Unlike the activity of the highway or the marketplace, classroom methodology affords no readily acceptable standards of care, or cause, or injury. The science of pedagogy itself is fraught with different and conflicting theories of how or what a child should be taught, and any layman might--and commonly does--have his own emphatic views on the subject. The 'injury' claimed here is plaintiff's inability to read and write. Substantial professional authority attests that the achievement of literacy in the schools, or its failure, are influenced by a host of factors which affect the pupil subjectively, from outside the formal teaching process, and beyond the control of its ministers. They may be physical, neurological, emotional, cultural, environmental; they may be present but not perceived, recognized but not identified." (60 C.A.3d 824.)

(b) Other practical considerations preclude imposition of liability on agencies administering the public educational process. "To hold them to an actionable 'duty of care,' in the discharge of their academic functions, would expose them to the tort claims--real or imagined--of disaffected students and parents in countless numbers. They are already beset by social and financial problems which have gone to major litigation, but for which no permanent solution has yet appeared. ... The ultimate consequences, in terms of public time and money, would burden them--and society--beyond calculation." (60 C.A.3d 825.) (See 8 Golden Gate L. Rev. 293 [Educational Malpractice and the Functionally Illiterate Student]; 8 Golden Gate L. Rev. 814 [Peter W.]; 10 Pacific L.J. 947 [same]; 18 *San Diego L. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 9

[§ 9] Social Service Agencies.

In Smith v. Alameda County Social Services Agency (1979) 90 C.A.3d 929, 153 C.R. 712, plaintiff, 17, alleged that he had been relinquished at birth to defendant agency for adoption; that the agency placed him in a series of foster homes, but did not attempt to find a proper preadoptive home; that he was never adopted; and that, as a result, he was deprived of the advantages of homelike family environment and parental care, and suffered damage, consisting of emotional distress and interference with his psychological development. Thus, the theory of the pleading was that a county agency entrusted with the responsibility for finding an adoptive home for a child may be liable to the child for negligent failure to carry out that responsibility. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Following the approach of Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 814, 131 C.R. 854, supra, §8, "the duty sought to be imposed here does not present us with a reasonably clear or manageable standard for assessing the wrongfulness of the agency's conduct." (90 C.A.3d 936.) Placement decisions are partially subjective; the chances of adoption of children placed in foster families are low; and whether an agency could or should have acted differently calls for speculation. (90 C.A.3d 937.)

(b) The proposed liability would be likely to impede the proper functioning of adoption agencies. It is doubtful whether insurance could be obtained, and the parties involved in the placement process would not be helped by attempted reconstruction of the events and judicial inquiry into the decisions made. (90 C.A.3d 938.) The proper approach is that of decisions approving judicial review of adoption agency decisions to protect against arbitrary action (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §§116, 117); a damage action is a "particularly poor" method of achieving greater institutional accountability and recognition of individual needs. (90 C.A.3d 939.)

The court also held that a separate cause of action for negligently placing plaintiff in classes for the mentally retarded was not maintainable, under the reasoning of Peter W. (90 C.A.3d 941.) (See Richard P. v. Vista Del Mar Child Care Service (1980) 106 C.A.3d 860, 863, 165 C.R. 370 [action against adoption agency for alleged failure to warn that infant's premature birth might lead to health problems; held, following Smith, public policy compels rejection of this theory of liability, which would in effect make adoption agency guarantor of infant's future health]; Keech v. Berkeley Unified School Dist. (1984) 162 C.A.3d 464, 468, 210 C.R. 7 [following Peter W. and Smith].)

b. Illustrations of No Duty.

4. Public Utilities.

[§ 10] Public Utilities.

In Niehaus Bros. Co. v. Contra Costa Water Co. (1911) 159 C. 305, 113 P. 375, it was held that a public water company under its contract to furnish water at ordinance rates for general purposes does not assume an obligation to extinguish a fire. This obligation may exist only where the company by express contract assumes the additional obligation of furnishing water in sufficient quantity to protect specific property from fire. (159 C. 309.)

In Lowenschuss v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 496, 14 C.R.2d 59, the issue and holding were stated as follows: "The gas company, a public utility, knows that a rapidly spreading fire is approaching a neighborhood. Does it have a duty to purge gas from its pipes and house meters which may be in the path of the fire? No." (11 C.A.4th 497.)

(a) The rule and reasoning of Niehaus are dispositive here. (11 C.A.4th 499, 500.)

(b) If plaintiffs were correct, the public gas company would assume liability practically as an insurer of millions of dollars worth of property upon which an insurance company would not think of assuming the risk. (11 C.A.4th 500.)

(c) A different case is presented when a utility company has been notified of a specific defect or damage involving one of its lines; it must then take proper precautions. (11 C.A.4th 500.)

In White v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1994) 25 C.A.4th 442, 30 C.R.2d 431, plaintiff was injured in an automobile accident and sued a public utility on the theory that its failure to maintain a streetlight in operable condition caused the accident. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant. Held, affirmed.

(a) "[L]iability may not be imposed on a public utility in these circumstances where (1) the installation of the streetlight is not necessary to obviate a dangerous condition, i.e., there is a duty to install the streetlight and a concomitant duty to maintain it; (2) the failure to maintain an installed streetlight does not create a risk greater than the risk created by the total absence of a streetlight; and (3) the injured party has not in some manner relied on the operation of the streetlight foregoing other protective actions, e.g., a pedestrian chooses a particular route home in reliance on the available streetlighting when the pedestrian would have chosen a different route or a different means of transportation in

(b) A municipality generally has no duty to light its streets, its failure to light them is not actionable negligence, and a public utility cannot be charged with a greater liability than the municipality itself. (25 C.A.4th 452.)

(c) Pub.Util.C. 2106 (imposing liability on public utilities for damages caused by acts or omissions in violation of Constitution, statute, or Public Utilities Commission order) and Sts. & H.C. 27, 941, 1806 (requiring public entities to maintain highways in a safe condition) do not create a statutory scheme imposing liability on public utilities to third parties for failure to maintain streetlights. (25 C.A.4th 452, 453.)

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

c. Violation of Statute or Constitutional Provision.

1. In General.

aa. Violation as Giving Rise to Tort Liability.

[§ 11] Violation as Giving Rise to Tort Liability.

When a legislative provision, embodying a public policy, is enacted for the protection of a particular class of persons, its violation may give rise to civil liability to an injured plaintiff who is a member of the class. (Hudson v. Craft (1949) 33 C.2d 654, 660, 204 P.2d 1, infra, §387; Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 763, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465, infra, §1195; Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Assn. (1969) 275 C.A.2d 168, 174, 79 C.R. 543; Michael R. v. Jeffrey B. (1984) 158 C.A.3d 1059, 1067, 205 C.R. 312, infra, §14; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §133; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §§17.5, 17.6.) The provision violated is ordinarily criminal, but may be civil in nature. (See Montalvo v. Zamora (1970) 7 C.A.3d 69, 73, 86 C.R. 401, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §347 [agricultural workers stated cause of action for damages or injunction by alleging that employer violated their statutory right to negotiate in discharging them after they had chosen attorney representative to negotiate over minimum wage claims].)

Situations in which a statute is alleged to create a new private cause of action must be distinguished from those in which a statute is merely employed to establish the elements of a common law cause of action, as where the breach of a statute is presumed to be a breach of the standard of due care in a negligence action. The courts in analyzing claims sometimes fail to distinguish between the two. (Crusader Ins. Co. v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 121, 125, 62 C.R.2d 620, infra, §13; on statutory violation as negligence per se, see infra, §818 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

c. Violation of Statute or Constitutional Provision.

1. In General.

bb. Restatement Rule.

[§ 12] Restatement Rule.

Rest.2d, Torts §874A recognizes that tort liability may arise from violation of a legislative provision and describes the character of the resulting tort: "When a legislative provision protects a class of persons by proscribing or requiring certain conduct but does not provide a civil remedy for the violation, the court may, if it determines that the remedy is appropriate in furtherance of the purpose of the legislation and needed to assure the effectiveness of the provision, accord to an injured member of the class a right of action, using a suitable existing tort action or a new cause of action analogous to an existing tort action."

The Comments explain the nature and scope of this principle:

(1) The term "legislative provision" includes statutes, ordinances, legislative regulations of administrative agencies, and constitutional provisions. (Comment a.)

(2) The "typical case" falling within the principle is one involving a criminal statute that proscribes certain conduct and imposes a criminal penalty but says nothing about civil responsibility. "In a case of this nature, it is obvious that the legislative body must have (1) intended that civil liability be imposed, (2) intended that there be no civil liability, or (3) not contemplated the issue at all and therefore have had no specific intent regarding it. If the court determines that the legislative body did actually intend for civil liability to be imposed or not imposed, whether the intent is express or implicit, then the court should treat the situation as if it had expressly so provided." (Comment c.)

(3) If the court concludes that the legislative body did actually have the intent either to establish a civil remedy or to limit the relief to that expressly provided in the legislative provision, the issue is settled. On the other hand, if the court does not reach either conclusion, but "recognizes instead that that body had no specific intent in fact on the issue, ... [i]t must decide this question on its own." While courts often speak of legislative intent in this situation, the expression is used in a figurative, rather than a literal, sense. "Intent" here is sometimes thought of as referring to how the legislative body would have dealt with the concrete situation if it had had the situation before it in the way in which it is now before the court. Perhaps more frequently, the figurative search for legislative intent "involves looking for the policy behind the legislative provision, attempting to perceive the purpose for which it was enacted, and then, having ascertained that policy or purpose, determining the most appropriate way to carry it out and identifying the remedy needed to accomplish that result." (Comment d; on alternative approach declining to find civil remedy where Legislature fails to consider issue, see infra, §13.)

(4) If the court determines that it is appropriate to provide a civil action, that action will normally sound in tort, and will ordinarily be assimilated to the most similar common law tort. If there is no common law tort sufficiently analogous, a new tort may be created for the purpose. (Comment f.)

(5) The factors that the court may consider are the nature of the legislative provision, the adequacy of existing remedies, the extent to which the tort action will aid or supplement or interfere with existing remedies, the significance of the purpose that the legislative body is seeking to effectuate, the extent of the change in tort law, and the burden that the new cause of action will place on the judicial machinery. (Comment h, analyzing each factor.)

(6) "Whether the tort action provided by the court in furtherance of the policy of a legislative provision is to be treated as an intentional tort, as negligence or as a form of strict liability, or perhaps as involving all three (as in some existing torts such as misrepresentation), depends primarily upon construction of the statute itself. It also depends upon the nature of the established tort to which it is found to be most closely analogous and which is therefore expanded to cover it." (Comment j.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

c. Violation of Statute or Constitutional Provision.

1. In General.

cc. Legislative Intent Approach.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 13

[§ 13] Legislative Intent Approach.

Crusader Ins. Co. v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 121, 62 C.R.2d 620, involved the proper approach for determining whether a private cause of action exists for the breach of a regulatory statute. The statute in question was Ins.C. 1763, which provides that a surplus line broker must conduct a diligent search for an admitted insurer before assigning a particular insurance risk to a nonadmitted insurer. Plaintiff, an admitted insurer, alleged that defendant brokers violated the statute by failing to make a diligent search before assigning a risk to a nonadmitted insurer. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants affirmed.

(a) A first step in analysis is to distinguish those situations in which a statute is alleged to create a new private cause of action from those in which a statute is merely employed to establish the elements of a common law cause of action, as where the breach of a statute is presumed to be a breach of the standard of due care in a negligence action. Much confusion results when courts fail to distinguish these two questions. In determining whether a statute creates a private cause of action, the distinction is necessary. This issue is squarely raised in the present case, because there is no common law violation; the only wrongful act is the alleged breach of the statute. (54 C.A.4th 125.)

(b) In determining whether a statute creates a private cause of action, there are basically four situations: (1) the statute expressly created a private cause of action; (2) the Legislature actually intended for there to be civil liability, even though there was no express provision to that effect; (3) the Legislature affirmatively intended that there be no civil liability; and (4) the Legislature did not contemplate the issue, and thus had no intent one way or the other. The two approaches adopted by the decisions, the "legislative intent approach" and the "Restatement approach," are similar for the first three of these situations; both approaches attempt to ascertain the legislative intent. However, the two approaches differ with respect to analyzing the fourth situation. Under the legislative intent approach, there could be no intent to create a private cause of action in a situation where the Legislature did not even consider the question. Under the Restatement approach, the courts could create a remedy if, after an analysis of the factors listed in Rest.2d, Torts §874A (supra, §12), they concluded that the remedy of a private cause of action is appropriate. (54 C.A.4th 126.)

for the Restatement approach. However, these cases are weakened by the fact that common law causes of action based on the same facts were alleged and by the fact that, under Ev.C. 669 (see infra, §873), a party who violates a statute is deemed to have failed to use due care. (54 C.A.4th 130.) Aligned against this somewhat questionable authority for adopting the Restatement approach is the leading California Supreme Court decision applying the legislative intent approach. In that case, Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1988) 46 C.3d 287, 250 C.R. 116, 758 P.2d 58, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §254, the court placed the case in the fourth category and concluded that there could have been no intent to create civil liability where the question was never reached. Neither the majority nor dissenting opinion in that case or of the one that it overruled once mentioned the Restatement. Thus, although opposite results were reached, neither case indicated that any analysis other than a search for the legislative intent was proper. (54 C.A.4th 131.)

(d) The general rule of C.C.P. 1858, that the function of a judge is simply to ascertain what the Legislature intended, not to insert what might have been omitted, is in accord with the legislative intent approach. Moreover, although a conclusion that no private right of action was created might involve a consideration of many of the factors listed in Rest.2d, Torts §874A, resolution of the question involves a difficult weighing of competing policies that is best left to the Legislature. (54 C.A.4th 134.)

(e) An approach that declines to adopt a private right to sue except when the Legislature so intended does not abrogate common law remedies. Indeed, in both Moradi-Shalal and in this case, the insured could still pursue common law remedies if harmed either by the unlawful practices of the insurer or by the failure of the broker to conduct a proper investigation before placing surplus line insurance. (54 C.A.4th 134.)

(f) The legislative intent approach adopted in Moradi-Shalal is controlling in the present case even though that case did not involve the identical statute involved here. Applying this approach shows that the Legislature, in enacting Ins.C. 1763, was concerned about unstable and underfunded nonadmitted insurers (a condition that might prove to be harmful to California insureds), and that to deal with this problem, the Legislature chose the option of increasing regulatory procedures and creating a surplus line advisory organization, even though at least one witness argued for a private right of action. Thus, instead of showing an intent to create civil liability, the legislative history of the relevant statute indicates that the Legislature considered, but rejected, such a proposal. (54 C.A.4th 135.)

(g) Plaintiff contends that the Department of Insurance was not adequately performing its task of regulating surplus line brokers before they allocated insurance risks to nonadmitted insurers. However, instead of seeking a writ of mandamus directing the department to perform this duty, it sought court-created regulation of brokers and nonadmitted insurers through damage awards, injunctions, and restitution orders. The question of what type or level of regulation is adequate or appropriate involves the consideration of many policy factors, and is best left to the Legislature. Thus, plaintiff's complaint should have been directed either to the Department of Insurance or to the Legislature. (54 C.A.4th 137.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

c. Violation of Statute or Constitutional Provision.

2. Illustrations.

aa. State Statute.

[§ 14] State Statute.

(1) Cause of Action Recognized. In some cases, a civil cause of action has been held to arise from violation of a state statute. (See, e.g., Wetherton v. Growers Farm Labor Assn. (1969) 275 C.A.2d 168, 174, 79 C.R. 543 [Lab.C. 923, relating to policy to uphold freedom of employees to enter into collective bargaining contracts, enunciates public policy, and employees who are discharged from employment for union activity can obtain damages and injunctive relief for violation of their rights under statute]; Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1217, 1224, 44 C.R.2d 197, citing the text [minor had cause of action against physician for unlawful seduction and childhood sexual abuse, based on alleged violations of P.C. 261.5 (unlawful intercourse with minor) and P.C. 288a(b)(1) (oral copulation with minor), because minor was clearly member of class meant to be protected].)

Michael R. v. Jeffrey B. (1984) 158 C.A.3d 1059, 205 C.R. 312, arose out of an assault following a school banquet. The complaint alleged in substance that defendant B prompted defendant J to shoot a marble at plaintiff with a slingshot, and that plaintiff was blinded in one eye. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant B on the ground that there is no tort of "negligent encouragement," i.e., that B owed no duty to control the conduct of J. Held, reversed.

(a) B admitted making the statement, "Hey shoot him; go for it." This satisfied the conditions of the crime of solicitation under P.C. 653f (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §31). (158 C.A.3d 1065.)

(b) Defendant contended that P.C. 653f was not intended to apply to "vocal bystanders," or to create tort liability. However, "an injury resulting from commission of an assault with a deadly weapon is the type of injury a statute prohibiting solicitation to commit assault with a deadly weapon was designed to prevent. Someone who encourages another to shoot a person is not a 'verbal bystander.'" (158 C.A.3d 1066.)

(c) "Violation of a statute embodying a public policy is generally actionable even though no specific civil remedy is provided in the statute itself. Any injured member of the public for whose benefit the statute was enacted may bring the action." (158 C.A.3d 1067.) "Although a statute that provides solely for a criminal penalty does not create a civil liability, the significance of the statute in a civil suit for negligence involves its formulation of a standard of conduct that the court then adopts in the determination of such liability." (158 C.A.3d 1067, citing Clinkscales v. Carver (1943) 22 C.2d 72, 136 P.2d 777, infra, §875.)

(d) The seven factors set forth by the Supreme Court in Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, to be considered in determining whether a duty is owed to third persons are present here: "The harm in the instant case was clearly foreseeable; [J] had been shooting at automobiles previously. The certainty of appellant's injury was undisputed. There was a proximate connection between the verbal encouragement and the shooting. Encouragement or solicitation of an assault with a deadly or dangerous instrument was clearly wrong. Imposing a duty would promote a policy of preventing future harm; it would not impose liability which did not previously exist for mere bystanders. The burden on [B] to abstain from encouraging or soliciting a crime was minimal." (158 C.A.3d 1070.)

An implied tort remedy was also found in Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 C.3d 355, 212 C.R. 143, 696 P.2d 637. The marriage of plaintiff and his wife was dissolved in a proceeding in which the wife was not represented by counsel. After entry of judgment, the wife consulted an attorney, and was informed that the court-approved property settlement had adverse implications. She advised plaintiff of this, plaintiff immediately telephoned the attorney, "and a heated exchange ensued." The wife then visited the place of business of defendant, obtained permission to use defendant's phone to call plaintiff, and asked her to listen on an extension telephone, which she did. The wife then filed an action to set aside the dissolution for fraud, and during an arbitration hearing, defendant testified that in the phone conversation, plaintiff conceded that he had prevented his wife from obtaining counsel during the dissolution proceeding. Although the arbitrator ruled in favor of plaintiff, plaintiff filed the present action against defendant for damages for violation of the Invasion of Privacy Act (P.C. 630 et seq.). Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed. Defendant's act of monitoring plaintiff's conversation with his wife constituted a breach of the wiretapping provisions of the Act (P.C. 631), vesting in plaintiff a civil cause of action for damages. Affording a civil remedy here fosters the broad Legislative intent, stated in P.C. 630, "to protect the right of privacy of the people of this state" from what it perceived as "a serious threat to the free exercise of personal liberties." (38 C.3d 359.) P.C. 631 was aimed at one aspect of the privacy problem--the secret monitoring of conversations by third parties. Defendant contends that the Act should not be construed to prohibit eavesdropping by means of an extension telephone; i.e., that it prohibits only monitoring of communications "in transit." But this ignores the language of P.C. 631(a), covering a communication "in transit" or "being sent from, or received" at a place within the state. Defendant also argues that P.C. 631 proscribes nothing more than wiretaps. However, this construction is inconsistent with the broad wording and purpose of the statute, and would render superfluous the language proscribing attempts to learn the content of a communication "in any unauthorized manner." (38 C.3d 360.) (See 33 A.L.R.4th 506 [statutory authorization of civil action for interception of communication].)

(2) No Cause of Action Recognized. In some instances, the allegation of an implied tort remedy has failed. (See Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1988) 46 C.3d 287, 304, 250 C.R. 116, 758 P.2d 58, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §254; Crusader Ins. Co. v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 121, 125, 62 C.R.2d 620, supra, §13.) Such was the case in Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1999) 70 C.A.4th 385, 82 C.R.2d 594, where an insurer cross-complained against the insureds on the theory of "reverse" bad faith. The ordinary action for bad faith (tortious breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing) involves bad faith by the insurer. (See 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §239 et seq.) The insurer contended that it must be permitted to sue on the reverse bad faith theory because P.C. 550(a)(1) makes it a criminal offense to present a fraudulent claim for the payment of a loss under an insurance contract. Held, the contention failed.

(a) "There is no indication that the Legislature, in enacting Penal Code section 550, intended to expose all insureds to suits for 'reverse bad faith' whenever they make an insurance claim. The motivations of a public prosecutor deciding whether and how to enforce a penal statute will expectably be significantly different from the motivations of a private litigant reacting to an insurance claim. One is vindicating public policy and the rule of law, the other is primarily concerned with its own private economic interests. There is no indication that the Legislature equated these two quite different situations. There is no language creating a private right of action in Penal Code section 550, thus any legislative intent to create such a private right would have to be implicit at most. Yet nothing has been cited or suggested indicating such a silent legislative intent, nor why, if the Legislature did so intend, they did not simply say so." (70 C.A.4th 399.)

(b) In P.C. 550(a)(1), the Legislature attempted to criminalize fraud; it did not attempt to criminalize bad faith, and probably could not have done so constitutionally. The nebulous concept of reverse bad faith is not conterminous with the better defined concept of fraud. (70 C.A.4th 400.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Cause of Action Recognized. See Ramona Unified School Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 C.A.4th 510, 522, 37 C.R.3d 381 [civil tort action may be based on violation of criminal barratry statutes (P.C. 158, 159; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, §3); however, claim was unavailable where only single lawsuit was alleged, because statutes require that defendant have excited at least three groundless lawsuits]. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 15

[§ 15] Federal Statute.

(1) Cause of Action Recognized. A federal statute may be the basis for an implied right of action for damages resulting from its violation. (See Cannon v. University of Chicago (1979) 441 U.S. 677, 99 S.Ct. 1946, 1953, 60 L.Ed.2d 560, 569 [sex discrimination in federally assisted education program under Education Amendments of 1972]; Merrill Lynch v. Curran (1982) 456 U.S. 353, 102 S.Ct. 1825, 1841, 72 L.Ed.2d 182, 203 [violation of Commodity Exchange Act]; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §17.6; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 236 [Merrill Lynch]; 33 Hastings L. J. 1294 [whether private cause of action can be implied under Rehabilitation Act of 1973]; 34 Hastings L. J. 969 [Implying Rights of Action for Minorities and the Poor Through Presumptions of Legislative Intent].)

In Merrill Lynch v. Curran, supra, the court said: "In determining whether a private cause of action is implicit in a federal statutory scheme when the statute by its terms is silent on that issue, the initial focus must be on the state of the law at the time the legislation was enacted. More precisely, we must examine Congress' perception of the law that it was shaping or reshaping. When Congress enacts new legislation, the question is whether Congress intended to create a private remedy as a supplement to the express enforcement provisions of the statute. When Congress acts in a statutory context in which an implied private remedy has already been recognized by the courts, however, the inquiry logically is different. Congress need not have intended to create a new remedy, since one already existed; the question is whether Congress intended to preserve the pre-existing remedy." (102 S.Ct. 1839, 72 L.Ed.2d 201.)

The Restatement points out that "the power to authorize damages or injunctive relief as a remedy for the vindication of a federal constitutional or statutory right is not exclusively in the hands of Congress, but exists inherently in the courts." However, "[t]here is a problem of broadening the jurisdiction of the federal courts if the court-supplied remedy of a civil action for damages is treated as arising out of a federal statute. For this reason the federal courts should give particular attention to the question of whether the state remedies can adequately take care of the situation." State courts, on the other hand, may "modify a state common law tort on the basis of a policy promoted by a federal statute," although it "would naturally be cautious in undertaking to do this." (Rest.2d, Torts §874A, Comment g.)

(2) No Cause of Action Recognized. A cause of action may be denied under particular circumstances. (See < > Schweiker v. Chilicky (1988) 487 U.S. 412, 108 S.Ct. 2460, 2466, 101 L.Ed.2d 370, 379 [alleged due process violation in denial of Social Security disability benefits does not give rise to action for damages against officials administering program]; Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 227 C.A.3d 318, 329, 227 C.R. 753, infra, §874 [no implied private cause of action to enforce Agricultural Credit Act of 1987]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 279 [Schweiker].)

California v. Sierra Club (1981) 451 U.S. 287, 101 S.Ct. 1775, 68 L.Ed.2d 101, declined to find such a cause of action on the facts. Plaintiffs sought to enjoin construction and operation of a state water diversion project, on the ground that the Rivers and Harbors Appropriations Act (33 U.S.C., §403) prohibits the creation of obstructions, not authorized by Congress, to the navigable capacity of waters of the United States. Both lower courts agreed that a private cause of action to enforce the Act existed. Held, reversed.

(a) In determining that plaintiffs were members of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted, the Court of Appeals defined the class as all persons who would be specially harmed by an authorized obstruction. (101 S.Ct. 1779, 68 L.Ed.2d 107.) This reasoning was erroneous; it would make any victim of any crime a special beneficiary of the criminal statute's proscription. The proper question "is not simply who would benefit from the Act, but whether Congress intended to confer federal rights upon those beneficiaries." (101 S.Ct. 1779, 68 L.Ed.2d 107.)

(b) The legislative history shows that the Act was enacted in response to an earlier decision holding that in the absence of specific legislation, the federal Government had no power to take any action with respect to obstructions of navigable waters. (101 S.Ct. 1780, 68 L.Ed.2d 108.) Hence, the "silence on the remedy question serves to confirm that in enacting the Act, Congress was concerned not with private rights but with the Federal Government's ability to respond to obstructions on navigable waterways." (101 S.Ct. 1780, 68 L.Ed.2d 109.) (See 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 949.)

A silent statute is even less likely to support an injunction. (See Diaz v. Kay-Dix Ranch (1970) 9 C.A.3d 588, 88 C.R. 443, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §341 [despite federal immigration laws, injunction was unavailable to prohibit ranch owners or operators from knowingly employing illegal entrants].)

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

6. Legal Duty Toward Person Harmed.

c. Violation of Statute or Constitutional Provision.

2. Illustrations.

cc. Federal Constitution.

[§ 16] Federal Constitution.

(1) Cause of Action Recognized. The United States Constitution may itself impliedly create a tort claim. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619, recognized a civil remedy against federal officials for violation of constitutional rights. Plaintiff brought an action in the federal district court against agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, to recover for emotional distress suffered as a result of a warrantless arrest without probable cause. His complaint alleged that they entered his apartment, manacled him in front of his wife and children, threatened to arrest the entire family, searched the entire premises, and then took him to the federal courthouse where he was interrogated, booked, and subjected to a visual strip search. The district court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the action was for violation of the right of privacy, and could be maintained only under state law. Held, reversed.

(a) The Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure extends to acts that might not be condemned by state law. Hence, the argument that the Amendment serves only as a limitation on defenses that can be asserted by federal officials in a state court, and not as an independent limitation on federal power, is unsound. (91 S.Ct. 2002, 29 L.Ed.2d 623.)

The Bivens doctrine was applied in Davis v. Passman (1979) 442 U.S. 228, 99 S.Ct. 2264, 60 L.Ed.2d 846, a Fifth Amendment case. Plaintiff, a woman hired as deputy administrative assistant to defendant Congressman, was discharged a few months later on the stated ground that, though she was able, defendant had concluded that the position required a man. She brought suit in the federal district court for damages in the form of back pay, alleging that defendant's conduct discriminated against her on the basis of sex in violation of the Fifth Amendment. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) The Fifth Amendment forbids the federal government from denying equal protection of the laws; and this protection confers on plaintiff a federal constitutional right to be free from gender discrimination. (99 S.Ct. 2271, 60 L.Ed.2d 857.)

(b) The judiciary is the primary means through which these rights may be enforced. Like the plaintiffs in Bolling v. Sharpe (1954) 347 U.S. 497, 74 S.Ct. 693, 98 L.Ed. 884, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §750, plaintiff here claims that her rights under the Amendment have been violated and that she has no other effective means than an action for damages to vindicate them. (99 S.Ct. 2275, 2276, 60 L.Ed.2d 861, 862.) Under Bivens, a damage remedy is appropriate. (99 S.Ct. 2277, 60 L.Ed.2d 862.)

Four justices dissented, chiefly on the ground that the Separation of Powers doctrine precluded this intrusion into the interests of members of Congress, and that Congress could, but did not, make Bivens type remedies available to congressional employees. (See 92 Harv. L. Rev. 745 [5th Circuit opinion in Davis].)

(2) No Cause of Action Recognized. No Bivens remedy is available if there are "special factors counselling hesitation in the absence of affirmative action by Congress." (Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, supra, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 2005, 29 L.Ed.2d 626.) This is true, for example, with respect to injuries to military personnel arising out of activity incident to military service. Special factors counseling against the remedy in those circumstances include the constitutional authorization for Congress rather than the judiciary to make rules governing the military, the unique disciplinary structure of the military establishment, and Congress' establishment of a comprehensive internal system of military justice. (United States v. Stanley (1987) 483 U.S. 669, 107 S.Ct. 3054, 3060, 97 L.Ed.2d 550, 563 [servicemen were secretly given doses of LSD for army experiment in study of long-term effects of drug].)

While acknowledging that Bivens actions are not limited to suits against government employees but may arise against private parties as well, Stalnaker v. Boeing Co. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1291, 231 C.R. 323, denied that relief under the particular circumstances. Defendant company was a government contractor maintaining an Army military installation. Decedent was employed to locate unexploded ordinance on firing ranges, and was fatally injured when he stepped on an unexploded hand grenade. Plaintiffs, his widow and children, settled a workers' compensation claim and filed this action based on a "Bivens-type constitutional tort." Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Defendant's contention that no Bivens-type action lies against a private party is unsound. Where the private defendant's action is backed by the power, property, and prestige of the Government, the harm approaches that caused by government officials. The standard is whether the defendant acted in such a way to create an "integrated alliance" so that its conduct is "imbued with the power and prestige of government officials." Here, the facts that defendant was a government contractor and its employees were supervised by the Army suggests that plaintiffs could possibly prove an "integrated alliance" at trial. (186 C.A.3d 1305, 1306.)

(b) However, the action, based on negligence, did not involve a deprivation of a constitutional right. "Bivens actions seek to permit recovery where there has been no remedy available for a violation of a particular right. In the case at bench, plaintiffs' constitutional liberty interest was protected by state law, i.e., workers' compensation." (186 C.A.3d 1307.)

The Bivens holding does not authorize recovery against a private entity acting under color of federal law. The threat of suit against an individual's employer is not the kind of deterrence contemplated by that holding, the purpose of which is to deter federal officers from committing constitutional violations. (Correctional Services Corp. v. Malesko (2001) 534 U.S. 61, 122 S.Ct. 515, 523, 151 L.Ed.2d 456, 461) [Correctional Services Corporation operated halfway house under contract with Bureau of Prisons; although exempted from policy requiring use of stairs, rather than elevator, inmate who suffered heart attack when ordered to take stairs to go to his room had no cause of action].

(New) No Bivens action for retaliation against exercise of property rights: In Wilkie v. Robbins (2007) 551 U.S. 537, 127 S.Ct. 2588, 168 L.Ed.2d 389, plaintiff property owner alleged that Bureau of Land Management employees had conducted a lengthy campaign of harassment and intimidation to force him to grant an easement to the bureau. Plaintiff sought damages under Bivens on a theory of retaliation for the exercise of his constitutional rights to exclude the Government from his property and to refuse to grant a property interest without compensation. Held, Bivens relief is not available for retaliation against the exercise of ownership rights.

(a) "[O]n the assumption that a constitutionally recognized interest is adversely affected by the actions of federal employees, the decision whether to recognize a Bivens remedy may require two steps. In the first place, there is the question whether any alternative, existing process for protecting the interest amounts to a convincing reason for the Judicial Branch to refrain from providing a new and freestanding remedy in damages. ... But even in the absence of an alternative, a Bivens remedy is a subject of judgment: 'the federal courts must make the kind of remedial determination that is appropriate for a common-law tribunal, paying particular heed, however, to any special factors counselling hesitation before authorizing a new kind of federal litigation.' " (127 S.Ct. 2598, 168 L.Ed.2d 401, quoting Bush v. Lucas (1983) 462 U.S. 367, 103 S.Ct. 2404, 2411, 76 L.Ed.2d 648.)

(b) With respect to the first step, plaintiff has an administrative and judicial process for vindicating virtually all of his complaints. (127 S.Ct. 2598, 168 L.Ed.2d 401.) The forums of defense and redress open to plaintiff are a patchwork, an assemblage of state and federal, administrative, and judicial benches applying regulations, statutes, and common law rules. "It would be hard to infer that Congress expected the Judiciary to stay its Bivens hand, but equally hard to extract any clear lesson that Bivens ought to spawn a new claim." (127 S.Ct. 2600, 168 L.Ed.2d 403.)

(c) This, then, is a case for the second step in Bivens analysis, "for weighing reasons for and against the creation of a new cause of action, the way common law judges have always done." Here, the competing arguments boil down to that of plaintiff ("the inadequacy of discrete, incident-by-incident remedies") and that of the Government and its employees ("the difficulty of defining limits to legitimate zeal on the public's behalf in situations where hard bargaining is to be expected in the back-and-forth between public and private interests that the Government's employees engage in every day"). (127 S.Ct. 2600, 168 L.Ed.2d 404.) A Bivens remedy should not be recognized in these circumstances. On the one hand, a judicial standard to identify illegitimate pressure going beyond legitimately hard bargaining "would be endlessly knotty to work out." On the other, a general provision for tort-like liability when government employees are unduly zealous in pressing a governmental interest affecting property would invite an onslaught of Bivens actions. Thus, any remedy for conduct by government employees who push too hard for the Government's benefit should come, if at all, through legislation. (127 S.Ct. 2604, 168 L.Ed.2d 408.)

dd. State Constitution.

[§ 17] State Constitution.

(1) Cause of Action Recognized. A right of action may be implied, in proper circumstances, for violation of a state constitutional provision. Thus, White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §575, held that the California Constitution's guarantee of the right of privacy supported a cause of action, relying on the ballot argument for the constitutional amendment creating the right, which stated that the amendment would create "a legal and enforceable right of privacy for every Californian." (202 C.A.3d 1456.) (See Porten v. University of San Francisco (1976) 64 C.A.3d 825, 829, 134 C.R. 839 [following White]; 75 A.L.R.5th 619 [extension of doctrine of Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619, supra, §16, to claims for violation of state Constitution].)

(2) No Cause of Action Recognized. Rights of action based on several constitutional provisions have been rejected.

In Leger v. Stockton Unified School Dist. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1448, 249 C.R. 688, the court refused to imply a tort remedy from the constitutional safe schools guarantee. Plaintiff, a high school student, was changing clothes in a school bathroom before wrestling practice, when he was attacked and battered by a nonstudent. In his complaint against defendant school district, one cause of action was based on Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(c), which provides: "Right to Safe Schools. All students and staff of public, primary, elementary, junior high, and senior high schools have the inalienable right to attend campuses which are safe, secure and peaceful." Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Cal. Const., Art. I, §26, states that the provisions of the Constitution are "mandatory and prohibitory"; and the courts have held that, in the absence of express language to the contrary, every constitutional provision is self-executing in the sense that agencies of government are prohibited from taking official actions that contravene these provisions. (202 C.A.3d 1454; see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §69.)

(b) This does not mean, however, that every self-executing constitutional provision gives persons a remedy of damages for its violation, in the absence of legislation granting a remedy. Cal Const., Art. I, §28(c), declares a general right without specifying any rules for enforcement. "It imposes no express duty on anyone to make schools safe. It is wholly devoid of guidelines, mechanisms, or procedures from which a damages remedy could be inferred." (202 C.A.3d 1455.)

In the companion cases of Katzberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2002) 29 C.4th 300, 127 C.R.2d 482, 58 P.3d 339, and Degrassi v. Cook (2002) 29 C.4th 333, 127 C.R.2d 508, 58 P.3d 360, the California Supreme Court examined the relevant factors in determining whether a damages action may be based on a state constitutional violation and rejected plaintiffs' claims in both instances. In Katzberg, a university professor who had been removed as department chairman during an investigation about misallocation of funds brought an action against university officials, seeking damages for an alleged violation of his liberty interest under the state constitutional Due Process Clause (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a)). Specifically, the complaint alleged that plaintiff had not been granted a "name clearing" hearing guaranteed by Codd v. Velger (1977) 429 U.S. 624, 97 S.Ct. 882, 51 L.Ed.2d 92. Finding that defendants had offered an adequate name clearing hearing to plaintiff and that this hearing was the sole remedy for the asserted liberty interest violation, the trial judge granted summary judgment in their favor. The Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, affirmed.

(1) "It is clear that the due process clause of article I, section 7(a) is self-executing, and that even without any effectuating legislation, all branches of government are required to comply with its terms. Furthermore, it also is clear that, like many other constitutional provisions, this section supports an action, brought by a private plaintiff against a proper defendant, for declaratory relief or for injunction. ... The question presented here is whether, assuming the complaint states a violation of plaintiff's due process liberty interest, plaintiff may maintain an action for monetary damages to remedy the asserted violation of his due process liberty interests under article I, section 7(a), on the facts alleged." (29 C.4th 307.)

(2) More than 30 years ago, Bivens recognized the right of a party to recover damages for the violation of a constitutional right in an action against federal agents. Bivens, which dealt with the Fourth Amendment, did not ask whether that Amendment was intended to provide an action for damages, or whether this intent could be inferred from the provision. Instead, it created a cause of action for damages, i.e., a "constitutional tort" to remedy a Fourth Amendment violation, even though neither Congress nor the Fourth Amendment provided for this remedy. In so doing, Bivens emphasized that (a) there existed no special factors counseling hesitation; (b) there was no equally effective alternative remedy; and (c) there was no explicit congressional declaration that persons could not recover money damages in the circumstances involved. (29 C.4th 307.) However, subsequent U.S. Supreme Court decisions, and many of the recent out-of-state cases, have declined to recognize constitutional tort actions for money damages. (29 C.4th 308.)

(3) California cases have taken a different approach from the "constitutional tort" analysis of Bivens and its progeny. Instead of focusing on the situations in which a court should create a tort action premised upon violation of a constitutional provision, most recent California cases focus on whether the provision at issue was intended, either expressly or impliedly, to afford relief in damages, and conclude that there is no action for damages to remedy a violation of the state Constitution. (29 C.4th 309, citing Leger v. Stockton Unified School Dist., supra, Gates v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 481, 38 C.R.2d 489, Supp., infra, §303, and other decisions.) (29 C.4th 313.)

(b) Analytical framework. "[W]e conclude it is appropriate to employ the following framework for determining the existence of a damages action to remedy an asserted constitutional violation," combining the intent-based analysis adopted by recent California Court of Appeal decisions with the policy-based factors that have been considered in the "constitutional tort" cases. (29 C.4th 317.)

(1) "First, we shall inquire whether there is evidence from which we may find or infer, within the constitutional provision at issue, an affirmative intent either to authorize or to withhold a damages action to remedy a violation. In undertaking this inquiry we shall consider the language and history of the constitutional provision at issue, including whether it contains guidelines, mechanisms, or procedures implying a monetary remedy, as well as any pertinent common law history. If we find any such intent, we shall give it effect." (29 C.4th 317.)

(2) "Second, if no affirmative intent either to authorize or to withhold a damages remedy is found, we shall undertake the 'constitutional tort' analysis adopted by Bivens and its progeny. Among the relevant factors in this analysis are whether an adequate remedy exists, the extent to which a constitutional tort action would change established tort law, and the nature and significance of the constitutional provision. If we find that these factors militate against recognizing the constitutional tort, our inquiry ends. If, however, we find that these factors favor recognizing a constitutional tort, we also shall consider the existence of any special factors counseling hesitation in recognizing a damages action, including deference to legislative judgment, avoidance of adverse policy consequences, considerations of government fiscal policy, practical issues of proof, and the competence of courts to assess particular types of damages." (29 C.4th 317.)

(c) Application: Intent.

(1) The Due Process Clause of Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), states: "A person may not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This language does not explicitly disclose an intent either to authorize or to withhold damages as a remedy for violation of the provision. (29 C.4th 318.)

(2) Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), which was added to the state Constitution in 1974 by the adoption of Proposition 7, was designed to make clear that the due process right applies not only in criminal prosecutions, but also affords a general civil right. There is no evidence that the drafters of the 1974 revision considered the issue of money damages as a remedy. Nor is there any discussion of this issue in the debates that preceded the adoption of the earlier version of the Due Process Clause. Moreover, there is nothing in the 1974 ballot material to suggest that the voters intended to create a damages remedy. (29 C.4th 318.)

(3) Not only does Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), set forth no explicit indication of a right to damages, it contains no "guidelines, mechanisms, or procedures" supporting an inference that the provision was intended to afford this remedy. (29 C.4th 320.)

(4) Because there is no indication that a damages remedy was either intended or foreclosed, it is necessary to consider whether a constitutional tort action for damages should be recognized. (29 C.4th 322.)

(d) Application: Constitutional tort.

(1) Other adequate remedies were available to plaintiff. For example, he could have sought mandamus under C.C.P. 1085 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §6) to compel defendants to hold a name-clearing hearing. In fact, doing so would have been more efficient than waiting and suing for money damages. Also, the delay in affording a hearing could have been remedied by filing a defamation action. Finally, plaintiff could have sought to establish a violation of his due process liberty interest by seeking injunctive or declaratory relief. (29 C.4th 325.)

(2) Plaintiff argued that a constitutional tort action for damages would not change existing tort law, because of the existence of C.C. 1708 and 3333. However, the former section, which provides in part that every person is bound to abstain from infringing on the rights of another person, merely states a general principle of law, but it hardly provides support for the novel legal proposition that a violation of Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), gives rise to a cause of action for damages outside the parameters of recognized tort law. And the latter provision, rather than being a substantive statute, merely prescribes the general measure of damages in tort cases. (29 C.4th 327.)

(3) The due process liberty interest of Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), is both important and fundamental, and this factor, in the abstract, favors recognition of a constitutional tort action for damages. However, the availability of adequate alternative remedies weighs against recognition of such an action, and this factor deserves greater emphasis than the nature of the right violated. (29 C.4th 328.) (See Simi Valley v. Superior Court (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1077, 1085, 4 C.R.3d 468 [under Katzberg, action for damages is permitted where state Constitution violation is "tied" to common law or statutory right such as false arrest, false imprisonment, or wrongful termination based on violation of public policy; recovery denied absent that showing].)

In Degrassi v. Cook, a city council member sued city officials and others for damages for infringement of her free speech rights in violation of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a). Plaintiff alleged that defendants hindered her ability to fulfill her duties, by filing a defamation suit and other conduct, because of their opposition to her position on an issue. The trial judge entered judgment on demurrer for defendants, and the Court of Appeal affirmed on the ground that Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), does not support a cause of action for damages. Held, affirmed. The court followed the analytical framework enunciated in Katzberg, and employed the same reasoning with respect to Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), that it had previously used regarding Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a). However, the following additional points were made:

(a) The Free Speech Clause of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), states: "Every person may freely speak, write and publish his or her sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this right." Reasoning that if the language "being responsible for the abuse of this right" implicitly recognizes the propriety of a damages suit for defamation, plaintiff argued that if the provision is to be interpreted as recognizing that actions for damages are appropriate for an abuse of the free speech right, then it should also be construed as allowing a cause of action for interference with that right. However, "[m]erely because the provision, as enacted in 1849, reenacted in 1879, and revised in 1974, implicitly contemplated the continued existence of a long-established common law action for defamation ... does not suggest or imply that it also was intended to create a new cause of action for damages to remedy a violation of the free speech right." (29 C.4th 338, 339.)

(b) Like Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a) was added in 1974 by the adoption of Proposition 7. There is no evidence from which to infer an intent that this provision itself permits an action for damages to remedy a violation. (29 C.4th 339.)

(c) Plaintiff had meaningful alternative remedies. She could have sought mandamus or an injunction against the challenged conduct under either C.C.P. 1085 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §6) or under the Brown Act (Govt.C. 54953 et seq.; see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §22). Had she done so, much of the conduct of which she now complains might have been avoided. (29 C.4th 342.)

(d) Plaintiff based her free speech claim essentially on allegations that defendants improperly frustrated her ability to exercise the duties of a local legislator (because defendants disagreed with her approach and with her views). "In circumstances such as these, there is reason for concern that a damages action might 'impose too heavy, or too erratic, a penalty' ... and that the threat of such damages improperly might chill the political process. These risks are increased in the absence of an objectively ascertainable measure of damages, and this also is so when 'the amount awarded depends upon the measure of the damage suffered by the particular plaintiff rather than the measure of fault on the part of the defendant. ... Accordingly, we are extremely reluctant to endorse a cause of action that would be subject to post hoc judicial scrutiny and assessment of damages the kind of political differences, squabbles, and perceived slights that are inherent in a representative government body such as a city council. ... Even assuming that the type of conduct alleged in the complaint constitutes a violation of the free speech clause by defendants, we conclude that money damages simply are not an appropriate remedy." (29 C.4th 343.)

(2) No Cause of Action Recognized: Richards v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (2006) 139 C.A.4th 304, 42 C.R.3d 782, held that the Due Process Clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a)) does not authorize a damages action by a restaurant owner challenging the suspension of an alcoholic beverage license. "Courts that have carefully considered the question have held that this provision does not authorize an action for money damages to remedy a violation." (139 C.A.4th 317, citing Katzberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2002) 29 C.4th 300, 127 C.R.2d 482, 58 P.3d 339, text, p. 67.)

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

7. Causation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 18

[§ 18] Causation.

Causation analysis differs depending on whether tort liability is based on intentional or negligent acts. (See 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1 [comparative fault and intentional torts]; 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 362; 73 Cal. L. Rev. 1735 [Causation in Tort Law]; on proximate cause requirement in negligence cases, see infra, §1181 et seq.)

In Tate v. Canonica (1960) 180 C.A.2d 898, 5 C.R. 28, a cause of action was upheld for wrongful death, where the death was brought about by intentional acts causing mental distress resulting in the decedent's suicide. (See infra, §461.) The court first observed that "[t]he law has for a long time recognized a distinction between intentional and negligent torts, and has generally recognized fewer defenses, and been more inclined to find that defendant's conduct was the legal cause of the harm complained of, where the tort is intentional. ... Indeed, it appears that many of the limitations upon liability that are subsumed under the doctrine of 'proximate cause,' as usually expounded in negligence cases do not apply to intentional torts." (180 C.A.2d 904.) It is necessary only that the conduct have been a substantial factor in bringing about an injury of the type intended; the intervention of new and independent forces, even though they may be tortious or criminal, is of no importance. "[I]t is thus made clear that the notion of independent intervening cause has no place in the law of intentional torts, so long as there is a factual chain of causation." (180 C.A.2d 907.) (See United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. American Employer's Ins. Co. (1984) 159 C.A.3d 277, 285, 205 C.R. 460 [quoting Tate and holding that insured's act of setting fire to trash behind building was wilful act within meaning of exclusionary provision of Ins.C. 533].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

8. New Torts and Tort Reform.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 19

[§ 19] In General.

New torts are recognized continually. California, which has long recognized that "[f]or every wrong there is a remedy" (C.C. 3523), has allowed for new torts through both the legislative and judicial process. (Smith v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 491, 496, 198 C.R. 829, infra, §750, citing the text; see Buxbom v. Smith (1944) 23 C.2d 535, 546, 145 P.2d 305, infra, §747 [interference with prospective business relations or advantages]; State Rubbish Collectors Assn. v. Siliznoff (1952) 38 C.2d 330, 336, 240 P.2d 282, infra, §461 [intentional causing of emotional distress]; Scott v. McPheeters (1939) 33 C.A.2d 629, 637, 92 P.2d 678, infra, §728 [right of action for injury to unborn child]; Aweeka v. Bonds (1971) 20 C.A.3d 278, 281, 97 C.R. 650, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §707 [retaliatory eviction by landlord].)

A classic example is the action for violation of the right of privacy, which developed when it was recognized that an interest in privacy existed that was not adequately protected by the law of defamation. (See infra, §651.)

Many courts and commentators emphasize the judicial creativity in the development of tort law. Thus, in United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1947) 332 U.S. 301, 67 S.Ct. 1604, 91 L.Ed. 2067, the Court, while rejecting a new basis of tort liability, made this observation: "We would not deny the Government's basic premise of the law's capacity for growth, or that it must include the creative work of judges. Soon all law would become antiquated strait jacket and then dead letter, if that power were lacking. And the judicial hand would stiffen in mortmain if it had no part in the work of creation." (67 S.Ct. 1611, 91 L.Ed. 2075.) And in Rosefield v. Rosefield (1963) 221 C.A.2d 431, 435, 34 C.R. 479, infra, §729, the court said, citing the text: "The concept that there are no causes of action except those that have been recognized by precedent, assumed at some point in the common law, was not accepted generally at early common law, nor is it accepted today."

Significant changes in the law of torts occur legislatively as well. (See C.C. 1708.7 [stalking].) An important example of this kind of legislation in California is the Medical Insurance Compensation Reform Act (MICRA). (See infra, §940 et seq.) Tort reform may be effected by way of initiative, such as in the case of the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (Proposition 51). (See infra, §52 et seq.)

Commentary on new torts and tort reform is extensive. (See 44 Cal. L. Rev. 40 [insult and outrage]; 73 Cal. L. Rev.

548 [symposium on alternative compensation schemes]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 463 [Creative Continuity in the Law of Torts]; 66 *Harv. L. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

8. New Torts and Tort Reform.

b. Intentional Torts: Prima Facie Tort Doctrine.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 20

[§ 20] Intentional Torts: Prima Facie Tort Doctrine.

Under the "prima facie tort" doctrine, intentional harm resulting in damage may be actionable even though the harm is outside the scope of a traditional tort. (See 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §36 et seq.; 16 A.L.R.3d 1191 [prima facie tort].)

The Second Restatement, §870, sets forth the doctrine as follows: "One who intentionally causes injury to another is subject to liability to the other for that injury, if his conduct is generally culpable and not justifiable under the circumstances. This liability may be imposed although the actor's conduct does not come within a traditional category of tort liability." (See Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 C.4th 714, 731, 80 C.R.2d 506, 968 P.2d 65, infra, §1099, citing the text [actor is subject to liability for intentionally injurious act only if conduct "is generally culpable and not justifiable under the circumstances" (Rest.2d, Torts §870)].)

The Comments to §870 explain its nature and scope, and the following excerpts are significant:

Comment a. The Restatement rule "is intended to supply a generalization for tortious conduct involving harm intentionally inflicted. Generalizations have long existed for negligence liability, involving conduct producing unreasonable risk of harm to others ... , and for strict liability, involving the carrying on of an activity that is abnormally dangerous. ... As for conduct intentionally causing harm, however, it has traditionally been assumed that the several established intentional torts developed separately and independently and not in accordance with any unifying principle." Rest.2d, Torts §870 and its comments purport to "supply that unifying principle and to explain the basis for the development of the more recently created intentional torts" and "to serve as a guide for determining when liability should be imposed for harm that was intentionally inflicted even though the conduct does not come within the requirements of one of the well established and named intentional torts."

Comment b. An intentional tort is "one in which the actor intends to produce the harm that ensues; it is not enough that he intends to perform the act. He intends to produce the harm when he desires to bring about that consequence by performing the act. ... [H]e also is treated as intending that consequence if he knows or believes that the consequence is certain, or substantially certain, to result from his act." When the claim is novel, "the court may decide to limit the liability to the situation in which the defendant acted for the purpose of producing the harm involved." The doctrine of "transferred intent" applied to such torts as assault and battery (see infra, §384; Rest.2d, Torts §§16, 32, 43) has no application to newly developing torts arising under the prima facie tort doctrine.

Comment d. Some categories of intentional tort that have been recognized in the exercise of this principle "are still in the process of development. A prime example of a tort presently not fully developed is intentional infliction of emotional distress; its contours are not yet fully clear. ... Other categories of fairly recent development include injurious falsehood, interference with contractual relations and interference with prospective economic advantage."

Comment e. The determination of which intentionally caused harms deserve a tort remedy is made by resorting to a balancing process involving four factors: "(1) the nature and seriousness of the harm to the injured party, (2) the nature and significance of the interests promoted by the actor's conduct, (3) the character of the means used by the actor and (4) the actor's motive."

Comment j. "The new tort may be closely related to an established tort and thus allow tort recovery when a restrictive rule of the traditional tort would not permit it. For example, the tort of assault has traditionally required the creation of apprehension of an imminent battery. Some cases have permitted recovery when the threat is not imminent but still is a very real one of a serious battery, to take place in the near future. ... In determining whether a new tort can appropriately eliminate a restrictive feature of a traditional tort it is important to give careful consideration to the nature of the restriction. If it came about as a historical accident or for reasons that no longer have real significance, the new tort without it may serve a useful purpose. If the restriction expresses an important policy of the law against liability, however, the significance of that policy should continue regardless of the name of the tort involved or the date of its origin."

Particular applications of the general principle covered in Rest.2d, Torts §870 are set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §871 (intentional harm to a property interest of another) and Rest.2d, Torts §871A (intentional creation of civil or criminal liability of another).

Dowds* (2007) 152 C.A.4th 518, 526, 61 C.R.3d 304, Supp., supra, §19 ["willful misconduct" is not a separate tort, but simply an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care; pleading requirements are similar to negligence but stricter]; CACI, No. 1321 [Transferred Intent].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

9. Tort Recovery Precluded by Public Policy: Perjury or False Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 21

[§ 21] Tort Recovery Precluded by Public Policy: Perjury or False Defense.

Recognition of tort recovery may be precluded by public policy. Thus, it has been held that a tort action cannot be based on the giving of false testimony (Taylor v. Bidwell (1884) 65 C. 489, 490, 4 P. 491) or the assertion of a fraudulent defense (MacCharles v. Bilson (1986) 186 C.A.3d 954, 956, 231 C.R. 155) in the course of litigation.

(1) Action After Judgment. In Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 99 C.R. 393, plaintiffs, relying on theories including intentional infliction of emotional distress (see infra, §449 et seq.) and malicious prosecution (see infra, §469 et seq.), sued to recover for damages allegedly resulting from litigation arising out of an aborted real estate exchange. The litigation had terminated in judgments adverse to plaintiffs, who had been named as defendants. Thereafter, plaintiffs acquired information tending to show that the judgments rested on a false document and perjured testimony, and brought the instant action against the plaintiffs in the first action, and against other persons purportedly involved in the alleged perjury. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendants affirmed.

(a) No cause of action for malicious prosecution was stated because the element of favorable termination of the prior proceeding (see infra, §§477, 498) was lacking. (22 C.A.3d 638, citing the text.)

(b) Favorable termination need not be shown to recover for intentional infliction of emotional distress; and collection of a debt by perjured testimony and a false document is as outrageous as any of the means condemned in prior cases (see infra, §458). (22 C.A.3d 640.)

(c) Nevertheless, compelling considerations of policy preclude recovery:

(1) Recognition of a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress on these facts would subvert the rule of intrinsic fraud. "In almost every case in which the prior judgment was procured by the adverse party through perjured testimony or a false document, severe emotional distress would be a substantially certain result. Thus, in virtually every such case, the doctrine of finality of judgments could be avoided merely by predicated liability in the second action on the theory of intentional infliction of emotional distress rather than malicious prosecution." (22 C.A.3d 641; on rule denying relief for intrinsic fraud, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §242.)

(2) Liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress is subject to the defense of privilege similar to that in defamation cases, including an absolute privilege analogous to that set forth in C.C. 47(2) (now C.C. 47(b)). (22 C.A.3d 641.) "The privilege is accorded not only to parties but to witnesses, even where their testimony is allegedly perjured and malicious." (22 C.A.3d 641.) As Prosser says, "The resulting lack of any really effective civil remedy against perjurers is simply part of the price that is paid for witnesses who are free from intimidation by the possibility of civil liability for what they say." (22 C.A.3d 641.)

(d) "Thus, with considerable regret and dissatisfaction, we conclude that the facts alleged and judicially noticed do not entitle plaintiffs to any relief. ... [W]e recognize that the wrong in this case is a most grievous one, and we should be glad to redress it if a rule could be devised that would remedy the evil without producing mischiefs far worse. Reluctance on the part of witnesses to testify for fear of subsequent harassment by unfounded claims of perjury or endless litigation in which nothing was ever finally determined would be worse than occasional miscarriages of justice." (22 C.A.3d 642.)

(2) Action After Settlement. In Carden v. Getzoff (1987) 190 C.A.3d 907, 235 C.R. 698, plaintiff anesthesiologist was involved in a dissolution proceeding with his wife. For use in settlement negotiations, defendant accountants prepared a valuation of the goodwill of plaintiff's anesthesiology practice, and testified at the trial that it was based on a comparison of the valuation of goodwill of three other comparable anesthesiology medical practices. Plaintiff brought this action for abuse of process (see infra, §517 et seq.) and intentional infliction of emotional distress (see infra, §449 et seq.), alleging that he had been forced to settle the dissolution proceeding and pay his wife $ 50,000 as her community property portion of the goodwill; that defendants' testimony was false, in that the three purported anesthesiologists with comparable practices did not exist; and that plaintiff was on a staff as part of a rotation group at a medical center, had no patients of his own, and thus had no goodwill. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. The publications (report and testimony) were made in the course of the dissolution proceeding, and were absolutely privileged. (190 C.A.3d 913, 914.) And, as held by the Supreme Court in Taylor v. Bidwell, supra, injurious perjury and suborning of perjury cannot be the basis of a civil action. "[W]hen there is a good faith intention to bring a suit, even malicious publications 'are protected as part of the price paid for affording litigants the utmost freedom of access to the courts.' ... Otherwise, adverse witnesses would always be fearful of subsequent civil suits and would be extremely hesitant or unwilling to testify. Appellant's potential remedies are to assist in the prosecution of criminal charges; to report any allegations of dereliction to the Board of Accountancy; and to attempt to litigate any claims he might have against his trial attorney." (190 C.A.3d 915.)

(3) False Defense in Main Action. In MacCharles v. Bilson, supra, plaintiff in a personal injury action filed an amended complaint alleging second and third causes of action for fraud and negligent misrepresentation against defendant and defendant's attorneys, claiming that they intended to offer as a false affirmative defense a settlement and release executed by plaintiff in reliance on intentional or negligent misrepresentations that defendant had no substantial assets beyond his insurance policy limit. Alleged damages were "that he will now be forced to litigate the invalidity of the release in the trial of the first cause of action, and this will cause delay in recovery of judgment, extra litigation expense and attorney's fees, and mental and emotional distress." (186 C.A.3d 956.) Held, judgments for defendants on demurrer to these causes of action affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff elected to disregard the settlement by continuing to pursue his first cause of action against defendant, and so far he has not suffered any limitation on his right to recover. If defendant raises the release as an affirmative defense, plaintiff will have the opportunity to prove that it is invalid. If he does not prevail, and is limited to the amount of the settlement, he may seek recourse against his own attorney for his reliance on opposing counsel's representations; and "[t]he issue of attorney liability for misrepresentations to opposing attorneys in settlement negotiations would then arise when appellant's attorney sought a remedy for the alleged misrepresentations on which he relied to his detriment." (186 C.A.3d 956, footnote 5.)

(b) No authority supports plaintiff's theory that he may, in the same action he maintains against a defendant, also sue the defendant and the defendant's attorney for raising a false defense in that action. And Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 C.3d 841, 92 C.R. 179, 479 P.2d 379, holding that a defendant may not file a cross-complaint for malicious prosecution in the action which defendant contends is being maliciously prosecuted, supports the conclusion that "a plaintiff may not, in the very same action, assert independent causes of action against the defendant and defendant's attorneys for asserting false defenses to plaintiff's main claim." (186 C.A.3d 957.) The reasons include a danger of confusion and prejudice of the issues, the creation of conflicts of interest between attorney and client, and the risk that parties may be deterred from asserting bona fide claims. (186 C.A.3d 957.)

(c) If, during the trial of the first cause of action, defendants offer in evidence a forged settlement agreement or perjured testimony, plaintiff would be expected to meet and defeat that evidence at trial; he would have no independent cause of action against defendants for the mental distress suffered. (186 C.A.3d 957, citing Kachig v. Boothe, supra.) "By long-standing tradition he is not entitled to recover attorney's fees or for the mental stress of litigating. Appellant cannot avoid long-established procedures by labeling his opponent's conduct as 'fraud' or 'negligent misrepresentation.'" (186 C.A.3d 958.)

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

10. Motive in Tort Law.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 22

[§ 22] Motive in Tort Law.

The older cases frequently declared that a malicious or improper motive alone cannot make a lawful act tortious. (See Fisher v. Feige (1902) 137 C. 39, 41, 69 P. 618; Hornaday v. Hornaday (1949) 95 C.A.2d 384, 392, 213 P.2d 91 ["a mere gesture, however vicious, is not an actionable tort"]; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 691.)

This statement is harmless enough but its implications are somewhat misleading. Motive is sometimes a test of the legality of the act; e.g., the spite fence as a nuisance (Bar Due v. Cox (1920) 47 C.A. 713, 715, 190 P. 1056; see 26 Cal. L. Rev. 691; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §373), the tort of malicious prosecution (see infra, §469 et seq.), and the tort of interference with another's business or economic advantage (infra, §741 et seq.). (See generally Dobbs, The Law of Torts §25; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §17.)

Malice is also relevant in connection with the defense of conditional privilege (see infra, §§131 et seq., 591 et seq.), where exemplary damages are sought (see infra, §1572 et seq.), and where a debtor relies on a discharge in bankruptcy, which does not release liabilities based on a judgment "for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another." (Fitzgerald v. Herzer (1947) 78 C.A.2d 127, 130, 177 P.2d 364 [default judgment in action against automobile driver alleged to have been grossly careless and reckless; citing 11 U.S.C., §523(a)(6)]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §493.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Nature of Torts and Tort Actions.

11. Survival of Tort Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 23

[§ 23] Survival of Tort Liability.

(1) Development of Law. Traditionally, survivability was the rule, and causes of action that abated on death were the exception. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §65.) Thus, causes of action for torts to real or personal property were declared survivable by the original Civil Code. (C.C. 954 ["a thing in action, arising out of the violation of a right of property ... may be transferred by the owner"]; see George v. McManus (1915) 27 C.A. 414, 416, 150 P. 73 [damage to automobile in collision]; Smith v. Stuthman (1947) 79 C.A.2d 708, 709, 181 P.2d 123 [slander of title to real property]; Sanders v. Allen (1948) 83 C.A.2d 362, 367, 188 P.2d 760 [constructive eviction]; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 456; 40 A.L.R.2d 533 [personal property]; on survival of actions generally, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §64 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §295.)

California formerly followed the common law rule that actions for personal torts, such as personal injuries and wrongful death, abated on the death of the injured party or the tortfeasor. (See Clark v. Goodwin (1915) 170 C. 527, 529, 150 P. 357; De La Torre v. Johnson (1927) 200 C. 754, 757, 254 P. 1105; Blodgett v. Greenfield (1929) 101 C.A. 399, 400, 281 P. 694; Singley v. Bigelow (1930) 108 C.A. 436, 441, 291 P. 899; Rideaux v. Torgrimson (1940) 39 C.A.2d 273, 274, 102 P.2d 1104; Rest.2d, Torts §900(a)(1) [tort cause of action is discharged by death of either party in absence of survival statute]; 18 Cal. L. Rev. 44; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 289; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 716; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 254; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 343.)

A radical change in the law was made in Hunt v. Authier (1946) 28 C.2d 288, 169 P.2d 913, allowing an action for wrongful death against the administrator of the deceased tortfeasor on the theory that personal injury or wrongful death constitute an injury to "property," i.e., the lessening of the plaintiffs' estate and deprivation of their pecuniary interest in future support from the victim. The action was therefore expressly survivable under former Prob.C. 574, which allowed an action against a tortfeasor's personal representative for destruction of the property of the plaintiff. (28 C.2d 296.) The Hunt theory was followed and expanded in subsequent cases. (See Moffat v. Smith (1949) 33 C.2d 905, 907, 206 P.2d 353 [personal injury action against executor of tortfeasor]; Mecum v. Ott (1949) 92 C.A.2d 735, 739, 207 P.2d 831 [same; "regardless of the proportion of damages sought for personal injuries as compared with damage to property, in a suit founded on tort, if the complaint alleges destruction of property interests or estate, the cause does not abate at the death of a tortfeasor"]; Nash v. Wright (1947) 82 C.A.2d 475, 477, 186 P.2d 691 [wrongful death action by heirs of deceased victim against executor of tortfeasor]; Los Angeles v. Howard (1947) 80 C.A.2d 728, 730, 182 P.2d 278 [employer's right of action against third-party tortfeasor, for reimbursement for money expended on behalf of injured employee, survives death of tortfeasor]; Smith v. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1948) 86 C.A.2d 581, 591, 195 P.2d 457 [cause of action for negligent failure to pass on insurance application until after applicant's death was probably survivable, independently of Hunt doctrine, as contractual or quasi-contractual]; Smith v. Stuthman (1947) 79 C.A.2d 708, 710, 181 P.2d 123 [cause of action for slander of title probably survivable independently as involving tort to property].)

Legislation adopted in 1949 provided for survival of personal injury and wrongful death actions. (See Cort v. Steen (1950) 36 C.2d 437, 440, 224 P.2d 723; Grant v. McAuliffe (1953) 41 C.2d 859, 862, 264 P.2d 944, infra, §202; Hume v. Lacey (1952) 112 C.A.2d 147, 150, 245 P.2d 672; Smith v. Finley (1952) 112 C.A.2d 599, 600, 246 P.2d 989; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 112; 36 Cal. L. Rev. 75, 657.) The scope of the 1949 statutes was uncertain as to other personal torts, such as false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, defamation, or invasion of privacy. On the other hand, there was no express language negating the principle of the Hunt case that any tort diminishing a person's estate is an injury to property, or repudiating the policy set forth in that case in favor of survivability of tort claims generally. (See Casey v. Katz (1952) 114 C.A.2d 391, 393, 250 P.2d 291 [malicious prosecution survives death of tortfeasor, as injury to property]; 37 Cal. L. Rev. 72, 659; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 229 [discussing superseded court of appeal decision holding false imprisonment survivable]; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 575 [remedies of person libeled in a will].)

These issues were resolved in 1961 when the Legislature abolished the classification of survivable and nonsurvivable causes of action, and made all survive. (See former Prob.C. 573.)

The current survival statutes, enacted in 1992 and set forth in C.C.P. 377.10 et seq., are discussed in detail in 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §518 et seq.

(2) Death of Injured Party. Death of the injured party does not abate the action. (C.C.P. 377.20(a); see C.C.P. 376(f) [parent's or guardian's right of action for personal injuries to minor child].)

(3) Death of Wrongdoer or Other Person Liable in Damages. Death of the wrongdoer or other liable person does not abate the action. (C.C.P. 377.20(a); see C.C.P. 376(g)(2) [action for injuries to minor child].)

(4) Indemnity Insurance. All policies insuring against loss or damage for personal injuries must provide for liability of the insurer on a judgment against the insured or the insured's personal representative in any action that survives. (Ins.C. 11580(b)(2).)

(5) Filing Claim Against Estate of Deceased Tortfeasor. Filing claims under Prob.C. 9100 et seq. is required in the case of actions brought against the estate of a deceased tortfeasor under the survival statutes. (See Hurlimann v. Bank of America (1956) 141 C.A.2d 801, 805, 297 P.2d 682; 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §620; on practice, see C.E.B., 1 Decedent Estate Practice, Chap. 12.)

(6) Limitations on Recoverable Damages. Recovery is prohibited of the following:

(a) Damages for pain, suffering, or disfigurement of a plaintiff who dies before judgment. (C.C.P. 377.34; cf. Sullivan v. Delta Air Lines (1997) 15 C.4th 288, 307, 63 C.R.2d 74, 935 P.2d 781, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §519 [damages are recoverable for pain, suffering, or disfigurement where plaintiff dies pending appeal from judgment awarding them].)

(b) Punitive damages against the personal representative or successor in interest of a deceased tortfeasor. (C.C.P. 377.42.)

(7) Imputation of Negligence. Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, the negligence of an estate's decedent affects the estate's recovery under a survival statute "to the same extent that it would have affected the decedent's recovery had the decedent survived." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(b).) In a survival claim, the representative acts as the decedent's alter ego. Thus, any defenses based on the decedent's conduct are available

The negligence of a beneficiary of the decedent's estate is not imputed to the estate merely because of his or her status as beneficiary. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(b).)

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 24

[§ 24] In General.

The general principle is that every person is liable for that person's own torts. (C.C. 1714(a); on liability for negligence of others, see infra, §1220 et seq.) The ancient common law rule that freed a wife from liability for her torts, but made the husband liable, was abolished by statute in 1913. (Former C.C. 171a; see Family C. 1000(a), 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §184 [marriage does not render married person liable for injury or damage caused by other spouse]; Rest.2d, Torts §895F [same].)

There are, however, certain qualifications on liability based on the capacity of the parties or on public policy. (On capacity of child, see infra, §25; on capacity of mentally disabled person, see infra, §26; on immunities of public entity, see infra, §226 et seq.; on immunities of public employee, see infra, §§348, 351 et seq.; on limitations on liability based on status of party generally, see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§225 et seq., 260 et seq., 279 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

2. Minors.

[§ 25] Minors.

A minor child is ordinarily liable for his or her torts but not for exemplary damages unless the child is capable of knowing that the act was wrongful. (Family C. 6600; see Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 310, 313, 253 P.2d 675 ["[s]tartling as this idea may be at first blush," legislative declaration is clear and this is general law]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §69; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.13; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 214; 42 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Infants §127 et seq.; 27 A.L.R.4th 15 [modern trends as to tort liability of child of tender years]; on parental liability for torts of child, see infra, §1227 et seq.; on duty of care owed by child, see infra, §998 et seq.) The theory of liability of a minor is compensation rather than moral guilt; the loss is imposed on the estate of the child rather than on that of the innocent injured person. (Ellis v. D'Angelo, supra, 116 C.A.2d 314.) But where a young child is involved, the generalization of Family C. 6600 is subject to qualification. The applicable rule is that a minor is liable "even though he lacks the mental development and capacity to recognize the wrongfulness of his conduct so long as he has the mental capacity to have the state of mind necessary to the commission of the particular tort with which he is charged." (Ellis v. D'Angelo, supra, 116 C.A.2d 315.)

In Ellis, plaintiff babysitter, hired by defendant parents, was attacked and knocked to the floor by defendant 4-year-old child, and suffered fractured arms and wrists. She sued for battery and negligence. Held, a cause of action was stated for battery but not for negligence. "[I]n the case of negligence, children have been recognized as a special group to whom a more or less subjective standard of conduct is to be applied, which will vary according to their age, intelligence and experience, so that in many cases immunity is conferred in effect by finding merely that there has been no negligence." (116 C.A.2d 314.) So a child of 4 is not liable for negligence because he does not have the mental capacity to realize that his or her conduct, not intended to harm, may nevertheless be reasonably expected to bring about that result. (116 C.A.2d 316.) However, the required mental capacity differs in a battery. "Thus as between a battery and negligent injury an infant may have the capacity to intend the violent contact which is essential to the commission of battery when the same infant would be incapable of realizing that his heedless conduct might foreseeably lead to injury to another which is the essential capacity of mind to create liability for negligence." (116 C.A.2d 315.) (See Singer v. Marx (1956) 144 C.A.2d 637, 641, 301 P.2d 440 [negligence and battery; following Ellis]; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 214 [criticizing Ellis].)

In Weisbart v. Flohr (1968) 260 C.A.2d 281, 67 C.R. 114, defendant 7-year-old boy told his 5-year-old neighbor to get off the lawn of his house or he would shoot her with his bow and arrow. He aimed it in her general direction and pulled back the bow string, and it went off and hit her in the eye. He testified that he only intended to frighten, and to shoot at her feet, but that the arrow was deflected by his thumb. Held, judgment for defendant reversed. His testimony showed that he knew the use of a bow and arrow, knew it was wrong to point it at a person, and had been warned not to shoot it at anyone. Hence, a motion for judgment in favor of plaintiff should have been granted. (260 C.A.2d 290.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

3. Mentally Disabled Persons.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 26

[§ 26] Mentally Disabled Persons.

(1) In General. Like a minor (see supra, §25), a person of unsound mind is ordinarily liable for torts but not for exemplary damages unless the person is capable of knowing that the act was wrongful. (C.C. 41; see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §69; 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 480; 33 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 95 [denial of capacity defense as violative of Americans with Disabilities Act]; 77 A.L.R.2d 625 [civil liability of mentally disordered person for assault or battery]; 49 A.L.R.3d 189 [liability of insane person for own negligence].)

Comparable principles govern. In Mullen v. Bruce (1959) 168 C.A.2d 494, 335 P.2d 945, plaintiff nurse was engaged to take care of defendant, an alcoholic patient in a sanitarium. In attempting to restrain defendant from leaving, plaintiff was struck, knocked down, and seriously injured. Judgment for damages for battery was affirmed. Conceding defendant's unsoundness of mind, the court, citing Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 310, 253 P.2d 675, supra, §25, held that the legislative intent to place tort liability of a child and an insane person on the same basis was clear. "Whether the defendant had sufficient capacity to intend the violent conduct essential to the commission of battery was a factual question for the trial judge." An insane or otherwise mentally disabled person, like a minor, is liable for a tort even though the person lacks the mental development and capacity to recognize the wrongfulness of the conduct so long as the person has the mental capacity to have the state of mind necessary to the commission of the particular tort charged. (168 C.A.2d 497.)

(2) Sudden and Unexpected Onset of Illness. In Bashi v. Wodarz (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1314, 53 C.R.2d 635, defendant was involved in an automobile accident with plaintiffs. There was evidence that the accident was due to the onset of defendant's sudden, unexpected mental illness. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) A line of appellate cases beginning with Waters v. Pacific Coast Dairy, Ltd. Mut. Comp. Ins. Co. (1942) 55 C.A.2d 789, 131 P.2d 588, has established the rule that a person who is suddenly stricken by an unexpected physical illness is not liable for negligence. However, the rule is the opposite with respect to persons stricken by a sudden, unexpected mental illness. This rule is codified in C.C. 41, which evidences the legislative intent to keep insane persons civilly liable for their torts. And by its terms, this statute applies regardless of the degree of fault of the insane, and thus covers negligence, as well as intentional torts. (45 C.A.4th 1318.)

(b) The California position is in accord with Rest.2d, Torts §283B, providing that mental deficiency does not relieve an actor from liability for conduct not conforming to the standard of a reasonable man under like circumstances, although this position has been criticized by scholars and by a few other jurisdictions. (45 C.A.4th 1321.) This California and Restatement position is based on a policy rationale. "Clearly the insane or mentally disabled individual is not considered at fault in the traditional sense. However, because such individuals do create harm, the general rationale is that they should be held financially responsible to those they harm. Therefore, mental disability is not a defense. Liability is therefore predicated on an objective reasonable person standard. Unlike the rationale behind suspension of a liability for sudden physical illness which is based on fault, the fault concept is not analogous to a sudden mental disability. Thus, we do not perceive any logical rationale for barring mental illness as a defense to negligence but allowing sudden mental illness as a complete defense. We conclude sudden mental illness may not be posed as a defense to harmful conduct and that the harm caused by such individual's behavior shall be judged on the objective reasonable person standard in the context of a negligence action as expressed in" C.C. 41. (45 C.A.4th 1323.)

C.C. 41 is intended to place a mentally disabled person in the same posture as a competent person, not in a legally worse position. For example, the statute does not preclude the mentally disabled person's assertion of the primary assumption of risk doctrine. (Herrle v. Estate of Marshall (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1761, 1765, 53 C.R.2d 713, infra, §1353.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

4. Liability Between Family Members.

a. Spouses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 27

[§ 27] Spouses.

(1) Former Rule of Immunity. The supposed policy of preserving the tranquility of the home was the principal support for the common law rule that neither spouse could sue the other for personal torts, such as assault and battery, committed during the marriage. (See Peters v. Peters (1909) 156 C. 32, 34, 103 P. 219 [husband against wife for assault and battery]; 11 Cal. L. Rev. 282; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 431; 75 So. Cal. L. Rev. 121 [domestic violence torts]; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 371.)

The archaic doctrine was followed in Cubbison v. Cubbison (1946) 73 C.A.2d 437, 438, 166 P.2d 387, an action by the wife against the husband for damages resulting from an automobile accident. The absurdity of the rule, as applied in this case, appeared from plaintiff's allegation that she and her husband were separated. (See Watson v. Watson (1952) 39 C.2d 305, 307, 246 P.2d 19 [same; plaintiff, after obtaining divorce, was estopped to evade the rule by asserting invalidity of marriage]; Paulus v. Bauder (1951) 106 C.A.2d 589, 592, 235 P.2d 422 [following Cubbison; tort committed after interlocutory divorce decree].)

Some relaxations, however, were recognized in this and other jurisdictions for the following situations and types of actions:

- (a) Purported marriage void. (See 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 372.)
- (b) Action by or against estate of spouse after death had dissolved the marriage. (See 1952 A.S. 652.)
- (c) Action for premarital tort. (See 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 373; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 438.)
- (d) Action against husband's employer. (See Foote v. Foote (1959) 170 C.A.2d 435, 438, 339 P.2d 188; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 633.)
- (e) Action for tort to property. (See Smith v. Stuthman (1947) 79 C.A.2d 708, 711, 181 P.2d 123 [suggesting that action for slander of title would lie by husband against wife]; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 432; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 371.)

(2) Abrogation of Immunity. Interspousal immunity has been repudiated in California, not only for intentional torts but for negligence as well.

(a) Intentional torts. The abrogation of the immunity doctrine took place in Self v. Self (1962) 58 C.2d 683, 26 C.R. 97, 376 P.2d 65, where defendant husband beat plaintiff wife and she sued for assault and battery. The court, reversing a summary judgment for defendant, reasoned as follows:

(1) The common law rule of interspousal immunity had a logical basis in the legal identity of the husband and wife. The married women's emancipation acts, giving the wife a legal personality, the right to own property, and to sue and be sued without joinder of the husband, removed that basis. In consequence, most American jurisdictions allowed one spouse to sue the other for a tort, intentional or negligent, to property. (58 C.2d 684, 685.)

(2) The immunity from liability for personal torts persisted, with a different rationalization: the danger of disturbing domestic peace by allowing these actions. This notion has been under constant attack. It is inconsistent with the theory allowing property actions; many states have rejected it; and it is out of line with modern thinking, which recognizes tort liability as a general rule, and gives immunity only for compelling reasons of public policy. (58 C.2d 685, 686, 689, 690.)

(3) Some support for the immunity doctrine could be found in the former statutory rule that damages for personal injury to a spouse were community property. It would have been incongruous for the wife to recover these damages from the husband when they immediately came under his control. But the 1957 amendment making these damages separate property of the injured spouse (see 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §41) "removed the last bar to the adoption of the more modern rule in this field." (58 C.2d 691.)

(b) Negligent torts. In Klein v. Klein (1962) 58 C.2d 692, 26 C.R. 102, 376 P.2d 70, the complaint alleged that defendant husband invited plaintiff, his newly married wife, on a fishing trip in his pleasure boat; that, knowing she was engaged in cleaning its exterior, he negligently allowed the deck to become slippery and failed to warn her of the danger. Held, she was entitled to recover damages for a broken leg resulting from a fall. The court, starting with the holding in the Self case, saw no reason to adopt a different rule for negligence actions, despite the fact that different rules were still followed in California in suits by a child against a parent (see infra, §28): "[B]ecause these cases have made a distinction between the two types of tort in the parent-child relationship, there is no logical basis for extending the distinction to the husband-wife relationship." (58 C.2d 696.) And the fraud and collusion argument was answered by quoting from Emery v. Emery (1955) 45 C.2d 421, 289 P.2d 218, infra, §29. (58 C.2d 695, 696.) A strong dissenting opinion (two justices) maintained that any change in the rule should have been made only by the Legislature. (58 C.2d 699.)

(3) Commentary. The Self and Klein cases received much favorable comment. (See, e.g., 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 456; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 448.) Other commentary on interspousal liability includes the following: Dobbs, The Law of Torts §279; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.10; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 449 [problem of source of recovery]; 79 *Harv. L. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

4. Liability Between Family Members.

b. Parent and Child.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 28

[§ 28] Parent and Child.

(1) Former Rule of Immunity. The public policy favoring preservation of the parental right to discipline children formerly operated to prohibit a suit by an unemancipated child against its parent or one who stood in loco parentis to the child. It was immaterial that the action was for a motor vehicle tort and that an insurance company handled the defense. (See Trudell v. Leatherby (1931) 212 C. 678, 680, 300 P. 7; Perkins v. Robertson (1956) 140 C.A.2d 536, 539, 295 P.2d 972; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 342; 19 Hastings L. J. 201; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 286; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 368; 6 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 195; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 374.)

The same rule applied to an action for wrongful death based on negligence. (Perkins v. Robertson, supra, 140 C.A.2d 544 [defendant stepfather sued by children for wrongful death of their mother].) And the immunity was extended to an action against the parent's employer, on the theory that the employer could recoup any loss suffered through the parent employee's negligence by bringing an action against that employee. (See Myers v. Tranquility Irr. Dist. (1938) 26 C.A.2d 385, 386, 79 P.2d 419; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 218.)

The courts recognized two major exceptions:

(a) If the child had been emancipated, i.e., freed from parental control (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §298 et seq.), the reasons for immunity were no longer valid and the action could be brought. (See Martinez v. Southern Pac. Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 244, 253, 288 P.2d 868.)

(2) Abrogation of Immunity. In Gibson v. Gibson (1971) 3 C.3d 914, 92 C.R. 288, 479 P.2d 648, the complaint alleged the following: Plaintiff, the unemancipated minor son of defendant, was riding at night in a car driven by defendant and towing a Jeep. Defendant father negligently stopped the car on a highway, and negligently instructed plaintiff to go out and correct the position of the Jeep's wheels. While following these directions plaintiff was struck by another vehicle. Judgment for defendant on demurrer was rendered on the authority of Trudell v. Leatherby, supra. Held, reversed, and Trudell overruled. (3 C.3d 923.)

(a) Origin and decline of blanket immunity rule. Interspousal immunity (see supra, §27) appears in early common law, but parental immunity is an invention of American courts, only 80 years old. It originated in Mississippi in Hewlett v. George (1891) 68 Miss. 703, 9 So. 885, which was followed in a number of other states. (3 C.3d 916, 917.) Courts soon began to fashion qualifications and exceptions to the rule, such as for wilful or malicious torts, actions against the estate of a deceased parent, actions against a parent in a business capacity, and actions against a parent's employer. (3 C.3d 918.) The doctrine was further weakened by Emery v. Emery, supra, relating to actions between siblings (see infra, §29), and by Self v. Self (1962) 58 C.2d 683, 26 C.R. 97, 376 P.2d 65, and Klein v. Klein (1962) 58 C.2d 692, 26 C.R. 102, 376 P.2d 70, abrogating interspousal immunity (see supra, §27). These decisions eliminated two of the three grounds for immunity: disruption of family harmony and fraud or collusion between family "adversaries." (3 C.3d 918 et seq.)

(b) Approach granting immunity for exercise of parental authority or discipline. The remaining ground was not covered in the Emery, Self, and Klein cases, but was carefully examined in the Wisconsin case of Goller v. White (1963) 20 Wis.2d 402, 122 N.W.2d 193. That case held that immunity should exist where the alleged negligent act involves an exercise of parental authority, or ordinary parental discretion in providing care. And there is merit in this approach of rejecting the blind application of traditional negligence concepts to the unique parent-child relationship. "Obviously, a parent may exercise certain authority over a minor child which would be tortious if directed toward someone else. For example, a parent may spank a child who has misbehaved without being liable for battery, or he may temporarily order the child to stay in his room as punishment, yet not be held responsible for false imprisonment." (3 C.3d 921.)

(c) No immunity should be provided for negligent acts. The implication in Goller that, within certain aspects of the relationship, a parent may freely act negligently is unsound; the Emery approach of reasonable parental discipline should be followed. "Although Emery involved wilful parental misconduct, we think this reasoning is applicable to a parent's negligent exercise of his familial duties and powers. In short, although a parent has the prerogative and the duty to exercise authority over his minor child, this prerogative must be exercised within reasonable limits. The standard to be applied is the traditional one of reasonableness, but viewed in light of the parental role. Thus, we think the proper test of a parent's conduct is this: what would an ordinarily reasonable and prudent parent have done in similar circumstances." (3 C.3d 921.)

(d) Policy reasons for abrogating immunity. Policy reasons exists for abrogating parental immunity. First, the basic legal principle is that "when there is negligence, the rule is liability, immunity is the exception." This "fundamental doctrine of compensation for injury proximately caused by the act of another governs 'in the absence of statute or compelling reasons of public policy.'" (3 C.3d 922.) "Secondly, we feel that we cannot overlook the widespread prevalence of liability insurance and its practical effect on intra-family suits. Although it is obvious that insurance does not create liability where none otherwise exists ... , it is unrealistic to ignore this factor in making an informed policy decision on whether to abolish parental negligence immunity." (3 C.3d 922.) (See West Shield Investigations & Sec. Consultants v. Superior Court (2000) 82 C.A.4th 935, 955, 98 C.R.2d 612, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §516A [in action by child against security firm and operator of wilderness camp for troubled youths, defendants failed to show that their conduct was not actionable as within scope of assigned parental authority; citing Gibson].)

Law review comment was generally favorable. (See 7 Cal. Western L. Rev. 466; 23 Hastings L. J. 588; 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 478; 6 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 199.) Other commentary on parental liability includes Dobbs, The Law of Torts §280; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.11; 6 A.L.R.4th 1066 [liability of parent for injury to unemancipated child caused by parent's negligence--modern cases]; 55 A.L.R. 4th 778 [liability of foster parent to foster child].

Abrogation of parental immunity has made it possible for a defendant sued for negligent injury to a child to claim contribution from the parent on the ground of negligent supervision of the child. (See infra, §105.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

4. Liability Between Family Members.

c. Siblings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 29

[§ 29] Siblings.

The decisions in other jurisdictions dealing with a claimed immunity between brother and sister uniformly deny it. (See 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 377; 81 A.L.R.2d 1155 [family relationship other than that of parent and child or husband and wife].)

California took the same position in Emery v. Emery (1955) 45 C.2d 421, 289 P.2d 218. A father allowed his son to drive a car, and his two daughters were injured. In this action by the sisters, defendant son contended that to allow the action would "(1) disrupt the family harmony, (2) encourage fraud and collusion, (3) impair the parents' exercise of their disciplinary functions, (4) result in an uneven distribution of the family resources, and (5) encourage useless litigation since there is a possibility that the minor defendant will live to inherit the money recovered from him by the minor plaintiff." (45 C.2d 430.) The court rejected these arguments as speculative and unpersuasive.

(a) Family harmony. "An uncompensated tort is no more apt to promote or preserve peace in the family than is an action between minor brother and sister to recover damages for that tort. Furthermore, the relationship between brother and sister is not complicated by reciprocal rights and obligations of the kind that characterize the relationships of husband and wife and parent and child and that lend some support to the immunities from tort liability that have been recognized" in the past in those cases. (45 C.2d 430.)

(b) Collusion. "The argument assumes that the action is not in reality directed against the minor brother or sister of the plaintiff, but is in fact directed at his liability insurer. If this assumption is correct, maintenance of such a tort action would not disturb the family peace and harmony. ... Moreover, although defendants' statement that the existence of insurance, of which there is no evidence in the present case, 'gives no cause of action where one did not exist before' is correct, by the same token the mere possibility of fraud or collusion because of the possible existence of liability insurance does not warrant immunity from liability where it would otherwise exist. ... Courts will not immunize tortfeasors from liability in a whole class of cases because of the possibility of fraud, but will depend upon the Legislature to deal with the problem as a question of public policy." (45 C.2d 431.)

5. Agents and Employees.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 30

[§ 30] Agents and Employees.

An agent or employee is always liable for that person's own torts. (C.C. 2343(3).) This is so whether the principal or employer is liable or not. (Perkins v. Blauth (1912) 163 C. 782, 787, 127 P. 50 [agent who commits tort acting under principal's authority is liable, even though principal thus also becomes liable]; Holt v. Booth (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1074, 1080, footnote 5, 2 C.R.2d 727, citing the text; see Otanez v. Blue Skies Mobile Home Park (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1521, 1526, 3 C.R.2d 210, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §615 [property managers' actions in terminating utility services to mobile home were not wrongful so as to render property managers liable under C.C. 2343(3), where statute prohibiting termination of utility services to tenants only applied to landlords]; Rest.2d, Agency §343; 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §199; on liability of public officers and employees, see infra, §345 et seq.)

The liability of principals for the torts of their agents, including under the respondeat superior doctrine, is treated in another chapter. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §163 et seq.)

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

6. Representatives.

[§ 31] Representatives.

(1) Trustee, Executor, or Administrator. A trustee of an active trust, or an executor or administrator of an estate may be personally liable for torts of persons employed on behalf of the trust or the estate, although, if free from personal fault, the representative has a right to reimbursement from the assets of the trust or estate. (See Johnston v. Long (1947) 30 C.2d 54, 62, 181 P.2d 645, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §173; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 586; on liability of trustee holding bare legal title, see infra, §1084; on liability of estate for torts of trustee, executor, or administrator, see 82 A.L.R.3d 892.)

(2) Receiver. In Chiesur v. Superior Court (1946) 76 C.A.2d 198, 172 P.2d 763, plaintiff tenant alleged that defendant, receiver in charge of an apartment house, maintained the premises in a negligent manner, causing her injury. Held, her action was against him only in his official capacity, and the trial court erred in refusing to allow her to sue him as receiver. For negligent acts within the scope of his duties as receiver, such as these, the liability is of the "receivership," the judgment is payable only from receivership funds, and the receiver is not personally liable, because his legal duties are owed not personally but as a receiver. (76 C.A.2d 200.) (See 15 Hastings L. J. 520; 20 A.L.R.3d 967 [liability for negligence in failing to care for or maintain property in receivership where property is lost or diminished in value]; 66 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Receivers §§295, 296.) (On trustee in bankruptcy, see 15 Hastings L. J. 520; 9 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Bankruptcy §258 et seq.)

In Vitug v. Griffin (1989) 214 C.A.3d 488, 262 C.R. 588, a wrongful death action by the heirs of persons killed in a fire in an apartment building managed by defendant receiver, it was held that an order discharging defendant as receiver was void as to plaintiffs, because they were not parties to, and had no notice of, the receivership proceeding, and their claim was not accounted for in defendant's final accounting. Under Chiesur, defendant may incur liability for negligence in her official capacity in performing her duties that results in injury to occupants of the property, with recovery payable out of receivership funds. Plaintiffs should be permitted to maintain their action against defendant even if all receivership funds were disbursed and the receivership terminated. It is axiomatic that liability is not synonymous with ability to pay. Also, plaintiffs may be able to recover from the surety on defendant's performance bond, and defendant may have incurred personal liability for disbursing the receivership funds without notice to plaintiffs. (214 C.A.3d 497.) (For further discussion of the case, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §§448, 449.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

7. Corporations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 32

[§ 32] Corporations.

A private corporation is ordinarily liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §165 et seq.) for torts of its agents or employees committed while they are acting within the scope of their employment. It is immaterial that the particular act was not authorized or ratified, or that it was ultra vires. (Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1867) 34 C. 48, 56; Chamberlain v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1914) 167 C. 500, 506, 140 P. 25; Hiroshima v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1936) 18 C.A.2d 24, 31, 63 P.2d 340; Kelly v. General Tel. Rev. 1679 [Corporate Tort Liability and the Problem of Overcompliance]; 18B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Corporations §§1831, 1832; 55 A.L.R.2d 828 [liability of insurance company for libel or slander by its agents or employees]; 39 A.L.R.4th 556 [liability of professional corporation of lawyers or its members for another member's malpractice or other tort]; BAJI, No. 13.30 [corporation acts through its officers and employees]; on effect of ultra vires acts, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §120 et seq.; on liability and immunities of public corporations, see infra, §222 et seq.)

A private corporation may be held liable for exemplary damages where its agents, in committing a wrong, are guilty of malice or oppression. (Lowe v. Yolo County Consol. Water Co. (1910) 157 C. 503, 510, 108 P. 297; see 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 140; on corporate liability for exemplary damages generally, see infra, §1583.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

8. Corporate Directors and Officers.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 33

[§ 33] In General.

Directors and officers of a corporation are liable for torts committed by them on its behalf. (O'Connell v. Union Drilling & Petroleum Co. (1932) 121 C.A. 302, 308, 8 P.2d 867; see Michaelis v. Benavides (1998) 61 C.A.4th 681, 684, 71 C.R.2d 776 [where corporate president personally bid for cement work on patio job, personally made construction decisions for entire project, and personally made decision to use cheaper material, and his brother provided manual labor, he could be held personally liable because he breached duty owed to plaintiffs, not just duty owed to corporation]; PMC v. Kadisha (2000) 78 C.A.4th 1368, 1378, 93 C.R.2d 663 [triable issue of fact whether investors who later became corporate directors participated in or consented to wrongful conduct; corporation allegedly formed by misappropriation of plaintiffs' trade secrets by former employees]; 29 A.L.R.3d 660 [liability of corporate directors or officers for negligence in permitting conversion of property of third persons by corporation]; 90 A.L.R.3d 916 [personal liability of officer or director for negligence of subordinate corporate employee]; 72 A.L.R.4th 492 [liability of director, officer, or employee for tortious interference with corporation's contract with another]; 29 Proof of Facts 3d 53 [tort liability of corporate officer for failure to provide computer disaster recovery measures]; on liability and immunities of employees of public corporations, see infra, §345 et seq.)

However, directors or officers do not incur personal liability for corporate torts merely because of their official position unless they participate in the wrong or authorize or direct that it be done. (United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes (1970) 1 C.3d 586, 595, 83 C.R. 418, 463 P.2d 770; Wyatt v. Union Mortg. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 773, 785, 157 C.R. 392, 598 P.2d 45; on liabilities of directors and officers generally, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §90 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Corporations k.342

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Necessity that directors or officers direct or participate in tort: In Reynolds v. Bement (2005) 36 C.4th 1075, 32 C.R.3d 483, 116 P.3d 1162, a former corporate employee sued its directors and officers, as well as the corporation itself, to recover overtime wages that were unpaid in violation of wage laws. Held, the directors and officers were not individually liable in tort.

(a) Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, text, §39, recognized that corporate directors may be jointly liable with the corporation and may be joined as defendants, provided that they personally directed or participated in the tortious conduct. Their liability, if any, stems from their own tortious conduct, not from their status as directors or officers of the enterprise. Director status therefore neither immunizes a person from individual liability nor subjects him or her to vicarious liability. (36 C.4th 1089.)

(b) Plaintiff cannot state a cause of action under Frances T. The simple failure to comply with statutory overtime requirements does not qualify as tortious conduct. (36 C.4th 1090.)

(c) Plaintiff's boilerplate allegations of conspiracy do not alter the situation. Agents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not as individuals for their individual advantage. Moreover, there can be no liability if the alleged conspirator, though a participant in the agreement underlying the injury, was not personally bound by the duty violated by the wrongdoing and was only acting as the agent or employee of the party who did have that duty. (36 C.4th 1090.)

(d) Nor has plaintiff alleged that the individual defendants here misappropriated to themselves, as individuals for their individual advantage, the unpaid wages allegedly owed. (36 C.4th 1090.)

See Jones v. Gregory (2006) 137 C.A.4th 798, 803, 40 C.R.3d 581 [CEO was not liable for unpaid wages of corporate employees merely because of his operational control of corporation; Labor Code did not alter common law rule against personal liability by corporate agents]; Bradstreet v. Wong (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1440, 1449, 75 C.R.3d 253 [corporate shareholders, officers, and managing agents were not liable as "employers" for unpaid wages and accrued vacation in Labor Commissioner's enforcement action under Lab.C. 1193.6; citing Reynolds and Jones].

[§ 34] Limitation of Liability in Articles.

(1) Director's Liability. Articles of incorporation may include "[p]rovisions eliminating or limiting the personal liability of a director for monetary damages in an action brought by or in the right of the corporation for breach of a director's duties to the corporation and its shareholders," as set forth in Corp.C. 309 (obligation to perform duties in good faith and with due care). (Corp.C. 204(a)(10); see 19 Pacific L. J. 497.) (On director's right to indemnification, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §81 et seq.)

This authorization is subject to specified exceptions. The provisions may not eliminate or limit a director's liability for any of the following (Corp.C. 204(a)(10)):

- (a) Acts or omissions that involve intentional misconduct or a knowing and culpable violation of the law.
- (b) Acts or omissions that the director believes to be contrary to the best interests of the corporation or its shareholders or that involve the absence of good faith.
- (c) Transactions from which the director derived an improper personal benefit.
- (d) Acts or omissions that show a reckless disregard for the director's duty in circumstances where the director was or should have been aware of a risk of serious injury to the corporation or shareholders.
- (e) Acts or omissions that constitute an unexcused pattern of inattention amounting to an abdication of duty.
- (f) Liability under Corp.C. 310 (corporate contracts or transactions in which director has material financial interest).
- (g) Liability under Corp.C. 316 (improper distributions, loans, and guarantees).

(2) Officer's Liability. No provision may eliminate or limit an officer's liability for any act or omission as an officer, notwithstanding that the officer is a director or that the officer's actions, if negligent or improper, were ratified by the directors. (Corp.C. 204(a)(10).)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

8. Corporate Directors and Officers.

c. Volunteer Directors or Officers of Nonprofit Corporations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 35

[§ 35] Volunteer Directors or Officers of Nonprofit Corporations.

(1) In General. Under specified circumstances, volunteer directors and volunteer executive officers of public benefit corporations (Corp.C. 5239), mutual benefit corporations (Corp.C. 7231.5), and religious corporations (Corp.C. 9247) are exempt from tort liability. (See 19 Pacific L. J. 499; on immunity of uncompensated directors and officers of nonprofit medical associations, see infra, §36; on immunity of uncompensated directors and officers of nonprofit corporations or associations managing common interest developments, see infra, §41.)

A pleading may not include a negligence cause of action against an uncompensated officer or director of a nonprofit corporation in the absence of a court order based on a finding that the party filing the pleading has "established evidence that substantiates the claim." (C.C.P. 425.15, 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §299.)

(2) Public Benefit and Religious Corporations. A volunteer director or officer of a public benefit or religious corporation is not personally liable to third parties for monetary damages caused by the director's or officer's negligent acts or omissions in the performance of his or her duties, if (a) the act or omission was within the scope of those duties, performed in good faith, and not reckless, wanton, intentional, or grossly negligent, and (b) the resulting damages are covered by liability insurance issued to either the corporation or the director or officer. If there is no insurance, there is still no liability if the board of directors and the director or officer made reasonable efforts in good faith to obtain it. (Corp.C. 5239(a), 9247(a); see Corp.C. 5239(h) [public benefit corporation with annual budget of less than $ 25,000 and exempt from federal taxation satisfies condition of making reasonable efforts in good faith to obtain liability insurance if (a) it makes at least one inquiry per year to purchase a general liability policy with coverage of at least $ 500,000; and (b) insurance was not available at a cost of less than 5% of corporation's annual budget for previous year]; on public benefit corporations generally, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §251 et seq.; on religious corporations generally, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §382 et seq.)

Liability is not eliminated or limited in actions or proceedings brought by the Attorney General, or as provided by statutes governing self-dealing transactions (see Corp.C. 5233, 9243) or actions for which a director is liable to the corporation (see Corp.C. 5237, 9245). (Corp.C. 5239(e), 9247(e).)

Nothing in Corp.C. 5239 or 9247 creates a duty of care or basis of liability. (Corp.C. 5239(f), 9247(f).) On the other hand, neither statute limits the corporation's liability for damages caused by the acts or omissions of a volunteer director or officer. (Corp.C. 5239(d), 9247(d).)

(3) Mutual Benefit Corporations. Except as provided in Corp.C. 7233 (contracts between corporation and director) and Corp.C. 7236 (acts making directors liable to corporation), a volunteer director or officer of a mutual benefit corporation is not subject to monetary damages or a damages action based on an alleged failure to discharge his or her duties, if the duties are performed in good faith, in a manner believed to be in the corporation's best interests, and with such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use under similar circumstances. (Corp.C. 7231.5(a); on mutual benefit corporations generally, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §358 et seq.)

Corp.C. 7231.5 is applicable only to trade, professional, and labor organizations that operate exclusively for fraternal, educational, and other nonprofit purposes, and under Section 501(c) of the United States Internal Revenue Code. (Corp.C. 7231.5(d).)

The statute does not limit a director's duty, under Corp.C. 7231, to act in good faith in the corporation's best interests. (Corp.C. 7231.5(e).)

(4) Definitions.

(a) To "volunteer" means to render services without compensation. And "compensation" refers to remuneration by salary, fee, or other consideration for services rendered, but does not include payment of per diem, mileage, or other reimbursement expenses. (Corp.C. 5239(b), 7231.5(b), 9247(b).)

(b) "Executive officer" refers to the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, or other individual serving in like capacity who assists in establishing corporate policy. (Corp.C. 5239(c), 7231.5(c), 9247(c).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

9. Unincorporated Associations.

a. Judicial Recognition of Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 36

[§ 36] Judicial Recognition of Liability.

The tort liability of labor unions was established in California by two Supreme Court decisions.

In Marshall v. International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, Local 6, Dist. 1 (1962) 57 C.2d 781, 22 C.R. 211, 371 P.2d 987, defendant union's employee negligently maintained a parking lot for its members, adjacent to its meeting hall. Plaintiff union member was injured in a fall over an obstruction there. In this action for damages against the union and the officers, summary judgment was granted on the basis of two traditional theories: (a) that the union, like a partnership, is not a legal entity but an aggregate of individuals; (b) that each member is both a principal and an agent as to all other members, and, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the negligence of the common agent is imputed to the coprincipal and bars recovery against the other principals. Held, reversed.

(a) The modern law has recognized the separate entity of the union for various substantive and procedural purposes; e.g., a member may sue the union for damages for breach of contract. (57 C.2d 784.)

(b) The doctrine of respondeat superior is not applied to make one union member liable as a principal for the wrongful acts of others where the defendant member does not personally participate in or authorize the acts. (57 C.2d 785.)

(c) The decision of the court was that (1) "a member of a labor union is entitled to sue the union for negligent acts which he neither participated in nor authorized," and (2) "any judgment that he may recover against the union can be satisfied from the funds and property of the union alone." (57 C.2d 787.) But an important caution was added: "We limit our holding to labor unions only, leaving to future development the rules to be applied in the case of other types of unincorporated associations." (57 C.2d 787, footnote 1.)

In Inglis v. Operating Engineers Local Union No. 12 (1962) 58 C.2d 269, 23 C.R. 403, 373 P.2d 467, plaintiff member sued the union for damages for assault and battery inflicted on him by officers and members during a union meeting. Held, the Marshall case was controlling and plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action; i.e., the same rule governs liability for negligent and intentional torts. (58 C.2d 270.) (See Coats v. Construction & General Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 C.A.3d 908, 914, 915, 93 C.R. 639 [union's liability is similar to that of corporation]; 50 Cal. L.

Rev. 909; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1087, 1092; 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 445; 34 A.L.R.3d 884 [union's liability for refusal or failure to process employee grievance]; 100 A.L.R.3d 546 [union's liability to member for defamation]; 14 A.L.R.4th 1161 [union's liability for injury or death allegedly resulting from unsafe working conditions]; 85 A.L.R.4th 979 [liability, under statute, of labor union or its membership for torts committed in connection with primary labor activities].)

Until 1967, apart from the labor union cases, there was little California law on the tort liability of unincorporated associations. (See 42 Cal. L. Rev. 825.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

9. Unincorporated Associations.

b. Statutory Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 37

[§ 37] Statutory Liability.

(1) In General. In 1967, legislation proposed by the California Law Revision Commission was enacted to give unincorporated associations entity status and make them liable, whether in contract or tort, to the same extent as natural persons. (See former Corp.C. 24000 et seq.) These provisions were substantially revised and reorganized in 2004. (See Corp.C. 18000 et seq., 18605 et seq.)

(a) Broad definition. An "unincorporated association" is defined as "an unincorporated group of two or more persons joined by mutual consent for a common lawful purpose, whether organized for profit or not." (Corp.C. 18035(a).)

(b) Liability of association. "Except as otherwise provided by law, an unincorporated association is liable for its act or omission," or that of a director, officer, agent, or employee acting within the scope of the office, agency or employment, "to the same extent as if the association were a natural person." (Corp.C. 18250.) The Law Revision Commission's Comment to former Corp.C. 24001 states that these principles are "probably declarative of the prior California law insofar as the tort liability of unincorporated associations is concerned," citing Marshall v. International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, Local 6, Dist. 1 (1962) 57 C.2d 781, 22 C.R. 211, 371 P.2d 987, and Inglis v. Operating Engineers Local Union (1962) 58 C.2d 269, 23 C.R. 403, 373 P.2d 467, supra, §36. (On liability of unincorporated associations generally, see 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Associations and Clubs §47 et seq.; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §50; 15 A.L.R.3d 1013 [liability of social club]; 40 A.L.R.4th 106 [liability of religious association]; 268 A.L.R.4th 228 [liability of college, university, fraternity, or sorority for injury or death caused by hazing]; on liability of condominium associations and directors, see infra, §§38, 39; on capacity of unincorporated associations to sue and be sued, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §81 et seq.)

It has been held that, because unincorporated associations are now generally recognized as separate legal entities, a member of an association may maintain a tort action against it. (White v. Cox (1971) 17 C.A.3d 824, 828, 95 C.R. 259, infra, §38.)

(2) Liability of Members, Directors, Officers, or Employees. An unincorporated association member is liable for torts where the member personally participates in, authorizes, or ratifies the wrongful act. Liability for the acts of other members or third parties is based on the agency doctrine of respondeat superior. (See Steuer v. Phelps (1974) 41 C.A.3d 468, 472, 116 C.R. 61 [vehicle entrusted to one member who drove it negligently, causing injury to plaintiffs]; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Associations and Clubs §49; 62 A.L.R.3d 1165 [liability of member for tort of nonmember agent or employee]; on respondeat superior, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §165 et seq.)

Generally, officers, committees, agents, or others who act for an association are liable, like members, for torts that they personally participate in, authorize, or ratify, or for which they are liable on the basis of respondeat superior. (See Florence v. Helms (1902) 136 C. 613, 615, 69 P. 429 [unlawful conversion of association property]; Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 503, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, infra, §39 [negligence]; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Associations and Clubs §49; cf. Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 C.A.4th 1232, 1244, 112 C.R.2d 593 [directors of subdivision or other property owners association have no vicarious liability for torts of association].) Tort liability of uncompensated officers and directors of nonprofit medical associations (see Corp.C. 24001.5) and of nonprofit common interest developments (C.C. 1365.7; infra, §41) is limited in prescribed circumstances. (On liability of directors and officers of nonprofit corporations, see supra, §35.)

A member, director, officer, or agent of a nonprofit association is not liable for a liability of the association solely by reason of being a member, director, officer, or agent. (Corp.C. 18605.) However, a member or person in control of the association may be subject to liability "under common law principles governing alter ego liability of shareholders of a corporation, taking into account the differences between a nonprofit association and a corporation." (Corp.C. 18630.)

(3) Enforcement of Judgment. A money judgment against an unincorporated association may be enforced only against its property. (Corp.C. 18260.)

A judgment creditor of a member, director, officer, or agent of an unincorporated association may not levy execution against his or her assets to satisfy a judgment based on a claim against the association unless a judgment based on the same claim has been obtained against the association and any of the following conditions is satisfied:

(a) A writ of execution on the judgment against the association has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part. (Corp.C. 18270(a)(1).)

(b) The association is a debtor in bankruptcy. (Corp.C. 18270(a)(2).)

(c) The member, director, officer, or agent has agreed that the creditor need not exhaust the assets of the association. (Corp.C. 18270(a)(3).)

(d) A court grants permission to the judgment creditor to levy execution against the assets of a member, director, officer, or agent based on a finding that the association's assets subject to execution are clearly insufficient to satisfy the judgment, that exhaustion of the assets of the unincorporated association is excessively burdensome, or that the grant of permission is an appropriate exercise of the court's equitable powers. (Corp.C. 18270(a)(3).)

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

9. Unincorporated Associations.

c. Condominiums and Other Common Interest Developments.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 38

[§ 38] In General.

In White v. Cox (1971) 17 C.A.3d 824, 95 C.R. 259, plaintiff was a unit owner in a condominium project and a member of defendant condominium association that maintained its common areas. He sued the association for damages for personal injuries allegedly suffered when he tripped and fell over a negligently maintained water sprinkler in the common areas. Judgment for defendant was based on the traditional theory of negligence of one member imputed to every other (see supra, §36). Held, reversed.

(a) Under the modern decisions and California statutes, an unincorporated association is an entity subject to tort liability. (17 C.A.3d 828; see supra, §36.)

(b) Under the tests set forth in Marshall v. International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, Local 6, Dist. 1 (1962) 57 C.2d 781, 22 C.R. 211, 371 P.2d 987, supra, §36, this rule applies to a condominium association:

(1) It has an existence separate from its members; otherwise the unit owners would be tenants in common of an estate in real property and exposed to the consequences of that status. "We think the concept of separateness in the condominium project carries over to any management body or association formed to handle the common affairs of the project, and that both the condominium project and the condominium association must be considered separate legal entities from its unit owners and association members." (17 C.A.3d 829.)

(2) The members do not retain direct control over the operations of the association. Under the statutory scheme, an administrator conducts the common affairs and maintains the common area; that administrator is appointed by and responsible to a board of governors elected by unit owners, each with one vote. Plaintiff was one of 60, and had no more control over the operations than a stockholder in a corporation operating such a project. (17 C.A.3d 830.)

(3) There is no substantial distinction between a condominium and any other unincorporated association. The condominium is therefore liable in tort to its members; it may be sued in its condominium name under former C.C.P. 388 (now C.C.P. 369.5; see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §84) and served in the manner of an unincorporated association (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §971); and individual unit owners need not be named or served as parties in a negligence action against the condominium and the condominium association. (17 C.A.3d 830.) (See 8 Cal. Western L. Rev. 536; 10 Cal. Western L. Rev. 361; 15A Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Condominiums and Cooperative Apartments §57; 45 A.L.R.3d 1171 [liability of condominium association for injury allegedly caused by condition of premises].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

9. Unincorporated Associations.

c. Condominiums and Other Common Interest Developments.

2. Liability for Third-Party Criminal Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 39

[§ 39] Liability for Third-Party Criminal Conduct.

In Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, the question was "whether a condominium owners association and the individual members of its board of directors may be held liable for injuries to a unit owner caused by third-party criminal conduct." (42 C.3d 495.) Defendant association was a nonprofit corporation composed of owners of individual condominium units. It was managed by a board of directors operating under the project's declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs). After plaintiff's unit was burglarized as part of a wave of similar crimes in the project, she and other owners requested the board to install more exterior lighting. When the board failed to act, she installed her own additional lighting. The board informed her that her action violated the CC&Rs and ordered removal of the lights, leaving the exterior of her unit in darkness. Some months later, plaintiff was raped and robbed, and brought suit against the association and individual members of the board for negligence. Held, judgment of dismissal reversed.

(a) Association's liability. A condominium association should be held to the same standard of care as a landlord.

(1) Defendants point out that the association is governed by its self-imposed restrictions (the CC&Rs), and is not a landlord in the traditional sense but a nonprofit association of homeowners. Nevertheless it is, for all practical purposes, the project's "landlord." "And traditional tort principles impose on landlords, no less than on homeowner associations that function as a landlord in maintaining the common areas of a large condominium complex, a duty to exercise due care for the residents' safety in those areas under their control." (42 C.3d 499.)

(2) White v. Cox (1971) 17 C.A.3d 824, 95 C.R. 259, supra, §38, supports the conclusion that a condominium association may properly be held to a landlord's standard of care as to the common areas under its control. (42 C.3d 500.) And judicial notice may be taken of the growth of condominiums and their management. "While in some projects the maintenance of common areas is truly cooperative, in most of the large projects control of the common areas is delegated or controlled by ruling bodies that do not exercise the members' collective will on a one-person, one-vote basis." (42 C.3d 500, footnote 9.)

(3) Landlord-tenant cases involving facts similar to those of this case (i.e., criminal acts of strangers) have reached different results on liability. (See infra, §§1142, 1143.) However, in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134, the court rejected the "rigidified foreseeability concept" and adopted the view that foreseeability does not require prior identical or even similar events. "The facts alleged here, if proven, demonstrate defendant's awareness of the need for additional lighting and of the fact that lighting could aid in deterring criminal conduct, especially break-ins. ... [T]he Association was on notice that crimes were being committed against the Project's residents. ... It is not necessary, as defendant appears to imply, that the prior crimes be identical to the ones perpetrated against the plaintiff. ... Defendant need not have foreseen the precise injury to plaintiff so long as the possibility of this type of harm was foreseeable." (42 C.3d 503.)

(b) Directors' liability. The complaint also alleged that the individual directors on the association's board breached a duty of care they owed by ordering plaintiff to remove the additional lighting and by failing to repair the hazardous lighting condition within a reasonable period of time.

(1) Corporate directors cannot be held vicariously liable for the corporation's torts in which they do not participate; their liability, if any, stems from their own tortious conduct, not from their status as directors or officers. (42 C.3d 503.) However, directors are liable if they personally directed or participated in the tortious conduct, regardless of whether they acted on behalf of the corporation and regardless of whether the corporation is also liable. (42 C.3d 504.) "[L]ike any other employee, directors individually owe a duty of care, independent of the corporate entity's own duty, to refrain from acting in a manner that creates an unreasonable risk of personal injury to third parties. The reason for this rule is that otherwise, a director could inflict injuries upon others and then escape liability behind the shield of his or her representative character, even though the corporation might be insolvent or irresponsible." (42 C.3d 505.)

(2) In order to maintain a tort claim against a director in his or her personal capacity, the plaintiff must first show that the director specifically authorized, directed or participated in the tortious conduct, or that although the director knew or reasonably should have known that some hazardous condition or activity under his or her control could injure the plaintiff, he or she negligently failed to take or order appropriate action to avoid the harm. (42 C.3d 508.) The plaintiff must also allege and prove that an ordinarily prudent person, knowing what the director knew at that time, would not have acted similarly under the circumstances. (42 C.3d 509.) Plaintiff pleaded facts to support two theories of negligence under the standard stated above:

(a) Plaintiff alleged that the directors took affirmative action that made the break-in more likely when they ordered her to immediately disconnect the additional lighting. (42 C.3d 510.)

(b) Plaintiff alleged that the individual directors, with actual knowledge of the risk of recurring criminal activity, failed to take action to repair the hazardous condition within a reasonable period of time. Directors and officers have frequently been held liable for negligent nonfeasance where they knew that a condition or instrumentality under their control posed an unreasonable risk of injury, and failed to take action to prevent it. (42 C.3d 510.)

(3) Plaintiff's allegation that each of the directors participated in the tortious activity was sufficient to withstand a demurrer. But she will have to prove that each director acted negligently as an individual, and a director may present evidence showing that he opposed or did not participate in the alleged tortious conduct. (42 C.3d 511.)

One justice concurred and two dissented. (42 C.3d 519.) (See Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 C.A.4th 1232, 1244, 112 C.R.2d 593 [directors of property owners association have no vicarious liability for torts of association; citing Francis T.; 19 Pacific L. J. 377; 5 Proof of Facts 3d 715 [association's liability for failure to protect residents and guests from criminal attack]; 59 A.L.R.4th 489 [condominium association's liability to unit owner for injuries caused by third person's criminal conduct]; on immunity of volunteer directors and officers of nonprofit common interest developments, see infra, §41.)

3. Liability of Individual Owners.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 40

[§ 40] Liability of Individual Owners.

In Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 C.A.3d 407, 209 C.R. 445, plaintiff passengers were injured when their automobile collided with a horse, which had escaped from the common areas of a condominium project. They sued defendant owner of an individual unit. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that exclusive control of the property had been delegated to the owners' association. Held, reversed.

(a) The owner or occupier of land owes a duty to third persons of ordinary care in the management of his or her property, and the owners of individual units in a condominium development are tenants in common of the common areas. (163 C.A.3d 411.) As such, they may not be immunized from liability to third parties for tortious conduct by delegating management and control of the property to a separate legal entity. (163 C.A.3d 412.)

(b) "It is clear that considerations of public policy require that any departure from the common law of liability of individual owners of property in common cannot operate to the substantial detriment of third parties Since California law does not require insurance to protect third parties in the case of common area torts, relieving individual owners in common of liability would eliminate any motivation on the part of any party to exercise due care in the management and control of commonly owned property and could leave third parties with no remedy at law." (163 C.A.3d 412.) (See Kaye v. Mount La Jolla Homeowners Assn. (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1476, 1491, 252 C.R. 67, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §250 [unnecessary to determine whether, as general rule, individual owners can be vicariously liable for torts of association's board of directors, where association's insurance was sufficient to satisfy all claims]; *Ruoff v. I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

9. Unincorporated Associations.

c. Condominiums and Other Common Interest Developments.

4. Volunteer Directors or Officers of Nonprofit Developments.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 41

[§ 41] Volunteer Directors or Officers of Nonprofit Developments.

(1) Governing Statute. Volunteer officers and directors of nonprofit associations or corporations managing common interest developments have a limited immunity. (C.C. 1365.7; see 24 Pacific L. J. 1053; on common interest developments, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §85 et seq.; on immunity of volunteer directors and officers of nonprofit corporations generally, see supra, §35.)

An officer or director is immune from liability for any tortious act or omission if both of the following conditions apply:

(a) The act or omission was performed in good faith within the scope of the officer's or director's association duties and was not wilful, wanton, or grossly negligent. (C.C. 1365.7(a)(1)-(a)(3).) For these purposes, the scope of the officer's or director's association duties includes, but is not limited to, any decision on whether (1) to conduct an investigation of the common interest development for latent deficiencies prior to the expiration of the applicable statute of limitations or (2) to commence a civil action against the builder for defects in design or construction. (C.C. 1365.7(f).)

(b) The association had insurance covering the general liability of the association and the individual liability of the officers and directors of at least $ 500,000 (if the development consists of 100 or fewer separate interests) or $ 1 million (if the development consists of more than 100 separate interests). (C.C. 1365.7(a)(4).)

The immunity extends only to an officer or director who is a volunteer and who resides in a common interest development that is exclusively residential. (C.C. 1365.7(a); on what constitutes volunteer status, see C.C. 1365.7(b), (c).) Also, the officer or director must reside in the development either as a tenant or an owner of no more than two separate interests. (C.C. 1365.7(e).)

(2) Unit Owners Not Immune. In Ruoff v. Harbor Creek Community Assn. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1624, 13 C.R.2d 755, plaintiff was seriously injured when she slipped and fell on a stairway in the common area of a condominium complex. Defendants, who were individual owners of condominium units, were the tenants in common of the common areas and had delegated control and management of these areas to their homeowners association. Defendants argued that under these circumstances they were immune under C.C. 1365.7. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) Defendants' argument that C.C. 1365.7 was intended to immunize them from liability for tortious acts or omissions in the management and control of the commonly held property is without merit. This construction would, in effect, delete the language of the statute limiting its applicability to specified volunteer officers or directors of the association. (10 C.A.4th 1629.)

(b) Defendants argued that Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 C.A.3d 407, 209 C.R. 445, supra, §40, by noting that California law did not require insurance covering common area torts, held that the reason for imposing liability on the individual owners evaporates if control of the common areas is delegated to a separate legal entity with sufficient liability insurance to protect injured parties. Defendants reasoned that because C.C. 1365.7 was enacted after Davert and requires homeowners associations to maintain a certain minimum level of liability insurance, the Legislature was reacting to Davert by eliminating common law rules regarding individual owner liability. This convoluted argument fails for two reasons:

(1) It should not be presumed that a statute was intended to overthrow long-established principles of law unless that intention clearly appears either by express declaration or necessary implication. No such declaration or implication is present here. (10 C.A.4th 1630.)

(2) Defendants' reliance on Davert for negative inferences is off the mark. "The clear holding of Davert is that tenants in common who delegate control and management of the property remain jointly and severally liable for tortious acts or omissions causing injury to third persons. We do not deem the court's observation about the wisdom of retaining landowners' liability where ownership is shared to be judicial advice that a tenant in common can buy his or her way out of liability by purchasing insurance for the property manager." (10 C.A.4th 1630.)

(c) Defendants further argued that granting immunity to them would not constitute a hardship on plaintiff because the homeowners association had liability insurance of $ 1 million and was authorized to assess its members for pro rata contribution if a judgment exceeded policy limits. However, in view of unanswered questions concerning the effect of sales by individual owners and the extent of coverage under their individual insurance policies, this power to assess might prove to be a wholly illusory remedy. (10 C.A.4th 1631, footnote 9.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

10. Charities.

a. Liability to Persons Other Than Beneficiaries.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 42

[§ 42] Liability to Persons Other Than Beneficiaries.

In some states, charitable institutions operated primarily for the public benefit are normally exempt from liability for torts of their agents or servants. Various theories are relied on, the principal one being that the property of the charity is a trust fund for certain purposes, and that the charitable objects should not be hampered by the wrongful acts of those chosen to carry them out. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §282; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.17; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 1382 [criticism of new forms of indirect immunity]; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Charities §183; 5B Am.Jur. P.P. Forms (2004 ed.), Charities, §26 et seq.; 125 A.L.R.4th 517 [tort immunity of nongovernmental charities].)

This view is rejected in California, and charitable organizations are liable to third persons under the usual rules of agency. (Phoenix Assur. Co. of London v. Salvation Army (1927) 83 C.A. 455, 461, 256 P. 1106; see Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen (1946) 27 C.2d 802, 812, 167 P.2d 729 ["by the great weight of authority, and clearly the rule in California, persons who are not recipients of the charity, such as employees and strangers, may maintain an action based on negligence"]; Rest.2d, Torts §895E; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §282; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.17; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Charities §184.)

It is, of course, a necessary basis of recovery to plead and prove that the agent acted within the scope of employment. (O'Moore v. Driscoll (1933) 135 C.A. 770, 775, 28 P.2d 438; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §873 et seq. [pleading tort liability for acts of others].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

B. Persons or Entities Liable for Tort.

10. Charities.

b. Liability to Beneficiaries.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 43

[§ 43] Liability to Beneficiaries.

(1) Former Law. Under the so-called American majority rule, formerly followed in California, where a person accepts the benefits of a charity, e.g., becomes a patient in a charitable hospital, that person exempts the benefactor from liability for the acts of its agents, provided those agents have been selected with due care. (See Thomas v. German General Benevolent Soc. (1914) 168 C. 183, 188, 141 P. 1186; Stonaker v. Big Sisters Hosp. (1931) 116 C.A. 375, 379, 2 P.2d 520; Hallinan v. Prindle (1936) 17 C.A.2d 656, 668, 62 P.2d 1075; 6 Cal. L. Rev. 307; 2 So. Cal. L. Rev. 490; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 360; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Charities §183.) This immunity is sometimes said to rest on "implied contract," but other theories are also advanced in its support. (See Shane v. Hospital of the Good Samaritan (1934) 2 C.A.2d 334, 336, 37 P.2d 1066.)

The doctrine made it necessary to draw peculiar distinctions; e.g., a corporation that deducted money from salaries of employees to maintain a hospital was held not a charity (Bowman v. Southern Pac. Co. (1921) 55 C.A. 734, 737, 204 P. 403; 10 Cal. L. Rev. 343), but a charitable hospital that operated without profit was held exempt even though the particular patient injured paid the regular rate charged for paying patients. (Burdell v. St. Luke's Hosp. (1918) 37 C.A. 310, 312, 173 P. 1008; Stonaker v. Big Sisters Hosp., supra; Hallinan v. Prindle, supra; cf. England v. Hospital of the Good Samaritan (1936) 16 C.A.2d 640, 643, 61 P.2d 48 [paying patient without knowledge of claim of charitable exemption might recover].)

(2) Present Rule of Liability. In Silva v. Providence Hosp. of Oakland (1939) 14 C.2d 762, 776, 97 P.2d 798, the theories supporting the exemption doctrine were reexamined and rejected, and the court adopted what it termed the "modern view" that the charity is liable for injuries suffered by a paying patient. (See England v. Hospital of the Good Samaritan (1939) 14 C.2d 791, 795, 97 P.2d 813 [following Silva]; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 530.)

The remaining question, whether liability would also be imposed in favor of a nonpaying beneficiary, was decided in the affirmative in Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 C.2d 356, 232 P.2d 241, where plaintiff, a 13-year-old boy, was injured while attending a Bible school. The court declared that there was no logical justification for immunity in the one case and not in the other, and quoted from a leading federal decision as follows: "Retention for the nonpaying patient is the least defensible and most unfortunate of the distinction's refinements. He, least of all, is able to bear the burden. More than all others, he has no choice. He is the last person the donor would wish to go without indemnity. With everyone else protected, the additional burden of protecting him cannot break the trust." (37 C.2d 365.) (See Rest.2d, Trusts §402(2) [abandoning immunity rule]; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 455; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 614 [abrogation of immunity as extending to religious organizations]; 3 Hastings L. J. 81; for discussions of the weakening of the immunity rule in other jurisdictions, see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §282; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.17; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 128.)

(3) Effect of Legislation. The issue may be affected by statute. Thus, a food facility that donates food fit for human consumption at the time of donation to a nonprofit charitable organization or food bank is not liable for injury due to the food, unless the injury results from negligence or a wilful act in preparing or handling the food. (C.C. 1714.25(a).) Similarly, a nonprofit charitable organization or food bank that, in good faith and without charge, receives and distributes food fit for consumption when distributed is not liable for injury due to the food, unless the injury is the direct result of the organization's negligence, recklessness, or intentional misconduct. (C.C. 1714.25(b).)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

1. Types of Joint Torts.

a. Acts in Concert: Joint Tortfeasors.

1. Who Are Joint Tortfeasors.

[§ 44] Who Are Joint Tortfeasors.

The term "joint tortfeasors" has been narrowly defined to apply only to those who act in concert to accomplish some common purpose or plan, and whose concerted acts cause the harm. (See Key v. Caldwell (1940) 39 C.A.2d 698, 701, 104 P.2d 87; Gray v. Sutherland (1954) 124 C.A.2d 280, 289, 268 P.2d 754.) However, the term has also been used more expansively to include those who order, direct, or permit others to do the act and those who give assistance or encouragement. (Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 605, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, infra, §1486.) (See generally 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §10.1; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 429; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 466; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §57 et seq.; 68 Am.Jur. Trials 503 [hidden and multiple defendant tort litigation].)

In Orser v. George (1967) 252 C.A.2d 660, 60 C.R. 708, defendant hunters were practicing by shooting with pistols and rifles at cans, frogs, and mudhens. Decedent, working on a farm machine in the line of fire, was killed by a pistol bullet. Held, summary judgment in favor of some defendants reversed.

(a) Mere knowledge of another person's acts does not amount to "concerted action," for one normally owes no affirmative duty to interfere. To establish liability, it must be shown that the defendant is proceeding tortiously--with intent or negligence. (252 C.A.2d 667.)

(b) On this theory, a triable issue of fact arose as to two of the hunters, Vierra and Jacobson, who were firing the pistol which, investigation showed, contained the fatal bullet. An issue also arose as to a third hunter, James, who had a rifle, and with both of the others, was firing at a mudhen. As to James, the evidence might show that he knew Vierra's conduct was a breach of duty to decedent, and that he was giving Vierra substantial assistance or encouragement by his own tortious conduct of a similar nature. (252 C.A.2d 668.)

(c) None of the other defendants could be held liable. They were not shooting, and there was no evidence that they knew the other three were shooting in the direction of decedent's work. (252 C.A.2d 669.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.22

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §10.1.

Assistance or encouragement: In Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois (2004) 125 C.A.4th 513, 23 C.R.3d 1, plaintiff, injured by asbestos exposure, sued a company that had sold its asbestos business to another company. The successor company made the product to which the plaintiff was first exposed. Plaintiff alleged misrepresentations about the product's safety. The trial court sustained demurrers to various tort causes of action against the predecessor company, including one for "concert of action." Held, affirmed. "Concert of action" is a theory of group liability that may be used to impose liability on a person who did not personally cause the harm to the plaintiff, "but whose 'advice or encouragement to act operates as a moral support to a tortfeasor[,] and if the act encouraged is known to be tortious[,] it has the same effect upon the liability of the adviser as participation or physical assistance. If the encouragement or assistance is a substantial factor in causing the resulting tort, the one giving it is himself a tortfeasor and is responsible for the consequences of the other's act.'" (125 C.A.4th 521, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §486, Comment d.) Here, however, plaintiff did not allege that defendant continued to encourage and advise the successor company to make false representations about the product after the sale. (125 C.A.4th 522.)

In Casey v. United States Bank Nat. Assn. (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1138, 26 C.R.3d 401, the trustee of a bankrupt corporation sued defendant banks for aiding and abetting corporate fiduciaries in looting the corporation. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers. Held, affirmed.

(a) California has adopted the common law rule for subjecting a defendant to liability for aiding and abetting a tort. Liability may be imposed on one who aids and abets the commission of an intentional tort if the person (1) knows the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other to so act, or (2) gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and the person's own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach of duty to the third person. (127 C.A.4th 1144.)

(b) Even ordinary business transactions that a bank performs for a customer can satisfy the substantial assistance element of an aiding and abetting claim. However, knowledge is the crucial element. Liability for aiding and abetting requires proof that the defendant had actual knowledge of the specific primary wrong the defendant substantially assisted. (127 C.A.4th 1145.)

(c) Here, though the complaint provides ample details of defendants' improper conduct in their business dealings with the fiduciaries, it fails to establish that they had actual knowledge of the primary violation in which they purportedly participated, i.e., the fiduciaries' misappropriation of the bankrupt's funds. (127 C.A.4th 1148, 1152.)

In Austin B. v. Escondido Union School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 860, 57 C.R.3d 454, Supp., infra, §425, plaintiffs sued their special education instructor for battery and joined various supervisory employees, alleging that the supervisory employees aided and abetted the instructor in the alleged tort. The evidence against them amounted at most to a showing that they had knowledge of the instructor's allegedly tortious conduct and failed to take action against it. The trial court granted these other employees a nonsuit. Held, affirmed. Under the common law rule, adopted in California, liability may be imposed on one who aids and abets the commission of an intentional tort only if he or she either (a) knows that the other's conduct constitutes a breach of duty and gives substantial assistance or encouragement to the other to so act, or (b) gives substantial assistance to the other in accomplishing a tortious result and his or her own conduct, separately considered, constitutes a breach of duty to the person acted upon. (149 C.A.4th 879, citing Casey.) However, mere knowledge that a tort is being committed and the failure to prevent it does not constitute aiding and abetting. As a general rule, one owes no duty to control the conduct of another. More specifically, a supervisor is not liable to third parties for the acts of his or her subordinates. (149 C.A.4th 879.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

1. Types of Joint Torts.

a. Acts in Concert: Joint Tortfeasors.

2. Civil Conspiracy.

aa. Significance of Charge.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 45

[§ 45] Significance of Charge.

(1) In General. Occasionally, in actions against joint tortfeasors, the defendants are charged with "conspiracy," and the cause of action is sometimes described as one for "civil conspiracy." (See, e.g., Neblett v. Elliott (1941) 46 C.A.2d 294, 302, 115 P.2d 872.) Strictly speaking, however, there is no separate tort of civil conspiracy. (Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1571, 1581, 47 C.R.2d 752, infra, §47; Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1128, 1140, 15 C.R.3d 118.) Thus, there is no civil action for conspiracy to commit a recognized tort unless the wrongful act itself is committed and damage results from that act (see infra, §146).

Hence, where the complaint charges a conspiracy and the commission of a wrongful act, the only significance of the conspiracy charge is that each member may be held responsible as a joint tortfeasor, regardless of whether that member directly participated in the act. (Revert v. Hesse (1920) 184 C. 295, 301, 193 P. 943; Bowman v. Wohlke (1913) 166 C. 121, 124, 135 P. 37; Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 484, 488, 110 P.2d 396; *Kinney v. (2) Conspirators. An alleged coconspirator must be legally capable of committing the tort charged. (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 511, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, infra, §739; Kasparian v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 242, 45 C.R.2d 90, infra, §746.) He or she must owe a duty to the plaintiff recognized by law and be potentially subject to liability for breach of that duty. (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., supra.) For example, a person who is not an employer, and hence cannot commit the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, cannot be liable for conspiracy to wrongfully discharge. (Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 C.A.4th 32, 54, 100 C.R.2d 627.)

Under the "agent's immunity rule," agents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not as individuals for their individual advantage. (Black v. Bank of America (1994) 30 C.A.4th 1, 4, 35 C.R.2d 725.)

In Everest Investors 8 v. Whitehall Real Estate Ltd. Partnership XI (2002) 100 C.A.4th 1102, 123 C.R.2d 297, the question on appeal was whether "a nonfiduciary defendant can be liable for conspiring with a fiduciary defendant to breach the fiduciary duty to the plaintiff." Plaintiffs, limited partners in an investment group, brought an action against defendant, a company that purchased partnerships in the group from the general partners at a price allegedly below fair market value. Plaintiffs based their action on a theory of civil conspiracy among the general partners and defendant, and alleged as the underlying torts breach of fiduciary duty, unfair business practices, and constructive fraud. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Defendant cannot be liable for the general partners' breach of their fiduciary duty, because defendant, which was neither an agent nor an employee of the general partners and which owed no fiduciary duty to plaintiffs, is legally incapable of committing the tort underlying the claim of conspiracy (breach of fiduciary duty). Conspiracy presupposes that the conspirator is legally capable of committing the underlying tort or, in other words, that he or she owes a duty to the plaintiff recognized by law and is potentially subject to liability for breach of that duty. Because the only duty allegedly breached was a fiduciary duty owed by the general partners but not by defendant, defendant cannot be held accountable to plaintiffs for breach of a fiduciary duty on a conspiracy theory. Because only a fiduciary can be liable for constructive fraud, plaintiffs' constructive fraud claim cannot be pursued against defendant. And because plaintiffs' unfair business practices cause of action is based entirely on the breach of fiduciary duty allegations and an unfair business practices claim requires proof that another law has been violated, the unfair business practices claim cannot be pursued. (100 C.A.4th 1107.)

(3) Inference of Unlawful Purpose. The requisite concurrence in the tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relation of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances. (Wyatt v. Union Mortg. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 773, 784, 785, 157 C.R. 392, 598 P.2d 45, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §516.)

(4) Statute of Limitations. In Wyatt, an action based on fraud and breach of fiduciary duty, the statute of limitations had run on each of the wrongful acts of misrepresentation and concealment. However, the allegation and proof of a civil conspiracy brought in the "last overt act" doctrine--that the statute does not begin to run until the culminating act in the conspiracy. In this case, the last overt act was collection of the final payment on a loan shortly before the trial. (24 C.3d 787, following Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 C.A.2d 827, 271 P.2d 588, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §516.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. In Richard B. LeVine v. Higashi (2005) 131 C.A.4th 566, 32 C.R.3d 244, citing the text, an arbitration ruling had been entered finding in favor of continuing partners on a former partner's torts claims involving the allocation of partnership profits. Held, the ruling barred the former partner's subsequent conspiracy cause of action against the partnership's accountants. Liability on a conspiracy theory is derivative, like that under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing the tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration. Here, because no tort was committed by the continuing partners, there could be no conspiracy liability of the accountants. (131 C.A.4th 575.)

(1) Nature of Requirement. A conspiracy is not actionable unless a wrongful act was committed with resulting damage. (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 511, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, infra, §739; Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 C.A.2d 50, 64, 35 C.R. 652, infra, §739; Rosefield v. Rose (1990) 216 C.A.3d 1551, 1564, 265 C.R. 597, quoting the text; see BAJI, No. 13.85 [definition of conspiracy].)

(2) Illustrations. The requirement that a wrongful act be shown has been an issue in a number of cases. (See Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 C.A.4th 512, 525, 37 C.R.2d 97, infra, §181 [no liability for conspiracy where underlying wrongs are subject to privilege]; Lyons v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1001, 1018, 48 C.R.2d 174 [no liability for conspiracy where object in view is lawful and lawful means are employed, even though damage results and defendant acts with malicious motives]; Monastra v. Konica Business Machines, U.S.A. (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1628, 1644, 51 C.R.2d 528 [defendants were jointly liable for conspiracy to hinder and delay plaintiff's efforts to satisfy judgment against judgment debtor by making fraudulent transfer of debtor's assets]; Weinbaum v. Goldfarb, Whitman & Cohen (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1310, 1314, 54 C.R.2d 462 [same].)

In Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 C.A.2d 756, 343 P.2d 118, plaintiff brought a malpractice suit against Dr. L. It was tried three times, the third ending in a judgment for plaintiff. In her present suit for conspiracy to obstruct the original action, she alleged that certain defendants, Los Angeles County Medical Association and doctors, conspired to prevent her from getting an impartial medical witness to testify for her; that at the request of the court the association's malpractice committee recommended defendant Dr. P; that Dr. P represented himself to be impartial and denied knowing Dr. L, but in fact knew him and had worked with him; and that Dr. P testified against plaintiff. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed.

(a) Allegations that defendant medical association threatened to expel doctors from membership and cause their malpractice insurance policies to be cancelled by their carriers if they testified for plaintiff did not give rise to a cause of action. A doctor who was not previously engaged by a patient has no legal obligation to accept employment to render services as a medical expert; and because the doctors asked by her had a legal right to refuse to testify for her, it was not an actionable wrong for the association to seek to control them in this regard. (172 C.A.2d 764.)

(b) Allegations of a conspiracy to obstruct the orderly prosecution of her malpractice action by false representations causing the court to appoint Dr. P as a disinterested expert and causing him to testify falsely, and concealment of certain X-ray evidence, did not state a cause of action. If this was a charge of perjury, subornation of perjury, or concealment of evidence, no civil right could be predicated on the mere violation of a criminal statute (except defamation and malicious prosecution from false testimony). (172 C.A.2d 765.)

2. Civil Conspiracy.

cc. Knowledge and Intent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 47

[§ 47] Knowledge and Intent.

Conspiracy is "a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." (Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 510, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, infra, §739.) Thus, there must be a showing of knowledge of the planned tort and intent to aid in its commission. (Wyatt v. Union Mortg. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 773, 784, 785, 157 C.R. 392, 598 P.2d 45, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §516.)

In Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp. (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1571, 47 C.R.2d 752, plaintiff, the originator of a television series, sued his former partners for conspiring to oust him from the project and the distributor who, after plaintiff's ouster, had entered into a distribution contract with the partners. Held, nonsuit in favor of the distributor affirmed.

(a) Conspiring defendants must have actual knowledge of the planned tort and concur in the tortious scheme with knowledge of its unlawful purpose. In other words, knowledge of the planned tort must be combined with intent to aid in its commission. (40 C.A.4th 1582.) There is no evidence here that defendant distributor satisfied either element at the time that the unlawful action was completed (5 months before it joined the project). Indeed, the evidence established that defendant distributor was deliberately kept uninformed of the dispute between plaintiff and the former partners in order to induce it to sign the contract. (40 C.A.4th 1583.)

(b) Similarly, there is a lack of evidence establishing that defendant distributor, after it had entered into the distribution contract, had knowledge of the plan to defraud plaintiff. And, even if it had knowledge of the partners' scheme to defraud plaintiff, there is no evidence suggesting that defendant distributor, who had no motive for harming plaintiff, intentionally joined them in this plan. Instead, the evidence showed that defendant distributor had no plan other than to distribute the television series according to its contract, the performance of which is no evidence that it was a coconspirator. (40 C.A.4th 1585.)

(c) Defendant distributor could not join in a conspiracy that had already been completed. De Vries v. Brumback

(1960) 53 C.2d 643, 2 C.R. 764, 349 P.2d 532, infra, §48, in which the conspiracy was still ongoing when defendant joined the scheme, does not suggest otherwise. (40 C.A.4th 1595.)

[§ 48] Joining Existing Conspiracy.

In De Vries v. Brumback (1960) 53 C.2d 643, 2 C.R. 764, 349 P.2d 532, M and B conspired to and did rob a jewelry store of plaintiff's assignor. Then they met with defendant, who joined the conspiracy to dispose of the property. Some of the stolen property was recovered; in this action for conversion defendant was held liable for the value of the unrecovered part--$ 21,947.13. On appeal, he contended that, because he was not a member of the prero robbery conspiracy, his tort was a new conversion when the stolen goods were delivered to him, and, because all that he had was recovered from him, he could not be liable in damages. His contention, based on the rule governing criminal conspiracy (see People v. Weiss (1958) 50 C.2d 535, 327 P.2d 527, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §96), was rejected.

"There is a clear distinction in the law of conspiracy as applied to criminal as differentiated from civil cases. ... The gist of the crime of conspiracy is the agreement to commit the unlawful act ... , while the gist of the tort is the damage resulting to the plaintiff from an overt act or acts done pursuant to the common design." (53 C.2d 649.) Hence, in tort a conspirator is a joint tortfeasor liable for all damages irrespective of whether he or she was a direct actor. (53 C.2d 650.) (See BAJI, No. 13.93 [joining conspiracy after formation]; CACI, No. 3601 [same].)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

1. Types of Joint Torts.

b. Independent Acts: Concurrent and Successive Tortfeasors.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 49

[§ 49] Independent Acts: Concurrent and Successive Tortfeasors.

Where the independent acts of several persons contribute to the injury, the wrongdoers are not joint tortfeasors, and are more properly characterized as "concurrent" tortfeasors or "successive" tortfeasors. (See American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 586, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357 [summary of law on multiple tortfeasors]; Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §17; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §385; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §10.1; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §58 et seq.)

(1) Concurrent Acts. The wrongful acts may actually be simultaneous or concurrent, as where two negligent automobile drivers collide, injuring a third person. (See infra, §1193; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 630; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 432; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 697; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 412; cf. Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, infra, §§67, 1194 [identification of culpable defendant].)

(2) Successive Acts. The acts may, however, be successive in point of time, one occurring before the other. (See Shea v. San Bernardino (1936) 7 C.2d 688, 693, 62 P.2d 365 [defendant railway company negligently paved right of way; defendant city accepted work and negligently failed to remedy or to warn of defects]; Ash v. Mortensen (1944) 24 C.2d 654, 657, 150 P.2d 876 [negligent motorist injured plaintiff; doctor aggravated injuries by negligent treatment]; Holahan v. McGrew (1931) 111 C.A. 443, 446, 295 P. 1059 [property owner and contractor negligently constructed canopy with protruding timbers; bus driver negligently struck it]; Alexander v. Hammarberg (1951) 103 C.A.2d 872, 879, 230 P.2d 399 [building contractor negligently placed house foundations on loose fill; architect negligently failed to supervise construction]; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 630; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 434; 9 A.L.R.5th 746 [joint and several liability of physicians whose independent negligence in treatment of patient causes indivisible injury].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

a. Common Law Background: Joint and Several Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 50

[§ 50] Common Law Background: Joint and Several Liability.

(1) General Rule of Joint and Several Liability. Before the adoption of Proposition 51 (infra, §52), contributory wrongdoers, whether joint tortfeasors or concurrent or successive tortfeasors, were ordinarily jointly and severally liable for the entire damage. (Shea v. San Bernardino (1936) 7 C.2d 688, 693, 62 P.2d 365; Holahan v. McGrew (1931) 111 C.A. 443, 446, 295 P. 1059; Gray v. Sutherland (1954) 124 C.A.2d 280, 289, 268 P.2d 754; see Rest.2d, Torts §§875, 879; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §385; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §66 et seq.)

Hence, when they were joined in an action, it was improper to apportion compensatory damages among them; judgment for the full amount would be rendered against each. (Hallinan v. Prindle (1934) 220 C. 46, 55, 29 P.2d 202; Puckett v. Sullivan (1961) 190 C.A.2d 489, 496, 12 C.R. 55; Apodaca v. Haworth (1962) 206 C.A.2d 209, 213, 23 C.R. 461, citing the text; Dauenhauer v. Sullivan (1963) 215 C.A.2d 231, 235, 30 C.R. 71; see Oldham v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1936) 17 C.A.2d 144, 146, 61 P.2d 503 [verdict of $ 6,282 against one joint tortfeasor and $ 4,282 against another was invalid for attempted apportionment]; Aitken v. White (1949) 93 C.A.2d 134, 142, 208 P.2d 788 [stating rule, but holding that improper verdict can be corrected by trial court in ruling on motion for new trial]; 41 So. Cal. L. Rev. 728; 100 A.L.R.2d 16 [damages following successive impacts by motor vehicles]; 46 A.L.R.3d 801 [propriety and effect of jury's apportionment of damages as between tortfeasors jointly and severally liable].) (On statutory right to contribution, see infra, §105.)

Application of the common law joint and several liability doctrine prior to Proposition 51 "produced some situations in which defendants who bore only a small share of fault for an accident could be left with the obligation to pay all or a large share of the plaintiff's damages if other more culpable tortfeasors were insolvent." (Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 1198, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, infra, §§52, 65.)

(2) Exceptions. In a few situations, apportionment was permitted before adoption of Proposition 51 (and still is). The most common is where independent acts of different defendants create a nuisance. The damages will be assessed against each tortfeasor according to the tortfeasor's contribution to them. (Conner v. Grosso (1953) 41 C.2d 229, 232, 259 P.2d 435; see California Orange Co. v. Riverside Portland Cement Co. (1920) 50 C.A. 522, 524, 195 P. 694 [dust from cement mills of two different companies formed deposits in plaintiff's orchard]; Griffith v. Kerrigan (1952) 109 C.A.2d 637, 639, 241 P.2d 296 [water seepage from defendants' land and other sources raised water table and injured plaintiff's orchard]; Carlotto Ltd. v. Ventura (1975) 47 C.A.3d 931, 937, 938, 121 C.R. 171 [recognizing right to apportionment, but holding that trial judge's apportionment formula was incorrect]; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §10.1; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 630; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 434; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 383; on remedies for nuisance generally, see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §153 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

b. Restatement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 51

[§ 51] Restatement.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability states the following propositions:

(1) When some persons are jointly and severally liable to an injured person, the injured person "may sue for and recover the full amount of recoverable damages from any jointly and severally liable person." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §10.)

(2) When, on the other hand, a person is severally liable to an injured person for an indivisible injury, the injured person "may recover only the severally liable person's comparative-responsibility share of the injured person's damages." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §11; on Restatement rule of comparative responsibility generally, see infra, §1328.)

(3) Joint and several liability is imposed on intentional tortfeasors (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §12) and on tortfeasors acting in concert (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §15).

(4) A person who negligently fails to protect the plaintiff from the specific risk of an intentional tort is liable for both the person's share of comparative responsibility and the intentional tortfeasor's share. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §14, infra, §§1129, 1146.)

(5) Liability similar to joint and several liability is imposed on vicariously liable parties. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §13, infra, §63.)

However, the Restatement leaves to local law when other tortfeasors should be held jointly and severally liable. It expressly takes no position on whether, or in what form, joint and several liability, several liability, or some combination of the two should be employed, noting that there is no majority rule on this question. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §17 and Comment a.) The Restatement provides five different alternative systems of joint and several, several, and hybrid liability.

Track A reflects a pure joint and several liability system. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §A18 et seq.)

Track B sets forth a pure several liability system. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §B18 et seq.)

Track C sets forth a hybrid system in which insolvent parties' shares are reallocated to solvent parties.(See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §C18 et seq.)

Track D sets forth a hybrid system in which defendants whose comparative responsibility exceeds a threshold are jointly and severally liable, while those below the threshold are severally liable. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §D18 et seq.)

Track E sets forth a hybrid system in which defendants may be jointly and severally liable for economic damages and severally liable for noneconomic damages. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §E18 et seq.)

Track E is similar, with respect to these tortfeasors, to the California statute (infra, §52 et seq.). When the independent tortious conduct of two or more persons is a legal cause of an indivisible injury, each defendant is jointly and severally liable for the economic damages portion of the recoverable damages and, generally, is severally liable for that defendant's comparative share of the noneconomic damages. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Damages §E18.) However, there is joint and several liability for both types of damages in the case of intentional tortfeasors and tortfeasors acting in concert. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Damages §§12, 15, E18.) When the only damages recoverable are economic damages, responsibility is assigned only to the parties and any settling tortfeasors, but when the plaintiff seeks recovery of both economic and noneconomic damages, other identified persons may be assigned a percentage of comparative responsibility. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Damages §E19.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

1. Nature, Purpose, and Validity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 52

[§ 52] Nature, Purpose, and Validity.

(1) Adoption and General Effect. The Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (C.C. 1431 et seq.), popularly known as Proposition 51 or the Deep Pocket Initiative, was adopted by the voters on June 3, 1986, to modify the long-established rule of joint and several liability of multiple tortfeasors (see supra, §50). (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§389, 390; 39 Cal. Western L. Rev. 69 [misapplication of Fair Responsibility Act]; 21 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1141 [defense of traditional joint and several liability rule]; 22 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1125, 1147, 1161 [criticism and defense of recent legislative changes in traditional joint and several liability rule]; 44 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 213 [judicial apportionment of liability under Proposition 51].)

The statute retains joint and several liability for economic damages, but makes liability for noneconomic damages several. (C.C. 1431, 1431.2; on several liability for noneconomic damages, see infra, §53.) It does not alter the law of immunity. (C.C. 1431.3.)

The statute may be amended or repealed only by a vote of the electors or a two-thirds vote of the Legislature. (C.C. 1431.4.)

Similar statutes have been implemented in other states. (See Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 1199, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, infra, §65.)

(2) Findings and Declaration of Purpose. C.C. 1431.1 states:

"The legal doctrine of joint and several liability, also known as 'the deep pocket rule,' has resulted in a system of inequity and injustice that has threatened financial bankruptcy of local governments, other public agencies, private individuals and businesses and has resulted in higher prices for goods and services to the public and in higher taxes to the taxpayers." (C.C. 1431.1(a).)

"Some governmental and private defendants are perceived to have substantial financial resources or insurance coverage and have thus been included in lawsuits even though there was little or no basis for finding them at fault.

Under joint and several liability, if they are found to share even a fraction of the fault, they often are held financially liable for all the damage. The People--taxpayers and consumers alike--ultimately pay for these lawsuits in the form of higher taxes, higher prices and higher insurance premiums." (C.C. 1431.1(b).)

"Local governments have been forced to curtail some essential police, fire and other protections because of the soaring costs of lawsuits and insurance premiums." (C.C. 1431.1(c).)

"Therefore, the People of the State of California declare that to remedy these inequities, defendants in tort actions shall be held financially liable in closer proportion to their degree of fault. To treat them differently is unfair and inequitable." (C.C. 1431.1.)

"The People of the State of California further declare that reforms in the liability laws in tort actions are necessary and proper to avoid catastrophic economic consequences for state and local governmental bodies as well as private individuals and businesses." (C.C. 1431.1.)

(3) Validity. In Evangelatos v. Superior Court, supra, the court rejected two constitutional challenges to the Act: (a) that it is too vague to satisfy the due process requirements of either the state or federal Constitutions, and (b) that it violates the Equal Protection Clauses of both Constitutions by establishing classifications that are not rationally related to a legitimate state interest. (44 C.3d 1200.) The opinion notes that similar contentions were raised in cases challenging the validity of the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA) (infra, §779), and that the decisions in the MICRA cases clearly showed the lack of merit in plaintiff's current constitutional challenges. (44 C.3d 1200 et seq.) (See Weidenfeller v. Star & Garter (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1, 7, 2 C.R.2d 14, infra, §62 [following Evangelatos].)

[§ 53] Several Liability for Noneconomic Damages.

(1) Statement of Rule. "In any action for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death, based upon principles of comparative fault, the liability of each defendant for non-economic damages shall be several only and shall not be joint." (C.C. 1431.2(a).) (See Aetna Health Plans of Calif. v. Yucaipa-Calimesa Joint Unified School Dist. (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1175, 1190, 85 C.R.2d 672 [no indemnity claim lies for noneconomic damages; liability for them is several under Proposition 51].)

(2) "Economic" and "Noneconomic" Damages. The basic terms are defined as follows:

(a) "[T]he term 'economic damages' means objectively verifiable monetary losses including medical expenses, loss of earnings, burial costs, loss of use of property, costs of repair or replacement, costs of obtaining substitute domestic services, loss of employment and loss of business or employment opportunities." (C.C. 1431.2(b)(1).)

(b) "[T]he term 'non-economic damages' means subjective, non-monetary losses including, but not limited to, pain, suffering, inconvenience, mental suffering, emotional distress, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium, injury to reputation and humiliation." (C.C. 1431.2(b)(2).) (See BAJI, No. 14.76 [defining economic and non-economic damages], CACI, Nos. 3902, 3903, 3905 [same].)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 55

[§ 55] Between Negligent and Intentional Tortfeasors.

In Rosh v. Cave Imaging Systems (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1225, 32 C.R.2d 136, plaintiff manager, who was shot by an employee whom he had fired, brought a negligence action against the security company that had contracted with plaintiff's employer to provide security services. The jury apportioned the fault as follows: defendant security company, 75%; the assailant, 25%. Defendant argued that no reasonable person could conclude that a negligent tortfeasor was more responsible for an injury than an intentional tortfeasor. Held, the apportionment was proper.

(a) Comparative fault is a flexible concept that does not lend itself to exact measurement. A jury is competent to apply comparative fault principles, and its determination will not be set aside if it is supported by substantial evidence. (26 C.A.4th 1233.)

(b) The liability theory presented by plaintiff, i.e., that defendant negligently permitted the assailant to repeatedly enter the employer's premises, does not lend itself to an apportionment of substantial fault to the assailant and minimal fault to defendant. And the evidence supports this theory: Defendant was hired to protect the employer's property and personnel. Defendant's employees were aware that terminated employees posed a security risk, that the assailant had been terminated, and that he was no longer allowed on the premises. Nevertheless, they allowed the assailant to remain on the premises on three occasions within 26 hours of his termination, and when informed of the assailant's presence on the premises, they promised to take care of the matter, but did nothing. Under these circumstances, there is substantial evidence to support the jury's apportionment of fault. (26 C.A.4th 1234.)

(c) Defendant's reliance on Weidenfeller v. Star & Garter (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1, 2 C.R.2d 14, infra, §62, is misplaced. In that case the plaintiff was the victim of an assault in a bar parking lot, and the jury assessed 75% fault to the assailant, 20% to the bar, and 5% to the plaintiff. However, Weidenfeller does not stand for the proposition that a jury must make this type of apportionment in every case involving both intentional and negligent tortfeasors. Moreover, Weidenfeller is readily distinguishable from the present case in that there was no evidence that the bar had notice that its parking lot was inadequately guarded, that a would-be assailant had returned several times to the premises, that a particular patron would be at risk, or that security procedures were being violated. (26 C.A.4th 1235.)

In Scott v. Los Angeles (1994) 27 C.A.4th 125, 147, 32 C.R.2d 643, however, a verdict setting the combined fault of defendant county and its social worker at 99% and the fault of a person who placed a child in boiling water at only 1% was held not supported by evidence.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Intentional tortfeasor is not entitled to reduction or apportionment of noneconomic damages: Thomas v. Duggins Const. Co. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1105, 44 C.R.3d 66, a case of first impression, held that an intentional tortfeasor is not entitled to a reduction or apportionment of noneconomic damages under Proposition 51. Plaintiffs, who were injured when a scissor lift collapsed at a construction site, sued the seller of the lift and certain of its employees for breach of implied warranty, negligence, and intentional misrepresentation. The jury found in plaintiffs' favor on these claims, found that the seller and plaintiffs' employer were each 40% responsible for the injuries and that the two of the seller's employees each were 10% responsible, and further found that one of the seller's employees, while acting within the scope of his employment, made intentional misrepresentations about the lift. The trial court rejected the seller's claim that its liability for plaintiffs' noneconomic damages was subject to apportionment in accordance with Proposition 51, and entered judgment against the seller for the entirety of the plaintiffs' damages. Held, affirmed.

(a) At the time Proposition 51 was adopted, the law was well established that a tortfeasor who intentionally injured another was not entitled to contribution from any other tortfeasors. A defendant who committed an intentional tort was not entitled to a reduction of the judgment against it because the plaintiff's injuries also resulted either from plaintiff's own negligence or the negligence of a third party. Proposition 51 did not alter these principles. (139 C.A.4th 1111.)

(b) In Heiner v. Kmart Corp. (2000) 84 C.A.4th 335, 347, 100 C.R.2d 854, text, §1371, the court noted (although in dicta) that an intentional tortfeasor's liability is not subject to apportionment where the plaintiff's injuries result in part from the plaintiff's own contributory negligence, observing that it would be contrary to sound policy to reduce a plaintiff's damages, based on comparative fault, for his or her negligence in encountering the defendant's deliberately inflicted harm. The same policy considerations of deterrence and punishment that bar a reduction of an intentional tortfeasor's liability to reflect the plaintiff's contributory negligence also support the conclusion that an intentional tortfeasor's liability to the plaintiff is not subject to apportionment (i.e., reduction) where the negligence of one or more third-party tortfeasors contribute to the injuries. An intentional actor cannot rely on someone else's negligence to shift responsibility for his or her own conduct. (139 C.A.4th 1112.)

(c) Applying the foregoing principles, the seller's vicarious liability for the intentional misrepresentation of its employee is not subject to reduction under Proposition 51 based on the jury's finding that the negligence of plaintiffs' employer also contributed to their injuries. Thus, although the seller's liability in negligence would have otherwise entitled it to an apportionment of the plaintiffs' noneconomic damages, its vicarious liability for the intentional tort is not subject to reduction. This is so even though the jury concluded that the employee's intentional misconduct constituted only a 10% contributing factor to the plaintiffs' injuries. (139 C.A.4th 1113.)

[§ 56] Between Original and Successive Tortfeasors.

In Kitzig v. Nordquist (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1384, 97 C.R.2d 762, the malpractice of plaintiff's prior dentist caused her to seek treatment from defendant, who negligently aggravated her original injuries. Held, the trial judge did not err in failing to require the jury to allocate fault to the prior dentist.

(a) Under the circumstances, it would have been inconsistent with the statutory language and the policies underlying C.C. 1431.2(a) to permit the second tortfeasor, who was directly at fault for the aggravation of the plaintiff's injuries, to reduce his liability for the noneconomic damages connected to those injuries because of the conduct of the original tortfeasor. The prior dentist played no part in creating the actual injuries caused by defendant for which plaintiff sought compensation in this action. The prior dentist's conduct was passive with respect to those injuries. He did not participate with defendant in causing those injuries, and he had no control or opportunity to protect himself against the subsequent negligence. (81 C.A.4th 1396.)

(b) While the prior dentist was a "proximate cause" of the damages suffered by the plaintiff and therefore could be jointly and severally liable for all economic damages, this form of proximate cause is not necessarily equivalent to "fault" analysis under Proposition 51. "Fault" connotes some form of active participation in creating the injuries for which the plaintiff seeks to recover. There was no evidence that the prior dentist was at fault with respect to the noneconomic damages suffered in connection with defendant's negligence. The fact that the prior dentist may have placed plaintiff in the situation where she needed more complicated dental care is not the same as saying that the prior dentist should bear financial responsibility under Proposition 51 for defendant's conduct alone. (81 C.A.4th 1401.)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

3. Manner of Allocating Damages.

dd. Between Tortfeasors Subject and Not Subject to Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 57

[§ 57] Between Tortfeasors Subject and Not Subject to Liability.

Liability for noneconomic damages under Proposition 51 cannot exceed the defendant's proportionate share of fault as compared with all fault for the plaintiff's injury, not merely that of parties subject to liability. In DaFonte v. Up-Right (1992) 2 C.4th 593, 7 C.R.2d 238, 828 P.2d 140, plaintiff was employed by defendant rancher. In attempting to clean a moving conveyor belt of a grape harvester, plaintiff was injured when his arm was drawn into the belt. The employer's insurance carrier paid plaintiff workers' compensation benefits. Plaintiff, his parents, and his sister then sued defendant manufacturer of the harvester, alleging negligence and strict products liability. There was evidence that the harvester lacked both a belt guard and an accessible emergency "off" switch; that the manufacturer gave no instruction on safe methods of cleaning the belt; and that plaintiff had worked on an overlong shift without adequate supervision. The jury allocated 15% of the fault for the injury to the employee, 45% to the employer, who was not a defendant, and 40% to the manufacturer. After the parties agreed to reduce the award by 15%, the amount attributable to the employee's fault, the trial court further reduced the judgment against the manufacturer, pursuant to C.C.P. 1431.2 by an amount equal to 45% of the employee's noneconomic damages, which were attributable to the fault of the employer. The Court of Appeal concluded that the trial court had erroneously invoked C.C.P. 1431.2 to preclude a full joint and several award of noneconomic damages against the manufacturer, and recomputed the judgment against the manufacturer. Held, reversed.

(a) Law prior to Proposition 51. Under the law prior to Proposition 51, an employee's damage judgment against third parties was required to be reduced by an amount attributable to the employer's proportionate share of fault, up to the amount of workers' compensation benefits paid. If the employer's share of fault exceeded the benefits paid or owed, its claim for reimbursement, lien, or credit was denied. If the benefits paid or owed exceeded the employer's share of fault, the employer could recoup the excess only. But third-party defendants remained jointly and severally liable to the injured employee for all damages attributable to the employer's fault that were not covered by workers' compensation benefits. And "deep pocket" defendants whose fault was slight could still be saddled with large damage awards mainly attributable to the greater fault of others who were able to escape their full proportionate contribution. (2 C.4th 599.)

(b) Purpose and effect of Proposition 51. Joint and several liability was modified by Proposition 51. C.C. 1431

establishes a presumption that an obligation is presumed to be joint and not several, except as provided in C.C. 1431.2, which states that the liability of each defendant for noneconomic damages shall be several only, and that each defendant shall be liable only for the amount of noneconomic damages allocated to that defendant in direct proportion to that defendant's percentage of fault. (2 C.4th 599.) "Proposition 51 thus retains the joint liability of all tortfeasors, regardless of their respective shares of fault, with respect to all objectively probable expenses and monetary losses. On the other hand, the more intangible and subjective categories of damage were limited by Proposition 51 to a rule of strict proportionate liability. With respect to these noneconomic damages, the plaintiff alone now assumes the risk that a proportionate contribution cannot be obtained from each person responsible for the injury." (2 C.4th 600.)

(c) No exception for damages attributable to fault of persons not subject to liability.

(1) Even though the employer, who was also determined to have fault for the injury, could not be a tort or indemnity defendant, due to the workers' compensation system, Proposition 51 does not have an exception for damages attributable to the fault of persons who are immune from liability or have no mutual joint obligation to pay missing shares. In every case, the statute limits the joint liability of every defendant to economic damages, and it shields every defendant from any share of noneconomic damages beyond that attributable to his or her own comparative fault. Thus, a defendant's liability for noneconomic damages cannot exceed his or her proportionate share of fault as compared with all fault responsible for plaintiff's injuries, not merely that of the defendants present in the lawsuit. (2 C.4th 601.)

(3) Plaintiff and his amici curiae argued that failure to infer an exception to Proposition 51 for third-party suits by injured workers would create a host of practical litigation problems and destroy the "delicate" preexisting balance among the rights of employee, employer, and third party tortfeasor. But the principal effect is precisely that intended by the initiative: defendants no longer have to pay an injured employee's noneconomic damages caused by the fault of another, and the employee, like any other tort victim, bears the resulting risk of loss. (2 C.4th 603.)

(d) Conclusion. "In sum, section 1431.2 plainly limits a defendant's share of noneconomic damages to his or her own proportionate share of comparative fault. The statute states or implies no exception for third party suits by injured employees. No compelling reason appears to infer such an exception in derogation of the measure's literal words." (2 C.4th 604.) (See Richards v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 14 C.4th 985, 993, 60 C.R.2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181 [tobacco manufacturers, whose immunity from direct suit under former language of C.C. 1714.45, infra, §1534, was based on no tort having been committed, were not "tortfeasors" whose fault could be used to reduce comparative liability of asbestos manufacturer for noneconomic damages; distinguishing DaFonte]; Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 985, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, infra, §1490 [same]; Hernandez v. Badger Const. Equipment Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1791, 1804, 34 C.R.2d 732 [citing DaFonte and applying C.C. 1431.2 where workers' compensation benefits were paid by immune employer under Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act; C.C. 1431.2 not preempted by federal law]; Taylor v. John Crane (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1063, 1068, 6 C.R.3d 695 [proportionate fault was properly allocated to nondefendant U.S. Navy in Navy machinist's negligence action against defendant manufacturer of asbestos-containing products, even if Navy was immune from liability]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 350; 33 U.S.F. L. Rev. 459 [Richards v. Owens-Illinois].)

A defendant may seek to reduce his or her share of liability for noneconomic damages by adding nonparty joint tortfeasors in the apportionment. However, the defendant must produce substantial evidence that the alleged nonparty tortfeasor is in fact at fault. (Wilson v. Ritto (2003) 105 C.A.4th 361, 366, 129 C.R.2d 336 [defendant was required to show that nonparty doctor was at fault as measured by medical standard of care, not that doctor merely contributed to plaintiff's injury].)

Munoz v. Union City (2007) 148 C.A.4th 173, 55 C.R.3d 393, was a wrongful death action against a police officer and city arising from a shooting incident and based in part on the city's direct negligence in selecting and supervising the officer. The trial court reduced recovery by the percent of fault allocated to the city on the ground that sovereign immunity barred liability for the city's direct negligence. Held, reversed, with directions to enter a new judgment apportioning liability between the parties legally at fault (officer and victim). Sovereign immunity does not mean simply that plaintiffs cannot collect damages from a public entity. Under Govt.C. 815, direct tort liability of public entities must be based on a specific statute declaring them to be liable, or at least creating some specific duty of care. In the absence of duty, there can be no tort liability, and no fault can be allocated to a party that is not a tortfeasor. It necessarily follows that no portion of the fault in this case may be allocated to the city. (148 C.A.4th 182, following Richards v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 14 C.4th 985, 60 C.R.2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181, text, p. 126, and distinguishing DaFonte v. Up-Right (1992) 2 C.4th 593, 7 C.R.2d 238, 828 P.2d 140, text, p. 124.)

See Ford v. Polaris Industries (2006) 139 C.A.4th 755, 778, 43 C.R.3d 215, Supp., infra, §1344 [watercraft operator who had no duty to injured passenger under primary assumption of the risk doctrine was not subject to allocation of fault in passenger's products liability action against watercraft manufacturer; operator committed no tort and thus there was no fault to apportion to her]; Ovando v. Los Angeles (2008) 159 C.A.4th 42, 71, 71 C.R.3d 415 [in legal malpractice action predicated on plaintiff's false criminal conviction, apportionment of fault was required among defendant and nonparty police officers who planted evidence and testified falsely against plaintiff, even if officers were immune under Govt.C. 821.6 (prosecution of judicial or administrative proceeding; see text, §180 et seq.); immunity is not based on legislative finding that public employee bears no fault; citing DaFonte].

[§ 58] Between Settling and Nonsettling Tortfeasors.

In Roslan v. Permea (1993) 17 C.A.4th 110, 21 C.R.2d 66, an action for injuries sustained from a defective shipping carton, plaintiff recovered damages against defendant Z that included $ 268,481 for noneconomic damages. While that amount was reduced by the 30% comparative fault of plaintiff, it was not reduced by the comparative fault of two other defendants which had settled prior to trial. Also, defendant Z was not allowed to introduce deposition testimony showing that one of the settling defendants had contributed to the design of the packaging system. Held, reversed.

(a) Under C.C. 1431.2, liability for noneconomic damages must be apportioned among the "universe of tortfeasors," including nonjoined defendants. (17 C.A.4th 113, citing DaFonte v. Up-Right (1992) 2 C.4th 593, 7 C.R.2d 238, 828 P.2d 140, supra, §57.) Here, liability was not so apportioned, because the relevant "universe" included the settling defendants. (17 C.A.4th 113.)

(b) Because the trial judge refused to allow defendant Z to present evidence concerning the alleged culpability of one of the settling defendants, the settling defendants were not included in the special verdict form, and the jury had no evidence from which to assess their comparative fault. Hence, the matter must be remanded so that the jury can make these determinations. (17 C.A.4th 113.)

His family sued both the manufacturer and the distributor of the valve, and a verdict was rendered in the family's favor. Plaintiffs also received workers' compensation benefits. Held, workers' compensation benefits should be allocated in the same proportion that damages are awarded. In this case, 55.3% of the damages were economic, so 55.3% of the benefits must be subtracted from the amount awarded for economic damages. (49 C.A.4th 21.) ((See *Scalice v. [§ 60] Applicability of Comparative Equitable Indemnity.

In Union Pac. Corp. v. Wengert (2000) 79 C.A.4th 1444, 95 C.R.2d 68, three of four defendants settled with plaintiffs for $ 3 million, and then cross-complained against the nonsettling defendant for comparative equitable indemnity (see infra, §116). The nonsettling defendant argued that, under Proposition 51, equitable indemnification could only be based on a joint obligation and that, therefore, the jury should have been required to assess only the reasonable amount of plaintiffs' economic damages. However, the trial court rejected this argument and awarded judgment against cross-defendant based on the total settlement. (Because cross-defendant was found to be 20% at fault, judgment was entered against him for $ 600,000.) Held, reversed.

(a) One acting in good faith in making a payment under a reasonable belief that it is necessary to his or her protection is entitled to equitable indemnity, even though it develops that the settlor has no interest to protect. Here, as a result of Proposition 51, the settling defendants could never be held liable for plaintiffs' noneconomic damages insofar as they were caused by the nonsettling defendant's negligence. Thus, they could not have reasonably believed that they were protecting their own interests when they settled all of plaintiffs' claims. (79 C.A.4th 1448.)

(b) "It is well established that the right to indemnity flows from payment of a joint legal obligation on another's behalf. ... Before the enactment of Proposition 51, a defendant who settled the plaintiff's entire claim was entitled to seek indemnification from concurrent tortfeasors for its payment of their joint obligation to the plaintiff. ... Now, however, joint liability is restricted to economic damages, and the right to seek indemnity after settlement is correspondingly limited." Here, the jury should have been instructed to determine the amount of the settlement attributable to economic losses, and the nonsettling defendant should only have been charged with his proportionate share of that amount. (79 C.A.4th 1448.)

(c) The settling defendants argued that Proposition 51 applies only to liability that has been apportioned by a trier of fact and thus has no applicability to a settlement that dismisses the plaintiff's principal action but preserves comparative indemnity rights. This argument has no merit. "If liability is firm enough to induce a defendant to settle, it is subject to the unequivocal terms of Proposition 51." (79 C.A.4th 1449.)

4. Claims Subject to Proposition 51.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 61

[§ 61] In General.

The rule of several liability for noneconomic damages applies in "any action for personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death, based upon principles of comparative fault." (C.C. 1431.2(a), supra, §53.)

In Hernandez v. Badger Const. Equipment Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1791, 34 C.R.2d 732, plaintiff wife was awarded $ 250,000 noneconomic damages for loss of consortium in her husband's action against the manufacturer and the lessor of a crane for injuries suffered in a work-related injury. Plaintiff argued that C.C. 1431.2 did not apply to her loss of consortium cause of action because such claim was not "based upon principles of comparative fault" within the meaning of the statute. Held, this argument is without merit. The quoted provision does not require comparison of the plaintiff's negligence to that of other parties. Instead, it focuses on the comparative fault of multiple tortfeasors. Hence, plaintiff's cause of action for loss of consortium was "based upon principles of comparative fault" because it involved independently acting tortfeasors who have some fault to compare. (28 C.A.4th 1811.) (See Craddock v. Kmart Corp. (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1300, 1309, 107 C.R.2d 881 [husband's claim for loss of consortium was subject to reduction for plaintiff wife's comparative fault; following Hernandez]; Brandon G. v. Gray (2003) 111 C.A.4th 29, 39, 3 C.R.3d 330 [legal malpractice action to recover for value of claim lost as result of failure to press meritorious claim was not transformed into one for "personal injury, property damage, or wrongful death" within meaning of C.C. 1431.2(a) by fact that underlying action was for personal injury].)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

4. Claims Subject to Proposition 51.

bb. Claims Involving Both Negligent and Intentional Torts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 62

[§ 62] Claims Involving Both Negligent and Intentional Torts.

Weidenfeller v. Star & Garter (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1, 2 C.R.2d 14, involved intentional as well as negligent torts. Plaintiff was assaulted in a bar's parking lot, and sued the bar and its owners for failing to provide adequate lighting and security. Finding that defendants' negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, the jury attributed 75% fault to the assailant, 20% to defendants, and 5% to plaintiff. Applying C.C. 1431.2, the trial judge reduced the economic damage award from $ 122,500 to $ 116,375 (95% of $ 122,500) and the noneconomic damage award from $ 250,000 to $ 50,000 (20% of $ 250,000), and entered judgment for $ 166,375. Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff contended that he was also entitled to 95% of the noneconomic damage award because C.C. 1431.2, applicable by its terms only to actions "based upon principles of comparative fault," was necessarily inapplicable whenever one party, as here, acted intentionally. However, accepting this argument would defeat the purpose of the statute and produce an absurd result. "It is inconceivable that the voters intended that a negligent tortfeasor's obligation to pay only its proportionate share of the noneconomic loss, here 20 percent, would become disproportionate increasing to 95 percent solely because the only other responsible tortfeasor acted intentionally. To penalize the negligent tortfeasor in such circumstances not only frustrates the purpose of the statute but violates the commonsense notion that a more culpable party should bear the financial burden caused by its intentional act." (1 C.A.4th 6.)

(b) The cases relied on by plaintiff, Allen v. Sundean (1982) 137 C.A.3d 216, 186 C.R. 863, and Godfrey v. Steinpress (1982) 128 C.A.3d 154, 180 C.R. 95, stand for the proposition that an intentional actor cannot rely on someone else's negligence to shift responsibility for his or her own conduct. In that context the statement in Allen that intentional torts appear to be excluded from the comparative fault system does not mean that C.C. 1431.2 never applies to both intentional and negligent tortfeasors. There is no basis for not applying the statute in the converse situation where, as in the present case, the injured party is attempting to transfer the intentional actor's responsibility to the negligent tortfeasor. (1 C.A.4th 7.) (See 54 A.L.R.5th 379 [apportionment of liability between landowners and assailants for injuries to crime victims].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

4. Claims Subject to Proposition 51.

cc. Claims Involving Vicarious Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 63

[§ 63] Claims Involving Vicarious Liability.

Proposition 51 does not abrogate vicarious liability; the parties remain jointly and severally liable for both economic and noneconomic damages.

(1) Liability Based on Respondeat Superior. In Miller v. Stouffer (1992) 9 C.A.4th 70, 11 C.R.2d 454, plaintiff was struck by an automobile driven by Barrientos, who at the time was acting within the scope of her employment as a housekeeper for Stouffer. The jury returned a verdict awarding plaintiff $ 174,000 in economic damages, and $ 260,000 in noneconomic damages and allocating fault between Barrientos and Stouffer. The trial judge granted a motion to modify the verdict so as to allocate 100% of the fault to Barrientos, and to find Stouffer vicariously liable for Barrientos' entire liability. Because she was only vicariously liable, and hence without fault, Stouffer argued that under Proposition 51 she could not be held liable for any portion of the noneconomic damages. Held, Proposition 51 does not shield vicariously liable employers from liability for noneconomic damages.

(a) Proposition 51 requires an apportionment of noneconomic damages based on each tortfeasor's comparative fault. "By its terms, Proposition 51 is unavailing to Stouffer because it is directed at the doctrine of joint and several liability, while Stouffer's liability arises as a consequence of her status as Barrientos's employer pursuant to the doctrine of respondeat superior. Nothing in Proposition 51 altered the vicarious liability of an employer under that long-standing doctrine." (9 C.A.4th 83.)

(b) Proposition 51 benefits employers by shielding them from liability for noneconomic damages beyond those attributable to their employees. However, it does not require the injured party to recover noneconomic damages only from the negligent employee, who may have little in the way of assets. Such a result would mean that victims would often go uncompensated while employers would be allowed to avoid much of the risk incident to their enterprise. (9 C.A.4th 84.)

(2) Liability Imposed by Statute. Rashtian v. BRAC-BH (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1847, 12 C.R.2d 411, addressed the question whether Proposition 51 is applicable to the vicarious liability imposed on the owner of a motor vehicle, under Veh.C. 17150 (infra, §1260), when an operator using that vehicle with the owner's implied or express permission injures another person, and the owner is without fault. Held, Proposition 51 does not reduce the liability of vehicle owners imposed by Veh.C. 17150.

(a) The reasoning of Miller v. Stouffer, supra, is applicable here. "However, the critical factor in our analysis is not the presence of imputed negligence under the respondeat superior doctrine, but rather the imposition of vicarious liability, whatever the basis. In Miller, that liability rested upon imputed negligence. In this case, it rests upon statutory fiat. In either case, liability for the negligent acts of another is imposed not because of independent culpability which can be measured and evaluated but because of status or relationship. To read Proposition 51 so as to shield every defendant from liability for noneconomic damages beyond that attributable to his or her own fault, 'largely would abrogate the vicarious tort liability of persons for the acts of others. Nothing in the language or intent of Proposition 51 conveyed to the voters in June 1986 dictates such a drastic change in California tort law.' " (9 C.A.4th 1854.)

(b) Furthermore, the liability of the operator and the owner are, to the extent of the financial limitations of Proposition 51, coextensive; i.e., for the purposes of Proposition 51, they are a single tortfeasor. Hence, the noneconomic damages properly chargeable to the operator are likewise chargeable to the owner; and nothing in Proposition 51 can reasonably be construed to abrogate that fundamental principle. (9 C.A.4th 1854.)

(3) Liability Based on Nondelegable Duty. In Srithong v. Total Inv. Co. (1994) 23 C.A.4th 721, 28 C.R.2d 672, T leased a portion of a mini-mall to plaintiff restaurant operator and contracted with M to do repair work on the roof. While this was being done, tar seeped through the ceiling and injured plaintiff. In plaintiff's action against T and M, the jury returned a verdict finding that (a) M was 95% at fault and T was 5% at fault; and (b) plaintiff sustained $ 2,735 in economic damages and $ 83,000 in noneconomic damages, for a total of $ 85,735. The trial judge granted T's motion for entry of a separate judgment under Proposition 51, making it obligated to pay 100% of the economic damages, but only 5% of the noneconomic damages, for a total of $ 6,885. Held, this was error, Proposition 51 was inapplicable; T was jointly and severally liable for the entire damages. As a lessor, T had a nondelegable duty to maintain the leased premises in a safe condition (see infra, §1250). The nondelegable duty rule is a form of vicarious liability. (23 C.A.4th 726.) Hence, the reasoning of Miller and Rashtian applies, and Proposition 51 is inapplicable. (23 C.A.4th 728.)

(4) Liability Based on Civil Conspiracy. By extension from the principles generally governing vicarious liability, where the substantive law makes each joint actor liable for the act of each other joint actor in causing a plaintiff's indivisible injury, as in the case of a civil conspiracy, the rule of joint and several liability is not abrogated by Proposition 51. The policy of allocating losses among defendants for harm caused by the defendants' joint enterprise justifies dispensing with the requirement that plaintiffs prove the degree of fault of each individual defendant. (Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1128, 1142, 15 C.R.3d 118.)

(5) Restatement 3d. The Restatement is in accord. A person "whose liability is imputed based on the tortious acts of another is liable for the entire share of comparative responsibility assigned to the other." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §13.)

See Bayer-Bel v. Litovsky (2008) 159 C.A.4th 396, 399, 71 C.R.3d 518 [negligent unlicensed driver was only severally liable for injured plaintiff's noneconomic damages, where other defendant was primarily liable for negligent entrustment rather than merely vicariously liable].

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

4. Claims Subject to Proposition 51.

dd. Claims Involving Strict Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 64

[§ 64] Claims Involving Strict Liability.

(1) Single Product. In Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 618, 65 C.R.2d 532, defendant was the producer and distributor of a brand of bicycle. It was sued in strict liability when plaintiff suffered an injury due to faulty welding on the fork assembly. Under Proposition 51, defendant attempted to have the liability for the noneconomic damages apportioned on the basis of fault among the manufacturer, designer, and retailer, as well as itself, because the manufacturer, from a negligence standpoint, was 100% at fault. However, the trial judge refused to apply Proposition 51 in this situation, and entered judgment for plaintiff. Held, affirmed. Drawing an analogy to vicarious liability (see supra, §63), the court said:

"[T]he retention of 'joint and several liability' of parties in a defective product's chain of distribution for the plaintiff's full damages without a showing of negligence is essential to the theory of strict product liability. Nothing in Proposition 51 compels dilution of the strict liability doctrine. To the contrary, the measure disapproves of joint and several liability for plaintiff's noneconomic damages only where there are 'independently acting tortfeasors who have some fault to compare.' ... The parties in a defective product's chain of distribution are not joint tortfeasors in the traditional sense; rather, as a matter of law their liability to plaintiff is coextensive with others who may have greater 'fault,' as in other instances of statutorily or judicially imposed vicarious, imputed or derivative liability." (56 C.A.4th 633.)

"Accordingly, we hold Proposition 51 has no application in a strict product liability case where, as here, the plaintiff's injuries are caused solely by a defective product. A strictly liable defendant cannot reduce or eliminate its responsibility to the plaintiff for all injuries caused by a defective product by shifting blame to other parties in the product's chain of distribution who are ostensibly more at 'fault,' and therefore may be negligent as well as strictly liable. The defendant's recourse, if not precluded by good faith settlement principles, lies in an indemnity action." (56 C.A.4th 633.) (See Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1541, 1574, 71 C.R.2d 190 [following Wimberly].)

(2) Multiple Products. The rule is different where multiple products are involved. Wimberly requires joint and several liability only when the defendants are in the same chain of distribution of a specific defective product. Proposition 51 is thus applicable to a strict liability case where multiple products cause the plaintiff's injuries and the evidence provides a basis to allocate liability for noneconomic injury. (Arena v. Owens Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1178, 1193, 74 C.R.2d 580 [asbestosis exposure]; Wilson v. John Crane (2000) 81 C.A.4th 847, 851, 97 C.R.2d 240 [following Arena].)

(1) Single Product. Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 618, 65 C.R.2d 532, text, p. 133, was followed in Bostick v. Flex Equipment Co. (2007) 147 C.A.4th 80, 54 C.R.3d 28, holding that Proposition 51 did not apply to a products liability action against a manufacturer of weight-lifting equipment and a gym brought by a plaintiff injured while using the equipment. Defendants in a strict liability action are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff for noneconomic damages because liability is imposed as a matter of public policy and is not based on fault. (147 C.A.4th 93.) However, a long, concurring opinion, agreeing with the majority on different grounds, argued that Wimberly was wrongly decided. Strict products liability "is not liability without fault. ... [A] defendant liable for strict products liability based on participation in the chain of distribution of a defective product is an actor whose relative culpability can be measured and assessed." (147 C.A.4th 109.) (2) Multiple Products. See Garcia v. Duro Dyne Corp. (2007) 156 C.A.4th 92, 102, 67 C.R.3d 100 [manufacturer of asbestos products, found to be 3% at fault for plaintiff's injuries, was not entitled to offset against award of noneconomic damages for plaintiff's settlement with another defendant in same chain of distribution of one defective product; jury found that manufacturer was both negligent and strictly liable without allocating amounts between theories of recovery or among different products manufacturer produced; distinguishing Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1178, 1193, 74 C.R.2d 580, text, p. 134].

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

2. Apportionment of Damages.

c. Modification of Joint and Several Liability (Proposition 51).

5. Proposition 51 Nonretroactive.

[§ 65] Proposition 51 Nonretroactive.

(1) Rule of Nonretroactivity. In Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, Proposition 51 was held nonretroactive, in an elaborate opinion in which the majority and dissenting opinions reviewed all of the case law on the presumption of prospectivity in the absence of an express statement of legislative intent to the contrary. (For a full discussion of the holding on this point, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §634.)

(2) Accrual of Action for Purposes of Rule. Under Evangelatos, Proposition 51 applies only to actions accruing after its passage. Buttram v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1997) 16 C.4th 520, 66 C.R.2d 438, 941 P.2d 71, held that, with respect to latent diseases, an action "accrues" for purposes of Proposition 51 only when the plaintiff becomes aware of the disease. Plaintiff employee contracted a form of asbestos-related lung cancer after being exposed to defendant's asbestos-containing products. In the ensuing products liability case, plaintiff obtained a judgment that included $ 450,000 for noneconomic damages, for which defendant was determined to be jointly and severally liable. Because defendant was only 28% at fault, it argued that, under Proposition 51, it was liable for only 28% of the noneconomic damages. However, plaintiff relied on the Evangelatos holding that Proposition 51 applies only to causes of action accruing after the Proposition's effective date of June 4, 1986. Plaintiff contended that the date of accrual was 1984, the date established by his medical testimony as the time when subclinical, i.e., undiscovered, cancer cells began forming. Defendant contended that the accrual date was not until 1991, when the cancer was discovered, or 1992, when suit was brought. Held, the cause of action accrued in 1991 or 1992, after the effective date of Proposition 51. Thus, defendant was only severally liable for the noneconomic damages.

(a) In Evangelatos, both the breach of duty and the injury occurred at the same time, which was well before the effective date of Proposition 51. However, in latent disease cases such as this, it is very difficult to pinpoint the date of injury, because the disease might not be discovered until many years after it began. In addition to this difficulty, the accrual date may vary depending on the purpose for which the determination is sought. (16 C.4th 529.) For example, insurance coverage for third-party liability is said to exist from the time when subclinical injury occurs. (16 C.4th 530, citing Montrose Chemical Corp. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C.4th 645, 42 C.R.2d 324, 913 P.2d 878, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §139.) In contrast, for statute of limitations purposes, a cause of action does not accrue until plaintiff discovers, or reasonably should have discovered, that plaintiff has suffered a compensable injury. (16 C.4th 530, citing Velasquez v. Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. (1979) 97 C.A.3d 881, 159 C.R. 113, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §525.) Here, however, the inquiry is confined to ascertaining the accrual date for the limited purpose of determining the applicability of Proposition 51. (16 C.4th 531.)

(b) The holding in Evangelatos that Proposition 51 merits prospective application only was based on two primary grounds: first, with regard to causes of action accruing before the effective date of Proposition 51, parties would have planned their actions according to the "rules of the game" then in existence, i.e., joint and several liability; and second, the drafters of the initiative said nothing to indicate that it was to have retroactive application. Retroactive application of Proposition 51 could prevent both plaintiffs and settling defendants from obtaining full recovery for noneconomic damages, because they would have made decisions on the basis of the existent joint and several liability rules, only to discover that those decisions were unwise under Proposition 51 provisions. Whether a plaintiff or a settling defendant were involved, the difficulty in applying Proposition 51 retroactively would stem from the fact that some other defendant, instead of being theoretically liable for all of the noneconomic damages, would only be responsible for that defendant's proportionate share. (16 C.4th 532.)

(c) Once it has been determined that Proposition 51 applies prospectively, i.e., to causes of action that accrue after its effective date, it becomes necessary to ascertain what is meant by "accrual," especially in latent injury cases. In making this determination, the crucial date occurs when the plaintiff becomes aware of the injury, because it is only then that the plaintiff contemplates a lawsuit and experiences a need to know the rules that will govern. Moreover, until there has been an awareness of the injury, there can be no noneconomic damages, such as pain and suffering, the category of damages to which Proposition 51 is addressed. (16 C.4th 533, 534.) "In short, none of the considerations that militated against declaring Proposition 51 retroactive in Evangelatos ... would be undermined by a rule that looks to diagnosis or discovery of actual injury as the date on which a cause of action should be deemed to accrue for the limited purpose of determining" the applicability of Proposition 51. (16 C.4th 535.) On the other hand, tying the date of accrual to when any appreciable harm resulted would mean (1) choosing a date that is proved only in retrospect by medical testimony as to the probability that such harm existed on that date, and (2) using a date that would often result in a situation where the statute of limitations would have expired on the plaintiff's cause of action before the plaintiff even discovered the harm and planned to bring suit. (16 C.4th 536.) (See Arena v. Owens Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1178, 1191, 74 C.R.2d 580 [under Buttram, Proposition 51 applied where cancer from exposure to asbestosis was diagnosed after Proposition's effective date, even though exposure occurred prior to that date]; 32 U.S.F. C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

3. Action and Judgment.

a. Suit and Judgment Against One or More.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 66

[§ 66] Suit and Judgment Against One or More.

The injured party may sue all or any of the joint tortfeasors or concurrent wrongdoers, either by separate actions or by joining them as defendants in a single action. Even where all are sued, a judgment against one and not against another may be entirely proper, and it is possible on appeal to reverse it as to one and not as to those who fail to appeal. (Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co. (1906) 149 C. 151, 155, 86 P. 178; Cole v. Roebeling Const. Co. (1909) 156 C. 443, 447, 105 P. 255; Frazzini v. Cable (1931) 114 C.A. 444, 453, 300 P. 121; Hedlund v. Sutter Med. Service Co. (1942) 51 C.A.2d 327, 335, 124 P.2d 878; see Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §10, Comment f [plaintiff "may choose to sue only one or less than all jointly and severally liable persons and obtain a full recovery of damages"]; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §64 et seq.; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 215; 25 Cal. L. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §181; on joint and several judgments, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §38 et seq.)

If an action is brought or judgment rendered against less than all, the entry of judgment alone is not res judicata with respect to the liability of the others. (*Knowles v. Tehachapi Valley Hosp. C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

3. Action and Judgment.

b. Burden of Proof on Defendants.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 67

[§ 67] Burden of Proof on Defendants.

The difficulty of ascertaining the amount of damage caused by each tortfeasor has occasionally resulted in decisions denying any recovery. (See Slater v. Pacific Amer. Oil Co. (1931) 212 C. 648, 654, 300 P. 31; Thome v. Honcut Dredging Co. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 737, 742, 111 P.2d 368.) But the better view is to place the burden of proof on the defendants to show their limited responsibility for a specified proportion of the damage, or be liable for the whole. (See Oakland v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1941) 47 C.A.2d 444, 449, 118 P.2d 328; Katenkamp v. Union Realty Co. (1940) 36 C.A.2d 602, 618, 98 P.2d 239; DeCorsey v. Purex Corp. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 669, 676, 207 P.2d 616; Brown v. Guy (1956) 144 C.A.2d 659, 666, 301 P.2d 413; Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26, Comment h; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 630; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 438; 33 Cal. L. Rev. 331; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 388.)

The policy underlying this shifting of the burden of proof was approved and given an extended application in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 85, 199 P.2d 1, infra, §1194. In the usual case, each defendant is responsible for some damage, and the difficulty is only in apportioning damages among them. In Summers, although two defendants were negligent, only one act could have been the cause of the major injury, and the problem was of identification of the culpable defendant. The court held, nevertheless, that the same reasons of policy justify shifting the burden to each defendant to absolve himself of liability, and that it is immaterial whether the defendants acted in concert (as joint tortfeasors) or, as here, independently (as concurrent wrongdoers). (See Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co. (1950) 35 C.2d 409, 433, 218 P.2d 17 [discussing Summers v. Tice]; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 389; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 412; 5 A.L.R.2d 98 [liability of several persons guilty of acts one of which alone caused injury, in absence of showing as to whose act was the cause].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

3. Action and Judgment.

d. Satisfaction of Judgment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 69

[§ 69] Satisfaction of Judgment.

(1) Single Satisfaction Rule. There can be only one satisfaction for any injury; hence, satisfaction of the judgment by execution sale, or payment by one or more of the joint or concurrent tortfeasors extinguishes the obligation and discharges the liability of all the others. (Laurenzi v. Vranizan (1945) 25 C.2d 806, 813, 155 P.2d 633; Heves v. Kershaw (1961) 198 C.A.2d 340, 345, 17 C.R. 837, citing the text; Steele v. Hash (1963) 212 C.A.2d 1, 3, 27 C.R. 853; Fletcher v. California Portland Cement Co. (1979) 99 C.A.3d 97, 99, 159 C.R. 915; see Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §25(a) ["payment of the full amount of recoverable damages constitutes a satisfaction of the plaintiff's rights against all tortfeasors legally responsible" for the injury]; 40 A.L.R.3d 1181 [voluntary payment into court of judgment as release of others].)

Watson v. McEwen (1964) 225 C.A.2d 771, 774, 37 C.R. 677, quoting the text, is illustrative. Plaintiff was injured while swimming in a recreational area owned by defendant S and operated by defendant lessee M. Verdict was for plaintiff against both, for $ 12,137. Defendant S moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial; defendant M moved for a new trial. The judge granted both motions unless plaintiff consented to a reduction to $ 7,647. Plaintiff filed a written consent, M paid in full, and satisfaction was entered. Held, plaintiff's appeal from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict dismissed. (225 C.A.2d 775.)

A judgment creditor and judgment debtor may have a satisfaction vacated for mutual mistake when no rights of third parties have intervened. (Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1979) 99 C.A.3d 9, 15, 160 C.R. 23.)

Thus, where fewer than all the joint tortfeasors by compromise satisfy less than the entire judgment, the satisfaction does not relieve the remaining tortfeasors of their obligation under the judgment. (Milicevich v. Sacramento Med. Center (1984) 155 C.A.3d 997, 1063, 202 C.R. 484, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §89; see McCall v.

Four Star Music Co. (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1394, 1398, 59 C.R.2d 829, quoting the text [where release clearly indicated that purpose of satisfaction was to cover only two of three defendants, action on judgment could be maintained against excluded defendant; terms of release are controlling].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

a. In General.

1. Common Law Release Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 70

[§ 70] Common Law Release Rule.

Prior to 1957, California followed the common law and general rule that a release or dismissal of one joint tortfeasor for consideration released all the others, even though an express reservation was made of the right to sue the others. The theory of the common law rule is that there can be but one compensation for the joint wrong; each joint tortfeasor is responsible for the whole damage; and once the injured party has been paid by any of them for the injury suffered, the cause of action is satisfied. Under this theory, the amount of payment received is immaterial; the claim is unliquidated, and any payment in consideration of a release or dismissal operates as full compensation. (See Bee v. Cooper (1932) 217 C. 96, 99, 17 P.2d 740; Bogardus v. O'Dea (1930) 105 C.A. 189, 193, 287 P. 149 [dismissal for consideration is a retraxit or renunciation of cause of action]; Markwell v. Swift & Co. (1954) 126 C.A.2d 245, 252, 272 P.2d 47.)

A few decisions, making no distinction between strict joint tortfeasors and others jointly and severally liable, held that the release or dismissal for consideration of one of two or more concurrent wrongdoers discharged the liability of the others. (See Hawber v. Raley (1928) 92 C.A. 701, 705, 268 P. 943 [automobile collision; release of one negligent driver]; Hadden v. Moran (1951) 104 C.A.2d 777, 778, 232 P.2d 594 [similar, though court confusingly refers to joint tortfeasors].) The Supreme Court subsequently held that the release doctrine did not apply to successive tortfeasors, leaving open the question as to concurrent tortfeasors. (See Ash v. Mortensen (1944) 24 C.2d 654, 657, 150 P.2d 876 [plaintiff released negligent motorist, then sued doctor for negligent treatment of injury]; Lamoreux v. San Diego & Arizona Eastern Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 617, 624, 311 P.2d 1 [following Ash]; Alexander v. Hammarberg (1951) 103 C.A.2d 872, 881, 230 P.2d 399 [same].)

A release of one joint tortfeasor may be made in writing without consideration. (Weddle v. Heath (1931) 211 C. 445, 454, 295 P. 832; on written release as not requiring consideration, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §946.) The later California decisions held that where no consideration has been received, the release or voluntary dismissal of one does not satisfy the cause of action and therefore did not discharge the liabilities of the others. (See Shea v. San Bernardino (1936) 7 C.2d 688, 694, 62 P.2d 365; Key v. Caldwell (1940) 39 C.A.2d 698, 701, 104 P.2d 87; Commercial Transfer v. Daigh & Stewart (1939) 33 C.A.2d 370, 373, 91 P.2d 951.)

The effect of the release doctrine could be avoided by the purely formal step of using different language. If, instead of a release, the claimant made a covenant not to sue, and this agreement affected only the parties to it, the other joint tortfeasors were not released. (Kincheloe v. Retail Credit Co. (1935) 4 C.2d 21, 23, 46 P.2d 971; Holtz v. United Plumbing & Heating Co. (1957) 49 C.2d 501, 504, 319 P.2d 617; Abbott v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (1931) 116 C.A. 665, 669, 3 P.2d 56; Burke v. W.R. Chamberlin & Co. (1942) 51 C.A.2d 419, 428, 125 P.2d 120; cf. Pellett v. Sonotone Corp. (1945) 26 C.2d 705, 711, 160 P.2d 783 [covenant not to execute]; Ivy v. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. (1958) 156 C.A.2d 652, 661, 320 P.2d 140 [same]; 24 A.L.R.4th 547 [covenant not to sue one primarily liable for tort, expressly reserving rights against one secondarily liable, as bar to recovery against latter].)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

a. In General.

2. Statutory Abrogation of Rule.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 71

[§ 71] In General.

The release rule (supra, §70) was widely criticized as a common law conceptual doctrine without any justification in modern practice. (See 31 Cal. L. Rev. 451; 9 Hastings L. J. 182; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 470; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 483.) In 1957, a State Bar-sponsored bill abolished the rule by the enactment of C.C.P. 877. "Where a release, dismissal with or without prejudice, or a covenant not to sue or not to enforce judgment is given in good faith before verdict or judgment to one or more of a number of tortfeasors claimed to be liable for the same tort, ... [i]t shall not discharge any other such party from liability unless its terms so provide, but it shall reduce the claims against the others in the amount stipulated by the release, the dismissal or the covenant, or in the amount of the consideration paid for it, whichever is the greater." (C.C.P. 877(a).) (On determination of good faith, see C.C.P. 877.6, infra, §83 et seq.)

Also, the good faith release, dismissal, or covenant "shall discharge the party to whom it is given from all liability for any contribution to any other parties." (C.C.P. 877(b).) (On effect of good faith settlement generally, see infra, §88 et seq.)

The statute "shall not apply to co-obligors who have expressly agreed in writing to an apportionment of liability for losses or claims among themselves." (C.C.P. 877(c).)

C.C.P. 877 and similar legislation have been the subject of extensive discussion by courts and commentators. (See Wouldridge v. Zimmerman (1971) 21 C.A.3d 656, 658, 98 C.R. 778; River Garden Farms v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 986, 993, 103 C.R. 498, infra, §78; *Sambaugh v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

a. In General.

2. Statutory Abrogation of Rule.

bb. Scope.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 72

[§ 72] Scope.

The following matters should be noted in connection with C.C.P. 877 (supra, §71):

(1) Application to all tortfeasors claimed liable for same tort. The statute applies to any "tortfeasors claimed to be liable for the same tort," thus eliminating the distinction between joint tortfeasors and concurrent or successive tortfeasors (see supra, §70). (See Kemp v. Barnett (1976) 62 C.A.3d 245, 248, 132 C.R. 823, infra, §1263 [vehicle owner and driver are considered joint tortfeasors]; Kohn v. Superior Court (1983) 142 C.A.3d 323, 328, 191 C.R. 78 [tortious activities by contractor, pest control inspector, and seller combined to create one indivisible injury that took place when sale was consummated]; Lopez v. Blecher (1983) 143 C.A.3d 736, 739, 740, 741, 192 C.R. 190 [C.C.P. 877 et seq. apply to persons properly joined as defendants even though they are not technically "joint tortfeasors"]; Turcon Const. v. Norton-Villiers, Ltd. (1983) 139 C.A.3d 280, 283, 188 C.R. 580 [same]; cf. Bailey v. Reliance Ins. Co. (2000) 79 C.A.4th 449, 453, 94 C.R.2d 149 [employee and his wife, injured in car accident, reached settlement with other driver whereby wife received $ 200,000 and employee nothing; employer's workers' compensation insurance carrier could not successfully challenge good faith of settlement, because no joint tortfeasor or coobligor was involved].) And the requirement of the "same tort" makes the statute inapplicable to tortfeasors charged in a single action with separate torts. (See Carr v. Cove (1973) 33 C.A.3d 851, 854, 109 C.R. 449 [plaintiff, injured in two separate vehicle accidents, settled with first defendant and obtained verdict against second; motion to reduce verdict by amount of settlement was properly denied].)

(3) Liability of parent corporation for acts of subsidiary. The statute applies to liability of a parent corporation for wrongful acts of its subsidiary. (See Mesler v. Bragg Management Co. (1985) 39 C.3d 290, 216 C.R. 443, 702 P.2d 601,

(4) No double recovery. The statute states the case law rule against double recovery (see infra, §1550) and makes clear its effect on the statutory rule of contribution (infra, §105).

(5) No necessity for covenant form. The statute covers "release, dismissal with or without prejudice, or a covenant not to sue or not to enforce judgment," thus making unnecessary the use of the covenant form (see supra, §70).

(6) Comparative equitable indemnity. The policy underlying C.C.P. 877(b) (supra, §71) makes it applicable not only to contribution but to comparative equitable indemnity; i.e., each settling tortfeasor is protected from contribution or equitable indemnity to the other. (Mill Valley Refuse Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 707, 710, 166 C.R. 687, quoting American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357.)

(7) Good faith requirement. The statute's application is restricted to releases, etc., "given in good faith." (See infra, §77.)

(8) Time of release. "[B]efore verdict or judgment" means before liability is established by jury verdict or judgment. (See Halpin v. Superior Court (1971) 14 C.A.3d 530, 543, 92 C.R. 329, infra, §76; Southern Calif. White Trucks v. Teresinski (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1393, 1407, 236 C.R. 159, infra, §76; Be v. Western Truck Exchange (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1139, 1142, 64 C.R.2d 527.)

(9) Right to offset. It is proper for the nonsettling tortfeasor to defer assertion of the right to offset until establishment of his or her liability at the completion of the trial. (Knox v. Los Angeles (1980) 109 C.A.3d 825, 834, 167 C.R. 463, citing River Garden Farms v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 986, 993, 103 C.R. 498, infra, §78.)

(10) Discharge of other parties. The release does not, under the statute, discharge other parties "unless its terms so provide." (See Brinton v. Bankers Pension Services (1999) 76 C.A.4th 550, 558, 90 C.R.2d 469 [further action against defendant was barred by settlement of earlier action where plaintiff participated in earlier action and defendant was third-party beneficiary of the release of claims clause contained in settlement of earlier action]; on effect of general release, see infra, §73.)

(11) Reduction of other claims. The "claims" against a nonsettling defendant are reduced by the amount of a settlement. Because "claim" refers to a cause of action with respect to liability and because "costs" are recoverable from the losing party after liability has been established, costs are not reduced by the amount of a settlement, unless they are part of the settlement consideration. (Reed v. Wilson (1999) 73 C.A.4th 439, 443, 86 C.R.2d 510.)

a. In General.

2. Statutory Abrogation of Rule.

cc. Effect of General Release.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 73

[§ 73] Effect of General Release.

A release, dismissal, or covenant not to sue given to tortfeasors claimed to be liable for a tort "shall not discharge any other such party from liability unless the terms so provide." (C.C.P. 877(a).) The courts have differed regarding the effect of a general release. (See General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 435, 440, 15 C.R.2d 622 [no requirement of specific identification; release of driver of other vehicle and "any and all other persons, firms and corporations" covered automobile manufacturer]; Lama v. Comcast Cablevision (1993) 14 C.A.4th 59, 64, 17 C.R.2d 224 [accident victim's release of driver and owner of other vehicle, as well as any other person or corporation allegedly responsible for the accident, covered driver's employer]; cf. Appleton v. Waessil (1994) 27 C.A.4th 551, 556, 32 C.R.2d 676 [distinguishing General Motors Corp. and Lama; whether party causing automobile accident was included within victim's release of automobile manufacturer and dealer and "all other persons" was triable question of fact]; Vahle v. Barwick (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1323, 113 C.R.2d 793 [release between client and country club that referred to "all other persons" did not apply to client's attorney when he was later sued for malpractice].)

A broadly worded general release was again involved in Neverkovec v. Fredericks (1999) 74 C.A.4th 337, 87 C.R.2d 856, and the related issues were discussed. Plaintiff was a passenger in a car that collided with another vehicle. The insurer of the car in which plaintiff was riding agreed to pay its policy limit, but required plaintiff and other claimants to sign a broadly worded release by which they purported to release anyone chargeable with liability for injuries arising from the accident. Nevertheless, a few months later, plaintiff instituted the present action against defendant, who was the driver of the other vehicle involved in the accident. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the basis of the release. Held, reversed; even if the release was sufficient to shift the burden of proof to plaintiff, the extrinsic evidence raised a triable issue regarding plaintiff's intent to release defendant.

(a) This case is best suited to resolution under well-settled contract principles governing third-party beneficiaries (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §685 et seq.). Thus, it is necessary to prove that the contracting parties intended to benefit the third-party beneficiary, and the fact that a literal interpretation of the release would be to his or her benefit is insufficient proof of that intent. In determining the intent of the contracting parties, the court must consider the circumstances surrounding their negotiations. And the parol evidence rule (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Documentary Evidence, §59 et seq.) does not preclude this consideration. Moreover, some authority supports the proposition that the rule does not apply if the term to be interpreted is ambiguous. (74 C.A.4th 344.)

(b) C.C.P. 877 provides that a release does not discharge other parties unless its terms so provide. (Defendant was arguably discharged by the terms of the release.) This statute has led to the development of three approaches regarding the effect of a general release: (1) a minority view holding that the release absolutely bars the settling party from proceeding against other tortfeasors; (2) a view presuming that parties not named or specifically identified are not released; (3) a view that the court must determine whether the parties intended to release the unnamed third party. Some of the courts following this third approach hold that extrinsic evidence is always admissible for this purpose and some hold that it is admissible only if there is an ambiguity. (74 C.A.4th 354.)

(c) Here, the agreement purported to release "anyone" chargeable with liability for plaintiff's injuries. However, the release also required plaintiff's mother (on his behalf) to "repay" any additional amounts that anyone chargeable with plaintiff's injuries might be compelled to pay in the future. The release is thus ambiguous, because if it were operative against "anyone" liable for plaintiff's injuries, plaintiff could not be expected to recover further amounts from which to make repayments. (74 C.A.4th 352.)

(d) The evidence also showed that the release in question was provided by the insurer to implement a settlement agreement negotiated among various claimants, including defendant, who had agreed to release only the driver of the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding. Several of the parties then sought a determination that the settlement was in good faith under C.C.P. 877.6 (see infra, §83 et seq.). However, the only purpose of this determination is to bar any other claim by a joint tortfeasor, and if the release had already accomplished that purpose, there was no reason to seek the protection of that statute. Moreover, the evidence indicated that none of the parties responsible intended to release defendant. The totality of the evidence was sufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to the release's applicability to defendant. (74 C.A.4th 352, distinguishing General Motors Corp. and Lama and following Appleton.)

(e) "In closing, we urge counsel on both sides to avoid overly broad, loose terms in release agreements. We suggest to counsel for insurers that the benefits of sweeping release terms are questionable in view of the high volume of litigation such terms have engendered. In California, consideration should be given to the statutory protection provided to parties settling in good faith under sections 877 and 877.6, which ought to reduce the temptation to release not just the insured but also the population at large. Counsel for claimants should advise their clients not to sign releases that appear to bar claims the client does not intend to give up. ... [A]ttorneys' energies are better spent making sure that release agreements accurately reflect their clients' intentions than in litigating what their clients really intended when they signed agreements including terms that counsel failed to analyze in the circumstances of the specific case." (74 C.A.4th 354.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

a. In General.

2. Statutory Abrogation of Rule.

dd. Application to Alter Ego Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 74

[§ 74] Application to Alter Ego Liability.

In Mesler v. Bragg Management Co. (1985) 39 C.3d 290, 216 C.R. 443, 702 P.2d 601, plaintiff, operating a Caterpillar dozer at night, stumbled into the vehicle while the engine was running, and his arm was partially amputated by the engine fan. His complaint, based on strict products liability and negligence, named a number of defendants, including the prior owner of the dozer and Does. After discovery revealed that the prior owner was a wholly owned subsidiary of another corporation, plaintiff substituted that corporation as Doe I. The parent corporation moved for summary judgment on the ground that it had no connection with the dozer, workplace, or plaintiff, and the trial judge granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed from the resulting judgment but, pending appeal, plaintiff settled with the subsidiary and dismissed his action against that defendant. The parent corporation, then the sole remaining defendant, contended that dismissal of the suit against its subsidiary precluded continuance of the action against it. The issue on appeal, therefore, was whether C.C.P. 877, abrogating the common law release rule (see supra, §71), applied to the parent-subsidary situation. Held, summary judgment reversed; C.C.P. 877 did apply.

(a) Defendant's contention, based on two federal decisions, is that C.C.P. 877 applies only to joint tortfeasors and that the alter ego claim rests on the theory that the two distinct entities are really one. This is a misinterpretation of the alter ego doctrine (see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §9 et seq.). When a court disregards the corporate entity, it does not dissolve the corporation; the corporate entity is real, not a fiction, and the doctrine merely limits the exercise of the corporate privilege to prevent its abuse. (39 C.3d 300.)

(b) The alter ego doctrine, properly applied, has this effect: "When it is claimed that a parent corporation should be liable because it is the alter ego of its subsidiary, equity commands that the corporate wall be breached. Yet the wall remains: the parent is liable through the acts of the subsidiary, but as a separate entity. A judgment obtained against a corporation and its alter ego is enforceable against both separately. Thus, when the plaintiff settles with only the subsidiary, the parent's liability continues." (39 C.3d 301.)

(c) Application of C.C.P. 877 to alter ego situations is supported by the analogy of tort liability of a principal for acts of its agent. "The principal is held vicariously liable not because it was necessarily at fault, but because justice requires that the enterprise be responsible for the risks of conducting its business. ... Similarly, the parent corporation is liable for the acts of its subsidiary under the alter ego doctrine because justice requires that the corporate wall be breached." (39 C.3d 302.) California cases have made it clear that C.C.P. 877 applies to principal-agent liability. (39 C.3d 303, citing Ritter v. Technicolor Corp. (1972) 27 C.A.3d 152, 155, 103 C.R. 686, and Mayhugh v. Orange (1983) 141 C.A.3d 763, 190 C.R. 537.)

(d) It has been argued that, because liability of the principal is wholly dependent on liability of the agent, dismissal of the agent removes the basis of the principal's responsibility. "However, it does not follow that because judgment in favor of the agent exonerates the principal ... , release of the agent has the same effect. A judgment ... means that under our system of law the plaintiff should not recover under the circumstances presented. A settlement has no such implication; it means simply that the parties have agreed to resolve their problems outside the courtroom. Thus liability of the principal--or parent corporation in the alter ego situation--has not been disproved. The liability of the principal (or parent) is not affected by the route the agent (or subsidiary) chooses to take in disposing of the action." (39 C.3d 303.)

(e) Policies underlying the contribution legislation (see infra, §105) further support the rule that release of the subsidiary does not release its alter ego.

(1) One goal is to allow the plaintiff full recovery to the extent that others are responsible for plaintiff's injuries. "This policy would be violated if a corporation alleged to be liable as the alter ego of its subsidiary were to be dismissed because the subsidiary has settled with the plaintiff, especially if the plaintiff has accepted a modest settlement because the subsidiary is undercapitalized." (39 C.3d 304.)

(2) A second goal of the contribution legislation is the early and final settlement of claims, and a problem arises because of the right of full indemnity; i.e., the threat of an indemnity claim by the secondarily liable defendant could keep a primarily liable defendant from settling. This court has not yet addressed the question whether an employer-judgment debtor has a right to obtain indemnification from an employee who has settled with the plaintiff, but it must be assumed that the Legislature, in preserving full indemnity by C.C.P. 875(f) (infra, §106), foresaw this contingency. "Moreover, in the alter ego arena, where the corporations involved have comparable control, it is unlikely that the parent will sue the subsidiary for indemnity unless to do so would be in the best interests of both corporations. Finally, it should be noted that in many cases the parent and subsidiary will be represented by the same counsel, as is the situation in the case at bar, or by separate counsel working in close collaboration. Thus the easiest method for avoiding indemnity problems is to include both corporations in the settlement." (39 C.3d 305.)

(3) A third policy is equity among defendants. C.C.P. 877(a) provides that the plaintiff's recovery will be reduced by the amount of consideration paid by the settling defendant, not by the proportion of that defendant's liability. "If the subsidiary is allowed to settle for a modest share of the plaintiff's liability and this settlement covers the parent as well, the remaining defendants will have a proportionately greater sum to pay. The low settlement, not made in bad faith because, for example, the subsidiary is undercapitalized, may indeed be unfair if the more affluent parent corporation is included in its terms. Since the remaining defendants cannot attack a settlement unless it was made in bad faith, the rule would be inequitable to the nonsettlers." (39 C.3d 305.)

(f) Allowing the plaintiff to proceed against the nonsettling parent would also reflect the parties' intent. "When, as here alleged, the terms of settlement and release expressly include only the subsidiary and no other party, the parent should not magically benefit from the agreement. If it could do so, results unfair to plaintiffs might follow: not realizing that the parent would also be part of the agreement, the plaintiff would base his settlement on the financial capabilities of the only other party to the agreement, the subsidiary. The amount the plaintiff would receive would likely be disproportionately low if the settlement discharged the parent as well as the subsidiary. And as for the protection of the corporations, the solution is simple: both parties could and should participate in the negotiations. In this way, with every party's identity fully disclosed, an agreement fair to all can be reached." (39 C.3d 305.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

a. In General.

3. Restatement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 75

[§ 75] Restatement.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, departs from common law principles. A plaintiff's recoverable damages from a jointly and severally liable tortfeasor "are reduced by the comparative share of damages attributable to a settling tortfeasor who otherwise would have been liable for contribution to jointly and severally liable defendants who do not settle." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §16.) Nonsettling tortfeasors thus receive a credit against the judgment for the settling tortfeasor's share of responsibility. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §16, Comment c.)

The settling tortfeasor's comparative share of damages is "the percentage of comparative responsibility assigned to the settling tortfeasor multiplied by the total damages of the plaintiff." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §16.) A "comparative-share" credit is adopted rather than its primary alternative, a credit in the amount of the settlement (a so-called pro tanto credit). The comparative share credit, among other advantages, obviates the need for courts to review the bona fides of partial settlements. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §16, Comment c; on good faith requirement, see infra, §77 et seq.)

Under the Restatement rule, a plaintiff may recover more than the damages determined by the factfinder, i.e., where the plaintiff settles with one defendant for an amount greater than that of defendant's comparative share of the plaintiff's damages. This result is deemed appropriate on the ground that, because the plaintiff bears the risk of an inadequate settlement, the plaintiff should also obtain the benefit of a favorable settlement. Also, a nonsettling defendant would otherwise receive an unjustified windfall. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §16, Comment e.)

Persons "released from liability by the terms of a settlement are relieved of further liability to the claimant for the injuries or claims covered by the agreement." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §24(b).) When a settlement releases only the settling tortfeasor, the settling tortfeasor ordinarily should be dismissed from the lawsuit or, if no suit has been initiated, not joined in any subsequent action. Nevertheless, the conduct of the settling tortfeasor may be submitted to the factfinder for assignment of responsibility. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §24, Comment e.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

b. Time of Settlement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 76

[§ 76] Time of Settlement.

With respect to the time of settlement, the only requirement is that it be made "before verdict or judgment." (C.C.P. 877, supra, §71; see Be v. Western Truck Exchange (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1139, 1142, 64 C.R.2d 527 [postjudgment settlement between cross-defendant and plaintiff was not subject to C.C.P. 877 and 877.6].)

(1) Release Prior to Litigation. A prelawsuit settlement, even if remote from the commencement of litigation, is binding on other tortfeasors if arrived at in good faith. (Mid-Century Ins. Exchange v. Daimler-Chrysler Corp. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 310, 314, 112 C.R.2d 880, infra, §93.)

(2) Release Before Establishment of Liability. C.C.P. 877 and nearly all of the cases deal with a single trial. But where there are separate trials on liability and damages (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §168 et seq.), a question is presented that the statute does not directly answer: What is the effect of a release given after liability has been determined in the first trial, but before verdict and judgment in the second trial on damages?

In Halpin v. Superior Court (1971) 14 C.A.3d 530, 92 C.R. 329, the court held that the contribution statute (infra, §105) was intended to provide a comprehensive scheme of contribution between joint tortfeasors after they have been judicially declared to be such. This takes place in the first trial on liability. Thereafter, there is no mere "claim of liability," for it has been determined. Accordingly, the statutory phrase "before verdict or judgment" must be construed to mean "before establishment of liability." "[W]ere the rule to be established otherwise, there would unquestionably occur concurrently with the determination of joint liability a mad rush by one or more of the joint tortfeasors in an effort to settle and to obtain a release, thus thwarting the provisions of the contribution statute and the right of the other joint tortfeasors to obtain contribution from the settlors. A complete breakdown of (1) bifurcation of trials and (2) the operation of the contribution statute's provisions would follow. Both of these modern processes are notably progressive advances towards the more efficient disposition of litigation." (14 C.A.3d 543.)

The Halpin approach was followed in Southern Calif. White Trucks v. Teresinski (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1393, 236 C.R. 159, a multiple defendant action involving a vehicle collision. Plaintiff, after settling with the other defendants, obtained a jury verdict against defendant V. A "partial" judgment provided for credit for the previous settlements, the amount of which was then unknown. Plaintiff and V then entered into a settlement on the stipulation that judgment be vacated. The trial judge vacated the judgment and, after determining pursuant to C.C.P. 877.6 (infra, §83 et seq.) that the settlement was made in good faith, dismissed the other defendants' cross-complaints for contribution and indemnification. Held, the dismissals were erroneous; the settlement was not made "before verdict or judgment," as required by C.C.P. 877.

(a) Halpin correctly determined that the phrase "before verdict or judgment" means before establishment of liability by either a jury verdict or a judgment in a court trial. (190 C.A.3d 1405.) And because one purpose of C.C.P. 877.6 is to implement C.C.P. 877, the requirement of a settlement "before verdict or judgment" applies to it as well, even though the phrase itself does not appear in it. (190 C.A.3d 1407.)

(b) The fact that the judgment was vacated does not change the result. First, the settlement was entered into before the vacating occurred. (190 C.A.3d 1407.) Second, because the trial judge was not correcting a clerical error, vacating a void judgment, or acting on one of the statutory grounds set forth in C.C.P. 473 and 663, the vacating order was invalid. (190 C.A.3d 1408; see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §147 et seq.)

The Halpin approach was not followed in Price Pfister v. William Lyon Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1643, 18 C.R.2d 437. Plaintiff filed an action against the developer of a housing tract and the plumbing contractor to recover damages sustained when her bathroom ceiling collapsed on her. The developer and the contractor filed a cross-complaint against a manufacturer of plumbing products. The trial was bifurcated and the jury found the developer to be 100% liable. Before completion of the damage phase, both the developer and the contractor entered into a settlement with plaintiff which, following a C.C.P. 877.6 hearing, was found to be in good faith. Plaintiff then instituted the present action against the manufacturer, which cross-complained against both settling tortfeasors for indemnity and contribution. Contending that the good faith settlement in the first action barred all of the manufacturer's claims against them, settling tortfeasors moved to strike the cross-complaint, and the trial judge granted the motions. Held, affirmed.

(a) Halpin held that the phrase "before verdict or judgment" in C.C.P. 877 means before establishment of liability by either a jury verdict or a judgment in a court trial. The manufacturer relied on Halpin in contending that the trial judge exceeded his jurisdiction by granting the motions for a finding of good faith because the settlement was entered into after the finding of liability. However, for the following reasons, Halpin is not controlling here:

(1) Halpin is distinguishable from this case. There, the defendants were found jointly and severally liable. Here, by contrast, only the developer was found liable. (14 C.A.4th 1647.)

(2) Given that the facts in Halpin were complex and convoluted (there was some question whether a settlement was even reached) and that the Court of Appeal was sharply critical of the attorneys for defendants, its result, i.e., that settlement after liability did not deprive the remaining tortfeasor of the right of contribution, can best be justified on the basis that the settlement, if any, was not made in good faith. (14 C.A.4th 1648.)

(3) When Halpin was decided, there was no established procedure for determining whether a settlement was in good faith. With the subsequent enactment of C.C.P. 877.6 to provide an expeditious procedure for a speedy determination of good faith after notice to all concerned, Halpin's concern that a settlement after a verdict of liability would lead to a "mad rush" to settle should vanish. (14 C.A.4th 1648.)

(b) The manufacturer's reliance on Southern Calif. White Trucks v. Teresinski is also unavailing. "To the extent it relies on Halpin, we disagree with Teresinski. Moreover, it is distinguishable because it was not a bifurcated trial. The verdict indeed was final, i.e., there was nothing more for the jury to decide." (14 C.A.4th 1649.)

(c) Although in enacting C.C.P. 877 and 877.6, the Legislature was not contemplating bifurcated trials where settlement is reached "before verdict or judgment," it was contemplating that this phrase would signify some kind of finality. However, a verdict on only one portion of a case in a bifurcated trial lacks finality. So long as a jury still must decide issues essential to the rendering of a judgment, there can be no finality. (14 C.A.4th 1649.)

(d) Extending the benefits and protection of C.C.P. 877 and 877.6 to a settling defendant in the situation presented here will have multiple benefits to the parties and the legal system in general. Bifurcation will provide an opportunity to settle once liability is found, because the settling defendant will no longer be subjected to indemnity cross-complaints, and the settling tortfeasor and the plaintiff will save the time and expense of litigating the issue of damages. Court time will also be saved. On the other hand, adopting the manufacturer's position would force all defendants in multiparty tort cases to litigate to the bitter end, thereby thwarting the legislative policy of encouraging settlements. (14 C.A.4th 1649.)

(3) Release Given Before Judgment Is Final. Under C.C.P. 877, a covenant before verdict or judgment no longer discharges other tortfeasors. In Thomas v. General Motors Corp. (1970) 13 C.A.3d 81, 91 C.R. 301, the covenant was given after judgment, and this would ordinarily have operated as a discharge, because the old law still governs except as modified by the statute. (13 C.A.3d 86.) Here, however, though given after judgment, it was given before the judgment became final (an appeal was pending). Held, in view of the policy favoring settlement and the harshness of the discharge doctrine, the covenant did not discharge. (13 C.A.3d 86.)

[§ 78] Early Cases.

(1) River Garden Farms Case. In River Garden Farms v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 986, 103 C.R. 498, all but one of several joint tortfeasors obtained releases for injuries and deaths resulting from a fire in which parents died and their children were injured. The nonsettling tortfeasor sought mandamus in the Court of Appeal to compel dismissal of one victim's action, contending that, in executing the releases, the victims had not complied with the good faith requirement of C.C.P. 877 in that the allocation as between the death and injury claims was such as to subject the nonsettling defendant to about two-thirds of the liability it had originally shared with three other defendants. Held, the nonsettling tortfeasor was entitled to assert the invalidity of the releases.

(a) Good faith requirement extends beyond settling parties.

(1) The claimants correctly argued that, because a plaintiff may choose to sue one of several joint tortfeasors and collect solely from that tortfeasor, there is no obligation to engage in collective negotiations. But this does not mean that they may negotiate and settle in disregard of a tortfeasor reserved for later negotiation or suit. Every contract contains an implied obligation of good faith and fair dealing, and, if the good faith requirement were limited to the settling parties, there would be no need for the provision in C.C.P. 877. (26 C.A.3d 993.)

(2) "The California legislation empowers a plaintiff, armed with a strong and lucrative claim, to settle with his antagonists one by one, preserving for the jury the opponent with the most money and least sympathy. The power is great and vulnerable to abuse. In a multi-party case the threat of an unshared judgment against the last remaining defendant--diminished only by meager settlements with his eager fellows--permits a plaintiff to create acute financial pressures bordering on extortion. Viewed as a demand for settlements which have a reasonable relation to the value of the plaintiff's case, to the strengths and weaknesses of the parties and the financial ability of the settlor, the good faith clause aids the statutory goal of equitable sharing. It also aids the goal of settlement, by preventing a plaintiff from selecting one defendant as the target for enlarged demands after unreasonably low settlements with others." (26 C.A.3d 994.)

(3) "Construed in the light of the legislation's objectives, the good faith release clause extends the obligation of good faith beyond the parties to the negotiations, embracing an absent tortfeasor. The latter has a financial stake in the amount of the settlement and thus a justiciable interest in the question of good faith. Petitioners are properly before the court." (26 C.A.3d 996.)

(b) Test of good faith. The standard that the good faith clause incorporates--the general equitable principle of contribution that frowns on unfair settlements--is nebulous, but no more so than the good faith test of an insurer's failure to settle. (26 C.A.3d 997.) The policies of equitable sharing and finality of settlement compete. If the clause demanded equitable sharing as determined by a future jury verdict, parties could not settle with assurance of finality. On the other hand, if the policy of encouraging settlements is permitted to overwhelm equitable financial sharing, the possibilities of unfair tactics are multiplied. (26 C.A.3d 997, 998.) To strike a balance between the two objectives is possible, for generalized valuation criteria are recognized by the personal injury bar, insurance claims departments, and pretrial settlement courts. "The danger that a low settlement violates the good faith clause will not impart uncertainty so long as the parties behave fairly and the courts maintain a realistic awareness of settlement imponderables." (26 C.A.3d 998.)

(c) Good faith is question of fact. The issue cannot be determined on this appeal. The question is one of fact, and only a trial court, on evidence, may reach a decision. (26 C.A.3d 998.)

(d) Effect of bad faith settlement. Assuming that the settlement was in bad faith, what is its effect?

(1) The contention that the release is taken outside the statute, and that the common law rule of release of the others applies, is unsound. The common law rule, criticized and evaded by language of covenant not to sue, was opposed to the statutory objective of encouraging settlement. "Section 877 implicitly but firmly dispatched it." (26 C.A.3d 1000.)

(2) Although the statute does not state the effect of a bad faith release, its consequences can be discerned by implication and nonstatutory principles: A release in bad faith is contrary to the policy of the law and is therefore an illegal contract. If it is the product of collusion between the plaintiff and the settlors, they are in pari delicto and barred from judicial aid. Where, however, as here, only the plaintiff has breached the duty, the settlors may insist on the validity of their releases, and their discharge from liability for their pro rata contributions. (26 C.A.3d 1000, 1001.)

(3) Although ordinarily only a party to a contract may invoke its illegality, a third person whose interests are affected may do so. "As a nonparticipant whose ultimate liability is affected, the nonsettling tortfeasor may invoke the settlement's illegality. Through appropriate procedures, he may have it set aside. Conceivably--although we do not so decide--he might seek the offending settlor's joinder to the lawsuit as a party defendant, thus preserving his own contribution claim against the possibility of a joint judgment." (26 C.A.3d 1000.)

(4) Although the contribution statute (infra, §105) provides no express remedy for the claimant's breach of duty, its violation supports a right of action. "The nonsettling tortfeasor has a civil claim for damages against the claimant who exercised bad faith. He may set off this claim against the latter's tort recovery and receive credit against any judgment recovered in the tort suit. In money terms, he receives pro rata rather than pro tanto credit against the judgment." (26 C.A.3d 1001.) (See Lareau v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 783, 797, 118 C.R. 837 [evidence showing allocation to be arguably disproportionate was sufficient to raise good faith issue; following River Garden Farms].)

(2) Dompeling Case. In Dompeling v. Superior Court (1981) 117 C.A.3d 798, 173 C.R. 38, plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision when defendant D's truck swerved to avoid defendant C's parked school bus and struck plaintiff's car. Plaintiff sued and demanded $ 325,000 for settlement. He made an agreement with defendant D calling for payment of $ 100,000 (the insurance policy limits) with a possible $ 10,000 in addition on a sliding scale dependent on recovery from C. Plaintiff then served C with an offer to compromise for $ 150,000. C, having cross-complained against D for partial indemnity, took D's deposition and asked numerous questions as to his personal and business assets, on the theory that a defendant's financial status is relevant on the issue of good faith in settlement; i.e., that D could have paid more. The trial judge ordered D to answer. Held, mandamus granted to compel the trial court to vacate the order.

(a) C's theory was that D was more culpable than C, that the damages were substantial, and that therefore the settlement was suspect. While some cases have intimated that a disproportionately low settlement may be in bad faith, most were decided before American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357, which declared that "a plaintiff's recovery from nonsettling tortfeasors should be diminished only by the amount that the plaintiff has actually recovered in a good faith settlement, rather than by an amount measured by the settling tortfeasor's proportionate responsibility for the injury." (117 C.A.3d 804.) Hence, while the court in River Garden Farms spoke of collusion resulting in an "unreasonably cheap settlement" (117 C.A.3d 807), the $ 100,000 settlement in the present case was not unreasonably cheap, and the sliding scale agreement has statutory recognition (infra, §§100, 101). (117 C.A.3d 807.)

(b) "Bad faith is not established by a showing that a settling defendant paid less than his theoretical proportionate or fair share of the value of plaintiff's case. A settlement always removes the settling defendant from the action; this necessarily results in a possibility that the remaining defendants will suffer judgment greater in amount than if there had been no settlement." (117 C.A.3d 809.)

(c) "Where plaintiff settles with fewer than all defendants, the defendants are clearly adverse parties. A settling defendant does not owe a legal duty to adverse parties, the nonsettling defendants, to pay the plaintiff more so that the adverse parties may pay the plaintiff less. Plaintiff and defendants are also adverse parties; the plaintiff does not owe a legal duty to the nonsettling defendants to seek more from a settling defendant so that the nonsettling defendants may pay less." (117 C.A.3d 809.)

(d) "The settling parties owe the nonsettling defendants a legal duty to refrain from tortious or other wrongful conduct; absent conduct violative of such duty, the settling parties may act to further their respective interests without regard to the effect of their settlement upon other defendants." (117 C.A.3d 809.)

A number of decisions followed Dompeling. (See Cardio Systems v. Superior Court (1981) 122 C.A.3d 880, 890, 176 C.R. 254 [settling defendant owes no duty to nonsettling codefendant except to refrain from tortious or other wrongful conduct; citing Dompeling]; Burlington Northern R. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 137 C.A.3d 942, 945, 187 C.R. 376 [following Dompeling]; Kohn v. Superior Court (1983) 142 C.A.3d 323, 327, 191 C.R. 78 [same]; Wysong & Miles Co. v. Western Industrial Movers (1983) 143 C.A.3d 278, 286, 289, 191 C.R. 671 [settlement does not lack good faith simply because of disparity in amount of settlement compared to damages claimed in complaint]; Ford Motor Co. v. Schultz (1983) 147 C.A.3d 941, 950, 195 C.R. 470 [good faith is deemed established where no showing of collusion to injure interests of absent tortfeasor]; 17 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 851 [exhaustive review of early cases].) However, Dompeling "and its progeny" were disapproved in Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 500, footnote 7, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, infra, §79.

cc. Tech-Bilt Test.

[§ 79] Tech-Bilt Test.

In Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, plaintiff owners of residential property sued the developer and soils engineers, and others, to recover damages for structural defects in the property. When it appeared that plaintiffs' action against the soils engineering firm was barred by limitations, plaintiffs accepted defendant's offer to waive any claim against plaintiffs for costs incurred in defending the action if plaintiffs agreed to dismiss their claim against it. Defendant developer, who had not settled with plaintiffs, thereafter filed an amended cross-complaint for equitable indemnity against the engineers. The engineers then moved for an order under C.C.P. 877.6 (infra, §83 et seq.) to confirm the agreement with plaintiffs as a good faith settlement and for summary judgment as to all cross-complaints against it. The trial judge found the settlement to be in good faith and entered summary judgment dismissing the developer's cross-complaint against the engineers. Held, the settlement was not in good faith, and thus did not immunize the settling defendant from liability to the other defendants.

(a) Prior common law and statutes. The common law discouraged settlements in multiple tortfeasor cases because a release of one joint tortfeasor released all. C.C.P. 877 provides that a release in good faith reduces the claims against the others in the amount stipulated or paid as consideration, but does not discharge the other tortfeasors; and C.C.P. 877.6 provides that a settlement in good faith bars any other joint tortfeasor from further claims against the settling tortfeasors for equitable comparative contribution or partial or comparative indemnity. (38 C.3d 493.)

(b) River Garden Farms case approved. River Garden Farms v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 986, 103 C.R. 498, supra, §78, pointed out that the 1957 legislation had dual objectives: equitable sharing of costs among parties at fault and encouragement of settlements. Although these goals are not necessarily harmonious, neither should be applied to defeat the other, and the courts should review agreements to insure appropriate balance. (38 C.3d 495.) American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357, in articulating a theory of partial indemnity applicable to all multiple tortfeasors, cited River Garden Farms on the meaning of "good faith" settlement. (38 C.3d 495.) Thereafter, the 1980 Legislature enacted C.C.P. 877.6, codifying the American Motorcycle result that a C.C.P. 877 settlement bars claims for partial or comparative indemnity as well as for contribution. This background suggests that the Legislature intended the "good faith" in C.C.P. 877.6 to have the meaning ascribed in River Garden Farms and American Motorcycle; and the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, applying California law, reached the same conclusion. (38 C.3d 496.)

(c) Dompeling case disapproved. Dompeling v. Superior Court (1981) 117 C.A.3d 798, 173 C.R. 38, supra, §66, held that bad faith is not established by showing that a settling defendant paid less than his or her theoretical proportionate or fair share of the value of plaintiff's case; i.e., the settling defendant and the nonsettling defendants are adverse parties and each may act to further his or her own interests. (38 C.3d 497, 498.) But the Dompeling every-person-for-himself approach has harsh results, and it is improbable that the Legislature intended to have the good faith requirement in C.C.P. 877.6 interpreted so narrowly. Dompeling and its progeny are disapproved "to the extent that those cases are inconsistent with this opinion." (38 C.3d 500, footnote 7.)

(1) The court may inquire, among other things, "whether the amount of the settlement is within the reasonable range of the settling tortfeasor's proportional share of comparative liability for the plaintiff's injuries." (38 C.3d 499.) This is not to say that bad faith is established by showing that a settling defendant paid less than his or her theoretical proportionate share; damages are often speculative, and settlement for a disproportionately low figure is often reasonable where liability is uncertain or remote, or the tortfeasor is insolvent, uninsured, or underinsured. However, the amount of the settlement is not irrelevant. (38 C.3d 499.)

(2) The policies underlying the good faith requirement "require that a number of factors be taken into account including a rough approximation of plaintiffs' total recovery and the settlor's proportionate liability, the amount paid in settlement, the allocation of settlement proceeds among plaintiffs, and a recognition that a settlor should pay less in settlement than he would if he were found liable after a trial. Other relevant considerations include the financial conditions and insurance policy limits of settling defendants, as well as the existence of collusion, fraud, or tortious conduct aimed to injure the interests of nonsettling defendants." (38 C.3d 499.)

(3) Practical considerations require that the evaluation be made "on the basis of information available at the time of settlement." (38 C.3d 499.)

(4) The party asserting lack of good faith--who has the burden of proof--should be permitted to demonstrate that "the settlement is so far 'out of the ballpark' in relation to these factors as to be inconsistent with the equitable objectives of the statute," and hence was not in good faith. (38 C.3d 499.)

(e) Policy considerations favor this approach.

(1) The plaintiff will have the same incentive to settle; "indeed, to the extent that the settling defendant is induced to offer more in order to bring the settlement within the bounds of fairness, the plaintiff's incentive to settle may be greater." (38 C.3d 500.)

(2) Because the "reasonable range" test leaves substantial latitude to the parties and to the discretion of the trial court, "defendants will still have an incentive to get out of the litigation for a reduced amount." (38 C.3d 500.)

(3) The public interest is advanced by settling all claims and removing the case from the judicial system. (38 C.3d 500.)

(4) There will not be an undue burden on the parties or the trial court. "Despite the uncertainties, generalized valuation criteria are recognized by the personal injury bar, insurance claims departments and pretrial settlement courts. When testing the good faith of a settlement figure, a court may enlist the guidance of the judge's personal experience and of experts in the field. Represented by knowledgeable counsel, settlement negotiators can predict with some assurance whether a settlement is within the reasonable range permitted by the criterion of good faith." (38 C.3d 500, quoting River Garden Farms.)

(f) Settlement in this case not in good faith. Plaintiffs received nothing in return for the dismissal except relief from having to pay costs of the settlor because it was wrongfully sued; the same net situation would have existed if, knowing that the statute of limitations had run, plaintiffs had not sued. Hence, the trial court's discretion, exercised on the basis of the criteria recited, could lead only to the conclusion that the settlement was not in good faith. (38 C.3d 501.) (See 22 Cal. Western L. Rev. 362; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 247; 26 Santa Clara L. Rev. 63.)

A number of cases, applying the Tech-Bilt test in various factual situations, uphold the trial court's determination of good faith. (See Barth-Wittmore Ins. v. H.R. Murphy Enterprises (1985) 169 C.A.3d 124, 132, 214 C.R. 894; Ex-Cell-O Corp. v. Holdener (1986) 181 C.A.3d 25, 32, 226 C.R. 57; Horton v. Superior Court (1987) 194 C.A.3d 727, 734, 238 C.R. 467; Schuler v. Hernandez (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1302, 1307, 249 C.R. 550; Schmid v. Superior Court (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1244, 1248, 253 C.R. 137; Los Angeles v. Guerrero (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1149, 1156, 257 C.R. 787; Cal-Jones Properties v. Evans Pac. Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 324, 329, 264 C.R. 737; Everman v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 466, 472, 10 C.R.2d 176, infra, §82; Aero-Crete v. Superior Court (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1685, 1701, 1705, 1708, 27 C.R.2d 62.)

Other cases find the settlement lacking in good faith. (See Gehl Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 183 C.A.3d 178, 184, 185, 228 C.R. 19 [mandamus to trial court to vacate its order determining that settlement was in good faith]; *Southern Calif. Gas Co. v. Cases finding settlement lacking in good faith: See TSI Seismic Tenant Space v. Superior Court (2007) 149 C.A.4th 159, 165, 56 C.R.3d 751 [good faith determination in construction defects action was abuse of discretion where approved settlement was based solely on limitation of liability clause in plaintiff's contract with settling party and was grossly disproportionate to that party's culpability in relation to other defendants; trial court failed to consider Tech-Bilt factor whether amount paid bears reasonable relationship to settling party's proportionate share of liability].

In Armstrong World Industries v. Superior Court (1989) 215 C.A.3d 951, 264 C.R. 39, plaintiffs, occupants of a new office building, brought an action against various entities responsible for its construction, claiming personal injuries from toxic chemicals generated within the building. One defendant, which had installed ceiling tiles, obtained summary judgment against plaintiffs on the ground that their action was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs then entered into a settlement with that defendant under which plaintiffs would not appeal from the summary judgment in consideration of that defendant's forbearance from seeking an award of costs incurred in its defense of the action. The settling defendant then sought an order confirming the settlement, supported by counsel's declaration that its litigation costs were $ 15,000. The trial judge denied the motion on the ground that the settling defendant's waiver of costs could not effect any economic benefit to the nonsettling defendants, because there was no express agreement that it would reduce their liability. Held, mandamus issued directing the trial judge to reconsider the motion.

(a) C.C.P. 877(a) provides that a good faith settlement reduces the claims against nonsettling defendants "in the amount of the consideration paid for it" (see supra, §71). The statute does not impose requirements as to how or when consideration is to be paid, and the case law does not require direct payment of money. (215 C.A.3d 956.) Thus, the operation of the setoff does not depend on either an express "offset" provision or an actual transfer of money. (215 C.A.3d 957.)

(b) Noncash consideration will effect a proportionate reduction under C.C.P. 877(a) in the liability of nonsettling defendants to the extent of the value of the noncash consideration. Forbearance from seeking an award of litigation costs is legal consideration for a contract. (215 C.A.3d 957, 958.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

1. Nature and Scope of Requirement.

ee. Settlement With Cross-Defendant.

[§ 81] Settlement With Cross-Defendant.

In Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1337, 45 C.R.2d 581, plaintiff subcontractor sued defendant accounting firm for damages allegedly caused by defendant's improper calculation of damages for plaintiff in a prior federal action. Defendant then cross-complained for indemnity and fraud against the attorneys plaintiff had retained in the federal action. The cross-defendant attorneys and plaintiff entered into a sliding scale settlement agreement (see infra, §100 et seq.), which was valued at $ 250,000 and guaranteed a recovery for plaintiff of at least $ 750,000, even though plaintiff had not sued them, and any claims against them were time-barred. Plaintiff's damages were estimated at $ 39 million, the figure used in cross-defendants' moving papers, which meant that they settled with plaintiff for less than one percent of plaintiff's damages. The trial judge approved the settlement, finding that it was in good faith, and dismissed defendant's cross-complaint. Held, reversed and remanded with directions to deny cross-defendants' motion for good faith settlement and to reinstate defendant's cross-complaint.

(a) Cross-defendants were authorized to bring a motion to determine the good faith of their settlement with plaintiff even though plaintiff did not sue them and they were solely cross-defendants on defendant's cross-complaint. C.C.P. 877.6(a)(1) (infra, §83) states that any party to an action "wherein it is alleged that two or more parties are joint tortfeasors" is entitled to a hearing on the issue of the good faith of a settlement. Although plaintiff did not sue cross-defendants, and its complaint against defendant did not allege that cross-defendants and defendant were joint tortfeasors, defendant's cross-complaint, by alleging that any damage to plaintiff was caused, in whole or in part, by cross-defendants' negligence or other fault, alleged that they were joint tortfeasors. (38 C.A.4th 1347.)

(b) One of the most important factors in determining the good faith of a settlement is the settling party's proportionate liability. Cross-defendants did not present any evidence regarding their proportionate liability for plaintiff's alleged injury; they merely presented a series of questionable assumptions in their memorandum of points and authorities to show the settlement amount was reasonable. Both C.C.P. 877.6(b) (infra, §85) and Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, supra, §79, require an evidentiary showing that the proposed settlement is within the reasonable range permitted by the criterion of good faith. Thus, absent that evidence, defendant met its burden under C.C.P. 877.6(d) (infra, §85) in attacking the settlement as lacking in good faith. (38 C.A.4th 1350.)

(c) The trial judge based the good faith ruling entirely on defendant's unwillingness to settle. This was error, as a matter of law. Under Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124, infra, §102, although a trial court may consider the conduct of the nonsettling defendant in determining whether a sliding scale agreement is a good faith settlement, there are limits on the consequences for being unreasonably recalcitrant in settlement negotiations. The mere fact of defendant's denial of liability and its refusal to settle did not establish that cross-defendants' settlement was anywhere within the reasonable range of their liability. (38 C.A.4th 1351.)

(d) Under Tech-Bilt, one of the factors in determining good faith is the settling party's financial condition and insurance policy limits. Cross-defendants had malpractice insurance with a $ 2 million limit of liability. Attorneys' fees, costs, and expert witness fees had reduced the available limits to something less than $ 1.8 million. Thus, the guarantee, with a present value of $ 250,000, represented a mere 14% of the available policy limits. Given the substantial insurance policy limits, the settlement was not justified by cross-defendants' financial condition. (38 C.A.4th 1352.)

(e) Another relevant consideration under Tech-Bilt is the existence of collusion, fraud, or tortious conduct aimed to injure the interests of nonsettling defendants. Given that cross-defendants settled for less than one percent of plaintiff's claimed damages, despite the availability of substantial insurance policy limits, that the "settlement" was made even though plaintiff no longer had a viable claim against cross-defendants, and that cross-defendants admitted their reason for settling was to cut off defendant's cross-complaint, the settlement was not in good faith and was aimed at injuring defendant's interests. A plaintiff and a cross-defendant may enter into a good faith settlement, even if the plaintiff's claims against the cross-defendant are time-barred, but the proffered good faith settlement must be subjected to particular scrutiny to ensure the settlement amount is reasonable and that there is no collusion aimed at injuring the interests of the nonsettling cross-complainant. (38 C.A.4th 1353.)

(f) The settlement was also invalid because it improperly encouraged continued litigation. Under C.C.P. 877.5(b) (infra, §100), a sliding scale agreement "limits the liability of the agreeing tortfeasor defendants to an amount which is dependent upon the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to recover from the nonagreeing defendant or defendants." Here, however, the sliding scale agreement went so far as to compel plaintiff to continue litigating the action against defendant in order to receive any compensation whatsoever from cross-defendants. (38 C.A.4th 1354.)

(g) Because the settlement failed to comply with good faith standards, the trial judge erred in dismissing defendant's cross-complaint for indemnity. It necessarily followed that the trial judge also erred in dismissing the fraud claim. (38 C.A.4th 1355.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 82

[§ 82] Condition That Settling Tortfeasor Participate in Trial.

In Everman v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 466, 10 C.R.2d 176, a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle collision, plaintiff sued the driver of the colliding vehicle, the driver's employer, the sanitation company whose truck allegedly caused the accident by swerving across the center line, and the city. The driver of the colliding vehicle and his employer agreed to settlements, one of the conditions of which was that the driver would remain in the lawsuit and participate at trial as a defendant. On the basis of this condition, the trial judge refused to grant the settling defendants' motion for a determination of good faith settlement under C.C.P. 877.6 (infra, §83 et seq.), and they sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; a settlement is not subject to disapproval solely because it provides for the continuing participation by a settling defendant.

(a) The purpose of a condition requiring a settling defendant to participate in the trial is to counteract the "empty chair" tactic, whereby the remaining defendants can ascribe fault to an actor who is not there to defend himself or herself. The condition is not collusive as a matter of law, so long as the jury is informed of the settling defendant's true status as a defendant facing no monetary liability. (8 C.A.4th 471.) Because the disclosure, which the settling defendants have agreed is appropriate, will remove any potential unfairness in the proceedings, the trial judge abused his discretion in denying the motion for determination of good faith settlement. (8 C.A.4th 473.)

(b) The nonsettling defendants' concern that defendant driver, having no involvement in the controversy, will merely "perform" for the jury is unwarranted. Defendant driver has a genuine interest in the litigation. By participating in the trial, he avoids a breach of contract and loss of the benefits of the settlement. Moreover, his participation, as the immediate actor, tends to facilitate the requirement of C.C. 1431.2 (supra, §53) that the comparative several liability of each defendant for noneconomic damages be allocated. (8 C.A.4th 472.)

(c) Defendant driver's participation in the trial after entering into the settlement does not defeat or seriously impair the goal of using settlements to finalize one's involvement in the litigation; this settlement is final, subject only to the condition of his participation. Certainly that participation involves no less finality than participation under a sliding scale agreement by a settling defendant who continues to participate in the case, a practice that has been approved subject to determination of whether there is a good faith settlement (see infra, §102). Furthermore, the settlement here clearly confers advantages on the settling parties, and hence tends to further the objective of C.C.P. 877.6 of encouraging settlements. (8 C.A.4th 472.) (See Alcala Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1308, 1312, 57 C.R.2d 349 [following Everman].)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

2. Determination of Good Faith.

aa. Statutory Requirement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 83

[§ 83] Statutory Requirement.

River Garden Farms v. Superior Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 986, 103 C.R. 498, supra, §78, observed that a judicial determination of the issue of good faith should be made at the earliest possible time. (26 C.A.3d 1002.) Fisher v. Superior Court (1980) 103 C.A.3d 434, 163 C.R. 47, approved the River Garden theory and held that there should be a hearing on noticed motion prior to trial of the liability issues. (103 C.A.3d 442.)

The 1980 Legislature accepted this view by the enactment of C.C.P. 877.6, entitling "[a]ny party to an action in which it is alleged that two or more parties are joint tortfeasors ... to a hearing on the issue of the good faith of a settlement entered into by the plaintiff or other claimant and one or more alleged tortfeasors." (C.C.P. 877.6(a)(1); see Regal Recovery Agency v. Superior Court (1989) 207 C.A.3d 693, 695, 255 C.R. 34 [defendant whose settlement was not confirmed had right, in action against it by codefendant for indemnity, for hearing on issue of good faith]; Los Angeles v. Guerrero (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1149, 1154, 257 C.R. 787 [C.C.P. 877.6 applies to both proposed and executed settlements; hence, fact that settlement was executed 8 months before action was filed did not preclude finding of good faith]; Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1337, 45 C.R.2d 581, supra, §81 [cross-defendant alleged by defendant to be joint tortfeasor was entitled to good faith determination under C.C.P. 877.6 even though not sued by plaintiff]; Nutrition Now v. Superior Court (2003) 105 C.A.4th 209, 212, 129 C.R.2d 266 [California court erred in refusing to determine good faith of Connecticut settlement; place of settlement is not relevant for purposes of C.C.P. 877.6]; 12 Pacific L. J. 290; on application of C.C.P. 877.6 to actions involving coobligors on contract, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §111.)

This is the procedure required where good faith is questioned. In Northrop Corp. v. Stinson Sales Corp. (1984) 151 C.A.3d 653, 199 C.R. 16, the settling defendant did not move for a hearing, but simply moved for summary judgment, which the trial judge granted without any determination of the issue of good faith of the settlement. Held, judgment reversed. The proper procedure where good faith is questioned is a motion under C.C.P. 877.6; if it is determined at the hearing that the settlement was made in good faith, a motion for summary judgment discharging the settling defendant from further liability is appropriate. (151 C.A.3d 658.) (See Andruss v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1276, 1279, 54 C.R.2d 466 [trial judge erred in granting summary judgment motion after settlement and dismissing motion to determine good faith as moot].)

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

2. Determination of Good Faith.

bb. Notice or Application.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 84

[§ 84] Notice or Application.

C.C.P. 877.6 sets forth alternative procedures:

(1) Notice of Motion for Hearing. Any party is entitled to a hearing on the good faith of the settlement after giving notice of motion pursuant to C.C.P. 1005(b) (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §11 et seq.). On a showing of good cause, the court may shorten the time for giving the required notice to permit determination of the issue before commencement of the trial, or before verdict or judgment if settlement is made after the trial has commenced. (C.C.P. 877.6(a)(1).)

(2) Application for Settlement. A settling party may give, by certified mail return receipt requested, notice of settlement to all parties and the court, together with a proposed order and an application for determination of good faith settlement indicating the settling parties and the basis, terms, and amount of the settlement. Proof of service must be filed with the court. However, this procedure does not apply to settlements in which a confidentiality agreement has been entered into regarding either the case or the settlement's terms. (C.C.P. 877.6(a)(2); on disclosure of terms of settlement agreement, see infra, §85.)

A nonsettling party may, within 25 days of the mailing of the notice, application, and proposed order, or within 20 days of personal service, file a notice of motion under C.C.P. 1005(b) contesting the good faith of the settlement. If no nonsettling party files such a motion, the court may approve the settlement. (C.C.P. 877.6(a)(2).)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

2. Determination of Good Faith.

cc. Conduct of Hearing.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 85

[§ 85] Conduct of Hearing.

(1) In General. The good faith issue may be determined on the basis of affidavits and counteraffidavits, or the court in its discretion may receive other evidence. (C.C.P. 877.6(b).) The party asserting lack of good faith has the burden of proof on the issue. (C.C.P. 877.6(d).) (See Erreca's v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1475, 1492, 24 C.R.2d 156, infra, §96 [criticizing procedure where judge presided over 4-hour preliminary ex parte settlement conference before delegating matter to special master and then presiding over good faith hearing, but concluding that there was no prejudicial error]; Brehm Communities v. Superior Court (2001) 88 C.A.4th 730, 734, 105 C.R.2d 918 [good faith of settlement consisting entirely of unvalued assets and intangibles could not be established by hearsay declaration that retired judge had determined that settlement was fair; good faith determination must be based on competent evidence].)

(2) Scope of Affidavits. In Grand Terrace v. Superior Court (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1251, 238 C.R. 119, nonsettling parties contended that the trial court abused its discretion in granting a good faith motion because there were no declarations or affidavits describing the basic facts concerning the litigation, and that these are necessary for an intelligent assessment of good faith. The court rejected the contention.

(a) The overwhelming majority of such motions are unopposed and granted summarily; and in many cases, at the time of filing, the moving party does not know if a contest will develop, and a full factual response to all of the factors set forth in Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, supra, §79, would be a waste of valuable judicial and legal time and clients' resources. (192 C.A.3d 1261.)

(b) Only when good faith is disputed must the trial court consider the Tech-Bilt factors; when no one objects, "the barebones motion which sets forth the ground of good faith, accompanied by a declaration which sets forth a brief background of the case is sufficient." (192 C.A.3d 1261.)

(c) When there is a contest, C.C.P. 877.6(d) states a workable ground rule for the hearing by placing the burden of proving lack of good faith on the contesting nonsettlor, who should file declarations. These could require the moving party to file responsive counterdeclarations to negate the lack of good faith asserted by the contesting party. (192 C.A.3d 1261.) (See Alcal Roofing & Insulation v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1121, 1127, 10 C.R.2d 844 [rule in Grand Terrace does not excuse settlor in contested case from disclosing details of settlement to nonsettlers and court].)

(3) Disclosure of Terms of Settlement Agreement. In J. Allen Radford Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1418, 265 C.R. 535, the settling defendant moved to confirm the good faith of a sliding scale recovery agreement, and the nonsettling defendant, in opposing the motion, requested permission to see the agreement. The trial judge denied the request and made an order determining good faith. Held, mandamus issued, directing the judge to vacate the order determining that the settlement was made in good faith and either allow the nonsettling defendant permission to review the relevant terms of the agreement, or permit the settling defendant to withdraw its motion. Sliding scale agreements may contain many provisions that require secrecy (see Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124, infra, §102) and the parties are free to maintain the confidentiality of their agreement, but "they may not claim a privilege of nondisclosure when they move to confirm the good faith of their settlement." (216 C.A.3d 1423.) Because the nonsettling defendant has the burden of proof on the issue of good faith, it must be allowed to see the settlement agreement in order to attempt to meet that burden. (216 C.A.3d 1423.) (See Mediplex of Calif. v. Superior Court (1995) 34 C.A.4th 748, 749, 40 C.R.2d 397 [settling defendant could not withhold confidential terms of settlement agreement even though it had revealed important terms; nonsettling defendant must be given opportunity to determine independently whether undisclosed terms could have effect on reducing offset].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Scope of Affidavits. See Franklin Mint Co. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1550, 1558, 31 C.R.3d 319, Supp., infra, §96 [moving party must set forth value of consideration paid and evidentiary basis for that valuation, and must demonstrate that valuation was reached in sufficiently adversarial manner to justify presumption that reasonable valuation was reached].

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

2. Determination of Good Faith.

dd. Review.

[§ 86] Review.

(1) By Mandamus. Within 20 days after service of written notice of the determination, or such additional time as the trial judge may allow, the aggrieved party may petition for review by mandamus. Within 30 days of the receipt of all filed materials, the court must determine whether it will hear the writ, and so inform the parties. Any hearing granted must be given special precedence over all civil matters on the calendar, except those matters having equal or greater precedence by law. (C.C.P. 877.6(e).)

During review, the running on any period of time after which an action would be subject to dismissal under C.C.P. 583.110 et seq. (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §330 et seq.) is tolled. (C.C.P. 877.6(e).)

(2) On Appeal of Final Judgment. Whether a good faith determination may only be reviewed by mandamus is unsettled. In Main Fiber Products v. Morgan & Franz Ins. Agency (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1130, 87 C.R.2d 108, plaintiffs brought an action against two defendants. One defendant settled, and the settlement was determined to have been in good faith. The nonsettling defendant moved successfully for judgment on the pleadings, and plaintiffs appealed. The nonsettling defendant cross-appealed in order to challenge the good faith determination. Noting that C.C.P. 877.6(e) provides that the aggrieved party "may" petition for mandamus to review a good faith determination, defendant argued that because this statute did not expressly preclude review of the ruling on appeal from the final judgment, the good faith determination, as with other interlocutory orders, could be reviewed at that time. Held, appeal dismissed.

(a) Several courts have stated generally in dicta that the determination of good faith may only be reviewed by mandamus (see, e.g., Housing Group v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 549, 29 C.R.2d 460, and Rohr Industries v. First State Ins. Co. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 1480, 69 C.R.2d 872). "But neither those cases nor any others of which we are aware actually address the specific issue before us, i.e., whether subdivision (e) of section 877.6 precludes, not only a direct appeal from the interlocutory good faith determination, but also any review of that ruling upon an appeal from the final judgment. We conclude that it does." (73 C.A.4th 1135.)

(b) This interpretation of C.C.P. 877.6(e) is supported by the need for finality regarding good faith determinations.

"A contrary construction, permitting an aggrieved party to postpone review of the good faith determination until after the balance of the claims were tried and a final judgment issued months or years later, would prevent the very finality and certainty that writ review was intended to promote. Years after the settlement, the settling tortfeasor could be dragged back into the action, necessitating a retrial of the plaintiff's claims." (73 C.A.4th 1135.)

(c) This construction is supported by the legislative history, and the language of the statute itself confirms that the Legislature planned for the expeditious resolution of the good faith issue. "By providing a speedy remedy and ensuring that the remaining litigants would not be prejudiced while that remedy was being pursued, the Legislature clearly indicated its intention that the trial be postponed until after the trial court's good faith determination was reviewed. The Legislature would not have gone to such lengths to enable effective writ review if the aggrieved party was equally free to wait for a final judgment." (73 C.A.4th 1136.) (See O'Hearn v. Hillcrest Gym & Fitness Center (2004) 115 C.A.4th 491, 494, 499, 9 C.R.3d 342 [party wishing to challenge merits of good faith determination must do so by way of mandamus petition, and may not forgo writ review and seek to have determination reviewed for first time on appeal from final judgment; following Main Fiber].)

However, Maryland Cas. Co. v. Andreini & Co. of Southern Calif. (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1413, 97 C.R.2d 752, held that a party who had unsuccessfully sought review of a good faith determination by petitioning for mandamus could again raise the good faith point on appeal from a final judgment. Examination of the legislative history of C.C.P. 877.6(e) reveals that while the Legislature "viewed a writ petition before trial as a preferable means of reviewing good faith settlement determinations," it did not intend by the statute's permissive language to foreclose postjudgment review. (81 C.A.4th 1423.) With respect to the apparent conflict with Main Fiber, and the cases cited, the court said: "In Main Fiber, the court expressly declined to address the question before us, i.e., whether a nonsettling party, having previously sought but failed to obtain a writ, can challenge a determination of good faith on a postjudgment appeal. ... Nevertheless, Main Fiber did note that other courts had stated in dicta that the sole means of challenging a determination of good faith was by writ petition. ... Because the cases cited in Main Fiber did not consider the legislative history of section 877.6(e), we decline to follow them." (81 C.A.4th 1425, footnote 13.)

Maryland Cas. Co. v. Andreini & Co. of Southern Calif. was followed in Wilshire Ins. Co. v. Tuff Boy Holding (2001) 86 C.A.4th 627, 103 C.R.2d 480, infra, §87. Appellant had previously petitioned the court for writ review and been denied. Noting that the statute, by using the word "may," is not designed to make a writ petition the exclusive mode of review, the court referred to other instances where the Legislature clearly accomplishes this result. (86 C.A.4th 636.) (See O'Hearn v. Hillcrest Gym & Fitness Center, supra, 115 C.A.4th 499, footnote 8 [noting that Wilshire Ins. Co. sets forth "possible exception" to rule denying appellate review of good faith settlement determination, but distinguishing instant action in which appellant did not seek writ review in first instance].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

c. Requirement of Good Faith.

2. Determination of Good Faith.

ee. Scope of Statute.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 87

[§ 87] Scope of Statute.

(1) Settlement Among Joint Tortfeasors. The Courts of Appeal are split on whether C.C.P. 877.6 applies to settlements among joint tortfeasors.

In Arizona Pipeline Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 C.A.4th 33, 27 C.R.2d 118, the court held that, because C.C.P. 877.6 applies to settlements between "the plaintiff or other claimant and one or more alleged tortfeasors," the statute does not apply to settlements among joint tortfeasors. Thus, a determination that a settlement among joint tortfeasors was made in good faith does not bar a nonsettling tortfeasor from prosecuting a claim for comparative indemnity against a settling tortfeasor. (22 C.A.4th 42.)

However, in KAOM v. Superior Court (1995) 35 C.A.4th 549, 41 C.R.2d 310, the court held that, because the phrase "plaintiff or other claimant" logically includes a cross-complainant seeking express or implied indemnity against a cross-defendant, a cross-defendant who settles with a cross-complainant, but not the plaintiff, is entitled to a good faith determination under C.C.P. 877.6. "We recognize ... that cross-defendants routinely settle indemnity cross-complaints without concurrently settling with the plaintiff. ... It creates an artificial and unsustainable distinction to say, as Arizona Pipeline does, that a cross-defendant who settles with the plaintiff is entitled to a good faith determination under section 877.6 ... , but that a cross-defendant who settles with a cross-complainant cannot." (35 C.A.4th 555.)

(2) Two or More Parties Must Be Tortfeasors. Although C.C.P. 877.6 applies when "it is alleged that two or more parties are joint tortfeasors or coobligors," the use of the word "alleged" does not mean that proceedings under the statute are appropriate whenever a complaint names joint tortfeasors, even when only one tortfeasor is made a party. C.C.P. 877.6(c) (infra, §88) applies only to actions involving both settling and nonsettling tortfeasors or coobligors. Read in context, the word "alleged" merely acknowledges that the party need not be found liable in tort; allegations are sufficient. It is essential, however that the action involve two or more parties who are at least alleged to be joint tortfeasors or coobligors and that some, but not all, of the parties have settled. (Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1174, 1178, 44 C.R.2d 126.)

(3) No Requirement of Nonsettling Party. Wilshire Ins. Co. v. Tuff Boy Holding (2001) 86 C.A.4th 627, 103 C.R.2d 480, which arose out of a traffic accident in which one driver was killed, initially produced two actions. In one action, the insurer for the driver causing the accident filed a complaint in indemnity against the manufacturer of a defective weld, seeking to recover the amount it had paid to settle the case with the heirs of the decedent. In the other case, the heirs filed a negligence and products liability action against the same manufacturer. The two actions were then consolidated, and the action involving the manufacturer and heirs was settled. After the settlement was found to have been made in good faith under C.C.P. 877.6 and judgment was entered, the insurer, whose indemnity action was effectively barred by the settlement under C.C.P. 877.6(c) (infra, §88), appealed on the ground that, because C.C.P. 877.6(a)(2) (supra, §84) refers to a "nonsettling" party, the presence of such a party is required before a settlement can be determined to be made in good faith. Held, C.C.P. 877.6 applied.

(a) Although most of the cases relied on by the insurer involved nonsettling defendants, those cases do not hold that the presence of a defendant who had not yet settled with the plaintiff is necessary. (86 C.A.4th 627.)

(b) C.C.P.877.6(a)(1) (supra, §83) entitles any party to a hearing to determine the good faith of a settlement, if it is alleged that there are at least two joint tortfeasors. Here, the two joint tortfeasors were the driver causing the accident, in whose shoes the insurer stood, and the manufacturer. (86 C.A.4th 641.)

(c) The only reference to "nonsettling party" occurs in C.C.P. 877.6(a)(2). This phrase "merely refers to a defendant who is not a party to the particular settlement for which a good faith determination is being sought. Subdivision (a)(2) does not require that there be defendants who have not settled with the plaintiff at the time of a good faith determination. Construed in its entirety, the language of section 877.6 envisions that a later-added defendant or the last defendant to settle can use section 877.6 to extinguish indemnity claims by joint tortfeasors or co-obligors who have already settled." (86 C.A.4th 641.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Where Tortfeasors Settle Separately. In Bob Parrett Const. v. Superior Court (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1180, 45 C.R.3d 250, two corporations separately settled claims against them by the United States. One corporation then sued the other for indemnity, and the defendant corporation moved under C.C.P. 877.6 for a determination that its own settlement was made in good faith and thus barred the plaintiff corporation's claims. Held, the trial court's denial of the motion was error; C.C.P. 877.6 applied. The motion is proper under the terms of the statute. A good faith determination need not be made in a tort action in which settlement is reached, but may be made in a separate indemnity action. Also, there is no requirement of a single action in which the joint tortfeasors are sued by the injured party. Because C.C.P. 877.6 was adopted to encourage settlements and to permit the equitable allocation of damages, it applies whenever the fundamental requirements of the statute are met. (140 C.A.4th 1187.)

1. General Rule: Bar to Further Claims Against Settling Tortfeasor.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 88

[§ 88] General Rule: Bar to Further Claims Against Settling Tortfeasor.

"A determination by the court that the settlement was made in good faith shall bar any other joint tortfeasor or co-obligor from any further claims against the settling tortfeasor or co-obligor for equitable comparative contribution, or partial or comparative indemnity, based on comparative negligence or comparative fault." (C.C.P. 877.6(c).) (See C.C.P. 877(b), supra, §85 [good faith release of tortfeasor "shall discharge the party to whom it is given from all liability for any contribution to any other parties"]; John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Setser (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1524, 1528, 50 C.R.2d 413 [C.C.P. 877.6(c) did not preclude defendant insurer from recovering attorneys' fees under C.C.P. 1021.6 (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §201); claim to fees, perfected before determination of good faith, was not "further claim," and defendant was not "joint tortfeasor," within meaning of C.C.P. 877.6(c)]; Dillingham Const., N.A. v. Nadel Partnership (1998) 64 C.A.4th 264, 276, 75 C.R.2d 207 [reasonable settlement amount could be used to establish damages in equitable indemnity action, but only where parties to settlement agreement specifically allocated settlement proceeds between claims and, in proceeding in which nonsettling parties were allowed to be heard, trial court found that allocation was made in good faith]; Norco Delivery Service v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas (1998) 64 C.A.4th 955, 962, 75 C.R.2d 456 [trial court making good faith settlement determination did not err by barring "direct" or "independent" causes of action by nonsettling defendant who failed to adduce evidence of other than derivative damages].)

In Shane v. Superior Court (1984) 160 C.A.3d 1237, 207 C.R. 210, infra, §90, the court made the following observations on the nature and effect of this provision:

(a) Unlike the other subdivisions of C.C.P. 877.6, which enunciate rules of procedure, subdivision (c) states a substantive right of discharge from liability. (160 C.A.3d 1245.) It does not provide a procedure by which this right may be implemented, but other provisions of the Code provide mechanisms by which the party settling in good faith may obtain dismissal of actions or cross-complaints: motion for summary judgment, motion for judgment on the pleadings, general demurrer, or motion to dismiss cross-complaint. (160 C.A.3d 1245.)

(b) "Regardless of which mechanism is chosen, employment of a distinct procedure to adjudicate the effect of a judicially determined good faith settlement upon a pending action or claim not only is procedurally necessary but also serves an important salutary function: it focuses the court's attention distinctly upon two completely different substantive questions--whether the settlement was in good faith and whether the claim sought to be dismissed is of such a nature as to be barred by a good faith settlement. Each of these questions is becoming increasingly controversial and complex with the development of the law in this area." (160 C.A.3d 1246.)

Application of C.C.P. 877.6(c) is not limited to parties to the action at the time the good faith settlement determination is made. The statute prescribes a substantive right of discharge from liability, and nothing in its language requires that the trial court have jurisdiction over any other joint tortfeasor in order for the good faith determination to bar that tortfeasor's claim for indemnity. (Britz v. Dow Chemical Co. (1999) 73 C.A.4th 177, 180, 86 C.R.2d 188; Mid-Century Ins. Exchange v. Daimler-Chrysler Corp. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 310, 314, 112 C.R.2d 880, infra, §93.)

2. Distinctions and Exceptions.

aa. Claims Against Others.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 89

[§ 89] Claims Against Others.

The provisions governing good faith settlements have no effect on claims other than those against a settling tortfeasor.

(1) Claim Against Settling Plaintiff. C.C. 877.6 does not apply to indemnity claims against a settling plaintiff. In Doose Landscape v. Superior Court (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1698, 1700, 286 C.R. 321, the court said: "In this action we are confronted with the novel situation where a settling plaintiff seeks the protection of a good faith settlement to protect itself from cross-claims by a cross-defendant for equitable indemnity. ... The subdivision only acts to bar claims against a settling tortfeasor. The court was without jurisdiction under the statutory provision to bar cross-claims for equitable indemnity against the settling plaintiff."

(2) Claim Against Nonsettling Tortfeasor. C.C. 877.6 does not apply to a settling tortfeasor's indemnity claims against a nonsettling tortfeasor. Thus, any valuation or allocation determinations made by the parties to the settlement are not binding in an action on those claims. In Gouvis Engineering v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 642, 43 C.R.2d 785, plaintiff sued developers for construction defects, and the developers cross-complained against numerous subcontractors for indemnification. Plaintiff settled with the developers and all but three of the subcontractors. The agreement called for the developers to pay a specified sum to plaintiff and to continue the indemnity action against the three nonsettling subcontractors, with any recovery to be allocated between themselves and plaintiff. Plaintiff moved for a determination of good faith settlement, which included an analysis of the value of the settlement, and the trial judge granted the motion. One of the nonsettling subcontractors, G, then petitioned for mandamus to review the good faith determination. The developers' cross-complaint against the subcontractors was based on the amount they had paid in settlement, and G contended that the total valuation of the settlement as well as the presumptive estimate of his share of damage was excessive. Held, petition denied; G was not prejudiced by the good faith determination.

(a) Because G was not a party to the settlement agreement, he could not be bound or affected by its terms, other than as provided by C.C.P. 877 (see supra, §71) and 877.6. Under these provisions, the legal effect of the determination of good faith could be no more than nondischarge of joint liability of nonsettling parties and the creation of a credit to offset the claims against nonsettling parties. (37 C.A.4th 649.)

(b) In the developers' action against G for indemnity, the terms of settlement will be admissible. However, the allocation and valuation approved at the good faith hearing have no binding or res judicata effect as to G in that action. Res judicata principles should not apply where the scope of substantive inquiry and the potential for development of evidence are much more restricted than the corresponding opportunity afforded in a court of general jurisdiction, as they were here:

(1) Although G was a party and participated in the good faith hearing, the procedures used were those of motion practice instead of the ordinary rules of evidence. The hearing is abbreviated and its objective is not a precise or accurate determination of fact. The inquiry at the good faith settlement stage is not the same as the inquiry at trial, where complete precision of allocation could presumably be achieved. (37 C.A.4th 650.)

(2) The burdens of proof in the hearings are different. At the good faith hearing, G, as the party opposing the finding of good faith, had the burden under C.C.P. 877.6(d) (see supra, §85) to show lack of good faith. At the trial of the indemnity action, the developers will have the burden to prove the amount that has been paid by virtue of injury caused by G's fault. (37 C.A.4th 650.)

A settlement with one joint tortfeasor does not, of course, bar the plaintiff from pursuing damages claims against the other joint tortfeasors. (Neubauer v. Goldfarb (2003) 108 C.A.4th 47, 53, 133 C.R.2d 218 [judgment in action by minority shareholder against closely held corporation and majority shareholders in favor of two majority shareholders was appealable, notwithstanding that plaintiff settled with corporation and other majority shareholder; two majority shareholders were still potentially liable, although any money judgment plaintiff might obtain against them would have to be reduced by amount paid in settlement].)

[§ 90] Claims Asserted in Independent Action.

In Shane v. Superior Court (1984) 160 C.A.3d 1237, 207 C.R. 210, two lawsuits between K and S, arising out of the same transaction, were pending in different branches of the Los Angeles Superior Court. K entered into a settlement in the Los Angeles branch and moved for a determination of good faith. The Los Angeles court granted the motion, and made an order that S's claims in the Van Nuys branch were barred. Held, the order purporting to adjudicate the Van Nuys claims was in excess of the court's jurisdiction. (160 C.A.3d 1246, 1248.) Adjudication of the reach of the "bar" effected by a good faith settlement "requires care and discrimination. When, as here, two or more cases are involved, the underlying issues concerning the extent of the 'bar' may be highly complex. Such cases may also involve courts of different jurisdiction, and/or different stages of proceeding, and/or diverse parties asserting diverse claims. Subject of course to the convenient statutory mechanisms of transfer, severance, consolidation, and coordination, each such case must be decided on its own." (160 C.A.3d 1251.) (See Housing Group v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 549, 552, 29 C.R.2d 460 [following Shane].) (For full treatment of priority of jurisdiction, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §232 et seq.)

2. Distinctions and Exceptions.

cc. Claims for Contractual or Statutory Indemnity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 91

[§ 91] Claims for Contractual or Statutory Indemnity.

(1) Claim Under Express Indemnity Clause. In C.L. Peck Contractors v. Superior Court (1984) 159 C.A.3d 828, 205 C.R. 754, plaintiff worker, injured on a construction site, sued the general contractor, the owner, and a subcontractor. Plaintiff settled with the subcontractor, who moved for a hearing and dismissal of all cross-claims for indemnification. The other defendants opposed dismissal on the ground that their cross-claims for indemnity were provided for in the contract between them and the subcontractor. The lower court found good faith and granted the motion. Held, mandamus granted to compel the court to vacate its order and deny dismissal.

(a) The issue whether a good faith settlement under C.C.P. 877.6 bars the remaining codefendants from seeking indemnity based on an express contract has been discussed in several cases in which no definitive holding was made. (159 C.A.3d 832.) The difficulty lies in the somewhat inconsistent language of C.C.P. 877 (settlement discharges tortfeasor "from all liability for any contribution to any other tortfeasors"; see supra, §73) and C.C.P. 877.6(c) (settlement discharges tortfeasor from claims "for equitable comparative contribution, or partial or comparative indemnity, based on comparative negligence of comparative fault"; see supra, §88). The possible conflict is resolved by holding that the more general language of C.C.P. 877(b) is subordinated to C.C.P. 877(c), "the more recent and more specific expression of the legislative will." (159 C.A.3d 833.)

(b) The rules governing express indemnity reflect its contractual nature (see infra, §119), and, within the limitations of the language used, an express indemnity clause is accorded a preemptive effect; i.e., when contractual indemnity is applicable, the doctrine of equitable indemnity does not come into play. (159 C.A.3d 833, 834.) (See Borrow/Thomas & Associates v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1654, 1660, 58 C.R.2d 626 [in construction defect case, determination that settlement between two of defendants and plaintiff was made in good faith was improper, where it was uncertain whether settlement satisfied nonsettling defendant's contractual indemnity rights or improperly sought to thwart them].)

(2) Claim Based on Statutory Indemnity. In Kantor v. Housing Authority (1992) 8 C.A.4th 424, 10 C.R.2d 695, defendant county housing authority settled a personal injury action involving a broken window in a building owned by it and used as a church. The other defendants (two ministers and a church), claiming to be "special employees" of defendant housing authority, filed a cross-complaint for statutory indemnity under Govt.C. 825 (infra, §375) to require defendant to pay any amount that they might have to pay plaintiff by way of judgment or settlement. Finding that the settlement was made in good faith, the trial judge granted defendant's motion to dismiss the cross-complaint. Held, judgment reversed; claims for statutory indemnity are not barred by C.C.P. 877.6(c).

(a) C. L. Peck Contractors v. Superior Court held that a claim against a codefendant based on express contract survives a good faith settlement under C.C.P. 877.6 because, by specifying equitable comparative indemnity, the Legislature evidenced its intention to exclude contractual indemnity. This rationale is equally applicable to statutory indemnity. (8 C.A.4th 431.)

(b) Defendant's argument that only a claim for express contractual indemnity survives a good faith settlement is not supported by statute or decision. Equally unpersuasive is the argument that the cross-complaint was clearly a claim for implied contractual indemnity. "Apples are not oranges, and a claim for statutory indemnity is not a claim for implied contractual indemnity. If a public entity could avoid its obligation under Government Code section 825 by simply settling with a claimant, the very purpose of the statute would be thwarted." (8 C.A.4th 431.)

[§ 92] Claims of Nonparties.

In Singer Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 179 C.A.3d 875, 225 C.R. 159, wrongful death actions were brought for the death of two children in a fire caused when a gas leak was ignited by a spark from the relay in an air conditioning unit. The named defendants were the homeowners and Cool-Temp, the servicer of their air conditioner. The homeowners cross-complained against the servicer for indemnity. In deposition proceedings, evidence indicated that a defective gas regulator could have caused the leakage. The servicer settled each action, involving claims of $ 252,000 and $ 500,000, for $ 5,000, and its motion for determination of good faith was granted. Thereafter, the manufacturer of the gas regulator was named as cross-defendant in a cross-complaint filed by the homeowners, and the manufacturer filed a cross-complaint for indemnity, contribution, and declaratory relief against the servicer and the homeowners. The manufacturer then sought discovery from the servicer on the extent and nature of its involvement with the servicing, its insurance coverage, and the financial condition of the servicer at the time of settlement. The servicer, relying on the determination of good faith, moved to dismiss the cross-complaint. Despite the fact that the manufacturer's discovery was not yet completed, the trial judge granted the motion. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacating of the order. The court stated the issue as follows: "whether a joint tortfeasor not a party to the lawsuit, either by complaint or cross-complaint, at the time another joint tortfeasor settles with the plaintiff is bound by an ensuing determination ... that the settlement is in good faith." (179 C.A.3d 881.)

(a) The court's inquiry must focus on "seeking to accommodate (1) the policy favoring settlement of litigation as well as that favoring equitable sharing of tort liability, (2) the reasonable expectation of a settling tortfeasor that he will escape the burden and expense of prolonged litigation, and (3) the fundamental constitutional principle that no one shall be deprived of a substantial property right without due process of law." (179 C.A.3d 884.)

(b) For a trial court to make a binding judicial determination of good faith, the tortfeasors known to have an interest in the outcome of the lawsuit must be brought before the court, and the obvious vehicle is a cross-complaint for contribution or partial indemnity. (179 C.A.3d 888.) C.C.P. 877.6 does not provide for a separate hearing in this situation, but to deny it is a violation of constitutional due process. "The financial stake an absent tortfeasor has in the fairness of a settlement between the plaintiff and a joint tortfeasor equates to the deprivation of a property interest, to wit: a nonsettling tortfeasor may be forced to bear a share of the liability greater than that proportionate to his fault when the plaintiff's recovery is reduced only by the monetary amount of a prior settlement. Since a nonsettling tortfeasor loses his right to seek contribution or partial indemnity from a joint tortfeasor who settled if that settlement is adjudged to be in good faith, the nonsettling tortfeasor stands to be deprived of his property right to contribution or partial indemnity. When the parties to a settlement know, or reasonably should know, that a nonsettling tortfeasor is exposed to substantial potential liability, such that his joinder as a defendant or cross-defendant is likely, the property right of that nonsettling tortfeasor must be regarded as significant." (179 C.A.3d 890.)

(c) "Assuming for this discussion that a settling tortfeasor is named a cross-defendant in a subsequent action for contribution or partial indemnity, how then can the cross-complaint be addressed to maximize the expectations of the parties? The cross-complainant must allege, initially or by amendment, (1) that he is exposed to substantial liability on the plaintiff's claim, (2) that his relationship to the subject matter of plaintiff's claim was known or reasonably should have been known to the settling parties, and (3) that he is therefore a necessary party who was not given notice of the prior good faith adjudication. A settlor who objects to the cross-complaint need only move to dismiss on the basis of the prior good faith determination; the cross-complainant must then prove to the satisfaction of the court his status as a necessary party, i.e., a likely defendant, at the time of settlement or face a judgment of dismissal." (179 C.A.3d 892.) The cross-complainant also has the burden of proof of absence of good faith. (179 C.A.3d 893.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Unnamed party with notice and opportunity to be heard may be bound: A settling tortfeasor's good faith settlement determination discharges indemnity claims by other tortfeasors, whether or not they are named as parties, so long as the other tortfeasors are given notice and an opportunity to be heard. Although C.C.P. 877.6 applies to "an action in which it is alleged that two or more parties are joint tortfeasors," there is no reason why a doe allegation does not satisfy this requirement. (Gackstetter v. Frawley (2006) 135 C.A.4th 1257, 1273, 38 C.R.3d 333 [notice of application for good faith settlement given to unnamed party by settling party].)

ee. Claims of Insurers.

[§ 93] Claims of Insurers.

A good faith determination under C.C.P. 877.6 is generally not binding on an insurer who does not participate in the settlement. (Pacific Estates v. Superior Court (1993) 13 C.A.4th 1561, 1573, 17 C.R.2d 434 [insurer not bound by settlement between developer and homeowners association]; Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 29 C.A.4th 435, 441, 34 C.R.2d 520 [in action by insured against multiple insurers allegedly covering same loss, C.C.P. 877.6(c) did not bar cross-claims by nonsettling insurers against settling insurer for contribution and indemnity; statute is inapplicable to equitable apportionment of contractual undertakings]; Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1174, 1181, 1184, 44 C.R.2d 126 [insurer was not bound by settlement between developer and builder; following Pacific Estates]; see 24 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1157 [settlement of complex environmental insurance coverage cases].)

Topa Ins. Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1331, 46 C.R.2d 516, is illustrative. An insured brought a declaratory relief action against two insurers. One of the insurers cross-complained for indemnity against another insurer, whose policy assertedly covered the same occurrence and who had previously entered into a good faith settlement with the insured. This insurer raised C.C.P. 877 and 877.6 as a defense, and was successful. Held, reversed.

(a) Both C.C.P. 877 and 877.6 refer to "joint tortfeasors." Although an insurer stands in the shoes of the insured, it is not a joint wrongdoer, either with the insured or with another insurer, because it does not commit the tort for which the claimant seeks to hold the insured liable. (39 C.A.4th 1338.)

(b) Both statutes also refer to "co-obligors." However, multiple insurers are not "co-obligors," as that term is used in the statutes, because their respective obligations arise out of separate contracts. (39 C.A.4th 1339.)

(c) Finally, C.C.P. 877.6 is limited to claims that are "based on comparative negligence or comparative fault." Because an action by an insurer against another for indemnity does not depend on "fault" concepts, the statute is inapplicable. These actions are based on an equitable apportionment of the contractual undertakings. (39 C.A.3d 1343.) (See Rohr Industries v. First State Ins. Co. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 1480, 1490, 69 C.R.2d 872 [because action for contribution by one insurer against another does not depend on "fault" concepts, C.C.P. 877.6 is inapplicable].)

These cases were distinguished in Mid-Century Ins. Exchange v. Daimler-Chrysler Corp. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 310, 112 C.R.2d 880. An individual was injured when a car's battery exploded in his face. Plaintiff, the car owner's insurer, paid its policy limits in return for a release of all claims. The injured individual then sued the car manufacturer and other defendants. That action was settled and, based on a finding that the settlement was made in good faith, the trial judge dismissed plaintiff insurer's claim for equitable indemnity. Held, affirmed. Under C.C.P. 877.6, a good faith settlement bars "any other tortfeasor" from asserting a claim against a settling tortfeasor. It is true that plaintiff, in its role as insurer, was not a tortfeasor or joint tortfeasor for purposes of C.C.P. 877.6. However, plaintiff was the insurer of an alleged tortfeasor, and under equitable subrogation principles, the insurer on its own settlement stepped into the shoes of its insured. Thus, plaintiff was entitled to no greater rights than the car owner and was subject to the same defenses that were assertable against that party. (93 C.A.4th 315.)

[§ 94] Claims Not Involving Contribution or Indemnity.

In Knowles v. Tehachapi Valley Hosp. Dist. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1083, 57 C.R.2d 192, plaintiffs brought a medical malpractice action against a doctor and a hospital district. After plaintiffs and the doctor stipulated to the entry of judgment against him, finding that he was negligent, plaintiffs argued that the matter of the doctor's negligence could not be relitigated in their suit against defendant hospital district, which resulted in a jury verdict in favor of the district. Specifically, plaintiffs argued that defendant could have requested a hearing, under C.C.P. 877.6, as to the good faith of the settlement, and that its failure to do so waived its right to a redetermination of this issue. The trial court rejected this argument, and entered judgment for defendant. Held, affirmed. "[T]he ultimate issue in a good faith hearing is the discharge of the right to indemnity or contribution. ... Such a hearing deals with likelihoods of liability and probabilities of outcomes, and is not a fair substitute for a jury determination focusing on the presence or absence of negligent acts or omissions." (49 C.A.4th 1090.)

[§ 95] In General.

A good faith settlement with a joint tortfeasor "shall reduce the claims against the others in the amount stipulated ... or in the amount of the consideration paid for it whichever is the greater." (C.C.P. 877(a), supra, §71.)

The reduction of an award pursuant to C.C.P. 877(a) is normally applied in one of two ways: (1) by the jury after evidence is submitted to it of the settlement with instructions to reduce the award by the amount paid in settlement; (2) by the court when the settlement is not presented to the jury. (Syverson v. Heitmann (1985) 171 C.A.3d 106, 111, 214 C.R. 581 [citing cases]; see May v. Miller (1991) 228 C.A.3d 404, 407, 409, 410, 411, 278 C.R. 341 [where jury was informed of settlement but not instructed to reduce award, trial judge had discretion to order setoff].)

A nonsettling defendant is entitled to a setoff for the settlement even where the trier of fact determines that the settling defendant was not at fault for the plaintiff's injuries. C.C.P. 877 does not require the settling defendant to prove that settling codefendants were, in fact, liable; it only requires proof that they were claimed to be liable for the same tort (see supra, §88). I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

d. Effect of Good Faith Settlement.

3. Offset to Judgment Against Nonsettling Tortfeasor.

bb. Valuation of Settlement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 96

[§ 96] Valuation of Settlement.

The consideration involved in the settlement must be valued in order to be offset against any judgment subsequently recovered against nonsettling tortfeasors. The burden of establishing the value of the settlement and, where necessary, of allocating that amount to particular types of damages rests on the settling parties. (Southern Calif. Gas Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1030, 232 C.R. 320; Arbuthnot v. Relocation Realty Service Corp. (1991) 227 C.A.3d 682, 690, 278 C.R. 135; Alcal Roofing & Insulation v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1121, 10 C.R.2d 844 [value of noncash consideration].)

Difficult questions of valuation and allocation may arise, as where there are multiple claims with different damages or where noncash consideration is included in the settlement. In Erreca's v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1475, 24 C.R.2d 156, plaintiffs brought an action against the developers of a residential subdivision for defective construction. The complaint was amended to add as defendants the parties responsible for the negligent grading and filling of the developed lots, i.e., the original owner of the property and the grader and soils engineer he hired to perform the work (the soils defendants). Plaintiffs then settled with the developers and various subcontractors, design professionals, and material suppliers for $ 6.5 million: $ 5,403,500 to be paid by the developers and $ 1,096,500 by the other contributors. In addition, the developers assigned to plaintiffs their claims for indemnity and contribution against the nonsettling soils defendants, and the settling parties agreed that the value of the assigned claims was $ 300,000. For purposes of allocation, the settlement severed the case into two parts, the soils claims and the nonsoils claims, and allocated $ 1.5 million of the settlement payment, plus the value of the assigned claims ($ 300,000), to the soils issues and the remainder of the settlement payment ($ 5 million) to the nonsoils issues, including construction and landscaping defect allegations.

After an ex parte hearing and referral of the matter to a special master, the trial judge ruled that the settlement was made in good faith. Specifically, the judge ruled that $ 300,000 was the correct valuation of the assigned claims and that $ 1.5 million should be allocated to the soils issues. However, based on a belief that the developers had contributed more to the settlement than their probable ultimate liability, the judge ruled that the credit to be given to the nonsettling soils defendants should be limited to $ 500,000. Held, this allocation was erroneous; the good faith order must be vacated unless modified to allow a $ 1.8 million credit to the nonsettling defendants.

(a) Allocation of settlement funds between damages issues.

(1) By allocating only $ 1.5 million out of the total settlement to the soils issues, the settling parties effectively reduced the credit to be accorded to the nonsettling soils defendants against any judgment in favor of plaintiffs that they might ultimately suffer. An evidentiary showing is required to justify such an allocation. (19 C.A.4th 1491.) Specifically, "[a] party seeking confirmation of a settlement must explain to the court and to all other parties, by declaration or other written form, the evidentiary basis for any allocations and valuations made, and must demonstrate that the allocation was reached in a sufficiently adversarial manner to justify the presumption that a reasonable valuation was reached." (19 C.A.4th 1495.)

(2) Here, there was evidence of a wide range of soils damages estimates and plaintiffs' settlement demands, thereby showing that the parties had an actual dispute to negotiate and giving rise to a presumption that their allocation was reached at arm's length and was reasonable. (19 C.A.4th 1495.) In concluding that the allocation was made in good faith, the trial judge correctly utilized his own experience, the evaluations of the attorneys, and expert opinion testimony. (19 C.A.4th 1495.)

(b) Valuation of assignment of indemnity rights.

(1) In addition to the $ 1.5 million cash consideration allocated for settlement of the soils claims, the settling parties set a value of $ 300,000 on the developers' assignment to plaintiffs of their indemnity and contribution rights as against the nonsettling defendants. An assignment of indemnity rights may constitute a valuable noncash consideration for settlement, but the value of the assignment must be supported by the evidence. (19 C.A.4th 1496.)

(2) Here, a declaration by the developers' attorney explained that (a) it was likely that the plaintiffs, as assignees, could prevail against the former owner of the property on a strict liability theory, but that because negligence would have to be proved as to the other soils defendants, prevailing on those claims would be more difficult; (b) the likelihood of collecting on a judgment on the assigned claims against any of the soils defendants was negligible because all were insolvent and had limited insurance, and the insurers were asserting coverage defenses; and (c) based on these considerations, the $ 300,000 evaluation represented a reasonable discount from the maximum $ 1.5 million entitlement to indemnity. This evidence supplied a factual basis for the valuation, based on estimated cost to prosecute the claims, probability of prevailing on them, and collection prospects for any judgment, and was sufficient to support a valuation of assignment rights that amounted to only 20% of the potential recovery. (19 C.A.4th 1497, 1499.)

(3) The valuation of the assignment rights was correctly made at the time of settlement, instead of after a trial took place. "If the time of setting a credit for an assignment of rights were delayed until after a trial took place, the credit to the nonsettling defendants would then be fixed at the amount the plaintiffs as assignees recovered at trial. Such a delayed valuation would serve to render the indemnity rights valueless, since they would be wiped out by a full award of credit. ... This would remove any incentive for the plaintiffs to accept or the settling defendants to offer such an assignment as settlement consideration." (19 C.A.4th 1498.)

(c) Credit to accorded nonsettling soils defendants for cash consideration. In this case, the settlement included an allocation to soils issues of $ 1.5 million cash consideration. The soils defendants argued that, under C.C.P. 877(a), the entire amount should be credited toward any future judgment that plaintiffs might obtain against them. However, the trial judge, reasoning that the developers' settlement payment represented an amount greater than their likely actual liability, allowed the soils defendants a credit of only $ 500,000. This was error. As stated in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357: " '[T]o preserve the incentive to settle which section 877 provides to injured plaintiffs, ... a plaintiff's recovery from nonsettling tortfeasors should be diminished. ... by the amount that the plaintiff has actually recovered in a good faith settlement, rather than by an amount measured by the settling tortfeasor's proportionate responsibility for the injury.' " (19 C.A.4th 1501.)

(d) Credit from settlement to be accorded nonsettling soils defendants for assignment of indemnity rights.

(1) The settlement consideration of $ 300,000 for assignment of indemnity rights is a little more problematic as far as credit is concerned. For example, once plaintiffs receive the settlement payment of $ 1.5 million from the developers, they may, as assignees of the developers' right to indemnity, seek to recover the same amount from the soils defendants. Also, it is difficult to determine whether the assignment represents the transfer of valuable consideration or whether the assigned right merely duplicates the plaintiff's existing rights against the nonsettling defendants. (19 C.A.4th 1503.)

(2) No confusion need arise if the assignment of indemnity rights is viewed as the transfer of a valuable asset in consideration of settlement, which should be treated like any other valuable asset for purposes of setting a credit. Here, in the parties' allocation of settlement consideration, the assignment of indemnity rights was placed in the soils issues category. Hence, the credit for the $ 300,000 value of those rights goes toward any future judgment plaintiffs may obtain on their direct soils claims against the soils defendants. If plaintiffs are able to successfully pursue their assignment of rights through litigation and judgment, they will have reaped a return on the valuable asset that they "bought"; at settlement. (19 C.A.4th 1503.)

(3) Any profit that plaintiffs obtain from the assignment should not be viewed as a double recovery. Because the nonsettling soils defendants must be accorded a credit in plaintiffs' direct action against them for the fair valuation of the assignment, later developments (such as any indemnity recovery) cannot affect the good faith of the settlement at the time it was approved. (19 C.A.4th 1504, footnote 9.) (See Aero-Crete v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 203, 209, 25 C.R.2d 804 [distinguishing Erreca and holding that valuation of assigned rights could wait until trial, where settling defendant's insolvency made valuation unnecessary to determination whether settlement was in good faith]; Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1685, 1714, 27 C.R.2d 62 [applying Erreca standards to determine value of assigned indemnity rights, but holding that evidence was insufficient to support valuation representing only .0025% of potential indemnity recovery]; L. C. Rudd & Sons v. Superior Court (1997) 52 C.A.4th 742, 750, 60 C.R.2d 703 [in construction defect case, nonsettling defendant, which was potentially liable for damages relating to "soils and foundation issues," was entitled to setoff of entire amount of settlement that related to these issues, without reduction for those "soils and foundation" damages attributable to design, for which nonsettling defendant was found not to be potentially liable].)

In Franklin Mint Co. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1550, 31 C.R.3d 319, plaintiffs in a malicious prosecution action entered into a settlement agreement with fewer than all defendants. The agreement provided for the payment of a stated sum into escrow to be distributed in charitable grants, and also ensured attendance of one of the settling defendants' officers as a witness at trial against the remaining defendants. The settling defendants moved for a good faith settlement determination under C.C.P. 877.6 but failed to assign a specific value to the consideration paid. The trial court, on declaring the settlement to be in good faith, fixed the value of the setoff for the nonsettling defendants as the amount paid into escrow. Held, reversed. Determination of the value of the consideration paid clearly required more than a mere presentation of the settlement terms. The settling parties failed in their obligation to set a value for the consideration, supported by admissible evidence. Similarly, the nonsettling defendants were required to do more than simply assert that the value was the full amount deposited in the escrow account. Therefore, in light of the noncash elements, the trial court had no evidence on which it could base a reasoned decision on the credit to which the nonsettling defendants were entitled. (130 C.A.4th 1559.)

In Garcia v. Duro Dyne Corp. (2007) 156 C.A.4th 92, 67 C.R.3d 100, plaintiff sued multiple defendants for asbestos-related injuries, but released 16 defendants for mutual cost waivers. After plaintiff obtained a judgment against a remaining manufacturer, the trial court offset the economic damages award by $ 4,000 for each cost waiver. Held, affirmed. Plaintiff had the burden of establishing the value of the cost waivers. After plaintiff declared that the waivers had no value and the manufacturer offered evidence that $ 6,000 was the approximate amount that each defendant incurred in costs, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining the amounts to be $ 4,000 each. (156 C.A.4th 106.)

[§ 97] Structured Settlement With Periodic Payments.

In Franck v. Polaris E-Z Go Div. of Textron (1984) 157 C.A.3d 1107, 204 C.R. 321, plaintiff was injured while riding in a snowmobile. She sued the driver of the machine, the driver's father, the seller, and the manufacturer. Damages were assessed by the judge at $ 300,000. Prior to trial, plaintiff settled with the driver and driver's father for a total of $ 215,000, embodied in a structured settlement calling for $ 25,000 down and $ 190,000 in future periodic payments over 17 years. The insurer of the driver's father made a $ 25,000 downpayment and bought an annuity contract for $ 75,000 to finance the future payments of $ 190,000. Plaintiff also settled with the seller for a lump sum payment of $ 2,500. Defendant manufacturer, which did not settle, contended that the $ 300,000 damage award should be reduced by the total amount to be paid under the settlement agreement--$ 217,500, consisting of $ 2,500 cash from the seller, $ 25,000 cash from the driver and the driver's father, and $ 190,000 in future payments. Plaintiff's position was that the award should be reduced only by the amount of cash paid and the present cash value or cost of future payments--$ 102,500, consisting of $ 2,500 cash from the seller, $ 25,000 cash from the driver's father, and the $ 75,000 premium for the annuity. The trial judge decided in favor of defendant manufacturer. Held, reversed.

(a) A policy consideration favored in the law--maximization of recovery to the plaintiff to the extent that the fault of others has contributed to his or her injury--supports plaintiff's position.

(1) She received judgment for $ 300,000; if the award is discounted by the total amount of future payments, she will have received at the end of the annuity period a total amount of money worth less than the amount to which she is now entitled. Under defendant's approach, if a plaintiff obtains a structured settlement for future payments in an amount equal to the judgment award, a nonsettling tortfeasor would be completely relieved of liability and the plaintiff would have only a settlement worth much less than the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled at the time of judgment. (157 C.A.3d 1117.)

(2) Defendant argues that plaintiff will receive a tax "windfall" because the future payments will not be subject to federal income taxation, while investment of a lump sum award would produce taxable income. This consideration is irrelevant. Tax benefits are a matter of legislative policy, and a plaintiff is entitled to negotiate a settlement that takes advantage of tax benefits legally available. Moreover, no one can predict the course of legislation in this area over the next 17 years. (157 C.A.3d 1118.)

(b) A second policy consideration supported in the law--encouragement of settlement--also supports plaintiff's position.

(1) Structured settlements have advantages for both plaintiffs and defendants. "Plaintiffs receive tax-free periodic income over a period of time, thereby preventing recoveries from being squandered and ensuring that money is received in the future at times when it is actually needed. Defendants, on the other hand, are able to offer plaintiffs large settlements at a relatively small up-front cost by spreading payments out over a period of years through an annuity." (157 C.A.3d 1119.)

(2) Defendant's position would discourage structured settlements in multiple defendant cases. "Few plaintiffs would be willing to enter into structured settlements unless they could obtain future payments large enough to cover the possibility of a nonsettling defendant being relieved of paying damages. The large amounts demanded by plaintiffs would in turn discourage defendants from settling. Using tax considerations to reduce a nonsettling defendant's liability would further discourage structured settlements by nullifying their tax advantage. Moreover, [defendant's] interpretation of the law would considerably lessen the incentive for nonsettling defendants to settle. If a plaintiff settles with other defendants for large future payments, a nonsettling defendant will be more willing to go to trial on the chance that the court will find damages in an amount equal to or less than the amount of future payments under the settlement." (157 C.A.3d 1119.)

(c) Evenhandedness in treatment of damages is also an important consideration. A plaintiff who recovers for future pecuniary loss must take an award reduced to its present cash value. But under defendant's theory, the nonsettling defendant would immediately receive the benefit of the full amount of future payments rather than the present cash value. (157 C.A.3d 1120.)

(d) Defendant's contention that its position is mandated by the language of C.C.P. 877 is not persuasive. The statute calls for a reduction of the award by "the amount stipulated by the release" or "the amount of the consideration paid for it," whichever is greater; and defendant asserts that structured settlements would actually be "paid for" by annuity premiums. But the statute was enacted 16 years before the first known structured settlement in California, and there is no indication that the Legislature foresaw that innovation. "We are persuaded that when enacted this provision was intended to prevent fraud and double recovery by plaintiffs. A plaintiff and a settling defendant might agree to state an amount in the settlement agreement less than that actually paid by the defendant. If an award against a nonsettling defendant is only reduced by the amount stated in the agreement, plaintiff would receive a double recovery. The language of Section 877 protects a nonsettling defendant from having the award reduced by an amount less than that stipulated in the agreement when, for whatever reason, a settling defendant pays less than the amount stipulated." (157 C.A.3d 1120.) (On requirements for contracts for transfer of structured settlement payment rights, see Ins.C. 10134 et seq.)

[§ 98] Settlement Offsetting Entire Judgment.

In Syverson v. Heitmann (1985) 171 C.A.3d 106, 214 C.R. 581, plaintiff sued defendant H for personal injuries and received a verdict and judgment for $ 100,000. Prior to trial, plaintiff had settled with other codefendants for $ 100,000. On appeal, defendant contended that, in view of the offset, plaintiff was not entitled to receive any of the damages awarded, and was therefore not a prevailing party entitled to costs. Held, the judgment should be modified, but plaintiff was entitled to costs.

(a) Plaintiff contended that the proper method of applying the offset was (1) entry of the judgment in the full amount, and (2) making an acknowledgment of partial satisfaction of judgment under C.C.P. 724.110, 724.120 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §385). Authorities from other jurisdictions support this procedure, but in each of the cases, the fact of settlement was not raised prior to judgment. (171 C.A.3d 111, 112.)

(b) In the present case, the parties stipulated to the fact and amount of the settlement before the entry of judgment. And C.C.P. 877 requires that the judgment be reduced by amounts paid by settling tortfeasors. Thus, "[w]here a plaintiff's settlement completely offsets the damages assessed against a nonsettling joint tortfeasor, it reduces the judgment to zero by operation of law." (171 C.A.3d 110.)

(c) Despite the reduction of the judgment to zero, plaintiff obtained a favorable verdict and judgment on liability, and was therefore the prevailing party entitled to costs. (171 C.A.3d 112; on recovery of costs by prevailing party, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §89 et seq.)

After trial, the jury found that the owner and the contractor each breached the contract and awarded $ 32,551 to the contractor and $ 19,800 to the nonsettling owner. The trial court offset the settlement amount against the contractor's award, yielding zero, and entered judgment of $ 19,800 for the owner. Held, reversed. The proper procedure was to offset the awards, yielding $ 12,751 owed to the contractor, and then apply the settlement credit, yielding a judgment of nothing for each party. (161 C.A.4th 1132, distinguishing Syverson v. Heitmann (1985) 171 C.A.3d 106, 214 C.R. 581, text, p. 189.)

- 3. Offset to Judgment Against Nonsettling Tortfeasor.
 - ee. Noneconomic Damages Under Proposition 51.

[§ 99] Noneconomic Damages Under Proposition 51.

Under Proposition 51, a tort defendant has no joint liability for noneconomic damages. (C.C. 1431.2, supra, §53.) As held in Espinoza v. Machonga (1992) 9 C.A.4th 268, 11 C.R.2d 498, this means that where such a defendant makes a settlement with the plaintiff, a nonsettling codefendant who sustains a money judgment is entitled to a setoff only for the portion of the settlement attributable to economic damages, and is solely responsible for his or her share of the noneconomic damages. To subject the portion of the settlement attributable to noneconomic damages to setoff would, in effect, cause settlement money to be treated as if it were paid as a joint liability. (9 C.A.4th 276.) It is thus necessary to determine the amount of the settlement attributable to economic damages. The method for doing so is to calculate the percentage of the judgment attributable to economic damages in relationship to the entire award, apply that percentage to the settlement amount to determine the portion of the settlement attributable to economic damages, and then reduce the amount of the judgment by the economic damages portion of the settlement. (12 C.A.4th 277.)

The Espinoza rule and formula have been frequently applied. (See Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1685, 1706, 27 C.R.2d 62 [implied approval of Espinoza calculation]; Hoch v. Allied-Signal (1994) 24 C.A.4th 48, 62, 29 C.R.2d 615 [in automobile accident case, one defendant settled for $ 382,500 and jury awarded noneconomic damages of $ 500,000; nonsettling defendant was not entitled to setoff]; Greathouse v. Amcord (1995) 35 C.A.4th 831, 837, 41 C.R.2d 561 [calculation of setoff must be based on percentages of economic and noneconomic damages reflected in jury verdict against nonsettling defendant, not on terms of settlement agreements with other defendants]; Poire v. C.L. Peck/Jones Bros. Const. Corp. (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1832, 1841, 46 C.R.2d 631, supra, §95 [defendant was entitled to setoff of 70.88% of the $ 45,000 settlement proceeds ($ 31,896) where percentage of jury's award of total damages ($ 285,000) attributable to economic damages ($ 202,000) was 70.88%]; Ehret v. Congoleum Corp. (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1308, 1316, 87 C.R.2d 363 [undifferentiated settlement must be apportioned between economic and noneconomic damages (so that setoff applies only to economic damages), and under Espinoza formula, percentage of economic damages in jury verdict must be applied to determined percentage of settlement to be offset; burden of proving different allocation is on plaintiff]; Wilson v. John Crane (2000) 81 C.A.4th 847, 859, 97 C.R.2d 240 [Espinoza formula applied to determine allowable amount to be credited against judgment, based on plaintiffs' settlements with other defendants].)

The right to this reduction in the setoff may be waived. In Conrad v. Ball Corp. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 439, 29 C.R.2d 441, plaintiff, who was injured when a bottle containing apple juice collapsed in her hand, brought an action against the manufacturer of the bottle, the bottler, and the seller. Plaintiff settled with the bottler and seller for $ 50,000 and obtained a special verdict against defendant manufacturer for $ 275,000. The trial judge reduced the judgment by the $ 50,000 settlement. Held, this was error; generally, only the amount of the settlement attributable to economic damages can be offset, but under the circumstances here, defendant waived the right to any offset.

(a) Although the Espinoza method is correct, it cannot be applied here because the special verdict did not specify economic and noneconomic damages. Plaintiff suggested that this problem be resolved by assuming that the jury awarded the full amount of economic damages that she claimed at trial, i.e., $ 48,446, and use this amount in an Espinoza calculation. However, this is not a satisfactory solution because it requires wholly unsupported speculation as to the jury's decision-making process. (24 C.A.4th 444.)

(b) The correct solution in this case is to hold that defendant waived any right to an offset. As the party seeking an offset, defendant had the burden of establishing the facts essential to it. And it could have established such facts by proposing a special verdict that differentiated between economic and noneconomic damages. Its failure to do so constitutes a wavier. (24 C.A.4th 444.)

[§ 100] Nature and Types.

A "sliding scale recovery agreement" is "an agreement or covenant between a plaintiff or plaintiffs and one or more, but not all, alleged tortfeasor defendants, which limits the liability of the agreeing tortfeasor defendants to an amount which is dependent upon the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to recover from the nonagreeing defendant or defendants." This definition includes, but is not limited to, agreements within the C.C.P. 877 and "agreements in the form of a loan from the agreeing tortfeasor defendant or defendants to the plaintiff or plaintiffs which is repayable in whole or in part from the recovery against the nonagreeing tortfeasor defendant or defendants." (C.C.P. 877.5(b).) Liability is "usually in some inverse ratio to the amount of recovery which the plaintiff is able to make against the nonagreeing defendant or defendants." (Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 869, footnote 9, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124, infra, §102; see *Hackett v. Sliding scale agreements are sometimes termed "Mary Carter" agreements, a term derived from one of the earliest cases involving such an agreement. (Abbott Ford v. Superior Court, supra.)

These agreements have been the subject of considerable commentary. (See Abbott Ford v. Superior Court, supra, 43 C.3d 869, footnote 10, listing law review articles; 19 *Loyola L.A. L. 2. Notice and Disclosure.

[§ 101] Notice and Disclosure.

(1) Notice of Intent To Make Agreement. No sliding scale recovery agreement is effective "unless a notice of intent to enter into an agreement has been served on all nonsignatory alleged defendant tortfeasors." The notice must be given at least 72 hours prior to entering into the agreement unless, on a showing of good cause, the court allows a shorter time. (C.C.P. 877.5(c)) [further providing that failure to comply with notice requirement does not constitute good cause to delay commencement of trial.]

(2) Disclosure to Court. The parties to a sliding scale agreement or covenant must "promptly inform the court in which the action is pending" of the existence of the agreement or covenant and its terms and provisions. (C.C.P. 877.5(a)(1).)

(3) Disclosure to Jury. If the action is tried before a jury, and a defendant party to a sliding scale agreement or covenant is called as a witness at trial, the court must, on motion of a party, disclose to the jury the existence and content of the agreement or covenant, "unless the court finds that such disclosure will create substantial danger of undue prejudice, of confusing the issues, or of misleading the jury." (C.C.P. 877.5(a)(2).) However, the disclosure required "shall be no more than necessary to inform the jury of the possibility that the agreement may bias the testimony of the witness." (4) Disclosure to Other Parties. A nonsettling defendant who disputes the good faith of a confidential sliding scale agreement is entitled to disclosure of its terms. (See J. Allen Radford Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1418, 1423, 265 C.R. 535, supra, §85.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

4. Settlement With Fewer Than All Tortfeasors.

e. Sliding Scale Agreements.

3. Good Faith Requirement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 102

[§ 102] Good Faith Requirement.

In Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124, the court held that a sliding scale agreement is valid if it meets the test of good faith under the standards set forth in Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, supra, §79. One of several defendants in a personal injury action entered a sliding scale agreement with plaintiffs. Under the terms of the agreement, the settling defendant's insurer guaranteed specified minimum recoveries from the nonsettling defendants and agreed to pay any balance short of those amounts, agreed to make no-interest loans to plaintiffs and their attorneys during the litigation, and agreed to pay a specified sum outright if the agreement was found invalid, and plaintiffs agreed not to settle with the other defendants without that insurer's consent. The settling defendant made a motion under C.C.P. 877.6 for an order declaring the agreement to be in good faith and dismissing all claims for contribution or comparative indemnity. The trial judge denied the motion, but the Court of Appeal, on an application for mandamus, concluded that the agreement was a good faith settlement as a matter of law. The Supreme Court granted a hearing and remanded the matter to the Court of Appeal to consider whether the Tech-Bilt standards should be applied. The Court of Appeal then concluded that the Tech-Bilt standards did apply to sliding scale agreements, and that the agreement here satisfied those standards as a matter of law. The Supreme Court granted review, but while the matter was pending, the case was fully settled. Nevertheless, because of the importance of the issue, the Supreme Court retained and decided the technically moot case. (43 C.3d 868.) Thus, the opinion of the Supreme Court does not determine the rights of the plaintiffs and defendants in the litigation, but sets forth the principles under which a sliding scale settlement agreement may meet the good faith requirement.

(a) Nature of problem. The majority of out-of-state decisions have declined to condemn or condone these agreements categorically, and this cautious approach is appropriate for a number of reasons:

(1) The variety of contractual arrangements is enormous. "Although in all such agreements the settling defendant's ultimate liability to the plaintiff is dependent, at least in part, on the amount of money which the plaintiff recovers from the nonsettling defendants, there are a virtually unlimited number of additional provisions that may be included in such agreements--for example, provisions which mandate secrecy, restrict settlement with the remaining defendants, or provide various forms of financing for the plaintiff's action--that will often substantially affect the operation and validity of the agreements." (43 C.3d 870.)

(2) The content and effect of the sliding scale clause itself and the factual background frequently vary from case to case. (a) In some cases, the clause may be structured so that the settling party may ultimately bear no liability to the plaintiff. (b) In other cases, the settling party may make a substantial noncontingent payment to the plaintiff, and the sliding scale element may simply provide a supplemental guaranty of some additional recovery. (c) In some cases, the guaranty figure may be for an amount equal or close to the plaintiff's total damages; in others, the guaranty figure may represent only a relatively small share of the plaintiff's damages. (d) In some cases, the settling defendant who may potentially be relieved of all liability may be clearly the most culpable of all the defendants; in others, the sliding scale agreement may be entered into by only peripherally involved defendants in order to avoid a potentially lengthy and costly suit. (e) In some cases, the agreement may be made in the early stages of negotiation without regard to the willingness of other defendants to engage in settlement negotiations, while in others, it may be only a last resort after one or more defendants unreasonably refuse to make a settlement offer commensurate with their fair share of responsibility. (43 C.3d 870.)

(3) The agreements may have a variety of effects at different stages of the litigation process (discovery, settlement, trial or appeal). The potential problems may call for one remedy in one context (e.g., disclosure of the agreement to the nonagreeing parties or to the jury), and another remedy in another context (e.g., invalidation of a specific provision or the entire agreement). (43 C.3d 871.)

Thus, "analysis requires close attention to the specific provisions of the agreement itself, the factual setting in which the agreement is entered into, and the agreement's effect on the particular aspect of the judicial process at issue." (43 C.3d 871.)

(b) Tech-Bilt standards.

(1) The two major goals of C.C.P. 877 and 877.6 are equitable sharing of costs among the parties at fault and encouragement of settlements. There is no priority to these objectives; they must be harmonized. (43 C.3d 872, and footnote 15.) Tech-Bilt recognized that the "good faith" requirement is the key to harmonization (43 C.3d 873), and set forth the factors to be taken into account (43 C.3d 874).

(2) "As Tech-Bilt emphasizes, of course, a 'good faith' settlement does not call for perfect or even nearly perfect apportionment of liability. In order to encourage settlement, it is quite proper for a settling defendant to pay less than his proportionate share of the anticipated damages. What is required is simply that the settlement not be grossly disproportionate to the settlor's fair share." (43 C.3d 874.)

(c) Tech-Bilt standards apply to sliding scale agreements. "Neither section 877 nor section 877.6 exempts sliding scale agreements from its 'good faith' requirement, and nothing in section 877.5 ...--a provision which was enacted to protect against the unfair consequences that may flow from undisclosed sliding scale agreements--indicates that these agreements need not meet the generally applicable good faith standard." (43 C.3d 875.)

(d) Contention that loss unfairly apportioned.

(1) The nonsettling defendants argue that sliding scale agreements invariably thwart the goal of fair apportionment because, by definition, the agreement is one in which the settling defendant's final out-of-pocket payment to the plaintiff is dependent on the amount the plaintiff recovers from the remaining defendants, and that in a case such as this, the nonsettling defendants could be required to bear all of the damages, while the settling defendant--who may be the most culpable tortfeasor--would pay nothing. (43 C.3d 876.) But some sliding scale agreements do require the settling defendant to make an outright payment, and the diverse situations call for analysis of the particular agreement. (43 C.3d 877.)

(2) A settlement found to be in good faith has two interrelated consequences: (a) It discharges the settling tortfeasor from liability for contribution or indemnity, and (b) it reduces the plaintiff's claims against the other defendants by "the amount of consideration paid for it." "Although past cases have often overlooked the interrelationship of these two features ... , in our view the ultimate analysis of the effect of the sliding scale agreement resolves itself to a consideration of fairness to the nonsettling defendants. If a court finds that a settling defendant, by entering into a sliding scale agreement, has realistically paid a 'consideration' that is within its Tech-Bilt 'ballpark,' and if the nonsettling defendants obtain a reduction in the plaintiff's claims against them in an amount equal to that consideration, the statutory fair apportionment objective should be satisfied." (43 C.3d 877.)

(3) "Accordingly, the analysis of whether a sliding scale agreement conflicts with the fair apportionment objective lies in 'the amount of consideration' which is attributed to the settling defendant as the 'payment' for his release from liability by entering into the sliding scale agreement. Since the sliding scale agreement is given by the settling defendant in exchange for the plaintiff's release and the immunity from contribution or indemnity from the claims of the nonsettling cotortfeasors, we should assume the exchange is of equivalents. If we focus, then, not on what the settling defendant gave up, but rather what he received, then we have a simple application of the Tech-Bilt rules. This is so because one of the principal difficulties in this area has been the attempt to arrive at an accurate evaluation of the 'price' or 'consideration' which has been paid by a settling defendant who enters into a sliding scale arrangement." (43 C.3d 878.)

(4) The nonsettling defendants contend that the "consideration paid" should be calculated solely by reference to the amount of any noncontingent payment; the settling defendant, pointing to its guaranty, contends that the consideration paid should be fixed at the maximum possible payment ($ 3 million). The "economic reality" lies between these two extreme positions. A guaranty agreement, even if totally contingent, is not completely cost-free, and the cost or price of such an agreement is not equal to the maximum possible payment. (43 C.3d 878.)

(5) The court should not be required to determine the actual value of the agreement by the use of actuarial or other valuation methods; the parties are in the best position to place a monetary figure on its value, and should have the burden of establishing it. (43 C.3d 879.) In many cases, negotiations will have included a traditional "straight" settlement, and this background will give the settling parties a vantage point in declaring the agreement's value. And in view of the conflicting interests of the plaintiff and settling defendant, "requiring a joint valuation by the plaintiff and the settling defendant should generally produce a reasonable valuation." (43 C.3d 879.) Once the parties to the agreement have declared its value, a nonsettling defendant may either (a) accept that value and attempt to show lack of good faith "because the assigned value is not within the settling defendant's Tech-Bilt ballpark," or (b) attempt to prove that the assigned value is too low and that a greater reduction in the plaintiff's claims against the remaining defendants is actually warranted. (43 C.3d 879.) Because the settling parties in the present case placed no value on the agreement, the ordinary result on review (if the case had not been settled) would be to remand the matter to the trial court for further consideration of this issue. (43 C.3d 880.)

(e) Contention that subsequent settlements are discouraged.

(1) The nonsettling defendants contend that the typical "veto power" provision in the present agreement, preventing settlement with other defendants except with consent of the settling defendant, interferes with the ability of the nonsettling defendants to settle. This contention has some merit. "An open-ended veto provision conflicts with the public policy which favors the full settlement of litigation and may frequently result in unnecessary trials. Accordingly, we conclude that to be valid and enforceable, such a veto provision must, by its terms, be confined only to those subsequent settlements that will require the earlier settling defendant to bear more than its fair 'ballpark' share of damages." (43 C.3d 883.)

(2) The nonsettling defendants further contend that, even in the absence of an express veto provision, sliding scale agreements impair subsequent settlements and should be found not in good faith for that reason. It is true that some sliding scale agreements--by establishing a high guaranty figure and by mandating that the proceeds of a subsequent settlement up to the figure be credited in toto to the earlier settling defendant--may eliminate any incentive a plaintiff has to settle with the remaining defendants within a range commensurate with their fair share of responsibility. "We do not decide at this time whether the potential antisettlement effect of such an agreement is sufficient, in itself, to warrant a finding that the agreement is not a good faith settlement. ... We do note, however, that settling parties may be able to obviate such a challenge in the future by providing some mechanism for the sharing of subsequent settlement proceeds between the earlier settling defendant and the plaintiff, thereby assuring that the plaintiff retains at least some incentive to entertain reasonable settlement offers from the remaining defendants." (43 C.3d 884.)

(f) Effect of provision for no-interest loan. This provision has the beneficial effect of providing injured victims with a speedy source of revenue, and the value of such a loan will realistically be considered by the parties in arriving at the agreement's value. (43 C.3d 885.)

(g) Conclusion. "In sum, we conclude: (1) that Tech-Bilt's good faith standard applies to sliding scale agreements; (2) that to satisfy the statutory objective of a fair apportionment of loss, (i) the 'consideration' paid by a defendant who enters into a sliding scale agreement must fall within the Tech-Bilt 'ballpark,' and (ii) the plaintiffs' claims against the remaining defendants must be reduced by the amount of the 'consideration paid' by the settling defendant; (3) that any unreasonable or bad faith conduct of the nonsettling defendants which impeded the settlement process and led to the sliding scale agreement may be taken into account in determining whether the agreement satisfies the 'ballpark' standard; and (4) that any provision which purports to give a settling defendant a 'veto' over subsequent settlements is valid only if it is limited to settlements which would leave the earlier settling defendant to bear more than its fair share of liability for the plaintiff's damages." (43 C.3d 887.)

In United Services Auto. Assn. v. Superior Court (2001) 93 C.A.4th 633, 113 C.R.2d 328, the consideration paid for a sliding scale settlement agreement consisted of a noncontingent $ 1 million and an interest-free loan of $ 3.5 million repayable only upon the contingency of its recovery from the nonsettling tortfeasor. Nevertheless, the settlement agreement provided that the value to be placed on all the payments of $ 4.5 million, for the purpose of establishing the credit to which the nonsettling defendant would be entitled, was only $ 1 million. In effect the settling parties agreed that the $ 3.5 million loan had no value to the settling plaintiffs. Held, the trial court erred in finding the settlement was made in good faith. The valuation placed on the loan by the settling parties failed to comply with the equitable principles governing good faith settlements under Abbot Ford. (93 C.A.4th 640.) (See Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1337, 45 C.R.2d 581, supra, §81 [applying principles derived from Abbot Ford in determining good faith of sliding scale settlement between plaintiff and party against whom plaintiff had no viable claim]; Alcala Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1308, 1312, 57 C.R.2d 349 [sliding scale settlement otherwise within Tech-Bilt standards is not invalidated solely because it provides for continued participation in trial by settling defendants]; 16 *Pepperdine L. 5. Contribution.

a. Development of Law.

[§ 103] Development of Law.

At common law, there is no right of contribution between persons jointly or severally liable in tort, i.e., among joint, concurrent, or successive tortfeasors. Hence, one who is sued may be forced to pay the entire claim, with the others wholly absolved. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §386; Rest., Restitution §102 [no contribution among jointly or severally liable tortfeasors]; 60 A.L.R.2d 1366 [contribution between negligent tortfeasors at common law].) This was formerly the California law. (See Adams v. White Bus Line (1921) 184 C. 710, 712, 195 P. 389; Smith v. Fall River Joint Union High School Dist. (1934) 1 C.2d 331, 334, 34 P.2d 994; Salter v. Lombardi (1931) 116 C.A. 602, 604, 3 P.2d 38; 18 Cal. L. Rev. 522; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 546, 612, 702; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 413, 425; 9 Hastings L. J. 180.)

This rule was severely criticized. (See 54 Harv. L. Rev. 1170; 23 Hastings L. J. 1612 [Nevada legislation]; 41 So. Cal. L. Rev. 728 [suggested ways to allocate loss].) The Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act was adopted in 1939. (See 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 185 [1955 revision of Act]; 34 A.L.R.2d 1107 [cases under uniform act].) The principal objections to the common law rule were stated in the Commissioner's Prefatory Note to the 1939 Uniform Act: "Most joint and several tort liability results from inadvertently caused damage, although it is almost impossible to draw a practical line between torts of inadvertence and others. It is, then, somewhat ironic to note that at common law contribution is denied among all tortfeasors and is allowed as a matter of course to one who has deliberately chosen to violate a contractual obligation undertaken with others. And this situation is aggravated by the common-law view that the injured person is 'lord of his action' and, when injured by the joint and several tort of two or more, may place the loss where and how he sees fit." (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 188.)

Contribution has been permitted in admiralty (see 45 Cal. L. Rev. 304) and under the Federal Tort Claims Act (see United States v. Yellow Cab Co. (1951) 340 U.S. 543, 71 S.Ct. 399, 95 L.Ed. 523).

Either by statute or judicial decision, a considerable number of states came to recognize the principle of contribution. (See 9 Hastings L. J. 181; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §10.2; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 865 [measure of contribution where judgments in different amounts have been rendered]; 72 A.L.R.2d 1298 [same]; 34 A.L.R.3d 1374 [effect of release on right to contribution]; 100 A.L.R.5th 409 [right to contribution of owner, operator, maintainer, repairer, or installer of automatic passenger elevator in action by elevator user].) In 1957, a right to contribution was statutorily granted in California. (See C.C.P. 875 et seq., infra, §105.)

Recognition of principle: See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §10.2.

(New) Municipal contribution to state liability for flood damage: Water C. 8307, added in 2007, provides that, where property damage is caused by a flood, a city or county may be required to contribute its fair and reasonable share to the extent that the city or county has increased the state's exposure to liability for that damage by unreasonably approving new development in a previously undeveloped area that is protected by a state flood control project. Contribution is not required if the city or county meets specified requirements. (Water C. 8307(a).) Also, the city or county is not required to contribute unless an action has been filed against the state asserting liability for the damage. There is no contribution requirement if the state settles the claims against it without providing the city or county with an opportunity to participate in settlement negotiations. (Water C. 8307(b).)

[§ 104] Restatement.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, when two or more persons are or may be liable for the same harm and one of them discharges the liability of another by settlement or discharge of judgment, the person discharging the liability is entitled to recover contribution from the other, unless the other previously had a valid settlement and release from the plaintiff. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §23(a).)

A person entitled to recover contribution may recover no more than the amount paid to the plaintiff in excess of the person's comparative share of responsibility. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §23(b); on comparative responsibility under Restatement generally, see infra, §1328.)

A person who has a right of indemnity against another does not have a right of contribution against the other person and is not subject to liability for contribution to that person. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §23(c); on indemnity under Restatement, see infra, §113.) A person may seek both indemnity and contribution as alternative theories of recovery, but may not recover under both theories. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §23, Comment d.)

A person otherwise entitled to contribution is not precluded from receiving contribution by the fact that he or she is liable for an intentional tort. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §23, Comment l.)

c. Contribution Statute.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 105

[§ 105] Contribution Statute.

(1) Enactment. In 1957, a State Bar-sponsored measure, differing substantially from the Uniform Act (supra, §103), was adopted. The statute is entitled "Releases From and Contribution Among Joint Tortfeasors." (C.C.P. 875 et seq.) (See Augustus v. Bean (1961) 56 C.2d 270, 272, 14 C.R. 641, 363 P.2d 873 [statute was applicable where judgment was recovered after effective date, though plaintiff's injury occurred before that date]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§386, 387; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Indemnity, Contribution and Setoff, Chap. 4; 9 Hastings L. J. 180; 72 A.L.R.4th 231 [right of initial tortfeasor to contribution from medical attendant aggravating injury or causing new injury]; for contribution among joint debtors other than tortfeasors, see C.C.P. 881 et seq., 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §479 et seq.)

(2) Tortfeasor Judgment Debtor's Right of Contribution. A right of contribution exists among two or more defendants to a tort action "[w]here a money judgment has been rendered jointly" against them. (C.C.P. 875(a); on amount of contribution, see infra, §§109, 110.) The statute applies to a judgment obtained in an action brought in another state. (Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Teledyne Industries (1975) 53 C.A.3d 693, 699, 126 C.R. 455.)

(3) Subrogation of Insurer. A liability insurer "who by payment has discharged the liability of a tortfeasor judgment debtor" is subrogated to that tortfeasor's right of contribution. (C.C.P. 875(e).) (On whether this requires payment of the entire amount of the judgment and not merely one tortfeasor's pro rata share, see 9 Hastings L. J. 189; cf. Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §1(e) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 195) [insurer subrogated if it "has discharged in full or in part the liability of a tortfeasor and has thereby discharged in full its obligation as insurer"].) C.C.P. 875(e) is limited to an insurer that pays under its policy. An insurance agent who is held liable for breach of a contract to procure insurance is not entitled to contribution. (Delta Mfg. Co. v. Jones (1977) 69 C.A.3d 428, 432, 138 C.R. 40.)

(4) Discharge of Contribution Obligation by Good Faith Settlement. To encourage settlement, the statute provides that a good faith release, dismissal, or covenant not to sue or enforce judgment (see supra, §70 et seq.) "shall discharge the tortfeasor to whom it is given from all liability for any contribution to any other tortfeasors." (C.C.P. 877(b), supra, §71; see Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §4(b) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 264) [similar]; 6 A.L.R.5th 883 [release of one joint tortfeasor as discharging liability of others under Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act and similar statutes].) But the consideration received will reduce the injured person's claims against the others. (

(5) Limitations on Contribution Right. The contribution right is subject to the following limitations:

(a) The plaintiff still has the right "to satisfy a judgment in full as against any tortfeasor judgment debtor." (C.C.P. 875(g).)

(b) A wilful wrongdoer has no right of contribution. (C.C.P. 875(d), infra, §107.)

(c) There is no right of contribution where one tortfeasor judgment debtor is entitled to indemnity from another. (C.C.P. 875(f), infra, §106.)

(d) There is no right of contribution where the liability of the person from whom contribution is sought is merely imputed by statute. (Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. Dolan (1972) 27 C.A.3d 534, 540, 104 C.R. 131, infra, §1258.)

(6) Significance of Contribution Remedy. Typically, the loss sharing claims of multiple tortfeasors are resolved by a comparative indemnification cross-complaint in the underlying action, instead of by a postjudgment claim for contribution under the statute. (Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Lucky Stores (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1372, 1379, 14 C.R.2d 673, infra, §106; on comparative indemnity generally, see infra, §116.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

5. Contribution.

d. No Contribution Where Entitlement to Indemnity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 106

[§ 106] No Contribution Where Entitlement to Indemnity.

There is no right of contribution where one tortfeasor judgment debtor is entitled to indemnity from another. (C.C.P. 875(f); see Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §1(f) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 195) [similar]; Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. v. Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. (2004) 123 C.A.4th 278, 288, 20 C.R.3d 128 [indemnity provision in subcontractor's contract with general contractor precluded subcontractor's insurer from recovering contribution from general contractor's insurer respecting defense and settlement expenses that were incurred in defending suit against general contractor by subcontractor's injured employee]; on indemnity generally, see infra, §112 et seq.)

Where an attempt to obtain indemnification proves unsuccessful, however, contribution may still be available. In Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Lucky Stores (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1372, 14 C.R.2d 673, a motorcyclist filed an action against a grocery store chain that owned a market and a bottling company alleging that the market directed the bottling company to park its delivery truck in an illegal zone, thereby preventing an approaching driver from seeing the motorcycle, with which the driver collided. The bottling company cross-complained against grocery store chain for partial equitable indemnity for any sum it was required to pay in excess of its proportionate share of liability. The trial judge granted the grocery store chain's motion for summary judgment on this cross-complaint on the ground that the bottling company's liability arising from illegally parking its truck could not be placed on the grocery store chain. In the motorcyclist's action, the jury returned a verdict against both defendants, and the bottling company paid the entire judgment. The bottling company then commenced this action seeking contribution from the grocery store chain. Held, summary judgment for the bottling company affirmed.

(a) The bottling company's cross-complaint was an assertion of a claim for partial equitable indemnity under American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357. On the other hand, its action for contribution seeks to enforce an entirely different right, i.e., a statutory right that distributes the loss equally among all tortfeasor judgment debtors, instead of on the basis of comparative fault. And American Motorcycle recognized that the statutory contribution remedy was separate and distinct from the judicially created doctrine of comparative indemnification. (11 C.A.4th 1378.)

(b) The loss sharing claims of multiple tortfeasors are typically resolved by a comparative indemnification cross-complaint in the underlying action, rather than by a postjudgment claim for contribution. "However, it does not follow that a defendant is limited to such procedure against its codefendant; nor do we see any reason to conclude that one defendant who unsuccessfully seeks indemnification is prohibited from thereafter seeking contribution if the statutory preconditions are met. The statute prohibits contribution only if a right to indemnity has been established. (Code Civ. Proc. §875, subd. (f).) In other words, a defendant cannot recover under both procedures, but there is no reason to deny a right to at least one of them." (11 C.A.4th 1379.)

(c) The grocery store chain argued that the finality of the judgment denying the bottling company's right to indemnity precludes it from now asserting a claim for contribution. This argument misapprehends the doctrine of res judicata. That doctrine does not apply when new rights have accrued since the rendition of the former judgment, and that is the situation here. When the bottling company prosecuted and lost its claim for partial indemnity on the basis of comparative fault, a claim for contribution could not have been brought. That right did not accrue until a money judgment had been rendered jointly against both the grocery store chain and the bottling company, and the bottling company had discharged more than its pro rata share of that judgment. Thus, the bottling company's "postjudgment statutory claim for contribution was an entirely new and different claim which was unaffected by the unsuccessful attempt to establish a right to comparative or equitable indemnification." (11 C.A.4th 1380.)

A similar result was reached in Huntington Beach v. Westminster (1997) 57 C.A.4th 220, 66 C.R.2d 826. City H responded to a report of a robbery in progress at a local restaurant. In accordance with a mutual assistance pact, officers from city W were also sent to the restaurant. At the crime scene, an officer from city H assumed control, and requested a canine unit. An officer from city W responded, but when the police dog was released, it ran through the area believed to be a possible hiding place of the suspects and bit one of the robbery victims. Without admitting fault, the cities settled the victim's suit, and the court entered judgment in accordance with the stipulated settlement, finding both cities jointly and severally liable. When the cities tried their indemnity cross-complaints, the judge found no fault on the part of either city, but nevertheless assigned 100% of the responsibility to city H, reasoning that the requesting party should bear the fiscal burden for unforeseen consequences that are not due to either party's fault. Held, reversed.

(a) In California, there is but a single comparative indemnity doctrine that permits partial indemnification on a comparative fault basis in appropriate cases. Comparative equitable indemnity includes the entire range of possible apportionments from no indemnity to total indemnity. However, it still depends on an allocation of fault. There is no authority for imposing an all-or-nothing indemnity judgment in favor of one fault-free party against another fault-free party. (57 C.A.4th 224.)

(b) Despite the failed attempt to obtain indemnity, however, contribution is still available. In fact, the contribution statute and common sense compels the result that each city be responsible for 50% of the settlement. (57 C.A.4th 237, citing Coca-Cola Bottling Co.)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

5. Contribution.

e. No Contribution to Wilful Wrongdoer.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 107

[§ 107] No Contribution to Wilful Wrongdoer.

There is no right of contribution "in favor of any tortfeasor who has intentionally injured the injured person." (C.C.P. 875(d); see Martinez v. De Los Rios (1960) 187 C.A.2d 28, 33, 9 C.R. 326, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §361 [right of contribution only exists between negligent tortfeasors]; Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §1(c) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 194 [similar]; 9 Hastings L. J. 187; cf. Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §1(g) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.)), p. 195 [no right of contribution for breach of trust or other fiduciary obligation].)

In Bartneck v. Dunkin (1969) 1 C.A.3d 58, 81 C.R. 428, plaintiff received a replevin judgment against D and M for return of property or payment of $ 9,000. M paid $ 4,500 (half). Several years later, he paid an additional $ 3,587 and received an assignment of the judgment. He then sought to execute on the judgment against D for the balance due. Held, he was not entitled to contribution. The judgment determined that there had been intentional detention of the property, and no contrary contention could be made in a subsequent proceeding. (1 C.A.3d 61.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

5. Contribution.

f. Necessity of Joint Judgment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 108

[§ 108] Necessity of Joint Judgment.

(1) Right Enforceable Only After Judgment. The right of contribution "may be enforced only after one tortfeasor has, by payment, discharged the joint judgment or has paid more than his pro rata share" of that judgment. (C.C.P. 875(c).) Thus the California statute is limited to contribution after judgment. It leaves the plaintiff free, as before, to select defendants, and avoids the controversial procedure of third-party impleader and litigation of the contribution issue in the main action. (See 9 Hastings L. J. 186, 189 [criticism of California provision]; cf. Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §1 (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.)), p. 194 [contribution right applies where persons "liable in tort," i.e., remedy provided is broader than in California].)

(2) Judgment Must Be Joint. The contribution statute applies only where a judgment has been rendered jointly against two or more defendants. (C.C.P. 875(a), (c).) Thus, in Guy F. Atkinson Co. v. Consani (1963) 223 C.A.2d 342, 35 C.R. 750, plaintiff was injured by the negligence of C, an independent contractor under control of A. Plaintiff sued both but received judgment against A alone, and A satisfied the judgment. A then appealed from the judgment in favor of C on the ground that an admittedly erroneous instruction may have cost it the right to contribution. Held, appeal dismissed. The general rule that a party is not aggrieved by an erroneous judgment in favor of a codefendant (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §181 et seq.) is unaffected by C.C.P. 875. (223 C.A.2d 344.) (See Winzler & Kelly v. Superior Court (1975) 48 C.A.3d 385, 395, 122 C.R. 259 [judgment against four defendants affirmed as to first two, and satisfied by them, but reversed and remanded as to others; hence, no "joint judgment," permitting former to seek contribution from latter, existed].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

5. Contribution.

g. Amount of Contribution.

1. Pro Rata Share.

[§ 109] Pro Rata Share.

Contribution is "limited to the excess so paid over the pro rata share of the person so paying and in no event shall any tortfeasor be compelled to make contribution beyond his own pro rata share of the entire judgment." (C.C.P. 875(c); see Mizirawi v. Holl (1982) 135 C.A.3d 322, 325, 185 C.R. 328 [contribution was properly limited to pro rata share of judgment].)

The pro rata share is determined by "dividing the entire judgment equally among all of them." (C.C.P. 876(a); see Rollins v. California (1971) 14 C.A.3d 160, 165, footnote 8, 92 C.R. 251 [contributing parties are said to be in pari delicto, and damages are divided equally between them].) But "[w]here one or more persons are held liable solely for the tort of one of them or of another, as in the case of the liability of a master for the tort of his servant, they shall contribute a single pro rata share, as to which there may be indemnity between them." (C.C.P. 876(b).)

The pro rata share limitation was applied in Lamberton v. Rhodes-Jamieson (1988) 199 C.A.3d 748, 245 C.R. 162. Applying comparative fault principles (see infra, §1327 et seq.), a jury found three defendants 25%, 25% and 10% liable, respectively, for a $ 350,000 damages award. (Plaintiff's employer, who was found 40% at fault, was not a party to the action.) The defendants who were 25% liable settled with plaintiff for $ 125,000 each, but the defendant who was 10% liable refused to settle, pursued an appeal, and then, after abandoning the appeal, finally settled for $ 100,000, an amount in excess of its original 10% share. It then brought a motion for contribution. Held, order denying motion affirmed.

(a) The 10% liable defendant argued that, under C.C.P. 875(c), it had a right to contribution for the amount it paid in excess of its fault-proportioned share. However, that statute conditions the right to contribution on a payment in excess of a defendant's pro rata share, and C.C.P. 876(a) provides that each defendant's pro rata share "shall be determined" by dividing the judgment equally. (199 C.A.3d 751.) Here, dividing the total judgment ($ 350,000) by the number of defendants (3) results in a pro rata share for each defendant of $ 116,661, an amount which is more than that paid by the 10% liable defendant ($ 100,000) and less than that paid by the 25% liable defendants ($ 125,000 each). Hence, because the 10% liable defendant's settlement did not exceed its pro rata share, as defined in C.C.P. 876, it was not entitled to contribution. (199 C.A.3d 751, 755.)

(b) American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357, suggested, without deciding, that C.C.P. 875(b), allowing the trial judge to apply contribution "in accordance with the principles of equity" (see infra, §110), might allow the contribution statute to be interpreted to permit fault-proportioned, instead of pro rata, contribution. "In our view, there is nothing to 'interpret.' Section 876 states that the pro rata share shall be determined by dividing the judgment equally among the number of defendants. The Legislature has the power to prescribe legal definitions of its own language, and when the meaning to be given to particular terms is prescribed by the Legislature, it is binding on the court." (199 C.A.3d 754.)

5. Contribution.

g. Amount of Contribution.

2. Equitable Principles.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 110

[§ 110] Equitable Principles.

The right of contribution "shall be administered in accordance with the principles of equity." (C.C.P. 875(b); cf. Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, §2 (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.)), p. 246 [more detailed provision]; on equitable right of joint obligors to contribution, see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §179 et seq.)

This provision was applied in Ramirez v. Redevelopment Agency of San Francisco (1970) 4 C.A.3d 397, 84 C.R. 356. Plaintiff was injured in a fall from a hotel elevator as a result of alleged negligence in maintenance. He sued the maintenance company, and the building owner, and the lessee of the building. After judgment for plaintiff, the maintenance company paid half, the owner and the lessee paid the other half, and satisfaction of judgment was executed. Then the maintenance company sought contribution from the owner and the lessee on the theory that each defendant should have paid one-third. Held, the contention was unsound. The maintenance company was, in the light of the verdict, guilty of active and primary negligence. The owner and the lessee, on the other hand, were held under the legal principle of nondelegable duty of care; there was nothing in the record to show active negligence on the part of either. Under these circumstances, it was proper to treat the owner and the lessee as a unit. (4 C.A.3d 401.) (See Mizirawi v. Holl (1982) 135 C.A.3d 322, 325, 185 C.R. 328 [stating, in case involving vicarious liability, that it is proper under C.C.P. 875(b) to "inquire into the relative delinquency of the parties"].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

a. In General.

1. Definition and Nature.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 112

[§ 112] Definition and Nature.

Indemnity "may be defined as the obligation resting on one party to make good a loss or damage another party has incurred." (Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon (1975) 13 C.3d 622, 628, 119 C.R. 449, 532 P.2d 97.) The right of indemnity is either express or implied (equitable). (Bay Dev., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 1012, 1030, 269 C.R. 720, 791 P.2d 290, infra, §118.) It may arise "from either of two general sources: First, it may arise by virtue of express contractual language establishing a duty in one party to save another harmless upon the occurrence of specified circumstances. Second, it may find its source in equitable considerations brought into play either by contractual language not specifically dealing with indemnification or by the equities of the particular case." (E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C.3d 497, 506, 146 C.R. 614, 579 P.2d 505, infra, §123; see Miller v. Ellis (2002) 103 C.A.4th 373, 832, 126 C.R.2d 667 [indemnity may not result in unjust enrichment]; on equitable indemnity, see infra, §115 et seq.; on express indemnity, see infra, §119 et seq.; on indemnity from successor attorney, see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §349 et seq.)

Indemnity, which either imposes the entire loss on one of two or more tortfeasors or apportions it on the basis of comparative fault, is distinct from contribution, which distributes the loss pro rata. (See Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 C.A.2d 69, 73, 38 C.R. 490; Rollins v. California (1971) 14 C.A.3d 160, 164, 92 C.R. 251; *Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 113

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22 provides as follows:

(1) "When two or more persons are or may be liable for the same harm and one of them discharges the liability of another in whole or in part by settlement or discharge of judgment, the person discharging the liability is entitled to recover indemnity in the amount paid to the plaintiff, plus reasonable legal expenses" in the following circumstances:

(a) The indemnitor has agreed by contract to indemnify the indemnitee. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22(a)(1).)

(b) The indemnitee was not liable except vicariously for the tort of the indemnitor, or "was not liable except as a seller of a product supplied to the indemnitee by the indemnitor and the indemnitee was not independently culpable." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22(a)(2).)

(2) "A person who is otherwise entitled to recover indemnity pursuant to contract may do so even if the party against whom indemnity is sought would not be liable to the plaintiff." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22(b).)

Unlike Rest.2d, Torts §886B, which it replaced, this section addresses all types of indemnity, including contractual indemnity. The right to recover contractual indemnity is determined by the terms of the contract. An indemnitee may recover contractual indemnity for the indemnitee's own legally culpable conduct only if the contract is clear on that point. If otherwise clear, the contract need not contain specific words, such as "negligence" or "fault." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22, Comment f; on construction of indemnity provisions generally, see infra, §120.)

Also, while Rest.2d, Torts §886B sometimes provided for indemnity when the indemnitee was negligent (i.e., a negligent retailer who was liable for a manufacturer's defective product), comparative responsibility undermines the need for indemnity in these situations, and the Third Restatement thus does not provide for indemnity to a person who is independently responsible. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §22, Reporter's Note, p. 276; on comparative responsibility generally, see infra, §1327 et seq.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

a. In General.

3. Instructions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 114

[§ 114] Instructions.

(1) BAJI Instructions.

(a) In general. BAJI classifies implied indemnity on the basis of whether, as between the indemnitee and the indemnitor, the right to indemnification arises from a contractual relationship (BAJI, No. 12.61 et seq.) or comparative fault (BAJI, No. 12.69). For purposes of either contractual or noncontractual indemnity, BAJI, No. 12.60 defines "indemnity" as "the right of one person to be compensated for a loss sustained or which will be sustained for the legal consequences of the conduct of another person."

(b) Implied contractual indemnity. BAJI, No. 12.61 states that the right to implied contractual indemnity is conferred on a party "who is liable to pay damages for injury to the person or property of another caused by the breach of a contractual duty owed to that party." (See BAJI, No. 12.62 [contractual relationship in issue], BAJI, No. 12.63 [contractual relationship admitted], BAJI, No. 12.64 [breach of duty to use reasonable care in performance of contract]; on implied contractual indemnity generally, see infra, §§118, 123.)

(c) Implied indemnity for comparative fault. BAJI, No. 12.69 relates to claims for "comparative indemnity," which is defined as "the right of a person, whose fault concurrently with the fault of [another][others] contributes as a cause of economic damages, to recover from the other person(s) any amount [he][she] [has paid] [has become liable to pay] in excess of [his][her] proportionate fault."

In these cases, the jury must determine "the percentage of fault of all persons which contributed as a cause of such damages" and award to the indemnitee "any amount of such damages in excess of the proportionate fault" of the indemnitee. (BAJI, No. 12.69; on comparative equitable indemnity generally, see §116 et seq.; for forms of special verdicts when comparative implied indemnity is in issue, see BAJI, Nos. 16.72 and 16.73.)

(2) CACI Instructions. The Judicial Council of California has approved plain language civil jury instructions. The following two instructions were adopted under the heading "Equitable Indemnity":

(a) Implied indemnity for comparative fault. CACI, No. 3800 [comparative fault between and among tortfeasors] provides as follows:

(b) Implied contractual indemnity. CACI, No. 3801 [implied contractual indemnity] provides:

"[Name of indemnitee] claims that [he/she] [is/was] required to pay [describe liability, e.g., "a court judgment in favor of [name of plaintiff]]" because of [name of indemnitor]'s failure to use reasonable care in performing work under an agreement with [name of indemnitee]. In order for [name of indemnitee] to recover from [name of indemnitor], [name of indemnitee] must prove both of the following:"

"2. That [name of indemnitor]'s failure contributed as a substantial factor in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm."

"[Name of indemnitor] claims that [name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others] contributed as [a] substantial factor[s] in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm."

"To succeed, [name of indemnitor] must prove both of the following:"

"1. That [name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others] [was/were] [negligent/[other basis of responsibility]]; and"

"2. That [name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others] contributed as [a] substantial factor[s] in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm."

"You will be asked to determine the percentages of responsibility of [name of indemnitee], [name of indemnitor] [, and all other persons responsible] for [name of plaintiff]'s harm.]"

West's Key Number Digest, Indemnity k.15(8); Torts k.22

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) CACI Instructions.(b) Implied contractual indemnity. CACI, No. 3801, as revised in 2007, provides:

"[Name of indemnitee] claims that [he/she] [is/was/may be] required to pay [describe liability, e.g., 'a court judgment in favor of plaintiff John Jones'] because [name of indemnitor] [failed to use reasonable care in performing work under an agreement with [name of indemnitee]/[specify other basis of responsibility]]. In order for [name of indemnitee] to recover from [name of indemnitor], [name of indemnitee] must prove both of the following:"

"1. That [name of indemnitor] [failed to use reasonable care in [performing the work/[describe work or services]] under an agreement with [name of indemnitee]/ [specify other basis of responsibility]]; and"

"2. That [name of indemnitor]'s conduct was a substantial factor in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm."

"[Name of indemnitor] claims that [[name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others]] contributed as [a] substantial factor[s] in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm. To succeed, [name of indemnitor] must prove both of the following:"

"1. That [[name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others]] [was/were] [negligent/[specify other basis of responsibility]]; and"

"2. That [[name of indemnitee] [and] [insert identification of others]] contributed as [a] substantial factor[s] in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm."

"You will be asked to determine the percentages of responsibility of [name of indemnitor] [and] [[name of indemnitee] [, [and] all other persons responsible] for [name of plaintiff]'s harm.]"

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

b. Equitable Indemnity.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 115

[§ 115] In General.

(1) Basis. "The duty to indemnify may arise, and indemnity may be allowed in those fact situations where in equity and good conscience the burden of the judgment should be shifted from the shoulders of the person seeking indemnity to the one from whom indemnity is sought. The right depends upon the principle that everyone is responsible for the consequences of his own wrong, and if others have been compelled to pay damages which ought to have been paid by the wrongdoer, they may recover from him. Thus the determination of whether or not indemnity should be allowed must of necessity depend upon the facts of each case." (Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 C.A.2d 69, 74, 38 C.R. 490; see Lassen v. California (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1151, 1155, 6 C.R.2d 359 [county may not use equitable indemnity doctrine to recover from state costs of defending lawsuits involving operation of county jails; these costs are part of costs of operating these jails, which counties are required by statute to bear]; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haslam (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1347, 1354, 35 C.R.2d 135, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §116, citing the text; Children's Hosp. of Los Angeles v. Sedgwick (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1780, 1786, 53 C.R.2d 725 [plaintiff hospital, subsequent tortfeasor that settled malpractice action brought by patient, could not recover in equitable indemnity action against defendant anesthesiologist, prior tortfeasor who was exonerated in earlier action brought by patient]; Major Clients Agency v. Diemer (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1116, 1130, 79 C.R.2d 613 [plaintiff representative, who settled suit by his client for alleged negligence in negotiating contract, was not entitled to indemnity from client's attorney, who allegedly also acted negligently in negotiating same contract, where there was no allegation that plaintiff had become liable to pay economic damages to client and where there was no relationship between plaintiff and attorney]; 97 A.L.R.2d 616 [equitable duty of construction contractor to indemnify contractee held liable for injury to third person]; on discharge of settling tortfeasor from partial or comparative indemnity, see supra, §72; on application of MICRA limitations to equitable indemnity rights, see infra, §962.)

(2) Applications. The doctrine applies only among defendants who are jointly and severally liable to the plaintiff. Joint and several liability in the context of equitable indemnity is fairly expansive; it can apply to acts that are concurrent or successive or are joint or several, as long as they create a detriment caused by several actors. Generally, there must be some basis for tort liability against the proposed indemnitor. It is usually based on a duty owed to the underlying plaintiff, although vicarious liability and strict liability also may sustain application of equitable indemnity. ( BFGC Architects Planners v. Forcum/Mackey Const. (2004) 119 C.A.4th 848, 852, 14 C.R.3d 721 [contractual claim was insufficient].) However, implied contractual indemnity between the indemnitor and the indemnitee may also provide a basis for equitable indemnity. (See infra, §118.)

(3) Shifting of Liability. Equitable indemnity originally was based "upon a difference between the primary and secondary liability of two persons each of whom is made responsible by the law to an injured party." (Alisal Sanitary Dist. v. Kennedy (1960) 180 C.A.2d 69, 75, 4 C.R. 379, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §880.) The rule traditionally applied where one person's negligence was active while the other's was either passive or constructive. (See San Francisco v. Ho Sing (1958) 51 C.2d 127, 130, 330 P.2d 802; Alameda v. Southern Pac. Co. (1961) 55 C.2d 479, 484, 11 C.R. 751, 360 P.2d 327; De La Forest v. Yandle (1959) 171 C.A.2d 59, 60, 340 P.2d 52; Los Angeles v. Cox Bros. Const. Co. (1961) 195 C.A.2d 836, 842, 16 C.R. 250; Montgomery Ward & Co. v. KPIX Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. (1962) 198 C.A.2d 759, 762, 18 C.R. 341; B.F.G. Builders v. Weisner & Coover Co. (1962) 206 C.A.2d 752, 762, 23 C.R. 815; Gardner v. Murphy (1975) 54 C.A.3d 164, 168, 126 C.R. 302.) It has been invoked in such situations as vicarious liability of the indemnitee (see Herrero v. Atkinson, supra, 227 C.A.2d 77), the indemnitor's creation of a dangerous condition (see Alameda v. Southern Pac. Co. (1961) 55 C.2d 479, 484, 11 C.R. 751, 360 P.2d 327), negligent aggravation of injury by the indemnitor (see Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 C.A.2d 69, 75, 38 C.R. 490), and reliance on misrepresentations by the indemnitor (see Gardner v. Murphy (1975) 54 C.A.3d 164, 169, 126 C.R. 302).

The rule resulted in a total shifting of liability from the indemnitee to the indemnitor. (See Cahill Bros. v. Clementina Co. (1962) 208 C.A.2d 367, 376, 25 C.R. 301, infra, §116; Horn & Barker v. Macco Corp. (1964) 228 C.A.2d 96, 101, 39 C.R. 320; Ralke Co. v. Esquire Bldg. Maintenance Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 141, 143, 54 C.R. 556; Ferrel v. Vegetable Oil Products Co. (1966) 247 C.A.2d 117, 120, 55 C.R. 589; Aerojet General Corp. v. D. Zelinsky & Sons (1967) 249 C.A.2d 604, 611, 57 C.R. 701; Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl (1971) 21 C.A.3d 694, 696, 98 C.R. 702, infra, §116; Mabie & Mintz v. B & E Installers (1972) 25 C.A.3d 491, 496, 101 C.R. 919.)

After adoption of the comparative negligence doctrine (see infra, §1327 et seq.), the equitable indemnity rule was significantly modified. (See American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 599, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357.) A concurrent tortfeasor may now obtain partial indemnity on a comparative fault basis. (See infra, §116.)

Co.* (2004) 125 C.A.4th 152, 174, 22 C.R.3d 660 [general contractor, who settled with property owner for damages arising from defective construction, had no equitable indemnity claim against design engineers where no basis existed for tort liability by engineers to owner and case did not involve any form of contractual indemnity]; Stop Loss Ins. Brokers v. Brown & Toland Med. Group (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1036, 1043, 49 C.R.3d 609 [mere negligent performance of contract will not support claim for equitable indemnity; omission to perform contractual obligation only constitutes tort when omission violates duty that is independent of contract and arises from principles of tort law]; *Stonegate Homeowners Assn. v. 6. Indemnity.

b. Equitable Indemnity.

2. Recognition of Comparative Indemnity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 116

[§ 116] Recognition of Comparative Indemnity.

(1) Former Law: No Indemnity Where Claimant Is at Fault. Under the doctrine of primary and secondary liability (see supra, §115), indemnity was originally denied to a party who actively participated in the wrongful act. (See American Can Co. v. San Francisco (1962) 202 C.A.2d 520, 524, 21 C.R. 33; Baldwin Contracting Co. v. Winston Steel Works (1965) 236 C.A.2d 565, 573, 46 C.R. 421; King v. Timber Structures (1966) 240 C.A.2d 178, 182, 49 C.R. 414; O'Melia v. California Production Service (1968) 261 C.A.2d 618, 623, 68 C.R. 125; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Lan Franco (1968) 267 C.A.2d 881, 888, 73 C.R. 660; People v. Daly City Scavenger Co. (1971) 19 C.A.3d 277, 281, 282, 96 C.R. 669, citing the text; Kerr Chemical v. Crown Cork & Seal Co. (1971) 21 C.A.3d 1010, 1016, 99 C.R. 162; Standard Oil Co. v. Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Int. Union (1972) 23 C.A.3d 585, 100 C.R. 354.)

Cahill Bros. v. Clementina Co. (1962) 208 C.A.2d 367, 25 C.R. 301, is illustrative. Contractor Cahill engaged Clementina as an independent contractor to do demolition work for an excavation. During this work a pedestrian was injured through the negligence of Cahill's employee L, acting in a dual capacity for both parties. The injured party recovered judgment against both, each paid half, and Cahill sought indemnity against Clementina. Held, there was no right of indemnity. In the original suit by the injured party, the judgment established the liability of Clementina for L's negligence, which was a breach of Clementina's contractual duty to Cahill. But, since L, the actual wrongdoer, was also Cahill's employee, his active negligence was imputed to Cahill; hence, as a matter of law, Cahill actively participated in the wrongful act and was not entitled to indemnity. The court said: "The thrust of these cases is that if the person seeking indemnity participates in an affirmative act of negligence, or is physically connected with an act or omission by knowledge or acquiescence in it on his part, or fails to perform some duty in connection with the omission which he may have undertaken by virtue of his agreement, he is deprived of the right of indemnity. In other words, the person seeking indemnity cannot recover if his negligence is active or affirmative as distinguished from negligence which is passive." (208 C.A.2d 382.)

The denial of indemnity was criticized in Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl (1971) 21 C.A.3d 694, 98 C.R. 702. When an automobile manufacturer determined that one of its models had a rear brake light defect, it sent its dealers a recall notice. A dealer and a leasing agency allegedly allowed a defective car to be used without correcting the defect, and an accident occurred by reason of that defect. The injured parties sued the manufacturer, the dealer, and the leasing agency. The manufacturer paid $ 72,000 in a settlement and then brought this action for indemnity against the dealer and the leasing agency. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. Whether, at the time of the recall notice, the car was in the dealer's hands or had reached the customer, the manufacturer could have located the car and the customer and notified the customer of the defect. By notifying the dealer alone, the manufacturer could not shift to the dealer the direct obligation of safety it owed the customer. The manufacturer's "production of the defective car, coupled with its failure to attempt direct notice to the customer, breached a direct obligation it owed the customer. It "had a 'last clear chance' to avert injury and failed to use it. Its fault is primary, not secondary, and not imputed to it as a consequence of the dealer's or leasing agency's fault. Under the pleaded circumstances, the latter are not liable for indemnification of the manufacturer." (21 C.A.3d 699.) The court was, however, unhappy about the result. The manufacturer bore the entire loss, while the dealer and leasing agency, both of whom knew of the danger and did nothing, escaped liability. "A wise rule of law--one designed to stimulate responsibility throughout the merchandising chain--would require both parties to share the loss. A rule of contribution or partial indemnification would permit that result." (21 C.A.3d 699, adding that California's contribution law applies only after a joint judgment; see supra, §109.)

(2) Partial Indemnity for Comparative Fault: American Motorcycle Case. Following the adoption of the comparative negligence doctrine in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329, the court in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357, held that "the current equitable indemnity rule should be modified to permit a concurrent tortfeasor to obtain partial indemnity from other concurrent tortfeasors on a comparative fault basis." (20 C.3d 598.)

American Motorcycle "did not establish a new cause of action separate and distinct from the traditional equitable indemnity action, but simply modified the all-or-nothing aspect of the doctrine to permit partial indemnification in appropriate cases." (People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Superior Court (1980) 26 C.3d 744, 756, 163 C.R. 585, 608 P.2d 673.) This revised rule is variously referred to as "comparative equitable indemnity," "comparative" indemnity, and "partial" indemnity. (See C.C.P. 877.6(c), supra, §88; Far West Financial Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 C.3d 796, 809, 251 C.R. 202, 760 P.2d 399, infra, §117.)

The scope and application of comparative indemnity are treated in detail later in this chapter. (See infra, §1357 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

b. Equitable Indemnity.

3. Total Indemnity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 117

[§ 117] Total Indemnity.

Comparative equitable indemnity includes the entire spectrum of possible apportionments--from no right to any indemnity at all to a right to total indemnity, as in the case of vicarious or derivative liability. A claim for total equitable indemnity is treated like any other claim for comparative equitable indemnity. (Far West Financial Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 C.3d 796, 807, 251 C.R. 202, 760 P.2d 399.)

C.C.P. 877.6(c), regarding good faith settlements, bars claims of a nonsettling defendant for "comparative indemnity, based on comparative negligence or comparative fault." (See supra, §88.) Does this provision preclude the right of nonsettling defendants whose liability is vicarious to obtain total equitable indemnity from actively negligent defendants? (See 74 Cal. L. Rev. 1057; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 99.) The Courts of Appeal were divided on this issue. (See Sacramento v. Gemsch Inv. Co. (1981) 115 C.A.3d 869, 877, 171 C.R. 764 [right denied]; E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1982) 138 C.A.3d 366, 376, 187 C.R. 879 [right upheld]; Huizar v. Abex Corp. (1984) 156 C.A.3d 534, 542, 203 C.R. 47 [right upheld]; Angelus Associates Corp. v. Neonex Leisure Products (1985) 167 C.A.3d 532, 542, 213 C.R. 403 [right upheld]; IRM Corp. v. Carlson (1986) 179 C.A.3d 94, 108, 224 C.R. 438 [right denied]; Horton v. Superior Court (1987) 194 C.A.3d 727, 739, 238 C.R. 467 [right denied; listing cases].)

The Supreme Court in Far West resolved the conflict, holding that a good faith settlement under C.C.P. 877.6(c) bars a claim of a nonsettling defendant for total equitable indemnity. Here, a homeowners association sued a developer and others on causes of action arising out of latent construction defects. The developer cross-complained against other defendants for total equitable indemnity following its settlement with plaintiff. However, the trial judge granted cross-defendants' motion for dismissal after finding that their own settlement with plaintiff was made in good faith, and that the settlement barred the developer's claim for indemnity. Held, affirmed.

(a) Construction of C.C.P. 877.6(c). Cross-complainant contended that because the statute does not expressly refer to claims for "total indemnity," it should not prohibit a nonsettling party who may be only vicariously or derivatively liable from pursuing a claim against a directly or primarily responsible tortfeasor even if that tortfeasor's settlement with the plaintiff has satisfied the good faith requirement. Cross-defendants contended that the language of the section was intended to refer to the entire spectrum of claims pursued under California's common law equitable indemnity doctrine.

The language is, on its face, reasonably susceptible to either interpretation; hence the issue must be resolved by considering the legislative history and legislative purpose. (46 C.3d 804.)

(b) Development of case law.

(1) Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, supra, §79, explained that C.C.P. 877.6(c) in large part was a codification of the principles established in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357. (46 C.3d 805.) In American Motorcycle, the court concluded that "the current equitable indemnity rule should be modified to permit a concurrent tortfeasor to obtain partial indemnity from other concurrent tortfeasors on a comparative fault basis." (46 C.3d 805, quoting 20 C.3d 578.) The court also held that a tortfeasor who entered into a good faith settlement with plaintiff would be free from any claim for partial recovery or comparative indemnity. (46 C.3d 806.)

(2) In Safeway Stores v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 C.3d 322, 146 C.R. 550, 579 P.2d 441, infra, §1360, the court observed that it did not determine whether the comparative indemnity doctrine should be applied in a situation in which a party's liability is entirely derivative or vicarious; and the court likewise did not address the question at issue in the present case, whether an action for total equitable indemnity is impervious to the effect of a good faith settlement. (46 C.3d 807.)

(3) People v. Superior Court (Frost) (1980) 26 C.3d 744, 163 C.R. 585, 608 P.2d 673, made it clear that there are not two separate equitable indemnity doctrines in California, but a single "comparative indemnity" doctrine that permits partial indemnification on a comparative fault basis in appropriate cases. (46 C.3d 808.) And Standard Pac. of San Diego v. A. A. Baxter Corp. (1986) 176 C.A.3d 577, 222 C.R. 106, properly concluded that under People v. Superior Court (Frost), comparative equitable indemnity includes the entire range of possible apportionments--from no right to a right of complete indemnity. (46 C.3d 808.)

(c) Enactment of C.C.P. 877.6. The statute was enacted in 1980, a few months after the decision in People v. Superior Court (Frost). And in light of the explanation in that case, "it appears reasonable to interpret the reference to claims for 'equitable comparative contribution, or partial or comparative indemnity' ... as embodying the entire spectrum of potential equitable indemnity claims." (46 C.3d 809.)

(d) Statutory objectives. The two objectives pointed out in Tech-Bilt and Abbott Ford v. Superior Court (1987) 43 C.3d 858, 239 C.R. 626, 741 P.2d 124, supra, §102, can be harmonized only by including claims for total equitable indemnity.

(1) Objective of promoting settlement agreements. This would be impaired by an interpretation leaving a settling tortfeasor vulnerable to further liability:

First, "claims for total indemnity have been made, and undoubtedly will continue to be made, by nonsettling tortfeasors in a wide variety of contexts, with nonsettling tortfeasors frequently characterizing their potential liability as merely 'derivative' or 'vicarious' in relation to the allegedly more direct malfeasance of the settling tortfeasor. Although if such total indemnity claims were permitted to proceed to trial the settling defendant might well ultimately succeed in defeating the claim for total indemnity in most instances by demonstrating that the nonsettling tortfeasor's liability was not merely vicarious or derivative, such success would be by a Pyrrhic victory as far as the settlement process is concerned. As explained above, the very fact that the total indemnity claim remained to be litigated despite a good faith settlement would have already taken its toll in discouraging the potential indemnitor from entering into a settlement agreement with the plaintiff in the first place." (46 C.3d 812.)

Second, the fact that the nonsettling defendant is vicariously or derivatively liable does not mean that a total shifting of loss is warranted under equitable indemnity principles; in many instances the vicariously liable defendant may also bear some direct responsibility for an accident (e.g., by negligent hiring of an agent, or failing to supervise his work). Cross-complainant's proposed interpretation "would reintroduce the intractable problem of attempting to define, through a general formula, the appropriate occasions for total equitable indemnity, one of the key problems which the adoption of comparative indemnity was intended to overcome." (46 C.3d 813.)

(2) Objective of fair apportionment of loss. Under Tech-Bilt and Abbott Ford, a vicariously or derivatively liable tortfeasor, like any other minimally culpable tortfeasor, is afforded substantial protection against harm from an unfair settlement between a more culpable tortfeasor and the plaintiff:

First, "[i]f the more culpable tortfeasor settles with the plaintiff before the vicariously liable tortfeasor, and if the settlement does not require the more culpable tortfeasor to bear its fair share of the loss, the trial court can find that the settlement is not in good faith and, as a consequence, the settlement will not bar the less culpable tortfeasor from pursuing its equitable indemnity claim against the more culpable tortfeasor." (46 C.3d 815.)

Second, if, as in this case, an allegedly vicariously liable tortfeasor has already settled with the plaintiff and has continued to pursue its indemnity claim, the allegedly culpable tortfeasor retains the right to challenge the good faith of any subsequent settlement by the allegedly more culpable tortfeasor. (46 C.3d 815.)

Third, under Tech-Bilt, a nonsettling tortfeasor may be left to bear some portion of the plaintiff's loss because a settlement may be found in good faith even though the sum is not precisely commensurate with its proportionate share of liability. This minor departure from a theoretical precise allocation of loss is the price that nonsettling defendants uniformly bear to promote the settlement of litigation. (46 C.3d 816, 817.) (See Pioneer Equipment Co. v. R.M. Wade & Co. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 824, 838, 260 C.R. 815 [following Far West]; 21 Pacific L. J. 147; 16 Pepperdine L. Rev. 874.)

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

b. Equitable Indemnity.

4. Implied Contractual Indemnity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 118

[§ 118] Implied Contractual Indemnity.

Implied contractual indemnity is a type of equitable indemnity in which equitable considerations are brought into effect by contractual language not specifically dealing with indemnification. (E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C.3d 497, 507, 146 C.R. 614, 579 P.2d 505, infra, §123; on preclusive effect of express indemnity provision on implied indemnity, see infra, §123.) This type of indemnity is based on the premise that a contractual obligation to perform carries with it an implied agreement to indemnify against liability to a third party arising from failure to perform. (Bay Dev., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 1012, 1032, 269 C.R. 720, 791 P.2d 290.)

A claim for implied contractual indemnity is treated like any other claim for equitable indemnity. Thus, in Bay Dev., the court held that a claim based on implied contractual indemnity is barred by a good faith settlement under C.C.P. 877.6(c), which bars claims of a nonsettling defendant for "comparative indemnity, based on comparative negligence or comparative fault" (supra, §88). (50 C.3d 1020.) "Our conclusion that a good faith settlement bars a claim for implied contractual indemnity is not at all inconsistent with the principle that such a settlement would not preclude an indemnity action based on an express indemnity agreement. ... Such agreements often provide an efficient means of allocating responsibility. When an indemnitee under such an agreement reasonably relies on express terms in the agreement in conducting its affairs, it would be unfair to permit a party that has agreed to indemnify to escape its express contractual obligations by entering into a partial settlement." (50 C.3d 1032, citing C.L. Peck Contractors v. Superior Court (1984) 159 C.A.3d 828, 205 C.R. 754, supra, §73; see 22 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1227 [Implied Contractual Indemnity: An Infirm Doctrine Whose Time Has Passed].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Implied contractual indemnity need not be based on finding of negligence: In Garlock Sealing Technologies, LLC v. NAK Sealing Technologies Corp. (2007) 148 C.A.4th 937, 56 C.R.3d 177, the trial court denied an implied contractual indemnity claim on the ground that the indemnitee failed to prove that the indemnitor failed to use reasonable care in performing its contractual duties. Held, this was error; the doctrine of implied contractual indemnity is not limited to negligent breaches of contract.

(a) An action for implied contractual indemnity is not a claim for contribution from a joint tortfeasor. It is not founded on a tort or on any duty that the indemnitor owes to the injured third party. Instead, it is grounded on the indemnitor's breach of duty owing to the indemnitee to properly perform its contractual duties. (148 C.A.4th 971.)

(b) Review of the cases demonstrates that a duty to indemnify has been implied from the obligation of the contracting parties to perform their promises, the reasoning being that a promise to perform includes an implied promise to perform properly. Where the cases have factually involved a negligent failure to perform, it is not surprising that the opinions contain language regarding the contracting party's implied obligation to "carefully" perform or to perform with "reasonable care" or "reasonable safety." A negligent breach of contract is clearly sufficient to trigger implied contractual indemnity. However, no California court has been squarely presented with the issue whether implied contractual indemnity requires a negligent breach of the contract. (148 C.A.4th 972.)

(c) Many of the cases recognize that implied contractual indemnity is not based on principles of tort law, but on the contractual relationship between the parties and a breach of the contract between them. Implied contractual indemnity cases may involve joint tortfeasors, but it is not necessary that an indemnitor be jointly liable with the indemnitee for the third party's injuries in order for the indemnitee to recover against the indemnitor. The court is concerned only with the obligations flowing between the indemnitor and the indemnitee, and whether the indemnitor breached an obligation that foreseeably resulted in the indemnitee being made liable for damages to the third party. Implied contractual indemnity rests on a balancing of the equities of the contractual situation between the parties, with contracting parties sharing a loss relative to their breach. (148 C.A.4th 973.) There is no discernible reason why this would not include responsibility for a breach of contract where the breach, even if not negligent, foreseeably causes damages to a third party for which another contracting party is held liable. (148 C.A.4th 974.)

(d) Moreover, because implied contractual indemnity is a form of equitable indemnity, it is inconsistent to limit it to situations involving a negligent breach of contract. Thus, the comparative equitable indemnity doctrine has been applied not only to require indemnification by a defendant whose negligence causes the plaintiff's loss, but to allow apportionment in situations of strict liability and of vicarious liability. (148 C.A.4th 974.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

c. Express Indemnity.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 119

[§ 119] In General.

The court in MacDonald & Kruse v. San Jose Steel Co. (1972) 29 C.A.3d 413, 105 C.R. 725, on an elaborate review of the California decisions (see infra, §125), classified indemnity clauses as follows:

(a) A clause that provides "expressly and unequivocally" that the indemnitor is to indemnify the indemnitee for the indemnitee's negligence. Under this provision, the indemnitee is indemnified whether liability has arisen as the result of the indemnitee's negligence alone or of the indemnitee's co-negligence with the indemnitor. (29 C.A.3d 419.)

(b) A general clause providing that the indemnitor is to indemnify the indemnitee for the indemnitee's liability "howsoever same may be caused," "regardless of responsibility for negligence," "arising from the use of the premises, facilities or services" of the indemnitee, "which might arise in connection with the agreed work," "caused by or happening in connection with the equipment or the condition, maintenance, possession, operation or use thereof," or "from any and all claims for damages to any person or property by reason of the use of said leased property." Under any of these provisions, "the indemnitee is indemnified from his own acts of passive negligence that solely or contributorily cause his liability, but is not indemnified for his own acts of active negligence that solely or contributorily cause his liability." (29 C.A.3d 419.)

(c) A clause providing that the indemnitor is to indemnify the indemnitee for the indemnitee's liabilities caused by the indemnitor, but not for liabilities otherwise caused. Under this provision, "any negligence on the part of the indemnitee, either active or passive, will bar indemnification against the indemnitor irrespective of whether the indemnitor may also have been a cause of the indemnitee's liability." (29 C.A.3d 420.)

A dissent, rejecting this tripartite classification, argues that the proper unifying premise of the indemnity cases is that "the intention of the parties must be enforced by limiting the indemnity to what the parties expected it to cover. The cases require no more." (29 C.A.3d 427.) (See Western Contracting Corp. v. Southwest Steel Rolling Mills (1976) 58 C.A.3d 532, 538, 541, 129 C.R. 782 [third class]; Hollywood Turf Club v. Montgomery Elevator Co. (1976) 58 C.A.3d 580, 587, 130 C.R. 81 [second class]; C.I. Engineers & Constructors v. Johnson & Turner (1983) 140 C.A.3d 1011, 1018, 189 C.R. 824 [first class; clause granting indemnity for all liability arising from indemnitor's obligations, except that arising from indemnitee's sole negligence, covered subject of indemnitee's negligence and required indemnification even for active negligence (unless it was sole cause of liability)); Ralph M. Parsons Co. v. Combustion Equipment Associates (1985) 172 C.A.3d 211, 219, 218 C.R. 170 [same]; Girard v. Delta Towers Joint Venture (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1741, 1749, 26 C.R.2d 102 [second class]; 16 Pacific L. J. 767; for statutory limitations on indemnification in construction contracts, see infra, §121.)

In Herman Christensen & Sons v. Paris Plastering Co. (1976) 61 C.A.3d 237, 132 C.R. 86, the court rejected application to the agreement in issue of the third MacDonald classification on the ground that to deny indemnity when the indemnitee is passively negligent would render the agreement largely illusory, i.e., "in the absence of some negligence, active or passive, on the part of the indemnitee there would be nothing for which it could seek indemnity other than costs of suit." (61 C.A.3d 248.) (See Marathon Steel Co. v. Tilley Steel (1977) 66 C.A.3d 413, 417, 136 C.R. 73 [following Herman Christensen & Sons].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

c. Express Indemnity.

2. Interpretation of Clauses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 120

[§ 120] Interpretation of Clauses.

The following rules apply in interpreting indemnity agreements "unless a contrary intention appears" (C.C. 2778):

(1) Recovery on liability. On an indemnity against liability, expressly or in other equivalent terms, the indemnitee is entitled to recover on becoming liable. (C.C. 2778(1).) (See CC-Calif. Plaza Associates v. Paller & Goldstein (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1042, 1054, 59 C.R.2d 382 [clause providing indemnification against both liabilities and claims fell under C.C. 2778(1), not C.C. 2778(2)].)

(2) Recovery on payment. On an indemnity against claims, demands, damages, or costs, expressly or in other equivalent terms, the indemnitee is not entitled to recover without payment of them. (C.C. 2778(2).)

(3) Costs of defense. An indemnity against claims, demands, or liability, expressly or in other equivalent terms, embraces costs of defense incurred in good faith and in the exercise of a reasonable discretion. (C.C. 2778(3); see FMC Corp. v. Plaisted & Cos. (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1132, 1199, 72 C.R.2d 467 [policies' explicit disavowal of duty to defend rendered C.C. 2778(3) inapplicable].)

(4) Duty to defend. The indemnitor is bound, on request of the indemnitee, to defend actions or proceedings against the indemnitee in respect to the matters embraced by the indemnity, but the indemnitee has the right to conduct these defenses, if the indemnitee chooses to do so. (C.C. 2778(4); see FMC Corp. v. Plaisted & Cos., supra [policies' explicit disavowal of duty to defend rendered C.C. 2778(4) inapplicable].)

(5) Conclusiveness of judgment. If, after request, the indemnitor neglects to defend the indemnitee, a recovery against the indemnitee, suffered by the indemnitee in good faith, is conclusive in the indemnitee's favor against the indemnitor. (C.C. 2778(5); see Peter Culley & Associates v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1484, 1495, 1498, 13 C.R.2d 624, infra, §124 [C.C. 2778(5) is limited to recovery by judgment; settlement negotiated by indemnitee is merely presumptive evidence of liability and its amount].)

(6) Judgment as presumptive evidence. If the indemnitor, whether a principal or a surety in the agreement, has not had reasonable notice of the action or proceeding against the indemnitee, or is not allowed to control the indemnitee's defense, judgment against the indemnitee is only presumptive evidence against the indemnitor. (C.C. 2778(6).)

(7) Effect of stipulation. A stipulation that a judgment against the indemnitee is conclusive on the indemnitor is inapplicable if the indemnitee had a good defense on the merits, which by want of ordinary care the indemnitee failed to establish in the action. (C.C. 2778(7).)

(3) Costs of defense.

(New) Recovery of costs is not conditioned on requesting defense: In Watsonville v. Corrigan (2007) 149 C.A.4th 1542, 58 C.R.3d 458, plaintiffs sued a city and developers for negligence related to soil instability and landslides. The city cross-complained against the developers for contractual indemnity. The trial court ruled that the developers had no duty to reimburse the city for costs and fees incurred by it in defending the actions, because the city failed to tender the defense to them. Held, reversed.

(a) C.C. 2778 sets forth rules that guide the construction of contracts of indemnity "unless a contrary intention appears." However, no contrary intention appears in the indemnity agreements here; the agreements are silent with respect to the costs of defense. (149 C.A.4th 1547.)

(b) The developers contend that general principles applicable in insurance contexts require that C.C. 2778 be construed to allow defense costs to an indemnitee only after he or she first requests a defense. This contention must be rejected; indemnity agreements are not construed like liability insurance policies. The insurer owes a broad duty to defend its insured after tender, even when there is only a potential for indemnity, and even where no damages are ultimately awarded in the underlying action. Also, unlike insurance policies, which are adhesion contracts, there is normally no reason to construe indemnity agreements against the drafter. (149 C.A.4th 1548.)

(c) C.C. 2778(3) states that an indemnity against claims includes the costs of defense against those claims where they are incurred in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable discretion. This rule of interpretation applies to the contractual relationship between the developers and the city because no contrary intention appears from the language of their indemnity agreements. (149 C.A.4th 1549.)

(d) The developers maintain that C.C. 2778(4), regarding an indemnitor's duty to defend on request of the indemnitee, requires the indemnitee to first request that the indemnitor provide a defense before recovering reimbursement. The developers read too much into that subdivision. It describes the indemnitor's duty to defend, not the duty of indemnification, and makes it clear that the indemnitee has the right to conduct its own defense if it so chooses. Nothing in the provision obligates the indemnitee to tender the defense to the indemnitor; and the election to conduct its own defense does not supplant the interpretive rule in C.C. 2778(3) that indemnification includes the costs of the indemnitee's defense. (149 C.A.4th 1549.)

(4) Duty to defend. See Watsonville v. Corrigan, supra, 149 C.A.4th 1549 [C.C. 2778(4) does not obligate indemnitee to tender defense to indemnitor before choosing to conduct defense itself and be reimbursed by indemnitor for defense costs].

Crawford v. Weather Shield Mfg. (2008) 44 C.4th 541, 79 C.R.3d 721, 187 P.3d 424, involved the scope of the duty to defend in an indemnity provision between a contractor and subcontractor. Homeowners sued the contractor and subcontractor for construction defects, and the contractor cross-complained against the subcontractor for indemnity and defense under the indemnity provision, requiring the subcontractor to indemnify the contractor for damages arising from the execution of the subcontractor's work and to defend "any suit or action" brought against the contractor "founded upon" a claim of such damages. The jury found that the subcontractor was not negligent, but in a separate proceeding on the cross-complaint, the trial court ordered the subcontractor to pay attorneys' fees the contractor had incurred. Held, affirmed.

(a) Parties to a construction contract may define their duties toward one another, may require one party to indemnify the other, and may assign one party the responsibility for the other's legal defense against third-party claims. These agreements are construed under the same rules as other contracts, but C.C. 2782 imposes some absolute limits on the enforceability of noninsurance indemnity agreements in the construction industry. C.C. 2778 (text, p. 222) sets forth general rules for the interpretation of indemnity contracts, including the defense obligations of indemnitors. (44 C.4th 551.)

(b) Here, the parties' agreement expressly obligated the subcontractor to defend, from the outset, any action against the contractor founded on the subcontractor's negligent role in the construction, even if it was later determined in the same litigation that the subcontractor was not negligent. (44 C.4th 553.) Under C.C. 2778(3) and 2778(4), the indemnitor's duty to defend is different from an obligation, after the fact, to pay defense costs another has incurred. (44 C.4th 554.) By specifying a duty to defend, C.C. 2778(4) places in every indemnity contract, unless the agreement provides otherwise, a duty to assume the indemnitee's defense, if tendered, against all claims embraced by the indemnity. (44 C.4th 557.) The agreement here did not limit the subcontractor's duty to defend only to those claims to which the subcontractor ultimately owed indemnity. (44 C.4th 558.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

c. Express Indemnity.

3. Void Clauses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 121

[§ 121] Void Clauses.

(1) Indemnification for Illegal Acts. An agreement to indemnify against an act to be done later is void, if the indemnitee knows the act is unlawful at the time of doing it. (C.C. 2773; see Arntz Contracting Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 464, 486, 54 C.R.2d 888 [indemnification of surety's settlement costs was properly denied where costs were attributable to obligee's direct action against surety for wilful malfeasance in managing property, and malfeasance was unrelated to any wrongdoing by principal].) However, an agreement to indemnify against an act already done is valid, even though the act was known to be unlawful, unless it was a felony. (C.C. 2774.)

(2) Indemnification for Negligence in Construction Contracts. Subject to specified exceptions (see C.C. 2782.1 et seq., 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §667), a provision in a construction contract is void and unenforceable if it purports to indemnify against liability for injuries arising from the sole negligence or wilful misconduct of the promisee, or for defects in design furnished by the promisee. (C.C. 2782(a).) Also void are provisions in construction contracts with public agencies that purport to relieve the agency from liability for its active negligence. (C.C. 2782(b).) (See B. & P.C. 7034(a) [prohibiting licensed contractor from inserting in contract a provision violative of C.C. 2782]; Ins.C. 11580.04 [invalidating additional insured indorsement for benefit of public agency that purports to provide indemnity coverage for agency's active negligence where an indemnity agreement would be invalid under C.C. 2782(b)]; C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d, §2.54; 32 McGeorge L. Rev. 1019 [interpretation of express contractual indemnity provisions in construction contracts]; 8 Pacific L. J. 209; 68 A.L.R.3d 7 [liability of subcontractor on agreement indemnifying general contractor against liability for damage to person or property].)

(3) Indemnification for Negligence in Hauling, Trucking, or Cartage Contracts. A provision in a hauling, trucking, or cartage contract is void and unenforceable if it purports to indemnify the promisee against liability for damages arising out of bodily injury or death or property damage caused by the sole negligence or wilful misconduct of the promisee. (C.C. 2784.5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Indemnification for Negligence in Construction Contracts.

See C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts, Defects, and Litigation, §2.52 (replacing C.E.B., Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d); 39 McGeorge L. Rev. 407 [type I indemnity agreements in construction contracts].

(New) Residential construction contracts: Agreements affecting residential construction contracts that purport to require a subcontractor to insure or indemnify the builder, or a general or other contractor not affiliated with the builder, against liability for claims of construction defects or other injury to property are unenforceable where the claims (a) arise from the negligence of the builder or contractor or its other agents, servants, or independent contractors who are directly responsible to the builder or contractor, (b) are for defects in design furnished by those persons, or (c) are unrelated to the scope of work in the agreement. These requirements may not be waived or modified. (C.C. 2782(c), added in 2005 and amended in 2008.) However, a subcontractor and the builder or contractor may mutually agree to the timing or immediacy of the defense and the reimbursement of defense fees and costs so long as the agreement does not constitute a waiver or modification. (C.C. 2782(d), added in 2005.)

A subcontractor does not owe a defense or indemnity obligation to a builder or contractor for a construction defect claim unless a written tender is provided. If a claim is tendered, the subcontractor may (a) defend the claim with counsel of its choice, or (b) pay a reasonable allocated share of the defense costs and fees within 30 days. (C.C. 2782(d), as amended in 2008.) If the subcontractor fails to perform, the contractor or builder may pursue a claim against it. (C.C. 2782(e), as amended in 2008.) For this purpose, "construction defect" is a violation of the standards set forth in C.C. 896, 897 (see text, §§1163, 1164). (C.C. 2782(h), added in 2008.)

A builder, contractor, or subcontractor may seek equitable indemnity for claims involving residential construction contracts. (C.C. 2782(f), added in 2008.)

Agreements affecting residential construction contracts to which wrap-up insurance policies (covering the risks associated with construction projects) are applicable are unenforceable to the extent they require a subcontractor to indemnify or defend another for a covered claim or action arising out of the project. However, if the contract is deemed unenforceable, the parties may pursue an equitable indemnity claim. (C.C. 2782.9, added in 2008). (On requirements for a wrap-up insurance policy covering a residential construction project, see C.C. 2782.95, added in 2008.)(4) (New) Indemnification of Public Agency by Design Professional. A provision in a contract with a public agency for design professional services that requires indemnification of the agency by the design professional for claims against the agency is unenforceable, except for claims concerning negligence, recklessness, or wilful misconduct of the design professional. This prohibition may not be waived or modified. Design professionals include, for these purposes, licensed architects, licensed landscape architects, registered professional engineers, licensed professional land surveyors, and related business entities. (C.C. 2782.8, added in 2006.)

c. Express Indemnity.

4. Distinction Between Active and Passive Negligence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 122

[§ 122] Distinction Between Active and Passive Negligence.

Even if a claim rests on express contract, the claimant's active participation in the wrongful act may preclude recovery. (Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon (1975) 13 C.3d 622, 628, 629, 119 C.R. 449, 532 P.2d 97.) On the other hand, an express indemnity clause, although in general terms, will furnish additional support for a claim by an indemnitee only passively negligent. Thus, in Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129, contractors negligently installed a defective guardrail and the owners negligently failed to inspect and discover the dangerous condition. Both were liable to the plaintiff injured by a fall, but the mere "nonfeasance" of the owners was not a bar to their claim against the contractors on the agreement to "hold Owner harmless ... in any suit at law for damages which might arise in connection with the agreed work." (66 C.2d 961.)

Despite criticism of its uncertainty (see 22 Hastings L. J. 1207), the distinction between active and passive negligence, and its consequences, were retained in Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon, supra, with the important qualification that the parties' intent expressed in the contract controls. An owner of real property employed a contractor to construct a sewage pump station and sewer lines in conformity with plans furnished by the owner. In the contract, the contractor agreed to indemnify the owner against all claims for damages arising out of the work, and to name the owner as an additional insured in its insurance policy. Two employees of the contractor were working in an unshored trench when it caved in, killing one and injuring the other. A personal injury and wrongful death action was brought against the owner and the judgment was paid by the owner and its insurer. The owner then brought this action against the contractor and its insurer, seeking indemnity on the theory that its negligence was only passive (failing to discover that the contractor's employees intended to enter an unshored trench). The trial judge agreed and gave judgment for the owner. Held, affirmed.

(a) The indemnity clause was a general one under MacDonald & Kruse v. San Jose Steel Co. (1972) 29 C.A.3d 413, 419, 105 C.R. 725, supra, §119, and plaintiff indemnitee can therefore recover if it was only passively negligent. (13 C.3d 629.)

(b) The contractor contended that the owner was actively negligent because it had plans prepared and supervision performed by an engineering firm, and also conducted other activities in the area causing earth vibrations. But the trial judge, on conflicting evidence, concluded that the owner had no supervisory personnel at the site when the accident occurred, and had no knowledge of the employees' intention to enter the unshored trench, and that the cave-in was not caused by defective plans or earth vibrations. This determination, that the owner's negligence was passive, must be sustained. (13 C.3d 631.)

(c) However, "we do not employ the active-passive dichotomy as wholly dispositive of this or any other case." (13 C.3d 632.) The pragmatic approach of Harvey Machine Co. v. Hatzel & Buehler (1960) 54 C.2d 445, 6 C.R. 284, 353 P.2d 924, gives full effect to the intent of the parties: "Thus, while adhering to the underlying distinction between active and passive negligence which has long been accepted by the bench, the bar, and the insurance industry, we hold that, as declared in Harvey, the question whether an indemnity agreement covers a given case turns primarily on contractual interpretation, and it is the intent of the parties as expressed in the agreement that should control. When the parties knowingly bargain for the protection at issue, the protection should be afforded. This requires an inquiry into the circumstances of the damage or injury and the language of the contract; of necessity, each case will turn on its own facts." (13 C.3d 633.) (See Jimenez v. Pacific Western Const. Co. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 102, 113, 229 C.R. 575 [criticizing Rossmoor dictum that finding of active negligence on part of indemnitee may be based solely on its knowledge of indemnitor's negligent act or omission]; Morton Thiokol v. Metal Bldg. Alteration Co. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1025, 1029, 1030, 238 C.R. 722 [following Rossmoor qualification and holding indemnity proper notwithstanding jury's finding of indemnitee's "active" negligence]; Rooz v. Kimmel (1997) 55 C.A.4th 573, 581, 64 C.R.2d 177 [following Rossmoor qualification and holding that indemnity agreement applied to both active and passive negligence]; 16 Pacific L. J. 767.)

See McCrary Const. Co. v. Metal Deck Specialists (2005) 133 C.A.4th 1528, 1537, 35 C.R.3d 624 [provision calling for indemnification for liabilities "on account of, or related to, any act or omission" of indemnitor was general indemnity clause, not addressing issue of indemnitee's negligence, and would not be interpreted to provide indemnity if indemnitee was actively negligent unless circumstances of case or language of contract evinced different intent; following Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon (1975) 13 C.3d 622, 119 C.R. 449, 532 P.2d 97, text, p. 224].

I. INTRODUCTION

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

c. Express Indemnity.

5. Implied Indemnity Despite Express Clause.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 123

[§ 123] Implied Indemnity Despite Express Clause.

An express indemnity clause, rather than the equitable principles behind comparative indemnity, governs the scope of any duty to indemnify. Thus, the indemnitee under an express contract is precluded from obtaining comparative equitable indemnity from the indemnitor. In Regional Steel Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 525, 32 C.R.2d 417, McCarthy was the general contractor on a project to erect a college science building, and Regional was a subcontractor. The subcontract contained a provision requiring Regional to indemnify others only to the extent that damage was "cause in whole" by the negligence of someone employed by or under the control of Regional. An employee of Regional who was injured after being knocked from a truck by McCarthy's crane, brought an action against McCarthy, and McCarthy cross-complained against Regional for equitable indemnity. Held, Regional was not subject to the claim. "The 'caused in whole' indemnity clause precludes joint tortfeasor liability. By contract, McCarthy bargained away its right to pursue Regional on equitable indemnity grounds. Because Regional's duty is limited by contract and McCarthy did not sue on the contract, Regional was entitled to summary judgment." (25 C.A.4th 529.)

However, the indemnitor under a contract is not necessarily precluded from obtaining comparative equitable indemnity from the indemnitee if the duties established by that contract are inapplicable to the particular facts giving rise to the liability. In E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C.3d 497, 146 C.R. 614, 579 P.2d 505, defendant city contracted with White to construct public improvements including a storm drain. White engaged subcontractor B & T to do the storm drain. B & T dug a trench, negligently failing to comply with safety orders, and city's inspectors observed the violation but took no action. A trench wall collapsed, killing one worker and injuring another, and personal injury and wrongful death judgments were recovered against city and White, and affirmed on appeal. Before the trial, city and its carriers sued White, its carrier, and B & T, seeking declaratory and other relief based on its contract with White under which White agreed to indemnify the city from claims arising out of performance. Judgment was in favor of White on the ground that city's negligence was active and that indemnity under the contract provision was precluded. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. Then White and its carrier filed the present action for implied indemnity against city for the sums paid on the personal injury and wrongful death judgments. City's general demurrer was sustained. Held, judgment of dismissal on demurrer reversed.

(a) The rules governing express indemnity reflect its contractual nature, permitting great freedom of action to the parties, subject to established rules of construction and limitations of public policy. (21 C.3d 507.) (1) The parties may, by sufficiently specific language, establish a duty to indemnify the indemnitee from the results of even active negligence (see supra, §122). But in the absence of that language the provision will be construed to provide indemnity only if the indemnitee has been no more than passively negligent. (21 C.3d 507.) (2) Even where an indemnitee has been only passively negligent the indemnitee may be precluded if the contract provides indemnity only from acts of the indemnitor and not from those of others (see supra, §119). (3) A provision that specifically excepts from its scope any negligence on the part of the indemnitee will be construed only to preclude indemnity to the indemnitee but may give rise to an implied right of indemnity in the indemnitor. (21 C.3d 507.) (4) An express indemnity clause is accorded a certain preemptive effect, displacing implied indemnity that might otherwise arise. (21 C.3d 508.) However, where the express contractual indemnity is in terms inapplicable to the factual setting, implied indemnity may come into play. (21 C.3d 508, 509.)

(b) These principles are applicable here. The decision in the prior action by city against White was that the express provision did not create an obligation of White to hold city harmless, in view of its active negligence; and city is collaterally estopped to challenge this determination. Hence, the preemptive effect of the express clause--which might have been applicable if city had been only passively negligent--did not apply. Accordingly, it was error to sustain the demurrer, and the trial judge must determine the issue under the facts presented at trial, in the light of American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, infra, §1357. (21 C.3d 510.) (See Maryland Cas. Co. v. Bailey & Sons (1995) 35 C.A.4th 856, 874, 41 C.R.2d 519 [where indemnity agreement specified circumstances under which subcontractor was entitled to indemnity from general contractor, but was silent as to whether general contractor was entitled to indemnification from subcontractor, general contractor could state cause of action for equitable indemnity; following E.L. White].)

C. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors.

6. Indemnity.

c. Express Indemnity.

6. Effect of Indemnatee's Settlement of Underlying Claim.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 124

[§ 124] Effect of Indemnatee's Settlement of Underlying Claim.

In Peter Culley & Associates v. Superior Court (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1484, 13 C.R.2d 624, the developer of a condominium project retained an architect, which in turn hired a structural engineer as a consultant on foundation design. By contract, the engineer agreed to defend, indemnify, and hold blameless the architect for and against all loss, damage, injury or liability, real or alleged, resulting from the engineer's negligent performance of services. When the architect sued the developer to collect fees owed on the project, the developer cross-complained, alleging that design flaws had caused delay and increased construction costs. The engineer was not a party to the action between the developer and the architect, having declined the architect's tender of defense of the cross-complaint. The developer and the architect settled the cross-complaint for $ 225,000-$ 200,000 of which was to cover the risk of liability associated with the engineer's foundation design work. After the architect assigned to the developer its indemnity rights against the engineer, the developer instituted the present action against the engineer to enforce the indemnity agreement. On the issue whether the architect had properly tendered the defense of the cross-complaint to the engineer, the jury found that the tender was proper. On the issue whether the architect's alleged active negligence barred indemnity, the trial judge granted nonsuit against the engineer because it had failed to present any expert testimony on standard of care. On the issue whether the settlement was made in good faith, the trial judge, citing C.C.P. 877.6 (supra, §83), found that the settlement, including the allocation of $ 200,000 to the foundation issue, was in good faith and was conclusive against the engineer. Citing C.C.P. 877.6(e) (supra, §86), the engineer sought mandamus. Held, writ granted, directing the trial judge to vacate the good faith settlement order and to conduct further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

(a) Mandamus is proper remedy. C.C.P. 877.6(e), which allows a party aggrieved by a good faith determination to seek review by mandamus, does not apply where, as here, the good faith determination was made to enforce a contractual indemnity right. C.C.P. 877.6 is designed to deal with equitable indemnity claims among multiple defendants in the same case where expedited review facilitates continuation of the action against nonsettling defendants. However, mandamus is a proper remedy under the general writ authority stated in C.C.P. 1086 (8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §6), because appeal is not an adequate remedy under the peculiar facts of this case. The proceedings below, as well as the channels for review, have become confused by a blurring of the distinctions between C.C.P. 877.6 proceedings and proceedings to enforce contractual indemnity rights. Without intervention at this stage, reversal on appeal seems inevitable. (10 C.A.4th 1490.)

(b) Nature of C.C.P. 877.6 procedure.

(1) C.C.P. 877.6 provides a defensive procedure by which a settling joint tortfeasor may extricate himself from a lawsuit and bar actions for equitable indemnity by the remaining joint tortfeasors. (10 C.A.4th 1488.) Hence, had the developer named the engineer as a defendant on its cross-complaint against the architect, the architect, as a settling defendant, could have used C.C.P. 877.6 procedures defensively against the engineer. However, because the original action was a two-party action involving only the developer and the architect, C.C.P. 877.6 procedures did not come into play, i.e., neither party could have contested its own settlement. Consequently, the parties' focus shifted to the role that the settlement would play in any subsequent indemnity action against the engineer. (10 C.A.4th 1491.)

(2) The record does not reveal why the trial judge used C.C.P. 877.6 to decide the issue of good faith, but it does demonstrate at least one problem. During the proceedings, the judge correctly stated that the burden of proof in the indemnity action was on the developer. However, in his written order determining that the settlement was made in good faith, he incorrectly assigned the burden of proof to the engineer, apparently because the engineer was the party that would have the burden, under C.C.P. 877.6(d), of proving lack of good faith. (10 C.A.4th 1498.)

(c) Meaning of C.C. 2778(5). C.C. 2778(5) (supra, §120) provides that if the indemnitor refuses a request to defend the indemnitee, a recovery against the indemnitee suffered in good faith is conclusive in the indemnitee's action against the indemnitor. Based on the juxtaposition of the term "good faith" with the words "is conclusive," the developer argues that a good faith determination in a contractual indemnity action has the same conclusive effect as a good faith determination in a C.C.P. 877.6 proceeding. However, insofar as C.C. 2778(5) makes a "recovery" suffered in good faith conclusive, "the statute refers only to a recovery by judgment against the indemnitee." (10 C.A.4th 1495.) This construction is based on the following grounds:

(1) C.C. 2778(5) neither defines "recovery" nor mentions how a settlement would affect enforcement of an indemnity agreement. And the wording of the statute does not, in itself, support the developer's construction, i.e., a negotiated settlement is not normally thought to have been "suffered" by an indemnitee. (10 C.A.4th 1495.)

(2) More importantly, the developer's construction is inconsistent with the following principle enunciated in Isaacson v. California Ins. Guarantee Assn. (1988) 44 C.3d 775, 244 C.R. 655, 750 P.2d 297, and Lamb v. Belt Cas. Co. (1935) 3 C.A.2d 624, 40 P.2d 311: " '[I]f an insurer wrongfully fails to provide coverage or a defense, and the insured then settles the claim, the insured is given the benefit of an evidentiary presumption. In a later action against the insurer for reimbursement based on a breach of its contractual duty to defend the action, a reasonable settlement made by the insured to terminate the underlying claim against him ... may be used as presumptive evidence of the insured's liability on the underlying claim, and the amount of such liability.' " (10 C.A.4th 1493, quoting Isaacson.)

(3) None of the decisions addressing C.C. 2778(5) conflicts with the construction adopted here. Although no case has discussed the effect of a settlement on an action for indemnity, the decisions have consistently equated "recovery" with judgment after trial. (10 C.A.4th 1496, citing Parra v. Traeger (1931) 214 C. 535, 6 P. 941, and numerous other decisions.)

(d) Lamb and Isaacson controlling. The developer cites several cases as establishing that a settlement in good faith is conclusive on all issues. However, none of these cases enforced the indemnity contract merely because the indemnitee had settled. Hence, none conflicts with the interpretation of C.C. 2778(5) adopted here, i.e., that only a judgment against the indemnitee is entitled to conclusive effect in a subsequent action against the indemnitor. When the indemnitee settles without trial, the principles of Lamb and Isaacson apply. "Pursuant to those principles, the indemnitee must show that liability is covered by the contract, that liability existed, and the extent thereof. The settlement is presumptive evidence of liability of the indemnitee and of the amount of liability, but it may be overcome by proof from the indemnitor that the settlement was unreasonable." (10 C.A.4th 1497.)

(1) Actions to enforce indemnity agreements are governed by rules developed primarily in insurance and construction cases, the paramount of which is that the extent of the duty to indemnify must be determined from the contract, instead of by reliance on the doctrine of equitable indemnity. (10 C.A.4th 1492, citing Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon (1975) 13 C.3d 622, 119 C.R. 449, 532 P.2d 97.)

(2) Here, the indemnity clause requires the engineer to defend and indemnify the architect for all loss, etc., resulting from the engineer's negligence, and the parties differ in their interpretation of it. The developer argues that it requires the engineer to defend and indemnify whenever there is an allegation of negligence, whereas the engineer argues that actual negligence is required. If the developer is correct, the architect's settlement with the developer would be presumptive evidence that the architect was liable to the developer in the amount of the settlement. But if the engineer is correct, the effect of the settlement would be a factor only if the engineer's actual negligence were proven. (10 C.A.4th 1494.)

(3) Hence, the trial judge should have determined whether the architect's "liability," as established by the settlement, was of the type covered by the indemnity clause before considering whether the settlement showed the architect's liability in fact. However, perhaps because of preoccupation with the questions of good faith and the possible application of C.C.P. 877.6, the trial judge evidently never decided which party's interpretation was correct. (10 C.A.4th 1494.)

(f) Effect of allocation in settlement.

(1) In this case, the allocation of the settlement is at least as important as the total amount of the settlement, because it is undisputed that the engineer's obligation as the indemnitor extends only to damages arising out of its design work on the building's foundation. However, neither the developer nor the architect had a motivation to allocate other than a high amount to this work. The developer, as possessor of the indemnification rights, would benefit from a high allocation, and a high allocation would not in any way be detrimental to the architect, which would pay the full settlement amount of $ 225,000 regardless of how the settlement was allocated. (10 C.A.4th 1497.)

(2) "We have found no case addressing the situation presented here. We find, however, no justification for giving presumptive effect to an allocation that is not the product of adverse negotiation. A presumption that the parties have reasonably allocated a settlement amount between issues in the action should be reserved for a settlement by parties with truly adverse interests in the allocation. ... Where the parties have purported to settle an imaginary dispute over allocation, that allocation should be given no special treatment in an indemnity action. Plaintiff should be required to prove the reasonableness of its proposed allocation by ordinary means." (10 C.A.4th 1498.)

(g) Role of good faith.

(1) To summarize, in a contractual indemnity action the indemnitee must prove that liability is covered by the contract, that liability existed, and the extent of that liability. A settlement in a prior action is merely presumptive evidence of liability and the amount thereof, and this evidence may be overcome by the indemnitor's proof that the settlement was unreasonable. (10 C.A.4th 1498.)

(2) "All these matters are determined at trial. The court holds no separate good faith hearing to confirm the settlement. In fact, in an indemnity action, the critical issue is not good faith, but reasonableness. ... In ruling on the reasonableness of a settlement, the court may consider any relevant evidence, including evidence tending to show the presence or absence of good faith as that term is applied" in Tech-Bilt v. Woodward-Clyde & Associates (1985) 38 C.3d 488, 213 C.R. 256, 698 P.2d 159, supra, §79. (10 C.A.4th 1498.) (See Mel Clayton Ford v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 46, 54, 127 C.R.2d 759 [where agreement provides for indemnification only where indemnitee is not negligent, indemnitee must prove absence of negligence and cannot use, offensively, good faith settlement in underlying action to establish amount owed by indemnitor; relying on Peter Culley]; Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co. (2003)

c. Express Indemnity.

7. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 125

[§ 125] Illustrations.

(1) Clause Sufficient. Express indemnity clauses have often been enforced. The following cases are illustrative:

Herman Christensen & Sons v. Paris Plastering Co. (1976) 61 C.A.3d 237, 249, 132 C.R. 86 [passive negligence of indemnitee does not bar indemnity]; Gonzales v. R.J. Novick Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 798, 809, 144 C.R. 408, 575 P.2d 1190 [same].

Continental Heller Corp. v. Amtech Mechanical Services (1997) 53 C.A.4th 500, 504, 508, 61 C.R.2d 668 [subcontractor's promise to indemnify contractor for loss arising out of or connected with subcontractor's acts or omissions did not require that loss be caused by subcontractor's fault or that its performance be substantial factor in loss; clause also allowed contractor to recover attorneys' fees it expended in fighting claims against it, while another clause allowed it to be indemnified for attorneys' fees it expended in enforcing indemnity contract].

Centex Golden Const. Co. v. Dale Tile Co. (2000) 78 C.A.4th 992, 997, 93 C.R.2d 259 [subcontractor's promise to indemnify contractor "with respect to all work which is covered by or incidental to this subcontract" did not require negligence on subcontractor's part; citing Continental Heller Corp. v. Amtech Mechanical Services].

In Hernandez v. Badger Const. Equipment Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1791, 34 C.R.2d 732, plaintiff was injured in an accident involving a crane that was manufactured by one defendant and leased to plaintiff's employer by another. Plaintiff recovered workers' compensation benefits from his employer (thereby rendering the employer immune from suit) and obtained judgment against the lessee and the manufacturer. Fault was apportioned as follows: plaintiff, 5%; the employer, 55%; the manufacturer, 20%; the lessee, 20%. The rental agreement between the employer and the lessee contained a provision under which the employer agreed to indemnify the lessee against any liability resulting from injury to plaintiff that was in any way caused by the employer and occasioned by use of the crane. Because the lessee was actively negligent, the judgment declared that the employer was not required to indemnify the lessee for the lessee's liability to plaintiff. Held, this portion of the judgment must be reversed; the lessee's active negligence did not preclude enforcement of the indemnity agreement.

(a) Although an indemnitee's active negligence may ordinarily preclude its recovery under a general indemnity agreement, Rossmoor Sanitation v. Pylon (1975) 13 C.3d 622, 119 C.R. 449, 532 P.2d 97, expressly held that the applicability of an indemnity agreement turns on contractual interpretation, instead of on a mechanical application of the active-passive dichotomy. (28 C.A.4th 1820.) Moreover, this more flexible approach is more in accord with the evolving and presumably more equitable trend toward allocating liability in proportion to comparative fault. (28 C.A.4th 1823.)

(b) Reasonably read, the contractual indemnity language here did not obligate the employer to indemnify the lessee for the lessee's own negligence. However, reasonably construed, the language did obligate the employer to indemnify the lessee for the portion of the lessee's liability attributable to the employer's fault. That interpretation is consistent with the lessee's reasonable expectation that it would be indemnified for liability arising from the negligence of the employer. Thus, despite its 20% active negligence, the lessee was contractually entitled to indemnification from the employer for the portion of plaintiffs' joint and several economic damage award attributable to the employer's 55% negligence that is ultimately paid by C. (28 C.A.4th 1822.)

In United Services Auto. Assn. v. Snappy Car Rental (1999) 74 C.A.4th 461, 87 C.R.2d 742, two insureds were injured while driving a rental car, and their insurer paid their claims. The insurer then filed a subrogation claim against the rental car company, and the company sought indemnification against the insureds for the costs and attorneys' fees expended in defense of that claim. Held, indemnification was required. The insureds had signed a clause stating that they would indemnify the rental car company "from all claims, liabilities and expenses for bodily injury, death or property damage, arising out of the use, operation, or possession" of the rental car during the rental period. The insurer's claims fell directly into the category of expenses for bodily injury or property damage arising from the use or operation of the rental vehicle. (74 C.A.4th 464.)

(2) Clause Insufficient. The following cases illustrate circumstances in which express indemnity provisions may be invalid or inapplicable:

Goldman v. Ecco-Phoenix Elec. Corp. (1964) 62 C.2d 40, 41 C.R. 73, 46, 396 P.2d 377 [indemnity against promisee's own negligence cannot rest on vague and ambiguous language].

MacDonald & Kruse v. San Jose Steel Co. (1972) 29 C.A.3d 413, 423, 105 C.R. 725, supra, §119 [promise to indemnify "from any cause whatsoever" does not constitute express and unequivocal reference to indemnitee's own negligence].

Los Angeles v. Japan Air Lines Co. (1974) 41 C.A.3d 416, 428, 116 C.R. 69 [promise to indemnify city for all liability arising from airlines' operations did not include liability based on inverse condemnation].

Guy F. Atkinson Co. v. Schatz (1980) 102 C.A.3d 351, 357, 359, 161 C.R. 436 [promise to indemnify for all liability arising from indemnitor's performance of its duties, unless due solely to indemnitee's negligence, did not apply to liability based on indemnitee's active negligence, even though indemnitor was itself passively negligent].

Armco Steel Corp. v. Roy H. Cox Co. (1980) 103 C.A.3d 929, 934, 936, 163 C.R. 330 [promise to indemnify for all claims for injury or death, however caused and even though due to indemnitee's negligence, was general clause not covering indemnitee's active negligence].

Widson v. International Harvester Co. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 45, 58, 200 C.R. 136 [general clause inapplicable where indemnitee, in addition to being guilty of passive negligence, was also liable on strict liability grounds].

Building Maintenance Service Co. v. AIL Systems (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1014, 1021, 64 C.R.2d 353 [indemnitee was not entitled to indemnity for attorneys' fees that it expended in defending indemnitor's cross-complaint].

Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co. (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1265, 1275, 87 C.R.2d 497 [no obligation to indemnify where language contained in preprinted subcontracts did not evidence mutual understanding that subcontractors would indemnify general contractor even if their work was not negligent].

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. American Dynasty Surplus Lines Ins. Co. (2002) 101 C.A.4th 1038, 1049, 124 C.R.2d 818 [subcontractor was not required to indemnify contractor, where indemnity clause expressly referred to injury from work arising out of subcontract, and injury was caused by unrelated work; injured employee's mere presence at site where subcontract was to be performed was insufficient to trigger indemnity clause].

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

1. Consent.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 126

[§ 126] In General.

The maxim "volenti non fit injuria" is expressed in C.C. 3515: "He who consents to an act is not wronged by it." Consent is generally a complete defense to tort liability. (See Churchill v. Baumann (1892) 95 C. 541, 544, 30 P. 770 [plaintiff participated with defendants in alleged tortious diversion of water]; Rest.2d, Torts §892A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §95 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §1.11; 2 California Affirmative Defenses, §32:1 et seq.; 47 Hastings L. J. 635 [contracting against liability]; 19 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 949 [applicability of consent doctrine to actions based on religiously motivated conduct]; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §46.) But it must be free, and not, e.g., rendered under duress or incapacity. (Rest.2d, Torts §§58, 59.)

Consent may take a number of forms, including the following:

(1) Express advance contractual release or waiver of liability for ordinary negligence. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §660.)

(2) Voluntary assumption of risk of injury from certain dangers inherent in the defendant's activity. (See infra, §1281 et seq.)

(3) Voluntary participation or acquiescence in acts otherwise amounting to an intentional tort such as battery. (See infra, §386 et seq.)

(4) Prevention of defendant's precautionary acts. Thus, in Edward Brown & Sons v. San Francisco (1950) 36 C.2d 272, 223 P.2d 231, water in a defective side sewer backed up and flooded plaintiff's basement offices. But defendant city's agent had been told at the time of the first seepage that plaintiff did not want repairs made in wintertime. Held, C.C. 3515 applied, and the damage that resulted from plaintiff's own inaction could not be charged to the city. (36 C.2d 279.)

(5) Patient's consent to withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining procedures. (See infra, §127 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

1. Consent.

b. Withholding of Life-Sustaining Treatment.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 127

[§ 127] In General.

(1) Under Advance Statutory Directive. The Natural Death Act (former Health & Saf.C. 7185 et seq.), enacted in 1976 and substantially revised in 1991, addressed the right to make advance decisions regarding the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment. The Natural Death Act, together with the statutes regarding durable powers of attorney for health care in the Power of Attorney Law (see 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §873 et seq.), were repealed in 1999 (effective July 1, 2000) and replaced by the Health Care Decisions Law (Prob.C. 4600 et seq.). The Health Care Decisions Law, prescribing the requisites and effect of "advance health care directives," is treated in detail in 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §876 et seq. (For the Uniform Determination of Death Act (Health & Saf.C. 7180 et seq.), see 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §§11, 12.)

(2) Independent of Statutory Directive. Even in the absence of an advance directive under the prescribed statutory procedure (see supra, §126), a "competent, informed adult, in the exercise of self-determination and control of bodily integrity, has the right to direct the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining medical treatment, even at the risk of death, which ordinarily outweighs any countervailing state interest. The right does not depend upon the nature of the treatment refused or withdrawn; nor is it reserved to those suffering from terminal conditions. Once a patient has declined further medical intervention, the physician's duty to provide such care ceases." (Thor v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 725, 744, 21 C.R.2d 357, 855 P.2d 375, infra, §129; see Barber v. Superior Court (1983) 147 C.A.3d 1006, 1015, 195 C.R. 484 [doctors who complied with family requests to remove life-sustaining equipment could not be found guilty of murder]; In re Christopher I. (2003) 106 C.A.4th 533, 548, 131 C.R.2d 122 [Juvenile Court's authority under Welf.C. 362(a) (10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §633) to make decisions regarding medical treatment for dependent children within its jurisdiction includes decisions to refuse or withdraw life-sustaining medical treatment]; 17 Southwestern L. Rev. 109 [Barber].)

The right is a corollary of the common law doctrine of informed consent to medical treatment (see infra, §388 et seq.). It has also been based on the liberty interest in the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and on the state constitutional right of privacy, i.e., the freedom to choose to reject intrusions on bodily integrity. (See Bartling v. Superior Court (1984) 163 C.A.3d 186, 193, 209 C.R. 220; Bouvia v. Superior Court (1986) 179 C.A.3d 1127, 1137, 225 C.R. 297; Donaldson v. Lungren (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1614, 1617, 1620, 4 C.R.2d 59, infra, §128.) However, the right to die may be legislatively restricted in proper circumstances. (See Cruzan v. Director, Missouri Dept. of Health (1990) 497 U.S. 261, 110 S.Ct. 2841, 2847, 111 L.Ed.2d 224, 237, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §571.)

A patient may assert this right over the objections of the caregiver. "[I]f the right of the patient to self-determination as to his own medical treatment is to have any meaning at all, it must be paramount to the interests of the patient's hospital and doctors." (Bartling v. Superior Court, supra, 163 C.A.3d 195; see 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 100 [Bartling].)

The patient's motive, such as to commit suicide, is irrelevant. "If a right exists, it matters not what 'motivates' its exercise. We find nothing in the law to suggest the right to refuse medical treatment may be exercised only if the patient's motives meet someone else's approval. It certainly is not illegal or immoral to prefer a natural, albeit sooner, death than a drugged life attached to a mechanical device." (Bouvia v. Superior Court 179 C.A.3d 1145; see 18 Pacific L. J. 1029 [Bouvia].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

1. Consent.

b. Withholding of Life-Sustaining Treatment.

2. Assisted Suicide.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 128

[§ 128] Assisted Suicide.

In Donaldson v. Lungren (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1614, 1617, 4 C.R.2d 59, D suffered from an incurable tumor that would result in a persistent vegetative state and probable death within 5 years. D and M brought an action for declaratory and injunctive relief against the Attorney General, the district attorney, and the county coroner, seeking (1) a declaration that D had a constitutional right to premortem cryogenic suspension and the assistance of others in achieving that state; (2) an injunction against criminal prosecution of M and others for participating in the act; and (3) an injunction against the coroner from performing an autopsy on D's body. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) A person has a constitutionally protected interest in refusing unwanted medical treatment or procedures. To determine whether D has suffered a violation of his constitutional rights, the court "must balance his interests against any relevant state interests. ... Pertinent state interests include preserving human life, preventing suicide, protecting innocent third parties such as children, and maintaining the ethical integrity of the medical profession. ... The state may also decline to assess the quality of a particular human life and assert an unqualified general interest in the preservation of human life to be balanced against the individual's constitutional rights." (2 C.A.4th 1620.)

(b) "Decisions regarding the right to refuse life-sustaining treatment, including hydration and nourishment, distinguish between artificial life support in the face of inevitable death and self-infliction of deadly harm (suicide). ... The rationale of these decisions is that natural death from underlying illness is merely forestalled by life support measures." (2 C.A.4th 1621.) There is a significant difference between the patient and doctor and D and M. The patient who is being kept alive by a life-support system has prolonged life and prevented death from taking place; D is asking sanction for something quite different: "Here there are no life-prolonging measures to be discontinued. Instead, a third person will simply kill [D] and hasten the encounter with death. No statute or judicial opinion countenances [D's] decision to consent to be murdered or to commit suicide with the assistance of others." (2 C.A.4th 1622.)

(c) D may take his own life; "[n]o state interest is compromised by allowing [D] to experience a dignified death rather than an excruciatingly painful life." (2 C.A.4th 1622.) But it does not follow that he may implement that right by allowing a third person assisting in the suicide to be immune from investigation by the coroner or law enforcement agencies: "In such a case, the state has a legitimate competing interest in protecting society against abuses. This interest is more significant than merely the abstract interest in preserving life no matter what the quality of that life is. Instead, it is the interest of the state to maintain social order through enforcement of the criminal law and to protect the lives of those who wish to live no matter what their circumstances. This interest overrides any interest [D] possesses in ending his life through the assistance of a third person in violation of the state's penal laws. We cannot expand the nature of [D's] right of privacy to provide a protective shield for third persons who end his life." (2 C.A.4th 1622.)

(d) D argues that constitutional rights do not depend on there being a fail-safe scheme, nor may they be deferred because of the difficulty in devising a procedure to implement them; and it is conceivable to devise a judicial procedure to supervise D's assisted death. But D has no constitutional right to a state-assisted death, and the court may not enjoin public officers from performing official acts that they are required by law to perform. (2 C.A.4th 1623.) "We realize that time is critical to [D], but the legal and philosophical problems posed by his predicament are a legislative matter rather than a judicial one." (2 C.A.4th 1623.)

(e) D also argues that he has a constitutional right to receive advice and encouragement concerning his suicide, and that P.C. 401 (making it a felony to aid, advise, or encourage suicide; see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §101) is unconstitutional. Suicide or attempted suicide is not a crime, but a majority of states impose criminal penalties on one who assists another to commit suicide. One reason is to discourage those who might encourage a suicide to advance personal motives; another is the belief that the sanctity of life is threatened by one who is willing to participate in taking the life of another, even at the victim's request; and a third justification is that, although the suicide victim may be mentally ill, the aider is not necessarily mentally ill. (2 C.A.4th 1624.) "The state's interest in such a situation involves more than just a general commitment to the preservation of human life ... Third parties, even family members, do not always act to protect the person whose life will end." (2 C.A.4th 1624.)

(f) M contends that, because suicide is not illegal, the state may not prohibit speech that encourages it. But regulation of conduct bearing no necessary relation to the freedom to disseminate information or opinion is not constitutionally protected. Hence, "[M] enjoys no constitutional protection for his planned participation in [D's] suicide." (2 C.A.4th 1625.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

1. Consent.

b. Withholding of Life-Sustaining Treatment.

3. Particular Types of Patients.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 129

[§ 129] Particular Types of Patients.

(1) Incompetent Patient. Where an incurable patient has the right to die (see supra, §127) but is incompetent, the patient's conservator, considering medical advice and the conservatee's best interest, may authorize the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment. (Conservatorship of Drabick (1988) 200 C.A.3d 185, 209, 245 C.R. 840, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §996.) However, the conservator may not authorize the withholding or withdrawal from a conscious conservatee who is not terminally ill, comatose, or in a persistent vegetative state, and who has not left formal instructions for health care or appointed an agent or surrogate for health care decisions without clear and convincing evidence that the conservator's decision is in accordance with either the conservatee's own wishes or best interest. (Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 C.4th 519, 530, 110 C.R.2d 412, 28 P.3d 151, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §909.) (On authority of conservator respecting removal of life support generally, see 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §996.)

(2) Victim of Crime. In People v. Adams (1990) 216 C.A.3d 1431, 265 C.R. 568, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §192, a prosecution for murder, defendant shot the victim, inflicting wounds so serious that he died 5 days later. At the trial, the prosecution introduced statements made by the victim 2 days before his death, to the effect that defendant intended to kill him. On the issue of belief in impending death (a condition of admission of a dying declaration), the prosecution introduced evidence that the victim had been advised that, if placed in a respirator, he could have lived "for days or weeks," and that the victim had refused life support. On appeal, defendant contended that his constitutional right of confrontation had been violated by admission of the dying declaration after the victim chose not to prolong his life through artificial life support. Held, the evidence was admissible; a competent adult has a constitutional right to die, and the state had no power, and consequently no duty, to keep him alive to ensure his presence at the preliminary examination. (216 C.A.3d 1439.)

(3) Prisoner. In Thor v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 725, 21 C.R.2d 357, 855 P.2d 375, a state prisoner serving a life term jumped or fell from a wall, fracturing a cervical vertebrae and rendering himself a quadriplegic. He lacked any physical sensation or control of his body below the shoulders, and medical personnel had to assist in the performance of all bodily functions; this condition was irreversible. Petitioner, a licensed physician, attending the prisoner as a staff member of the medical facility, instituted an ex parte proceeding in the superior court seeking an order allowing him to perform a gastrojejunostomy--a surgical operation to permit feeding and medication--notwithstanding the prisoner's refusal to consent to the procedure. Petitioner alleged that unless this procedure was done, the prisoner, who had intermittently rejected both food and necessary medication, would be at substantial risk of death due to possible pulmonary emboli, starvation, infection, and renal failure. Petitioner argued that he had a duty to force-feed and provide other nonconsensual medical treatment because the prisoner, although competent, was in petitioner's custodial care, and unless permitted to provide such care, petitioner could be subject to possible civil and criminal liability. Held, the prisoner had the right to refuse.

(a) Ex parte and summary procedure criticized and limited. The ex parte and summary nature of the hearing below, which does not appear to have been precipitated by any actual emergency, has somewhat constrained the court's analysis for lack of a thorough exposition of the facts. "The informality of the procedures did more than potentially compromise the record for review, however: it denied fundamental due process. The unnecessary exclusion of the critical party from meaningful participation in a determination of his right to direct the course of medical treatment contravenes the basic tenets of our judicial system and affronts the principles of individual integrity that sustain it." Accordingly, "except in cases of imminent danger to the life or health of the patient or a similar exigency," any procedure is disapproved "that denies or limits any relevant party access to the proceedings and the opportunity to be heard. In the event such denial or limitation has occurred and thereby impaired review, an appellate court may remand the matter for amplification of the record to safeguard the interests of all concerned." (5 C.4th 733, footnote 2.)

(b) Patient's right to refuse life-sustaining treatment. While the physician has the professional and ethical responsibility to provide the medical evaluation on which informed consent is predicated, the patient still retains the sole prerogative to make the subjective treatment decision based on an understanding of the circumstances. (5 C.4th 735.) "[W]e find no countervailing state interest in the preservation of life sufficient to sustain a duty on the part of petitioner superseding the right to refuse unwanted medical treatment." The proposed treatment involves a substantial surgical procedure, with the potential not only to cause discomfort and pain but also to create additional risks. And, while it may serve to extend his life, it offers no hope of reversing the affliction, and "remains palliative at best." (5 C.4th 740.) A competent, informed adult has the right to direct the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining medical treatment, even at the risk of death, which ordinarily outweighs any countervailing state interest. (5 C.4th 744.)

(c) Extent to which state prison inmate may make medical decisions.

(1) The need to ensure institutional security may place substantial limitations on a prisoner's ability to exercise the rights of association, expression, privacy and some others. But prison administrative authority is not unqualified: P.C. 2600 (3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §45) provides that a prisoner may be deprived of these rights only to the extent necessary for the reasonable protection of the public. And petitioner has offered no evidence that allowing exercise of the right of self-determination in medical decisions undermines prison integrity or endangers the public. (5 C.4th 745.)

(2) However, "our holding does not imply any attenuation of the deference accorded the experience and expertise of administrative officials in such matters. ... In another case, or in this case if a change of circumstances warrant, we do not preclude prison authorities from establishing the need to override an inmate's choice to decline medical intervention." (5 C.4th 745.) But measures to forestall the untoward consequences of disruptive conduct "must be demonstrably 'reasonable' and 'necessary,' not a matter of conjecture." (5 C.4th 746.)

(3) "Under the facts of this case, we have no occasion to address, and therefore do not decide, any related issues that might arise in the event an otherwise healthy inmate with no underlying affliction engages in a course of conduct for nonmedical reasons, such as a hunger strike, that subsequently necessitates therapeutic intervention to prevent death." (5 C.4th 747, footnote 16.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 637 [Thor].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 131

[§ 131] In General.

(1) Nature of Privilege Defense. Conduct that ordinarily would be tortious is not if it is privileged, i.e., if justified or excused for reasons of policy. (Rest.2d, Torts §10, Comment a; see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §68 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §2.39 et seq., 3.10 et seq.; 2 California Affirmative Defenses, §41:1 et seq.; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Torts §§42, 45.) The difference between a "privilege" limiting liability and an "immunity"[] is largely one of semantics, i.e., a person entitled to claim a privilege as a defense is immune from liability. (Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 C.4th 634, 639, footnote 1, 29 C.R.2d 152, 871 P.2d 204; on evidentiary privileges, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §59 et seq.; on privileged communications in defamation actions, see infra, §561 et seq.; on immunities under Tort Claims Act, see supra, §§222 et seq., 345 et seq.)

(2) Restatement Analysis. The Torts Restatement classifies consent (supra, §126 et seq.) as one of the forms of privilege. (Rest.2d, Torts §10(2)(a).) It is defined as denoting "willingness in fact that an act or an invasion of an interest shall take place." (Rest.2d, Torts §10A.)

Apart from consent, the Restatement groups the various types of privilege into two classes, conditional and absolute:

(a) Conditional privilege. Some interest of the actor or of the public may be important enough to justify the harm, e.g., force used or personal injury inflicted in self-defense or defense of property (see infra, §417 et seq.), and confinement of the person or force used in a lawful arrest by a police officer or private person (see infra, §§424, 434 et seq.). The privilege exists in these cases because of the value of the interest (possession of land, personal security, etc.) to be protected, and it is available only where the person acts in good faith for the protection of the interest. An improper motive or purpose defeats the privilege. Hence, it is characterized as a "defeasible" or "conditional" privilege. (Rest.2d, Torts §10, Comment d; see Gilmore v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 416, 420, 421, 281 C.R. 343, infra, §*420, citing the text [defense of property is conditional privilege].) A conditional privilege is frequently referred to as a "qualified" privilege. (See Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 2900, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, 906, infra, §178.)

(b) Absolute privilege. Certain persons performing public functions require a greater freedom from the annoyance of litigation, and their acts are privileged, regardless of malice or other improper motive. Any inquiry into motive in these cases would unduly hamper their activities. This defense is known as "absolute privilege." (Rest.2d, Torts §10; see infra, §304 et seq.; Easton v. Sutter Coast Hosp. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 485, 492, 95 C.R.2d 316, infra, §150 [privilege for health practitioners' reports of elder abuse required by Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act is absolute]; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 915 [Absolute Immunity from Civil Liability: Lessons for Litigation Lawyers].) (On particular privileges, see Rest.2d, Torts §§888 et seq., 895A et seq. [immunities].)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

b. Emergency Medical Aid.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 132

[§ 132] In General.

At common law, a person not under an affirmative duty to aid another, who nevertheless undertook to do so for humanitarian motives, was subject to liability for failure to act with reasonable care. Thus, a physician who rendered emergency medical care could be sued for malpractice, and this possibility operated as a serious deterrent to rendering needed medical aid in emergency situations. "In response, California, in 1959, became the first state to enact Good Samaritan legislation altering the common law rights and obligations in the medical malpractice area." (Colby v. Schwartz (1978) 78 C.A.3d 885, 890, footnote 3, 144 C.R. 624 ["Currently, all 50 states and the District of Columbia have enacted some type of Good Samaritan legislation"]; on immunity of physicians rendering emergency medical care generally, see infra, §133 et seq.) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §252; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 816; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 641; 4 Pacific L. J. 665; 54 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417; 68 A.L.R.4th 294 [construction and application of Good Samaritan statutes].) A number of other statutes also relate to emergency medical care. (see infra, §§136, 137.)

"No person who in good faith, and not for compensation, renders emergency care at the scene of an emergency shall be liable for any civil damages resulting from any act or omission." However, the "scene of an emergency," for purposes of this provision, "shall not include emergency departments and other places where medical care is usually offered." (Health & Saf.C. 1799.102.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(6)(New) Scope of Statutory Immunity. In Van Horn v. Watson (2008) 45 C.4th 322, 86 C.R.3d 350, 197 P.3d 164, plaintiff, involved in a traffic accident, sued a friend who removed her from the car, alleging that defendant's actions caused permanent injury and rendered her a paraplegic. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant on the ground of statutory immunity under Health & Saf.C. 1799.102. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal affirmed. Defendant was not immune.

(a) Parties' contentions. Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 provides immunity for uncompensated emergency care at the scene of an emergency. Defendant argues that the statute applies broadly to both medical and nonmedical care rendered at the scene of any emergency, while plaintiff argues that the statute applies narrowly to those who render medical care at the scene of a medical emergency. (45 C.4th 327.)

(b) Statutory analysis. Under principles of statutory construction, Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 immunizes only those who, in good faith, render medical care at the scene of a medical emergency. (45 C.4th 327.) A statute providing broad immunity would likely appear in the Civil Code. Instead, Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 appears in the division of the Code entitled "Emergency Medical Services." Other statutes in this division expressly refer to emergency medical attention or care. This indicates that the Legislature intended this entire division to apply to medical emergencies. (45 C.4th 327.) Under Health & Saf.C. 1797.70, an "emergency" is a situation "in which an individual has a need for immediate medical care." This implies that "the scene of an emergency" under Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 involves a medical emergency. This conclusion is further supported by the portion of Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 that excludes from "the scene of an emergency" places where medical care is usually offered. Further, Health & Saf.C. 1799.107, intended to encourage public entities and emergency rescue personnel to give emergency assistance, broadly defines "emergency services" to include nonmedical situations, but expressly limits this definition to this particular section. (45 C.4th 329.)

(c) Common law principles. Defendant's broad interpretation of the statute would undermine established common law regarding liability for assisting others. Although there is no general common law duty to give assistance, a person who undertakes to help others has a duty to exercise due care. Nothing in the statute overcomes the judicial presumption that the Legislature does not intend to overrule established common law principles when it enacts legislation. (45 C.4th 332.)

(d) Other "Good Samaritan" statutes. A broad interpretation would also render superfluous other "Good Samaritan" statutes, such as Govt.C. 50086 (immunity for person trained in first aid who is summoned by authorities and renders emergency services) and Harb. & Nav.C. 656(b) (immunity for person who assists at scene of vessel collision). (45 C.4th 333.)

A concurring and dissenting opinion, in which two justices concur, disagrees with the majority's limitation of the statute to medical care given in medical emergencies. "There is no reason why one kind of lay volunteer aid should be immune, while another is not." (45 C.4th 335.)

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

b. Emergency Medical Aid.

2. Immunity of Physicians.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 133

[§ 133] In General.

(1) Emergency Care at Scene of Accident. No licensed doctor "who in good faith renders emergency care at the scene of an emergency, shall be liable for any civil damages as a result of any acts or omissions by such person in rendering the emergency care." Excepted from the immunity are wilful acts and omissions. (B. & P.C. 2395; see Kearns v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1325, 1328, 252 C.R. 4 [surgeon responding to request for intraoperative assistance during critical stage of operation was protected by B. & P.C. 2395].)

"The scene of an emergency" includes, but is not limited to, hospital emergency rooms during medical disasters, i.e., duly proclaimed states of emergency. Immunity is granted for acts or omissions that occur either after the declaration of a medical disaster or prior to the declaration but after commencement of the disaster. (B. & P.C. 2395.)

(2) Emergency Care for Complication From Prior Care. Similar immunity is granted to a doctor who, at the request of another doctor, renders emergency care "for medical complication arising from prior care" by another doctor. (B. & P.C. 2396; see Burciaga v. St. John's Hosp. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 710, 716, 717, 232 C.R. 75, infra, §134 [pediatrician rendering emergency care at request of obstetrician]; Perkins v. Howard (1991) 232 C.A.3d 708, 717, 283 C.R. 764 [B. & P.C. 2396 protects physician responding in good faith regardless of whether physician calling for assistance could or should have anticipated the emergency requiring assistance].)

(3) Emergency Care for Participant in Athletic Event. Immunity is also granted to a doctor "who in good faith and without compensation renders voluntary emergency medical assistance to a participant in a community college or high school athletic event or contest, at the site of the event or contest, or during transportation to a health care facility," unless the doctor's conduct constitutes gross negligence. (B. & P.C. 2398.)

(4) Determination That Emergency Exists. In Bryant v. Bakshandeh (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1241, 277 C.R. 379, the trial judge held that the Good Samaritan immunity applied and granted summary judgment for defendant doctor, on the ground that whether an emergency exists and an unforeseen complexity creates the necessity to obtain assistance to complete surgery is determined by the operating surgeon. Held, reversed. It is for the trier of fact to determine whether the surgeon had a reasonable, good faith belief that he was responding to an emergency situation, or whether, under the circumstances, a doctor acting in good faith would have reasonably concluded that no emergency existed. (226 C.A.3d 1247.)

The issue whether an emergency that initially triggered Good Samaritan immunity continues to exist at any given juncture is likewise "an issue of fact, which must be determined in the same manner as the issue of whether an emergency existed in the first instance." (Breazeal v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hosp. (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1329, 1337, 286 C.R. 207.)

(5) Effect of Election Not To Transfer Patient. In Breazeal, supra, plaintiff contended that the immunity was not available because the patient's condition was sufficiently stable to permit transfer to another hospital with better facilities, and that in electing to retain the patient defendant doctors established an ordinary doctor-patient relationship with him. In rejecting this theory the court said: "There is no support in the language of the Good Samaritan statutes for such a limitation. Nor would such a limitation produce results consistent with the statutory purpose. The encouragement ... to provide emergency care will be inevitably and greatly diminished if physicians know that, however urgently some care might be needed in any given situation, the availability of Good Samaritan immunity will depend upon whether the responding physician guesses correctly as to whether he or she is the best person reasonably available to provide that care. The statutory purpose would be seriously undermined if immunity were denied to physicians who provided care where care was plainly and urgently needed, merely because a jury could conclude with the benefit of hindsight that another physician would have provided superior care."; (234 C.A.3d 1340.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Determination That Emergency Exists. See Reynoso v. Newman (2005) 126 C.A.4th 494, 500, 24 C.R.3d 5 [where it was undisputed that emergency did in fact exist, doctor's subjective belief whether he was responding to actual emergency was irrelevant; objective test applies in determining whether emergency exists].

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

b. Emergency Medical Aid.

2. Immunity of Physicians.

bb. Distinction: Physician Assigned to Emergency Duties.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 134

[§ 134] Distinction: Physician Assigned to Emergency Duties.

(1) Doctor Liable Where Treatment Is Part of Normal Practice. In Colby v. Schwartz (1978) 78 C.A.3d 885, 889, 144 C.R. 624, decedent was seriously injured in an automobile accident in the early morning hours. He was taken to the emergency room of defendant hospital, given emergency treatment, and later prepared for surgery by defendant doctors. The surgery began at 3 p.m. and decedent died at 4:30 p.m. In this action, defendants were granted summary judgment on the basis of former B. & P.C. 2144 and 2144.5 (now B. & P.C. 2395 and 2396, supra, §133). Held, reversed. The declarations showed that defendants operated on decedent in the normal course of their practice as members of the hospital emergency call panel, and this did not constitute "emergency" medical care as the term is used in the statute. The statutory immunity is given to physicians who, by chance and on an irregular basis, render emergency care; often the physician would not have the skills of a specialist and the facilities available could be severely limited. Defendants, by contrast, were practicing within the area of their expertise and with the benefits of full hospital facilities; they did not need the added inducement that immunity from civil liability would provide. "Moreover, excusing such physicians of their negligence could have the adverse effect of lowering the quality of their medical care without justification. And further, to extend immunity to such physicians would deny an overly broad spectrum of malpractice victims of their legal remedies." (78 C.A.3d 892.) (See 54 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417 [Colby].)

(2) Doctor Not Liable When Responding to Emergency Call. In McKenna v. Cedars of Lebanon Hosp. (1979) 93 C.A.3d 282, 155 C.R. 631, the doctor was a "volunteer" rather than a member of a regular emergency staff. The court said: "While dicta in Colby may lead to an interpretation that the statute is not applicable to emergency medical treatment in a hospital, the holding of the case does not compel that result." (93 C.A.3d 286.) (See 54 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417 [Colby and McKenna].)

McKenna was followed in Burciaga v. St. John's Hosp. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 710, 232 C.R. 75. Dr. T, the obstetrician delivering plaintiff at 9:30 a.m., observed that the umbilical cord was entangled about plaintiff's neck and feet and that he suffered from severe intrauterine anoxia. Dr. T requested the services of a pediatrician, and defendant Dr. G, a pediatrician visiting his patients in the hospital, responded to the call within a minute. He discovered that the infant was cyanotic, gave him emergency treatment, and made several efforts to place him in a hospital with a neonatal intensive care unit, which efforts finally were successful at 5 p.m. Plaintiff, now 6 years old and suffering cerebral palsy and permanent neurological damage, brought this malpractice action, contending that the Good Samaritan statutes did not shield Dr. G because he was an active member of the hospital staff with a duty to treat infants born there. Held, summary judgment for Dr. G affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff contended that because Dr. G was in the hospital when he was summoned for aid, he had a duty to treat plaintiff. "Under such reasoning, the Good Samaritan laws would grant immunity only to physicians who, without specialized expertise, respond by chance to medical emergencies that occur outside the hospital such as a roadside injury." (187 C.A.3d 715.) But B. & P.C. 2395 and 2396 contain no provision restricting the site of an emergency, and therefore apply to emergencies both within and without a hospital. (187 C.A.3d 715, 716.)

(b) Plaintiff also contended that McKenna was not controlling because the defendant in that case was a chief resident without specialized expertise, while Dr. G was a specialist. But the statutes do not limit immunity to only those physicians treating patients outside the physicians' specialties. "Such a restriction would deny victims the benefit of knowledgeable and experienced care and would not promote the legislative purpose of inducing physicians to provide medical care to those in need." (187 C.A.3d 716.)

(c) "The heart of the application of the Good Samaritan statutes is the inquiry whether a duty of professional care pre-existed the emergency." (187 C.A.3d 716.) Plaintiff was not Dr. G's patient, and Dr. T. did not customarily refer patients to him. Dr. G was present in the hospital only because he was treating his own hospitalized patients. He cancelled his office appointments for the day in order to treat plaintiff. That a medical emergency fortuitously occurred while he was in the hospital creates no duty to plaintiff. There was no evidence that Dr. G was employed by the hospital, and it is not a reasonable inference that because he was an active staff member, the hospital had designated him to treat newborns in the event of an emergency. (187 C.A.3d 716.)

In Perkins v. Howard (1991) 232 C.A.3d 708, 719, 283 C.R. 764, a responding physician who had no business relationship with the treating physician and no medical relationship with the patient was deemed a "volunteer," immune from liability under the Good Samaritan statutes, even though he had treated the patient for an earlier, unrelated problem.

(3) Emergency Obstetrical Services. Doctors rendering emergency obstetrical services on an on-call basis are not liable for negligent acts or omissions in the good faith rendering of these services to a hospital emergency room. (B. & P.C. 2395.5(a).) The immunity does not apply in the following circumstances:

(a) The doctor's acts or omissions constitute gross negligence, recklessness, or wilful misconduct. (B. & P.C. 2395.5(a).)

(b) The doctor received consideration for serving on an on-call basis, or was required to so serve, unless the hospital expressly, in writing, accepts liability for the doctor's negligence. (B. & P.C. 2395.5(b)(1); see B. & P.C. 2395.5(c) [B. & P.C. 2395.5 does not otherwise affect hospital's liability for negligence].)

(c) The doctor had provided prior services to the same patient for a condition relating to the obstetrical condition requiring emergency services. (B. & P.C. 2395.5(b)(2).)

(d) Before rendering the emergency services, the doctor had either a reasonable expectation of payment for the services or a contractual obligation with the patient, another doctor, or a third-party payer on the patient's behalf to provide obstetrical care for the patient. (B. & P.C. 2395.5(b)(3).)

[§ 135] Distinction: Services Rendered to Scheduled Patient.

In Street v. Superior Court (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1397, 274 C.R. 595, defendant Dr. C and his brother owned and operated a medical group. Decedent came to the clinic for a diagnostic test, which was negligently performed by Dr. D. Defendant Dr. C. then took control of the emergency treatment, but the patient died. Held, the immunity of the Good Samaritan statutes was unavailable.

(a) The immunity has been upheld in a number of cases in which the physicians were rendering emergency treatment inside hospitals. (225 C.A.3d 1402, citing Kearns v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1325, 252 C.R. 4, McKenna v. Cedars of Lebanon Hosp. (1979) 93 C.A.3d 282, 155 C.R. 631, supra, §134, and Burciaga v. St. John's Hosp. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 710, 232 C.R. 75, supra, §134.) But none involved the situation presented here, of an owner of a medical facility who renders emergency aid to a scheduled patient. (224 C.A.3d 1403.)

(b) The correct rule is stated in a Georgia case: "If the doctor had a particular employment duty to aid the patient at the hospital or had a pre-existing doctor-patient relationship to the patient he aided, then he had a duty to the patient to begin with; and in such a case he does not need a special inducement to offer aid, the aid he offers is not 'voluntary' in the sense of a Good Samaritan, and public policy would be ill-served if he were relieved of the usual physician's duty of care and given immunity in such a case." (224 C.A.3d 1403, quoting Clayton v. Kelly (1987) 183 Ga.App. 45, 47, 357 S.E.2d 865, 868.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

b. Emergency Medical Aid.

3. Immunity of Others.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 136

[§ 136] In General.

In addition to the Good Samaritan laws primarily directed to physicians (supra, §133 et seq.), many other statutes grant immunity from civil liability to specified persons or agencies for acts or omissions occurring during good faith emergency treatment. The following are among those given immunity:

(1) Dentist. A licensed dentist has immunity for emergencies occurring and treated outside the dentist's place of practice, and for emergency care given on request of another licensed dentist as the result of complications from prior care. (B. & P.C. 1627.5.)

(2) Nurse. Immunity extends to a licensed nurse who renders emergency care "outside both the place and the course of that person's employment." The immunity is lost, however, if the nurse is grossly negligent. (B. & P.C. 2727.5.) (On similar immunity for vocational nurse, see B. & P.C. 2861.5; 6 Pacific L. J. 423 [discussing B. & P.C. 2861.5].)

(3) Veterinarian. "A veterinarian who on his or her own initiative, at the request of an owner, or at the request of someone other than the owner, renders emergency treatment to a sick or injured animal at the scene of an accident shall not be liable in damages to the owner of that animal in the absence of gross negligence." (B. & P.C. 4826.1.)

(4) School District or Officer, etc., Treating Student. A school district or officer, school principal, physician, or hospital is not liable for administering "reasonable treatment" to a child without the consent of the child's parent or guardian when the child is ill or injured during school hours, needs reasonable medical treatment, and the parent or guardian cannot be reached. The immunity is inapplicable if the parent or guardian previously filed written objection to any treatment other than first aid. (Educ.C. 49407.) (On similar immunity for treatment of community college students, see Educ.C. 76407.)

School districts are authorized, in the absence of a licensed nurse, to provide emergency medical training to school personnel to administer emergency medical assistance to diabetic pupils suffering from severe hypoglycemia. (Educ.C. 49414.5.) It is the intent of the Legislature that Health & Saf.C. 1799.102 (supra, §132) apply in this situation. (Stats.

(5) Operator of Vessel. A vessel operator is not liable for providing or arranging for medical treatment "where the assisting person has acted as an ordinary, reasonably prudent person would have acted under the same or similar circumstances." (Harb. & Nav.C. 656(b).)

(6) Agency or Person Providing Emergency Medical Care Training. To encourage the training of people in emergency medical care, a public or private agency providing that training is not liable for any resulting damages. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.100; see McAlexander v. Siskiyou Joint Community College (1990) 222 C.A.3d 768, 774, 272 C.R. 70 [immunity applied where injuries were sustained by student taking part in belay rope training exercise during training]; Duckett v. Pistoiresi Ambulance Service (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1525, 1533, 24 C.R.2d 304 [injury sustained during ambulance attendant module of training; immunity barred relief].)

Similarly, neither a physician or nurse providing emergency instruction to paramedics, nor any paramedic following that instruction is liable for resulting damages. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.104.)

(7) Trained Volunteer. Immunity is extended to a person who has had first aid training and is summoned by authorities to voluntarily assist in a search or rescue operation. (Govt.C. 50086.)

(8) Firefighter, Law Enforcement Officer, or Emergency Medical Technician. Firefighters, law enforcement officers, and emergency medical technicians, and the agencies hiring them, are not liable for damages resulting from emergency treatment rendered at the scene of an emergency, unless they acted in a grossly negligent manner or without good faith. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.106; see Wright v. Los Angeles (1990) 219 C.A.3d 318, 347, 268 C.R. 309 [paramedic was guilty of gross negligence in examining fight victim who later died of sickle cell shock]; 16 A.L.R.5th 605 [liability of ambulance attendants, emergency medical technicians, etc., rendering emergency medical care outside hospital].) Emergency rescue personnel, defined as members of a federal, state, local, or private firefighting agency, are not liable unless they act in bad faith or in a grossly negligent manner. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.107; see Eastburn v. Regional Fire Protection Authority (2003) 31 C.4th 1175, 1185, 7 C.R.3d 552, 80 P.3d 656, infra, §343 [immunity of Health & Saf.C. 1799.107 extends to 911 dispatchers].)

(9) Person Helping Another Person Choking on Food. Neither the proprietor of a restaurant nor any other person who, in accordance with instructions promulgated by the state Department of Health Services, assists a person choking on food is liable for resulting damages. (Health & Saf.C. 114180(d).)

(10) Poison Control Centers. A poison information specialist or provider that provides emergency information or advice in accordance with protocols approved by a poison control center's medical director is liable only for acts or omissions performed in a grossly negligent manner or in bad faith. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.105(b).) And the medical director is liable only for acts or omissions performed in a grossly negligent manner or in bad faith when providing emergency information not covered by an approved protocol. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.105(c).) Immunity is granted the poison control center with respect to the acts or omissions for which its medical director, poison information specialist, or poison information provider are thus immune. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.105(a).) (See 20 Pacific L. J. 737.)

(11) Hospital or Physician Detaining Mentally Disordered or Gravely Disabled Person. A general acute care hospital, its licensed professional staff, and any physician or surgeon providing emergency medical services to a mentally disordered or gravely disabled person at the hospital are not liable for detaining the person, or for the actions of the person following release from the hospital, if prescribed conditions exist. (Health & Saf.C. 1799.111.) Also, no person authorized to detain another under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf.C. 5000 et seq., 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.) may be held liable for exercising that authority "in accordance with the law." (Welf.C. 5278.)

(12) Persons or Teams Attempting Resuscitation. (See infra, §137.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Dentist. B. & P.C. 1627.5 was amended in 2008 to provide immunity to a licensed dentist who voluntarily and without compensation provides emergency medical care, consistent with his or her dental education and emergency training, and negligently causes injury, death, or property damage during a declared state of emergency.(9) Person Helping Another Person Choking on Food. Health & Saf.C. 114180(d) was repealed in 2006.

(11) Hospital or Physician Detaining Mentally Disordered or Gravely Disabled Person.

bb. Persons or Teams Attempting Resuscitation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 137

[§ 137] Persons or Teams Attempting Resuscitation.

(1) Hospital Rescue Team. Immunity is granted for an act or omission by a rescue team in attempted resuscitation in good faith of a person in immediate danger of loss of life. The immunity is given to the health facility, public or private, its officers, staff, and employees, and the federal or state government or a county. (Health & Saf. C. 1317(f).) "Rescue team" is defined as "a special group of physicians and surgeons, nurses, and employees of a health facility who have been trained in cardiopulmonary resuscitation and have been designated by the health facility to attempt, in cases of emergency, to resuscitate persons who are in immediate danger of loss of life." (Health & Saf.C. 1317(g).) However, the health facility is not relieved of any legal duty involved in designation and training of members of the team, or for providing or maintaining its equipment. (Health & Saf.C. 1317(h).) (See Lowry v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hosp. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 188, 192, 229 C.R. 620 [language of Health & Saf.C. 1317 clearly refers to designated members of hospital rescue team; hence, it cannot be construed as Good Samaritan statute designed to apply only to volunteers]; 64 A.L.R.4th 1200 [liability for injury or death allegedly caused by activities of hospital "rescue team"].)

(2) Trained Person Administering CPR. A person who has completed a basic cardiopulmonary resuscitation course that complies with specified standards, and who in good faith renders that resuscitation at the scene of an emergency, is generally immune from liability for resulting damages. (C.C. 1714.2(a).) Immunity, however, does not extend to conduct constituting gross negligence. (C.C. 1714.2(b).) Also, no immunity exists where the person renders emergency care to an individual "with the expectation of receiving compensation from the individual." (C.C. 1714.2(e).)

Local agencies, entities of the state or local government, and other public or private organizations that sponsor, authorize, support, finance, or supervise cardiopulmonary resuscitation training are immune from liability for damages resulting from the training programs. (C.C. 1714.2(c).) A certified instructor is immune from liability for the acts or omissions of a person who received instruction from the instructor. (C.C. 1714.2(d).) (See 9 Pacific L. J. 678.)

(3) Trained Person Using AED. A person who in good faith and not for compensation, renders emergency care or treatment by the use of an automatic external defibrillator (AED) at the scene of an emergency is not liable for resulting damages. (C.C. 1714.21(b).) Also, a person or entity who provides CPR and AED training to the person rendering AED emergency care is immune from liability for damages resulting from acts or omissions of the person rendering the emergency care. (C.C. 1714.21(c).) And a person or entity that acquires an AED for emergency use is not liable for damages resulting from acts or omissions in rendering emergency care if that person or entity has complied with specified requirements regarding training for and use of AEDs. (C.C. 1714.21(d).) A physician involved with the placement of an AED and a person or entity responsible for the site where an AED is located are not liable for damages resulting from acts or omissions of the person rendering the care, if that physician, person, or entity has complied with applicable requirements for training and use of AEDs. (C.C. 1714.21(e).) (See Health & Saf.C. 1797.196 [requirements for AED training and use].)

These immunities do not apply where personal injury or wrongful death results from the gross negligence or wilful or wanton misconduct of the person who renders AED emergency care or treatment. (C.C. 1714.21(f).) Also, nothing in these provisions relieves a manufacturer, designer, developer, distributor, installer, or supplier of an AED of liability under any applicable statute or rule of law. (C.C. 1714.21(g).)

c. Immunization Programs.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 139

[§ 139] Immunization Programs.

(1) Elderly and Other High-Risk Groups. The Department of Health Services is required to provide flu and pneumonia vaccines without cost to local governmental or private nonprofit agencies, in order that these agencies may provide the vaccine at minimal cost to older persons and other high-risk groups. (Health & Saf.C. 104900(a), (b).) The program is designed to utilize voluntary assistance from public or private sectors. (Health & Saf.C. 104900(c).)

Immunity is provided, as follows, from liability for injury (including residual effects) caused by an act or omission in administering the vaccine or other immunizing agent:

(a) Scope of immunity. The immunity extends to a "private, nonprofit volunteer agency" whose involvement in the program is limited to providing a "clinic site or promotional and logistical support"; and to the agency's employees or members. (Health & Saf.C. 104900(f).)

(b) Conditions of immunity. The immunity exists if (1) the immunization is performed pursuant to the statute in conformity with applicable federal, state, or local governmental standards, and (2) the act or omission does not constitute wilful misconduct or gross negligence. (Health & Saf.C. 104900(f).)

(2) Minors. Immunity is provided for "any injury caused by an act or omission in the administration of a vaccine or other immunizing agent to a minor," including residual effects, if (a) the immunization is required by state law or given as part of an outreach program established by the Department of Health Services (see Health & Saf.C. 120400 et seq.), and (b) the act or omission does not constitute wilful misconduct or gross negligence. Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

d. Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 140

[§ 140] In General.

(1) Reporting Requirements and Authorization. The Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (P.C. 11164 et seq.) requires specified persons to report known or reasonably suspected instances of child abuse or neglect. (P.C. 11166(a); see P.C. 11165.6 [defining "child abuse and neglect"]; P.C. 11166(a) [mandated reporter who knows or reasonably suspects that home or institution in which child resides is unsuitable because of abuse or neglect must report that condition].) The report must be made immediately or as soon as practicably possible (P.C. 11166(a)) to a police or sheriff's department, the county probation department if designated to receive the reports, or the county welfare department (P.C. 11165.9; see P.C. 11166(i), 11166(j), 11166.1 et seq., 11169 et seq. [action on reports by public agencies]; Burt v. Orange (2004) 120 C.A.4th 273, 279, 15 C.R.3d 373 [parent was entitled to hearing on agency's decision to file report with Child Abuse Central Index finding that allegation of suspected child abuse was either substantiated or inconclusive; due process, based on right to privacy, mandates procedure to challenge child abuse reports, and Act's reporting limitations, notification requirement, and expungement remedy impliedly recognize that right].) "Mandated reporters" include, among others, childcare custodians, health practitioners, child protective agency employees, teachers, social workers, peace officers, and clergy members. (P.C. 11165.7; see P.C. 11166.5 [statements by mandated reporters on employment promising compliance with reporting requirements].) Any other person may report known or suspected child abuse or neglect. (P.C. 11166(f).) The form and content of the reports is prescribed by the Act (see P.C. 11166(a), 11167, 11168) and the reports are generally privileged (infra, §141 et seq.). (For detailed treatment of reporting requirements, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §156.)

(2) Confidentiality and Disclosure. The identity of all persons who report is confidential. Disclosure is permitted only (a) between agencies receiving or investigating mandated reports; (b) to counsel in designated criminal, juvenile, or administrative proceedings involving child abuse or neglect; (c) to a licensing agency where abuse in out-of-home care is involved; (d) when the person waives confidentiality; (e) by court order. (P.C. 11167(d)(1).) No disclosure may be made to the person's employer except with the person's consent or by court order. (P.C. 11167(d)(2).)

Both mandatory and optional reports are confidential. (P.C. 11167.5(a).) Reports may be disclosed only to the persons or agencies to whom disclosure of the reporting party's identity is permitted or to designated persons or agencies involved in investigation, treatment, or licensing. (P.C. 11167.5(b), (c).) Disclosure is not required if prohibited by other state or federal law. (P.C. 11167.5(e).)

However, neither the physician-patient (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §196 et seq.) nor the psychotherapist-patient (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), §211 et seq.) privilege applies in any court proceeding or administrative hearing to information reported pursuant to the Act. (P.C. 11171.2(b), 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §234.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Reporting Requirements and Authorization. P.C. 11165.9, as amended in 2005, prohibits agencies receiving reports of child abuse or neglect from refusing to accept them, and requires the agencies to keep records of all reports received.

P.C. 11166(f), (i), and (j) were relettered in 2005 as P.C. 11166(g), (j), and (k), respectively.

As amended in 2006, P.C. 11165.9 and 11166(a) not only require reports of suspected child abuse or neglect, but also authorize reports of instances where a child suffers or is at substantial risk of suffering serious emotional damage.

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

d. Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

2. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 141

[§ 141] Nature and Scope of Immunity.

(1) Immunity Provisions. A mandated reporter (supra, §140) is immune from civil or criminal liability for the submission of any required or authorized report of child abuse or neglect. Similar immunity is granted to any other person submitting a report, unless he or she knew that the report was false or made with reckless disregard for the truth. (P.C. 11172(a).) (See McMartin v. Children's Institute Int. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1393, 1401, 261 C.R. 437 [childcare custodian's immunity under P.C. 11172 was not affected by allegations that its employee was unlicensed and used unorthodox methods in interviewing children].)

(2) Immunity of Mandated Reporter Is Absolute. In Storch v. Silverman (1986) 186 C.A.3d 671, 231 C.R. 27, plaintiffs brought an action against defendant doctors and hospital for malpractice and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Both causes of action were based on allegations of defendants' negligence in reporting that plaintiff's daughter was a suspected child abuse victim. Despite plaintiff's contention that P.C. 11172 was inapplicable to negligent or knowingly false reports, the trial judge gave a judgment for defendants on demurrer. Held, affirmed; the immunity granted by P.C. 11172 is absolute.

(a) Plaintiffs' argument for qualified immunity was based on the following reasoning: (1) P.C. 11166 requires a report only where the practitioner "knows or reasonably suspects" child abuse; (2) P.C. 11172 grants immunity only to reports "required or authorized"; (3) hence, a report must meet the standards of P.C. 11166 to qualify for immunity. (186 C.A.3d 678.) But, this interpretation would render P.C. 11172 virtually meaningless. "There is no need for immunity when there can be no liability, as in the case of reports that are true or based upon objectively reasonable suspicion." (186 C.A.3d 678.)

(b) The legislative history is also contrary to plaintiffs' position. Under former P.C. 11161.5, all reporters, whether required to report or not, were immune unless they "knew or should have known" that the report was false. With the enactment of P.C. 11172, the Legislature made the "known or should have known" qualification applicable only to persons voluntarily reporting, thereby evidencing an intention to eliminate this limitation on immunity for persons required to report. (186 C.A.3d 679.) (See Thomas v. Chadwick (1990) 224 C.A.3d 813, 820, 274 C.R. 128, infra, §144 [even intentionally false reports by mandated reporter are immunized; following Storch v. Silverman].)

(3) Matters Subject to Immunity. The immunity from liability granted by P.C. 11172 extends not only to making an initial report, but also to conduct giving rise to the obligation to report, such as the collection of data, or the observation, examination, or treatment of the suspected victim performed in a professional capacity, and to subsequent communications between the reporter and the public authorities responsible for investigating or prosecuting child abuse. (Robbins v. Hamburger Home for Girls (1995) 32 C.A.4th 671, 679, 38 C.R.2d 534, infra, §143; on application of immunity to postreporting activities, see infra, §§142, 143.) The immunity extends to the entire report, including even potentially irrelevant statements. (Stecks v. Young (1995) 38 C.A.4th 365, 374, 45 C.R.2d 475.)

(4) Persons Immune. The immunity applies not only to those who actually make the reports, but also to all those who participate in the process. Limitation of immunity to the person making the telephone call or signing the report would defeat the legislative purpose of promoting the reporting of child abuse. Thus, in Storch v. Silverman, supra, where the complaint alleged that all defendants "supported and/or submitted" a report, each physician who either actually submitted a report or supported the submission was immune. And because the liability of defendant hospital was, under respondeat superior, necessarily based on the negligence of one of the other defendants, it too was immune. (186 C.A.3d 681.)

However, the immunity extends only to persons involved in reporting the child abuse or neglect, and not to actions taken by officials who receive the reports. (Newton v. Napa (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1551, 1557, 1558, 266 C.R. 682.)

(5) Reimbursement for Legal Fees and Costs. In the event that, despite immunity, an action based on a required or authorized report is initiated against a mandated reporter, the mandated reporter may, on obtaining a dismissal of the action or a favorable judgment, obtain reimbursement for reasonable attorneys' fees and costs from the state Board of Control. However, the right to reimbursement does not exist if a public entity has provided for the defense of the action. (P.C. 11172(c).) Also, the fees recovered may not exceed either the hourly rate charged by the Attorney General or an aggregate amount of $ 50,000. (P.C. 11172(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Immunity Provisions. Qualified immunity of voluntary reporters: See Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 1574, 1578, 31 C.R.3d 368 [P.C. 11172(a), imposing liability on voluntary reporters for knowingly false child abuse reports, does not violate First Amendment; also, liability is not limited to reports made to listed agencies but extends to reports made to persons legally required to transmit those reports to listed agencies]; Chabak v. Monroy (2007) 154 C.A.4th 1502, 1512, 65 C.R.3d 641 [liability of voluntary reporters for false reports does not apply to reports by alleged victims; P.C. 11172(a) is limited to reports by third parties about suspected instances of child abuse]. (5) Reimbursement for Legal Fees and Costs. P.C. 11172(c) was amended in 2006 to refer to the California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board, rather than the state Board of Control.

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

d. Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

3. Subsequent Acts.

aa. Subsequent Statements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 142

[§ 142] Subsequent Statements.

(1) By Reporters. In Ferraro v. Chadwick (1990) 221 C.A.3d 86, 270 C.R. 379, plaintiffs' son fell down some stairs and died after being treated by defendants doctor and hospital. After making a report of suspected child abuse as required by P.C. 11166(a) (supra, §140), defendants made statements to law enforcement agencies that led to a dependency proceeding involving plaintiffs' daughter and a criminal prosecution for the death of their son. Both proceedings were resolved in plaintiffs' favor, and plaintiffs then brought this action for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress and malicious prosecution. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Immunity for authorized reports.

(1) P.C. 11172(a) provides reporters with immunity for all reports required or authorized. To avoid treating the words "or authorized" as mere surplusage, it must be assumed that the Legislature foresaw that reporters would have occasion to make reports other than those required by the Act, and intended that these authorized reports be protected by the same immunity that protects the required reports. (221 C.A.3d 92.) This construction is in accord with the goal of rectifying the problem of inadequate child abuse reporting, particularly by professionals. (221 C.A.3d 94.)

(2) Numerous provisions in the Act involve reporting other than that required by P.C. 11166(a). It is reasonable to infer that the Legislature anticipated that the reporter would be contacted and interviewed by the agency conducting the investigation, and sanctioned any communication between reporter and agency. (221 C.A.3d 94.) Hence, regardless of which party initiated the contact, communications by a reporter to child protective or law enforcement agencies that are statutorily entitled to receive and investigate reports of child abuse are "authorized" reports under the Act, and are, therefore, within the protection of P.C. 11172(a). (221 C.A.3d 95.)

(3) Storch v. Silverman (1986) 186 C.A.3d 671, 231 C.R. 27, supra, §141, held that the immunity provided for required reports is absolute. There is nothing in the language of P.C. 11172(a) suggesting that less immunity should be provided for authorized reports. (221 C.A.3d 95.)

(b) Effect of dismissal of dependency proceeding. Plaintiffs argued that after the dismissal of the dependency proceeding concerning their daughter, defendants lost their immunity for communications with law enforcement agencies concerning the death of their son. This position is untenable:

(1) Plaintiffs' position blurs the distinction between a dependency proceeding to protect the welfare of the child and a proceeding to determine the defendant's criminal liability. These are litigated separately. (221 C.A.3d 96.) And, although Lockwood v. Superior Court (1984) 160 C.A.3d 667, 206 C.R. 785, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §336, held that a finding of no abuse in a dependency proceeding collaterally estops a subsequent criminal prosecution on the same evidence, it did not hold that the finding automatically stops all criminal investigatory activity. (221 C.A.3d 96.)

(2) Ending the reporter's immunity after dismissal of a dependency proceeding would reduce the desired cooperation between the district attorney investigating suspected child abuse and the reporter, who in many cases would hesitate to supply additional information out of fear of exposure to liability. (221 C.A.3d 97.) (See Thomas v. Chadwick (1990) 224 C.A.3d 813, 222, 274 C.R. 128, infra, §144 [Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act contemplates that mandated reporters may be involved in communications beyond initial "required" report; following Ferraro].)

(2) By Others. Ferraro v. Chadwick was distinguished in James W. v. Superior Court (1993) 17 C.A.4th 246, 21 C.R.2d 169. A hospital, after determining that plaintiffs' 8-year-old daughter had been raped and sodomized, filed a report under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act. Although the daughter claimed that the assailant was a man who had climbed through her bedroom window, a hospital worker and a detective accused plaintiff father. Soon thereafter, the county department of social services referred plaintiffs to defendant family counselor and placed the daughter in defendant foster home. Over the next 21/2 years, defendants allegedly campaigned incessantly to force the daughter to identify her father as her assailant despite possessing knowledge indicating that another man, who was a registered sex offender, was the guilty party. Finally, allegedly in order to return to her home, the daughter named her father as the assailant. Plaintiff father was charged with the crime, but all charges were dropped when newly discovered extrinsic evidence established that he could not have been the assailant. In the present action, the trial judge sustained demurrers to most of the causes of action on the ground that defendants were immune under P.C. 11172. Held, this was error; the statute does not apply to acts performed, after the report of abuse, by parties not acting as reporters.

(a) The focus of the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act is directed toward discovering suspected child abuse and, to that end, encouraging reporters to spread the word as quickly as possible without fear of suit so that independent governmental agencies may remove the child from immediate danger and investigate. Here, the Act was satisfied when the hospital determined that plaintiff's daughter had been abused, filed a report, and enabled the county to file a petition and remove the daughter from her home. The activities of defendants for the next 21/2 years went far beyond anything contemplated by statute. (17 C.A.4th 254.)

(b) Both Ferraro v. Chadwick and Thomas v. Chadwick, supra, involved postreporting activities that were simply republications of the initial report of suspected child abuse. They are, therefore, distinguishable from the present situation, and are not authority for extending the Act, beyond its purpose of reporting suspected child abuse, to include investigations seeking to identify the perpetrator. (17 C.A.4th 255.) Here, neither of the defendants identified or reported child abuse; that was done by the hospital staff. Nor did they merely republish an initial report. To the contrary, defendants voluntarily assumed the role of those who seek to identify the perpetrator and obtain a conviction. As such, they are not entitled to immunity under the Act. (17 C.A.4th 256.)

(c) Krikorian v. Barry (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1211, 242 C.R. 312, and McMartin v. Children's Institute Int. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1393, 261 C.R. 437, carved out an expanded immunity concept that immunizes forensic experts not only for the report of the abuse, but also for the activities leading up to the report. This concept is not available here. First, there is no authority or reason for applying expanded immunity to a nonprofessional, such as defendant foster parent, who was not treating a suspected victim preliminary to a determination of child abuse. (17 C.A.4th 257.) Second, with respect to defendant family counselor, she was, in contrast to the forensic experts in Krikorian and McMartin, a treating therapist who, long after the abuse had been reported, rendered psychotherapeutic services not only to plaintiff's daughter, but also to the daughter's mother and brother. And, under Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, infra, §1024, defendant may be held liable for breaching the duty of care imposed by the therapeutic relationship. To allow her to escape that liability would be to penalize families who, however, reluctantly, enter the juvenile justice system. (17 C.A.4th 258.)

(d) "[R]ecognition of a dichotomy between reporter and reportee, i.e., differentiating between those who make the initial report and the officials who come later, is a healthy distinction. It discourages family counselors and foster parents from taking on roles they are not adequately prepared to perform. When private citizens become deeply enmeshed in investigatory or prosecutorial activities and take on functions of the police, the DSS, county counsel or district attorney, the system suffers a loss of objectivity, independence, balance and accountability. The combination of private players and public officials all on one side performing the same roles, albeit for different reasons, has a momentum of its own which can, in its own way, overwhelm any family. Such an imbalance leading to grievous injury is precisely the problem alleged in this complaint." (17 C.A.4th 257.)

3. Subsequent Acts.

bb. Subsequent Concealment of Victim.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 143

[§ 143] Subsequent Concealment of Victim.

In Robbins v. Hamburger Home for Girls (1995) 32 C.A.4th 671, 38 C.R.2d 534, plaintiffs' 15-year-old daughter voluntarily sought assistance from defendants, a private, nonprofit girls' shelter and its counselors, and stayed at the shelter for 3 days after complaining of abuse at home. A counselor reported the claimed abuse to the county department of children's services under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, but the authorities took no action and plaintiffs took their daughter home. In their action, plaintiffs alleged federal civil rights violations and various state law causes of action, asserting that defendants interfered with parental rights of custody and inflicted emotional distress on them. The trial judge granted summary judgment to defendants. Held, affirmed.

(a) Reporting. To the extent the action was based on the report of suspected child abuse and communications with the department of children's services, defendants were immune from liability under the Act. (32 C.A.4th 679.)

(b) Concealment. Here, the gist of the action was not reporting child abuse, but the subsequent concealment of the girl while the authorities investigated. Because the absolute immunity under P.C. 11172 for reporting suspected child abuse follows from the mandate that persons do so under criminal penalty, and because there was no statute requiring defendants to avoid disclosing the girl's whereabouts, the absolute immunity was inapplicable to their refusal to disclose her whereabouts. Nevertheless, summary judgment was proper for the following reasons:

(1) There was no violation of C.C. 49(a) (abduction or enticement of child; see infra, §729) because the girl voluntarily went to the shelter, seeking a safe place to stay; there was no evidence of force, coercion, or inducement. Under Rest.2d, Torts §700 (interference with parental custody rights), there is a privilege to rescue a child from physical violence inflicted by a parent. Defendants' conduct was privileged because it was based on a reasonable apprehension that the girl could suffer immediate physical harm if she returned home or her whereabouts were disclosed. (32 C.A.4th 680.)

(2) Defendants did not have a duty under Welf.C. 305 et seq. (temporary custody of minors by peace officers, probation officers, and social workers; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §552 et seq.) to notify plaintiffs of the girl's whereabouts. She was at the shelter voluntarily and she had not been taken into custody by any public authority. (32 C.A.4th 682.)

(3) Plaintiffs failed to state a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.). The shelter was private and defendants were not acting under color of law in allowing the girl to remain there voluntarily and in following the advice of the department of children's services not to disclose the shelter's address. The brief nondisclosure of the address, while counseling the girl and while the authorities investigated, did not constitute a violation of a fundamental interest of plaintiffs protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Further, a federal civil rights action is subject to defenses of immunity and privilege. To the extent plaintiffs' action was based on conduct immunized by P.C. 11172, defendants had absolute immunity on the federal civil rights action as well. To the extent their conduct was not within that immunity, they could assert a defense of good faith or probable cause. (32 C.A.4th 683.) (On immunity of reporters of child abuse or neglect from federal civil rights liability generally, see infra, §144.)

4. Federal Civil Rights Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 144

[§ 144] Federal Civil Rights Liability.

In Thomas v. Chadwick (1990) 224 C.A.3d 813, 274 C.R. 128, the complaint alleged that plaintiff's 2-month-old child was sent to defendant hospital, suffering from a congenital defect (subdural hematoma). Defendant doctor misdiagnosed the ailment as indicating child abuse, and defendants filed an initial report under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act. The child died 4 days later, and defendants sent a letter (the subsequent report) to the district attorney, urging action to remove plaintiffs' other child from her parents' home. The district attorney then recommended dependency proceedings. Plaintiffs prevailed on the issue of the true cause of death, and were cleared of all charges. They then filed this complaint under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.). Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted, mainly on the theory that their acts were protected by absolute immunity under state and federal law. Held, affirmed.

(a) The immunities provided by P.C. 11172(a) to mandated reporters are absolute, and protect negligent, reckless, or even intentionally false reports. (224 C.A.3d 819, citing and discussing Storch v. Silverman (1986) 186 C.A.3d 671, 231 C.R. 27, supra, §141.) (224 C.A.3d 820.) This absolute immunity extends to both the initial and subsequent reports by defendants. The statute protects reports "required or authorized," and it contemplates that mandated reporters may be involved in communications beyond the initial "required" report. (224 C.A.3d 821, citing Ferraro v. Chadwick (1990) 221 C.A.3d 86, 270 C.R. 379, supra, §142.)

(b) California's immunity statute bars a claim under 42 U.S.C., §1983. Ordinarily state statutory immunities cannot protect a defendant against federal civil rights litigation because of federal preemption; but state defenses may be asserted against a 42 U.S.C., §1983 claim if not inconsistent with the intent and purpose of federal law. (224 C.A.3d 824, citing Robertson v. Wegmann (1978) 436 U.S. 584, 98 S.Ct. 1991, 56 L.Ed.2d 554, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §841.) Here, Congress impliedly authorized the creation of an immunity by its enactment of the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act in 1974. "Because fear of civil liability was the impediment to reporting Congress sought to remove, it would be incongruous to construe the federal act as permitting avoidance of immunity (thus resurrecting the impediment to reporting) merely because the injured party pleads federal rather than state causes of action premised on the same operative conduct. ... [W]e believe the congressional intent behind the immunity provisions requires that immunity protect against all damage claims arising from the act of reporting, including claims artfully pled under" 42 U.S.C., §1983. (224 C.A.3d 826.)

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

d. Report of Child Abuse or Neglect.

6. Liability for Failure To Report.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 146

[§ 146] Liability for Failure To Report.

The Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act's enacting statute (Stats. 1980, Chap. 1071, §5) states that "it is not the intent of the Legislature to alter the holding in" Landeros v Flood (1976) 17 C.3d 399, 131 C.R. 69, 551 P.2d 389, infra, §972 which imposed civil liability for a failure to report child abuse. (See 19 J. Juvenile Law 236 [civil liability of mandated reporters of suspected child abuse]; 12 San Diego L. Rev. 743 [pre-Landeros argument for holding physician civilly liable for failing to report]; 38 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [Failure To Report Child Abuse].) In addition, a mandated reporter failing to report child abuse or neglect is guilty of a misdemeanor. (P.C. 11166(b), 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §156.)

In Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, infra, §822, plaintiff was molested by G, who was hired as vice-principal of plaintiff's school as a result of favorable recommendations given by defendants, his former employers, despite the fact that they knew he had committed sexual misconduct. Plaintiff alleged that, in breaching their statutory duty to report past instances of G's sexual misconduct, defendants were guilty of negligence per se. Held, defendants' demurrers were properly sustained. It is not necessary to determine whether defendants had sufficient knowledge of the "child abuse" to trigger the requirements of the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act because plaintiff was not a member of the class for whose protection that Act was enacted. The reporting statute makes the duty to report applicable to children the reporter observes in his or her professional capacity or within the scope of his or her employment, and it is clear that the Act was designed to protect only those in the custodial care of the person charged with reporting the abuse, not all children who may be abused by the same offender in the future. Plaintiff failed to allege that she was ever in the custodial care of defendants. Furthermore, to adopt plaintiff's contrary argument would mean that a childcare custodian who failed to report the suspected abuse of a child in his or her custodial care could be held liable, perhaps years later, to other children abused by the same person, whether or not those children were within custodial protection. Neither legislative intent nor public policy supports such a broad extension of liability. (14 C.4th 1087.) (See 32 U.S.F. L. Rev. 405 [Randi W.]; on negligence per se generally, see infra, §871 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

e. Report of Abuse of Elder or Dependent Adults.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 147

[§ 147] In General.

(1) Nature and Purpose of Governing Legislation. The Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act (Welf.C. 15600 et seq.), covering abuse of the elderly and other dependent adults, was added in 1982 and has since been extensively amended. The Act is basically the same in format as the child abuse reporting statute (supra, §140 et seq.). (See 21 California Lawyer 55 (November 2001) [Elder Abuse Law]; 40 Cal. Western L. Rev. [banks' effectiveness at reporting financial abuse of elders]; 42 Hastings L. J. 859 [Elder Abuse and the States' Adult Protective Services Response: Time for a Change in California]; 36 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 565 [symposium on elder abuse]; 34 McGeorge L. Rev. 267 [protection of elderly against financial abuse]; 31 McGeorge L. Rev. 801 [reporting requirements and remedies under Welf.C. 15600 et seq.]; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 653 [The Not-So-Golden Years: The Legal Response to Elder Abuse]; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 505 [same]; 53 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [abuse, neglect, or exploitation of older persons]; on recovery in civil actions for abuse of elder or dependent adults, see infra, §1686 et seq.; BAJI, Nos. 7.40 et seq., 16.25; CACI, Nos. 3100 et seq., VF-3100 et seq.)

In adopting the Act, the Legislature intended that adult protective services agencies, local law enforcement agencies, and long-term care ombudsman coordinators should receive relevant information concerning the endangered welfare of elders and dependent adults, and should take appropriate corrective action. (Welf.C. 15600(i).) The purposes of the Act are to (a) encourage the reporting of suspected cases of abuse, (b) collect data to aid the state in establishing adequate aid to the victims, and (c) grant protection to persons reporting abuse, unless done with malicious intent. (Welf.C. 15601.)

Reports pursuant to the Act are generally privileged. (See infra, §150.)

(2) Definitions. "Elder," within the scope of the Act, is defined as "any person residing in this state, 65 years of age or older." (Welf.C. 15610.27.) "Dependent adult" means any resident between 18 and 64 with physical or mental limitations restricting his or her ability to carry out normal activities or protect his or her rights, or any person of that age admitted as an inpatient to a 24-hour health facility. (Welf.C. 15610.23.) "Abuse of an elder or a dependent adult" is defined as "physical abuse, neglect, financial abuse, abandonment, isolation, abduction, or other treatment with resulting physical harm or pain or mental suffering," or "deprivation by a care custodian of goods or services that are necessary to avoid physical harm or mental suffering." (Welf.C. 15610.07.) The definitions of terms used in defining "abuse of an elder or a dependent adult" are set forth in the following statutes: Welf.C. 15610.05 [abandonment]; Welf.C. 15610.06, [abduction]; Welf.C. 15610.17 [care custodian]; Welf.C. 15610.30 [financial abuse]; Welf.C. 15610.35 [goods and services necessary to avoid physical harm or mental suffering]; Welf.C. 15610.43 [isolation]; Welf.C. 15610.53 [mental suffering]; Welf.C. 15610.57 [neglect]; Welf.C. 15610.63 [physical abuse]. (See Conservatorship of Gregory (2000) 80 C.A.4th 514, 520, 95 C.R.2d 336 [instruction based on definition of "abuse of an elder or a dependent adult" in Welf.C. 15610.07, but omitting definitions of "neglect" and "physical abuse" in Welf.C. 15610.57 and Welf.C. 15610.63 was proper, where jury was not misled]; Mack v. Soung (2000) 80 C.A.4th 966, 971, 95 C.R.2d 830 [allegations that doctor concealed existence of serious bed sore, opposed patient's hospitalization where circumstances indicated that it was medically necessary, and then abandoned patient in her dying hour pleaded elder abuse in form of "neglect" under Act]; Marron v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 1049, 1066, 134 C.R.2d 358, infra, §230 [decendent was "dependent adult" within definition of Welf.C. 15610.23(b); she did not have to have physical or developmental disability as required by alternative definition in Welf.C. 15610.23(a)].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

e. Report of Abuse of Elder or Dependent Adults.

2. Required or Authorized Reporting.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 148

[§ 148] Required or Authorized Reporting.

(1) Report Required. A mandated reporter, "who, in his or her professional capacity, or within the scope of his or her employment, has observed or has knowledge of an incident that reasonably appears to be physical abuse, abandonment, abduction, isolation, financial abuse, or neglect," is "told by an elder or dependent adult that he or she has experienced" that abuse, or "reasonably suspects" that abuse must report the known or suspected instance of abuse by telephone immediately or as soon as practically possible, and by written report sent within 2 working days. (Welf.C. 15630(b)(1).) "Mandated reporters" include elder or dependent adult care custodians, health practitioners, clergy members, employees of a county adult protective services agency or a local law enforcement agency, and persons who have assumed responsibility, with or without compensation, for care or custody of an elder or dependent adult, including administrators, supervisors, and any licensed staff of a public or private facility that provides care or services for elder or dependent adults. (Welf.C. 15630(a).) (See Welf.C. 15640 et seq., 15650 et seq., 15653 et seq., 15656, 15657 et seq. [action on reports by public agencies]; on recovery in civil actions for abuse of elder or dependent adults, see infra, §1686 et seq.)

When the abuse has occurred in a long-term care facility, except a state mental health hospital or a state developmental center, the report is made to either the local ombudsperson or the local law enforcement agency. When it has occurred in a state mental hospital or a state developmental center, the report is made to designated investigators of the State Department of Mental Health or the State Department of Developmental Services or to the local law enforcement agency. If it has occurred anywhere else, the report is made to the adult protective services agency or the local law enforcement agency. On receiving reports of abuse in a long-term care facility, the local ombudsperson or local law enforcement agency must in turn make reports to designated state agencies in specified cases. (Welf.C. 15630(b)(1).)

When two or more mandated reporters are required to report a single instance of abuse, they may select a member of their team to act for them. However, any other member who knows that the designated member has failed to submit the report must then do so. (Welf.C. 15630(d).)

(2) Report Optional. A mandated reporter who has knowledge of, or reasonably suspects that, "types of elder or dependent adult abuse for which reports are not mandated" have occurred or that "his or her emotional well-being is endangered in any other way" may report the abuse. (Welf.C. 15630(c).)

Any other person with knowledge or a reasonable suspicion that any type of abuse has occurred may also report it. (Welf.C. 15631.)

(3) Report Excused. A mandated reporter who is a physician and surgeon, a registered nurse, or a psychotherapist is not required to report an incident where (a) the mandated reporter has been told by an elder or dependent adult that he or she has experienced behavior constituting abuse, (b) the mandated reporter is unaware of any independent corroborative evidence, (c) the elder or dependent adult has been diagnosed with a mental illness or dementia or is the subject of a court-ordered conservatorship for that reason, and (d) the mandated reporter, in the exercise of clinical judgment, reasonably believes that the abuse did not occur. (Welf.C. 15630(b)(3).)

A clergy member who acquires knowledge or reasonable suspicion of elder or dependent adult abuse during a penitential communication is likewise excused from making a report. "Penitential communication" means a communication that is intended to be in confidence, including, but not limited to, a sacramental confession made to a clergy member. However, this provision may not be construed to modify or limit a clergy member's duty to report known or suspected elder and dependent adult abuse when the clergy member is acting in the capacity of a care custodian, health practitioner, or employee of an adult protective agency. (Welf.C. 15630(b)(2).)

In a long-term care facility, a mandated reporter is not required to report an incident where the reporter is aware that there is a proper plan of care and that the plan was properly provided or executed, injury resulted as a result of that care, and the reporter reasonably believes that the injury was not the result of abuse. (Welf.C. 15630(b)(3).)

(4) Form and Content of Reports. The form and content of reports are prescribed by the Act. (See Welf.C. 15630(e) [telephone reports]; Welf.C. 15658(a) [written reports].)

(5) Statements Promising Compliance. A person who becomes employed as a care custodian, clergy member, health practitioner, or with an adult protective services agency or a local law enforcement agency must, as a prerequisite to employment, sign a statement that the person has knowledge of the provisions of Welf.C. 15630, and will comply with them and that informs the person that the person is a mandated reporter and of his or her reporting obligations under Welf.C. 15630. In addition, the employer must provide a copy of Welf.C. 15630 to the person. (Welf.C. 15659(a).) Similar requirements apply to persons issued a state license or certificate to engage in a profession or occupation the members of which are required to make reports pursuant to Welf.C. 15630. (Welf.C. 15659(d), (e).)

(6) Criminal Liability for Failure To Report. Failure to make a required report of elder or dependent adult abuse is a misdemeanor. (Welf.C. 15630(h); see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §168.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Report Required. See C.E.B., Elder Law Litigation, §8.6; C.E.B., Elder Law Resources, §5.40.

Financial abuse: On reporting by financial institutions, see Supp., infra, §148A.(6) Criminal Liability for Failure To Report. Welf.C. 15630(h), as amended in 2005, provides that "impeding or inhibiting" a required report is likewise a misdemeanor.

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

e. Report of Abuse of Elder or Dependent Adults.

2a. (New) Reporting by Financial Institutions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 148A

[§ 148A] (New) Reporting by Financial Institutions.

(1) In General. The Financial Elder Abuse Reporting Act of 2005 (Stats. 2005, Chap. 140) prescribes reporting requirements for a mandated reporter of suspected financial abuse of elder or dependent adults. (See Welf.C. 15630.) The following definitions apply:

(a) "Mandated reporter" means "all officers and employees of financial institutions." (Welf.C. 15630.1(a).)

(b) "Financial institution" means a depository institution as defined in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (see 12 U.S.C., §1813(c)), an institution-affiliated party as defined in that Act (see 12 U.S.C., §1813(u)), or a federal or state credit union as defined in the Federal Credit Union Act (see 12 U.S.C., §1752), including an institution-affiliated party of a credit union as defined in that Act (see 12 U.S.C., §1786(r)). (Welf.C. 15630.1(b).)

(c) "Financial abuse" is defined in Welf.C. 15610.30. (Welf.C. 15630.1(c) [adopting that definition for purposes of Financial Elder Abuse Reporting Act of 2005].)

(2) When Report Is Required. A mandated reporter who (a) has direct contact with an elder or dependent adult, or reviews or approves his or her financial documents, records, or transactions in connection with providing financial services, and (b) within the scope of the reporter's employment or professional practice, observes, knows of, or reasonably suspects an incident that reasonably appears to be financial abuse, must report the abuse. (Welf.C. 15630.1(d)(1).)

Suspected financial abuse is deemed to occur when a mandated reporter observes or has knowledge of behavior or unusual circumstances or transactions, or a pattern of behavior or unusual circumstances or transactions, that would lead an individual with like training or experience, based on the same facts, to form a reasonable belief that an elder or dependent adult is the victim of financial abuse. (Welf.C. 15630.1(h).)

(3) When Report Is Not Required. An allegation by the elder or dependent adult, or any other person, that financial abuse has occurred is not sufficient to trigger the reporting requirement if both of the following conditions are met:

(a) The mandated reporter is aware of no other corroborating or independent evidence of the alleged financial abuse. The mandated reporter is not required to investigate any accusations. (Welf.C. 15630.1(e)(1).)

(b) In the exercise of his or her professional judgment, the mandated reporter reasonably believes that financial abuse did not occur. (Welf.C. 15630.1(e)(2).)

(4) Manner of Reporting. The abuse must be reported by telephone immediately or as soon as practicably possible, and by written report sent within 2 working days, generally to the local adult protective services agency or the local law enforcement agency. (Welf.C. 15630.1(d)(1); see Welf.C. 15630.1(d)(3) [report must be made to local ombudsman or local law enforcement agency if mandated reporter knows that elder or dependent adult resides in long-term care facility].) When two or more mandated reporters jointly have knowledge or reasonably suspect financial abuse, the telephone report may be made by a member of the reporting team who is selected by mutual agreement. (Welf.C. 15630.1(d)(2).)

(5) Civil Penalty. Failure to report financial abuse under these provisions is subject to a civil penalty not exceeding $ 1,000 or, if the failure to report is wilful, a civil penalty not exceeding $ 5,000. The penalty is paid by the financial institution employing the mandated reporter. (Welf.C. 15630.1(f).) The penalty may be recovered only in a civil action brought against the financial institution by the Attorney General, district attorney, or county counsel. Multiple actions for the penalty may not be brought for the same violation. However, nothing in the Financial Elder Abuse Reporting Act may be construed to limit, expand, or otherwise modify any civil liability or remedy that may exist under other law. (Welf.C. 15630.1(g).)

(6) Reports Are Privileged. Reports of suspected financial abuse made by an employee or officer of a financial institution pursuant to these provisions are absolutely privileged under C.C. 47(b) (text, §562). (Welf.C. 15630.1(i).)

(7) Effective Dates. Unless extended, these provisions are effective from January 1, 2007, through January 1, 2013. (Welf.C. 15630.1(j); Stats. 2005, Chap. 140, §13.)

3. Confidentiality and Disclosure.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 149

[§ 149] Confidentiality and Disclosure.

(1) Identity of Reporter. The identity of all persons who report is confidential. Disclosure is permitted only (a) among adult protective services agencies, long-term care ombudsman coordinators, licensing agencies, local law enforcement agencies, the district attorney, the public guardian, the probate court, the Bureau of Medi-Cal Fraud, and the Division of Investigation of the Department of Consumer Affairs; (b) to counsel representing adult protective services agencies; (c) to the district attorney in a criminal prosecution; (d) when the person waives confidentiality; and (e) by court order. (Welf.C. 15633.5(b), (c).)

(2) Content of Report. Both mandatory and optional reports are confidential. (Welf.C. 15633(a).) They may be disclosed only to persons or agencies to whom disclosure of the reporting party's identity is permitted, and among members of teams charged with the prevention, identification, or treatment of abuse. (Welf.C. 15633(b).) Disclosure is not required if prohibited by other state or federal law. (Welf.C. 15633(c).)

However, neither the physician-patient (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §196 et seq.) nor the psychotherapist-patient (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §211 et seq.) privilege applies to information reported. (Welf.C. 15632(a).)

(3) Disclosure in Civil Actions. C.C.P. 2017.310 and 2017.320 relate to confidentiality and disclosure in civil actions, the foundation of which establishes a cause of action for violation of Welf.C. 15600 et seq. (see supra, §147, and infra, §1686 et seq.).

(a) Confidential settlement agreements. Confidential settlement agreements are disfavored in these actions. (C.C.P. 2017.310(a).) An agreement may not be recognized or enforced without a showing that (1) the information is privileged under existing law, (2) the information is not evidence of abuse of an elder or dependent adult as described in Welf.C. 15610.30, 15610.57, and 15610.63 (see supra, §147), or (3) the party seeking to uphold the confidentiality of the information has demonstrated that there is a substantial probability that prejudice will result from the disclosure and that the party's interest in the information cannot be adequately protected through redaction. (C.C.P. 2017.310(b).)

Nothing in these provisions (1) permits sealing or redacting a defendant's name in information made available to the public (C.C.P. 2017.310(c)); (2) is intended to alter, modify, or amend existing law (C.C.P. 2017.310(d)); (3) may be deemed to prohibit the entry or enforcement of that part of a confidentiality agreement, settlement agreement, or stipulated agreement between the parties that requires the nondisclosure of the amount of any money paid in the settlement of a claim (C.C.P. 2017.310(e)); or (4) applies to or affects an action for professional negligence against a health care provider (C.C.P. 2017.310(f)).

(b) Protective orders. Information acquired through discovery in these actions that is protected from disclosure by a stipulated protective order remains subject to the protective order, except for information that is evidence of abuse of an elder or dependent adult as described Welf.C. 15610.30, 15610.57, and 15610.63 (see supra, §147). (C.C.P. 2017.320(a).) In that instance, after redacting information in the document that is not evidence of abuse of an elder or dependent adult, a party may file that particularized information with the court. (C.C.P. 2017.320(b).) The party proposing to file the information must offer to meet and confer with the party from whom the information was obtained at least 1 week prior to filing the information, giving concurrent notice of filing and its basis to the party from whom the information was obtained. (C.C.P. 2017.320(b), (c).)

The filed information submitted to the court remains confidential under the protective order for 30 days after filing and becomes part of the public court record thereafter, unless an affected party petitions the court and shows good cause for a court protective order. (C.C.P. 2017.320(d).) The burden of showing good cause is on the party seeking the court protective order. (C.C.P. 2017.320(e).) A stipulated protective order may not be recognized or enforced by the court to prevent disclosure of information filed with the court pursuant to these provisions without a showing that (a) the information is privileged under existing law, (b) the information is not evidence of abuse of an elder or dependent adult as described in Welf.C. 15610.30, 15610.57, and 15610.63, or (c) the party seeking to uphold the confidentiality of the information has demonstrated that there is a substantial probability that prejudice will result from the disclosure and that the party's interest in the information cannot be adequately protected through redaction. (C.C.P. 2017.320(f).)

If the court denies the petition for a court protective order, it must redact any part of the filed information that is not evidence of abuse of an elder or dependent adult. (C.C.P. 2017.320(g).)

Nothing in these provisions permits sealing or redacting a defendant's name in information made available to the public or applies to or affects an action for professional negligence against a health care provider. (C.C.P. 2017.320(g), (h).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Content of Report. Welf.C. 15633(c) further provides that a financial institution's disclosure of reports or records relevant to a report of elder or dependent adult abuse is not prohibited if the disclosure would be required by an otherwise applicable state or federal law or court order. This provision is effective from January 1, 2007, until January 1, 2013. (Welf.C. 15633(d); Stats. 2005, Chap. 140, §13.) (On reporting by financial institutions, see Supp., supra, §148A.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

e. Report of Abuse of Elder or Dependent Adults.

4. Immunity for Reporting.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 150

[§ 150] Immunity for Reporting.

(1) Immunity Provisions. A "care custodian, clergy member, health practitioner, or employee of an adult protective services agency or a local law enforcement agency" is immune from civil or criminal liability for the submission of any required or authorized report, or for providing, on request, an adult protective services agency or a local law enforcement agency with access to the victim. (Welf.C. 15634(a), (b).)

"Any other person" submitting a report is immune unless it is proven that the report was knowingly false. (Welf.C. 15634(a).)

No person required to make a report, nor any person taking photographs at his or her direction, is civilly or criminally liable for taking the photographs or disseminating them with the report. However, there is no immunity for any other use of the photographs. (Welf.C. 15634(a).)

(2) Immunity as Absolute or Conditional. In Easton v. Sutter Coast Hosp. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 485, 95 C.R.2d 316, the mother of one of the plaintiffs was removed from his home by defendant paramedics who had been escorted there by sheriff's deputies. The deputies had received a report of elder abuse from defendant doctor, who was acting on information from defendant visiting nurse's actual observation. After the mother died, plaintiffs sued all parties for various causes of action, and defendants demurred. Held, judgment sustaining demurrer affirmed; the privilege granted by Welf.C. 15634 is absolute as to these defendants.

(a) Immunity of doctor and nurse. Both the nurse and the doctor were "health practitioners" required to make reports of elder abuse. As to whether persons making these reports receive a conditional or absolute privilege, Welf.C. 15634 distinguishes between required and voluntary reports. Persons making voluntary reports do not merit a privilege if the report is knowingly false. The omission of this requirement with respect to persons submitting mandatory reports implies that the truth or falsity of the report is of no moment, and that the resulting privilege is thus absolute. (80 C.A.4th 492.)

(b) Immunity of paramedics. Welf.C. 15634 also grants immunity to health practitioners who, pursuant to request, provide the requesting agency with access to a victim of elder abuse. Defendant paramedics, who were charged with trespass and false imprisonment, are "health practitioners" for this purpose. The goal of the Act, which is not only for agencies to receive reports of elder abuse, but also to allow the agencies to intervene to protect the elderly, would not be served by withholding the absolute privilege from defendant paramedics, who at all times were acting under the directions of defendant doctor or the deputies to whom the report was submitted. Thus, defendant paramedics were absolutely privileged with respect to the alleged trespass. Because plaintiffs failed to allege that the patient's removal to a hospital was not privileged, they failed to plead a cause of action for false imprisonment. (80 C.A.4th 495.)

(3) Reimbursement for Legal Fees. In the event that, despite immunity, an action is initiated against a care custodian, a health practitioner, or an employee of an adult protective services agency or a local law enforcement agency, that person may, on obtaining a dismissal or favorable judgment, obtain reimbursement for reasonable attorneys' fees from the state Board of Control. However, the right to reimbursement does not exist if a public entity has provided for the defense of the action. Also, the fees recovered may not exceed either the hourly rate charged by the Attorney General or an aggregate amount of $ 50,000. (Welf.C. 15634(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Immunity Provisions. Welf.C. 15634(a) and (b) also provide immunity to "a mandated reporter of suspected financial abuse of an elder or dependent adult." These provisions are effective from January 1, 2007, until January 1, 2013. (Welf.C. 15634(d); Stats. 2005, Chap. 140, §13.) (On reporting by financial institutions, see Supp., supra, §148A.)(3) Reimbursement for Legal Fees. Welf.C. 15634(c) was amended in 2006 to refer to the California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board, rather than the state Board of Control.

f. Report of Student's Use of Alcohol or Drugs.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 151

[§ 151] Report of Student's Use of Alcohol or Drugs.

(1) Right To Report. Generally, a principal or person designated by the principal may report a pupil's consumption of alcohol or abuse of a controlled substance to the pupil's parents or legal custodian if, in so doing, the principal or designee is acting in his or her professional capacity or within the scope of employment and knows or reasonably suspects, based on the pupil's apparent intoxication, that the pupil has used alcohol or drugs. (Educ.C. 44049(a).) No report may be made if it would require disclosure of confidential information given to a school counselor by a pupil over 12 years of age receiving counseling, or by a parent or guardian of that pupil. (Educ.C. 44049(c), 49602, 72621.)

(2) Immunity From Liability. There is no civil or criminal liability for making a report unless it can be proved that the report was false and that the principal or principal's designee knew of the falsity or made it with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. If this proof is established, the reporting party is liable for any damages caused. (Educ.C. 44049(b).)

g. Reports Respecting Health Care Plans and Facilities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 152

[§ 152] Reports Respecting Health Care Plans and Facilities.

(1) Report by Consultant Regarding Health Care Service Plan. No cause of action arises against a consultant on account of any communication by the consultant to the Director of the Department of Managed Health Care, or any other officer, employee, agent, contractor, or consultant of the Department of Managed Health Care, made for the purpose of determining whether health care services have been or are being arranged or provided in accordance with the Knox-Keene Health Care Service Plan Act of 1975 (Health & Saf.C. 1340 et seq.). The consultant must (a) act without malice, (b) make a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter communicated, (c) act with a reasonable belief that the communication is warranted by the facts actually known to the consultant after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts, and (d) act pursuant to a contract, as prescribed, with the director or the Commissioner of Corporations or between the director or commissioner and a state licensing board or committee. (C.C. 43.98.)

(2) Report of Assault Against Hospital Personnel. Assaults against on-duty hospital personnel that result in injury or involve the use of a firearm or other dangerous weapon must be reported to the local law enforcement agency. Reports of other types of assault against on-duty hospital personnel are optional. Absolute immunity is given to a health facility or employee making a mandatory report and conditional immunity for making an optional report, i.e., there is no immunity if the report was false and the facility or employee knew that the report was false or was made with reckless disregard of its truth or falsity. 2. Privilege.

h. Disclosure of AIDS Test.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 153

[§ 153] Disclosure of AIDS Test.

Disclosure of the identity of a person who was the subject of an AIDS blood test may result in liability (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §522), subject to certain exceptions. Circumstances in which the disclosing party is immune from liability include the following:

(1) Reporting of a diagnosed case of AIDS by the state Department of Health Services or the Centers for Disease Control under the United States Public Health Service. (Health & Saf.C. 120980(i).)

(2) Reporting by physicians, hospitals, and health care providers to local health officers of AIDS cases, HIV infections, and viral hepatitis infections. (Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(c), (d).)

(3) Distribution by a local health officer to a blood bank or plasma center, on a confidential basis, whether blood or blood components previously transfused may have been donated by a person infected with HIV. (Health & Saf.C. 1603.1(k).)

(4) Disclosure to a person believed to be a patient's spouse, sexual partner, or needle sharer that the patient tested positive. (Health & Saf.C. 121015.)

(5) Disclosure to public health authorities or tissue banks of results of tests performed on cadavers. (Health & Saf.C. 120980(h).)

(6) Disclosure of test results to a public health officer when necessary to locate and notify a blood donor of a positive result. (Health & Saf.C. 1603.3(f).) (For full discussion of exceptions to AIDS confidentiality requirements, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §523 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Required reporting: Health & Saf.C. 120980(i), as amended in 2006, provides immunity for disclosing HIV tests in accordance with reporting requirements for cases of HIV infection by the state Department of Health Services or the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention under the United States Public Health Service.

(7) (New) Reporting to local health officer and state Department of Health Services: To ensure knowledge of current trends in the HIV epidemic and to assure that California remains competitive for federal HIV and AIDS funding, health care providers and laboratories must report cases of HIV infection to the local health officer using patient names. Local health officers must, in turn, report unduplicated HIV cases by name to the state Department of Health Services. (Health & Saf.C. 121022, added in 2006.)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

j. Proceedings of Professional Society or Committee.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 155

[§ 155] Proceedings of Professional Society or Committee.

(1) Organizations and Persons Protected. The following organizations and persons are immune from monetary liability and actions for damages in prescribed circumstances:

(a) Members of a quality assurance committee formed to evaluate the care provided to mental health patients. (C.C. 43.7(a).)

(b) Professional societies and members of a committee of a medical specialty society, state or local professional society, or licensed hospital's professional staff that are formed to maintain professional standards. A "professional society" includes "legal, medical, psychological, dental, dental hygiene, dietetic, accounting, optometric, acupuncture, podiatric, pharmaceutical, chiropractic, physical therapist, veterinary, licensed marriage and family therapy, licensed clinical social work, and engineering organizations" with at least 25% of the eligible persons in the geographic area served, or at least a majority if the organization has less than 100 members. A "medical specialty society" is one having as members at least 25% of the eligible physicians within a recognized medical specialty in the geographic area served by the society. (C.C. 43.7(b).) (On liability of hospital ethics committee, see 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1239.)

(c) Members of a peer review committee formed to evaluate "medical, dental, dietetic, chiropractic, optometric, acupuncture, or veterinary services," and composed chiefly of members of the covered professions. (C.C. 43.7(b).) (On antitrust implications of medical peer review, see 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 111.)

(d) Members of a hospital's governing board when reviewing the quality of medical services. (C.C. 43.7(b).)

(e) Physicians and surgeons, podiatrists, or chiropractors serving on "an underwriting committee of an interindemnity or reciprocal or interinsurance exchange or mutual company" when evaluating such professionals for liability insurance or an interindemnity, reciprocal, or interinsurance contract. (C.C. 43.7(d).)

(f) Members of a committee of a professional society composed of a substantial percentage of licensed realtors in the geographic area served and formed to maintain professional standards. (C.C. 43.91(a).)

(g) Persons giving information to hospitals and professional schools, societies, committees, and licensing boards relating to professional evaluation. (B. & P.C. 802.5, 2318; C.C. 43.8; C.C. 43.91(b); C.C. 43.96(b).)

(2) Scope of Immunity. The privileges accorded are generally stated as conditional. (See C.C. 43.7(a), (b), (d), 43.91(a), providing that immunity extends to acts or proceedings within scope of designated functions, if organization or person "acts without malice, has made a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter ... , and acts in reasonable belief that the action taken ... is warranted by the [known] facts ... after such reasonable effort to obtain facts.")

Hassan v. Mercy Amer. River Hosp. (2003) 31 C.4th 709, 3 C.R.3d 623, 74 P.3d 726, held to the same effect in examining the scope of C.C. 43.8. Plaintiff doctor, a member of defendant hospital's medical staff, applied for medical staff privileges at another hospital. In response to the other hospital's request for information regarding plaintiff, defendant forwarded a copy of a memorandum summarizing a 20-year-old telephone conversation in which plaintiff was described as militant with respect to authority, too personally involved with the problems of the unfortunate, and a manipulator of coworkers. After the other hospital rejected plaintiff's application, he sued defendant on several causes of action, all of which were based on the telephone conversation. The trial court granted defendant's summary judgment motion on the ground that its correspondence with the other hospital was absolutely privileged under C.C. 43.8. The Court of Appeal affirmed, but concluded that the privilege was conditional. Held, affirmed.

(a) Word "person" is not limited to humans.

(1) C.C. 43.8 confers a privilege on any "person" but does not define that term. C.C. 14, which defines certain words used in the Civil Code, states that "the word person includes a corporation as well as a natural person," and that definition was adopted by the Supreme Court long ago in Pasadena v. Stimson (1891) 91 C. 238, 27 P. 604. (31 C.4th 716.)

(2) Noting that health care providers are often organized as noncorporate entities, plaintiff argued that applying the C.C. 14 definition of "person" would lead to an absurd result in this context, because a corporation could claim the C.C. 43.8 privilege, but a medical provider organized in another way could not. This contention is without merit. C.C. 14 states that the word "person" "includes" corporations, and "includes" is ordinarily a term of enlargement, rather than limitation. (31 C.4th 717.)

(3) Referring to the bill that enacted C.C. 43.8, a legislative staff analysis stated that "it is the intent of the legislation that 'person's include natural and unnatural individuals." Additionally, the Legislature could have expressly excluded all hospitals from the privilege, as it has done in other provisions granting immunity from tort liability, e.g., C.C. 43.7, but it did not do so. Thus, neither the language nor history of this provision supports the narrow definition of "person" advanced by plaintiff. (31 C.4th 717.)

(b) Privilege as conditional.

(1) A 1990 amendment to C.C. 43.8 deleted the phrase that made the privilege expressly conditioned on the communicator's reasonable belief in the truth of the information conveyed. But the elimination of this language does not mean that the privilege was changed to an absolute one, because the statute continues to require that the communication be "intended to aid," in the evaluation of a medical practitioner. By so providing, the Legislature manifested an intent to require a form of subjective good faith inconsistent with the communication of information known to be false. Had the Legislature meant to refer merely to the context of the communication, it could have provided that the privilege applied only to a communication "used" or "submitted for use." (31 C.4th 718.)

(2) The concluding sentence of C.C. 43.8 provides that the immunity does not affect the availability of any absolute privilege afforded by C.C. 47 (infra, §561 et seq.) If C.C. 43.8 itself conferred an absolute privilege, there would be no reason for the legislative concern that the C.C. 43.8 privilege not affect the absolute privilege of C.C. 47. "This legislative concern necessarily implies that the section 43.8 privilege is more limited than the section 47 privilege, or, in other words, that the section 43.8 privilege is qualified rather than absolute." (31 C.4th 721.)

(3) Although the words "intended to aid" "do not require that the communication actually assist the receiving party in evaluating the doctor's 'qualifications, fitness, character, or insurability,' they do require that the communicator make the communication with a particular subjective intent. Because false information of any sort has no value in evaluating a medical practitioner, the communication of information known to be false cannot be intended to help or assist in that evaluation, or, in other words, an intent to deceive is inconsistent with an intent to aid. Thus, proof that the communicator knew the information to be false when it was conveyed establishes malice sufficient to defeat the qualified section 43.8. privilege." (31 C.4th 723.) (See Axline v. St. John's Hosp. & Health Center (1998) 63 C.A.4th 907, 912, 74 C.R.2d 385 [C.C. 43.8 does not apply unless alleged misconduct relates to "communication" to hospital or peer review committee]; N.N.V. v. American Assn. of Blood Banks (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1358, 1398, 89 C.R.2d 885 [immunity of C.C. 43.7 applies to professional society's failure to comply with standards, not with failure to adopt standards]; 27 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 357 [Medical Staff Peer Review: Qualifying the Qualified Privilege Provision].) (On immunity for persons serving on committees reviewing health care service plans, see Health & Saf.C. 1370, 1370.1.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Scope of Immunity.

Scope of C.C. 43.8: C.C. 43.8 was subdivided in 2007. The provision that the immunity set forth in the section does not affect the absolute immunity afforded by C.C. 47 was lettered as subdivision (b), and other provisions were lettered as subdivision (a). Subdivision (c) was added: "Nothing in this section is intended to in any way affect the California Supreme Court's decision in" Hassan v. Mercy Amer. River Hosp. (2003) 31 C.4th 709, 3 C.R.3d 623, 74 P.3d 726, text, p. 274, "holding that subdivision (a) provides a qualified privilege."

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

k. Referrals of Patients or Clients.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 156

[§ 156] Referrals of Patients or Clients.

(1) Immunity of Professional Society or Referral Service. Immunity from civil liability is provided to "any professional society or any nonprofit corporation authorized by a professional society to operate a referral service, or their agents, employees, or members, for referring any member of the public to any professional member of such society or service, or for acts of negligence or conduct constituting unprofessional conduct committed by a professional to whom a member of the public was referred." (C.C. 43.95(a).) The referral must have been made without malice and at no cost above an initial fee made as part of a public service referral system. (C.C. 43.95(a).)

Immunity is also given to these societies and nonprofit corporations for providing a telephone information library that is available to the general public without charge. (C.C. 43.95(a).)

"Professional society" is defined broadly to include (a) "psychological, architectural, medical, dental, dietetic, accounting, optometric, podiatric, pharmaceutical, chiropractic, veterinary, licensed marriage and family therapy, licensed clinical social work, and engineering organizations" with at least a majority of the eligible persons or licentiates in the geographic area served if the society has less than 100 members, and at least 25% otherwise, (b) organizations with nonprofit lawyer referral services registered with the State Bar and in conformance with the minimum standards approved by the Supreme Court, and (c) organizations established to provide free assistance or representation to the needy. (C.C. 43.95(a).) (On standards and requirements for lawyer referral services, see B. & P.C. 6155.)

The immunity is lost if the society fails to disclose the nature of a disciplinary action, of which it has actual knowledge, taken against a member by a state licensing agency. However, there is no duty to disclose where (a) a disciplinary proceeding results in no action being taken, or (b) except for attorneys, for whom there is no time limit on the duty to disclose, 3 years have elapsed since the professional satisfied the conditions imposed. (C.C. 43.95(b).)

(2) Immunity of Health Care Provider Receiving Unsolicited Referral From Diagnostic Testing Facility. A health care provider is given immunity from liability for professional negligence "on account of the receipt by such provider of an unsolicited referral, arising from a test performed by a multiphasic screening unit," i.e., a facility performing diagnostic testing only. (C.C. 43.9(a), 43.9(d)(4).) However, the immunity does not apply if there is a provider-patient relationship or a contract for health care services. (C.C. 43.9(b).)

In order to receive immunity, the provider must notify the screening unit, or return the test results within 21 days, if it does not evaluate the results, or does so but takes no further action. If a review of the results indicates a substantial risk of serious illness or death, the provider must make a reasonable effort to notify the testee within 14 days. (C.C. 43.9(c).)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

k. Referrals of Patients or Clients.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 157

[§ 157] (l) Protection of Property Against Dog.

Generally, "any dog entering any enclosed or unenclosed property upon which livestock or poultry are confined may be seized or killed by the owner or tenant of the property or by any employee of the owner or tenant," and no action, civil or criminal, "shall be maintained against the owner, tenant, or employee." (Food & Ag.C. 31103; see C.C. 3341(2) [granting immunity for killing dog or other animal, not on its owner's property, engaged in "worrying, wounding, or killing any bovine animals, swine, horses, mules, burros, sheep, angora or cashmere goats"].)

Food & Ag.C. 31103 was construed in Katsaris v. Cook (1986) 180 C.A.3d 256, 225 C.R. 531. Plaintiff, living alone on land adjacent to the ranch of defendants Mr. and Mrs. H, had two sheep dogs. While plaintiff was absent on business, the dogs, left in the care of two neighbor boys, wandered away and were shot on the H ranch by defendant C, the Hs' employee. The facts of the killing and dumping of the bodies in a ditch were not disclosed to plaintiff for 10 days, during which period he made sustained and expensive efforts to find them. He brought this action for negligence and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge granted defendants' motion for judgment on the ground that Food & Ag.C. 31103 precluded all claims. Held, affirmed as to all but the emotional distress count.

(a) By enacting the statute, the Legislature found that the public interest in protecting farm animals outweighed the dog owners' right to permit their animals to roam freely on land occupied by livestock, and gave livestock owners a privilege to kill or seize trespassing dogs. (180 C.A.3d 263.) The privilege is qualified, because it protects nonofficial actors and is based on the value of the interest protected. (180 C.A.3d 265.) However, because the privileged killing deprives the owner of his property rights in the animal, the statute should be strictly construed. (180 C.A.3d 266.)

(b) The claim for damages arising from the killing is clearly barred by the statute; and the claim that defendants negligently failed to tell plaintiff what happened could not be maintained, for defendants were under no duty to speak. (180 C.A.3d 266, 267.)

(c) The claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress would be barred by the privilege if it were based solely on the manner of killing of the dogs and disposition of their bodies. (180 C.A.3d 267.) But an additional basis was Mrs. H's statements after the shooting that she knew nothing about the dogs. If plaintiff can prove that this conduct was, under the circumstances, extreme and outrageous, and that it met the other tests of intent or reckless disregard and proximate cause (see infra, §451 et seq.), recovery may be possible. (180 C.A.3d 267, 268.) Proof merely of failure to notify the dog's owner of its death, or failure to answer truthfully to an inquiry about the dog, will not be sufficient. "Livestock owners, insulated by section 31103 from often negligible liability for the value of the destroyed dog, would instead be exposed to potentially substantial liability for the dog owner's emotional suffering." (180 C.A.3d 268.)

The Katsaris approach and reasoning were applied in Scozzafava v. Lieb (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1575, 236 C.R. 129, involving different facts. Defendant, owner of a poultry farm, instructed his employee M to shoot trespassing dogs. M shot and wounded a dog that was chasing the chickens. The dog's owner took it to C, a veterinarian, and while it was being prepared for surgery, the dog bit plaintiff, C's assistant. Held, plaintiff had no cause of action against defendant for negligence. "With the sole distinction that Katsaris dealt with the killing of dogs and this case involves only the wounding of a marauding dog, plaintiff's negligence claim is virtually identical to that in Katsaris." (190 C.A.3d 1581.) The statutory privilege to kill necessarily reaches shooting intended to kill. (190 C.A.3d 1581.)

o. Independent Quality Review for Residential Construction.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 160

[§ 160] Independent Quality Review for Residential Construction.

There is no monetary liability by, and no cause of action for damages against, a qualified person under contract with an applicant for a residential building permit (1) to provide independent quality review of the plans and specifications provided with the application in order to determine compliance with the State Housing Law (Health & Saf.C. 17910 et seq.) or related rules or regulations, or (2) to provide independent quality review of the work of improvement to determine compliance with these plans and specifications. The person must be a building inspector, combination inspector, combination dwelling inspector, registered professional engineer, licensed general contractor, or licensed architect meeting specified standards and holding a valid certification. The immunity extends to the entity employing the qualified person. (C.C. 43.99(a).) However, the qualifying person may not engage in other construction, design, planning, supervision, or activities on the work of improvement, or provide quality review services for any other party on the work of improvement. (C.C. 43.99(e).) Also, the qualifying person or employing entity must maintain professional errors and omissions insurance coverage in an amount not less than $ 2 million. (C.C. 43.99(f).) (On liability for construction defects generally, see infra, §1162 et seq.)

The immunity does not apply to an action initiated by the applicant who retained the qualified person. (C.C. 43.99(a).) Also, the immunity does not inure to the benefit of the qualified person for damages caused to the applicant solely by the negligence or wilful misconduct of the qualified person resulting from providing services under the contract with the applicant. (C.C. 43.99(g).)

The fact that an inspection by a qualified person has taken place may not be introduced as evidence in a construction defect action, other than an action initiated by the applicant, including any reports or other items generated by the qualified person. (C.C. 43.99(b).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

p. Reliance on Court Process or Order.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 161

[§ 161] Reliance on Court Process or Order.

(1) Reliance on Court Process. A sheriff or other ministerial officer is required to execute all orders "regular on their face and issued by competent authority," whatever may be the defect in the proceedings on which they were issued. (C.C.P. 262.1.) A peace officer is not liable for an arrest on a warrant regular on its face if the officer acts without malice and in the reasonable belief that the person arrested is the one referred to. (C.C. 43.55.) These statutes state the established common law rule that an officer acting under an apparently valid process or order is immune from civil liability. (See Vallindras v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (1954) 42 C.2d 149, 151, 265 P.2d 907; Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v. Biscailuz (1957) 47 C.2d 716, 721, 306 P.2d 6; Rest.2d, Torts §122 et seq.) And "[a]ll that is required to make process fair on its face is that it must proceed from a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter and that it contain nothing which ought reasonably to apprise the officer that it was issued without authority." (Vallindras v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., supra, 42 C.2d 154.)

In Vallindras, the superior court held plaintiff in contempt for wilful failure to pay attorneys' fees and support money to his wife in a divorce action. He was imprisoned, but obtained a discharge on habeas corpus by showing that the contempt order was defective (failure to state the sum due in the adjudicating and committing portion of the order) and therefore void. Plaintiff's theory was that if the process was void, the sheriff, chargeable with knowledge of what constitutes a valid order, was liable for false imprisonment. Held, despite its technical invalidity, the order was regular on its face and no cause of action was stated. (42 C.2d 154.)

The rule was given an extended application in Biscailuz, where the sheriff was sued for wrongfully releasing the attachment of a bank account. The defense, upheld by the court, was the sheriff's reliance on the superior court clerk's certificate reciting that no undertaking to continue the lien had been timely filed. (47 C.2d 722.)

In George v. San Luis Obispo (2000) 78 C.A.4th 1048, 1051, 93 C.R.2d 595, a bankruptcy court writ of possession omitting plaintiffs' names was nevertheless held regular on its face, where it was executed with an order from the same court that contained plaintiffs' names.

The rule was indirectly involved in People v. Vargas (1960) 179 C.A.2d Supp. 863, 3 C.R. 925, where defendant, while being served with a writ of possession in a civil action, struck and bit deputy sheriffs. In this prosecution for battery, she asserted the right to resist service of the writ on the ground that it was based on a void judgment. Held, conviction affirmed. The same principle that protects the officer executing process valid on its face from civil liability protects the officer from physical violence, and makes it criminal to resist the service. (179 C.A.2d Supp. 865.)

(2) Obedience to Law or Lawful Order. In Sokol v. Public Util. Com. (1966) 65 C.2d 247, 257, 53 C.R. 673, 418 P.2d 265, the telephone company discontinued service to a suspected bookmaker, on request of the chief of police, pursuant to a Public Utilities Commission order. The order, though invalid; was valid on its face. Held, the utility was not liable in tort for compliance with it. It would be manifestly unfair to impose civil liability on a private entity for doing what the law requires. (65 C.2d 258, citing Peterson v. Robison (1954) 43 C.2d 690, 277 P.2d 19, infra, §439.) (See Brian T. v. Pacific Bell (1989) 210 C.A.3d 894, 908, 258 C.R. 707 [following Sokol; telephone utility was absolved from liability where it acted under compulsion of Public Utilities Commission order, even if order was based on mistaken interpretation of commission's duties and powers].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Reliance on Court Process. C.C. 43.55 was subdivided in 2005, with the material treated in the text designated as C.C. 43.55(a). C.C. 43.55(b) defines a "warrant of arrest regular upon its face" to include either (a) a paper arrest warrant issued pursuant to a judicial order or (b) a judicial order entered into an automated warrant system by law enforcement or court personnel authorized to make those entries at or near the time the judicial order is made.

C.C. 48.9 provides a qualified immunity for an "anonymous witness program," defined as "a program whereby information relating to alleged criminal activity is received from persons, whose names are not released without their authorization unless required by law, and disseminated to law enforcement agencies." (C.C. 48.9(d).)

(1) Persons Protected. The immunity covers an organization that "sponsors or conducts" such a program, and its employees and agents. (C.C. 48.9(a).)

(2) Nature of Immunity. These organizations and persons are not liable in a civil action for damages resulting from their receipt of information or dissemination of it to a law enforcement agency. "Civil action for damages" includes, but is not limited to, "a defamation action or an action for damages resulting from retaliation against a person who provided information." (C.C. 48.9(a), (b).)

(3) Where Immunity Is Inapplicable. The immunity does not apply where (a) the information was disseminated with actual knowledge of its falsity; (b) the name of the provider of the information was disseminated without his or her authorization, and the dissemination was not required by law; (c) the name of the provider was obtained and he or she was not informed that the disclosure may be required by law. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 164

[§ 164] Report Regarding Threat of Violence on School Grounds.

C.C. 48.8 recognizes a qualified privilege for communications or reports about threats of armed violence on school grounds. The communication may be made by any person to a school principal. It may also be made by a student attending the school to the student's teacher, a school counselor, or a school nurse, and a report of that communication to the school principal is also protected. The communication or report must state that a specific student or other specified person has made a threat to commit violence or potential violence on the school grounds involving the use of a firearm or other deadly or dangerous weapon. (C.C. 48.8(a).) "School" is defined as "a public or private school providing instruction in kindergarten or grades 1 to 12, inclusive." (C.C. 48.8(b).) (See 33 McGeorge L. Rev. 195 [protecting those who report threats of potential violence from defamation liability].)

The communication or report "is a communication on a matter of public concern" and is subject to liability in defamation only on a showing by clear and convincing evidence that the communication or report was made with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of the communication. Where punitive damages are alleged, C.C. 3294 (see infra, §1559) applies. (C.C. 48.8(a).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

1. Legislators.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 165

[§ 165] Legislators.

Federal, state, and local legislators have an absolute privilege and therefore a complete immunity from tort liability for acts (e.g., defamatory statements) in the exercise of their legislative functions (e.g., speeches and publications). (Lake Country Estates v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (1979) 440 U.S. 391, 99 S.Ct. 1171, 1178, 59 L.Ed.2d 401, 411; see Rest.2d, Torts §590; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §273; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.10; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 888; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 318; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1229; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 486; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 466; 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1087.) (On immunity under Speech or Debate Clause, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§150, 151.)

In Tenney v. Brandhove (1951) 341 U.S. 367, 71 S.Ct. 783, 95 L.Ed. 1019, plaintiff, who had petitioned the Legislature to refuse funds to a committee, was summoned to a hearing. On his refusal to testify, his prior statements and criminal record were disclosed and he was prosecuted for contempt. He brought a civil rights suit in the federal district court under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.), alleging conspiracy to prevent him from exercising his rights of free speech, etc. Held, legislators are protected by common law immunity from tort liability. To find that an investigation exceeded the bounds of legislative power there must be an obvious usurpation of judicial or executive functions, not shown here. And as to the allegations of motive, the Court said: "The claim of an unworthy purpose does not destroy the privilege. Legislators are immune from deterrents to the uninhibited discharge of their legislative duty, not for their private indulgence but for the public good. One must not expect uncommon courage even in legislators. The privilege would be of little value if they could be subjected to the cost and inconvenience and distractions of a trial upon a conclusion of the pleader, or to the hazard of a judgment against them based upon a jury's speculation as to motives." (71 S.Ct. 788, 95 L.Ed. 1027.) (See 44 Cal. L. Rev. 890; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1229.)

Dawson v. Martin (1957) 150 C.A.2d 379, 309 P.2d 915, involved the effect of Govt.C. 25042, which provides that a county supervisor who performs any duty "fraudulently or corruptly" is liable on his official bond to a person so injured. Plaintiff alleged that defendants, members of the county board, had him falsely charged with violations of the building code, for which he was arrested and imprisoned. Thus, plaintiff sought an interpretation of the statute which would remove the ordinary immunity of these officers from liability for malicious prosecution. Held, the Legislature did not intend to single out boards of supervisors for special liability, and the statutory language, strictly interpreted, was not satisfied with these general charges of fraud. (150 C.A.2d 382.)

In Hancock v. Burns (1958) 158 C.A.2d 785, 323 P.2d 456, plaintiffs, employees of a public utility, alleged that they were summoned before the committee and claimed privilege; that thereafter the committee maliciously communicated with their employer recommending their discharge for their lack of cooperation and as poor security risks; that they were discharged on the basis of this recommendation; and that they were loyal citizens. Held, no cause of action for inducing breach of contract was stated; the acts were within the legislative authority of the committee to report its recommendations to the people.

(a) The underlying policy may be stated as follows: "If government, operating through the individuals who form it, is afforded immunity from private suit only when its actions are beyond any question, and loses that immunity upon mere allegation of improper motives or unlawful acts in a complaint seeking damages, then those persons who form government are subject to the threat of personal liability in any matter in which their discretion is exercised." (158 C.A.2d 792.)

(b) However, the privilege is not wholly unlimited: "Were the committee or its members charged with the commission of some bodily injury inflicted on another in the course of conducting their hearings, such act could not reasonably be urged to come within the immunity here stated, as the mere recitation of the infliction of bodily harm is a statement of an act which by no reasonable means could be encompassed by the immunity." (158 C.A.2d 793.) (See Allen v. Superior Court (1959) 171 C.A.2d 444, 448, 340 P.2d 1030, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §402 [chairman of legislative committee was immune from tort liability for acts in conduct of hearing]; Martelli v. Pollock (1958) 162 C.A.2d 655, 659, 328 P.2d 795 [city legislators have same immunity]; 11 Stanf. L. Rev. 194 [criticizing Hancock].)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

2. Judges and Quasi-Judicial Officers.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 166

[§ 166] In General.

(1) Rule of Absolute Privilege. A judge has the same absolute privilege as a legislator (supra, §165), and is consequently immune from liability for such torts as malicious prosecution or false imprisonment. (Oppenheimer v. Ashburn (1959) 173 C.A.2d 624, 629, 343 P.2d 931; Lewis v. Linn (1962) 209 C.A.2d 394, 397, 26 C.R. 6; Paddleford v. Biscay (1971) 22 C.A.3d 139, 143, 99 C.R. 220, infra, §169; Stump v. Sparkman (1978) 435 U.S. 349, 98 S.Ct. 1099, 1105, 55 L.Ed.2d 331, 341, infra, §169; Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 2912, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, 918, infra, §178; Pulliam v. Allen (1984) 466 U.S. 522, 104 S.Ct. 1970, 1975, 80 L.Ed.2d 565, 572, infra, §170.) "An unbroken line of authorities including many English cases as well as authorities in our own country from the beginning of our judicial history sustains the principle that judicial officers are not liable for the erroneous exercise of judicial powers vested in them." (Frazier v. Moffatt (1951) 108 C.A.2d 379, 384, 239 P.2d 123.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §585; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 309; 27 San Diego L. Rev. 1; 46 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Judges §74 et seq.; 42 A.L.R.2d 825 [findings, report, or the like of judge or person acting in judicial capacity as privileged in defamation action]; 64 A.L.R.3d 1251 [civil liability of judicial officer for malicious prosecution or abuse of process].)

(2) Illustrations. The judicial privilege defense has been frequently applied. (See Ceinar v. Johnston (1933) 134 C.A. 166, 170, 25 P.2d 28 [justice court judge who incarcerated plaintiff was not liable for false imprisonment]; Malone v. Carey (1936) 17 C.A.2d 505, 507, 62 P.2d 166 [city judge]; Perry v. Meikle (1951) 102 C.A.2d 602, 605, 228 P.2d 17 [superior court judge committed plaintiff for contempt for disobedience of order to produce a child; no liability for false imprisonment]; Reverend Mother Pauline v. Bray (1959) 168 C.A.2d 384, 385, 335 P.2d 1018 [appellate justice]; Taliaferro v. Contra Costa (1960) 182 C.A.2d 587, 592, 6 C.R. 231, infra, §169 [immunity of judge of inferior court is same as that of judge of any other court].)

In Frazier v. Moffatt, supra, plaintiff and his party were engaged in a noisy lunch at a cafe. Defendant justice court judge, acting under P.C. 838 (authorizing magistrate to order arrest committed in presence), called the police, ordered plaintiff arrested for disturbing the peace, and filed a criminal complaint. After trial and acquittal, plaintiff sued for false arrest and imprisonment. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed. The question was whether a magistrate is civilly liable for an arrest made maliciously and on insufficient evidence; in other words, whether the act carried with it the complete immunity of a judicial officer. The court concluded that in making the arrest pursuant to P.C. 838, the magistrate "is acting within his jurisdiction and in the performance of a judicial act, done in the execution of his office and within the purview of his general authority." (108 C.A.2d 387.)

In Pierson v. Ray (1967) 386 U.S. 547, 87 S.Ct. 1213, 18 L.Ed.2d 288, blacks, arrested and convicted for peacefully attempting to use public facilities in Mississippi, brought a civil rights action in federal district court under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) against the police judge who tried them. Held, the principle of judicial immunity was applicable to such actions, and the judge had a complete defense. (87 S.Ct. 1218, 18 L.Ed.2d 296.)

In Frost v. Geernaert (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1104, 246 C.R. 440, involving allegations that defendant superior court judges were guilty of fraud in making rulings against plaintiff in other actions, plaintiff argued that judicial immunity was abrogated by Govt.C. 822.2, which immunizes public employees from liability for misrepresentation, unless they are guilty of "actual fraud, corruption or actual malice" (see infra, §348). Plaintiff's argument was based on a 1977 amendment to Govt.C. 810.2, which expanded the definition of "employee" to include a "judicial officer." Held, judicial immunity was not abrogated.

(a) The 1977 Chapter amending Govt.C. 810.2 also added Govt.C. 27648, which provides that any judge who, like other public employees, is entitled to representation under Govt.C. 825, 995, or 27647, but who is required to retain the judge's own counsel because of a conflict of interest, is entitled to recover attorneys' fees from the public entity. In the light of the limited nature of the 1977 legislation, there is no indication that the Legislature intended to expand judicial liability through Govt.C. 822.2 by amending Govt.C. 810.2. (200 C.A.3d 1109.)

(b) Although a literal construction of the language of Govt.C. 810.2 and 822.2 would lead to alteration of the common law doctrine of judicial immunity, nothing in the language or history of these statutes suggests that the Legislature intended to achieve so significant a result by indirection. Rather, it is far more likely that had the Legislature intended such a result it would have addressed the issue directly. (200 C.A.3d 1109.)

[§ 167] Quasi-Judicial Immunity.

Under the concept of "quasi-judicial immunity," California courts have extended absolute judicial immunity to persons other than judges if those persons act in a judicial capacity. In determining whether a person is acting in a quasi-judicial fashion, the courts look at the nature of the duty performed to determine whether it is a judicial act--not the name or classification of the officer who performs it; many who are properly classified as executive officers are invested with limited judicial powers. (Howard v. Drapkin (1990) 222 C.A.3d 843, 852, 271 C.R. 893, infra, §174; see Fisher v. Pickens (1990) 225 C.A.3d 708, 713, 275 C.R. 487, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §941 [in gathering evidence on proposed conservatee, court investigator was acting as quasi-judicial officer]; 29 Hastings L. Rev. 613 [immunity of police officers enforcing court orders as quasi-judicial or as qualified].) Thus, a court commissioner acting either as a temporary judge or in performance of subordinate judicial duties under Cal. Const., Art. VI, §22, may raise the defense. (Tagliavia v. Los Angeles (1980) 112 C.A.3d 759, 761, 169 C.R. 467; see Branson v. Martin (1997) 56 C.A.4th 300, 304, 65 C.R.2d 401 [court commissioner, substituting for magistrate in traffic infraction case, was immune from liability for incarcerating plaintiff, who refused to enter plea or sign promise to appear].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

2. Judges and Quasi-Judicial Officers.

cc. Nonjudicial Acts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 168

[§ 168] Nonjudicial Acts.

(1) Inapplicability of Immunity. The concept of judicial immunity does not extend to conduct that, though by a judicial or quasi-judicial officer or employee, is not performed in a judicial capacity. Courts look at the nature of the challenged act to determine if it is truly in the exercise of a judicial function and therefore deserving of judicial immunity. (Soliz v. Williams (1999) 74 C.A.4th 577, 595, 88 C.R.2d 184.)

Soliz involved both judicial and nonjudicial acts. Plaintiff was a party to a previous action before defendant, a superior court judge, that involved a settlement conference. During that conference, defendant in very profane terms criticized plaintiff's position. Three days later, defendant made comments to a reporter in which he denied his earlier conduct, thus indicating that plaintiff was a liar. Plaintiff then filed the present complaint, alleging several causes of action, some of which involved the statements during the settlement conference and some of which related to defendant's remarks to the reporter. Pursuant to stipulation, the trial judge entered judgment dismissing the complaint with the understanding that plaintiff could appeal the order sustaining the demurrer. Held, affirmed with respect to the causes of action involving the settlement conference; reversed as to the causes based on the remarks to the reporter.

(a) Conducting settlement conferences is a judicial function and, under C.R.C., Rule 222, is within the jurisdiction of an acting judge. Plaintiff argued that defendant's conduct was so serious that absolute judicial immunity was inapplicable. This contention is erroneous. "The seriousness of the misconduct identified in the complaint in the present case does not alter the fact that judicial immunity bars the damage claims ... premised on the statements made and the conduct engaged in at the ... settlement conference." (74 C.A.4th 589.)

(b) A judge is not immune from liability for torts involving nonjudicial action, however, and federal law makes it clear that defamatory comments to reporters fall into this category. Speaking to a reporter about a pending lawsuit is not a normal judicial function. While the judicial function can be furthered by statements to journalists, the present case involves a verified complaint alleging that defendant made false statements about the incident that thereby made plaintiff appear to be a liar. "Under these narrow circumstances," the absolute judicial privilege against a suit for damages is not applicable. (74 C.A.4th 595.)

(2) Ministerial Acts. Nonjudicial conduct, unprotected by judicial immunity, includes the performance of duties that are ministerial, rather than discretionary. In Antoine v. Byers & Anderson (1993) 508 U.S. 429, 113 S.Ct. 2167, 124 L.Ed.2d 391, plaintiff, who had been convicted of robbery, brought a civil action against defendant court reporter whose delay in producing a transcript of the robbery trial delayed the appeal process for 4 years. Defendant claimed absolute judicial immunity as a defense. Held, a court reporter is not absolutely immune for damages liability for failure to produce a transcript of a federal criminal trial.

(a) The "functional approach" to immunity does not require that absolute immunity be extended to court reporters on the ground that they are part of the judicial process. (113 S.Ct. 2171, 124 L.Ed.2d 399, citing Burns v. Reed (1991) 500 U.S. 478, 111 S.Ct. 1934, 114 L.Ed.2d 547, infra, §181.) "When judicial immunity is extended to officials other than judges, it is because their judgments are 'functional[ly] comparab[le]' to those of judges--that is, because they, too, 'exercise a discretionary judgment' as part of their function." (113 S.Ct. 2171, 124 L.Ed.2d 399, citing Imbler v. Pachtman (1976) 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 47 L.Ed.2d 128, infra, §181.)

(b) The function performed by court reporters does not meet this test. Court reporters are afforded no discretion in performing their statutory duty (28 U.S.C., §753(b)) to record verbatim court proceedings in their entirety; they must record, as accurately as possible, what transpires in court. And neither the skill required to perform this task nor the importance of it is sufficient to make it functionally comparable to that of a judge. "In short, court reporters do not exercise the kind of judgment that is protected by the doctrine of judicial immunity." (113 S.Ct. 2172, 124 L.Ed.2d 400.)

(3) Executive, Legislative, or Administrative Acts. In Forrester v. White (1988) 484 U.S. 219, 108 S.Ct. 538, 98 L.Ed.2d 555, defendant, an Illinois trial judge, had authority to hire probation officers, and hired plaintiff. Later he discharged her, and, in this civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.), a jury found that he had discriminated against her on account of her sex, and awarded compensatory damages. The federal district court set aside the verdict and granted summary judgment for defendant on the ground of absolute judicial immunity. Held, the judge's decision to dismiss a subordinate court employee was not a judicial act, and the defense of absolute immunity was not available.

(a) "[T]his Court has been cautious in recognizing claims that government officials should be free of the obligation to answer for their acts in court. Running through our cases, with fair consistency, is a 'functional' approach to immunity questions other than those that have been decided by express constitutional or statutory enactment. Under that approach, we examine the nature of the functions with which a particular official or class of officials has been lawfully entrusted, and we seek to evaluate the effect that exposure to particular forms of liability would likely have on the appropriate exercise of those functions." (108 S.Ct. 542, 98 L.Ed.2d 563.)

(b) "Difficulties have arisen primarily in attempting to draw the line between truly judicial acts, for which immunity is appropriate, and acts that simply happen to have been done by judges. Here, as in other contexts, immunity is justified and defined by the functions it protects and serves, not by the person to whom it attaches." Although the Court has never articulated a precise and general definition of acts entitled to immunity, the cases "suggest an intelligible distinction between judicial acts and the administrative, legislative, or executive functions that judges may on occasion be assigned by law to perform." (108 S.Ct. 544, 98 L.Ed.2d 565.)

(c) In this case, it is clear that defendant was acting in an administrative capacity when he demoted and discharged plaintiff. Those acts--like many others involved in supervising court employees and overseeing the efficient operation of a court--may have been quite important in providing the necessary conditions of a sound adjudicative system. The decisions at issue, however, were not themselves judicial or adjudicative. A judge who hires or fires a probation officer cannot meaningfully be distinguished from a district attorney who hires and fires assistant district attorneys, or indeed from any other executive branch official who is responsible for making these employment decisions. (108 S.Ct. 545, 98 L.Ed.2d 566.)

(d) "This does not imply that qualified immunity, like that available to Executive Branch officials who make similar discretionary decisions, is unavailable to judges for their employment decisions." (108 S.Ct. 545, 98 L.Ed.2d 567.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Inapplicability of Immunity. Former C.R.C., Rule 222 was renumbered C.R.C., Rule 3.1380 in 2006.

In Regan v. Price (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1491, 33 C.R.3d 130, a discovery referee slammed a door against a litigant's body when he tried to leave the deposition room, and the litigant subsequently sued the referee for false imprisonment, assault, battery, negligence, and infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the referee's demurrer to the complaint on the ground of judicial immunity. Held, reversed.

(a) Physically assaulting a litigant cannot be a judicial function, except in extraordinary cases. (131 C.A.4th 1496.) That situation might occur, for example, where a litigant assaults court staff, and the judge physically intervenes because court security personnel are absent. However, this is not the case here. (131 C.A.4th 1497.)

(b) The referee claims that the assault is privileged because the referee was exercising his power to compel the parties to proceed with a scheduled deposition. Under the same rule, however, a judge could, without incurring civil liability, step down from the bench and choke an unruly litigant under the "judicial" auspices of restoring order to the courtroom. The test for whether an act is a judicial one, to which judicial immunity attaches, must be determined by whether it is a function normally performed by a judge. The use of physical force on a litigant is not an act normally performed by a judge. "A judge's robe is not a king's crown. [Judicial immunity] was never intended to protect acts of thuggery against litigants merely because the assailant happens to be a judge." (131 C.A.4th 1499.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

2. Judges and Quasi-Judicial Officers.

dd. Acts Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 169

[§ 169] Acts Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction.

(1) Limited Scope of Exception. It is often asserted (usually as dictum) that a judicial officer has complete immunity only when the officer acts within his or her jurisdiction, and that liability may be imposed for acts in excess of jurisdiction. (See Franklin v. Municipal Court (1972) 26 C.A.3d 884, 898, 103 C.R. 354; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 314.) Use of the ambiguous term "jurisdiction" in this connection is misleading, and the actual rule as applied by California cases can be stated as follows:

(a) In the rare situation in which a judge totally lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, so that the judge is not acting within the general scope of his or her judicial powers, the judge may be subject to liability. Thus, in De Courcey v. Cox (1892) 94 C. 665, 30 P. 95, the allegation was that plaintiff, having refused to return an alleged overpayment of $ 20 made by another, was arrested, tried by defendant justice of the peace, ordered to restore the sum or be committed to jail, and thereafter imprisoned. The facts alleged showed that the judge of an inferior court conducted a criminal trial and had a sentence of imprisonment executed where it was obvious that no crime of any kind was charged. The court held that a cause of action for false imprisonment was stated, and quoted several broad declarations to the effect that a magistrate or inferior tribunal with limited authority is liable as a private individual for acts beyond jurisdiction. (94 C. 669.)

(b) Where a judge determines a debatable jurisdictional issue, even though erroneously, the judge is not civilly liable even though it develops that the issue was incorrectly decided. Usually, the court has subject matter jurisdiction, and the departure is merely an erroneous exercise of that jurisdiction (i.e., an "act in excess of jurisdiction"; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §276). Thus, in Singer v. Bogen (1957) 147 C.A.2d 515, 305 P.2d 893, plaintiffs alleged that defendant superior court judges, sitting in the juvenile court, improperly detained plaintiff as a material witness in a criminal case. The jurisdictional defect was lack of timely filing of the petition and citation. "In other words, the judges ... acted within the scope of the general subject matter over which they were given power, even though there might have been some procedural error." (147 C.A.2d 525.) Held, no cause of action was stated for false imprisonment. The court in Singer also pointed out that a prior determination of the jurisdictional issue in favor of the plaintiff (on habeas corpus) did not affect the immunity: "One standard will be recognized for obtaining relief from imprisonment on habeas corpus, and another standard for obtaining damages from public officials in a civil suit." (147 C.A.2d 525.)

(2) Illustrations. In Taliaferro v. Contra Costa (1960) 182 C.A.2d 587, 6 C.R. 231, plaintiff was arrested for wilfully ignoring a subpoena duces tecum requiring his appearance before the Labor Commissioner at a hearing in Alameda County. The warrant of arrest was issued by the judge of the San Pablo Justice Court in Contra Costa County, the proceeding was tried by the Martinez Justice Court in that county, and a verdict of guilty was reversed by the Appellate Department on the ground that neither the San Pablo nor Martinez court had jurisdiction because the crime charged was wholly committed in Alameda County. In this action, plaintiff sought damages in tort against the San Pablo judge. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. The allegation of plaintiff's residence in San Pablo and judicial notice of its geographical proximity to Oakland furnished reasonable grounds for the judge to believe that the criminal act had occurred in Contra Costa County. The court said: "The meaning of the phrase 'within the general scope of judicial powers' or 'within the judicial competency of the magistrate's as applied to judges of courts of inferior jurisdiction in California must include all of those cases wherein any reasonable ground for assumption of jurisdiction arises under the facts disclosed by a criminal complaint and the law applicable thereto. Otherwise, the administration of justice in a most important sphere would be seriously hampered by depriving such judges of the immunity from civil suit that society recognizes as essential to the maintenance of an efficient and independent judiciary." (182 C.A.2d 593.)

In Paddleford v. Biscay (1971) 22 C.A.3d 139, 99 C.R. 220, defendant municipal judge provided printed warrants for traffic violations, with his prestamped signature, authorizing service day or night. This was contrary to P.C. 840, which at that time permitted service at night of a misdemeanor warrant only on direction of the magistrate indorsed on the warrant in the particular case. Plaintiff, arrested on such a warrant for a standing parking violation, sued defendant judge in the federal court for violation of his civil rights, and then sued in the California court for conspiracy to violate the governing Penal Code sections. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The judge had jurisdiction over the offense and the issuance of a warrant (subject matter jurisdiction); his violation of the statute was at most an act in excess of jurisdiction. This long-recognized distinction was not abrogated by the Civil Rights Act. (22 C.A.3d 144.)

In Stump v. Sparkman (1978) 435 U.S. 349, 98 S.Ct. 1099, 55 L.Ed.2d 331, plaintiff brought a civil rights action alleging the following: When she was 15 years old, her mother had an attorney prepare a petition to have a tubal ligation performed on her, and presented it to defendant judge of the Indiana Circuit Court. The petition stated that plaintiff was "somewhat retarded," that she had been associating with "older youth or young men," and that in view of this behavior and her mental capabilities, it would be in her best interest to be sterilized. Defendant approved the petition, and, after being told she was to have her appendix removed, plaintiff entered the hospital and the tubal ligation was performed. Two years later, she married, discovered that she had been sterilized, and brought this suit in the federal district court. The court ruled that defendant was entitled to judicial immunity. Held, affirmed.

(a) Judge liable only when "clear absence of all jurisdiction." The doctrine of judicial immunity was recognized as early as 1872 (Bradley v. Fisher (1872) 13 Wall 335, 20 L.Ed. 646), and was later held applicable to civil rights actions under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (Pierson v. Ray (1967) 386 U.S. 547, 87 S.Ct. 1213, 18 L.Ed.2d 288, supra, §166). The immunity depends on subject matter jurisdiction, and the scope of jurisdiction is construed broadly: A judge will not be liable because he acted in error, or maliciously, or in excess of authority. A judge "will be subject to liability only when he has acted in the 'clear absence of all jurisdiction.'" (98 S.Ct. 1105, 55 L.Ed.2d 339, quoting Bradley.)

(b) Principle inapplicable on facts. The Indiana statutes expressly provide for sterilization of institutionalized persons under certain circumstances, and contain no express authority for judicial approval of tubal ligation. But no statute or case law prohibits a court of general jurisdiction from considering a petition of the type presented here. (98 S.Ct. 1105, 55 L.Ed.2d 340.) An Indiana decision holds that a parent does not have a common law right to have a minor child sterilized; but this decision deals only with the rights of the parents and does not question the jurisdiction of a judge to act, even though the judge would err as a matter of law. The implication of the decision is that a judge presented with such a petition should deny it on the merits rather than dismiss it for lack of jurisdiction. (98 S.Ct. 1106, 55 L.Ed.2d 340.) The contention that the judge's act was an illegitimate exercise of common law power because it failed to comply with elementary principles of procedural due process misconceives the immunity doctrine: The judge is absolutely immune "even if his exercise of authority is flawed by the commission of grave procedural errors." (98 S.Ct. 1106, 55 L.Ed.2d 341.)

(c) Approval of petition was judicial act. A judge is immune only for acts performed in his "judicial" capacity, and it was argued that the informality of this ex parte proceeding, with no docket number, no filing, no notice, and no appointment of a guardian ad litem, took it out of that classification. But the determinative factors relate to the nature of the act, i.e., whether it is a function normally performed by a judge, and to the expectations of the parties, i.e., whether they dealt with the judge in his or her judicial capacity. Both factors appear here. (98 S.Ct. 1107, 1108, 55 L.Ed.2d 342.)

(d) Fundamental unfairness does not nullify jurisdiction. The suggestion that defendant's action was so devoid of concern for the interests of a young girl as to disqualify it as a judicial act is unacceptable: Disagreement with the action taken does not warrant deprivation of the immunity. (98 S.Ct. 1108, 55 L.Ed.2d 343.) (See Mireles v. Waco (1991) 502 U.S. 9, 112 S.Ct. 286, 116 L.Ed.2d 9, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §835 [per curiam opinion discussing Stump].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

2. Judges and Quasi-Judicial Officers.

ee. Proceedings or Relief Not Barred.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 170

[§ 170] Proceedings or Relief Not Barred.

Judicial or quasi-judicial immunity provides a defense against civil liability for damages. It has been held inapplicable in certain other types of proceedings, however, even though brought against a judge or other person performing a judicial function. The immunity does not, for example, preclude a private, voluntary professional association from disciplining one of its members for false representations or wrongful conduct made or carried out in a judicial proceeding. (Budwin v. American Psychological Assn. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 875, 884, 29 C.R.2d 453, infra, §572.)

The right to injunctive relief and attorneys' fees in a civil rights action against a judge was declared in Pulliam v. Allen (1984) 466 U.S. 522, 104 S.Ct. 1970, 80 L.Ed.2d 565. Defendant, a state magistrate in Virginia, followed the practice of imposing bail on persons arrested for nonjailable misdemeanors and of incarcerating those who could not meet the bail. Plaintiffs were arrested for nonjailable misdemeanors and incarcerated. They brought this civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) in the federal district court, seeking an injunction and declaratory relief. The district court declared the practice to be a violation of due process and equal protection, and granted an injunction. The court also awarded attorneys' fees of $ 7,038 under the Civil Rights Attorney's Fees Awards Act (42 U.S.C., §1988; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §206 et seq.). The Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, affirmed.

(a) Judicial immunity no bar to injunctive relief. "We never have had a rule of absolute judicial immunity from prospective relief and there is no evidence that the absence of that immunity has had a chilling effect on judicial independence." (104 S.Ct. 1978, 80 L.Ed.2d 576.)

(1) The limitations on equitable relief--a showing of inadequate remedy at law and a serious risk of irreparable harm--"severely curtail the risk that judges will be harassed and their independence compromised by the threat of having to defend themselves against suits by disgruntled litigants." (104 S.Ct. 1978, 80 L.Ed.2d 576.)

(2) The other concern is that federal judges should not sit in constant supervision of state judicial officers. But this does not raise a question of judicial independence properly addressed by a doctrine of judicial immunity. The intrusion would result whether the action enjoined were that of a state judge or of another state official, and the concern has been addressed as a matter of comity and federalism. "We reaffirm the validity of those principles and the need for restraint by federal courts called on to enjoin the actions of state judicial officers. We simply see no need to reinterpret the principles now as stemming from the doctrine of judicial immunity." (104 S.Ct. 1979, 80 L.Ed.2d 577.)

(3) In enacting the Civil Rights Act, Congress intended to reach unconstitutional actions by all state actors, including judges. And, although it is no longer proper to assume that a state court will not act to prevent a federal constitutional deprivation, "[w]e remain steadfast in our conclusion ... that Congress intended §1983 to be an independent protection for federal rights and find nothing to suggest that Congress intended to expand the common-law doctrine of judicial immunity to insulate state judges completely from federal collateral review." (104 S.Ct. 1981, 80 L.Ed.2d 579.)

(b) Attorneys' fee award not prohibited by judicial immunity. Defendant contends that judicial immunity bars a fee award because attorneys' fees are the functional equivalent of monetary damages, which are prohibited by judicial immunity, and that the chilling effect of a damages award is no less chilling when it is denominated attorneys' fees. Although there is some logic in this reasoning, it is for Congress to determine whether and to what extent to abrogate the judiciary's common law immunity. And the legislative history of the statute "confirms Congress' intent that an attorney's fee award be available even when damages would be barred or limited by 'immunity doctrines and special defenses, available only to public officials.'" (104 S.Ct. 1981, 80 L.Ed.2d 580.) (See 17 Pacific L. J. 461.)

Economou* (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, infra, §178, the absolute immunity of judicial officers was extended to persons performing adjudicatory functions in federal administrative proceedings. "There can be little doubt that the role of the modern federal hearing examiner or administrative law judge ... is 'functionally comparable' to that of a judge." (98 S.Ct. 2914, 57 L.Ed.2d 920.) "We therefore hold that persons subject to these restraints and performing adjudicatory functions within a federal agency are entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability for their judicial acts. [§ 172] State Bar and Bar Associations.

(1) State Bar and Committee of Bar Examiners. In Greene v. Zank (1984) 158 C.A.3d 497, 204 C.R. 770, plaintiff, who had passed the bar examination, was informed that his certificate for admission would be delayed pending a moral fitness investigation by the Committee of Bar Examiners (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §380 et seq.). After a year had passed without a hearing, he brought a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) against the State Bar, the committee, and two of its employees, alleging a conspiracy to deny his certification for reasons other than moral fitness. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The absolute immunity of judges extends to those performing "judge-like" functions. (158 C.A.3d 508, citing Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, infra, §178.) And bar associations and their officials charged with duties involving attorney discipline have historically enjoyed absolute immunity from damage claims. The immunity attaches because they function as an integral part of the judicial process. (158 C.A.3d 508.)

(b) Supreme Court justices deciding matters pertaining to admission to the bar are likewise performing judicial acts, and the performance of those acts by bar officials are similarly protected by absolute immunity. (158 C.A.3d 510.) In California, the State Bar and Committee of Bar Examiners are regarded as arms of the California Supreme Court in conducting investigations of applicants for admission, and they and their officials have similar immunity. (158 C.A.3d 511, 512, 513.)

(2) State Bar and Local Bar Association. In Lebbos v. State Bar (1985) 165 C.A.3d 656, 211 C.R. 847, defendant county bar association received complaints from clients and former clients of plaintiff attorney, and forwarded them to the State Bar. The State Bar, after an investigation and informal hearing, dismissed the complaints without issuing an order to show cause. Plaintiff then brought this suit against the State Bar and the county bar association on various causes of action, including violation of 42 U.S.C., §1983. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The county bar association, a private nonprofit corporation, is not "clothed with the authority of state law," and therefore cannot be held liable under the Civil Rights Act. (165 C.A.3d 656.)

(b) The State Bar, an arm of the California Supreme Court, is entitled to the same quasi-judicial immunity in conducting disciplinary proceedings as other prosecutors acting within their prosecutorial authority. (165 C.A.3d 666.) Imbler v. Pachtman (1976) 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 47 L.Ed.2d 128, infra, §181, and similar cases make it clear that the quasi-judicial immunity extends beyond conducting a trial or hearing to include actions that must be taken prior to the initiation of a prosecution. Hence, the investigation of the complaints by the State Bar and its officers was within the prosecutorial authority of the State Bar and entitled to immunity. (165 C.A.3d 666.)

2. Judges and Quasi-Judicial Officers.

ii. Persons Engaged in Alternative Dispute Resolution.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 174

[§ 174] Persons Engaged in Alternative Dispute Resolution.

Judicial immunity may arise in the context of alternative dispute resolution (ADR). (On ADR generally, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §468 et seq.)

(1) Arbitrators or Mediators. In Baar v. Tigerman (1983) 140 C.A.3d 979, 189 C.R. 834, plaintiffs engaged defendant arbitrator to administer arbitration proceedings pursuant to the arbitration clause of their limited partnership agreement. Defendant failed to make an award within the deadline fixed, and as a result, lost all contractual and statutory authority to act. In this action by plaintiffs for breach of contract and negligence, the court held: (a) An arbitrator acts in a quasi-judicial capacity and is immune from liability for alleged misconduct in arriving at a decision. (140 C.A.3d 982, 983.) (b) However, the absolute immunity that protects a judge who fails to rule does not apply in arbitration proceedings; the contractual obligations of an arbitrator, including the duty to rule within the time period set forth in the agreement, must be upheld. (140 C.A.3d 984, 985.) (See 44 Hastings L. J. 421 [Redefining Arbitral Immunity: A Proposed Qualified Immunity Statute for Arbitrators]; 27 U.S.F. L. Rev. 873 [Reassessing the Architect's Role as Arbiter]; on privilege of witnesses in contractual arbitration proceeding, see infra, §573.)

The liability holding of Baar was nullified by the enactment of former C.C.P. 1280.1 in 1985, providing that "[a]n arbitrator has the immunity of a judicial officer from civil liability when acting in the capacity of arbitrator under any statute or contract." (See Coopers & Lybrand v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 524, 527, 535, 260 C.R. 713 [immunity under former C.C.P. 1280.1 extended to arbitrators in appraisals, valuations, and similar proceedings, such as audits]; Thiele v. RML Realty Partners (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1526, 1529, 18 C.R.2d 416 [immunity created for arbitrator extended to sponsoring arbitration association]; 17 Pacific L. J. 627.)

Former C.C.P. 1280.1 was repealed by its own terms in 1997. However, Stasz v. Schwab (2004) 121 C.A.4th 420, 17 C.R.3d 116, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §509, reaffirmed that the protection of judicial immunity extends to arbitrators and sponsoring arbitration organizations. (121 C.A.4th 430, 433.) The court reasoned that former C.C.P. 1280.1 never purported to affect arbitral immunity under the common law but was intended only to respond to Baar, which held merely that arbitrators are liable for complete nonperformance of their contract with the parties. (121 C.A.4th 434.)

An arbitrator or mediator of an attorneys' fee dispute conducted by the State Bar or a local bar association pursuant to B. & P.C. 6200 et seq. (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §248 et seq.), as well as the arbitrating association and its officers and employees, "have the same immunity which attaches in judicial proceedings." (B. & P.C. 6200(f).) This statute was construed in Olney v. Sacramento County Bar Assn. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 807, 813, 260 C.R. 842. Plaintiff client sued defendant arbitrator and the county bar association, alleging that statements in the arbitration findings were fraudulent. He contended that the statutory immunity did not apply because the arbitrator made a mistake of law and therefore did not conduct the arbitration "pursuant to" B. & P.C. 6200 et seq., as required by the statute. In rejecting this contention, the court said: "Under plaintiff's reasoning, any arbitrator who makes an error of law would be subject to liability because the arbitration would not have been conducted 'pursuant to' the authorizing legislation. Of course the only time an arbitrator faces potential liability and thus the only time the statutory immunity is called into play is when one party to the arbitration asserts the arbitrator erred. We cannot adopt an interpretation of the statute which allows the statute to have effect only in those situations where it serves no function. Rather, an arbitrator is entitled to the immunity when the arbitration's structure and procedure are fashioned in accordance with the rules established under section 6200 et seq. and the arbitration results from a request made 'pursuant to' the statute's authority." (212 C.A.3d 813.)

(2) Neutral Third Parties. In Howard v. Drapkin (1990) 222 C.A.3d 843, 271 C.R. 893, plaintiff initiated family law proceedings against her former husband to terminate his custody and visitation rights with respect to their 9-year-old son, on the ground that the former husband had physically and sexually abused the child. Plaintiff and the former husband then entered into a stipulation providing that defendant, a licensed psychologist, would evaluate the facts and render nonbinding findings and recommendations. The stipulation was ultimately signed by the court and converted into an order, but the judge did not supervise defendant's work. In this action for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, plaintiff alleged that (a) defendant in a 6-hour session ridiculed her, and made false charges and threats, in order to induce her to abandon her belief in the former husband's abuse of the child; (b) that defendant failed to divulge her own lack of expertise in the area of child and sexual abuse; and (c) defendant failed to disclose a prior professional relationship with the former husband and her close personal friendship with the wife of one of the former husband's law partners. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Absolute quasi-judicial immunity is properly extended to neutral third parties who attempt to resolve disputes. (222 C.A.3d 860.) (On neutral fact-finding or evaluation, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §478; on ADR generally, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §468 et seq.)

The Howard case was distinguished in Susan A. v. Sonoma (1991) 2 C.A.4th 88, 3 C.R.2d 27, infra, §578. A public defender representing a minor charged with attempted murder retained defendant psychologist on the minor's behalf to assist the defense. In an action based on statements that defendant made to the press concerning his evaluation of the minor, defendant raised the immunity defense. Held, Howard was inapplicable. In speaking to the press, defendant intended to relate facts that would be helpful to the defense case by rebutting certain press allegations about premeditation. In this role as the minor's advocate, defendant was not entitled to quasi-judicial immunity. (2 C.A.4th 98.)

(1) Arbitrators or Mediators. See 5 Pepperdine Dispute Resolution L. J. 325 [Immunizing Arbitrators From Claims for Equitable Relief].

In Morgan Phillips v. JAMS/Endispute, L.L.C. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 795, 44 C.R.3d 782, a party to an arbitration proceeding sued the arbitrator for breach of contract and negligent breach of the duty to provide binding arbitration services. The complaint alleged that the arbitrator improperly withdrew from the proceeding, without cause, following evidence and argument in order to coerce a settlement, and refused to render an arbitration award. The arbitrator's demurrer on the ground of arbitral immunity was sustained. Held, reversed.

(a) California common law arbitral immunity protects arbitrators from civil liability for conduct in their quasi-judicial capacity. The purpose of arbitral immunity is to encourage fair and independent decisionmaking by immunizing arbitrators from lawsuits arising from conduct in their decisionmaking role. Generally speaking, arbitral immunity shields all functions that are integrally related to the arbitral process. (140 C.A.4th 800.)

(b) Baar v. Tigerman (1983) 140 C.A.3d 979, 211 C.R. 426, text, p. 297, recognizes a narrow exception to arbitral immunity: the immunity generally does not apply to an arbitrator's failure to make any decision at all. This exception is supported by common sense. Failure to render an arbitration award is not integral to the arbitration process; it is, rather, a breakdown of that process. (140 C.A.4th 801.) The Baar exception is applicable here. Thus, the arbitrator's conduct was not sufficiently associated with the adjudicative phase of the arbitration to justify immunity. (140 C.A.4th 802.)

(c) The scope of the Baar exception is not unlimited. Certainly, a decision to withdraw because of ethical considerations, i.e., because of substantial doubt about the ability to be fair and impartial or because of a conflict of interest, is entitled to immunity. An arbitrator's decision to withdraw based on ethical standards is integral to the arbitral function and is therefore covered by arbitral immunity. Here, however, the complaint alleges that the arbitrator withdrew without justification. If these facts are true, and in the absence of any other showing, the arbitrator's withdrawal is not immunized as a decision necessitated by ethical strictures. (140 C.A.4th 803.) Stasz case:

[§ 175] Private Persons Conspiring With Judge.

In Dennis v. Sparks (1980) 449 U.S. 24, 101 S.Ct. 183, 66 L.Ed.2d 185, plaintiffs filed a civil rights action in federal district court under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) alleging that a state court judge had issued an injunction as a result of a corrupt conspiracy involving bribery of the judge. Defendants were the judge and the alleged coconspirators. Held, the judge was immune but the private conspirators were not.

(a) The private parties conspiring with the judge were acting under color of state law. The judge's immunity did not change the character of his action or theirs; indeed, his immunity was dependent on the challenged conduct being an official judicial act within his statutory jurisdiction. (101 S.Ct. 186, 187, 66 L.Ed.2d 190.)

(b) The contention that denial of immunity to the coconspirators will seriously erode the judge's immunity is not persuasive. Even though the judge may be forced to testify about and defend his judicial conduct, there is no constitutional privilege that precludes such compulsory testimony in third-party litigation. (101 S.Ct. 188, 66 L.Ed.2d 191.) And the concern that his conduct will be examined in a collateral proceeding against those with whom he allegedly conspired is not as great as that which would arise if he were held liable for damages. "[T]he potential harm to the public from denying immunity to private co-conspirators is outweighed by the benefits of providing a remedy against those private persons who participate in subverting the judicial process and in so doing inflict injury on other persons." (101 S.Ct. 188, 66 L.Ed.2d 192.)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

3. Executive Officers.

aa. General Rule and Policy.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 176

[§ 176] General Rule and Policy.

(1) Rule of Absolute Immunity. The absolute immunity developed in the judge cases (supra, §166 et seq.), and then applied to legislators (supra, §165), also generally exists in favor of "executive public officers when performing within the scope of their power acts which require the exercise of discretion or judgment." (Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 C.2d 577, 582, 311 P.2d 494 [rule applied "notwithstanding malice or other sinister motive"]; see Martelli v. Pollock (1958) 162 C.A.2d 655, 659, 328 P.2d 795 [quoting Hardy; absolute immunity applied to city attorney giving legal advice]; Cross v. Tustin (1958) 165 C.A.2d 146, 149, 331 P.2d 785 [members of State Personnel Board were protected by absolute immunity for acts within scope of power]; Rest.2d, Torts §591; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §273; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.10; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 887; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 303; 73 Harv. L. Rev. 237; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 44; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 127, 216; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 49; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 589; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 1169; 66 A.L.R.2d 749 [civil liability of school officials for malicious prosecution]; for immunities under Tort Claims Act, see infra, §§226 et seq., 348.)

(2) Underlying Policy. The underlying policy is quoted at length from a leading federal case in Hardy v. Vial, supra: "It does indeed go without saying that an official, who is in fact guilty of using his powers to vent his spleen upon others, or for any other personal motive not connected with the public good, should not escape liability for the injuries he may so cause; and, if it were possible in practice to confine such complaints to the guilty, it would be monstrous to deny recovery. The justification for doing so is that it is impossible to know whether the claim is well founded until the case has been tried, and that to submit all officials, the innocent as well as the guilty, to the burden of a trial and to the inevitable danger of its outcome, would dampen the ardor of all but the most resolute, or the most irresponsible, in the unflinching discharge of their duties. Again and again the public interest calls for action which may turn out to be founded on a mistake, in the face of which an official may later find himself hard put to it to satisfy a jury of his good faith. There must indeed be means of punishing public officers who have been truant to their duties; but that is quite another matter from exposing such as have been honestly mistaken to suit by anyone who has suffered from their errors. As is so often the case, the answer must be found in a balance between the evils inevitable in either alternative. In this instance it has been thought in the end better to leave unredressed the wrongs done by dishonest officers than to subject those who try to do their duty to the constant dread of retaliation." (48 C.2d 582, quoting Judge Learned Hand in Gregoire v. Biddle (2d Cir. 1949) 177 F.2d 579, 581.) (See Barr v. Matteo (1959) 360 U.S. 564, 79 S.Ct. 1335, 1434, 3 L.Ed.2d 1434, 1441 [quoting same opinion].)

(3) Discretionary Function Requirement. In Westfall v. Erwin (1988) 484 U.S. 292, 108 S.Ct. 580, 98 L.Ed.2d 619, plaintiff, employed as a civilian warehouseman at an army depot, sued defendants, his supervisors, alleging injuries resulting from inhaling soda ash dust stored in the warehouse without warning of the presence and danger of the ash. The federal district court found that defendants were acting within the scope of their employment, hence were absolutely immune from liability for ordinary torts. Held, the immunity is available only if the conduct is also discretionary in nature.

(a) Defendants contended that the requirement is satisfied so long as the official exercises "minimal discretion." "We reject such a wooden interpretation of the discretionary function requirement. Because virtually all official acts involve some modicum of choice, petitioners' reading of the requirement would render it essentially meaningless. Furthermore, by focusing entirely on the question whether a federal official's precise conduct is controlled by law or regulation, petitioners' approach ignores the balance of potential benefits and costs of absolute immunity under the circumstances and thus loses sight of the underlying purpose of official immunity doctrine." (108 S.Ct. 585, 98 L.Ed.2d 627.)

(b) "Congress is in the best position to provide guidance for the complex and often highly empirical inquiry into whether absolute immunity is warranted in a particular context. Legislated standards governing the immunity of federal employees involved in state-law tort actions would be useful." (108 S.Ct. 585, 98 L.Ed.2d 628.)

(4) Officer Conspiring With Private Persons. In Hardy v. Vial, supra, plaintiff state college professor brought an action for malicious institution of an administrative proceeding (infra, §513). He alleged that defendants (college officials and officers of the State Department of Education) conspired with outsiders to make false charges of immorality and unprofessional conduct against him which resulted in his dismissal, and that, after a hearing, the State Personnel Board cleared him and he was reinstated. His theory was that in acting with outsiders the school defendants went outside the scope of their official duties. The court held, however, that their positions embraced duties relating to investigation of charges against teachers. This being so, "the fact that the school defendants sought to attain their objective by acting in concert with other persons cannot properly be treated as destroying the immunity which they would have if each of them had acted individually and independently of any other person to secure the same result. The underlying theory of absolute immunity is equally applicable whether the employee acts by himself or with others who are not immune." (48 C.2d 583.) (See criticism, 9 Hastings L. J. 81; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 164.)

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

bb. State Officers in Civil Rights Suits.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 177

[§ 177] State Officers in Civil Rights Suits.

In Scheuer v. Rhodes (1974) 416 U.S. 232, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, the United States Supreme Court reaffirmed the immunity but characterized it under the circumstances as qualified, not absolute. The case arose out of the killing of students by members of the Ohio National Guard at the Kent State University campus civil disorder in May 1970. The present action was by personal representatives of student decedents against the governor and other executive officers of the state, the National Guard, and the state university, seeking damages under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.). The federal district court dismissed the suit before answer, and the Court of Appeals affirmed, on the dual grounds of Eleventh Amendment and common law executive immunity. Held, the dismissal was inappropriate at this stage of the litigation, for the complaints alleged, in substance, that the defendants acted either outside the scope of their offices or in an arbitrary manner, grossly abusing the lawful powers of the office.

(a) An absolute immunity is given to Congress by the Speech and Debate Clause (see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §150); the other two branches of government have immunity under the common law. And "one policy consideration seems to pervade the analysis: the public interest requires decisions and action to enforce laws for the protection of the public." (94 S.Ct. 1689, 40 L.Ed.2d 99.)

(b) The Court of Appeals held that the immunity here was absolute; but this was not the common law rule for peace officers (94 S.Ct. 1691, 40 L.Ed.2d 102), and the Civil Rights Act would have no meaning if high executive officers were wholly immune from liability (94 S.Ct. 1692, 40 L.Ed.2d 103).

(c) "These considerations suggest that, in varying scope, a qualified immunity is available to officers of the executive branch of government, the variation dependent upon the scope of discretion and responsibilities of the office and all the circumstances as they reasonably appeared at the time of the action on which liability is sought to be based. It is the existence of reasonable grounds for the belief formed at the time and in light of all the circumstances, coupled with good-faith belief, that affords basis for qualified immunity of executive officers for acts performed in the course of official conduct." (94 S.Ct. 1692, 40 L.Ed.2d 103.)

This approach has been followed in later decisions. (See Wood v. Strickland (1975) 420 U.S. 308, 95 S.Ct. 992, 995, 43 L.Ed.2d 214, 218 [liability of school board member under Civil Rights Act: no immunity if he knew or should have known that act would violate constitutional rights of student]; *O'Connor v. [§ 178] Federal Officers in Constitutional Tort Actions.

In Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, plaintiff, a commodity futures commission merchant, filed an action for damages against defendant, the Secretary of Agriculture, and several administrative officers of the Department of Agriculture. The complaint alleged that defendants had brought administrative proceedings against plaintiff to revoke his registration, and that the proceedings were wrongfully instituted with improper motives and without due process of law. Damages were sought on the theory that defendants' acts were in violation of plaintiff's rights under the federal Constitution. The United States contended that all of the federal officials were absolutely immune even if they knowingly and deliberately infringed plaintiff's constitutional rights. Held, this contention is unsound.

(a) Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics (1971) 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999, 29 L.Ed.2d 619, supra, §16, held that federal officers' violation of a constitutionally protected interest gives rise to a cause of action for damages, but reserved the question whether the officers were immune from liability. On remand, the Court of Appeals held that the officers were not absolutely immune but had qualified immunity. Other Courts of Appeals reached the same result. (98 S.Ct. 2900, 57 L.Ed.2d 906.) The plurality opinion in Barr v. Matteo (1959) 360 U.S. 564, 79 S.Ct. 1335, 3 L.Ed.2d 1434, is not controlling; it did not purport to depart from the general rule that a federal official may not ignore limitations on his or her powers. (98 S.Ct. 2902, 57 L.Ed.2d 908.) And a review of all of the United States Supreme Court decisions from early times demonstrates that a federal official was protected from liability for a tort committed under state law only if the official's acts were authorized by federal law. (98 S.Ct. 2902 et seq., 57 L.Ed.2d 909 et seq.)

(b) The cases on immunity of state officers (see Scheuer v. Rhodes (1974) 416 U.S. 232, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, supra, §177; Wood v. Strickland (1975) 420 U.S. 308, 95 S.Ct. 992, 43 L.Ed.2d 214, supra, §177; Procunier v. Navarette (1978) 434 U.S. 555, 98 S.Ct. 855, 55 L.Ed.2d 24, supra, §177) are instructive. None furnishes support for the view that federal officials are absolutely immune, and the federal Courts of Appeals have unanimously concluded that federal officials should receive no greater degree of protection from constitutional claims than their counterparts in state government. (98 S.Ct. 2907, 57 L.Ed.2d 912.)

(c) These decisions are sound: "We see no sense in holding a state governor liable but immunizing the head of a federal department; in holding the administrator of a federal hospital immune where the superintendent of a state hospital would be liable; in protecting the warden of a federal prison where the warden of a state prison would be vulnerable; or in distinguishing between state and federal police participating in the same investigation." (98 S.Ct. 2908, 57 L.Ed.2d 912.) Accordingly, without congressional directions to the contrary, no distinction should be drawn between suits against state officials under federal civil rights legislation (see supra, §177) and suits against federal officers under the Constitution. (98 S.Ct. 2909, 57 L.Ed.2d 914.)

(d) Extending absolute immunity to all federal executive officials "would seriously erode the protection provided by basic constitutional guarantees. ... It makes little sense to hold that a Government agent is liable for warrantless and forcible entry into a citizen's house in pursuit of evidence, but that an official of higher rank who actually orders such a burglary is immune simply because of his greater authority." (98 S.Ct. 2910, 57 L.Ed.2d 915.)

(e) Public policy, however, does require some protection of public officials required to exercise discretion. "We therefore hold that, in a suit for damages arising from unconstitutional action, federal executive officials exercising discretion are entitled only to the qualified immunity specified in Scheuer, subject to those exceptional situations where it is demonstrated that absolute immunity is essential for the conduct of the public business." (98 S.Ct. 2911, 57 L.Ed.2d 916.) (See Wilson v. Layne (1999) 526 U.S. 603, 119 S.Ct. 1692, 1696, 143 L.Ed.2d 818, 825 ["media ride along" during police action to enforce arrest warrants violates Fourth Amendment, but because state of law was not clearly established at time protective sweep took place, federal officers were entitled to defense of qualified immunity]; 8 Hastings Const. L. Q. 671; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 265; 28 Pepperdine L. Rev. 163 [Wilson]; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 453.)

[§ 179] President and Aides.

(1) Absolute Immunity of President. In Nixon v. Fitzgerald (1982) 457 U.S. 731, 102 S.Ct. 2690, 2701, 73 L.Ed.2d 349, 363, the Court said: "[W]e hold that petitioner, as a former President of the United States, is entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability predicated on his official acts. We consider this immunity a functionally mandated incident of the President's unique office, rooted in the constitutional tradition of the separation of powers and supported by our history." (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 226; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 701 [Executive Privileges and Immunities: The Nixon and Clinton Cases"]; 25 Western State L. Rev. 211 [suits against President].)

(2) Qualified Immunity of Presidential Aides. In Harlow v. Fitzgerald (1982) 457 U.S. 800, 102 S.Ct. 2727, 73 L.Ed.2d 396, the Court, after reviewing its reasoning and decision in Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895, supra, §178, said: "Having decided in Butz that Members of the Cabinet ordinarily enjoy only qualified immunity from suit, we conclude today that it would be equally untenable to hold absolute immunity an incident of the office of every Presidential subordinate based in the White House. Members of the Cabinet are direct subordinates of the President, frequently with greater responsibilities, both to the President and to the Nation, than White House staff. The considerations that supported our decision in Butz apply with equal force to this case. It is no disparagement of the offices held by petitioners to hold that Presidential aides, like Members of the Cabinet, generally are entitled only to a qualified immunity." (102 S.Ct. 2733, 73 L.Ed.2d 404.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 226.)

(3) Qualified Immunity of Attorney General Acting in Furtherance of National Security. Mitchell v. Forsyth (1985) 472 U.S. 511, 105 S.Ct. 2806, 86 L.Ed.2d 411, involving the Attorney General's authorization of an unconstitutional warrantless domestic security wiretap, held that the absolute immunity applicable to a Cabinet officer generally (see supra, §176) or applicable to a prosecutor (see infra, §180) does not apply where the Attorney General is exercising national security functions. The bases of this holding are explained as follows:

(a) The performance of national security functions does not subject an official to the same risks of entanglement in vexatious litigation as does the carrying out of judicial or quasi-judicial tasks, for the judicial process is an area of open conflict, while national security tasks are carried out in secret. (105 S.Ct. 2813, 86 L.Ed.2d 422.)

(b) Most officials entitled to absolute immunity are subject to other checks that help to prevent abuses of authority; e.g., legislators are accountable to their constituents, and the judicial process is largely self-correcting. No such built-in restraints on the Attorney General's activities in the name of national security exist. (105 S.Ct. 2814, 86 L.Ed.2d 423.)

(c) The denial of absolute immunity will not leave the Attorney General at the mercy of litigants with frivolous and vexatious complaints. Under the standard of Harlow v. Fitzgerald, supra, the Attorney General will be entitled to immunity "so long as his actions do not violate 'clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.' " (105 S.Ct. 2814, 86 L.Ed.2d 423.)

(4) Distinction: Unofficial Conduct Before Assuming Office. In Clinton v. Jones (1997) 520 U.S. 681, 117 S.Ct. 1636, 137 L.Ed.2d 945, plaintiff, a private citizen, filed various state and federal charges in federal district court against defendant President stemming from alleged sexual misconduct that occurred before he assumed office. Defendant, claiming presidential immunity, moved to dismiss the charges. The trial judge denied the motion and ruled that discovery could continue, but that any trial was stayed until defendant left office. The Court of Appeals, finding that the stay amounted to an improper grant of temporary immunity, reversed this condition. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendant claimed that, in all but the most exceptional cases, the Constitution affords a President temporary immunity from civil damages litigation arising from events that occurred before taking office. This contention is without merit. The rationale for affording government officials immunity for their official acts has no application when unofficial conduct is involved, as in the present case. Moreover, in defining the scope of the immunity granted for clearly official acts, a functional approach has been used that considers the function performed, rather than the title of the person performing it. Thus, defendant's attempt to construct an immunity from being sued for unofficial conduct that is based purely on the identity of the Presidential office is unsupported by precedent. (117 S.Ct. 1643, 137 L.Ed.2d 959.)

(b) Relying on a separation of powers argument, defendant contended that, while he is not "above the law," he is at least entitled to a stay. Specifically, defendant argued that the powers and duties of his office are so awesome that the public interest demands that he not be called on to use his valuable time in defending civil suits. However, this position fails to recognize that the separation of powers doctrine is mostly concerned with allocating power between the three branches of Government, and with ensuring that the power granted to each branch is not encroached upon. Suing a President for unofficial conduct poses no risk of misallocation of either judicial or executive power. (117 S.Ct. 1645, 137 L.Ed.2d 962.) Moreover, with respect to the contention that subjecting the President to civil suit will impair the executive branch by rendering him unable to perform his functions, history has shown that only three sitting Presidents have been subjected to suits for their private actions. It thus appears that a deluge of litigation is unlikely to engulf the Presidency. (117 S.Ct. 1648, 137 L.Ed.2d 966.)

(c) Most importantly, the separation of powers doctrine does not preclude all interaction between the three branches of government. For example, it has long been established that the judiciary has the power to determine whether the President's actions comply with the law. Also settled is the principle that the President is subject to judicial process. Thus, "[i]f the Judiciary may severely burden the Executive Branch by reviewing the legality of the President's official conduct, and if it may direct appropriate process to the President himself, it must follow that the federal courts have power to determine the power of his unofficial conduct. The burden on the President's time and energy that is a mere by-product of such review surely cannot be considered as onerous as the direct burden imposed by judicial review and the occasional invalidation of his official actions. We, therefore, hold that the doctrine of separation of powers does not require federal courts to stay all private actions against the President until he leaves office." (117 S.Ct. 1650, 137 L.Ed.2d 967.)

(d) The Court of Appeals concluded that the stay was the equivalent of constitutional immunity. This is not so, because discovery was allowed to continue and because the trial court, apart from constitutional considerations, has power to order stays to control its dockets. Indeed, the trial court may consider such factors as any burden on the Presidency in determining whether a stay is appropriate in a particular case. However, ordering a stay in this case was an abuse of discretion, because the trial judge failed to consider the interests of plaintiff in bringing the matter to a speedy trial. The complaint was filed a mere 3 days before expiration of the statute of limitations, and further delay would have increased the chance of loss of evidence, including the inability of witnesses to remember the facts. Moreover, the stay was premature because, having been imposed prior to discovery, there was no way, at that time, to assess whether a stay was called for. (117 S.Ct. 1651, 137 L.Ed.2d 969.) (See 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 71 [Clinton]; 31 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 123 [same].)

[§ 180] In General.

(1) Rule of Immunity. The policy reasons that give immunity to judges (see supra, §166) are equally applicable (though perhaps not as strongly) to other kinds of officers connected with the judicial process in the field of law administration and enforcement. And the courts have favored this policy as against that of protecting individuals from oppressive official action. (See White v. Towers (1951) 37 C.2d 727, 729, 235 P.2d 209; Imbler v. Pachtman (1976) 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 991, 47 L.Ed.2d 128, 139, infra, §181 [proceeding under federal Civil Rights Act]; Falls v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1031, 1042, 49 C.R.2d 908 [prosecutor acts within official, judicial capacity and enjoys absolute immunity when subpoenaing witness, preparing for preliminary hearing, or interviewing witness and encouraging that witness to testify]; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 317.) The Tort Claims Act now expressly immunizes a public employee for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting a judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, even if the employee acts maliciously and without probable cause. (Govt.C. 821.6; infra, §368.)

The cases uniformly hold district attorneys and other prosecuting officers immune from liability for false arrest and malicious prosecution, despite allegations or findings of malice and lack of probable cause. (See Pearson v. Reed (1935) 6 C.A.2d 277, 278, 44 P.2d 592 [city prosecuting officer]; Norton v. Hoffmann (1939) 34 C.A.2d 189, 194, 93 P.2d 250 [city attorney prosecuting misdemeanors]; Imbler v. Pachtman, supra, 96 S.Ct. 991, 47 L.Ed.2d 139; Rest.2d, Torts §586; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 216; 79 A.L.R.3d 882 [immunity of prosecuting attorney or similar officer].) The immunity also exists where the officer is charged with an omission rather than with affirmative action. (Wilson v. Sharp (1954) 42 C.2d 675, 679, 268 P.2d 1062 [county counsel, with functions of district attorney, exercised discretion to refrain from suit to recover allegedly illegal payments].)

In Harmston v. Kirk (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1410, 265 C.R. 548, the court held that a deputy attorney general assigned to assist a grand jury in its investigation is immune from liability to any person wrongfully indicted or accused after the investigation. (a) On the state law causes of action, recovery was precluded by the Govt.C. 821.6 (infra, §368). (216 C.A.3d 1413.) (b) On the cause of action for violation of federal civil rights under 42 U.S.C., §1983, the court relied on Imbler v. Pachtman, supra, and federal cases following it. (216 C.A.3d 1415, 1416.)

(2) Distinction: Public Defenders. A distinction was made in Ferri v. Ackerman (1979) 444 U.S. 193, 100 S.Ct. 402, 408, 409, 62 L.Ed.2d 355, 362, 363: Although a lawyer appointed to represent an indigent defendant in a federal judicial proceeding is also a federal officer, the policy reasons for granting immunity to prosecutors do not apply to defense counsel sued for malpractice by his or her own client. (See 6 A.L.R.4th 774 [public defender not immune from malpractice liability].)

bb. Immunity in Civil Rights Suits.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 181

[§ 181] Immunity in Civil Rights Suits.

(1) Imbler v. Pachtman. The common law absolute immunity of prosecuting officers from tort liability was reaffirmed in Imbler v. Pachtman (1976) 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 47 L.Ed.2d 128, and was held equally applicable to civil rights suits for damages under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) respecting prosecutor's functions that are an integral part of the judicial process. Petitioner was convicted of murder in California. His conviction was affirmed and he commenced service of a life sentence. Some years later, he sought habeas corpus in the federal district court, alleging suppression of evidence and knowing use of false testimony by the prosecution. The district court found the allegations true and ordered his retrial. The Court of Appeals affirmed, California elected not to retry petitioner, and he was released. He then filed a civil rights action against several law enforcement officers, including respondent, the deputy district attorney who had prosecuted him at the trial. The district court dismissed the complaint as to respondent. Held, affirmed.

(a) Absolute common law immunity. The common law absolute immunity of a prosecutor "is based upon the same considerations that underlie the common-law immunities of judges and grand jurors acting within the scope of their duties. These include concern that harassment by unfounded litigation would cause a deflection of the prosecutor's energies from his public duties, and the possibility that he would shade his decisions instead of exercising the independence of judgment required by his public trust." (96 S.Ct. 991, 47 L.Ed.2d 139.)

(b) Absolute immunity under 42 U.S.C., §1983. The same considerations of public policy apply to civil rights suits:

(1) If the prosecutor had only a qualified immunity, the threat of a 42 U.S.C., §1983 suit would undermine performance of his duties in the same way as a suit for malicious prosecution. He would have to make decisions in terms of his own potential liability, and his energy and attention would be diverted from the duty of enforcing the criminal law. (96 S.Ct. 992, 47 L.Ed.2d 140.)

(2) A qualified immunity rule could also have an adverse effect on the criminal justice system. The veracity of witnesses is frequently subject to doubt before and after they testify; and if prosecutors were hampered in exercising their judgment as to the use of witnesses, the triers of fact often would be denied relevant evidence. Also, in postconviction collateral proceedings, the focus of the reviewing court could be blurred by the knowledge that a decision for the accused might result in the prosecutor being called to respond in damages for his error or mistaken judgment. (96 S.Ct. 993, 47 L.Ed.2d 141.)

(3) The absolute immunity does not leave the public powerless to deter or punish misconduct. (1) Criminal proceedings against judges as well as prosecutors may be brought under 18 U.S.C., §242 (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §815) for wilful deprivation of constitutional rights. (2) A prosecutor is also amenable to professional discipline. (96 S.Ct. 994, 47 L.Ed.2d 142.)

(c) Distinction: where other functions of prosecutor involved. The holding here is limited to activities that are an "integral part of the judicial process"; i.e., the prosecutor, in initiating a prosecution and in presenting the state's case, is absolutely immune from a civil suit for damages under 42 U.S.C., §1983. "We have no occasion to consider whether like or similar reasons require immunity for those aspects of the prosecutor's responsibility that cast him in the role of an administrator or investigative officer rather than that of advocate." (96 S.Ct. 995, 47 L.Ed.2d 143.) As to these, the Courts of Appeals of some circuits have held that only a qualified immunity, similar to that of other law enforcement officers, exists. (96 S.Ct. 995, 47 L.Ed.2d 143.) (See 10 Southwestern L. Rev. 305; 34 Stanf. L. Rev. 487 [Supplementing the Functional Test of Prosecutorial Immunity].)

(2) Later Cases. Subsequent cases have applied the Imbler analysis. (See Jenkins v. Orange (1989) 212 C.A.3d 278, 286, 260 C.R. 645 [social worker held entitled to absolute prosecutorial immunity from 42 U.S.C., §1983 claims based on investigating child abuse charges and weighing and presenting evidence]; Harmston v. Kirk (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1410, 1415, 265 C.R. 548, supra, §180 [deputy attorney general assigned to assist grand jury]; Bradley v. Medical Bd. of Calif. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 445, 454, 65 C.R.2d 483 [deputy attorney general was entitled to absolute immunity, when charged under 42 U.S.C., §1983 for evaluative action she had taken in preparing charges against plaintiff doctor]; Pitts v. Kern (1998) 17 C.4th 340, 345, 70 C.R.2d 823, 949 P.2d 920, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §819 [in prosecuting criminal violations of state law, district attorney acts for the state and has absolute immunity under 42 U.S.C., §1983].)

Jenkins v. Orange was followed in Alicia T. v. Los Angeles (1990) 222 C.A.3d 869, 881, 271 C.R. 513. The opinion points out that the lower federal courts are split on the issue whether social workers are entitled to absolute or only qualified immunity in 42 U.S.C., §1983 cases, and that in the absence of a controlling United States Supreme Court decision, California reviewing courts are free to adopt one of the divergent lines of authority. (222 C.A.3d 879.)

In Burns v. Reed (1991) 500 U.S. 478, 111 S.Ct. 1934, 114 L.Ed.2d 547, the issue was whether a state prosecuting attorney was absolutely immune for participating in a probable cause hearing and for giving legal advice to the police. Held:

(a) Under the functional approach of Imbler v. Pachtman, the prosecutor's appearance in court in support of an application for a search warrant and the presentation of evidence at that hearing were protected by absolute immunity. (111 S.Ct. 1942, 114 L.Ed.2d 562.)

(b) There is no common law basis for extending absolute immunity for giving legal advice to the police in the investigative phase of a case, and the prosecutor did not meet his burden of showing relevant factors to justify such an extension. Thus, the prosecutor was entitled only to qualified immunity for giving the advice. An improper motive or purpose defeats the immunity. (111 S.Ct. 1942, 1944, 114 L.Ed.2d 562, 564.)

In Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 C.A.4th 512, 37 C.R.2d 97, plaintiff foster home operators brought an action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 against employees of the state Department of Social Services (state DSS), a county, and the county social services department (county DSS), alleging wrongful acts in connection with the suspension of plaintiffs' foster home license. The trial judge ruled that defendants were absolutely immune from civil liability, and dismissed the action. Held, affirmed.

(a) Federal law determines immunity. Because 42 U.S.C., §1983 was intended by Congress as a remedy to prevent unconstitutional acts by state and local officials, state courts must look to federal law to determine the scope of immunity of governmental officials from a suit under that statute. Imbler v. Pachtman, supra, and following cases delineate the scope of liability, and Imbler-type immunity has been extended by most federal courts to social workers performing statutorily authorized quasi-prosecutorial functions. (31 C.A.4th 519.)

(b) State employees immune.

(1) The conduct of the state DSS defendants in temporarily suspending plaintiffs' license was entitled to absolute immunity. In implementing disciplinary action to protect the welfare of foster children under plaintiffs' care, defendants were acting in a prosecutorial role. State officials performing the functions of prosecutors in administrative proceedings are acting in a quasi-judicial capacity and are entitled to absolute immunity within the meaning of Imbler. (31 C.A.4th 521.)

(2) Although one of the defendants was acting as a staff attorney in an investigative role, his conduct in interviewing witnesses and evaluating reports and complaints in preparation for filing an accusation fell within the scope of the prosecutorial role. The label "investigative" is not determinative of the boundaries of the prosecutor's immunity. The prosecutor's role may include investigatory activities in preparing for judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings. When it does, the shield of prosecutorial immunity follows. (31 C.A.4th 522.)

(c) County employees immune. Under the functional test of Imbler, the county DSS defendants also had absolute immunity. Although they had no power to institute or prosecute license revocation proceedings, in reporting to the prosecutorial arm of the state DSS on matters affecting the state's decision on commencing disciplinary action against plaintiffs' foster care license, they were operating in a role functionally equivalent to that of the prosecutors whom they served. The same immunity that protects prosecutors and social workers investigating child abuse should apply to county defendants when performing their duties to monitor and report on the activities of foster licensees to state prosecutorial officials. (31 C.A.4th 524.)

(d) County immune. Defendant county was immune because its employees were immune. When 42 U.S.C., §1983 liability of a municipality is predicated on privileged conduct of its employee acting within the scope of employment, the municipality is protected by the same immunity. (31 C.A.4th 525.) (On immunity of administrative agency officers performing prosecutorial functions generally, see infra, §182.)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

4. Prosecuting Officers.

cc. Administrative Agency Officers.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 182

[§ 182] Administrative Agency Officers.

In Butz v. Economou (1978) 438 U.S. 478, 98 S.Ct. 2894, 57 L.Ed.2d 895 (supra, §178), the absolute immunity of a prosecutor in judicial proceedings was extended to officers of a federal administrative agency performing similar functions.

(a) Agency official initiating administrative proceeding applying sanctions. The decision is very much like the prosecutor's decision to initiate a criminal prosecution; and an agency official, like a prosecutor, may have broad discretion in deciding whether a proceeding should be brought and what sanctions should be sought. (98 S.Ct. 2915, 57 L.Ed.2d 921.) The agency officer must make his or her decision free from intimidation or harassment. "Because the legal remedies already available to the defendant in such a proceeding provide sufficient checks on agency zeal, we hold that those officials who are responsible for the decision to initiate or continue a proceeding subject to agency adjudication are entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability for their parts in that decision." (98 S.Ct. 2915, 57 L.Ed.2d 922.)

(b) Agency attorney who conducts trial. There is no substantial difference between the function of an agency attorney in presenting evidence in an agency hearing and that of a prosecutor who brings evidence before a court. "We therefore hold that an agency attorney who arranges for the presentation of evidence on the record in the course of an adjudication is absolutely immune from suits based on the introduction of such evidence." (98 S.Ct. 2916, 57 L.Ed.2d 923.)

With respect to state officers, the Tort Claims Act expressly immunizes public employees for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting an administrative proceeding with the scope of employment, even if malicious and without probable cause. (Govt.C. 821.6; infra, §368.)

[§ 183] In General.

(1) State and Local Officers. In White v. Towers (1951) 37 C.2d 727, 235 P.2d 209, defendant, an investigator for the State Fish and Game Commission, was charged with having maliciously and without probable cause procured the institution of criminal proceedings against plaintiff for pollution of waters. Held, no action for malicious prosecution could be maintained. The court relied in part on cases from other jurisdictions upholding the privilege of building inspectors, fire marshals, city engineers, and F.B.I. agents, and disapproved Prentice v. Bertken (1942) 50 C.A.2d 344, 349, 123 P.2d 96, which had denied immunity to a police officer. (37 C.2d 730.) (See White v. Brinkman (1937) 23 C.A.2d 307, 317, 73 P.2d 254 [chief building inspector; city manager]; Oppenheimer v. Arnold (1950) 99 C.A.2d 872, 874, 222 P.2d 940 [county engineer who discharged plaintiff, a probationary employee]; Dawson v. Martin (1957) 150 C.A.2d 379, 382, 309 P.2d 915 [county building inspector]; Dawson v. Rash (1958) 160 C.A.2d 154, 159, 324 P.2d 959 [deputy county building inspector]; Keylon v. Kelley (1961) 188 C.A.2d 490, 493, 10 C.R. 549 [marshal of municipal court who, on advice of district attorney, filed criminal complaint against plaintiff]; Johnson v. Pacifica (1970) 4 C.A.3d 82, 87, 84 C.R. 246 [police officers]; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 342; 4 U.S.F. L. Rev. 452; 28 A.L.R.2d 646 [civil liability of law enforcement officers for malicious prosecution]; for immunities under Tort Claims Act, see infra, §§290 et seq., 362.)

In civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.), investigators for the Medical Board of California, and private persons assisting them, enjoyed qualified immunity for undercover investigation of a doctor accused of writing false prescriptions, where the investigators clearly had authority to conduct the investigation and where their actions were reasonable. (Bradley v. Medical Bd. of Calif. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 445, 456, 460, 65 C.R.2d 483; on qualified immunity of executive and prosecuting officers in civil rights suits, see supra, §§177, 178, 181.)

(2) Federal Officers. In Anderson v. Creighton (1987) 483 U.S. 635, 107 S.Ct. 3034, 97 L.Ed.2d 523, the Court held that a federal law enforcement officer who participated in an unreasonable search could claim immunity on the basis of a reasonable belief that the search was lawful. (107 S.Ct. 3040, 97 L.Ed.2d 532.) (See Hunter v. Bryant (1991) 502 U.S. 224, 112 S.Ct. 534, 537, 116 L.Ed.2d 589, 596 [citing *Anderson v. Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Privilege of Public Officers.

5. Law Enforcement Officers.

bb. Police Officer Witness.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 184

[§ 184] Police Officer Witness.

In Briscoe v. LaHue (1983) 460 U.S. 325, 103 S.Ct. 1108, 75 L.Ed.2d 96, the Court held (6-3) that 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.) does not authorize a convicted person to recover damages from a police official for giving perjured testimony at his criminal trial. In three cases arising in Indiana, the convicted defendants sued under the Act against police officer witnesses alleging that they gave false testimony. The Court of Appeals held that absolute immunity of any witness was a complete defense. The Supreme Court, in an extensive review of the history, came to the same conclusion.

(a) Immunity of lay witness. 42 U.S.C., §1983 does not create a remedy for all conduct that may result in a violation of rights, privileges, or immunities protected by the Constitution or laws. Its reach is limited to actions taken under "color of law," and a private party giving testimony in a criminal trial is not performing such an action. Common law principles, including defenses previously recognized in ordinary tort litigation, apply, and the immunity of parties and witnesses from subsequent damages liability for their testimony was well established at common law. (103 S.Ct. 1112, 1113, 75 L.Ed.2d 104, 105.)

(b) Immunity of persons who perform official functions in the judicial process. State judges and prosecutors have absolute immunity under common law principles because they are integral parts of the judicial process. (103 S.Ct. 1115, 1116, 75 L.Ed.2d 107, citing Stump v. Sparkman (1978) 435 U.S. 349, 98 S.Ct. 1099, 1105, 55 L.Ed.2d 331, 341, supra, §169, and Imbler v. Pachtman (1976) 424 U.S. 409, 96 S.Ct. 984, 47 L.Ed.2d 128, supra, §181.)

(c) Immunity of police officer. "When a police officer appears as a witness, the officer may reasonably be viewed as acting like any other witness sworn to tell the truth--in which event he or she can make a strong claim to witness immunity; alternatively, he may be regarded as an official performing a critical role in the judicial process, in which event he may seek the benefit afforded to other governmental participants in the same proceeding." (103 S.Ct. 1116, 75 L.Ed.2d 108.)

(d) Conspiracy section distinguished. The civil and criminal conspiracy section of the civil rights statutes (42 U.S.C., §1985(3); 18 U.S.C., §241) was designed to provide remedies in the federal court for conspiratorial activities of the Ku Klux Klan, and was aimed at acquittals obtained by perjury, not unjust convictions. "We are asked to extrapolate from pro-defendant perjury to pro-prosecution perjury, and if willing to make that step, we are further invited to apply legislative history relating to ... a section specifically directed toward private conspiracies ... to ... a section designed to provide remedies for abuses under color of law. We decline the invitation." (103 S.Ct. 1118, 75 L.Ed.2d 110, 111.)

(e) No exception for police officer witnesses. Although there is force in the argument that common law immunity for police officers has less justification than such immunity for lay witnesses, the decisions show that immunity rests on function, not on status. "A police officer on the witness stand performs the same functions as any other witness; he is subject to compulsory process, takes an oath, responds to questions on direct examination, and may be prosecuted subsequently for perjury." (103 S.Ct. 1119, 75 L.Ed.2d 112.) Moreover, other considerations of public policy support the immunity "more emphatically for such persons than for ordinary witnesses": Subjecting officers to damages liability "might undermine not only their contribution to the judicial process but also the effective performance of their other public duties." (103 S.Ct. 1119, 75 L.Ed.2d 112.) As Judge Learned Hand said: "[I]t has been thought in the end better to leave unredressed the wrongs done by dishonest officers than to subject those who try to do their duty to the constant threat of retaliation." (103 S.Ct. 1120, 75 L.Ed.2d 114.) (On immunity of witnesses in defamation actions, see infra, §568.)

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

s. Privilege of Member of Military.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 185

[§ 185] Privilege of Member of Military.

A member of the armed forces is not liable to a civilian for injuries in carrying out an order of a superior unless the order is so palpably illegal as to be obvious to the subordinate. (Curnutt v. Holk (1964) 230 C.A.2d 580, 583, 41 C.R. 174.) In the Curnutt case, the issue was liability between members of the military. Plaintiff and defendant were Air Force officers on active duty at Vandenberg Air Force Base, a military reservation ceded by California to the United States. The commander ordered six officers, including these parties, to kill deer that were a hazard to aircraft at the runway. Defendant, according to the complaint, injured plaintiff by the negligent discharge of his shotgun. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer sustained. In the absence of any authority on point, the policy is one for Congress to determine. There is no right of action of one member of the military against another for negligent injury while acting under orders in the line of duty in the absence of a federal statute giving an officer or enlisted man a right of action. (230 C.A.2d 583.)

Members of the National Guard on active service are immune from liability for any act done in the performance of their duty. (Mil. & Vet.C. 392, infra, §349.) Also, a public entity is not liable for injuries arising out of an activity conducted by a National Guard member that are compensated under the Federal Tort Claims Act. (Govt.C. 816, infra, §344.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

2. Privilege.

t. Statutory Privileged Communications.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 186

[§ 186] Statutory Privileged Communications.

C.C. 47 provides a privilege for a publication or broadcast in the proper discharge of an official duty, in a legislative or judicial proceeding, in a communication without malice between interested persons, and for reports of judicial, legislative, or other public official proceedings or public meetings. (See infra, §562.)

The usual application of the statute is in defamation actions. (See infra, §561 et seq.) But it has been invoked in other proceedings. (See, e.g., Bernstein v. Alameda-Contra Costa Med. Assn. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 241, 245, 293 P.2d 862 [privilege applied to protect doctor against unwarranted discipline by medical association]; Portman v. George McDonald Law Corp. (1979) 99 C.A.3d 988, 991, 160 C.R. 505 [privilege applied in action for negligent misrepresentation based on statement of defendant attorneys to avoid filing undertaking to stay enforcement of money judgment].)

In Pettitt v. Levy (1972) 28 C.A.3d 484, 104 C.R. 650, plaintiffs alleged that defendants conspired to submit to a city a forged building permit that omitted a particular street address contained in the original, in order to deny plaintiffs the use of that address for business purposes as a nonconforming use in a residential area. The complaint alleged causes of action for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, negligence, and intentional infliction of mental distress. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The C.C. 47 privilege accorded to publications made in judicial, legislative, or other official proceedings applies to this publication made in a city planning commission or city council proceeding. (28 C.A.3d 488.)

(b) The contention that the criminal act of forging the permit destroyed the privilege is untenable. Perjury in a complaint does not, and preparing and presenting false documents is equivalent to preparation and presentation of false testimony. (28 C.A.3d 489.)

(c) The contention that the conspiracy to forge and the forgery took place prior to and outside of the meeting of the planning commission or city council, and therefore did not occur "in any proceeding," is unsound. "To accomplish the purpose of judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings, it is obvious that the parties or persons interested must confer and must marshal their evidence for presentation at the hearing. The right of private parties to combine and make presentations to an official meeting and, as a necessary incident thereto, to prepare materials to be presented is a fundamental adjunct to the right of access to judicial and quasi-judicial proceedings. To make such preparations and presentations effective, there must be an open channel of communication between the persons interested and the forum, unchilled by the thought of subsequent judicial action against such participants; provided always, of course, that such preliminary meetings, conduct and activities are directed toward the achievement of the objects of the litigation or other proceedings." (28 C.A.3d 490.)

(d) "It is not gratifying to reach a result which insulates those guilty of alleged heinous conduct from answering therefor. However, we are satisfied that the purpose and philosophy of the privilege compels this result and that any narrowing of the privilege to redress this grievance would produce mischiefs far worse." (28 C.A.3d 492.) (See Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 641, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21 [privilege applied in action for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on false documents and perjured testimony introduced in litigation].)

w. (New) Prescription of Controlled Substance Pursuant to Drug Overdose Program.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 186A

[§ 186A] (New) Prescription of Controlled Substance Pursuant to Drug Overdose Program.

A licensed health care provider who is permitted by law to prescribe an opioid antagonist may, if acting with reasonable care, prescribe and subsequently dispense or distribute the drug in conjunction with an opioid overdose prevention and treatment training program without being subject to civil liability or criminal prosecution. (C.C. 1714.22(b), added in 2007.) "Opioid antagonist" means naloxone hydrochloride that is approved by the federal Food and Drug Administration for the treatment of a drug overdose, and "opioid overdose prevention and treatment training program" means a program operated by or registered with a local health jurisdiction to train individuals to prevent, recognize, and respond to an opiate overdose. (C.C. 1714.22(a), added in 2007.)

This immunity applies even when the drug is administered by and to someone other than the person to whom it is prescribed. (C.C. 1714.22(b), added in 2007.)

These provisions apply only to seven designated counties, and they remain in effect only until January 1, 2011, unless extended. (C.C. 1714.22(d) and (e), added in 2007.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

D. Defenses to Tort Action.

4. What Are Not Defenses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 188

[§ 188] What Are Not Defenses.

Among the excuses for tortious conduct that are usually rejected by the courts are the following:

(1) Mistake or Innocent Motive. This is seldom a defense. Thus, in actions for defamation, trespass, or conversion, the innocent motive or belief of the defendant is immaterial where the action is intentional. (See Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 C. 372, 375, 139 P. 815; Shahood v. Cavin (1957) 154 C.A.2d 745, 751, 316 P.2d 700; Rest.2d, Torts §164; infra, §§626, 693, 713; on privileged mistake as defense, see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §69; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §2.5.)

(2) Coercion. In accordance with the common law conception that all persons are free and equal, "[o]ne whose conduct is otherwise tortious is not relieved from liability merely by the fact that his conduct is pursuant to the command of or is on account of another." (Rest.2d, Torts §888.)

(3) "Jus Tertii" (Rights of Third Persons). A defendant liable for interference with land or a chattel does not escape liability because a third person has an interest superior to that of the plaintiff, unless the third person either adopts the tortious act or discharges the defendant. (Rest.2d, Torts §895; see 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §2.8.)

(4) Plaintiff's Violation of Law. The fact that the injured person is committing a tort or crime, or is illegally in possession of land or a chattel does not absolve the defendant. (See Rest.2d, Torts §889.) However, if the injured person violated a statute, he or she cannot recover if the harm caused by the violation resulted from a risk against which the statute was intended to afford protection. (Rest.2d, Torts §889, Comment b.)

(5) Contractual Delegation of Duty. Contracting parties may, as between themselves, agree to an exemption from liability for ordinary negligence where the public interest is not involved. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §671 et seq.) But the agreement does not absolve a contracting party of his or her ordinary legal duty to strangers. (Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 303, 314, 239 P.2d 48.)

(6) Public Franchise or License. Official permission to locate power poles along a highway does not absolve a public service company from liability for placing them in such a manner as to constitute a danger to traffic. (Gerberich v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1935) 5 C.2d 46, 51, 53 P.2d 948.)

(7) Performance of Government Contract. In Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 56 C.R. 128, liability was imposed for the ultrahazardous activity of testing a rocket motor. (See infra, §1421.) The defense that defendant was a government contractor was rejected, the court pointing out that the Government itself is not liable without fault under the Federal Tort Claims Act (infra, §205), and that to extend the immunity to an independent contractor would leave plaintiff remediless. (247 C.A.2d 791.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

1. Traditional Rule: Place of Wrong.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 189

[§ 189] Traditional Rule: Place of Wrong.

(1) Traditional Rule and Underlying Theory. Under the former general rule, set forth in the first Restatement of Conflict of Laws, the "lex loci delicti" or law of the place where the tort occurred governed substantive tort liability. If a cause of action arose there, suit could be brought on it in another state, although under the law of that state no liability would have been recognized. And conversely, if the tort was not recognized in the place where the act was done, no action could be maintained in a state that did recognize the tort. (See Loranger v. Nadeau (1932) 215 C. 362, 366, 10 P.2d 63; Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp. (1957) 148 C.A.2d 56, 78, 306 P.2d 1017; American Conflicts Law 4th, §132; Scoles & Hay 2d, §17.2; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 211; 16 Hastings L. J. 21; 38 Hastings L. J. 1041; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 503; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 367; 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §125 et seq.)

The rule and its underlying theory are described in the second Restatement (Introductory Note, p. 412) as follows: "The original Restatement stated that, with minor exceptions, all substantive questions relating to the existence of a tort claim are governed by the local law of the 'place of wrong.' This was described ... as 'the state where the last event necessary to make an actor liable for an alleged tort takes place.' Since a tort is the product of wrongful conduct and of resulting injury and since the injury follows the conduct, the state of the 'last event' is the state where the injury occurred. This rule of the original Restatement was derived from the vested rights doctrine which called for the enforcement everywhere of rights that had been lawfully created under the local law of a state. In effect, the doctrine provided for the application of the local law of the state in which had occurred the last act necessary to bring a legal obligation into existence. In the case of torts, the state of the last act, for reasons stated above, was the state where the injury had occurred."

(2) Departures From Rule. The rule embodied in the first Restatement was subjected to continual attack by commentators and courts, and was generally felt to be unsuited to modern conditions. (See Reich v. Purcell (1967) 67 C.2d 551, 553, 63 C.R. 31, 432 P.2d 727, infra, §191; Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 729, 101 C.R. 314, infra, §198; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 762; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 1351; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 355; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 377; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 347 [special substantive rules for multistate problems]; 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1301, 1584; 55 Cal. L. Rev. 74; 16 Hastings L. J. 21, 42; 22 Hastings L. J. 1173; 44 So. Cal. L. Rev. 877; 1 Stanf. L. Rev. 759; 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 699; American Conflicts Law 4th, §131; Scoles & Hay 2d, §17.7; 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §127; 29 A.L.R.3d 622 [modern status of rule that substantive rights of parties to tort action are governed by law of place of wrong].)

The second Restatement (Introductory Note, p. 413) makes this observation: "Experience has shown that the last event rule does not always work well. Situations arise where the state of the last event (place of injury) bears only a slight relationship to the occurrence and the parties with respect to the particular issue. Also, in the case of such torts as fraud, defamation, invasion of the right of privacy, unfair competition and interference with a marital relationship, there is often no one clearly demonstrable place of injury and at times injury will have occurred in two or more states."

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

2. Modern Approach.

a. Restatement: State of Most Significant Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 190

[§ 190] Restatement: State of Most Significant Relationship.

(1) General Principles. The basic modern conflicts rule for torts is set forth in Section 145 of the Restatement 2d of Conflict of Laws in conformity with the general principles stated in Section 6 : "The rights and liabilities of the parties with respect to an issue in tort are determined by the local law of the state which, with respect to that issue, has the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties under the principles stated in § 6," which governs choice of law generally. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145(1); see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §93; 38 Hastings L. J. 1041 [Choice of Law in the United States]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §128; on choice of law generally, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §61.)

Applying the Section 6 principles, the identity of the state of most significant relationship depends on the nature of the tort and the particular issue. Accordingly, the basic rule of Section 145 is supplemented by a number of specific rules applying its underlying principle to particular torts and to particular issues in tort (see infra, §§193 et seq., 199 et seq.). (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws, Introductory Note to Chapter 7 (Wrongs), Topic 1 (Torts), p. 413.)

The protection of "the justified expectations of the parties" (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §6), of extreme importance in contracts, property, wills, and trusts, is of lesser importance in torts; the tortfeasor usually acts without giving thought to the law determining the legal consequences of the conduct. Also, the values of "certainty, predictability and uniformity of result" (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §6) are of lesser importance in torts than in areas where the parties and their lawyers plan their transactions. Finally, certain specific policies underlie the tort field, e.g., deterrence of tortious conduct and compensation for the injured victim. Hence, the remaining factors of Section 6 assume greater importance: needs of the interstate and international systems, relevant policies of the forum, relevant policies of other interested states (and particularly of the state with the dominant interest in the determination of the particular issue), and ease in determination and application of the law. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment b.)

(2) Important Contacts. Under Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145(2), the contacts to be taken into account in applying these principles include the following:

- (a) The place where the injury occurred.

(b) The place where the conduct causing the injury occurred.

(c) The domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties.

(d) The place where the relationship, if any, between the parties is centered.

The place where the injury occurred is usually the important contact. But this is not always true, as in fraud (infra, §195) or multistate defamation (infra, §196). (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment e.)

The place where the conduct occurred may be given weight where the injury occurs in two or more states; where the place of injury cannot be ascertained, is fortuitous, or bears little relation to the occurrence and parties with respect to a particular issue, e.g., in unfair competition (where there is often no clearly demonstrable place of injury); where the primary purpose is to deter or punish misconduct; or where the conduct is required or privileged by the law of the state where it occurred. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment e.)

Domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business ordinarily carry little weight alone, but in two situations have independent significance: (a) Where the interest affected is a personal one (e.g., in reputation or privacy), domicile, residence, and nationality are important; and where the interest is financial (e.g., unfair competition, interference with contract, or trade disparagement), the place of business is important. (b) Where the injury occurs in two or more states, the domicile or principal place of business is important. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment e.)

The place where the relationship is centered may be significant when the plaintiff is riding as a guest in an automobile. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment e.)

(3) Purpose of Substantive Torts Rules. This is an important factor. If the primary purpose sought to be achieved by a state in having its tort rule applied is to deter or punish misconduct, the state where the conduct took place may be the one of dominant interest; but if it is primarily to compensate the victim for injuries, the state where the injury occurred (often the state of the plaintiff's residence) may have the greater interest. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment c.)

(4) Issue Involved. Certain recurring issues have a significant relation to certain states. Thus, the law of the state where the conduct and injury occurred will, with rare exceptions, be applied to determine whether the actor satisfied minimum standards of acceptable conduct, and whether the interest affected was entitled to legal protection (see infra, §199). But the law of the state of domicile may be applied to determine immunity, liability only for intentional conduct or aggravated negligence, or the requirement of a higher standard of care (see infra, §201). (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment d.)

(5) Tort Involved. The importance of the contacts may vary somewhat with the nature of the tort. Thus, the place of injury is of particular importance in cases of personal injury, injury to property, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, and abuse of process (see infra, §193 et seq.). It is less significant in cases of fraud and of unfair competition by false advertising or misappropriation of trade values, for the injury suffered will frequently be in two or more states and the effect will normally be felt at the principal place of business. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, Comment f.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

2. Modern Approach.

b. Repudiation of Traditional Rule and Adoption of Governmental Interest Approach.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 191

[§ 191] Repudiation of Traditional Rule and Adoption of Governmental Interest Approach.

The modern approach to choice of law in tort cases in California was ushered in by Reich v. Purcell (1967) 67 C.2d 551, 63 C.R. 31, 432 P.2d 727. Mrs. R and her child Jay were killed in an automobile collision caused by negligence of defendant, and plaintiffs Mr. R and child Jeffry sued in California for wrongful death. Defendant was domiciled in California. The R family, domiciled in Ohio, were on their way to California; Mr. R and the remaining child later became California residents, but the estates of Mrs. R and the deceased child were administered in Ohio. It was stipulated that judgment be entered for plaintiffs, and that the damages for death of Mrs. R be fixed at $ 55,000, if Ohio or California law--with no limitation of damages--applied. But the accident occurred in Missouri, which had a maximum of $ 25,000 for wrongful death. The trial judge, following the traditional rule, gave effect to this limitation imposed by the law of the place of wrong. Held, reversed.

(a) Criticism of traditional rule. The established rule assumes that the law of the place of wrong creates the cause of action and necessarily determines the extent of liability. This theory worked well enough when all the relevant events took place in one jurisdiction. But in a complex situation involving multistate contacts, no single state alone can be deemed to create exclusively governing rights. These complex cases make it clear that the forum can only apply its own law, and that when it purports to do otherwise it is not enforcing foreign rights but is choosing a foreign rule of decision as the appropriate one to apply to the case before it. (67 C.2d 553.) And the hopeless search for a governing foreign law to create a foreign vested right may defeat the legitimate interests of the litigants and the states involved. (67 C.2d 554.)

(b) Departures from traditional rule. When application of the law of the place of wrong would defeat the interests of the litigants and states concerned, California and other states have refused to apply it. (67 C.2d 554, 555, discussing Grant v. McAuliffe (1953) 41 C.2d 859, 264 P.2d 944, infra, §202, and Emery v. Emery (1955) 45 C.2d 421, 289 P.2d 218, infra, §201, and listing cases from other jurisdictions.)

(c) Traditional rule repudiated. "[A]s jurisdiction after jurisdiction has departed from the law of the place of the wrong as the controlling law in tort cases, regardless of the issue involved ... , that law no longer affords even a semblance of the general application that was once thought to be its great virtue. We conclude that the law of the place of the wrong is not necessarily the applicable law for all tort actions brought in the courts of this state." (67 C.2d 555.) Loranger v. Nadeau (1932) 215 C. 362, 10 P.2d 63, supra, §189, and other cases to the contrary, are overruled. (67 C.2d

(d) New rule stated. The objective of proper choice of law is to determine the law that most appropriately applies to the issue involved, on a consideration of the interests of the states and the litigants. (67 C.2d 555.)

(e) New rule applied.

(1) California. The present residence of plaintiffs is not significant. At the time of the accident, they were not California residents, and had no fixed plans to become domiciled here. If choice of law were made to turn on events happening after the accident, forum shopping would be encouraged. California, therefore, is only the forum, and disinterested in the only issue in dispute. (67 C.2d 555, 556.)

(2) Missouri. This state has a predominant interest in conduct within her borders. But a limitation of damages for wrongful death concerns compensation, not conduct. The proceeds are not part of the decedent's estate and hence do not provide a fund for local creditors. Also, insofar as the limitation expresses a concern for defendants, this concern is primarily local; there is no substantial interest in extending its benefits to travelers from out of state. Hence, the Missouri limitation does not apply. (67 C.2d 556.)

(3) Ohio. This is the state where plaintiffs and their decedents resided before the accident and where their estates are being administered. Giving effect to "Ohio's interests in affording full recovery to injured parties does not conflict with any substantial interest of Missouri." Defendant has no complaint, for Ohio's law is the same as that of his own domicile (California), and plaintiffs receive no more than they would have had if injured in their home state Ohio. (67 C.2d 556.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1635; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 365; 29 A.L.R.3d 603 [modern status of rule that substantive rights of parties to tort action are governed by law of place of wrong].)

The approach taken in California has been termed the "governmental interest approach," replacing the place of the wrong test with "a rule requiring an analysis of the respective interests of the states involved." (Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 574, 579, 114 C.R. 106, 522 P.2d 666, infra, §200 [citing Reich v. Purcell]; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §130.)

The governmental interest approach has been frequently applied. (See Schneider v. Schimmels (1967) 256 C.A.2d 366, 373, 64 C.R. 273, infra, §199; Fuller v. Greenup (1968) 267 C.A.2d 10, 18, 72 C.R. 531, infra, §201; Ramirez v. Wilshire Ins. Co. (1970) 13 C.A.3d 622, 629, 91 C.R. 895; Kelley v. Von Kuznick (1971) 18 C.A.3d 805, 808, 96 C.R. 184; Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 729, 101 C.R. 314, infra, §198; Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 61 C.A.3d 501, 518, 522, 132 C.R. 541; Pacific Diamond Co. v. Superior Court (1978) 85 C.A.3d 871, 875, 878, 149 C.R. 813 [liability of innkeeper for loss of or damage to personal property]; Anderson v. Savin Corp. (1988) 206 C.A.3d 356, 366, 254 C.R. 627; Denham v. Farmers Ins. Co. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1061, 1065, 262 C.R. 146; Rivera v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 294, 298, 266 C.R. 11; Tucci v. Club Mediterranee (2001) 89 C.A.4th 180, 188, 107 C.R.2d 401.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

2. Modern Approach.

c. Comparative Impairment Analysis.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 192

[§ 192] Comparative Impairment Analysis.

(1) Bernhard Case: Statement of Test. Where a "true conflict" exists, the task of the court, in applying California's governmental interest approach (supra, §191), is to determine which state's interest would be more impaired if its policy were subordinated to that of the other state. (Bernhard v. Harrah's Club (1976) 16 C.3d 313, 320, 128 C.R. 215, 546 P.2d 719; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §130.) In Bernhard, plaintiff's complaint alleged the following: Defendant, a Nevada corporation, owned and operated Nevada gambling establishments in which intoxicating liquors were sold, furnished, and given away for consumption on the premises. Also, defendant advertised for and solicited in California the business of California residents, knowing and expecting that many would use the public highways going to and from defendant's establishments. Mr. and Mrs. M, in response to defendant's advertising and solicitations, drove from their California residence to defendant's club, were served liquor to the point of obvious intoxication, and drove back to California. In California, Mrs. M, still intoxicated, was involved in a collision with plaintiff, a California resident, driving a motorcycle. Plaintiff suffered serious injuries and sued defendant under the then applicable California rule of Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, infra, §1067, imposing liability on tavern keepers for furnishing alcohol to intoxicated persons. Defendant demurred, citing the Nevada rule of nonliability. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) True conflicts case: both states have interests. (1) Nevada has an interest in having its rule of decision applied to protect its resident tavern keepers from civil liability, which Nevada has not imposed. (2) California has an interest in applying its civil liability rule on tavern keepers for the protection of California residents injured in California. (16 C.3d 317.) Thus, because each state has an interest and both conflict, this is not a "false conflicts" case (like Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 574, 579, 114 C.R. 106, 522 P.2d 666, infra, §200, and Reich v. Purcell (1967) 67 C.2d 551, 63 C.R. 31, 432 P.2d 727, supra, §191); "in the instant case for the first time since applying a governmental interest analysis as a choice of law doctrine in Reich, we are confronted with a 'true' conflicts case." (16 C.3d 319.)

(b) Analysis required of comparative impairment of interests. When, under the governmental interest approach, an apparent conflict of interest appears, determination of the appropriate law to be applied should be approached under principles of "comparative impairment," i.e., which state interest would be more impaired if its law were not applied. This is not a weighing process. The court does not weigh the conflicting governmental interests in the sense of determining which law manifests the better or worthier social policy on the issue; this would be difficult to justify under our federal system, which leaves policies to each state. Rather, the process is an accommodation of conflicting state policies, imposing "limitations on the reach of state policies--as distinguished from evaluating the wisdom of such policies"; emphasis is on the appropriate scope of conflicting state policies rather than on the quality of those policies. (16 C.3d 320, 321.)

(c) Examination of Competing State Policies.

(1) "Defendant by the course of its chosen commercial practice has put itself at the heart of California's regulatory interest, namely to prevent tavern keepers from selling alcoholic beverages to obviously intoxicated persons who are likely to act in California in the intoxicated state. It seems clear that California cannot reasonably effectuate its policy if it does not extend its regulation to include out-of-state tavern keepers such as defendant who regularly and purposely sell intoxicating beverages to California residents in places and under conditions in which it is reasonably certain these residents will return to California and act therein while still in an intoxicated state. California's interest would be very significantly impaired if its policy were not applied to defendant." (16 C.3d 322, 323.)

(2) While Nevada does not impose civil liability on tavern keepers, it does impose criminal liability for furnishing liquor to an intoxicated person. Hence, application of California's civil liability rule would not impose an entirely new duty requiring ability to distinguish between California residents and other patrons. "Rather the imposition of such liability involves an increased economic exposure, which, at least for businesses which actively solicit extensive California patronage, is a foreseeable and coverable business expense. Moreover, Nevada's interest in protecting its tavern keepers from civil liability of a boundless and unrestricted nature will not be significantly impaired when as in the instant case liability is imposed only on those tavern keepers who actively solicit California business." (16 C.3d 323.)

(d) Conclusion. Under this analysis, it must be concluded "that California has an important and abiding interest in applying its rule of decision to the case at bench, that the policy of this state would be more significantly impaired if such rule were not applied and that the trial court erred in not applying California law." (16 C.3d 323.)

The Bernhard opinion produced the expected volume of critical analysis and comment. (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 290 [Bernhard]; 68 Cal. L. Rev. 477 [Use of Comparative Impairment To Resolve True Conflicts]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1079 [Comparative Impairment Reformed: Rethinking State Interests in the Conflict of Laws]; 29 Hastings L. J. 731 [The Need for a Reorientation in American Conflicts Law]; 30 Hastings L. J. 255 [Comparative Impairment and Better Law: Grand Illusions in the Conflict of Laws].)

(2) Three-Step Analysis. California's governmental interest approach is thus said to involve three steps: First, the court determines whether the foreign law differs from that of the forum. Second, if there is a difference, the court examines each jurisdiction's interest in the application of its own law to determine whether a true conflict exists. Last, if each jurisdiction has a legitimate interest in the application of its rule of decision, the court analyzes the comparative impairment of the interested jurisdictions. The court applies the law of the state the interest of which would be the more impaired if its law were not applied. (Tucci v. Club Mediterranee (2001) 89 C.A.4th 180, 189, 107 C.R.2d 401.)

(3) Minimal Interest in Outmoded Statute. The comparative impairment analysis of Bernhard was applied in Offshore Rental Co. v. Continental Oil Co. (1978) 22 C.3d 157, 148 C.R. 867, 583 P.2d 721. Plaintiff, a California corporation with its principal place of business in California, derived a large part of its revenues from leasing oil drilling equipment in Louisiana. Defendant, a Delaware corporation with New York headquarters, did business in various states including Louisiana and California. K, plaintiff's vice-president, went from plaintiff's Texas office to Louisiana to confer with defendant's representatives, and while on defendant's premises was injured by defendant's negligence. Defendant compensated K for his injuries, but plaintiff brought this suit seeking damages for loss of the services of its "key" employee, under C.C. 49 and Darmour Productions Corp. v. Herbert M. Baruch Corp. (1933) 135 C.A. 351, 27 P.2d 664, infra, §755. Louisiana law did not recognize such liability, and the lower court, concluding that California law could not be applied, dismissed the action. Held, affirmed.

(a) Governmental interest approach. Where two states have interests, the underlying policies must be examined in determining the governing law. (22 C.3d 161, 163, 164, discussing Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 574, 114 C.R. 106, 522 P.2d 666, infra, §200, and Bernhard.)

(b) Interests of states. (1) Louisiana decisions take the position that allowing recovery for loss of a key employee's services would lead to undesirable social and legal consequences; i.e., the state's policy is to protect negligent resident tortfeasors from excessive legal liability or exaggerated claims. (22 C.3d 163, 164.) (2) California, through C.C. 49, expresses an interest in protecting California employers from economic harm; and this policy of protection extends to injuries inflicted outside California, because its economy and tax revenues are affected regardless of the situs of physical injury. (22 C.3d 164.)

(c) Resolution of conflict through comparative impairment analysis. Governmental interest analysis calls for application of the law of the state whose interest would be the more impaired if its law were not applied. (22 C.3d 165.) Several factors are to be considered:

(1) Whether the policy is one that was much more strongly held in the past than it is now. If one of the competing laws is archaic, it may have to yield to the more prevalent and progressive law. (22 C.3d 165.) "Moreover, a particular statute may be an antique not only in comparison to the laws of the federal union, but also as compared with other laws of the state of its enactment. Such a statute may be infrequently enforced or interpreted even within its own jurisdiction, and, as an anachronism in that sense, should have a limited application in a conflicts case." (22 C.3d 166.)

(2) The comparative pertinence of the underlying policy of the statute. The policy may be less pertinent if the original object is no longer of pressing importance, and the statute has survived mainly because of inertia; or the policy may be satisfied by some means other than enforcement of the statute, e.g., by insurance to provide compensation to tort victims. (22 C.3d 166.)

(d) Application of comparative impairment analysis to facts. The majority of common law states do not sanction actions for harm to business employees, "recognizing that even if injury to the master-servant relationship were at one time the basis for an action at common law, the radical change in the nature of that relationship since medieval times nullifies any right by a modern corporate employer to recover for negligent injury to his employees." (22 C.3d 167.) Louisiana has joined this mainstream of American jurisdictions that refuse to allow actions based on negligent interference with contract. (22 C.3d 168.) And California has never squarely held its statute applicable to business employees, nor has any California court recently considered the issue. Thus, California's interest in application of "its unusual and outmoded statute" is comparatively less strong than Louisiana's interest in its "prevalent and progressive" law. (22 C.3d 168.) The situs of the injury, no longer controlling, is nevertheless a relevant consideration. And "[a]t the heart of Louisiana's denial of liability lies the vital interest in promoting freedom of investment and enterprise within Louisiana's borders, among investors incorporated both in Louisiana and elsewhere." (22 C.3d 168.) Moreover, insurance is available to guard against the exigencies of the present case; i.e., plaintiff could have procured key employee insurance, a reasonable business expense. (22 C.3d 168.) Defendant, dealing with key employees of companies incorporated in a number of states, would reasonably have based its insurance protection on Louisiana law. (22 C.3d 169.)

(e) Conclusion. "Upon examination of the nature and purpose of the states' respective laws, ... we have determined that the California statute has historically been of minimal importance in the fabric of California law, and that the Louisiana courts have recently interpreted their analogous Louisiana statute narrowly in light of that statute's obsolescence. We do not believe that California's interests in the application of its law to the present case are so compelling as to prevent an accommodation to the stronger, more current interest of Louisiana. We conclude therefore that Louisiana's interests would be the more impaired if its law were not applied, and consequently that Louisiana law governs the present case." (22 C.3d 169.) (See 30 Hastings L. J. 294; 68 Cal. L. Rev. 586; for overruling of Darmour, see infra, §755.)

The Offshore Rental rationale was applied in Cable v. Sahara Tahoe Corp. (1979) 93 C.A.3d 384, 155 C.R. 770. Plaintiff, a California resident, was a passenger in an automobile driven by S. She alleged that defendant, a Nevada corporation, served liquor to S, and that she was injured in Nevada when S lost control of the car. Held, no cause of action was stated. The California interest in protecting those injured by intoxicated persons who were furnished liquor outside of California was declared in Bernhard. (93 C.A.3d 395.) However, that policy related only to Nevada conduct causing injury in California. (93 C.A.3d 396.) Also, the policy in favor of protecting such injured persons was repudiated by 1978 amendments abrogating the doctrines of Vesely and Bernhard (see infra, §1070). Thus, impairment of this repudiated policy would have a minimal effect on California's governmental interest. (93 C.A.3d 395, 398.) (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 591; 2 A.L.R.4th 952 [choice of law as to liability of liquor seller for injuries caused by intoxicated person].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

3. Particular Torts.

a. Injuries to Person or Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 193

[§ 193] Injuries to Person or Property.

(1) Personal Injuries. Under the Restatement, the law of the state where a personal injury occurred determines the rights and liabilities of the parties, "unless, with respect to the particular issue, some other state has a more significant relationship ... to the occurrence and the parties." (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §146; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §136; 77 A.L.R.2d 1266 [what is place of tort causing personal injury for purpose of principle of conflict of laws that law of place of tort governs].)

In the ordinary case, conduct and injury occur in the same state, and these two elements usually call for application of the law of that state. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §146, Comment d.) But when they occur in different states, a distinction is made: (a) The law of the state of injury will usually be applied, because persons who cause injury in a state should not escape liability under that state's law, and the place of injury is readily ascertainable. (b) Where, however, the purpose of the law is to punish conduct, the state where the conduct occurred may be more important; and the same is true where absolute liability is imposed. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §146, §Comment e.)

(2) Injury to Property. The Restatement rule is similar to that applicable to personal injury. The law of the state where the injury occurred applies, subject to the same qualification as to the particular issue. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §147.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

3. Particular Torts.

b. Wrongful Death.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 194

[§ 194] Wrongful Death.

(1) State Where Injury Occurred. The statutory action for wrongful death raises a number of issues, such as the defenses available, the beneficiaries who will share in the recovery and the portions each will receive, the damages recoverable and any limitations on damages, and the persons who may bring the action. The Restatement rule generally calls for application of the law of the state where the injury occurred, with the usual exception for a state of more significant relationship. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §175; see 12 Pacific L. J. 147 [wrongful death action against international air carrier]; for conflicting approaches to this problem, see 22 Hastings L. J. 1173; on defenses, see Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §176; on beneficiaries, see Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §177; on damages, see Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §175; on person who may bring suit, see Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §179.)

The place of injury is where the force set in motion by the actor first takes effect on the person. This is not necessarily the place where the death occurs or the pecuniary loss results. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §175, Comment b; see 77 A.L.R.2d 1266 [what is place of tort causing personal injury or resultant damage or death, for purpose of principle of conflict of laws that law of place of tort governs].)

Where the conduct and injury occur in different states, a distinction is made: (a) The law of the state of injury is usually applied; e.g., where the decedent was domiciled or a resident there, or did business there. (b) But if the decedent was domiciled or a resident or did business in the state where the conduct occurred, that may be the state of most significant relationship. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §175, Comment f.)

(2) Death at Sea. Where the act causing death occurs on the high seas, the governing law is the federal Death on the High Seas Act (46 U.S.C., §761). (Gordon v. Reynolds (1960) 187 C.A.2d 472, 477, 10 C.R. 73; Offshore Logistics v. Tallentire (1986) 477 U.S. 207, 106 S.Ct. 2485, 2488, 91 L.Ed.2d 174, 181; see Garofalo v. Princess Cruises (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1060, 1068, 102 C.R.2d 754 [federal Death on the High Seas Act preempts state wrongful death and survival claims, as well as employer's subrogation claim against third-party tortfeasor to recover sums that employer was obligated to pay employee under workers' compensation law]; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 78; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 735.)

It has been held that California courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the federal admiralty courts over these claims. (See Garofalo v. Princess Cruises, supra, 85 C.A.4th 1079 [California courts may exercise concurrent jurisdiction over Death on the High Seas Act claims; disagreeing with Gordon v. Reynolds, supra, 187 C.A.2d 478]; cf. Touhey v. Carnivale Cruise Lines (1980) 111 C.A.3d 958, 959, 168 C.R. 910 [where injury occurs at sea, federal jurisdiction is exclusive even though resulting death occurs on land].)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 195

[§ 195] Fraud.

In determining choice of law in fraud cases, locating the place of loss presents some difficulties, and the Restatement distinguishes two situations:

(1) When the false representations and plaintiff's reliance take place in the same state, that state's law governs, subject to the usual exception for a state with a more significant relationship. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §148(1).)

(2) When the plaintiff's reliance takes place in whole or in part in a different state, several contacts will be considered in determining the state of most significant relationship. These are: (a) the place of reliance; (b) the place where the representations were received by the plaintiff; (c) the place where the representations were made by the defendant; (d) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties; (e) the place where property that was the subject of the transaction was situated at the time; and (f) the place where the plaintiff was to render performance under a contract induced by the fraud. E. Conflict of Laws.

3. Particular Torts.

d. Defamation and Invasion of Privacy.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 196

[§ 196] Defamation and Invasion of Privacy.

(1) Defamation. The principal issues involving choice of law in an action for libel or slander are whether the communication is defamatory, whether it is libel or slander, whether proof of special damages is essential, what persons are protected, what constitutes publication, whether the publisher is strictly liable or liable only for intentional or negligent publication, the defenses of absolute or qualified privilege and truth, and matters considered in mitigation. (See Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §149, Comment b.)

(a) If the publication occurs in a single state, the law of the state where it occurs applies, subject to the usual qualification for a state of more significant relationship. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §149; see Gallegos v. Union-Tribune Publishing Co. (1961) 195 C.A.2d 791, 797, 16 C.R. 185 [libel published in Mexico].)

(b) If the defamatory matter is in a book, newspaper, broadcast, or moving picture that reaches more than one state, the right to sue is governed by the substantive single publication rule and only one cause of action arises. (See infra, §538.) The single publication rule also governs choice of law; otherwise the forum might be required to examine the law of a great many states. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §150, Comment c.) Accordingly, in multistate defamation the law of the state of some significant relationship is applied: (1) When a natural person sues, usually the state of the person's domicile at the time, if the matter was published in that state. (2) When a corporation or some other legal person sues, usually the state of its principal place of business at the time, if the matter was published in that state. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §150 and Comments e, f.) (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1463; 26 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1045 [Let the Chips Fall Where They May: Choice of Law in Computer Bulletin Board Defamation Cases].)

The defamation rule also applies to "injurious falsehood," e.g., disparagement of title to property or its quality (infra, §640). (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §151.)

(2) Invasion of Privacy. The same rule, and the same distinction for multistate publication, apply to invasion of the right of privacy. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §§152, 153.) (On choice of law applicable to the distinguishable tort of invasion of the right of publicity (infra, §685), see 31 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 640.)

The issues in an action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process (see infra, §§469 et seq., 517 et seq.) that involve choice of law include the possible requirement of a showing of actual pecuniary damage, and whether less substantial grounds for the defendant's belief in the merits will justify the institution of a civil (see infra, §486 et seq.) as opposed to a criminal proceeding. Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

3. Particular Torts.

f. Products Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 198

[§ 198] Products Liability.

There has been some uncertainty as to the law applicable in a strict products liability case. (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1452; 76 A.L.R.2d 130 [what law governs liability of manufacturer or seller for injury caused by product sold].) A California case examined the subject and offered an innovative solution.

In Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 101 C.R. 314, defendant Remington created a Mexican affiliate--CDM--with interlocking or common directors and officers, and 40% stock ownership in Remington. Remington licensed the use of its trademark, and provided working equipment and training of personnel. CDM manufactured shotgun ammunition with the Remington label, somewhat similar to the American product. Plaintiff, a California resident on a hunting trip in Mexico, bought CDM shells from a Mexican dealer. A defective shell exploded in his gun, causing serious injuries. Recovery on the theory of strict products liability, and compensation for pain and suffering, could not be had under Mexican law. The trial judge ruled that California law applied, but instructed the jury that Remington would be liable only if it actually manufactured the shell in the United States or CDM manufactured it in Mexico as Remington's agent. Verdict was for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) If negligence were involved, conduct would be of paramount concern, and Mexico would be the more important contact. But strict liability is not concerned with conduct. It is an expression of policy, concerned with compensating the injured consumer on the theory that the enterprise can spread the burdens of cost. (24 C.A.3d 733.)

(b) As Reich v. Purcell (1967) 67 C.2d 551, 553, 63 C.R. 31, 432 P.2d 727, supra, §191, points out, the state of the place of wrong has little or no interest in compensation when none of the parties reside there. (24 C.A.3d 734.)

(c) There is no support for a rule that the law of the place of manufacture is controlling in strict liability cases. And here, "the interest California has in compensating its residents injured by defective products outweighs any interest Mexico may have in the regulation of its own manufacturers where no Mexican citizen is a party to the action and where Mexican law does not even recognize the doctrine of strict liability in tort or make provision for compensating an injured person for pain or suffering, both of which principles constitute the public policy of California." (24 C.A.3d 735.)

(d) The place of injury was fortuitous; the shell might have been fired after plaintiff's return to California. (24 C.A.3d 736.)

(e) Remington is the only member of the enterprise available to suit in California by an injured California citizen. (24 C.A.3d 737.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

4. Particular Issues.

a. Duty, Breach, and Causation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 199

[§ 199] Duty, Breach, and Causation.

The Restatement makes the general rule of Section 145 (usually law of the state where the injury occurred; see supra, §190) applicable to most of the issues of tort liability.

(1) Protected Interest and Duty. The law of the state where the injury occurred usually governs the following: (a) The interest entitled to legal protection; e.g., recovery for emotional distress and any requirement of impact or intentional act; recovery for injuries to an unborn child; recovery for invasion of privacy; recovery for negligent misrepresentation; recovery for loss of consortium. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §158 and Comment.) (b) The nature of the duty; e.g., manufacturer's liability without privity, affirmative duty of care, and liability for failure to act. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §159 and Comment a; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §141.)

Schneider v. Schimmels (1967) 256 C.A.2d 366, 64 C.R. 273, was a husband's action to recover for loss of consortium. The place of wrong and marital domicile of the husband, as well as the residence of all parties, was Colorado, which authorized recovery. California, which at the time did not, was merely the state to which defendant moved after the act and the only place where he could be sued. Because California had earlier recognized the right to recover these damages (see infra, §1678), it had no strong public policy against an award; hence, application of Colorado law did not offend any California interest or concern. (256 C.A.2d 373.) (See 46 A.L.R.3d 880 [conflict of laws as to right of action for loss of consortium].)

In Zimmerman v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1986) 179 C.A.3d 840, 224 C.R. 917, plaintiff, an Illinois resident, was injured in an automobile collision with a car driven in Oklahoma by an Oklahoma resident. Plaintiff first sued the driver in Oklahoma; this suit was eventually settled. But plaintiff became a California resident, and brought another action in California against the driver's insurer under the Unfair Insurance Practices Act (Ins.C. 790) for wrongful failure to attempt settlement. California at that time recognized such an action (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §253). The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground that Oklahoma law, which did not recognize a third-party bad faith action against an insurer, applied. Held, affirmed.

(a) Oklahoma has an interest in protecting its defendant insurers, and, through them, its insureds who would ultimately absorb the cost of extending insurers' liability to third persons. (179 C.A.3d 846.)

(b) California's interest in regulating the practices of insurers and affording redress to California residents is irrelevant, because the conduct by defendant occurred in Oklahoma. (179 C.A.3d 846.) The factor supporting plaintiff's claim of California governmental interest is his status as a resident of California; but he did not become a resident until some months following the accident precipitating the conduct which is the subject of the suit. To hold that the law of plaintiff's residence applied would encourage forum shopping, and would also abrogate the interest of Oklahoma in application of its law to an insurance policy written in Oklahoma for an Oklahoma resident for an accident that occurred in that state, and to conduct of the insurer in Oklahoma. (179 C.A.3d 847.)

(2) Breach. The standard of care, whether established by statute, ordinance, or common law, is usually that of the state where the injury occurred. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §157.) The same is true of the tortious character of the conduct; e.g., intentional wrong, negligence, recklessness, or liability without fault. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §156 and Comments c, d, and e.)

(3) Causation. Legal cause is governed by the same rule. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §160.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

4. Particular Issues.

b. Damages.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 200

[§ 200] Damages.

(1) In General. The choice of law on damage issues presents several problems:

(a) What items of loss can be recovered, and what limitations are imposed on the amount of the recovery. These limitations are commonly encountered in actions for wrongful death. (See 49 Cal. L. Rev. 187; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1652; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1484; 10 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 670; 16 Hastings L. J. 53; 3 Santa Clara Lawyer 190.) Under the Restatement, the principles of Section 6 govern. The state of conduct and injury is not primarily concerned, and the governing law should be that of the state with a dominant interest in this issue. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §171, Comment b.) California follows this modern approach. (Reich v. Purcell (1967) 67 C.2d 551, 555, 63 C.R. 31, 432 P.2d 727, supra, §191; Hernandez v. Burger (1980) 102 C.A.3d 795, 799, 162 C.R. 564; see 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1635; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 365.)

(b) The principles of Section 6 also apply to apportionment of damages (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §171, Comment e) and exemplary damages (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §171, Comment d).

(c) The right to interest, and the rate, are likewise governed by these principles. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §171, Comment c.)

(2) Illustrations. In Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 C.3d 574, 579, 114 C.R. 106, 522 P.2d 666, plaintiffs and the decedent were domiciled in Mexico. Defendants were domiciled in California, and the death occurred in California. Defendants sought to have Mexico's limited rule applied as the measure of damages (it would have been $ 1,946.72). The trial judge ruled that California law applied, and defendants sought mandamus. Held, writ denied.

(a) Determination of competing interests. Only when it is suggested that foreign law should be the rule of decision must the forum determine the policy of its own and foreign laws. "[G]enerally speaking the forum will apply its own rule of decision unless a party litigant timely invokes the law of a foreign state. In such event he must demonstrate that the latter rule of decision will further the interest of the foreign state and therefore that it is an appropriate one for the forum to apply to the case before it." (11 C.3d 581.) The interest of a state in a rule limiting damages for wrongful death is to protect its residents from imposition of excessive financial burdens; and, since defendants are not Mexican residents, Mexico has no interest in denying full recovery to its plaintiff residents injured by non-Mexican defendants. (11 C.3d 581.)

(b) Misconceptions from Reich v. Purcell. Defendants quoted the Reich opinion to the effect that the interest of the state is in determining the distribution of proceeds to beneficiaries, and that it extends only to local decedents and beneficiaries. This "reflects a serious misreading of Reich which apparently has not been confined to the parties before us." (11 C.3d 582.) Reich dealt separately with two state interests: (1) the interest in creating a cause of action for wrongful death so as to provide some recovery; and (2) the interest in limiting the amount of recovery. But in a cause of action for wrongful death there are three distinct aspects: (1) compensation for survivors; (2) deterrence of conduct (unlimited recovery strengthens the deterrent); (3) limitation on the damages recoverable (protecting local defendants against excessive financial burdens). Here, California has a decided interest in furthering its deterrent policy of full compensation by applying its own law to California defendants. (11 C.3d 584.) (See 63 Cal. L. Rev. 56 [on Supreme Court opinion in Hurtado]; 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 817 [on Court of Appeal opinion in Hurtado]; 29 Stanf. L. Rev. 127 [same]; 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 719, 781, 795 [same]; 10 U.S.F. L. Rev. 625 [same].)

In Hall v. University of Nevada (1977) 74 C.A.3d 280, 141 C.R. 439, the state of Nevada was held subject to suit for a vehicle tort of its employee in California; its sovereign immunity did not extend beyond its borders. (See 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §51.) It contended, however, that its statutory limitation of liability to $ 25,000 in an action in which sovereign immunity was waived should govern. Held, California's policy interest in providing full protection to persons injured on its highways through negligence is stronger than Nevada's interest in protecting its residents against the business expense of increased insurance coverage. (74 C.A.3d 285, 286, following Bernhard v. Harrah's Club (1976) 16 C.3d 313, 128 C.R. 215, 546 P.2d 719, supra, §192.) (See Nevada v. Hall (1979) 440 U.S. 410, 99 S.Ct. 1182, 1190, 59 L.Ed.2d 416, 427 [rejecting constitutional challenges to California decision in this case]; 30 Hastings L. J. 283.)

In Hernandez v. Burger 1980) 102 C.A.3d 795, 162 C.R. 564, plaintiff, a Mexican resident and citizen, was struck by a vehicle driven in Mexico; defendants, the driver and the owner of the vehicle, were California residents and citizens. The suit was brought in California to obtain unlimited tort damages under California law. Held, the Mexican law of limited recovery ($ 2,000 maximum) applied. The opinion reviewed all of the leading cases, distinguished Hurtado, and concluded that (a) California had no legitimate interest in application of its unlimited damages rule to a Mexican citizen; and (b) Mexico had an interest in application of its limited damages rule to nonresident motorists--fostering tourism. (102 C.A.3d 800, 802, 804.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. INTRODUCTION

E. Conflict of Laws.

4. Particular Issues.

c. Defenses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 201

[§ 201] Defenses.

(1) In General. The general Restatement choice of law rule for torts (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145; see supra, §190) determines what defenses may be raised on the merits. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §161.) Included are:

(a) Specific conditions of liability; e.g., whether an action can be maintained against a liability insurer without first getting judgment against the tortfeasor. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §162 and Comment b.)

(b) Privilege to act. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §163.)

(c) Contributory fault; e.g., the legal standard, the last clear chance doctrine, the effect of reckless conduct, and comparative negligence. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §164 and Comments a, d, e, and f; see 86 A.L.R.3d 1206 [choice of law as to application of comparative negligence doctrine].)

(d) Assumption of risk; e.g., whether the defense may be raised by a defendant who has violated a statute enacted for the protection of persons in plaintiff's class. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §165 and Comment a.)

(e) Imputed negligence; e.g., between spouses, parent and child, or driver and passenger. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §166 and Comments a and b.)

(2) Release or Covenant Not To Sue. The rule of Section 145 applies to the determination of the effect of a release or covenant not to sue one tortfeasor on the liability of the others. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §170.) Although most of the cases "have applied the local law of the state of conduct and injury," the Restatement questions this view. "If all of the interested parties are domiciled in the state where the instrument was executed, it would seem that, usually at least, this state would have the greatest interest in the issues." (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §170, Comment c.)

(3) Guest Law. The traditional rule of the place of wrong (supra, §189) was formerly applied in California to cases involving a "guest law" defense. (See Loranger v. Nadeau (1932) 215 C. 362, 366, 10 P.2d 63; Emery v. Emery (1955) 45 C.2d 421, 425, 289 P.2d 218; 16 Hastings L. J. 45.) Later cases take the modern approach (see supra, §190 et seq.). (On unconstitutionality of former California Guest Law, see Brown v. Merlo (1973) 8 C.3d 855, 882, 106 C.R. 388, 506 P.2d 212, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §795.)

In Fuller v. Greenup (1968) 267 C.A.2d 10, 72 C.R. 531, plaintiff and defendant, domiciliaries of Alaska, took a motor trip in plaintiff's car through British Columbia to California. While in British Columbia plaintiff suffered injuries from defendant's negligent driving. British Columbia's guest statute bars recovery except for gross negligence; Alaska has no guest statute. Held, Alaska law applied. Both parties were domiciled there and the agreement to share expenses of the trip was made there. It is reasonable to assume that they contemplated the determination of their rights and liabilities by the law of their domicile and place of agreement; it is unreasonable to assume that they contemplated a change in such rights and liabilities each time they crossed a border. British Columbia, a fortuitous place of wrong, has little interest in the issue, and recovery by a guest is not against California's public policy. (267 C.A.2d 18.) (See Kelley v. Von Kuznick (1971) 18 C.A.3d 805, 809, 96 C.R. 184 [wrongful death involving California residents who drove through New Mexico in returning from a vacation trip; held that New Mexico had no legitimate interest, and instruction on right to recover for wilful misconduct under California law was proper]; 63 A.L.R.4th 167 [modern status of choice of law in applying guest statutes].)

(4) Immunity. The general Restatement torts rule determines whether the defendant can defend a tort suit on the ground that it is a charity. (See Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §145, supra, §190.)

With respect to intrafamily immunity, the modern view was established in California in Emery v. Emery, supra. The law of the place of wrong is "fortuitous and irrelevant," and the applicable law is that of the domicile. "We think that disabilities to sue and immunities from suit because of a family relationship are more properly determined by reference to the law of the state of the family domicile. That state has the primary responsibility for establishing and regulating the incidents of the family relationship and it is the only state in which the parties can, by participation in the legislative processes, effect a change in those incidents. Moreover, it is undesirable that the rights, duties, disabilities, and immunities conferred or imposed by the family relationship should constantly change as members of the family cross state boundaries during temporary absences from their home. Since all of the parties to the present case are apparently domiciliaries of California, we must look to the law of this state to determine whether any disabilities or immunities exist." (45 C.2d 428.) (See 73 Harv. L. Rev. 785; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1707; 40 So. Cal. L. Rev. 307; 13 Stanf. L. Rev. 731; 96 A.L.R.2d 973 [conflict of laws as to right of action between husband and wife or parent and child].)

The Restatement is in accord. The applicable law, selected by application of the Section 145 principles, is usually that of the parties' domicile. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §169.) "Whatever the true explanation, the state of the parties' domicil will almost always be the state of dominant interest, and, if so, its local law should be applied to determine whether there is immunity in the particular case. One possible situation where the state of the parties' domicil would not be that of dominant interest is where the parties' relationship to the state of their domicil is considerably less close than is their relationship to some other state." [§ 202] Other Issues.

(1) Joint and Concurrent Torts. The law applicable to circumstances in which two or more persons are liable for acts of each other is determined under the general torts conflicts rule of Restatement, §145 (supra, §190), and is usually the law of the state of injury. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §172.) The same is true of contribution and indemnity among tortfeasors, although the Restatement suggests that the rule may be different where both parties are domiciled in the same state. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §173, and Comments a and b.) (See 29 A.L.R.3d 642 [modern status of rule that substantive rights of parties to a tort action are governed by the law of place of wrong]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §143.)

In Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Teledyne Industries (1975) 53 C.A.3d 693, 126 C.R. 455, a Florida company received judgment in the federal district court in Florida against two California corporations, Caterpillar and Teledyne. Caterpillar satisfied the judgment and brought this action against Teledyne for contribution. Florida at that time had no contribution statute. Held, California law applied and Caterpillar was entitled to contribution. Applying the governmental interests test (see supra, §191), Florida was only interested in satisfaction of the judgment in favor of the Florida plaintiff; it had no interest in the relationship of the two California tortfeasors to each other, and California had an interest in applying its rule of contribution to them. (53 C.A.3d 698.)

(2) Vicarious Liability. Whether one person is liable for another's tort, e.g., in situations involving independent contractors, employer and employee, or driving with permission, the rule of Section 145 and the principles of Section 6 are the guidelines to determination of the proper choice of law. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §174; see 16 Hastings L. J. 55 [owner's responsibility].) "These principles require that the forum consider (1) whether the relationship between the defendant and the other person makes the imposition of vicarious liability reasonable and (2) whether there is a reasonable relationship between the defendant and the state whose local law is to be applied." (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §174, Comment a; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Conflict of Laws §144.)

(3) Survival. The Restatement treats survival as one of the issues governed by Section 145. (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §167.) California has held, however, that the issue is not substantive but procedural. Hence, a cause of action for negligent personal injuries is maintainable here under our survival statute even though it has abated by the death of the tortfeasor in the state where it arose. (Grant v. McAuliffe (1953) 41 C.2d 859, 864, 264 P.2d 944 [noting that all parties were California residents and estate was being administered here]; see 42 Cal. L. Rev. 803; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1260; 13 Stanf. L. Rev. 729; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 380; on conflict of laws respecting survival and abatement, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §102.)

(4) Miscellaneous Jurisdictional and Procedural Issues. Problems of jurisdiction and choice of law on procedural matters are considered in another work:

(a) Jurisdiction. The general rule is that a tort action is transitory and may be brought in any place where personal jurisdiction of the defendant may be obtained. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §139.) The principal exceptions are: (1) Actions involving foreign land. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §359.) (2) Actions contrary to public policy of the forum. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §361.) (3) Actions where the forum is inconvenient. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §365.)

(b) Procedure. Procedural matters are generally governed by the law of the forum. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §96.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

1. Common Law Doctrine of Sovereign Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 203

[§ 203] Common Law Doctrine of Sovereign Immunity.

"The theory of sovereign immunity originated in the fiction that the king can do no wrong. It may be said that the doctrine arose in former times from the practical necessity of enabling the state to exercise its governmental functions unhampered by the demands on the exchequer resulting from the carelessness or mistakes of its officers and agents in the discharge of their official duties. ... The doctrine has had widespread acceptance as a part of the American common law, and has been deemed to prevail except where it had been departed from by constitutional and statutory law, as interpreted and applied by the courts." (People v. Superior Court (Pierpont) (1947) 29 C.2d 754, 756, 178 P.2d 1.) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §260; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.1 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.25; 2 California Affirmative Defenses (2004 ed.), §38:56 et seq.; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 829; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 714; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 515 [economic analysis of sovereign immunity]; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §1 et seq.; on immunity of foreign country, see 67 Harv. L. Rev. 608; 23 San Diego L. Rev. 741; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 501; 34 Stanf. L. Rev. 385; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), International Law §82 et seq.)

The doctrine has both substantive and procedural aspects; i.e., it embraces both immunity from liability and immunity from suit. (On immunity from suit and modern statutory consent to suit, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §87 et seq.; on jurisdictional nature of defense, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §91.)

The immunity doctrine has been under fire by progressive courts and law writers for many years, and it has been urged in responsible quarters that it should be wholly abolished and full tort liability should be assumed by American state and local governments. (See Talley v. Northern San Diego County Hosp. Dist. (1953) 41 C.2d 33, 41, 257 P.2d 22 [dissenting opinion]; Vater v. Glenn (1958) 49 C.2d 815, 820, 323 P.2d 85; Madison v. San Francisco (1951) 106 C.A.2d 232, 249, 251, 253, 234 P.2d 995, 236 P.2d 141 [concurring opinion]; Waterman v. Los Angeles County General Hosp. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 143, 144, footnote 1, 266 P.2d 221; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 303; 7 Hastings L. J. 109; 7 Hastings L. J. 330 [New York Court of Claims Act]; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 492; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1 [general discussion of alternatives to immunity].) As a result, "the traditional blanket immunities ... have been abolished or substantially modified both at the federal and at the state level. Nevertheless, some kind of immunity, or unique constraints on duties of governmental entities, remains everywhere." (Dobbs, The Law of Torts §260, p. 694; on abrogation of doctrine in California, see infra, §215.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
A. In General.
2. Federal Sovereign Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 204

[§ 204] Federal Sovereign Immunity.

The sovereign immunity doctrine is still recognized with respect to the federal Government, and, except where express statutory consent is conferred, the United States is not liable for torts. (See Eastern Trans. Co. v. United States (1927) 272 U.S. 675, 47 S.Ct. 289, 291, 71 L.Ed. 472, 475 [doctrine applicable]; Rest.2d, Torts §895A [tort immunity of United States]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §261 et seq.; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 94 [immunity of United States in water rights litigation and effect of statutory waiver]; 71 Cal. L. Rev. 1707 [immunity for injuries resulting from violation of constitutional right; proposal for change]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 829, 887; 73 Harv. L. Rev. 602 [liability under Tucker Act]; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1 [suits against governments and officers]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 2009 [federal government tort liability]; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 258; 12 Southwestern L. Rev. 457 [competing considerations]; on federal immunity from suit, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §87 et seq.)

The immunity cannot be overcome by an action ostensibly against a public officer when in substance it is against the Government or its instrumentality. (See Larson v. Domestic & Foreign Commerce Corp. (1949) 337 U.S. 682, 69 S.Ct. 1457, 1460, 93 L.Ed. 1628, 1634 [action to restrain War Assets Administrator from reselling property claimed by plaintiff under prior contract of purchase; held an action against federal Government, and dismissed]; Alred v. Camp Irwin Non-Commissioned Officers' Open Mess (1958) 156 C.A.2d 571, 574, 319 P.2d 654; Wheeldin v. Wheeler (1963) 373 U.S. 647, 83 S.Ct. 1441, 10 L.Ed.2d 605 [no tort liability for abuse of subpoena power]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 831; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 136 [Wheeldin]; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 691 [exemption of government contractors from strict liability for blasting]; 9 A.L.R.3d 382 [right of contractor with federal, state, or local public body to latter's immunity from tort liability].)

There are, however, a number of federal statutory waivers of immunity. (See 70 Harv. L. Rev. 875, 887, 888; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §88.) In particular, the Federal Tort Claims Act of 1946 greatly broadened the area of liability. (See infra, §205 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

3. Liability Under Federal Tort Claims Act.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 205

[§ 205] In General.

(1) Nature and Scope of Act. In 1946, the Federal Tort Claims Act (28 U.S.C., §§1346(b), 2671 et seq.) was adopted, radically changing the former immunity rule with respect to the federal Government. Generally, the United States is liable for injury or damage caused by the negligent or wrongful act of a government employee while acting within the scope of the employee's office or employment. (See 28 U.S.C., §§1346(b), 2672, infra, §206.) The liability is the same as that imposed on a private person under the law of the place where the tort occurred. (See 28 U.S.C., §2672, 2674, infra, §206.)

(2) Punitive Damages. The United States is not liable for punitive damages. (28 U.S.C., §2674; see Woodland Production Credit Assn. v. Nicholas (1988) 201 C.A.3d 123, 128, 251 C.R. 791 [federal agency is immune from punitive damages in absence of explicit authorization for them]; Molzof v. United States (1992) 502 U.S. 301, 112 S.Ct. 711, 718, 116 L.Ed.2d 731, 742 [FTCA bars recovery only of common law punitive damages, i.e., those intended to punish intentional or egregious conduct; recovery was proper of compensatory damages for future medical expenses and loss of enjoyment of life of plaintiff's comatose husband]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §§134, 135.) Where the state law prescribes a penal measure of damages on a cause of action, the federal Government is liable only for actual or compensatory damages, and the award need not conform to the state statutory limit on its penal sum. (Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. United States (1956) 352 U.S. 128, 77 S.Ct. 186, 1 L.Ed.2d 189 [Massachusetts Death Act making recovery depend on culpability instead of pecuniary loss; statutory $ 20,000 limit inapplicable and $ 60,000 judgment for actual damages upheld].)

(3) Interest and Attorneys' Fees. The United States is not liable for interest prior to judgment. (28 U.S.C., §2674; see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §133.) And attorneys' fees are strictly limited (20% on claims settled administratively, 25% on judgment or settlement after commencement of action). (28 U.S.C., §2678; see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §§226, 227; 86 A.L.R. Fed 866 [attorneys' fees under FTCA].)

(4) Indemnification. The Act permits an indemnity action against the United States in the same manner and to the same extent that an action would lie against a private individual. (Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. United States (1983) 460 U.S. 190, 103 S.Ct. 1033, 1037, 74 L.Ed.2d 911, 918.) However, a tortfeasor has no right of indemnity from the United States in cases involving injuries to military personnel. (Stencel Aero Engineering Corp. v. United States (1977) 431

U.S. 666, 97 S.Ct. 2054, 2057, 52 L.Ed.2d 665, 670 [allowing claim for indemnity by negligent aircraft manufacturer would circumvent Feres doctrine (no governmental liability to servicemen injured in the line of duty; see infra, §208), and same reasons of policy behind that doctrine were applicable here].) The United States has no right of indemnity from an employee whose negligence led to an award against it. (United States v. Gilman (1954) 347 U.S. 507, 74 S.Ct. 695, 696, 98 L.Ed. 898, 901; see 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 176.)

(5) Commentary. The commentary on the Federal Tort Claims Act has been extensive. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §261 et seq.; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §29.12 et seq.; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 889; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 1363; 21 Hastings L. J. 1059; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 581 [liability for outer space accidents]; 31 *So. Cal. L. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

3. Liability Under Federal Tort Claims Act.

b. Liability for Tortious Acts of Federal Employees.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 206

[§ 206] Liability for Tortious Acts of Federal Employees.

(1) In General. The United States is made liable generally for "injury or loss of property, or personal injury or death caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any employee ... while acting within the scope of his office or employment." (28 U.S.C., §§1346(b), 2672; see Sheridan v. United States (1988) 487 U.S. 392, 108 S.Ct. 2449, 2455, 101 L.Ed.2d 352, 362 [government liable for negligently allowing assailant serviceman to leave Navy hospital with loaded weapon].)

The liability is for "wrongful," as well as negligent, acts. Although most intentional torts are expressly excluded (see infra, §208), liability extends to wilful torts that are outside the statutory waiver. (See Hatahley v. United States (1956) 351 U.S. 173, 76 S.Ct. 745, 751, 100 L.Ed. 1065, 1073 [no immunity for nonnegligent trespass]; 36 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 895 [federal government's liability for intentional torts of its law enforcement officials]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §89 et seq.)

In United States v. Demko (1966) 385 U.S. 149, 87 S.Ct. 382, 17 L.Ed.2d 258, a federal prisoner injured in performance of an assigned task claimed and received an award under the related compensation act (18 U.S.C., §4126). Held, this was the prisoner's exclusive remedy and precluded any action under the Federal Tort Claims Act.

(2) Who Are Federal Employees. "Employees of the government" are defined in the statute as including officers or employees of "any federal agency," members of the military or naval forces, members of the National Guard while engaged in training or other prescribed duty, and persons "acting on behalf of a federal agency in an official capacity, temporarily or permanently in the service of the United States, whether with or without compensation." (28 U.S.C., §2671; see Logue v. United States (1973) 412 U.S. 521, 93 S.Ct. 2215, 2221, 37 L.Ed.2d 121, 129 [federal Government was not liable for negligence of employees of county jail in which federal prisoner was held on narcotics smuggling charges; federal marshal had no authority to control their activities]; United States v. Orleans (1976) 425 U.S. 807, 96 S.Ct. 1971, 1977, 48 L.Ed.2d 390, 399 [agents and employees of community action agency that, though supported with federal funds and subject to federal standards, was local enterprise whose day-to-day operations were not supervised by federal Government were not federal employees within meaning of FTCA]; 75 Cal. L. Rev. 1513 [criticism of 42 U.S.C., §2212, extending Federal Tort Claims Act to private contractors involved in atomic weapons testing program].)

The term "federal agency" includes, for these purposes, "the executive departments, the judicial and legislative branches, the military departments, independent establishments of the United States, and corporations primarily acting as instrumentalities or agencies of the United States, but does not include any contractor with the United States." (28 U.S.C., §2671; see 166 A.L.R. Fed 187 [when is federal agency employee an independent contractor, creating exception to United States waiver of immunity under 28 U.S.C., §2671].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 7 A.L.R. Fed 2d 179 [when has federal employee acted within scope of employment for purposes of 28 U.S.C., §2679, permitting substitution of United States as defendant, in action asserting intentional tort involving personal injury, death, or threats of personal injury or death]; 12 A.L.R. Fed 2d 649 [when has federal employee acted within scope of employment for purposes of 28 U.S.C., §2679, permitting substitution of United States as defendant in action for negligence or other unintentional tort or for violation of state statute]; 14 A.L.R. Fed 2d 251 [when federal employee acts within scope of employment for purposes of 28 U.S.C., §2679, permitting substitution of United States as defendant in action asserting intentional tort not involving personal injury or death].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
A. In General.
3. Liability Under Federal Tort Claims Act.
c. Liability Is That of Private Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 207

[§ 207] Liability Is That of Private Person.

The liability is the same as that imposed on a "private person ... in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred." (28 U.S.C., §2672; see 28 U.S.C., §2674 [liability "in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances"]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 890; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §108.) But the traditional distinction between governmental and proprietary acts has no application. (Indian Towing Co. v. United States (1955) 350 U.S. 61, 76 S.Ct. 122, 124, 100 L.Ed. 48, 54 [Coast Guard operated lighthouse failed through negligence in inspection and repair]; Rayonier v. United States (1957) 352 U.S. 315, 77 S.Ct. 374, 376, 1 L.Ed.2d 354, 358 [negligence of firefighter]; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 234; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 134.)

In Richards v. United States (1962) 369 U.S. 14, 82 S.Ct. 585, 7 L.Ed.2d 492, the conflict of laws provision ("law of the place where the act or omission occurred") was given a broader meaning than internal substantive tort law. The statute requires application of "the whole law" of that state (82 S.Ct. 592, 7 L.Ed.2d 499), thus including its judicially declared conflict of laws rules. (See 76 Harv. L. Rev. 191; 10 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 681.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) "Private person" does not include state or municipal entity: In United States v. Olson (2005) 546 U.S. 43, 126 S.Ct. 510, 163 L.Ed.2d 306, plaintiffs injured in a mine accident in Arizona sued the Mine Safety and Health Administration under the Federal Tort Claims Act, alleging negligence by federal mine inspectors. The federal district court granted the agency's motion to dismiss, but the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed on the ground that Arizona law would make a state or municipal entity liable in the alleged circumstances, reasoning that (1) where unique governmental functions are at issue, the Act waives sovereign immunity if a state or municipal entity would be held liable under the law where the activity occurred, and (2) federal mine inspections are unique governmental functions because there is no private sector analogue for mine inspections. Held, Court of Appeals judgment reversed and case remanded; the Act waives the federal Government's sovereign immunity only where local law would make a private person liable in tort, not where local law would make the state or a municipal entity liable.

(a) The Ninth Circuit's first premise is too broad, reading into the Act something that is not there. 28 U.S.C., §1346(b)(1) authorizes private tort actions against the Government "under circumstances where the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred." The provision says that it waives sovereign immunity "under circumstances where the United States, if a private person," not "the United States, if a state or municipal entity," would be liable. This Court has consistently adhered to this "private person" standard, even when uniquely governmental functions are at issue. (126 S.Ct. 512, 163 L.Ed.2d 310.)

(b) The Ninth Circuit's second premise reads the Act too narrowly in its determination that federal mine inspections have no private sector analogue. 28 U.S.C., §2674 makes the United States liable "in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances." The words "like circumstances" do not restrict a court's inquiry to the same circumstances, but require it to look further afield. The Government in effect concedes, and other Courts of Appeals' decisions suggest, that private person analogies exist for the federal mine inspectors' conduct at issue, namely private persons who conduct safety inspections. The lower courts should have looked for a similar analogy in this case, and the case is remanded so that they may decide this matter in the first instance. (126 S.Ct. 513, 163 L.Ed.2d 311.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 208

[§ 208] Exceptions.

(1) In General. There are a number of express statutory exceptions to liability under the Federal Tort Claims Act. (See 28 U.S.C., §2680; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §33 et seq.) Some relate to claims compensable under other statutes. (See 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §14 et seq.; 135 A.L.R. Fed 403 [federal compensation acts, in nature of workers' compensation acts, as affecting recovery against United States under FTCA].) Others retain the governmental immunity for certain kinds of acts. Immunity provisions also appear in other statutes. (See, e.g., 33 U.S.C., §702(c).) And they may be judicially created. (See Feres v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153, 159, 95 L.Ed. 152, 161.) Some of the more important exceptions follow.

(2) Discretionary Function or Duty. Excluded from the Act are claims based on performance of or failure to perform "a discretionary function or duty." Immunity exists "whether the discretion be abused or not." (28 U.S.C., §2680(a); see United States v. Empresa de Viacao Aerea Rio Grandense (Varig Airlines) (1984) 467 U.S. 797, 104 S.Ct. 2755, 2765, 81 L.Ed.2d 660, 675 [discretionary function exception covers both government agencies and government employees exercising discretion]; Berkovitz v. United States (1988) 486 U.S. 531, 108 S.Ct. 1954, 1961, 1963, 100 L.Ed.2d 531, 543 [decision on social, economic, or political issues is required for discretionary immunity; there must not be readily ascertainable constitutional, statutory, or regulatory standard]; United States v. Gaubert (1991) 499 U.S. 315, 111 S.Ct. 1267, 1275, 113 L.Ed.2d 335, 348 [discretionary function exception is applicable at any level of the governmental process, operational as well as planning; federal regulators' participation in management of savings and loan institution fell within provision]; 22 Cal. Western L. Rev. 175 [Empresa]; 15 Ecology L. Q. 477; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 488; 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1279; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 892; 12 Southwestern L. Rev. 627; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 734; 30 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 691 [causation and discretionary function exception]; 38 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 871; 11 U.S.F. L. Rev. 170 [critique of planning level-operational level test]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §§35, 36; 35 A.L.R. Fed 481 [issuance of permits, licenses, and the like as within discretionary function exception]; 36 A.L.R. Fed 240 [claims based on law enforcement and regulatory activities as within discretionary function exception]; 37 A.L.R. Fed 537 [claims based on construction and maintenance of public property as within discretionary function exception]; 167 A.L.R. Fed 1 [claims arising from governmental conduct causing damage to plaintiff's real property as within discretionary function exception]; 169 A.L.R. Fed 421 [liability of United States for failure to warn of danger or hazard not directly created by act or omission of federal Government and not in national parks as affected by discretionary function exception]; 170

A.L.R. Fed 365 [liability of United States for failure to warn of danger or hazard resulting from governmental act or omission as affected by discretionary function exception]; 171 A.L.R. Fed 655 [liability of United States for failure to warn local police or individuals of discharge, release, or escape of person deemed dangerous to public as affected by discretionary function exception]; 172 A.L.R. Fed 407 [claims arising from conduct of governmental employee in administering or failing to administer medical care as within discretionary function exception]; 173 A.L.R. Fed 431 [liability of United States under discretionary function exception for damages caused by ingestion or administration of government-approved drugs, vaccines, and medications].)

(3) Enforcement of Statute or Regulation. The federal Government is immune from claims based on acts of employees exercising due care in the execution of a statute or regulation, whether valid or invalid. (28 U.S.C., §2680(a); see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §34 et seq.)

(4) Intentional Torts. Claims arising out of most intentional torts, including "assault, battery, false imprisonment, false arrest, malicious prosecution, abuse of process, libel, slander, misrepresentation, deceit, or interference with contract rights," are excepted from the Act. (28 U.S.C., §2680(h); see 70 Harv. L. Rev. 891; 30 A.L.R. Fed 421 [exception for claims arising out of misrepresentation and deceit]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §89 et seq.; 43 A.L.R. Fed 571 [exception for claims arising out of false imprisonment, false arrest, malicious prosecution, or abuse of process]; 79 A.L.R. Fed 826 [exception for claims arising out of libel and slander]; 88 A.L.R. Fed 7 [exception for claims arising out of assault and battery]; 92 A.L.R. Fed 186 [exception for claims arising out of interference with contract rights].)

The reference in 28 U.S.C., §2680(h) to "misrepresentation, deceit," covers both intentional or fraudulent representation (deceit) and negligent misrepresentation (misrepresentation). (United States v. Neustadt (1961) 366 U.S. 696, 81 S.Ct. 1294, 1298, 6 L.Ed.2d 614, 619; see 75 Harv. L. Rev. 216; 31 Hastings L. J. 247 [arguing that 28 U.S.C., §2680(h) does not preclude liability for negligent airworthiness certification]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §46.)

(5) Foreign Torts. Any claim "arising in a foreign country" is excepted from the Act. (28 U.S.C., §2680(k); see United States v. Spelar (1949) 338 U.S. 217, 70 S.Ct. 10, 11, 94 L.Ed.3, 5 [accident on leased air base in Newfoundland]; United States v. Smith (1991) 499 U.S. 160, 111 S.Ct. 1180, 1186, 113 L.Ed.2d 134, 146 [military doctor could not be held personally liable for malpractice occurring in Italy, even though action against United States was barred by 28 U.S.C., §2680(k)]; Smith v. United States (1993) 507 U.S. 197, 113 S.Ct. 1178, 1183, 122 L.Ed.2d 548, 554 [exception included claim arising in Antarctica, even though Antarctica has no recognized government and has no civil tort law of its own]; 22 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 603; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §74; 158 A.L.R. Fed 137 [what constitutes "claim arising in a foreign country" under 28 U.S.C., §2680(k)].)

(6) Transmission of Mail. The federal government is immune from liability for the "loss, miscarriage, or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter." (28 U.S.C., §2680(b); see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §79; cf. 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 241 [arguing that 28 U.S.C., §2680(b) does not preclude liability of postal service supervisory personnel for lost or mishandled mail].)

(7) Collection of Taxes or Detention of Goods. The assessment or collection of a tax or customs duty or the detention of goods by a customs or other law enforcement officer is excepted from the Act. (28 U.S.C., §2680(c); see Kosak v. United States (1984) 465 U.S. 848, 104 S.Ct. 1519, 1524, 79 L.Ed.2d 860, 868 [28 U.S.C., §2680(c) precludes liability for negligent handling of detained property]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §80 et seq.; 173 A.L.R. Fed 465 [construction and application of 28 U.S.C., §2680(c)].)

(8) Combatant Activities. "Any claim arising out of the combatant activities of the military or naval forces, or the Coast Guard, during time of war" is excepted. (28 U.S.C., §2680(j); see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §87.)

(9) Flood Control. An exception exists for damage from floods or flood waters. (33 U.S.C., §702c; see United States v. James (1986) 478 U.S. 597, 106 S.Ct. 3116, 3121, 92 L.Ed.2d 483, 493 [33 U.S.C., §702c precludes recovery for personal injury caused by negligent failure to warn of release of waters from federal flood control projects]; Central Green Co. v. United States (2001) 531 U.S. 425, 121 S.Ct. 1005, 1008, 148 L.Ed.2d 919, 924 [in determining whether immunity attaches, courts should consider character of waters that cause relevant damage, not relation between that damage and flood control project]; 31 McGeorge L. Rev. 77 [Federal Tort Claims Act and immunity provision of Flood Control Act]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §68.)

(10) Injuries Incident to Military Service. Under the so-called Feres doctrine, a judicially created exception, the federal Government is not liable for injuries "incident to service." (Feres v. United States, supra [servicemen injured on active duty from negligence of other service personnel]; see United States v. Johnson (1987) 481 U.S. 681, 107 S.Ct. 2063, 2069, 95 L.Ed.2d 648, 655 [Feres bars suit on service-related injuries even though they result from negligence of federal civilian employees]; 29 Cal. Western L. Rev. 307 [sexual harassment of female naval personnel]; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 350; 21 Hastings L. J. 1059; 24 Hastings L. J. 1281; 15 Pacific L. J. 1181; 15 Pepperdine L. Rev. 623 [Intramilitary Tort Immunity: A Constitutional Justification]; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 502; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 525; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §3.) The Feres doctrine applies to statutory as well as common law causes of action. (See Estes v. Monroe (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1347, 1355, 16 C.R.3d 616 [Feres doctrine precluded wrongful termination claim under Fair Employment and Housing Act by national guardsman who was disabled in accident].)

If the injury is not incident to military service, such as after discharge or on furlough, recovery is allowed. (Brooks v. United States (1949) 337 U.S. 49, 69 S.Ct. 918, 919, 93 L.Ed. 1200, 1203 [servicemen on leave negligently injured by government truck driver]; United States v. Brown (1954) 348 U.S. 110, 75 S.Ct. 141, 142, 99 L.Ed. 139, 143 [veteran injured on active duty and discharged; recovery allowed for subsequent negligent treatment of injury in Veterans Administration Hospital]; see 21 Hastings L. J. 1059; 29 Hastings L. J. 589 [remedies of overseas dependent for military medical malpractice]; 14 Pacific L. J. 333 [recovery for postservice tort]; 17 Pacific L. J. 1477 [postservice tort of failure to warn of previously unknown danger as means of circumventing Feres doctrine]; 31 A.L.R. Fed 146 [serviceman's right to recover under FTCA].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(6) Transmission of Mail. In Dolan v. United States Postal Service (2006) 546 U.S. 481, 126 S.Ct. 1252, 163 L.Ed.2d 1079, a postal customer sued the United States Postal Service to recover for injuries sustained when she tripped over mail negligently left on her porch. Held, the federal Government's immunity from liability for negligent transmission of the mail did not apply. "Negligent transmission," for purposes of 28 U.S.C., §2680(b), "does not go beyond negligence causing mail to be lost or to arrive late, in damaged condition, or at the wrong address." (126 S.Ct. 1257, 163 L.Ed.2d 1088.) Had Congress intended to preserve immunity for all delivery-related torts, it would have used sweeping language similar to that used in other Federal Tort Claims Act exceptions. (126 S.Ct. 1259, 163 L.Ed.2d 1090.)

(7) Collection of Taxes or Detention of Goods. In Ali v. Federal Bureau of Prisons (2008) 552 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 831, 169 L.Ed.2d 680, a federal prisoner brought an action against prison officials who allegedly lost his property while he was being transferred between prisons. Held, the immunity from liability for the detention of goods "by any officer of customs or excise or any other law enforcement officer" applied. The term "any other law enforcement officer" in 28 U.S.C., §2680(c) includes law enforcement officers of whatever kind. The word "any" generally has a broad meaning, and there is no indication that Congress intended to limit the scope of the statute to officers engaged in enforcing customs or excise laws. (128 S.Ct. 835, 169 L.Ed.2d 686, distinguishing Dolan v. United States Postal Service, supra.) (8) Combatant Activities. See 23 A.L.R. Fed 2d 489 [construction and application of combatant activities exception to Federal Tort Claims Act].

(10) Injuries Incident to Military Service. See 24 A.L.R. Fed 2d 529 [liability of civilian contractors providing services under contract to Department of Defense or Department of State for injuries to their employees, members of armed services, foreign nationals, and their survivors]. Correction: Page 349, ninth line of section, "33 U.S.C., §702(c)" should be "33 U.S.C., §702c".

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

3. Liability Under Federal Tort Claims Act.

e. Procedure in Suit Under Act.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 209

[§ 209] Procedure in Suit Under Act.

(1) Jurisdiction and Venue. Actions under the Federal Tort Claims Act must be brought in the federal district court where the plaintiff resides or where the act complained of occurred. (28 U.S.C., §§1346(b), 1402(b); see 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §§189, 203, 204; 8 Am.Jur. Trials 635 [Federal Tort Claims Act proceedings].)

(2) Presentation of Claim and Commencement of Action. No action may be instituted until a claim has been presented to the appropriate federal agency and has been finally denied. Claims must be presented within 2 years after they accrue, and actions must be commenced within 6 months of the final denial of the claim. (28 U.S.C., §§2401(b), 2675(a); see United States v. Kubrick (1979) 444 U.S. 111, 100 S.Ct. 352, 359, 62 L.Ed.2d 259, 267 [cause of action accrues when claimant learns of both existence and cause of injury; it is not required that claimant also know that the acts causing injury constituted medical malpractice]; McNeil v. United States (1993) 508 U.S. 106, 113 S.Ct. 1980, 1984, 124 L.Ed.2d 21, 29 [dismissal was proper where claimant failed to exhaust administrative remedies before filing suit, even though he did so before substantial progress was made in litigation]; 35 San Diego L. Rev. 391 [statute of limitations problem posed by FTCA claims deemed denied by administrative inaction]; 35A Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Federal Tort Claims Act §§192, 193; 29 A.L.R. Fed 482 [statute of limitations under FTCA]; 101 A.L.R. Fed 27 [accrual of cause of action for purpose of statute of limitations in medical malpractice actions under FTCA].)

(3) Settlement of Claim. The governmental agency involved has power to settle claims before suit, subject to approval by the Attorney General for settlements above a prescribed amount. After suit is commenced, the Attorney General may settle claims in any amount. (28 U.S.C., §§2672, 2677; see 70 Harv. L. Rev. 896.) The amount demanded in the claim may not be increased in a suit subsequently filed in the absence of newly discovered evidence or intervening facts. (28 U.S.C., §2675(b).)

(4) Trial by Court. The trial is by the court without a jury. (28 U.S.C., §2402.)

(5) Preclusive Effect of Procedure. The judgment is a bar to any action against the employee by reason of the claim, and the procedure under the Act is the exclusive remedy against the federal agency. (28 U.S.C., §§2676, 2679.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

a. Immunity Prior to Tort Claims Act.

1. General Immunity of Public Entities for Governmental but Not Proprietary Acts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 210

[§ 210] General Immunity of Public Entities for Governmental but Not Proprietary Acts.

(1) Immunity Where Activity Was Governmental. It was originally held that the immunity of the state and its agencies extended to any acts except where a particular liability was imposed by special statutes; i.e., the functions of the state and state agencies were deemed exclusively governmental in character. (Dillwood v. Riecks (1919) 42 C.A. 602, 607, 184 P. 35; Rauschan v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1927) 80 C.A. 754, 760, 253 P. 173.) The rule was subsequently established, however, that there may be proprietary activities of the state and its agencies, and that tort liability may be imposed for those activities. (See People v. Superior Court (Pierpont) (1947) 29 C.2d 754, 762, 178 P.2d 1.) Illustrative of state or state agency activities held governmental and protected by immunity were operation of a county courthouse (Dineen v. San Francisco (1940) 38 C.A.2d 486, 490, 101 P.2d 736); operation of a county jail (Bryant v. Monterey (1954) 125 C.A.2d 470, 473, 270 P.2d 897); construction and maintenance of public highways (Bettencourt v. California (1954) 123 C.A.2d 60, 62, 266 P.2d 201); maintenance of a bridge and roadway by an irrigation district (Vater v. Glenn (1958) 49 C.2d 815, 818, 323 P.2d 85); and operation of a county hospital (Waterman v. Los Angeles County General Hosp. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 143, 144, 266 P.2d 221). (For review of former law of governmental immunity, see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.24 et seq.)

Municipal and quasi-municipal corporations, such as cities and municipal utility districts, were liable for the torts of their agents committed while acting in a proprietary capacity, but not while acting in a governmental capacity. (Morrison v. Smith Bros. (1930) 211 C. 36, 39, 293 P. 53; McKinney v. San Francisco (1952) 109 C.A.2d 844, 846, 241 P.2d 1060; 21 Cal. L. Rev. 383; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 744; 6 So. Cal. L. Rev. 269; 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 48, 214, 295, 372; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1.) The following are illustrations of municipal or quasi-municipal activities held governmental: collection and incineration of garbage or waste (McNeil v. Montague (1954) 124 C.A.2d 326, 268 P.2d 497); a municipal summer camp (Kellar v. Los Angeles (1919) 179 C. 605, 609, 178 P. 505); a public park or playground (Carr v. San Francisco (1959) 170 C.A.2d 48, 51, 338 P.2d 509 [merry-go-round]); a municipal swimming pool (Barrett v. San Jose (1958) 161 C.A.2d 40, 42, 325 P.2d 1026); street and highway maintenance (Loewen v. Burbank (1954) 124 C.A.2d 551, 553, 269 P.2d 121 [removal of trees]); maintenance of firefighting equipment and its water supply (Stang v. Mill Valley (1952) 38 C.2d 486, 488, 240 P.2d 980); and operations of police (Henry v. Los Angeles (1952) 114 C.A.2d 603, 604, 250 P.2d 643).

(2) Liability Where Activity Was Proprietary. In People v. Superior Court (Pierpont) (1947) 29 C.2d 754, 178 P.2d 1, the theory declared in a number of prior decisions, that the state and its agencies perform exclusively governmental functions, was repudiated. Plaintiff sued for injuries received from alleged negligent operation of the State Belt Railroad, which consisted of 5 miles of track serving carriers, wharves, and plants, operated by the state without profit. Held, the state was liable. The activity here, though without profit, performed an industrial function; and "where the state engages in industrial or business enterprises, as distinguished from purely governmental activities, tort liability attaches and may be adjudicated pursuant to the consent statute." (29 C.2d 762; see 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 78; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 490.) The following are illustrative of state or state agency activities held proprietary: operation of San Francisco piers by Board of State Harbor Commissioners (Schwerdtfeger v. California (1957) 148 C.A.2d 335, 342, 306 P.2d 960; operation of housing authority for slum clearance and public housing (Muses v. Housing Authority (1948) 83 C.A.2d 489, 491, 189 P.2d 305); a state fair (Guidi v. California (1953) 41 C.2d 623, 625, 262 P.2d 3); and a district fair (Brown v. Fifteenth Dist. Agricultural Fair Assn. (1958) 159 C.A.2d 93, 96, 323 P.2d 131).

The following are among municipal or quasi-municipal activities that were held to be proprietary and not subject to immunity: water, gas and electric systems (Davoust v. Alameda (1906) 149 C. 69, 72, 84 P. 760); a municipal auditorium (Chafor v. Long Beach (1917) 174 C. 478, 483, 163 P. 670); a garage for repair of city automobiles (Bertiz v. Los Angeles (1925) 74 C.A. 792, 794, 241 P. 921); a municipal airport (Coleman v. Oakland (1930) 110 C.A. 715, 719, 295 P. 59); furnishing municipal employees as harbor pilots (General Petroleum Corp. v. Los Angeles (1937) 22 C.A.2d 332, 334, 70 P.2d 998); a community theatre in a public park (Rhodes v. Palo Alto (1950) 100 C.A.2d 336, 341, 223 P.2d 639); and a municipal golf course (Plaza v. San Mateo (1954) 123 C.A.2d 103, 106, 266 P.2d 523). (See 14 Cal. L. Rev. 229; 3 So. Cal. L. Rev. 353; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 302.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

a. Immunity Prior to Tort Claims Act.

2. Statutory Basis for Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 211

[§ 211] Statutory Basis for Liability.

Prior to the judicial abrogation of the immunity doctrine (infra, §215), liability for governmental acts (supra, §210) existed only where imposed by specific legislation. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§895B, 895C; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.28.) Much of this law was carried over into the Tort Claims Act (infra, §216 et seq.), and the prior decisions are therefore of some significance.

The important statutes were:

(1) The Public Liability Act (former Govt.C. 53051 et seq.) imposing liability on counties, municipalities, and school districts for the dangerous or defective condition of public property. (See infra, §212; for similar liability under current law, see infra, §249 et seq.)

(2) A statute (former Educ.C. 903) imposing liability on a school district for negligence of its officers or employees. (See infra, §213; for similar liability under current law, see infra, §321 et seq.)

(3) A statute (Veh.C. 17000 et seq.) making the state and subdivisions liable for the negligent operation of motor vehicles by officers and employees. These sections were unaffected by the revision. (See infra, §331 et seq.)

(4) A statute (former Govt.C. 50140 et seq.) making counties and municipal corporations liable for injury to real or personal property caused by mobs or riots. This law was not carried over into the new statutes, and the former liability no longer exists. (See 16 Hastings L. J. 459; 3 Lincoln L. Rev. 62; 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 415 [proposal of new statute].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

a. Immunity Prior to Tort Claims Act.

3. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 212

[§ 212] Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

(1) General Nature of Liability. The most important of the former statutes imposing liability for governmental activities was the Public Liability Act of 1923, under which counties, municipalities, and school districts were liable for injuries to person or property resulting from "the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property" where (a) the governing or managing board or other officer or person having authority to remedy the condition had knowledge or notice of it, and (b) failed or neglected for a reasonable time thereafter to remedy the situation or to take steps reasonably necessary to protect the public. (Former Govt.C. 53051.) Despite the reference to "injuries" alone, the statute was held applicable to actions for wrongful death. (Arellano v. Burbank (1939) 13 C.2d 248, 258, 89 P.2d 113; see 27 Cal. L. Rev. 622.)

The public entity was not liable in the same manner as a private corporation for negligence of its employees; nor was it enough to show a dangerous condition of property; the entity was required to "have had notice and have failed to exercise its opportunity to remedy the condition." (Watson v. Alameda (1933) 219 C. 331, 333, 26 P.2d 286.) However, the issue of what constitutes a dangerous condition was the same as in negligence cases; i.e., the "unreasonable risk" analysis was applied. (Jones v. Los Angeles (1951) 104 C.A.2d 212, 215, 231 P.2d 167.) The causation element was likewise the same as in negligence cases; the plaintiff had to show that the dangerous condition was the proximate cause of the injury. (Osborn v. Whittier (1951) 103 C.A.2d 609, 620, 230 P.2d 132 [discussing foreseeable consequences and holding that proximate cause was established]; Bady v. Detwiler (1954) 127 C.A.2d 321, 337, 273 P.2d 941 [fact that some other cause, such as act of third person, concurred with defective condition to cause injury did not absolve municipality].) The defense of contributory negligence was also available to the governmental agency. (Brooks v. Monterey (1930) 106 C.A. 649, 653, 290 P. 540.)

The "person having authority to remedy such condition" (former Govt.C. 53051) meant some officer or member of a governing board who could permanently correct the condition, and did not include employees generally. (Sinclair v. Pasadena (1937) 21 C.A.2d 720, 722, 70 P.2d 241; Hoel v. Los Angeles (1955) 136 C.A.2d 295, 304, 288 P.2d 989.) And the authority to remedy defects in a state highway running through a city was in the state Department of Public Works, not the city. (Gillespie v. Los Angeles (1952) 114 C.A.2d 513, 514, 250 P.2d 717.)

In order to escape liability, the public entity had to eliminate the dangerous condition or protect the public by adequate warning. Thus, dips or "humps" in a highway, jogs in a street, etc., might be made safe by adequate warning signs; but the sufficiency of these warnings was ordinarily a question of fact. (See Bigelow v. Ontario (1940) 37 C.A.2d 198, 205, 99 P.2d 298; Barsoom v. Reedley (1940) 38 C.A.2d 413, 419, 101 P.2d 743; cf. Electrical Products Corp. v. Tulare (1953) 116 C.A.2d 147, 253 P.2d 111 [remedial steps were held sufficient as matter of law where there was no substantial evidence to contrary].)

(2) Public Property. An essential basis of liability was that the injury had resulted from the dangerous or defective condition of "public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works" or "property." (Former Govt.C. 53051.) The term was used in its broad and comprehensive sense, including personal as well as real property, and was not limited to the physical condition of streets or to property not used in the exercise of a police function. (Bady v. Detwiler, supra, 127 C.A.2d 327 [listing many types of defective property that had given rise to liability, including incinerator, piano in schoolroom, piling or telephone pole washed back and forth by ocean waves, shore of lake in public park, abandoned sewer system, white line along center of street, picnic shelter, boulevard stop sign, rubbish disposal dump, storm drain, and fence around public golf course].)

Liability was not imposed for the negligent failure to install property. Thus, the mere failure to place a sign at a dangerous intersection was only negligence in a governmental function for which the city was not liable. (Perry v. Santa Monica (1955) 130 C.A.2d 370, 372, 279 P.2d 92.)

No city or county was liable for failure to maintain a road unless it had been accepted by the governing body by resolution or otherwise. (See Sts. & H.C. 941, 1806, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §243.)

(3) Types of Defects. Many kinds of defects and dangers gave rise to liability. (See, e.g., Arellano v. Burbank, supra, 13 C.2d 251 [curved street created bottleneck, without mark or other warning]; Durante v. Oakland (1937) 19 C.A.2d 543, 549, 65 P.2d 1326 [negligent use of defective sewer pipes, and maintenance of sewer in such defective condition that plaintiff's basement flooded]; Paxton v. Alameda (1953) 119 C.A.2d 393, 400, 259 P.2d 934 [defective low grade roof sheathing on county building under construction, which gave way and injured roofer carrying tar].)

The bulk of the litigation under the Public Liability Act arose out of minor street defects, such as small holes or cracks in a sidewalk, sufficient to catch the heel of a shoe, and the case law developed in several cycles. The first approach was in favor of the plaintiff. (See, e.g., Hook v. Sacramento (1931) 118 C.A. 547, 550, 5 P.2d 643; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 135.) Subsequently, these early holdings were disapproved on the theory that these minor defects are common and impossible to prevent or to correct, unless notice of them is given to responsible city officials. The new decisions required that the conspicuousness or notoriety of the defect be sufficient to charge the city with constructive notice of both its existence and dangerous character. (See Nicholson v. Los Angeles (1936) 5 C.2d 361, 364, 54 P.2d 725; Whiting v. National City (1937) 9 C.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990.) A few years after Nicholson and Whiting, however, the courts began to relax these strict requirements. (See Allen v. Los Angeles (1941) 43 C.A.2d 65, 68, 110 P.2d 75 [sidewalk 2 inches high, 6 inches wide, actual notice alleged; held sufficient on demurrer].) The effect of later decisions may be summarized as follows: (a) If the defect was obviously minor, the reviewing court would not sustain a judgment for the plaintiff; i.e., the trivial nature of the defect could be treated as a question of law. (See Barrett v. Claremont (1953) 41 C.2d 70, 73, 256 P.2d 977 [ridge in sidewalk slab 1/2-inch high, full of sticky asphaltum; authorities reviewed; following Nicholson and Whiting cases followed].) (b) If the nature of the defect, i.e., the question whether it gave rise to a duty to repair, was reasonably debatable, the question was one of fact for the jury. (See Newman v. San Mateo (1953) 121 C.A.2d 825, 831, 264 P.2d 594 [4- to 6-inch deep hole in sidewalk, long continued; verdict for plaintiff upheld].)

Defective highway signals and lights, such as a defectively operated stop signal at an intersection could give rise to liability. (Bady v. Detwiler, supra, 127 C.A.2d 330.) The mere failure to install a signal would not. (Perry v. Santa Monica, supra, 130 C.A.2d 375.) But the removal of an existing sign for repairs, without providing a temporary substitute, created a dangerous condition, and the statute applied. (Irvin v. Padelford (1954) 127 C.A.2d 135, 142, 273

A county was liable for the dangerous or defective condition of a highway shoulder customarily traveled. (Murphy v. Lake (1951) 106 C.A.2d 61, 67, 234 P.2d 712.) And liability was extended to a situation where the shoulder was not customarily traveled if the circumstances showed that the driver was not negligent in departing from the traveled area, and if the defects or obstructions were "in close proximity to the traveled area" and "hidden from ordinary view." (Alderson v. Santa Clara (1954) 124 C.A.2d 334, 339, 268 P.2d 792 [shoulder with deep depressions and boulders hidden in tall weeds; plaintiff veered to avoid approaching car].)

A natural condition could constitute a dangerous condition. (See Hawk v. Newport Beach (1956) 46 C.2d 213, 217, 293 P.2d 48 [jury question whether large rock on city beach from which people frequently dived into shallow water was dangerous condition].)

(4) Dangerous Activity Permitted. Liability could be based on the dangerous manner in which the property was operated or allowed to be used. (See Bauman v. San Francisco (1940) 42 C.A.2d 144, 150, 108 P.2d 989 [playing of hard baseball on playground in close proximity to children's sand box].) The permitted activity had to be one which made the property dangerous. In Jones v. Czapkay (1960) 182 C.A.2d 192, 6 C.R. 182, plaintiff alleged that a contagious tubercular patient was negligently allowed to violate his quarantine, and contended that this created a dangerous condition of the street within the meaning of the Act. In rejecting this theory of liability for plaintiff's tuberculosis, the court said: "If this is so, then any negligence of the police in allowing a dangerous criminal on the streets, or in failing to arrest a person operating a motor vehicle in a dangerous manner would constitute a dangerous and defective condition of property. The section has always been considered to mean just what it says, that it is the condition of property that determines the waiver of the immunity and not the condition of persons on that property." (182 C.A.2d 203.)

(5) Improper Planning or Construction. Liability was also imposed for dangerous conditions resulting from improper planning or construction in the first instance. (See Sandstoe v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1938) 28 C.A.2d 215, 219, 82 P.2d 216 [improperly painted white traffic grade line on highway, causing plaintiff to strike obstruction].) In Fackrell v. San Diego (1945) 26 C.2d 196, 157 P.2d 625, the court said: "If the improvement is designed to be used without inspection and maintenance and under varying conditions which are normally to be anticipated then it should be made reasonably safe for ordinary use under all of those conditions and if, under any one or more of them, it is, or naturally will become, unsafe for such use because of its planned design then it is inherently dangerous." (26 C.2d 204.) It made no difference whether an inherently dangerous condition was present when the improvement was completed according to plan, or whether that situation arose through change of circumstances. (McAtee v. Marysville (1952) 111 C.A.2d 507, 513, 244 P.2d 936.) Because the dangerous condition arising from improper construction was deliberately created, no notice had to be shown, and the entity was not entitled to any reasonable time for correction. (Sandstoe v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co., supra; Pritchard v. Sully-Miller Contracting Co. (1960) 178 C.A.2d 246, 256, 2 C.R. 830.)

(6) Notice of Condition. Notice could be actual knowledge of the condition (Rodriguez v. Los Angeles (1963) 215 C.A.2d 463, 468, 30 C.R. 180) or constructive notice, arising from the long-continued existence of a defective condition (Dawson v. Tulare Union High School (1929) 98 C.A. 138, 142, 276 P. 424; Bady v. Detwiler, supra, 127 C.A.2d 334; see Kirack v. Eureka (1945) 69 C.A.2d 134, 140, 158 P.2d 270 [superintendent of streets failed to inspect]; Jones v. Los Angeles (1946) 74 C.A.2d 183, 184, 168 P.2d 480 [judgment for defendant reversed for failure to instruct jury on doctrine of constructive notice]). Evidence of other known accidents at the same place, e.g., a claim or suit filed by another injured person prior to the accident in question, was competent to prove notice. (Bigelow v. Ontario, supra, 37 C.A.2d 204; see Maddern v. San Francisco (1946) 74 C.A.2d 742, 756, 169 P.2d 425 [constructive notice of dangerous depression in street was sufficiently established, although only few days had elapsed between first evidence of it and accident].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

a. Immunity Prior to Tort Claims Act.

4. School District's Liability for Negligence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 213

[§ 213] School District's Liability for Negligence.

(1) In General. In addition to being responsible, under the Public Liability Act, for a known dangerous condition of property (see supra, §212), a school district was liable, under former Educ.C. 903, for injuries to person or property resulting from negligence of officers or employees acting within the scope of their employment. (See 15 Hastings L. J. 495, 567.) The standard of care required was "that which a person of ordinary prudence, charged with his duties, would exercise under the same circumstances." (Pirkle v. Oakdale Union Grammar School Dist. (1953) 40 C.2d 207, 210, 253 P.2d 1.)

These duplicate bases of liability raised a problem where the plaintiff sued for injury resulting from a dangerous or defective condition of property of the district. Was it sufficient for him to establish negligence of the district's officers or employees in creating or maintaining the condition, or did he have to show knowledge or notice of the condition and failure to remedy it? (See, recognizing election to proceed under either statute, Freund v. Oakland Bd. of Education (1938) 28 C.A.2d 246, 249, 82 P.2d 197; Bridge v. Board of Education of Los Angeles (1934) 2 C.A.2d 398, 402, 38 P.2d 199; Maede v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda County (1931) 212 C. 419, 424, 298 P. 987; cf. Hough v. Orleans Elementary School Dist. of Humboldt County (1943) 62 C.A.2d 146, 155, 144 P.2d 383 [pupil collided with bolt protruding from flagpole brace; held that plaintiff had to bring his case within Act].)

(2) Dangerous Activities in Classroom. Recovery was allowed for injuries sustained in classroom activities on a showing of negligence. In Bellman v. San Francisco High School Dist. (1938) 11 C.2d 576, 81 P.2d 894, for example, a 17-year-old high school girl recovered for injuries sustained while performing a test exercise (a dive) in a tumbling class. It was held that the jury could determine that the exercise was inherently dangerous and that the teachers were negligent in permitting such a student to perform it. (11 C.2d 583.) (See Lilienthal v. San Leandro Unified School Dist. of Alameda County (1956) 139 C.A.2d 453, 457, 293 P.2d 889 [student threw homemade knife during metal craft class; held that jury could infer instructor's knowledge]; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 237.)

Recovery was denied in the absence of such a showing. (See Pirkle v. Oakdale Union Grammar School Dist., supra, 40 C.2d 210 [judgment reversed for plaintiff injured playing touch football; activity was not inherently dangerous, boys were selected according to skill, participation was voluntary, and no harm resulted from delay in treatment]; Wright v. San Bernardino High School Dist. (1953) 121 C.A.2d 342, 345, 263 P.2d 25 [physical education class; plaintiff, wearing rimless glasses, walked between boys batting tennis ball; no recovery].)

(3) Dangerous Outside Activities. Recovery was allowed in Hanson v. Reedley Joint Union High School Dist. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 643, 649, 111 P.2d 415, where the school arranged for transportation of students to tennis practice in other students' cars, and teachers permitted use of a defective car driven by a student known to be a reckless driver; and in Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 594, 599, 110 P.2d 1044, where the authorities knew of the practice of a delivery truck coming on the school grounds and children running out to the athletic field, but failed to post warning signs or take other precautions to protect them. (See 29 Cal. L. Rev. 546.)

(4) Failure To Supervise. The negligence could consist of lack of proper supervision of activities of children during lunch or recreation periods. (Lehmuth v. Long Beach Unified School Dist. (1960) 53 C.2d 544, 551, 2 C.R. 279, 348 P.2d 887; see Buzzard v. East Lake School Dist. (1939) 34 C.A.2d 316, 319, 93 P.2d 233 [child permitted to ride bicycle among children at play]; Forgnone v. Salvador Union Elementary School Dist. (1940) 41 C.A.2d 423, 426, 106 P.2d 932 [absence of teacher from classroom where students were eating lunch; plaintiff injured in scuffle]; Ziegler v. Santa Cruz City High School Dist. (1959) 168 C.A.2d 277, 283, 335 P.2d 709 [children allowed to sit on stair railing; reasonably foreseeable that pupil might be jostled or lose balance]; 15 Hastings L. J. 498, 567.) It was necessary, however, that the lack of supervision be the proximate cause of the harm. (Woodsmall v. Mt. Diablo Unified School Dist. (1961) 188 C.A.2d 262, 265, 10 C.R. 47 [injury when children ran on playground and one pushed another into basketball goal pole; sudden act of pupil could occur equally as well in presence of supervisor].)

(5) Distinction: Unforeseeable Independent Acts of Students. Liability was dependent on proof of negligence of school officers or employees, e.g., instructors; it was not sufficient to show negligence of a student, even though the student was attempting to carry out the directions of an instructor. (Perumean v. Wills (1937) 8 C.2d 578, 584, 67 P.2d 96.) And liability for lack of supervision was imposed only where the dangerous act of a student could reasonably have been anticipated. (See Weldy v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda County (1937) 19 C.A.2d 429, 431, 65 P.2d 851 [not liable for injuries from unexpected rowdiness by student spectators at football game]; Reithardt v. Board of Education of Yuba County (1941) 43 C.A.2d 629, 636, 111 P.2d 440 [student suddenly pulled another student off her seat on a window ledge]; Ford v. Riverside City School Dist. (1953) 121 C.A.2d 554, 561, 263 P.2d 626 [plaintiff 9-year-old 3rd grader with another boy pulling thorns from palm tree outside school playground; no evidence of prior accident or activity there].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

a. Immunity Prior to Tort Claims Act.

5. Limited Immunity of Public Employees.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 214

[§ 214] Limited Immunity of Public Employees.

(1) General Rule of Liability. The immunity accorded California public entities (see supra, §210) did not extend to their officers and employees, who were, as a general rule, liable for their torts to the same extent as private persons. (Lick v. Madden (1868) 36 C. 208, 213; Fernelius v. Pierce (1943) 22 C.2d 226, 233, 139 P.2d 12; see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.29 et seq.)

(2) Discretionary Immunity. Even before enactment of the Tort Claims Act (see infra, §§216, 345), however, the rule had "become established that government officials are not personally liable for their discretionary acts with the scope of their authority." (See Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary School Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 224, 229, 11 C.R. 97, 359 P.2d 465; on immunity of public entities for governmental acts, see supra, §210.)

(3) Officer's Liability for Subordinate's Wrong. The doctrine of respondeat superior was generally inapplicable to public officers and employees, i.e., they were ordinarily not liable for the tortious acts of their subordinates. (Fernelius v. Pierce, supra; Marshall v. Los Angeles (1955) 131 C.A.2d 812, 815, 281 P.2d 544; on liability of principal for agent's torts generally, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §163 et seq.)

However, under the common law theory of legal identity of an officer and the officer's deputy, applicable where the officer had unrestricted power to control and discharge deputies, the deputy was the representative of the officer, and the act was treated as though done by the officer. (Foley v. Martin (1904) 142 C. 256, 260, 71 P. 165, 75 P. 842; Van Vorce v. Thomas (1937) 18 C.A.2d 723, 724, 64 P.2d 772.) Hence principals, such as sheriffs, were liable for wrongful acts of their deputies or agents acting in their official capacities, within the scope of their duties. (Abbott v. Cooper (1933) 218 C. 425, 430, 23 P.2d 1027; Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 C.A.2d 586, 592, 292 P.2d 559; see 71 A.L.R.2d 1140 [liability of clerk of court, county clerk, or surety on bond for negligent or wrongful acts of deputies or assistants]; 15 A.L.R.3d 1189 [liability of police officer for injuries or death of third persons resulting from operation of motor vehicle by subordinate].)

The officer was generally not liable when the subordinate was also an independent public officer. Where the deputy occupied an independent position established by statute or charter, and the principal officer had no unrestricted control over the deputy (e.g., where the deputy worked under civil service regulations), the common law rule was repudiated, and the officer was not liable for the deputy's torts. (Michel v. Smith (1922) 188 C. 199, 202, 205 P. 113 [chief of police and sergeant]; Placer v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. (1958) 50 C.2d 182, 188, 323 P.2d 753 [justice court judge not liable for embezzlement by his clerk; position created by county board of supervisors]; Van Vorce v. Thomas, supra [marshal of municipal court and deputy marshal]; Abrahamson v. Ceres (1949) 90 C.A.2d 523, 526, 203 P.2d 98 [chief of police was not liable for wrongs of police officer appointed by city council]; Payne v. Bennion (1960) 178 C.A.2d 595, 599, 3 C.R. 14 [supervisor of rural schools, not employee of county superintendent of schools]; 11 So. Cal. L. Rev. 384.)

Even though the subordinate officer held a civil service position, the subordinate's superiors were liable if they participated in the wrongful act, or if they had power to remove or suspend the officer and failed to do so after knowledge of similar prior misconduct by the subordinate. (Fernelius v. Pierce, supra, 22 C.2d 235 [negligent failure of police chief and city manager to discharge "vicious" police officers who beat plaintiff's husband to death]; see 28 Cal. L. Rev. 780.) Part of this principle was codified in former Govt.C. 1954, which provided that the members of a board of supervisors or city council, etc., were liable for negligent acts of an employee if (a) they had knowledge or notice of the employee's inefficiency or incompetency when engaging the employee, or (b) they retained the employee after knowledge or notice of these facts.

(4) Statutory Liability for Dangerous Conditions. Former Govt.C. 1953 impliedly recognized a public officer's individual liability for injury from the defective or dangerous condition of public property, and stated certain limiting conditions: causation; notice; authority and duty to remedy; funds available; failure to remedy or warn within reasonable time; and plaintiff's due care. (See Bettencourt v. California (1956) 139 C.A.2d 255, 258, 293 P.2d 472 [defendant employees without warning raised bridge span in face of plaintiff's oncoming car]; Bartlett v. California (1956) 145 C.A.2d 50, 55, 301 P.2d 985 [complaint against highway patrol officers who removed defective stop sign; insufficient because no showing that they had authority to remedy]; on liability of public entities for dangerous condition of public property, see supra, §212.)

The causation element posed a question of interpretation. It must have appeared that the injury was "the direct and proximate result" of the condition. (Former Govt.C. 1953(a).) "Direct" was construed as the equivalent of "proximate," i.e., as including both direct causes and reasonably foreseeable intervening causes. (See Hinton v. California (1954) 124 C.A.2d 622, 629, 269 P.2d 154 [defective signal was direct cause of pedestrian's injuries despite intervening act (automobile striking pedestrian)].)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 215

[§ 215] Judicial Repudiation of Governmental Immunity.

In Muskopf v. Corning Hosp. Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 211, 11 C.R. 89, 359 P.2d 457, the rule of governmental immunity from tort liability was reevaluated and "discarded as mistaken and unjust." (55 C.2d 213.) In this case plaintiff, a paying patient in defendant's hospital, sued for injuries received by reason of negligence of the staff. The trial judge sustained a demurrer, holding that a hospital district was a state agency exercising a governmental function and therefore immune from liability (see supra, §210). In reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court reviewed the history of governmental immunity, condemned it as a court-established "anachronism, without rational basis," which has existed "only by the force of inertia," and can no longer be defended. (55 C.2d 216.) The arguments based on stare decisis and legislative inaction were examined and found insufficient to justify the continuance of an outmoded rule:

"Only the vestigial remains of such governmental immunity have survived; its requiem has long been foreshadowed. For years the process of erosion of governmental immunity has gone on unabated. The Legislature has contributed mightily to that erosion. The courts, by distinction and extension, have removed much of the force of the rule. Thus, in holding that the doctrine of governmental immunity for torts for which its agents are liable has no place in our law we make no startling break with the past but merely take the final step that carries to its conclusion an established legislative and judicial trend." (55 C.2d 221.) (For comments on the reasoning and effect of the decision, see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.39; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 400; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 346; 36 So. Cal. L. c. Tort Claims Act.

1. Adoption.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 216

[§ 216] Adoption.

In the session immediately following Muskopf v. Corning Hosp. Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 211, 11 C.R. 89, 359 P.2d 457, supra, §215, the Legislature enacted former C.C. 22.3, reinstating the governmental immunity doctrine "to all matters and all governmental entities in the same manner and to the same extent that it was applied in this State on January 1, 1961." The enacting statute (Stats. 1961, Chap. 1404) disclosed that this was a moratorium or interim measure designed to enable the Legislature to determine whether, and to what extent, the immunity doctrine should be retained or abandoned, and provided that it was effective only until the 91st day after adjournment of the 1963 Legislature, and then automatically expired. The California Law Revision Commission duly submitted a report and recommendation for legislation to the 1963 Legislature. (See C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.40 et seq.; 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 172.)

The 1963 Legislature enacted a comprehensive set of governmental liability statutes and repealed much inconsistent legislation. Generally, all public entities, state and local, are now liable in tort to the extent declared by statute, subject to stated immunities and defenses. (See Govt.C. 815 et seq.; infra, §217 et seq.) Public employees are liable to the same extent as private persons, again subject to various immunities and defenses. (See Govt.C. 820 et seq.; infra, §345 et seq.) (For a discussion of problems involved in drafting the legislation, see 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 163; 10 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 463; and see generally C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.2 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Guide 3d, Chap. 8; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §268 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Torts, Liability of Public Entities, Chap. 31; 3 San Diego L. Rev. 7; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §91 et seq.)

A great many statutes, inconsistent or superseded in whole or in part, were repealed or amended. But the Vehicle Code provisions on motor vehicle torts (Veh.C. 17000 et seq.) were left untouched. (See infra, §331 et seq.)

Although the legislative revision lacks an official short title, it has come to be referred to as the "Tort Claims Act." (See C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.2.)

The enacting statute provided for retroactive application "to the full extent that it constitutionally can be so applied," and the retroactive provisions have been upheld. (See Flournoy v. California (1964) 230 C.A.2d 520, 532, 41 C.R. 190, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §625 [stating and applying the three controlling factors determining constitutional retroactivity: nature and strength of policy interest served, nature of right modified, extent of modification]; Burbank v. Superior Court (1965) 231 C.A.2d 675, 682, 42 C.R. 23 [following Flournoy; causes of action arose during moratorium]; Hayes v. California (1964) 231 C.A.2d 48, 50, 41 C.R. 502, infra, §268 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Short title of legislation: Because of the broad scope of the legislation, the California Supreme Court has determined that " 'Government Claims Act' is a more appropriate short title than the traditional 'Tort Claims Act.' ... Henceforth, we will refer to division 3.6, parts 1 through 7 of the Government Code (§ 810 et seq.) as the Government Claims Act." (Stockton v. Superior Court (2007) 42 C.4th 730, 741, 68 C.R.3d 295, 171 P.3d 20, 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §238.)

2. Statutory Framework.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 217

[§ 217] Statutory Framework.

The Tort Claims Act is embodied in Division 3.6 of the Government Code (Govt.C. 810 et seq.), in 8 Parts:

- (1) Definitions. (Govt.C. 810 et seq.; see infra, §§219, 220.)
- (2) Liability of Public Entities and Public Employees. (Govt.C. 814 et seq.; see infra, §§222 et seq., 345 et seq.)
- (3) Claims Against Public Entities. (Govt.C. 900 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§223 et seq., 628 et seq.; infra, §370 et seq.)
- (4) Actions Against Public Entities and Public Employees. (Govt.C. 940 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §779 et seq.; infra, §370 et seq.)
- (5) Payment of Claims and Judgments. (Govt.C. 965 et seq.; see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §53.)
- (6) Insurance. (Govt.C. 989 et seq.; see infra, §231.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

c. Tort Claims Act.

3. Exclusions and Limitations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 218

[§ 218] Exclusions and Limitations.

The Act does not affect the following:

(1) "[L]iability based on contract or the right to obtain relief other than money or damages against a public entity or public employee." (Govt.C. 814; see Arthur L. Sachs v. Oceanside (1984) 151 C.A.3d 315, 320, 198 C.R. 483, infra, §241 [immunity from liability for employee's misrepresentation was no bar to contract action for rescission]; Schooler v. California (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1004, 1013, 102 C.R.2d 343 [Govt.C. 814 does not resurrect legal or financial burdens barred by any immunity where to do so would create duty that particular immunity provision guards against]; Utility Audit Co. v. Los Angeles (2003) 112 C.A.4th 950, 957, 5 C.R.3d 520 [action against public entity for refund of overcharges, without more, is based on breach of contractual duty and is not affected by governmental tort immunity provisions].) Thus, the Act "has no effect on the contractual liabilities" of public entities or employees. Also, "the appropriate way to seek review of discretionary governmental actions is by an action for specific or preventive relief to control the abuse of discretion, not by tort actions for damages." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 814.)

(2) Rights under the Workers' Compensation Act. (Govt.C. 814.2.)

(3) Liability for damage to property in the course of a public use. This liability is still covered by the constitutional provision on eminent domain. (See Cal. Const., Art. I, §19, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1112 et seq.)

(4) Civil liability imposed on public officers under the federal Civil Rights Act. (See 42 U.S.C., §1983, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§816, 818 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, States k.112(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) "[L]iability based on contract or the right to obtain relief other than money or damages against a public entity or public employee." See Dinuba v. Tulare (2007) 41 C.4th 859, 867, 62 C.R.3d 614, 161 P.3d 1168, Supp., infra, §289 [county's liability to redevelopment agency for misallocated tax revenue was unaffected by immunity provisions of Government Claims Act; action to compel performance of statutory duty is not barred by Act, even though performance of duty may involve payment of money].

(New) Claim filing requirements: Govt.C. 814 does not operate to exclude breach of contract claims from the Act's claim filing requirements (see Govt.C. 900 et seq.). Govt.C. 814 "simply reaffirms the long-standing rule that governmental immunity does not encompass contractual liability. ... That proposition has no necessary connection to the requirement that a claim be presented before suit is filed." (Stockton v. Superior Court (2007) 42 C.4th 730, 741, 68 C.R.3d 295, 171 P.3d 20, 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §238.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

A. In General.

4. Development of California Law.

c. Tort Claims Act.

4. "Employee."

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 219

[§ 219] "Employee."

"Employee," for purposes of the Tort Claims Act, "includes an officer, judicial officers as defined in Section 327 of the Elections Code, employee, or servant, whether or not compensated, but does not include an independent contractor." (Govt.C. 810.2; see Govt.C. 811.9 [judges, subordinate judicial officers, and court executive officers of superior and municipal courts are deemed state officers, and trial court employees are deemed employees of that court, for purposes of Govt.C. 995 et seq. (defense of public employees)].) "Agent" was excluded from the definition as possibly expanding liability to a greater extent than desired. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 810.2.)

Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 C.A.3d 605, 281 C.R. 578, involved the distinction between employees and independent contractors. Defendants, who were public defenders for Monterey County, represented plaintiff in a murder trial. After he was acquitted, and without filing a claim against the county, plaintiff filed a malpractice action against defendants. Plaintiff contended that no claim was necessary because defendants were independent contractors, instead of county employees. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed; defendants were employees, and hence the complaint was deficient for not alleging that a claim had been filed.

(a) Although his complaint acknowledged that defendants were employees of the county for some purposes, plaintiff argued that they were acting as independent contractors during the time in which they were fulfilling their professional duties, and hence were beyond the county's absolute control. This argument is untenable for two reasons:

(1) A person is either an employee or an independent contractor. Any attempt to subdivide what has traditionally been an all-or-nothing inquiry would inevitably create problems of judicial administration, e.g., which status would govern a public defender's claim for a work-related injury or unemployment benefits, or a third party's claim against the county for personal injuries caused by the defender's negligence. (230 C.A.3d 614.) Although one person could conceivably serve another person or entity as both employee and independent contractor, such as where a clerical employee agreed, for a separate consideration, to paint the employer's building on weekends, a dual capacity should be found only where the parties' intentions were made plain and the functions were clearly defined and separated. No clear separation was pleaded here. (230 C.A.3d 615.)

(2) Plaintiff's approach of relying exclusively on the control factor was rejected by Tieberg v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1970) 2 C.3d 943, 88 C.R. 175, 471 P.2d 975, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §34, which pointed out that although the right to control the work in question is the most important test of the employment relationship, other factors, enumerated in Rest.2d, Agency §220, should also be considered. (230 C.A.3d 615.)

(b) A consideration of the Restatement factors leads to the following conclusions concerning the nature of defendants' work and their relationship with the county: (1) defendants are not engaged in a distinctive occupation or business, but rather act solely as public defenders for Monterey County; (2) defendant public defender presumably works without supervision, while defendant deputy public defender may have some supervision, but not from county employees outside the public defender's office; (3) defendants' occupation obviously requires skill; (4) the instrumentalities, tools, and workplaces necessary to defendants' functions are provided by the county; (5) defendants are subject to termination on reasonable notice for unsatisfactory performance; (6) defendants receive salaries paid at regular intervals without reference to particular cases or clients; (7) the work of public defenders, i.e., fulfilling the constitutional requirement of providing legal representation to indigent criminal defendants, is part of the county's regular business; (8) the county and defendants believed that they had created an employment relationship with many of its normal indicia, e.g., exclusive right to the employee's services, regular hours, employment benefits, etc.; (9) the county is "in business," and the provision of public defense service is a necessary part of that business. The preponderance of these factors, many of which are simply special indicators of control, and all of which are secondary to the control factor itself, suggests an employment relationship. (230 C.A.3d 616.)

(c) Although it is true that within the narrow perspective of a public defender's duty to serve a client's legitimate interests exclusively the defender is not subject to the county's control, in a broader perspective this devotion to the client's interest is exactly what the defender has been employed to provide. In this broader perspective, the county, which should be prepared to discharge a defender who does not comply with professional standards, does exercise control over the public defender's representation of clients. (230 C.A.3d 617.) Moreover, it does not follow that a person become an independent contractor merely because there is a certain amount of freedom inherent in the work performed. (230 C.A.3d 618.) (See 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 17 [Briggs]; on liability for acts of independent contractors, see infra, §244.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Govt.C. 811.9 was amended in 2005 to delete the reference to municipal courts.

(1) Public employee "means an employee of a public entity." (Govt.C. 811.4; on definition of "employee," see supra, §219.)

(2) Employment "includes office or employment." (Govt.C. 810.4.)

(3) Injury "means death, injury to a person, damage to or loss of property, or any other injury that a person may suffer to his person, reputation, character, feelings or estate, of such nature that it would be actionable if inflicted by a private person." (Govt.C. 810.8.) "The purpose of the definition is to make clear that public entities and public employees may be held liable only for injuries to the kind of interests that have been protected by the courts in actions between private persons." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 810.8; see *Aubry v. Tri-City Hosp. (4) Public entity "includes the State, the Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, public agency, and any other political subdivision or public corporation in the State." (Govt.C. 811.2.) The definition is intended to include "every kind of independent political or governmental entity." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 811.2.)

(5) Enactment "means a constitutional provision, statute, charter provision, ordinance or regulation." (Govt.C. 810.6.)

(6) Regulation "means a rule, regulation, order or standard, having the force of law, adopted by an employee or agency of the United States pursuant to the federal Administrative Procedure Act ... or as a regulation by an agency of the state pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act." (Govt.C. 811.6.)

(7) "Law" "includes not only enactments but also the decisional law applicable within this State as determined and declared ... by the courts of this State and of the United States." (Govt.C. 811.)

(8) "Statute" includes federal as well as California legislation, or "a statewide initiative act." (Govt.C. 811.8.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 222

[§ 222] In General.

By enacting the Tort Claims Act, the 1963 Legislature gave legislative approval to the judicial repudiation of sovereign immunity (see supra, §215), and also eliminated common law liabilities of the state and local entities for proprietary acts (see supra, §210). Now, all public entities, state and local, are liable in tort to the extent declared by statute, and have certain statutory immunities and defenses. (Govt.C. 815; see infra, §§223, 224, 226 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §1.6 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §268 et seq.; 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §29.1 et seq.; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §§1 et seq., 91 et seq.)

The provisions of the Act concerning public entities are "intended to include every kind of independent political or governmental entity in the State." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 811.2.) However, particular entities may be excluded by statute from its coverage. Under Ins.C. 11873, making Government Code provisions relating to state agencies inapplicable, with stated exceptions, to the State Compensation Insurance Fund, the Fund is not subject to the Act. (Maxon Industries v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1387, 1391, 20 C.R.2d 730; see *Security Officers Service v. State Comp. Ins. II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Liability.

2. No Common Law Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 223

[§ 223] No Common Law Liability.

"Except as otherwise provided by statute," a public entity "is not liable for an injury, whether such injury arises out of an act or omission of the public entity or a public employee or any other person." (Govt.C. 815(a).) This provision "abolishes all common law or judicially declared forms of liability." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 815.) Hence, except as required by the federal or state constitutions (e.g., under the eminent domain guarantee), liability must be based on a California statute. (Sava v. Fuller (1967) 249 C.A.2d 281, 284, 57 C.R. 312, infra, §355; Susman v. Los Angeles (1969) 269 C.A.2d 803, 808, 75 C.R. 240; *Peter W. v. Occasional expressions in opinions indicate a reluctance to accept this basic premise. (See *Ramos v. Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Liability.

3. Liability Under Statutes and Constitution.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 224

[§ 224] Liability Under Statutes and Constitution.

(1) Tort Claims Act. Liability under the Act is declared in three general provisions and in a number of provisions dealing with particular kinds of liability. The general provisions concern:

- (a) Vicarious liability for employees and independent contractors. (See Govt.C. 815.2, 815.4, infra, §237 et seq.)
- (b) Dangerous condition of property. (See Govt.C. 830 et seq., infra, §249 et seq.)
- (c) Failure to discharge a mandatory duty. (See Govt.C. 815.6, infra, §245 et seq.)

Chapters dealing with particular kinds of liability include such matters as:

- (a) Police and correctional activities. (See Govt.C. 844 et seq., infra, §290 et seq.)
- (b) Fire protection. (See Govt.C. 850 et seq., infra, §310 et seq.)
- (c) Medical, hospital and public health activities. (See Govt.C. 854 et seq., infra, §316 et seq.)

The Act contains separate provisions for state and local public entities on most aspects of filing claims, bringing actions, and obtaining payment of judgments. (See Galli v. California (1979) 98 C.A.3d 662, 675, 159 C.R. 721 [summarizing nature of provisions]; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §223 et seq.)

Detailed provisions cover general and specific immunities and defenses (see infra, §§226 et seq., 272 et seq., 292), but the liability issue should be determined before immunity issues are considered (see infra, §225).

(2) Other Statutes. Statutes outside the Tort Claims Act provide for governmental liability, including the following:

- (a) Veh.C. 17000 et seq., concerning liability for motor vehicle torts. (See infra, §331 et seq.)
- (b) C.C. 3479 on nuisance liability. (See infra, §339.)

(c) C.C.P. 1245.060, recognizing liability arising from a public entity condemnor's entry to survey land. (See infra, §340.)

(3) Self-Executing Constitutional Provisions. Violation of a self-executing provision of the California Constitution, such as the right to vote guaranteed by Cal. Const, Art. II, §2, gives rise to a cause of action not barred by the Act. (Fenton v. Groveland Community Services Dist. (1982) 135 C.A.3d 797, 803, 805, 185 C.R. 758; see 75 A.L.R.5th 619 [implied cause of action for violation of state Constitution].)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Liability.

4. Liability Issue Tried First.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 225

[§ 225] Liability Issue Tried First.

Statutory immunity is not an issue until it is determined that the governmental entity owes a duty of care and would be liable in the absence of the immunity. In making the determination of liability, common law tort principles apply, even though the entity's immunity is governed exclusively by statute. (Williams v. California (1983) 34 C.3d 18, 22, 192 C.R. 233, 664 P.2d 137, infra, §291.)

Thus, immunity issues were never reached in Davidson v. Westminster (1982) 32 C.3d 197, 202, 185 C.R. 252, 649 P.2d 894, infra, §291. Plaintiff was stabbed by an assailant in a laundromat. She sued defendants city and police officers, alleging that women had been stabbed in the area on earlier occasions; that police officers had the laundromat under surveillance on the night of the assault, were aware of her presence, and saw a man who closely resembled the earlier attacker; and that they nevertheless failed to warn or protect her. The theory of liability urged was that a special relationship existed between plaintiff and the officers. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. It must first be determined that a duty of care is owed that would result in liability in the absence of immunity. If the duty is found, application of the relevant statutory immunity need only then considered. (32 C.3d 202.) Common law negligence principles apply in determining this duty. Here, there was no special relationship giving rise to a duty; the officers' decision to conduct the surveillance, observation of the potential assailant as the likely perpetrator of a previous assault, and failure to warn or otherwise protect plaintiff, were insufficient to create a relationship. Thus, immunity issues never arise. (32 C.3d 206.) (On affirmative duties arising from special relationships, see infra, §1038 et seq.)

1. Statutory Immunities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 226

[§ 226] Statutory Immunities.

The liability of a public entity "is subject to any immunity of the public entity provided by statute." (Govt.C. 815(b); see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §10.1 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Torts, Liability of Public Entities, §29:1 et seq.; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §1 et seq.) As a general rule, immunity provisions prevail over liability provisions. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 815; see Wright v. California (2004) 122 C.A.4th 659, 672, 19 C.R.3d 92 [sovereign immunity is rule in California; governmental liability is limited to exceptions specifically set forth by statute]; on immunity under Tort Claims Act where liability is imposed by statute outside Act, see infra, §229.) However, public entities are not immune from constitutional or federal statutory claims. (Buenavista v. San Francisco (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1168, 1174, 255 C.R. 329.)

The statutory immunities are set forth both in the Tort Claims Act and in various statutes outside the Act. (See infra, §237 et seq.; on immunities of public employees, see infra, §345 et seq.; on defense of privilege or immunity generally, see infra, §131 et seq.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 227

[§ 227] Defenses of Private Person Are Available.

The liability of a public entity "is subject to any defenses that would be available to the public entity if it were a private person." (Govt.C. 815(b); see Heieck & Moran v. Modesto (1966) 64 C.2d 229, 232, 49 C.R. 377, 411 P.2d 105, infra, §310 [nonliability of water provider for failure to maintain sufficient supply].)

Tort defenses commonly available to private persons, and therefore public entities, include comparative negligence (see infra, §1327 et seq.) and assumption of risk (see infra, §1281 et seq.). (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 815.)

General tort immunities applicable to private persons apply, when relevant, to public entities. (Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 413, 134 C.R. 402; on defense of privilege or immunity generally, see supra, §131 et seq.)

1. In General.

b. Scope of Immunities and Defenses.

3. Immunity Where Employee Is Immune.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 228

[§ 228] Immunity Where Employee Is Immune.

A public entity "is not liable for an injury resulting from an act or omission of an employee of the public entity where the employee is immune from liability," unless a statute provides otherwise. (Govt.C. 815.2(b); see Govt.C. 815.4, infra, §244 [public entity is not liable for act or omission of independent contractor if entity would not have been liable had act or omission been that of employee of entity]; on immunities of employee, see infra, §§348, 351 et seq., 360, 362, 365, 368.)

The exception is made for liability otherwise provided by statute because "under certain circumstances it appears to be desirable to provide by statute that a public entity is liable even when the employee is immune." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 815.2 [citing as example, Govt.C. 830 et seq., infra, §249 et seq., under which public entity may be liable for dangerous condition of public property even though no employee is personally liable].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

b. Scope of Immunities and Defenses.

4. Tort Claims Act Immunities Extend to Liabilities Imposed by Other Statutes.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 229

[§ 229] Tort Claims Act Immunities Extend to Liabilities Imposed by Other Statutes.

In O'Hagan v. Board of Zoning Adjustment (1974) 38 C.A.3d 722, 113 C.R. 501, plaintiff's temporary use permit to operate a drive-in restaurant was revoked. In administrative mandamus proceedings under C.C.P. 1094.5 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §295 et seq.), he succeeded in having the revocation declared wrongful by a Court of Appeal decision. He then amended his mandamus petition to seek damages from defendant city for loss of goodwill, profits, and expenses, pursuant to C.C.P. 1095 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §211). Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; the city was immune.

(a) Immunities under Tort Claims Act. Govt.C. 820.2 (infra, §351) gives immunity to public employees for injuries resulting from an exercise of discretion. Govt.C. 821.2 (infra, §348) gives immunity to an employee where a license or permit is revoked. Govt.C. 818.4 (infra, §287) gives a similar immunity to the public entity. Hence, the Tort Claims Act provides complete immunity in the instant case. (38 C.A.3d 725, 726.)

(b) Immunity where liability is imposed by statute outside Tort Claims Act. The immunity provisions of the Tort Claims Act usually contain the qualification, "except as otherwise provided by statute." Immunities provided by other statutes clearly apply to Tort Claims Act liabilities; but the Act does not clearly indicate that liabilities created by other statutes are subject to Tort Claims Act immunities. C.C.P. 1095 presents a direct conflict with the Tort Claims Act immunity provisions, which must be resolved by construction. (38 C.A.3d 728.) The conflict should be resolved in favor of immunity:

(1) C.C.P. 1095 is a general statute providing for damages in mandamus proceedings embracing a great variety of actions; the Tort Claims Act, a special statute dealing expressly with liabilities and immunities of public entities and employees, takes priority. (38 C.A.3d 729.)

(2) Policy considerations favor this interpretation: Holding that C.C.P. 1095 abridges the immunities granted in the Tort Claims Act "would destroy the carefully wrought system of liabilities and immunities set forth therein. Since direct review of the licensing activities of the public entities is usually available through writ proceedings or other proceedings to review administrative action ... , all that a plaintiff would have to do to circumvent the immunity provisions of the Tort Claims Act would be to effect a mere change in his pleading designating it a petition for writ of mandamus rather than a complaint for damages. Considering the strongly worded legislative intent, ... most certainly the Legislature cannot be deemed to have intended to impose liability and abrogate immunities through writ proceedings or by maneuvering with the rules of pleadings and procedure." (38 C.A.3d 730.)

The O'Hagan approach was followed in Mikkelsen v. California (1976) 59 C.A.3d 621, 629, 130 C.R. 780. Plaintiffs sued for wrongful deaths caused by the collapse of a freeway bridge during an earthquake. The trial judge found in favor of the state on the affirmative defense of design immunity (Govt.C. 830.6, infra, §280 et seq.), and then refused to permit plaintiffs to proceed on the theory of nuisance (C.C. 3479, infra, §339). Held, affirmed. The conduct amounting to a nuisance may be negligent or nonnegligent (59 C.A.3d 628); and, whether pleaded in language of negligence or nuisance, plaintiffs' cause of action was based on an allegedly defective plan or design. (59 C.A.3d 628.) To permit the design immunity to depend on the form of the pleading would be to thwart the legislative purpose. (59 C.A.3d 630.) (See Longfellow v. San Luis Obispo (1983) 144 C.A.3d 379, 384, 192 C.R. 580 [following Mikkelsen].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

b. Scope of Immunities and Defenses.

5. No Punitive Damages.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 230

[§ 230] No Punitive Damages.

(1) Statutory Rule. "Notwithstanding any other provision of law," a public entity is not liable for exemplary or punitive damages. (Govt.C. 818.) (See 1 A.L.R.4th 448 [recovery of punitive damages from municipal corporation].)

An equal protection challenge to Govt.C. 818 was rejected in McAllister v. South Coast Air Quality Dist. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 653, 228 C.R. 351. The court found sufficient justification for special treatment of public employers. (a) Because punishment is the objective of punitive damages, the group bearing the burden of the award, i.e., the citizens, would be the same one that would benefit from it; (b) because evidence of a defendant's wealth is admissible on the amount of punitive damages, plaintiffs would be able to introduce evidence of the public entity's unlimited taxing power; (c) a compromise that would allow punitive damages, but prohibit evidence of the entity's wealth, would eliminate one of the prime justifications for punitive damages, i.e., deterrence. (183 C.A.3d 660.)

(2) Distinction: Collateral Source Rule. The collateral source rule of damages is not penal in its effect and is properly applied to a public entity. (Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 9, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, infra, §1632; on statutory post-trial hearing and offset, see infra, §1637 et seq.)

(3) Distinction: Civil Penalties. Damages that serve a legitimate compensatory or other nonpunitive function, though in the nature of a penalty, are not barred by Govt.C. 818. For example, the additional compensation given an employee under Lab.C. 4553 for serious and wilful misconduct of an employer (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §316 et seq.) is distinguishable from punitive damages and may properly be awarded against a public entity. The increase in the award constitutes merely more adequate compensation, rather than punishment. (State Dept. of Corrections v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1971) 5 C.3d 885, 888, 97 C.R. 786, 489 P.2d 818.)

People v. Superior Court (Oakland Port Commrs.) (1976) 16 C.3d 30, 127 C.R. 122, 544 P.2d 1322, reached a similar result. Here, after 125,000 gallons of oil were discharged into the waters of the Oakland Estuary from oil storage tanks located on land owned by the city of Oakland, the Attorney General, at the request of the Regional Water Quality Control Board, brought an action under Water C. 13350, seeking penalties provided by that section. Held, Govt.C. 818 was not a defense. Although the civil liability imposed by Water C. 13350 is admittedly punitive in that it seeks to deter oil spills, the damages collected also serve a compensatory purpose because they are used to clean up waste or abate its effects on state waters. Thus, they are not simply and solely punitive, and are therefore not punitive damages within the meaning of Govt.C. 818. (16 C.3d 39.) (See San Francisco Civil Service Assn. v. Superior Court (1976) 16 C.3d 46, 50, 127 C.R. 131, 544 P.2d 1331 [following People v. Superior Court (Oakland Port Commissioners) in Attorney General's action under Water C. 13385 to recover penalties for discharge of sewage into bay waters]; 7 Golden Gate L. Rev. 499 [People v. Superior Court (Oakland Port Commissioners)]; on enforcement of environmental protection statutes generally, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §913.)

Govt.C. 818 does not preclude assessment of penalties designed to ensure compliance with a regulatory scheme. In Kizer v. San Mateo (1991) 53 C.3d 139, 279 C.R. 318, 806 P.2d 1353, the state Department of Health Services issued citations against a county health care facility under the Long-Term Care, Health, Safety and Security Act of 1973 (Health & Saf.C. 1417 et seq.). The department then filed an action against defendant county to affirm the citations and assess the monetary penalties authorized by the Act. Defendant county demurred, contending that the penalties were punitive damages and forbidden by Govt.C. 818. The demurrer was sustained and the Court of Appeal affirmed the dismissal of the action. Held, reversed.

(a) Nowhere in the Tort Claims Act does the Legislature indicate an intention to immunize public entities from monetary sanctions imposed for failure to observe minimum health and safety standards adopted to protect patients. Granting an immunity to public entities from the penalties would be contrary to the intent of the Legislature to provide a citation system for imposing prompt and effective civil sanctions against long-term health care facilities in violation of state statutes and regulations. (53 C.3d 146.)

(b) Civil penalties under the Long-Term Care, Health, Safety and Security Act, "unlike damages, require no showing of actual harm per se." (53 C.3d 147.) They are imposed according to a range set by statute irrespective of actual damage suffered. Unlike punitive damages, they are imposed without regard to motive and require no showing of malfeasance or intent to injure; they can be imposed for negligent conduct. And damages serve to compensate the victim, while civil penalties under the Act are to be applied to offset the State's costs in enforcing the health and safety regulations. (53 C.3d 147.)

(c) Given the unquestionable importance of the legislative purpose of assuring a uniform standard of quality health care, there is no significant public policy reason to exempt a state licensed health-care facility from liability for statutory penalties simply because it is operated by a public rather than a private entity, even though it is the taxpayer who ultimately bears the burden when such penalties are imposed. The statutory citation and penalty provisions serve to encourage compliance with state-mandated standards for patient care and to deter conduct that may endanger patients. (53 C.3d 150.) (See 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 272 [Kizer].)

In Los Angeles County Metropolitan Trans. Authority v. Superior Court (2004) 123 C.A.4th 261, 20 C.R.3d 92, plaintiff bus passenger sued a county metropolitan transportation authority and one of its drivers for violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act, alleging that the driver assaulted plaintiff after directing homophobic remarks at him. The trial court denied a motion by the transportation authority to strike allegations supporting plaintiff's claim for a civil penalty under the Act. Held, affirmed. Govt.C. 818 does not preclude recovery of the penalty. The penalty has nonpunitive purposes and is not imposed primarily for punishment. It clearly serves to advance the Legislature's intent to encourage and aid private parties to help in enforcing the civil rights laws by bringing civil suits against perpetrators of hate crimes. The penalty also helps to ensure that plaintiffs receive ample compensation, irrespective of their actual damages. (123 C.A.4th 268.)

(4) Distinction: Enhanced Damages for Elderly or Dependent Adult Abuse. In Marron v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 1049, 134 C.R.2d 358, plaintiffs' 44-year-old daughter entered a hospital owned and operated by defendant, Regents of the University of California, for a liver biopsy. Complications arose and emergency surgery was required. Plaintiff's daughter spent 2 months in the hospital's intensive care unit with an ever increasing number of complications. In the following months, she was released from the hospital several times, but always returned. This continued until her death. Plaintiffs' complaint included a cause of action for dependent adult abuse, and sought the enhanced remedies allowed by Welf.C. 15657, i.e., damages for decedent's pain and suffering and an award of reasonable attorneys' fees and costs (see infra, §1686). Defendant moved for summary adjudication on the ground that the damages and attorneys' fees and costs were punitive damages, which, when awarded against public entities, were barred by Govt.C. 818. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and plaintiffs sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted directing the trial court to vacate its order.

(a) Statutory framework. The Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act (Welf.C. 15600 et seq.) provides for criminal and private civil enforcement of elder and dependent adult abuse laws. The Act was amended in 1991 to allow enhanced remedies where the defendant committing the abuse or neglect is guilty of recklessness, oppression, fraud, or malice. Under these circumstances, Welf.C. 15657(a) requires the court to award reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, and Welf.C. 15657(b) provides that the limitation of C.C.P. 377.34 (decedent's personal representative may not recover damages for pain and suffering) does not apply. Under Govt.C. 818, a public entity is not liable for punitive damages or other damages imposed primarily for the sake of example and to punish the defendant. Thus, the issue where the defendant is a public entity is whether the enhanced remedies of Welf.C. 15657 are precluded by the prohibition of punitive damages in Govt.C. 818. (108 C.A.4th 1057.)

(b) Pain and suffering. Punitive damages and compensatory damages serve different purposes. Compensatory damages are intended to redress the concrete loss suffered by the plaintiff, and punitive damages are intended to punish the defendant and deter future wrongdoing. Pain and suffering damages, which are measured by the plaintiff's actual loss or injury and are not meant to punish the defendant, are compensatory. The fact that pain and suffering damages and punitive damages are two different things is made clear by C.C.P. 377.34, which allows a decedent's personal representative to recover punitive damages, but not pain and suffering damages. (108 C.A.4th 1059.) The trial court concluded that the express exception of Welf.C. 15657 to the general preclusion of awards of a decedent's pain and suffering damages in C.C.P. 377.34 equates to an award of punitive or exemplary damages under Govt.C. 818. However, considering the language of those statutes and the general statutory and common law regarding compensatory and punitive damages, the enhanced remedies are not punitive or exemplary in nature or "damages imposed primarily for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant" under Govt.C. 818. (108 C.A.4th 1062.)

(c) Employers' liability for punitive damages. Welf.C. 15657(c) provides that the standards of C.C. 3294(b) regarding the imposition of punitive damages on an employer based on the acts of an employee must be satisfied before damages or attorneys' fees may be imposed on an employer. Defendant argued that this incorporation of the standard for holding employers liable for punitive damages proves that the enhanced remedies of Welf.C. 15657 were intended to be punitive damages. (108 C.A.4th 1063.) "We are not persuaded. ... [I]ncorporation of that standard is merely a simple statutory means for setting forth what actions of an employer suffice for holding that employer liable for an employee's reckless neglect or other egregious conduct under section 15657. Section 15657, subdivision (c) incorporates a standard of conduct rather than the remedy or damages to be awarded if that conduct is found to have occurred." Furthermore, this argument does not apply to Welf.C. 15657 cases that do not involve employers. (108 C.A.4th 1064.)

(d) Attorneys' fees and costs. The legislative history of Welf.C. 15657 shows that the purpose of the provision authorizing attorneys' fees and costs was to act as an incentive for attorneys to accept elder or dependent adult abuse cases involving recklessness or more egregious conduct. There is nothing in the Act or legislative history to indicate that the purpose was to punish defendants. Furthermore, awards of statutorily authorized attorneys' fees are considered an element of costs, not damages, and as such they are paid to counsel, rather than to a party. Hence, an award of attorneys' fees and costs cannot be equated with punitive damages, which are awarded to a party. (108 C.A.4th 1064.)

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

c. Insurance Coverage.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 231

[§ 231] Insurance Coverage.

(1) Statutory Treatment. A number of scattered statutory provisions authorizing particular entities to insure were repealed by the Tort Claims Act, and a unified treatment was given in Govt.C. 989 et seq. (local public entities) and Govt.C. 11007.4 (state agencies). However, the validity of other insurance statutes is recognized. (See Govt.C. 991, 11007.4(d).) (On insurance against public entity liability generally, see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §§1.12, 5.4, 8.36; 3 Pacific L. J. 400; 71 A.L.R.3d 6 [validity and construction of statute authorizing or requiring governmental unit to procure liability insurance covering public officers or employees].)

(2) Authorized Coverage. Insurance coverage is permitted for the following:

(a) "[A]ll or any part of any tort or inverse condemnation liability." (Govt.C. 990(a), 11007.4(b)(1).)

(b) "[T]he expense of defending a claim ... whether or not liability exists on such claim." (Govt.C. 990(c), 11007.4(b)(3).)

Hospital districts may "participate in a reciprocal or interinsurance exchange with the members of its medical staff" as provided by Ins.C. 1284. (Govt.C. 990(d), 11007.4(b)(1).)

Of course, insurance by itself neither creates liability nor impairs defenses. (Govt.C. 991.2, 11007.4(e).)

(3) No Indemnity for Punitive Damages. A local public entity may obtain insurance that calls for the defense of a claim that seeks punitive damages, and such an insurance contract is valid, notwithstanding C.C. 1668 (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §660), Ins.C. 533 (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §100), "or any other provision of law." (Govt.C. 990(c).) However, it cannot contract for insurance that provides for payment of a judgment for punitive damages. (Govt.C. 990(d).)

(4) Insurance Methods. Insurance for public entities may be provided by self-insurance as well as through authorized carriers. (Govt.C. 990.4, 11007.4(c).) And two or more local entities may obtain joint insurance or be coinsured under a master policy with prorated premiums. (Govt.C. 990.8(a), (b)); see Orange County Water Dist. v. Association of Calif. Water Agencies Joint Powers Ins. Authority (1997) 54 C.A.4th 772, 777, 63 C.R.2d 182 [joint

d. Liability Under Joint Powers Agreements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 232

[§ 232] Liability Under Joint Powers Agreements.

Public entities may enter into several kinds of agreements under which some "function, service or act" is to be performed by one "with or for" any other. (See Govt.C. 895.) If a tort is committed in performance of such a function, etc., for which liability is imposed by statute, the parties to the agreement are jointly and severally liable to the injured person. (Govt.C. 895.2; see Tucker Land Co. v. California (2001) 94 C.A.4th 1191, 1197, 114 C.R.2d 891 [Govt.C. 895 and 895.2 make clear that member entities of joint powers agreements are liable for torts, but not contracts; agreement in question stated that constituent members were not liable for agency's debts, as permitted by Govt.C. 6508.1]; on joint and several liability, see supra, §50 et seq.)

The Education Code assigns some powers to the county board of education and some to the county superintendent of schools; and in exercising an assigned power the county superintendent is a public entity within the meaning of Govt.C. 895.2. Hence the superintendent is liable, as a school district would be, for negligent supervision of students on a campus during school hours (see infra, §321 et seq.) and is not entitled, as an employee would be, to indemnity or contribution from other superintendents or districts jointly and severally liable. (Ross v. Campbell Union School Dist. (1977) 70 C.A.3d 113, 119, 138 C.R. 557.)

Among themselves, however, the entities may allocate the liability by provisions for contribution or indemnification. (Govt.C. 895.4; on contribution, see supra, §103 et seq.; on indemnification, see supra, §112 et seq.) And, in the absence of any provision, any entity that pays more than its pro rata share is entitled to contribution from the others. (Govt.C. 895.6.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 233

[§ 233] Compromise and Settlement of Claims.

Generally, the head of a state agency may compromise, adjust, or settle a pending action where a sufficient appropriation exists for payment of the claim or, if not, on recommendation of the Attorney General or other attorney authorized to represent the state and approval of the Department of Finance. (Govt.C. 948.) Also, the governing body of a local public entity is authorized to settle actions or delegate authority to do so. (Govt.C. 949.) (See *Ford v. Judicial branch entities and judges are excluded from the coverage of Govt.C. 948. The Judicial Council is authorized to settle claims against a judicial branch entity or a judge in accordance with procedures set forth in the Rules of Court. (Govt.C. 912.7.) The manner of presentation and service of these claims is prescribed. (See Govt.C. 915(c).) "Judicial branch entity" includes the superior court, the Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court, the Judicial Council, and the Administrative Office of the Courts. f. Conference on Satisfaction of Judgment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 234

[§ 234] Conference on Satisfaction of Judgment.

(1) Availability of Conference. In an action for personal injury or wrongful death, when a verdict is entered against a public entity in excess of $ 100,000, the entity may request a mandatory settlement conference to consider methods of satisfying the judgment. (Govt.C. 962; see 19 Pacific L. J. 530.)

(2) Request. The request must be in writing and within the time prescribed for a new trial motion (C.C.P. 659; see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §56). The request may be noticed with any motion under Govt.C. 984 (periodic payment of judgment; infra, §235), Govt.C. 985 (reduction of judgment for collateral source payments; infra, §1637 et seq.), or C.C.P. 659. (Govt.C. 962.)

(3) Date of Conference. The court sets a date for the conference. The conference may not occur until after determination of any motion for a new trial, motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, motion for remittitur, and motion for additur. However, the conference must occur before hearing on any motions pursuant to Govt.C. 984 or 985. (Govt.C. 962.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

1. In General.

g. Periodic Payment of Judgment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 235

[§ 235] Periodic Payment of Judgment.

Public entities have the right to make periodic payments on large judgments, in the following circumstances and subject to the following conditions (Govt.C. 984):

(1) When Payments May Be Ordered. The judgment may be ordered paid by periodic payments only if ordered under C.C.P. 667.7 (periodic payment of future damages for medical malpractice; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §31) or Govt.C. 970.6 (installment payment of judgment against local public entity; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §401), or if the entity has made an election under Govt.C. 984(d), or the parties have agreed to it. (Govt.C. 984(c).)

(2) Election by Public Entity. An entity may elect to satisfy a judgment by periodic payments if, after making any deductions pursuant to Govt.C. 985 (reduction of judgment for collateral source payments; infra, §1637 et seq.), the judgment against the entity not insured is greater than a statutory minimum amount. The amount is $ 725,000, increased 5% per year beginning in 1997. (Govt.C. 984(d).)

(3) Time and Manner of Payment. After any amounts are reimbursed pursuant to Govt.C. 985, the judgment debtor must pay 50% of the remainder immediately, and the other 50% "over a period of time to be determined by the court, not to exceed 10 years or the length of the judgment-creditor's remaining life expectancy at the time the judgment is entered, whichever is less." (Govt.C. 984(d).) Payments do not terminate on death of the judgment creditor. (Govt.C. 984(e)(1).)

Interest accrues on the unpaid balance at the same rate as 1-year United States Treasury Bills as of January 1, each year. On each January 1 thereafter, the interest is adjusted until the judgment is fully satisfied. (Govt.C. 984(e)(2).)

(4) Duration of Liability. Until the judgment is fully satisfied, the entity "shall remain liable for all payments due on the judgment and the interest." (Govt.C. 984(e)(3).)

(5) Enforcement and Modification. The court retains jurisdiction in order to enforce, amend, modify, or approve settlement of the installment payments as may be just. On motion by the judgment-creditor, the court must accelerate the installment payments "if it finds any unreasonable delay in, or failure to make payments." (Govt.C. 984(e)(4).)

The court on motion may modify the installment payments consistent with C.C. 1431 et seq. (see supra, §52 et seq.) "to account for the insolvency or uncollectability of amounts of the judgment owed by joint tortfeasors." The defendant must bring the motion under C.C.P. 1010 (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §56). (Govt.C. 984(e)(5).)

Nothing in the statute "shall prevent the parties from agreeing to settle an action on any other terms." (Govt.C. 984(f).)

(6) Limitations on Applicability. If the entity has commercial insurance as to a portion of the judgment, the statute applies only to that portion that is "not insured." (Govt.C. 984(b); see Govt.C. 984(a) [defining "not insured"].)

The statute "does not apply to contribution and indemnity between joint tortfeasors" (see supra, §§103 et seq., 112 et seq.). (Govt.C. 984(h).)

h. Defense or Indemnification of Witness.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 236

[§ 236] Defense or Indemnification of Witness.

(1) General Rule. On written request, a public entity may defend or indemnify a witness who has testified on behalf of the public entity in a criminal, civil, or administrative action. (Govt.C. 995.9; on right to defense or indemnification of public employee, see infra, §§371 et seq., 375 et seq.)

(2) Discretion of Public Entity. The decision to defend or indemnify the witness is within the discretion of the entity and may be based on any relevant factors, including, but not limited to, whether to do so would serve the public interest. However, the public entity may defend or indemnify the witness only if it determines that the action against the witness is based directly on the conduct requested of the witness related to the witness's testimony or provision of evidence. The entity may provide a defense alone apart from indemnity, and may offer to defend or indemnify or defend and indemnify while reserving all rights to subsequently withdraw these offers on reasonable notice. (Govt.C. 995.9.)

(3) When Defense or Indemnification Prohibited. The public entity may not defend or indemnify if (a) the testimony giving rise to the action against the witness was false in any material respect, (b) the testimony was otherwise not given with a good faith belief in its truth, (c) the action has not been commenced, or (d) the witness has not requested action for his or her benefit. (Govt.C. 995.9.)

(4) Liability of Public Entity for Punitive Damages. The public entity is not liable for indemnification of a defendant witness for punitive damages awarded to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff prevails in a claim for punitive damages, the defendant is liable to the public entity for the full costs incurred in providing representation. (Govt.C. 995.9.) (On liability of public entity for payment of punitive damages on behalf of employee, see infra, §378.)

b. Employment by Public Entity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 238

[§ 238] Employment by Public Entity.

It is not necessary in every case to identify the particular employee causing the injury; it is sufficient to show that "some employee of the public entity tortiously inflicted the injury in the scope of his employment under circumstances where he would be personally liable." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 815.2(a).) But proof is required that whoever caused the injury was an employee of the entity against which recovery is sought. (Gonzales v. California (1972) 29 C.A.3d 585, 590, 105 C.R. 804 [bus driver employed by school district was not state employee even though district's authority to employ drivers was derived from Legislature to carry out state's duty to educate children]; on definition of "employee," see supra, §219.)

In Townsend v. California (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1530, 237 C.R. 146, the court held that a student-athlete is not an employee of the school he represents. Plaintiff, a U.C.L.A. player in a varsity basketball game between U.C.L.A. and San Jose State, was attacked by L, a San Jose State player. He brought this personal injury action against L, the San Jose athletic director and coach, and the state. On motion for summary judgment, the trial judge ruled that L was not an employee of the university or the State. Held, judgment for defendants other than L affirmed.

(a) In the workers' compensation area, Van Horn v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1963) 219 C.A.2d 457, 33 C.R. 169, held that a California Polytechnic football player, receiving direct financial assistance from the school and a private booster club, was an employee. But the Legislature nullified the holding by enacting Lab.C. 3352(k), excluding a player who receives an athletic scholarship. (191 C.A.3d 1536; see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §191.)

(b) "[C]onceptually, the colleges and universities maintaining these athletic programs are not in the 'business' of playing football or basketball any more than they are in the 'business' of golf, tennis or swimming. Football and basketball are simply part of an integrated multisport program which is part of the education process. Whether on scholarship or not, the athlete is not 'hired' by the school to participate in interscholastic competition." (191 C.A.3d 1536.) (See Munoz v. Palmdale (1999) 75 C.A.4th 367, 369, 89 C.R.2d 229 [unpaid volunteer helping at city senior center function was not employee of defendant city; relying on Townsend and public policy represented by Lab.C. 3352(i), excluding unpaid volunteers from definition of "employee" for workers' compensation purposes].)

2. Liability for Torts of Employees.

c. Scope of Employment.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 239

[§ 239] In General.

The general principles relating to scope of employment (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §176 et seq.) apply to public employees. (Mary M. v. Los Angeles (1991) 54 C.3d 202, 209, 285 C.R. 99, 814 P.2d 1341, infra, §240; Leger v. Stockton Unified School Dist. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1448, 1459, 249 C.R. 688; Virginia G. v. ABC Unified School Dist. (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1848, 1855, 19 C.R.2d 671; see Thorn v. Glendale (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1379, 1383, 35 C.R.2d 1 [city fire marshal who entered plaintiff's business premises under color of authority and then committed arson was not acting within scope of employment]; Inouye v. Los Angeles (1994) 30 C.A.4th 278, 281, 35 C.R.2d 367 [because off-duty safety police officers are authorized by statute to make arrests for reasonable cause, county policy of treating off-duty officers as not engaged in performance of duties did not insulate county from liability for officer's alleged wrongful conduct in making arrest]; Myricks v. Lynwood Unified School Dist. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 231, 241, 87 C.R.2d 734 [city recreation and parks employee driving van without city's permission was not acting within scope of her employment]; Hoblitzell v. Ione (2003) 110 C.A.4th 675, 2 C.R.3d 8 [while driving unmarked city car, city building inspector and city police officer in civilian clothes staged fake building inspection for personal reasons; extraordinary reasons existing in Mary M., supra, for applying vicarious liability were not present here]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §9.11 et seq.; 17 A.L.R.4th 881 [liability of governmental unit for intentional assault by employee other than police officer].) The term "scope of employment" has been construed as broadly in public as in private tort litigation. (Mary M. v. Los Angeles, supra, 54 C.3d 210.)

Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 134 C.R. 402, 556 P.2d 764, is illustrative. Plaintiff's funds had been deposited with defendant M, county clerk, as a result of an attachment. Although M had been instructed by a deputy city attorney not to release the money without a court order, he did so when plaintiff called on him and requested it. A few days later, M concluded that he had made a mistake, and, when interviewed by a newspaper reporter, said that "[i]t was a real con job," that plaintiff "ranted and raved," etc. The quoted remarks were published, and plaintiff sued M and defendant city and county, as his employer, for defamation. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. The record supported the jury's implied finding that M was acting within the scope of his authority so as to give rise to liability of his public employer under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Although the statements in part tended to exculpate M personally, they also were in furtherance of the public purpose of informing the press and the public of his performance of the duties of his office. (18 C.3d 412.)

[§ 240] Sexual Misconduct by Employee.

(1) Sexual Assault by Police Officer. Mary M. v. Los Angeles (1991) 54 C.3d 202, 285 C.R. 99, 814 P.2d 1341, held that a public entity can be held vicariously liable for a police officer's misuse of his official authority in raping a woman he has detained. Plaintiff, driving home alone, was stopped by defendant police officer for erratic driving. Defendant officer was on duty patrolling the streets, in uniform with a badge and gun, and driving a black and white police car. Plaintiff did not do well on her field sobriety test, and pleaded with defendant officer not to take her to jail. Defendant officer then ordered her to get into the police car, drove her home, and raped her. At the time of the detention, and after the rape, defendant officer sent false radio messages to the city police department concerning his activities. Plaintiff sued the officer and the city, and the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff against both, finding that at the time of the events the officer was acting within the scope of his employment. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment against the city, holding that, as a matter of law, the officer was not acting within the scope of his employment. Held, reversed.

(a) In Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons (1986) 41 C.3d 962, 227 C.R. 106, 719 P.2d 676, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §180, the court articulated three reasons for applying the doctrine of respondeat superior: "(1) to prevent recurrence of the tortious conduct; (2) to give greater assurance of compensation for the victim; and (3) to ensure that the victim's losses will be equitably borne by those who benefit from the enterprise that gave rise to the injury." (54 C.3d 209.)

(b) Under Govt.C. 815.2, the respondeat superior doctrine applies to public as well as private employers. And the courts have construed the term "scope of employment" in Govt.C. 815.2 as broadly as in private tort litigation. (54 C.3d 210.)

(c) In White v. Orange (1985) 166 C.A.3d 566, 212 C.R. 493, the court held that a county could be held liable for the wrongful act of a deputy sheriff who detained a female motorist and threatened to rape and kill her. The court there observed that an officer is entrusted with a substantial degree of authority, and that the motorist submitted to that authority, stopping her car solely because the officer had ordered her to do so. Accordingly, the officer's wrongful acts flowed from the exercise of that authority. (54 C.3d 210.)

(d) In John R. v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1989) 48 C.3d 438, 256 C.R. 766, 769 P.2d 948, infra, §329, on the other hand, the court held that a school district could not be held vicariously liable for sexual molestation of a junior high school student while at the teacher's apartment as part of an officially sanctioned extracurricular program. (54 C.3d 210.) Although the opinion did not determine whether White v. Orange was correctly decided, it suggested that the policy reasons underlying the doctrine of respondeat superior would justify its application when a police officer uses the officer's authority to commit a sexual assault. (54 C.3d 211.)

(e) Defendant city contends that White v. Orange was wrongly decided, and that a police officer's act of rape, even when preceded by an assertion of authority, is outside the scope of the officer's employment as a matter of law. This contention is unsound.

(1) Ordinarily the determination of scope of employment is a question of fact. (54 C.3d 213.) The test is whether "in the context of the particular enterprise an employer's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business." (54 C.3d 214, quoting Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, supra, 41 C.3d 968.) To assist in making that determination in this case the court will consider whether the three policy objectives underlying respondeat superior would be achieved by applying the doctrine. (54 C.3d 214.)

(2) The first is whether imposing liability creates a strong incentive for vigilance by those in a position to guard substantially against the evil. John R. concluded that the preventive measures that the employer could be forced to take would do more harm than good, for they would be far too likely to deter districts from authorizing extracurricular contacts between teachers and students. (54 C.3d 214.) But imposition of liability for sexual assaults by law enforcement officers would not impair the effectiveness of law enforcement. "There is little or no risk that preventative measures would significantly interfere with the ability of police departments to enforce the law and to protect society from criminal acts." (54 C.3d 215.)

(3) The second is greater assurance of compensation for the victim. The Legislature has recognized that imposition of vicarious liability on a public employer is an appropriate method to ensure that victims of police misconduct are compensated, by declining to grant immunity to public entities when their police officers engage in violent conduct. (54 C.3d 215.) And a number of appellate court decisions involving assaultive conduct have upheld liability. (54 C.3d 215, 216.)

(4) The third is spreading the risk of loss among the beneficiaries of the enterprise. In John R., the court contrasted the difference in authority between a teacher and a police officer, pointing out that the authority of a police officer over a motorist is far greater than that of a teacher over a student. (54 C.3d 216.) "An officer who detains an individual is acting as the official representative of the state, with all of its coercive power. ... Inherent in this formidable power is the potential for abuse. The cost resulting from misuse of that power should be borne by the community, because of the substantial benefits that the community derives from the lawful exercise of police power." (54 C.3d 216.)

(f) The city nevertheless contends that a police officer who commits rape while on duty can never be acting within the scope of employment because the conduct is so unusual. This contention is not supported by principle or authority.

(1) In view of the considerable power and authority of police officers, it is neither startling nor unexpected that on occasion an officer will misuse that authority by engaging in assaultive conduct. The precise circumstances of the assault need not be anticipated, so long as the risk is one that is reasonably foreseeable. While sexual assaults by police officers are fortunately uncommon, the risk of these assaults is broadly incidental to law enforcement, and thus liability for them may appropriately be imposed on the employing public entity. (54 C.3d 217.)

(2) The fact that defendant officer was primarily pursuing his own interests does not bring this case within the exception for substantial deviation from duties (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §179). The officer was acting within the scope of his employment when he detained plaintiff and ordered her to get into the police car. Then, misusing his authority, he drove her home and raped her. When plaintiff attempted to resist his criminal conduct, he continued to assert his authority by threatening to take her to jail. Viewing the transaction as a whole, it cannot be said that, as a matter of law, that the officer was acting outside the scope of his employment when he raped plaintiff. (54 C.3d 219.)

(3) The holding in this case does not mean that a public employer is liable as a matter of law whenever an on-duty officer commits a sexual assault. This is a question of fact for the jury. And, in the light of the facts set forth above, the jury could reasonably conclude that defendant officer was acting in the course of his employment. (54 C.3d 221, 242.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 947 [Mary M.]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 394 [same]; 28 U.S.F. L. Rev. 419 [same]; on governmental liability for police activities generally, see infra, §290 et seq.)

(2) Sexual Harassment. Mary M. was distinguished in Farmers Ins. Group v. Santa Clara (1995) 11 C.4th 992, 47 C.R.2d 478, 906 P.2d 440. Three female deputy sheriffs brought a federal court action for sexual harassment against a male deputy sheriff, the county that employed him, and others. The alleged harassment included requests for sexual favors, lewd and sexually suggestive comments, and offensive touching. The county refused to indemnify the male deputy, but he was able to obtain counsel paid for by his homeowners insurer. The federal court dismissed the claims of one of the federal plaintiffs, and the male deputy settled with the other two. The deputy and his insurer then filed this action against the county and others seeking indemnity for the amount the insurer paid in defending and settling the federal action. The trial judge granted summary judgment for the county, finding that the male deputy's conduct was outside the scope of his employment as a matter of law. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, reversed; the deputy's conduct was outside the scope of his employment and the county was not liable to indemnify him.

(a) Although most of the harassment took place on county jail premises during working hours while the deputies were on duty, plaintiff's conduct was motivated by personal reasons unrelated to guarding inmates or his other duties, and was in direct violation of the county's sexual harassment policy. (11 C.4th 1007.)

(b) Although sexual harassment is a pervasive problem in many fields of employment, this does not necessarily mean that, for respondeat superior purposes, it is foreseeable in a county jail. In determining whether a risk is "unusual or startling" so as to relieve an employer of respondeat superior liability, the inquiry should be whether the risk was one that may fairly be regarded as "typical of or broadly incidental to" the enterprise undertaken by the employer. It is not enough that a risk be neither unusual nor startling as a general matter; rather the risk must be evaluated in the context of the employer's particular enterprise. Even if the evidence showed that the use of profanity and sexually explicit language was not uncommon at the county jail, it fell far short of establishing that serious misconduct such as asking individual employees for sexual favors and targeting those individuals for inappropriate touching is either typical of or broadly incidental to the operation of a county jail or to the duties and tasks of deputy sheriffs. (11 C.4th 1008.)

(c) Plaintiff was the supervisor of only one of the female deputies, and his power over her was in no way comparable to the extraordinary power police officers exercise over members of the public. As emphasized in Mary M., police officers occupy a unique position of trust in our society. When officers abuse their authority by committing crimes against members of the community, they violate the public trust and may erode the community's confidence in the integrity of its police force. There was no parallel between the supervisory authority here and the formidable, official authority at issue in Mary M. Moreover, Mary M. did not suggest that an employer may be vicariously liable for an employee's misconduct whenever there is an abuse of a job-created, hierarchical relationship in which the employee is afforded a high degree of authority over the victim. Stressing quite clearly that its conclusion flowed from the unique authority vested in police officers, Mary M. distinguished but did not purport to overrule previous cases rejecting the application of respondeat superior for misconduct occurring in relationships of a hierarchical nature where, at least in the eyes of the victim, the wrongdoer's authority might be considered very great. (11 C.4th 1012.) (See Doe 1 v. Murrieta (2002) 102 C.A.4th 899, 906, 126 C.R.2d 213 [city was not vicariously liable to two boys who were sexually molested by advisor police officer during youth explorer program; following John R. and Farmers Ins. Group]; K.G. v. Riverside (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1374, 1379, 131 C.R.2d 762 [county was not vicariously liable when one of its deputy sheriffs sexually abused his stepdaughter, even though he threatened to use his authority as police officer against her if she did not cooperate or disclosed his criminal activities and even though abuse sometimes occurred while sheriff was in uniform or in patrol car]; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 772 [Farmers Ins. Group]; 30 U.S.F. L. Rev. 825 [same]; 37 U.S.F. L. Rev. 1091 [Doe 1 v. Murrieta].)

Fowler v. Howell (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1746, 50 C.R.2d 484, involved the issue whether a complaint of sexual harassment may be within the scope of a public employee's employment. Defendant public employee had accused plaintiff coworker of sexual harassment. After the State Personnel Board found that most of defendant's charges were untrue, plaintiff filed this action for malicious prosecution. However, he did not first file a timely claim, as required by Govt.C. 950.2 (3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §242) when the employee is acting within the scope of employment. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed. Govt.C. 12940(h) (now Govt.C. 12940(j); see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §922) requires an employer to prevent sexual harassment of one employee by another. "We hold as a matter of law that an employee who has been encouraged to complain and provided a procedure to complain of sexual harassment by a coworker acts within 'the scope of ... employment' by making such complaint." (42 C.A.4th 1751.) (See 18 California Lawyer 73 (November 1998) [investigating sexual harassment]; 34 Cal. Western L. Rev. 53 [what social sexual behavior is harassment]; 34 Cal. Western L. Rev. 457 [factors affecting employee perceptions and consequences of sexual harassment]; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 265 [sexual harassment in primary and secondary classrooms]; 50 Stanf. L. Rev. 523 [student peer sexual harassment]; 51 Stanf. L. Rev. 161 [proposal for unified theory of gender harassment].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

2. Liability for Torts of Employees.

d. Exception for Employee's Misrepresentation.

1. Immunity Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 241

[§ 241] Immunity Rule.

(1) In General. "A public entity is not liable for an injury caused by misrepresentation by an employee of the public entity, whether or not such misrepresentation be negligent or intentional." (Govt.C. 818.8.) This statute provides an absolute immunity from liability for misrepresentation of any sort. A similar immunity is provided to public employees by Govt.C. 822.2 (infra, §348), except that an employee may be held liable where guilty of actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 818.8.) (See Universal By-Products v. Modesto (1974) 43 C.A.3d 145, 153, 154, 117 C.R. 525 [while public employee is liable for actual fraud, public entity is wholly immune]; Grenell v. Hermosa Beach (1980) 103 C.A.3d 864, 873, 163 C.R. 315 [comparing Govt.C. 818.8 and 822.2]; Masters v. San Bernardino County Employees Retirement Assn. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 30, 42, 43, 37 C.R.2d 860 [although immunity of public employee under Govt.C. 822.2 for misrepresentation is qualified, immunity of public entity under Govt.C. 818.8 for misrepresentation by employee is absolute]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §10.38 et seq.)

(2) Illustrations. Govt.C. 818.8 is frequently applied. (See, e.g., Tokeshi v. California (1990) 217 C.A.3d 999, 1005, 1007, 266 C.R. 255 [county employee's advice to farmers to spray crops with pesticide that subsequently prevented them from harvesting or selling was within scope of Govt.C. 818.8]; Brown v. Compton Unified School Dist. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 114, 116, 80 C.R.2d 171 [school district, whose employee misrepresented that particular course satisfied NCAA requirements, thereby costing plaintiff basketball scholarship, was immune under Govt. C. 818.8, even if it owed duty to plaintiff].)

In Brown v. Los Angeles (1968) 267 C.A.2d 849, 73 C.R. 364, plaintiff lessee operated a massage parlor in a residential zone in Los Angeles. The city Department of Building and Safety notified her that this was illegal and should be discontinued. On several occasions, she sought to inspect zoning records but was only allowed to see the map. She discontinued the business and sued her lessor. In this suit, the records were subpoenaed and showed that a zoning variance for the property had been granted. She then sued the city. Held, defendant was immune; the erroneous demand that her activity had to be discontinued amounted to a misrepresentation under Govt.C. 818.8. (267 C.A.2d 850.)

In Harshbarger v. Colton (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1335, 243 C.R. 463, building inspectors employed by defendant city signed records stating that a house being built on plaintiffs' property complied with applicable building codes, even though they knew it did not. As a result of defects in construction, plaintiffs were required to spend $ 295,000 on reconstruction. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed; defendant was immune.

(a) Immunity and respondeat superior. Under Govt.C. 815.2 (supra, §237), a public entity is liable for injuries caused by the acts of an employee in the scope of employment, if the acts would give rise to a cause of action against the employee, and Govt.C. 822.2 makes a public employee liable for actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice. Plaintiffs argued that, under these statutes, defendant was liable for the fraudulent misrepresentations of its building inspectors. However, Govt.C. 818.8 provides a public entity with absolute immunity from liability for the negligent or intentional misrepresentations of its employees, and it is apparent that Govt.C. 822.2 applies only to a public employee, not to a public entity such as defendant. (197 C.A.3d 1340.)

(b) Suppression of fact. Plaintiffs argued that suppression of fact is not "misrepresentation," as that term is used in Govt.C. 818.8. However, the cases support the conclusion that intentional concealment of a material fact is equivalent to direct affirmative misrepresentation. (197 C.A.3d 1343.)

(3) Distinctions. In Arthur L. Sachs v. Oceanside (1984) 151 C.A.3d 315, 320, 321, 198 C.R. 483, the court pointed out that Govt.C. 818.8 gives immunity only from tort liability; under Govt.C. 814 (supra, §218), a contract action for rescission based on fraud of an employee may be brought against a public entity. (Cf. Janis v. California State Lottery Com. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 824, 829, 80 C.R.2d 549 [state lottery was immune from charge that it misrepresented legality of particular game; although complaint termed action one for recession of contract, action actually was one for fraud, and immunity of Govt.C. 818.8 applied].)

In Tallmadge v. Los Angeles (1987) 191 C.A.3d 251, 236 C.R. 338, plaintiff was arrested for unlawful possession of firearms, and the firearms were seized. He was convicted only of unlawful possession of machine guns, but by court order, both the machine guns and the other firearms were destroyed. In this action, he alleged that defendant deputy district attorney had represented to him that the other firearms would be returned, and that this representation was made to deceive and mislead him into not initiating legal process to get them. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant county and defendant district attorney. Held, reversed as to defendant county. The immunity of Govt.C. 818.8 would ordinarily bar the action; but the complaint, incorporating the claim form by reference, could be construed to state a cause of action for conversion. It alleged that the property was destroyed without prior notice to plaintiff, contrary to P.C. 1418. (191 C.A.3d 254.) (See dissent, 191 C.A.3d 256, arguing that complaint could not be so construed.)

In Jopson v. Feather River Air Quality Management Dist. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 492, 133 C.R.2d 506, because of a miscalculation, defendant air quality management district issued plaintiff more marketable emission reduction credits (ERCs) than plaintiff had actually earned in recognition of its reduced burning of agricultural waste. While sale of the inflated credits was pending, plaintiff received notification of the mistake, which caused the sale price to be reduced by $ 831,360. Plaintiff completed the sale and then sued defendant for negligence. However, on the basis of the misrepresentation immunity granted by Govt.C. 818.8, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary adjudication. Held, affirmed.

(a) Govt.C. 818.8 grants public entities immunity for negligent or intentional misrepresentation, but not for negligence. Here, plaintiff maintained that defendant's calculation of ERCs involved an operational task giving rise to a cause of action for negligence and not the communication of information, which would have involved a misrepresentation claim. However, every tort of negligent misrepresentation obviously involves both negligence and misrepresentation, and United States v. Neustadt (1961) 366 U.S. 696, 81 S.Ct. 1294, 6 L.Ed.2d 614, supra, §208, rejected the notion that the similar federal immunity statute (28 U.S.C., 2680(h)) does not apply when the gist of the claim lies in negligence underlying the inaccurate representation. Thus, merely distinguishing operational tasks from communication of information does not serve to clarify the scope of the immunity. (108 C.A.4th 495.)

(b) Defendant relied on a long line of California cases in which the courts, citing Neustadt, rejected the plaintiffs' attempts to evade the Govt.C. 818.8 immunity by characterizing the misconduct as something other than intentional or negligent misrepresentation. Essential to each claim was the plaintiff's reliance on misinformation communicated by the Government. (108 C.A.4th 498, citing Grenell and Harshbarger.)

(c) Plaintiff attempted to distinguish these cases, arguing that they addressed simple misrepresentations of existing facts as opposed to negligent performance of the technical operational tasks of identifying, calculating, and banking ERCs. This argument is without merit. The public entities in the cases cited by defendant did not simply act as conduits of information. In each case, the public entity took preliminary steps to ascertain information but, in doing so, either wrongfully or negligently obtained false information by either misapplying their own ordinances and rules to the relevant factual scenarios or failing to process applications properly. The same is true here. Defendant, by using an erroneous factor, also obtained false information. Like an inflated appraisal, an erroneous building inspection, a mistaken certificate of ownership, a false zoning report, or ill-advised instructions, the miscalculation of the ERCs constituted misinformation communicated by a governmental entity. Based on analogous facts in the cases cited by defendant, defendant is shielded from liability for having misrepresented the true fact that plaintiff had earned but a small percentage of the ERCs it was issued. (108 C.A.4th 499.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

2. Liability for Torts of Employees.

d. Exception for Employee's Misrepresentation.

2. Requirement of Commercial Relationship or Transaction.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 242

[§ 242] Requirement of Commercial Relationship or Transaction.

"Misrepresentation," as used in Govt.C. 818.8, is limited to "interferences with financial or commercial interest." (Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 800, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352; see Harshbarger v. Colton (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1335, 1341, 243 C.R. 463, supra, §241 [Johnson requirement was satisfied by allegation that building inspectors misrepresented that house conformed to building code, requiring homeowner's subsequent reconstruction]; Bastian v. San Luis Obispo (1988) 199 C.A.3d 520, 533, 245 C.R. 78, infra, §1080 [no immunity where complaint failed to allege interference with commercial or financial interest]; Lundeen Coatings Corp. v. Department of Water & Power (1991) 232 C.A.3d 816, 833, 283 C.R. 551 [quoting Johnson]; Burden v. Santa Clara (2000) 81 C.A.4th 244, 248, 96 C.R.2d 587 [misrepresentation as to terms of employment, causing plaintiff's relocation to another area and then his eventual return to original location, satisfied need for financial or commercial damage; Govt.C. 818.8 immunity applied to both common law claim and claim under Lab.C. 972, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §450].)

Connelly v. California (1970) 3 C.A.3d 744, 84 C.R. 257, is illustrative. Plaintiff, who operated marinas on the Sacramento River, periodically telephoned the State Department of Water Resources for anticipated changes in the level of the river during heavy rains. His complaint alleged that he called, was given erroneous information on which he set his docks to float, and a resulting rise caused extensive damage. Held, the misrepresentation immunity was inapplicable. The statute is concerned with misrepresentation affecting a financial or commercial interest. Here, although plaintiff suffered a commercial loss, it did not result from a commercial transaction with the state or from the state's interference with his commercial transactions; the complaint alleged a service gratuitously performed by the state in a negligent manner resulting in physical damage to property. (3 C.A.3d 752.) (See elaborate and forceful dissent, 3 C.A.3d 753.)

In Michael J. v. Los Angeles County Dept. of Adoptions (1988) 201 C.A.3d 859, 247 C.R. 504, a child was relinquished for adoption when he was born, and was subsequently adopted. Ten years later this action was brought by the minor and his adoptive parent. Plaintiffs alleged that defendant county had concealed the fact that the child was suffering from a congenital nerve disorder (Sturge-Weber Syndrome), and the complaint sought damages for emotional distress and past and future medical expenses. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the basis of Govt.C. 818.8. Held, reversed.

(a) The scope of immunity under Govt.C. 818.8 is limited; it generally provides immunity for interference with financial or commercial interests. (201 C.A.3d 868 et seq., discussing Johnson and Bastian.)

(b) "The adoption process is not a commercial transaction, such as leasing and purchasing property or contracting for a pension." (201 C.A.3d 872.) The immunity provided governmental entities and public employees by Govt.C. 818.8 and 822.2 does not shield defendant from liability for misrepresentation and deceit in the social service area. Although plaintiffs suffer a financial loss in the sense that they have incurred, and will continue to incur, substantial medical expenses, their loss does not result from a commercial transaction with defendant or from defendant's interference with a commercial transaction. (201 C.A.3d 872.)

(c) "Considerations of public policy support recognition of a cause of action against an adoption agency for intentional misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment in the adoption process." (201 C.A.3d 872.) An adoption agency cannot be made the guarantor of a child's future good health and should not be liable for mere negligence in providing information regarding the child's health. But here the evidence raised a triable issue of fact regarding the failure to disclose a material fact within the agency's possession that the examining physician would not render a prognosis for the child. The significance of that fact at the very least suggests that the nondisclosure was fraudulent. (201 C.A.3d 874.) (See 29 Golden Gate L. Rev. 181 [expanding adoption agency liability to include duties to investigate and to warn]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1761 [tort of "wrongful adoption"]; 29 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 167 [recovery of emotional distress damages in wrongful adoption cases]; 74 A.L.R.5th 1 [claims against adoption agencies where children have or develop mental or physical problems that are misrepresented or not disclosed].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
2. Liability for Torts of Employees.
e. Intentional Torts of Elected Officials.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 243

[§ 243] Intentional Torts of Elected Officials.

(1) In General. Govt.C. 815.3 provides specific rules governing the liability of public entities for intentional torts, other than defamation, of elected officials. The legislative intent is that elected officials assume full fiscal responsibility for intentional torts not directly related to their official duties for which the public entity may also be liable, while maintaining fair compensation for persons injured by this conduct. (Govt.C. 815.3(f).)

The statute does not apply to criminal or civil enforcement actions brought on behalf of the state by an elected district attorney, city attorney, or Attorney General. (Govt.C. 815.3(g); see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §9.16.)

(2) General Immunity of Public Entity Not Named As Codefendant. Unless the elected official and the public entity are named as codefendants in the same action, a public entity is not liable to a plaintiff for an intentional tort, other than defamation, committed by an elected official employed by or otherwise representing the entity. The term "intentional tort" includes, but is not limited to, harassment, sexual battery, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. And, to the extent permitted by federal law, harassment in violation of state or federal law also constitutes an intentional tort. (Govt.C. 815.3(a).)

(3) Tort Within Scope of Duties. If the public entity is named as a codefendant and the elected official is held liable for an intentional tort other than defamation, the trier of fact must determine if the tort arose from and was directly related to the official's performance of official duties. If the answer is in the affirmative, the public entity is liable for the judgment as provided by law. Employee managerial functions, but not acts or omissions constituting sexual harassment, are deemed to arise from, and to directly relate to, the official's official duties. (Govt.C. 815.3(b).)

(4) Tort Not Within Scope of Duties. If the public entity is named as a codefendant, the elected official is held liable for an intentional tort other than defamation, and the trier of fact determines the elected official's act or omission did not arise from and was not directly related to the performance of official duties, the plaintiff is required, on a final judgment, to first seek recovery of the judgment against the assets of the official. If the court determines that the official's assets are insufficient to satisfy the judgment, including plaintiff's costs as provided by law, it must determine the amount of the deficiency. The plaintiff may then seek to collect the remainder of the judgment from the public entity, which may pay the deficiency if it is otherwise authorized by law to do so. (Govt.C. 815.3(c).)

(5) Public Entity's Pursuit of Creditor's Remedies. To the extent that the public entity pays any portion of the judgment against the elected official or has expended defense costs in an action in which the trier of fact determines the official's action did not arise from and did not directly relate to the official's performance of official duties, the entity must pursue all available creditor's remedies against the official in indemnification, including garnishment, until the elected official has fully reimbursed the entity. (Govt.C. 815.3(d).)

(6) Appeal by Public Entity. If the public entity elects to appeal the judgment in an action brought under this statute, it must continue to provide a defense for the official until the case is finally adjudicated. (Govt.C. 815.3(e).)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
3. Liability for Torts of Independent Contractors.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 244

[§ 244] Liability for Torts of Independent Contractors.

The judicially recognized liability of an employer for torts of independent contractors under certain circumstances (see infra, §1236 et seq.) is codified as a basis of governmental liability. "A public entity is liable for injury proximately caused by a tortious act or omission of an independent contractor of the public entity to the same extent that the public entity would be subject to such liability if it were a private person." (Govt.C. 815.4; see O'Gan v. King City Joint Union High School Dist. (1970) 3 C.A.3d 641, 645, 83 C.R. 795 [nondelegable duty; negligent installation of sink in school restroom]; Foster v. San Luis Obispo (1993) 14 C.A.4th 668, 672, 17 C.R.2d 730 [county was not liable for negligence of attorney it appointed, as independent contractor, to represent indigent; county's duty extended only to appointment of licensed attorney, not to his subsequent performance]; Bostrom v. San Bernardino (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1654, 1665, 42 C.R.2d 669 [county was not liable for negligence of employee of aviation service company that leased land at county airport in absence of showing that lease gave rise to employer-independent contractor relationship].)

However, nothing in the statute "subjects a public entity to liability for the act or omission of an independent contractor if the public entity would not have been liable for the injury had the act or omission been that of an employee of the public entity." (Govt.C. 815.4; see 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1762.)

The mere issuance of a permit by a public entity to a contractor who is actually employed by a private individual does not make the entity liable under the statute. (Stanford v. Ontario (1972) 6 C.3d 870, 879, 101 C.R. 97, 495 P.2d 425, infra, §271.)

Governmental liability in these circumstances is treated in detail in the discussion of employers' liability for independent contractors' torts generally. (See infra, §1236 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Under Govt.C. 815.4, a public entity may be liable under the retained control doctrine (see text, §1241) for injury to an employee of an independent contractor hired by the public entity if the injury is proximately caused by the tortious act or omission of the independent contractor. (McCarty v. Department of Trans. (2008) 164 C.A.4th 955, 976, 79 C.R.3d 777.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

4. Failure To Discharge Mandatory Duty.

a. Statutory Rule of Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 245

[§ 245] Statutory Rule of Liability.

(1) In General. "Where a public entity is under a mandatory duty imposed by an enactment that is designed to protect against the risk of a particular kind of injury, the public entity is liable for an injury of that kind proximately caused by its failure to discharge the duty unless the public entity establishes that it exercised reasonable diligence to discharge the duty." (Govt.C. 815.6; see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §9.25 et seq.; BAJI, No. 11.52; CACI, No. 423.) The negligence per se doctrine of Ev.C. 669, which is analogous and relates to statutory violations by tortfeasors generally, is treated elsewhere in this chapter. (See infra, §871 et seq.)

The term "enactment" includes an ordinance or regulation. (Govt.C. 810.6, supra, §220.) However, an agreement between a city and county for development of a particular area does not come within Govt.C. 815.6. (Dateline Builders v. Santa Rosa (1983) 146 C.A.3d 520, 528, 194 C.R. 258.) The same conclusion has been reached as to an internal order or guideline, not adopted pursuant to statutory authority and therefore not a regulation with the force of law. (Posey v. California (1986) 180 C.A.3d 836, 847, 849, 225 C.R. 830 [internal guideline of California Highway Patrol]; People v. Superior Court (Wilson) (1993) 18 C.A.4th 31, 38, 22 C.R.2d 110 [highway patrol order requiring, under specific circumstances, request that DMV reexamine person's driving ability is not duly adopted administrative regulation or otherwise "enactment" within meaning of Govt.C. 815.6].)

(2) Elements of Liability. Govt.C. 815.6 contains a three-part test for determining whether liability may be imposed on a public entity: (a) An enactment must impose a mandatory, not discretionary, duty. (b) The enactment must intend to protect against the kind of risk of injury suffered by the party asserting Govt.C. 815.6 as a basis for liability. (c) Breach of the mandatory duty must be a proximate cause of the injury suffered. (California v. Superior Court (Perry) (1984) 150 C.A.3d 848, 854, 197 C.R. 914.) In this case, plaintiffs alleged that they filed complaints with the Real Estate Commissioner concerning irregularities in a licensee's handling of money entrusted to him, and that the commissioner in one instance failed to investigate, and in another, investigated and found irregularities but never informed plaintiffs of his findings. The court held that a mandatory duty to investigate was imposed by B. & P.C. 10176, and that the statute was intended to protect against the risk of injury suffered here (unlawful appropriation of funds by the licensee). (150 C.A.3d 854, 855, 856.) However, proximate cause was not shown. The commissioner has a mandatory duty to investigate; the steps he may take--e.g., proceedings to suspend or revoke the license--are discretionary. (150 C.A.3d 857, 858.)

Each of these elements must be present. Just because a statute creates a mandatory public duty does not mean that it also creates a private cause of action for its violation. In Haggis v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 490, 93 C.R.2d 327, 993 P.2d 983, defendant city ordered the owner of the property in a coastal bluff area to correct hazardous slide conditions existing on the property but failed to record notice of the conditions, as required by ordinance. Plaintiff subsequently purchased the property without knowledge of these conditions. When the home was destroyed in a landslide, plaintiff sued for damages under Govt.C. 815.6. Held, dismissal of action affirmed. Govt.C. 815.6 is inapplicable because the enactment creating the duty here was not designed to protect against the type of injury suffered.

(a) For liability under Govt.C. 815.6, the enactment at issue must be obligatory, rather than merely discretionary or permissive, in its directions to the public entity; it must require, rather than merely authorize or permit, that a particular action be taken or not taken. Equally important, however, is the requirement that the mandatory duty be designed to protect against the particular kind of injury the plaintiff suffered. Judicial inquiry in this regard goes to the legislative purpose of imposing the duty. That the enactment confers some benefit on the class to which plaintiff belongs is not enough; if the benefit is only incidental to the enactment's protective purpose, the enactment cannot serve as a predicate for liability under Govt.C. 815.6. (22 C.4th 498.)

(b) Defendant's contention that the enactment must expressly manifest the enacting body's intent to create a private right of action cannot be sustained. Whenever an enactment establishes a mandatory governmental duty and is designed to protect against the particular kind of injury the plaintiff suffered, Govt.C. 815.6 provides that the public entity is liable for an injury proximately caused by its negligent failure to discharge the duty. It is Govt.C. 815.6, not the predicate enactment, that creates the private right of action. So long as the predicate enactment is of a type that supplies the elements of liability under Govt.C. 815.6, liability lies against the public entity, regardless of whether private recovery liability would have been permitted, in the absence of Govt.C. 815.6, under the predicate enactment alone. (22 C.4th 499.)

(c) The difficult question here is whether the ordinance was designed to protect against the particular kind of injury that plaintiff suffered. Plaintiff alleges that, had defendant recorded the required certificate, he would not have purchased the property and would therefore not have suffered the damages alleged. This, plaintiff contends, was the exact injury the ordinance's recordation requirement was designed to prevent by putting future purchasers (and others involved in property purchases, such as lenders and title companies) on notice of the instability. This is incorrect. The recordation requirement was designed not for the benefit of prospective purchasers, but as leverage to compel compliance with an order to comply. The requirement is simply an enforcement tool designed as protection for the general public as a whole against the effects of improper construction, rather than as protection against economic losses by purchasers or lenders. Its purpose is to encourage the landowner to undertake necessary stabilization work, for if he or she does not do so, a recorded certificate of substandard condition will seriously impair the value of the property for possible sale or security. True, the recordation also may provide warning to potential purchasers and lenders (assuming what has not been demonstrated, that the recorded notice would be disclosed by a standard title search), but that effect is merely incidental to the ordinance's enforcement goals. The ordinance exists to protect the public against unsafe building and land conditions, not to regulate the marketing of real estate. (22 C.4th 502.)

West's Key Number Digest, States k.112.1(1), 112.2(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

What constitutes "enactment": See Tilton v. Reclamation Dist. No. 800 (2006) 142 C.A.4th 848, 862, 48 C.R.3d 366 [United States Army Corps of Engineers manual was not "enactment" within meaning of Govt.C. 810.6; manual did not impose mandatory duty on reclamation district to prevent leakage of levees that would support tort liability for alleged real property damage].

(2) Elements of Liability.

Enactment must impose mandatory duty: See Shamsian v. Department of Conservation (2006) 136 C.A.4th 621, 633, 39 C.R.3d 62 [mere statement of legislative intent does not impose mandatory duty on which liability may be based]; Department of Corps. v. Superior Court (2007) 153 C.A.4th 916, 931, 63 C.R.3d 624 [even where statute includes mandatory language, other factors may indicate that apparent obligatory language was not intended to foreclose exercise of discretion]; In re Groundwater Cases (2007) 154 C.A.4th 659, 691, 64 C.R.3d 827 [recitations of legislative goals and policies do not establish mandatory duties].

Enactment must be intended to protect against kind of risk of injury suffered: See Tilton v. Reclamation Dist. No. 800, supra, 142 C.A.4th 861 [plaintiff must show that particular injury is one of consequences that enacting body sought to prevent by imposing mandatory duty; that enactment confers incidental benefit on class to which plaintiff belongs is not enough].

Under Govt.C. 815.6, public entities will be held liable for injuries to the kinds of interests that have been protected by the courts in actions between private persons. (N.V. Heathorn v. San Mateo (2005) 126 C.A.4th 1526, 1533, 25 C.R.3d 400 [definition of "injury" for purposes of Govt.C. 815.6 is that set forth in Govt.C. 810.8, i.e., injury that would be actionable if inflicted by private person (see text, §220)].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

4. Failure To Discharge Mandatory Duty.

b. Illustrations Finding Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 246

[§ 246] Illustrations Finding Liability.

A number of decisions have found a mandatory duty on which governmental liability may be predicated:

Thompson v. Lake Elsinore (1993) 18 C.A.4th 49, 58, 22 C.R.2d 344 [once defendant city determined that plaintiff's building complied with all regulations, issuance of certificate of occupancy was mandatory act].

Davila v. Los Angeles (1996) 50 C.A.4th 137, 140, 57 C.R.2d 651 [coroner had mandatory statutory duty to make diligent attempts to locate decedent's family; duty was designed, in part, to prevent unwanted cremation].

Walt Rankin & Associates v. Murrieta (2000) 84 C.A.4th 605, 612, 101 C.R.2d 48 [under statutory scheme requiring payment bond as condition of award of public contract, public entity had mandatory duty to require surety to be admitted surety insurer or to confirm sufficiency of surety prior to accepting bond].

Roe v. California (2001) 94 C.A.4th 64, 73, 113 C.R.2d 900 [breach of confidentiality clause of agreement settling disciplinary proceeding violated numerous statutes and regulations, and was thus violation of mandatory duty, not merely of private agreement].

In Ramos v. Madera (1971) 4 C.3d 685, 94 C.R. 421, 484 P.2d 93, plaintiffs, recipients of state aid for dependent children, brought a class action for declaratory relief and for damages for individual plaintiffs. The complaint alleged that the county closed schools to permit pupils to assist in the grape harvest; that they notified welfare recipients that those 10 years of age or older must work in the fields or have their assistance terminated; and that 19 families suffered this penalty for failure to send children into the fields. Held, a cause of action was stated. Even if the county and agents had discretion to establish additional requirements of eligibility, the Labor Code forbids employment of minors under 16 except under conditions not complied with here. And a public entity may be liable in tort "where it knows or should know that its failure to exercise its duty to reasonably supervise employees will result in coercing others to violate state laws, and where such violation proximately results in an injury of the kind which the law was designed to prevent." (4 C.3d 695.) The entities are conclusively presumed to have knowledge of these statutes. And they have a mandatory duty "not to coerce others--either by force or by a threatened withdrawal of life-sustaining aid--to violate state laws, whether or not the entity is specifically charged with enforcing that particular law. Nor does any employee have 'discretion' to coerce California citizens to break the law." (4 C.3d 696.) (See 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 624 [Ramos and other possible bases of liability for improper administration of welfare statutes].)

In Sullivan v. Los Angeles (1974) 12 C.3d 710, 117 C.R. 241, 527 P.2d 865, plaintiff was charged with several misdemeanors and felonies, was sentenced to jail for one misdemeanor on a guilty plea, and served the time. The other pending charges were dismissed, and pursuant to P.C. 1384, plaintiff was entitled to a discharge from custody. But the superior court neglected to issue a release order, and plaintiff remained in jail for about 10 days until freed after writing a letter to the court. In this action for false imprisonment against the county, the lower court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. Held, reversed; a cause of action was stated. Because P.C. 1384 imposes a mandatory duty to release a defendant from jail on dismissal of all charges against him, Govt.C. 815.6 applies, under plaintiff's allegation (accepted in this attack on pleadings) that the sheriff knew or in the exercise of due care should have known that the charges had been dismissed. (12 C.3d 715.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 602.)

In Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 84 C.R. 27, plaintiff, declared a dependent child by the juvenile court, was placed in a foster home conducted by H. The complaint alleged negligence of defendant county, its Department of Social Welfare, and its Probation Department in certifying and supervising H, with the result that plaintiff was subjected to physical abuse in the home. Held, a cause of action was stated. The court rejected arguments based on various statutory immunities: (a) discretionary acts (infra, §351 et seq.); (b) failure to enforce a law (infra, §286); (c) failure to revoke a permit or license (infra, §287); and (d) failure to inspect property (infra, §288). Here, the theory was failure to perform mandatory duties of supervision required by state regulations, and the complaint alleged deficiencies in operators of the foster home, not physical inadequacies in it. (3 C.A.3d 1059.) (See 90 A.L.R.3d 1214 [governmental tort liability for social service agency's negligence in placement of children or supervision after placement].)

In Bradford v. California (1973) 36 C.A.3d 16, 111 C.R. 852, plaintiff was convicted of a sex offense, requiring registration as a sex offender under P.C. 290. He was placed on probation, and once he fulfilled the conditions, the proceeding was dismissed under P.C. 1203.4. The dismissal relieved him of all penalties and disabilities, including the duty to register as a sex offender; and P.C. 11116.6 and 11117 require appropriate record entries of the dismissal by state employees. In this action, plaintiff alleged that the entries were not made; that he was arrested for failure to register, booked, fingerprinted, and required to obtain bail and an attorney before securing a dismissal of the charge. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed. The statutory requirement of entry of the dismissal was designed to prevent the very type of harm plaintiff alleged. (36 C.A.3d 21.)

In Trewin v. California (1984) 150 C.A.3d 975, 198 C.R. 263, plaintiff alleged that the Department of Motor Vehicles issued a driver's license to W, age 87, with knowledge of his diminished capacity and the danger of driving; that this was a violation of its duty under former Veh.C. 12805(e) (now Veh.C. 12805(d)) to deny a license to a person unable to operate a vehicle safely because of disability; and that W, after jumping a divider in a road and driving on the wrong side, collided with plaintiff's vehicle and caused serious injuries. Held, a cause of action was stated. Papelian v. California (1976) 65 C.A.3d 958, 135 C.R. 665, and other cases finding the DMV not liable under similar circumstances (see supra, §287) are distinguishable in that the complaints there did not specifically allege that the DMV had determined beforehand that it was unsafe to issue a license because of the driver's physical handicaps. The statute creates a mandatory duty not to issue a license once the department decides that the person cannot drive safely. (150 C.A.3d 980, 981.)

In Braman v. California (1994) 28 C.A.4th 344, 33 C.R.2d 608, plaintiff's husband was detained under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf.C. 5000 et seq.) as a person dangerous to himself or others. Shortly after his release, he purchased a pistol and killed himself. Plaintiff then instituted this action against defendant state, alleging that it had breached its mandatory duty under P.C. 12076 to conduct an investigation to determine the decedent's eligibility to purchase a firearm. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) P.C. 12076 imposes a mandatory duty of inspection on the Department of Justice with respect to would-be purchasers of firearms capable of being concealed. Under P.C. 12076(k), the department's investigation remains discretionary only if directed at the purchasers of firearms other than pistols, revolvers, or other weapons capable of being concealed on the person. In other words, the Legislature has made investigation mandatory. P.C. 12076(d) specifies that, in determining eligibility to purchase a firearm, the department must examine its own records, as well as those records that it is authorized to request from the state Department of Mental Health. (28 C.A.4th 350, 351.)

(b) Defendant argues that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because P.C. 12076 was not intended to protect against suicide. However, P.C. 12076 requires an investigation to determine if the purchaser is a person described in Welf.C. 8103, and that statute includes any person taken into custody not only because the person is a danger to others, but also because the person is a danger to himself or herself. (28 C.A.4th 355.)

In Scott v. Los Angeles (1994) 27 C.A.4th 125, 32 C.R.2d 643, defendant county was held liable, under Govt.C. 815.6, for failing to fulfill the mandatory duty imposed by a state regulation requiring social workers to make monthly visits to foster children and foster parents. Relying on the provision in Govt.C. 815.6 precluding liability if the public entity exercised "reasonable diligence to discharge the duty," defendant argued that it could have established reasonable diligence had it not been precluded from presenting evidence of its extreme budgetary limitations, which, it contended, prevented its employees from fully and literally complying with regulatory requirements. Held, exclusion of this evidence was proper.

(a) Exclusion of evidence of budgetary limitations was proper because the evidence is irrelevant. The financial limitations of governments have never been, and cannot be, an excuse for a public employee's failure to comply with mandatory duties imposed by law. (27 C.A.4th 146, citing Robbins v. Superior Court (1985) 38 C.3d 199, 211 C.R. 398, 695 P.2d 695, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §602; Wallace v. Los Angeles (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1385, 16 C.R.2d 113, infra, §291.)

(b) Although Welf.C. 10001(a) makes the provision of public social services subject to "the limits of public resources," "sound public policy precludes delegating to individual public employees the determination of the manner in which limited resources are to be utilized, particularly where specific statutes or regulations state specific requirements." (27 C.A.4th 146, citing Ramos.)

(c) Policies for the supervision of children in foster care, including the requirements for the frequency of home visits to these children, are established at the state level by Department of Social Services regulations. "Local governments and their employees have the merely ministerial duty of carrying out these requirements. If the requirements cannot be fulfilled with funding available to a local agency, the agency must address its concerns to those with the authority to set policy, not to the courts by way of excusing violations of mandatory requirements." (27 C.A.4th 146.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
The following case is likewise illustrative of those finding liability:

N.V. Heathorn v. San Mateo (2005) 126 C.A.4th 1526, 1531, 25 C.R.3d 400 [unpaid subcontractor on public project had cause of action under Govt.C. 815.6 against public entity that failed to discharge its statutory duty to obtain payment bond from original contractor, which went bankrupt].

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

4. Failure To Discharge Mandatory Duty.

c. Illustrations Finding No Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 247

[§ 247] Illustrations Finding No Liability.

A number of decisions have found that there was no mandatory duty, no intention to protect against the kind of injury suffered, or no proximate causation of the injury by breach of the duty:

Nunn v. California (1984) 35 C.3d 616, 624, 200 C.R. 440, 667 P.2d 846 [statute prohibiting private security guards from carrying or using firearms unless they completed course of training was enacted to protect the public, not security guard while on duty].

Creason v. Department of Health Services (1998) 18 C.4th 623, 630, 76 C.R.2d 489, 957 P.2d 1323 [duty to devise accurate testing and reporting standards for hypothyroidism is discretionary, not mandatory, duty; defendant was tested, but results were not reported to his parents and physician because he did not meet specifications requiring reporting].

Hoff v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1998) 19 C.4th 925, 937, 80 C.R.2d 811, 968 P.2d 522, infra, §328 [Educ.C. 44807 (infra, §321), stating teacher's duty to supervise student's coming and going, was enacted to protect students and did not provide basis for liability of school district to nonstudent injured by student's driving].

Haggis v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 490, 502, 93 C.R.2d 327, 993 P.2d 983, supra, §245 [no cause of action by buyer of unstable property against city that had failed to record certificate of substandard condition as required by ordinance; ordinance's purpose was to protect general public against effects of improper construction, rather than to protect purchasers or lenders against economic losses].

Smith v. Alameda County Social Services Agency (1979) 90 C.A.3d 929, 940, 153 C.R. 712, supra, §9 [no cause of action for alleged negligence of adoption agency in failing to obtain adopting parents for hard-to-place child].

Keech v. Berkeley Unified School Dist. (1984) 162 C.A.3d 464, 470, 210 C.R. 7 [Educ.C. 56000 et seq., on special education for eligible handicapped children, are designed to attain stated educational goals, and do not impose mandatory duty to protect parents from expense of hospital treatment of disturbed children].

Fox v. Fresno (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1238, 1241, 1243, 216 C.R. 879 [Health & Saf.C. 17980, authorizing abatement of nuisances, does not impose mandatory duty on county to abate fire hazard, and county was not liable for damage caused by fire].

Ibarra v. California Coastal Com. (1986) 182 C.A.3d 687, 692, 227 C.R. 371 [California Coastal Act (Pub.Res.C. 30000 et seq.) does not impose mandatory duty on Commission either to adopt policy denying permits for septic tank installation in specified area or to require county to abolish septic tank system; commission was not liable for damages from landslides].

Tirpak v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 639, 643, 232 C.R. 61 [procedural provisions of Education Code dealing with suspension and expulsion of students do not give rise to actionable tort against school district].

First Interstate Bank v. California (1987) 197 C.A.3d 627, 636, 243 C.R. 8 [Former Educ.C. 81836, requiring community college chancellor to establish standards for facilities, was not intended to protect against community college district's default on financing agreement].

Brenneman v. California (1989) 208 C.A.3d 812, 818, 256 C.R. 363 [parole procedures manual, which granted Department of Corrections considerable discretion in deciding how to supervise parolees, did not impose mandatory duty to choose one course over another].

California v. Superior Court (Ushana D.) (1992) 8 C.A.4th 954, 958, 10 C.R.2d 527 [Educ.C. 44346 (grounds for denial of teaching credential) does not create private cause of action for failure to deny teaching credential to convicted sex offender].

Zolin v. Superior Court (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1157, 1162, 23 C.R.2d 871 [although Veh.C. 11205 requires DMV to publish list of licensed traffic violator schools, purpose is to aid courts and traffic violators, not to provide schools with equal competition; hence, school left off list had no cause of action under Govt.C. 815.6].

Washington v. Contra Costa (1995) 38 C.A.4th 890, 896, 45 C.R.2d 646 [county was not liable under Govt.C. 815.6 for failure to adequately regulate chemical company that released hazardous materials into atmosphere, where plaintiffs alleged general duty of county to protect them under Health and Safety Code, but failed to show specific statute that county violated].

Janis v. California State Lottery Com. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 824, 831, 80 C.R.2d 549 [breach of statute enacted to prevent false advertising of lottery games could not be basis for claim against state lottery for injury caused not by advertising, but by nature of game in question].

Trinkle v. California State Lottery (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1198, 1202, 84 C.R.2d 496 [state lottery was not liable to plaintiff vending machine operator for allowing illegal games that diverted funds from plaintiff; false advertising legislation was enacted to protect public, not gaming operators].

Becerra v. Santa Cruz (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1450, 1458, 81 C.R.2d 165 [to extent that Welf.C. 16501.1(c), regarding out-of-home placement of children, imposes mandatory duty, it requires county to weigh various factors before placing child, but does not mandate specific result; thus, where county made required assessment, it could not be successfully sued on basis of result reached].

Sutherland v. Fort Bragg (2000) 86 C.A.4th 13, 19, 102 C.R.2d 736 [despite use of some mandatory language, overall effect of duty imposed on city to review building permit applications was discretionary; even if duty was mandatory, its purpose was aesthetic and scenic, not to preserve access to light and air from adjoining lots].

Wilson v. San Diego (2001) 91 C.A.4th 974, 979, 111 C.R.2d 173 [Welf.C. 300.2, which states legislative goals and policies of juvenile dependency law, did not impose mandatory duty on children's center to prevent juvenile placed there in protective custody from running away].

Landeros v. Department of Corrections (2002) 99 C.A.4th 271, 274, 120 C.R.2d 867 [Government could not be sued for failing to discharge mandatory duty to comply with prevailing wage law where injury alleged was not within Tort Claims Act; following Aubry v. Tri-City Hosp. Dist. (1992) 2 C.4th 962, 9 C.R.2d 92, 831 P.2d 317, supra, §220, and distinguishing Walt Rankin & Associates v. Murrieta (2000) 84 C.A.4th 605, 101 C.R.2d 48, supra, §246].

Forbes v. San Bernardino (2002) 101 C.A.4th 48, 53, 123 C.R.2d 721 [state did not fail to discharge mandatory duty, where court records of prior action were destroyed; statutes imposed duty on trial courts and clerks to preserve court records, not on state].

Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Terrell R.) (2002) 102 C.A.4th 627, 639, 125 C.R.2d 637 [statutes and regulations relevant to issues showed preference for placing children with relatives, but did not make that placement mandatory].

In Williams v. California (1976) 62 C.A.3d 960, 133 C.R. 539, plaintiff, an applicant for welfare aid, sued the Director of the State Department of Benefit Payments, alleging that he had failed to issue a final decision within 60 days from the date of request for a fair hearing (as required by law), and that as a result of that delay, plaintiff had suffered emotional distress. Held, no cause of action was stated. In Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246; Ramos v. Madera (1971) 4 C.3d 685, 94 C.R. 421, 484 P.2d 93, supra, §246; Bradford v. California (1973) 36 C.A.3d 16, 111 C.R. 852, supra, §246; and Elson v. Public Util. Com. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 577, 124 C.R. 305, infra, §248, liability was based on "the failure to perform a duty clearly designed to protect against the risk of the particular kind of injury for which damages were sought." (62 C.A.3d 969.) The purpose of the requirement of a prompt decision by the director was to assure timely relief to persons who request hearings; but this is only one step in the statutory proceedings to obtain benefits, and there is no assurance that they will be received even on the rendition of a favorable decision by the director. (62 C.A.3d 970.) In other words, the mandatory duty was not to act by awarding benefits to plaintiff; hence, the injury of which plaintiff complained was not "the particular kind of injury that the failure to render a decision would necessarily cover." (62 C.A.3d 969.) (See Novoa v. Ventura (1982) 133 C.A.3d 137, 144, 145, 183 C.R. 736 [following Williams; failure of county agencies to make reasonable efforts to locate plaintiff father and give him notice of juvenile court proceedings that deprived him of custody of his children for period of time].)

In Shelton v. Westminster (1982) 138 C.A.3d 610, 188 C.R. 205, plaintiffs' son was found dead shortly after plaintiffs filed a missing persons report with defendant city's police department, but he was listed by defendant's officials as an unknown person, and plaintiffs were not informed that he was their son until 8 months later. In this action for damages against defendant city, plaintiffs alleged that the city's failure to obtain their son's dental record pursuant to former P.C. 11114 (now P.C. 14200 et seq.) and forward it to the Department of Justice in a timely manner caused them investigation expense, grief and sorrow, emotional distress, and medical expense. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) There was no failure to discharge a mandatory duty. P.C. 11114 did not charge any specific person or body with a duty, but assigned various duties at various levels of government. (138 C.A.3d 614, 615.)

(b) The creation of a new cause of action by determining that a duty is owed depends on considerations of public policy, and the major factors to be considered are those set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. (138 C.A.3d 616, 617.) Liability has been imposed where the duty was clearly designed to protect against the risk of the particular kind of injury for which damages were sought. (138 C.A.3d 618, 619, 620, citing Williams, and similar cases.) Here, the direct cause of plaintiffs' suffering was the act of the murderer; the failure to request dental records with resultant delay in identification was not even a remote cause. (138 C.A.3d 618.)

Shelton was followed in Bock v. Los Angeles (1983) 150 C.A.3d 65, 197 C.R. 470, holding that the statutes relating to the coroner (Govt.C. 27460 et seq.) do not impose a mandatory duty to identify a body for the benefit of next of kin. (150 C.A.3d 69, 70.) However, the court reversed a judgment on demurrer in order to permit plaintiff to amend to allege a voluntary assumption of the duty, thereby creating a special relationship calling for due care in carrying out the duty (see infra, §1038). (150 C.A.3d 72, 73.)

P.C. 647(f) makes it a misdemeanor for a person to be found intoxicated in a public place, and P.C. 647(g) provides that a police officer must place such a person in protective custody for treatment under Welf.C. 5170. In Stout v. Porterville (1983) 148 C.A.3d 937, 196 C.R. 301, plaintiff alleged that he was walking on the street while intoxicated, that defendant police officer stopped and questioned him but did not place him in custody, and that he was struck by a vehicle and injured. Held, there was no breach of mandatory duty. The dangers of the street are dealt with in P.C. 647(f); minimizing them is not the purpose of subdivision P.C. 647(g); hence, the kind of harm plaintiff incurred is not covered in subdivision P.C. 647(g); i.e., it is not its purpose to create a cause of action in the inebriate. (148 C.A.3d 947.)

In MacDonald v. California (1991) 230 C.A.3d 319, 281 C.R. 317, plaintiff child, 22 months old, was injured when his day care provider burned his hands in scalding water. The complaint was brought against the day care provider and the state and county, on the theory that the Child Day Care Facilities Act (Health & Saf.C. 1596.70 et seq.) imposed a mandatory duty on the public entities and created a private right of action. Held, judgment on the pleadings for these defendants affirmed.

(a) The statement in Health & Saf.C. 1597.30(a) that the Legislature "has a responsibility to insure the health and safety of children in family homes that provide day care" is a general declaration of policy goals, and does not create a mandatory duty. (230 C.A.3d 330.) And the requirements for licensing of day care providers are generally considered discretionary; they do not create privately enforceable mandatory duties. (230 C.A.3d 330.) The requirement that the state or its delegatee establish procedures for handling complaints, including a site visit, likewise involves some exercise of discretion; and a mandatory duty to investigate is not the same as a mandatory duty to take action after the investigation. (230 C.A.3d 331.)

(b) With respect to the statute's scope of protection against the kind of injury suffered, Tirpak v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist., supra, furnishes an instructive answer: The court concluded that certain administrative provisions of the Education Code were intended to attain legislative goals, not to create private causes of action for damages for breach. (230 C.A.3d 331.)

(c) Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246, is distinguishable. Placing dependent children in licensed foster homes is different in kind and degree from licensing and related inspection duties with regard to family day care homes. (230 C.A.3d 333.)

(d) There was no special relationship between plaintiff and the public entities to give rise to a legal duty (see infra, §1038). They did not engage in any affirmative acts placing plaintiff in peril or increasing the risk of harm to him; there was no heightened duty of care to plaintiff based on his individualized placement in a position of peril; and requiring a public entity to enforce regulations designed to promote safety does not make the agency an insurer of safety. (230 C.A.3d 334.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
The following cases are likewise illustrative of those finding no liability:

Shamsian v. Department of Conservation (2006) 136 C.A.4th 621, 632, 39 C.R.3d 62 [action against Department of Conservation and department officials under Govt.C. 815.6 could not be based on alleged violation of Beverage Container Recycling and Litter Reduction Act in failing to provide recycling opportunities; provision of Act imposing responsibility on department to provide these opportunities was mere statement of legislative intent and imposed no mandatory duty].

Tilton v. Reclamation Dist. No. 800 (2006) 142 C.A.4th 848, 862, 48 C.R.3d 366 [regulation that related only to construction and design of levees, but not their subsequent maintenance, did not impose mandatory duty on reclamation district to maintain levees so as to prevent leakage of levees that caused real property damage].

Department of Corps. v. Superior Court (2007) 153 C.A.4th 916, 931, 63 C.R.3d 624 [Department of Corporations was immune from liability arising from rescission of desist and refrain orders against brokers alleged to have subsequently sold fraudulent securities; language of governing enactment appeared mandatory but was within statutory framework that entrusted action to be taken to commissioner's sound judgment, expertise, and discretion].

In re Groundwater Cases (2007) 154 C.A.4th 659, 687, 64 C.R.3d 827 [public entity water purveyors were not liable for providing allegedly contaminated water to consumers; enactments allegedly creating mandatory duties either granted discretion or expressed objectives rather than duties].

de Villers v. San Diego (2007) 156 C.A.4th 238, 256, 67 C.R.3d 253 [employee of county office of medical examiner stole drugs and used them to poison her husband; any violation of 21 C.F.R., §1301.71, which requires effective steps to safeguard drugs against theft, was not basis of liability of county for wrongful death; regulation did not impose mandatory duty to guarantee against theft and was not designed to protect against this type of injury].

California Highway Patrol v. Superior Court (2008) 162 C.A.4th 1144, 1150, 76 C.R.3d 578 [impoundment of vehicle after arrest for driving with suspended license under Veh.C. 14602.6 is discretionary, not mandatory; officers who did not impound car after arrest were not liable for death of driver killed in collision shortly after arrestee was released].

Clark v. Optical Coating Laboratory (2008) 165 C.A.4th 150, 179, 80 C.R.3d 812 [water board's cleanup and abatement order, based on reports of soil contamination and hazardous leaks threatening water supply, did not trigger mandatory duty of board's employees to disclose discharge or threat of discharge under Health & Saf.C. 25180.7(b); statute requires knowledge, not mere reasonable suspicion, that discharge or threat is likely to cause substantial injury to public health or safety].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

4. Failure To Discharge Mandatory Duty.

d. Availability of Immunities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 248

[§ 248] Availability of Immunities.

(1) Employee Immunities Are Not Applicable. The immunities applicable to employees (see infra, §345 et seq.) are not applicable in suits for failure to discharge a mandatory duty. Public entity liability under Govt.C. 815.6 is not subject to the general rule of Govt.C. 815.2(b) that a public entity is entitled to the benefit of applicable employee immunities. It is not a defense under Govt.C. 821.6 that the entity could not be vicariously liable under Govt.C. 815.2(a) (supra, §237). The statutory liabilities are cumulative, and "the fact that derivative liability under section 815.2 may be nullified by an employee immunity in no way affects direct liability based on section 815.6." (Bradford v. California (1973) 36 C.A.3d 16, 21, 111 C.R. 852, supra, §246.)

(2) Immunities for Legislative or Enforcement Inaction or Licensing Action or Inaction Are Not Applicable. The immunities for legislative or quasi-legislative inaction or failure to enforce a law (Govt.C. 818.2; see infra, §286) and for action or inaction on a license (Govt.C. 818.4; see infra, §287) are inapplicable in suits for failure to discharge a mandatory duty.

In Elson v. Public Util. Com. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 577, 124 C.R. 305, plaintiff alleged that defendant Public Utilities Commission by general order required passenger stage corporations to carry liability insurance; that a bus company had no liability insurance or assets to satisfy a judgment; that defendant, with knowledge of the facts, failed to perform its mandatory statutory duty to enforce its order by revocation of the bus company's operating authority; and that plaintiff, injured by a negligently driven stage of the bus company, recovered a judgment against it that could not be satisfied. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed; a cause of action was stated.

(a) The judicial and legislative history shows that the immunity under Govt.C. 818.4 for action or inaction on a license is only for discretionary activities. (51 C.A.3d 587, 588.) The complaint alleged a mandatory duty (51 C.A.3d 581), and Govt.C. 818.4 immunity did not exist (51 C.A.3d 589).

(b) The same is true of the immunity under Govt.C. 818.2 for legislative or quasi-legislative inaction or failure to enforce a law; it also relates only to discretionary activities. (51 C.A.3d 589, citing Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246.)

This problem was more fully examined and the same result was reached in Morris v. Marin (1977) 18 C.3d 901, 136 C.R. 251, 559 P.2d 606. Lab.C. 3800 provides that a county that issues a building permit as a condition precedent to construction "shall require" that the applicant have a policy of workers' compensation insurance. Plaintiff, a worker employed by C, suffered serious injuries on the job. If C had carried insurance, plaintiff would have been entitled to over $ 200,000 in benefits, but C had no insurance and was adjudicated a bankrupt. Plaintiff was given an award of benefits from the Uninsured Employers Fund (Lab.C. 3715 et seq., 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §153 et seq.), but the Fund was bankrupt and no payments were made. Plaintiff then brought this action against defendant county under Govt.C. 815.6. Held, judgment for defendant county on demurrer reversed.

(a) Mandatory duty under Lab.C. 3800. The language of Lab.C. 3800, construed in accordance with the general rule that "shall" is mandatory, establishes a mandatory duty under Govt.C. 815.6. (18 C.3d 907.) Many cases dealing with similar language reach the same conclusion. (18 C.3d 907, citing Sullivan v. Los Angeles (1974) 12 C.3d 710, 117 C.R. 241, 527 P.2d 865, supra, §246, Bradford, and Elson.)

(b) No immunity. Defendant claimed an absolute immunity under Govt.C. 818.4 for issuance of a permit and under Govt.C. 818.2 for failure to enforce a law. Both statutes, however, provide immunity only where the duty is discretionary, and not, as here, where the duty to require insurance is mandatory. Govt.C. 818.4 has been interpreted by the drafters and the legislative committee to apply only to situations in which the governmental agency exercises discretion in determining whether to issue or deny a license. (18 C.3d 912.) The cases support this interpretation. (18 C.3d 914, citing Elson and Elton supra.) O'Hagan v. Board of Zoning Adjustment (1974) 38 C.A.3d 722, 113 C.R. 501, supra, §229, stating that the immunity under Govt.C. 818.4 prevails over the liability imposed by Govt.C. 815.6, refers only to discretionary activity. (18 C.3d 915.) Although the language of Govt.C. 818.2 does not expressly refer to the exercise of discretionary authority, the legislative comment makes it clear that it does, and the same reasons for immunity under Govt.C. 818.4 apply here. (18 C.3d 916.)

(c) Policy considerations. "To uphold the position of the county would not only violate the letter of the statute but nullify its purpose. If we are to bestow immunity upon governmental entities that ignore the statutory requirement that the applicant for a building permit obtain workers' compensation insurance, the requirement becomes a dead letter. Future workers who rely upon the statute in the expectation that it will be enforced must inevitably find themselves unprotected and uninsured from injuries and losses incurred in devastating accidents. Surely we cannot erase the statute itself from the books and expose workers to such serious harm in the face of the Legislature's protective concern." (18 C.3d 917.) (See Young v. Inglewood (1979) 92 C.A.3d 437, 439, 154 C.R. 724 [following Morris, where complaint alleged failure by city to comply with another mandatory precondition for issuance of building permit: requiring that work be done either by state-licensed contractor or by one exempt from that licensing].)

(3) Immunity for Failure To Inspect Private Property Is Applicable. The immunity for failure to inspect private property in Govt.C. 818.6 (infra, §288) does apply. In Clayton v. Sunnyvale (1976) 62 C.A.3d 666, 133 C.R. 306, the court distinguished the holding in Elson that the immunity for discretionary acts under Govt.C. 818.2 and 818.4 did not apply where there was a failure to perform a mandatory duty. "Section 818.6 ... is not subject to the mandatory-discretionary dichotomy set forth in Elson. The grant of immunity provided by the statute is absolute on its face; there is nothing in the language of the section to indicate that it was intended to apply only to discretionary activities." (62 C.A.3d 670.) (See Cochran v. Herzog Engraving Co. (1984) 155 C.A.3d 405, 412, 205 C.R. 1 [quoting Legislative Committee Comment and citing Clayton]; Powell v. California (1991) 234 C.A.3d 910, 916, 286 C.R. 8 [following Clayton]; Haggis v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 490, 503, 93 C.R.2d 327, 993 P.2d 983, supra, §245 [city was immune from mandatory duty liability for failure to report result of inspection].) The court in Powell stated: "The government undertakes licensing and inspection activities to insure public health and safety. The Legislature has apparently concluded that it is better public policy to leave an injured person to his remedy against the person actually causing the injury than it is to impose an additional liability on the government for negligently failing to prevent the injury, presumably because imposition of such liability would expose public entities to virtually unlimited risks and certain bankruptcy." (234 C.A.3d 917.)

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

a. Governing Statute.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 249

[§ 249] Governing Statute.

The liability formerly imposed by the Public Liability Act and similar statutes (supra, §211) is the subject of an extensive chapter entitled "Dangerous Conditions of Public Property." (Govt.C. 830 et seq.) (See C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, Chap. 12; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §237 et seq.; 41 Proof of Facts 3d 109 [governmental liability for failure to maintain trees near public way].)

The general immunities applicable to all types of liability and the usual tort defenses of comparative negligence and assumption of risk (see supra, §227) are of course applicable to actions based on dangerous conditions of property. In addition, particular immunities and defenses are specified, including the following:

- (1) Reasonableness of the act or omission. (See infra, §272.)
- (2) Participation in hazardous recreational activities. (See infra, §275 et seq.)
- (3) Improper use of a reservoir or canal. (See infra, §§273, 274.)
- (4) Causation of the accident by weather conditions. (See infra, §279.)
- (5) Advance approval of a plan or design. (See infra, §280 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

1. Property Covered.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 250

[§ 250] Property Covered.

"Public property," or "property of a public entity," is defined as "real or personal property owned or controlled by the public entity." (Govt.C. 830(c); see Arroyo v. California (1995) 34 C.A.4th 755, 762, 40 C.R.2d 627, infra, §253 ["public property" within meaning of Govt.C. 830(c) includes wild animals]; Huffman v. Poway (2000) 84 C.A.4th 975, 989, 101 C.R.2d 325 [because Govt.C. 830(c) refers to property that is either owned or controlled, property owned by public entity does not lose public property status when entity cedes temporary control to third parties]; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §12.9 et seq.)

The statutory liability does not apply to property not owned or controlled. (See infra, §251.) The statute is also inapplicable to certain kinds of unimproved property. (See infra, §252 et seq.) And governmental agencies maintaining emergency shelters are exempted from liability for injuries sustained as a result of the condition of the premises. (C.C. 1714.5.)

In Warden v. Los Angeles (1975) 13 C.3d 297, 118 C.R. 487, 530 P.2d 175, defendant city allowed its submerged sewer pipe to protrude into the waters of Santa Monica Bay, causing several boating accidents. Although the federal Government exercised jurisdiction over the navigable waters, the city obtained authorization for the construction, and it could have had adequate warning signals installed by applying to the Coast Guard. Hence, it was liable to plaintiff for damage caused when his boat struck the pipe. Its knowledge of the prior accidents imposed a duty to seek protective action by the Coast Guard. (13 C.3d 301.)

In Low v. Sacramento (1970) 7 C.A.3d 826, 87 C.R. 173, defendant county operated a hospital facing a street with a dirt parking strip between the sidewalk and the street. The strip was not properly maintained, and plaintiff, a visitor to the hospital, fell into a water-filled rut and was injured. Held, both the city and the county were liable.

(a) The statutory language ("owned or controlled") is ambiguous when ownership is separated from control. (7 C.A.3d 831.) Control is the important factor; i.e., ordinarily, the tenant rather than the landlord is liable to persons injured by dangerous conditions. (7 C.A.3d 832.)

(b) The old Public Liability Act (supra, §211) imposed liability on the governmental entity having authority to remedy the condition. Although this is no longer an express statutory standard, the courts have continued to resort to it; i.e., in identifying the defendant with whom control resides, location of the power to correct is an aid. (7 C.A.3d 832.)

(c) Out-of-state cases hold that when a private owner maintains a grassy parking strip between the sidewalk and street curb, the abutting owner exercises control, subordinate only to the city's street easement; and the abutting owner is liable where his or her failure to maintain it in reasonably safe condition results in injury to a pedestrian. (7 C.A.3d 833.)

(c) "In this case each defendant had a species of ownership in the parking strip--the city as holder of the street easement and the county as holder of the underlying fee. More important, each had control--the city as holder of the public easement and the county as abutting owner. Like a private abutting owner, the county ... had the power of control both to prevent its deterioration and to remedy it. ... Coupled with its ownership of the underlying fee was a set of powers amounting to 'control' in the statutory sense." (7 C.A.3d 834.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

2. Property Not Owned or Controlled.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 251

[§ 251] Property Not Owned or Controlled.

Property cannot be "public property" unless owned or controlled by the public entity. (Govt.C. 830(c), supra, §250; see Avey v. Santa Clara (1968) 257 C.A.2d 708, 712, 65 C.R. 181 [highway, with island in middle, was owned and controlled by state; summary judgment for defendant city and defendant county]; Petersen v. Vallejo (1968) 259 C.A.2d 757, 776, 66 C.R. 776 [property was, by reason of freeway agreement, in possession and control of state; summary judgment for city]; Goss v. California (1978) 82 C.A.3d 426, 430, 147 C.R. 110 [hole in county road reached by off-ramp, 150 feet from state highway and 53 feet from state's right-of-way boundary; distinguishing cases finding liability because of conditions on "adjacent property" (infra, §269)]; Aaitui v. Grande Properties (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1369, 1377, 1378, 35 C.R.2d 123 [although city inspected and issued safety violations for apartment swimming pool, it was privately owned and controlled; for purposes of Govt.C. 830(c), municipal regulation of private pools does not, in itself, make pools public property].)

Control is the important factor where the property is not publicly owned. (See Mamola v. San Bernardino (1979) 94 C.A.3d 781, 788, 156 C.R. 614 [state relinquished ownership of road to county, reserving easement for ingress and egress; state had no control and could not be liable]; Tolan v. California (1979) 100 C.A.3d 980, 983, 161 C.R. 307 [state relinquished control and ownership of street to city]; Longfellow v. San Luis Obispo (1983) 144 C.A.3d 379, 383, 192 C.R. 580 [following Tolan; county did not own or control city property at time of injury]; Searcy v. Hemet Unified School Dist. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 792, 798, 223 C.R. 206 [portion of public street considerable distance from school grounds, used by school children as "short cut" on way home; school district not liable]; Chatman v. Alameda County Flood Control & Water Conservation Dist. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 424, 431, 228 C.R. 257 [defendant flood control district was not liable for subsidence damage caused by collapse of private developer's culvert; district did not build, accept, approve, or maintain culvert]; Ramsey v. Lake Elsinore (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1530, 1539, 270 C.R. 198 [city had no control over portion of state highway where accident occurred].)

Specifically excluded from the definition of "public property" are "easements, encroachments and other property that are located on the property of the public entity but are not owned or controlled by the public entity." (Govt.C. 830(c).) The purpose of this exclusion is "in order to make clear that it is not the duty of the owner of the servient estate to inspect such property for hazards; rather, it is the duty of the person or entity that owns the easement, encroachment, etc." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 830.)

aa. Property in Natural Condition: General Rule of Nonliability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 252

[§ 252] Property in Natural Condition: General Rule of Nonliability.

For practical reasons, liability is denied for injury caused by "a natural condition of any unimproved public property, including but not limited to any natural condition of any lake, stream, bay, river or beach." (Govt.C. 831.2; see McCauley v. San Diego (1987) 190 C.A.3d 981, 986, 992, 235 C.R. 732, infra, §254 [no duty to warn of dangerous natural conditions on unimproved property]; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §12.82 et seq.; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §243.) This statute provides an absolute immunity for these injuries. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 831.2.)

Govt.C. 831.2 furthers a legislative policy "to permit the members of the public to use public property in its natural condition and to provide trails for hikers and riders and roads for campers into the primitive regions of the State." Because "the burden and expense of putting such property in a safe condition and the expense of defending claims for injuries would probably cause many public entities to close such areas to public use ... , it is not unreasonable to expect persons who voluntarily use unimproved public property in its natural condition to assume the risk of injuries arising therefrom as a part of the price to be paid for benefits received." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 831.2.)

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

3. Unimproved Property.

bb. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 253

[§ 253] Illustrations.

(1) In General. The Govt.C. 831.2 immunity is frequently applied. (See Kuykendall v. California (1986) 178 C.A.3d 563, 566, 223 C.R. 763 [immunity applied with respect to canyon, even though unidentified person had attached rope to overhanging tree limb]; Winterburn v. Pomona (1986) 186 C.A.3d 878, 881, 231 C.R. 105 [immunity where plaintiffs' son was killed when debris fell from roof of cave located in defendant city's "greenbelt"].)

(2) Beaches. A cliff on the beach of a state park, with no park facilities in the area, has been held to constitute unimproved property in its natural condition despite the existence of lifeguard towers and restrooms on other parts of the beach. (See Fuller v. California (1975) 51 C.A.3d 926, 937, 125 C.R. 586.) The same result has been reached with respect to injuries on a sandbar. (See Geffen v. Los Angeles (1987) 197 C.A.3d 188, 194, 242 C.R. 492 [sandbar was unimproved property even though surrounding beach had lifeguard building and towers, parking lots, food concessions, promenade, breakwater, pier, signs, and rock groin]; Morin v. Los Angeles (1989) 215 C.A.3d 184, 189, 263 C.R. 479 [sandbar was natural condition even assuming it was result of both natural forces and human activity; citing Fuller]; Tessier v. Newport Beach (1990) 219 C.A.3d 310, 314, 268 C.R. 233 [sandbar held natural condition; following Morin].)

In Mercer v. California (1987) 197 C.A.3d 158, 242 C.R. 701, sand dunes within the vehicular recreation area of a state beach were held to be unimproved property in natural condition. Various signs and fences did not change the physical nature or characteristics of the property at the location of plaintiff's injury, as required to remove the immunity conferred by Govt.C. 831.2. (197 C.A.3d 165.) (See Bartlett v. California (1988) 199 C.A.3d 392, 397, 245 C.R. 32 [following Mercer].)

Knight v. Capitola (1992) 4 C.A.4th 918, 6 C.R.2d 874, involved a body surfing accident on a public beach. The beach had been rebuilt 17 years earlier, when imported sand was deposited to replace a beach that had washed away and a rock groin was constructed to preserve the new beach. Held, summary judgment for defendant city affirmed. Govt.C. 831.2 applies to all public beaches, so long as the accident was caused by a natural condition. (4 C.A.4th 927.) "[I]t appears as a matter of law that at most a combination of human activities and natural forces created the condition which resulted in Knight's tragic injuries. Such a combination of forces, particularly where it produces, over a long period of time, a condition similar to those which occur in nature, has repeatedly been held to come within the immunity" provided by Govt.C. 831.2. (4 C.A.4th 929.) (See Valenzuela v. San Diego (1991) 234 C.A.3d 258, 261, 262, 286 C.R. 1 [plaintiff injured when he dove from projecting rock on beach and struck his head on bottom]; Lupash v. Seal Beach (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1428, 1434, footnote 3, 89 C.R.2d 920 [public entities were immune from liability to children in city-sponsored junior lifeguard program, where injury was result of breaking waves and uneven ocean floor and entities did nothing to increase inherent risk of harm from ocean activities]; 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 11 [Knight].)

(3) Lakes. As originally proposed, the immunity of Govt.C. 831.2 was limited to a "natural lake." In enacting the section to refer to "any lake," the Legislature made it clear that the immunity extended to all public lakes. (Osgood v. Shasta (1975) 50 C.A.3d 586, 589, 590, 123 C.R. 442 [Shasta Lake]; Keyes v. Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. (1982) 128 C.A.3d 882, 887, 180 C.R. 586 [Lexington Reservoir]; Eben v. California (1982) 130 C.A.3d 416, 419, 422, 181 C.R. 714 [Millerton Lake].)

(4) Rivers. A river is unimproved public property (Govt.C. 831.2), and a snag, consisting of uprooted trees washed away by erosive action and held together by mud and roots, is a "natural condition." (Sacramento v. Superior Court (Kuhn) (1979) 89 C.A.3d 215, 218, 152 C.R. 391.)

(5) Wild Animals. In Arroyo v. California (1995) 34 C.A.4th 755, 40 C.R.2d 627, plaintiff child, who was attacked by a mountain lion while hiking on a marked trail in a state park, sued defendant state for personal injuries. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. Held, affirmed.

(a) Wild animals are a natural part of the condition of unimproved public property within the meaning of Govt.C. 831.2. It is the state's policy to encourage the use of hiking trails in primitive public regions. To implement this policy, the statute relieves the state from the burden of making those areas safe and consequently from defending suits for injuries arising from trail use. The statute requires the public to assume the risk of using hiking trails in state parks. (34 C.A.4th 761.)

(b) The immunity of Govt.C. 831.2 is not restricted to conditions of real property. Under Govt.C. 830(c) (supra, §250), "property of a public entity" and "public property" include "personal property owned or controlled by the public entity," and wild animals fall within this definition, because they are owned by the state. (34 C.A.4th 762.)

(c) The state has no duty to place warning signs in state parks to alert people to the dangers of mountain lions on hiking trails. Liability for failure to warn is inconsistent with the absolute immunity that Govt.C. 831.2 provides. That immunity applies whether or not the dangerous condition amounted to a hidden trap and whether or not the public entity had knowledge of it. (34 C.A.4th 762.)

(d) The trial judge properly refused plaintiff leave to amend to allege that defendant had placed signs in the park warning of snakes and ticks. The immunity of Govt.C. 831.2 permits public entities to provide signs without incurring potential liability for failure to notify of every possible danger. Also, defendant did not negligently assume a voluntary protective service towards plaintiff merely because its signs, brochures, and verbal information generally indicated that, except for "various dangers," the park was reasonably safe. Absolute immunity is the rule, so long as the public entity's conduct does not amount to negligence in creating or exacerbating the degree of danger normally associated with a natural condition. (34 C.A.4th 763.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

3. Unimproved Property.

cc. Effect of Assuming Duty To Protect Public.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 254

[§ 254] Effect of Assuming Duty To Protect Public.

(1) In General. In Gonzales v. San Diego (1982) 130 C.A.3d 882, 182 C.R. 73, plaintiffs sued for wrongful death of their mother, who was drowned while swimming in a beach and surf area for which defendant city provided lifeguard and police protection. The complaint alleged that by providing these services, defendant assumed the obligation to post warnings of unsafe conditions such as the dangerous rip tide that resulted in the death of the decedent. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) Govt.C. 831.2 (supra, §252) applies to natural conditions, and "the complaint describes a hybrid dangerous condition, partially natural and partially artificial in character, the result of a combination of a natural defect within the property and the third party conduct of the City." (130 C.A.3d 885.)

(b) "[W]here a public entity voluntarily assumes a protective duty toward certain members of the public, even though there is no liability for its acts or omissions, upon undertaking the action on behalf of the public and inducing a public reliance, the entity will be held to the same standard of care as a private individual or entity." (130 C.A.3d 887.) (See 23 San Diego L. Rev. 723 [criticizing holding].)

Gonzales was distinguished in McCauley v. San Diego (1987) 190 C.A.3d 981, 235 C.R. 732. Plaintiff became intoxicated at an evening beach party in defendant city's recreational area, and fell off a cliff. The theory of the action was that defendant's posting of signs warning of false and slippery trails was an assumption of responsibility, and that the signs were insufficient to protect the public from the dangerous conditions of eroding cliffs. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The protective services voluntarily assumed in Gonzales "were active and ongoing and of the character to induce reasonable public reliance." Here, "the passive nature of a series of warning signs is designed simply to warn the people to take care if they assume the risk in using the unimproved public property in its natural condition." (190 C.A.3d 988.)

(b) In Gonzales, the city's voluntary assumption of the duty "induced public reliance upon the expertise of those who provided the lifeguard service in detecting and warning of the existence of dangerous rip currents, latent in character to the majority of the unknowing, swimming public." (190 C.A.3d 989.) Here, there was no hidden condition, only an undisguised cliff openly dangerous. And the city does not waive its statutory immunity merely because the signs were not visible at night. (190 C.A.3d 989.) "Indeed, Gonzales only stands for the proposition section 831.2 will not cloak a public entity with immunity when its own conduct is partially responsible for inducing a person to be victimized by a dangerous condition of the nature of a hidden trap." (190 C.A.3d 989.)

(c) Public policy considerations support the conclusion reached here. The city could have avoided any liability by simply not posting any warning signs, but public policy is promoted by the minimally burdensome and passive intervention of sign placement. To allow public entities to place warnings of purely natural conditions on unimproved public property, without jeopardizing their Govt.C. 831.2 immunity, fosters the statute's legislative purpose. "A warning-signage program which does not contribute to the dangerousness of a natural condition constitutes a reasonable middle approach for a public entity to pursue, guaranteeing the retention of the cloak of immunity while promoting public safety by encouraging the governmental entity to warn the using public of the existence of known dangerous natural conditions." (190 C.A.3d 991.)

Subsequent decisions, following McCauley, have similarly denied liability and applied immunity, finding that the public entity's conduct did not induce reliance by the victim. (See Geffen v. Los Angeles (1987) 197 C.A.3d 188, 192, 242 C.R. 492 [sandbar hit by plaintiff when he dived into ocean]; Morin v. Los Angeles (1989) 215 C.A.3d 184, 193, 263 C.R. 479 [same]; Mercer v. California (1987) 197 C.A.3d 158, 166, 242 C.R. 701 [sand dunes used by all-terrain vehicles]; Bartlett v. California (1988) 199 C.A.3d 392, 399, 245 C.R. 32 [same]; Santa Cruz v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 999, 1005, 244 C.R. 105 [sandbar struck by plaintiff when he dived into river]; Rombalski v. Laguna Beach (1989) 213 C.A.3d 842, 852, 261 C.R. 820 [ocean floor struck by plaintiff when he dived from rock when tide was out]; Knight v. Capitola (1992) 4 C.A.4th 918, 930, 6 C.R.2d 874, supra, §253 [waves breaking closer than normal to shore and causing bodysurfer to hit ocean floor].)

(2) Statutory Rejection of Liability in Beach Cases. Govt.C. 831.21, enacted in 1987, partially rejects the liability imposed by Gonzales: "Public beaches shall be deemed to be in a natural condition and unimproved notwithstanding the provision or absence of public safety services such as lifeguards, police or sheriff patrols, medical services, fire protection services, beach cleanup services, or signs." (Govt.C. 831.21(a).)

These provisions "shall apply only to natural conditions of public property and shall not limit any liability or immunity that may otherwise exist pursuant to this division." (Govt.C. 831.21(a).)

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

3. Unimproved Property.

dd. Roads, Trails, and Paths.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 255

[§ 255] Roads, Trails, and Paths.

(1) In Recreational Areas or on Easements of Way. Public entities have immunity where the injury is caused by the condition of any of the following:

(a) An "unpaved road" that "provides access" to "fishing, hunting, camping, hiking, riding, including animal and all types of vehicular riding, water sports, recreational or scenic areas" and that is not (1) a city street or highway, (2) a county, state, or federal highway, or (3) a public street or highway of a district formed for the improvement or building of public streets or highways. (Govt.C. 831.4(a); see Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 831.4 [provision provides absolute immunity from liability for injuries resulting from condition of such roads as fire protection roads in timbered areas and irrigation district maintenance roads].)

(b) A "trail" that is used for these purposes. (Govt.C. 831.4(b).)

(c) A "paved trail, walkway, path, or sidewalk on an easement of way which has been granted to a public entity, which easement provides access to any unimproved property, so long as such public entity shall reasonably attempt to provide adequate warnings of the existence of any condition of the paved trail, walkway, path, or sidewalk which constitutes a hazard to health or safety." These warnings "shall only be required where pathways are paved, and such requirement shall not be construed to be a standard of care for any unpaved pathways or roads." (Govt.C. 831.4(c).)

In Giannuzzi v. California (1993) 17 C.A.4th 462, 21 C.R.2d 335, the court analyzed the legislative history of Govt.C. 831.4 and concluded that it embraces the following three related immunities: "(1) subdivision (a) precludes liability for injuries caused by the condition of unpaved roads providing access to 'fishing, hunting, camping, hiking, riding, including animal and all types of vehicular riding, water sports, recreational or scenic areas,' (2) subdivision (b) precludes liability for injuries caused by the condition of trails which are used for these activities, and (3) subdivision (c) precludes liability for injuries caused by the condition of any paved trail, walkway, path or sidewalk located on an 'easement of way which ... provides access to any unimproved property.'" (17 C.A.4th 466.) (See Armenio v. San Mateo (1994) 28 C.A.4th 413, 417, 33 C.R.2d 631 [Govt.C. 831.4 applied to bicycle accident occurring on paved bicycle trail in public park]; California v. Superior Court (Young) (1995) 32 C.A.4th 325, 328, 329, 39 C.R.2d 1 [state immune from liability to woman who fell from horse on state park trail when horse was spooked by mountain bicyclist]; Carroll v. Los Angeles (1997) 60 C.A.4th 606, 608, 70 C.R.2d 504 [paved bicycle path along Pacific Ocean was "trail" under Govt.C. 831.4; although path provided access to scenic view, statute applies to trail that is itself object of recreational activity]; Farnham v. Los Angeles (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1097, 1099, 80 C.R.2d 720 [paved bicycle path was "trail" even if it could be considered part of streets and highway system, because it was not open to public in general and because Govt.C. 831.4 does not exempt trails that are part of this system]; Treweek v. Napa (2000) 85 C.A.4th 221, 224, 101 C.R.2d 883 [standing alone, boat ramp is not "trail" for purposes of Govt.C. 831.4; however, statute might apply where ramp was part and essential to full use of trail]; 11 Pacific L. J. 665.)

(2) Nondedicated Road. A public entity is not liable for the grading, maintenance, repair, reconstruction, or replacement of a road that has not been accepted as part of the entity's road system, provided that the work is done with reasonable care and does not leave the road in a more dangerous or unsafe condition. Nor does the undertaking of this work give rise to any duty to continue it. (Govt.C. 831.3; see Sts. & H.C. 941, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §243 [immunity for failure to maintain road not yet accepted as part of county road system].)

Matthews v. San Bernardino (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1623, 285 C.R. 422, explained the relationship between Govt.C. 831.3 and Sts. & H.C. 941 as follows: "Section 941 states that a county is not liable for failure to maintain unaccepted roads, while section 831.3 merely states that if public entities perform an act of maintaining, grading or repairing unaccepted roads, they may be liable if the work is not done with reasonable care and if the work leaves the road in a more dangerous or unsafe condition than it was in before the work began. Simply stated, section 941 immunizes a county from any claimed nonfeasance regarding its lack of maintaining unaccepted roads. Section 831.3 addresses in part a public entity's misfeasance in its action of maintaining, grading or repairing an unaccepted road. ... It is also noteworthy that section 941 is limited to counties, while section 831.3 includes all public entities." (233 C.A.3d 1633.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In Recreational Areas or on Easements of Way. See Amberger-Warren v. Piedmont (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1074, 1083, 49 C.R.3d 631 [pathway in park could be characterized as "trail" under Govt.C. 831.4(b), even assuming that pathway could also be characterized as "sidewalk" and that Govt.C. 831.4(c) distinguishes between trails and sidewalks; Govt.C. 831.4(c) does not limit application of Govt.C. 831.4(b)]; Prokop v. Los Angeles (2007) 150 C.A.4th 1332, 1338, 59 C.R.3d 355 [paved bikeway was "trail" within meaning of Govt.C. 831.4; following Farnham v. Los Angeles (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1097, 80 C.R.2d 720, text, p. 425].

In Astenius v. California (2005) 126 C.A.4th 472, 23 C.R.3d 877, plaintiffs brought wrongful death actions against defendant state after their mother died while driving an off-highway vehicle in a state recreation area. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Govt.C. 831.4 grants immunity to the state. Plaintiffs contended that Govt.C. 831.4 applies only to unimproved land, citing the Legislative Committee Comment to Govt.C. 831.2 (text, §252), which states in part that Govt.C. 831.2 and 831.4 provide absolute immunity from liability for injuries resulting from the natural conditions of a state park area where the only improvements are recreational roads and trails. Plaintiffs' reference to a legislative committee's comment "is unconvincing. The best place to find legislative intent is in the language of the statute. When the Legislature has intended to limit governmental immunity to unimproved property, it has expressly said so." (126 C.A.4th 476.) Thus, Govt.C. 831.2 limits immunity to injuries arising from "a natural condition of any unimproved public property." Govt.C. 831.4 contains no such limiting language and this court declines to add it. (126 C.A.4th 476.)

(b) Plaintiffs further contended that the state is not entitled to immunity under Govt.C. 831.4 because it failed to warn of the dangerous condition that caused the accident. But nothing in that statute makes immunity contingent on giving proper warnings. The immunity is absolute. For the same reason, the fact that the state charged a fee to enter the recreational area does not abrogate the state's immunity. (126 C.A.4th 476.)

(c) Nor does the state's duty under Pub.Res.C. 5090.32 and 5090.35 to maintain trails affect its immunity. Even assuming that those statutes create a mandatory duty, any breach of that duty comes within the scope of Govt.C. 831.4. (126 C.A.4th 476.)

[§ 256] Tidelands, Submerged Lands, and School Lands.

Certain lands owned by the state but neither improved nor occupied are subject to a specific grant of immunity:

(1) Ungranted "tidelands," "submerged lands," and "beds of navigable rivers, streams, lakes, bays, estuaries, inlets and straits." (Govt.C. 831.6(a).)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

b. Public Property.

3. Unimproved Property.

ff. Injury or Damage on Adjacent Land.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 257

[§ 257] Injury or Damage on Adjacent Land.

(1) General Rule of Liability. In Milligan v. Laguna Beach (1983) 34 C.3d 829, 196 C.R. 38, 670 P.2d 1121, eucalyptus trees growing on unimproved property of defendant city fell, causing injury to plaintiffs' residence on adjacent property. The city, relying on the broad language of Govt.C. 831.2, contended that the absolute immunity applied to any injury caused by a natural condition on that property. Held, the immunity was inapplicable to injuries caused to nonusers on adjacent property. The legislative policy underlying the statute--that governmental agencies might prohibit the use of public property in its natural condition if they were put to the expense of making it safe for recreational use--had nothing to do with an injury sustained by an adjacent landowner from a falling tree. "[W]hile the natural condition immunity may be applicable when the decayed tree limb falls on a user of the governmental property, it is not applicable when the limb injures adjacent property or persons on adjacent property because there is no danger that the governmental agency will close the property to use." (34 C.3d 834.)

(2) Exception for Land Failure. The Milligan holding was partly nullified by the enactment of Govt.C. 831.25 in 1984. (See 16 Pacific L. J. 723.) Under this statute, a public entity is not liable "for any damage or injury to property, or for emotional distress unless the plaintiff has suffered substantial physical injury, off the public entity's property caused by land failure of any unimproved public property if the land failure was caused by a natural condition of the unimproved public property." (Govt.C. 831.25(a); see Govt.C. 831.25(e) [nothing in statute limits immunity provided by Govt.C. 831.2 (supra, §252)]; Govt.C. 831.25(f) [nothing in statute "creates a duty of care or basis of liability for damage or injury to property or of liability for emotional distress"]; Schooler v. California (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1004, 1009, 102 C.R.2d 343 [unsolicited pedestrian traffic on unimproved bluff adjacent to public beach did not, as matter of law, alter bluff's "natural condition" within meaning of Govt.C. 831.25; generally, conditions that occur in nature but are produced by combination of human and natural forces are natural conditions as matter of law].)

However, the statute "shall not benefit any public entity or public employee who had actual notice of probable damage that is likely to occur outside the public property because of land failure and who fails to give a reasonable warning of the danger to the affected property owners." (Govt.C. 831.25(d).) No liability arises from giving such a warning. (Govt.C. 831.25(d).) (See 20 Pacific L. J. 719.)

For purposes of the statute, "a natural condition exists and property shall be deemed unimproved notwithstanding the intervention of minor improvements made for the preservation or prudent management of the property in its unimproved state that did not contribute to the land failure." (Govt.C. 831.25(b).) "Land failure," under the statute, means "any movement of land, including a landslide, mudslide, creep, subsidence, and any other gradual or rapid movement of land." (Govt.C. 831.25(c).)

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

1. In General.

aa. Elements of Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 258

[§ 258] Elements of Liability.

"Except as provided by statute, a public entity is liable for injury caused by a dangerous condition of its property" if the plaintiff establishes all of the following (Govt.C. 835):

- (1) That the property "was in a dangerous condition at the time of the injury." (Govt.C. 835.)
- (2) That the injury "was proximately caused by the dangerous condition." (Govt.C. 835.)
- (3) That the dangerous condition "created a reasonably foreseeable risk of the kind of injury which was incurred." (Govt.C. 835.)
- (4) Either that the dangerous condition was created by an employee's wrongful act or omission within the scope of employment (Govt.C. 835(a)) or that the entity had actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition in time to take protective measures (Govt.C. 835(b)). (See Paterno v. California (1999) 74 C.A.4th 68, 98, 87 C.R.2d 754 [although levee with water against it was in "dangerous condition" and flooding was foreseeable result, issue remained whether dangerous condition was proximate result of defendant's negligence]; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §12.15 et seq.; 50 Proof of Facts 2d 63 [failure to install median barrier]; 14 Proof of Facts 3d 527 [negligent design or maintenance of curve]; 65 Proof of Facts 3d 311 [governmental liability for injury to landowner's property from road construction on neighboring land]; 97 A.L.R.3d 11 [liability where ice or snow on surface of highway or street]; 98 A.L.R.3d 101 [liability for failure to repair pothole in highway or street]; 98 A.L.R.3d 439 [liability for defect or obstruction on roadside parkway or parking strip]; 2 A.L.R.4th 635 [liability for design, construction, or failure to warn of narrow bridge]; 19 A.L.R.4th 532 [liability for defect or obstruction in shoulder of street or highway]; 58 A.L.R. 4th 559 [liability as to highway median barriers]; 58 A.L.R. 4th 1197 [liability for injury to roller skater caused by sidewalk or street defects]; 111 A.L.R.5th 579 [liability of city or utility for injury resulting from defective streetlight]; BAJI, Nos. 11.53, 11.54, 16.30; CACI, Nos. 1100 et seq., VF-1100, VF-1101; on what constitutes dangerous condition, see infra, §259.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Metcalfe v. San Joaquin (2008) 42 C.4th 1121, 72 C.R.3d 382, 176 P.3d 654, plaintiff motorist brought an action against defendant county under the Government Claims Act to recover for injuries he suffered in a vehicle collision at a T-intersection controlled by the county. Plaintiff alleged that the placement of signage and road markings constituted a dangerous condition of public property. The jury found that, although a dangerous condition existed, the county did not negligently or wrongfully create the condition, and that the county did not have notice of the condition for a sufficient time to have protected against it. Accordingly, the trial court entered judgment for the county. The Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff forfeited claim of instructional error. Plaintiff agreed at trial to instructions requiring the jury to find either negligence or notice for plaintiff to prevail. Therefore, he may not argue on appeal that he was not required to establish negligence. (42 C.4th 1130.)

(b) County was not liable in absence of either negligence or notice. To provide guidance to future courts, the court discussed the merits of that issue. The plain language of Govt.C. 835 requires, as a basis for liability, either that the county acted negligently or wrongfully in creating the dangerous condition (Govt.C. 835(a)) or had notice of the condition (Govt.C. 835(b)). Govt.C. 835(a) imposed on plaintiff the burden of showing, under ordinary tort principles, unreasonable conduct by the county in light of the foreseeable risk of harm. The mere existence of the dangerous condition, even if deliberately created by the county, did not establish the requisite negligence or wrongdoing. (42 C.4th 1131.)

(c) County had affirmative defense to negligence. Govt.C. 835.4, providing that a public entity is not liable for a negligently created dangerous condition of public property if the public entity establishes that the act or omission that created the condition was reasonable, is an affirmative defense, unique to public entities, where the plaintiff establishes the public entity's negligence as a basis for liability for a dangerous condition of public property under Govt.C. 835(a). Public entities may defend against liability on the basis that, because of financial or political constraints, the public entity may not be able to accomplish what reasonably would be expected of a private entity. Govt.C. 835.4 does not place on the public entity the burden of showing its reasonableness in the absence of the plaintiff's showing of negligence. (42 C.4th 1136.)

One justice filed a concurring and dissenting opinion, agreeing that plaintiff's request for the instructions barred his contention that they were erroneous, but disagreeing on plaintiff's burden of proof as to negligence. (42 C.4th 1139.)

See 86 Proof of Facts 3d 327 [liability of municipality for sidewalk defects]; 92 Proof of Facts 3d 461 [liability of public authority for injury caused by pothole in street or highway]; 12 A.L.R.6th 645 [governmental liability for injury to bicyclist due to defect or obstruction in public roadway or sidewalk].

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

1. In General.

bb. What Constitutes Dangerous Condition.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 259

[§ 259] What Constitutes Dangerous Condition.

(1) In General. "Dangerous condition" means a condition "that creates a substantial (as distinguished from a minor, trivial or insignificant) risk of injury when such property or adjacent property is used with due care in a manner in which it is reasonably foreseeable that it will be used." (Govt.C. 830(a); on minor or trivial defects, see infra, §261.) Thus, the elements of a dangerous condition are (1) "foreseeable use" by persons themselves acting with due care, and (2) a "substantial" risk of injury nevertheless. (Swaner v. Santa Monica (1984) 150 C.A.3d 789, 799, 198 C.R. 208; Childs v. Santa Barbara (2004) 115 C.A.4th 64, 74, 8 C.R.3d 823; see Dahlquist v. California (1966) 243 C.A.2d 208, 211, 52 C.R. 324 [pleading held sufficient]; Callahan v. San Francisco (1967) 249 C.A.2d 696, 703, 57 C.R. 639 [liability extends to persons generally, not just those acting with due care].) The standard applied in determining whether a dangerous condition existed is an objective one. (Huffman v. Poway (2000) 84 C.A.4th 975, 991, 101 C.R.2d 325 [whether open stage trapdoor met standard was question of fact].)

The phrase "used with due care" does not require the plaintiff to prove due care on the part of another tortfeasor, e.g., a bus driver, whose act contributed to the injury. "Rather, the statute means that the condition is dangerous if it creates a substantial risk of harm when used with due care by the public generally, as distinguished from the particular person charged as concurrent tortfeasor." (Murrell v. California (1975) 47 C.A.3d 264, 267, 269, 120 C.R. 812 [criticizing confusing instructions that failed to make the distinction clear]; see Mathews v. California (1978) 82 C.A.3d 116, 121, 145 C.R. 443, infra, §265 [quoting Murrell].) If it is shown that the property is safe when used with due care and that a risk of harm is created only when foreseeable users fail to exercise due care, the property is not dangerous within the meaning of Govt.C. 830(a). (Fredette v. Long Beach (1986) 187 C.A.3d 122, 131, 231 C.R. 598.)

(2) Property Must Be That of Entity. The public entity is liable only for the dangerous condition of its own property. However, it may be liable if that dangerous condition creates a risk of injury to adjacent property or persons on adjacent property, e.g., where a tree overhangs, or explosives are stored. (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 830; on effect of unsafe condition of adjoining property, see infra, §269.)

(3) Evidence of Happening of Accident or Subsequent Precautions. Except where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies, the happening of the accident that results in the injury is not in and of itself evidence that public property was in a dangerous condition. Also, the fact that action was taken after the injury occurred to protect against a condition of public property is not evidence that the property was in a dangerous condition at the time of the injury. (Govt.C. 830.5; see Brown v. Poway Unified School Dist. (1993) 4 C.4th 820, 15 C.R.2d 679, 843 P.2d 624, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §151 [discussing res ipsa loquitur in dangerous conditions cases, and rejecting contention that doctrine precludes summary judgment for public entity]; on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §114 et seq.; on evidence of subsequent precautions, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §163 et seq.)

cc. Illustrations of Dangerous and Non-Dangerous Conditions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 260

[§ 260] Illustrations of Dangerous and Non-Dangerous Conditions.

(1) Dangerous Conditions. The following are illustrative of conditions found to be dangerous:

Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 C.3d 707, 715, 718, 720, 159 C.R. 835, 602 P.2d 755 [reviewing cases and upholding liability of state for failing to erect median barrier in freeway].

Harland v. California (1977) 75 C.A.3d 475, 486, footnote 4, 142 C.R. 201 [bridge with various defects including guardrail which propelled driver of another vehicle across center median strip].

Morris v. California (1979) 89 C.A.3d 962, 966, 153 C.R. 117 [previously damaged and unrepaired median barrier in freeway].

Mamola v. San Bernardino (1979) 94 C.A.3d 781, 791, 156 C.R. 614 [inadequately barricaded open ravine adjacent to boulevard].

Erfurt v. California (1983) 141 C.A.3d 837, 843, 190 C.R. 569 [no warning to indicate that three-lane highway split off into two parts with pillar in the middle].

Constantinescu v. Conejo Valley Unified School Dist. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1466, 1473, 20 C.R.2d 734 [heavily congested loading zone used to drop off and pick up young school children, and lacking any barrier between curb and nearby waiting area].

Childs v. Santa Barbara (2004) 115 C.A.4th 64, 74, 8 C.R.3d 823 [uneven surface of sidewalk].

(2) Conditions That Are Not Dangerous. The following are illustrative of conditions found not dangerous:

Rombalski v. Laguna Beach (1989) 213 C.A.3d 842, 849, 261 C.R. 820 [rock from which plaintiff dived into ocean after attempting to time surge of tide and after being warned not to dive from rocks].

Mathews v. Cerritos (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1380, 1385, 4 C.R.2d 16 [extremely steep, wet, grassy hill on which 8-year-old boy rode bicycle even though he knew of danger and had been told not to ride by his parents].

Schonfeldt v. California (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1462, 1465, 72 C.R.2d 464 [teenager who scaled fence near highway and was injured when crossing roadway was unforeseeable user, and state was not liable; fact that fence was slightly lower than recommended by state maintenance manual guidelines did not establish dangerous condition of highway].

Plattner v. Riverside (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1441, 1444, 82 C.R.2d 211 [unlighted crosswalk; city had no duty to install streetlight, and crosswalk was no more dangerous with inoperative light than if city had not installed light at all].

Brenner v. El Cajon (2003) 113 C.A.4th 434, 440, 6 C.R.3d 316 [increase in volume and speed of vehicular traffic on widened public street was not in itself sufficient to constitute dangerous condition].

Milligan v. Golden Gate Bridge Highway & Trans. Dist. (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1, 7, 15 C.R.3d 25 [bridge district could not be held liable for failing to install suicide barrier; persons who use bridge to commit suicide are not using bridge in manner used by general public exercising ordinary care].

In Dominguez v. Solano Irr. Dist. (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1098, 279 C.R. 470, an 8-foot-high sound wall was constructed as a barrier between a housing development and a canal. A boy, under 12, scaled the wall and fell into the canal. Affirming summary judgment for defendant, the court said: "Numerous California cases have held that public entities have no duty, as a matter of law, to prevent members of the public--including young children--from scaling walls and fences erected for the purpose of keeping them out of areas of relative danger." (228 C.A.3d 1103.)

In Lompoc Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1688, 26 C.R.2d 122, plaintiff was injured when he was struck by a motorist who had been distracted by a football game being held on defendant school district's property. Held, defendant owed no duty to the users of an adjacent street to shroud its athletic field so that activities conducted thereon could not be seen or hear by passing motorists. If a motorist is exercising the requisite due care, the fact that an event is being held on property that he drives by poses no risk of harm (let alone a substantial risk) to pedestrians, bicyclists, or motorists on the adjacent public road. (20 C.A.4th 1697.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Conditions That Are Not Dangerous. The following decisions illustrate conditions found not dangerous:

Dina v. People (2007) 151 C.A.4th 1029, 1053, 60 C.R.3d 559 [noise, dust, and vibrations emanating from highway construction did not render state liable for cracks later appearing in nearby homes and patio slabs; Govt.C. 835 applies only where there is some defect in public property itself and causal connection is shown between defect and injury].

Biscotti v. Yuba City Unified School Dist. (2007) 158 C.A.4th 554, 557, 69 C.R.3d 825 [chain link fence topped with metal prongs, separating school property from neighboring property, was not dangerous; 9-year-old boy climbed on bicycle propped against fence to reach oranges on neighbor's property; use was not foreseeable, and risk of injury was obvious even to child].

Sun v. Oakland (2008) 166 C.A.4th 1177, 1197, 83 C.R.3d 372 [intersection in which pedestrian was struck by negligent driver, where city had removed crosswalk markings when it installed bulb-out sidewalk extensions that shortened crossing distance, was not dangerous even though city had failed to comply with notice requirements for removing crosswalk (Veh.C. 21950.5); condition of intersection did not increase risk of injury caused by negligent drivers].

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

1. In General.

dd. Minor or Trivial Defect.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 261

[§ 261] Minor or Trivial Defect.

A condition is not dangerous if the court determines as a matter of law that the risk was minor, trivial, or insignificant. (Govt.C. 830.2; see Fielder v. Glendale (1977) 71 C.A.3d 719, 734, 139 C.R. 876 [three-quarter-inch difference in the level of two adjoining slabs of sidewalk was not dangerous as matter of law]; Ursino v. Big Boy Restaurants (1987) 192 C.A.3d 394, 397, 398, 237 C.R. 413 [nongovernmental defendants may also assert triviality defense]; Davis v. Pasadena (1996) 42 C.A.4th 701, 703, 50 C.R.2d 8 [as matter of law, two flights of stairs converging at right angle, with diagonally rising handrail along line of convergence, do not constitute dangerous condition]; cf. Dolquist v. Bellflower (1987) 196 C.A.3d 261, 271, 241 C.R. 706 [trial judge improperly relied solely on size in determining that single piece of steel reinforcement extending one-quarter inch above surface of tire-stop was trivial defect as matter of law]; Washington v. San Francisco (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1531, 1539, 269 C.R. 58, infra, §264 [reduced visibility caused by freeway support pillars in middle of road and freeway's shadow were not minor, trivial, or insignificant risk as matter of law]; Sambrano v. San Diego (2001) 94 C.A.4th 225, 233, 114 C.R.2d 151 [fire ring containing hot coals covered by sand at city-owned park was not "dangerous condition" of property, where, over last 5 years, 130,700 had used park without similar incident; only reasonable conclusion was that when fire rings were used with due care by public, they posed only minor, insignificant, or trivial risk of injury].)

The concept of triviality has two facets, which were discussed in Barone v. San Jose (1978) 79 C.A.3d 284, 144 C.R. 836: (a) The court must first determine whether the defect is too trivial to be dangerous as a matter of law. (b) The larger question must then be considered, whether the nature of the defect, along with other circumstances, is sufficient to raise a jury question of notice of the dangerous character. "This initial inquiry into the question of 'dangerousness' would involve consideration of such matters as the size and location of the defect with respect to the surrounding area and lighting conditions and whether it has been the cause of other accidents; while the question of notice would necessarily involve not only the factors which are primarily related to 'dangerousness,' but also such matters as the visibility of the condition, the frequency of travel in the area and the probability, if any, that a reasonable inspection by the appropriate public officials would have discovered its existence and its dangerous character." (79 C.A.3d 291.) The court concluded that defendant city's showing--photographs of a crack in a sidewalk resulting in one part slightly raised--was insufficient to justify summary judgment in its favor. (79 C.A.3d 291, 292.) (See Antenor v. Los Angeles (1985) 174 C.A.3d 477, 482, 220 C.R. 181 [quoting Barone].)

In Delta Farms Reclamation Dist. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 C.3d 699, 190 C.R. 494, 660 P.2d 1168, two 15-year-old girls were drowned in a canal owned by a reclamation district, and actions for damages for wrongful death and emotional distress were brought by the mothers of the children and the sister of one of them. Held, there was no "canal immunity" (see infra, §273) or recreational purpose immunity (see infra, §1103), and recovery against the public entity for emotional distress was possible. Govt.C. 835 imposes liability for a dangerous condition creating a reasonably foreseeable risk of injury, and Govt.C. 810.8 defines injury to include injury to "feelings" of such a nature that it would be actionable if inflicted by a private person. "This imports a common law meaning into the statute which would include emotional distress." (33 C.3d 711.) And it is foreseeable that adult relatives would accompany children wading in a canal and would suffer emotional distress from watching them drown. (33 C.3d 711.)

A plaintiff seeking to recover for injuries sustained as the result of an alleged dangerous condition must establish, as one of the elements of liability, that the injuries were proximately caused by the condition. (Govt.C. 835, supra, §258; see Childs v. Santa Barbara (2004) 115 C.A.4th 64, 74, 8 C.R.3d 823 [evidence supported finding that that county's failure to maintain sidewalk in safe condition proximately caused child's injury in fall from scooter]; Milligan v. Golden Gate Bridge Highway & Trans. Dist. (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1, 9, 15 C.R.3d 25 [alleged defects in design of bridge railing were not cause of death of person who committed suicide by leaping from bridge].) Constance B. v. California (1986) 178 C.A.3d 200, 223 C.R. 645, is illustrative. Defendant maintained a rest stop on a highway, with a restroom building close to the parking area. Plaintiff was sexually assaulted in the women's restroom at 12:30 a.m., and brought this action alleging that the rest stop was in a dangerous and defective condition because of improper patrolling, improper lighting, improper maintenance, and insufficient visibility. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Legal duty established. Defendant contended that in the absence of a showing of prior similar incidents at this or any other rest stop in the area, the assault was unforeseeable and consequently there was no duty to take precautions. But Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134, repudiated this view, and requires a holding that the duty exists under the facts of the present case. "The state's rest stops are open for public use at all hours of the day and night. ... The motoring public includes a portion of the criminal element of our society. ... It is predictable that such malefactors will take criminal opportunities in the course of their travels. We cannot conclude that the degree of predictability of criminal assaults under cover of darkness at rest stops is so low that a reasonably thoughtful administrator would never have a duty to anticipate such conduct and take account of it in guiding practical conduct concerning matters that might enhance the security of innocent users." (178 C.A.3d 206.)

(b) Causation not established. However, none of the theories offered by plaintiff supports a conclusion that the claimed dangerous condition was the cause of plaintiff's injury.

(1) The parking area was 15 yards from the restroom; but neither vision nor hearing was appreciably diminished by this displacement. (178 C.A.3d 209.)

(2) The entrances to the restroom were on the side of the building rather than the front; but no reasonable factfinder could conclude that the state should have recognized that side entrances to restrooms would increase the risk of criminal activity. (178 C.A.3d 209.)

(3) The placement of lights and trees produced heavy shadows at night which would provide concealment for an assailant; but the only inference to be drawn from the undisputed facts was that the assailant in this case was standing in the light. (178 C.A.3d 211.) (On governmental liability for injuries from criminal assaults on public property generally, see infra, §268.)

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

2. Traffic Signals.

aa. Lack of Signal.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 264

[§ 264] Lack of Signal.

Generally, a condition is not dangerous merely because of the failure to provide traffic control signals, stop signs, yield right-of-way signs, speed restriction signs, distinctive roadway markings, or other devices described in the Vehicle Code. (Govt.C. 830.4, 830.8.) Govt.C. 830.4 relates to "regulatory traffic control signals, stop signs, yield right-of-way signs, or speed restriction signs, as described by the Vehicle Code, or distinctive roadway markings as described in Section 21460 of the Vehicle Code." Govt.C. 830.8 relates more generally to "traffic or warning signals, signs, markings or devices described in the Vehicle Code," but excepts "liability for injury proximately caused by such failure if a signal, sign, marking or device (other than one described in Section 830.4) was necessary to warn of a dangerous condition which endangered the safe movement of traffic and which would not be reasonably apparent to, and would not have been anticipated by, a person exercising due care." In other words, liability may exist for failure to provide a signal or device of a type not listed in Govt.C. 830.4 where the condition "constitutes a trap to a person using the street or highway with due care." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 830.8.) (See Anderson v. Thousand Oaks (1976) 65 C.A.3d 82, 93, 135 C.R. 296 [broad discretion allowed to public entity in placement of road control signs is limited by requirement under Govt.C. 830.8 that there be adequate warning of dangerous conditions not reasonably apparent to motorists]; Kessler v. California (1988) 206 C.A.3d 317, 321, 253 C.R. 537 [Govt.C. 830.8 applies not just to signs specifically described in Vehicle Code, but to all signs conforming to Department of Transportation standards]; Frazier v. Sonoma (1990) 218 C.A.3d 454, 459, 267 C.R. 39 [painted traffic islands, i.e., double yellow lines with white striping inside designed to keep turning traffic in right lane, are regulatory markings as described in Govt.C. 830.4]; South Lake Tahoe v. Superior Court (1998) 62 C.A.4th 971, 975, 73 C.R.2d 146 [exception in Govt.C. 830.8 becomes applicable only when it is alleged that some type of sign, etc., other than those listed in Govt.C. 830.4, should have been provided]; Brenner v. El Cajon (2003) 113 C.A.4th 434, 442, 6 C.R.3d 316 [city's failure to install traffic regulation or safety devices to reduce dangers to pedestrians crossing busy public street was excluded by Govt.C. 830.4 as basis for finding dangerous condition]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 351 [establishing liability of state or local highway administration where injury results from failure to place or maintain adequate highway signs].)

The principles governing liability for failure to provide traffic signs and signals were discussed, and the two statutes compared, in Washington v. San Francisco (1990) 219 C.A.3d 1531, 269 C.R. 58. The Washington case involved an action for the wrongful death of a motorcyclist who, while making a left turn from a street running under a freeway, was struck by an oncoming car. Visibility was reduced by metal support pillars in the middle of the street and by the freeway's shadow. Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed.

(a) Govt.C. 830.4 provides immunity only where the alleged dangerous condition is caused solely by the absence of a regulatory traffic device or street marking. (219 C.A.3d 1534.) Here, there was expert testimony that the danger was caused not only by the absence of these markings or devices, but also by the limitations on visibility imposed by the pillars in the middle of the street and the freeway's shadow. (219 C.A.3d 1535.)

(b) Defendant argued that Govt.C. 830.4 is inapplicable only if the failure to provide a traffic regulatory device results in a "trap." This argument is based on the presence of that exception in Govt.C. 830.8, but the two sections are distinguishable. Govt.C. 830.8 is designed to provide immunity for the failure to provide regulatory or warning signals or devices other than as described in Govt.C. 830.4. (219 C.A.3d 1536.) Thus, defendant city's liability was not contingent on a finding that the condition constituted a trap. (219 C.A.3d 1537.)

In South Lake Tahoe v. Superior Court, supra, plaintiff was involved in a collision at an intersection that was normally controlled by stop signs, but the stop sign on the road on which he was traveling was missing due to another accident earlier on the same day. Held, the state was immune. Under Govt.C. 830.4, defendant had no duty to provide a stop sign, and thus, without incurring liability, could remove the sign at any time and for any reason. Drivers entering the intersection from the road with no stop sign were entering an uncontrolled intersection and were subject to the rules of the road applicable at such a crossing. (62 C.A.4th 976.)

See Weinstein v. Department of Trans. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 52, 61, 42 C.R.3d 417 [simple absence of warning sign cannot create liability unless there is hidden dangerous condition]; Cerna v. Oakland (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1340, 1348, 75 C.R.3d 168 [intersection where children were struck was not in dangerous condition for failure to have blinking lights in pavement, crossing guard, or demarcation and signage required for crosswalks contiguous with school (Veh.C. 21368); failure to provide signals does not create dangerous condition, absence of guard is not physical characteristic of intersection, and closest school property was 50 feet from crosswalk].

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

2. Traffic Signals.

bb. Defective Signal.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 265

[§ 265] Defective Signal.

(1) General Rules Apply. The general rules of governmental liability for dangerous conditions (see supra, §249 et seq.) apply to defective traffic signals, signs, and markings. (See Bakity v. Riverside (1970) 12 C.A.3d 24, 30, 90 C.R. 541 [badly placed stop sign]; Briggs v. California (1971) 14 C.A.3d 489, 495, 92 C.R. 433 [mudslide on state highway, inadequate warning signs not clearly visible to passing motorists]; 1 A.L.R.5th 163 [governmental liability for detour accidents]; cf. Mittenhuber v. Redondo Beach (1983) 142 C.A.3d 1, 8, 9, 10, 190 C.R. 694 [no allegations that stop sign was defective or confusing or in unanticipated position]; Chowdhury v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1187, 1194, 45 C.R.2d 657 [city not liable for accident caused by motorist's failure to stop at intersection with obviously inoperative traffic signals during power outage; approaching motorists were bound by Veh.C. 21800, which transforms inoperative signal light into stop sign].)

Thus, the test of a dangerous condition that it be dangerous when used by the public with due care (see supra, §259) was applied in Mathews v. California (1978) 82 C.A.3d 116, 145 C.R. 443. Plaintiff alleged that the traffic lights at an intersection were malfunctioning in that the light of the street on which plaintiff was traveling was stuck on green, and the light of the intersecting street on which another vehicle was traveling was stuck on red. The other driver negligently drove through the red light and plaintiff was injured in the ensuing collision. Held, judgment on the pleadings reversed; the complaint stated a cause of action. Defendant state conceded that if all the lights had been stuck on green, the condition would have been dangerous. But it argued that the existing condition was rendered dangerous only by the negligent conduct of the other driver, and that liability should be imposed only if the condition is dangerous when all persons use it carefully. This argument is not consistent with the statute or case law. A third party's negligent use of the property does not negate the existence of a dangerous condition (see supra, §259). (82 C.A.3d 121.) Specifically: Motorist A approaching a stuck green signal can be deceptively lulled into a sense of freedom from interference by cross traffic, and may exercise a minimal degree of lookout; motorist B, after a period of delay at the stuck red light, will become aware of the fact, and is likely to take the risk of entering the intersection. If motorist A were aware of the malfunctioning lights, his degree of care and lookout for cross traffic would be heightened. "Thus, the fact that the light is stuck on red could reasonably be found to result in a greater risk for motorist 'A' and to create a dangerous condition at the intersection to motorists generally." (82 C.A.3d 122.)

In Teall v. Cudahy (1963) 60 C.2d 431, 34 C.R. 869, 386 P.2d 493, the action was brought under former law, but the court pointed out that Govt.C. 835 did not materially differ in relation to the facts involved. The complaint alleged that plaintiff 7-year-old child mistakenly crossed the street when a truck was passing, because the only signal visible to her indicated that vehicular traffic would yield the right of way. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) "Pedestrians have a right to rely on traffic signals. The only signal visible to plaintiff indicated to her that north and south vehicular traffic would yield the right of way. Such a condition involves an unreasonable risk of injury to the public. It is not materially different from one in which, because of a mechanical defect, all lights at an intersection are green simultaneously." (60 C.2d 434.)

(b) Although defendant city had no duty to install an additional signal (Govt.C. 830.4, 830.8, supra, §264), it undertook to control traffic, invited reliance on the signals, and was liable if it created a dangerous or defective condition in doing so. (60 C.2d 434.)

(c) While the location of traffic signals involves an exercise of legislative discretion (see infra, §286), liability may result from an originally defective plan in the first place, and a dangerous condition resulting from an exercise of governmental discretion is not exempt from liability. (60 C.2d 434.)

(2) Exception for Signals Under Control of Emergency Vehicle. A public entity is not liable for an injury caused by "the operation or nonoperation" of signals "when controlled by an emergency vehicle" in accordance with Veh.C. 25258(a). (Govt.C. 830.9.)

In Quelvog v. Long Beach (1970) 6 C.A.3d 584, 86 C.R. 127, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §582, the decedent was killed when the ladder on which he was working was struck down by an autoette (apparently a self-propelled electric vehicle) being driven on the public sidewalk. Plaintiffs alleged that the city had failed to enforce state law by allowing vehicles to be driven on the sidewalks, and had affirmatively encouraged this improper use by constructing special access areas along the curbing. Held, a cause of action was stated. (6 C.A.3d 591.) (See Vedder v. Imperial (1974) 36 C.A.3d 654, 660, 111 C.R. 728, infra, §314 [negligent storage of gasoline on city property].)

In Hill v. People (1979) 91 C.A.3d 426, 154 C.R. 142, the complaint alleged that defendant California Department of Transportation issued a permit to codefendants to transport an oversized load on the public highways; the designated route included an overpass with insufficient clearance; the tractor-trailer struck the overpass, and fell and struck plaintiff's vehicle, causing personal injury and property damage. Held, a cause of action was stated:

(a) Under the reasoning of Quelvog, although the overpass may not have been dangerous for normal vehicles, defendant's conduct in permitting its use by a vehicle that was too high created a dangerous condition of the highway. (91 C.A.3d 430.)

(b) As in the traffic signal cases (supra, §§264, 265), codefendants reasonably relied on defendant's implied representation (in designation of the route) that the passage was safe. (91 C.A.3d 431.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

4. Negligent or Criminal Conduct of Third Party.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 267

[§ 267] In General.

A public entity may be liable for injuries sustained on property that is foreseeably dangerous as a result of a combination of the condition of the property and negligent or criminal conduct by third persons on or about the property. (Peterson v. San Francisco Community College Dist. (1984) 36 C.3d 799, 806, 205 C.R. 842, 685 P.2d 1193, infra, §268; on liability based on dangerous activity on private premises, see infra, §1129 et seq.)

In Zuniga v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (1995) 41 C.A.4th 82, 48 C.R.2d 353, plaintiffs were occupants of a unit in a housing project that was set on fire by arsonists, killing five members of plaintiffs' family. Plaintiffs filed a complaint for negligence and other torts against the housing authority that ran the project and the city in which the project was located. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed.

(a) Plaintiffs alleged that the dangerous condition of the property was inadequate security measures taken by defendants in the face of the existence of a centralized location where drug dealers with violent tendencies congregated (in front of plaintiffs' unit). Specifically, they alleged that defendants failed to warn the residents, failed to transfer residents, failed to expel criminal tenants, failed to place security barriers, and failed to otherwise take appropriate security measures. According to the complaint, plaintiffs were at risk simply by virtue of being assigned to the unit and became targets of increased hostility merely because they reported their difficulties to the authority. Such a pleading sufficiently alleges a dangerous condition to the property to overcome a demurrer. (41 C.A.4th 95.)

(b) The cases that have held that public and private landlords have no duty to guard against the criminal activity of third persons (see infra, §§268, 1143) have typically dealt with the situation in which the criminal activity was an isolated and unexpected occurrence that could not have been controlled by the landlord, absent the implementation of drastic precautions. However, in this case, the liability of defendants is based on allegations of the same perpetrators; the same location; an escalating pattern of behavior over a period of time, with repeated reports to the landlord; an awareness of the problems by defendant authority; and knowledge of the identity of the perpetrators by defendant city's police department. (41 C.A.4th 94.)

(c) The complaint also sufficiently alleged facts from which a special relationship might be found to have existed between plaintiffs and defendant authority, which assumed the duty of providing housing to plaintiffs, who, in turn, were apparently dependent on the authority to take responsibility for the hazards that existed within the project (see infra, §1038). In other words, plaintiffs reported the violence and harassment to the authority and the police, and depended on the authority to secure a transfer to other quarters. Indeed, it is clear from the complaint that the violence increased simply by virtue of reporting these incidents. (41 C.A.4th 95.)

The result is different, however, if the risk of injury from third parties is in no way increased by the condition of the property. (Hayes v. California (1974) 11 C.3d 469, 472, 113 C.R. 599, 521 P.2d 855, infra, §268.) In Pekarek v. San Diego (1994) 30 C.A.4th 909, 36 C.R.2d 22, plaintiffs, two minor children, sued defendant city for nuisance, alleging that one of the plaintiffs was injured when they crossed a city street after buying ice cream from an ice cream truck. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant. Held, affirmed.

(a) In interpreting Govt.C. 830, courts have consistently refused to characterize harmful third-party conduct as a dangerous condition, absent some concurrent contributing defect in the property itself. (30 C.A.4th 913, citing Hayes.) A plaintiff must demonstrate that some characteristic of public property contributed to the plaintiff's injury. Although there need not be a physical defect in the property, there must be something about its physical condition that increased the risk of harm to the plaintiff. (30 C.A.4th 913.)

(b) To establish that the block of the city street where the injury occurred was in a dangerous condition, plaintiffs had to demonstrate that defendant could have reduced the risk of harm to them by doing something to the street itself, as opposed to regulating the vehicles and pedestrians who used it. However, nothing suggested that any change in the street would have diminished the risk of injury. An outright ban on operation of ice cream trucks would not have altered the condition of the street. (30 C.A.4th 916.) (See 24 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [action against school arising out of criminal act]; cf. Zelig v. Los Angeles (2002) 27 C.4th 1112, 1131, 119 C.R.2d 709, 45 P.3d 1171 [liability under Govt.C. 835 depends on existence of some defect in the property itself and causal relationship between that defect and plaintiff's injury; criticizing Zuniga].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Sun v. Oakland (2008) 166 C.A.4th 1177, 1197, 83 C.R.3d 372 [finding that driver was negligent when he struck pedestrian crossing street did not preclude finding of dangerous condition of intersection, but his conduct alone did not prove that intersection posed substantial risk of injury; there must be defect in condition of property that has causal relationship to third party's conduct that injures plaintiff]. No liability where risk of injury from third parties is not increased by condition of property: In San Diego v. Superior Court (Hanson) (2006) 137 C.A.4th 21, 28, 40 C.R.3d 26, illegal street racing in defendant city resulted in injuries to nonparticipants. Held, the city was not liable. There is no public liability caused solely by the acts of third parties; the third-party conduct must be coupled with a defective condition of property. A defective condition exists in third-party cases only where there is a dangerous physical condition and that condition has a causal relationship to the third-party conduct resulting in injury. Here, there was no physical defect in the roadway, which was straight and level, and, even assuming that lighting was insufficient, no evidence connected the absence of lighting to the injuries. (137 C.A.4th 28.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

4. Negligent or Criminal Conduct of Third Party.

bb. Criminal Assault.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 268

[§ 268] Criminal Assault.

Actions to recover for injuries sustained from third-party conduct on public property have frequently involved criminal assaults.

(1) Hayes Case and Subsequent Decisions. In Hayes v. California (1974) 11 C.3d 469, 113 C.R. 599, 521 P.2d 855, two young men were attacked by unknown persons while sleeping on a beach at a state university. Their parents filed actions for personal injury and wrongful death, on the theory of failure to provide adequate police protection. Because this was concededly covered by statutory immunity (see infra, §302), they sought to amend to allege failure to warn of a dangerous condition of property. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Liability may be imposed where a combination of a defective condition of the property and acts of third parties is shown. (11 C.3d 472; see supra, §267.) "However, courts have consistently refused to characterize harmful third party conduct as a dangerous condition--absent some concurrent contributing defect in the property itself." (11 C.3d 472.)

(b) Although a warning might be beneficial in some instances, imposition of a duty to warn is unwise: (1) the public is already aware of violent crime in unlit and little used places; (2) such a warning might effectively close the area; and the regulation of the use of public property is better left to legislative and administrative bodies, rather than to the judiciary. (11 C.3d 473.)

Hayes was followed in Sykes v. Marin (1974) 43 C.A.3d 158, 117 C.R. 466. Defendant county operated a community center that had an unlighted parking lot. Plaintiff's 15-year-old daughter worked there as a volunteer, and plaintiff, attempting to pick her up at 6 p.m., was attacked by unknown assailants. Held, nonsuit affirmed. As in Hayes, the public entity was not required to protect against criminal activities of third persons; and the absence of lights in the parking area did not create a dangerous or defective condition.

In Slapin v. Los Angeles Int. Airport (1976) 65 C.A.3d 484, 135 C.R. 296, the court disagreed with the Sykes reasoning and distinguished Hayes. Plaintiff, while parking his car in defendant's airport parking lot, was assaulted by unknown persons. His complaint alleged that defendants knew that the lot was dangerous unless properly maintained, and that it was inadequately lighted. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) "That a mugger thrives in dark public places is a matter of common knowledge." (65 C.A.3d 488.) Hence, if defendant so poorly lighted the lot as to create a substantial risk of muggings, plaintiff could establish the elements of liability under Govt.C. 835; i.e., the lot so maintained was in a dangerous condition. (65 C.A.3d 488, 489.)

(b) Sykes is distinguishable: (1) In Sykes, the plaintiff went to trial, while plaintiff here suffered judgment on demurrer. In Sykes, there was no showing of previous criminal activity on the lot; plaintiff in this case may be able to establish a history of crime that rendered the injury foreseeable. (65 C.A.3d 489.) (2) The Sykes court, on the evidence presented, held that the intentional criminal acts of the assailants were a superseding cause; but plaintiff may be able to show that defendant created a reasonably foreseeable risk of such third-party conduct. (65 C.A.3d 490.)

(c) Hayes is distinguishable in that it involved beach property in its natural condition; here, it was alleged that the parking lot had a specific defect--insufficient lighting--that contributed to the assault. (65 C.A.3d 490.)

The Hayes approach was followed, and Slapin was distinguished, in Moncur v. Los Angeles (1977) 68 C.A.3d 118, 137 C.R. 239. A terrorist placed a bomb in a coin-operated locker in the Los Angeles Airport, in an area completely accessible to the public; when it exploded, several persons were killed and injured. In these actions against the city for personal injuries and wrongful death, judgments of dismissal were entered on demurrers sustained. Held, affirmed. Slapin involved a defect in the condition of the property (the lighting), while here, the danger was created by the act of placing the bomb, unrelated to the physical condition of the property. (68 C.A.3d 123, 124.) There are many airport facilities equally available to a terrorist, and there is no way to foresee the place or manner of the terrorist's action. (68 C.A.3d 125.) The California Supreme Court has declared that airport preboarding inspection is constitutionally permissible only if "confined to minimally intrusive techniques." (68 C.A.3d 126, citing People v. Hyde (1974) 12 C.3d 158, 165, 115 C.R. 358, 524 P.2d 830.)

Branch v. California (1984) 159 C.A.3d 340, 205 C.R. 482, makes an obvious distinction: Plaintiff alleged that she was abducted at an unspecified place and then taken to state property where she was criminally assaulted. The court, citing many decisions, held that a "dangerous condition" is one that involves a risk of injury to a plaintiff who is using the property. Here, plaintiff was not on the property of her own volition and was not using it in the manner contemplated by Govt.C. 830. (159 C.A.3d 345.)

(2) Peterson Case and Subsequent Decisions. The California Supreme Court again considered the issue of public liability where there is a criminal assault in Peterson v. San Francisco Community College Dist. (1984) 36 C.3d 799, 205, C.R. 842, 685 P.2d 1193. Plaintiff, a state college student, was injured in an attempted daylight rape in the parking lot area of the campus. She brought this action against defendant district, alleging the following facts: The assailant jumped from behind "unreasonably thick and untrimmed foliage and trees" adjoining a stairway which she was ascending; the assailant used a modus operandi similar to that used in previous attacks on the same stairway; defendants were aware that other assaults of a similar nature had occurred in the area; they had taken steps to protect students, and plaintiff relied on this increased protection; but defendants did not publicize the prior incidents or in any way warn plaintiff that she was in danger of attack in this area. The trial judge gave judgment for defendants on demurrer. Held, reversed.

(a) Third-party conduct by itself, unrelated to the condition of the property, does not constitute a dangerous condition. This principle relies primarily on policy considerations and the definition of dangerous condition as a "condition of property." But nothing in Govt.C. 835 precludes a finding of an affirmative duty under special circumstances (infra, §1038) to protect individuals against harmful criminal conduct on the defendant's property. (36 C.3d 811, and footnote 10.)

(b) It is also clear that intervening criminal conduct cannot absolve the defendant of liability where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant maintained the property in such a way as to increase the risk of criminal activity. Slapin v. Los Angeles Int. Airport is indistinguishable from the present case. Plaintiff alleged that defendants were aware that the parking lot was unsafe unless properly supervised and maintained, and that it was poorly lighted. (36 C.3d 812.) Here, plaintiff alleged that the foliage and trees permitted the assailant to perpetrate his crime, and that defendants, aware of the condition, failed to take reasonable protective measures, including trimming the foliage or warning her of danger. "In light of the relationship between plaintiff and defendants as well as the facts known to the defendants," a cause of action was stated. (36 C.3d 812.)

(c) Hayes v. California, holding that a university was not liable for attacks on two young men using the university's beach at night, is distinguishable. "In the closed environment of a school campus where students pay tuition and other fees in exchange for using the facilities, where they spend a significant proportion of their time and may in fact live, they can reasonably expect that the premises will be free from physical defects and that school authorities will also exercise reasonable care to keep the campus free from conditions which increase the risk of crime. Here the parking lot was not one of the 'unlit and little used places' to which we referred in Hayes. Plaintiff was lawfully on the campus and was attacked in broad daylight in a place where school officials knew she and others as well as the assailant might be. Further, the warnings sought here would not result in preventing the students from using the campus or its facilities, only in alerting them to unknown dangers and encouraging them to exercise more caution." (36 C.3d 813.)

Peterson was distinguished in Rodriguez v. Inglewood Unified School Dist. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 707, 230 C.R. 823. Plaintiff high school student was stabbed by a nonstudent third-party assailant while on the campus. He sued defendant school district, alleging that the high school had a long history of acts of violence involving dangerous weapons, and that defendant negligently failed to provide adequate security and protection against such acts. Held, although a special relationship existed between plaintiff student and defendant school district which imposed an affirmative duty on the district (see infra, §1054), no statutory liability was shown. The Peterson case held that thick and untrimmed trees around a parking lot could constitute a dangerous condition under the circumstances. Here, no physical defects or conditions were alleged; the complaint merely stated that plaintiff was stabbed while he was on the campus. (186 C.A.3d 718.) The constitutional guarantee of the right to safe schools (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(c), adopted in 1982) and its implementing statutes were prospective in effect, and thus inapplicable to plaintiff's action based on injuries sustained in 1981. (186 C.A.3d 721, 722.) (See Constance B. v. California (1986) 178 C.A.3d 200, 206, 223 C.R. 645, supra, §263 [claimed dangerous condition presented by restroom at highway rest stop was not shown to be proximate cause of assault on plaintiff]; Crow v. California (1990) 222 C.A.3d 192, 205, 271 C.R. 349 [student assaulted in state college dormitory by another student did not state cause of action; discussing Hayes, Peterson, and Constance B.]; Turner v. California (1991) 232 C.A.3d 883, 894, 284 C.R. 349 [state had no duty to warn public of gang-related activity at Cal Expo; citing Hayes].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

c. Dangerous Condition as Cause.

5. Condition on Adjacent Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 269

[§ 269] Condition on Adjacent Property.

Although a dangerous condition on public property may be actionable, even though not posing a hazard to persons using that property itself, where it is a hazard to adjacent property or persons using other property (supra, §259), a public entity cannot, of course, be held liable for dangerous conditions on other property. The entity "may be liable only for dangerous conditions of its own property." However, "its own property may be considered dangerous if a condition on the adjacent property exposes those using the public property to a substantial risk of injury." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 830.) (See 95 A.L.R.3d 778 [tree or limb falling onto highway from adjacent property]; 22 A.L.R.4th 624 [failure to reduce vegetation obscuring view at railroad crossing or at street or highway intersection].)

In Bonanno v. Central Contra Costa Transit Authority (2003) 30 C.4th 139, 132 C.R.2d 341, 65 P.3d 807, plaintiff was struck by a car when she was crossing at an uncontrolled intersection (only a crosswalk) to reach a nearby bus stop maintained by defendant transit authority. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff on a jury verdict expressly finding that the bus stop constituted a dangerous condition of public property. Held, affirmed.

(a) The fact that defendant needed the county's permission to move the bus stop to a safer location did not, as a matter of law, preclude defendant's potential liability for risks arising from the stop's present location, because there was no evidence that defendant had asked for permission and been refused. (30 C.4th 147.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that defendant's bus stop was in a dangerous condition because accessing it required crossing at a dangerous intersection. The statutory language neither precludes nor endorses this theory, but the Law Revision Commission comment to Govt.C. 830 expressly accepts it, and comments by the Law Revision Commission are persuasive, albeit not conclusive. Moreover, this theory has been applied in numerous cases. (30 C.4th 148, citing, among other examples, Warden v. Los Angeles (1975) 13 C.3d 297, 118 C.R. 487, 530 P.2d 175, supra, §250.)

(c) Defendant's contention that it cannot be liable for an injury that occurred on property (the street) that it neither owned nor controlled is rejected. Defendant owned and controlled its own bus stop, and a condition of that property (its physical location) caused users of the stop to be at risk from the immediately adjacent property. For similar reasons, it makes no difference that the injury occurred on adjacent property, rather than at the bus stop itself, or that the injury was caused by the act of a third party (negligent driving). (30 C.4th 151, distinguishing Seaber v. Hotel Del Coronado (1991) 1 C.A.4th 481, 2 C.R.2d 405, Supp., infra, §1090, on the ground that the hotel involved in that case could not be relocated as easily as a bus stop.)

(d) This holding will not result in wholesale liability for conditions on nearby property being imposed on public entities. This case is concerned with only one element of liability, the dangerous condition of property, and it does not address other elements, such as the requirement that the risk be substantial. Moreover, this holding does not address the various immunities that might be relevant. Finally, the reasonableness of a public entity's creation or maintenance of a dangerous condition of its property must be balanced against the cost and benefits of alternative means of providing the public service. In other words, the government cannot go out of business. (30 C.4th 154.)

The following cases are also illustrative:

Holmes v. Oakland (1968) 260 C.A.2d 378, 389, 67 C.R. 197 [railroad track on property owned by defendant city adjacent to plaintiff's school, plaintiff minor run over by train].

Bakity v. Riverside (1970) 12 C.A.3d 24, 30, 90 C.R. 541 [intersection with view obstructed by trees on adjacent property].

De La Rosa v. San Bernardino (1971) 16 C.A.3d 739, 745, 94 C.R. 175 [visibility impaired by tree and shrubbery on adjacent property].

Jordan v. Long Beach (1971) 17 C.A.3d 878, 883, 95 C.R. 246 [protruding water pipe located on adjacent private property].

Carson v. Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 830, 841, 206 C.R. 136, 686 P.2d 656 [sign located on property adjacent to city intersection obstructing view of intersection].

Joyce v. Simi Valley Unified School Dist. (2003) 110 C.A.4th 292, 298, 1 C.R.3d 712 [open school yard gate that encouraged students to cross heavily traveled four-lane highway at crosswalk, rather than at signal-controlled intersection less than 500 feet away].

In Branzel v. Concord (1966) 247 C.A.2d 68, 55 C.R. 167, defendant city maintained an open unfenced field for public flying of motor-driven model airplanes. The planes were held on long wires and moved in a circle. Immediately adjacent were high voltage power lines, lawfully maintained without insulation, and with no sign or other warning of the danger. The plane which plaintiff's son was flying jerked loose. Plaintiff pursued and caught the wire just as the plane looped over the power lines, and was electrocuted. Held, defendant city was liable for wrongful death. It was foreseeable that a plane might break loose, that persons flying it or others present might attempt to catch it by the trailing wire, that the wire could come in contact with the power lines, and that in view of the high speeds attained by the planes, all this could take place in a few seconds. Thus, "the condition of the field can be considered dangerous because the condition of the adjacent power lines exposed those using the field to a substantial risk of injury." (247 C.A.2d 75.)

Victorville* (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1242, 1259, 78 C.R.3d 372 [city that controlled southbound lanes of road could be liable for dangerous condition caused by inadequate stopping sight lines in northbound lanes owned and controlled by county; road had been widened in past, and both city and county had ability to effect change in design of roadway to protect against risk of injury].

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 270

[§ 270] Act or Omission of Employee.

In addition to a showing of dangerous condition and proximate cause, the plaintiff must establish one of two types of culpable conduct that justify the imposition of liability. The first is that the dangerous condition be created by "[a] negligent or wrongful act or omission of an employee of the public entity within the scope of his employment." (Govt.C. 835(a).) (See State v. Superior Court (1968) 263 C.A.2d 396, 399, 69 C.R. 683 [no recovery where no negligent act; injury to small child who sat on white ash from hot coals on a state beach]; *Van Kempen v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

d. Culpable Conduct.

2. Notice of Condition.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 271

[§ 271] Notice of Condition.

(1) In General. As an alternative to a negligent or wrongful act or omission (supra, §270), the second and more common basis of liability is that the public entity had "actual or constructive" notice of the dangerous condition "a sufficient time prior to the injury to have taken measures to protect against" it. (Govt.C. 835(b); see Flournoy v. California (1969) 275 C.A.2d 806, 810, 80 C.R. 485 [state's notice of periodic formation of ice on bridge and of numerous prior accidents]; Briggs v. California (1971) 14 C.A.3d 489, 495, 92 C.R. 433 [mudslide on state highway, known to highway crews for 10 days to 2 weeks before accident]; Van Kempen v. Hayward Area Park, Recreation & Park Dist. (1972) 23 C.A.3d 822, 827, 100 C.R. 498 [no actual or constructive notice, and no recovery].)

"Protect against" includes "repairing, remedying or correcting a dangerous condition, providing safeguards against a dangerous condition, or warning of a dangerous condition." (Govt.C. 830(b).) (See Flournoy v. California, supra [failure to post warning signs indicating ice on bridge or necessity of reducing speed]; Cameron v. California (1972) 7 C.3d 318, 329, 102 C.R. 305, 497 P.2d 777, infra, §281 [failure to warn of dangerous "S" curve].)

(2) Actual Notice. The entity has actual notice if it has "actual knowledge of the existence of the condition and knew or should have known of its dangerous character." (Govt.C. 835.2(a).)

(3) Constructive Notice. The entity has constructive notice if the condition "existed for such a period of time and was of such an obvious nature" that the condition and its danger should have been discovered in the exercise of due care. And on the issue of due care, evidence is admissible on (a) whether the dangerous condition would have been discovered by a reasonably adequate inspection system, and (b) whether the entity operated an inspection system with due care and did not discover the condition. (Govt.C. 835.2(b)); see Carson v. Facilities Dev. Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 830, 842, 206 C.R. 136, 686 P.2d 656 [constructive notice of dangerous condition created by encroaching sign]; Garber v. Los Angeles (1964) 226 C.A.2d 349, 354, 38 C.R. 157 [street defect; constructive notice may be established by proof of a previous fall]; Strongman v. Kern (1967) 255 C.A.2d 308, 312, 62 C.R. 908 [plaintiff failed to meet burden of showing notice by circumstantial evidence]; State v. Superior Court (1968) 263 C.A.2d 396, 399, 69 C.R. 683 [no evidence that condition existed for any particular length of time]; Erfurt v. California (1983) 141 C.A.3d 837, 844, 845, 190 C.R. 569 [jury could reasonably find constructive notice of condition in existence over 10 years, since construction of highway];

Nishihama v. San Francisco (2001) 93 C.A.4th 298, 302, 112 C.R.2d 861 [to show constructive notice of city, it was proper to introduce evidence that city had system for finding and repairing potholes and that it had sufficient time to have repaired them prior to plaintiff's injury].)

(4) Duration of Notice. The notice may be of extremely short duration. In Stanford v. Ontario (1972) 6 C.3d 870, 101 C.R. 97, 495 P.2d 425, a homeowner, seeking to connect her dwelling with defendant city's sewer system, engaged a plumbing contractor to do the job. After the contractor obtained a permit and the city engineers staked out the proposed excavation, the contractor dug the trench to a depth of 9 feet, but, in violation of an Industrial Safety Order, provided no shoring or sloping. On the morning of the day following the improper excavation, plaintiff employee, while in the ditch laying the pipe, was injured by a cave-in. In this action against defendant city, a nonsuit was granted. Held, reversed. There was evidence that an inspector could at a glance have determined that the condition of the excavation was dangerous, and could have ordered suspension of the work. (6 C.3d 882.) Thus, jury questions were presented whether a reasonable inspection would have disclosed the dangerous condition, and whether there would have been adequate time to take preventive measures. "Where the lives of workmen are imperiled, certainly it cannot be said as a matter of law that such an inspection would impose an unreasonable burden on a public entity." (6 C.3d 883.)

1. Reasonable Act or Omission.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 272

[§ 272] Reasonable Act or Omission.

A public entity is not liable for injuries resulting from a dangerous condition if (1) the act or omission that created the condition was reasonable or (2) the action it took to protect against the risk created by the condition, or its failure to take such an action, was reasonable. (Govt.C. 835.4.) This defense is provided in recognition that a public entity does not have the freedom of a private enterprise to decide not to engage in a particular activity that costs too much to keep safe. (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 835.4.)

Reasonableness is determined by weighing the probability and gravity of potential injury against the practicability and cost of the action. (Govt.C. 835.4; see Cardenas v. Turlock Irr. Dist. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 352, 362, 73 C.R. 69, infra, §274 [failure to fence canal in which small children drowned could be found reasonable considering cost and practicality]; Van Kempen v. Hayward Area Park, Recreation & Park Dist. (1972) 23 C.A.3d 822, 827, 100 C.R. 498 [park district's precautionary steps taken to secure bench were reasonable].)

The determination of reasonableness under Govt.C. 835.4 is a question of fact for the jury, unlike the applicability of the "design immunity" of Govt.C. 830.6 (infra, §280 et seq.), which is a question of law. (De La Rosa v. San Bernardino (1971) 16 C.A.3d 739, 748, 94 C.R. 175.)

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

2. Improper Use of Reservoir or Canal.

aa. Statutory Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 273

[§ 273] Statutory Rule.

Generally, a public entity or employee is not liable for an injury caused by the condition of a water improvement or distribution facility, if the injured person was using it for any purpose other than that intended or permitted. (Govt.C. 831.8(a)); on immunities and defenses of public employees concerning dangerous conditions generally, see infra, §360.) An example is use for swimming. (See Cardenas v. Turlock Irr. Dist. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 352, 356, 73 C.R. 69, infra, §274.) The following immunities or defenses are set forth in the statute:

(1) Reservoirs. Neither "a public entity nor a public employee" is liable for injuries from an unintended or unpermitted use caused by the condition of a reservoir. (Govt.C. 831.8(a).)

(2) Canals. Neither "an irrigation district nor an employee thereof nor the State nor a state employee" is liable for injuries suffered in an untended use of canals, conduits, or drains. (Govt.C. 831.8(b).) Irrigation and reclamation districts have long been separately classified; hence, the statutory immunity could not be claimed where children were drowned in a canal of defendant reclamation district. (Delta Farms Reclamation Dist. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 C.3d 699, 702, 703, 190 C.R. 494, 660 P.2d 1168; see dissent of two justices, arguing that there is no sharp distinction between an irrigation district and a reclamation district.)

(3) Flood control and water conservation facilities. Under prescribed conditions, neither "a public agency operating flood control or water conservation facilities nor its employees" are liable for injuries caused by the condition or use of "unlined flood control channels or adjacent groundwater recharge spreading grounds" where the person injured was using the property for a purpose other than that for which the public entity intended it to be use. (Govt.C. 831.8(c)); see Govt.C. 831.9(a) [records of injuries from unlined flood control channels or adjacent groundwater recharge spreading grounds in Los Angeles County and of resulting claims].) These provisions become inoperative on January 1, 2007. (Govt.C. 831.8(f), 831.9(b).)

Govt.C. 831.8 specifies two exceptional situations in which liability may be asserted. (See infra, §274.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Flood control and water conservation facilities. A limitation on immunity applies when the injured person is 16 years old or younger (see Supp., infra, §274). Govt.C. 831.8(c) and 831.9(a) now become inoperative on January 1, 2013. II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

2. Improper Use of Reservoir or Canal.

bb. Exceptions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 274

[§ 274] Exceptions.

A public entity or employee is not exonerated from liability for injury proximately caused by a dangerous condition of property in either of the following circumstances:

(1) Noncriminal trespasser and concealed trap. Where the injured person was not violating P.C. 552 et seq. (prohibiting trespassing on posted property; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §250), the condition created a substantial and unreasonable risk of harm to a person using the property with due care in a reasonably foreseeable manner, the condition was not reasonably apparent to a mature person acting with due care, and the entity or employee had actual knowledge of the condition and knew or should have known of its dangerous character in time to have protected against it. (Govt.C. 831.8(d).)

(2) Children under 12 and attractive nuisance. Where the injured person was a child under 12, the condition created a substantial and unreasonable risk of harm to such a child using the property with due care in a reasonably foreseeable manner, the child because of immaturity did not discover or appreciate the danger, and the entity or employee had actual knowledge of the condition and knew or should have known of its dangerous character in time to have protected against it. (Govt.C. 831.8(e); see Hibbs v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1967) 252 C.A.2d 166, 170, 60 C.R. 364 [flood control district's improved waterway passing through residential area containing elementary school, normally dry, presenting hazard of drowning in time of heavy rainfall, unfenced, and without warning signs of danger].)

The exception now stated in Govt.C. 831.8(e) was found inapplicable, and liability was rejected, in Cardenas v. Turlock Irr. Dist. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 352, 73 C.R. 69. Defendant irrigation district had 250 miles of unfenced canals. A 9-mile branch ran through the residential area of Modesto. Though the canal was posted with no-trespassing and no-swimming warnings, children regularly swam in it. Two boys, ages 6 and 8, and unable to swim, were repeatedly warned by their parents to stay away from the canal. They were left unattended for about an hour and a half, and were later found drowned in the canal. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) There was no unreasonable risk to these children. Unlike the situation in King v. Lennen (1959) 53 C.2d 340, 1 C.R. 665 (very young child, dirty water, sharp drop, slippery walls and bottom), the canal was not slippery, the flow was slow, and there were relatively few drownings over an 11-year period. (267 C.A.2d 358.)

(b) Even if there was an unreasonable risk, the evidence did not establish as a matter of law that the children did not appreciate the danger. They were of normal intelligence, and repeatedly warned. (267 C.A.2d 359.)

(c) The trial judge found on substantial evidence that considering costs, public function, etc., the failure to fence was reasonable, thus making applicable the "reasonableness" immunity of Govt.C. 835.4 (supra, §272). (267 C.A.2d 362.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) (New) Persons age 16 or younger injured at flood control or water conservation facilities. Govt.C. 831.8 was amended in 2008 to add an exception to immunity under Govt.C. 831.8(c). A public agency or employee is not exonerated if the person injured is age 16 or younger, the dangerous condition created a substantial and unreasonable risk of harm to children age 16 or younger using the property or adjacent property with due care and in a reasonably foreseeable manner, the injured person did not discover the condition or did not appreciate its dangerousness because of immaturity, and the public entity or employee had actual knowledge of the condition and knew or should have known of its dangerous character a sufficient time before the injury to have taken protective measures. (Govt.C. 831.8(f), added in 2008.)

Govt.C. 831.8(c) and 831.8(f) become inoperative on January 1, 2013. (Govt.C. 831.8(g).)

(1) General Scope of Immunity. A public entity is immune from liability for personal injury or property damage "arising out of" a "hazardous recreational activity." (Govt.C. 831.7; see 15 Pacific L. J. 686.)

In Decker v. Imperial Beach (1989) 209 C.A.3d 349, 257 C.R. 356, an action for the wrongful death of plaintiff's son while surfing, plaintiff argued that defendant city was not immune under Govt.C. 831.7 because its negligence during rescue attempts contributed to decedent's death. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) In defining the scope of hazardous recreational activities immunity, the Legislature did not limit immunity to injuries "solely attributable" to the hazardous activity. Rather it granted immunity for an injury "arising out" of that activity. "This broad language is reasonably susceptible to an interpretation that it was intended to preclude liability for negligently inflicted injuries while rescuing a person who has been participating in a hazardous recreational activity because it can be said the rescue effort 'arises out of' the individual's participation in the hazardous recreational activity." (209 C.A.3d 355.)

(b) This interpretation is consistent with the statutory scheme, because none of the exceptions to the rule of immunity, as stated in Govt.C. 831.7(c) (infra, §278), applies to liability for injuries caused by negligent rescue attempts. (209 C.A.3d 356.)

(c) Under Govt.C. 831.7(c)(5) (infra, §278), immunity would not extend to rescue attempts involving gross negligence. Interpreting Govt.C. 831.7 as granting immunity for emergency rescue services unless there is gross negligence is consistent with the numerous other statutes granting immunity to persons providing emergency assistance except when there is gross negligence. (209 C.A.3d 356.) And that interpretation is also consistent with the strong public policy of encouraging emergency assistance and rescue. (209 C.A.3d 357.)

(2) C.C. 846 Inapplicable. C.C. 846, the statute negating a duty to keep premises safe or to warn of hazards as to gratuitous users of property for recreational purposes (see infra, §1103 et seq.) applies only to private landowners, and gives no immunity to public entities. (Delta Farms Reclamation Dist. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 C.3d 699, 707, 190 C.R. 194, 600 P.2d 1168, supra, §262; Nelsen v. Gridley (1980) 113 C.A.3d 87, 91, 169 C.R. 757, infra, §1110.)

(3) Recovery of Attorneys' Fees From State Funds. The state Board of Control must allow a claim for reasonable attorneys' fees incurred by a public entity that gives permission to the public to enter or use real property for a recreational purpose and is sued by a person who allegedly suffers injury or damage on the property, or who seeks to restrict, prevent, or delay public use of the property, in any of the following circumstances:

(a) The court dismisses the action on a demurrer or motion for summary judgment by the public entity or on its own motion for lack of prosecution. (C.C. 846.1(b)(1).)

(b) The action is dismissed by the plaintiff without any payment from the public entity. (C.C. 846.1(b)(2).)

(c) The public entity prevails in the action. (C.C. 846.1(b)(3).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Scope of Immunity. See Avila v. Citrus Community College Dist. (2006) 38 C.4th 148, 157, 41 C.R.3d 299, 131 P.3d 383, Supp., infra, §277 [Govt.C. 831.7 was adopted as premises liability measure, designed to limit liability based on public entity's failure either to maintain public property or to warn of dangerous conditions on public property; statute was not intended to limit public entity's liability arising from other duties, such as duty to supervise participation in particular activities].

(3) Recovery of Attorneys' Fees From State Funds. C.C. 846.1(b) was amended in 2006 to refer to the California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board, rather than the state Board of Control.

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

3. Hazardous Recreational Activity.

cc. Nature of Activity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 277

[§ 277] Nature of Activity.

(1) General Definition. The term "hazardous recreational activity" is generally defined as "a recreational activity conducted on property of a public entity which creates a substantial (as distinguished from a minor, trivial, or insignificant) risk of injury to a participant or a spectator." (Govt.C. 831.7(b); see Wood v. San Joaquin (2003) 111 C.A.4th 960, 968, 4 C.R.3d 340 ["arising out of" language of Govt.C. 831.7 encompasses objectively foreseeable risks of participating in hazardous recreational activity; thus, entity was not liable for deaths of fishermen resulting when their tethered canoe was struck by powerboat in channel used by public]; 80 A.L.R.3d 1192 [governmental liability for injury resulting from automobile road racing].)

(2) Enumerated Activities. The term also specifically includes various enumerated activities: (a) Water contact activities where no lifeguard is provided and warning has been given of the absence of a lifeguard or this should reasonably have been known. (b) Diving from other than a board or platform or where diving is prohibited and warning has been given. (c) "Animal riding, including equestrian competition, archery, bicycle racing or jumping, mountain bicycling, boating, cross-country and downhill skiing, hang gliding, kayaking, motorized vehicle racing, off-road motorcycling or four-wheel driving of any kind, orienteering, pistol and rifle shooting, rock climbing, rocketeering, rodeo, spelunking, sky diving, sport parachuting, paragliding, body contact sports (i.e., sports in which it is reasonably foreseeable that there will be rough bodily contact with one or more participants), surfing, trampolining, tree climbing, tree rope swinging, water skiing, white water rafting, and wind surfing." For these purposes, " 'mountain bicycling' does not include riding a bicycle on paved pathways, roadways, or sidewalks." (Govt.C. 831.7(b).)

(3) Illustrations in Cases. The following cases have found particular activities to constitute hazardous recreational activities:

(a) Diving. (See Morin v. Los Angeles (1989) 215 C.A.3d 184, 195, 263 C.R. 479 [diving from sand near shore's edge into ocean]; Tessier v. Newport Beach (1990) 219 C.A.3d 310, 316, 268 C.R. 233 [same]; Rombalski v. Laguna Beach (1989) 213 C.A.3d 842, 850, 261 C.R. 820 [diving from rock into ocean]; Valenzuela v. San Diego (1991) 234 C.A.3d 258, 263, 286 C.R. 1 [following Rombalski]; Berry v. California (1992) 2 C.A.4th 688, 692, 3 C.R.2d 382

[diving from tree stump into river].)

(b) Games. (See Yarber v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1516, 1519, 6 C.R.2d 437 [playing full-court basketball in gym with unpadded concrete wall located 4 feet beyond end line]; Ochoa v. California State University (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1300, 1306, 85 C.R.2d 768 [adult college student voluntarily participating in intramural soccer game; following Yarber].)

(4) Distinction: School Activities. School physical educational classes, on the other hand, have been held not to constitute hazardous recreational activities. Govt.C. 831.7 is inapplicable to injuries sustained on school grounds during a physical education class required by the school and conducted during school hours. Thus, a body contact sport incorporated into a physical education class is not a "recreational" activity, no matter how hazardous the activity may be in the abstract. (Iverson v. Muroc Unified School Dist. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 218, 227, 38 C.R.2d 35 [soccer match during physical education class on school grounds].)

The same is true of school-sponsored extracurricular activities under the supervision of school personnel. Nothing in Govt.C. 831.7 or its history demonstrates a clear legislative intent to immunize school districts from liability for negligent supervision of extracurricular activities in general or athletics in particular. Nor is immunity conferred by necessary implication. Under Govt.C. 831.7 a school district would not be liable for purely "recreational" activities that happen to be conducted on school property. However, a clear distinction exists between allowing the public to use school facilities and school-sponsored athletic practices under the supervision of school personnel after school or during the off-season. Furthermore, an activity is not "recreational" merely because it is voluntary. (Acosta v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1995) 31 C.A.4th 471, 477, 37 C.R.2d 171 [school district was liable for injuries suffered by student gymnast during after-school practice session in off-season supervised by gymnastics coach].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Enumerated Activities. See 29 A.L.R.6th 369 [governmental liability for injury sustained or caused by person sledding, tobogganing, or coasting on snow on government land]. (4) Distinction: School Activities. In Avila v. Citrus Community College Dist. (2006) 38 C.4th 148, 41 C.R.3d 299, 131 P.3d 383, a community college baseball player sued a rival community college for negligent supervision of a game after he was struck in the head by a pitched ball. The trial court sustained the college's demurrer on the ground that it was immune from liability under Govt.C. 831.7, and dismissed the action against it. Held, this was error; the statute "does not extend to injuries sustained during supervised school sports." (38 C.4th 152.)

(a) The legislative history of Govt.C. 831.7 shows that it was adopted as a premises liability measure, modeled on C.C. 846 (see text, §1103 et seq.), and designed to limit liability based on a public entity's failure either to maintain public property or to warn of dangerous conditions on public property. Nothing in this history indicates that the statute was intended to limit a public entity's liability arising from other duties, such as a duty to supervise participation in particular activities. Consistent with the legislative history, cases applying Govt.C. 831.7 immunity generally have done so only in the context of injuries sustained during voluntary, unsupervised, unsponsored activities. (38 C.4th 157.)

(b) Separate from the body of law governing premises liability claims, another body of law establishes that public schools and public colleges and universities owe certain nonproperty-based duties to their students. Public schools have a duty to supervise students, and this duty extends to athletic practice and play. Although public colleges and universities do not owe similarly broad duties of supervision to all their students, that development has not limited the recognition that they owe special duties to their athletes when conducting athletic practices and games. (38 C.4th 158.)

intended to immunize public entities from liability for injuries sustained by members of the public during voluntary unsupervised play on public land, in order to prevent public entities from having to close off their land to this use in order to limit liability. These activities may be fairly characterized as recreational. Sports in the school environment, in contrast, are not "recreational" in the sense of voluntary unsupervised play, but rather part and parcel of the school's educational mission. (38 C.4th 159.)

(d) Nothing in the legislative history indicates that the Legislature ever contemplated or intended that Govt.C. 831.7 would overrule the body of law governing supervisorial duties and liability in the school sports context. Accordingly, the statute cannot be read as immunizing public entities from potential liability arising out of their oversight of school-sponsored activities. "[S]chool sports in general, and organized intercollegiate games in particular, are not 'recreational' within the meaning of the statute." (38 C.4th 160, disapproving Ochoa v. California State University (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1300, 85 C.R.2d 768, text, p. 453, to extent it suggests that Govt.C. 831.7 always immunizes universities against liability for injuries sustained by their adult student-athletes.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

3. Hazardous Recreational Activity.

dd. Exceptions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 278

[§ 278] Exceptions.

(1) Liability of Entity. The immunity under Govt.C. 831.7 for hazardous recreational activities does not limit liability of the public entity that would otherwise exist for any of the following:

(a) Failure to guard or warn after knowledge. Failure of the entity to "guard or warn of a known dangerous condition or of another hazardous recreational activity known to the public entity ... that is not reasonably assumed by the participant as inherently a part of the hazardous recreational activity out of which the damage or injury arose." (Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1).)

In DeVito v. California (1988) 202 C.A.3d 264, 248 C.R. 330, plaintiff was injured when she fell down a steep slope after swinging from a fire hose that was hanging from a tree. Plaintiff argued that Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1) was applicable because defendant state failed to warn her of a known dangerous condition. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. From the legislative history of Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1), it is clear that the phrase "that is not reasonably assumed by the participant as inherently a part of the hazardous recreational activity" modifies the phrase "known dangerous condition," as well as the phrase "another hazardous recreational activity." (202 C.A.3d 271.) Because a person who swings from a hose hanging from a tree limb over a steep slope must be held to have reasonably assumed that an inherent part of the activity is the possibility of falling down the slope, Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1) was inapplicable. Hence, defendant was immune from liability. (202 C.A.3d 272.) (See Rombalski v. Laguna Beach (1989) 213 C.A.3d 842, 851, 261 C.R. 820 [diving from rock into ocean; following DeVito v. California]; Perez v. Los Angeles (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1380, 1386, 33 C.R.2d 55 [determination whether dangerous condition or hazardous recreational activity was reasonably assumed by the participant, within meaning of Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1), is based on objective, instead of subjective, standard].)

In Valenzuela v. San Diego (1991) 234 C.A.3d 258, 263, 286 C.R. 1, the court said: "The inherent risk of diving from a rock into shallow water is hitting one's head. Here Valenzuela reasonably assumed this inherent risk. He dove from this rock twice on the day before the accident, and twice on the day of the accident. He knew the water was shallow and purposely dove at an angle in an attempt to avoid striking the bottom. Since hitting one's head is reasonably assumed as an inherent risk of diving from a rock into shallow water," Govt.C. 831.7(c)(1) does not apply.

(b) Permission to participate for fee. Injury or damage suffered "where permission to participate in the hazardous recreational activity was granted for a specific fee. For the purpose of this paragraph, a "specific fee" does not include a fee or consideration charged for a general purpose such as a general park admission charge, a vehicle entry or parking fee, or an administrative or group use application or permit fee, as distinguished from a specific fee charged for participation in the specific hazardous recreational activity out of which the damage or injury arose." (Govt.C. 831.7(c)(2).)

(c) Improper construction or maintenance. Injury suffered "to the extent proximately caused by the negligent failure of the public entity or public employee to properly construct or maintain in good repair any structure, recreational equipment or machinery, or substantial work of improvement utilized in the hazardous recreational activity out of which the damage or injury arose." (Govt.C. 831.7(c)(3).)

(d) Improper promotion of participation. Injury or damage suffered "where the public entity or employee, recklessly or with gross negligence, promoted the participation in, or observance of, a hazardous recreational activity. For purposes of this paragraph, promotional literature or a public announcement or advertisement which merely describes the available facilities and services on the property does not in itself constitute a reckless or grossly negligent promotion." (Govt.C. 831.7(c)(4).)

(e) Act of gross negligence. An "act of gross negligence" by the entity "is the proximate cause of the injury." (Govt.C. 831.7(c)(5); see Decker v. Imperial Beach (1989) 209 C.A.3d 349, 358, 257 C.R. 356, supra, §275 [gross negligence not established]; Wood v. San Joaquin (2003) 111 C.A.4th 960, 971, 4 C.R.3d 340 [failing to place speed limit signs in narrow harbor with boat docks was equivalent to "failing to enforce" Harb. & Nav.C. 655.2, but Govt.C. 818.2 immunizes public entity for injury caused by "failing to enforce" any law; thus, failing to post speed limit signs was not "gross negligence" within meaning of Govt.C. 831.7(c)(5)].)

Nothing in Govt.C. 831.7(c) "creates a duty of care or basis of liability for personal injury or for damage to personal property." (Govt.C. 831.7(c).)

(2) Liability of Others. The immunity does not "limit the liability of an independent concessionaire, or any person or organization other than the public entity, whether or not the person or organization has a contractual relationship with the public entity to use the public property, for injuries or damages suffered in any case as a result of the operation of a hazardous recreational activity on public property by the concessionaire, person, or organization." (Govt.C. 831.7(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Liability of Entity.(b) Permission to participate for fee. See Perry v. East Bay Regional Park Dist. (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1, 13, 45 C.R.3d 477 [Govt.C. 831.7(c)(2) did not apply to drowning death of 14-year-old boy where fee for swimming in public lake was charged only when lifeguards were on duty and decedent drowned after lifeguards were no longer on duty; terms of exception require that fee be charged for "specific hazardous recreational activity out of which the damage or injury arose"].

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 279

[§ 279] Accident Caused by Weather Conditions.

It is a defense to governmental liability for a dangerous condition that the injury was a result of "the effect on the use of streets and highways of weather conditions," e.g., "fog, wind, rain, flood, ice or snow." (Govt.C. 831; see Allyson v. Department of Trans. (1997) 53 C.A.4th 1304, 1312, 62 C.R.2d 490 [Govt.C. 831 applied to snowstorm accident, where Caltrans had only discretionary, not mandatory, duty to do such things as post speed signs, establish chain control, plow snow from road, spread cinders, and post warning signs].)

This immunity does not exist, however, (1) if the effect "would not be reasonably apparent to, and would not be anticipated by, a person exercising due care," or (2) where the weather conditions "resulted in physical damage to or deterioration of" the street or highway. (Govt.C. 831; see Erfurt v. California (1983) 141 C.A.3d 837, 845, 846, 190 C.R. 569 [effect would not be anticipated; blinding sunlight combined with pillar in middle of freeway].)

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

5. Advance Approval of Plan or Design.

aa. Nature of Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 280

[§ 280] Nature of Defense.

(1) Elements. Under Govt.C. 830.6, setting forth the so-called design immunity defense (see Cornette v. Department of Trans. (2001) 26 C.4th 63, 68, 109 C.R.2d 1, 26 P.3d 332; Hefner v. Sacramento (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1007, 1014, 243 C.R. 291; Wycoff v. California (2001) 90 C.A.4th 45, 50, 108 C.R.2d 198), a public entity or employee is not liable for an injury where all of the following are shown:

(a) Causation of the injury by a defective plan or design for the construction or improvement of public property. (Govt.C. 830.6; infra, §281.)

(b) Advance approval of the plan or design by the entity's legislative body or by some other body or employee exercising discretionary authority (or preparation of the plan or design in conformity with standards previously so approved). (Govt.C. 830.6; infra, §282.)

(c) Reasonableness of the adoption or approval of the plan or standards. (Govt.C. 830.6; infra, §283.) (See Hernandez v. Department of Trans. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 376, 383, 7 C.R.3d 536 [first two of three elements of design immunity are questions of fact for jury; only last element, concerning reasonableness of design, is question of law for court]; 30 Lincoln L. Rev. 25 [design immunity in median barrier case]; 28 San Diego L. Rev. 241 [comprehensive review of cases decided under Govt.C. 830.6]; 11 U.S.F. L. Rev. 395; 45 A.L.R.3d 875 [governmental tort liability as to highway median barriers]; on immunities and defenses of public employees concerning dangerous conditions generally, see infra, §360.)

(2) Purpose and Effect. The legislative purpose of the defense is stated by the California Law Revision Commission as follows: "There should be immunity from liability for the plan or design of public construction and improvements where the plan or design has been approved by a governmental agency exercising discretionary authority, unless there is no reasonable basis for such approval. While it is proper to hold public entities liable for injuries caused by arbitrary abuses of discretionary authority in planning improvements, to permit reexamination in tort litigation of particular discretionary decisions where reasonable [persons] may differ on how the discretion should be exercised would create too great a danger of impolitic interference with the freedom of decision-making by those public officials to whom the function of making such decisions has been vested." (4 Cal. Law Revision Com. Reports (1963), p. 823; see Uyeno v. California (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1371, 1376, 286 C.R. 328 [quoting commission].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Purpose and Effect. See Weinstein v. Department of Trans. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 52, 61, 42 C.R.3d 417 [public entity held immune from liability because design is deemed reasonably adoptable cannot then be held liable for failing to warn that design is dangerous; to hold otherwise would be illogical]. Correction: Page 456, fourth line of section, "Wyckoff v. California" should be "Wyckoff v. California".

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

5. Advance Approval of Plan or Design.

bb. Causation of Injury by Design.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 281

[§ 281] Causation of Injury by Design.

(1) In General. Design immunity applies only to "an injury caused by the plan or design of a construction of, or an improvement to, public property." (Govt.C. 830.6; see Fuller v. Department of Trans. (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1109, 1114, 107 C.R.2d 823 [setting speed limit is subject to design immunity analysis because it is related to road construction or improvement].)

The defense is available despite departures from the design plans where these are not material to the circumstances of the accident. (Wyckoff v. California (2001) 90 C.A.4th 45, 52, 108 C.R.2d 198.)

(2) Defense Is Unavailable Where Concurrent Cause Subjects Entity to Liability. Design immunity is not a defense if the injuries are caused, at least in part, by negligent acts or omissions of the public entity that are independent of the plan or design. (Flournoy v. California (1969) 275 C.A.2d 806, 814, 80 C.R. 485.) Cameron v. California (1972) 7 C.3d 318, 102 C.R. 305, 497 P.2d 777, is illustrative. Plaintiffs sued for injuries sustained when the automobile in which they were riding went out of control on a sharp curve in the roadway. The theory of the complaint was that the superelevation or banking changed abruptly without warning signs. Held, the design defense was not available. Even though the state may have had the defense against its active negligence in construction, it could still be held liable for its passive negligence in failing to warn of the danger, where that failure was "an independent, separate, concurring cause of the accident." (7 C.3d 329.) (See 61 Cal. L. Rev. 627.) [Cameron.])

In Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 C.A.4th 476, 53 C.R.2d 906, however, the plaintiff failed to show an independent ground for liability. Plaintiff boarded a car of defendant district. As plaintiff was preparing to sit down, the car lurched back and forth approximately five times, throwing her into a seat and injuring her. Plaintiff alleged negligent maintenance of the train and negligent supervision of train operators. Defendant unsuccessfully moved for summary judgment. Held, on writ of mandamus, trial judge directed to grant the motion; defendant was immune under Govt. C. 830.6.

(a) Design immunity is limited to design-caused accident; it does not immunize the public entity from liability for negligence that is independent of design. (46 C.A.4th 480.)

(b) To prove that a design defect caused the accident (the other elements of the defense were not in controversy), defendant in moving for summary judgment introduced expert testimony that the design of its acceleration system produced some lurching motion during acceleration when the system sensed that the wheels were slipping. (46 C.A.4th 481.) To combat this evidence, plaintiff showed that a suitable ride was produced by proper functioning of all the systems, the malfunction of any of which could be caused by negligent maintenance or negligent supervision. However, she introduced no evidence regarding the negligence in maintenance or supervision, or the mechanism by which a failure with respect to these functions could cause lurching during acceleration. Plaintiff thus failed to meet her burden of proof. (46 C.A.4th 482.)

(3) Distinction: Temporary Dangerous Condition Arising During Construction of Improvement. Govt.C. 830.6 is inapplicable to a temporary dangerous condition of public property that arises during the construction of an improvement. The class of risks that attend construction work is dissimilar to that attending the design of improved public property. The risks inherent in the static design alternatives of a finished fixed installation are different in kind and are generally more limited and foreseeable than those that arise in the fluid process of construction. (Winig v. California (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1772, 1776, 45 C.R.2d 652 [excavation preparatory to installation of new median barrier on freeway].)

5. Advance Approval of Plan or Design.

cc. Advance Discretionary Approval.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 282

[§ 282] Advance Discretionary Approval.

To establish design immunity, the entity must show either that the plan or design "has been approved in advance of the construction or improvement by the legislative body of the public entity or by some other body or employee exercising discretionary authority to give such approval" or that the plan or design "is prepared in conformity with standards previously so approved." (Govt.C. 830.6; see Uyeno v. California (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1371, 1376, 286 C.R. 328 [approval of design of traffic signal system]; Sutton v. Golden Gate Bridge, Highway & Trans. Dist. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1149, 1157, 81 C.R.2d 155 [evidence showed adequate approval of plan to omit movable median barrier on Golden Gate Bridge]; Hernandez v. Department of Trans. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 376, 383, 7 C.R.3d 536 [element of design immunity that requires discretionary approval of design prior to construction is question of fact for jury]; 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 15 [Uyeno].)

The approval must be by an agency exercising discretionary authority. In Johnston v. Yolo (1969) 274 C.A.2d 46, 79 C.R. 33, plaintiff sued defendant county for injuries sustained when a car failed to negotiate a double curve in a county road. In rejecting the design defense, the court pointed out that the approval must be by the governmental agency exercising discretionary authority. Under the Streets and Highways Code, this was not the board of supervisors, but the county road commissioner, a qualified civil engineer. The evidence showed that the road commissioner disapproved of the design, but ordered it built anyway in deference to the wishes of a member of the county board of supervisors. This was not the approval required by the statute. The approval had to express both his official and professional approval, and did not. (274 C.A.2d 54.)

In Bane v. California (1989) 208 C.A.3d 860, 256 C.R. 468, infra, §284, a Caltrans engineer responsible for the safety of an intersection approved a plan for design changes, but did not sign it as required by B. & P.C. 6735. Held, the plan was nevertheless "approved" under Govt.C. 830.6.

(a) B. & P.C. 6735 does not invalidate unsigned plans, and Govt.C. 830.6 does not require that approved plans be signed. The only purpose for the signature requirement is to establish accountability. Hence, although a public entity will have a more difficult time demonstrating that unsigned plans were approved, it may nevertheless establish approval by oral testimony, as was done here. (208 C.A.3d 869.)

(b) Johnston v. Yolo, supra, is distinguishable, because the "approving" commissioner in that case actually disapproved of the design. (208 C.A.3d 867.)

The approval must have included the alleged design feature that is in issue. (Cameron v. California (1972) 7 C.3d 318, 326, 102 C.R. 305, 497 P.2d 777, supra, §281 [accident where banking on sharp curve changed abruptly without warning; although plans had been approved, they contained no specification of banking].)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 283

[§ 283] Reasonableness of Design.

Another requirement for design immunity is that "the trial or appellate court determines that there is any substantial evidence upon the basis of which (a) a reasonable public employee could have adopted the plan or design or the standards therefor or (b) a reasonable legislative body or other body or employee could have approved the plan or design or the standards therefor." (Govt.C. 830.6; see Cornette v. Department of Trans. (2001) 26 C.4th 63, 68, 109 C.R.2d 1, 26 P.3d 332 [court, not jury, determines existence of substantial evidence to support reasonableness of initial adoption of plan or design]; Levin v. California (1983) 146 C.A.3d 410, 418, 194 C.R. 223 [no showing of reasonableness; silence of state's experts regarding absence of shoulder and guardrails at accident site]; Morfin v. California (1993) 12 C.A.4th 812, 816, 15 C.R.2d 861 [to establish unreasonable design of DMV building in which plaintiffs were sitting when it was hit by a car, evidence of number of vehicle-building collisions at other DMV facilities within preceding 10 years was relevant]; Higgins v. California (1997) 54 C.A.4th 177, 184, 62 C.R.2d 459 [reasonable basis for approval of design]; Grenier v. Irwindale (1997) 57 C.A.4th 931, 941, 67 C.R.2d 454, infra, §284 [when proving that design was reasonable, it is only necessary to produce some substantial evidence to that effect, that is, evidence of solid value that reasonably inspires confidence, such as opinion of civil engineer; it makes no difference that there is also contrary evidence]; Arreola v. Monterey (2002) 99 C.A.4th 722, 757, 122 C.R.2d 38 [holding that there was no substantial evidence on basis of which reasonable public employee could have approved culvert design that did not take flooding into account]; Hernandez v. Department of Trans. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 376, 386, 7 C.R.3d 536 [element of design immunity that requires substantial evidence supporting reasonableness of design is matter of law for court to decide; following Cornette].)

The requirement of reasonable design was not met in Davis v. Cordova Recreation & Park Dist. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 789, 101 C.R. 358. The dangerous condition was a lake in defendant district's park, intended for aesthetic and fishing purposes, not for swimming. Plaintiff's 4-year-old son drowned in the deep area. Defendant had actual knowledge of children playing in the lake. Held, there was no substantial evidence to support a conclusion of reasonableness of a "fish hole" or sump 51/2 feet deep at the bottom, properly described as a "trap." (24 C.A.3d 799.)

See Weinstein v. Department of Trans. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 52, 58, 42 C.R.3d 417 [substantial evidence supported Department of Transportation's decision to omit median barrier at location of later accident; department could reasonably focus on cross-median accident rate in vicinity, rather than general accident rate there, in deciding whether barrier was required]; Laabs v. Victorville (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1242, 1262, 1267, 78 C.R.3d 372 [design immunity for dangerous condition of road where collision occurred was established by evidence that city's engineer had approved plan for construction and expert's declaration that design was not only "reasonable," but "excellent"; that design was reasonably approved was implicit in declaration].

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.

e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.

5. Advance Approval of Plan or Design.

ee. Effect of Changed Conditions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 284

[§ 284] Effect of Changed Conditions.

(1) Baldwin Case. In Baldwin v. California (1972) 6 C.3d 424, 438, 99 C.R. 145, 491 P.2d 1121, the court laid down a substantial limitation on the design defense, holding it to be unavailable where changed circumstances have produced a dangerous condition of which the entity has notice. In 1967, plaintiff, driving north on a four-lane highway through a city, waited in the high-speed left lane to make a left turn, and was struck from behind. He sued the state. Defendant offered evidence sufficient to show that the plan for the intersection without a left turn lane, made in 1942, was reasonable and properly approved at the time. In subsequent years, the traffic increased enormously, and commencing in 1961, complaints to the Division of Highways by the police, businesspersons, the city council, and others, called attention to the serious danger and listed numerous traffic injuries, including four deaths. The division notified the city that it was restudying the conditions, but took no action. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Design immunity is not perpetual. The Law Revision Commission, in drafting Govt.C. 830.6, referred to the "similar" judicially developed rule of Weiss v. Fote, 7 N.Y.2d 579. But Weiss did not state an absolute and permanent immunity: "The clear teaching of Weiss is that design immunity persists only so long as conditions have not changed. Having approved the plan or design, the governmental entity may not, ostrich-like, hide its head in the blueprints, blithely ignoring the actual operation of the plan. Once the entity has notice that the plan or design, under changed physical conditions, has produced a dangerous condition of public property, it must act reasonably to correct or alleviate the hazard." (6 C.3d 434.) Because the Legislature explicitly adopted the Weiss rule, it did not intend that design immunity be perpetual. (6 C.3d 434.)

(b) Function of trier of fact. Juries should not be allowed to second-guess discretionary determinations of public officials. But where experience has revealed the dangerous nature of a public improvement under changed conditions, the trier of fact will not simply be reweighing the same technical data and policy criteria that went into the original plan; there will be objective evidence of its actual operation. (6 C.3d 435.)

(c) Policy considerations. This view also reflects considerations of public policy guiding judicial decisions in the field of governmental liability. (6 C.3d 436.) The argument that liability under the new rule will bankrupt public entities by forcing them to spend vast sums for updating of hazardous or obsolescent public improvements is unsound. Under Govt.C. 835.4 (supra, §272), corrective action need only be reasonable, and in this case, barricades would have been sufficient. Also, past experience under the Public Liability Act of 1923 (supra, §212) before the design immunity law was enacted, and in other populous states such as New York and Illinois, shows no such fiscal disaster. (6 C.3d 437.)

(d) Inverse condemnation liability is persuasive. The constitutional liability, under Cal. Const., Art. I, §19 (8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1132), for injury to property by an improvement as deliberately designed and constructed overrides any statutory design immunity for injury to property. Consequently, where property is involved, a public entity is already under a continuing obligation to review the design of its public works in order to avoid liability constitutionally imposed. No insuperable additional burden is placed on a public entity by extending this duty to cases of personal injury. (6 C.3d 438.)

(e) Conclusion. "Where a plan or design of a construction of, or improvement to, public property, although shown to have been reasonably approved in advance or prepared in conformity with standards previously so approved, as being safe, nevertheless in its actual operation under changed physical conditions produces a dangerous condition of public property and causes injury, the public entity does not retain the statutory immunity from liability" conferred on it by Govt.C. 830.6. (6 C.3d 438.) (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1756 [case law before Baldwin]; 4 U.S.F. L. Rev. 442 [same]; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 627; 3 Pacific L. J. 687 [proposing new statute to increase predictability of immunity]; 10 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 393; 11 U.S.F. L. Rev. 400.)

(2) Legislative Expansion of Immunity. To meet liability concerns raised by Baldwin, Govt.C. 830.6 was amended in 1979. (See 11 Pacific L. J. 658.) The following provisions were added:

(a) Immunity while public entity seeks funding and performs remedial work. "Notwithstanding notice" that the property may no longer be in conformity with a proper design, the immunity will continue for a reasonable period of time sufficient for the public entity to obtain funds and carry out remedial work to put the property in such conformity. (Govt.C. 830.6.)

(b) Immunity where adequate warnings given. If the public entity is unable to remedy the condition because of "practical impossibility or lack of sufficient funds," the immunity remains "so long as such public entity shall reasonably attempt to provide adequate warnings of the existence of the condition." However, failure of a person to heed the warning "shall not in itself constitute an assumption of the risk of the danger." (Govt.C. 830.6.)

There was some initial confusion on how these legislative changes affected the principles stated in Baldwin. Bane v. California (1989) 208 C.A.3d 860, 256 C.R. 468, held that these legislative changes nullified the Baldwin requirement of a change in physical conditions for loss of design immunity: "[I]n drafting the 1979 amendment to section 830.6, the Legislature is presumed to have been aware of the Baldwin holding, yet it did not limit the loss of immunity to changed physical conditions which result in a dangerous condition. Rather, the amendment language is unlimited; thus, the amendment should be construed to mean that immunity is lost if the subsequent history shows the design was unreasonable for any reason once the public entity has notice of the dangerous condition and has a sufficient time period to remedy it." (208 C.A.3d 871.)

However, the holding in Bane was subsequently rejected by several Courts of Appeal, including, ultimately, the court that rendered the decision. These courts held that the 1979 legislative changes, rather than expanding Baldwin to extinguish design immunity in a situation other than changed physical conditions, extended design immunity in circumstances when, under Baldwin, that immunity would otherwise be lost. (See Compton v. Santee (1993) 12 C.A.4th 591, 598, 15 C.R.2d 660 [rejecting Bane and following Baldwin]; Grenier v. Irwindale (1997) 57 C.A.4th 931, 945, 67 C.R.2d 454 [same]; Sutton v. Golden Gate Bridge, Highway & Trans. Dist. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1149, 1162, 81 C.R.2d 155 [same]; Alvarez v. California (1999) 79 C.A.4th 720, 735, 95 C.R.2d 719 [Bane overruled by court that rendered that decision].)

(3) Cornette Case: Elements Required for Loss of Immunity. Any possible remaining confusion over the effect of the 1979 legislation was laid to rest in Cornette v. Department of Trans. (2001) 26 C.4th 63, 109 C.R.2d 1, 26 P.3d 332: Under Baldwin and Govt.C. 830.6, "to demonstrate loss of design immunity a plaintiff must establish three elements: (1) the plan or design has become dangerous because of a change in physical conditions; (2) the public entity had actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition thus created; and (3) the public entity had a reasonable time to obtain the funds and carry out the necessary remedial work to bring the property back into conformity with a reasonable design or plan, or the public entity, unable to remedy the condition due to practical impossibility or lack of funds, had not reasonably attempted to provide adequate warnings." (26 C.4th 72.)

(4) Illustrations. The following decisions illustrate what constitute "changed conditions" and the effect of the change:

Higgins v. California (1997) 54 C.A.4th 177, 187, 62 C.R.2d 459 [no changed circumstances where highway design approved in late 1960s and improved in late 1980s still complied with state standards; even if increased traffic had created hazard, defendant lacked requisite notice of this fact; distinguishing Baldwin].

Dole Citrus v. California (1997) 60 C.A.4th 486, 70 C.R.2d 348 [fact that new design manual required all new overpasses to be provided with screens, as well as existing overpasses considered to be dangerous, did not require retrofitting of all existing overpasses and did not establish changed circumstances making state liable for injuries sustained when object fell from unscreened overpass].

Sutton v. Golden Gate Bridge, Highway & Trans. Dist., supra [rejecting argument that technological advances in development of movable median barrier by 1994 constituted evidence of changed conditions defeating design immunity granted in 1985].

Wyckoff v. California (2001) 90 C.A.4th 45, 58, 108 C.R.2d 198 [changed circumstances, including increased traffic volume and increased speed limit, did not make absence of center divider at site of head-on collision dangerous condition that would result in loss of design immunity, where no relation appeared between these increases and higher cross-median accident rates].

Mirzada v. Department of Trans. (2003) 111 C.A.4th 802, 805, 4 C.R.3d 205 [plaintiffs failed to raise factual issue concerning whether lack of median barrier had become dangerous due to changed circumstances; increase in traffic alone proved nothing].

In Grenier v. Irwindale, supra, plaintiff was injured when an automobile skidded on flooded streets and struck him. He sued defendant city, but it obtained summary judgment on the ground of design immunity. Held, affirmed. Plaintiff has shown no change in physical conditions here. He has shown no evidence that this single accident in 7 years constituted a change in conditions. Also, although the city had undisputed knowledge that the street flooded during storms, this was not a change in conditions, but something that existed from the day the improvements were first implemented. (57 C.A.4th 945.)

In Alvarez v. California, supra, plaintiff was injured and her son was killed when an approaching vehicle crossed the median and struck her car. The highway in question had been widened into a six-lane highway with a dirt median between the north and southbound lanes. On most of the 30-mile stretch involved, defendant state had constructed median barriers, but there was a 3.42-mile stretch where no barrier had been erected, and the accident occurred within this segment. With respect to the construction of median barriers, defendant's policy was that barriers should be installed only if the result of colliding with the barrier would be less severe than the result if no barrier existed. Summary judgment was entered for defendant on the ground of design immunity. Held, affirmed; plaintiff failed to establish a triable issue of fact of changed conditions.

(a) While increased traffic volume may constitute changed physical conditions, design immunity is not lost simply because the design is operating under changed conditions. Instead, there must be evidence that, under the new conditions, the design has produced a dangerous condition of which the state is aware, and "dangerous condition" means a condition creating substantial injury when the property is used with due care in a reasonably foreseeable manner. For example, there was no evidence that, after the road in question was widened, increased traffic, coupled with an aberrant accident history, indicated its dangerousness. (79 C.A.4th 737.)

(b) The fact that defendant had erected other barriers on other segments of the road in question merely showed defendant's general concern with safety; it did not constitute an admission that lack of a barrier created a dangerous condition. Given the probability that barriers might increase, rather than decrease, the likelihood of accidents, defendant did not choose to install barriers on every median. Rather, it sought to identify road segments where the benefit of a barrier might outweigh the expected detriment. This determination did not constitute a finding that a median without a barrier was a dangerous condition or that conditions had changed so that design immunity had ended. (79 C.A.4th 738.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Illustrations. The following decisions also illustrate what constitute "changed conditions" and the effect of the change:

Weinstein v. Department of Trans. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 52, 60, 42 C.R.3d 417 [increase in traffic and corresponding increase in accidents did not result in loss of design immunity defense against liability for omission of median barrier; plaintiffs failed to produce evidence that either statistic made roadway's condition at accident location inconsistent with state standards or would have rendered defendant's approval of roadway's design unreasonable].

Laabs v. Victorville (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1242, 1268, 78 C.R.3d 372 [plaintiff injured in collision at intersection of public roads failed to show that city lost design immunity for dangerous condition as result of changed circumstances; there was no evidence that functioning of intersection had changed through time or that city could carry out remedial work].

- 5. Dangerous Condition of Public Property.
 - e. Particular Immunities and Defenses.
 - 5. Advance Approval of Plan or Design.
 - ff. Protective Measures Against Earth Movement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 285

[§ 285] Protective Measures Against Earth Movement.

(1) Nature and Purpose of Legislation. Govt.C. 865 et seq. deal with the problems created by gradual earth movement. The legislative finding is as follows: "The gradual movement of land, such as in prehistoric slide areas, or as a result of subsidence due to the depletion of underground or subterranean supporting substances, such as minerals, petroleum sources, water, and similar substances, can result in danger to persons or property. Although the movement is gradual and expressed in terms of inches, feet or meters per day, week or year, at some point the forces that are exerted by the movement will sever underground utilities, such as water, sewer, gas, electricity or telephone services and can cause the destruction of above ground structures whose foundations become undermined or where support is denied altogether. Unlike an earthquake or rapid rockslide or landslide, these gradual earth movements permit possible intervention to arrest the movement and avoid harm which is posed to persons or property. If there is an adequate manifestation of the problem before actual harm to persons or property, it is possible to make some determinations as to a method of remedial action which can abate the hazard. However, any undertaking to arrest the earth movement may not be successful or may have within it the potential for hastening the movement and the damages resulting from such movement. Regardless of how slight that potential for aggravating the damages, local public entities are unwilling to undertake action to alleviate the hazard if such undertaking may invite potential liability." (Govt.C. 865(a).)

These provisions were therefore enacted to create an incentive for local public entities to undertake remedial action to abate the movement or protect against its danger, without fear of liability. (Govt.C. 865(b).) (See Govt.C. 866(a) [defining "gradual earth movement"]; 11 Pacific L. J. 661 [noting possible grounds for constitutional challenge].)

(2) Immunity of Local Public Entity. A local public entity is not liable for injury to person or property resulting from the impending peril or from any action taken to abate it, if, "on the basis of expert opinion or other reasonable basis," it has done all of the following:

- (a) Found the existence of the impending peril. (Govt.C. 866(a)(1).)
- (b) Determined appropriate remedial action. (Govt.C. 866(a)(2).)

(c) Undertaken to implement that action. (Govt.C. 866(a)(3).)

However, if the local public entity is unable to take these steps because (a) the hazard has ceased, (b) the steps cannot be completed before it occurs, or (c) the legislative body determines that remedial action will not abate the danger, the immunity remains. (Govt.C. 866(b).)

Immunity under Govt.C. 866 is in addition to any other immunity provided by law and any claim of liability is subject to the immunities and defenses available to a private person. (Govt.C. 866(c).)

(3) Immunity of Employee. An employee of a local public entity is not liable for injuries resulting from an impending peril or from any action taken to abate it pursuant to Govt.C. 866. (Govt.C. 867; on immunities of public employees respecting dangerous conditions generally, see infra, §360.)

(4) Immunity Applicable Where Peril Exists on Entity's Land. In Pomona v. Superior Court (1986) 182 C.A.3d 1093, 227 C.R. 714, the action was for property damage resulting from an explosion to collapse a dangerous cave on city property. The trial judge ruled that because the city was required under Govt.C. 835 (supra, §258) to remedy dangerous conditions on its property and was granted immunity under Govt.C. 835.4 (supra, §272) for reasonable attempts to do so, Govt.C. 866 must be construed to apply solely to perils on private property. Held, there is nothing in either Govt.C. 866 itself or the overall plan of the Tort Claims Act requiring this limited construction.

(a) Govt.C. 835 is a general statute which by its terms recognizes that its applicability may be limited by such specific immunity provisions as Govt.C. 866. (182 C.A.3d 1100.)

(b) The Legislative Committee Comment to Govt.C. 815 (supra, §226) makes it clear that the immunity provisions of the Act, unless specifically limited, prevail over all sections imposing liability. (182 C.A.3d 1100.) And Govt.C. 866 contains no such limitation. (182 C.A.3d 1099.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

6. Legislation or Law Enforcement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 286

[§ 286] Legislation or Law Enforcement.

A public entity is not liable for "an injury caused by adopting or failing to adopt an enactment or by failing to enforce any law." (Govt.C. 818.2; see Sacramento v. Superior Court (1972) 8 C.3d 479, 485, 105 C.R. 374, 503 P.2d 1382, infra, §296 ["law" includes regulations of prison authorities]; Nunn v. California (1984) 35 C.3d 616, 621, 200 C.R. 440, 677 P.2d 846 [alleged negligent delay in promulgating regulations governing instruction in firearms use by private security guards]; Ronald S. v. San Diego (1993) 16 C.A.4th 887, 896, 20 C.R.2d 418 [county's release of child to adoptive parents after several police detentions involved use of county's coercive power, and hence constituted failure in "law enforcement"]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §§9.40, 10.51.)

The immunity only relates to legislative and quasi-legislative action and to the discretion of law enforcement officers in carrying out their duties; it is not available where liability is imposed for failure to perform a mandatory duty. (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 818.2; Morris v. Marin (1977) 18 C.3d 901, 916, 136 C.R. 251, 559 P.2d 606, supra, §248; Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 1059, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246; Elson v. Public Util. Com. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 577, 589, 124 C.R. 305, supra, §248; on liability for failure to discharge mandatory duty, see supra, §245 et seq.)

Notwithstanding Govt.C. 818.2, a city or county that knowingly issues a permit improperly exempting property from seismic safety requirements may be liable for earthquake-related injuries or death. (Pub.Res.C. 2621.8.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
7. Action or Inaction on License.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 287

[§ 287] Action or Inaction on License.

A public entity is not liable for "an injury caused by the issuance, denial, suspension or revocation of, or by the failure or refusal to issue, deny, suspend or revoke, any permit, license, certificate, approval, order, or similar authorization," where the public entity or an employee of the public entity has discretion to make the determination. (Govt.C. 818.4; see California v. Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C.3d 237, 246, 115 C.R. 497, 524 P.2d 1281 [denial of permit to developer]; Nunn v. California (1984) 35 C.3d 616, 627, 200 C.R. 440, 677 P.2d 846 [decision of college district on when student was permitted to complete test leading to certification for firearms instruction]; Burns v. City Council (1973) 31 C.A.3d 999, 1003, 107 C.R. 787 [denial of building permit]; O'Hagan v. Board of Zoning Adjustment (1974) 38 C.A.3d 722, 726, 730, 113 C.R. 501, supra, §229 [denial of temporary use permit to operate restaurant]; Universal By-Products v. Modesto (1974) 43 C.A.3d 145, 154, 117 C.R. 525 [rejection of bid for license to provide garbage collection service]; Slagle Const. Co. v. Contra Costa (1977) 67 C.A.3d 559, 564, 136 C.R. 748 [denial of building permit]; Engel v. McCloskey (1979) 92 C.A.3d 870, 881, 883, 155 C.R. 284 [delay in investigation of character of applicant for admission to bar]; West v. California (1986) 181 C.A.3d 753, 761, 227 C.R. 16 [issuance of contractor's license without comprehensive investigation and failure to investigate complaints]; Cancun Homeowners Assn. v. San Juan Capistrano (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1352, 1359, 264 C.R. 288 [issuance of grading and building permits where soil compaction did not meet standards of local ordinance]; Colome v. State Athletic Com. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1444, 1454, 55 C.R.2d 300 [while duty of boxer to undergo exam before boxing is mandatory, duty of Boxing Commission to issue or deny license is discretionary]; Inland Empire Health Plan v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 588, 592, 133 C.R.2d 735 [health maintenance organization's decision to credential certain physician as eligible to receive Medi-Cal reimbursement was discretionary under Govt.C. 818.4, even though it could not license physicians]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §10.93 et seq.; 28 A.L.R.4th 184 [issuance of automobile certificate of title without discovering title defect]; 41 A.L.R.4th 99 [negligent issuance of building permit subsequently suspended or revoked]; cf. Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 1059, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246 [Govt.C. 818.4 was not applicable to complaint based on county's failure to investigate and supervise foster home operator, rather than on negligence in issuing license].)

This immunity statute has applied to the alleged negligence of the Department of Motor Vehicles in issuing a driver's license to an incompetent driver. (Papelian v. California (1976) 65 C.A.3d 958, 962, 135 C.R. 665; People v. Superior Court (Wilson) (1993) 18 C.A.4th 31, 37, 22 C.R.2d 110 [immunity statute applied to licensing where DMV had made no prior determination that diabetic was unable to operate vehicle safely]; Waschek v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1997) 59 C.A.4th 640, 644, 69 C.R.2d 296 [DMV was immune where accident was caused by 96-year-old driver whom, in exercise of discretion, it had licensed]; see 41 A.L.R.4th 111 [state's liability to one injured by improperly licensed driver]; cf. Trewin v. California (1984) 150 C.A.3d 975, 981, 198 C.R. 263, supra, §246 [Papelian distinguished where department knew of elderly driver's diminished capacity at time license was issued; issuance of license was not discretionary act in those circumstances].) However, the department is liable to a lienholder or good faith purchaser of a vehicle for injury proximately caused by its negligent omission of the lienholder's name from an ownership certificate. (Govt.C. 818.5 [department's liability may not exceed actual cash value of vehicle]; see Stats. 1985, Chap. 437 [legislative intent that Govt.C. 818.5 "not be construed as establishing any precedent for creating state liability in any other situation or circumstance"]; 17 Pacific L. J. 795.)

The immunity is not available where liability is imposed under Govt.C. 815.6 (infra, §245) for failure to perform a mandatory duty. (See Elson v. Public Util. Com. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 577, 582, 124 C.R. 305, supra, §248 [Public Utilities Commission's failure to revoke bus company's license for disobeying Commission order requiring liability insurance]; Trewin v. California, supra.)

Direct review of abuse of discretion in licensing is available by extraordinary writ. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 818.4; on review by administrative mandamus, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §257 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Richards v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (2006) 139 C.A.4th 304, 318, 42 C.R.3d 782 [under Govt.C. 818.4, Department of Alcoholic Beverages Control was immune from liability in restaurant owner's action challenging suspension of alcoholic beverage license; immunity is accorded only to discretionary activities, but department enjoys broad discretion in licensing decisions].

(New) What constitutes "certificate." In Sonoma AG Art, LLC v. Department of Food & Agriculture (2004) 125 C.A.4th 122, 22 C.R.3d 468, a grape grower sued the state and the Department of Food and Agriculture, alleging that they were negligent in issuing a certificate finding that the grower's vines were diseased. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment of dismissal. Held, affirmed, the state and the department were immune from liability.

(a) Under Govt.C. 818.4 and 821.2 (text, §348), a public entity or employee is immune if the entity or employee (1) issues a certificate and (2) exercises discretion in determining whether to issue the certificate. Both conditions are satisfied here. (125 C.A.4th 126.)

(b) Plaintiffs argue that a grapevine certificate is not covered by these immunities, because a "certificate" under these provisions is an authorization to act, not a mere "official statement." (125 C.A.4th 126.) This is incorrect. "[N]either the dictionary, nor statutes and case law, supports the argument" that a certificate cannot be, simply, an official statement. (125 C.A.4th 127.)

(c) The Food and Agriculture Code requires the state and the department to exercise significant discretion in testing grapevines and issuing grapevine certificates. (125 C.A.4th 128.) Administrative mandamus:

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
8. Inspection of Private Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 288

[§ 288] Inspection of Private Property.

A public entity is not liable for "injury caused by its failure to make an inspection, or by reason of making an inadequate or negligent inspection, of any property, other than its property, for the purpose of determining whether the property complies with or violates any enactment or contains or constitutes a hazard to health or safety." (Govt.C. 818.6.) (See Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 1059, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246 [Govt.C. 818.6 is applicable only to inspections of property; hence, there is no immunity for county's failure to investigate and supervise foster home operator]; Harshbarger v. Colton (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1335, 1344, 1348, 243 C.R. 463, supra, §241 [Govt.C. 818.6 conferred immunity for fraudulent inspection and for negligent hiring and supervision of inspectors]; Washington v. Contra Costa (1995) 38 C.A.4th 890, 898, 45 C.R.2d 646 [under Govt.C. 818.6, county was immune for negligence in performing inspection of chemical plant required by statute even if inspection, if properly done, would have prevented release of hazardous materials into atmosphere]; Haggis v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 490, 498, 93 C.R.2d 327, 993 P.2d 983, supra, §245 [Govt.C. 818.6 immunity is not limited to inspection per se, but includes failure to report result of inspection]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §10.47 et seq.) Because the inspection activities of public entities are so extensive, "a public entity would be exposed to the risk of liability for virtually all property defects within its jurisdiction if this immunity were not granted." (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 818.6.)

The immunity given by Govt.C. 818.6 is absolute and cannot be circumvented by invoking the mandatory duty liability under Govt.C. 815.6 (supra, §245). (Clayton v. Sunnyvale (1976) 62 C.A.3d 666, 670, 133 C.R. 306, supra, §248.)

This immunity covers the many kinds of authorized or required inspections of private property. Where public property is involved, liability may be imposed under Govt.C. 830 et seq. (supra, §249 et seq.) for negligent failure to discover a dangerous condition by conducting reasonable inspections. The public entity may also be held liable under Govt.C. 815.6 for noncompliance with any mandatory legal duty it may have to inspect its property. (Legislative Com. Comment to Govt.C. 818.6.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
9. Tax Collection or Administration.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 289

[§ 289] Tax Collection or Administration.

Neither a public entity nor a public employee is liable for an injury caused by either of the following:

(1) "Instituting any judicial or administrative proceeding or action for or incidental to the assessment or collection of a tax." (Govt.C. 860.2(a).)

(2) "An act or omission in the interpretation or application of any law relating to a tax." (Govt.C. 860.2(b).) (See Rickley v. Los Angeles (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1002, 1016, 8 C.R.3d 406 [county's alleged practice of recording liens and reporting them to credit agency when no taxes or penalties were owed fell squarely within Govt.C. 860.2 immunity]; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §11.122 et seq.; on immunities and defenses of public employees generally, see infra, §348.)

The term "tax" is defined to include "a tax, assessment, fee, or charge." (Govt.C. 860.)

The Comment to Govt.C. 860, which is also applicable to Govt.C. 860.2, suggests that the immunity conferred by Govt.C. 860.2 is applicable only to discretionary acts. The court in Mitchell v. Franchise Tax Bd. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 1133, 228 C.R. 750, disagreed: "The language of section 860.2 is clear and unambiguous. It makes no distinction between discretionary and ministerial acts. We must therefore reject plaintiffs' request that we indulge in construction and interpret section 860.2 to apply only to discretionary acts." (183 C.A.3d 1137.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Bates v. Franchise Tax Bd. (2004) 124 C.A.4th 367, 381, 21 C.R.3d 285 [immunity conferred by Govt.C. 860.2 does not apply to violations of Information Practices Act (C.C. 1798 et seq., text, §667), which expressly provides for governmental liability].

In Dinuba v. Tulare (2007) 41 C.4th 859, 62 C.R.3d 614, 161 P.3d 1168, a county was statutorily required to collect property taxes on behalf of local taxing entities, including a city redevelopment agency, and then allocate and distribute the revenue to these entities. The county improperly computed the portion of tax revenue to which the agency was entitled, and the agency sued to recover the misallocated revenue. Held, Govt.C. 860.2 did not bar recovery.

(a) Wrong complained of is not "injury" within Government Claims Act. Govt.C. 860.2 is expressly directed to limiting governmental liability for an "injury," which is defined in Govt.C. 810.8 (see text, §220) as "death, injury to a person, damage to or loss of property, or any other injury that a person may suffer to his person, reputation, character, feelings or estate, of such nature that it would be actionable if inflicted by a private person." The county's failure to comply with its statutory duty to correctly allocate and distribute tax revenue to other public entities does not constitute an "injury" within the narrow meaning of Govt.C. 810.8 and 860.2. The wrong complained of here is one that by its very nature could not exist in an action between private persons. (41 C.4th 867.)

(b) Money damages are not sought. Also, the immunity provisions of the Government Claims Act are only concerned with shielding public entities from having to pay money damages for torts. Govt.C. 814 (see text, §218) provides that liability based on contract or the right to obtain relief other than money damages is not affected by the Act. The agency does not seek damages; it seeks only to compel the county to perform its statutory duty. While compliance with the duty may result in the payment of money, that is distinct from seeking damages. (41 C.4th 867.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
10. Police and Correctional Activities.
a. Scope of Liability.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 290

[§ 290] In General.

The provisions of the Tort Claims Act specifically directed to police and correctional activities (Govt.C. 844 et seq.) are phrased in the language of immunities (see infra, §292 et seq.), with specified narrow exceptions. These exceptions, i.e., bases for liability, are as follows:

(1) Dangerous condition of public property: Except for an injury to a prisoner (see infra, §294), a person may recover under Govt.C. 830 et seq. (Govt.C. 844.6(c), 845.2; on liability for dangerous condition of public property, see supra, §249 et seq.)

(2) Motor vehicle tort of public employee under Veh.C. 17000 et seq. (Govt.C. 844.6(b)); on liability for negligent operation of vehicle by public employee, see infra, §331 et seq.)

(3) Intentional and unjustifiable interference, by a public employee, with the right of a prisoner to obtain a judicial determination or review of the legality of the prisoner's confinement. However, no cause of action accrues until it has first been determined that the confinement was illegal. (Govt.C. 845.4; on effect of interference with prisoner's right to judicial determination or review of legality of confinement generally, see infra, §306.)

(4) Failure to furnish medical care to a prisoner, where the employee knows or has reason to know that the prisoner is in immediate need and fails to take reasonable action to get it. (Govt.C. 845.6; on effect of failure to provide medical care to prisoner generally, see infra, §295.) (See C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §11.3 et seq.; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §394 et seq.; 36 A.L.R.5th 1 [municipal liability for injury or death caused by off-duty police officer's action or failure to act]; 62 Am.Jur. Trials 547 [obtaining damages in federal court for state and local police misconduct].)

Litigation regarding police or correctional activities often arises in situations outside the scope of statutory immunities. Where no immunity applies, the public entity or officer is liable, as in other cases, to the same extent as a private individual for negligent or intentional conduct that results in injury. (Govt.C. 815.2(a), supra, §237; Govt.C. 820(a), infra, §346.) Liability may result, for example, from ordinary police negligence in investigative, protective, or traffic control activities. (McCorkle v. Los Angeles (1969) 70 C.2d 252, 74 C.R. 389, 449 P.2d 453, infra, §356; Clemente v. California (1985) 40 C.3d 202, 210, 219 C.R. 445, 707 P.2d 818.) Also, a duty of care may arise from a special relationship that has arisen under the circumstances between the entity or officer and the victim or a third person (infra, §291).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Situations outside scope of statutory immunities: See Venegas v. Los Angeles (2007) 153 C.A.4th 1230, 1249, 63 C.R.3d 741 [no statutory immunity in action based on police officers' alleged negligence in detaining plaintiffs and searching their home].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

a. Scope of Liability.

2. Liability Based on Special Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 291

[§ 291] Liability Based on Special Relationship.

(1) In General. A duty to act may be imposed on police or correctional authorities by a special relationship between them and either the plaintiff or a third party. The relationship arises from representations or conduct causing detrimental reliance. (Stone v. California (1980) 106 C.A.3d 924, 929, 165 C.R. 339; cf. Von Batsch v. American Dist. Tel. Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1111, 1122, 222 C.R. 239 [that officers responded to burglar alarm at business premises and investigated did not alone create special relationship imposing special duty]; Foremost Dairies v. California (1986) 190 C.A.3d 361, 364, 366, 232 C.R. 71 [reviewing cases holding that no special relationship existed, and reaching same conclusion]; on affirmative duties arising from special relationships generally, see infra, §1038 et seq.)

In Davidson v. Westminster (1982) 32 C.3d 197, 185 C.R. 252, 649 P.2d 894, plaintiff was stabbed in a laundromat. She sued defendant city and police officers, alleging that on three earlier occasions women had been stabbed at the same or nearby laundromats; that the officers had this laundromat under surveillance on the night of the assault, were aware of her presence, and saw a man who closely resembled the attacker; and that the officers nevertheless did not warn or protect her. The theory of liability was that a special relationship existed between plaintiff and the officers and between the assailant and the officers. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. There was no special relationship giving rise to a duty.

(a) Necessity of special relationship to establish duty of care. Under Rest.2d, Torts §315, a duty may arise to control another's conduct or to warn those endangered by it if (1) a special relation exists between the actor and the third person imposing a duty to control his or her conduct; or (2) a special relation exists between the actor and the endangered party that gives the latter a right to protection. The principles governing that duty have been set forth in Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352; Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050; and Thompson v. Alameda (1980) 27 C.3d 741, 167 C.R. 70, 614 P.2d 728, infra, §299.)

(b) No special relationship in this case.

(1) Between the officers and the assailant, the minimal connection--visual identification from a distance--was insufficient; a person's "mere proximity to an assailant, even with knowledge of his assaultive tendencies or status as a felon, does not establish a relation imposing a duty to control the assailant's conduct." (32 C.3d 205.)

(2) Between plaintiff and the officers, their decision to conduct the surveillance, observation of the potential assailant as the likely perpetrator of a previous assault, and failure to warn or otherwise protect her were insufficient. There was no voluntary assumption of a duty. (32 C.3d 206.) The police may sometimes conclude that warning all potential victims in the vicinity is prudent and necessary, but imposition of a general duty would be inappropriate. (32 C.3d 208.)

The same result was reached in Williams v. California (1983) 34 C.3d 18, 192 C.R. 233, 664 P.2d 137. Plaintiff alleged that while she was a passenger in an automobile, a piece of a heated brake drum from a passing truck was propelled through the windshield, causing serious injuries; that defendants, the State of California and California Highway Patrol officers, arrived within minutes and assumed the responsibility of investigating the accident; and that defendants so negligently investigated the accident as to destroy any opportunity for plaintiff to obtain compensation; i.e., they failed to investigate the brake drum part to determine that it was still hot, failed to identify other witnesses or the other motorists injured, and failed to attempt an investigation or pursuit of the owner or operator of the truck. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Duty to aid another: general principles. (1) As a rule, one has no duty to come to the aid of another unless there is some special relationship between them that gives rise to a duty to act. (34 C.3d 23, citing Rest.2d, Torts §314.) (2) However, under the "good Samaritan" rule, a volunteer who undertakes to come to the aid of another is liable if the volunteer's lack of due care in performance increases the risk of harm, or the harm is suffered because of the other's reliance on the undertaking. (34 C.3d 23, citing Rest.2d, Torts §323.)

(b) Application of principles to law enforcement activities. Despite widely held misconceptions to the contrary, the general principles concerning duty or lack of duty apply to law enforcement personnel in carrying out routine traffic investigations. (1) The highway patrol has the right, but not the duty, to investigate accidents or to come to the aid of stranded motorists. Veh.C. 2412 merely states that officers of the Highway Patrol "may" investigate accidents for the purpose of prosecuting persons guilty of violation of the law. (2) However, where an officer voluntarily assumes a protective duty and undertakes action, he is held to the same standard of care as a private person. (34 C.3d 24.)

(c) No special relationship arose from officers' conduct. "[P]laintiff has not stated a cause of action in that she fails to establish a duty of care owed by defendant state. The officers did not create the peril in which plaintiff found herself; they took no affirmative action which contributed to, increased, or changed the risk which would have otherwise existed; there is no indication that they voluntarily assumed any responsibility to protect plaintiff's prospects for recovery by civil litigation; and there are no allegations of the requisite factors to a finding of special relationship, namely detrimental reliance by the plaintiff on the officers' conduct, statements made by them which induced a false sense of security and thereby worsened her position." (34 C.3d 27.)

Williams was followed in Rose v. Plumas (1984) 152 C.A.3d 999, 199 C.R. 842. Plaintiffs alleged that, while customers in a bar, they assisted the bartender in evicting unruly persons and were seriously injured, and that deputy sheriffs of defendant county investigated the disturbance and were aware of plaintiffs' need for emergency medical treatment and the importance of preserving evidence, but did nothing. Held, the complaint failed to state a cause of action; allegations of dependency alone, without reliance, do not establish the special relationship necessary to create a duty to act: "Nothing in the complaint even suggests that plaintiffs in any sense relied on the police for medical aid . . . The officers did not undertake any affirmative action which contributed to, increased or changed the risk which otherwise already existed . . . No express or implied promises were made by the officers indicating they would render aid. Nothing in the complaint suggests that plaintiff or anyone else held the subjective belief that emergency aid would be rendered by the officers." (152 C.A.3d 1004.)

(2) Duty To Warn. The issue has arisen in a number of cases in the context of failure to warn. (See Davidson v.

Westminster, supra.)

In Denton v. Fullerton (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1636, 285 C.R. 297, the requisite relationship was likewise found to be absent. A woman contacted defendant city's police department after being sexually assaulted in a laundry room of the apartment complex where plaintiff lived, and reported that she had seen the assailant enter a specified apartment. The only actions taken by the investigating officers were to check the outside of the apartment, ascertain from the apartment complex's management that it was rented to plaintiff, and run a registration check on a vehicle listed on the rental agreement as belonging to plaintiff's son. After coming home from work later that same night, plaintiff was taken from her apartment and raped. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; the officers had no duty to warn plaintiff of the danger.

(a) Neither the investigation of a prior assault nor the fact that plaintiff was a foreseeable victim of a sexual assault created a special relationship between plaintiff and the police that would require them to warn her of the danger. (233 C.A.3d 1643.)

(b) Because plaintiff was completely unaware of the prior assault and the police investigation of it, she could not argue that she depended on the police to warn her of any potential danger. And because the police did nothing to change the risk that would have existed even if they had not conducted the earlier investigation, the mere fact that they were aware of plaintiff's identity and the potential risk she faced was not sufficient to impose liability on them. (233 C.A.3d 1643.)

(c) Because the police had no duty to warn plaintiff of the potential danger, they also had no obligation to ensure that the apartment manager would do so. And there was nothing in the actions taken by the officers to support plaintiff's argument that the manager was lulled into believing that no further action was necessary. (233 C.A.3d 1645.)

A contrary conclusion was reached in Carpenter v. Los Angeles (1991) 230 C.A.3d 923, 281 C.R. 500. Plaintiff sued defendant city for damages suffered when he was shot by an unknown assailant, allegedly in retaliation for having testified against a defendant at a preliminary hearing. The issue was "whether a city, through its police department, owes a duty to warn a witness, assisting in a criminal prosecution, about information it has received from a reliable source, regarding a threat to the witness's life, after earlier assuring the witness that he had no cause for concern." (230 C.A.3d 926.) Held, summary judgment for defendant city reversed.

(a) "While neither party has cited a California case directly in point and our independent research has revealed no such case, we conclude that appellant, as a witness in a criminal prosecution, who had been assured that the defendant posed no real danger to him, enjoyed a special relationship with the City, through its police department, such that the City owed appellant a duty of care, which required it to warn appellant" of the "subsequent threat to appellant's life." (230 C.A.3d 931.)

(b) Here, the city sought plaintiff's assistance in identifying Jenkins. The duty arose because the police, after assuring plaintiff that defendant posed no real danger, received reliable information that plaintiff's life was in danger and failed to warn him. And reasonable care required that the police, after lulling defendant into a false sense of security, inform him of the very real threat. (230 C.A.3d 933.) "We are speaking here of a duty to warn. As evidenced by the Witness Protection Program in which appellant was placed after being shot, the City already recognizes it has a duty to protect certain witnesses." (230 C.A.3d 933.) (See Wallace v. Los Angeles (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1385, 1401, 16 C.R.2d 113 [following Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352, and Carpenter v. Los Angeles, supra, and holding that defendants breached duty to warn witness subpoenaed to testify in homicide case]; on duty to warn of release of prisoner, see infra, §299.)

10. Police and Correctional Activities.
b. Injury Caused or Sustained by Prisoner.
1. Immunity Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 292

[§ 292] Immunity Rule.

(1) Injury Caused by Prisoner. A public entity is immune from liability for an injury "proximately caused by any prisoner." (Govt.C. 844.6(a)(1).)

The scope of the immunity is broad. In Savitt v. Jordon (1983) 142 C.A.3d 820, 191 C.R. 290, plaintiff, a deputy district attorney attending a parole hearing at San Quentin Prison, was attacked and stabbed by J, a prisoner. Plaintiff's action was based on the theory that the Department of Corrections had negligently allowed J to come into possession of the knife, i.e., that state officials had acted negligently in implementing ministerial acts and were therefore not accorded the immunity for discretionary acts (see Govt.C. 820.2, infra, §351 et seq.). Held, no cause of action was stated. The immunity of Govt.C. 844.6 applies to public entities, not public employees, and makes no distinction between discretionary and ministerial acts. "Thus, it is conceivable that if a homicidal prisoner is negligently permitted to have access to prison visitors and, in fact, murders a visitor, the state would be immune from liability for its negligence." (142 C.A.3d 822.)

P.C. 1618 precludes civil liability of the state or country for the criminal acts of persons committed or placed at Forensic Conditional Release Program (CONREP) facilities. (See Ley v. California (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1297, 1303, 8 C.R.3d 642 [immunity under P.C. 1618 is absolute]; on forensic conditional release programs, see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §199.)

(2) Injury Sustained by Prisoner. The entity is also immune from liability for an injury "to any prisoner." (Govt.C. 844.6(a)(2); on original statute, see Sanders v. Yuba (1967) 247 C.A.2d 748, 754, 55 C.R. 852, infra, §295; Hart v. Orange (1967) 254 C.A.2d 302, 304, 62 C.R. 73, infra, §295; Datil v. Los Angeles (1968) 263 C.A.2d 655, 658, 69 C.R. 788, infra, §293; Apelian v. Los Angeles (1968) 266 C.A.2d 550, 552, 72 C.R. 265; Hughes v. Los Angeles (1973) 35 C.A.3d 349, 353, 110 C.R. 754 [immunity is constitutional].) (See generally 2 Pacific L. J. 697 [recommending repeal of immunity]; 41 A.L.R.3d 1021 [liability of prison authorities for injury to prisoner directly caused by assault by other prisoner]; 79 A.L.R.3d 1210 [civil liability of prison or jail authorities for self-inflicted injury or death of prisoner].)

The distinction drawn in Govt.C. 844.6 between injuries sustained by prisoners and those suffered by arrestees does not offend equal protection principles, because the distinction between a person in the custody of law enforcement officers (an arrestee) and a person in the custody of correctional officers (a prisoner) is based on rational criteria related to the statute. (Reed v. Santa Cruz (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1274, 1281, 44 C.R.2d 149.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

b. Injury Caused or Sustained by Prisoner.

2. Who Are Prisoners.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 293

[§ 293] Who Are Prisoners.

(1) In General. The term "prisoner" is generally defined as "an inmate of a prison, jail or penal or correctional facility." (Govt.C. 844.) The immunity thus exists only where the injured person is confined in a prison, jail, or other correctional institution. In Larson v. Oakland (1971) 17 C.A.3d 91, 94 C.R. 466, a police officer chased plaintiff, a suspected traffic violator, and caught and handcuffed him. The officer then led plaintiff to the police car, where the officer slipped and fell, injuring plaintiff. Held, there was no immunity. Plaintiff was merely under restraint, and not yet actually arrested and booked. (17 C.A.3d 97.)

On the other hand, a person booked and arraigned and awaiting trial is a prisoner within the meaning of the statute. (Sahley v. San Diego (1977) 69 C.A.3d 347, 349, 138 C.R. 34.) The same is true of a convicted person waiting in a county jail to be processed after having been remanded for incarceration as a condition of probation. (Peterson v. Los Angeles (1986) 185 C.A.3d 705, 708, 230 C.R. 80.) A person confined to a county work furlough facility is a prisoner, even though the person may be permitted to leave the facility to engage in employment, education, or other activities permitted by the administrator. (Badiggo v. Ventura (1989) 207 C.A.3d 357, 361, 254 C.R. 771.)

(2) Juvenile Court Ward. The broad term "prisoner" includes a ward of the juvenile court in custody by reason of the court's placement. (Jiminez v. Santa Cruz (1974) 42 C.A.3d 407, 411, 116 C.R. 878.)

Jiminez was distinguished in Patricia J. v. Rio Linda Unified School Dist. (1976) 61 C.A.3d 278, 132 C.R. 211, where the juvenile was not in custody. Parents of a young girl sued two school districts for injuries (rape resulting in venereal disease) inflicted by a juvenile court ward employed as a custodian. The ward had been committed to the custody of his mother and placed under supervision of the county probation department; thereafter, one of the school districts, as administrator of a neighborhood youth program, obtained employment for the ward with the other district. Held, the prisoner immunity under Govt.C. 844.6(a)(1) was inapplicable. In Jiminez, the ward was in custody, even though the particular place of confinement was called a "foster home." Here, the minor was not in custody. To come within Govt.C. 844.6, "a prisoner must be a person confined in a correctional facility or institution under the authority of law enforcement authorities or legal process . . . The distinction to be drawn in juvenile cases is that between wards individually placed in private homes, either of a parent or private foster home and those placed in institutions or other collective facilities of restraint established for youthful offenders." (61 C.A.3d 287.)

(3) Person Whose Term Has Expired. The immunity does not apply to a person whose term has already expired and who is in the eyes of the law no longer a "prisoner." Hence, his or her confinement may be actionable false imprisonment. (Sullivan v. Los Angeles (1974) 12 C.3d 710, 716, 117 C.R. 241, 527 P.2d 865, supra, §246; see dissent, arguing that by statutory definition, "an inmate" is a prisoner, despite his claim of illegal confinement.)

(4) Person in Civil Protective Custody. Under P.C. 647(g), a person arrested for public intoxication (P.C. 647(f)) may be placed in "civil protective custody" in a designated facility. Meyer v. Oakland (1980) 107 C.A.3d 770, 777, 778, 166 C.R. 79, held that such a person, though confined, is not a "prisoner" within the meaning of Govt.C. 844.6(a), and that the immunities under that statute do not apply. However, Meyer was disapproved in Teter v. Newport Beach (2003) 30 C.4th 446, 133 C.R.2d 139, 66 P.3d 1225. Plaintiff was arrested for public intoxication and booked into the city jail. Under P.C. 647(g), a person charged with this crime would normally be placed in civil protective custody and taken to a civil detoxification facility. However, defendant city had no such facility. Instead, it had a policy of releasing those arrested for public drunkenness if they satisfied three criteria. Prior to 6:30 the next morning, defendant planned to release plaintiff at 8:00 if he satisfied these criteria. However, at 7:00 plaintiff was assaulted by another prisoner who had been placed in the same cell, and he sued defendant. Defendant claimed immunity under Govt.C. 844.6(a). The trial court entered judgment against defendant, and the Court of Appeal affirmed on the ground that plaintiff was a detainee in civil protective custody, rather than a prisoner. Held, reversed.

(a) Under Govt.C. 844, a lawfully arrested person becomes a "prisoner" on his or her initial entry into a correctional facility for the purpose of being booked. Under this standard, plaintiff was a "prisoner." He nevertheless argued that he was in civil protective custody under P.C. 647(g). However, before an arrestee can be in this type of custody, the arresting officer must be reasonably able to place the arrestee in a civil detoxification facility, a requirement that was not met here, because defendant had no such facility. This fact distinguishes this case from Meyer. Moreover, the underlying premise of Meyer--that a P.C. 647(f) arrestee being held in jail pending transfer to a detoxification facility is not a "prisoner" for purposes of the immunity statute--is rejected as illogical. There is no good reason why a city's liability should depend on the availability within that city of a detoxification facility. Accordingly, Meyer is disapproved. (30 C.4th 452.)

(b) The Court of Appeal was of the opinion that a broad definition of "prisoner" would discourage cities from providing detoxification facilities lest they lose their immunity. However, the decision whether to expend county funds on detoxification facilities or on criminal enforcement of P.C. 647(f) is not for the courts to make, but for those exercising legislative authority at the state or county level. (30 C.A.4th 453.)

(c) An arrest that is valid when made remains a valid arrest for purposes of Govt.C. 844.6(a), even though the person is released under P.C. 849(b) and issued a certificate under P.C. 851.6 describing the action as a "detention." Otherwise, there would be a "disappearing lawful arrest." (30 C.4th 454.)

(d) Plaintiff argued that P.C. 647(f) arrestees who are temporarily detained to sober up in local jails, with no intention that they be charged or prosecuted, cannot be considered "prisoners," because they are afforded none of the due process prerequisites of criminal procedure. This argument is based on a false premise, i.e., that defendant had no intention of charging him when he was arrested. To the contrary, when plaintiff was arrested, the question whether he would be charged was still open based on his ability to satisfy the criteria for release, and this question remained open at the time that he was assaulted. No further process was due plaintiff. (30 C.4th 456.)

(5) Person Arrested but Not Incarcerated. In Griffith v. Monrovia (1982) 134 C.A.3d Supp. 6, 184 C.R. 709, plaintiff, arrested and taken to the rear seat of a police car, began to kick and yell, and a police officer sprayed him with mace. Held, he could sue for battery; the statute applies only to persons incarcerated in a penal facility. (134 C.A.3d Supp. 9, 10.)

(6) Person Incarcerated but Not Yet Charged. In Datil v. Los Angeles (1968) 263 C.A.2d 655, 69 C.R. 788, two persons, arrested for drunkenness and booked, were in the hallway of the jail when one assaulted the other. Held, they were prisoners because they were in the process of transfer from one jail to another, and Govt.C. 844.6 therefore applied. They were prisoners even though they had not yet been charged with a crime. (263 C.A.3d 658.)

(7) Significance of Booking. In Zeilman v. Kern (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1174, 214 C.R. 746, the court said: "Notwithstanding a certain amount of deprivation attendant upon an arrest, all the cases do seem to recognize a distinction between persons who are simply under arrest and therefore not prisoners and those persons who have become 'confined in a correctional facility or institution under the authority of law enforcement authorities or legal process.' ... [I]t appears the line of demarcation between status as an arrestee and as a confined person is the completion of the booking process. Once an arrestee has been booked, the status of an arrestee changes since he or she has become confined to a correctional facility under the authority of law." (168 C.A.3d 1181.)

In Terzian v. Ventura (1994) 24 C.A.4th 78, 28 C.R.2d 809, the decedent was arrested and taken to jail at approximately 11:40 p.m., at which time decedent was searched, his wallet and other personal property taken, and he was given a property inventory slip and turned over to the jail personnel by the arresting officer. Decedent was then given a booking number and an armband and placed in a holding cell. Further booking procedures subsequently occurred, including being photographed and fingerprinted, and the official booking time was listed as 2:58 a.m., with a supplemental booking at 3:03 a.m. After complaining of chest pain, Decedent was seen by a nurse at 1:25 a.m. and by a doctor at some time between 1:25 a.m. and 9:25 a.m. Early the next evening, decedent was found in his cell unconscious, having suffered a heart attack. He died 1 month later, and his children instituted the present action against defendant county, claiming that at the time decedent first received allegedly negligent medical treatment, i.e., 1:25 a.m., he was not yet a prisoner because the booking process had not yet been completed. Held, decedent had become a prisoner before receiving any medical treatment; hence, defendant was immune under Govt.C. 844.6.

(a) There was evidence that there are several stages of booking, i.e., reception booking, master booking, supplemental booking, and final booking, and that the formal booking procedure could take from hours to days, depending on the number of arrestees in custody and the condition of the particular arrestee. However, once the initial reception booking is completed, i.e., search, property inventory, assignment of a booking number, and placement in a holding cell, the arresting officer leaves the scene, and the arrestee is confined to jail under legal process and is not free to leave of his or her own accord. At that point, the arrestee becomes a "prisoner." (24 C.A.4th 86.)

(b) Plaintiffs argued that Zeilman v. Kern stands for the proposition that an arrestee does not become a prisoner until the total booking procedure is completed, including photographing and fingerprinting. However, Zeilman did not hold that the booking process had to include photographing and fingerprinting before it could be considered completed; it merely held that it was impossible to state as a matter of law from the declarations presented that the plaintiff had been booked. Under plaintiffs' interpretation of Zeilman, an arrestee who had not been photographed or fingerprinted could not be said to have been "booked" even though he may have been incarcerated for an extended period of time and have lost his freedom to leave. Such a strained interpretation of "booking" is not reasonable. (24 C.A.4th 86.) (See Reed v. Santa Cruz (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1274, 1280, 44 C.R.2d 149, supra, §292 [following Terzian; person assaulted in holding room at county jail after completion of only booking processes necessary to warrant her lawful confinement in jail was prisoner as matter of law, even though detention officer had not finalized booking process by creating computer record].)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
10. Police and Correctional Activities.
b. Injury Caused or Sustained by Prisoner.
3. Exceptions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 294

[§ 294] Exceptions.

The immunities of a public entity under Govt.C. 844.6 for injuries caused or sustained by prisoners are subject to a number of exceptions:

(1) Liability As Provided in Govt.C. 844.6. Liability attaches "as provided in this section." (Govt.C. 844.6(a).) Actions are permitted in Govt.C. 844.6 to recover for the following:

- (a) Negligent operation of a motor vehicle. (Govt.C. 844.6(b); see infra, §331.)
- (b) Dangerous condition of public property. (Govt.C. 844.6(c); see supra, §249.)

Govt.C. 844.6(c) applies "[e]xcept for an injury to a prisoner," thus making it clear that no wrongful death action can be brought if the prisoner would not have been able to recover for nonfatal injuries. (Lowman v. Los Angeles (1982) 127 C.A.3d 613, 616, 179 C.R. 709; May v. Monterey (1983) 139 C.A.3d 717, 721, 189 C.R. 63.) Similarly, a cause of action for consortium, though initiated by a person who is not a prisoner, is barred by Govt.C. 844.6, because it is based on injury to a prisoner. (Badiggo v. Ventura (1989) 207 C.A.3d 357, 361, 254 C.R. 771 [citing Lowman and May].)

(2) Liability Under Other Specified Statutes. Liability attaches as provided in certain other specified statutes. (Govt.C. 844.6(a).) These include the following:

- (a) Govt.C. 814 (contract liability or nonmonetary relief; see supra, §217).
- (b) Govt.C. 814.2 (workers' compensation; see supra, §217.)
- (c) Govt.C. 845.4 (interference with right of prisoner to seek judicial review of legality of confinement; see infra, §306).
- (d) Govt.C. 845.6 (failure to summon medical care for prisoner in need of immediate medical care; see infra, §295).

(e) P.C. 3500 et seq. (biomedical and behavioral research; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §65).

(3) Other Liability. Govt.C. 844.6 applies "[n]otwithstanding any other provision of this part." (Govt.C. 844.6(a).) The limitation to provisions of "this part" avoids any implication that liability imposed by the law outside the Tort Claims Act is precluded. For example, liability under P.C. 4900 for erroneous conviction is preserved. (Legislative Com. Comment to 1970 Amendment to Govt.C. 844.6.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

b. Injury Caused or Sustained by Prisoner.

4. Failure To Furnish Medical Care to Prisoner.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 295

[§ 295] Failure To Furnish Medical Care to Prisoner.

(1) Statutory Provision. A public entity or employee is generally immune from liability for injuries caused by "the failure of the employee to furnish or obtain medical care for a prisoner in his custody." (Govt.C. 845.6; see Wright v. California (2004) 122 C.A.4th 659, 672, 19 C.R.3d 92 [state and Department of Corrections were immune from liability for prisoner's injuries allegedly arising from denial of timely surgery]; on immunities and defenses of public employees respecting police and correctional activities generally, see infra, §362.)

However, liability is imposed where the employee "knows or has reason to know that the prisoner is in need of immediate medical care and he fails to take reasonable action to summon such medical care." (Govt.C. 845.6; on liabilities of public employees respecting police and correctional activities generally, see infra, §361.) This liability exists "except as otherwise provided" by Govt.C. 855.8 and Govt.C. 856. Govt.C. 855.8 gives immunity from liability for diagnosing or failing to diagnose or prescribe for mental illness or addiction (see infra, §317), and Govt.C. 856 gives immunity from liability for determining whether to confine a person for mental illness or addiction or to release the person (see infra, §365).

(2) Judicial Construction. The relation between Govt.C. 845.6 and Govt.C. 844.6 (supra, §292) was examined in Sanders v. Yuba (1967) 247 C.A.2d 748, 55 C.R. 852. Plaintiff, a prisoner in the county jail, was injured when he sat up in bed and struck a towel rack. His complaint alleged not only a dangerous condition, but also negligent failure of the jailers to summon medical aid despite their knowledge of his need. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed; liability of defendant county and its employees (the jailers) could be based on the second theory. The difficult problem was the apparently conflicting catch-all immunity provision of Govt.C. 844.6(a)(2): "Notwithstanding any other provisions of law," a public entity is not liable for "[a]n injury to any prisoner." (See supra, §292, for amendment changing statement to "any other provision of this part.") Examining the legislative history, the court pointed out that Govt.C. 844.6 was never recommended by the Law Revision Commission and was deleted several times in the course of consideration of the Tort Claims Act, while Govt.C. 845.6 remained and was strengthened by making the public entity liable as well as the employee. Then, reconciling the two sections by preferring the specific over the general, Govt.C. 844.6 was interpreted to give immunity for the normal physical impact type of injury, with Govt.C. 845.6 still providing liability for failure to summon immediate medical care when its need is known. (247 C.A.2d 754.)

Hart v. Orange (1967) 254 C.A.2d 302, 62 C.R. 73, followed Sanders, but suggested a different rationalization.

(a) Govt.C. 844.6 is concerned with the person's status as a prisoner, and with injuries that would be actionable but for that status. Govt.C. 845.6, on the other hand, deals with the positive subject of creation of liability, not with reiteration of an immunity. Hence, it is not inhibited by the restrictions of Govt.C. 844.6. Under this view, the phrase "[n]otwithstanding any other provisions of law" of Govt.C. 844.6 "would relate only to injuries recognized as actionable if inflicted by a private person and not to injuries resulting from breach of a newly-defined duty not applicable to private persons, created by the Legislature as a special burden to be borne by public entities under limited circumstances." (254 C.A.2d 306.)

(b) Also, Govt.C. 844.6 appears to have been based on the contemplated magnitude of liability if immunity from traditional tort actions did not exist. But exposure to liability under Govt.C. 845.6 would arise infrequently and establishes only a modest standard of care in an area of ethical duty--the moral obligation to come to the aid of a person in danger. "We see this distinction in point of view as a valid basis for differentiation in legislative policy." (254 C.A.2d 307.)

Govt.C. 845.6 was held inapplicable in Lucas v. Long Beach (1976) 60 C.A.3d 341, 131 C.R. 470. A 17-year-old boy, held in a juvenile detention cell while apparently under the influence of a drug, committed suicide. Verdict and judgment were against defendant city on the ground of negligent failure to summon immediate medical care. Held, reversed. The statute "envision[s] liability for injury resulting from the failure to treat the physical condition requiring treatment and not for some other incidental injury that might have been prevented by the mere presence of medical personnel." (60 C.A.3d 350.) In Johnson v. Los Angeles (1983) 143 C.A.3d 298, 316, 317, 191 C.R. 704, infra, §301, however, a complaint alleging failure to provide medical assistance to an obviously suicidal prisoner was held to state a good cause of action under Govt.C. 845.6.

In Zeilman v. Kern (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1174, 214 C.R. 746, the court, reversing a summary judgment for defendant county, pointed out that decisions such as Lucas v. Long Beach were based on failure of proof at the trial, and are not inconsistent with decisions such as Hart v. Orange. "In all cases it seems abundantly clear that the issues of the governmental entity's actual or constructive knowledge of an individual's immediate need for medical care and of the reasonable action of the governmental entity to provide such care are questions of fact." (168 C.A.3d 1186.)

In Watson v. California (1993) 21 C.A.4th 836, 841, 26 C.R.2d 262, the trial court granted summary judgment to the state on a Govt.C. 845.6 claim based on failure to diagnose a prisoner's ankle injury properly as a torn Achilles tendon. Held, affirmed. The facts presented were not tantamount to failure to summon medical care. The duty imposed by the statute does not include a duty to provide reasonable medical care. (21 C.A.4th 841.)

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

c. Injury Caused by Escaped Prisoner.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 296

[§ 296] Injury Caused by Escaped Prisoner.

(1) Statutory Provision. A public entity or employee is immune from liability for injury caused by an escaping or escaped prisoner. (Govt.C. 845.8(b)(1); see 44 A.L.R.3d 899 [liability of public officer or body for harm done by prisoner permitted to escape]; on statutory duty to give notice of an escape, see infra, §300; on immunities and defenses of public employees respecting police and correctional activities generally, see infra, §362.)

(2) Immunity Not Limited to Discretionary Acts or Omissions. The contention that this immunity is only a particular application of the discretionary immunity under Govt.C. 820.2 (see infra, §351 et seq.), and therefore subject to the discretionary-ministerial distinction of Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352, was rejected in Sacramento v. Superior Court (1972) 8 C.3d 479, 105 C.R. 374, 503 P.2d 1382. Plaintiffs, heirs of F, sued defendant county for wrongful death of F. They alleged that two prisoners escaped from defendant's jail, burglarized F's home, and killed F in the process; that defendant acted negligently in classifying, supervising, and detaining the prisoners, as a result of which they escaped; that defendant failed to pursue them; and that defendant failed to warn local residents of their escape. Defendant's demurrer was overruled, and defendant sought prohibition. Held, writ granted.

(a) The sections of the Tort Claims Act dealing with peculiarly governmental functions, e.g., police, fire, tax, and mental hospital, show no pattern of immunity only for discretionary acts. The immunity of Govt.C. 845.8(b) is in terms absolute, and must be given effect unless there is a clear legislative intent to the contrary. And no such intention appears. (8 C.3d 482.)

(b) Johnson deals with Govt.C. 845.8(a), which refers to "determining" whether to parole, etc.; Govt.C. 845.8(b) relates simply to injury caused by an escaping or escaped prisoner. (8 C.3d 484.)

(c) Plaintiffs alleged that defendant failed to lock or secure its doors and fences, thereby creating a dangerous condition under Govt.C. 835 (supra, §§258, 259). It is questionable whether the condition of property becomes dangerous by reason of unlocked doors; but in any event, the specific statute dealing with an escaped prisoner prevails over the general section. (8 C.3d 485.)

(d) The absolute immunity, "encompassing both discretionary acts or omissions and ministerial acts or omissions," is based on sound policy. "[P]rison administrators would of necessity be inhibited in maintaining rehabilitative programs allowing liberal prisoner freedom if the result is to increase greatly the risk of escape, and the entity is to be held responsible to third persons for injuries caused by the escaped prisoner." (8 C.3d 485.)

(3) Prisoner's Injury to Self. In Ladd v. San Mateo (1996) 12 C.4th 913, 50 C.R.2d 309, 911 P.2d 496, plaintiff, a ward of the juvenile court, was being transported to juvenile hall by defendant county employees in a county automobile. Plaintiff's hands were handcuffed in front of her, and she was placed, alone, in the back seat of the automobile. When the vehicle stopped for a red light, plaintiff jumped from the vehicle and was severely injured while attempting to board a slow-moving freight train. In the ensuing personal injury action against the county and various county employees, summary judgment was granted for defendants, in part because they were immune under Govt.C. 845.8(b)(1). Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff argues that Govt.C. 845.8 does not cover the present case, because that statute is only applicable to injuries caused by the escaping prisoner, not to injuries to the prisoner. This contention is without merit. There is nothing in the statutory language ("caused by") that suggests an exception for injuries caused by a prisoner to himself or herself. In either case, there would be a chilling effect on law enforcement if public entities were to be held liable. Furthermore, it would be an anomalous result if the entity were immune for injuries to a third party, but liable for injuries suffered by the prisoner. (12 C.4th 920.)

(b) Several statutes in the same part of the Government Code specifically provide immunity for injuries caused by, and ones caused to, certain escaped persons. However, this is not indicative of an intent in Govt.C. 845.8 to exclude self-inflicted injuries suffered by escaped prisoners. The aforementioned statutes included the "caused to" language to make it clear that the entity is also immune for injuries caused to the escaped person by the government or a third party. The addition of the "caused to" language is not necessary to provide immunity for injuries caused by the escaped person to himself or herself, because that immunity is already provided by the "caused by" language. (12 C.4th 921.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

d. Injury Caused by Arrested Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 297

[§ 297] Injury Caused by Arrested Person.

(1) Statutory Provision. The escaped prisoner immunity (see supra, §296) set forth in the original Tort Claims Act was extended in 1970 to injuries caused by "[a]n escaping or escaped arrested person," and "[a] person resisting arrest." (Govt.C. 845.8(b)); see Law Revision Com. Comment to 1970 Amendment ["[t]his probably codifies former law".])

(2) What Constitutes Arrest. In Kisbey v. California (1984) 36 C.3d 415, 204 C.R. 428, 682 P.2d 1093, police officers, responding to an official broadcast of a possible felony at a service station, observed a car leaving the premises without lights and entering an intersection against a red light. They pursued and stopped the car, and got out of their own car to question the occupants and cite the driver for traffic violations. However, the driver suddenly started the car, fled the scene at high speed, and a few seconds later struck plaintiff's vehicle. He was then arrested for Vehicle Code violations. Held, the immunity of Govt.C. 845.8(b) was applicable even though the escaper had not technically been arrested. "It seems clear that the purpose of the broadening amendment to subdivision (b) was to immunize public entities and employees from the entire spectrum of potential injuries caused by persons actually or about to be deprived of their freedom to take physical measures of one kind or another to avoid the constraint or to escape from it. It would plainly violate the legislative intent if particular words of the statute--such as 'arrest' or 'resisting'--were given such technical meanings that a case fell between the cracks of the immunity because, for example, the police had not intended a full arrest--as distinguished from a temporary detention--when the subject fled, or because at the time of the escape the process had not reached the point of physical control over the suspect." (36 C.3d 419.)

(3) Effect of Negligent Operation of Motor Vehicle. In Thomas v. Richmond (1995) 9 C.4th 1154, 40 C.R.2d 442, 892 P.2d 1185, a suspected criminal, who was struck by a pursuing police vehicle while fleeing on foot from police officers, brought an action for personal injuries against the city that employed the officers. The trial judge granted summary judgment for the city, finding it immune from liability for plaintiff's injuries under Govt.C. 845.8(b). Held, reversed.

(a) Three Court of Appeal decisions, Duarte v. San Jose (1980) 100 C.A.3d 648, 161 C.R. 140, San Jose v. Superior Court (Martinez) (1985) 166 C.A.3d 695, 212 C.R. 661, and Stark v. Los Angeles (1985) 168 C.A.3d 276, 214 C.R. 216, have concluded that the liability of Veh.C. 17001 for negligent operation of a motor vehicle (see infra, §331 et seq.) prevails over the immunity of Govt.C. 845.8. In apparent reaction to these decisions, the Legislature enacted Veh.C.

17004.7 (infra, §336), providing immunity in vehicular pursuit cases if the entity employing the police officers adopts a written policy on those pursuits. In effect, the Legislature overruled these cases in part but impliedly approved them to the extent it did not modify them. (9 C.4th 1159.)

(b) Although the broad language of Kisbey arguably supported the city's position with respect to immunity, that case is distinguishable. There, the court had no occasion to consider the relevance of Veh.C. 17001, because, at the moment of escape, the officers were no longer driving. (9 C.4th 1163.)

(c) A public entity's liability under Veh.C. 17001 prevails over the Govt.C. 845.8(b) immunity, except as provided in Veh.C. 17004.7. That exception was inapplicable here because plaintiff was fleeing on foot. (9 C.4th 1165.) (See 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 792 [Thomas]; on governmental liability for police or correctional activities involving motor vehicle torts generally, see supra, §290.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

e. Injury From Release of Prisoner.

1. Immunity Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 298

[§ 298] Immunity Rule.

A public entity is immune from liability for "injury resulting from determining whether to parole or release a prisoner or from determining the terms and conditions of his parole or release or from determining whether to revoke his parole or release." (Govt.C. 845.8(a)); see Martinez v. California (1980) 444 U.S. 277, 100 S.Ct. 553, 62 L.Ed.2d 481 [rejecting constitutional challenge of Govt.C. 845.8(a)]; Johnson v. Ventura (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1400, 35 C.R.2d 150, infra, §319 [immunity for release by police of escaped mental patient]; Fleming v. California (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1378, 1382, 41 C.R.2d 63 [immunity for failure to arrest parolee who left state in violation of parole terms]; Swift v. Department of Corrections (2004) 116 C.A.4th 1365, 1370, 11 C.R.3d 406 [immunity extends to negligent supervision of parolees]; 6 A.L.R.4th 1155 [governmental tort liability for injuries caused by negligently released individual]; on duty to warn of prisoner's release, see infra, §§299, 300.)

This statute is said to be a specific application of the discretionary immunity recognized in Govt.C. 820.2 (infra, §351). (Leyva v. Nielsen (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1061, 1065, 100 C.R.2d 236 [chairman of Board of Prison Terms was immune from liability to prisoner for extending time when prisoner was eligible for parole and for later finding him unsuitable for parole].) However, it has been extended, generally, to the ministerial implementation of correctional programs as well. (Swift v. Department of Corrections, supra, 116 C.A.4th 1373; on liability for failure to warn, see infra, §299.)

The rationale for the immunity is that the freedom to be accorded prisoners for rehabilitative purposes and the precautions necessary to prevent escape "are matters that should be determined by the proper public officials unfettered by any fear that their decisions may result in liability." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 854.8.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

e. Injury From Release of Prisoner.

2. Duty To Warn Where Special Relationship Exists.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 299

[§ 299] Duty To Warn Where Special Relationship Exists.

(1) In General. A duty to warn the plaintiff of the release of a prisoner may be imposed on police or correctional authorities by a special relationship arising from representations or conduct causing detrimental reliance. In Morgan v. Yuba (1964) 230 C.A.2d 938, 41 C.R. 508, A, having threatened the life of plaintiffs' mother, was arrested at her instigation. In this complaint by her minor children, it was alleged that the sheriff and deputies of defendant county, with knowledge of the threat, undertook to warn her immediately upon A's release on bail, that they did not give the warning, and that A, on his release, killed the mother. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed; a cause of action could be stated.

(a) Immunity for determination to release. Under Govt.C. 845.8, neither an entity nor an employee is liable for injury resulting from a determination whether to release a prisoner; this rule is within the general principle of Govt.C. 820.2 (immunity for discretionary acts; see infra, §351). Hence, if the negligence charged were release of a dangerous prisoner, there would be no liability. (230 C.A.2d 941.)

(b) Liability of officers for failure to warn. The negligence charged, however, was failure to warn, as promised, that a dangerous prisoner was about to be released. No discretion is involved in carrying out the promise; i.e., regardless of discretion to release or not, notification called for a simple ministerial act. (230 C.A.2d 942.) Either a private person or a public employee may be liable for failure to perform a voluntary undertaking where the plaintiff, "in reasonable reliance thereon, suffers harm, as by refraining from securing other necessary assistance." (230 C.A.2d 944.) The pleading failed to allege this reliance, but this defect could be remedied by amendment. (230 C.A.2d 945.)

(c) Respondeat superior liability of public entity. Under Govt.C. 815.2, a public entity is liable only for acts or omissions of the employee within the scope of employment, and defendants contended that the officers, in making this promise and omitting to perform it, were not acting in the public interest but on their own as "good Samaritans." But "scope of employment" goes beyond acts merely in furtherance of the principal's interest. "The giving of reassurance and protection to members of the public who have been threatened with violence is within the scope of a policeman's and sheriff's employment, even though the officer has not been authorized to give such reassurance--or, in fact, has been expressly forbidden so to do." (230 C.A.2d 946.) (On affirmative duties of law enforcement authorities where special relationship exists generally, see supra, §291; on statutory duty to notify, see infra, §300.)

(2) Specific Victim Required. The duty to warn is limited to a situation that involves specific, foreseeable victims. In Thompson v. Alameda (1980) 27 C.3d 741, 167 C.R. 70, 614 P.2d 728, the complaint alleged that a juvenile offender had been confined in defendant county's institution under court order; that defendant knew that he had the propensity to commit sexual assaults on young children, and that he had "indicated that he would, if released, take the life of a young child residing in the neighborhood"; that defendant released him on temporary leave in his mother's custody at her home, and did not advise the mother, the local police, or parents of young children within the immediate vicinity of the mother's house, of the known facts; that plaintiffs, husband and wife and their minor son, lived a few doors from the mother's home; and that within 24 hours of his release, the offender murdered their son in the garage of the mother's home. Held, no cause of action was stated. The county was protected by statutory immunity, and had no duty to warn.

(a) Statutory immunity under Govt.C. 820.2 and 845.8.

(1) The decision to release an offender is discretionary, and renders the releasing authorities immune under Govt.C. 820.2 (infra, §351) and the "basic policy decision test" of Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352. "The decision, requiring as it does, comparisons, choices, judgments, and evaluations, comprises the very essence of the exercise of 'discretion.' " (27 C.3d 749.)

(2) Defendant is also protected by the specific immunity conferred by Govt.C. 845.8 (supra, §298). This immunity "is provided when the questioned acts involve policy decisions made prior to or as an integral part of the decision to release . . . The selection of [the offender's] mother as custodian and the degree of supervision to be exercised over her clearly involved such protected policy decisions." (27 C.3d 749.)

(b) No duty to warn police, neighborhood parents, or custodian. Even if no statutory immunity were applicable, defendant had no affirmative duty that it failed to perform.

(1) Johnson and Tarasoff distinguished. In Johnson the state placed the specific plaintiff in a position of clearly foreseeable danger; and in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050, the patient posed a serious threat of violence to a foreseeable victim. (27 C.3d 751.) Here, the complaint did not allege a special relationship between plaintiffs and defendant county through which defendant placed the decedent in danger, and it did not allege that the decedent was a foreseeable or readily identifiable target of the offender's threats. (27 C.3d 753.)

(2) Policy considerations. Parole and probation decisions are inherently imprecise, and each member of the general public who comes in contact with a parolee bears the risk that the rehabilitative effort will fail. (27 C.3d 753.) Further, there are significant practical obstacles in the imposition of an affirmative duty to warn of the release of an inmate with a violent history who has made "nonspecific threats of harm directed at nonspecific victims." (27 C.3d 754.) The generalized warnings would do little to increase the precautions of any particular members of the public, and might also negate the rehabilitative purposes of the parole and probation system by stigmatizing the released offender in the public's eye. (27 C.3d 755.)

(3) Analysis of proposed warnings.

First, warnings to the police would be of little benefit to potential victims of violence unless the police had a concurrent duty to act on these warnings. In Tarasoff, supra, the duty was recognized only to an identifiable potential victim or to those who would advise that person of potential danger. To require the police to knock on individual doors in the community or to furnish 24-hour police escort for the offender or all possible victims would divert an inordinate amount of time and manpower. (27 C.3d 756.)

Second, warnings to neighborhood parents would likewise require an expenditure of time and limited resources of parole and probation agencies of questionable value, and also might substantially jeopardize rehabilitative efforts by stigmatizing released offenders and by inhibiting their release. (27 C.3d 756.)

Third, warnings to the juvenile's mother would not have the desired effect of warning potential victims; it is doubtful that the mother would voluntarily inform neighborhood parents or children that her son posed a general threat to their welfare. The speculation by dissenting justices that she might have taken special care to control her 18-year-old son is insufficient to support the imposition of civil liability. (27 C.3d 757, 758.)

(c) Conclusion. "In summary, whenever a potentially dangerous offender is released and thereafter commits a crime, the possibility of the commission of that crime is statistically foreseeable. Yet the Legislature has concluded that the benefits to society from rehabilitative release programs mandate their continuance. Within this context and for policy reasons the duty to warn depends upon and arises from the existence of a prior threat to a specific identifiable victim. ... In those instances in which the released offender poses a predictable threat of harm to a named or readily identifiable victim or group of victims who can be effectively warned of the danger, a releasing agent may well be liable for failure to warn such persons. Despite the tragic events underlying the present complaint, plaintiffs' decedent was not a known, identifiable victim, but rather a member of a large amorphous public group of potential targets. Under these circumstances we hold that County had no affirmative duty to warn plaintiffs, the police, the mother of the juvenile offender, or other local parents." (27 C.3d 758.) (See Santa Barbara v. Superior Court (1971) 15 C.A.3d 751, 757, 93 C.R. 406 [no liability where victim was member of general public, not individual known to defendant county's employees and capable of being warned]; Duffy v. Oceanside (1986) 179 C.A.3d 666, 671, 672, 224 C.R. 879 [Thompson does not require that verbal threat have been made to victim]; Brenneman v. California (1989) 208 C.A.3d 812, 818, 256 C.R. 363 [state had no duty to warn parents of boy who was killed by paroled child molester living in same neighborhood; citing Thompson]; 8 *Pepperdine L. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 300

[§ 300] Statutory Duty of Notification.

P.C. 11155 requires the Department of Corrections to notify the victim, the victim's next of kin, the police, and the county sheriff of a prisoner's release or escape under certain circumstances. (See 14 Pacific L. J. 602.)

(1) Notice of Placement in Reentry or Work Furlough Program. As soon as an inmate's placement in any reentry or work furlough program is planned, but in no case less than 60 days before placement, the department must "send written notice, if such notice has been requested, to all of the following: (1) the chief of police of the city, if any, in which the inmate will reside, if known, or in which placement will be made, (2) the sheriff of the county in which the inmate will reside, if known, or in which placement will be made, and (3) the victim, if any, of the crime for which the inmate was convicted or the next of kin of the victim if the crime was a homicide, if the victim or the next of kin has submitted a request for notice with the department." (P.C. 11155(a).)

(2) Notice of Escape. In the event of an escape, the department must "immediately notify, by the most reasonable and expedient means available the chief of police of the city, and the sheriff of the county, in which the inmate resided immediately prior to the inmate's arrest and conviction, and, if previously requested, to the victim, if any, of the crime for which the inmate was convicted, or to the next of kin of the victim if the crime was a homicide. If the inmate is recaptured, the department shall send written notice thereof to the persons designated in this subdivision within 30 days after regaining custody of the inmate." (P.C. 11155(b).)

(3) Manner of Notice to Requesting Party. The department is generally required to send the required notices to the last address provided by the requesting party, and it is the requesting party's responsibility to provide the department with a current address. (P.C. 11155(c).) However, the department must send notice to a victim by return receipt mail, and make a diligent, good faith effort to discover the victim's whereabouts if the victim does not live at the last address given to the department. (P.C. 11155(d).)

e. Injury From Release of Prisoner.

4. Release of Suicidal Arrestee.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 301

[§ 301] Release of Suicidal Arrestee.

In Johnson v. Los Angeles (1983) 143 C.A.3d 298, 191 C.R. 704, plaintiffs, wife and daughter of decedent, sued defendant county and sheriff's officers for wrongful death. The complaint alleged that decedent was arrested for driving on the wrong side of a freeway; that he informed the officers that he was attempting to commit suicide and that people were trying to torture him; that his wife thereafter informed the officers that he was a paranoid schizophrenic with suicidal tendencies who required immediate medication and should not be released; that the officers promised to act accordingly, but instead, released him from jail without notice to plaintiffs; and that 2 days later, he committed suicide. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Immunity from liability for failure to confine or medicate. Govt.C. 856(a)(1) gives immunity from liability for any determination to confine or not to confine a person for mental illness, and for all determinations involved in the process of commitment. (143 C.A.3d 314, 315; see infra, §319.) Govt.C. 855.8(a) gives immunity from liability for diagnosing or failing to diagnose mental illness, or from failing to prescribe for mental illness. (143 C.A.3d 316; see infra, §§318, 365.)

(b) Liability for failure to warn of impending release based on special relationship. Under the principles discussed in Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, infra, §352, Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050, Thompson v. Alameda (1980) 27 C.3d 741, 167 C.R. 70, 614 P.2d 728, supra, §299, and Davidson v. Westminster (1982) 32 C.3d 197, 202, 185 C.R. 252, 649 P.2d 894, supra, §291, defendants were in a special relationship to both decedent and plaintiffs, and had a duty to warn plaintiffs before releasing decedent. (143 C.A.3d 311.) "The instant case is unique in that, since it involves a suicide, the person whose conduct needed to be controlled was also the foreseeable victim of that conduct. In light of the policy considerations underlying the imposition of affirmative duties, this singular setting does not undermine, but rather supports, the imposition of a duty: in the case of Decedent, Sheriffs stood in a special relationship both to the victim and to the person whose conduct created the danger. By releasing Decedent from custody without a prior warning to Appellants, Sheriffs placed Decedent in a position of clearly foreseeable danger. Decedent was not only a foreseeable target of the danger--he was the specific and identified potential victim. Decedent had made a specific threat of harm, directed at a specific victim--himself The fact that the warning in the case at bar should have been given to Appellants (and not to the immediate 'victim' of the suicide) does not foreclose plaintiffs. As wife and child of their non compos mentis loved one, Appellants are the real and foreseeable 'victims' of this tragedy, and entitled to maintain a wrongful death action . . . Moreover, Appellants could have been notified without appreciable burden to Sheriffs upon whom they depended for 'protection' against the very eventuality that occurred." (143 C.A.3d 311.)

(c) No discretionary immunity. The immunity for discretionary acts, as explained in Johnson v. California, extends only to basic policy decisions; and under the allegations of the complaint, the officers' failure to warn of a clearly foreseeable danger did not rise to that level. (143 C.A.3d 312, 313.) Moreover, Johnson points out that the public agency must demonstrate that its employee in fact consciously exercised discretion, i.e., that the employee made a basic policy decision. (143 C.A.3d 313.)

(d) Liability for failure to furnish immediately needed medical care. The complaint also stated a cause of action under Govt.C. 845.6 (supra, §295). The scope of the immunities under Govt.C. 855.8 and 856 is more limited than the scope of the general duty to summon medical care created by Govt.C. 845.6. (143 C.A.3d 316, 317.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 302

[§ 302] Immunity Rule.

A public entity or employee is immune from liability for failure to establish a police department or to provide sufficient police protection service. (Govt.C. 845; see Antique Arts Corp. v. Torrance (1974) 39 C.A.3d 588, 592, 114 C.R. 332 [delay in responding to alarm, resulting in escape of robbers]; Hartzler v. San Jose (1975) 46 C.A.3d 6, 9, 120 C.R. 5 [failure to send officer to woman whose estranged husband, after threats, came and killed her]; Lopez v. San Diego (1987) 190 C.A.3d 678, 681, 235 C.R. 583 [delay in rescuing victims of mass random shooting]; Zuniga v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (1995) 41 C.A.4th 82, 99, 48 C.R.2d 353, supra, §267 [Govt.C. 845 immunity, while it applied to various failures of housing authority involving provision and activities of police officers, did not cover authority's failure to transfer tenants, to warn them about crime problems in particular unit, to arrest or reprimand perpetrators of offenses, to erect barriers to keep out intruders, or to evict those tenants who sold drugs and harassed other tenants]; Zelig v. Los Angeles (2002) 27 C.4th 1112, 1141, 119 C.R.2d 709, 45 P.3d 1171 [defendant public entity was immune from liability for failure to provide sufficient police protection to prevent decedent from being killed by ex-husband while she was in courthouse awaiting hearing in dissolution proceeding]; 39 A.L.R.4th 691 [failure to respond to emergency call]; 90 A.L.R.5th 273 [liability of municipality or other governmental unit for failure to provide police protection from crime]; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 821 [Police Liability for Negligent Failure To Prevent Crime]; on immunities and defenses of public employees respecting police and correctional activities generally, see infra, §362.)

"Whether police protection should be provided at all, and the extent to which it should be provided, are political decisions which are committed to the policy-making officials of government. To permit review of these decisions by judges and juries would remove the ultimate decision-making authority from those politically responsible for making the decisions." (Law Revision Com. Comment to Govt.C. 845.)

Specifically excluded from the immunity is a police department's failure to respond to a request for service via a burglar alarm or an alarm company referral service solely on the basis that a permit from the city was not obtained. (Govt.C. 845; see 24 Pacific L. J. 1027.)

Similar immunity is created by Govt.C. 845.2 for failure to provide a prison, jail, or penal or correctional facility, or sufficient equipment, personnel, or facilities there (unless a dangerous condition of public property results). (See Taylor

v. Buff (1985) 172 C.A.3d 384, 387, 390, 218 C.R. 249 [immunity from liability for providing allegedly inadequate door-locking system in jail].)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

10. Police and Correctional Activities.

f. Injury From Failure To Provide Protection.

2. Discriminatory Allocation of Protective Services During Riot.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 303

[§ 303] Discriminatory Allocation of Protective Services During Riot.

In Gates v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 481, 38 C.R.2d 489, plaintiffs, three individuals who were injured during a riot, alleged that defendants, the city's chief of police and numerous senior commanders in the police department, violated their rights under C.C. 51.7 (right to be free from violence) and C.C. 52 (liability for denial of civil rights), by the discriminatory deployment of police officers during the riot, which resulted in the lack of a police presence where they were injured. Specifically, plaintiffs alleged that defendants' improper conduct included the failure to properly train and mobilize officers; the withdrawal of officers from minority neighborhoods; the failure to properly deploy or redeploy officers; the failure to respond to telephone calls for emergency police assistance; the absence of a police response to acts of violence and looting; and the denial of protective services. The trial judge overruled defendants' demurrers. Held, defendants were immune from money damages under Govt.C. 845 (supra, §302), and the demurrers should have been sustained without leave to amend.

(a) Prior to the abrogation of the judicial doctrine of sovereign immunity in Muskopf v. Corning Hosp. Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 211, 11 C.R. 89, 359 P.2d 457, supra, §215, public entities and their employees were generally immune from suit for activities relating to law enforcement, including the failure to enforce a law or make an arrest, except for property damage occurring during a riot, which was the subject of a specific statute (former Political Code 50140) providing for liability. Therefore, there was no liability for nonriot-related property damage and all personal injuries occasioned by the failure to enforce the law. The Tort Claims Act recreated these pre-Muskopf immunities, and the repeal of former Political Code 50140 et seq. increased the scope of the money damage immunity for failure to provide adequate police protection services beyond that in existence prior to Muskopf. (32 C.A.4th 496.)

(b) The conduct alleged by plaintiffs fell squarely within the ambit of "failure to provide sufficient police protective service" within the meaning of Govt.C. 845. Further, other provisions of the Tort Claims Act indicate a legislative intent to immunize the police from liability for money damages for the failure to properly respond to a riot. And the fact that the Legislature adopted the statute concurrently with the repeal of former Political Code 50140 et seq. is of material consequence in applying the statute. (32 C.A.4th 503.)

(c) Although some courts have held that the individual negligence of on-scene officers in performing law enforcement functions, such as moving a police cruiser or laying out a warning flare pattern, are outside the scope of the Govt.C. 845 immunity from money damages, this case is different. Defendants were senior officials in the police department. They were alleged to have made unlawfully discriminatory policy decisions as to the allocation of police resources in the second largest city in the country in the midst of a riot. That is the kind of political decision by policymaking officials that Govt.C. 845 was designed to cover. By its terms, it applies to a discretionary policy determination concerning police deployment. (32 C.A.4th 507.)

(d) The fact that the action alleged intentional discrimination was of no consequence. The unlawful motive for failure to deploy an adequate number of officers, intentional discrimination, did not change the injury-causing event, a "failure to provide sufficient police protection services," within the meaning of Govt.C. 845. Because governmental tort immunities from damages apply to intentional torts, defendants' alleged unlawful discriminatory motive did not take plaintiffs' claims outside the scope of the statute. (32 C.A.4th 508.)

(e) The Unruh Civil Rights Act does not supersede the immunity provided by Govt.C. 845. First, the immunity is a jurisdictional bar to pursuing any claim for money damages against a public entity or employee. Second, there is no indication either in the wording or legislative history of C.C. 51.7 and 52 that the Legislature ever contemplated the effect of the immunity, that it intended the Tort Claims Act immunities to be inapplicable to a civil rights cause of action, or that it ever sought to address the question of public entity and employee immunity from the duty to pay money claims arising from the failure to enforce the law or provide adequate police protection. (32 C.A.4th 508.)

(f) Application of Govt.C. 845 did not violate plaintiffs' equal protection rights. The statute makes no classification premised on race or nationality. Moreover, there was no evidence that the statute was neutral in its wording but "grossly discriminatory in its operation," which would have given rise to heightened equal protection analysis. The statute meets the rational basis equal protection test (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §704), because it was neutrally drawn with no race-or nationality-based distinctions. Further, it could not be concluded that the Legislature's determination to provide immunity in a riot situation for the failure to provide adequate police protective services was irrational. (32 C.A.4th 513.) Likewise, plaintiffs had no right to sue for damages under the equal protection provisions of Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), lacking evidence that the voters intended to authorize damages for a violation of that provision. (32 C.A.4th 516.)

(g) Nevertheless, this decision did not affect any right plaintiffs may have had to seek equitable relief. "This opinion, which discusses the section 845 immunity from the duty to pay monetary damages, may not be read that equitable relief is unavailable when police supervisors discriminate in the deployment of protective resources for racial reasons." (32 C.A.4th 494.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
10. Police and Correctional Activities.
f. Injury From Failure To Provide Protection.
3. Duty To Protect Where Special Relationship Exists.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 304

[§ 304] Duty To Protect Where Special Relationship Exists.

Where a special relationship arises between the public entity and plaintiff by which the entity voluntarily assumes a duty to act, the immunity for failure to provide police protection does not apply. (Hartzler v. San Jose (1975) 46 C.A.3d 6, 9, 120 C.R. 5; Stone v. California (1980) 106 C.A.3d 924, 929, 165 C.R. 339; on affirmative duties of law enforcement where special relationship exists generally, see supra, §291.) However, several decisions have held that no special relationship exists under the particular facts:

In M.B. v. San Diego (1991) 233 C.A.3d 699, 284 C.R. 555, someone entered plaintiff's bedroom window while she was sleeping and stole some lingerie. When she called the police, the investigating officers told her "not to worry" and that "these guys never come back." A short time later, plaintiff began receiving phone calls from J, who told her that he had committed the burglary and was going to return. When she informed the police, an officer told her that "they never do." He also agreed to send a squad car by to check on her, but none ever arrived. Two days later J returned and raped plaintiff. She sued defendant city, alleging police negligence in investigating the case and giving advice. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; there was no special relationship between plaintiff and the police that would impose a duty on them to control J's behavior.

(a) The police did not make special promises to protect plaintiff, took no affirmative steps to provide her with special protection, and did nothing to increase her peril by making it more likely that J would return. Rather, the essence of plaintiff's complaint is that the police failed to take such affirmative acts as adequately investigating the case, uncovering J's prior record, and warning her that J might return. "These failures ... did not increase the risk [J] would decide to return to her house and harm her; they merely failed to decrease the risk. The police actions resulted in maintaining the status quo." (233 C.A.3d 706.)

(b) The officer's offer after the burglary to send a patrol car to check on plaintiff did not create the required special relationship. First, this offer was made in response to plaintiff's call for assistance. These responses are basic to police work and hence are not "special" to a particular individual. Second, even assuming the offer amounted to the voluntary assumption of a special protective role by the police, that role was limited to protecting plaintiff on the night of the burglary. Hence, any police negligence in failing to send a patrol car at that time could not have caused a rape that occurred 2 days later. (233 C.A.3d 706.)

In Hernandez v. San Jose (1993) 14 C.A.4th 129, 17 C.R.2d 589, two police officers of defendant city stopped a vehicle at about 11 p.m. for speeding. Because all of the occupants of the vehicle, including plaintiff's son, the decedent, were underage and without a driver's license, the officers impounded the vehicle. Decedent eventually accepted a ride in another individual's car, which was involved in a one-car accident that resulted in decedent's death. Plaintiff sued defendant for the alleged negligence of the officers in failing either to provide safe transportation for decedent or to notify plaintiff of his whereabouts. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; the officers had no duty to protect decedent.

(a) Although decedent was in violation of defendant's curfew ordinance, no duty can be premised on the officers' failure to take decedent into custody. Under Govt.C. 846 (infra, §305), public entities and employees may not be held liable for injuries resulting from a failure to make an arrest or to retain an arrested person in custody. (14 C.A.4th 133.)

(b) Neither decedent's presence in the stopped vehicle nor the fact that he was a minor established any special relationship or protective duty toward him that could be imposed on the officers. (14 C.A.4th 134.)

(c) Nor did the officers create a peril by voluntarily assuming a duty to protect, and then discharging that duty negligently. "That the officers impounded the vehicle did not create any peril to [decedent] and the other young men as none of them could have lawfully driven the vehicle. Nor did the impounding of the vehicle and alleged refusal to let the young men get a ride with the tow truck driver increase any risk of harm to [decedent] that otherwise existed. A one-car accident caused by the driver of the vehicle the young men headed home with was no more a risk before the officers impounded the vehicle than it was after." (14 C.A.4th 135.)

Hernandez v. Pomona (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1492, 57 C.R.2d 406, held that no special relationship creating a duty to protect existed between the police and plaintiff's son, who was killed by fellow gang members when testimony he gave incriminated a gang member in a previous murder. The court emphasized the following points:

(a) The fact that the police officers allegedly assured the decedent that he would not be harmed if he gave them a statement did not create a duty to protect, because there was no allegation that this assurance amounted to a specific or implicit undertaking to provide the decedent with protection at any time, or that he relied on it for his safety. (49 C.A.4th 1502.)

(b) The present case does not involve the duty to warn, but rather, involves the duty to protect, which requires commitment of substantially greater resources. (49 C.A.4th 1503, distinguishing Carpenter v. Los Angeles (1991) 230 C.A.3d 923, 281 C.R. 500, supra, §291, and Wallace v. Los Angeles (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1385, 16 C.R.2d 113, supra, §291.) And the applicable statute, P.C. 13835.5(b), clearly makes it a matter of police discretion whether to place a witness in the Witness Protection Program. There is no duty to do so. (49 C.A.4th 1503.)

(c) Citizens have a duty to give testimony in criminal trials. In performing this duty, it is natural that they have some fear of reprisal, especially where they are testifying against a fellow gang member. However, if this fear, by itself, were strong enough to create a duty to protect on the part of the police, it would be prohibitively expensive, and it would cause criminal investigation, in its present status, to grind to a halt. Thus, absent a specific undertaking to protect a witness, there is no duty to do so in the course of investigating and prosecuting criminal activity. (49 C.A.4th 1504.)

A public entity, and a public employee acting within the scope of employment, are generally immune from liability for "for interfering with the right of a prisoner to obtain a judicial determination or review of the legality of his confinement." (Govt.C. 845.4; on defenses and immunities of public employees respecting police and correctional activities generally, see infra, §362.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
10. Police and Correctional Activities.
i. Traffic Injuries.
1. Failure To Prevent Driving.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 307

[§ 307] Failure To Prevent Driving.

Several cases involve liability for permitting an intoxicated motorist to continue driving. In Green v. Livermore (1981) 117 C.A.3d 82, 172 C.R. 461, the complaint alleged that police officers stopped an automobile with three intoxicated occupants, that the police arrested only one of them and left the other two in the automobile with its keys, and that the others drove away and subsequently struck plaintiffs' automobile, causing injuries and death. Held, a cause of action was stated. Because the officers' duty to prevent the others from operating the automobile was allegedly predicated on an enactment imposing a mandatory duty, pursuant to Govt.C. 815.6 (supra, §245), plaintiffs did not have to plead the existence of a special relationship to create a duty of care. (117 C.A.3d 89.)

Green was disagreed with in Lehto v. Oxnard (1985) 171 C.A.3d 285, 217 C.R. 450. Plaintiff, injured in a collision with vehicle driven by a drunken driver, alleged that defendant police officers had stopped the vehicle for a traffic violation; that they knew or should have known that the driver was drunk and incapable of safely operating the car, and that they nevertheless allowed him to continue driving. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Davidson v. Westminster (1982) 32 C.3d 197, 185 C.R. 252, 649 P.2d 894, supra, §291, and Williams v. California (1983) 34 C.3d 18, 192 C.R. 233, 664 P.2d 137, supra, §291, set forth the factors necessary to establish a special relationship imposing a duty on the officers, and none is present here. (171 C.A.3d 291.) Hence, Green, to the extent that it predicated a duty of care on general tort theory, is no longer authority. (171 C.A.3d 292.)

(b) Plaintiff's reliance on Govt.C. 815.6 is also unpersuasive in the light of the authorities, for no specific statute or regulation imposing such a duty was pleaded. (171 C.A.3d 293.) "In view of these cases and others, Green made a quantum leap from the specific to the general when it permitted a plaintiff to allege the breach of a mandatory duty without identifying the particular enactment relied on." (171 C.A.3d 293.)

(c) "The Green rationale would also allow a plaintiff to bootstrap a general obligation to enforce the law into a general duty of care owed to the public. This, of course, runs afoul of the language in both Davidson and Williams that carefully limits the duty owed by police to individual members of the general public. Although phrased in terms of a breach of mandatory duty, the allegations of negligence in Green, as well as those in the instant case, actually derive from defendants' status as police officers and the implied contention that they failed to do what reasonably prudent officers would have done in similar circumstances. Such pleading is an attempt to avoid the special relationship doctrine and the requirements of [Govt.C. 815.6] and impose a duty on law enforcement greater than that imposed on others." (171 C.A.3d 293.)

The same result has been reached in a number of other decisions. (See Jackson v. Clements (1983) 146 C.A.3d 983, 988, 194 C.R. 553; Harris v. Smith (1984) 157 C.A.3d 100, 107, 203 C.R. 541; Hucko v. San Diego (1986) 179 C.A.3d 520, 522, 523, 224 C.R. 552 [calling attention to the contrary rule in some other jurisdictions]; Sunnyvale v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 839, 844, 250 C.R. 214; 48 A.L.R.4th 320 [failure to restrain drunk driver as ground of liability of state or local government unit or officer]; 1 Proof of Facts 3d 545 [negligent failure to detain drunk driver].)

[§ 308] Failure To Remove Parked Car.

The California Highway Patrol has the authority to remove a vehicle from a highway when its condition creates a hazard to other traffic (Veh.C. 22651(b)); but this statutory provision does not create a mandatory duty (supra, §245). A decision to remove or not to remove is discretionary and within the immunity of Govt.C. 820.2 (infra, §351). (Bonds v. California (1982) 138 C.A.3d 314, 321, 187 C.R. 792; Posey v. California (1986) 180 C.A.3d 836, 846, 225 C.R. 830.)

In rejecting a "special relationship" argument (see supra, §291), the Bonds opinion states: "Here, there is nothing in the actions of the CHP that could have caused Bonds or the other motorists to rely on CHP protection. The CHP had not investigated the plight of specific persons; it merely ticketed an illegally parked car. Its actions did not place Bonds in a position of foreseeable danger that would not be readily discoverable by him if he were exercising due care. Nor did the CHP's actions contribute to, increase or change a risk which otherwise existed." (138 C.A.3d 319.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 309

[§ 309] Inadequate Assistance to Stranded Motorist.

(1) Liability Formerly Imposed: Mann Case. In Mann v. California (1977) 70 C.A.3d 773, 139 C.R. 82, a highway patrol officer observed two stranded cars in a speed-change lane of a freeway and pulled up behind them. Then: (a) he stood in the speed-change lane without instructing persons on the scene to get back into their cars; (b) after a tow truck arrived, he departed without advising anyone of the fact, and without waiting for the tow truck to assume the protective rearward position with a flashing light; (c) he failed to put protective flares on the highway. Shortly after he left, an old car driven by a partially blind driver sideswiped one of the stalled cars and struck plaintiff. The trial judge directed a verdict for defendant state on the theory that the intervening negligence of the driver was a superseding cause. Held, reversed. The driver's negligence was reasonably foreseeable, hence was not a superseding cause; the officer's negligence was a basis for liability of the state, and the immunity of Govt.C. 845 (failure to provide protection; supra, §302) was not a defense.

(2) Repudiation of Mann Holding. The 1979 Legislature responded to the Mann decision by the adoption of Govt.C. 820.25 as an urgency measure. The enacting statute (Stats. 1979, Chap. 806) points out that the Mann court found the initial decision to stop discretionary but the decision to leave not discretionary; hence, to avoid liability, "a traffic officer, or a state or local law enforcement official, would have to either not render assistance to motorists who are not involved in an accident or, having stopped to give assistance, remain at the scene even though more serious emergency situations may arise elsewhere in the meantime."

Under Govt.C. 820.25(a), the decision of a peace officer or other law enforcement official "to render assistance to a motorist who has not been involved in an accident or to leave the scene after rendering assistance, upon learning of a reasonably apparent emergency requiring his immediate attention elsewhere or upon instruction from a superior to assume duties elsewhere, shall be deemed an exercise of discretion." Under Govt.C. 820.25(b), acts or omissions in the performance of a ministerial duty ("a plain and mandatory duty involving the exercise of a set task to be performed without the exercise of discretion") are excluded. 11. Fire Protection.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 310

[§ 310] In General.

As in the police and correctional area (supra, §290 et seq.), immunity from liability for injuries resulting from fire protection activities is the rule, and liability for those injuries is the exception. (See Govt.C. 850 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §11.58 et seq.) Thus, a public entity is immune from liability for the following:

(1) Failure to provide fire protection service. Failure to establish a fire department or otherwise to provide fire protection service. (Govt.C. 850; see Cochran v. Herzog Engraving Co. (1984) 155 C.A.3d 405, 413, 205 C.R. 1 [inadequate inspection for fire hazards; Govt.C. 850 applicable]; Colapinto v. Riverside (1991) 230 C.A.3d 147, 151, 281 C.R. 191 [improper method of fighting fire]; 69 A.L.R.4th 739 [negligent fire inspection and subsequent enforcement]; on immunity of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

(2) Failure to provide or maintain sufficient personnel, equipment, or facilities. Where fire protection service has been undertaken, failure to provide or maintain sufficient personnel, equipment, or other facilities. (Govt.C. 850.2; see Cochran v. Herzog Engraving Co., supra [inadequate inspection for fire hazards; Govt.C. 850.2 applicable]; on immunity of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

In Heieck & Moran v. Modesto (1966) 64 C.2d 229, 49 C.R. 377, 411 P.2d 105, plaintiff alleged that a fire started on adjoining premises, that city employees had closed a valve in the water main for relocation of water and had failed for a month to turn it on again or notify the fire department, and that the fire spread to plaintiff's premises. Held, no cause of action was stated against defendant city.

(a) Govt.C. 815 (supra, §227) gives a public entity any defenses available to a private person, and the case law has established nonliability of a private water company for failure to maintain sufficient water supply. (64 C.2d 232.)

(b) Govt.C. 850.2 and 850.4 expressly give immunity from liability for failure to provide fire protection facilities or for the condition of fire protection equipment. (64 C.2d 233.)

(c) The further allegation that, on learning there was no water, the fire department negligently failed to summon available county firefighting equipment, did not support liability. Govt.C. 815.2(b) (supra, §228) makes the entity immune where the employee is immune, and there was no allegation that any city employee promised or represented that assistance would be summoned. (64 C.2d 234.) (See New Hampshire Ins. Co. v. Madera (1983) 144 C.A.3d 298, 304, 305, 192 C.R. 548 [valve in city water system used to furnish water to fight fires is part of city fire protection "facilities," subject to Govt.C. 815.2 immunity; following Heieck]; Lainer Inv. v. Department of Water & Power (1985) 170 C.A.3d 1, 7, 215 C.R. 812 [sprinkler system controlled by city did not work effectively; following Heieck].)

(3) Inadequate condition of equipment or facilities. Injury resulting from the condition of fire protection or firefighting equipment or facilities. (Govt.C. 850.4.) (See Heieck & Moran v. Modesto, supra; Cochran v. Herzog Engraving Co., supra [inadequate inspection for fire hazards; Govt.C. 850.4 applicable]; cf. Valley Title Co. v. San Jose Water Co. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1490, 1495, 67 C.R.2d 636 [Pub.Util.C. 774 grants same immunity to water companies that Govt.C. 850.4 grants to governmental entities, i.e., water company is immune for all damage caused by failure to maintain fire protection equipment, even when equipment is not being used in firefighting activities]; Pacific Bell v. San Diego (2000) 81 C.A.4th 596, 601, 96 C.R.2d 897 [Govt.C. 850.4 did not preclude plaintiff from maintaining inverse condemnation action for water damage caused by bursting fire hydrant pipe]; on immunity of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

In Razeto v. Oakland (1979) 88 C.A.3d 349, 151 C.R. 791, plaintiffs alleged that a fire hydrant had been negligently installed across the street with its spout pointing toward their house; that vandals had turned it on; and that the stream of water caused damage to the house and contents. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. Although the original intent in drafting Govt.C. 850.4 had been to state an immunity for damage caused in firefighting activities (see infra, §311), the section as ultimately drafted extended the immunity to include dangerous and defective fire protection equipment. (88 C.A.3d 352.)

(4) Transportation of injured person. Where a person has been injured by a fire or fire protection operation, injury sustained in connection with transporting the injured person to a doctor or hospital without objection. (Govt.C. 850.8; on immunity and liability of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

(5) Injury caused in fighting fire. Generally, injury caused in fighting fire. Govt.C. 850.4 (infra, §311 et seq.)

(1) Failure to provide fire protection service. See *People v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

11. Fire Protection.

b. Injury Caused in Fighting Fire.

1. General Immunity Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 311

[§ 311] General Immunity Rule.

Subject to exceptions and distinctions (infra, §312), a public entity is immune from liability for "any injury caused in fighting fires." (Govt.C. 850.4; on immunity and liability of public employees respecting firefighting injuries, see infra, §363.)

In Heimberger v. Fairfield (1975) 44 C.A.3d 711, 117 C.R. 482, plaintiff alleged that he sustained injuries when defendant city's fireman rescued him from a fire. Held, no cause of action was stated. Govt.C. 850.4 applies not only to the condition of equipment (see supra, §310), but to the conduct of firefighters; and an injury resulting from the rescue of a person trapped in a burning structure is one incurred in the course of fighting fires. (44 C.A.3d 715.)

In Bettencourt v. California (1975) 51 C.A.3d 892, 124 C.R. 542, plaintiffs attempted to overcome the immunity statute, after alleging that state firefighters cut plaintiffs' wire fence to fight a grass fire (immunity clear), by additionally alleging that the firefighters, after the fire had been extinguished, negligently failed to repair the fence or notify plaintiffs of its condition with the result that plaintiffs' cattle went through the opening and were killed on the highway. The court rejected this "semantic technique" as one that would emasculate this and other immunity statutes. (51 C.A.3d 894.) (See lengthy dissent, 51 C.A.3d 896, strongly supporting plaintiffs' theory.)

California v. Superior Court (Nagel) (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1409, 105 C.R.2d 499, involved governmental liability to a nonemployee participating in a firefighting operation. The decedent was killed while piloting an airplane and attempting to drop fire retardant material on a forest fire. In this action for wrongful death, defendant state demurred on the ground that it was immune under Govt.C. 850.4. Held, mandamus issued directing the trial judge to sustain the demurrer; defendant was immune.

(a) Had decedent been a public employee, his only remedy would have been through the workers' compensation system, and the matter would never have reached the civil courts. Had decedent been a nonparticipating third-party victim of the fire, it is equally clear from the statutory language that defendant would have been immune. The novel question raised here results from the fact that decedent was a participant in fighting the fire, and was neither a public employee nor a classic third-party victim. (87 C.A.4th 1412.)

(b) Govt.C. 850.4 and related statutes were enacted to protect the discretion of public officials in determining whether fire protection should be provided and, if so, to what extent and with what facilities. Here, many of the alleged negligent acts related to the advice or instructions given (or not given) by state employees. Had these employees negligently selected the wrong fight path, they would have been immune from liability for increased property damage. They would also have been immune had decedent's plane crash caused injury to a private person. The result is no different with respect to plaintiffs' efforts to recover for decedent's death. (87 C.A.4th 1413.)

(c) Govt.C. 850.4 speaks of injuries "caused" in fighting fires, rather than injuries "suffered" while fighting fires, and the Law Revision Commission remarked that firefighters should be able to take whatever action they think desirable without fear that a jury will later find them liable. Arguably, this suggests that the statute is directed at suits by members of the public, but, in relation to state employees whose putative negligence resulted in decedent's death, decedent was a member of the public. (87 C.A.4th 1414.)

(d) Plaintiffs contended that if the accident had occurred other than during firefighting activities, such as during a training run, defendant would not have been immune. Assuming that this is true, it does not help plaintiffs' case. Insofar as the statutes protect actions taken during the heat of firefighting, the statutory immunity is not lost merely because no immunity would have been available for the same action or decision taken without urgency. Decisions as to the scope of immunity are for the Legislature, not the courts. (87 C.A.4th 1415.)

2. Exceptions and Distinctions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 312

[§ 312] Exceptions and Distinctions.

(1) Motor Vehicle Torts. An exception from the general immunity for injuries from fighting fires (supra, §311) exists for motor vehicle torts under Veh.C. 17000 et seq. (infra, §331 et seq.) (Govt.C. 850.4; on liability of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

(2) Extraterritorial Services. Liability is imposed when a public entity provides fire protection or firefighting service outside its regular area. The entity providing the service is liable under any of the statutes imposing liability for the torts of its employees. The entity receiving the service is not liable for these torts, but it may agree on indemnification of the providing entity. (Govt.C. 850.6.)

(3) Conduct Before Fire Started. In Potter v. Oceanside (1981) 114 C.A.3d 564, 170 C.R. 753, the complaint alleged that plaintiff, operating a trenching machine, broke a natural gas line; he called the fire department, and the fire captain negligently told him to start the machine and move it from the area; he started the machine and escaping gas ignited, causing injuries to him. Held, the governmental immunity did not apply; there was no allegation that the fire captain was fighting a fire when the alleged negligent act occurred. (114 C.A.3d 566.)

(4) Rescue Unrelated to Firefighting. Heimberger v. Fairfield (1975) 44 C.A.3d 711, 117 C.R. 482, supra, §311, was distinguished in Lewis v. Mendocino Fire Protection Dist. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 345, 190 C.R. 883. The complaint alleged that plaintiff, while camping in a state park, was trapped by a fallen tree and that members of defendant's volunteer fire department, responding to the emergency, negligently tried to remove the tree, with the result that it twice fell back on plaintiff, causing further injuries. Held, the action was maintainable; although this rescue operation may be within the normal activities of a fire department, it was unrelated to combating fires and therefore not within the immunity. (142 C.A.3d 347, 348.)

 b. Injury Caused in Fighting Fire.
 3. Immunity Despite Wilful Misconduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 313

[§ 313] Immunity Despite Wilful Misconduct.

Firefighting activities subject to Govt.C. 850.4 include wilful misconduct as well as ordinary negligence. In San Francisco v. Superior Court (Lourdeaux) (1984) 160 C.A.3d 837, 207 C.R. 6, plaintiffs alleged that their home was located 300 feet from a fire station; on the evening of the fire, all members were away from the station at a social dinner; the fire was reported by persons who ran directly to that station instead of calling department headquarters; and, as a result, response to the fire was delayed and extensive damage to the property resulted. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) The trial judge, in overruling the demurrer, concluded that the allegations of intentional, wilful, or reckless conduct distinguished the case from those involving ordinary negligence of firefighters. This is incorrect. The Govt.C. 850.4 immunity for injury caused in fighting fires extends to wilful misconduct by the firefighters. (160 C.A.3d 841.)

(b) Even if Govt.C. 850.4 could be so narrowly construed as to apply to actions only after the firefighters reached the fire, the immunity of Govt.C. 850 (supra, §311) would apply, for then the acts of the firefighters must be viewed as a failure "to provide fire protection service." (160 C.A.3d 842.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

11. Fire Protection.

c. Fire on Public Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 314

[§ 314] Fire on Public Property.

In Vedder v. Imperial (1974) 36 C.A.3d 654, 111 C.R. 728, plaintiffs were lessees of business property at defendant city's airport. They alleged that defendant city negligently stored large amounts of gasoline and other highly combustible chemicals on the property, and that a fire, negligently started by other defendants, caused damage to plaintiffs' property and loss of profits. Held, a cause of action against the city was stated on the dangerous condition theory (supra, §266). The city permitted a dangerous condition to exist, the other defendants negligently started the fire, and the wrongful conduct of both proximately caused the injury. (36 C.A.3d 660.) The immunity defenses offered by the city under Govt.C. 850 and 850.2 (supra, §311), concerning failure to provide fire protection service, personnel, equipment, or facilities, were designed to protect a public entity from liability for its political decision to provide or not provide fire protection for the public generally. "They should not be applied to allow a public entity to escape responsibility for damages resulting from its failure to provide for protection on property which it owns and manages itself, particularly where it has permitted a dangerous fire condition to exist on the property. In that situation, lack of fire protection is a proper factor to be considered as contributing to the existence of a dangerous condition on the property." (36 C.A.3d 660, citing Quelvog v. Long Beach (1970) 6 C.A.3d 584, 86 C.R. 127, supra, §266.) (See Cairns v. Los Angeles (1997) 62 C.A.4th 330, 334, 72 C.R.2d 460 [closed road that could not be used for firefighting, although termed dangerous condition of property by plaintiff, was actually failure to provide either protective service or firefighting facilities within meaning of firefighting immunity statutes; distinguishing Vedder].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
12. Protection From Hazardous Substances.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 315

[§ 315] Protection From Hazardous Substances.

(1) Immunity Rule. Generally, neither public entities nor designated types of public employees are liable for injuries or property damage caused by action, within the scope of employment, to abate or attempt to abate "hazards reasonably believed to be an imminent peril to public health and safety caused by the discharge, spill, or presence of a hazardous substance." (Health & Saf.C. 25400(b)); see Govt.C. 821.5 [immunity of public entities and employees from liability for failing to restrict travel in tunnels by flammable liquid carriers]; Govt.C. 8655.5 [immunity from liability arising from use of community warning system in Contra Costa County to warn of hazardous materials release]; Health & Saf.C. 25402.1 [immunizing local agency from liability for hazardous substance release where site investigation and remedial action are undertaken under California Land Environmental Restoration and Reuse Act (Health & Saf.C. 25401 et seq.)].)

A "hazardous substance" is one that presents a threat to the public because of its "toxicity, radioactivity, flammability, or other characteristic dangerous to the public health or the environment." (Health & Saf.C. 25400(d)(1).) An "imminent peril" includes a peril that, if not mitigated, "threatens the public health or welfare, or the environment." (Health & Saf.C. 25400(d)(2).)

The legislative finding declares the intent, by providing a qualified immunity, to encourage public entities, county public health directors, public safety employees, members of radiation emergency screening teams, persons authorized by a public entity, and registered sanitation employees to abate these hazards. (Health & Saf.C. 25400(a).)

(2) Exception: Motor Vehicle Torts. Motor vehicle torts under Veh.C. 17000 et seq. (infra, §331 et seq.) are excepted from the immunity. (Health & Saf.C. 25400(b)); on liability of public employees respecting these activities, see infra, §363.)

(3) Qualification: Bad Faith or Gross Negligence. The immunity is not available if the employee performed "in bad faith or in a grossly negligent manner." (Health & Saf.C. 25400(b).) However, it is presumed that the employee acted in good faith and without gross negligence, and this presumption is one affecting the burden of proof. (Health & Saf.C. 25400(c)); on effect of presumption, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §57.) (See Washington v. Contra Costa (1995) 38 C.A.4th 890, 899, 45 C.R.2d 646 [county was immune from liability for failure to adequately regulate chemical company that released hazardous materials into atmosphere; plaintiffs' allegations that accident was result of company's abnormal activities and its failure to report situation to proper authorities precluded finding that county acted with gross negligence or in bad faith].)

(4) Qualification: County Public Health Directors or Registered Sanitarian Employees. Immunity for these persons exists only where, at the request of a public safety employee in charge of scene management, they give "emergency assistance or advice at the scene of the peril" concerning a "hazardous substance problem on public or private property." (Health & Saf.C. 25400(f).)

(5) Liability of Person Creating Hazard. "It is not the intent" of Health & Saf.C. 25400 "to impair any cause of action against the person, firm, or entity creating the spill, discharge, or presence of the hazardous material giving rise to the response" of the public entity or employee. (Health & Saf.C. 25400(e).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

13. Medical, Hospital, and Public Health Activities.

a. Liabilities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 316

[§ 316] Liabilities.

The provisions of the Tort Claims Act specifically directed to medical, hospital, and public health activities (Govt.C. 854 et seq.) recognize the following types of liability:

- (1) Motor vehicle torts. Motor vehicle torts under Veh.C. 17000 et seq. (infra, §331). (Govt.C. 854.8(b).)
- (2) Dangerous condition of property. Injury from the dangerous condition of public property (see Govt.C. 830 et seq., supra, §249 et seq.), except for injury to a patient of a mental institution. (Govt.C. 854.8(c).)
- (3) Failure to provide required equipment, personnel, or facilities. Failure to provide adequate or sufficient equipment, personnel, or facilities required by statute or regulation prescribing minimum standards, unless reasonable diligence is exercised in an attempt to comply. (Govt.C. 855(a), (b); see Baber v. Napa State Hosp. (1989) 209 C.A.3d 213, 220, 257 C.R. 55 [whether hospital failed to comply with prescribed minimum standards is question of fact that cannot be resolved by motion for nonsuit].)
- (4) Interference with right to judicial review. Intentional and unjustifiable interference, by a public employee, with the right of an inmate of a medical facility to obtain a judicial determination or review of the legality of the confinement. However, no cause of action accrues until it has first been determined that the confinement was illegal. (Govt.C. 855.2; see 82 Harv. L. Rev. 1771 [medical malpractice leading to excessive incarceration].)
- (5) Failure to admit patient where mandatory duty. Failure to admit a person to a medical facility where the entity is under a mandatory duty to do so. (See Govt.C. 856.4 and Legislative Committee Comment.)
- (6) Negligent examination or diagnosis for purpose of treatment. Negligence in an examination or diagnosis for the purpose of treatment, or negligent injury in the course of an examination. (See Govt.C. 855.6 and Legislative Committee Comment; Colome v. State Athletic Com. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1444, 1458, 55 C.R.2d 300 [purpose of physical conducted as condition to issuance of boxing license was for examination rather than treatment].) (On liability respecting medical, hospital, and public health activities generally, see C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §11.75 et seq.; on liabilities of public employees respecting medical, hospital, and public health activities, see infra, §364.)

For purposes of these provisions, the term "medical facility" includes a hospital, infirmary, clinic, dispensary, mental institution, or similar facility, unless the context otherwise requires. (Govt.C. 854.) A "mental institution" includes any state hospital for the mentally disordered or retarded, the California Rehabilitation Center, or a county psychiatric hospital. (Govt.C. 854.2.)

Litigation regarding medical, hospital, and public health activities often arises in situations outside the scope of immunities in these or other provisions of the Act. Where no immunity applies, a public entity or employee is liable, as in other cases, to the same extent as a private individual for negligent or intentional conduct that results in injury. (Govt.C. 815.2(a), supra, §237; Govt.C. 820(a), infra, §346.) Thus, liability may result from ordinary negligence in rendering these services. (See Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 436, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050 [psychiatric treatment].)

West's Key Number Digest, Municipal Corporations k.747(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Failure to provide required equipment, personnel, or facilities.

Requirement of minimum standards: In Lockhart v. Los Angeles (2007) 155 C.A.4th 289, 66 C.R.3d 62, the son of a patient who committed suicide in a county mental health hospital sued for wrongful death, alleging failure to provide adequate or sufficient equipment, facilities, or personnel in violation of Govt.C. 855. Held, summary judgment for hospital affirmed.

(a) Under Govt.C. 855, liability is limited to breaches of duties set forth in statutes and regulations of the State Department of Health Services, Social Services, Developmental Services, or Mental Health. Violations of other enactments are insufficient for liability. (155 C.A.4th 304.)

(b) Also, under the statute, the statute or regulation must be one "prescribing minimum standards." It must require something specific of the governmental entity and not simply set forth a goal, leaving it to the entity's discretion as to how to meet that goal. (155 C.A.4th 307.)

(c) The complaint fails to identify any statute or regulation, violation of which would support liability under the statute. Accordingly, no triable issue of fact exists. Plaintiff attempts to create liability under Govt.C. 855 for violations of county regulations, federal regulations, and standards of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations. Plaintiff cannot proceed on the basis of any of these authorities, as they are not statutes or regulations of the State Department of Health Services, Social Services, Developmental Services, or Mental Health. Plaintiff also attempts to create liability under several regulations of these departments. However, these regulations, which require "adequate" or "sufficient" equipment, personnel, or facilities, cannot provide a basis for liability because they do not prescribe "minimum standards," i.e., specific requirements, within the scope of the statute. (155 C.A.4th 310.)

b. Immunities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 317

[§ 317] Immunities.

Subject to the exceptions stated in the previous section, the following immunities apply under the provisions of the Tort Claims Act specifically directed to medical, hospital, and public health activities (Govt.C. 854 et seq.):

(1) Injury caused by mental patient. Injury caused by a patient of a mental institution. (Govt.C. 854.8(a)(1); see Moxon v. Kern (1965) 233 C.A.2d 393, 396, 43 C.R. 481 [immunity for death of mental patient killed by fellow patient]; on definition of "mental institution," see Govt.C. 854.2, supra, §316.) The term "patient" includes both inpatients and outpatients. (Legislative Committee Com. to 1970 Amendment to Govt.C. 854.8; see Guess v. California (1979) 96 C.A.3d 111, 120, 17 C.R. 618 [outpatient of county mental health center]; Buford v. California (1980) 104 C.A.3d 811, 826, 829, 164 C.R. 264 [person on leave of absence from mental institution].)

(2) Injury to mental patient. Injury to an inpatient of a mental institution. (Govt.C. 854.8(a)(2); see Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1965) 62 C.2d 839, 842, 44 C.R. 796, 402 P.2d 868 [Govt.C. 854.8(a)(2) reflects policy to provide immunity for diagnosing and treating mentally ill]; *Foy v. The term "inpatient" refers only to inmates and not outpatients. (Legislative Committee Com. to 1970 Amendment to Govt.C. 854.8.)

(3) Interference with right to judicial review. Interference with a medical facility inmate's right to a judicial determination or review of the legality of the confinement (unless intentional and unjustifiable and determined to have been illegal). (Govt.C. 855.2; see supra, §316.)

(4) Injury from decision respecting quarantine or disease control. Injury caused by a discretionary decision to institute or not to institute quarantine or other disease prevention or control measures, or by an act or omission in carrying out such a decision with due care. (Govt.C. 855.4; see Wright v. Los Angeles (2001) 93 C.A.4th 683, 687, 113 C.R.2d 352 [Govt.C. 855.4 provides exception to liability for dangerous condition of public property under Govt.C. 835

(5) Failure to make adequate examination. Injury caused by failure to make an adequate physical or mental examination to determine whether a hazard to health or safety exists. (Govt.C. 855.6; see supra, §316.)

(6) Diagnosing or failing to diagnose or prescribe for mental illness or addiction. Injury resulting from the diagnosis or failure to diagnose a mental illness or addiction, or failure to prescribe for it. (7) Confinement or release of mental patient or addict. Determination whether to confine a person for mental illness or addiction, the terms of confinement, or whether to parole, grant a leave of absence to, or release such a person. (Govt.C. 856(a).)

(8) Escape of persons confined. Injury caused by an escaping or escaped person confined for mental illness or addiction, or death or injury suffered by the escaper. (Govt.C. 856.2; see infra, §320.)

(9) Failure to admit patient absent mandatory duty. Failure to admit a person to a medical facility (unless a mandatory duty exists). (Govt.C. 856.4.)

(10) National influenza program. Injury caused by an act or omission of a participant in the National Influenza Program of 1976. (Govt.C. 856.6(a); see Heitz v. Sacramento (1978) 87 C.A.3d 754, 758, 151 C.R. 429 [statute is valid, and exclusive remedy for injuries is claim against the United States under 42 U.S.C., §247b]; 65 Cal. L. c. Failure To Conduct Physical or Mental Examination.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 318

[§ 318] Failure To Conduct Physical or Mental Examination.

Except for an examination for purposes of treatment, neither a public entity nor an employee acting in the scope of employment is liable for injury caused by failure to make a physical or mental examination, or an adequate one, to determine whether a person has a disease or condition constituting a hazard to the health or safety of that person or of others. (Govt.C. 855.6; see Lucas v. Long Beach (1976) 60 C.A.3d 341, 349, 131 C.R. 470 [failure to examine arrested juvenile exhibiting symptoms of intoxication who subsequently committed suicide in cell; immunity applied]; Colome v. State Athletic Com. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1444, 1458, 55 C.R.2d 300 [doctor examining boxer to determine fitness for purpose of licensure was immune under Govt.C. 855.6]; Creason v. Department of Health Services (1998) 18 C.4th 623, 635, 76 C.R.2d 489, 957 P.2d 1323 [Govt.C. 855.6 immunity applied to screening test given to all infants to determine whether they had hypothyroidism, because test was not one given for "treatment" within exception to that immunity]; on immunity of public employee for injury from failure to make medical or mental examination, see infra, §365.)

In Smith v. Kern (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1826, 25 C.R.2d 716, plaintiff police officer, while acting in the line of duty, became exposed to the blood of D, who claimed to have AIDS. Plaintiff requested defendant county to conduct an AIDS blood test on D, but defendant mistakenly tested for hepatitis instead. By the time this mistake had been discovered, D had been released and the remainder of his blood sample destroyed. In plaintiff's action for negligence, the main issue was whether defendant was immune under Govt.C. 855.6. Held, defendant was not immune; because the blood test was for the purpose of treatment, Govt.C. 855.6 was inapplicable.

(a) Govt.C. 855.6 grants immunity for injury caused by the failure to make a physical or mental examination, "[e]xcept for an examination or diagnosis for the purpose of treatment." Hence, the issue is whether the AIDS test of D's blood was an examination "for the purpose of treatment." (20 C.A.4th 1833.)

(b) The resolution of this issue is guided by the inapplicability of Govt.C. 855.6 immunity in related situations. For example, it is clear that Govt.C. 855.6 would not provide immunity if defendant's laboratory had undertaken to test plaintiff's blood for AIDS in order to assist in the diagnosis of whether he had contracted the disease. And in various circumstances, a medical laboratory might test an animal or a plant to aid in the examination or diagnosis of a person, such as a test on an animal to determine whether it had rabies. (20 C.A.4th 1834.)

(c) Hence, "[w]e conclude the source of the material examined is not determinative of the applicability of [Govt.C. 855.6]. Rather, the question is whether the public employee's actions were taken to facilitate the delivery of medical diagnosis or care to the individual who is injured by the employee's actions." (20 C.A.4th 1835.) Here, the facts alleged permit a reasonable inference that defendant's laboratory undertook to perform the test on D's blood for the purpose of assisting plaintiff's physician in examining or diagnosing his exposure to AIDS. (20 C.A.4th 1835.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

13. Medical, Hospital, and Public Health Activities.

d. Confinement or Release of Mental Patient or Addict.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 319

[§ 319] Confinement or Release of Mental Patient or Addict.

(1) Immunity for Decisions To Confine or Release. Neither a public entity nor a public employee acting within the scope of employment is liable for injury resulting from a determination, in accordance with a statute or other regulation, of any of the following:

(a) Whether to confine a person for mental illness or addiction. (Govt.C. 856(a)(1).)

(b) The terms and conditions of confinement. (Govt.C. 856(a)(2).)

(c) Whether to parole or release or grant a leave of absence to the person confined. (Govt.C. 856(a)(3); see 38 A.L.R.3d 699 [liability of one releasing institutionalized mental patient for harm patient causes].) (On immunity of public employee for confinement or release of mental patient or addict, see infra, §365.)

In Hernandez v. California (1970) 11 C.A.3d 895, 90 C.R. 205, an inmate of a state mental hospital was released from confinement, and 2 months later, killed his mother. The heirs of decedent sued the state on the theory that employees of the hospital had negligently failed to keep proper records required by Welf.C. 7251, thereby depriving the releasing authority of full information, resulting in the inmate's release in a dangerous condition. Held, Govt.C. 856(a)(3) gives absolute immunity to the state and its employees for injuries from release of a mental patient. Plaintiffs' attempted distinction between those who determine to release and those who negligently maintain records was rejected. The immunity "extends to all those involved in the process leading to release and its protection is not restricted to the custodial officer who makes the final determination to release." (11 C.A.3d 899.) The statutes indicate a policy of encouraging free release from confinement, unfettered by the possibility of charges of negligence, which would have an inhibiting effect on the speed and frequency of release. (11 C.A.3d 900.)

(2) Other Immunities or Defenses. Other immunities or defenses have been held to bar recovery for injuries resulting from release of a mental patient, either in the absence of or in conjunction with immunity under Govt.C. 856(a).

In McDowell v. Alameda (1979) 88 C.A.3d 321, 151 C.R. 779, defendant public hospital sent a mental patient to defendant private hospital in a taxicab. He escaped in some manner, and 2 days later, shot and killed decedent. In a wrongful death action, judgment for defendants on the pleadings was affirmed.

(a) Govt.C. 856(a)(1) provides an absolute immunity only for injuries resulting from the determination whether to confine. Govt.C. 856(c) (infra, §364) makes it clear that there is no immunity for negligent failure to carry out the determination. (85 C.A.3d 326.)

(b) However, there was no negligence in using a taxicab rather than an ambulance in transporting the patient; defendant public hospital could have simply released him. (85 C.A.3d 327.)

In Katona v. Los Angeles (1985) 172 C.A.3d 53, 218 C.R. 19, plaintiffs' daughter killed herself approximately 6 months after being released from defendant county's mental health facility, where she had been treated on numerous occasions for various mental illnesses, including suicidal ideation. Defendant knew that decedent had applied for the purchase of a handgun and had completed its purchase after her release. In this wrongful death action, defendant received judgment on demurrer. Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs wisely eschew any claim that defendant's liability rests on the release of decedent from custody or the failure to otherwise directly control defendant's conduct. Govt.C. 856(a)(3) grants a public entity an immunity for injury resulting from a determination to release a mental patient. (172 C.A.3d 59.)

(b) Decedent was unconditionally released, and defendant had no contact with her or her parents during the 6 weeks between her release and death; hence, there was no basis for imposing a duty on defendant to supervise decedent in an attempt to prevent her suicide. (172 C.A.3d 59.) Vistica v. Presbyterian Hosp. & Med. Center of San Francisco (1967) 67 C.2d 465, 62 C.R. 577, 432 P.2d 193, and Meier v. Ross General Hosp. (1968) 69 C.2d 420, 71 C.R. 903, 445 P.2d 519, holding that a hospital has a duty to protect its patients and that an action will lie where a confined patient commits suicide while undergoing psychiatric treatment, are not applicable here. (172 C.A.3d 59.)

(c) Neither Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050, where a mental patient threatened a specific person, nor Johnson v. Los Angeles (1983) 143 C.A.3d 298, 191 C.R. 704, supra, §301, where defendant promised decedent's wife that he would be cared for, is authority for imposing a duty on defendant to warn a law enforcement agency or the gun store that decedent was suicidal. (172 C.A.3d 60.) (On psychotherapist's duty to warn generally, see infra, §§1045, 1050, 1051.)

In Johnson v. Ventura (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1400, 35 C.R.2d 150, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against a city and a county, after a patient left a county hospital and stabbed plaintiffs' decedent to death. The patient had been admitted to the hospital for self-inflicted stab wounds, and a plan was adopted to admit him to the county mental health department after he received treatment for his wounds. While still being treated, the patient walked out of the hospital. City police officers located him and discovered that he had broken into homes, but determined that he was not a danger to himself or others and allowed him to walk back to the hospital without notifying the hospital. The patient then entered decedent's home and stabbed her. The trial judge, finding that the governmental immunity statutes precluded recovery, sustained defendants' demurrers and dismissed the action. Held, affirmed.

(a) City not liable. The action against the city was barred for the following reasons:

(1) The city owed the decedent no special duty, because the city provided a service to the county, not the decedent. (29 C.A.4th 1406.)

(2) There was no indication that the police had induced decedent's reliance on a promise, express or implied, that they would provide her with protection; thus, no special relationship existed between the city and decedent. And, the conduct of the police did not increase the risk of harm to decedent. (29 C.A.4th 1406.)

(3) Further, the action against the city was barred by Govt.C. 815 (immunity of governmental entity from liability unless otherwise provided by statute; see supra, §223); Govt.C. 820.2 (immunity of public employee for discretionary acts; see infra, §351); and Welf.C. 5154 (immunity of peace officer for release of mental patient). (29 C.A.4th 1406.)

(4) Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif., supra, holding that police officers are immune from liability for releasing a mental patient after a brief confinement, barred any action against the police officers. (29 C.A.4th 1407.)

(b) County not liable. The action against the county was barred for the following reasons:

(1) Under Tarasoff, the scope of the immunity under Govt.C. 856 extends not only to the final determination to confine or not to confine the person for mental illness, but to all determinations involved in the process of commitment. (29 C.A.4th 1407.)

(2) Under Buenavista v. San Francisco (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1168, 255 C.R. 329, lacking a threat to a specific individual, there is no liability for negligent failure to warn; thus, the county had no duty to warn the general public. (29 C.A.4th 1408.)

(3) Immunity under Govt.C. 856.2 (infra, §320) was applicable even though the plan to confine and treat the patient never materialized. For purposes of the statute, the term "confined" applies to persons voluntarily or temporarily admitted for treatment. (29 C.A.4th 1408.)

(4) The county was not liable under Govt.C. 856(c) (public employee liable for negligence in determinations relating to confinement of person for mental illness, infra, §364). The statute applies only to public employees, not public entities. (29 C.A.4th 1409.)

(5) The county was not negligent in carrying out the plan to confine the patient. The decision to commit him at a later date was one of the determinations involved in the process of commitment. (29 C.A.4th 1409.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Immunity for Decisions To Confine or Release. See Coburn v. Sievert (2005) 133 C.A.4th 1483, 1504, 35 C.R.3d 596 [Welf.C. 5154, providing immunity to treating psychiatrist and others for action by person released early from involuntary commitment under Lanterman-Petris-Short Act, imposes subjective "honest-in-fact" standard of belief on psychiatrist that release is proper, not objective standard of reasonableness].

e. Escape of Mental Patient or Addict.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 320

[§ 320] Escape of Mental Patient or Addict.

Public entities and employees are not liable for either of the following:

(1) Injury caused by an escaping or escaped person confined for mental illness or addiction. (Govt.C. 856.2(a)(1).)

(2) Injury or death suffered by the escaper. (Govt.C. 856.2(a)(2).) (See Johnson v. Ventura (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1400, 35 C.R.2d 150, supra, §319 [immunity applied even though patient escaped before actually admitted to county mental facility]; on immunity of public employees for escape of mental patient or addict, see infra, §365.)

Use of the word "confined" in Govt.C. 856.2 makes it clear that the immunity extends to a mental patient who is voluntarily confined. (Forde v. Los Angeles (1976) 64 C.A.3d 477, 479, 134 C.R. 549 [action by patient who escaped and jumped off bridge; summary judgment for county affirmed].)

In Los Angeles County-U.S.C. Med. Center v. Superior Court (1984) 155 C.A.3d 454, 202 C.R. 223, plaintiff, with a history of mental illness, was brought to the county mental health services evaluation unit. The doctor completed an application for a 72-hour detention, and, while still on the hold, plaintiff was transferred to the county medical center for tests which required equipment not at the unit. Before the equipment could be procured, plaintiff escaped and jumped from a freeway overpass. The complaint was drafted on the theory that plaintiff, without being released from confinement, was negligently placed "in an unrestrained environment." Held, defendant medical center was entitled to summary judgment.

(a) Detention on a 72-hour hold constitutes "confinement" within the meaning of Govt.C. 856.2, for use of the word "confined" in lieu of "committed" enlarged the scope of the immunity to include a person temporarily detained. (158 C.A.3d 460, citing Forde.)

(b) Confinement does not invariably require holding in custody; C.C.P. 854.5 defines "confine" in the disjunctive ("admit, commit, place, detain or hold in custody"). Hence, the contention that plaintiff was not confined when left unattended at the hospital is unsound. (155 C.A.3d 462.)

(c) Plaintiff's contention that defendant failed to adequately confine a mental patient confuses the issue of negligence with the immunity issue. As pointed out in Forde, confinement turns on the person's status as a patient "confined" for mental illness, not on whether physical restraints are imposed. (155 C.A.3d 462, 463.)

(d) The argument that Govt.C. 856.2 gives immunity only where the person escapes from a licensed health care facility is likewise unsound. Plaintiff was not confined in an unauthorized facility. The mere fact that at the precise moment she escaped she was in a location within the county medical center that housed medical testing equipment and was not 'in custody' in the psychiatric ward at the huge and complex county facility does not a fortiori rule out escape immunity. (155 C.A.3d 463.) (See Buenavista v. San Francisco (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1168, 1173, 255 C.R. 329 [mental patient was "confined," even though left unrestrained and unattended in waiting area; following Los Angeles County-U.S.C. Med. Center v. Superior Court].)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

14. School Operations.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 321

[§ 321] In General.

Under the old Educational Code (former Educ.C. 903), school authorities had a duty to supervise the conduct of children on school grounds. And the standard of care was the same as that required in performance of other duties: i.e., the care that a person of ordinary prudence, charged with comparable duties, would exercise under the same circumstances. (See Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 594, 600, 110 P.2d 1044; Pirkle v. Oakdale Union Grammar School Dist. (1953) 40 C.2d 207, 210, 253 P.2d 1.)

Under the Tort Claims Act, a public entity is liable for an act or omission of an employee in the scope of employment if that act or omission would have given rise to an action against that employee. (Govt.C. 815.2(a), supra, §237; on liability of public employees for torts, see infra, §345 et seq.) This basic provision carries over the respondeat superior liability previously imposed on school districts, making it applicable to all public entities. Hence, the decisions applying the Educational Code provision are still good law: "The pattern of vicarious liability for employees' negligence is essentially identical under both statutes. We have found no evidence indicating an intention on the part of the Legislature to alter the duty to provide supervision of students while on school grounds, the standard of care required of those undertaking to provide supervision, or the amount of evidence necessary to support a finding of negligence." (Dailey v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 741, 747, footnote 3, 87 C.R. 376, 470 P.2d 360, infra, §322; see Biggers v. Sacramento City Unified School Dist. (1972) 25 C.A.3d 269, 274, 101 C.R. 706 [referring to decisions prior to Act]; Castro v. Los Angeles Bd. of Education (1976) 54 C.A.3d 232, 235, 126 C.R. 537 [same].)

Several statutes outside the Tort Claims Act likewise affect the liability of school districts for their employees' torts. (See Educ.C. 35330, infra, §323; Educ.C. 39226 [limitation on liability of school district board members for buildings not constructed according to statutory requirements]; Educ.C. 44808, infra, §323; Educ.C. 81177 [limitation on liability of community college board members for buildings not constructed according to statutory requirements]; Educ.C. 87706, infra, §323.)

With respect to the conduct of school employees, for which the district may be vicariously liable, public school teachers are required to hold pupils "to a strict account for their conduct on the way to and from school, on the playgrounds, or during recess." (Educ.C. 44807; see Torsiello v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1987) 197 C.A.3d 41, 45, 242 C.R. 752 [in absence of evidence of improper conduct, Educ.C. 44807 imposes no general duty to investigate students' activities while going to and from school].)

B. Public Entities.

14. School Operations.

b. Activities on School Grounds.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 322

[§ 322] Activities on School Grounds.

Actions against school districts often arise from activities on school grounds. (See Lucas v. Fresno Unified School Dist. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 866, 872, 18 C.R.2d 79 [student injured during recess by thrown rock did not, as matter of law, assume risk that school authorities would breach duty under Educ.C. 44807 (supra, §321) to provide supervision during recess]; Iverson v. Muroc Unified School Dist. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 218, 227, 38 C.R.2d 35 [school district was not immune from liability for injuries sustained by student in soccer match during physical education class on school grounds]; Skinner v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1995) 37 C.A.4th 31, 37, 43 C.R.2d 384 [record did not support jury's finding on causation in negligence action against school district by student injured in attack by another student during volleyball game in physical education class]; Ochoa v. California State University (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1300, 1305, 85 C.R.2d 768 [institutions of higher learning have no duty to their adult students to protect them against criminal acts of third persons; student participating in intramural soccer game was punched by student on opposing team]; Thompson v. Sacramento City Unified School Dist. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1352, 1361, 132 C.R.2d 748 [school district was not liable for assault by student who had been readmitted after being suspended, because decision to readmit was discretionary]; 41 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1101 [school districts' liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983 for failure to provide safe learning environment]; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §479 et seq.; 1 A.L.R.4th 1099 [liability of university, college or other school for failure to protect student from crime]; 66 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability for accidents occurring in school physical education classes].)

In Dailey v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 741, 87 C.R. 376, 470 P.2d 360, decedent, a 16-year-old high school student, went to the boys' gymnasium during the lunch hour. He and a friend then began to "slap box" before a group of 30 watchers. After some 5 to 10 minutes, decedent fell backwards, fractured his skull on the asphalt paving, and died. Plaintiffs, his parents, sued the school district and two teachers for wrongful death. They introduced evidence that slap boxing was not permitted and would have been stopped by a teacher, but that defendant head of the physical education department and defendant physical education instructor were not observing the students in the lunch area at the time of the accident; and that although three administrative employees and two teachers had been assigned to supervise students during the lunch period, the gymnasium area was the specific responsibility of the physical education department. The trial judge granted a directed verdict for defendants. Held, reversed.

(a) Duty to supervise. Defendants owed a duty to maintain supervision during recess and lunch periods, to maintain discipline, and to protect students against harm from aggressive, reckless, or intentional misconduct, including boisterous or dangerous play. Although high school pupils may be more capable of self-control than grammar school children, they are not adults and require supervision. (2 C.3d 748.) "Recognizing that a principal task of supervisors is to anticipate and curb rash student behavior, our courts have often held that a failure to prevent injuries caused by the intentional or reckless conduct of the victim or a fellow student may constitute negligence." (2 C.3d 748.)

(b) Negligent supervision. The evidence showed that (1) defendant department head "had failed to develop a comprehensive schedule of supervising assignments and had neglected to instruct his subordinates as to what was expected of them while they were supervising"; and (2) defendant instructor, ostensibly on duty, remained in his office doing other things and not observing the students outside. This was sufficient for a jury to reach a verdict of negligence. (2 C.3d 750.)

(c) Causation. Actual cause was clearly established. Slap boxing was prohibited, and supervision would have prevented the accident. (2 C.3d 750, footnote 7.) And neither the involvement of a third party nor the victim's own wrongful act were superseding causes. The testimony showed that horseplay and roughhousing are normal activities of high school boys, and the events that occurred "are precisely what one would expect from unsupervised adolescents." (2 C.3d 751.) The exact injuries need not be foreseeable; it is enough that injuries of the same general type would be likely to occur. (2 C.3d 751.)

In Perna v. Conejo Valley Unified School Dist. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 292, 192 C.R. 10, the complaint alleged that plaintiff sisters, aged 12 and 14, were kept after school to help the teacher grade papers, and that when they left, the crossing guard was no longer on duty and they were struck by a vehicle at an intersection. Held, a cause of action was stated, under the theory of Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City School Dist. (1978) 22 C.3d 508, 150 C.R. 1, 585 P.2d 851, infra, §327. There would have been no liability if the children had been allowed to leave the school on time; but here, as in Hoyem, if the school district failed to properly supervise a student on the school premises, it cannot automatically escape liability simply because the injury occurred off the premises. (143 C.A.3d 295, 296.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 323

[§ 323] Activities Outside School Grounds.

The distinct problem of the duty to supervise pupils not on school property is the subject of several sections in the Education Code. Under Educ.C. 44808 (elementary and secondary schools) and Educ.C. 87706 (community colleges), the district is not liable for pupils' conduct or safety outside school property unless (1) school authorities have "undertaken" either to provide transportation to and from school or to sponsor a school activity off school premises, or (2) responsibility or liability has been "otherwise specifically assumed," and the liability in the event of a "specific undertaking" is imposed "only while such pupil is or should be under the immediate and direct supervision of an employee of such district or board." Under Educ.C. 35330, however, persons making a "field trip or excursion" waive all claims against the district or state. (See Torsiello v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1987) 197 C.A.3d 41, 47, 242 C.R. 752 [teacher's stopping his van "out of curiosity" to question students about their activity was not specific undertaking under Educ.C. 44808]; Hoff v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1998) 19 C.4th 925, 80 C.R.2d 811, 968 P.2d 522, infra, §328 [undertaking responsibility to supervise main school parking lot did not assume responsibility for all student driving at school]; Myricks v. Lynwood Unified School Dist. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 231, 238, 87 C.R.2d 734 [where participation in summer basketball league was neither required nor for credit, Educ.C. 44808 did not render school district liable for injuries sustained by players while traveling to league game, and fact that district paid its employees for their travel expenses did not constitute sufficient ratification to make district liable; to extent trip was voluntary excursion, immunity of Educ.C. 35330 applied]; Casterson v. Superior Court (2002) 101 C.A.4th 177, 186, 123 C.R.2d 637 [field trip immunity of Educ.C. 35330 applies to employees of school districts, even though statute mentions only school districts and State of California; if immunity did not extend to employees, school districts and state would become vicariously liable for torts of their employees, in contravention of legislative policy]; Ramirez v. Long Beach Unified School Dist. (2002) 105 C.A.4th 182, 188, 129 C.R.2d 128 [Educ.C. 44808 immunity applied to death of student while attending camp not affiliated with defendant school district, even though defendant strongly recommended camp and actively recruited candidates for it]; Stockinger v. Feather River Community College (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1014, 1028, 4 C.R.3d 385 [requirement in Educ.C. 87706 that school-sponsored activity be under direct supervision of school district employee refers to supervision during excursion itself, not to classroom supervision; cases where liability for off-campus injuries was based on on-campus negligence involved elementary or high school students, not college students]; Guerrero v. South Bay Union School Dist. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 264, 268, 7 C.R.3d 509 [under Educ.C. 44808, school district was immune from liability for injuries suffered by elementary school student after school when struck by car on adjacent street, absent specific undertaking to supervise students until they were picked up by parents or otherwise reached place of safety from traffic]; 68 A.L.R.5th 519 [school's liability for injury sustained on school field trip]; 72 A.L.R.5th 469 [school's liability for injury sustained walking to or from school].)

In Castro v. Los Angeles Bd. of Education (1976) 54 C.A.3d 232, 126 C.R. 537, an action for wrongful death of a high school student, the death occurred while he was participating in ROTC summer training under the supervision of employees of defendant board of education. Held, the complaint stated a cause of action.

(a) Govt.C. 815.2, the general statute imposing liability on a public entity for torts of its employees, applies to school districts. (54 C.A.3d 235; see supra, §321.) However, Educ.C. 44808 limits liability to school grounds except where there is "a specific undertaking." (54 C.A.3d 235.) Educ.C. 35330 further limits liability by providing that persons making a "field trip or excursion" waive all claims against the district or state. (54 C.A.3d 236.) A field trip is "a visit made by students and usually a teacher for purposes of first hand observation (as to a factory, farm, clinic, museum)." An excursion is "a journey chiefly for recreation." (54 C.A.3d 236, footnote 1.) The specific immunity of Educ.C. 35330 prevails over the general liability provided in Educ.C. 44808 when, but only when, there is a field trip or excursion. (54 C.A.3d 236.)

(b) "The Legislature, by these sections, recognized that not all educational facilities can be provided within the confines of each school's property. To accomplish a school's educational aims, it therefore is necessary for students to accomplish portions of their study off the school's property. Students who are off of the school's property for required school purposes are entitled to the same safeguards as those who are on school property, within supervisory limits. Students who participate in nonrequired trips or excursions, though possibly in furtherance of their education but not as required attendance, are effectively on-their-own; the voluntary nature of the event absolves the district of liability." (54 C.A.3d 236.) Thus, plaintiffs should be permitted to prove that the ROTC "summer camp, bivouac and summer training" was a school-sponsored activity and part of the curriculum. (54 C.A.3d 236, 237.) (See Wolfe v. Dublin Unified School Dist. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 126, 129, 65 C.R.2d 280 [citing Castro and holding that specific immunity of Educ.C. 35330 prevailed with respect to pupil who was injured in a traffic accident while returning home from voluntary field trip].)

In Farley v. El Tejon Unified School Dist. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 371, 274 C.R. 780, decedent, a 7-year-old schoolboy, was riding defendant's school bus. The driver stopped the bus at a bus stop where children disembarked and then had to cross the road. The driver continued on his way. Decedent was struck and killed by a car while crossing the road. In this wrongful death action, plaintiff parents alleged that defendant acted in violation of its special undertaking under Educ.C. 44808. The trial judge concluded that no duty of care had been assumed, and granted summary judgment. Held, reversed. The evidence presented established that defendant, through its bus driver employees, its director of transportation, and the principal of the school, was aware prior to the accident that children being discharged from the school bus at the bus stop customarily crossed the road to meet family members and be transported the rest of the way to their homes. That defendant was aware that this practice was a hazard to the children's safety is demonstrated by the principal's letter to parents and the school bus driver's instructions to the children not to cross the road until the school bus was out of sight. Having undertaken to provide transportation to its pupils to and from the school premises, respondent had an obligation to supervise the children during that transportation and a duty to provide a reasonably safe system. Whether the exercise of reasonable care under the circumstances of this case required defendant to supervise the children's safe crossing of the road here is a question to be resolved by the trier of fact. (225 C.A.3d 380.)

In Barnhart v. Cabrillo Community College (1999) 76 C.A.4th 818, 90 C.R.2d 709, plaintiffs, members of a community college soccer team, sued the college and their coach for injuries suffered in an automobile accident when the coach, a college employee, was driving plaintiffs from the college to a soccer game in a van owned by the college. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. Although Educ.C. 87706 states a general rule of a community college district's vicarious liability in this situation, an administrative regulation (5 Cal. Code Reg. §55450) overrides this rule by immunizing the district from liability for accidents occurring during field trips or excursions.

(a) Cal. Const., Art. IX, §14, authorizes the Legislature to allow the governing board of a school district to act in any manner that is not in conflict with the purposes for which school districts are established. A school district may act under this general authority without specific statutory authorization. In addition, the Legislature has directed community colleges to adopt regulations incorporating the text of repealed statutes (Stats. 1990, Chap. 1372, §708). The regulation in question is identical to former Educ.C. 72640. From this background, it is clear that this regulation is no ordinary regulation, but instead possesses equal dignity with Educ.C. 87706. (76 C.A.4th 824.)

(b) As support for their argument that immunity attaches where the activity is required rather than voluntary, defendants rely on Wolfe and Castro, supra. However, Wolfe discussed the voluntary participation issue only as part of its discourse on Castro, and under that case, the test is not whether the student's participation is voluntary or not, but whether the off-premises activity is part of the school curriculum. Also, neither the statute nor the regulation involved here mentions the voluntary-required dichotomy. Thus, the disputed facts about the voluntary or involuntary nature of plaintiffs' participation on the soccer team are immaterial. (76 C.A.4th 825.)

(c) Educ.C. 87706 applies to a "school-sponsored activity" and the regulation to a "field trip or excursion." Strictly speaking, plaintiffs' trip does not appear to be a "field trip or excursion," as that term was defined in Castro. Nevertheless, the regulation expressly states that field trips or excursions include trips conducted in connection with school-related athletic activities. Plaintiffs were thus on a field trip or excursion, and the specific regulation takes precedence over the general statute. (76 C.A.4th 821, 827.)

Lakeside Inn* (2006) 140 C.A.4th 863, 870, 44 C.R.3d 827 [under Educ.C. 44808, school district was immune from liability for death of student killed by drunk driver while crossing street on way to school bus stop, occurring off campus and outside supervision of district, notwithstanding that district had designated school bus stop at allegedly dangerous intersection]; Patterson v. Oakland (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1340, 1348, 1358, 75 C.R.3d 168 [school districts are not responsible for safety of students outside school property absent specific undertaking; school district did not assume liability for safety of children crossing street near school by preparing environmental impact report analyzing traffic safety, by adopting resolution finding that site selection safety standards were met, or by telling parents that it would take steps to make it safe for children to walk to school]. Field trip or excursion: As amended in 2007, Educ.C. 35330 also provides for waiver of claims against charter schools.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 324

[§ 324] Extracurricular Activities.

The duty of a school district to exercise reasonable care in supervising students and its vicarious liability under Govt.C. 815.2(a) (supra, §237) for the negligence of school personnel do not end when classes are dismissed for the day. Extracurricular activities are generally recognized as a fundamental ingredient of the educational process. School-sponsored activities, such as sports, though denominated "extracurricular," nevertheless form an integral and vital part of the educational program. (Acosta v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1995) 31 C.A.4th 471, 477, 37 C.R.2d 171 [school district was liable for injuries suffered by student gymnast during after-school off-season practice session supervised by gymnastics coach]; see 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 213 [university's liability for actions of student organizations]; 25 A.L.R.5th 784 [liability for injury to student resulting from cheerleader activities]; 68 A.L.R.5th 663 [liability for accidents occurring during school athletic events].)

School authorities' duty to supervise under Educ.C. 44807 (supra, §321) does not include the duty to decrease risks that a student assumes under the primary assumption of risk doctrine (infra, §1339 et seq.) in pursuing extracurricular activities. This would include the risk of injury from a gymnastic stunt in cheerleader practice. (Aaris v. Las Virgenes Unified School Dist. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1112, 1118, 75 C.R.2d 801.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

14. School Operations.

e. Activities Unrelated to School Function or Program.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 325

[§ 325] Activities Unrelated to School Function or Program.

School districts have generally not been found liable for injuries sustained in activities unrelated to school. (See 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §479 et seq.; 17 A.L.R.5th 179 [school's liability for suicide of student]; 85 A.L.R.5th 301 [school's liability for accident involving motor vehicle operated by student].)

In Bartell v. Palos Verdes Peninsula School Dist. (1978) 83 C.A.3d 492, 147 C.R. 898, for example, plaintiffs alleged that their 12-year-old son and a companion gained access to a school playground after school hours, either through an unlocked gate or a hole in the fence, and that the son suffered fatal injuries in a fall playing a game in which he was slung from the end of a rope while riding a skateboard. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) No dangerous condition. The first theory of the complaint was that the playground was known to be used for the dangerous skateboard game, and hence was maintained in a dangerous condition (see supra, §266). (83 C.A.3d 497, 498.) But the alleged defects (in the gate or fence) merely allowed access to the area, and the injury was not a result of any dangerous condition of the property. (83 C.A.3d 492.)

(b) No negligent failure to supervise. The broad language of Dailey v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 741, 87 C.R. 376, 470 P.2d 360, supra, §322, should be limited to school-related or encouraged activities taking place during school hours. "To require virtual round-the-clock supervision or prison-tight security for school premises" would impose an unwarranted financial burden on school districts. "We find no special circumstances here which would impose a general duty on the school district to supervise and control the conduct of persons on its premises apart from school-related activities and functions which require persons to be on school grounds." (83 C.A.3d 500.)

Several cases have involved misuse of alcohol by students. (See Baldwin v. Zoradi (1981) 123 C.A.3d 275, 291, 292, 176 C.R. 809 [university trustees and dormitory advisors who allegedly failed to prevent college students in dormitories from consuming liquor in violation of regulations, leading to speed contest and automobile collision, were not liable for negligent failure to supervise; citing Bartell]; Crow v. California (1990) 222 C.A.3d 192, 209, 271 C.R. 349 [following Baldwin]; 62 A.L.R.4th 81 [liability of college or university for student injury resulting from own or fellow student's intoxication].)

In Tanja H. v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1991) 228 C.A.3d 434, 278 C.R. 918, plaintiff was a first year university student, living in a dormitory on the campus. Plaintiff and other students constantly violated the regulations forbidding use of alcohol by minors, and after one party plaintiff was raped and sexually assaulted by fellow students. She brought this action against the students, the university, and university officials. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. Universities are not generally liable for "the sometimes disastrous consequences which result from combining young students, alcohol, and dangerous or violent impulses." (228 C.A.3d 437, discussing Baldwin and Crow.) A university as operator of a dormitory "is more akin to an innkeeper, who does not have a duty to search guests for contraband, separate them from each other, or monitor their private social activities." (228 C.A.3d 438.) As campuses have moved away from their former role as semimonastic environments subject to intensive regulation of student lives by college authorities, they have become microcosms of society; and unfortunately, sexually degrading conduct or violence are all too common within society at large. "College administrators have a moral duty to help educate students in this respect, but they do not have a legal duty to respond in damages for student crimes." (228 C.A.3d 438.)

In Brownell v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 787, 5 C.R.2d 756, plaintiff high school student sued defendant school district for negligent supervision after he was shot by gang members, who mistakenly thought that he was a member of a rival gang. The shooting took place on a public street adjacent to school property and occurred approximately 5 minutes after school hours while plaintiff was waiting in front of the school for some friends with whom he was going to walk to a bus stop. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed.

(a) A school district may be liable for injuries suffered by a student off school premises and after school hours if the injury resulted from the school's negligence while the student was on school premises (4 C.A.4th 795, citing Perna v. Conejo Valley Unified School Dist. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 292, 192 C.R. 10, supra, §322, and Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City School Dist. (1978) 22 C.3d 508, 150 C.R. 1, 585 P.2d 851, infra, §327.) However, the district need only exercise reasonable care in supervising the conduct of its students; it is not an insurer of the students' safety. (4 C.A.4th 796.) Here, defendant satisfied this standard, considering that it had no advance warning of potential gang violence pertaining to the incident involving plaintiff, and it had always taken general precautions to minimize gang-related problems, e.g., prohibiting wearing gang colors and confiscating weapons. (4 C.A.4th 796.)

(b) Although the school was located in a gang neighborhood and attended by rival gangs, and trouble had occurred on occasion, it does not follow that defendant had a duty to scout the neighborhood for gang members off the campus and to wait until it was "all clear" before releasing students for the day. Given the suddenness of the attack on plaintiff and the normalcy of having gang members in the vicinity of the school, imposing a duty of visual precaution would be unwarranted and impractical. Under these circumstances, reasonable school personnel should not be required to engage in visual precaution absent either "(1) any specific indication of a real and imminent gang-related threat at the particular time and place of the shooting, or (2) prior incidents reflecting not necessarily this identical type of assault but that 'the possibility of this type of harm was foreseeable.' " (4 C.A.4th 797, quoting Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 503, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, supra, §39.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 326

[§ 326] Use of Facilities by Other Organizations.

School districts are required to authorize the use of school facilities or grounds by nonprofit organizations that promote youth and school activities, when an alternative location is not available. (Educ.C. 38134(a); see Pacific L. J. 636.) With respect to liability arising from these activities, Educ.C. 38134(i) sets forth the following rules:

(1) The school district is liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of the district in the ownership and maintenance of the facilities or grounds.

(2) A group using the facilities or grounds is liable for negligence of that group during the use.

(3) The district and the group must each bear the cost of insuring against its respective risks and of defending itself against claims arising from those risks.

(4) Nothing in this provision may be construed to limit or affect a school district's immunity or liability for injuries caused by a dangerous condition (see supra, §249 et seq.).

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.
14. School Operations.
g. Injury to Truant.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 327

[§ 327] Injury to Truant.

Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City School Dist. (1978) 22 C.3d 508, 150 C.R. 1, 585 P.2d 851, held that liability could be imposed on a school district where negligent supervision of students on school premises permitted a truant to leave and be exposed to injury off the premises. The complaint alleged that plaintiff, a 10-year-old boy, attended summer school. On the day of the accident, he came to school, but left before the end of scheduled classes. He was struck by a motorcyclist four blocks from the school yard and suffered serious injuries. Held, a cause of action was stated against the school district.

(a) Duty to supervise students on school premises. The complaint alleged that defendant failed to exercise ordinary care in supervising him while he was on the premises, and this brought the pleading within the rule of Dailey v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 741, 87 C.R. 376, 470 P.2d 360, supra, §322. The arguments against application of the Dailey holding are not persuasive:

(1) The administrative regulation against pupils leaving the school premises before the closing hour is in part for the pupils' protection, and school authorities had the duty to exercise ordinary care to enforce the rule. (22 C.3d 514.)

(2) Emphasis on the situs of the injury is misplaced; i.e., the district does not automatically escape liability simply because the injury occurs off the school premises. A federal Court of Appeals case, dealing with similar New Mexico law, supports the conclusion that negligent supervision permitting truants to leave and be exposed to injury can be the basis of liability. (22 C.3d 516.)

(3) Educ.C. 44808 (supra, §323) does not absolve the district of responsibility for an off-premises injury. The statute contains an exception where the school district "has failed to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances," a fact alleged in this case. (22 C.3d 517.) Further, the legislative intention was to limit liability for injuries suffered either before or after school hours when pupils were going to school or coming home. (22 C.3d 517, 518.)

(4) The contention that this holding will lead to "truant-proof" schools, with drastic restriction of student freedom, is unsound. The district will be liable only for injuries that proximately result from failure to exercise ordinary care; "schools must be reasonably supervised, not truant-proof." (22 C.3d 519.)

(b) Causation. Proximate cause is a question of fact for the jury, and the trial court erred in concluding that, as a matter of law, the alleged negligent supervision did not proximately cause the injury.

(1) Foreseeability: A jury could conclude that defendants could have reasonably foreseen that the temptation to wander off from school might be especially strong during summer months. (22 C.3d 520.)

(2) Intervening cause: The fact that the injury was directly caused by a third party does not make his act a superseding cause as a matter of law. The risk of injury at the hands of a negligent motorist may be foreseeable. (22 C.3d 521.) The district, however, may join the motorcyclist as a cross-defendant and seek comparative indemnity. (22 C.3d 521.)

Three justices strongly dissented. (22 C.3d 523.) (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 881; 30 Hastings L. J. 1893; 19 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1125; 12 West L.A. L. Rev. 107.)

h. Injury to Nonstudent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 328

[§ 328] Injury to Nonstudent.

In Hoff v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1998) 19 C.4th 925, 80 C.R.2d 811, 968 P.2d 522, a school provided supervision for its main parking lot, but not for an overflow lot. A student at the school, leaving the overflow lot on the last day of the school year, lost control of his vehicle, careened across the street, and struck and injured plaintiff, a nonstudent who was not on school property. Plaintiff's main theory was that defendant school district was vicariously liable for the negligence of school personnel in failing to supervise the driver as he left the overflow parking lot. Held, judgment of nonsuit for defendant affirmed; school personnel breached no duty of care owed to plaintiff.

(a) Vicarious liability.

(1) As a nonstudent, plaintiff did not claim that a special relationship existed between himself and defendant. Rather, he argued that the requisite special relationship existed between defendant and the student driver causing the accident, and that this relationship imposed on defendant a duty to exercise reasonable care to control the driver to protect all persons foreseeably endangered by his conduct. Although California decisions have recognized that a student may recover for injuries proximately caused by breach of this duty of supervision, no decision has considered whether breach of the duty may support recovery by nonstudents. (19 C.4th 933.)

(2) In answering this question, it is instructive to consider the common law limitations on the duty that parents owe to third persons as a result of their duty to supervise their children, because the relationship between school personnel and their students is analogous to the relationship between parents and their children. To be liable to third persons, a parent must have both the ability to control the child and actual or constructive knowledge that control is necessary. Given this similarity, any duty that school employees owe off-campus nonstudents should be no greater in scope than the duty that parents owe third persons. Accordingly, because school personnel neither knew nor had reason to know that this particular student driver had a propensity to drive recklessly, they owed plaintiff no duty, and defendant school district could thus not be held vicariously liable under Govt.C. 815.2 for any breach of duty by its employees. (19 C.4th 934.)

(3) Plaintiff also contended that school personnel had a statutory duty to plaintiff, and that the breach of this duty imposed vicarious liability on defendant. Specifically, he argued that Educ.C. 44807 (supra, §321), which requires in part that every teacher's duty to supervise extends to the student's coming and going, obviously applied to driving, because virtually all teachers are aware that automobile driving is the most dangerous activity that students are routinely permitted to do on school property. This argument is without merit. Under the negligence per se doctrine (infra, §871 et seq.), a presumption of negligence may arise from the violation of a statute if the statute is enacted to protect a class of persons of which the plaintiff is a member. However, Educ.C. 44807 was enacted to protect students, not nonstudents such as plaintiff, and thus it is inapplicable to the present case. (19 C.4th 937.)

(b) Direct liability.

(1) Plaintiff also argued that defendant was directly liable under Govt.C. 815.6 (infra, §245) for violating the mandatory duty imposed on the school district by Educ.C. 44807. However, that statute requires only "teachers" to hold students to strict accountability for their conduct; it does not purport to impose a broader duty that would extend to any public entity. Moreover, because plaintiff's injury did not fall within the risk of an injury against which Educ.C. 44807 was designed to protect, he cannot base a direct claim against defendant on any duty imposed by this statute. (19 C.4th 939.)

(2) Finally, plaintiff alleged direct liability in that defendant or an officer or employee, by undertaking responsibility to supervise the main parking lot, placed the burden on the jury to determine whether that undertaking was a "specific assumption" within the meaning of Educ.C. 44808 (supra, §323) and, if so, whether defendant's subsequent failure to supervise the overflow lot constituted negligence. However, the decision to supervise the main lot was not a "specific assumption" of responsibility for a student's off-campus conduct. In any event, plaintiff could not expand the decision to supervise one parking lot into the assumption of a general duty to supervise all student driving at the school. (19 C.4th 940.) (See 85 A.L.R.5th 301 [school's liability for accident involving motor vehicle operated by student].)

i. Sexual Misconduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 329

[§ 329] Sexual Misconduct.

In John R. v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1989) 48 C.3d 438, 256 C.R. 766, 769 P.2d 948, a 9th grade junior high school student, was asked by his mathematics teacher to participate in the school's work-experience program, under which high-performing students received both school credit and monetary payments for assisting teachers in such tasks as grading papers. Although the student did not have high grades, the teacher sought to develop a close personal relationship with him, and then, by threat of failing grades, succeeded in pressuring him into sexual acts, and made further threats of retaliation if he told his parents what he had done. Ten months later the student told his parents, and thereafter the student's parents, on behalf of the student and themselves, brought this action for damages against defendant school district on two theories: (a) direct liability of the district for negligent hiring and supervision of the teacher, and (b) vicarious liability for the teacher's acts under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The trial judge sustained demurrers and granted defendant's motion for nonsuit; the Court of Appeal reversed. Held: (a) Court of Appeal judgment affirmed on direct liability, thus allowing plaintiffs to pursue that theory in the trial court; (b) Court of Appeal judgment reversed on vicarious liability; the demurrer was properly sustained as to that cause of action.

(a) Courts have struggled in recent years over whether and how to apply the respondeat superior doctrine to the sexual misconduct of employees. The historical and perhaps still prevailing point of view declines to impose vicarious liability in these circumstances, but the other school of thought has its adherents as well. (48 C.3d 447; see supra, §240.) The theory of the minority view is that the tort is a consequence of the employer's conferring of official authority on the employee. (48 C.3d 448, 449.) And the extensive control teachers are authorized to exercise over students lends some credence to the proposition that a school district should not be immune from liability where a teacher's molestation of a student directly flows from the exercise of that job-created authority. (48 C.3d 449, 450.)

(b) However, the three considerations on which the modern doctrine of respondeat superior rests are not present in this case.

(1) The spur toward accident prevention. Although it is important to encourage both careful selection of school teachers and close monitoring of their conduct, these concerns are better addressed by subjecting school districts to liability only for their own direct negligence. "Applying the doctrine of respondeat superior to impose, in effect, strict liability ... would be far too likely to deter districts from encouraging, or even authorizing, extracurricular and one-on-one contacts between teachers and students or to induce districts to impose such rigorous controls on activities of this nature that the educational process would be negatively affected." (48 C.3d 451.)

(2) Assurance of compensation for victims. The acts here differ from the normal range of risks; application of the doctrine would make insurance harder to obtain and could lead to the diversion of needed funds from the classroom to cover claims. (48 C.3d 451.)

(3) Spreading the risk among the beneficiaries of the enterprise. "[T]he connection between the authority conferred on teachers to carry out their instructional duties and the abuse of that authority to indulge in personal, sexual misconduct is simply too attenuated to deem a sexual assault as falling within the range of risks allocable to a teacher's employer." (48 C.3d 452.)

(c) It is unnecessary to decide whether the cases involving sexual misconduct by police (supra, §240) were properly decided or whether the job-created authority theory has any validity in evaluating vicarious liability for the torts of police officers. It suffices here to note that the authority of a police officer over a motorist (bolstered most immediately by his uniform, badge, and firearm, and only slightly less so by the prospect of criminal sanctions for disobedience) plainly surpasses that of a teacher over a student. The teacher's authority is different in both degree and kind, and it is simply not great enough to persuade the court that vicarious liability should attach here for the teacher's tort. Also, invoking respondeat superior here would raise an entirely different specter of untoward consequences, or interference with the purposes for which the authority was conferred in the first place, than might result from the imposition of vicarious liability in the limited context of a police officer's abuse of authority. While it is doubtful that police departments would deprive their officers of weapons or preclude them from enforcing the laws, there is a significant and unacceptable risk that school districts would be dissuaded from permitting teachers to interact with their students on any but the most formal and supervised basis. (48 C.3d 452.) (See Kimberly M. v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 545, 548, 263 C.R. 612 [following John R.]; Virginia G. v. ABC Unified School Dist. (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1848, 1855, 19 C.R.2d 671 [cause of action could be stated against district for negligence in hiring and supervising teacher with prior history of sexual misconduct towards students]; Ortega v. Pajaro Valley Unified School Dist. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1023, 1057, 75 C.R.2d 777 [school district was not vicariously liable for sexual molestation by teacher]; Steven F. v. Anaheim Union High School Dist. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 904, 908, 6 C.R.3d 105 [no evidence that school district was directly negligent in hiring or supervising teacher who had sexual affair with high school student, where affair was kept secret; under John R., district could not be held vicariously liable]; 86 A.L.R.5th 1 [school's liability for employee's sexual misconduct toward student]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 261 [liability of school districts under common law tort theories for sexual molestation of student by teacher].)

School districts (and their officers, directors, and employees) are not liable for injury, disease, death, or economic loss arising from exposure, on or after January 1, 1989, to asbestos in any school district building, except on proof of negligence. No presumption of negligence applies. Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 331

[§ 331] In General.

(1) Liability Rules. Veh.C. 17000 et seq. govern the liability of public entities for motor vehicle injuries. (See C.E.B., Governmental Tort Liability Practice §4.57; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 339; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §187 et seq.; on filing claim, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §223 et seq.; on pleading, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §577 et seq.; on liability of public employees for motor vehicle torts, see infra, §366.)

(a) Liability for employees' torts within scope of employment. Of primary significance, a public entity "is liable for death or injury to person or property proximately caused by a negligent or wrongful act or omission in the operation of any motor vehicle by an employee of the public entity acting within the scope of his employment." (Veh.C. 17001.)

(b) Liability as owner based on permissive use. Subject to Govt.C. 825 et seq. (see infra, §375 et seq.), a public entity is liable under Veh.C. 17150 et seq. ("driving with permission" law, infra, §1260) "to the same extent as a private person." (Veh.C. 17002.)

(2) Definitions. For purposes of Veh.C. 17000 et seq., "employee" includes "an officer, employee, or servant, whether or not compensated," but not an independent contractor. (Veh.C. 17000(a).)

"Public entity" includes "the state, the Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, public agency, and any other political subdivision or public corporation in the state." (Veh.C. 17000(c).)

(3) General Immunity Provisions Are Inapplicable. The specific provision of Veh.C. 17001 for public entity liability for a public employee's negligent or wrongful operation of a motor vehicle overrides the general derivative immunity provided by Govt.C. 815.2(b) (supra, §228) for a public employer when its employee is immune. (Sacramento v. Superior Court (George) (1982) 131 C.A.3d 395, 400, 182 C.R. 443.) Similarly, the general immunity of Govt.C. 845.8 (supra, §297) for injuries caused by an escaping arrested person or a person resisting arrest does not provide immunity from liability predicated on Veh.C. 17001. (See Thomas v. Richmond (1995) 9 C.4th 1154, 1159, 40 C.R.2d 442, 892 P.2d 1185, supra, §297.) (On specific immunity provisions relating to emergency vehicles, see infra, §§334, 335.)

(4) Employees Working on Highway. Under Veh.C. 21053, the provisions of "this code" (with stated exceptions) do not apply to public employees while actually engaged in work on a highway. In Yarrow v. California (1960) 53 C.2d 427, 2 C.R. 137, 348 P.2d 687, the state contended that this language was directed to Veh.C. 17000 et seq. as well as to the rest of the code. The court held, however, that Veh.C. 21053 refers only to the penal consequences of violation of the Vehicle Code, and cannot be construed "to relieve the public employee or the public employer from civil liability for personal or property damage caused by negligent operation of motor vehicles by public employees while so engaged." (53 C.2d 441.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

b. Negligent or Wrongful Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 332

[§ 332] Negligent or Wrongful Conduct.

Liability under Veh.C. 17001 (supra, §331) is predicated on a "negligent or wrongful" act or omission by an employee operating the motor vehicle within the scope of employment. Although the statute thus includes intentional torts, the entity's liability is ordinarily for negligence, and the legal duty of care is determined by applying the policy factors generally governing negligence analysis (see, e.g., Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179). (Reenders v. Ontario (1977) 68 C.A.3d 1045, 1052, 137 C.R. 736.)

In Reenders, police officers pursued a drunken and reckless motorcycle driver, and the motorcyclist struck plaintiff's vehicle. Plaintiff's theory was that the officers were negligent in undertaking and continuing the pursuit. Held, summary judgment for defendant city affirmed. To impose a duty not to pursue a lawbreaker engaged in dangerous conduct on the city streets would severely restrict necessary law enforcement, and might have even more tragic consequences, e.g., if the reckless driver had lost control of his vehicle and had run over persons on a sidewalk. (68 C.A.3d 1054.)

Reenders was distinguished in Gibson v. Pasadena (1978) 83 C.A.3d 651, 148 C.R. 68. Two police officers observed a car driven by S run a red light. They pursued the car, with proper lights and sirens, at high speeds through about 25 intersections of city streets. S's car then crashed into decedent's vehicle, causing it to run into a third vehicle. Plaintiff administrator brought this action for wrongful death against the city alone. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) The driver of an authorized emergency vehicle must act with due care. (83 C.A.3d 657, citing Torres v. Los Angeles (1962) 58 C.2d 35, 22 C.R. 866, 372 P.2d 906.) Plaintiff's complaint sufficiently alleged negligence for the purposes of the demurrer. (83 C.A.3d 658.)

(b) The acts of the officers were ministerial, hence not within the immunity for discretionary acts (see infra, §§351 et seq., 356); i.e., although they exercised judgment in determining to pursue S's vehicle, the conduct of the pursuit itself was ministerial. Whether they were negligent in that pursuit--driving at over 100 miles an hour through city streets to apprehend a driver for a traffic infraction was a question of fact. (83 C.A.3d 660.)

(c) In Reenders, the pursuit was of a suspect wanted for assault with a deadly weapon and hit-and-run driving, not of a mere traffic offender. In Reenders, the officers did not commence the pursuit of the suspect until he began to drive dangerously in traffic, and the collision was not necessarily a result of the pursuit; in this case plaintiff alleged that the officers' pursuit caused the suspect to drive at faster speeds. Reenders was an appeal from a summary judgment; here, the only issue was sufficiency of the pleading. (83 C.A.3d 662.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

c. Operation of Vehicle.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 333

[§ 333] Operation of Vehicle.

Liability under Veh.C. 17001 (supra, §331) exists only where the injury results from the "operation" of the motor vehicle. (On what is a "motor vehicle," see C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §11.130; 77 A.L.R.2d 945 [what is "motor vehicle" within statute waiving governmental immunity as to operation of motor vehicles].)

In Chilcote v. San Bernardino (1933) 218 C. 444, 23 P.2d 748, plaintiff alleged injury that occurred when his car skidded in oil negligently left on a highway by county trucks. Held, no cause of action was stated. The injury did not result from operation of the vehicles. (218 C. 446.) And in Greenberg v. Los Angeles (1952) 113 C.A.2d 389, 391, 248 P.2d 74, the holding was the same where the complaint alleged that a patient died as a result of the delay of the county hospital's ambulance driver, who had stopped to pick up another patient. On the other hand, Marshall v. Los Angeles (1955) 131 C.A.2d 812, 814, 281 P.2d 544, held that a dump truck being unloaded by tilting and shaking its bed was in operation. And in Bright v. East Side Mosquito Abatement Dist. (1959) 168 C.A.2d 7, 14, 335 P.2d 527, allegations that a jeep and trailer sprayed chemical dust that obscured vision on the highway, causing a collision, were held to state a cause of action.

In Champion v. San Diego (1996) 47 C.A.4th 972, 55 C.R.2d 205, a prisoner escaped from a county van in which he was being transported, murdered a man, and terrorized a passenger in the man's car. The decedent's widow and the passenger sued the county and various county employees alleging negligent operation of a motor vehicle. The negligent acts alleged involved defendant county's failure to adequately supervise its employees and to restrain the prisoner. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) If liability under Veh.C. 17001 and immunity for escaping prisoners under Govt.C. 845.8(b) (supra, §296) were both applicable, the Vehicle Code liability would prevail. (47 C.A.4th 977, citing Thomas v. Richmond (1995) 9 C.4th 1154, 1159, 40 C.R.2d 442, 892 P.2d 1185, supra, §297.) However, neither the negligent supervision of employees nor the failure to restrain a prisoner constitutes the negligent operation of a motor vehicle within the meaning of Veh.C. 17001. Thus, the immunity statute is operable in this case. (47 C.A.4th 977.)

(b) Plaintiffs argued that they adequately alleged negligent operation of a motor vehicle. "We disagree. Review of the complaint and plaintiffs' argument demonstrates that there are no allegations of negligence in operating the van as it is commonly understood. There are no allegations the van was being driven in an erratic manner or that the manner of driving the van caused any highway hazard which injured plaintiffs. Rather, the entire thrust of the negligence alleged is failure to properly train county personnel and failure to secure and supervise [the prisoner] leading to his escape. Plaintiffs' inventive characterization of the lack of security and supervision as 'negligent loading' and [the prisoner] as cargo that 'exploded,' cannot change the fact the injuries occurred because [the prisoner] escaped from the van, not because the van was driven in an unsafe manner." (47 C.A.4th 979.)

In Ladd v. San Mateo (1996) 12 C.4th 913, 50 C.R.2d 309, 911 P.2d 496, supra, §296, a prisoner handcuffed alone in the back seat in a county car was able to escape. Placing her in the car was not "negligent operation of a motor vehicle," as used in Veh.C. 17001, even though a motor vehicle was indirectly involved. (12 C.4th 923.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

d. Authorized Emergency Vehicle.

1. Exemption and Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 334

[§ 334] Exemption and Immunity.

(1) Exemption From Traffic Regulations. Drivers of authorized emergency vehicles, when on emergency calls, are exempt from the provisions of the Vehicle Code governing speed and other traffic rules, provided that they sound their sirens "as may be reasonably necessary" and display front red lights as a warning. (Veh.C. 21055.)

However, they are not relieved of the general duty to drive with due care, nor are they protected from the consequences of arbitrary exercise of these special privileges. (Veh.C. 21056; see Reed v. Simpson (1948) 32 C.2d 444, 448, 196 P.2d 895 [driver is required, by suitable warning, to give others reasonable opportunity to yield right of way]; Mulligan v. West Coast Fast Freight (1957) 151 C.A.2d 791, 795, 312 P.2d 59 [matters from which emergency vehicle drivers may be exempted include rules under Veh.C. 21659 for passing on three-lane roadways]; Torres v. Los Angeles (1962) 58 C.2d 35, 47, 51, 22 C.R. 866, 372 P.2d 906 [emergency vehicle drivers must exercise degree of care that, under all circumstances, does not impose on others unreasonable risk of harm]; Dillenbeck v. Los Angeles (1968) 69 C.2d 472, 478, 72 C.R. 321, 446 P.2d 129, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §115 ["Daily Training Bulletins" of Police Department are "safety rules of employer" admissible as evidence of due care]; C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §§11.140, 11.143; 10 Proof of Facts 3d 203 [negligent operation of emergency vehicle]; 83 A.L.R.2d 383 [police vehicle]; 84 A.L.R.2d 121 [ambulance]; 87 A.L.R.5th 1 [construction of statutory provision requiring motorist to yield right of way to emergency vehicle].)

The duty to exercise due care includes the duty to give the statutory warning by flashing red lights or sounding the siren. (Grant v. Petronella (1975) 50 C.A.3d 281, 286, 123 C.R. 399; see Sacramento v. Superior Court (George) (1982) 131 C.A.3d 395, 405, 182 C.R. 443, supra, §331 [emergency vehicle driver who fails to activate red light, and siren where necessary, is not exempt from rules of road, and negligence liability may be based on violation of those rules]; Stark v. Los Angeles (1985) 168 C.A.3d 276, 283, 214 C.R. 216 [city was subject to liability for police officers' negligence in failing to activate siren in conduct of pursuit].)

(2) Immunity From Liability. Public employees are immune from all liability "resulting from the operation, in the line of duty, of an authorized emergency vehicle while responding to an emergency call or when in the immediate pursuit of an actual or suspected violator of the law, or when responding to but not upon returning from a fire alarm or other emergency call." (Veh.C. 17004.) (See 11 So. Cal. L. Rev. 172, 187.)

Veh.C. 17004 does not require the "immediate pursuit" to involve an actual emergency situation, as opposed to a routine traffic stop for the purpose of issuing a ticket. Nor does that statute withhold immunity in a case involving negligent conduct of the pursuing officer, such as failing to activate lights or siren. (Cruz v. Briseno (2000) 22 C.4th 568, 573, 93 C.R.2d 715, 994 P.2d 986.)

(3) What Are Authorized Emergency Vehicles. Veh.C. 165 defines "authorized emergency vehicle" as any of the following:

(a) A public ambulance, lifeguard equipment, or lifesaving equipment, or private ambulance licensed by the Commissioner of the Highway Patrol to respond to emergency calls.

(b) A public vehicle operated by federal, state, or local police officers in the performance of their duties, or by a forestry or fire department organized as provided in the Health and Safety Code.

(c) A state or bridge and highway district vehicle used for fighting fires, towing, or servicing other vehicles, caring for injured persons, or repairing lighting or electrical equipment.

(d) A state vehicle used for emergency fire, rescue, or communications calls and operated by the Office of Emergency Services or by agencies or fire departments to which the office has assigned the vehicle.

(e) A federal vehicle used for emergency fire, ambulance, or lifesaving calls or actively engaged in law enforcement work.

(f) A vehicle for which the Commissioner has issued an authorized emergency vehicle permit.

Veh.C. 2416 specifies the vehicles for which the Commissioner may issue a permit, and requires a finding "that the vehicle is used in responding to emergency calls for fire or law enforcement or for the immediate preservation of life or property or for the apprehension of law violators."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Exemption From Traffic Regulations. See Monroy v. Los Angeles (2008) 164 C.A.4th 248, 256, 78 C.R.3d 738 [in action against officer arising from accident involving police vehicle, it was error to instruct that officer would not be negligent for failure to follow rules of road if he was responding to urgent "Code 3" emergency, where officer had admitted that he was not responding to "Code 3" at time of collision; error was prejudicial where jury found that officer was not negligent despite ample evidence that he was speeding].

d. Authorized Emergency Vehicle.

2. Entity Liable Even Though Driver Is Not.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 335

[§ 335] Entity Liable Even Though Driver Is Not.

Veh.C. 17001 (supra, §331), the general statute establishing public liability for motor vehicle torts of employees, contains no exception covering the operation of emergency vehicles. Accordingly it has been held that even though the driver is not liable, the governmental agency is liable if the driver fails to exercise due care. (Thomas v. Richmond (1995) 9 C.4th 1154, 1159, 40 C.R.2d 442, 892 P.2d 1185, supra, §297; Gibson v Pasadena (1978) 83 C.A.3d 651, 656, 148 C.R. 68, supra, §332; Sacramento v. Superior Court (George) (1982) 131 C.A.3d 395, 400, 182 C.R. 443, supra, §331; see Raynor v. Arcata (1938) 11 C.2d 113, 120, 65 P.2d 838 [fire chief's car]; Brummett v. Sacramento (1978) 21 C.3d 880, 883, 885, 148 C.R. 361, 582 P.2d 952 [police officers pursuing suspect drove at excessive speed into an intersection, unaware of color of light]; Eddy v. Los Angeles (1938) 28 C.A.2d 89, 94, 82 P.2d 25 [police car, no siren, negligently driven; driver exempt but city liable].)

In San Jose v. Superior Court (Martinez) (1985) 166 C.A.3d 695, 212 C.R. 661, the complaint alleged that defendant police officers negligently engaged in a high-speed chase of a speeding driver, and that the speeder's vehicle struck that of plaintiff. Held, defendant city was liable.

(a) In Brummett v. Sacramento, the police vehicle struck that of the victim; in Sacramento v. Superior Court, the speeder's vehicle collided with the victim's; and in Duarte v. San Jose (1980) 100 C.A.3d 648, 161 C.R. 140, the drunk driver's car caused the collision. In each case the entity was held liable although the police officers were immune. (166 C.A.3d 698.)

(b) Defendant city contended that Kisbey v. California (1984) 36 C.3d 415, 204 C.R. 428, 682 P.2d 1093, supra, §297, impliedly overruled Duarte; but, notwithstanding the sweep of the language in the Kisbey opinion, its narrow holding does not conflict with either Duarte or Sacramento (166 C.A.3d 701, and footnote 3.) (See Stark v. Los Angeles (1985) 168 C.A.3d 276, 287, 214 C.R. 216 [agreeing with San Jose court on this point].)

However, because the basis of liability of the city or state is the tort of the driver, no public liability is imposed unless the emergency vehicle driver abuses the privileges under Veh.C. 21055, e.g., by failure to sound the siren, or fails to exercise due care for the safety of others under Veh.C. 21056. (Lucas v. Los Angeles (1938) 10 C.2d 476, 479, 75

P.2d 599 [police car siren sounded, and no other abuse shown, city not liable]; Head v. Wilson (1939) 36 C.A.2d 244, 251, 97 P.2d 509 [city could not be found liable where driver's conduct was exempt under Veh.C. 21055, 21056].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

e. Police Pursuit.

1. Nature and Scope of Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 336

[§ 336] Nature and Scope of Immunity.

A public agency that adopts a written policy on vehicular pursuits is immune from liability for personal injury, death, or property damage resulting from the collision of a vehicle operated by an actual or suspected violator of the law who is pursued by a peace officer. (Veh.C. 17004.7(b); see McGee v. Laguna Beach (1997) 56 C.A.4th 537, 543, 65 C.R.2d 506 [Veh.C. 17004.7 applies where pursuing officer is riding on motorcycle, as well as when in automobile]; Ketchum v. California (1998) 62 C.A.4th 957, 962, 73 C.R.2d 152 [because there was a rational relationship between pursuit policy and immunity, Veh.C. 17004.7 does not violate due process]; Weaver v. California (1998) 63 C.A.4th 188, 199, 73 C.R.2d 571 [Veh.C. 17004.7 immunity was applicable to injury to passenger in pursued vehicle even though vehicle was deliberately rammed by police car in attempt to end pursuit]; 100 A.L.R.3d 815 [liability to pedestrian or occupant of parked vehicle, or for damage to vehicle, as result of police chase]; 4 A.L.R.4th 865 [liability for injury to innocent occupant of moving vehicle, or for damage to such vehicle, as result of police chase]; on requisites of pursuit policy, see infra, §337.)

The immunity is "in addition to any other immunity provided by law," and the adoption of a policy is discretionary. (Veh.C. 17004.7(a); on immunity of public employee responding to emergency call or conducting vehicular pursuit, see supra, §334.)

The immunity applies whether the action is brought by the fleeing suspect or by a third party. (Thomas v. Richmond (1995) 9 C.4th 1154, 1164, 40 C.R.2d 442, 892 P.2d 1185, supra, §297.)

Lewis v. Sacramento (2001) 93 C.A.4th 107, 113 C.R.2d 90, considered the issue of when a "collision" results for purposes of the statute. Decedent was a passenger on a motorcycle being driven by a suspect and pursued by a police vehicle. As the suspect was attempting to make a left turn, the motorcycle skidded down, and decedent either jumped or fell. Immediately thereafter, decedent was struck and killed by the pursuing police vehicle. Plaintiff parents brought a wrongful death action against the county and its sheriff's department, contending that Veh.C. 17004.7 only applies when the injury or death "resulted from a collision" between a vehicle being driven by a suspect and the pursuing police car. In rejecting this argument, the court made the following points:

(a) If the motorcycle went down onto the street, i.e., crashed, this would constitute a "collision" of the motorcycle with the ground within the common meaning of that word. And if the decedent jumped off or fell off the motorcycle as it began to crash, it must be said that this "resulted" from the collision, i.e., his jumping off or falling off was a consequence of the collision. For the same reason, if the pursuing patrol car then struck and killed the decedent when he jumped off or fell off as the motorcycle crashed in the path of the patrol car, it must be said that the death resulted from the collision of the motorcycle with the ground. (93 C.A.4th 120.)

(b) Had the Legislature intended to restrict the statutory immunity to situations where the injury or death resulted solely from a collision of the suspect's vehicle, without any contributory conduct of the peace officer driving a police vehicle, it could have drafted Veh.C. 17004.7 to reflect this intent. However, it did not do so. (93 C.A.4th 125.) (See Nguyen v. Westminster (2002) 103 C.A.4th 1161, 1164, 127 C.R.2d 388 [immunity applied even though decedent was struck by trash bin with which police collided, rather than by vehicle, and even if pursuing officer did not comply with guidelines concerning vehicular pursuits; relying on Lewis].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Veh.C. 17004.7 was amended in 2005, effective July 1, 2007. (See Veh.C. 17004.7(g).) The immunity applies to a public agency that adopts "and promulgates" a written policy on vehicular pursuits "and provides regular and periodic training on an annual basis." (Veh.C. 17004.7(b)(1).) Promulgation of the policy must include, but is not limited to, a requirement that all peace officers of the agency certify in writing that they have received, read, and understand the policy. However, an individual officer's failure to sign a certification may not be used to impose liability on the officer or agency. (Veh.C. 17004.7(b)(2).) "Regular and periodic training" means annual training including, at a minimum, coverage of each of the subjects and elements set forth in Veh.C. 17004.7(c) (Supp., infra, §337) and complying, at a minimum, with training guidelines established pursuant to P.C. 13519.8. (Veh.C. 17004.7(d).)

Entities that may claim immunity: See Alcala v. Corcoran (2007) 147 C.A.4th 666, 669, 53 C.R.3d 908 [city is "public agency," entitled to immunity provided by Veh.C. 17004.7 when city adopts requisite vehicular pursuit policy; terms "public entity" and "public agency" are used interchangeably in statute and both include city within their definitions].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

15. Operation of Motor Vehicles.

e. Police Pursuit.

2. Adoption of Pursuit Policy.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 337

[§ 337] Adoption of Pursuit Policy.

(1) Manner of Adoption. In Colvin v. Gardena (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1270, 15 C.R.2d 234, a city police chief's issuance of a directive on police vehicular pursuits was held to satisfy the requirement of Veh.C. 17004.7 for adoption of a vehicular pursuit policy. Issuance of the directive "was appropriate in light of the police chief's role as head of a form of public authority." (11 C.A.4th 1279.) (See Brumer v. Los Angeles (1994) 24 C.A.4th 983, 987, 29 C.R.2d 515 [following Colvin].)

Ketchum v. California (1998) 62 C.A.4th 957, 73 C.R.2d 152, determined that a California Highway Patrol policy signed by a deputy commissioner, rather than by the commissioner of the CHP, was properly "adopted," where the commissioner had approved the policy and the deputy commissioner was only acting in the commissioner's absence. (62 C.A.4th 962.)

(2) Requisite Provisions. The policy on vehicular pursuits must provide all of the following:

(a) That, if available, there be supervisory control of the pursuit. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(1).)

(b) Procedures for designating the primary pursuit vehicle and for determining the total number of vehicles to be permitted to participate at one time in the pursuit. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(2).)

(c) Procedures for coordinating operations with other jurisdictions. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(3).)

(d) Guidelines for determining when the interests of public safety and effective law enforcement justify a vehicular pursuit and when a vehicular pursuit should not be initiated or should be terminated. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4).)

Whether a policy complies with these requirements "is a question of law for the court." (Veh.C. 17004.7(d).)

(3) Policy Need Not Actually Be Followed. In Kishida v. California (1991) 229 C.A.3d 329, 280 C.R. 62, plaintiffs were injured when their automobile collided with another car that was fleeing from Highway Patrol units during a high-speed chase. To overcome the immunity of Veh.C. 17004.7, plaintiffs contended that the word "adopt," where used with reference to the written policy on vehicular pursuits, necessarily imported the requirement that it be "implemented"; hence that, to claim the immunity, the defendant must demonstrate that during the particular chase the officers actually employed the procedures prescribed for safe pursuits. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The statutory language does not imply or import the requirement that there be proof that the policy procedures were actually followed. (229 C.A.3d 338.) (See Weiner v. San Diego (1991) 229 C.A.3d 1203, 1210, 280 C.R. 818 [following Kishida]; Brumer v. Los Angeles, supra [same].)

(4) Sufficiency of Particular Policies. The adequacy of vehicular pursuit policies has been considered in a number of cases. (See Bryant v. Los Angeles (1994) 26 C.A.4th 919, 923, 32 C.R.2d 285 [policy that otherwise complied with requirements of Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4) was not insufficient even though it failed to cover situation where suspect was driving stolen police vehicle]; McGee v. Laguna Beach (1997) 56 C.A.4th 537, 543, 65 C.R.2d 506 [pursuit policy satisfied minimum requirements of Veh.C. 17004.7 where it contained general guidelines, but left specifics to officer, e.g., it contained policy concerning radio communication, but no specific prohibition against high-speed pursuit if radio was malfunctioning]; Ketchum v. California, supra, 62 C.A.4th 966 [guidelines adequate; court refused to impose guideline limiting pursuits to certain offenses or situations].)

In Colvin v. Gardena, supra, the provision regarding the initiation and termination of police vehicular pursuits read as follows: "A. Initiation of pursuits: Pursuits may be initiated when an officer has reasonable cause to stop a vehicle and the driver fails to stop as required by law. ... B. Discontinuance of pursuits: Justification to continue a pursuit will be based on what reasonably appears to be the facts known or perceived by the officer. Officers should consider discontinuing a pursuit when it poses a serious and unreasonable risk of harm to the pursuing officer or to the public balanced against the seriousness of the violation, or when directed to do so by a supervisor." The provision regarding designation of the primary pursuit vehicle and the determination of the number of such vehicles stated that a pursuit initiated by a motorcycle or unmarked police vehicle should be abandoned when a marked four-wheeled vehicle becomes available, and that the number of vehicles may vary with the circumstances, but should be kept to a minimum. Held, the provision on the initiation and termination of pursuits violated Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4), and the provision on designating the primary pursuit vehicle and the total number of vehicles violated Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(2); policies adopted under Veh.C. 17004.7 must clearly and with specificity set forth standards to guide officers in the field.

(a) The language respecting initiation of pursuits fails to articulate any guidelines for determining when the gravity of a particular situation justifies initiation of a pursuit. Under its "reasonable cause to stop a vehicle" standard, a pursuit could apply to a mere Vehicle Code violation for a nonfunctional tail lamp or other minor violation. The language respecting termination is similarly vague. By failing to set forth such obvious factors as "weather, visibility, vehicular and pedestrian traffic, surface and other roadway conditions, speed, experience of the officers, nature of the offense, capacity of police vehicle, and distance traveled," defendant city's policy constitutes an impermissible delegation of basic policy matters to police officers. (11 C.A.4th 1285.)

(b) The provision on determining the main pursuit vehicle merely reflects the obvious fact that some vehicle will initiate a pursuit. The only guideline stated is that an initiating unmarked police car or motorcycle should abandon the pursuit in favor of a marked four-wheeled unit. And the provision on the number of vehicles merely states in a conclusionary manner that such number should be kept to a minimum. These provisions do not afford adequate guidelines for either selecting the lead vehicle or determining the number of vehicles to be permitted to participate at one time in the pursuit. (11 C.A.4th 1286.) (See Payne v. Perris (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1738, 1746, 16 C.R.2d 143 [following Colvin; compliance with Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4) requires more than merely directing pursuing officers to exercise their discretion and use their best judgment]; Berman v. Daly City (1993) 21 C.A.4th 276, 282, 26 C.R.2d 493 [following Payne].)

In Billester v. Corona (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1107, 32 C.R.2d 121, defendant city's pursuit policy contained general guidance on when to initiate or terminate a pursuit, e.g., pursuits should normally be initiated when, in the officer's judgment, an individual clearly shows an intent to avoid arrest by using a vehicle to flee, but the fact that most pursuits originate from misdemeanors should be considered; a pursuit should be terminated when, in the pursuing officer's judgment, a serious hazard is present to the public or the officer. In addition, the policy listed the following factors that an officer must consider during pursuits: time, speed, distance, the importance of and necessity for apprehension of the suspect, traffic in the vicinity, and the availability of assistance. The policy also directed the officer to consider whether his or her life is in danger. Held, the policy meets the requirements of Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4); the specific factors required to be considered provide the additional guidance that was lacking in Payne and Berman. (26 C.A.4th 1121.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Manner of Adoption. See Alcala v. Corcoran (2007) 147 C.A.4th 666, 674, 669, 53 C.R.3d 908 [testimony by chief of police that vehicular pursuit policy was in police department's policies and procedures manual when he was hired, that he used it as field training officer, and that, as police chief, he formally re-adopted policy as department's policy was sufficient to establish that department had adopted policy as required by Veh.C. 17004.7].

(2) Requisite Provisions. Veh.C. 17004.7 was amended in 2005, effective July 1, 2007. (See Veh.C. 17004.7(g).) The policy on vehicular pursuits must do all of the following:

(a) Determine under what circumstances to initiate a pursuit. The policy must define a "pursuit," articulate the reasons for which a pursuit is authorized, and identify the issues that should be considered in reaching the decision to pursue. It must also address the importance of protecting the public and balancing the known or reasonably suspected offense, and the apparent need for immediate capture, against the risks to peace officers, innocent motorists, and others. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(1).)

(b) Determine the total number of law enforcement vehicles authorized to participate in a pursuit, establish the authorized number of law enforcement units and supervisors who may be involved in a pursuit, describe the responsibility of each authorized unit and the role of each peace officer and supervisor, and specify if and when additional units are authorized. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(2).)

(c) Determine the communication procedures to be followed during a pursuit, specify pursuit coordination and control procedures, and determine assignment of communications responsibility by unit and organizational entity. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(3).)

(d) Determine the role of the supervisor in managing and controlling a pursuit. Supervisory responsibility must include management and control of a pursuit, assessment of risk factors associated with a pursuit, and when to terminate a pursuit. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(4).)

(e) Determine driving tactics and the circumstances under which the tactics may be appropriate. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(5).)

(f) Determine authorized pursuit intervention tactics. Pursuit intervention tactics include, but are not limited to, blocking, ramming, boxing, and roadblock procedures. The policy must specify under what circumstances and conditions each approved tactic is authorized to be used. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(6).)

(g) Determine the factors to be considered by a peace officer and supervisor in determining speeds throughout a pursuit. Evaluation must take into consideration public safety, peace officer safety, and the safety of the occupants in a fleeing vehicle. (Veh.C. 17004(c)(7).)

(h) Determine the role of air support, where available. Air support must include coordinating the activities of resources on the ground, reporting on the progress of a pursuit, and providing peace officers and supervisors with information to evaluate whether to continue the pursuit. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(8).)

(i) Determine when to terminate or discontinue a pursuit. Factors to be considered include, but are not limited to, (1) ongoing evaluation of risk to the public or pursuing peace officers, (2) protection of the public, balancing the known or reasonably suspected offense and apparent need for immediate capture against the risks to the public and peace officers, (3) vehicular or pedestrian traffic safety and volume, (4) weather conditions, (5) traffic conditions, (6) speeds, (7) availability of air support, and (8) procedures when an offender is identified and may be apprehended at a later time or when the location of the pursuit vehicle is no longer known. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(9).)

(j) Determine procedures for apprehending an offender following a pursuit. Safety of the public and peace officers during the law enforcement effort to capture an offender must be an important factor. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(10).)

(k) Determine effective coordination, management, and control of interjurisdictional pursuits. The policy must include, but may not be limited to, (1) supervisory control and management of a pursuit that enters another jurisdiction, (2) communications and notifications among the agencies involved, (3) involvement in another jurisdiction's pursuit, and (4) roles and responsibilities of units and coordination, management, and control at the termination of an interjurisdictional pursuit. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(11).)

(l) Provide reporting and postpursuit analysis as required by Veh.C. 14602.1, establish the level and procedures of postpursuit analysis, review, and feedback, and establish procedures for written postpursuit review and follow-up. (Veh.C. 17004.7(c)(12).)

These requirements represent minimum policy standards and do not limit an agency from adopting additional policy requirements. Nothing in Veh.C. 17004 precludes the adoption of a policy that limits or restricts pursuits. (Veh.C. 17004.7(d).) Compliance with requirements as question of law: Effective July 1, 2007, Veh.C. 17004.7(d) is relettered Veh.C. 17004.7(f).

(4) Sufficiency of Particular Policies. See Alcala v. Corcoran, supra, 147 C.A.4th 669 [vehicle pursuit policy must do more than simply advise pursuing officers to exercise discretion and use their best judgment; policy must clearly set forth specific criteria to control and channel officers' discretion that meet minimum standards of Veh.C. 17004.7(c)].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
16. Use of Pesticides.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 338

[§ 338] Use of Pesticides.

(1) In General. "A public entity is liable for injuries caused by its use of a pesticide to the same extent as a private person." (Govt.C. 862(b).) "Pesticide" is broadly defined to include materials used to control weeds as well as pests. (See Govt.C. 862(a).) (See C.E.B., 2 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §§11.126, 11.127; 57 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Municipal, County, School, and State Tort Liability §594.)

However, the presumption of negligence per se applicable to a private person's violation of a statute or regulation (see infra, §871) is qualified: No presumption of negligence arises from the failure of a public entity or a public employee to comply with a provision of a statute or regulation relating to the use of a pesticide "if the statute or regulation by its terms is made inapplicable to the public entity or the public employee." (Govt.C. 862(b).)

In Farmers Ins. Exchange v. California (1985) 175 C.A.3d 494, 221 C.R. 225, plaintiff insurance companies, having found numerous claims of policyholders for paint damage to automobiles caused by the state's aerial spraying of fruit-fly infested areas, sued the state to recover the amounts paid. On the cause of action based on Govt.C. 862 the court took note of the Law Revision Commission Comment, that "[a]lthough it appears that the effect of the California statutes and regulations relating to the use of pesticides is to impose 'strict' liability for injuries resulting from such use, this conclusion will remain uncertain until there has been a judicial determination of the question in California." The court then held that a demurrer was properly sustained to this cause of action on either of two alternative grounds:

(a) The Attorney General argued that the statute applies only where the state is carrying out proprietary activities on property it owns or controls, and not where it is acting in a governmental capacity to abate a statewide nuisance. "We tend to agree with this interpretation of the statute." (175 C.A.3d 504.)

(b) "In any case," the state would be immune from liability under Govt.C. 862 by virtue of Govt.C. 8655 (infra, §341), making the state immune from liability for discretionary conduct under the Emergency Services Act. Here, the spraying program, instituted by the Governor's declaration of a state of emergency pursuant to the Act, was clearly the exercise of a discretionary function. (175 C.A.3d 505.) (See LaBadie v. California (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1366, 1368, 256 C.R. 604 [state was immune under Govt.C. 8655 for injuries suffered by plaintiff from malathion spraying; following Farmers Ins. Exchange]; cf. Adkins v. California (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1802, 1812, 59 C.R.2d 59 [state in undertaking pest eradication program was not immune under Govt.C. 8655 for failing to use its best efforts to accurately notify citizens of health and safety precautions; this duty was ministerial and the statute immunizes only discretionary acts].)

(2) Decisions of County Agricultural Departments. The immunity for discretionary acts of a public employee (Govt.C. 815.2, supra, §228, and Govt.C. 820.2, infra, §351) applies to decisions of county agriculture departments and their employees when enforcing state or local pest control or pest eradication laws. (Food & Ag.C. 2286.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
17. Nuisances.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 339

[§ 339] Nuisances.

(1) Recovery Permitted Under Former Law. A public entity has traditionally been held liable in damages under C.C. 3479 (13 Summary (10th), Equity, §133) for maintaining a nuisance, despite the fact that it was engaged in a governmental activity. (See Phillips v. Pasadena (1945) 27 C.2d 104, 106, 162 P.2d 625; Flournoy v. California (1962) 57 C.2d 497, 498, 20 C.R. 627, 370 P.2d 331; Mulloy v. Sharp Park Sanitary Dist. (1958) 164 C.A.2d 438, 441, 330 P.2d 441.)

(2) Continuation Under Tort Claims Act. The Tort Claims Act bars liability "except as otherwise provided by statute" (Govt.C. 815, supra, §223), and there is no provision for nuisance liability. Nevertheless, recovery under a nuisance theory, for damages as well as injunctive relief, has been permitted. In Nestle v. Santa Monica (1972) 6 C.3d 920, 101 C.R. 568, 496 P.2d 480, over 700 plaintiffs sued defendant city for property and personal injury damages caused by defendant's operation of its airport. They alleged that vibration, fumes, and noise emanating from takeoff and landing of jet aircraft interfered with the free enjoyment of their property and resulted in physical pain, suffering, and emotional disturbance. The complaint asserted four theories of recovery (inverse condemnation, negligence, zoning violations, and nuisance), but the main holding was on nuisance, reversing the judgment for defendant.

(a) The Tort Claims Act neither provides for nor precludes liability for a nuisance, but C.C. 3479, the general nuisance section, provides the necessary statutory basis for the action. And an amendment to the Tort Claims Act proposed by the Law Revision Commission in 1970, to state an express immunity from nuisance liability, was not enacted. "[W]e must conclude that the Legislature, with due deliberation, decided to reject the commission's proposal to bar suits against public entities for nuisance. Consequently it is manifest that the Legislature intended to allow such causes of action if they could be tailored to meet the specifications of statutory provisions," such as C.C.3479. (6 C.3d 935.)

(b) This conclusion finds further support in the Legislature's demonstrated interest in combating pollution. "Since it is well-documented that a nuisance theory provides an effective means for redress in a wide range of actions resulting from pollution including noise disturbance, it appears that, in deleting the commission's recommendation to preclude governmental nuisance liability, the Legislature intended to preserve this additional weapon in the arsenal available to combat grievous injury to the environment." It must therefore be concluded that Govt.C. 815 does not bar nuisance actions against public entities to the extent these actions are founded on C.C.3479 or applicable statutes. (6 C.3d 936.)

The Nestle holding has been followed in a number of later cases. (See Vedder v. Imperial (1974) 36 C.A.3d 654, 661, 111 C.R. 728, supra, §314 [complaint on nuisance theory sufficient]; Buchanan v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1976) 56 C.A.3d 757, 768, 128 C.R. 770 [same]; Greater Westchester Homeowners Assn. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 C.3d 86, 101, 160 C.R. 733, 603 P.2d 1329 [recovery against city by homeowners for personal injuries and emotional distress sustained by reason of noise from aircraft using defendant's airport]; Andrews v. Orange (1982) 130 C.A.3d 944, 963, 182 C.R. 176 [following Greater Westchester]; Paterno v. State (1999) 74 C.A.4th 68, 103, 87 C.R.2d 754 [nuisance allegations sufficient].)

Nuisance actions are subject to immunities under the Act that apply to the particular facts. (Mikkelsen v. California (1976) 59 C.A.3d 621, 628, 630, 130 C.R. 780, supra, §229 [dangerous condition of property, design immunity]; Longfellow v. San Luis Obispo (1983) 144 C.A.3d 379, 384, 192 C.R. 580 [following Mikkelsen]; cf. Pfleger v. Superior Court (1985) 172 C.A.3d 421, 431, 218 C.R. 371 [plaintiff may simultaneously assert causes of action for nuisance and for dangerous condition of real property].)

B. Public Entities.

18. Condemnor's Entry To Survey Land.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 340

[§ 340] Condemnor's Entry To Survey Land.

A public entity with the power of eminent domain "may enter upon property to make studies, surveys, examinations, tests, soundings, borings, samplings, or appraisals or to engage in similar activities reasonably related to acquisition or use of the property for that use." (C.C.P. 1245.010.) It is liable, however, notwithstanding Govt.C. 821.8 (infra, §348, giving a public employee immunity for an authorized entry), for "actual damage to property or for substantial interference with the possession or use of property." (C.C.P. 1245.060.)

C.C.P. 1245.060 is intended to comply with the constitutional guarantee of compensation for damaging property (Cal. Const., Art. I, §19; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1132), and the Law Revision Commission Comment emphasizes two factors limiting recovery:

(1) The term "actual" precludes an award for merely nominal or "constructive" damages not based on physical injury to property.

(2) The phrase "substantial interference" precludes recovery for entries and activities which do not seriously impinge on or impair possession and use of the property.

B. Public Entities.

19. Emergency Activities.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 341

[§ 341] In General.

(1) General Immunity. The state and its political subdivisions are immune from liability for claims based on the exercise, or failure to exercise, a discretionary function in carrying out the Emergencies Services Act (Govt.C. 8550 et seq.) (Govt.C. 8655.) (On application of Govt.C. 8655 to pest eradication programs, see supra, §338.)

Training persons to respond to disasters is the type of discretionary act that, even if negligently performed, immunizes the state from liability for resulting injuries. The courts must abstain from deciding the appropriateness of the design or execution of the training exercises. That the exercises may place the participants at risk does not lessen the inappropriateness of judicial intervention. (Soto v. California (1997) 56 C.A.4th 196, 199, 65 C.R.2d 11.)

(2) Extraterritorial Activities. All immunities that apply to public employees when performing emergency functions within the territorial limits of their political subdivisions apply equally when they are performing these functions extraterritorially under the Emergency Services Act. (Govt.C. 8656.)

No other state or its employees rendering aid in this state under an interstate arrangement is liable for any good faith act or omission in connection with an emergency. (Govt.C. 8660.)

(3) Volunteer and Impressed Workers. Volunteer emergency workers and persons impressed into service during an emergency are subject to the same liabilities and immunities as public employees performing similar work. (Govt.C. 8657(a).)

Public entities and their employees, including volunteer emergency workers and persons impressed into service, are immune from liability for personal injuries or property damage sustained by volunteers and impressed persons while engaged in or training for emergency duties. (Govt.C. 8657(b).)

(4) Removal and Release of Prisoners. Persons in charge of correctional institutions are immune from liability respecting removal or release of inmates whose lives are threatened by an emergency. (Govt.C. 8658.)

(5) Liabilities of Health Care Providers. Physicians, hospitals, and other medical providers are immune from liability for injuries sustained from nonwilful acts or omissions in rendering emergency services at the request of the responsible public official or agency. (Govt.C. 8659.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Immunity. In Thousand Trails v. California Reclamation Dist. No. 17 (2004) 124 C.A.4th 450, 21 C.R.3d 196, campground owners sued a reclamation district for property damage that resulted when the district, during a declared state of emergency due to flooding, cut a levee in an effort to divert raging floodwaters. The district's action unintentionally caused further flooding of the campground. Held, summary judgment for district affirmed.

(a) Under Govt.C. 8655, the state and its political subdivisions are not liable for the exercise of discretionary functions in carrying out the Emergency Services Act. When the state is called on to quell an emergency, "it must be able to act with speed and confidence, unhampered by fear of tort liability. A state of emergency imposes severe time constraints, forcing decisions to be made quickly and often without sufficient time to carefully analyze all potential repercussions. Therefore, the immunity granted by the Act is broad and specifically extended to encompass not only discretionary actions, but also the performance of or failure to perform those discretionary actions." (124 C.A.4th 458.)

(b) The fact that the district later adopted a specific flood prevention plan does not preclude immunity here. To strip an agency of immunity because, after the fact, it attempts to improve its response to an emergency would conflict with public policy. (124 C.A.4th 459.)

(c) To subject the emergency measures taken by governmental entities to microscopic examination would be contrary to the Act's purpose. Under the severe time constraints inherent in a declared state of emergency, decisions must be made quickly and often without the time necessary to carefully analyze all of the potential repercussions. (124 C.A.4th 460.) Given the undisputed facts on the record, the trial court did not err in granting summary judgment. (124 C.A.4th 461.) (2) Extraterritorial Activities. See Thousand Trails v. California Reclamation Dist. No. 17, supra, 124 C.A.4th 459 [reclamation district that cut levee in effort to divert floodwaters during declared state of emergency did not lose immunity under Emergency Services Act merely because levee was outside its jurisdiction].

The Governor, "at his or her discretion," may warn the public of "an earthquake or volcanic prediction determined to have scientific validity." (Govt.C. 955.1(b).) The state and its agencies and employees are not liable for any injury resulting from the decision to issue or not to issue a warning. (Govt.C. 955.1(b).) (On immunity of members of the California Earthquake Prediction Evaluation Council, see Govt.C. 8657(c).)

Public entities and public employees may take or fail or refuse to take any action on the warning, or execute or fail or refuse to execute any earthquake or volcanic prediction response plan, and they are not liable for any injuries thus caused. Nor are they liable for injuries resulting from the preparation of, or failure or refusal to prepare, an earthquake hazard or damage prediction map, an evacuation plan, and other plan elements. (Govt.C. 955.1(c).)

An earthquake or volcanic warning is a basis for a declaration of a state of emergency. Public entities and public employees are immune from liability in accordance with all immunity provisions applicable during the state of emergency. Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

B. Public Entities.

19. Emergency Activities.

c. 911 Calls.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 343

[§ 343] 911 Calls.

Ma v. San Francisco (2002) 95 C.A.4th 488, 115 C.R.2d 544, held that public entities employing emergency dispatchers may be liable for injuries attributable to a dispatcher's negligence or delay in responding to a 911 call. It was overruled in Eastburn v. Regional Fire Protection Authority (2003) 31 C.4th 1175, 7 C.R.3d 552, 80 P.3d 656, in which injuries were allegedly sustained from an emergency dispatcher's failure to respond promptly to a 911 call. The minor and her parents sued the public entities that provided the 911 emergency dispatch services. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment of dismissal. Held, affirmed.

(a) Intent of Tort Claims Act to confine governmental liability. Govt.C. 815(a) (supra, §223) provides that a public entity is not liable for an injury "[e]xcept as otherwise provided by statute." As that language indicates, the intent of the Tort Claims Act is to confine potential governmental liability, not expand it. (31 C.4th 1179.)

(b) No direct liability. No statute imposes direct liability on the defendant agencies here.

(1) Govt.C. 820(a) (infra, §346) provides only that public employees are liable for injuries from their acts or omissions in the scope of their employment to the same extent as private persons, unless otherwise provided by statute; no similar provision makes public agencies liable for their own negligent conduct or omission to the same extent as a private person or entity. (31 C.4th 1179.)

(2) Govt.C. 815.6 (supra, §245) makes a public entity directly liable for its breach of a statutory "mandatory duty." But with the exception of Health & Saf.C. 1799.107 (supra, §136), the general immunity provision for emergency services, no statutory provision declares or defines a public agency's duty of care with respect to handling 911 emergency calls. (31 C.4th 1180.)

(3) C.C. 1714 (infra, §833), which imposes a general duty of care on all persons, and the common law principles that statute codifies are alone insufficient bases for imposing direct liability on public agencies. Direct tort liability of public entities must be based on a specific statute declaring them to be liable, or at least creating some specific duty of care. Otherwise, the general rule of immunity for public entities would be largely eroded by the routine application of general tort principles. (31 C.4th 1183.)

(c) Vicarious liability is limited. Govt.C. 815.2(a) (supra, §237) makes a public entity vicariously liable for its employee's negligent acts or omissions within the scope of employment (see Govt.C. 820), but Govt.C. 815.2(b) (supra, §228) adds the important qualification that a public entity is not liable for injuries committed by an employee who is immune from liability for the injuries. Once again, Health & Saf.C. 1799.107 is the only statute pertaining to the subject of the liability and immunity of public employees performing emergency rescue services such as 911 dispatching. (31 C.4th 1180.)

(d) Qualified immunity exists under Health & Saf.C. 1799.107. The critical statute at issue here is Health & Saf.C. 1799.107. It provides in pertinent part that a "qualified immunity from liability shall be provided for public entities and emergency rescue personnel providing emergency services" and that "neither a public entity nor emergency rescue personnel shall be liable for any injury caused by an action taken by the emergency rescue personnel acting within the scope of their employment to provide emergency services, unless the action taken was performed in bad faith or in a grossly negligent manner." (31 C.4th 1180.) The statutory language unambiguously applies to 911 emergency dispatching. (31 C.4th 1184.)

(e) Conclusion. Absent a showing of bad faith or gross negligence, defendants are immune under Health & Saf.C. 1799.107 for the acts or omissions of the 911 emergency dispatchers in their employ. (31 C.4th 1185.) Plaintiffs' pleadings and briefs failed to set forth any facts to support a finding of bad faith or gross negligence. Accordingly, the judgment must be affirmed. (31 C.4th 1186.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
B. Public Entities.
20. National Guard Operations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 344

[§ 344] National Guard Operations.

Govt.C. 816, enacted to conform to federal law, provides that a public entity is not liable for an injury arising out of any activity conducted by a California National Guard member pursuant to 32 U.S.C., §§316, 502, 503, 504, or 505, and compensated pursuant to the Federal Tort Claims Act. (See 14 Pacific L. J. 704; 52 A.L.R.4th 1095 [immunity of state National Guard members].)

In Chester v. California (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1002, 26 C.R.2d 575, plaintiffs, the wife and children of a deputy sheriff who was killed in a helicopter crash during a drug interdiction operation, sued defendant state, alleging that the accident was caused by the negligence of the helicopter pilot, who was a member of the California National Guard. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Under Govt.C. 815.2(b) (supra, §228), a public entity is not liable for the negligence of an employee if the employee is immune from liability, unless another statute creates liability. And Mil. & Vet.C. 392 (infra, §349) immunizes members of the state militia on active service for any act done in the performance of their duty. Because it is undisputed that members of the California National Guard are "members of the militia" within the meaning of the statute, the combined effect of Govt.C. 815.2(b) and Mil. & Vet.C. 392 is to immunize defendant for the pilot's negligence unless another statute expressly provides otherwise. (21 C.A.4th 1005.)

(b) Plaintiffs argued that Govt.C. 816 is such a statute. Specifically, they argued that this statute creates public entity liability for any act committed by a member of the National Guard where, as here, the victims are not compensated by the federal Government under the Federal Tort Claims Act. This argument is without merit. Prior to the enactment of Govt.C. 816, both the federal and state Governments were liable for the negligence of National Guard members who had not been called up to active federal service. Mil. & Vet.C. 392 was thus enacted to ensure that California would not be held liable for the torts of the members of the National Guard where federal liability applies and federal compensation is made. In other words, the statute was enacted to restrict liability, not to expand it. (21 C.A.4th 1006.)

(c) Also without merit is plaintiffs' contention that Govt.C. 816 is a superfluous law because at the time it was enacted the state was already immune from suit under Mil. & Vet.C. 392. When Govt.C. 816 was enacted, other statutes rendered the state liable for acts of National Guard personnel in particular situations, such as the negligent operation of a motor vehicle. Hence, the Legislature could have legitimately concluded that Govt.C. 816 was necessary to ensure that the state would no longer be held liable for injuries resulting from a National Guard member's negligent operation of a motor vehicle if such injuries were compensated by the federal Government. (21 C.A.4th 1008.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

1. In General.

a. Statutory Framework.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 345

[§ 345] Statutory Framework.

The Tort Claims Act (Govt.C. 810 et seq.) covers liability of public entities and public employees; most of the sections on particular liabilities and immunities deal with both. Hence, to a great extent, the treatment of liability of public employees must parallel that of liability of public entities, and cases involving employee liability generally involve entity liability as well. (See supra, §222 et seq.) (See C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §9.3 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §273; for definitions of "employee," "public employee," and other essential terms, see supra, §§219, 220; on liability of public entities for torts of their employees, see supra, 237 et seq.)

The Act deals separately with actions against public employees (see infra, §370), defense of these actions (see infra, §371 et seq.), and indemnification of employees (see infra, §375 et seq.).

Liability of public employees is treated not only in the Act, but in other state statutes as well. (See Educ.C. 44807, 44808, supra, §321 et seq. [school employees].) A public employee may also be subject to liability under federal civil rights legislation. (See 42 U.S.C., §1983 (civil relief for deprivation of federal constitutional or statutory rights under color of state law); for detailed discussion of liability under federal civil rights legislation, see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §816 et seq.; 3 *Cal. II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

1. In General.

b. Nature of Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 346

[§ 346] Nature of Liability.

(1) Same Liability as Private Person. At common law, there was no compelling policy that called for a broad immunity for ordinary ministerial officers, and these officers were liable for intentional or negligent wrongs. (See Silva v. MacAuley (1933) 135 C.A. 249, 258, 26 P.2d 887; People v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co. (1941) 42 C.A.2d 409, 411, 108 P.2d 923; Collenburg v. Los Angeles (1957) 150 C.A.2d 795, 803, 310 P.2d 989; Armstrong v. Belmont (1958) 158 C.A.2d 641, 322 P.2d 999; Rest.2d, Torts §895D; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 322; 2 A.L.R.3d 822 [personal liability of public officer for killing or injuring animal while carrying out statutory duties with respect to it]; 34 A.L.R.4th 228 [personal liability of public school teacher in negligence action for personal injury or death of student]; 35 A.L.R.4th 328 [personal liability in negligence action of public school employee, other than teacher or executive or administrative officer, for personal injury or death of student].)

The Tort Claims Act codified the preexisting law. "Except as otherwise provided by statute ... , a public employee is liable for injury caused by his act or omission to the same extent as a private person." (Govt.C. 820(a); see Lueter v. California (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1285, 1300, 115 C.R.2d 68 [because private person is not liable for spoliation of evidence, public employee is also not liable].)

(2) Specific Types of Liability. This basic rule is supplemented by a number of sections dealing with special kinds of liability of public employees. (See infra, §359 et seq.)

Also, a number of the general immunity sections (see infra, §348) contain provisos or exceptions recognizing liability, including the following:

(a) Govt.C. 820.4 [false arrest or false imprisonment excepted from general immunity for execution of laws].

(b) Govt.C. 820.8 [negligent or wrongful act or omission excepted from general immunity for acts of omissions of others].

(c) Govt.C. 821.8 [negligent or wrongful act or omission excepted from general immunity for authorized entry on property].

(d) Govt.C. 822 [negligent or wrongful act or omission excepted from general immunity for money stolen from custody].

(e) Govt.C. 821.4 [negligent inspection of entity's property excepted from general immunity for negligent inspection].

(f) Govt.C. 822.2 [actual fraud, corruption, or malice excepted from general immunity for misrepresentations].

Liability is also provided, under specified circumstances, under statutes outside the Tort Claims Act. (See supra, §345.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

1. In General.

c. Punitive Damages May Be Recoverable.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 347

[§ 347] Punitive Damages May Be Recoverable.

A public employee may be held liable for punitive damages. In Runyon v. Superior Court (1986) 187 C.A.3d 878, 232 C.R. 101, plaintiffs, former employees of a county marshal's department, sued defendant marshal and his assistants for damages for wrongful employment practices and violation of civil rights (42 U.S.C., §1983) and, on allegations of malice, prayed for punitive damages. The trial court granted defendant's motion to strike the allegations and the prayer for punitive damages, on the theory that Govt.C. 818 precludes such an award against a public entity (see supra, §230), and that the alleged conduct of the individual defendants is imputable to the county. Held, Govt.C. 818 was not a bar.

(a) Govt.C. 820(a) makes it clear that a public employee is liable to the same extent as a private person, and Govt.C. 818 sets forth an immunity only for public entities. (187 C.A.3d 881.)

(b) Govt.C. 825 on indemnification of employees (see infra, §375 et seq.), makes this even clearer: It expressly does not authorize an entity to pay that part of a judgment for punitive damages against the employee unless certain findings are made. "Thus, the statutory scheme now contains express recognition that individual public employees may be held liable for punitive or exemplary damages." (187 C.A.3d 882.)

(c) Govt.C. 820.2, providing immunity for discretionary acts (infra, §351), does not preclude the award. Where the section applies, no punitive damages may be recovered because the immunity is a complete defense to the entire cause of action. Thus, if it is eventually found that the acts or omissions alleged by plaintiffs were the result of the exercise of defendants' official discretion within the meaning of Govt.C. 820.2, that finding would preclude plaintiffs from recovering any damages. However, "the possible availability of that immunity does not justify the granting of a motion to strike a claim for punitive damages apart from a final determination the immunity exists." (187 C.A.3d 882.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

1. In General.

d. Nature of Immunities and Defenses.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 348

[§ 348] Nature of Immunities and Defenses.

Under Govt.C. 820(b), liability of a public employee established by the Tort Claims Act (see supra, §346) "is subject to any defenses that would be available to the public employee if he were a private person." (See Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 413, 134 C.R. 402 [general tort immunities applicable to private persons apply, when relevant, to public employees]; on defense of privilege or immunity generally, see supra, §131 et seq.) Also, succeeding sections list a large number of acts for which liability does not exist:

(1) Discretionary acts or omissions. Discretionary acts or omissions, regardless of whether the employee's discretion is abused. (Govt.C. 820.2; see infra, §351 et seq.)

(2) Execution or enforcement of law. Acts or omissions, exercising due care, in the execution or enforcement of any law. (Govt.C. 820.4.)

(3) Acting under invalid or inapplicable statute. Acts in good faith, without malice, and under apparent authority of an unconstitutional, invalid, or inapplicable statute (except to the extent that liability would have arisen had the statute been valid and applicable). (Govt.C. 820.6; see Pierson v. Ray (1967) 386 U.S. 547, 87 S.Ct. 1213, 1218, 18 L.Ed.2d 288, 296, supra, §166 [officers who arrested plaintiffs had good defense of reliance on statute believed valid though later held unconstitutional]; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 127, 147.) The aggrieved party may, of course, seek specific relief by injunction against enforcement. (See Legislative Committee Com. to Govt.C. 814; 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §98.)

(4) Acts or omissions of others. Acts or omissions of another person. (Govt.C. 820.8.)

(5) Adoption or failure to adopt or enforce enactment. Adoption of, failure to adopt, or failure to enforce a statute or regulation. (Govt.C. 821.) (See Roseville Community Hosp. v. California (1977) 74 C.A.3d 583, 588, 141 C.R. 593 [failure to enforce statute].)

(6) Action or inaction on license. Issuance, denial, suspension, or revocation of a permit, license, certificate, approval, order, or similar authorization; or failure or refusal to take that action. (Govt.C. 821.2; see O'Hagan v. Board of Zoning Adjustment (1974) 38 C.A.3d 722, 725, 113 C.R. 501, supra, §229 [revocation of permit]; Colome v. State Athletic Com. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1444, 1456, 55 C.R.2d 300 [state employees were immune from liability for denial of boxing license].)

(7) Inspection of private property. Failure to inspect, or inadequate or negligent inspection of, property to determine whether it violates a statute or regulation or constitutes a hazard to health or safety. (Govt.C. 821.4 [noting exception for property of the public entity]; see 70 A.L.R.3d 1239 [negligence in carrying out governmentally required inspection of motor vehicle].)

(8) Institution or prosecution of proceeding. Institution or prosecution of a judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of employment. (Govt.C. 821.6; see infra, §368.)

(9) Entry on property. Entry on property where entry is expressly authorized by law. (Govt.C. 821.8 [noting exception for negligent or wrongful act or omission]; see Cowing v. Torrance (1976) 60 C.A.3d 757, 761, 131 C.R. 830 [city inspector, authorized by ordinance to enter business premises to determine whether appropriate license had been obtained, entered by strategem--following mail carrier who had key; immunity applied]; cf. Ogborn v. Lancaster (2002) 101 C.A.4th 448, 462, 124 C.R.2d 238 [Govt.C. 821.8 did not apply to conversion claim].)

(10) Money stolen from custody. Theft of money from employee's official custody without employee's fault. (Govt.C. 822.)

(11) Misrepresentation. Misrepresentation, negligent or intentional, without actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice. (Govt.C. 822.2; see Schonfeld v. Vallejo (1975) 50 C.A.3d 401, 410, 123 C.R. 669 [immunity under Govt.C. 822.2 exists "unless, in addition to the essentials of common law deceit, a public employee is motivated by corruption or actual malice, i.e., a conscious intent to deceive, vex, annoy or harm the injured party in his business"]; Grenell v. Colton (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1335, 1339, 243 C.R. 463, supra, §241 [demurrer was properly sustained to complaint seeking recovery for county employees' misrepresentations respecting plaintiff's disability retirement pension that failed to allege fraud, corruption, or malice]; Brown v. Compton Unified School Dist. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 114, 116, 80 C.R.2d 171 [school district counselor who misrepresented that particular course satisfied NCAA requirements, thereby costing plaintiff basketball scholarship, was immune]; on similar immunity granted public entity by Govt.C. 818.8, without exception for actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice, see supra, §241.)

(12) Tax collection or administration. Institution of judicial or administrative proceeding for assessment or collection of a tax, or interpretation or application of a tax law. (Govt.C. 860.2.)

(13) Abatement of peril from gradual earth movement. Action taken to abate a peril from gradual earth movement. (Govt.C. 867; see supra, §285.)

In addition, a number of sections of the Act respecting immunities of public entities (see supra, §222 et seq.) apply also to public employees. (See, e.g., Govt.C. 831, supra, §279 and infra, §360 [highway accident caused by weather conditions].)

Immunities of public employees are likewise set forth in other statutes. The following are illustrative:

(a) C.C. 43.55, supra, §161 [arrest under warrant regular on face].

(b) C.C.P. 262.1, supra, §161 [execution of process regular on face].

(c) C.C.P. 1566 [payment or delivery of money or property to claimant, or other transaction under Unclaimed Property Law]. (See Harris v. Westly (2004) 116 C.A.4th 214, 224, 10 C.R.3d 343 [Controller was immune from suit arising from allegedly defective sale of escheated corporate stock pursuant to Unclaimed Property Law]; Fong v. Westly (2004) 117 C.A.4th 841, 851, 12 C.R.3d 76 [same].)

(d) Health & Saf.C. 25400, supra, §315 [action taken to protect against hazardous substance].

Even if an act is otherwise immune, liability arises if a reasonable employee knows, or should know, that the act violates a clearly established constitutional right. (Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. v. Superior Court (1994) 30 C.A.4th 713, 726, 36 C.R.2d 665, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §288; see Conway v. Pasadena Humane Soc. (1996) 45 C.A.4th 163, 177, 52 C.R.2d 777 [humane society officer who conducted warrantless search without plaintiffs' consent and in absence of exigent circumstances was not immune; reasonable officer would have known that search was unconstitutional].)

(3) Acting under invalid or inapplicable statute. See O'Toole v. Superior Court (2006) 140 C.A.4th 488, 503, 44 C.R.3d 531 [under Govt.C. 820.6, police officers were immune from liability for preventing plaintiffs from speaking or distributing literature on community college campus where they acted in good faith and without malice under apparent authority of district permit policy, even assuming that policy was unconstitutional]. (6) Action or inaction on license. See Sonoma AG Art, LLC v. Department of Food & Agriculture (2004) 125 C.A.4th 122, 125, 22 C.R.3d 468, Supp., supra, §287 [issuance of certificate finding that grapevines were diseased; "certificate," within Govt.C. 821.2, need not provide authority to act but may be mere official statement]; Richards v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (2006) 139 C.A.4th 304, 318, 42 C.R.3d 782 [under Govt.C. 821.2, Department of Alcoholic Beverages Control employees were immune from liability in restaurant owner's action challenging suspension of alcoholic beverage license; while immunity under statute is accorded only to discretionary activities, discretion in making alcoholic beverage licensing decisions is broad].

(11) Misrepresentation. See Kern v. Sparks (2007) 149 C.A.4th 11, 20, 56 C.R.3d 551 [immunity under Govt.C. 822.2 is not absolute; it applies only when misrepresentation involves interference with financial or commercial interests]; Curcini v. Alameda (2008) 164 C.A.4th 629, 649, 79 C.R.3d 383 [jail chaplains, who claimed fraud by sheriff's employees in relation to contract for chaplain services, failed to allege actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice to overcome immunity under Govt.C. 822.2; they alleged that defendants put contract out for bid to cover mismanagement of funds and rigged bidding process, but did not allege connection between corruption and harm they suffered].

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 349

[§ 349] Particular Employees.

Certain statutory liabilities or immunities relate to particular employees or their relatives. The following are illustrative:

(1) Local Officials and Board Members. "Members of city councils, mayors, members of boards of supervisors, members of school boards, members of governing boards of other local public entities, members of locally appointed boards and commissions, and members of locally appointed or elected advisory bodies are not vicariously liable for injuries caused by the act or omission of the public entity or advisory body." However, nothing in this statute "exonerates an official from liability for injury caused by that individual's own wrongful conduct," or "affects the immunity of any other public official." (Govt.C. 820.9.)

(2) Police Officer's Survivors. A police officer's widow, widower, and heirs are not liable individually for injury or death resulting from an act or omission of the officer in the line of duty, including an act or omission directly related to the officer's death. However, nothing in this statute precludes an action against the officer's estate. (Govt.C. 823.)

(3) Juvenile Court and Child Protection Workers. The civil immunity of juvenile court social workers, child protection workers, and other public employees authorized to conduct investigations or proceedings under the Juvenile Court Law (Welf.C. 200 et seq., 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §440 et seq.) does not extend to specified improper acts where committed with malice. (See Govt.C. 820.21, infra, §368.)

(4) National Guard Members. "Members of the militia on active service of the State" are not liable civilly or criminally for any act done in the performance of their duty. (Mil. & Vet.C. 392; on immunity of state for National Guard operations, see supra, §344.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

2. Discretionary Acts.

a. Immunity Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 351

[§ 351] Immunity Rule.

Even before enactment of the Tort Claims Act (see supra, §216), the rule had become established that government officials are not personally liable for their discretionary acts within the scope of their authority even though it is alleged that their conduct was malicious. (See Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 C.2d 577, 582, 311 P.2d 494; Jones v. Czapkay (1960) 182 C.A.2d 192, 198, 6 C.R. 182; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 400, 772; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 346.) The basis of the rule is that "[t]he subjection of officials, the innocent as well as the guilty, to the burden of a trial and to the danger of its outcome would impair their zeal in the performance of their functions, and it is better to leave the injury unredressed than to subject honest officials to the constant dread of retaliation." (Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary School Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 224, 229, 11 C.R. 97, 359 P.2d 465.)

This rule was codified on adoption of the Act. "Except as otherwise provided by statute, a public employee is not liable for an injury resulting from his act or omission where the act or omission was the result of the exercise of the discretion vested in him, whether or not such discretion be abused." (Govt.C. 820.2; 19 Hastings L. J. 561; 3 San Diego L. Rev. 7.)

Many cases deal with the rule and the test of a discretionary act. (See infra, §352 et seq.)

C. Public Employees.

2. Discretionary Acts.

b. What Constitutes Discretionary Act.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 352

[§ 352] What Constitutes Discretionary Act.

(1) Earlier Cases. The earlier decisions involving Govt.C. 820.2 (supra, §351) failed to establish reliable guidelines for application of the elusive distinction, i.e., between discretionary and ministerial, on which the statute rests.

In Ne Casek v. Los Angeles (1965) 233 C.A.2d 131, 43 C.R. 294, the court pointed out that discretionary acts have ministerial features once a decision is made, and most ministerial acts have discretionary aspects. Because mechanical classification is not possible, the category of a particular activity should be guided by the purpose of the discretionary immunity doctrine: Subjecting officials to the danger of torts trials would impair the performance of their functions. (233 C.A.2d 135.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1020; 39 So. Cal. L. Rev. 470.)

In Sava v. Fuller (1967) 249 C.A.2d 281, 57 C.R. 312, infra, §355, the court declared that immunity does not inevitably follow after an exercise of discretion, but is granted only where the act or omission "was the result" of the exercise of discretion. (249 C.A.2d 285.)

(2) Basic Policy Decision Test. In Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, the court took a new approach to this problem.

(a) A semantic inquiry is not helpful, for it is difficult to conceive of any official act that does not admit of some discretion. Hence, a literal or mechanical interpretation of the term is inappropriate, and the proper approach concentrates on policy considerations. (69 C.2d 789.)

(b) The historical justification for discretionary immunity was protection of public employees from "the spectre of extensive personal tort liability," which "would dampen the ardor of all but the most resolute, or the most irresponsible, in the unflinching discharge of their duties." (69 C.2d 790, quoting Learned Hand.) But this danger no longer exists: (1) A sued employee may, under Govt.C. 825 (infra, §375), call on the public entity to defend the employee and to pay any judgment rendered. (2) Under Govt.C. 825.4, 825.6 (infra, §375), an entity that is sued and held liable ordinarily has no indemnity against the employee unless the act was outside the scope of employment or the employee was guilty of actual fraud or malice. (69 C.2d 792.)

(c) An employee's concern over the potential liability of the employer has the wholesome effect of promoting careful work. (69 C.2d 792.)

The court then announced a practical test based on the separation of basic policy decisions (discretionary) and implementation of the decisions (ministerial), sometimes described as the distinction between "planning" and "operational" levels. (69 C.2d 793.) (For specific holding in case, see infra, §357.)

The Johnson test has been discussed and applied in many later cases. (See Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 447, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050; *Sanborn v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
C. Public Employees.
2. Discretionary Acts.
c. Causes of Action Subject to Immunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 353

[§ 353] Causes of Action Subject to Immunity.

Immunity for discretionary acts under Govt.C. 820.2 applies to statutory as well as common law causes of action. In Caldwell v. Montoya (1995) 10 C.4th 972, 42 C.R.2d 842, 897 P.2d 1320, plaintiff, a terminated school superintendent, sued defendant school board members for breach of contract and retaliatory discharge in violation of public policy, and also alleged that defendants discriminated against him on the basis of age and race in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt.C. 12900 et seq.; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §915 et seq.). The trial judge sustained defendants' demurrers. Held, the demurrers were properly sustained.

(a) Common law causes of action.

(1) Govt.C. 820.2 affords discretionary act immunity for plaintiff's common law causes of action. Applying the test established by Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, which distinguishes between "planning" (discretionary) and "operational" (ministerial) functions of government, votes by members of a school district's governing board whether to renew the superintendent's employment contract qualified as discretionary acts. (10 C.4th 981.)

(2) Johnson precludes a finding of immunity solely on grounds that the affected employee's general course of duties is "discretionary" and requires a showing that the specific conduct giving rise to the suit involved an actual exercise of discretion, i.e., a conscious balancing of risks and advantages. But Johnson does not require a strictly careful, thorough, formal, or correct evaluation. That standard would swallow an immunity designed to protect against claims of carelessness, malice, bad judgment, or abuse of discretion in the formulation of policy. Plaintiff's complaint contained allegations that the school board made an actual, conscious, and considered collective policy decision to replace plaintiff as superintendent. It admitted of no theory that the board acted unconsciously or failed to weigh pros and cons. (10 C.4th 983.)

(b) Statutory causes of action. Plaintiff could not proceed against defendants on the FEHA causes of action. He argued that the FEHA counts fell within the limiting phrase "[e]xcept as otherwise provided by statute" in Govt.C. 820.2. (10 C.4th 984.) No prior California decision has interpreted this phrase, and its meaning is not utterly clear on its face. (10 C.4th 984.) Under the construction proposed by plaintiff--that the phrase means that whenever a "statute" of general application creates a liability applicable to public employees, the exception has been satisfied--public employees might enjoy discretionary act immunity from common law forms of relief, but they would be stripped of that immunity for statutory causes of action. (10 C.4th 985.) However, the context of the Tort Claims Act indicates that a far more limited exception to immunity was intended:

(1) The intent of the Act is not to expand the rights of plaintiffs in suits against governmental entities or employees, but to confine potential governmental liability to rigidly delineated circumstances; governmental immunity is waived only if the various requirements of the Act are satisfied. The very purpose of the Act is to afford categories of immunity where, but for its provisions, public agencies or employees would otherwise be liable under general principles of law. (10 C.4th 985.)

(2) The Act's purpose, that specific immunities should prevail over general rules of actionable duty, is made particularly clear in the provisions dealing with public employees. Even though Govt.C. 820.2 uses the generic phrase "is not liable" to describe the situations where suit is forbidden, it does not grant or withhold its protection on the basis of whether the legal duty asserted arose by common law or by statute. Instead, the statute erects a separate barrier of immunity at a point beyond the threshold issue of legal duty. Therefore, public employees are immune for their discretionary acts, even those constituting breaches of actionable duty, unless a statute otherwise provides. It follows that where the immunity would otherwise apply, it cannot be abrogated by a statute that simply imposes a general legal duty or liability on persons, including public employees. Such a statute may render the employee liable for violations unless a specific immunity applies, but it does not remove the immunity. This further effect can only be achieved by a clear indication of legislative intent that statutory immunity is withheld or withdrawn in the particular case. (10 C.4th 985.)

(3) FEHA does not meet this test. It generally prohibits employment discrimination by both public and private "employer[s]" and provides civil remedies when its provisions are violated. But even if those liabilities extend to individuals, including public employees, as "agents" or "aiders and abettors" of culpable "employer[s]," FEHA contains no indication of an additional intent that individual public officials or employees may be sued despite a specific statutory immunity that would otherwise apply. Thus, FEHA does not abrogate the specific grant of immunity to public employees for discretionary acts provided by Govt.C. 820.2. (10 C.4th 986.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Taylor v. Los Angeles Dept. of Water & Power (2006) 144 C.A.4th 1216, 1238, 51 C.R.3d 206 [although Govt.C. 820.2 immunity extends, where applicable, to liabilities imposed by prohibitory statutes of general application such as FEHA (citing Caldwell v. Montoya (1995) 10 C.4th 972, 42 C.R.2d 842, 897 P.2d 1320, text, p. 562), city supervisor's alleged retaliatory acts against subordinate for opposing race discrimination against coworker were not discretionary within scope of immunity].

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 354

[§ 354] Immunity Applicable.

Various acts have been found discretionary and the Govt.C. 820.2 immunity applied. The following cases are illustrative:

Ramos v. Madera (1971) 4 C.3d 685, 693, 695, 94 C.R. 421, 484 P.2d 93, supra, §246 [planning and establishment of eligibility standards for county aid, followed by imposition of radically different standards on persons otherwise entitled to aid, was discretionary].

Nunn v. California (1984) 35 C.3d 616, 623, 200 C.R. 440, 677 P.2d 846 [formulation of regulations involving holding of public hearings and review of public comments; subjecting administrative agency to tort liability would interfere with deliberative process and contravene doctrine of separation of powers which underlies immunity].

Caldwell v. Montoya (1995) 10 C.4th 972, 982, 42 C.R.2d 842, 897 P.2d 1320, supra, §353 [votes by members of school district's governing board whether to renew superintendent's employment contract were discretionary acts].

Osborne v. Huntington Beach Union High School Dist. (1970) 5 C.A.3d 510, 514, 85 C.R. 793 [advice by one governmental agency to another, not to perform an unenforceable oral contract with a third person, was discretionary act].

Saltares v. Kristovich (1970) 6 C.A.3d 504, 518, 85 C.R. 866 [public administrator's determination not to make payments on mortgages and to allow estate property to be foreclosed was discretionary].

Kemmerer v. Fresno (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1426, 1438, 246 C.R. 609 [decision to institute disciplinary proceeding against civil service employee was policy decision involving discretion].

Alicia T. v. Los Angeles (1990) 222 C.A.3d 869, 882, 271 C.R. 513 [social worker's decision to institute dependency proceedings was discretionary].

Ronald S. v. San Diego (1993) 16 C.A.4th 887, 897, 20 C.R.2d 418 [preadoption work of county social service employees, as well as decision to approve adoption, constituted discretionary activity].

Masters v. San Bernardino County Employees Retirement Assn. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 30, 47, 37 C.R.2d 860 [adjudicatory decisions of county employees retirement association board members relating to claim for disability retirement benefits were discretionary].

Skinner v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1995) 37 C.A.4th 31, 39, 43 C.R.2d 384 [decision of school district not to expel student was discretionary].

Odello Bros. v. Monterey (1998) 63 C.A.4th 778, 792, 73 C.R.2d 903 [decision with respect to county flood plan and decision to breach designated levee in particular manner were policy choices].

Becerra v. Santa Cruz (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1450, 1458, 81 C.R.2d 165 [both determination to place child in particular foster home and whether to intervene and discontinue placement were immune discretionary acts].

Leyva v. Nielsen (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1061, 1065, 100 C.R.2d 236 [decisions of Chairman of Board of Prison Terms as to eligibility and suitability for parole were discretionary].

Ma v. San Francisco (2002) 95 C.A.4th 488, 517, 115 C.R.2d 544, supra, §343 [design and content of 911 emergency medical service were discretionary, although manner in which that program is administered by 911 dispatchers was ministerial].

Ogborn v. Lancaster (2002) 101 C.A.4th 448, 460, 124 C.R.2d 238 [decision declaring that certain property was to be demolished as nuisance was discretionary, although acts involving actual demolition were ministerial].

Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2002) 102 C.A.4th 627, 643, 125 C.R.2d 637 [placement of child with foster family was discretionary act].

Thompson v. Sacramento City Unified School Dist. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1352, 1361, 132 C.R.2d 748 [decision to readmit suspended student].

In Glickman v. Glasner (1964) 230 C.A.2d 120, 40 C.R. 719, defendant, enforcement officer for the state Koshur Food Law, sent a letter on the official letterhead of the State Department of Public Health to kosher food wholesalers, retailers, restaurateurs, and other interested persons, advising them that plaintiff, a slaughterer, was disqualified to act. Plaintiff sued for libel. Held, defendant's duties involved the exercise of discretion and he was immune from liability. (230 C.A.2d 125.)

In Widdows v. Koch (1968) 263 C.A.2d 228, 69 C.R. 464, plaintiff was engaged in the business of offering ambulances for hire. He advised city officials that without a subsidy he would have to stop, and when the subsidy was refused he cut the service to a single unit. The city's counsel then offered an ambulance operator in an adjoining community the privilege of stationing a unit on city property; and the city officials issued a strong directive, posted at the community hospital (a city-operated facility), that the new service was to be preferred. Plaintiff sued for damages for conspiracy to restrain trade. Held, judgments on demurrer, for defendant city officials and the new ambulance operator, affirmed. The city officials' actions were discretionary and immune from liability. (263 C.A.2d 238.)

In Bank of America v. Los Angeles (1969) 270 C.A.2d 165, 174, 75 C.R. 444, estate executors held a probate sale of a large parcel of land the bid of a particular corporation was received. The board of supervisors adopted resolutions to condemn the property, and directed a deputy county counsel to advise the court. The deputy county counsel appeared and made the announcement. Later the condemnation proceedings were abandoned. In this action against the county, plaintiffs contended that the announcement stifled higher bids, and the judge so found; but recovery was denied under Govt.C. 820.2. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed. The board's decision to notify the court was discretionary and carried out its public responsibility; the manner of announcement by the deputy counsel was an appropriate ministerial carrying out of that discretion. (270 C.A.2d 174.)

The following cases are also illustrative:

Kern v. Sparks (2007) 149 C.A.4th 11, 20, 56 C.R.3d 551 [sheriff's certification of department payrolls resulting in certain employees receiving unauthorized pay adjustments was discretionary; decision involved policy-making, not implementation of existing policy].

Jacqueline T. v. Alameda County Child Protective Services (2007) 155 C.A.4th 456, 465, 66 C.R.3d 157 [social worker's decisions relating to investigation of child abuse, removal of minor from home, and instigation of dependency proceedings are discretionary decisions subject to immunity under Govt.C. 820.2; holding is necessary to protect social workers in their vital work from harassment of civil suits and to prevent dilution of protection afforded to minors by dependency provisions of Welfare and Institutions Code].

Ortega v. Sacramento County Dept. of Health & Human Services (2008) 161 C.A.4th 713, 727, 74 C.R.3d 390 [social worker's release of child from protective custody to father, who stabbed child shortly thereafter, was discretionary act subject to immunity under Govt.C. 820.2; statute and regulation requiring investigation do not set forth ministerial duties, and social worker conducted investigation required by county and reached considered decision, although with inadequate information].

Curcini v. Alameda (2008) 164 C.A.4th 629, 648, 79 C.R.3d 383 [sheriff's employees' conduct in awarding contract for jail chaplain services to one organization and not awarding it to another involved discretionary acts immunizing them from fraud claims, notwithstanding allegations that employees falsely represented that they would evaluate bids fairly].

[§ 355] Immunity Not Applicable.

A number of cases, in varying circumstances, have found the discretionary acts immunity inapplicable. The following are illustrative:

Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 447, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050 [failure of publicly employed therapist to warn of dangers from mental patient is not a basic policy decision protected by immunity for discretionary acts].

Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 415, 134 C.R. 402, 556 P.2d 764 [governmental officer's discussions with public or press regarding functioning of office fall within category of routine, ministerial duties incident to normal operations of that office].

Connelly v. California (1970) 3 C.A.3d 744, 751, 84 C.R. 257, supra, §242 [while "determination to issue flood forecasts is a policy-making function, a discretionary activity within the scope of governmental immunity, ... gathering, evaluating and disseminating flood forecast information are administrative or ministerial activities outside the scope of governmental immunity"].

Elton v. Orange (1970) 3 C.A.3d 1053, 1058, 84 C.R. 27, supra, §246 [although it was policy decision to declare plaintiff a dependent child, negligent implementing acts of placement and supervision of home were ministerial].

Toney v. California (1976) 54 C.A.3d 779, 792, 126 C.R. 869 [press release by officials of state college defaming plaintiff professor; decision to issue press releases concerning college events was discretionary act, but timing of a particular release, its content, and manner of making were operational and not protected by immunity].

Susan A. v. Sonoma (1991) 2 C.A.4th 88, 96, 3 C.R.2d 27, infra, §578 [statement to press by psychologist retained by public defender to evaluate minor charged with criminal offense was not type of basic policy decision entitled to immunity].

Sandrini Bros. v. Voss (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1398, 1408, 9 C.R.2d 763 [seizure of crop treated with unregistered pesticide in violation of Food & Ag.C. 12648 was ministerial].

Scott v. Los Angeles (1994) 27 C.A.4th 125, 140, 32 C.R.2d 643 [social worker's noncompliance with Department of Social Services regulation requiring monthly visits to foster children and foster parents was ministerial].

Masters v. San Bernardino County Employees Retirement Assn. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 30, 48, 37 C.R.2d 860 [conduct of county employees retirement association administrator in withholding medical records relating to claim for disability retirement benefits from association's board was ministerial].

Zuniga v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (1995) 41 C.A.4th 82, 98, 48 C.R.2d 353, supra, §267 [housing authority's failure to warn tenants of criminal activity was ministerial].

Alejo v. Alhambra (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1180, 1192, 89 C.R.2d 768 [duty of police officer under Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (see infra, §140 et seq.) was ministerial].

Ma v. San Francisco (2002) 95 C.A.4th 488, 517, 115 C.R.2d 544, supra, §343 [although design and content of 911 emergency medical service were discretionary, manner in which that program is administered by 911 dispatchers was ministerial].

Ogborn v. Lancaster (2002) 101 C.A.4th 448, 460, 124 C.R.2d 238 [while decision declaring that certain property was to be demolished as nuisance was discretionary, acts involving actual demolition were ministerial].

In Sava v. Fuller (1967) 249 C.A.2d 281, 57 C.R. 312, plaintiff's 4-year-old child was sick. The doctor requested the state botanist to analyze a plant substance the child might have ingested. In this complaint for wrongful death of the child, plaintiff alleged that the state botanist negligently examined it and identified it as "toxic," and that the doctor treated the child on that basis, whereas the child actually was suffering from bronchopneumonia, and died of this the next day. Held, judgment for defendant state botanist and the state on demurrer reversed. The state botanist exercised discretion by agreeing to analyze the plant substance, but the exercise of discretion ended at that point. Government may, in its sole and uninhibited discretion, reasonably or arbitrarily (even maliciously) exercise, extend, or withhold its services to its citizens, but once the determination has been made that a service will be furnished and the service is undertaken, public policy demands (except when the Legislature specifically decrees otherwise) that government be held to the same standard of care the law requires of its private citizens in the performance of duties imposed by law or assumed. (249 C.A.2d 290.)

3. Police Officers.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 356

[§ 356] Police Officers.

Special immunity provisions apart from the general discretionary acts immunity address a number of specific types of police activity. (See Govt.C. 844.6 (supra, §292 et seq.) [injuries by or to prisoner]; Govt.C. 845 (supra, §302) [failure to provide police protection]; Govt.C. 845.8 (supra, §296 et seq.) [injury caused by escaped prisoner, escaped arrestee, or person resisting arrest]; Govt.C. 846 (supra, §305) [failure to make arrest]; Veh.C. 17004.7 (supra, §§336, 337) [vehicular pursuit where written pursuit policy]; on liability of police officers generally, see infra, §361.)

However, the applicability of Govt.C. 820.2 is also sometimes in issue. (See Ne Casek v. Los Angeles (1965) 233 C.A.2d 131, 137, 43 C.R. 294, supra, §352 [complaint alleging negligence in permitting arrestees to escape; Govt.C. 820.2 applied]; McCarthy v. Frost (1973) 33 C.A.3d 872, 875, 109 C.R. 470 [decision of highway patrolman to investigate or not investigate an accident is exercise of discretion; Govt.C. 820.2 applies]; Gibson v. Pasadena (1978) 83 C.A.3d 651, 659, 148 C.R. 68, supra, §332 [although officers exercised discretion in determining to pursue vehicle, speed, and other conduct during pursuit were ministerial]; Watts v. Sacramento (1982) 136 C.A.3d 232, 186 C.R. 154 [sheriff's officers' ordering plaintiffs to leave M's property, where dispute arose as to plaintiffs' right to grow and harvest crops there, was exercise of discretion, and county was not liable for M's alleged conversion of crops]; Sullivan v. Sacramento (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1070, 1081, 235 C.R. 844 [police dispatcher's decision to phone victim after neighbors' reports of cries for help was discretionary]; Wallace v. Los Angeles (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1385, 1403, 16 C.R.2d 113, supra, §291; [officer's decisions to refrain from either warning homicide witness of dangers involved or offering her protection were ministerial]; Johnson v. Ventura (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1400, 35 C.R.2d 150, supra, §319 [release by police of escaped mental patient was discretionary]; 15 Santa Clara Lawyer 467; 39 So. Cal. L. Rev. 470; on discretion in rendering assistance to stranded motorist, see Govt.C. 820.25, supra, §309.)

In Scruggs v. Haynes (1967) 252 C.A.2d 256, 60 C.R. 355, a police officer, claiming that plaintiff driver involved in a collision was obstructing his attempt to arrest the other driver, beat plaintiff severely. Plaintiff sued for damages for assault and battery. Held, judgment for plaintiff against the officer and the city affirmed. Under the pre-Tort Claims Act common law rule, a peace officer making an arrest was liable to the person arrested for using unreasonable force (252 C.A.2d 264), and no case has applied the discretionary immunity doctrine to this situation. (252 C.A.2d 266.) To give immunity would encourage police brutality. (252 C.A.2d 267.)

In McCorkle v. Los Angeles (1969) 70 C.2d 252, 74 C.R. 389, 449 P.2d 453, plaintiff's automobile collided with another vehicle. A police officer, on arriving at the scene, asked plaintiff to show him the point of impact, and plaintiff followed him into the street. Though aware of traffic approaching when the green light was on, the officer did not use flares, and plaintiff was struck by another vehicle. Held, judgment against city affirmed. The city argued that the officer had no duty to investigate the accident, and only did so in the exercise of discretion. This assumption was questioned, but accepted because the record did not contain proof of that duty. (70 C.2d 261, footnote 8.) However, it was not a defense. Even though an act is discretionary, liability will be imposed where, after the discretion is exercised by doing the act, the employee is negligent in performing it. (70 C.2d 261.) Because the essential requirement of Govt.C. 820.2--a causal connection between the exercise of discretion and the injury--did not exist, the statutory immunity does not apply. (70 C.2d 262.)

A claim for property damage from police action should be evaluated under the provisions of the Tort Claims Act, rather than those of the inverse condemnation law. (Customer Co. v. Sacramento (1995) 10 C.4th 368, 391, 41 C.R.2d 658, 895 P.2d 900, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1142 [store owner's claim for damages caused by police efforts to arrest suspect].)

4. Parole Officers.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 357

[§ 357] Parole Officers.

In Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, a parole agent of the California Youth Authority asked plaintiff and her husband to provide a foster home for a 16-year-old boy. They did, and, 5 days later, the boy assaulted plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that the state, through the Youth Authority, acted negligently in placing a boy with homicidal tendencies and a record of violence and cruelty, with knowledge of these propensities and without disclosure. The state contended that it had discretionary immunity and owed no duty of care to plaintiff. Held, summary judgment for defendant state reversed. The legal duty to warn of the foreseeable danger was clear under established law (see infra, §905). As to discretionary immunity, the court first undertook an elaborate examination of the policies involved and then applied the basic policy decision test laid down by the court (see supra, §252):

(a) The decision to place the youth on parole was reached by weighing the risks and benefits. This was a discretionary act. (69 C.2d 795.)

(b) After that policy decision was reached, no further discretion was involved. The state's contention that the parole agent had to exercise professional judgment as to what part of the boy's record should be communicated was unsound. The determination whether to warn the foster parents was "at the lowest, ministerial rung of official action." Thus, the Govt.C. 820.2 immunity was inapplicable. (69 C.2d 795.)

(c) Two specific immunities urged by defendant are likewise inapplicable. The first is Govt.C. 845.8 (determination to parole or release prisoner; supra, §298). Once the discretionary determination is made, the role of Govt.C. 845.8 ends, and "subsequent negligent actions, such as the failure to give reasonable warnings to the foster parents actually selected, are subject to legal redress." (69 C.2d 799.) The second is Govt.C. 818.8 (misrepresentation by employee; supra, §348). This section deals only with the common law tort of deceit--interference with financial or commercial interests. (69 C.2d 799.) (See Morgan v. Yuba (1964) 230 C.A.2d 938, 942, 41 C.R. 508, supra, §299 [failure to give promised warning of release on bail of dangerous prisoner was ministerial act]; 58 Cal. L. Rev. 303; 60 Cal. L. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, text, p. 570].

C. Public Employees.

2. Discretionary Acts.

d. Illustrations.

5. Public Defenders.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 358

[§ 358] Public Defenders.

Barner v. Leeds (2000) 24 C.4th 676, 102 C.R.2d 97, 13 P.3d 704, deals with whether the immunity for discretionary acts applies to a public defender representing a defendant in a criminal case. Plaintiff had been convicted of bank robbery. On the basis of later evidence, the original conviction was set aside, and plaintiff was found factually innocent of the charge. However, by this time, plaintiff had spent approximately a year in prison. Plaintiff filed the present malpractice action alleging that his conviction and incarceration resulted from defendant's negligence in failing to pursue various leads. Concluding that a deputy public defender is immune under Govt.C. 820.2, the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendant, but the Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed; the entry of summary judgment for defendant was error.

(a) The term "discretionary," as used in Govt.C. 820.2, refers to basic policy decisions, not to operational decisions, even though the latter may involve the use of discretion (as that term is used in everyday language). (24 C.4th 685.)

(b) With respect to whether the application of a professional duty of care is a basic policy decision or an operational decision, Tarasoff v. Regents of University of California (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 551 P.2d 334; 131 C.R. 14, infra, §1050, held that a psychologist's decision whether to warn a third person was an operational decision. And the fact that Govt.C. 855.6 (supra, §317) creates immunity for public health officials suggests that providing health services does not constitute "discretion" within the meaning of Govt.C. 820.2, because otherwise the immunity set forth in Govt.C. 855.6 would have been unnecessary. Finally, it has been held that a public employee's initial decision whether to provide professional services involves discretion under Govt.C. 820.2, but that once these services are undertaken, the employee is not immune for the negligent performance of duties not amounting to policy or planning decisions. (24 C.4th 686, citing Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352.)

(c) The same analysis applies to public defenders. Only the initial decision to provide representation is a policy decision covered by Govt.C. 820.2; the actual representation, although requiring the exercise of considerable skill and judgment, consists of noncovered operational decisions. (24 C.4th 688.)

(d) Allegations of deficient performance of counsel are also encountered in connection with claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment, and the standard applied there also applies in civil malpractice actions. Hence, subjecting public defenders to civil tort liability for the same conduct that constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel does not add measurably to the demands already imposed on all criminal defense attorneys or involve an unseemly interference by the judiciary in the policy decisions of a coordinate branch. (24 C.4th 689.)

(e) Plaintiff contended that public defender immunity could be based on the fact that public defenders are often at odds with their clients and thus run a greater risk of being accused of malpractice should they provide zealous representation. This argument is without merit. Both public defenders and private attorneys owe the same duty of care to their clients. If sued personally, public defenders, in the absence of bad faith, may obtain both defense and indemnity from their employers. Finally, a public defender's exposure to liability for malpractice is lessened by the requirement that a defendant in a criminal action must prove actual innocence by a preponderance of the evidence. (24 C.4th 690.)

a. Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 359

[§ 359] Liability.

A plaintiff seeking to recover for injuries resulting from a dangerous condition of public property must first establish the basic elements of liability, i.e., public property, dangerous condition, foreseeable risk of injury, and proximate causation. (Govt.C. 840.2; on elements of governmental liability for dangerous conditions generally, see supra, §249 et seq.) The plaintiff must then show either of the following:

(1) Wrongful Act. That the dangerous condition "was directly attributable wholly or in substantial part to a negligent or wrongful act of the employee" and the employee "had the authority and the funds and other means immediately available to take alternative action which would not have created the dangerous condition." (Govt.C. 840.2(a).)

(2) Failure To Take Protective Measures. That the employee "had the authority and it was his responsibility to take adequate measures to protect against the dangerous condition at the expense of the public entity and the funds and other means for doing so were immediately available to him," and the employee "had actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition ... a sufficient time prior to the injury to have taken measures to protect against the dangerous condition." (Govt.C. 840.2(b).)

An employee has actual notice if the employee had "actual personal knowledge of the existence of the condition and knew or should have known of its dangerous character." (Govt.C. 840.4(a).)

An employee has constructive notice "only if the plaintiff establishes (1) that the public employee had the authority and it was his responsibility as a public employee to inspect the property of the public entity or to see that inspections were made to determine whether dangerous conditions existed in the public property, (2) that the funds and other means for making such inspections or for seeing that such inspections were made were immediately available to the public employee, and (3) that the dangerous condition had existed for such a period of time and was of such an obvious nature that the public employee, in the exercise of his authority and responsibility with due care, should have discovered the condition and its dangerous character." (Govt.C. 840.4(b).) (See Govt.C. 840 [except as provided in Govt.C. 840 et seq., public employee is not liable for injury caused by condition of public property existing because of employee's act or omission within scope of employment]; on governmental liability for dangerous condition of public property generally, [§ 360] Immunities.

A public employee's specific immunities and defenses in connection with liability for dangerous conditions, generally similar to those of a public entity, relate to the following:

- (1) Advance approval of a reasonable plan. (Govt.C. 830.6; see supra, §280.)
- (2) Failure to provide traffic signals or devices. (Govt.C. 830.8; see supra, §264.)
- (3) The effect of weather conditions on the use of streets and highways. (Govt.C. 831; see supra, §279.)
- (4) Natural conditions of unimproved and unoccupied tidelands, beds of navigable waters, or school lands. (Govt.C. 831.6; see supra, §256.)
- (5) Improper use of a reservoir, canal, drain, or an unlined flood control channel or adjacent groundwater recharge spreading grounds, except for a concealed trap or attractive nuisance. (Govt.C. 831.8; see supra, §273.)
- (6) Reasonableness of the act or omission creating the condition or of the action taken to protect against the risk of injury. (Govt.C. 840.6; on comparable provision governing public entities, see Govt.C. 835.4, supra, §272.)
- (7) Protective measures against earth movement. (Govt.C. 867; see supra, §285.)

The employee has the general statutory immunities (supra, §348) and any defenses which would be available to a private person (supra, §346).

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

4. Police and Correctional Activities.

a. Liabilities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 361

[§ 361] Liabilities.

Liabilities of public employees specifically relating to police and correctional activities, given indirect recognition as exceptions in the immunity sections relating to those activities and generally paralleling liabilities of the public entity (see supra, §290), are for the following:

- (1) Negligent or wrongful acts or omissions causing injury to a prisoner. (Govt.C. 844.6(d).)
- (2) Dangerous condition of a prison, jail, or other correctional facility. (Govt.C. 845.2; see supra, §290.)
- (3) Intentional and unjustifiable interference with a prisoner's right to judicial determination of the legality of confinement. (Govt.C. 845.4; see supra, §306.)
- (4) Failure to furnish medical care to a prisoner known to be in immediate need. (Govt.C. 845.6; see supra, §295.)

However, litigation regarding police or correctional activities often arises in situations outside the scope of these or other statutory immunities. Where no immunity applies, the public officer is liable, as in other cases, to the same extent as a private individual, for negligent or intentional conduct that results in injury. (See supra, §346.) Also, a duty of care may arise from a special relationship between the entity or officer and the victim or a third person. (See infra, §291.) (On governmental liability for police and correctional activities generally, see supra, §290 et seq.)

b. Immunities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 362

[§ 362] Immunities.

Immunities available to public employees engaged in law enforcement and correctional activities parallel those of the public entity (see supra, §292 et seq.). They are as follows:

(1) Failure to establish a police department or to provide police protection service. (Govt.C. 845; see supra, §302.)

(2) Failure to provide a prison, jail, or other correctional facility or sufficient equipment or personnel in that facility, unless a dangerous condition results. (Govt.C. 845.2; see supra, §302; 73 Harv. L. Rev. 600 [warden not liable for negligent assignment of prisoner to dormitory where fellow inmates murdered him].)

(3) Interference with a prisoner's right to judicial determination of the legality of the confinement, unless intentional and unjustifiable. (Govt.C. 845.4; see supra, §306.)

(4) Failure to furnish medical care for a prisoner, absent a known immediate need. (Govt.C. 845.6; see supra, §295.)

(5) Determination to parole or release a prisoner. (Govt.C. 845.8(a); see supra, §298; 5 A.L.R.4th 773 [public officer's immunity from liability for injuries caused by negligently released individual].)

(6) Injury caused by an escaping or escaped prisoner or arrested person, or by a person resisting arrest. (Govt.C. 845.8(b); see supra, §§296, 297.)

(7) Injury caused by failure to arrest or retain custody. (Govt.C. 846; see supra, §305.)

The employee also has the general statutory immunities (supra, §348) and any defenses that would be available to a private person (supra, §346).

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 363

[§ 363] Fire Protection.

(1) Liabilities. The only specific liabilities of public employees that are recognized in the provisions governing fire protection activities are for motor vehicle torts under Veh.C. 17000 et seq. (Govt.C. 850.4; see infra, §366) and wilful misconduct in transporting or arranging transportation to a doctor or hospital of a person injured by a fire or fire protection operation (Govt.C. 850.8). However, the employee is generally liable, as in other cases, to the same extent as a private person for negligent or intentional conduct that results in injury. (See supra, §346.)

(2) Immunities. The immunities are the same as those of the entity (see supra, §310 et seq.):

(a) Injuries received in fighting a fire. (Govt.C. 850.4; see supra, §311 et seq.)

(b) Failure to establish a fire department or provide fire protection service. (Govt.C. 850; see supra, §310.)

(c) Failure to provide sufficient personnel, equipment, or facilities. (Govt.C. 850.2; see supra, §310.)

(d) The condition of equipment, except where a motor vehicle tort is involved. (Govt.C. 850.4; see supra, §310.)

(e) Transportation to a doctor or hospital of an injured person, absent wilful misconduct. (Govt.C. 840.8; see supra, §310.)

[§ 364] Liabilities.

Liabilities of public employees that are recognized in the provisions declaring immunities concerning medical, hospital, and public health activities (see infra, §365) are for the following:

(1) Negligent or wrongful acts or omissions causing injury to an inpatient of a mental institution. (Govt.C. 854.8(d).)

(2) Intentional and unjustifiable interference with the right of an inmate of a medical facility to judicial determination of the legality of the confinement. (Govt.C. 855.2; see supra, §316.)

(3) Negligent or wrongful acts in prescribing or administering treatment for mental illness or addiction. (Govt.C. 855.8(c), (d).)

(4) Negligent or wrongful acts or omissions in carrying out or failing to carry out (a) a determination to confine or not to confine a person for mental illness or addiction; (b) the terms or conditions of confinement; (c) a determination to parole, grant a leave of absence to, or release a person from confinement. (Govt.C. 856(c).)

(5) Failure to admit a person to a public medical facility where this is a mandatory duty under statute or regulation. (Govt.C. 856.4; see supra, §316.)

(6) Negligence in examination or diagnosis for the purpose of treatment, or negligent injury in the course of an examination. (Govt.C. 855.6 and Legislative Committee Comment; see supra, §316.)

Specific immunities available to public employees engaged in medical, hospital, and public health activities, in part paralleling those of public entities (see supra, §317), are as follows:

(1) Interference with a medical facility inmate's right to a judicial determination of the legality of the confinement (unless intentional and unjustifiable and determined to have been illegal). (Govt.C. 855.2; see supra, §§316, 317.)

(2) Injury caused by a discretionary decision to institute or not to institute quarantine or other disease prevention or control measures, or by an act or omission in carrying out such a decision with due care. (Govt.C. 855.4; see supra, §317.)

(3) Injury caused by failure to make an adequate physical or mental examination to determine whether a hazard to health or safety exists. (Govt.C. 855.6; see supra, §§317, 318.)

(4) Injury resulting from diagnosing or failing to diagnose mental illness or addiction, or failing to prescribe for it. (Govt.C. 855.8(a), (b); see supra, §317.)

(5) Unless negligent or wrongful, (a) a determination whether to confine a person for mental illness or addiction, the terms of confinement, or whether to parole, grant a leave of absence to, or release such a person, or (b) an act or omission in carrying out this determination. (Govt.C. 856; see supra, §§317, 319.)

(6) Injury caused by an escaping or escaped person confined for mental illness or addiction, or death or injury suffered by the escaper. (Govt.C. 856.2; see supra, §§317, 320.)

(7) Failure to admit a person to a medical facility (unless a mandatory duty exists). (Govt.C. 856.4; see supra, §317.)

(8) Injury caused by an act or omission of a participant in the National Influenza Program of 1976. (Govt.C. 856.6(a); see supra, §317.)

The employee also has the general statutory immunities (supra, §348) and any defenses that would be available to a private person (supra, §346).

[§ 366] Operation of Motor Vehicles.

A public employee operating a motor vehicle is generally liable, as in other cases, to the same extent as a private person for negligent or intentional conduct that results in injury (supra, §346).

Drivers of authorized emergency vehicles, when on emergency calls, are exempt from certain speed restrictions and other traffic rules, provided that they sound their sirens "as may be reasonably necessary" and display front red lights as a warning and that due care is exercised. (Veh.C. 21055, 21056; see supra, §334.) Also, drivers are given complete immunity from liability arising from operation of an emergency vehicle while "responding to an emergency call" or "in the immediate pursuit of an actual or suspected violator of the law," but not when "returning from a fire alarm or other emergency call." (Veh.C. 17004; see supra, §334.) The public entity, however, may be liable in these circumstances. (See supra, §335.) (On cases concerning governmental liability for motor vehicle torts, see supra, §331 et seq.)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

8. Improper Expenditure of Public Funds.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 367

[§ 367] Improper Expenditure of Public Funds.

Stanson v. Mott (1976) 17 C.3d 206, 130 C.R. 697, 551 P.2d 1, involved the basis of liability of an executive officer for improper expenditure of public funds. Plaintiff, in a taxpayer's suit, alleged that defendant, director of the Department of Parks and Recreation, authorized expenditure of public funds to promote the passage of a bond issue to provide for future acquisition of park land and recreational and historical facilities by state and municipal authorities. The complaint sought a personal judgment requiring defendant to repay the funds. The governing statute (Pub.Res.C. 512) authorized publications only for the purpose of "disseminating information" regarding a bond issue, rather than for promoting a partisan position. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

(a) Expenditures cannot be sustained unless the power is clearly stated, and out-of-state decisions hold that use of public funds for partisan campaign purposes is improper. (17 C.3d 217.) Hence, if plaintiff can prove the allegation of improper campaign expenditures, he is entitled to declaratory or injunctive relief or both. (17 C.3d 222.)

(b) In Mines v. Del Valle (1927) 201 C. 273, 257 P. 530, the court held that, in addition, individual public officers were personally liable for the improper expenditures despite their good faith belief in the propriety of their action. This view is no longer sound. The line between proper and improper expenditures is not always clear; and imposition of strict liability on public officials who in good faith, but mistakenly, authorize improper expenditures is incompatible with subsequent legislative developments in related areas, e.g., the indemnification provisions of the Tort Claims Act. (17 C.3d 224, 225.) Hence, Mines is overruled on this point. (17 C.3d 226.)

(c) The proper standard is not strict liability or fraud, but due care, i.e., "reasonable diligence, in authorizing the expenditure of public funds." Because the complaint did not allege failure to exercise due care, plaintiff should be permitted to amend. (17 C.3d 227.) (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 482.)

The reasoning and tests of Stanson v. Mott were followed in Miller v. Miller (1978) 87 C.A.3d 762, 151 C.R. 197, an action challenging expenditure of public funds by the California Commission on the Status of Women. The complaint alleged, and the commission acknowledged, that it was actively involved in the promotion of ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §762 et seq.). Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed. There was a triable issue of fact whether the commission's activities involved improper election campaigning. (87 C.A.3d 767, 772.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

9. Institution or Prosecution of Judicial or Administrative Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 368

[§ 368] Institution or Prosecution of Judicial or Administrative Proceeding.

(1) In General. A public employee is not liable "for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his employment, even if he acts maliciously and without probable cause." (Govt.C. 821.6; see Brown v. Los Angeles (1968) 267 C.A.2d 849, 851, 73 C.R. 364 [city was immune under Govt.C. 821.6 from liability for plaintiff's discontinuance of his business pursuant to erroneous notice that business violated zoning ordinance and should be shut down]; Stearns v. Los Angeles (1969) 275 C.A.2d 134, 137, 79 C.R. 757 [deputy coroner improperly performed autopsy on plaintiff's wife, resulting in unfounded murder charge against plaintiff]; Blackburn v. Los Angeles (1974) 42 C.A.3d 175, 178, 116 C.R. 622 [rejecting constitutional challenge to Govt.C. 821.6]; Scannell v. Riverside (1984) 152 C.A.3d 596, 604, 199 C.R. 644 [county detective who prosecuted plaintiff despite previously granting him immunity from prosecution was within Govt.C. 821.6]; Kemmerer v. Fresno (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1426, 1436, 246 C.R. 609 [civil service disciplinary proceeding is "administrative proceeding" under Govt.C. 821.6]; Ronald S. v. San Diego (1993) 16 C.A.4th 887, 899, 20 C.R.2d 418 [adoption proceedings, being judicial in nature, are covered by Govt.C. 821.6]; Gensburg v. Miller (1994) 31 C.A.4th 512, 518, 37 C.R.2d 97, supra, §181 [employees of state and county departments of social services were immune from liability for actions taken in connection with suspension of foster home license]; Javor v. Taggart (2002) 98 C.A.4th 795, 807, 120 C.R.2d 174 [employees of Uninsured Employers Fund, in seeking reimbursement from illegally uninsured employers after state pays benefits to injured employee, are within immunity granted by Govt.C. 821.6]; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 429; 100 A.L.R.5th 341 [immunity of law enforcement officer from liability in defamation action]; cf. Ogborn v. Lancaster (2002) 101 C.A.4th 448, 462, 124 C.R.2d 238 [where complaint did not allege that public employee acted improperly with respect to proceedings declaring certain property a nuisance, but instead claimed that inhabitants' private belongings were destroyed, there was no Govt.C. 821.6 immunity]; on liability for malicious prosecution generally, see infra, §469 et seq.)

Govt.C. 821.6 is given an expansive interpretation to further the rationale of the immunity, i.e., to allow the free exercise of the prosecutor's discretion and to protect against harassment in the performance of duties related to the prosecution process. (Ingram v. Flippo (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1280, 1291, 89 C.R.2d 60, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, Supp., §25 [statements in press release that district attorney had investigated alleged open meeting violations and that, although no charges were to be filed, there had been some minor violations, were immune as part of prosecution process within meaning of Govt.C. 821.6].)

The immunity is not limited to conduct leading up to the institution of the proceeding, but includes conduct during and after it. (Alicia T. v. Los Angeles (1990) 222 C.A.3d 869, 883, 271 C.R. 513; see Jenkins v. Orange (1989) 212 C.A.3d 278, 284, 260 C.R. 645 [social worker was immune from liability for negligence both in investigating child abuse report and in weighing and presenting evidence]; Cappuccio v. Harmon (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1496, 1499, 257 C.R. 4 [investigating officer who, after prosecution for underweighing squid, published incorrect figures was not liable for defamation].)

Any injury inducing conduct is within the scope of the immunity. Thus, it extends to both discretionary and ministerial acts. (Kaplan v. LaBarbera (1997) 58 C.A.4th 175, 180, 67 C.R.2d 903 [public employees were immune for both discretionary and ministerial acts in connection with collecting child support].)

The immunity is not confined to the sorts of proceedings that are the traditional subject of malicious prosecution actions. For example, the immunity has been applied to actions based on the publication of disciplinary actions taken. (See Citizens Capital Corp. v. Spohn (1982) 133 C.A.3d 887, 889, 184 C.R. 269 [newspaper publicity of plaintiffs' alleged improper operation of collection agencies].) In Kayfetz v. California (1984) 156 C.A.3d 491, 203 C.R. 33, the state Board of Medical Quality Assurance and its diversion program administrator published an official "Action Report" distributed to hospitals and doctors concerning plaintiff's participation in a drug rehabilitation program for impaired physicians. Plaintiff sued the state, alleging that the published report was inaccurate and in violation of promised confidentiality. Held, defendants were immune.

(a) Citizens Capital Corp. v. Spohn, supra, supports this broad application of the immunity statute. Publication of disciplinary action is part of a statutory scheme for enforcement of the Medical Practice Act. (156 C.A.3d 497.)

(b) Plaintiff contended that the statute did not apply because the act of which he complained did not arise from institution of a proceeding but rather from an unauthorized publication 5 months after the proceeding was dismissed. But the proceeding was not dismissed at the time of publication; dismissal occurred the following year, after successful rehabilitation. Publication was part of an ongoing proceeding, contemplating continued diversion program participation and eventual dismissal. (156 C.A.3d 498.)

If the action is based on contract, however, the immunity of Govt.C. 821.6 does not apply. (Roe v. California (2001) 94 C.A.4th 64, 69, 113 C.R.2d 900 [action alleging that defendant public entities violated confidentiality clause of settlement agreement terminating disciplinary proceeding against plaintiff].)

(2) Effect of Misrepresentations. In Tur v. Los Angeles (1996) 51 C.A.4th 897, 59 C.R.2d 470, plaintiff sued defendant public employees for malicious prosecution based on misrepresentations regarding an aviation incident. The trial judge instructed, in accordance with Govt.C. 822.2 (supra, §348), that defendants were immune for misrepresentations made in the scope of their employment, unless guilty of actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice (as was the case here). The judge rejected an instruction based on Govt.C. 821.6 that defendants were immune even if they acted maliciously and without probable cause. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; Govt.C. 821.6 controls. The source of immunity is Govt.C. 821.6, because both that statute and the present action involve malicious prosecution. It thus makes little difference whether a statute (Govt.C. 822.2) that is not the source of immunity creates an exception to the general rule of immunity where fraudulent misrepresentations are involved. (51 C.A.4th 901.) In addition, Govt.C. 822.2 and its companion statute, Govt.C. 818.8 (supra, §241), were enacted to grant qualified immunity for misrepresentations. They are concerned with common law deceit, a wrong that is different from malicious prosecution. (51 C.A.4th 902.)

(3) Immunity Not Limited to Claims by Target of Proceeding. In Amylou R. v. Riverside (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1205, 34 C.R.2d 319, plaintiff was raped by an individual who also raped and murdered her friend. During the course of the investigation, an antagonistic relationship developed between plaintiff and the investigating officers, and the present action, which included claims for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, followed. Held, the officers were immune from liability; Govt.C. 821.6 bars liability for any injury caused by the prosecution of the prior judicial or administrative proceeding, even if the person suffering the injury is not the target of that prosecution.

(a) Govt.C. 821.6 defines claims as to which a public employee is immune on the basis of how they were caused, not on the basis of the identity of the person bringing the claim. Nothing in the language of the statute suggests that immunity be limited to claims made by a target of the former proceeding. (28 C.A.4th 1211.)

(b) Public policy is against limiting the scope of Govt.C. 821.6. "That public policy of trying to prevent an officer's decisions from being tainted by his or her concern over the possibility of subsequent claims for damages does not apply solely to claims made by the target of the prior proceeding. Claims made by persons who were injured by the officer's decisions but who were not the actual target of the investigation or prosecution have the same potential to inhibit the officer from following his or her professional judgment and thus to interfere with the evenhanded enforcement of the law." (28 C.A.4th 1213.) (See Baughman v. California (1995) 38 C.A.4th 182, 190, 45 C.R.2d 82 [following Amylou R. and holding that campus police officers acting under search warrant in investigation of campus computer theft were immune from liability for destruction of floppy disks, even though owner of disks was not target of investigation].)

(4) Proceedings Under Juvenile Court Law. Under Govt.C. 820.21(a), the immunity of juvenile court social workers, child protection workers, and other public employees authorized to conduct investigations or proceedings under the Juvenile Court Law (Welf.C. 200 et seq., 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §440 et seq.) does not extend to the following acts if committed with malice:

- (a) Perjury.
- (b) Fabrication of evidence.
- (c) Failure to disclose known exculpatory evidence.
- (d) Obtaining testimony by duress, fraud, or undue influence.

For this purpose, "malice" means conduct intended to cause injury to the plaintiff or despicable conduct carried on with a wilful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others. (Govt.C. 820.21(a).)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY
C. Public Employees.
10. False Arrest or Imprisonment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 369

[§ 369] False Arrest or Imprisonment.

(1) No Immunity. While a public employee is not liable for an act or omission, exercising due care, in executing or enforcing the law (supra, §348), nothing in this immunity "exonerates a public employee from liability for false arrest or false imprisonment." (Govt.C. 820.4.) Also, the immunity for institution or prosecution of a judicial or administrative proceeding (see Govt.C. 821.6, supra, §348) is for malicious prosecution, not false imprisonment. (Sullivan v. Los Angeles (1974) 12 C.3d 710, 719, 722, 117 C.R. 241, 527 P.2d 865, supra, §246, disapproving contrary language in Herndon v. Marin (1972) 25 C.A.3d 933, 935, 102 C.R. 221; Scannell v. Riverside (1984) 152 C.A.3d 596, 605, 199 C.R. 644.)

In McKay v. San Diego (1980) 111 C.A.3d 251, 168 C.R. 442, the opinion states that "there is no false arrest governmental immunity for a public employee who maliciously arrests and imprisons another by personally serving an arrest warrant issued solely on information deliberately falsified by the arresting officer himself." (111 C.A.3d 253.) "It would be absurd indeed to hold [the arresting officer], and vicariously [the county], liable for false arrest and imprisonment had [the arresting officer] acted with malice in serving the warrant without participating in the acts leading up to the issuance of the warrant, but grant immunity when, in addition to the foregoing, he also devised and carried out the scheme outlined." (111 C.A.3d 257.)

The causes of action of false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, although distinct, are not necessarily mutually exclusive; a cause of action for false arrest or imprisonment may lie where the same facts also support a cause of action for malicious prosecution. Under the facts of a given case, the distinction between the two causes of action--and with it, the existence of statutory immunity--may depend on whether the defendant charged with maliciously instituting the prosecution personally also made the arrest. (Harden v. San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 7, 17, 16, 263 C.R. 549 [holding, however, that immunity was unavailable where public employee took very active role in securing arrest warrant and participated in having it served by fellow police officer].)

(2) Measure of Damages Where Both False Arrest and Malicious Prosecution Are Involved. False arrest leading to malicious prosecution raises an issue of the measure of damages. In Jackson v. San Diego (1981) 121 C.A.3d 579, 175 C.R. 395, plaintiff was arrested without a warrant by defendant city's police officer for murder and robbery; the grand jury returned an indictment, and he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to state prison. During his incarceration another person confessed to the crime, was tried and convicted, and the judgment against plaintiff was vacated. Plaintiff, having spent 10 months in custody, sued for damages for false imprisonment and received a jury award of $ 280,000. Held, judgment reversed for retrial on issue of damages. If the grand jury had voted not to indict, damages for false arrest would have been limited to the period from arrest to release. When the grand jury did indict, however, lawful process commenced, and immunity under Govt.C. 821.6 precluded any action for malicious prosecution. (121 C.A.3d 587.) The Legislature's intent in providing liability for false arrest or imprisonment and immunity for malicious prosecution was to place a ceiling on damages for false arrest or imprisonment, limiting those damages to the period of incarceration beginning with the false arrest, but ending when the lawful process begins. (121 C.A.3d 582, 588.)

This damages issue and the holding in Jackson were examined by the California Supreme Court in Asgari v. Los Angeles (1997) 15 C.4th 744, 63 C.R.2d 842, 937 P.2d 273. Plaintiff was arrested for suspicion of a drug offense as a result of an undercover police operation, was placed in jail, and 7 days later was officially charged with the sale of heroin. After remaining in jail for 7 months, plaintiff was tried and acquitted. He then instituted the present action against defendant police officer for false arrest and imprisonment and related offenses. The trial judge, in accordance with a federal decision, instructed the jury that liability for false arrest could include damages sustained by the arrestee after the filing of formal charges, if there was nothing to break the chain of causation between the false arrest and the damages. Examples of acts that would not break this chain of causation might include causing the district attorney to act contrary to his independent judgment or presenting the district attorney with information known by defendant to be false. The jury awarded plaintiff substantial damages. The Court of Appeal affirmed the instruction and the false arrest damages. Held, Court of Appeal judgment reversed insofar as it approved the principle that damages for false arrest could include harm suffered after the formal charge.

(a) A police officer is liable for false arrest under Govt.C. 820.4, but is immune from liability for malicious prosecution under Govt.C. 821.6. This scheme recognizes the basic differences: with respect to false arrest, there is no legal process, and the interest protected is freedom from restraint of movement, while malicious prosecution is based on lawful process, and the interest served is freedom from unjustifiable litigation. (15 C.4th 754.) California law is thus statutory, and, in assessing false arrest damages, focuses on the nature of the offense. Here, plaintiff's false imprisonment ended when he was arraigned on the felony complaint 7 days after his arrest. In other words, "the Legislature's imposition of liability when a police officer causes a suspect to be confined unlawfully (false arrest), coupled with the Legislature's grant of absolute immunity when a police officer, maliciously and without probable cause, causes a suspect to be confined through the initiation of lawful process (malicious prosecution), evidences a legislative intent to shield police officers from liability for damages that are attributable to a suspect's incarceration after the institution of lawful process." (15 C.4th 758, citing Jackson.)

(b) Federal law is different in two major respects. The question of immunity for false arrest and subsequent acts is based on the common law, rather than on statute, and the focus is on the nature of the duties involved, rather than the nature of the crime. These differences mean that the factfinder, in assessing false arrest damages, may consider all acts proximately caused by the false arrest, even if they constitute malicious prosecution. (15 C.4th 755.) In California, once the plaintiff is held under lawful process (malicious prosecution), the false arrest as well as the assessment of damages ends. (15 C.4th 757.)

(c) Jackson, while recognizing that police officers are shielded from liability for damages attributable to a suspect's incarceration after institution of lawful process, held that defendant in that case could recover damages for false arrest suffered during the period from his arrest to the date he was rearrested pursuant to his grand jury indictment. This latter holding was based on Gill v. Epstein (1965) 62 C.2d 611, 44 C.R. 45, 401 P.2d 397, infra, §1553, in which the court held that indictment on formal charges was an insufficient superseding cause to break the chain of causation between false arrest and the damages sustained. However, "we decline to follow the decision in Gill v. Epstein ... and disapprove the decision in Jackson v. City of San Diego ... to the extent they hold that the recovery of damages for post-arraignment confinement is permitted." (15 C.4th 758, footnote 10.)

(3) Measure of Damages Where Both False Arrest and Federal Civil Rights Act Violation Are Involved. In Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Valentin) (2000) 78 C.A.4th 212, 92 C.R.2d 668, plaintiffs brought an action for false arrest and false imprisonment, as well as for violation of their federal civil rights under 42 U.S.C., §1983. Generally, the court followed Asgari, but added the following qualifications:

(a) Under their state law claims, plaintiffs were entitled to all damages attributable to injuries arising from the false arrest and false imprisonment that preceded arraignment and the filing of the complaint. However, plaintiffs were also entitled to recover for damage suffered beyond the filing date, if the damages were caused by prefiling conduct. Asgari and other cases did not intend to arbitrarily cut off compensation for continuing injuries caused by false arrest and false imprisonment once the plaintiff is released from custody or indicted. (78 C.A.4th 218.)

(b) Under federal law, the plaintiff is generally limited to recovery for injuries caused prior to the filing of a criminal complaint, not because police officers are immune for malicious prosecution, but because it is presumed that the prosecutor filing the complaint exercises independent judgment and thus breaks the chain of causation so that further injuries from incarceration are not attributable to the false arrest or false imprisonment. Thus, the plaintiffs here can recover for injuries arising after the filing of the criminal complaint but attributable to prefiling conduct, if they can show that the complaint was not the product of the prosecutor's independent conduct. In addition, plaintiffs can claim damages resulting from posfiling conduct, because under federal law, plaintiffs can recover for what amounts to malicious prosecution (subject again to the condition that the decision to file charges not be based on independent judgment). (78 C.A.4th 224.)

(c) Plaintiffs who have been falsely arrested and imprisoned by employees of a public entity are entitled to the same damages in a 42 U.S.C., §1983 action filed in a California court as they would receive in such an action filed in federal court. Thus, the ceiling on malicious prosecution damages imposed by Govt.C. 821.6 (supra, §368) is not enforceable in a state action brought under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (78 C.A.4th 227.) (On liability under federal civil rights legislation generally, see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §816 et seq.; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §236.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) No Immunity.

Statutory immunity for institution or prosecution of judicial or administrative proceeding does not apply: See Gillan v. San Marino (2007) 147 C.A.4th 1033, 1048, 55 C.R.3d 158 [Govt.C. 821.6 (see text, §368) does not provide immunity from liability to person detained without probable cause].(3) Measure of Damages Where Both False Arrest and Federal Civil Rights Act Violation Are Involved. Manta Management Corp. v. San Bernardino (2008) 43 C.4th 400, 412, 75 C.R.3d 353, 181 P.3d 159, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, Supp., §830A, disapproved of Gill v. Epstein (1965) 62 C.2d 611, 44 C.R. 45, 401 P.2d 397, text, p. 585, to the extent it is contrary to the rule that, where a court is provided with appropriate facts to adjudicate a motion for a preliminary injunction or a motion for a stay pending appeal, the court's intervening exercise of independent judgment breaks the chain of causation for purposes of liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983. Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §245.

(4) (New) Damages Are Limited to Period of Arrest or Imprisonment. Although a public employee (see Govt.C. 820.4) and his or her public entity employer (see Govt.C. 815(a)) may be liable for false arrest or imprisonment, "the recoverable damages are limited to damages for injuries caused by conduct that occurred during the period of false imprisonment." Govt.C. 821.6 (see text, §368) precludes damages for injuries caused by conduct that occurs after the false imprisonment has ended, even if that conduct is causally related to the false imprisonment. (Gillan v. San Marino, supra, 147 C.A.4th 1049 [subsequent press releases and other public statements; citing Asgari v. Los Angeles (1997) 15 C.4th 744, 63 C.R.2d 842, 937 P.2d 273, text, p. 584].)

[§ 370] In General.

A public employee may have a right to a defense by (see infra, §371 et seq.) and indemnification from (see infra, §375 et seq.) the public entity. Other important procedural aspects of liability of public employees have been covered elsewhere:

(1) The abolition of the requirement of filing a claim against the public employee, and the effect of the claims requirement for action against the public entity. (Govt.C. 950 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Proc., 4th, Actions, §§241, 242.)

(2) The statute of limitations on actions after rejection of claim or excuse for filing claim. (Govt.C. 950.6; see 3 Cal. Proc., 4th, Actions, §632.)

(3) Payment of judgments. (Govt.C. 965 et seq.; see 8 Cal. Proc., 4th, Enforcement of Judgment, §§400, 401.)

(4) Specificity of a complaint against a publicly elected or appointed official. (Govt.C. 951; see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, Supp., §584.)

Liability on an official bond, and the procedure to enforce it, are set forth in C.C.P. 995.810 et seq. and 996.410 et seq.

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

11. Procedure.

b. Defense by Public Entity.

1. Employee's Right to Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 371

[§ 371] Employee's Right to Defense.

Generally, a public entity must, on request of an employee or former employee, provide for the defense of a civil action or proceeding (or cross-action) brought against the employee, in the employee's official or individual capacity or both, "on account of an act or omission in the scope of his employment." (Govt.C. 995.) (See Sinclair v. Arnebergh (1964) 224 C.A.2d 595, 597, 36 C.R. 810 [Los Angeles city attorney properly represented police officer sued in civil tort action arising out of employment]; C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §4.2 et seq.; for exceptions to requirement, see infra, §§372, 373; on right to defense of witness who testifies on behalf of public entity, see supra, §236.)

If a proper request is refused and the employee retains his or her own counsel, the employee may recover reasonable attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses from the entity. (Govt.C. 996.4.) This remedy is not exclusive; i.e., it does not deprive the employee of the right to mandamus to compel the entity to perform its mandatory duty (Govt.C. 996.4), and it is in addition to any other right the employee may have by contract, statute, or regulation (Govt.C. 996.6). The employee may recover attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses only if the proceeding arose out of an act or omission in the scope of employment. (Farmers Ins. Group v. Santa Clara (1995) 11 C.4th 992, 1007, 47 C.R.2d 478, 906 P.2d 440, supra, §240 [county was not liable to deputy sheriff and his insurer under Govt.C. 996.4 for costs incurred in defending sexual harassment action against deputy where his conduct was outside scope of employment]; San Diego Police Officers Assn. v. San Diego (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1736, 1741, 35 C.R.2d 253 [city was not liable to police officer under Govt.C. 996.4 for costs incurred in defending action by informal citizen informant for sexual battery based on acts occurring in officer's condominium while officer was off duty].)

In Zamudio v. California (1998) 62 C.A.4th 673, 73 C.R.2d 79, plaintiff, an officer of the Youth Authority and a union representative, was sued for allowing other employees at a youth camp to violate the terms of the union contract with the state regarding sex discrimination. Held, Govt.C. 995 did not obligate defendant state to defend the suit, because the misconduct alleged related to plaintiff's duties as a union representative and not as an employee.

(a) Although plaintiff was performing youth counselor duties at the time of the wrongful conduct for which he was sued, the lawsuit was not brought against him "on account of" an act or omission in the scope of his employment. The alleged wrongful conduct had nothing to do with his duties as a youth counselor. (62 C.A.4th 678.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that his union duties were themselves within the scope of employment. This position is unpersuasive. Although the employees had the right to form a union, they did not have to do so, and defendant employer, as a state entity, had nothing to do with the union's existence. Defendant and the union were separate entities, with separate functions, and defendant had no control over the existence or operation of the union. (62 C.A.4th 679.)

(c) Imposing vicarious liability on defendant would not further the policy justifications of the respondeat superior doctrine. Defendant could do nothing to guard against lax union representation; the union, with its own structure, budget, and employees, was the proper vicarious party in this situation; the enterprise that gave rise to the alleged injuries was the union, and its members were the ones who benefit from the union's existence. It is thus equitable that the union bear the cost of any losses to members (and associated defense costs). (62 C.A.4th 681.)

2. When Defense May Be Refused.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 372

[§ 372] When Defense May Be Refused.

A public entity may refuse to provide for the defense of an action or proceeding against an employee or former employee if it determines any of the following:

(1) The act or omission was "not within the scope of his or her employment." (Govt.C. 995.2(a)(1); see Stone v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1999) 77 C.A.4th 736, 747, 92 C.R.2d 94 [holding that there was substantial evidence, at time public agency was asked to provide defense, to support agency's decision that physician in fertility clinic was involved in "egg stealing" and that this conduct was beyond physician's scope of employment].)

(2) The employee acted or failed to act because of "actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice." (Govt.C. 995.2(a)(2).)

(3) The defense would create "a specific conflict of interest" between the employee and the entity. (Govt.C. 995.2(a)(3); see Stewart v. Pismo Beach (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1600, 1605, 42 C.R.2d 382 [city had right to withdraw defense for former city police officer in federal civil rights action against it and officer where officer's agreement to testify for federal plaintiffs in exchange for dismissal of action against him created actual and specific conflict of interest between officer and city within meaning of Govt.C. 995.2(a)(3)].)

If the employee requests in writing that the public entity provide for a defense, the entity must, within 20 days, inform the employee whether it will provide a defense, and the reason for refusal to provide a defense. (Govt.C. 995.2(b).) If an actual and specific conflict of interest becomes apparent subsequent to the 20-day period following the employee's written request for defense, the public entity may refuse to provide further defense to the employee, provided that the employee is informed of the reason. (Govt.C. 995.2(c).)

A public entity may, but is not required to, provide for the defense of the following actions or proceedings against an employee or former employee:

(1) An action or proceeding by the entity to remove, suspend, or otherwise penalize the employee, or an appeal to a court from an administrative proceeding brought for that purpose. (Govt.C. 995.4(a).)

(2) An action or proceeding brought by the entity against the employee in his or her individual capacity, or an appeal from that action or proceeding. (Govt.C. 995.4(b).)

(3) An administrative proceeding or criminal proceeding (including a proceeding to remove an officer; see 2 *Cal. Crim. [§ 374] Methods of Providing Defense.

(1) In General. The entity may use its own attorney, employ other counsel, or purchase insurance requiring the insurer to provide the defense. The expense is a proper charge against the entity, and it has no right to recover it from the employee or former employee defended. (Govt.C. 996; see 71 A.L.R.3d 6 [validity and construction of statutes authorizing or requiring procurement of liability insurance covering public employees].)

(2) No Duty To Provide Independent Counsel. Laws v. San Diego (1990) 219 C.A.3d 189, 267 C.R. 921, involved an action against a county sheriff's department and many of its employees for both compensatory and punitive damages on theories of police misconduct. The court rejected the employees' claim that a conflict of interest with the county required it to provide them with independent counsel on the model established in insurance cases by San Diego Navy Fed. Credit Union v. Cumis Ins. Soc. (1984) 162 C.A.3d 358, 208 C.R. 494, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §287. So broad an extension of existing law would be a matter for the Legislature, not this court." (219 C.A.3d 192.) (See *Huntington Beach v. c. Indemnification of Employee.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 375

[§ 375] In General.

(1) Duty To Pay Judgment or Reimburse Employee. If the employee or former employee makes a written request for defense not less than 10 days before trial, and reasonably cooperates in good faith in the defense, the public entity must pay any judgment or any compromise of the claim or action to which it has agreed, whether or not it conducts the defense, unless it reserves its rights. (Govt.C. 825(a); see C.E.B., 1 Government Tort Liability Practice 4th, §4.14 et seq.; 71 A.L.R.3d 90 [validity and construction of statute authorizing or requiring indemnification of public employee for liability arising out of performance of duties]; 47 A.L.R.5th 553 [reimbursement of legal fees incurred in defending action against public official]; on right to indemnification of witness who testifies on behalf of public entity, see supra, §236.) With exceptions for serious misconduct and failure to cooperate, if the entity pays the claim or judgment against itself or the employee, it cannot claim indemnity from the employee. (Govt.C. 825.4.) And an employee who pays the claim or judgment or any portion of it may ordinarily recover the amount paid from the entity. (Govt.C. 825.2(a); see Govt.C. 996.4, supra, §371 [indemnification for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses where entity refuses proper request for defense]; on controlling effect of memorandum of understanding, see Govt.C. 825(c), 825.2(c), 825.6(d); on indemnification by state of health care providers, see Govt.C. 827.)

The right of indemnity applies to actions brought under the federal Civil Rights Act. (Williams v. Horvath (1976) 16 C.3d 834, 847, 129 C.R. 453, 548 P.2d 1125; on actions under federal Civil Rights Act generally, see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §816 et seq.; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §236.)

(2) Optional Payment or Indemnification. Generally, with respect to injuries to prisoners (supra, §361) or inpatients of mental institutions (supra, §364), a public entity "may but is not required to indemnify any public employee, in any case where the public entity is immune from liability." However, it must pay a judgment or settlement for medical malpractice by any employee "lawfully engaged in the practice of one of the healing arts." (Govt.C. 844.6(d), 854.8(d).)

(3) Improper Conduct by Employee. Indemnity is unavailable where the employee or former employee acted or failed to act because of actual fraud, corruption, or actual malice, or wilfully failed or refused to conduct his or her defense in good faith, or failed to reasonably cooperate in good faith in the defense conducted by the entity. (Govt.C. 825, 825.2(b), 825.6(a).)

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

11. Procedure.

c. Indemnification of Employee.

2. Employee Must Act Within Scope of Employment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 376

[§ 376] Employee Must Act Within Scope of Employment.

For the entity's duty to indemnify to arise, the claim against the employee must arise from an act or omission occurring within the scope of employment. (Govt.C. 825(a), 825.2; see Farmers Ins. Group v. Santa Clara (1995) 11 C.4th 992, 1007, 47 C.R.2d 478, 906 P.2d 440, supra, §240 [county was not required to indemnify deputy sheriff and his insurer for insurer's payments in settlement of action against deputy sheriff for sexual harassment, where his conduct was outside scope of employment].)

In Henriksen v. Rialto (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1612, 25 C.R.2d 308, M, a police officer, sued fellow officer H and the city employing them for negligence after H's service revolver accidentally discharged and wounded M while both officers were socializing off duty. H answered M's complaint, asserting that H was acting within the scope of his employment, and that if he were found to be negligent, the city should be held responsible under the doctrine of respondeat superior. H also cross-complained against the city under Govt.C. 825(a) and 995 et seq. (supra, §371 et seq.) for indemnification of damages and cost of suit. The trial judge granted summary judgment for the city on the cross-complaint, ruling that H was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time that M was injured. Held, affirmed.

(a) "We recognize that under respondeat superior an employer may be held directly liable for the acts of an employee under a theory of vicarious liability, while under the statutes at issue in this case an employer may be required to indemnify an employee for a judgment arising out of the employee's acts; the two doctrines are conceptually and procedurally distinct. ... In the present case, however, the similarities between the two doctrines are more significant than the differences. ... The critical issue under the indemnification statutes is whether the employee's actions, which resulted in the injury for which the indemnification is sought, occurred within the scope of employment." Analysis of this issue under a theory of respondeat superior, the analysis is equally applicable to the indemnification issue here. (20 C.A.4th 1617, footnote 2.)

(b) None of the factors deemed critical in relevant cases were present here: "[T]he incident did not occur during working hours, was not accomplished by use of [H's] authority as a police officer, did not occur in the course of acts that [H] was carrying out under his employer's instructions or on his employer's behalf. The injury to [M] did not occur after [H] had drunk alcohol provided by the employer or permitted by the employer on the employer's premises. Even the relationship between [H] and [M] predated [H's] employment by many years and did not arise out of the employment relationship." (20 C.A.4th 1619, 1620.)

(c) The fact that the city expected the loaded weapon to be on M's person while off duty so that he could respond to emergencies was of no import. A weapon should be treated like another potentially dangerous instrumentality, i.e., the automobile, wherein the employee must be driving it on employer business and not for his own benefit before the employer is liable for an accident resulting from its operation. (20 C.A.4th 1620, 1621.)

(d) Moreover, the policy factors underlying the doctrine of respondeat superior listed in Mary M. v. Los Angeles (1991) 54 C.3d 202, 285 C.R. 99, 814 P.2d 1341, supra, §240, i.e., the prevention of recurrence of the tortious conduct, compensation for the victim, and spreading the risk, do not compel a different result. Officers themselves, when they make the decision to socialize after hours, are the ones in a position to take the necessary safeguards to mitigate any increased risk, and if they fail to do so, they, not the public, must bear the loss. (20 C.A.4th 1621, 1622.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. GOVERNMENTAL LIABILITY

C. Public Employees.

11. Procedure.

c. Indemnification of Employee.

3. Where Entity Fails To Defend or Defends Under Reservation of Rights.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 377

[§ 377] Where Entity Fails To Defend or Defends Under Reservation of Rights.

If the public entity did not conduct the employee's defense against the action or claim, or conducted the defense pursuant to an agreement with the employee reserving the rights of the public entity against the employee, an employee paying a claim or judgment may recover from the entity "only if he establishes that the act or omission upon which the claim or judgment is based occurred within the scope of his employment as an employee of the public entity and the public entity fails to establish that he acted or failed to act because of actual fraud, corruption or actual malice or that he willfully failed or refused to conduct the defense of the claim or action in good faith or to reasonably cooperate in good faith in the defense conducted by the public entity." (Govt.C. 825.2(b).)

In Rivas v. Kerman (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1110, 13 C.R.2d 147, defendant city refused to defend O, one of its police officers, in an action instituted against him by F and R alleging that O had shot F without justification. Defendant's refusal to defend was based on claims that, at the time of the shooting, O was acting with fraud, corruption, or malice and not within the scope of his employment. O agreed to a stipulated judgment for F and R of $ 5,825,000, based on agreements assigning to them his claim against defendant in return for their promise not to execute on the judgment. The three parties then brought the present action against defendant, alleging that Govt.C. 825(a) (supra, §375) required defendant to pay the stipulated judgment on O's behalf. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Basis of decision. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground that the stipulated judgment was not a "judgment" within the meaning of Govt.C. 825(a). But the relevant question, and the only one decided here, is whether Govt.C. 825(a) is even applicable when the public entity has declined to provide a defense for an employee or former employee. The holding here on appeal is that Govt.C. 825(a) applies only where the public entity provides a defense for the employee. (10 C.A.4th 1116.)

(b) Construction of Govt.C. 825(a).

(1) The first paragraph of Govt.C. 825(a) requires the employer to pay a judgment if the employee requests a defense not less than 10 days before the trial date and cooperates in good faith in the defense. From the use of the word "cooperates" it is clear that the public entity must agree to provide the defense. If the statute intended to provide indemnity regardless of whether the public entity acceded to the employee's request for defense, some indication of this intention would be present. None is provided, and it is implicit in paragraph one that "the defense" in which the employee must cooperate is one that the public entity provided, and not one that the employee provided on his or her own after refusal by the public entity. (10 C.A.4th 1116.)

(2) The introductory phrase of the second paragraph of Govt.C. 825(a), which is basically a restatement of the first paragraph, explicitly states the statute applies where "the public entity conducts the defense." Plaintiffs' argument that paragraph two refers only to the situation in which the entity provides the defense under a reservation of rights is untenable; because the remainder of paragraph two concerns the situation in which defense is provided under a reservation of rights, the introductory clause would be mere surplusage if it too were interpreted as applying only in the reservation of rights situation. (10 C.A.4th 1117.)

(c) Relationship between Govt.C. 825 and 825.2.

(1) Govt.C. 825.2(b) provides that when the public entity defends under a reservation of rights, the employee may not recover if the entity establishes that the employee failed to "reasonably cooperate in good faith in the defense conducted by the public entity." Because Govt.C. 825 and 825.2 are part of one comprehensive statutory framework, the phrase "the defense" should be construed in Govt.C. 825 to have the same meaning as that explicitly given it by the Legislature in Govt.C. 825.2. (10 C.A.4th 1117.)

(2) Govt.C. 825.2(b) not only deals with the situation where the public entity defends under a reservation of rights, but also deals with the situation where the entity does not conduct the defense. In either situation, it provides that the employee is entitled to indemnity only if the employee establishes that he or she acted within the scope of employment and the employer fails to establish either that the employee acted because of actual fraud or malice or that the employee refused to conduct the defense in good faith. Hence, to hold that Govt.C. 825 applies even if the public entity did not defend would allow employees to circumvent the protections for public entities contained in Govt.C. 825.2(b). (10 C.A.4th 1119.)

(3) The legislative history of the 1972 amendments to Govt.C. 825 and 825.2, which added the requirement of good faith cooperation in the defense, shows that the Legislature intended a public entity to be required to indemnify an employee if (a) liability arose out of the scope of employment; (b) liability was not the result of the employee's corruption or actual fraud or malice; and (c) the employee presented a good faith defense against liability or cooperated with the entity's presentation of defense. (10 C.A.4th 1119.)

(4) Govt.C. 825.2(a) (supra, §375) provides that if a public employee pays any claim or judgment against the employee that the public entity is required to pay under Govt.C. 825, the employee is entitled to recover the amount of the payment from the entity if he or she satisfies the requirements of Govt.C. 825.2(b). To require payment by the employee before his or her right to recover arises would (a) be contrary to the legislative intent by imposing a fourth requirement not intended by the Legislature, and (b) cause many employees to bankrupt themselves before triggering any duty on the part of the entity to reimburse them for their losses. Hence, the correct interpretation is that if judgment is entered against the employee after the entity declined to defend, and the employee subsequently satisfies the requirements of Govt.C. 825.2(b), he or she will be held harmless by the entity. (10 C.A.4th 1120.)

(d) Public policy considerations.

(1) "If [Govt.C. 825] were interpreted to include situations in which the public entity declined an employee's request for defense, the public entity would have no protection against an employee's stipulated judgment and would be required to pay such a judgment in full even though the issue of whether the employee acted with fraud or malice or whether the employee was acting within the scope of his or her employment had never been determined. In fact, the public entity could not even contest the amount of damages to which the employee and the victim agreed. Obviously, such an interpretation invites fraud and/or collusion between the employee and the alleged victim. Therefore, if [Govt.C.

825] were interpreted to apply to situations in which the public entity did not defend the employee, public entities would be forced to protect themselves from potentially fraudulent or collusive situations by providing a defense in all cases, presumably under a reservation of rights, regardless of the merits." (10 C.A.4th 1122.)

(2) Plaintiffs admit that their interpretation of Govt.C. 825(a) requires such an outcome, but argue that defendant could have protected itself from having to pay the judgment by providing a defense. Were this position adopted, it would result in a de facto repeal of Govt.C. 995.2, which sets forth the situations in which a public entity may refuse to provide a defense (see supra, §372). And there is nothing in Govt.C. 825(a) indicating that it was intended to limit or repeal Govt.C. 995.2. (10 C.A.4th 1123.)

(3) Plaintiffs also argued that the interpretation adopted here means that a public entity can always avoid being compelled to pay a judgment on behalf of its employee, because it can, with impunity, refuse to defend the employee. This argument is without merit. Govt.C. 825.2 protects employees in this situation by ensuring that they will be held harmless provided they are able to demonstrate they were acting within the scope of their employment at the time of the incident in question. It is plaintiffs' "interpretation that works a hardship as it would require a public entity to provide a defense in every case, regardless of whether the evidence overwhelmingly supports a conclusion the employee acted outside the scope of his employ, fraudulently or with actual malice towards the victim." (10 C.A.4th 1123.) (See Johnson v. Fresno (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1087, 1090, 4 C.R.3d 475 [where stipulated judgment was entered against public employee after his employer declined to defend him, and employee satisfied Govt.C. 825.2(b), he was entitled to recover from employer; distinguishing Rivas].)

4. Payment of Punitive Damages.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 378

[§ 378] Payment of Punitive Damages.

A public entity other than the state may pay punitive damages if it finds that (1) the judgment was based on an act or omission within the scope of employment, (2) the act or omission occurred in good faith, without actual malice, and in the apparent best interests of the entity, and (3) payment would be in the entity's best interest. (Govt.C. 825(b).) (On general rule against payment of punitive damages, see supra, §230; on payment of punitive damages on behalf of witness, see supra, §236.)

A state government entity may pay punitive damages with the approval of the Legislature, based on the recommendation of the appointing power of the employee whose act or omission was the basis for the judgment and on a finding by the Legislature and the appointing authority that the three conditions for payment of a punitive damages claim exist. The payment of a punitive damages claim is subject to Govt.C. 965.6(a) (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §400), which requires legislative authorization for payment of a specific tort judgment against the state. (Govt.C. 825(b).)

Nothing in Govt.C. 825 affects the provisions of Govt.C. 818 (see supra, §230) prohibiting punitive damage awards against public entities. (Govt.C. 825(e).) In any trial in which it is alleged that the employee is liable for punitive damages, neither the discovery or introduction of evidence of the entity's assets nor the disclosure of the possibility that it may pay the punitive damages is permitted. (Govt.C. 825(b).) And the payment of punitive damages may not be a subject of consideration of the meet and confer provisions of the Meyers-Milias-Brown Act (Govt.C. 3500 et seq.; see 3 Summary, (10th), Agency and Employment, §571 et seq.). Where there is neither a concession nor a contract provision that renders an employee's insurance available to satisfy the public entity's obligation to the victim or to its employee, the entity's insurer may not obtain contribution from the employee's insurer. (Pacific Indem. Co. v. American Mut. Ins. Co. (1972) 28 C.A.3d 983, 995, 105 C.R. 295 [also stressing legislative purpose to place burden on public entity].) But if the employee and the entity have taken out complementary insurance coverage, the employee's insurer may be held primarily liable for payment. (*Yunker v. 6. Elected Officials.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 380

[§ 380] Elected Officials.

(1) Tortious Influence of Outcome of Judicial Proceeding. Generally, a public entity may not pay a judgment, compromise, or settlement arising from a claim or action against an elected official based on the official's tortiously intervening or attempting to intervene in, or tortiously influencing or attempting to influence, the outcome of a judicial action or proceeding for the benefit of a particular party by contacting the trial judge or a commissioner, a court-appointed arbitrator, mediator, or special referee, or the court clerk, bailiff, or marshal after the action has been filed, unless the official was the counsel of record acting lawfully on behalf of that party. And if the entity conducted the defense and the elected official was found liable by the trier of fact, the court must order the official to pay the entity the cost of that defense. (Govt.C. 825(f)(1).)

An exception exists in case of insufficiency of funds: The plaintiff must first seek recovery of the judgment against the assets of the elected official, but if those assets are insufficient to satisfy the judgment, as determined by the court, the public entity may pay the deficiency if it is authorized by law to do so. (Govt.C. 825(f)(2).)

A public entity that pays any portion of the judgment or is entitled to reimbursement of defense costs must pursue all available creditor's remedies against the elected official, including garnishment, until the official has fully reimbursed the entity. (Govt.C. 825(f)(3).)

These provisions do not apply to any criminal or civil enforcement action brought by an elected district attorney, city attorney, or Attorney General in the name of the state. (Govt.C. 825(f)(4).)

(2) Commission of Felony. An elected official or former elected official who is convicted of violating Govt.C. 1195 (diverting subordinate's salary) or P.C. 68, 86, 93, 165, 504, or 518 (receiving or offering bribes, embezzlement, extortion) for an act or omission while in office forfeits any right to defense or indemnification with respect to a claim for damages for an injury arising from that act or omission. (Govt.C. 825.6(b)(1).)

If a public entity pays a claim or judgment either against itself or against an elected official or former elected official for injury from an act or omission constituting a felony under these statutes, the entity, on felony conviction of the official, is entitled to recover from the official the amount of that payment and the cost of any defense to a civil action filed against the official. (Govt.C. 825.6(b)(2).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

1. Nature and Distinctions.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 381

[§ 381] In General.

Assault and battery are crimes as well as torts, and the statutory definition of the crimes is in the Penal Code: "An assault is an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another." (P.C. 240.) "A battery is any wilful and unlawful use of force or violence upon the person of another." (P.C. 242.) In tort actions for assault and battery, the courts usually assume that these Penal Code definitions and related criminal cases are applicable. (See Fraguglia v. Sala (1936) 17 C.A.2d 738, 742, 62 P.2d 783; on criminal assault and battery, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §1 et seq.) (See generally Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§28 et seq., 33 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §3.3; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Assault and Battery, Chap. 12; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 363 [sexual abuse by clergy]; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Assault and Battery §1 et seq.; 44 A.L.R.5th 91 [validity and effect of assault and battery exclusion in liability insurance policy]; 46 A.L.R.5th 813 [secondary smoke as battery]; 1 Proof of Facts 3d 613 [assault and battery]; BAJI, No. 7.50 [definition and elements of battery]; CACI, Nos. 1300, 1301 [same].)

The popular use of the term "assault" when "battery" is intended occurs occasionally in pleadings and judicial opinions. (See Estrada v. Orwitz (1946) 75 C.A.2d 54, 57, 170 P.2d 43 [court terms battery an "assault"]; Vaughn v. Jonas (1948) 31 C.2d 586, 603, 191 P.2d 432 [plaintiff pleaded that defendant "assaulted" him by firing a loaded revolver, with bullet passing through his body; court observes that this was technically inaccurate because act pleaded was battery].) The confusion is enhanced by the statutory felonious "assaults" (see P.C. 244 et seq.), which, in their tort aspect, would be batteries.

A. Assault and Battery.
1. Nature and Distinctions.
b. Statutory Actions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 382

[§ 382] Statutory Actions.

(1) In General. Civil claims for particular types of assault or battery have been created by statute. Thus, C.C. 43.93 authorizes recovery against a psychotherapist for sexual conduct with a patient by therapeutic deception. (See infra, §416.) And C.C. 1708.7 creates the tort of stalking. (See infra, §662.)

(2) Sexual Battery. A claim for sexual battery arises from either of the following:

(a) Sexually offensive contact with another person resulting directly or indirectly from an act done with the intent to cause harmful or offensive contact either with an intimate part of another person, or with another person by use of the actor's intimate part. (C.C. 1708.5(a)(1), (a)(2).)

(b) Sexually offensive contact directly or indirectly resulting from an act done to cause imminent apprehension of the above mentioned conduct. (C.C. 1708.5(a)(3).)

"Intimate part" refers to the sexual organ, anus, groin, or buttocks of any person, or the breast of a female. (C.C. 1708.5(d).) "Offensive contact" refers to contact that offends a reasonable sense of personal dignity. (C.C. 1708.5(f).)

The victim may recover general, special, and punitive damages. (C.C. 1708.5(b).) And the court may award equitable relief, including injunction, costs, and any other relief deemed proper. (C.C. 1708.5(c).)

These rights and remedies are in addition to any others provided by law. (C.C. 1708.5(e).) (See 91 Am.Jur. Trials 151 [litigating clergy sexual abuse cases]; BAJI, No. 7.56 [sexual battery].)

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY A. Assault and Battery. 2. Elements. a. Offensive Contact.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 383

[§ 383] Offensive Contact.

Harmful or offensive contact, intentionally done, is the essence of battery (Rest.2d, Torts §18), while apprehension of that contact is the basis of assault (Rest.2d, Torts §21). Mere words, however threatening, will not amount to an assault. (Rest.2d, Torts §31; cf. 12 A.L.R.2d 971 [indecent proposal to woman]; on liability for emotional distress caused by threatening or offensive words, see infra, §449 et seq.) (See Barouh v. Haberman (1994) 26 C.A.4th 40, 44, 31 C.R.2d 259 [in instruction defining battery as intentional, unlawful, and harmful contact, word "unlawful" needed clarifying instruction that it meant only that contact must be without consent]; Fluharty v. Fluharty (1997) 59 C.A.4th 484, 497, 69 C.R.2d 244 [plaintiff initiated contact to prevent defendant's suicide; defendant, who intended only to harm himself, committed no wrongful or offensive act]; BAJI, No. 7.51 ["offensive contact" defined]; CACI, Nos. 1300, 1301 [same].)

A civil action for battery may be brought by the victim of rape. (See Delia S. v. Torres (1982) 134 C.A.3d 471, 480, 184 C.R. 787; 8 Golden Gate L. Rev. 479.)

Where force is used to effect a restraint of the person, the defendant may be liable for both false imprisonment (infra, §426 et seq.) and assault and battery. But force in treatment of a person hospitalized by false imprisonment may not constitute assault and battery in all circumstances. "[T]here is not necessarily such a close relationship between detention and treatment that any treatment, even though in itself proper, becomes unlawful merely because it is given during an unlawful detention." (Maben v. Rankin (1961) 55 C.2d 139, 144, 10 C.R. 353, 358 P.2d 681, infra, §429.)

The plaintiff must prove the use of unreasonable force when the defendant is a police officer. (See Edson v. Anaheim (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1269, 74 C.R.2d 614, infra, §424.)

If the striking takes place in the performance of an unlawful act, the intent to injure is immaterial; the actor is answerable for all consequences that directly and naturally result, though unintended. (Rest.2d, Torts §16(1).) And if the defendant attempts to strike one person and actually hits another, the defendant is liable to the person struck under the theory of constructive or transferred intent. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§16(2), 20(2); 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Elements, §16.)

In Lopez v. Surchia (1952) 112 C.A.2d 314, 318, 246 P.2d 111, defendant's son and R were in a fist fight. Plaintiff, looking for R, but not participating, came close. Defendant rushed out with a gun to protect his son, fired, and hit plaintiff. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. (112 C.A.3d 318.) (See Singer v. Marx (1956) 144 C.A.2d 637, 642, 301 P.2d 440 [facts warranted inference that defendant 9-year-old boy aimed rock at B and struck D].)

c. Present Ability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 385

[§ 385] Present Ability.

Under P.C. 240 (supra, §381), to constitute an assault the wrongdoer must have a present ability to injure. Hence, threatening to shoot a person with an unloaded gun would not be an assault, at least so far as criminal liability is concerned. (People v. Sylva (1904) 143 C. 62, 64, 76 P. 814; People v. Simpson (1933) 134 C.A. 646, 650, 25 P.2d 1008; 1 Cal Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §7 et seq.) However, in Lowry v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1944) 63 C.A.2d 1, 7, 146 P.2d 57, the court, without discussing the Penal Code section or the criminal cases, declared that pointing a gun at another in a threatening manner constitutes an assault unless the plaintiff knows it is in fact unloaded.

Under the Restatement, it is immaterial whether the actor has or believes that he or she has the ability; if the actor intends to put the other in apprehension, and the other believes that he or she has the ability to injure, the tort is committed. (Rest.2d, Torts §33.)

[§ 386] Nature of Defense.

A person may, by participating in a game or by other conduct, consent to an act that might otherwise constitute a battery. (See Rest.2d, Torts §49 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §95 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §3.10; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Assault and Battery §124 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.52 [consent to battery]; CACI, No. 1302 [same].) CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

b. Participation in Illegal Activity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 387

[§ 387] Participation in Illegal Activity.

Although the authorities are divided, the Restatement recognizes consent as a defense against tort liability even where the act is illegal, e.g., a fist fight constituting a breach of the peace, or a criminal abortion. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§60, 892(c)(1); Dobbs, The Law of Torts §105; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §3.10; 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 472; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 103.)

The Restatement rule was followed in Sayadoff v. Warda (1954) 125 C.A.2d 626, 271 P.2d 140. Plaintiff woman, having had illicit relations with defendant and two prior abortions at his expense, had another at his "importuning." Alleging that this resulted in sterility and other harm, she sought damages for conspiracy to commit assault and battery. Held, consent was a complete defense. The court rejected the theory that the state's interest in an individual's health vitiates the consent, and took a realistic view of the policy involved. "Admittedly, the court should discourage the violation of the penal statutes of this state, but it is highly doubtful that this end should be sought through the medium of civil litigation. It is also highly doubtful that any deterrent would be afforded by allowing damages in such a case as this. Such holding might well encourage a line of conduct such as we have before us--the submission to abortions with no complaint if they are successful, but with the assurance of financial reward if the woman participant is injured." (125 C.A.2d 631.) (See 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 103; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 145.)

An exception is recognized for invasions made criminal for the protection of a particular class. (Rest.2d, Torts §61.) In Hudson v. Craft (1949) 33 C.2d 654, 204 P.2d 1, defendants, conducting a carnival, held a series of unlicensed boxing exhibitions in violation of law. Plaintiff, an 18-year-old boy, was solicited to compete for $ 5, and was seriously injured. He sued defendant promoters and his opponent, but the latter was not served. Held, defendants were liable. The theory of the decision was that the public policy of the state seeks to protect contestants from the dangers of unlicensed boxing matches conducted in violation of the regulatory statutes, and that where the violation of these criminal statutes is the cause of physical harm, it should give rise to civil liability of the promoter, "the activating force." With this as the basis of liability, the defense of consent could not be raised because plaintiff was a member of the class that the criminal statutes were designed to protect. (33 C.2d 657.) (See 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 135.)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

c. Consent to Operation or Treatment.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 388

[§ 388] In General.

A surgical operation or other medical treatment performed without consent is a battery. (Estrada v. Orwitz (1946) 75 C.A.2d 54, 57, 170 P.2d 43; Berkey v. Anderson (1969) 1 C.A.3d 790, 803, 82 C.R. 67, infra, §396.) But if a competent adult consents to the procedure, no cause of action for battery arises when it is performed within the scope of the consent. (See Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 C.A.2d 33, 38, 224 P.2d 808 [surgery]; Conte v. Girard Orthopaedic Surgeons Med. Group (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1260, 1266, 132 C.R.2d 855 [consent authorizing surgeon to perform open surgical repair, but also permitting any advisable procedure for plaintiff's medical well-being, authorized surgeon, after examining shoulder arthroscopically, to refrain from doing open shoulder repair, even though plaintiff was disappointed by result of operation]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §95 et seq.; 54 Hastings L. J. 1575 [role of consent forms in informed consent process]; 22 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 89 [extension of informed consent doctrine to vaccinations]; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 631 [effect of typical hospital general consent forms]; 25 A.L.R.3d 1439 [patient's mental competence to consent]; 77 A.L.R.5th 541 [damage action for HIV testing without consent]; 87 A.L.R.5th 277 [construction and application of patient bill of rights statutes]; 35 *Am.Jur. A wife may give her own consent to an operation; the husband has no legal interest that is invaded by a doctor's medical treatment of the wife without his consent. (Rosenberg v. Feigin (1953) 119 C.A.2d 783, 786, 260 P.2d 143; see Kritzer v. Citron, supra [wife's express consent to sterilization]; 89 A.L.R.3d 32 [questions of consent in connection with treatment of genital or urinary organs].)

Formerly, although abortions were illegal except under narrowly specified conditions, a woman's consent to that operation was sometimes held to bar recovery for death or injury. Other courts permitted the action to be maintained. (See 36 A.L.R.3d 630 [right of action for injury to or death of woman who consented to illegal abortion].) With the liberalization of abortion laws (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §117 et seq.), the problem has become generally moot. (On effect of participation in illegal activity generally, see supra, §387.)

 - 2. Minor or Incompetent Patient.
 - aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 389

[§ 389] In General.

(1) Consent of Parent or Guardian. The consent of a parent or guardian is ordinarily necessary to authorize an operation on or other medical treatment of a minor. (See Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 243, 104 C.R. 505, 514, 502 P.2d 1, infra, §396; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §99; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §3.10; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 109; 4 U.C.L.A. L. (2) Consent of Minor. A minor may consent to medical or dental care, and the consent of the minor's parent or guardian is unnecessary, where the minor:

(a) Has entered into a valid marriage, whether or not the marriage has been dissolved. (Family C. 7002(a); 7050(e)(1).)

(b) Is on active duty with the armed forces. (Family C. 7002(b); 7050(e)(1).)

(c) Has received a declaration of emancipation. (Family C. 7002(c); on emancipation of minor, see Family C. 7110 et seq.; 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child §298 et seq.)

(d) Is 15 or older, living separate and apart from the parents or guardian, and managing his or her own financial affairs. (Family C. 6922.)

(e) Is seeking care relating to the prevention or treatment of pregnancy, other than sterilization. (Family C. 6925; on minor's consent to abortion, see infra, §391.)

(f) Is 12 or older and may have come into contact with an infectious, contagious, or communicable disease. (Family C. 6926.)

(g) Is 12 or older and has been raped. (Family C. 6927.)

(h) Has been sexually assaulted. (Family C. 6928.)

(i) Is 12 or older and has a drug-or alcohol-related problem. (Family C. 6929.) (See 33 Golden Gate L. Rev. 105 [informed consent of children in medical research]; 48 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1417 [argument that minor's constitutional right of privacy includes right to consent to medical treatment]; 25 A.L.R.3d 1439 [mental competency to consent]; on consent by minor to medical treatment generally, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §§34, 38 et seq.)

(3) Consent of Authorized Adult. The parent or guardian of a minor "may authorize in writing an adult into whose care the minor has been entrusted" to consent to medical or dental care for the minor. (Family C. 6910; see Family C. 6901 [defining "dental care"]; Family C. 6902 [defining "medical care"]; Family C. 6903 [defining "parent or guardian"].)

(4) Consent of Court. On application by a minor, the court may summarily grant consent for the minor on a determination that the minor is 16 or older, resides in the state, and has no parent or guardian available to give the consent. (Family C. 6911.)

- A. Assault and Battery.
 - 3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.
 - c. Consent to Operation or Treatment.
 - 2. Minor or Incompetent Patient.
 - bb. Treatment of Mental Disorders.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 390

[§ 390] Treatment of Mental Disorders.

(1) Psychosurgery or Shock Treatment. Welf.C. 5325 et seq. specifies the requirements of informed consent to psychosurgery and shock treatment. (See 6 Pacific L. J. 434; 9 U.S.F. L. Rev. 738 [criticizing former legislation]; 15 Santa Clara Lawyer 725.) In Aden v. Younger (1976) 57 C.A.3d 662, 129 C.R. 535, these provisions were held unconstitutional for vagueness and invasion of privacy. (See 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §598.) The 1976 Legislature then amended the provisions, making them applicable to all forms of convulsive shock treatments, and adding new sections greatly strengthening the patient's right to exercise a voluntary and informed consent. The amending statute states: "Recognizing the danger of a violation of a mental patient's constitutional right to privacy, the Legislature intends by this enactment to assure that the integrity and free choice of every such patient is fully recognized and protected. Because those who are emotionally disturbed are vulnerable to being unduly influenced, the Legislature believes the protection of their rights requires a careful process of informing and consenting in order to assure the protection and vindication of their rights." (Stats. 1976, Chap. 1109, §1.) (See 8 Pacific L. J. 391; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 39, 73.)

Under these provisions, specified information must be given the patient for a valid informed consent. (Welf.C. 5326.2.) The treating physician may use a standard form for this purpose, adding details relevant to the individual patient. (Welf.C. 5326.3.) The treating physician must explain to the patient the nature of the treatment and its purpose and consequences and administer the execution of the consent form, which must be dated and witnessed. The consent form must be available to the patient, to the patient's attorney, guardian, and conservator, and, if the patient consents, to a responsible relative of the patient's choosing. (Welf.C. 5326.4.) Consent must be knowing and intelligent and may be given only after 24 hours have elapsed from the time the required information has been given. (Welf.C. 5326.5.) The therapies may be used only if prescribed conditions are met. (See Welf.C. 5326.6 et seq.) Special civil penalties are provided for violations, and an intentional violation is a ground for license revocation. (Welf.C. 5326.9.) (See Conservatorship of Waltz (1986) 180 C.A.3d 722, 732, 227 C.R. 436 [psychotic patient who, during rational periods, understood that electroconvulsive therapy was recommended to help him, but had rational fears of side effects and believed that medication was better, was capable of consenting to or refusing treatment].)

(2) Antipsychotic Medication. An attending physician or surgeon of a resident in a skilled nursing facility who prescribes, orders, or increases an order for an antipsychotic medication must do both of the following:

(a) Obtain the resident's informed consent. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.9(a)(1); see Health & Saf.C. 1418.9(c)(1) [defining "resident" as patient "who has the capacity to consent to make decisions concerning his or her health care, including medications"].)

(b) Seek the resident's consent to notify an interested family member designated in the medical record, and, if the resident consents, make reasonable attempts to notify that person within 48 hours. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.9(a)(2).) Notification is not required if no interested family member is designated in the medical record, the resident has been diagnosed as terminally ill and is receiving hospice services, or the resident does not consent to the notification. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.9(b).)

The consent of the interested family member is not required. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.9(d).)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 391

[§ 391] Abortion Without Parental Consent.

C.C. 34.5, as enacted in 1953, provided that an unmarried minor could give consent to medical care related to prevention or treatment of pregnancy, and that consent of the parent or parents of the minor was not required. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §39.) The statute was construed in Ballard v. Anderson (1971) 4 C.3d 873, 878, 95 C.R. 1, 484 P.2d 1345, as emancipating minors for the purpose of obtaining therapeutic abortions without parental consent. (4 C.3d 880, 883, 884.) (See 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 469.)

C.C. 34.5 was amended in 1987 to provide that it may not be construed "to authorize an unemancipated minor to receive an abortion without the consent of a parent or guardian other than as provided in Section 25958 of the Health and Safety Code." C.C. 34.5 and Health & Saf.C. 25958 have since been recodified as Family C. 6925 and Health & Saf.C. 123450, respectively. Health & Saf.C. 123450 provides that, except in a medical emergency, no abortion may be performed on an unemancipated minor unless (1) she has obtained the written consent of one of her parents or her legal guardian, or (2) the juvenile court, on petition of the minor, orders performance of the abortion without the consent of, or notice to, the parents or guardian. (See 19 Pacific L. J. 646.) However, the Supreme Court has declared that these statutory restrictions on a minor's right to obtain an abortion are an unconstitutional violation of the right to privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1). (See American Academy of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 C.4th 307, 314, 66 C.R.2d 210, 940 P.2d 797, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §579.) (See 25 *Golden Gate L. dd. Procedure When Long-Term Health Facility Resident Loses Competency.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 392

[§ 392] Procedure When Long-Term Health Facility Resident Loses Competency.

(1) In General. Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 prescribes the procedures to be followed when a resident of a skilled nursing facility or an intermediate care facility loses the capacity to give informed consent to medical intervention and there is no person with legal authority to give consent. (See 24 Pacific L. J. 981.) Physicians and facilities complying with Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 are not required to obtain a court order under Prob.C. 3201 (judicial authorization of medical treatment for incompetent adult; see 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §1063 et seq.) prior to administering a medical intervention. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(i).)

A resident lacks the capacity to make a decision regarding his or her health care if the resident is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proposed medical intervention or unable to express a preference regarding it. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(b).) A person with the legal authority to make medical treatment decisions for a patient is a person designated under a valid Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care, or a guardian, conservator, or next of kin. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(c); see Pagarigan v. Libby Care Center (2002) 99 C.A.4th 298, 302, 120 C.R.2d 892 [Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(c) does not authorize next of kin to sign arbitration agreement on patient's behalf.]

(2) Nonemergencies. In nonemergencies, the facility must conduct an interdisciplinary team review prior to administration of the prescribed medical intervention. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(e).) The team, composed of the resident's attending physician, a registered nurse with responsibility for the resident, other staff as needed, and, where practicable, a patient representative, must review the physician's assessment of the resident's condition, the reason for the proposed medical intervention, its frequency and duration, the probable impact of using or not using the intervention, reasonable alternatives, and the desires of the patient, where known. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(e); on who may serve as a patient representative, see Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(f).)

(3) Emergencies. In case of an emergency, the facility may immediately administer the prescribed medical intervention after obtaining a physician's order. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(h).) The team must meet within 1 week of an emergency for an evaluation of the medical intervention if the emergency results in application of physical or chemical restraints. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(h).)

(4) Administrative Sanctions. A physician or other health care provider acting in accordance with reasonable medical standards is not subject to administrative sanction if he or she believes in good faith that the action is consistent with Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 and the resident's desires or, if unknown, the resident's best interests. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(k).)

(5) Right to Judicial Review. Residents retain the right to seek judicial review of a decision to provide medical intervention. (Health & Saf.C. 1418.8(j).)

(6) No Violation of Privacy Rights. Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 does not violate patients' privacy rights under Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. (See Rains v. Belshe (1995) 32 C.A.4th 157, 38 C.R.2d 185, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §655.)

A fictional "implied consent" or privilege authorizes a doctor to perform an operation in an emergency without actual consent. (*Cobbs v. In Preston v. Hubbell (1948) 87 C.A.2d 53, 196 P.2d 113, a dentist, removing a wisdom tooth, caused a fracture of the patient's jaw, and proceeded to repair it. The court pointed out that the almost universal use of anesthesia in surgery makes it impossible to obtain express consent in surgical emergencies, and that the surgeon previously selected by the patient is the logical representative of the patient in judging the necessity for the additional act. However, the court added: "This is not, of course, to hold that consent to one operation is always to be regarded as implied consent to the performance of another operation, unanticipated by the patient, but which the surgeon, upon discovering unexpected conditions, may deem advisable." (87 C.A.2d 59.)

4. Exceeding Scope of Consent.

[§ 394] Exceeding Scope of Consent.

An operation or treatment performed without consent is a battery (see supra, §388), and the same is true where a doctor is authorized to perform one medical procedure and goes beyond the scope of the consent to perform another. (Hundley v. St. Francis Hosp. (1958) 161 C.A.2d 800, 806, 327 P.2d 131; see Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 239, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, infra, §396 [distinction between battery from exceeding scope of consent and negligent failure to warn of known risk]; Estrada v. Orwitz (1946) 75 C.A.2d 54, 57, 170 P.2d 43 [dentist, engaged to extract one tooth, extracted five others]; see 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 67; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 627; 56 A.L.R.2d 695 [liability of physician or surgeon for extending operation or treatment beyond that expressly authorized]; BAJI, No. 6.10.5 [treatment without or beyond consent]; CACI, No. 533 [same].)

When a patient consents to a procedure but places conditions on that consent, a physician who exceeds the conditions may be liable. However, the physician must intentionally violate the condition in order to commit a battery. (Piedra v. Dugan (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1483, 1494, 21 C.R.3d 36 [battery is intentional tort; physician who is unaware of condition on consent is liable at most for negligence].)

Even where the particular treatment is by consent, mishandling of the patient or use of unnecessary force is tortious. (Inderbitzen v. Lane Hosp. (1932) 124 C.A. 462, 468, 12 P.2d 744 [woman in labor roughly handled and subjected to jibes by doctors and medical students]; see 89 A.L.R.2d 983 [liability of doctor or dentist using force to restrain or discipline patient].)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

c. Consent to Operation or Treatment.

5. Nondisclosure and Uninformed Consent.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 395

[§ 395] In General.

(1) Informed Consent Doctrine. The operation or treatment must be performed with the patient's informed consent. The doctor has a duty to disclose to the patient all information material to the patient's making an informed decision whether to undergo the procedure. Where the physician's disclosure is inadequate, the defense of consent is generally unavailable and the doctor is subject to tort liability. (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 239, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, infra, §396.) (On scope of required disclosure, see infra, §400; on informed consent to medical experimentation, see infra, §411 et seq.)

No disclosure is required where the patient requests that he or she not be informed of the risks. And none is required if the procedure is simple and the danger remote and commonly appreciated to be remote. (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 246; see Piedra v. Dugan (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1483, 1490, 21 C.R.3d 36 [physicians need not discuss risks inherent to common procedures that very rarely result in serious ill effects].) Also, the duty to inform is subject to a statutory exclusion for emergencies. (See B. & P.C. 2397, infra, §399.)

(2) No Discretion To Withhold Information. Any suggestion that the doctor has discretion to withhold information to avoid alarming a patient (see Salgo v. Leland Stanford Jr. University Bd. of Trustees (1957) 154 C.A.2d 560, 578, 317 P.2d 170) has been rejected as unsound. The patient does not have the doctor's knowledge, trusts the doctor, and has the right to make the determination whether to subject himself or herself to treatment. (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 243.)

West's Key Number Digest, Assault and Battery k.11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) (New) Duty of Referring Physician. In Quintanilla v. Dunkelman (2005) 133 C.A.4th 95, 34 C.R.3d 557, Supp., infra, §400, a physician who referred a patient to a surgeon was held equally liable in negligence as the surgeon for failure to obtain informed consent where the referring physician owned all the stock in the medical group that employed the surgeon, met with the patient, made the diagnosis, discussed the treatment with her, and directed the surgeon regarding what procedures were to be performed. (133 C.A.4th 118.)

In Wilson v. Merritt (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1125, 1134, 48 C.R.3d 630, defendant physician referred plaintiff for a procedure performed by a chiropractor that resulted in injury. Plaintiff claimed that he was not warned of the risks of the procedure. Evidence was introduced at trial indicating that defendant had direct contact with plaintiff, suggested and assisted in the procedure, and was the medical director of the clinic in which the procedure was performed. Held, entry of nonsuit was error. This evidence raised a question of fact whether defendant was a mere consulting expert or shared joint responsibility with the chiropractor for managing plaintiff's care. (142 C.A.4th 1134, citing Quintanilla.)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

c. Consent to Operation or Treatment.

5. Nondisclosure and Uninformed Consent.

bb. As Battery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 396

[§ 396] As Battery.

(1) In General. Formerly, there was some uncertainty whether the tort was battery or negligence. (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1396, 1399; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 217.) But the test has now been established for California: Where the doctor performs the treatment to which consent was given but fails to make a proper disclosure, the tort is negligence (infra, §397); if the doctor performs a different one, the tort is battery (Rainer v. Community Memorial Hosp. (1971) 18 C.A.3d 240, 255, 95 C.R. 901).

In Berkey v. Anderson (1969) 1 C.A.3d 790, 82 C.R. 67, plaintiff injured his neck. He was treated for some time by defendant Dr. A, who concluded that diagnosis of his problem required a myelogram. Plaintiff testified that Dr. A merely told him that "[w]e have to get to the bottom of this," that a myelogram "was simply exploratory and nothing to worry about," that the most uncomfortable thing about it was being harnessed to a cold table and tilted about, and that he would have a pain-killing injection. Plaintiff also testified that he had no knowledge of what was involved in the procedure and, having heard of dire results from spine injections, would never have permitted a puncture of his spine. The myelogram was performed by defendant Dr. R, a qualified expert, who duly introduced the needle into the lumbar area to obtain spinal fluid. During the process plaintiff felt a "terrific thrust as if someone were jamming an icepick into his lower spine," and suffered excruciating pain. He ended up with a "rubber leg," i.e., a weakness in dorsiflexion of the left foot. The medical testimony as to the cause was vague and inconclusive, and the trial judge granted a nonsuit. Held, reversed.

(a) The propriety of the nonsuit depended on whether the doctor obtained the informed consent of the plaintiff. "It involves the duty of a doctor to properly explain the contemplated procedure and the question whether the patient reasonably comprehended the explanation. If appellant did not give his informed or knowledgeable consent, the performance of the myelogram would constitute a technical battery ... for which the defendant would be liable for all damages proximately resulting, whether the myelogram was or was not skillfully performed ... and whether they could be anticipated or not." (1 C.A.3d 803.)

(b) The jury could have found that Dr. A gave plaintiff no information which would enable him to understand the procedure, and that the information he did give would have a tendency to mislead; i.e., they could have found that plaintiff's query, "is it like the electromyograms that I have been having?" called for "more than a few mollifying words which grossly understated the seriousness of the procedure." (1 C.A.3d 804.)

In Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 239, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, infra, §397, the court likewise classified the Berkey situation as battery, i.e., as a deliberate intent to deviate from the given consent. The consent was to performance of "a procedure no more complicated than the electromyograms plaintiff had previously undergone, when the actual procedure was a myelogram involving a spinal puncture."

(2) Conditional Consent. A battery also occurs where the consent is conditional and the condition is violated. (See Grieves v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 159, 164, 203 C.R. 556 [plaintiff wife, pregnant, consented to tubal ligation only if her child was born without abnormalities; different doctor performed operation without informing her that child was born with fatal genetic disorder].)

In Ashcraft v. King (1991) 228 C.A.3d 604, 278 C.R. 900, plaintiff, age 16, needed surgery to correct a curvature of the spine, and consented to an operation by defendant. According to her testimony and that of her mother, the consent was expressly conditioned on the use of only family-donated blood for necessary transfusions, and members of her family gave blood before and during the operation. Defendant, however, took all of the blood from general supplies on hand at the hospital. Later it was discovered that some blood had come from an HIV positive donor, and plaintiff then took a test that was positive. She brought this malpractice action against defendant on theories of battery and negligence; she was nonsuited on the battery cause, and the jury verdict on the negligence cause was for defendant. Held, judgment for defendant reversed for error in granting the nonsuit. A patient may place conditions on the doctor's authority to perform an operation, and the doctor who violates the conditions may be liable for battery. (228 C.A.3d 610.) The evidence introduced by plaintiff was sufficient for a jury to infer an intent of defendant to wilfully disregard the conditional consent. (228 C.A.3d 613.)

In Kerins v. Hartley (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1062, 1077, 33 C.R.2d 172, defendant performed surgery on plaintiff without disclosing that he was infected with HIV. Plaintiff sought recovery for battery, contending that she effectively conveyed, as a condition on her consent, her desire to avoid any risk of exposure to AIDS and to be operated on by a healthy doctor. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The record established that there was no significant risk that plaintiff would develop AIDS as the result of exposure to HIV during the surgery. (See 25 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 205 [Kerins].)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 397

[§ 397] As Negligence.

In Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, plaintiff suffered from a duodenal ulcer. Defendant, a surgeon called in by plaintiff's family doctor, recommended surgery and explained the nature of the operation, but did not discuss the inherent risks. The operation was performed, but complications required two subsequent operations: removal of the spleen (a result of injury that occurs in about 5% of ulcer operations); and a gastrectomy with removal of half the stomach (a result of a new gastric ulcer, a risk inherent in the first operation). Plaintiff was also hospitalized again for internal bleeding due to premature absorption of a suture, another inherent risk. In this malpractice suit the jury returned a general verdict against defendant, which could have been based on either negligence or failure to obtain an informed consent to the treatment. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed.

(a) Prosser's suggestion should be followed that the matter presented in cases like this involves standards of professional conduct and that the action is for negligence in failing to conform to the proper standard. "Although this is a close question, either prong of which is supportable by authority, the trend appears to be towards categorizing failure to obtain informed consent as negligence. That this result now appears with growing frequency is of more than academic interest; it reflects an appreciation of the several significant consequences of favoring negligence over a battery theory. ... [A] doctor could be held liable for punitive damages under a battery count, and if held liable for the intentional tort of battery he might not be covered by his malpractice insurance." (8 C.3d 240.)

(b) The test was then set forth as follows: "The battery theory should be reserved for those circumstances when a doctor performs an operation to which the patient has not consented. When the patient gives permission to perform one type of treatment and the doctor performs another, the requisite element of deliberate intent to deviate from the consent given is present. However, when the patient consents to certain treatment and the doctor performs that treatment but an undisclosed inherent complication with a low probability occurs, no intentional deviation from the consent given appears; rather, the doctor in obtaining consent may have failed to meet his due care duty to disclose pertinent information. In that situation the action should be pleaded in negligence." (8 C.3d 240.)

(c) The instant case clearly sounds in negligence. "Defendant performed the identical operation to which plaintiff had consented. The spleen injury, development of the gastric ulcer, gastrectomy and internal bleeding as a result of the premature absorption of a suture, were all links in a chain of low probability events inherent in the initial operation." (8 C.3d 241.) (See Freedman v. Superior Court (1989) 214 C.A.3d 734, 739, 263 C.R. 1, infra, §416 [patient induced to accept drug by deceptive statement regarding its purpose may bring action for negligence, but not battery]; Daum v. SpineCare Med. Group (1997) 52 C.A.4th 1285, 1313, 61 C.R.2d 260 [where patient consents to operation and doctor performs that operation, but undisclosed complication of low probability occurs, doctor is guilty of negligence, not battery; citing Cobbs]; on significance and effect of Cobbs, see 6 *Loyola L.A. - A. Assault and Battery.

 - 3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 398

[§ 398] Causation of Injury.

The doctor's failure to inform must be the cause of the injury to the plaintiff; i.e., it must be established that, had disclosure been made, the consent to treatment would not have been given. (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 245, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397.) Cobbs adds this caution: "The patient-plaintiff may testify on this subject but the issue extends beyond his credibility. Since at the time of trial the uncommunicated hazard has materialized, it would be surprising if the patient-plaintiff did not claim that had he been informed of the dangers he would have declined treatment. Subjectively he may believe so, with the 20/20 vision of hindsight, but we doubt that justice will be served by placing the physician in jeopardy of the patient's bitterness and disillusionment. Thus an objective test is preferable; i.e., what would a prudent person in the patient's position have decided if adequately informed of all significant perils." (8 C.3d 245.) (See Morgenroth v. Pacific Med. Center (1976) 54 C.A.3d 521, 532, 126 C.R. 681 [causation not established]; Spann v. Irwin Memorial Blood Centers (1995) 34 C.A.4th 644, 656, 40 C.R.2d 360 [deceased patient's husband failed to raise issue of fact that blood bank's failure to disclose risk of AIDS from blood transfusions as treatment for life-threatening blood disease caused patient's injury, because no reasonable person in patient's position would have declined treatment had full disclosure been made]; 8 U.S.F. L. Rev. 261, 320.)

The general damages rule applies: The defendant is liable for the amount that will compensate for all the detriment caused by the tort (see C.C. 3333, infra, §1553). Thus, a patient who was not told of a risk of bone disease from surgery could recover damages for risks that had been disclosed, as well as for the bone disease, where he would not have consented to an operation at all if he had been adequately informed. (Warren v. Schechter (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1189, 1203, 67 C.R.2d 573.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 399

[§ 399] Emergency Exception to Duty To Inform.

The judicially declared duty to inform a patient of the risks of treatment (see supra, §395) is subject to a statutory exception under B. & P.C. 2397 for emergencies. (See Pacific L. J. 679; BAJI, No. 6.16; CACI, No. 554.)

(1) Scope of Immunity. The immunity is given to a physician for emergency situations in the physician's office or in a hospital requiring immediate services or diagnosis and treatment. (B. & P.C. 2397(a), (c).)

(2) Conditions Excusing Failure To Inform. Failure to inform does not give rise to liability where it is caused by any of the following:

(a) The patient is unconscious. (B. & P.C. 2397(a)(1).)

(b) The medical procedure is undertaken without the consent of the patient because the physician reasonably believes that a medical procedure should be undertaken immediately and that there is insufficient time to inform the patient. (B. & P.C. 2397(a)(2).)

(c) A medical procedure is performed on a person legally incapable of giving consent, and the physician reasonably believes that a medical procedure should be undertaken immediately and that there is insufficient time to obtain the informed consent of a person authorized to give consent for the patient. (B. & P.C. 2397(a)(3).)

(3) Liability for Negligence. This exception applies only to failure to inform; it does not give immunity for negligence in rendering or failing to render treatment. (B. & P.C. 2397(b).)

The same immunity was extended to dentists by B. & P.C. 1627.7. (See 10 Pacific L. J. 601.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.
- c. Consent to Operation or Treatment.
- 6. Required Disclosure.
- aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 400

[§ 400] In General.

The kind of disclosure required is discussed briefly in Berkey v. Anderson (1969) 1 C.A.3d 790, 803, 82 C.R. 67, supra, §396, and comprehensively in Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397:

(a) General scope of disclosure. The physician's duty is to disclose all information material to a patient's decision whether to undergo a course of treatment. "[A]s an integral part of the physician's overall obligation to the patient there is a duty of reasonable disclosure of the available choices with respect to proposed therapy and of the dangers inherently and potentially involved in each." (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 243.)

(b) Medical community standard not controlling. Nearly every jurisdiction which has considered the question has adopted the medical community standard as the test of reasonable disclosure. Both Berkey and Cobbs reject this rule: "We cannot agree that the matter of informed consent must be determined on the basis of medical testimony any more than that expert testimony of the standard practice is determinative in any other case involving a fiduciary relationship. We agree with appellant that a physician's duty to disclose is not governed by the standard practice of the physicians' community, but is a duty imposed by law which governs his conduct in the same manner as others in a similar fiduciary relationship. To hold otherwise would permit the medical profession to determine its own responsibilities to the patients in a matter of considerable public interest." (Berkey v. Anderson, supra, 1 C.A.3d 805.)

The majority rule "is needlessly overbroad," and if there is a medical community standard "it appears so nebulous that doctors become, in effect, vested with virtual absolute discretion." The doctor's expert function is to disclose the risks of a decision not to undergo the treatment and the probability of a successful outcome of the treatment. "But once this information has been disclosed, that aspect of the doctor's expert function has been performed. The weighing of these risks against the individual subjective fears and hopes of the patient is not an expert skill. Such evaluation and decision is a nonmedical judgment reserved to the patient alone." (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 243.)

(c) Measured by patient's need. The doctor need not engage in a lengthy medical discussion, and need not cover the relatively minor risks inherent in common procedures. However, "the jury should be instructed that when a given procedure inherently involves a known risk of death or serious bodily harm, a medical doctor has a duty to disclose to his patient the potential of death or serious harm, and to explain in lay terms the complications that might possibly occur. Beyond the foregoing minimal disclosure, a doctor must also reveal to his patient such additional information as a skilled practitioner in good standing would provide under similar circumstances." (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 244.)

(d) Summary. "In sum, the patient's right of self-decision is the measure of the physician's duty to reveal. That right can be effectively exercised only if the patient possesses adequate information to enable an intelligent choice. The scope of the physician's communications to the patient, then, must be measured by the patient's need, and that need is whatever information is material to the decision. Thus the test for determining whether a potential peril must be divulged is its materiality to the patient's decision." (Cobbs v. Grant, supra, 8 C.3d 245.)

The scope of required disclosure has been frequently considered. (See Morgenroth v. Pacific Med. Center (1976) 54 C.A.3d 521, 534, 126 C.R. 681 [Cobbs test met]; Jambazian v. Borden (1994) 25 C.A.4th 836, 30 C.R.2d 768 [where physician's declaration established no evidence of diabetes, patient, to avoid summary judgment, needed to produce expert evidence that he had diabetes and that it created special surgical risks not identified by defendant]; Warren v. Schecter (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1189, 1205, 67 C.R.2d 573 [adequacy of disclosure is measured under objective standard, and plaintiff has no obligation to prove that he was subjectively misled]; 61 Cal. Commentary: See 58 Hastings L.J. 967 [requiring physicians' disclosure of off-label prescriptions and conflicts of interest].

(New) Execution of consent form is not conclusive: In Quintanilla v. Dunkelman (2005) 133 C.A.4th 95, 34 C.R.3d 557, the patient, who was fluent in Spanish but could not read it, testified that she was given Spanish-language forms to initial and sign, but that the forms were not interpreted for her and she was not given an adequate oral explanation of the procedures to be performed. Held, substantial evidence supported the jury's finding that informed consent was not obtained. Ev.C. 622, establishing a conclusive presumption of the truth of facts recited in a written instrument (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof, §161), is inapplicable. Not only is there no authority to support its application in the context of informed consent, its application is inconsistent with the rationale supporting the informed consent doctrine, that is, the desirability of frank and open disclosure of relevant medical information. Where, as here, there is substantial evidence that the patient is unable to read the language on the form, the presumption is clearly inappropriate. (133 C.A.4th 117.)

[§ 401] Duty To Disclose Risks of Not Consenting.

Liability may result not only from administration of a medical procedure on the patient's consent without disclosure of related risks, but also from failure to administer a procedure where the patient refuses to consent without being informed of the risks of not consenting. In Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 C.3d 285, 165 C.R. 308, 611 P.2d 902, plaintiff children sued for wrongful death of their mother, who died of cancer of the cervix. The theory of the complaint was that defendant doctor failed to inform the mother of the risks of not consenting to a pap smear test, which is an accurate detector of cervical cancer. Reversing a judgment for defendant, the court held that the duty to disclose is not limited to cases in which the patient consents to the recommended procedure; the doctor's duty of disclosure of information material to the patient's decision applies also to cases where the patient declines the recommended course of action. (27 C.3d 292.) A dissent of three justices argued that the new duty recognized by the decision imposes an intolerable burden on doctors and on persons desiring treatment for specific complaints. (27 C.3d 297, 298, 299.) (See 12 Pacific L. J. 915; 19 San Diego L. Rev. 823; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1105; BAJI, No. 6.11.5 [based on Truman].)

The theory of the Truman case has been referred to as the "informed refusal" doctrine. (Moore v. Preventive Medicine Med. Group (1986) 178 C.A.3d 728, 737, 223 C.R. 859 [following Truman].)

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

cc. Duty To Disclose Information Unrelated to Patient's Health.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 402

[§ 402] Duty To Disclose Information Unrelated to Patient's Health.

The duty to disclose all information material to a patient's decision to undergo treatment does not extend to the patient's nonmedical interests, such as financial interests. A physician is not the patient's financial adviser; the disclosure requirement is imposed to protect the patient's freedom to exercise control over his or her body in directing the course of medical treatment. (Arato v. Avedon (1993) 5 C.4th 1172, 1188, 23 C.R.2d 131, 858 P.2d 598, infra, §410 [nondisclosure of statistical life expectancy of persons with patient's illness].)

On the other hand, the physician has a duty to disclose his or her own research or economic interest in the treatment that is not related to the patient's health. (Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 51 C.3d 120, 271 C.R. 146, 793 P.2d 479, infra, §704.) The issue in Moore was whether plaintiff had stated a cause of action against his physician and other defendants (the hospital and other researchers) for using his blood cells, obtained in the course of surgery to remove his spleen, in potentially lucrative medical research without his permission. Held, a cause of action was stated against the physician for breach of fiduciary duty to disclose facts material to plaintiff's consent, or performing medical procedures without having first obtained his informed consent.

(a) As pointed out in Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397, a patient's consent to treatment must be an informed consent, and in soliciting that consent, the physician has a fiduciary duty to disclose all information material to the patient's decision. (51 C.3d 129.) Hence: "(1) a physician must disclose personal interests unrelated to the patient's health, whether research or economic, that may affect the physician's professional judgment; and (2) a physician's failure to disclose such interest may give rise to a cause of action for performing medical procedures without informed consent or breach of fiduciary duty." (51 C.3d 129.)

(b) Questions about the validity of a patient's consent typically arise when the physician allegedly fails to disclose medical risks; but the concept of informed consent is broad enough to encompass the case where the physician allegedly has a personal interest. (51 C.3d 129.) The objective of protecting patients from possible conflicts of interest has also motivated legislative enactments, e.g., B. & P.C. 654.1 and 654.2, on referrals by the physician to an organization in which the physician has an interest. (51 C.3d 129.) A physician who has his own research interests "may be tempted to order a scientifically useful procedure or test that offers marginal, or no, benefits to the patient." (51 C.3d 130.)

(c) The contention that the scientific use of cells that have already been removed cannot possibly affect the patient's medical interests is only partly correct. "[A] physician who does have a preexisting research interest might, consciously or unconsciously, take that into consideration in recommending the procedure." (51 C.3d 131.)

(d) It is possible that required disclosure may corrupt the patient's own judgment by distracting the patient from the requirements of his or her health. But the physician does not have unlimited discretion to decide what to disclose: it is the prerogative of the patient to make the ultimate informed decision. (151 C.3d 131.)

(e) The allegations of the complaint against the physician were sufficient to state a cause of action: they plainly state that the physician concealed an economic interest in the postoperative procedures. (51 C.3d 132.) The remaining defendants were not physicians and owed no fiduciary duty; but the question whether plaintiff has stated a cause of action on the basis of respondeat superior should be considered by the trial judge on remand. (51 C.3d 133, 134.) (See 27 Cal. Western L. Rev. 209; 104 Harv. L. Rev. 808; 24 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 115 [proposed legislative solution]; 23 Pacific L. J. 267; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1216; 28 San Diego L. Rev. 455; 35 San Diego L. Rev. 951 [physician's fiduciary duty to disclose managed care financial incentives]; 34 U.S.F. L. [§ 403] No Duty To Inform Respecting Unrecommended Procedure.

In Scalere v. Stenson (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1446, 1453, 260 C.R. 152, the court said: "The dissent would draw a new duty-to-disclosure line. Though a doctor proposes neither surgery nor medical procedure, though he recommends no therapy and is unaware of any other school of doctors who would recommend therapy, the dissent would require such a doctor to disclose 'the risks and benefits of non-treatment.' Such a line, like one drawn with a finger in the air, is without precision and predictability. It would impose significant new burdens on already harried doctors without awarding demonstrable benefits to their patients. 'It seems obviously prohibitive and unrealistic to expect physicians to discuss with their patients every risk of proposed treatment ...--no matter how small or remote--and generally unnecessary from the patient's viewpoint as well.' " (211 C.A.3d 1453.)

In Munro v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 977, 263 C.R. 878, plaintiffs contended that, even though defendants did not recommend a Tay-Sachs screening test, defendants were under a duty to inform plaintiffs of the incidence of Tay-Sachs disease and its costs, in order to enable them to decide whether to undergo testing. "Plaintiffs would have us impose on defendants a duty to give plaintiffs information regarding a genetic test defendants did not recommend because it was not indicated by any facts which plaintiffs told to defendants, or even any facts of which plaintiffs were aware. Reason, as well as precedent, compels our refusal to impose such a duty." (215 C.A.3d 988.) (See Vandi v. Permanente Med. Group (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1064, 1070, 9 C.R.2d 463 [no duty to advise patient of availability of nonrecommended CT scan; citing Scalere v. Stenson]; *Parris v. ee. No Duty To Inform Respecting Illegal Procedure.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 404

[§ 404] No Duty To Inform Respecting Illegal Procedure.

In Schiff v. Prados (2001) 92 C.A.4th 692, 112 C.R.2d 171, decedent child underwent surgery for cancer in her brain and around her spinal cord. Because some residual tumor remained, decedent, on the recommendation of defendant doctor, underwent about 3 months of chemotherapy and radiation. Towards the end of this period, plaintiffs, her parents, discovered that a doctor in Texas was using an alternative cancer treatment. Although aware that this treatment was not approved by the Food and Drug Administration, that Texas was attempting to remove this doctor's license, and that defendant was opposed to the treatment and instead recommended participation in clinical trials, plaintiffs decided to have the controversial treatment used. Although use of the alternative treatment allegedly helped decedent, she died from complications apparently caused by the radiation that she had previously received on defendant's recommendation. Plaintiffs then instituted the present wrongful death case, alleging that defendant, by failing to advise them of the alternative treatment, had not obtained their informed consent. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397, holds that informed consent requires a doctor to disclose to a patient "available" treatments with respect to a proposed therapy. Many cases have echoed the statement in Cobbs that the duty of disclosure extends only to available choices. A treatment that cannot be legally administered in this state is not "available" within the meaning of this rule, and thus a physician cannot be held liable for failing to disclose the existence of such a treatment. (92 C.A.4th 701.)

(b) In order to prevent persons from being misled by unproved and untested cancer treatments, Health & Saf.C. 109250 et seq. were enacted to enable the public to have complete knowledge of the cancer treatments "available in this state." Under Health & Saf.C. 109300 and 109325, a cancer drug is not legally "available in this state" unless (1) it has been approved by the FDA, (2) a current new drug application (IND) is on file with the FDA, or (3) specified alternative conditions, including filings with the Medical Board of California, have been fulfilled. There is no evidence here that (1) and (3) had been met. With respect to (2), the evidence revealed that an IND was on file for the use of capsules of the alternative medication for the treatment of breast cancer, but that decedent's treatment could not have been authorized under this IND, because she required large doses of the medication that had to be administered intravenously. Thus, at the time that defendant allegedly should have disclosed the existence of the alternative treatment, it would have been illegal to administer that treatment in California. (92 C.A.4th 703.)

(c) Plaintiffs argued that defendant should have informed them about the alternative treatment in order to afford them the choice to investigate whether that treatment would have become available in California through FDA-approved clinical trials in time to have saved decedent's life. However, to rule that a physician may have a duty to disclose a treatment that is currently unavailable but that might become available in the future would be to discard the availability requirement altogether. (92 C.A.4th 706.) Plaintiffs further argued that defendant was obligated to advise them that the alternative treatment was available in Texas. However, requiring physicians to inform patients of treatment alternatives illegal in California but available in other states is beyond what the law expects of doctors. Finding legal alternatives is a job more suitable to lawyers. Indeed, the difficulty with determining what is "available" in another state is well illustrated in this case, where the use of the alternative treatment was twice held to be legal under Texas law and twice held to be illegal. (92 C.A.4th 707.)

(d) Because cancer drugs in FDA-approved clinical trials were not "unavailable" under the foregoing analysis, the present decision would not serve to discourage participation in these trials. (92 C.A.4th 708.)

[§ 405] Duty of Specialist.

In Townsend v. Turk (1990) 218 C.A.3d 278, 266 C.R. 821, plaintiff injured her back in a plane crash. She was examined in an emergency room by Dr. W, who asked Dr. T, a radiologist, to look at X-rays of plaintiff's spine. After Dr. T informed Dr. W that the X-rays showed a mild compression fracture, plaintiff was sent home, where she suffered severe pain and loss of mobility from damage to posterior elements of the vertebrae that required surgery. Plaintiff argued that Dr. T should have informed her of the alternative of a CT scan, which would have revealed the more serious injury. Held, no such duty existed.

(a) The proper approach is to confine a patient's claims against a specialist, such as a consulting radiologist, to theories of medical negligence, as opposed to permitting the assertion that informed consent on each treatment level should be obtained. (218 C.A.3d 287.)

(b) The record here shows that it was the clinician, Dr. W, who had the responsibility of deciding what course of action to take, what tests to order, and what treatment to prescribe, in view of the information given him by the radiologist. Dr. T did not deal directly with plaintiff or make decisions about her care. (218 C.A.3d 287.)

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 406

[§ 406] Breast Cancer.

A physician and surgeon has a duty to inform a patient being treated for breast cancer by means of "a standardized written summary ... in layman's language and in a language understood by the patient" of "alternative efficacious methods of treatment which may be medically viable, including surgical, radiological, or chemotherapeutic treatments or combinations thereof." (Health & Saf.C. 109280(a), (b).) Failure to so inform the patient constitutes unprofessional conduct. (Health & Saf.C. 109280(b).) (See 12 Pacific L. J. 595.)

The summary, which is developed and made available by the Medical Board of California and based on recommendations by the Cancer Advisory Council, informs the patient of "the advantages, disadvantages, risks, and descriptions" of the alternative procedures and also includes information regarding breast cancer treatments in the investigational or clinical trial stage (and recognized by the Physician's Data Query of the National Cancer Institute). (Health & Saf.C. 109280(c).)

Prior to a biopsy, the physician and surgeon must note on the patient's chart that he or she has given the patient the required written summary. (Health & Saf.C. 109280(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Health & Saf.C. 109275(b), as amended in 2006, refers to a duty to provide a standardized written summary in "layperson's" language, rather than in "layman's" language. Correction: "Health & Saf.C. 109280" should be "Health & Saf.C. 109275".

(Health & Saf.C. 1690(a).) The patient must sign a written statement indicating that she has read and understood the written information, discussed it with her doctor, and has been advised that the operation will render her permanently sterile. (Health & Saf.C. 1690(b).) An exception to these informed consent requirements exists when the operation is performed in a life-threatening emergency situation. A physician who removes sperm or ova from a patient for implantation in one other than the patient or his or her spouse is required to obtain a prescribed consent. (B. & P.C. 2260(a).) The consent must be in writing, contain specified language, and be signed by both the patient and the physician. (B. & P.C. 2260(b).) Not only does violation constitute unprofessional conduct (B. & P.C. 2260(d)), but a civil penalty is assessed against a physician who fails for a second time to obtain any consent so required; this penalty is additional to other available remedies (B. & P.C. 2260(e)).

Physicians are required to inform patients of the risks and possible side effects of silicone implants (B. & P.C. 2259) or collagen injections (B. & P.C. 2259.5) used in cosmetic, plastic, reconstructive or similar surgery before performing the surgery. (See B. & P.C. 2259(i) [defining "silicone implant"]; B. & P.C. 2259.5(i) [defining "collagen injection"]; 24 Pacific L. J. 653.)

Physicians may comply with this requirement by furnishing the patient with (1) a copy of the standardized written summary for the implants or injections prepared by the state Department of Health on a determination that the federal Food and Drug Administration has not authorized related written information intended for laypersons, or (2) written information authorized for use by the FDA prepared by the manufacturer based on the physician package insert. (B. & P.C. 2259(a), (e), 2259.5(a), (e).) The standardized summary must (1) use language readily understood by laypersons; (2) contain a disclaimer that the state neither endorses any procedures nor provides an exhaustive analysis of the potential benefits or associated risks; and (3) provide only information approved by the FDA. (B. & P.C. 2259(e), 2259.5(e).)

Failure to comply constitutes unprofessional conduct, but is not a misdemeanor. (B. & P.C. 2259(c), (h), 2259.5(c), (h).) Compliance does not modify a physician's existing duties, including duties relating to informed consent. A physician may not be held liable as a distributor of a standardized written summary or written information allegedly containing erroneous or incomplete information. 5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 410

[§ 410] Statistical Life Expectancy.

In Arato v. Avedon (1993) 5 C.4th 1172, 23 C.R.2d 131, 858 P.2d 598, decedent died of pancreatic cancer after undergoing a treatment program consisting of chemotherapy and radiation. His wife and children instituted this action based on defendant physicians' failure to disclose the high statistical mortality rate associated with pancreatic cancer. Plaintiffs alleged that had decedent been given this information, he would have refused the treatment, choosing instead to live out his last days at peace with plaintiffs and placing his business affairs in order. Held, defendants did not breach their duty of disclosure.

(a) General versus specific information.

(1) The fount of the doctrine of informed consent in California is Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 245, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397. "Together with companion decisions in other jurisdictions, Cobbs v. Grant ... is one of the epochal opinions in the legal recognition of the medical patient's protectible interest in autonomous decision making. After more than a generation of experience with the judicially broadened duty of physician disclosure, the accumulated medicolegal comment on the subject of informed consent is both large and discordant. Those critics writing under the banner of 'patient autonomy' insist that the practical administration of the doctrine has been thwarted by a failure of judicial nerve and an unremitting hostility to its underlying spirit by the medical profession. Others, equally earnest, assert that the doctrine misapprehends the realities of patient care and enshrines moral ideals in the place of workable rules." (5 C.4th 1184.)

(2) The particular issue to be addressed here is whether the holding in Cobb, as embodied in BAJI, No. 6.11, adequately states the standard to be used in determining the adequacy of the disclosure to the patient, or whether the standard instruction should be revised to mandate specific disclosures, such as a patient's life expectancy as revealed by mortality statistics. (5 C.4th 1185.)

(3) "In our view, one of the merits of the somewhat abstract formulation of BAJI No. 6.11 is its recognition of the importance of the overall medical context that juries ought to take into account in deciding whether a challenged disclosure was reasonably sufficient to convey to the patient information material to an informed treatment decision. The contexts and clinical settings in which physician and patient interact and exchange information material to therapeutic decisions are so multifarious, the informational needs and degree of dependency of individual patients so various, and the professional relationship itself such an intimate and irreducibly judgment-laden one, that we believe it is unwise to require as a matter of law that a particular species of information be disclosed." (5 C.4th 1185.)

(4) The fact-bound assessment stated in BAJI, No. 6.11 is particularly appropriate in the case of life expectancy projections for cancer patients based on statistical samples, because standard morbidity values derived from the experience of population groups are inherently unreliable regarding the fate of the individual patient. (5 C.4th 1186.)

(b) Relevancy of nonmedical interests. Plaintiffs contended that decedent's statistical life expectancy was admissible because it was material to his nonmedical interests, i.e., his business and investment affairs. This claim is founded on a premise not recognized in California. The doctrine of informed consent does not impose a duty on physicians to disclose information material to a patient's nonmedical interests. (5 C.4th 1188; see supra, §402.)

(c) Use of expert evidence. Two expert witnesses for defendants testified that the standard of medical practice cautions against disclosing to pancreatic cancer patients specific life expectancy data, unless the patient directly requests that information. The admission of this testimony was proper. Although the role of expert testimony is limited in informed consent litigation, especially as related to disclosures involving the risk of death or serious injury, there may be some situations where the adequacy of disclosure may turn on the standard of practice within the relevant medical community. In such a case, expert testimony will usually be appropriate. (5 C.4th 1191.) Because statistical life expectancy data information lies outside the significant risks associated with a given treatment, it falls within the scope of the additional information that a skilled physician would provide. And because the question whether a physician should disclose that information turns on the standard of practice within the medical community, expert testimony was properly admitted in this case. (5 C.4th 1192.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 348 [Arato].)

[§ 411] Nature of Statute.

(1) Adoption and Purpose. The Protection of Human Subjects in Medical Experimentation Act (Health & Saf.C. 24170 et seq.), enacted in 1978, concerns informed consent (see generally supra, §395 et seq.) of subjects of medical experimentation. (See 10 Pacific L. J. 510; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 99; 34 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 67 [Bridging the Gap Between Ethical Thought and Current Practice].) Health & Saf.C. 24171 provides in part:

"The Legislature hereby finds and declares that medical experimentation on human subjects is vital for the benefit of mankind, however such experimentation shall be undertaken with due respect to the preciousness of human life and the right of individuals to determine what is done to their own bodies."

"It is, therefore, the intent of the Legislature, in the enacting of this chapter, to provide minimum statutory protection for the citizens of this state with regard to human experimentation and to provide penalties for those who violate such provisions."

(2) Meaning of "Medical Experiment." The significant term is defined as follows:

(a) "The severance or penetration or damaging of tissues of a human subject or the use of a drug or device, as defined in Section 109920 or 109925, electromagnetic radiation, heat or cold, or a biological substance or organism, in or upon a human subject in the practice or research of medicine in a manner not reasonably related to maintaining or improving the health of the subject or otherwise directly benefiting the subject." (Health & Saf.C. 24174(a).)

(b) "The investigational use of a drug or device as provided in Sections 111590 and 111595." (Health & Saf.C. 24174(b).)

(c) "Withholding medical treatment from a human subject for any purpose other than maintenance or improvement of the health of the subject." (Health & Saf.C. 24174(c).)

(3) No Waiver of Rights or Requirements. A purported waiver of the rights guaranteed or requirements prescribed in the Act is void. (Health & Saf.C. 24176(f).)

2. Scope of Statute.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 412

[§ 412] Scope of Statute.

The Protection of Human Subjects in Medical Experimentation Act does not supersede the existing laws relating to use of experimental drugs in prisons. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.) Also, the Act does not apply to the following:

(1) Subject to specified exceptions, an investigator conducting an experiment within an authorized institution who obtains informed consent pursuant to federal regulations. (Health & Saf.C. 24178.)

(2) A pharmacist dispensing drugs on a prescription. (Health & Saf.C. 24179.)

(3) An adult person in a terminal condition who executes a directive for withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining procedures under the Health Care Decisions Law (14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §876 et seq.). (Health & Saf.C. 24179.5.)

(4) A patient subject to a life-threatening emergency. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a); see Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(b) [exemption does not relieve any party of any other legal duty, including duty to act in nonnegligent manner]; Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(c) [exemption remains in effect until January 1, 2011]; 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 657 [Health & Saf.C. 24177.5.]) The following conditions must be met:

(a) Care is provided in accordance with the procedures and protections set forth in 21 C.F.R., Part 50 and 45 C.F.R., Part 46 (regulations of the federal Department of Health and Human Services relating to the protection of human subjects), in effect on January 1, 1997. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(1).)

(b) The patient is in a life-threatening situation necessitating urgent intervention, and available treatments are unproven or unsatisfactory. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(2).)

(c) The patient is unable to give informed consent as a result of the patient's medical condition. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(3).)

(d) Obtaining informed consent from the patient's legally authorized representatives is not feasible before the treatment must be administered. However, the proposed investigational plan must define the length of time of the potential therapeutic window based on scientific evidence, and the investigator must commit to attempting to contact a legally authorized representative for each subject within that length of time and, if feasible, to asking the legally authorized representative contacted for consent within that length of time rather than proceeding without consent. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(4).)

(e) There is no reasonable way to identify prospectively the individuals likely to become eligible for participation in the clinical investigation. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(5).)

(f) Valid scientific studies have been conducted that support the potential for the intervention to provide a direct benefit to the patient. Risks associated with the investigation must be reasonable in relation to what is known about the medical condition of the potential class of subjects, the risks and benefits of standard therapy, if any, and what is known about the risks and benefits of the proposed intervention or activity. (Health & Saf.C. 24177.5(a)(6).)

Health & Saf.C. 24172 sets forth the "experimental subject's bill of rights," which includes, but is not limited to, the rights to:

- (a) "Be informed of the nature and purpose of the experiment."
- (b) "Be given an explanation of the procedures to be followed in the medical experiment, and any drug or device to be utilized."
- (c) "Be given a description of any attendant discomforts and risks reasonably to be expected from the experiment."
- (d) "Be given an explanation of any benefits to the subject reasonably to be expected from the experiment, if applicable."
- (e) "Be given a disclosure of any appropriate alternative procedures, drugs or devices that might be advantageous to the subject, and their relative risks and benefits."
- (f) "Be informed of the avenues of medical treatment, if any, available to the subject after the experiment if complications should arise."
- (g) "Be given an opportunity to ask any questions concerning the experiment or the procedures involved."
- (h) "Be instructed that consent to participate in the medical experiment may be withdrawn at any time and the subject may discontinue participation in the medical experiment without prejudice."
- (i) "Be given a copy of the signed and dated written consent form as provided for by Section 24173 or 24178."
- (j) "Be given the opportunity to decide to consent or not to consent to a medical experiment without the intervention of any element of force, fraud, deceit, duress, coercion, or undue influence on the subject's decision."

(1) Requirement and Exceptions. Subject to specified exceptions, "no person shall be subjected to any medical experiment unless the informed consent of such person is obtained." (Health & Saf.C. 24175(a).) The exceptions generally relate to situations in which a conservator may give consent (Health & Saf.C. 24175(b), (c)), and to situations in which consent is obtained for a developmentally disabled person without a guardian or conservator, pursuant to Welf.C. 4655(c) (Health & Saf.C. 24175(d)). However, consent given by a person other than the human subject "shall only be for medical experiments related to maintaining or improving the health of the human subject or related to obtaining information about a pathological condition of the human subject." (Health & Saf.C. 24175(e).) (See 33 Golden Gate L. Rev. 105 [informed consent of children in medical research].)

(2) Nature and Conditions. The subject or the subject's conservator, guardian, or other representative must sign and date a copy of the subject's bill of rights and a written consent form. (Health & Saf.C. 24173(a), (b).) The subject or representative must also be informed, both verbally and within the written consent form, "in nontechnical terms and in a language" in which he or she "is fluent," of all the important facts that might influence his or her decision. (Health & Saf.C. 24173(c) [specifying numerous matters that must be covered].) The written consent form must be signed and dated by some other person who can attest that the requirements have been satisfied. (Health & Saf.C. 24173(d).) The consent must be freely given, without force, fraud, deceit, duress, coercion, or undue influence. (Health & Saf.C. 24173(e).)

(2) Criminal Sanctions. The following persons are guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a county jail sentence of not over 1 year or a fine of $ 50,000 or both:

(a) A person who wilfully fails to obtain informed consent "and thereby exposes a subject to a known substantial risk of serious injury, either bodily harm or psychological harm." (Health & Saf.C. 24176(c).)

(b) A representative or employee of a pharmaceutical company who contracts with another person for the conduct of an experiment and who wilfully withholds information of its risks and hazards from such person and thereby exposes the subject to substantial risk of serious injury, either bodily harm or psychological harm. (Health & Saf.C. 24176(d).)

(3) Separate Offenses. "Each medical experiment performed in violation of any provision" of the Protection of Human Subjects in Medical Experimentation Act "is a separate and actionable offense." (Health & Saf.C. 24176(e).)

(4) Recovery of Damages. Nothing in Health & Saf.C. 24176 "shall be construed to limit or expand the right of an injured subject to recover damages under any other applicable law." (Health & Saf.C. 24176(g).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

A. Assault and Battery.

3. Plaintiff's Consent to Act.

e. Consent Fraudulently Obtained.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 416

[§ 416] Consent Fraudulently Obtained.

(1) Fraud as Vitiating Consent. A consent fraudulently obtained is invalid, and the act consented to may therefore be actionable. Thus, in Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 369, 193 C.R. 422, defendant induced plaintiff to have intercourse with him on the false representation that he was sterile. The court held that a cause of action was stated for fraud (see infra, §790) and also for battery: (a) the act of impregnation exceeded the scope of the consent, and (b) the consent was fraudulently induced. (145 C.A.3d 375.)

In Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 C.A.3d 933, 198 C.R. 249, plaintiff psychiatric patients sued defendant psychiatrists alleging that batteries occurred as part of an in-patient psychiatric treatment program in which the patients participated. The complaint stated that plaintiffs consented to the use of physical violence on themselves as an aspect of the treatment, because defendants persuaded them that the physical abuse was necessary to effect a cure, and that the violence was not in fact administered for a therapeutic purpose but in order to subjugate them and control their behavior to defendants' personal advantage. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer. Held, mandamus issued to compel vacation of the order. Plaintiffs state a cognizable cause of action for battery. Deceit as to the therapeutic purpose of an otherwise offensive contact vitiates consent. (150 C.A.3d 936.) To vitiate a patient's consent to a medical procedure on the basis of a physician's misrepresentation, the mistaken understanding of the patient must extend to the essential character of the act itself. The essential character is that which makes it harmful or offensive, rather than some collateral matter that merely operates as an inducement. The deception here, however, does not relate to a collateral matter operating as an inducement but "goes to the essential nature of the act itself." (150 C.A.3d 941.)

In Freedman v. Superior Court (1989) 214 C.A.3d 734, 263 C.R. 1, a malpractice action involving childbirth by Cesarean section, plaintiff's battery cause of action was based on the administration of the drug Pitocin. Plaintiff alleged that her consent to the treatment was fraudulently obtained because she was told by defendant doctors that the drug was necessary to prevent infection when, in fact, its purpose is to induce labor. After defendants' demurrer was sustained, plaintiff petitioned for review. Held, petition denied.

(a) Rains v. Superior Court held that, for fraud to vitiate a patient's consent to treatment, the patient must establish that the purpose of the treatment was nontherapeutic. (214 C.A.3d 737.) Here, plaintiff did not allege that defendants' purpose was other than the rendition of therapeutic treatment, and she did not allege that defendants' deception was for any independent or improper motive. Hence she did not allege a cause of action for battery. "She was induced to accept a drug by deception, but the deception did not have to do with the mutual purpose of patient and physician, which was treatment. They both knew the 'essential character' of the treatment, and the deception by the physician as to the specific medical objective was a collateral matter not vitiating consent." (214 C.A.3d 739.)

(b) This does not mean that plaintiff is without a cause of action. Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397, held that a patient whose consent was exceeded by a well-meaning physician attempting therapeutic treatment should be relegated to a negligence cause of action. Similarly, a patient whose consent was obtained by a well-meaning deception as to the precise effect of a treatment should also be relegated to a negligence action. (214 C.A.3d 740.) "We would expect it to be a very common phenomenon that patients whose course of treatment turns unsuccessful would, on reflection, conclude that had they known at the beginning what they know at the end they would not have permitted the treatment. We believe that the pleading of such cases should be restricted to negligence, or with appropriate facts to the tort of deceit, and that it will not serve society to permit the bringing of such actions as batteries." (214 C.A.3d 741.) (On negligence recovery for uninformed consent generally, see supra, §397.)

(2) Statutory Action for Injuries From Sexual Contact With Psychotherapist. C.C. 43.93 provides a cause of action for injury resulting from sexual contact with a psychotherapist in prescribed circumstances. (See 19 Pacific L. J. 508.) The cause of action exists if the sexual contact occurs under any of the following conditions:

(a) During the period the patient is receiving psychotherapy from the psychotherapist. (C.C. 43.93(b)(1).)

(b) Within 2 years following termination of therapy. (C.C. 43.93(b)(2).)

(c) By means of therapeutic deception. (C.C. 43.93(b)(3).) "Therapeutic deception" is defined as "a representation by a psychotherapist that sexual contact with the psychotherapist is consistent with or part of the patient's or former patient's treatment." (C.C. 43.93(a)(5).)

It is not a defense that the contact occurs outside a therapy or treatment session or off the premises regularly used. However, no cause of action exists between spouses within a marriage. (C.C. 43.93(c).)

4. Privilege of Defendant.

a. Self-Defense and Defense of Third Person.

1. Nature and Scope of Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 417

[§ 417] Nature and Scope of Privilege.

"Any necessary force may be used to protect from wrongful injury the person or property of oneself, or of a wife, husband, child, parent, or other relative, or member of one's family, or of a ward, servant, master, or guest." (C.C. 50.) Acts that would normally amount to assault or battery may thus be excused under the privilege to protect oneself and certain others. (See Villines v. Tomerlin (1962) 206 C.A.2d 448, 23 C.R. 617 [evidence insufficient]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §70 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §3.11 et seq.; 2 California Affirmative Defenses, §50:1 et seq.; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Assault and Battery §129 et seq.; 67 A.L.R.2d 405 [pleading self-defense in civil assault and battery action]; 9 A.L.R.3d 933 [relationship with assailant's wife as provocation depriving defendant of right of self-defense]; 35 A.L.R.4th 947 [provocation insufficient to create right to self-defense as basis for mitigation of damages]; 3 Proof of Facts 2d 211 [privileged use of force in self-defense]; 71 A.L.R.4th 940 [construction and application of statutes justifying use of force to prevent use of force against another]; BAJI, No. 7.55 [self-defense and defense of others]; CACI, No. 1304 [same]; cf. Bartosh v. Banning (1967) 251 C.A.2d 378, 385, 59 C.R. 382 [obligation of person acting in self-defense not to harm innocent bystander in public bar]; on exception where lawful arrest is being attempted, see infra, §424.)

The privilege under C.C. 50 covers only the defense of oneself, relatives, members of the household, and guests, while under the Restatement the actor may defend any third person under the same circumstances that would have justified defense of himself or herself. (Rest.2d, Torts §76; see 10 A.L.R.3d 619 [duty to protect another against criminal attack].)

4. Privilege of Defendant.

a. Self-Defense and Defense of Third Person.

2. Conditions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 418

[§ 418] Conditions.

The person claiming the privilege must reasonably believe that danger exists, and must use only such force as is reasonably necessary. (Fraguglia v. Sala (1936) 17 C.A.2d 738, 745, 62 P.2d 783; Rest.2d, Torts §63; see Marriott v. Williams (1908) 152 C. 705, 711, 93 P. 875 [burden of proof is on defendant]; Lopez v. Surchia (1952) 112 C.A.2d 314, 317, 246 P.2d 111 [fistfight between two boys, not involving imminent danger of great bodily harm; father of one, who fired gun at the other, was not privileged]; Sheward v. Magit (1951) 106 C.A.2d 163, 166, 234 P.2d 708 [father pushed away boy who was assaulting his son; privilege upheld]; 25 A.L.R.2d 1215 [danger or apparent danger of great bodily harm or death as condition of self-defense in civil action for assault and battery]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 119 [burden of proof in wrongful death action based on intentional homicide]; 13 Proof of Facts 3d 219 [use of excessive force].)

However, the test of necessary force is the reasonable appearance, and not the actual necessity. Hence, it is improper to instruct that the right to use force in self-defense "is always limited by the condition that the force used must be no more than is reasonably adequate and necessary to the occasion." (Vaughn v. Jonas (1948) 31 C.2d 586, 599, 191 P.2d 432 ["[i]n emphasizing that the law of self-defense is a law of necessity courts should never lose sight of the fact that the necessity may be either real or apparent"].)

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 4. Privilege of Defendant.
- b. Defense or Recapture of Property.
- 2. Use of Deadly Force.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 420

[§ 420] Use of Deadly Force.

(1) General Rule. Deadly force or force likely to cause bodily harm is ordinarily not justified merely in defense of property, as in ejecting a trespasser or recovering a chattel. (Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 C.2d 109, 119, 130 P.2d 389; see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §76; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §3.13.) Under the Restatement, deadly force is permitted "if, and only if, the actor reasonably believes that the intruder, unless expelled or excluded, is likely to cause death or serious bodily harm to the actor or to a third person whom the actor is privileged to protect." (Rest.2d, Torts §79.)

(2) Spring Gun or Trap. Spring guns or other deadly mechanical devices are, under the rule of the Restatement, privileged only where deadly force personally employed would have been justifiable; while barbed wire and spiked walls are generally permissible where reasonably necessary. (Rest.2d, Torts §§84, 85; see People v. Ceballos (1974) 12 C.3d 470, 476, 116 C.R. 233, 526 P.2d 241, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §79 [recognizing exception permitting use of spring gun where defendant, if present, would have been justified in using deadly force, but holding it to be inapplicable under the facts]; 64 Cal. L. Rev. 396 [Ceballos]; 47 A.L.R.3d 646 [use of set gun, trap, or similar device on defendant's own property].)

(3) Felonious Trespasser. Against a felonious trespasser, the use of deadly force without warning may be excusable. In Nakashima v. Takase (1935) 8 C.A.2d 35, 38, 46 P.2d 1020, defendant restaurant proprietor, suspecting a burglary, hid in a passageway and, when two men broke in and entered, shot without warning, killing one. Held, he was not liable for the wrongful death. The act was both a justifiable homicide under P.C. 197 (1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §§64, 78) and a privileged battery. (See Boyer v. Waples (1962) 206 C.A.2d 725, 730, 24 C.R. 192 [long-continued harassment and threats by vandals, followed by trespass in nighttime by persons apparently carrying explosives or gasoline; shooting with .22 rifle, after disregard of warnings and warning shots, was justifiable]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 119; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 375 [discussion of similar problem arising under claim of self-defense]; 100 A.L.R.2d 1021 [use of firearm in defense of habitation or property]; 29 A.L.R.4th 144 [private person's liability to third person injured by shots fired at fleeing criminal].)

Nakashima was followed in Gilmore v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 416, 281 C.R. 343. Defendant was awakened at 2 a.m. by a sound outside his second story living room window, and saw decedent standing on a ladder and attempting to remove the window screen. Defendant got his gun, went out the front door, and pulled the ladder down, knocking decedent to the ground. Decedent regained his feet, moved toward defendant and then backed away. Defendant ordered him to "freeze," and fired two warning shots near him; Decedent ran away, and defendant fired four more shots to decedent's side, hoping to frighten him into stopping. Fragments from a bullet, though not aimed at decedent, ricocheted off the asphalt and killed him. In a criminal prosecution, defendant's conviction for manslaughter was reversed on the ground that the evidence showed a justifiable homicide. In the present action by decedent's mother for wrongful death, defendant moved for summary judgment. Held, the motion should have been granted.

(a) An act resulting in justifiable homicide as defined by P.C. 197 is, in legal effect, a privileged act; i.e., though it would ordinarily be tortious, under the circumstances it does not subject the actor to liability. (230 C.A.3d 420, 421, citing the text.) Thus, the holding in Nakashima was that the shooting of the victim was both a justifiable homicide and a privileged battery. (230 C.A.3d 420, citing the text.)

(b) In People v. Ceballos, supra, the court pointed out that the common law sanctioned the use of deadly force only in situations where the felony being committed could be characterized as "forcible and atrocious"; and that where the offense is burglary, this standard is satisfied; the circumstances establish that the perpetrator's conduct "threatened, or was reasonably believed to threaten, death or serious bodily harm." (230 C.A.3d 422.) Here the undisputed facts establish that defendant did in fact entertain the belief that he was so threatened and that his belief was reasonable. He testified on deposition that when he looked out and saw decedent on the ladder he was "absolutely frantic"; his initial intent was to keep the intruder outside of his house, and he sought to accomplish it by making an arrest. And in his statement of undisputed facts defendant asserted that he was "afraid for his life." (230 C.A.3d 422.)

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 4. Privilege of Defendant.
- b. Defense or Recapture of Property.
- 3. No Privilege for Forcible Entry.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 421

[§ 421] No Privilege for Forcible Entry.

A tenant holding over without permission is technically a trespasser. But by statute the owner must use the unlawful detainer procedure, and, if the owner ousts the tenant forcibly, the tenant may regain possession by an action for forcible entry. (See C.C.P. 1159 et seq.; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §608 et seq.) There is a conflict of authority on whether the owner is liable in damages for battery in the case of the forcible ouster. (See 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Assault and Battery §139.) California formerly did not allow recovery by the tenant. (See Walker v. Chanslor (1908) 153 C. 118, 131, 94 P. 606.) However, the Walker case was overruled in Daluiso v. Boone (1969) 71 C.2d 484, 500, 78 C.R. 707, 455 P.2d 811.

In Daluiso, plaintiff, owner of a ranch, conveyed it to his son for a nominal consideration, reserving the right of possession during his lifetime. A dispute arose over the boundary, defendant contending that plaintiff's fence was on defendant's land. Defendant sent men to remove and relocate it, and in the bitter altercation plaintiff, an elderly man with a known heart condition, suffered emotional distress. He sued for intentional infliction of mental distress and injury to personal property. The trial judge refused to consider defendant's claim of privilege based on title to the disputed strip, and gave judgment for plaintiff without determining the issue. Held, affirmed.

(a) Former California law. Under the ancient common law, a person entitled to possession of land was privileged to enter and use such force--short of causing death or serious bodily harm--as reasonably appeared to be necessary to regain possession. The forcible entry statutes made this unlawful; but California, in Walker v. Chanslor, followed the minority American view that, where the defendant used no more force than necessary, the action provided by the statute was the exclusive remedy. (71 C.2d 497.)

(b) New rule. The policy of the forcible entry statutes is to discourage self-help. "In the light of this legislative policy, we are persuaded to hold that where as in the instant case a plaintiff is in peaceable possession of land, he may recover in tort for all damages for injuries to his person or goods which are the natural and proximate result of a forcible entry by another irrespective of whether the entering party has title or the right to possession." (71 C.2d 499.) The Walker case, to the extent inconsistent, is overruled. (71 C.2d 500.)

(c) Scope of holding. The court cautioned that its holding was confined to the possessor's action for damages for injuries to his person or his goods; it did not reach the questions whether the possessor can sue for damages for trespass on the land thus possessed; or whether a person peaceably on the land but not in possession of it, e.g., an invitee or guest, can recover from the forcibly entering defendant. (71 C.2d 499, and footnote 14.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 297; 7 San Diego L. Rev. 163.)

The question whether the possessor can sue for damages for trespass, left open in Daluiso v. Boone, was answered in the affirmative in Allen v. McMillion (1978) 82 C.A.3d 211, 147 C.R. 77. The court said: "Daluiso could not more emphatically condemn the employment of self-help methods in controversies over the right to possession of real property. The only real difference between that case and this is that here there was no actual confrontation during the removal of the fence. But this is a difference for which the parties in the case must be grateful. It would be incongruous in the extreme to say that one in the peaceable possession of land who protests forcible intrusion on his possession and thereby suffers physical injury has a cause of action against the intruder while one similarly circumstanced who avoids a potentially explosive confrontation does not. In effect this would be to encourage a showdown over the possession of the property. Contrary to the clear legislative policy against forcible self-help measures, this position would hold out the hope to would-be self-helpers that the person being forcibly dispossessed would, whether through fear or caution, suffer in silence rather than meet force with force. If since Daluiso the law has appeared to permit this loophole it must be because there arose no occasion to close it. This is the occasion." (82 C.A.3d 218.)

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 4. Privilege of Defendant.
- b. Defense or Recapture of Property.
- 4. Recaption of Personal Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 422

[§ 422] Recaption of Personal Property.

A person wrongfully deprived of chattels may sometimes, after demand, use necessary force to retake them. (Rest.2d, Torts §101.) But this privilege is a limited one. The person must act promptly, or after timely discovery. (Rest.2d, Torts §103.) Where the property was rightfully acquired, but subject to a security interest, the seller is not justified in committing assault and battery in repossessing it for default in payments. (Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase (1919) 181 C. 51, 54, 183 P. 451 [conditional sale]; see Rest.2d, Torts §108; cf. Blair v. Pitchess (1971) 5 C.3d 258, 277, 96 C.R. 42, 486 P.2d 1242, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §248 [holding former claim and delivery statute unconstitutional and indicating that contractual consent to taking of property may be ineffectual].)

In Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 C.2d 109, 130 P.2d 389, chattel mortgagees, relying on a mortgage provision giving them possession on default "either with or without process of law and using all necessary force so to do," were held liable for beating the mortgagors who resisted the attempt to take possession. (21 C.2d 118.)

In Rogers v. Kabakoff (1947) 81 C.A.2d 487, 184 P.2d 312, defendant, having parked his car in plaintiff's lot, refused to pay the full sum demanded. Plaintiff then removed the ignition key and defendant struck him twice, knocking him to the pavement and causing serious injuries. Held, defendant was liable for battery on two theories: (a) plaintiff was a bailee, in actual rightful possession, and forcible retaking was therefore improper; (b) even if defendant had been entitled to forcible recaption, the evidence justified the finding that unreasonable force was used. (81 C.A.2d 490.)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 4. Privilege of Defendant.
- c. Defense Against Animal.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 423

[§ 423] Defense Against Animal.

In Devincenzi v. Faulkner (1959) 174 C.A.2d 250, 344 P.2d 322, plaintiff's two Great Danes entered defendant's yard and attacked and injured his small cocker spaniel. A neighbor frightened the attackers away and defendant put his dog in the car to take him to a veterinarian. En route he saw plaintiff's dogs headed for a boy who had just dismounted from his bicycle. Believing they were about to attack, he drove his car against one dog, fatally injuring him. Then he continued to the veterinarian's, returning later to the scene. Plaintiff sued for damages for death of the dog. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The right under C.C. 3341(2) (supra, §157) to kill a dog worrying other animals is inapplicable because dogs are not among the specified other animals. However, defendant is entitled to kill the apparently attacking dog as an abatement of a nuisance (see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §153). Plaintiff's contention that defendant's failure to stop, in violation of the hit-and-run statute (infra, §1077), deprived him of this right, is rejected on the ground that the failure to stop followed and was not a part of striking the dog. (174 C.A.2d 253.)

(b) The view of some courts that one who uses force on a human being takes the risk that the person defended may not have had the right of self-defense should not be applied to the use of force against animals. Hence, defendant's testimony, showing a reasonable belief that the dogs were about to attack the boy, was sufficient for the jury to find justification. (174 C.A.2d 255.) (See 74 A.L.R.2d 770 [privilege to kill or injure nontrespassing licensed dog to defend third person from harm or attack by animal]; 37 Proof of Facts 2d 711 [justifiable destruction of animal].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- A. Assault and Battery.
- 4. Privilege of Defendant.
- d. Arrest by Police Officer.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 424

[§ 424] Arrest by Police Officer.

(1) Exception to Self-Defense Privilege for Arrest. The normal right of a person to resist what appears to be a battery (see supra, §417) does not exist where a lawful arrest is being attempted. "If a person has knowledge, or by the exercise of reasonable care, should have knowledge, that he is being arrested by a peace officer, it is the duty of such person to refrain from using force or any weapon to resist such arrest." (P.C. 834a; see Susag v. Lake Forest (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1401, 1410, 115 C.R.2d 269 [arrestee was convicted of resisting or obstructing peace officer in violation of P.C. 148(a); because lawfulness of arresting officers' conduct was established by conviction, arrestee was precluded from bringing assault and battery claims arising from his arrest].)

(2) Reasonable Force by Officer Is Permitted. The arresting officer may use reasonable force to restrain the person arrested without being liable for battery. (P.C. 843, 835a, 835.) "A peace officer who makes or attempts to make an arrest need not retreat or desist from his efforts by reason of the resistance or threatened resistance of the person being arrested; nor shall such officer be deemed an aggressor or lose his right to self-defense by the use of reasonable force to effect the arrest or to prevent escape or to overcome resistance." (P.C. 835a.) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §82 et seq.; 25 Pacific L. J. 171 [Police Brutality: Problems of Excessive Force Litigation]; 83 A.L.R.3d 174 [right of peace officer to use deadly force in attempting to arrest fleeing felon]; 83 A.L.R.3d 238 [peace officer's civil liability for death or personal injuries caused by intentional force in arresting misdemeanor]; 82 A.L.R.4th 598 [burden of proof in civil action for using unreasonable force in making arrest as to reasonableness of force used]; on authority to break into house to make arrest, see P.C. 844, 845, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §40.)

In Fobbs v. Los Angeles (1957) 154 C.A.2d 464, 316 P.2d 668, defendant police officers gave plaintiff F a traffic citation, then called at his home to exchange the proper copy for the court's copy inadvertently handed to him. Plaintiff F struck an officer, and with plaintiff T, his mother, continued to kick and battle until subdued and arrested. After their acquittal of the criminal charge of assault and battery they brought this action for damages for assault and battery. Held, the arrest was lawful (the misdemeanor of striking the officer was committed in his presence), and the force used was not excessive. (154 C.A.2d 469.)

(3) Liability for Excessive Force. An arresting officer and the public entity are liable for the use of excessive force. (Scruggs v. Haynes (1967) 252 C.A.2d 256, 264, 60 C.R. 355, supra, §356; see BAJI, No. 7.54 [use of force by arresting officer]; CACI, No. 1305 [same].)

Use of excessive force is an element to be proved by the plaintiff. In Edson v. Anaheim (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1269, 74 C.R.2d 614, defendant police officer shot and killed a suspect who appeared to be reaching for a gun. Decedent's widow and children filed a wrongful death action, and the cause was submitted to the jury on a battery claim. The trial judge instructed the jury that plaintiffs had the burden of proving that the officer used unreasonable force. The jury returned a special verdict finding that the officer acted reasonably. Held, affirmed.

(a) Majority rule adopted: Plaintiff must prove unreasonable force as element of tort. The issue raised here is one of first impression in California. In a battery action against a police officer, must plaintiff prove unreasonable force as part of the cause of action or must the officer prove reasonable force as an affirmative defense? Plaintiffs argued that because they proved a prima facie battery, justification was an affirmative defense for the defense to prove; this is the rule in battery actions against private citizens. Defendants countered that the trial court's instruction was correct because a police officer is entitled to use reasonable force in making an arrest, and, therefore, plaintiffs must prove unreasonable force to make a prima facie showing of battery. Other jurisdictions are fairly evenly split in these circumstances. A slim majority hold that unreasonable force is an element of the tort. A minority hold that a police officer, like any defendant seeking to justify a battery, has the burden of proving justification. The majority rule is the better one: Plaintiff must prove unreasonable force as an element of the tort. (63 C.A.4th 1272.)

(b) Rule consistent with Penal Code and standard jury instruction. Under P.C. 835a, a police officer in California may use reasonable force to make an arrest, prevent escape, or overcome resistance, and need not desist in the face of resistance. The standard jury instruction in police battery actions recognizes this. "A peace officer who uses unreasonable or excessive force in making a lawful arrest or detention commits a battery upon the person being arrested or detained as to such excessive force." (63 C.A.4th 1272, quoting BAJI (8th ed.), No. 7.54, which is carried on, in substance, in BAJI, No. 7.54.) By definition then, a prima facie battery is not established unless and until plaintiff proves that unreasonable force was used. (63 C.A.4th 1273.)

(c) Police defendants and private citizens are not similarly situated. The rule adopted here takes into account the special situation of a police defendant. Unlike private citizens, police officers act under color of law to protect the public interest and are charged with acting affirmatively and using force as part of their duties. They are not similarly situated to the ordinary battery defendant and need not be treated the same. A police officer must have control over the manner and means of making an arrest or detention. Police officers are often forced to make split-second judgments--in circumstances that are tense, uncertain, and rapidly evolving--about the amount of force that is necessary in a particular situation. Placing the burden of proof on the plaintiff gives the police appropriate maneuvering room in which to make these judgments, free from the need to justify every action in a court of law. (63 C.A.4th 1273.)

(d) Same rule applies in actions under Federal Civil Rights Act. In federal civil rights actions under 42 U.S.C., §1983, the federal counterpart of state battery or wrongful death actions, the rule is that plaintiff must establish, as part of the affirmative case, the unreasonableness of the force used. The federal practice is all the more significant because plaintiffs sometimes join federal and state claims against police defendants, either in federal or state court. To avoid jury confusion and to ease judicial administration, it makes sense to require plaintiff to prove unreasonable force on both claims. (63 C.A.4th 1274.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY A. Assault and Battery. 4. Privilege of Defendant. f. Control of Pupils.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 425

[§ 425] Control of Pupils.

(1) Common Law and Constitutional Background. The early common law rule that a schoolteacher could use reasonable force to discipline a child, by parental delegation, has been replaced by the modern view that the state itself may authorize moderate corporal punishment of children in public schools. (See Ingraham v. Wright (1977) 430 U.S. 651, 97 S.Ct. 1401, 1407, 1419, 51 L.Ed.2d 711, 724, 737, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §226 [Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment is inapplicable to school paddlings]; 37 A.L.R.4th 842 [public school teacher's self-defense as justification for use of force against student]; for argument that corporal punishment violates substantive due process, see 33 Hastings L. J. 1245.)

(2) Former Authorization of Corporal Punishment With Parental Consent. School districts in California were formerly empowered to adopt rules authorizing reasonable corporal punishment, provided that it could not be administered without the written approval of the pupil's parent or guardian. (Former Educ.C. 49000 et seq.; see 7 Pacific L. J. 425.)

(3) Corporal Punishment Prohibited. Educ.C. 49000 and 49001 prohibit all corporal punishment of a pupil, based on the following legislative findings and declarations: "[The] protection against corporal punishment, which extends to other citizens in other walks of life, should include children while they are under the control of the public schools. Children of school age are at the most vulnerable and impressionable period of their lives and it is wholly reasonable that the safeguards to the integrity and sanctity of their bodies should be, at this tender age, at least equal to those afforded to other citizens." (Educ.C. 49000.)

The prohibition is in Educ.C. 49001(b): "No person employed by or engaged in a public school shall inflict, or cause to be inflicted corporal punishment upon a pupil. Every resolution, bylaw, rule, ordinance, or other act or authority permitting or authorizing the infliction of corporal punishment upon a pupil attending a public school is void and unenforceable."

However, only "the willful infliction of, or willfully causing the infliction of, physical pain on a pupil," is prohibited. (Educ.C. 49001(a).) Neither the use of reasonable force to quell a disturbance threatening persons or property, to protect one's self, or to remove weapons or other dangerous objects from a pupil, nor the physical pain or discomfort caused by voluntary athletic competition or other recreational activity, constitutes corporal punishment. (Educ.C. 49001(a).)

West's Key Number Digest, Assault and Battery k.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Privilege To Maintain Reasonable Control. In Austin B. v. Escondido Union School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 860, 57 C.R.3d 454, two minors who suffered from severe autism sued their special education teacher for battery, alleging that he engaged in abusive conduct toward them while in school. The trial court included in its instructions and special verdict form a requirement that, to prove battery, defendant's touching of plaintiffs had to be unreasonable, within the context of a teacher's role in controlling the conduct of students, particularly autistic or special needs children. Held, there was no error. California recognizes that, both under the common law and by statute, a teacher stands in loco parentis to his or her students. Accordingly, a teacher may maintain that degree of control over a student that is "reasonably necessary to maintain order, protect property, or protect the health and safety of pupils, or to maintain proper and appropriate conditions conducive to learning." (149 C.A.4th 874, quoting Educ.C. 44807, text, §321.) This is particularly true where, as here, the students are autistic children who admittedly need, and in some circumstances desire, touching to calm, guide, and control them. If the reasonableness of the touching is eliminated as an element of battery in these circumstances, that could lead to a form of strict liability for battery as to special education teachers who engage in therapeutic touching of students. (149 C.A.4th 874.) The court did not err in requiring that the jury find that defendant's touching be unreasonable. (149 C.A.4th 875.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

1. Nature of Tort.

a. Definition and Distinctions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 426

[§ 426] Definition and Distinctions.

The statutory definition of false imprisonment, like that of battery (supra, §381), is in the Penal Code: "False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another." (P.C. 236; see Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 C.A.2d 14, 22, 217 P.2d 89 [definition of crime and tort are the same]; Stallings v. Foster (1953) 119 C.A.2d 614, 619, 259 P.2d 1006 [same]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §36 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, False Imprisonment and False Arrest, Chap. 13; 152 A.L.R. Fed 605 [Federal Tort Claims Act exemption of false imprisonment claims]; 15 Am.Jur. Trials 555 [police misconduct litigation--plaintiff's remedies]; 75 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [chemical and physical restraint in nursing home].)

False imprisonment involves the intentional confinement of another against the person's will. The elements are (1) nonconsensual, intentional confinement of a person, (2) without lawful privilege, (3) for an appreciable period of time, however brief. (See Easton v. Sutter Coast Hosp. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 485, 496, 95 C.R.2d 316, supra, §150; Rest.2d, Torts §35; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §3.7; BAJI, No. 7.60 et seq.; CACI, No. 1407; on pleading cause of action, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §719 et seq.; on nature of restraint or confinement, see infra, §427 et seq.)

A false arrest is one way to commit a false imprisonment; i.e., because the arrest involves detention or restraint, it always involves imprisonment. False arrest and false imprisonment are therefore not separate torts. (Moore v. San Francisco (1970) 5 C.A.3d 728, 735, 85 C.R. 281; Collins v. San Francisco (1975) 50 C.A.3d 671, 673, 123 C.R. 525, citing the text; see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 600; 19 Hastings L. J. 974; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §2.)

In Ware v. Dunn (1947) 80 C.A.2d 936, 183 P.2d 128, the court appears to have confused assault, trespass, and false imprisonment, with the result that an unusually broad and questionable test of false imprisonment was given. Plaintiff wife registered alone at a hotel in her married name. Plaintiff husband registered there later, but, through a mistake of the hotel clerk, defendants, police officers of a "Vice Squad Bureau," were informed that the room was registered only to the woman. While plaintiffs were in bed, the officers, acting on a tip, entered without knocking to determine whether a misdemeanor was being committed, questioned plaintiff husband (who answered voluntarily with no protest) about his registration, and left. A verdict for damages of $ 1,000 was upheld, the court stressing the propositions that (a) there is no right to arrest on suspicion of a misdemeanor not committed in the presence of the officer, and (b) the constitutional guarantee against unreasonable search and seizure cannot be impaired by the pretext of "investigation" by police officers. The opinion properly concludes that defendants' "entry under pretended color of official right was therefore an abuse of the authority invested in them as peace officers, and relegated them to the category of trespassers." (80 C.A.2d 944.) However, the court also suggested that there might have been an assault, even though no violence was employed or threatened. (80 C.A.2d 942.) More important, the court held that false imprisonment was established because "the words and conduct of the officers may well be held to be of such a character as to induce a reasonable apprehension or fear ... of the use of force should they resist the entry into their room and the conduct of the others therein." (80 C.A.2d 943.) It would seem, however, that the evidence clearly established trespass and nothing else; there was no threat of injury to constitute an assault, and no attempt at detention to constitute false imprisonment. (See 21 So. Cal. L. Rev. 431.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

1. Nature of Tort.

b. Necessity of Restraint.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 427

[§ 427] Necessity of Restraint.

The tort requires direct restraint of the person for some appreciable length of time, however short, compelling the person to stay or go somewhere against his or her will. (Rest.2d, Torts §35 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §3.8; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 601; 11 A.L.R.4th 228 ["deprogramming" member of religious sect]; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §11 et seq.; 40 Proof of Facts 2d 81 [confinement in nursing home or hospital].) Merely preventing a person from going to a particular place is not false imprisonment, though it may, in some situations, constitute another actionable wrong. (See Rest.2d, Torts §36(3).)

The necessity of restraint is illustrated in Snyder v. Evangelical Orthodox Church (1989) 216 C.A.3d 297, 264 C.R. 640. Plaintiffs R and S, members of defendant church who were having an extramarital affair, confessed this information to various church officials, who promised confidentiality. However, the information was divulged to the congregation and the public, and plaintiffs were excommunicated. Each plaintiff filed a complaint alleging multiple causes of action, including, in R's case, one for false imprisonment. The trial judge granted defendants' motions for partial summary judgment on the false imprisonment claim. Held, affirmed.

(a) When R confessed to defendant B, a bishop, B asked him to move to the city where the church was headquartered to accept pastoral guidance and care. Allegedly, he was ordered to abandon his family, the absolution of his sins was conditioned on his pursuing this course of action, and he was again promised confidentiality if he cooperated. When R asked for a week to consider, defendant H, another bishop to whom he had confessed, requested that he spend the week in a motel "to struggle for his soul without outside contact." R agreed to do that. (216 C.A.3d 304.)

(b) Although R claimed that he was "trapped" in the motel cabin without transportation or telephone, the record established consent and lack of physical restraint. On several occasions, he left the cabin and had contact with S and family members, and he disobeyed H's order to return. (216 C.A.3d 304.) R's argument that his consent to isolation was induced by threats to reveal his confidences and to withhold absolution if he did not comply is untenable. Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, infra, §770, rejected a similar contention on the ground that such threats are privileged religious speech that may not serve as the basis for tort liability. (216 C.A.3d 305.)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

1. Nature of Tort.

c. Methods of Restraint.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 428

[§ 428] Methods of Restraint.

(1) Physical Force or Threats of Force. Any exercise of force, or threat of force, by which a person is compelled to remain where the person is or to go to another location is a sufficient restraint. (Vandiveer v. Charters (1930) 110 C.A. 347, 355, 294 P. 440.)

The physical force may be slight. (Hanna v. Raphael Weill & Co. (1949) 90 C.A.2d 461, 462, 203 P.2d 564 [defendant's special officer took plaintiff by arm saying, "You go back with us. It will be better for you if you do."].)

Actual physical force is not essential; the restraint may be by apprehension of force resulting from words, gestures, or acts. (Vandiveer v. Charters, supra; Rest.2d, Torts §§35, 40, 40A; see Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 C.A.2d 14, 23, 217 P.2d 89 [plaintiff was coerced into being interrogated at superior's desk by threats of prosecution for alleged misappropriation]; Baines v. Brady (1953) 122 C.A.2d Supp. 957, 959, 265 P.2d 194 [plaintiff was ordered into police patrol wagon, searched, and released without arrest; cf. P.C. 849, infra, §447, on release of arrested person].)

The restraint is sufficient where a person voluntarily submits to a show of authority by an officer threatening arrest. (Vandiveer v. Charters, supra; Rest.2d, Torts §41; cf. Gibson v. J.C. Penney Co. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 640, 644, 331 P.2d 1057 [issue raised by facts but not discussed on appeal]; see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 601.)

(2) Liability in Absence of Physical Force or Threats. There may be false imprisonment with neither physical force nor threats of force.

In Schanafelt v. Seaboard Finance Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 420, 239 P.2d 42, defendant A, agent of defendant finance company, went to the home of plaintiff, a pregnant woman, to repossess furniture for delinquent payments. He blocked her driveway to prevent her driving off, ordered her to stay until the truck arrived, and refused to allow her to get food. The detention lasted from 11:00 a.m. to 2:15 p.m., when the truck took the furniture out and defendant A left. An award of $ 500 compensatory and $ 2,000 punitive damages was upheld. Although A did not physically restrain plaintiff, his conduct effectively prevented her from leaving, for her car was her only means of transportation. (108 C.A.2d 423.)

In Scofield v. Critical Air Medicine (1996) 45 C.A.4th 990, 52 C.R.2d 915, infra, §430, three children were injured while in Mexico, and their father arranged for a particular air transport service to pick them up. However, defendant, also an air transport service, learned of the job, and succeeded in getting there first and transporting the children. The children, through their father as guardian ad litem, brought a false imprisonment action against defendant. Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed. Under Rest.2d, Torts §40A, false imprisonment may be by means of any form of unreasonable duress. (45 C.A.4th 1002.) Similarly, P.C. 236, relevant because the crime and tort of false imprisonment are defined as the same (supra, §426), recognizes that false imprisonment can be perpetrated by fraud or deceit. (45 C.A.4th 1001.) This result is not changed by the fact that BAJI, No. 7.60 refers to false imprisonment as being accomplished by force or threat of force; that instruction is limited to situations where the false imprisonment is carried out in the stated manner, and does not purport to address the situations where it is accomplished by fraud, deceit, or unreasonable duress. (45 C.A.4th 1002.)

(3) Failure To Provide Means of Escape. Although no general duty is recognized to provide a means of escape from confinement, Rest.2d, Torts §45 declares such a duty where the plaintiff's confinement was induced by the defendant's representation that assistance would be given when needed. (See 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 102.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

1. Nature of Tort.

d. Persons Restrained.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 429

[§ 429] Persons Restrained.

(1) Minors. Unlawful confinement in a juvenile court detention home may constitute false imprisonment. This is so despite the fact that these homes are deemed to be in the nature of shelters for abandoned or mistreated children. (McAlmond v. Trippel (1928) 93 C.A. 584, 588, 269 P. 937; see 17 Cal. L. Rev. 71; 20 A.L.R.3d 1441 [detaining child].)

(2) Mentally Ill Persons. The involuntary hospitalization of a person in a mental institution in violation of statute constitutes false imprisonment. Maben v. Rankin (1961) 55 C.2d 139, 10 C.R. 353, 358 P.2d 681, involved the application of former Welf.C. 5750 et seq., which provided for involuntary hospitalization of mentally ill persons in private institutions without judicial proceedings for commitment, but required a disinterested physician's statement, and an opportunity for the patient to notify others of his detention and have a court hearing. Without complying with these provisions defendant psychiatrist, at the request of plaintiff's husband, forcibly anesthetized her and took her to a private hospital where he gave her electroshock treatments. She remained there against her will for 15 days. In this action for false imprisonment and assault and battery, the court held that there might be liability, but that an error in instructions necessitated reversal. The criticized instruction told the jury that the burden was on defendants (the doctor and his medical partnership) to prove that the husband consented in good faith on behalf of plaintiff. "This placed an excessive burden of proof on defendants with respect to the husband's good faith. A doctor is not required to investigate whether the consenting husband has an ulterior motive in the absence of circumstances which put him on notice that the husband is acting in bad faith. The burden of proving that the doctor was put on notice is on the plaintiff. Good faith is presumed." (55 C.2d 142.) (See 30 A.L.R.3d 523 [false imprisonment in institution of, or conduct in connection with, insanity proceedings]; 44 Proof of Facts 3d 217 [wrongful confinement to mental health or developmental disabilities facility].)

In Culbertson v. Santa Clara (1968) 261 C.A.2d 274, 67 C.R. 752, a deputy, acting under a court order, took plaintiff into custody as a mentally ill person. But the statute expressly required service of the order of detention and the petition, and failure of the deputy to make this service resulted in wrongful detention. (261 C.A.2d 276.)

Significant immunities for the detention of the mentally ill are provided by statute. (See Health & Saf.C. 1799.111 and Welf.C. 5000 et seq., supra, §136.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

1. Nature of Tort.

e. Necessity for Awareness or Harm.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 430

[§ 430] Necessity for Awareness or Harm.

Under the Restatement, there is no liability for false imprisonment "unless the person physically restrained knows of the confinement or is harmed by it," which harm must be more than nominal. (Rest.2d, Torts §42 and Comment b.) However, a California Court of Appeal departed from this rule in Scofield v. Critical Air Medicine (1996) 45 C.A.4th 990, 52 C.R.2d 915, supra, §428. The father of children injured in Mexico arranged for a particular air transport service to pick them up, but defendant, also an air transport service, learned of the job, and succeeded in getting there first and transporting the children. None of the children knew that defendant was not the service arranged for by their father. Neither the crew nor the plane bore distinctive marks that would have told the children of the error involved. The children, through their father as guardian ad litem, brought a false imprisonment action against defendant, and received a verdict of over $ 180,000. Held, affirmed.

(a) Contemporaneous awareness of unlawful restraint is not necessary.

(1) The original Restatement of Torts required contemporaneous awareness, but that position was questioned by Prosser. The Second Restatement takes the position that false imprisonment is accomplished whenever there is either contemporaneous awareness or harm to the victim, although the harm must be more than merely nominal. There is a dearth of persuasive authority on this question in other states, so it is necessary for California to make its own determination on the significance of the victim's state of mind. (45 C.A.4th 1003.)

(2) It is readily apparent that a victim may sustain substantial harm from a false imprisonment, even if not immediately cognizant of being wrongfully detained, as where a person in a diabetic coma is locked up as a drunk, and, on later being made aware of the confinement, suffers humiliation and emotional distress. (45 C.A.4th 1006, citing Rest.2d, Torts §42, Comment b.) "Therefore, contemporaneous awareness of the false imprisonment is not, and need not be, an essential element of the tort. Such an arbitrary limitation would leave persons harmed by false imprisonment uncompensated, while allowing perpetrators of an intentional tort to escape liability. Instead, the relevant factor is whether the unlawful restraint or confinement resulted in harm." (45 C.A.4th 1006.)

(b) Actual damage is not necessary. Nominal harm is sufficient to support a cause of action for false imprisonment. While the Second Restatement requires that the wrongful restraint cause more than nominal damages, C.C. 3360 (infra, §1546) allows recovery whenever there has been a breach of duty, even if the harm is only nominal, and both the California Supreme Court and BAJI have recognized that only nominal damages are required for false imprisonment. (45 C.A.4th 1007, citing Maher v. Wilson (1903) 139 C. 514, 73 P. 418, and BAJI, No. 7.60.) The advantages of an award of nominal damages, other than psychological, are two: The plaintiff (1) is entitled to costs and (2) may be entitled to punitive damages. In addition to nominal damages, the victim of false imprisonment frequently suffers compensable emotional distress, and may also be entitled to compensation for such harms as loss of time, physical discomfort, illness, or injury, business interruption, and damage to reputation. (45 C.A.4th 1008.) (On damages recoverable for false imprisonment generally, see infra, §1698.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

a. Reasonable Detention Without Arrest.

1. Judicially Created Privileges.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 431

[§ 431] Judicially Created Privileges.

(1) Detention by Property Owner. Several jurisdictions, including California, have extended the privilege of lawful arrest (infra, §434 et seq.) to a privilege of detention without arrest. A property owner (usually a storekeeper), on probable cause to believe a theft has been committed, may detain the suspected person for a reasonable time, to conduct an investigation in a reasonable manner. (Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 C.2d 175, 180, 54 P.2d 20; Bettolo v. Safeway Stores (1936) 11 C.A.2d 430, 431, 54 P.2d 24; see Roberson v. J.C. Penney Co. (1955) 136 C.A.2d 1, 4, 288 P.2d 275 [probable cause is question of law for court]; Gibson v. J.C. Penney Co. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 640, 644, 331 P.2d 1057 [same]; Lowry v. Standard Oil Co. (1942) 54 C.A.2d 782, 789, 130 P.2d 1 [same privilege applies in action for assault based on attempt to apprehend]; King v. Andersen (1966) 242 C.A.2d 606, 609, 51 C.R. 561, citing the text [shoplifter]; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 119; 13 Hastings L. J. 156; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 103; 28 Stanf. L. Rev. 589 [Merchants' Responses to Shoplifting: An Empirical Study]; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 269; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §74 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.65 [right of reasonable detention by property owner]; CACI, No. 1409 [same].)

The detention must be reasonable. In Moffatt v. Buffums' (1937) 21 C.A.2d 371, 375, 69 P.2d 424, plaintiff, an employee of defendant corporation, was called to the manager's office, charged with theft, and told that she could not leave until she signed a confession. After threats and forcible detention for 5 hours she signed and was released. Held, this was false imprisonment; she was not detained for investigation of an alleged present theft, but for the purpose of securing a confession of an offense already completed. Defendant also urged that because plaintiff was an employee, there was no false imprisonment in calling her to the office during working hours, but the court declared that her obligation of service did not authorize forcible detention to compel a confession. (21 C.A.2d 375.)

In Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 C.A.2d 735, 218 P.2d 802, plaintiff, with a criminal record well known to defendants, was allowed to pay admission and attend the races. However, after leaving during a race, and while sitting in his car, he was accosted by track police and forced to go to the office by threats. There his coat was torn, and he was searched for evidence of bookmaking. A judgment for both compensatory damages and exemplary damages was affirmed. The theory of the defense was that statutes and regulations of the Racing Board require exclusion of known undesirables and persons of immoral character; that revocation of a license may result from failure to comply with these conditions; and that they were therefore privileged to detain plaintiff for investigation in protection of their property (license). The court did not disapprove of the theory, but upheld the jury's determination that, on the facts, there was no reasonable investigation; defendants already knew everything about plaintiff and the needless infliction of pain and indignities was unwarranted. (97 C.A.2d 738.)

(2) Detention by Police Officer. A police officer has a privilege to detain a suspect for questioning when the circumstances indicate that this is called for in the proper discharge of the officer's duties; and the good faith suspicion that justifies the detention for investigation "is necessarily of a lesser standard than that required to effect an arrest." (Dawkins v. Los Angeles (1978) 22 C.3d 126, 133, 148 C.R. 857, 583 P.2d 711.)

This privilege does not extend, however, to a mere witness. In Baines v. Brady (1953) 122 C.A.2d Supp. 957, 265 P.2d 194, defendant police officers saw what appeared to be an assault in a poolroom. They questioned onlookers, including plaintiff, a friend of A, and arrested A. Then they ordered plaintiff into the patrol wagon, searched him, and released him. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. It is the duty of a good citizen to give all information to law officers concerning a crime (and plaintiff maintained that he did). "If a person does not willingly talk with an investigator, there is no law that permits his arrest or detention by the police on that ground. A citizen who is not charged with, or suspected of, a crime, cannot be arrested or detained by a policeman in the course of his duties, and any alleged inconvenience caused to the investigating authorities by this principle is far outweighed by the rights of citizens to be protected in their personal liberty." (122 C.A.2d Supp. 960.) (But see P.C. 849, infra, §447, on effect of release.)

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

a. Reasonable Detention Without Arrest.

2. Statutory Privileges.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 432

[§ 432] Statutory Privileges.

Detention privileges of several types of property owners have been codified:

(1) Detention by Merchant. A merchant may detain a person for a reasonable time in order to conduct an investigation in a reasonable manner, on probable cause to believe that the person is attempting to unlawfully take, or has unlawfully taken, merchandise from the merchant's premises. (P.C. 490.5(f)(1); see 47 A.L.R.3d 998 [statutes authorizing detention of suspected shoplifters].)

(2) Detention by Librarian. A library employee may detain a person for a reasonable time in order to conduct an investigation in a reasonable manner, when the employee has probable cause to believe that the person is attempting to unlawfully remove, or has unlawfully removed, books or library materials from the library facility premises. (P.C. 490.5(f)(1); see P.C. 490.5(g)(4), (g)(5) [defining "library facility" to include library, museum, and public records repository, and "library materials" to include materials in custody of such a facility].)

(3) Detention by Theater Owner. A theater owner may detain a person for a reasonable time to conduct a reasonable investigation if the owner has probable cause to believe that the person is attempting to operate a video recording device in the theater without the owner's permission. (P.C. 490.5(f)(1).)

(4) Search During Detention. During the period of detention any items that the merchant, librarian, or theater owner has probable cause to believe are unlawfully taken from the premises or recorded on theater premises, and that are in plain view, may be examined to determine their ownership. (P.C. 490.5(f)(3).) If the person detained refuses to voluntarily surrender an item, the merchant, librarian, or theater owner, or an agent, may conduct a limited and reasonable search of property in the immediate possession of the detainee, such as packages, shopping bags, and handbags, but not including clothing worn by the person. (P.C. 490.5(f)(4).) (See 13 Pacific L. J. 666.)

3. Distinction: Detention of Patient.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 433

[§ 433] Distinction: Detention of Patient.

No patient may be intentionally confined in a health facility without consent of the patient or an authorized person, "solely for the nonpayment of a bill." (Health & Saf.C. 1285(a), (b).) (See 11 Pacific L. J. 671; 4 A.L.R.4th 449 [false imprisonment in connection with confinement in nursing home or hospital].)

The detention is a misdemeanor (Health & Saf.C. 1285(d)), and gives the wrongfully detained person a cause of action for damages, as follows:

(1) The action may be brought by the person detained or by the patient's parent, guardian, conservator, or other legal representative. (Health & Saf.C. 1285(c).)

(2) The action may be brought against the health facility, its proprietor, its lessee, or their agents. (Health & Saf.C. 1285(c).)

(3) The plaintiff may recover general and punitive damages, costs, and attorneys' fees. (Health & Saf.C. 1285(c).)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 434

[§ 434] In General.

An arrest is made by taking a person into custody, in a case and in the manner authorized by law. (See P.C. 834 et seq.) It may be made by a peace officer or by a private person. (P.C. 834, 836, 837; on citizen's arrest, see infra, §439; on authority of magistrate to order arrest of anyone committing offense in magistrate's presence, see P.C. 838.) If made by a peace officer, it may be either with or without a warrant. (P.C. 836; see infra, §§435 et seq., 438, 441 et seq.) The grounds for an arrest (and therefore the basis for the defense of justification or privilege) differ depending on whether the crime is a misdemeanor or felony, and whether it was or was not committed in the presence of the arresting officer. (P.C. 836; see infra, §435 et seq.) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §82 et seq.; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §§24 et seq., 81 et seq.; BAJI, Nos. 7.63, 7.64, 7.66 [requisites of arrest].)

The mechanics and procedure of arrest and subsequent steps are properly part of the subject of criminal procedure. (For a survey, see Rest.2d, Torts §112 et seq.; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 96; 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §1 et seq.; and infra, §§435 et seq., 444.) However, the impact of the legal principles is mainly found in two other fields: (1) Evidence: The admissibility or exclusion of evidence found by a search incident to a lawful or unlawful arrest. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §1 et seq.) (2) Torts: The defense of privilege in an action for false arrest or imprisonment, based on a lawful arrest. (See P.C. 835, 847; infra, §435 et seq.)

The courts, in discussing "reasonable" or "probable" cause for an arrest, ordinarily use the terms interchangeably. (See People v. Talley (1967) 65 C.2d 830, 835, 56 C.R. 492, 423 P.2d 564.)

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

2. Felony Arrest Without Warrant.

aa. When Arrest Is Authorized.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 435

[§ 435] When Arrest Is Authorized.

(1) Private Person. A private person may arrest another:

(a) "When the person arrested has committed a felony." (P.C. 837(2).)

(b) "When a felony has been in fact committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it." (P.C. 837(3).) (See BAJI, No. 7.64 [arrest by private person]; CACI, No. 1403 [same].)

(2) Police Officer. While a private person may not arrest unless a felony was in fact committed (see P.C. 837), a peace officer is not so restricted. A peace officer may arrest when:

(a) "The person arrested has committed a felony, although not in the officer's presence." (P.C. 836(a)(2).)

(b) "The officer has probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed a felony, whether or not a felony, in fact, has been committed." (P.C. 836(a)(3).) (See P.C. 847 [peace officer is not liable for false arrest or false imprisonment arising out of authorized arrest]; Hamilton v. San Diego (1990) 217 C.A.3d 838, 843, 266 C.R. 215 [arrest on probable cause, officer and city immune from liability under P.C. 847 and 836]; BAJI, No. 7.63 [arrest by peace officer without warrant]; CACI, No. 1401 [same].)

P.C. 836(a)(2) makes no reference to probable or reasonable cause, and the question whether this qualification is read into it has not been decided in California. (See Beauregard v. Wingard (1965) 237 C.A.2d 760, 765, 47 C.R. 279, infra, §437.)

Warrantless felony arrests are also permitted by peace officers in prescribed circumstances for specified offenses:

(a) A peace officer responding to a call alleging violation of a domestic violence protective or restraining order must, consistent with existing policies for responding to domestic violence calls (see P.C. 13701), arrest the person against whom the order is issued, without a warrant and regardless of whether the violation occurred in the officer's presence, if the officer has probable cause to believe that the person has notice of the order and has committed the violation. (P.C. 836(c)(1).) Where mutual protective orders have been issued, the officer may arrest the primary (not necessarily the first) aggressor. (P.C. 836(c)(3).)

(b) A peace officer may make a warrantless arrest of a suspect who commits an assault or battery on the suspect's current or former spouse, fiancé, fiancée, or current or former cohabitant, a person with whom the suspect currently is having or has previously had an engagement or dating relationship, a person with whom the suspect has or is presumed to have parented a child, a child of the suspect or of a person in one of the above categories, or a relative of the suspect who is 65 or older if the peace officer (1) has probable cause to believe that the suspect has committed the assault or battery, whether or not it has in fact been committed, and (2) makes the arrest as soon as probable cause arises. (P.C. 836(d); see 32 McGeorge L. Rev. 579 [expansion of warrantless arrest exception to dating relationships].)

(c) A peace officer may make a warrantless arrest for carrying a concealed firearm (P.C. 12025) if (1) the officer has reasonable cause to believe that the suspect has committed the violation, (2) the violation occurred within an airport, and (3) the officer makes the arrest as soon as reasonable cause arises to believe that the suspect committed the violation. (P.C. 836(e).)

(3) Police Officer of Another State. Under the Uniform Act on Fresh Pursuit (P.C. 852 et seq.), a peace officer of another state, "in fresh pursuit" of a person for a felony committed in the other state, has the same authority to arrest as local peace officers would have for a felony committed here. (P.C. 852.2.)

(2) Police Officer. See O'Toole v. Superior Court (2006) 140 C.A.4th 488, 511, 44 C.R.3d 531 [reasonable cause to arrest exists when facts known to arresting officer would lead reasonable person to have strong suspicion of arrestee's guilt; this is objective standard].

(1) Nature of Requirement. "Reasonable" or "probable" cause to believe that the arrested person committed a felony means more than mere suspicion. But if the circumstances and information at the time of the act, including matters technically hearsay or inadmissible as legal evidence, induced a reasonable belief, it is immaterial how the case ultimately turns out. (Murphy v. Murray (1925) 74 C.A. 726, 730, 241 P. 938; Cook v. Singer Sewing Machine Co. (1934) 138 C.A. 418, 420, 32 P.2d 430; *Van Fleet v. West Amer. Ins. (2) Question of Law. Whether there was reasonable cause is a question of law. It should not be submitted to the jury, and the trial judge's determination is not binding. (Allen v. McCoy (1933) 135 C.A. 500, 507, 27 P.2d 423; Aitken v. White (1949) 93 C.A.2d 134, 141, 208 P.2d 788.)

[§ 437] Arrest Based on Entrapment.

In Beauregard v. Wingard (1965) 237 C.A.2d 760, 47 C.R. 279, plaintiff incurred the enmity of defendant chief of police. Defendant arranged for a deputy sheriff, posing as an employee of plaintiff's friend, to urge plaintiff to place a racetrack bet for him. Plaintiff first demurred, then agreed, and a hidden officer immediately arrested him. He was charged with a felony, but at the criminal trial without a jury, the judge found him not guilty on the ground of entrapment. In this action for false arrest, defendant contended that the criminal defense of entrapment is irrelevant in a civil action, that the felony remains as a fact, and that the officers therefore had the privilege to arrest for actual commission of that felony (see supra, §435). Held, this was too superficial a view; a criminal act committed as a result of entrapment cannot justify an arrest. (237 C.A.2d 765.) (See 15 A.L.R.3d 963 [entrapment as precluding justification of arrest].)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

3. Misdemeanor Arrest Without Warrant.

aa. Arrest by Peace Officer or Authorized Public Employee.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 438

[§ 438] Arrest by Peace Officer or Authorized Public Employee.

(1) Presence Rule. Former P.C. 836, 837(1) originally required actual commission of a misdemeanor in the presence of the peace officer making the arrest; and some cases strictly applied the requirement. (See Ware v. Dunn (1947) 80 C.A.2d 936, 943, 183 P.2d 182; Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 C.A.2d 713, 718, 176 P.2d 372; People v. Perry (1947) 79 C.A.2d Supp. 906, 909, 180 P.2d 465; Miller v. Glass (1955) 44 C.2d 359, 362, 282 P.2d 501.) Accordingly, arrest on mere suspicion or on information of others was wholly unauthorized. (See In re Milstead (1919) 44 C.A. 239, 242, 186 P. 170; Oppenheimer v. Los Angeles (1951) 104 C.A.2d 545, 549, 232 P.2d 26.)

(2) Judicial Relaxation of Presence Rule. The unqualified statutory requirement of actual commission of the misdemeanor in the peace officer's presence was modified by cases establishing a test of reasonable or probable cause in one situation: where a misdemeanor was apparently being committed in the presence of the officer, but there was some uncertainty as to the parties participating in that crime.

Thus, in Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 C.2d 315, 239 P.2d 876, plaintiffs C and M, assembled with other students to view a hot rod race, were arrested with the group for unlawful assembly. Held, the officers could act on reasonable appearances in making the arrest. The court took the position that P.C. 836(1) should be read in conformity with the general rule of probable cause, in order that peace officers might be allowed to act without fear of being held liable for reasonable mistakes. (38 C.2d 321.) (Cf. Miller v. Glass (1955) 44 C.2d 359, 362, 282 P.2d 501 [Coverstone rule was inapplicable where there was no apparent commission of misdemeanor in presence].)

(3) Statutory Rule of Reasonable Cause. As amended in 1957, P.C. 836(a)(1) provides that an officer may arrest whenever "the officer has reasonable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed a public offense in the officer's presence." Presumably this was intended to state the effect of the Coverstone case as interpreted in the Miller case. (See Whaley v. Jansen (1962) 208 C.A.2d 222, 227, 25 C.R. 184; Whaley v. Kirby (1962) 208 C.A.2d 232, 237, 25 C.R. 50.)

P.C. 836.5 analogously permits a public officer or employee who is authorized by ordinance to arrest a person without a warrant when the officer or employee has reasonable cause to believe that the person has committed a misdemeanor in his or her presence "which is a violation of a statute or ordinance which the officer or employee has the duty to enforce." (P.C. 836.5(a); see P.C. 836.5(b) [no liability in these circumstances for false arrest or false imprisonment].)

In the Whaley cases, supra, plaintiff was going from house to house soliciting the use of homes and contributions for his campaign exposing governmental wrongdoing, carrying with him literature making extravagant charges against government officials. An officer took him into custody, he was given a psychiatric examination, and he was then released without charge of crime. Held, under Coverstone principles the officer had reasonable cause to believe a misdemeanor was being committed (vagrancy or soliciting money without a permit); but the arrest was actually made and justified under the terms of a statute authorizing a peace or health officer to take into custody a person so mentally ill as to require care or restraint for the protection of himself and others. This statute did not require that the acts justifying such restraint be committed in the presence of the others. (208 C.A.2d 237.) (See 92 A.L.R.2d 570 [right to arrest and detain person who is or is suspected of being mentally deranged].)

(4) Arrest by Off-Duty Officer. In

Cervantez v. J.C. Penney Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 579, 156 C.R. 198, 595 P.2d 975, plaintiff and a companion were in defendant's store when D, an off-duty police officer working as a security guard, observed what he thought were thefts of merchandise. After continued surveillance, he arrested them as they left the store. Theft charges were dismissed after the allegedly stolen items were lost, and plaintiff brought this action for damages against D and defendant company for false arrest and other torts. A nonsuit was granted on the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and the jury returned a verdict for defendants on the other counts. Held, reversed for prejudicial error in instructions. The trial judge instructed the jury on the standards applicable to arrests by peace officers, rather than on the more limited authority of a private person (only where offense actually committed or attempted in the person's presence; see infra, §439). This was erroneous. The fact of private employment prevents a peace officer from acting in what would otherwise be the officer's official capacity. (24 C.3d 587, 588.)

Under amendments to P.C. 70 subsequent to the Cervantez case, however, a police officer who works part-time as a security guard acts as a peace officer during that time so long as the officer meets specified requirements relating generally to wearing a police uniform and observing agency rules and regulations. (See P.C. 70(c), (d); Melendez v. Los Angeles (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1, 6, 73 C.R.2d 469 [because part-time security guards did not comply with requirements of P.C. 70, they were not acting as peace officers, and there was no respondeat superior basis for defendant city's liability]; 65 A.L.R.5th 623 [performance of public duty by off-duty police officer acting as security guard].)

(5) Burden of Proof. The burden of proof of showing justification for a warrantless arrest is on the defendant officer. (Cervantez v. J.C. Penney Co., supra, 24 C.3d 592.)

III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

3. Misdemeanor Arrest Without Warrant.

bb. Arrest by Private Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 439

[§ 439] Arrest by Private Person.

(1) Citizen's Arrest. A private person may make a "citizen's arrest" for a public offense committed in his or her presence. (P.C. 837(1).) Thus, the presence rule (supra, §438) continues to apply to arrests by private persons. A public offense must actually be committed or attempted; the mere fact that the arresting person has probable cause to believe that a public offense has been committed or attempted is insufficient. (See Hamburg v. Wal-Mart Stores (2004) 116 C.A.4th 497, 512, 10 C.R.3d 568 [arrest on premises of defendant store was not privileged where its manager acted on basis of discussions with police officers and customer complaints rather than personal observation].)

The cooperation of police officers is necessary to make the arrest effective. The citizen calls the police, who are unable to make an arrest because the offense was previously committed outside their presence, but the citizen may make the arrest and the officers will then take the arrested person into custody. (See Hill v. Levy (1953) 117 C.A.2d 667, 670, 256 P.2d 622; Ogulin v. Jeffries (1953) 121 C.A.2d 211, 213, 263 P.2d 75; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 103; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 595; 16 A.L.R.3d 535 [arrest under invalid statute or ordinance].) Neither the police officer nor the officer's governmental employer is liable for false arrest as a result of taking custody of a person at the request of one who makes a citizen's arrest; the remedy, if any, is against the citizen who makes the arrest. (Kinney v. Contra Costa (1970) 8 C.A.3d 761, 768, 769, 87 C.R. 638.)

The situation becomes more complicated if the officers, to avoid responsibility, prevail on the victim of the crime to make an arrest that should have been made by the officers. Thus, in Peterson v. Robison (1954) 43 C.2d 690, 695, 277 P.2d 19, plaintiff, driving while intoxicated in Burlingame, knocked defendant's unattended car onto the sidewalk, breaking a parking meter. He left his name, address, and phone number, and drove off. Defendant reported this to the Burlingame police, who induced him to sign a "Citizen's Arrest Form" requesting their aid. Meanwhile South San Francisco police arrested plaintiff for driving while intoxicated, and held him until Burlingame police picked him up. Thereupon defendant, at the direction of a Burlingame officer, made the arrest (placing his hand on plaintiff's shoulder and saying, "I arrest you in the name of the law"). No charge was made, no warrant was issued, and plaintiff was released the next morning when defendant refused to sign a complaint. Held, judgment for damages reversed. The court relied on P.C. 150, making it a misdemeanor for a able-bodied person over 18 to refuse an officer's lawful request for aid in an arrest. "It would be manifestly unfair to impose civil liability upon the private person for doing that which the law declares it a misdemeanor for him to refuse to do." (43 C.2d 697.)

Although the court undoubtedly reached the proper result in the Peterson case, the theory of the opinion seems unrealistic. Plaintiff was properly arrested by the South San Francisco police for drunken driving, and could have been arrested again in Burlingame on a warrant for hit-and-run; the officers needed no help from defendant in this respect. It would seem more reasonable to give full significance to the fact of the original arrest in South San Francisco. Plaintiff, already in custody, could not be arrested by defendant, nor was any act of defendant a confinement amounting to false imprisonment. (See 44 Cal. L. Rev. 595.)

In Floro v. Lawton (1960) 187 C.A.2d 657, 10 C.R. 98, the court, setting forth the entire form, criticized the practice: "She did sign the form of the police department which was obviously designed to attempt to remove the police from any responsibility in performing their duty. Such an effort on the part of the police to detach or insulate themselves from the burdens of their office ought to be carefully scrutinized whenever the question arises as to who it was who made an arrest." (187 C.A.2d 668.)

In Gomez v. Garcia (1980) 112 C.A.3d 392, 169 C.R. 350, plaintiff violated former P.C. 602(n) (now P.C. 602(o)) by refusing to leave premises when requested to do so by defendant. The police were called and mistakenly instructed defendant to make a citizen's arrest for violation of P.C. 415 (disturbing the peace). Held, verdict and judgment for compensatory and punitive damages reversed; plaintiff's own testimony, in denying that he used loud and abusive language in violation of P.C. 415, disclosed his violation of P.C. 602(n) and therefore established reasonable cause for his arrest. (112 C.A.3d 398.)

A peace officer called out on a domestic violence call is required to make a good faith effort to inform the victim of his or her right to make a citizen's arrest. The information must include advice on how to safely execute the arrest. (P.C. 836(b).)

(2) Arrest by Merchant, Librarian, or Theater Owner. In Cervantez v. J.C. Penney Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 579, 156 C.R. 198, 595 P.2d 975, supra, §438, the court declared that the judicially created privilege of a merchant to detain (supra, §431), codified in P.C. 490.5, does not extend to an arrest. (24 C.3d 589, 590, 591.) This is no longer true; the statute, as amended, provides that, in any civil action brought by a person resulting from a detention or arrest by a merchant or library employee, it is a defense that the merchant or library employee had probable cause to believe that the person had stolen or attempted to steal merchandise, or books or library materials, and that the merchant or library employee acted reasonably under all the circumstances. A theater owner is given the same defense where the owner, with probable cause, arrests a person suspected of attempting to operate a video recording device in the theater without the owner's permission. (P.C. 490.5(f)(7).) (See 13 Pacific L. J. 666.)

ee. Delayed Arrest.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 440

[§ 440] Delayed Arrest.

Either a police officer or a private person may arrest for an offense committed in his or her presence (1) at the time of the offense, (2) within a reasonable time afterwards, or (3) on fresh and immediate pursuit of the offender. What is a reasonable time is not determined mechanically but rather by the circumstances. An officer may delay the actual arrest while attempting to accomplish it, e.g., by calling for help of other officers in apprehending or subduing the offender. But an officer who delays for any purpose unconnected with its accomplishment loses the right to arrest without a warrant. (See Ogulin v. Jeffries (1953) 121 C.A.2d 211, 213, 263 P.2d 75; 58 A.L.R.2d 1056 [peace officer's delay in making arrest without warrant for misdemeanor or breach of peace].)

Thus, in Jackson v. Superior Court (1950) 98 C.A.2d 183, 219 P.2d 879, the officers observed boys shooting at a light bulb in a public building, warned them, but did not attempt an arrest until the next day at their home. Held, the delay was unwarranted and the right was lost. (98 C.A.2d 187.)

On the other hand, in Hill v. Levy (1953) 117 C.A.2d 667, 256 P.2d 622, plaintiff, in a hotel, made loud scurrilous and profane remarks in the presence of women. Defendant, after asking him to desist, notified the police. The police arrived about one-half hour after the remarks, defendant made a citizen's arrest for disturbing the peace, and the officers took plaintiff into custody. Held, the arrest was made within a reasonable time and was legal. Defendant, who could not easily have arrested a quarrelsome person by himself, made an unsuccessful attempt to get help from the hotel manager, then immediately called the officers; and he did nothing unconnected with the arrest during the short interval. (117 C.A.2d 671.)

4. Arrest With Warrant.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 441

[§ 441] In General.

An arrest pursuant to a warrant regular on its face is privileged; i.e., the officer is protected though the arrest turns out to be invalid for reasons not apparent. The peace officer in making the arrest must act without malice and in the reasonable belief that the person arrested is the one referred to in the warrant. (C.C. 43.55.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §122 et seq. [arrest under warrant]; on meaning of "regular on its face," see infra, §442; on mistaken arrest of wrong person, see infra, §443; on immunity for acts in reliance on court process or order generally, see supra, §161; on nature and form of warrant, and conditions of issuance, see P.C. 813 et seq., 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §15 et seq.) Under this privilege, an officer, acting in good faith, who executes a warrant regular on its face is not subject to tort liability, even if the arrest turns out to be unlawful. (People v. Brite (1937) 9 C.2d 666, 682, 72 P.2d 122; Donati v. Righetti (1908) 9 C.A. 45, 48, 97 P. 1128; Kalish v. White (1918) 36 C.A. 604, 606, 173 P. 494; *Malone v.
