(3) Invalid Statute or Ordinance. The fact that the statute or ordinance is invalid for technical reasons may be immaterial, for the court may still accept and apply the standard. In Clinkscates defendant was held liable for driving through a posted stop sign, although the ordinance authorizing the particular sign had not been validly adopted. "Failure to observe a stop-sign is unreasonably dangerous conduct whether or not the driver is immune from criminal prosecution because of some irregularity in the erection of the stop-sign" (22 C.2d 76); the driver should realize that the public relies on the actual sign appearing in the customary manner. (22 C.2d 76.)

(4) Federal Legislation. A federal statute or regulation may be adopted as the standard of care in a negligence action under Ev.C. 669. (DiRosa v. Showa Denko K.K. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 799, 808, 52 C.R.2d 128 [dietary supplement violating federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C., §301 et seq.); citing *Toole v. 2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.

a. In General.

2. Administrative Regulation.

[§ 876] Administrative Regulation.

Safety orders and similar regulations of the Public Utilities Commission and the Division of Industrial Accidents (formerly the Industrial Accident Commission; see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §10) are given the same effect as statutes in this connection. (See Nevis v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1954) 43 C.2d 626, 629, 275 P.2d 761; Langazo v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1939) 32 C.A.2d 678, 682, 90 P.2d 825, infra, §1094 [general safety order requiring removal of abandoned telephone lines]; Mula v. Meyer (1955) 132 C.A.2d 279, 284, 282 P.2d 107; Wiese v. Rainville (1959) 173 C.A.2d 496, 510, 343 P.2d 643; Longway v. McCall (1960) 181 C.A.2d 723, 727, 5 C.R. 818; Di Muro v. Masterson Trusafe Steel Scaffold Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 784, 791, 14 C.R. 551; Halliday v. Greene (1966) 244 C.A.2d 482, 488, 53 C.R. 267; Galvez v. Frields (2001) 88 C.A.4th 1410, 1420, 107 C.R.2d 50; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §753 et seq.)

The same is true of regulations of other administrative agencies. (See Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 C.3d 540, 545, 208 C.R. 874, 691 P.2d 630 [safety standards promulgated by Federal Aviation Agency]; Fagerquist v. Western Sun Aviation (1987) 191 C.A.3d 709, 717, 236 C.R. 633 [same]; 79 A.L.R.3d 962 [OSHA regulation].)

In Porter v. Montgomery Ward & Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 846, 313 P.2d 854, plaintiff, a customer in defendant's store, slipped and fell on a stairway that was over 88 inches wide and had no center handrail as required by a safety order. Held, an instruction that the violation constituted negligence per se was proper. The court made this distinction: (a) Some safety orders, such as those regulating the use of machinery, might be regarded as solely for the protection of employees, where the public is prohibited from entering the place of employment. (b) In other situations, such as this one, the benefits of the order are extended to business invitees entitled to use the particular facility. (48 C.2d 849.)

In Hyde v. Russell & Russell (1959) 176 C.A.2d 578, 1 C.R. 631, plaintiff steelworker was injured in a fall from a defective scaffold supplied by defendant to plaintiff's employer. Held, the modern tendency is to regard safety orders as binding regardless of whether the relationship of employer and employee exists; hence, it was proper to impose the duty of compliance on a professional supplier. (176 C.A.2d 584.) (Cf. Morris v. Horton (1994) 22 C.A.4th 968, 972, 973, 27 C.R.2d 585 [property owners claiming costs incurred to repair or change work that contractor agreed to perform could not recover on negligence per se theory; building code provisions at issue were designed to ensure safety of persons]) using staircase, not to prevent owners from incurring costs in remedying violations]; Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 C.A.4th 93, 105, 40 C.R.2d 328 [water quality board order requiring owner to clean up contaminated property created duty to clean up gasoline spill, and was designed to protect adjoining owners, but did not establish duty, prior to order, to prevent land from becoming contaminated in first place].)

An administrative agency cannot independently impose a duty of care if that authority has not been properly delegated to the agency by the Legislature. (California Service Station & Auto. Repair Assn. v. American Home Assur. Co. (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1166, 1175, 73 C.R.2d 182 [regulation requiring workers' compensation insurer to provide prescribed disclosure statement did not create duty of care on which to base negligence action against insurer for failure to provide statement].)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.

a. In General.

3. Agency Manual Is Not Regulation.

[§ 877] Agency Manual Is Not Regulation.

(1) Case Holding Manual To Be Regulation of Public Entity. In Peterson v. Long Beach (1979) 24 C.3d 238, 155 C.R. 360, 594 P.2d 477, V, a Long Beach police officer, responded to a radio call erroneously reporting a burglary at P's apartment. When V arrived, P was running from his apartment. V approached with gun drawn, P fled, and V shot and killed him. In this action for wrongful death by P's parents against V and the city, defendants relied on P.C. 196, making homicide justifiable when necessarily committed in an attempt to arrest, and on the immunity under Govt.C. 820.6 of a public employee who acts under the apparent authority of an enactment that is inapplicable. Plaintiffs offered proof of V's violation of the guidelines for discharge of a firearm in the Long Beach Police Department Manual, and then invoked the presumption of negligence in Ev.C. 669(a). In entering judgment for defendants, the trial court found that V failed to comply with the guidelines, but concluded that the manual did not constitute a minimal standard of care, and that V's act was within the limits set by the Penal Code. Held, reversed.

Defendants contended that the phrase "statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity" in Ev.C. 669(a)(1) covers local ordinances but not local regulations of the Chief of Police and City Manager. But Ev.C. 200 broadly defines "public entity" to include "public agency," and the Law Revision Commission Comment states that the term includes "every form of public authority." (24 C.3d 244.) Cases establishing the rule codified by Ev.C. 669 have involved administrative regulations as well as statutes and ordinances, and Govt.C. 811.6 defines regulation to include a "standard" having the force of law, adopted by "an employee or agency" of a public entity. (24 C.3d 238.) Thus, the manual's guidelines were standards having the force of law, and the presumption of Ev.C. 669(a) applied. (24 C.3d 246.) (See 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 419.)

(2) Legislation Repudiation. The result in Peterson has been repudiated by the enactment of Ev.C. 669.1. "A rule, policy, manual, or guideline of state or local government setting forth standards of conduct or guidelines for its employees in the conduct of their public employment shall not be considered a statute, ordinance, or regulation of that public entity within the meaning of Section 669, unless the rule, manual, policy, or guideline has been formally adopted as a statute, as an ordinance of a local governmental entity in this state empowered to adopt ordinances, or as a regulation by an agency of the state pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act ... or by an agency of the United States government pursuant to the federal Administrative Procedure Act." This provision "affects only the presumption set forth in Section 669, and is not otherwise intended to affect the admissibility or inadmissibility of the rule, policy, manual, or guideline under other provisions of law." (Ev.C. 669.1.) (See Lugtu v. California Highway Patrol (2001) 26 C.4th 703, 720, 110 C.R.2d 528, 28 P.3d 249 [CHP Officer Safety Manual could not be used to establish standard of care, but it could serve as evidence on question of negligence]; 19 Pacific L. J. 611.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Legislative Repudiation. See Minch v. Department of Calif. Highway Patrol (2006) 140 C.A.4th 895, 907, 44 C.R.3d 846 [CHP Safety Manual admonishing officers to perform traffic control functions when necessary did not create duty of care to tow truck driver who was struck by car at accident scene; manual was not adopted pursuant to Administrative Procedure Act, and thus did not have force of law needed to establish duty on part of officers].

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.
b. Motor Vehicles.
1. Speed Limits.

[§ 878] Speed Limits.

Early cases dealing with the speed laws declared that proof of a violation was conclusive on the question of negligence. (See Benjamin v. Noonan (1929) 207 C. 279, 282, 277 P. 1045; Schilling v. Central Calif. Traction Co. (1931) 115 C.A. 30, 33, 1 P.2d 53.) But in 1931, the statutes were changed, and they now provide as follows:

(1) Basic Speed Law. "No person shall drive a vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than is reasonable or prudent having due regard for weather, visibility, the traffic on, and the surface and width of, the highway, and in no event at a speed which endangers the safety of persons or property." (Veh.C. 22350; see Hardin v. San Jose City Lines (1953) 41 C.2d 432, 438, 260 P.2d 63; 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §288 et seq.; 14 Hastings L. J. 452; BAJI, No. 5.30; 91 A.L.R.2d 1260 [duty of an overtaken driver to adjust speed].)

(2) Prima Facie Speed Limits. Certain limits are specified by statutes dealing with particular conditions (Veh.C. 22351 et seq.), e.g., 15 miles per hour when traversing a railway grade crossing or certain obstructed highway intersections, or traveling on an alley; 25 miles per hour when passing a school building or a facility primarily used by senior citizens, or proceeding in a business or residence district. (Veh.C. 22352; see Reynolds v. Filomeo (1951) 38 C.2d 5, 11, 236 P.2d 801 [business or residence district must be sign-posted]; Mapes v. Yowell (1960) 54 C.2d 231, 232, 5 C.R. 159, 352 P.2d 527; Johnson v. Williams (1950) 100 C.A.2d 294, 298, 223 P.2d 266; Clark v. Pamplin (1957) 147 C.A.2d 676, 679, 305 P.2d 950; 14 Hastings L. J. 451; 87 A.L.R.2d 539 [necessity of instruction on prima facie speed limit]; BAJI, No. 5.31.)

Violation of the prima facie limit is only "prima facie unlawful"; the defendant may show that his or her driving was in compliance with the Basic Speed Law of Veh.C. 22350. (Veh.C. 22351.) And "[i]n any civil action proof of speed in excess of any prima facie limit ... does not establish negligence as a matter of law but in all such actions it shall be necessary to establish as a fact that the operation of a vehicle at such excess speed constituted negligence." (Veh.C. 40831; see Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, supra, 41 C.2d 439; Clark v. Pamplin, supra, 147 C.A.2d 679 [notwithstanding language of Veh.C. 22351 suggesting burden of proof on defendant, Veh.C. 40831 governs in civil case]; Faselli v. Southern Pac. Co. (1957) 150 C.A.2d 644, 649, 310 P.2d 698 [same].)

(3) Maximum Speed Limit. The maximum limits are 65 miles per hour (Veh.C. 22349) or 70 miles per hour if approved by the Department of Transportation (Veh.C. 22356). However, 55 miles per hour is the maximum on two-lane, undivided highways. (Veh.C. 22349(b); see BAJI, No. 5.32; CACI, No. 708.)

- b. Motor Vehicles.
2. Right-of-Way: Driver and Other Motorists.
- aa. Intersections.

[§ 879] Intersections.

At uncontrolled intersections, the driver of a vehicle that is approaching an intersection must yield to a vehicle that has already entered the intersection from a different highway. (Veh.C. 21800(a).) When the vehicles enter at the same time, the driver on the left must yield to the driver on the right, except that a driver on a terminating highway, i.e., one intersecting a continuing highway, but not continuing beyond the intersection, must yield to the driver on the continuing highway. (Veh.C. 21800(b).) The rule of yielding to the driver on the right also applies to vehicles entering at the same time an intersection controlled from all directions by stop signs. (Veh.C. 21800(c).)

A driver approaching an intersection with inoperable traffic control signals must stop, and then proceed with caution when it is safe. When two drivers approach such an intersection from different highways, the right-of-way rules are the same as those for uncontrolled intersections. (Veh.C. 21800(d).)

These provisions do not apply at intersections controlled by an official traffic control signal, a "yield right-of-way" sign, or stop signs for some but not all directions, or to vehicles approaching each other from opposite directions when one driver intends to or is making a left turn. (Veh.C. 21800(e).) (See Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist. of San Diego (1947) 29 C.2d 581, 591, 177 P.2d 279, infra, §891 [driver cannot arbitrarily rely on right-of-way gained as result of excessive speed, other negligent act, or violation of law]; 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §314; on waiver of right-of-way, see Sesler v. Ghumman (1990) 219 C.A.3d 218, 220, 223, 268 C.R. 70 [analyzing Veh.C. 21801 and BAJI instructions].)

For intersections where stop signs have been erected on some (but not all) approaches, the driver coming to a stop sign must stop at the limit line or the entrance to the intersection, and must yield the right-of-way to other vehicles that have approached or are approaching so closely from another roadway as to constitute an immediate hazard. The driver must continue yielding the right-of-way until he or she can proceed with reasonable safety. Once the driver has yielded and properly proceeded, drivers of all approaching vehicles must give him or her the right-of-way. These provisions, however, do not apply where stop signs are erected on all approaches to an intersection. (Veh.C. 21802.) (See Grasso v. Cunial (1951) 106 C.A.2d 294, 300, 235 P.2d 32; 2 A.L.R.3d 12 [motor vehicle accident as affected by reliance on or

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.

2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.

b. Motor Vehicles.

2. Right-of-Way: Driver and Other Motorists.

bb. Other Situations.

[§ 880] Other Situations.

(1) Left Turns. A driver who intends to turn left or to complete a U-turn upon a highway, or into public or private property or into an alley, must yield the right-of-way to all vehicles that have approached or are approaching from the opposite direction and that are so close as to constitute a hazard at any time during the turning movement. The driver must continue to yield the right-of-way until the turn can be made with reasonable safety. Once the driver has yielded and given the required signal, he or she may turn left and drivers of approaching vehicles must yield the right-of-way. (Veh.C. 21801.) (See Sesler v. Ghumman (1990) 219 C.A.3d 218, 224, 268 C.R. 70 [under Veh.C. 21801, driver turning left across multiple lanes, some of which yield right-of-way to him or her, has continuing duty to ascertain if remaining lanes are clear]; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 405; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 127 [motorcycle accidents]; BAJI, Nos. 5.20, 5.21.)

(2) "Yield Right-of-Way" Signs. A driver approaching a "yield right-of-way" sign must yield to other vehicles that have entered the intersection from an intersecting street or approaching so closely as to constitute an immediate hazard. The driver must continue yielding until he or she can proceed with reasonable safety. Once the driver has yielded, the driver may proceed and approaching drivers must yield. (Veh.C. 21803.) (See 2 A.L.R.3d 275 [intersection accident as affected by yield sign or signal]; 87 A.L.R.5th 1 [failure to yield right-of-way to emergency vehicle]; BAJI, No. 5.13.)

(3) Non-Highway Approaches. A driver about to enter or cross a highway from public or private property, or from an alley, must yield the right-of-way to all approaching "traffic," i.e., pedestrians, ridden animals, vehicles, streetcars, and other conveyances (see Veh.C. 620) that constitute an immediate hazard, and must continue to yield until he or she can proceed with reasonable safety. (Veh.C. 21804(a).) Once the driver has so yielded, he or she may enter or cross the highway, and approaching drivers must then yield. (Veh.C. 21804(b).) (See Malone v. Perryman (1964) 226 C.A.2d 227, 235, 37 C.R. 864 [statute does not confer absolute and uncontrolled right, and does not apply where signaling device and flagman are controlling traffic over highway crossing]; BAJI, No. 5.22; 40 A.L.R.3d 1429 [traffic merging onto limited access highway from service road or ramp].)

(4) Equestrian Crossings. The driver of a motor vehicle must yield the right-of-way to a horseback rider crossing a roadway at a properly designated equestrian crossing. (Veh.C. 21805(b).) However, the rider must use due care for his or her safety, and may not suddenly leave a place of safety and proceed into the path of a vehicle so close as to constitute an immediate hazard. (Veh.C. 21805(c).) (See 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §693.)

(5) U-Turns. A driver must not make a U-turn on a curve or on the approach to or near the crest of a grade where his or her vehicle cannot be seen by the driver of another vehicle approaching from either direction within 200 feet. (Veh.C. 22105; see 4 Pacific L. J. 555; 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §268; 24 Proof of Facts 697 [U-turn accidents]; 53 A.L.R.4th 849 [U-turn collisions].)

[§ 881] In General.

(1) Who Is a Pedestrian. A pedestrian is any person who is afoot or who is using a means of conveyance propelled by human power other than a bicycle (Veh.C. 467(a)(1)) or an electric personal assistive mobility device (Veh.C. 467(a)(2)). The term "pedestrian" includes "any person who is operating a self-propelled wheelchair, motorized tricycle, or motorized quadricycle and, by reason of physical disability, is otherwise unable to move about as a pedestrian." (Veh.C. 467(b).) (See Jermane v. Forfar (1952) 108 C.A.2d 849, 850, 240 P.2d 351 [decided prior to statutory definition; child crossing facedown on scooter propelled by one foot at crosswalk was pedestrian entitled to right-of-way]; 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §§344 et seq., 1087 et seq.; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 456; 35 A.L.R.4th 1117 [who is "pedestrian"].) Unless extended, Veh.C. 467 is repealed January 1, 2008. (Veh.C. 467(c).)

(2) Pedestrian on Roadway. Outside a business or residence district, a pedestrian walking on the roadway must do so "close to his or her left-hand edge of the roadway." (Veh.C. 21956(a).) In Myers v. King (1969) 272 C.A.2d 571, 77 C.R. 625, plaintiff was walking on the left-hand side of a two-lane road, facing oncoming traffic, when he was struck from behind by defendant's vehicle, which had swung out to pass another car going in the same direction. At the trial, defendant unsuccessfully sought instructions under Veh.C. 21954 (infra, §882). Held, no error; the left-hand side rule of Veh.C. 21956 relates to pedestrians walking along a highway, while Veh.C. 21954 refers to people crossing or upon a highway. A pedestrian walking in compliance with Veh.C. 21956 is not governed by Veh.C. 21954. (272 C.A.2d 579.) (On right of persons in disabled vehicle to walk to nearest freeway exit, see Veh.C. 21960.)

- Witkin Summary of California Law
- X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
- B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.
- b. Motor Vehicles.
3. Right-of-Way: Driver and Pedestrian.
- bb. Crosswalks.

(1) Pedestrian in Crosswalk. The driver of a vehicle must yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian crossing a roadway within a marked crosswalk or within an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection. (Veh.C. 21950(a).) If the driver approaches a pedestrian within a marked or unmarked crosswalk, he or she must exercise all due care and must reduce speed or take any other action as necessary to safeguard the safety of the pedestrian. (Veh.C. 21950(c).) But these provisions do not relieve the pedestrian from using due care for his or her safety: "[n]o pedestrian may suddenly leave a curb or other place of safety and walk or run into the path of a vehicle that is so close as to constitute an immediate hazard." And "[n]o pedestrian may unnecessarily stop or delay traffic while in a marked or unmarked crosswalk." (Veh.C. 21950(b).) (See 42 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [negligence of pedestrian struck by motor vehicle].) However, these duties of the pedestrian do not relieve the driver from the duty to exercise due care for the safety of a pedestrian within a marked crosswalk or within an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection. (Veh.C. 21950(d).) (See BAJI, No. 5.50 et seq.)

In Gray v. Brinkerhoff (1953) 41 C.2d 180, 184, 258 P.2d 834, the court declared that a driver's failure to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian crossing in a marked crosswalk amounts to "a violation of the statute and negligence as a matter of law in the absence of a reasonable explanation for defendant's conduct." (See Novak v. Dewar (1961) 55 C.2d 749, 752, 13 C.R. 101, 361 P.2d 709 [following Gray].)

In Schmitt v. Henderson (1969) 1 C.3d 460, 82 C.R. 502, 462 P.2d 30, the court held that there was no duty on the part of a pedestrian crossing in a marked crosswalk and in obedience to a traffic signal to look behind, because doing so would blind the pedestrian to the more common sources of danger. (1 C.3d 464.) (On accident where there is reliance on traffic signal, see 2 A.L.R.3d 155 [stop-go signal]; 3 A.L.R.3d 557 [signal other than stop-go].)

(2) Pedestrian Outside Crosswalk. A pedestrian on a roadway at a point (a) other than within a marked crosswalk, or (b) within an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection, must yield the right-of-way to all vehicles on the roadway so near as to constitute an immediate hazard. (Veh.C. 21954(a)); see 42 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [negligence of pedestrian struck by motor vehicle]; BAJI, No. 5.52.2.) The driver, however, must still exercise due care for the safety of pedestrians on the roadway. (Veh.C. 21954(b).) (See 34 A.L.R.3d 425 [liability when person on sidewalk is struck by overhang of vehicle].)

In Stockstill v. South Laguna Disposal Co. (1969) 1 C.A.3d 1022, 82 C.R. 268, plaintiff, an elderly woman, walked into the street in front of her home to sweep up leaves that had just fallen from defendant's departing refuse truck. While plaintiff had her back to the truck, the driver began to back up to make a turn and struck plaintiff with the rear of the vehicle. The trial judge instructed the jury that the pedestrian should have yielded the right of way to the vehicle. Held, reversed; Veh.C. 21954 "was not intended to give motorists a superior right over pedestrians when backing a vehicle on a highway. The section was obviously designed to require a pedestrian to yield the right of way to normal oncoming vehicular traffic, not to give superior rights to a motorist backing up on a highway." (1 C.A.3d 1027.) When backing up, a driver must act "with reasonable safety." (1 C.A.3d 1027, citing Veh.C. 22106.)

(3) Driver Blocking Crosswalk. No person may stop a vehicle unnecessarily so as to block a marked or unmarked crosswalk or sidewalk. (Veh.C. 21970(a).) However, this provision does not preclude the driver of a vehicle facing a steady circular red light from turning right or left from a one-way street onto a one-way street as otherwise permitted by law. (Veh.C. 21970(b).)

aa. Driving in Wrong Location or Manner.

[§ 883] Driving in Wrong Location or Manner.

(1) Driving on Wrong Side of Roadway. With certain exceptions, a vehicle must be driven on the right half of a highway. (Veh.C. 21650; see Harris v. Johnson (1916) 174 C. 55, 57, 161 P. 1155; Mathers v. Riverside (1943) 22 C.2d 781, 785, 141 P.2d 419; Armstrong v. Allen (1946) 75 C.A.2d 514, 517, 171 P.2d 552; *Altomare v. (2) Turning From Wrong Lane. No person may turn a vehicle from a direct course or move right or left on a roadway until the movement can be made with reasonable safety, and then only after the giving of an appropriate signal. (Veh.C. 22107 [requiring reasonable safety and giving of signal]; see 24 Proof of Facts 559 [right turns]; 7 A.L.R.3d 282 [right turn from lane other than right-hand lane]; BAJI, Nos. 5.20, 5.21.)

(3) Maintaining Intervening Distance. No driver should follow another vehicle more closely than is reasonable and prudent, having regard for speed, traffic, and road conditions. (Veh.C. 21703.) (See Sweeney v. Pozarelli (1964) 228 C.A.2d 585, 590, 39 C.R. 601; *Pittman v. (4) Driving Too Slowly. No person should drive on a highway at such a slow speed as to impede or block the normal and reasonable movement of traffic, except when reduced speed is necessary for safe operation or while the vehicle is on a grade or to comply with the law. (Veh.C. 22400.) (See 66 A.L.R.2d 1194 ["slow-speed" traffic statutes].)

(5) Driving Under Influence of Liquor or Drug. A person may not recover nonpecuniary damages if, at the time of the accident, he or she was operating a vehicle in violation of Veh.C. 23152 (driving with blood-alcohol percentage above allowable limits) or Veh.C. 23153 (causing bodily injury while driving under the influence), and was convicted. (See C.C. 3333.4(a)(1), infra, §1657 [barring recovery of noneconomic damages by motorist convicted of driving under influence]; BAJI, Nos. 5.40, 5.41.)

- B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.
- b. Motor Vehicles.
4. Other Driving Rules.
- bb. Obstruction of View.

[§ 884] Obstruction of View.

No person may drive a vehicle that is so loaded, or so filled with persons in the front seat, that the driver's (1) view is obstructed to the front or sides, or (2) control is interfered with. (Veh.C. 21700.) (See Goodwin v. Bryant (1964) 227 C.A.2d 785, 794, 39 C.R. 132 [in view of general knowledge that auto seats are wider than before, mere proof that three adults were in the front seat was insufficient to justify instruction on Veh.C. 21700].)

No person may drive a motor vehicle with any object or material "placed, displayed, installed, affixed, or applied" on the windshield or side or rear windows (Veh.C. 26708(a)(1)), or applied in or upon the vehicle so that it obstructs or reduces the driver's clear view through the windshield or side windows (Veh.C. 26708(a)(2)). This section, however, does not apply to the following: rearview mirrors; adjustable nontransparent sun visors mounted forward of the side windows and not attached to the glass; signs, stickers, or other materials displayed in a seven inch square in the lower corner of the windshield farthest from the driver or in the lower corner of the rear window farthest from the driver, or in a five-inch square in the lower corner of the windshield nearest the driver; side windows to the rear of the driver; informational signs on a common carrier, when the signs do not interfere with the driver's clear view of approaching traffic; rear window wiper motors; rear trunk lid handles or hinges; rear windows when the vehicle has outside mirrors on both sides affording a view of at least 200 feet to the rear; clear, transparent lens of specified dimensions on the side window opposite the driver to give him or her a wide-angle view; sun screens on the front side windows if authorized in writing by a licensed physician or surgeon; school buses if the signs do not interfere with the driver's clear view of approaching traffic; and certain electronic communication devices for electronic toll and traffic management or for California Highway Patrol enforcement facilities to communicate with the vehicle. (Veh.C. 26708(b).) (On requirements for affixing transparent material to top of windshield, see Veh.C. 26708(c); on requirements for affixing clear, colorless, and transparent material to front side windows, see Veh.C. 26708(d).)

Placing a transparent material on the windshield or side or rear windows is also prohibited if the material alters the color or reduces the light transmittance of the windshield or windows. This requirement is subject to the same exceptions as Veh.C. 26708(b), (c), and (d). (Veh.C. 26708.5(a).) The section does not apply to tinted safety glass complying with safety standards of the United States Department of Transportation and installed in a location permitted by those standards for the type of glass used. (Veh.C. 26708.5(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Veh.C. 26708 does not apply to a portable global positioning system mounted on the windshield in the seven-inch square in the lower corner of the windshield farthest from the driver or in the five-inch square in the lower corner of the windshield nearest the driver. (Veh.C. 26708(b)(12), added in 2008.)

(On headlamps for motorcycles, see Veh.C. 25650.5; 4 Pacific L. J. 557.)

(3) Duty To Give Proper Visual Signals. Signals must be given by signal lamp, unless a vehicle is not required to be and is not equipped with turn signals. Drivers of these vehicles must give a hand and arm signal when required. (Veh.C. 22110(a).) In the event the signal lamps become inoperable while driving, hand and arm signals must be used. (Veh.C. 22110(b).) (See Veh.C. 22107, 22108 [turn signals]; Veh.C. 22109 [signals for stopping or suddenly decreasing speed]; Veh.C. 22111 [methods of signaling with hand and arm]; Veh.C. 22112 [school bus signals]; *Sweeney v. (4) Duty To Give Proper Sound Signals. When reasonably necessary to insure safety, the driver should give audible warning with the vehicle's horn. "The horn shall not otherwise be used." [§ 886] Other Situations.

Everyone other than a driver's license examiner or an approved driving instructor is prohibited from wilfully interfering with a driver or the vehicle's mechanism in such a way as to affect the driver's control of the vehicle. (Veh.C. 21701.) In Reclusado v. Mangum (1964) 228 C.A.2d 8, 39 C.R. 157, the court held that the statute was violated by a mother placing her 18-month-old baby in the front seat next to the driver. The statute does not explicitly require physical and direct interference, and that it must be deemed to cover acts like blinding the driver's view of the road or thrusting a baby forward so as to cause a lapse of the driver's control. (228 C.A.2d 15.)

Numerous other statutes and articles deal with driving rules. (See Veh.C. 21280 et seq. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 887

The violation of parking standards set forth in the Vehicle Code (Veh.C. 22500 et seq.) or a local ordinance is negligence per se. (See Thomson v. Bayless (1944) 24 C.2d 543, 546, 150 P.2d 413; Flynn v. Bledsoe Co. (1928) 92 C.A. 145, 152, 267 P. 887; Mason v. Crawford (1936) 17 C.A.2d 529, 62 P.2d 420 [double parking]; Carlton v. San Francisco (1958) 158 C.A.2d 597, 602, 323 P.2d 108 [local ordinance on bus stopping in marked zone].)

A number of practice works involve parking. (See 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobiles and Highway Traffic §329 et seq.; 26 Proof of Facts 2d 575 [accidents involving stalled or disabled vehicle]; 17 A.L.R.2d 582, 585 [parallel parking]; 82 A.L.R.2d 726 [double parking]; 92 A.L.R.2d 1037 [parked car with open door]; 4 A.L.R.3d 324 [illegal parking in vicinity of street corner or intersection]; 42 A.L.R.3d 1252 [runaway due to faulty brakes or failure to set brakes]; 42 A.L.R.3d 1283 [accidental starting up of parked vehicle]; 45 A.L.R.3d 787 [stranger's operation of vehicle parked with key left in ignition]; 61 A.L.R.3d 13 [parked or standing vehicle without sufficient lights]; 70 A.L.R.4th 276 [stranger's operation of vehicle parked with key removed from ignition].)

Under the Anti-Gridlock Act of 1987, a driver may not (1) enter an intersection or marked crosswalk, (2) make a turn at an intersection when facing a steady circular yellow or yellow arrow signal, or (3) enter a railroad or rail transit crossing unless there is sufficient space on the other side of the crossing to accommodate the vehicle. (Veh.C. 22526(a), (b), (c).)

A violation of the Act is either a stopping violation (if a notice to appear is issued by a peace officer) or a parking violation (if a notice of a parking violation is issued by a person, other than a peace officer, who is authorized to enforce parking statutes and regulations). (Veh.C. 22526(e).)

c. Bicycles.

[§ 888] Bicycles.

A bicycle is "a device upon which any person may ride, propelled exclusively by human power through a belt, chain, or gears, and having one or more wheels." (Veh.C. 231.) The rights and duties of motor vehicle drivers apply to bicycle riders, except those provisions that by their very nature can have no application (Veh.C. 21200(a)) and except for peace officers when engaged in specified activities (Veh.C. 21200(b)). Bicycles operated on a roadway or shoulder of a highway must proceed in the same direction as vehicles. a. In General.

[§ 890] In General.

Under the strictest view of the doctrine, a statute or ordinance prescribes an inflexible standard of due care, and proof of its violation conclusively establishes negligence. However, the view followed by the majority of courts recognizes that in emergencies, or under unusual conditions, it may be difficult if not impossible to comply, and that the statutes are subject to implied qualifications or exceptions that excuse the violation. (See Mora v. Favilla (1921) 186 C. 199, 202, 199 P. 17; Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co. (1923) 191 C. 195, 199, 215 P. 675 [taillight inspected and found in good order short time before it went out]; Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist. of San Diego (1947) 29 C.2d 581, 588, 177 P.2d 279; Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 C.2d 442, 444, 71 C.R. 897, 445 P.2d 513, infra, §1251; California Assn. of Health Facilities v. Department of Health Services (1997) 16 C.4th 284, 294, 65 C.R.2d 872, 940 P.2d 323, infra, §1248; Rath v. Bankston (1929) 101 C.A. 274, 279, 281 P. 1081 [gasoline supply exhausted despite reasonably careful inspection]; Jolley v. Clemens (1938) 28 C.A.2d 55, 68, 82 P.2d 51; Dennis v. Gonzales (1949) 91 C.A.2d 203, 210, 205 P.2d 55; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Operated Equipment Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 759, 764, 71 C.R. 531; Casey v. Russell (1982) 138 C.A.3d 379, 383, 384, 188 C.R. 18, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §288A; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §710 et seq.; 10 Cal. L. Rev. 255; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 428; 3 So. Cal. L. Rev. 131.)

Some opinions expressed the view that the excuse must be a cause "beyond the control" of the party charged with the violation. (See, e.g., Ornales v. Wigger (1950) 35 C.2d 474, 480, 218 P.2d 531; Gallichotte v. California Mut. Bldg. & Loan Assn. (1935) 4 C.A.2d 503, 506, 41 P.2d 349;) This view was expressly disapproved, as involving an impossible standard, in Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 C.2d 617, 327 P.2d 897: "In our opinion the correct test is whether the person who has violated a statute has sustained the burden of showing that he did what might be reasonably expected of a person of ordinary prudence, acting under similar circumstances, who desired to comply with the law." (50 C.2d 624.)

Ev.C. 669(b) restates this principle generally, with special attention to when the person violating the statute is a child. The presumption may be rebutted by proof of either of the following:

(1) "The person violating the statute, ordinance, or regulation did what might reasonably be expected of a person of ordinary prudence, acting under similar circumstances, who desired to comply with the law." (Ev.C. 669(b)(1).)

(2) "The person violating the statute, ordinance, or regulation was a child and exercised the degree of care ordinarily exercised by persons of his maturity, intelligence, and capacity under similar circumstances, but the presumption may not be rebutted by such proof if the violation occurred in the course of an activity normally engaged in only by adults and requiring adult qualifications." (Ev.C. 669(b)(2).)

[§ 891] Illustrations.

Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist. of San Diego (1947) 29 C.2d 581, 177 P.2d 279, extensively considers the effect of the doctrine. The action arose out of a collision between plaintiff's automobile and defendant's school bus at an intersection. Defendant asked for an instruction substantially in the language of Veh.C. 21800, requiring one driver to yield the right of way to another, under specified circumstances (see supra, §§879, 880), and for a further instruction that violation of the statute by the plaintiff would be negligence that, if it proximately contributed in the slightest degree to the accident, would bar recovery. The trial judge refused and instead instructed the jury on his own motion that one driver could not arbitrarily rely on the right of way, and that the test of negligence in such a case is the usual one: What would a reasonably prudent person do under those circumstances? Held, both instructions were erroneous, and judgment for plaintiff was reversed.

(a) The instruction proposed by defendant omitted the essential issue whether circumstances existed that might excuse the violation of the statute. An emergency or other unusual conditions beyond the control of the person charged with the violation may rebut the presumption of negligence, and the jury must ordinarily determine, as a question of fact, whether the excuse is shown. (29 C.2d 591.)

(b) The instruction given by the judge erroneously disregarded the doctrine of negligence per se and applied the reasonable man standard alone. (29 C.2d 592.)

(c) The correct rule is as follows: "The presumption created by proof of the failure to comply with a statute or ordinance relieves a defendant from the burden of proving that the plaintiff failed to act as a reasonably prudent man. All that the defendant need prove to establish contributory negligence is that plaintiff's violation of the statute in question proximately caused the accident. ... If there was a violation of the applicable statute, the burden of going forward is then cast upon the plaintiff, if the defendant is relying upon contributory negligence, to present evidence justifying an excuse for violation. If the jury does not believe that the evidence is sufficient to excuse violation, it must find for the defendant." (29 C.2d 592.)

In Combs v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1947) 29 C.2d 606, 177 P.2d 293, the court, restating the principles laid down in Satterlee, affirmed a judgment for plaintiff on somewhat doubtful facts. Plaintiff was injured in a collision of an automobile and a streetcar while riding on the step of the streetcar in violation of a local ordinance. Held, the jury could conclude, from his testimony, that he boarded the car without noticing its crowded condition, that he was endeavoring to make his way into the car and thought the people in front would soon move up, that he was prevented from doing so by "subsequent events beyond his control," and that the violation of the ordinance was therefore excusable. (29 C.2d 610.) (See Espinoza v. Rossini (1966) 247 C.A.2d 40, 47, 55 C.R. 205, infra, §1317 [Veh.C. 21712, prohibiting riding on portion of vehicle not intended for passengers, is expressly inapplicable to employee engaged in necessary discharge of duties].)

In Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 C.2d 617, 327 P.2d 897, plaintiff's car, stopped in traffic at a stoplight, was struck in the rear by defendant's car. Defendant testified that his foot brake failed, that he was so excited that he did not think of using his hand brake, and that there had been nothing wrong with his brakes prior to that moment. Held, this testimony was sufficient to overcome the presumption and sustain a verdict and judgment for defendant. (50 C.2d 624.)

In State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Operated Equipment Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 759, 71 C.R. 531, the negligent tortfeasor operated a crane. A safety order required a warning device that could be heard above noise on the site, and permitting the crane to operate without such a device was a breach of duty. But the evidence showed a custom of the crane operator to give vocal warning; this supported an inference that the warning was equal to the signal called for in the safety order. (265 C.A.2d 764.)

In Martin v. Smith (1951) 103 C.A.2d 894, 230 P.2d 679, a truck became disabled (brakes locked) in the daytime. The driver set out warning reflectors in front and back, flagged a passing car, and went for assistance, leaving his truck unattended for an hour. The operator of plaintiff's car did not observe or heed the warnings and collided. Held, the truck driver was not negligent; the yellow truck and reflectors were ample warning to oncoming traffic. (103 C.A.2d 898.)

Witkin Summary of California Law X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se. 4. Legal Duty and Type of Harm. a. Class of Persons.

[§ 892] Class of Persons.

Even where the violation is not excused, so that the conduct is below the standard of due care (see supra, §§871, 872), this does not establish all the elements of a cause of action. Other limiting doctrines applicable to negligence generally apply here as well, including the basic principle that liability is dependent upon a duty owed to persons in the class of which the plaintiff is a member. (Ev.C. 669(a)(4), supra, §873; Figone v. Guisti (1919) 43 C.A. 606, 609, 185 P. 694; see Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 62, 271 P.2d 23; Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 164, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151; Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 C.4th 1063, 1069, 68 C.R.2d 859, 946 P.2d 817, infra, §1349; Flynn v. Bledsoe Co. (1928) 92 C.A. 145, 150, 267 P. 887; Hatch v. Ford Motor Co. (1958) 163 C.A.2d 393, 398, 329 P.2d 605; Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1166, 221 C.R. 675; Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 C.A.3d 86, 96, 221 C.R. 374; Nowlon v. Koram Ins. Center (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1437, 1445, 2 C.R.2d 683; Andres v. Y.M.C.A. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 85, 92, 74 C.R.2d 788; Rest.2d, Torts §§286, Comment f et seq., 288; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §725 et seq.)

Thus, in Corbett v. Spanos (1918) 37 C.A. 200, 202, 173 P. 769, violation of an ordinance requiring permanent flooring on stairways, intended to assure unobstructed access for firefighters, was held not to be negligence toward an ordinary licensee coming on the premises. And Hoff v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1998) 19 C.4th 925, 937, 80 C.R.2d 811, 968 P.2d 522, supra, §328, held that a school district had no duty under a statute (Educ.C. 44807) requiring public school teachers to hold students to strict account for their conduct going to and from school to a pedestrian struck by a car driven by a student leaving an unsupervised parking lot of the high school; plaintiff was not a member of the class of persons (students) that the statute was designed to protect.

On the other hand, in Cappa v. Oscar C. Holmes (1972) 25 C.A.3d 978, 102 C.R. 207, defendant, constructing a multilevel parking lot, left a slab on a high level without a fence or railing. Held, the judge properly instructed on a general safety order of the Department of Industrial Relations requiring these safeguards. Although intended primarily for the protection of workers, where an order does not indicate the contrary, it may apply to persons coming on the premises. (25 C.A.3d 982.) Prior cases have assumed that such an order does not protect trespassers, but under Rowland v. Christan (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, in determining its application, "no distinction may be made between trespassers, licensees, and invitees." (25 C.A.3d 983.)

In Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 C.2d 493, 225 P.2d 497, plaintiff, a friend of a hotel guest, went up on the hotel roof through an open door, came to a mattress resting on what looked like a small roof, sat down, and fell to the bottom of an open shaft on which the mattress rested. The shaft was surrounded by a 27-inch parapet, instead of the 30-inch parapet then required by statute. Although a judgment for damages was affirmed on general negligence principles, it was held error for the trial judge to instruct on the statute and negligence per se. The statute was designed to protect against danger of a person walking or stumbling into the shaft. But even a wall 30 inches high in compliance with the statute would not have prevented a person from sitting on the covering; hence, it could not have been the legislative intent to guard against the danger of falling while sitting. (36 C.2d 498.) (For similar approach in terms of proximate cause, see infra, §895.)

In Atkins v. Bisigier (1971) 16 C.A.3d 414, 94 C.R. 49, the court held that a regulation requiring rope and buoys in public swimming pools was meant to prevent drowning rather than diving accidents. (16 C.A.3d 421.)

In Lua v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1897, 1903, 9 C.R.2d 116, the court held that a Public Utilities Commission order regulating the length of time that a train could block a public grade crossing was designed to prevent harm caused by delays of traffic, and hence could not be a basis for a railroad's per se liability to a pedestrian who was injured when he chose to climb on a train that was blocking an intersection. (6 C.A.4th 1904.)

On the other hand, in Courtell v. McEachen (1959) 51 C.2d 448, 334 P.2d 870, an ordinance made it unlawful to leave an unattended and unextinguished fire. Plaintiff, a child trespasser, sat down near the embers of defendants' rubbish fire and was burned. Defendants contended that the regulation was designed to protect only against the spread of fire. The court held, however, that reasonably construed, the statute was intended to protect against all perils that might arise from fires not properly extinguished, whether or not the danger materializes on the premises; and that the protection extended to a child trespasser who came within the attractive nuisance rule (infra, §1154). (51 C.2d 459.) (See Olsen v. McGillicuddy (1971) 15 C.A.3d 897, 903, 93 C.R. 530.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
4. Legal Duty and Type of Harm.
c. Vehicle Cases.

[§ 894] Vehicle Cases.

Both of the foregoing concepts (duty and type of harm; supra, §§892, 893) are involved in several familiar types of vehicle accident cases, although the courts often use the older terminology and approach of proximate cause.

Failure of the defendant to register his or her motor vehicle as required by a statute or ordinance does not conclusively establish liability to a person injured in a collision. The purpose of the regulation is to safeguard the owner's title and to protect buyers, and it has no causal connection with injuries resulting from a collision. (See Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 C.4th 456, 484, 63 C.R.2d 291, 936 P.2d 70, supra, §911; Shimoda v. Bundy (1914) 24 C.A. 675, 682, 142 P. 109; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 300; 29 A.L.R.2d 963 [lack of proper registration or license as evidence of operator's negligence].)

This result is more debatable where a statute or ordinance requires that a car left in a public street be locked and the ignition key removed; the owner leaves it unlocked, with the ignition key in place; a thief steals it and, while operating it, negligently injures the plaintiff. One view is that the regulation is designed merely to prevent the theft of the vehicle, and that its violation has no causal connection with the negligent driving of the thief. The other is that the unlocked vehicle creates a foreseeable risk of meddling by children or by thieves who are less likely to operate it carefully than the owner or an authorized person; hence, the statute has as one of its purposes the protection of the public from negligent driving. (See Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, supra, §840; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 140; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 146; 45 A.L.R.3d 787 [stranger's operation of vehicle parked with key left in ignition]; 70 A.L.R.4th 276 [stranger's operation of vehicle parked with key removed from ignition].)

In Hatch v. Ford Motor Co. (1958) 163 C.A.2d 393, 329 P.2d 605, plaintiff, a 6-year-old child, while walking, collided with the sharp protruding radiator ornament of a parked car manufactured by defendant. Veh.C. 27601 (since repealed) makes it unlawful to sell or operate a new motor vehicle equipped with a radiator ornament protruding to the front of the face of the grill. Held, order sustaining demurrer affirmed. (a) In the absence of statute, a manufacturer owes no duty to design an automobile so as to preclude injuries of this type sustained while the car is not being operated; i.e., this is not a risk to be anticipated. Otherwise, liability could be imposed for injuries from any protruding functional parts, such as headlights or radio antenna. (163 C.A.2d 397.) (b) The statute was designed to protect those who might be injured as a result of driving the automobile. Thus, the lawful possessor is made liable only if operating it, and the Legislature could not have intended to impose liability on the manufacturer under conditions that would not impose this liability on the possessor. (163 C.A.2d 399.)

In Miglierini v. Havemann (1966) 240 C.A.2d 570, 49 C.R. 795, the complaint alleged that defendants negligently collided with plaintiff's parked car, and failed to stop and leave information as required by Veh.C. 20002; that plaintiff pursued them on foot, calling on the driver to stop, and tripped and fell, sustaining personal injuries. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. Veh.C. 20002 was designed to protect the owner of an unattended vehicle from financial loss by a hit-and-run driver, not to protect the owner from personal injuries sustained in chasing a suspect. Thus, plaintiff was in the protected class of persons, but the harm suffered was not that which the statute sought to prevent. (240 C.A.2d 573.)

Western Sun Aviation* (1987) 191 C.A.3d 709, 723, 236 C.R. 633, infra, §1195; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §737 et seq.; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 414, 420; BAJI, No. 3.45; on proximate cause generally, see infra, §1181 et seq.)

In Moon v. Payne (1950) 97 C.A.2d 717, 218 P.2d 550, a rubbish fire was maintained in a garden without a permit from the fire chief as required by an ordinance. Held, this was not the proximate cause of injuries to a child who, though warned away, came up to the fire. The child would have been burned by a permitted fire as well. (97 C.A.2d 719.)

DeArmond v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 648, 61 C.R. 844, applied this rule to a statute making a railroad company liable for damages caused by its train where there is no compliance with the requirement of ringing a bell or sounding a whistle commencing a quarter mile from a crossing. Here, the finding that negligence of the driver of the colliding automobile was the "sole proximate cause" of the collision supported judgment for defendant. (253 C.A.2d 653.)

The facts may be such as to establish proximate cause as a matter of law. Thus, in Whinery v. Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 6 C.A.3d 126, 85 C.R. 649, decedent was a passenger in a truck crossing railroad tracks in a city. Defendant's train, traveling at 55 miles per hour in violation of an ordinance that limited the speed to 35 miles per hour, struck the truck, killing decedent. In this wrongful death action, the judge instructed the jury that defendant was guilty of negligence per se, but that violation of the ordinance was of no consequence unless they found it to be a proximate cause. The jury returned a defense verdict. Held, judgment reversed for retrial of damage issue alone; on causation, only one inference could reasonably be drawn from the uncontroverted facts: (a) the ordinance was designed to prevent the type of injury suffered; (b) the violation continued to the moment of impact; and (c) the injury could not have occurred but for the violation. (6 C.A.3d 129.)

The fact that an automobile driver has failed to obtain or keep in force a driver's license is perhaps prima facie evidence of unfitness to drive, but it is not so clearly the cause of an accident as to justify application of the doctrine of negligence per se. (Lehmuth v. Long Beach Unified School Dist. (1960) 53 C.2d 544, 554, 2 C.R. 279, 348 P.2d 887; Strandt v. Cannon (1938) 29 C.A.2d 509, 517, 85 P.2d 160; Wysock v. Borchers Bros. (1951) 104 C.A.2d 571, 583, 232 P.2d 531; Shmatovich v. New Sonoma Creamery (1960) 187 C.A.2d 342, 344, 9 C.R. 630; see 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 497.) The same is true of the failure of a physician or nurse to obtain a valid California license; e.g., proof that a nurse who administered drugs had only an out-of-state license does not establish negligence. (McDonald v. Foster Memorial Hosp. (1959) 170 C.A.2d 85, 92, 338 P.2d 607.)

6. Doctrine Is Inapplicable to Immature Children.

[§ 896] Doctrine Is Inapplicable to Immature Children.

The conflict between the doctrine of negligence per se and the subjective standard of care applied to children (supra, §998) has been the subject of much discussion. In Cummings v. Los Angeles (1961) 56 C.2d 258, 263, 14 C.R. 668, 363 P.2d 900, plaintiff, a child of 7 walking on a highway, was struck by defendant's automobile, suffered retrograde amnesia, and did not testify. The evidence was conflicting on the chief factual issue, whether the point of impact was on the paved portion of the highway or the shoulder. The jury's verdict for defendant was therefore an implied finding that plaintiff was on the highway and guilty of contributory negligence. Held, judgment reversed, for error in instructing on the general rule of negligence per se in the language of Veh.C. 21954 (crossing at other than crosswalks).

"The per se negligence instruction, taken alone, when applied to children, is totally inconsistent with the body of law that has grown up to protect children. The per se negligence instruction is predicated on the theory that the Legislature has adopted a statutory standard of conduct that no reasonable person would violate, and that all reasonable adults would or should know such standard. But this concept does not apply to children." (56 C.2d 263.) (See Daun v. Truax (1961) 56 C.2d 647, 654, 16 C.R. 351, 365 P.2d 407 [5-year-old child; following Cummings]; Brown v. Connolly (1962) 206 C.A.2d 582, 586, 24 C.R. 57 [6-year-old boy; same]; cf. Ev.C. 669(b)(2), supra, §890 [doctrine is applicable to child engaged in adult activity]; BAJI, No. 3.45 [doctrine is applicable unless child proves he or she acted reasonably in light of his or her maturity, intelligence, and capacity].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
1. Custom and Regulations.
a. Customary Conduct.

[§ 897] Customary Conduct.

(1) Evidence of Custom Is Admissible. Evidence of custom or practice of others similarly situated is always admissible on the issues of due care and negligence, unless it is violative of a standard prescribed by statute. (See Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1978) 21 C.3d 801, 809, 148 C.R. 22, 582 P.2d 109, citing the text; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §162 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §701 et seq.; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 324 [admissibility of evidence of superior conduct to establish breach of duty].)

(2) Custom Is Not Conclusive of Due Care. A few questionable decisions go further and purport to hold that reasonable conduct for a prudent person to follow under particular circumstances may become established as a matter of law by long approved practice; i.e., that when one does what the great body of other prudent men do in the same situation, he or she cannot be considered negligent. (See Webber v. Bank of Tracy (1924) 66 C.A. 29, 33, 225 P. 41 [standard of care of bailee established by evidence of usual custom in particular business]; Denman v. Pasadena (1929) 101 C.A. 769, 775, 282 P. 820; CACI, No. 413.)

But a long line of California cases supports the general rule that custom, while relevant, is not conclusive on the issue; i.e., it cannot make due care out of conduct that is in fact negligent. (See Rudd v. Byrnes (1909) 156 C. 636, 642, 105 P. 957; Neel v. Mannings (1942) 19 C.2d 647, 655, 122 P.2d 576; Sheward v. Virtue (1942) 20 C.2d 410, 414, 126 P.2d 345; Phoenix Assur. Co., Ltd., of London v. Texas Holding Co. (1927) 81 C.A. 61, 74, 252 P. 1082; Wolfsen v. Wheeler (1933) 130 C.A. 475, 482, 19 P.2d 1004; Milton v. Los Angeles Motor Coach Co. (1942) 53 C.A.2d 566, 570, 128 P.2d 178; Owen v. Rheem Mfg. Co. (1947) 83 C.A.2d 42, 45, 187 P.2d 785 [custom of loading steel drums in boxcar, without bracing or other device to keep them from falling out when door opened]; Reagh v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 119 C.A.2d 65, 70, 259 P.2d 43 [custom of chemistry teachers to keep dangerous chemicals on open shelves]; Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 C.A.2d 67, 73, 276 P.2d 703 [general practice of maintaining warning systems at grade crossings]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§162, 165; 85 A.L.R.2d 1196 [custom as to loading, unloading, or storage of cargo]; BAJI, No. 3.16.)

In Leonard v. Watsonville Community Hosp. (1956) 47 C.2d 509, 305 P.2d 36, plaintiff sued for damages for malpractice in leaving a Kelly clamp (6-inch metal instrument) in his abdomen. Defendant C, superintendent of the hospital, testified that while hospitals generally maintain a sponge and needle count, there was no established practice of instrument counting with respect to other implements, either before or after surgery. Held, this testimony, even if believed, did not dispel the inference of negligence of the hospital and nurse under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. "It is a matter of common knowledge ... that no special skill is required in counting instruments. Although under such circumstances proof of practice or custom is some evidence of what should be done and may assist in the determination of what constitutes due care, it does not conclusively establish the standard of care." (47 C.2d 519.)

It is not easy, however, to disassociate the ideas of due care and custom; "a practice that has been generally followed without incident is not transformed into negligence merely by the occurrence of a single accident not reasonably foreseeable." (Dissenting opinion in Blumberg v. M. & T. (1949) 34 C.2d 226, 231, 209 P.2d 1.) In Blumberg, defendant, in front of the elevators of its office building, maintained a large mat consisting of strips of rubber intersecting at right angles, leaving open spaces of varying sizes, the maximum being 5/8 by 11/16 inches. Plaintiff invitee caught the narrow heel of her shoe in one of the openings, and fell. There was evidence that many women wore these shoes, and that the bottom of the heel, though larger than the opening when laid flat, could enter the hole at an angle. Held, the jury could find defendant negligent in failing to inspect and to discover the danger of the mat, regardless of the asserted fact that the type of mat was in wide use. (34 C.2d 229.)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
1. Custom and Regulations.
b. Departure From Custom.

[§ 898] Departure From Custom.

Just as proof of conformity to custom is not conclusive of due care (see supra, §897), so proof of departure from the usual custom does not establish negligence where the evidence in fact shows due care. (Valentine v. Hayes (1924) 67 C.A. 650, 653, 228 P. 57.) But evidence of departure from a custom relied on by the plaintiff may be admissible as tending to show negligence of the defendant or to refute the charge of contributory negligence of the plaintiff. (See Scott v. Gallot (1943) 59 C.A.2d 421, 426, 138 P.2d 685 [plaintiff working under truck, relied on custom of drivers to sound horn as warning before starting car].)

In Fowler v. Key System Transit Lines (1951) 37 C.2d 65, 67, 230 P.2d 339, plaintiff was a bus passenger. Her witnesses testified that the bus customarily stopped within a crosswalk at this particular crossing, where there was a flat space to alight; on this dark night, however, it stopped at another place and she stepped into a gutter and fell. Held, it was reversible error to strike out this testimony. The custom of a bus or streetcar, in stopping at a particular place, becomes a rule of conduct on which the public has a reasonable right to rely. (37 C.2d 68.) (On evidence of precautionary rules or regulations of railroad or other carrier, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §114.)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
1. Custom and Regulations.
c. Compliance With Safety Regulations.

[§ 899] Compliance With Safety Regulations.

Statutory and administrative regulations frequently prescribe minimum standards of care, and violation of them may be negligence as a matter of law. (See infra, §871 et seq.) But compliance is not due care as a matter of law; the circumstances may call for something more. Thus, in Douglas v. Maloney (1951) 105 C.A.2d 284, 233 P.2d 59, defendant contractor constructed a scaffold on the sidewalk in front of a store, in full compliance with the Industrial Accident Commission safety order. But the 2-inch by 4-inch sills at the base were covered with dust and of the same general color as the sidewalk. Held, the evidence supported a verdict for plaintiff, who tripped on the sill and fell. (105 C.A.2d 287.) (See Nevis v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1954) 43 C.2d 626, 630, 275 P.2d 761; Campbell v. Fong Wan (1943) 60 C.A.2d 553, 557, 141 P.2d 43; Pennington v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 146 C.A.2d 605, 613, 304 P.2d 22; Amos v. Alpha Property Management (1999) 73 C.A.4th 895, 901, 87 C.R.2d 34 [fact that window met all fire, building, and safety regulations did not, as matter of law, establish that landlord and manager had fulfilled duty to take reasonable precautions to prevent children from falling from window].)

The principle was summarized in Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 C.A.2d 67, 276 P.2d 703, where defendant maintained a warning device at a crossing, pursuant to an order of the Public Utilities Commission: "The state, in prescribing such safety regulations (whether done by legislative enactment expressed in a statute or by action of the commission expressed in an order), has never gone so far as to say to a utility company that compliance therewith constitutes a complete discharge of its duties toward the public. The state does not undertake to foresee and declare in advance what, under all circumstances, constitutes ordinary care. Regulations of this nature lay down minimum, not maximum, requirements." (129 C.A.2d 72.) (Cf. Monreal v. Tobin (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1337, 72 C.R.2d 168 [defendant traveling at posted speed limit in second or third lane was not negligent; he had no duty to move right, even though other traffic was traveling at greater speed].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
2. Emergency: Doctrine of Imminent Peril.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 900

[§ 900] In General.

"[A] person who, without negligence on his part, is suddenly and unexpectedly confronted with peril, arising from either the actual presence, or the appearance, of imminent danger to himself or to others, is not expected nor required to use the same judgment and prudence that is required of him in the exercise of ordinary care in the calmer and more deliberate moments." (Leo v. Dunham (1953) 41 C.2d 712, 714, 264 P.2d 1.)

This "emergency doctrine" or "doctrine of imminent peril" is well established and frequently invoked. (See Lawrence v. Goodwill (1919) 44 C.A. 440, 448, 186 P. 781; Drury v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1929) 102 C.A. 58, 64, 282 P. 525; Alward v. Paola (1947) 79 C.A.2d 1, 7, 179 P.2d 5 [instruction on doctrine was proper where brake failed and defendant lost control of car]; Stickel v. Durfee (1948) 88 C.A.2d 402, 406, 199 P.2d 16 [refusal of instruction was reversible error under circumstances]; Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 C.A.3d 904, 912, 83 C.R. 888; Damele v. Mack Trucks (1990) 219 C.A.3d 29, 36, 37, 267 C.R. 197; Harris v. Oaks Shopping Center (1999) 70 C.A.4th 206, 208, 82 C.R.2d 523 [doctrine applied where shopping mall employee, believing incorrectly that 30-foot sand sculpture was going to collapse, was injured while attempting to rescue customers]; Rest.2d, Torts §296; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §128 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §198 et seq.; 4 California Affirmative Defenses (2d), §49:1 et seq.; 8 Proof of Facts 3d 399 [sudden emergency]; 80 A.L.R.2d 5 [instructions on sudden emergency in motor vehicle cases]; 41 A.L.R.3d 1124 [liability of motorist for collision as affected by attempts to avoid dog or other small animal in road]; 75 A.L.R.3d 327 [sudden emergency as exception to rule requiring motorist to maintain ability to stop within assured clear distance ahead]; 10 A.L.R.5th 680 [modern status of sudden emergency doctrine]; BAJI, No. 4.40; CACI, No. 452; infra, §901.)

The doctrine does not apply where the emergency is created by the actor's own negligence. But the actor's freedom from negligence up to the time of the emergency is a question of fact for the jury. (Vedder v. Bireley (1928) 92 C.A. 52, 60, 267 P. 724; Yates v. Morotti (1932) 120 C.A. 710, 716, 8 P.2d 519; see Rest.2d, Torts §296; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §208.)

[§ 901] Illustrations.

In Leo v. Dunham (1953) 41 C.2d 712, 264 P.2d 1, plaintiff pedestrian started to cross a highway (not at a crosswalk or an intersection). Defendant truck driver, approaching from the right, had the right of way. When defendant was 300 feet distant, plaintiff looked, assumed that he had time to cross, and never looked again. Defendant saw him start, assumed that he would continue to take care, and did not conclude that danger was imminent until he was 60 or 80 feet away, when he braked, shouted, and swerved, but nevertheless struck plaintiff. Held, it was proper to instruct on imminent peril, and judgment on the verdict for defendant was affirmed. The evidence would have supported an inference of defendant's negligence before the emergency, but it also reasonably supported the jury's implied finding that he was not negligent until the time that he concluded that plaintiff was not going to look again (the emergency). (41 C.2d 715.)

In Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 C.A.3d 904, 83 C.R. 888, defendant driver saw a car ahead traveling very fast in the wrong lane of a two-lane highway. Defendant applied his brakes and swerved to the left, crossing the center line, in a vain attempt to avoid a collision (the other car swerved to the right at the last moment). Held, the doctrine applied as a matter of law; there was no substantial evidence that defendant's attempt to avoid a collision by swerving to his left was negligence. (3 C.A.3d 912.)

A related aspect of the emergency principle is presented where the defendant's property is in danger, and, in an attempt to rescue it, the defendant causes injury to property of another; e.g., where a backfire is started to save property from an approaching fire. In Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 C. 515, 31 P.2d 793, property of defendant was stored in a warehouse. The building caught fire, and defendant's employees broke in and removed the property. Plaintiffs, insurance companies, alleged that defendant's action caused the fire to flare up and destroy the warehouse and its remaining contents. Held, if defendant reasonably believed that its property was in danger, it was not negligence to take reasonable steps to protect it. (220 C. 520.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
3. Unavoidable Accident.

[§ 902] Unavoidable Accident.

The so-called defense of "unavoidable accident" has caused great confusion in negligence actions. (See 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §32 et seq.)

Earlier misconceptions were highlighted in Parker v. Womack (1951) 37 C.2d 116, 230 P.2d 823, involving a collision at an intersection with an obstructed view. Held, it was proper to instruct the jury as follows: "In law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident. These terms do not mean literally that it was not possible for such an accident to be avoided. They simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence. Even if such an accident could have been avoided by the exercise of exceptional foresight, skill or caution, still, no one may be held liable for injuries resulting from it." (37 C.2d 120.) (See Polk v. Los Angeles (1945) 26 C.2d 519, 542, 159 P.2d 931; Driver v. Norman (1951) 106 C.A.2d 725, 727, 236 P.2d 6.)

Essentially, Parker stood for the proposition that such an instruction may be given not only where the defendant offers affirmative evidence to show that the accident was caused by circumstances beyond the control of an ordinarily prudent person, but also where the plaintiff has failed in his own proof of negligence; i.e., in any case except where the defendant is negligent as a matter of law. But, in Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co. (1958) 49 C.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500, the court reconsidered the problem and overruled Parker.

(a) Nature of the defense. "In reality, the so-called defense of unavoidable accident has no legitimate place in our pleading. It appears to be an obsolete remnant from a time when damages for injuries to person or property directly caused by a voluntary act of the defendant could be recovered in an action of trespass and when strict liability would be imposed unless the defendant proved that the injury was caused through 'inevitable accident.' Although exactly what was covered by this expression is not clear, it apparently included cases where the defendant was utterly without fault. 'Unavoidable accident' was then an affirmative defense to be pleaded and proved by the defendant." (49 C.2d 658.)

(b) Instruction. The defense is simply a denial of negligence or a contention that any negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury. "Since the ordinary instructions on negligence and proximate cause sufficiently show that the plaintiff must sustain his burden of proof on these issues in order to recover, the instruction on unavoidable accident serves no useful purpose." (49 C.2d 659.) Not only that, it is confusing, because the jury "may get the impression that unavoidability is an issue to be decided and that, if proved, it constitutes a separate ground of nonliability of the defendant." (49 C.2d 660.) Here, defendant taxi driver attempted to make a left turn into a driveway in order to turn around. His engine stopped while he was on the center line, and he was hit. The instruction obviously overemphasized defendants' case, in its tendency to induce the jury (1) to believe that stalling of engine was an unavoidable occurrence, and (2) to disregard the permissible inferences that the taxi company was negligent in maintaining the taxi and that the driver, with knowledge of previous stalling, failed to take proper precautions. (49 C.2d 661.) Accordingly, judgment for defendants, based on the jury's verdict, was reversed. (See Rayner v. Ramirez (1958) 159 C.A.2d 372, 377, 324 P.2d 83 [suggesting that Supreme Court should clarify its dictum on the "special situations" which may still call for the instruction]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 72.)

Later cases follow Butigan in holding the instruction improper. (See Bridgman v. Safeway Stores (1960) 53 C.2d 443, 449, 2 C.R. 146, 348 P.2d 696 [error was not reversible in this case]; Hidden v. Malinoff (1959) 174 C.A.2d 845, 852, 345 P.2d 499; Clarke v. Michals (1970) 4 C.A.3d 364, 371, 84 C.R. 507; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §36; 65 A.L.R.2d 12 [instructions on unavoidable accident in motor vehicle cases].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
4. Lack of Necessary Skill or Care.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 903

[§ 903] Lack of Necessary Skill or Care.

An act may be negligent because it is not performed with the necessary care or skill that the circumstances require. (See Rest.2d, Torts §298.) Thus, an automobile is an instrumentality capable of inflicting death or serious injury, and a greater amount of care is required of the driver than of a pedestrian. (Raymond v. Hill (1914) 168 C. 473, 478, 143 P. 743.)

Veh.C. 22350 requires drivers of motor vehicles to operate them in a careful manner, having due regard for traffic and the surface and width of the highway. Accordingly, one may be guilty of negligence in driving too fast under certain circumstances, even though not exceeding the specific speed limit. (Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co. (1922) 189 C. 335, 340, 208 P. 125; Dam v. Bond (1926) 80 C.A. 342, 350, 251 P. 818; Cannon v. Kemper (1937) 23 C.A.2d 239, 241, 73 P.2d 268; see infra, §878.)

The effect of a physical disability or illness is to require a standard equal to that of a reasonable man under an equivalent disability. (See Hammontree v. Jenner (1971) 20 C.A.3d 528, 531, 97 C.R. 739 [epileptic automobile driver under regular medication had unanticipated seizure and lost control of car; principles of negligence govern, and proposed instruction on strict liability is properly refused]; Rest.2d, Torts §283C; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §16.7; 53 Proof of Facts 3d 67 [physical disability of driver]; 28 A.L.R.2d 12 [physical defect, illness, drowsiness, or falling asleep of vehicle driver as affecting liability].)

5. Lack of Preparation or Inspection.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 904

[§ 904] Lack of Preparation or Inspection.

Where the circumstances require careful preparation for an act, or reasonable inspection of a vehicle or other instrumentality, failure in these respects will constitute negligence. (See *Polk v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 905

[§ 905] Warning Before Acts.

Failure to give appropriate warning before doing certain acts may be negligent. (See Rest.2d, Torts §301.) The following are illustrative:

(1) Failure of a motorist to sound the horn in sufficient time to give notice to others of his or her approach. (See Rush v. Lagomarsino (1925) 196 C. 308, 319, 237 P. 1066; Marston v. Higgins (1941) 43 C.A.2d 759, 761, 111 P.2d 668 [no duty to sound horn while in private driveway, despite knowledge that children habitually played on adjoining lawn].)

(3) Throwing heavy objects into a place where others are lawfully present. (See O'Callaghan v. Bode (1890) 84 C. 489, 493, 24 P. 269; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 87 [errant golf ball shots].)

C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
6. Failure To Give Warning.
c. Signals at Railroad Crossing.

[§ 907] Signals at Railroad Crossing.

Even where the law does not require it, if a railway company installs signals or other safety devices, so that the public is led to rely upon them, it is negligence to abandon them or to fail to operate them properly. (Rest.2d, Torts §301, Comment f; see 5 A.L.R.2d 112 [customary or statutory train signal as fulfilling railroad's duty to warn at highway crossing]; 90 A.L.R.2d 350 [failure of signaling device at crossing to operate as affecting railroad's liability].)

In Mallett v. Southern Pac. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 500, 68 P.2d 281, defendant's automatic wig-wag signal was so constructed that the light and bell would operate until a southbound train had passed the crossing, but would stop while a northbound train still blocked it. Plaintiff, unaware of this lack of uniformity, drove her car with due care, relying on the motionless signal, and ran into a standing freight train that her lights did not reveal until too late. Held, defendant was liable. Defendant contended that the signals are intended to warn of approaching trains, and that upon arrival, the train itself is sufficient warning; but here, the signal operated in so peculiar a manner as to constitute a trap for those who relied on it. (20 C.A.2d 506.)

Another poorly devised wig-wag signal was the basis of liability in Startup v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1947) 29 C.2d 866, 869, 180 P.2d 896: If one train followed another within 600 feet, the wig-wag would cease operating when the first train cleared the crossing, notwithstanding the danger from the oncoming second train.

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
7. Failure To Take Precautions.
a. Safety Belts.

[§ 908] Safety Belts.

Failure to use a safety belt in an automobile may be negligence. (See Twohig v. Briner (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1102, 1108, 214 C.R. 729 [safety belts removed]; Krawitz v. Rusch (1989) 209 C.A.3d 957, 965, 966, 257 C.R. 610, [distinguishing Twohig before selling used vehicle, nondealer seller has no duty to either install seat belts or warn purchaser that they are missing]; 35 Am.Jur. Trials 349; 65 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [seat belt defense]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 925; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 597 [effect of mandatory safety belt law on safety belt defense].) (On child safety belt and passenger restraint requirements, see Veh.C. 27360 et seq.)

The Motor Vehicle Safety Act (Veh.C. 27315, enacted in 1992, requires safety belts to be worn in motor vehicles. (See People v. Coyle (1988) 204 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 251 C.R. 80 [upholding Veh.C. 27315 against right to privacy challenge].) "Motor vehicle" includes any passenger vehicle, motor truck, or truck tractor, but does not include motorcycles. (Veh. C. 27315(c)(1).) "Motor vehicle" also means any farm labor vehicle, regardless of the date of certification. (Veh. C. 27315(c)(2).)

It is an infraction to operate a motor vehicle on a highway unless the operator and all passengers 16 years of age or over are properly restrained by a safety belt. This provision does not apply to the operator of a taxicab, when the taxicab is driven on a city street and is engaged in the transportation of a fare-paying passenger. (Veh. C. 27315(d)(1).) However, any front seat passenger in a taxi who is 6 years of age or over or who weighs 60 pounds or more must be properly restrained by a safety belt. (Veh. C. 27315(d)(3).) In the case of a limousine for hire or an emergency vehicle, both the operator and any front seat passenger 6 years of age or over or weighing 60 pounds or more must wear a safety belt. (Veh. C. 27315(d)(2).)

It is an infraction to be a passenger in a motor vehicle on a highway without wearing a safety belt (not applicable to a passenger occupying a sleeper berth) and for the owner of a motor vehicle, or the owner or operator of a taxicab or a limousine for hire, to fail to maintain safety belts for the use of occupants of the vehicle. (Veh. C. 27315(e), (f).)

Veh. C. 27315 does not apply to: (1) a passenger or operator with a physical or medical condition that would prevent appropriate restraint in a safety belt; (2) to a public employee or a rear seat passenger when these parties are in an emergency vehicle (Veh. C. 27315(g)); and (3) assuming that a safety belt is worn before commencing and after completing the task, a person actually engaged in delivery of newspapers to customers (Veh. C. 27315(n)), collection and delivery activities as a rural delivery carrier for the postal service (Veh. C. 27315(o)), or the collection of solid waste or recyclable materials along that driver's collection route (Veh. C. 27315(p)).

A violation of the Act "does not establish negligence as a matter of law or negligence per se for comparative fault purposes, but negligence may be proven as a fact without regard to the violation." (Veh. C. 27315(i).) An identical provision is found in Veh. C. 27315.3, which makes it an infraction for a sheriff's department, city police department, or highway patrol to fail to "maintain safety belts in good working order for the use of occupants of any vehicle which it operates on a highway for the purpose of patrol." (Veh.C. 27315.3(b), (c).)

In Housley v. Godinez (1992) 4 C.A.4th 737, 6 C.R.2d 111, plaintiff was injured when the vehicle in which he was riding as a passenger crashed into a land plane that was stuck in the middle of the highway. Based on plaintiff's failure to wear a seat belt, defendants raised the defense of contributory negligence, and the trial judge instructed the jury on Veh.C. 27315 as part of the "seat belt defense." The judgment entered for plaintiff reflected the jury's finding that he was 30% negligent. Plaintiff argued that it was error to instruct on Veh.C. 27315, because Veh.C. 27315(j) established that the Legislature intended the statute to be used only in criminal matters. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) While Veh.C. 27315(j) (now Veh.C. 27315(i)) precludes defense arguments that violation of the statute constitutes "negligence as a matter of law or negligence per se," nothing in the statute prohibits a jury from knowing and considering the statute's existence when determining the reasonableness of driving without a seat belt. Indeed, the second clause of the subdivision, which permits negligence to be proved as a fact, plainly contemplates that the effect of failure to wear a seat belt should be fully litigated as a question of fact. Furthermore, it is well established that juries may be instructed on criminal statutes even when the statute itself does not establish a presumption of negligence. (4 C.A.4th 744, citing Vallas v. Chula Vista (1976) 56 C.A.3d 382, 128 C.R. 469, infra, §877.)

(b) Allowing instructions on the seat belt statute will serve to accomplish the legislative goal of encouraging greater usage of existing seat belts for the purpose of public safety. These instructions underscore the value of seat belts by warning that a jury may reduce an injured party's recovery for injuries that would have been avoided by using a seat belt. (4 C.A.4th 746.)

(c) Had the Legislature intended to bar the use of the seat belt statute in civil proceedings, it could have stated this intention clearly, as it has done in other statutes. (4 C.A.4th 746, citing Lab.C. 6304.5.) Hence, the Legislature intended Veh.C. 27315(j) "only to preclude the automatic and invariable reduction of awards to plaintiffs injured while not wearing a seat belt. This construction is consistent with the language of the legislation. It permits the civil trial courts to instruct on the existence of the seat belt statute in appropriate cases, while allowing the jury to decide what weight, if any, to give the statute in determining the standard of reasonable care." (4 C.A.4th 747.)

Veh.C. 27315(n), (o), and (p) were renumbered Veh.C. 27315(m), (n), and (o), respectively, in 2003.

[§ 909] Other Precautions.

The failure to adopt other proper precautions in doing certain acts or maintaining certain conditions may also be negligent. Examples are:

(1) Leaving an excavation in a street without guards, lights, or barriers. (Carty v. Boeseke-Dawe Co. (1906) 2 C.A. 646, 648, 84 P. 267.)

(2) Parking a car on a steep hill without setting the brakes properly. (Latky v. Wolfe (1927) 85 C.A. 332, 348, 259 P. 470.)

(3) Setting or leaving electric wires without insulation, or without safeguards against breaking. (McCormick v. Great Western Power Co. of Calif. (1932) 214 C. 658, 662, 8 P.2d 145; Royal Indem. Co. v. Midland Counties Public Service Corp. (1919) 42 C.A. 628, 632, 183 P. 960.)

(4) Failure of a street railway maintaining wooden poles at the curb to select poles sufficient to withstand ordinary strain of weather conditions. (Gibson v. Garcia (1950) 96 C.A.2d 681, 683, 216 P.2d 119.)

(5) Suspending a therapeutic light bulb over a patient without a screen. (Crowe v. McBride (1944) 25 C.2d 318, 320, 153 P.2d 727.)

(6) Failing to maintain a proper lookout for persons in the zone of danger. Thus, an automobile driver should be particularly watchful at intersections. (Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co. (1922) 189 C. 335, 340, 208 P. 125; Truitner v. Knight (1927) 83 C.A. 655, 661, 257 P. 447.) (7) Failing to take measures to protect against injury on waxed floor. (See Hatfield v. Levy Bros. (1941) 18 C.2d

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
8. Absence of Similar Occurrence.

[§ 910] Absence of Similar Occurrence.

In Schwerin v. H.C. Capwell Co. (1934) 140 C.A. 1, 34 P.2d 1050, defendants operated an escalator in proper mechanical condition. Held, they were not bound to anticipate danger to passengers resulting from acts of children attempting to ascend against the downward movement of the machinery. There was no showing that these acts had been known to occur before; they were highly unusual and not reasonably to be anticipated. "The use of the thing must be dangerous according to common experience, at least to the extent that there is a manifest and appreciable chance of harm from what is done, in view of the actor's knowledge or of his conscious ignorance." (140 C.A. 4, quoting Massachusetts case.)

But the fact that there was no prior similar occurrence is not conclusive. In Rocca v. Tuolumne County Elec. Power & Light Co. (1926) 76 C.A. 569, 245 P. 468, high-tension electric wires were loosely hung near a tree, and a limb, broken in a storm, fell across them, causing a sag. Defendant was held liable for the death of a person coming in contact with them although no limb of the tree had previously broken. (76 C.A. 583.)

In Beresford v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 738, 290 P.2d 498, defendant maintained a power line. On adjacent land, a tall old tree fell across the line during a storm, bringing the wires in contact with telephone lines leading to plaintiff's lodge, and a fire resulted from contact of the high-voltage uninsulated wires with the telephone wires. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. It was not unreasonable to require a power company to anticipate that in a high wind a tree might fall against high-voltage lines and cause a fire; and it was immaterial that the tree stood outside the right-of-way, on private property. (45 C.2d 746.) (See Terrell v. Key System (1945) 69 C.A.2d 682, 686, 159 P.2d 704 [carrier's foreseeability of assaults by passengers engaged in crap game]; Kaukonen v. Aro (1956) 142 C.A.2d 502, 505, 298 P.2d 611 [defendant, driving with passenger on road where there was slide danger, kept going despite one slide and was struck by another]; *Darnold v. Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
9. Operation of Machinery Near Horses.

[§ 911] Operation of Machinery Near Horses.

In Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 C.4th 456, 481, 63 C.R.2d 291, 936 P.2d 70, a rider sustained injuries when thrown from his horse after it was frightened by loud noises from a garbage truck operating near a public bridle path. He sought recovery from the garbage company. The Supreme Court, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal, held that the trial court properly entered summary judgment for defendant; the record contained no evidence that defendant breached the limited duty of care it owed to plaintiff.

(a) The duty of care imposed by the common law with respect to the operation of machinery in the presence of horses is a limited one. For over 150 years, courts have recognized that the needs of a modern, industrial society often conflict with and generally must prevail over the delicate sensibilities of horses. Generally, a plaintiff whose horse causes damage because of the noise, sight, or odor from a defendant's regular and necessary conduct cannot state a cause of action for negligence, because the defendant has not breached any duty of care. (15 C.4th 467.) There are exceptions: A defendant breaches a duty of care if the defendant conducts or uses a vehicle, machine, or other device in a careless or imprudent manner or causes noises or emissions unnecessary to the regular operation of the machine; the defendant fails to take reasonable protective actions after it knows that the plaintiff's horse actually has become frightened; the defendant or its employees operate machinery in an unnecessary or malicious fashion designed to cause fright; or the defendant violates a safety statute designed to protect the class of which the plaintiff is a member. (15 C.4th 469.) Nevertheless, a driver or machine operator has no duty to stop or cease operation merely because he or she is aware that horses may be nearby or sees a horse. (15 C.4th 472.)

(b) Because there was no evidence that defendant operated its garbage truck in anything but the regular and necessary manner, and, further, no evidence that defendant knew that plaintiff's horse had become frightened, there is no basis on which to conclude that defendant breached the limited duty of care it owed to plaintiff. (15 C.4th 473.) Considerations of social policy--i.e., the social utility of defendant's conduct and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to guard against frightening a horse--override any assumption that the garbage company should have foreseen this risk. (15 C.4th 475.) Also, none of the exceptions to the common law rule of nonliability is here applicable. (15 C.4th 477.)

(c) The Court of Appeal erroneously interpreted Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, infra, §1339, a case discussing the implications of the assumption of risk doctrine, to support the proposition that defendants generally have a duty to use due care not to increase the risks to a participant over and above those inherent in a sport or other recreational activity, regardless of the lack of relationship between the parties. This court imposed no such general duty in Knight. (15 C.4th 481.) On the contrary, Knight simply requires courts in each instance to examine the question of duty in light of the nature of the defendant's activities and the relationship of the parties to that activity. There are circumstances in which the relationship between defendant and plaintiff gives rise to a duty to use due care not to increase the risks inherent in the plaintiff's activity, e.g., the relationship between a purveyor of recreational activities and a patron. However, where, as here, parties have no relationship, and instead are independent actors, separately pursuing their own activities, a defendant generally has no duty to avoid increasing the risks inherent in the plaintiff's activity. (15 C.4th 482.)

(d) Moreover, there was no evidence to suggest that defendant violated Veh.C. 21759, which imposes a duty of care on a driver approaching a ridden animal, because defendant's truck was stationary as plaintiff approached the vehicle. Furthermore, plaintiff presented no evidence that defendant violated a county ordinance that prohibited operation of a compacting mechanism at a sound level in excess of a certain decibel rating. (15 C.4th 484.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
10. Risk of Venereal Disease.

[§ 912] Risk of Venereal Disease.

In Doe v. Roe (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1538, 267 C.R. 564, defendant Richard Roe had suffered three outbreaks of herpes prior to engaging in sexual relations with plaintiff Jane Doe. He did not inform her of this fact, and contended that he had no duty to do so because the lesions had healed and the risk of asymptomatic transmission (transmission without lesions) was not well known and was therefore not reasonably foreseeable. Plaintiff was nonsuited on her cause of action for intentional misrepresentation, but she prevailed at the trial on her cause of action for negligence. Held, affirmed.

(a) In cases where there are strong policy reasons for preventing the harm, or the harm can be prevented by simple means, a lesser degree of foreseeability may be required. (218 C.A.3d 1544, citing Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134.) "In the present case, it is beyond question that our state's policy of preventing the spread of venereal disease is great and that the burden of warning a prospective sex partner is small. Thus, only a slight degree of foreseeability was needed to warrant the imposition of a duty of due care in the present case." (218 C.A.3d 1544.)

(b) The record showed that defendant, with knowledge that he had herpes and that it could be transmitted by sexual conduct, did nothing to find out about its contagiousness or what steps could be taken to prevent giving it to a prospective partner; he elected to gamble with her health rather than inform her of his condition or educate himself about the disease. (218 C.A.3d 1544.)

(c) "A reasonable person should know that if he/she has a contagious, sexually transmissible disease like genital herpes, the disease is likely to be communicated through sexual contact. Thus people suffering from genital herpes generally have a duty either to avoid sexual contact with uninfected persons or, at least to warn potential sex partners that they have herpes before sexual contact occurs." (218 C.A.3d 1545, quoting Minnesota case.) (On tort liability for sexually transmitted disease generally, see 88 Am.Jur. Trials 153.)

In John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 C.4th 1177, 45 C.R.3d 316, 137 P.3d 153, plaintiff wife sued defendant husband on the theory that he negligently infected her with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). Plaintiff's pretrial discovery included the service of special interrogatories and requests for admission concerning defendant's sexual history and his awareness of his HIV infection. She also subpoenaed defendant's medical and employment records. In discussing whether discovery may be limited on the ground that the negligent transmission of HIV required actual knowledge of the infection, the court made the following points:

(a) California has not yet decided whether negligent transmission of a sexually transmitted disease is a recognized tort, but other states have long imposed liability on individuals who have harmed others by transmitting communicable diseases. (38 C.4th 1188.)

(b) The tort of negligent transmission of HIV does not depend solely on actual knowledge of HIV infection, but instead extends to those situations where the actor, under the totality of the circumstances, has reason to know of the infection, i.e., possesses constructive knowledge. Under the "reason-to-know" standard, the actor must have knowledge of facts from which a reasonable person of ordinary intelligence or one with the superior intelligence of the actor would either infer the existence of the fact in question or regard its existence as so highly probable that his or her conduct would be predicated on the assumption that the fact did exist. (38 C.4th 1189.)

(c) Limiting tort defendants to those who have actual knowledge that they are infected with HIV would have perverse effects on the spread of the virus, because if only those who have been tested were subject to suit, there might be an incentive for some persons to avoid diagnosis and treatment in order to avoid knowledge of their own infection. On the other hand, extending liability to those with constructive knowledge of the disease would provide an incentive to use proper diagnostic techniques and to alter behavior and procedures in order to limit the likelihood of HIV transmission. (38 C.4th 1190.)

(d) Extending liability to those who have constructive knowledge of the disease comports with general principles of negligence, i.e., that all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as a result of their conduct (see Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, text, §833). There is no reason to depart from this principle in cases of alleged transmission of HIV, where contracting a deadly disease is a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the negligence. (38 C.4th 1192.)

(e) Evidence that defendant engaged in unprotected sex outside the relationship and hid these encounters from plaintiff, even if insufficient to establish the requisite knowledge for a negligence claim, may reasonably lead to the discovery of evidence as to defendant's awareness of the HIV status of those partners (without even disclosing their identities) and thus may be relevant to whether defendant knew or had reason to know that he was infected with HIV. Similarly, evidence that defendant had symptoms consistent with HIV infection may be insufficiently distinctive to indicate HIV infection by itself but may be relevant to whether defendant knew or had reason to know that he was infected, when considered in combination with his alleged history of engaging in unprotected sex outside the relationship. (38 C.4th 1193.)

(f) Defendant contended that, because carriers of HIV may be asymptomatic, possible symptoms of HIV are irrelevant. However, many sexually transmitted diseases, such as chlamydia, gonorrhea, syphilis, and herpes, likewise commonly present asymptotically at the initial stages or have nonspecific symptoms that can be confused with other, more common diseases. And defendant has cited no decision that has invoked the possible difficulties of establishing the requisite knowledge of these diseases in some instances as a justification for categorically foreclosing recovery in all cases. (38 C.4th 1194.)

(g) Defendant also contended that the risk of transmission of HIV in any individual act of intercourse is so low as to make it unreasonable to impose a duty of care on someone who is not actually aware that he or she is infected. However, a low risk of transmission is insufficient to relieve the infected individual of a duty, where the harm itself is great and the duty of care to prevent that harm is not onerous. And medical advances in combating HIV do not relieve infected individuals of their duty to avoid transmitting what remains a very serious disease, nor should the efficacy of those advances necessarily determine what discovery is permissible. (38 C.4th 1195.)

(h) The argument that the Legislature, by criminalizing the intentional and knowing transmission of HIV (Health & Saf.C. 120291; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §368), intended to limit tort liability to those individuals who have actual knowledge that they are infected misapprehends the respective roles of criminal and tort law. The Legislature typically intends a lowered standard for a civil action to recover damages than for a prosecution imposing substantial criminal penalties. Thus, the fact the Legislature did not attach criminal penalties to those persons who have reason to know they carry HIV and nonetheless take no steps to avoid infecting others in no way suggests that the Legislature intended to depart from ordinary negligence principles in a civil action for negligent transmission of HIV. (38 C.4th 1197.)

(i) It is not necessary to consider here whether a conflict exists between plaintiff's entitlement to discover relevant evidence and Health & Saf.C. 120975, which protects the identity of a person taking an HIV test (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §245), because defendant waived this statutory protection by claiming in his answer that plaintiff infected him with HIV and by relying on a negative HIV test in support of his motion for summary judgment. Nor is it necessary to consider the extent of permissible discovery about the HIV status of third parties, because the discovery authorized does not include identifying information about defendant's sexual partners. (38 C.4th 1198.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
11. False Diagnosis of Recovered Memory.

[§ 913] False Diagnosis of Recovered Memory.

In Trear v. Sills (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1341, 82 C.R.2d 281, S sued plaintiff, her father, for sexual abuse that had allegedly occurred during her childhood years, but she claimed that she had no recollection until defendant psychiatrist diagnosed her (falsely according to plaintiff) as suffering from "body and cell memories" of childhood sexual abuse. Plaintiff, although never a patient of defendant, sued her for malpractice, alleging that, had she exercised reasonable care, she would have foreseen the harm to plaintiff. Defendant successfully demurred. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The theory that childhood sexual abuse may result in suppression of memory such that the victim may not remember it until many years later under the guidance of a psychotherapist is controversial, but the theory appears to have been adopted in many states by the passage of statutes of limitations implicitly accepting the idea that a victim of sexual abuse may not have reason to know of the abuse until many years later. In 1986, California joined these states by enacting C.C.P. 340.1, which allows a civil action for childhood sexual abuse within 3 years from the date the plaintiff discovers or should have discovered that psychological sickness occurring after the age of majority was caused by the childhood sexual abuse. However, at present, opposition to this theory is growing. (69 C.A.4th 1344.)

(b) One can easily see the horror resulting to a parent falsely accused of child molestation, and, not surprisingly, numerous cases from other jurisdictions, emphasizing simple foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, have ruled in favor of allowing suits such as this one to go forward. However, California has emphasized that duty is not a function of simple foreseeability. (69 C.A.4th 1346, citing Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, infra, §1009.) Furthermore, this case does not involve a patient's suit against his or her therapist, but a suit by a patient's parent. Thus, in the absence of a voluntary assumption of duty by the therapist, such as by agreement, any duty toward the parent must be imposed as a matter of policy. (69 C.A.4th 1346.)

(c) A therapist clearly owes a duty to the patient. However, holding that the therapist also owes a duty to the third-party abuser would create an intolerable situation. The therapist would have to choose between violating the duty to the patient (by ignoring possible childhood abuse), or fulfilling that duty, but violating the duty to the third-party abuser (by uncovering any repressed memory, whether true or false). (69 C.A.4th 1350.)

(d) It can be argued that no patient is well served by an incorrect diagnosis of repressed childhood sexual abuse and that the correct solution is to use the law of negligence to require the therapist to make the correct diagnosis. However, therapy is inexact, and a duty to a potential abuser would afford the therapist no leeway in deciding whether the patient was really abused. A therapist would be like a juror required to make determinations according to well-established rules of evidence, rather than acting as a helping professional. The out-of-state cases that have allowed suits such as this have avoided dealing with the impossibility of verification and the conflicts of interest created by imposition of a duty to a third-party abuser. These cases assume a level of ascertainability and verifiability on the part of the therapist that is unrealistic and that courts would never consider imposing on judges and juries with respect to incorrect determinations concerning the factual merits of repressed memory claims. (69 C.A.4th 1351.)

(e) The traditional factors used in determining whether a duty should be imposed are all against liability. James W. v. Superior Court (1993) 17 C.A.4th 246, 21 C.R.2d 169, supra, §142 does not require otherwise. To say that James W. stands for the proposition that a therapist is liable for all false accusations of molestation is misleading. Rather, the case stands for the principle that the statutes designed to protect reporters of suspected child abuse do not shield family counselors from liability to those who hire them. (69 C.A.4th 1357.)

(f) Plaintiff has not alleged facts that constitute the following causes of action: intentional infliction of emotional distress (not outrageous for a therapist to act on the premise that repressed memories of sexual abuse cause later psychological problems); barratry (plaintiff alleged that defendant urged S to sue him as part of her therapy, but barratry requires three groundless lawsuits); abuse of process (requires abuse of legal process, not just filing suit); malicious prosecution (S's earlier suit against plaintiff had not yet been terminated at the time that this action was filed). (69 C.A.4th 1357.)

(g) The court cautioned that it was not commenting on any theory of malpractice that a patient might bring against a therapist based on false or implanted memories of childhood abuse, but was simply holding that the therapist's duty did not extend beyond the patient to include someone who the therapist in good faith (even if negligently) concluded abused the patient. (69 C.A.4th 1360.)

Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, found foreseeability present in the following unusual facts: Defendant's Los Angeles radio station KHJ commanded 48% of the teenage listeners. To attract a larger audience, it inaugurated a promotion entitled "The Super Summer Spectacular." Its disc jockey, known as "The Real Don Steele," traveled to a number of locations in the Los Angeles metropolitan area in a conspicuous red automobile; the station broadcast the information of its whereabouts and the correct response to a question or some other condition, and the first to arrive received a cash prize ($ 25 in a typical instance). Two defendants, Robert and Marsha, located Steele after someone had already claimed the prize. These two defendants, in separate cars, followed Steele on a freeway at high speeds to get the prize at the next stop, and in the pursuit one of their cars forced decedent's car onto the center divider, where it overturned, killing decedent. In this wrongful death action, Robert's carrier settled, and a verdict and judgment against Marsha was not appealed. Defendant station appealed from the judgment against it. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendant's duty was established by the foreseeability of the risk, pursuant to the jury verdict supported by the evidence. The broadcast was in vacation time, and youthful listeners were attracted by the money and notoriety; it was foreseeable that some, finding the prize had eluded them at one location, would race to arrive first at the next site and disregard the demands of highway safety; and Steele himself testified that he had noticed vehicles following him from location to location. (15 C.3d 47.) Causation was also established by foreseeability of the negligent acts of third parties, under Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 C.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269, supra, §842. (15 C.3d 47.)

(b) Defendants contended that the imposition of a duty here would lead to unwarranted extensions of liability, e.g., to an athletic department advertising a limited number of tickets, or a department store announcing a "while-they-last" sale. But this contest was not a commonplace invitation to an attraction available on a limited basis. "It was a competitive scramble in which the thrill of the chase to be the one and only victor was intensified by the live broadcasts which accompanied the pursuit." (15 C.3d 48.)

(c) The contention that, under Rest.2d, Torts §315, defendants owed no duty to control the conduct of third parties, mistakenly assumed that the act here was mere nonfeasance. Defendant's act was one of misfeasance, i.e., it created the risk; and the standards of ordinary care governed. (15 C.3d 49.) (See criticism, 64 Cal. L. Rev. 617; and see 37 Proof of Facts 2d 521 [broadcaster's personal liability in connection with broadcast]; 20 A.L.R.4th 328 [liability for personal injury or death allegedly resulting from television or radio broadcast].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
12. Radio, Television, or Motion Picture Production.
b. Film Depicting Violence.

[§ 915] Film Depicting Violence.

Olivia N. v. National Broadcasting Co. (1981) 126 C.A.3d 488, 178 C.R. 888, distinguished Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914, and sustained a First Amendment defense. On September 10, 1974, at 8 p.m., defendant NBC telecast nationwide, and defendant Chronicle Broadcasting Co. broadcast locally, a film entitled "Born Innocent." It contained a scene in which a young girl in a state-run home was attacked by four adolescent girls who abused her sexually with the wooden handle of a plunger. On September 14, 1974, plaintiff, age 9, was attacked in a similar manner by minors using a bottle. Plaintiff alleged that her assailants had viewed and discussed the "artificial rape" scene in "Born Innocent," and that this caused them to decide to commit a similar act on her. The complaint also alleged that the film was particularly likely to cause imitation and that it had been televised without proper warning. After denial of a defense motion for summary judgment, the case was set for trial, but the judge viewed the film, decided that it did not incite the crime against plaintiff, and gave judgment for defendants. This was reversed on the ground that it was a violation of plaintiff's right to trial by jury. (Olivia N. v. National Broadcasting Co. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 383, 141 C.R. 511.) On remand, a jury was picked, and plaintiff's counsel made his opening statement, in which he said that the action was based on negligence and recklessness, and that no attempt would be made to prove incitement by defendants. The judge then granted a nonsuit and rendered judgment of dismissal. Held, affirmed.

(a) Controlling decisions establish the First Amendment protection of material communicated by the public media, including fictional material such as that presented here. (126 C.A.3d 492.) Hence, the broadcast was protected speech unless it advocated or encouraged violent acts, amounting to an "incitement," under Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §470. (126 C.A.3d 494.)

(b) Plaintiff's theory that liability could be imposed on the basis of negligence is untenable. That liability would have a "chilling effect" on media broadcasting, leading to self-censorship, and "could reduce the U.S. adult population to viewing only what is fit for children." (126 C.A.3d 494.) Nor can liability be justified by distinguishing between the fictional presentation of "Born Innocent" and news programs and documentaries. "If a negligence theory is recognized, a television network or local station could be liable when a child imitates activities portrayed in a news program or documentary." (126 C.A.3d 495.)

(c) Weirum, which briefly disposed of the First Amendment defense, is distinguishable. Although the language of the opinion "was broad" it must be understood in light of the fact that the Weirum broadcasts repeatedly encouraged listeners to speed to announced locations, and liability was imposed for urging listeners to act in an inherently dangerous manner. Here, plaintiff alleges only that the teenage viewers "acted on the stimulus of the broadcast rather than in response to encouragement of such conduct." (126 C.A.3d 496.) (See 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 529 [commenting on first Olivia N. opinion].)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.

c. Song About Suicide.

[§ 916] Song About Suicide.

In McCullum v. CBS (1988) 202 C.A.3d 989, 249 C.R. 187, John, plaintiffs' decedent, was a 19-year-old youth suffering from emotional problems. He regularly listened to the broadcasts of defendant Osbourne, the "mad man" of rock and roll, whose songs included "Suicide Solution," in which the words "Get the gun and try it" appeared. One night, after listening to Osbourne, John shot himself.

The complaint alleged the following: Defendant Osbourne's music was directed to an audience including troubled adolescents and young adults; the target group was extremely susceptible to the directions of this cult figure and role model; a "special relationship" of kinship existed between Osbourne and his avid fans; defendants Osbourne and CBS knew or should have known that it was foreseeable that the music, lyrics, and hemisync tones would influence the emotions and behavior of susceptible listeners; defendants negligently and intentionally disseminated the music and intentionally aided or encouraged the resulting suicide. The trial court gave judgment for defendants on demurrer, on the ground that, irrespective of the theory of recovery, the action was barred by the First Amendment guarantee of free speech. Held, affirmed.

(a) Bar of First Amendment.

(1) Material communicated by the public media, including artistic expression such as the music and lyrics involved here, are generally to be accorded protection under the First Amendment. (202 C.A.3d 998; see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §323.) One recognized exception is speech directed to inciting imminent lawless action, which is likely to incite or produce this action. (202 C.A.3d 1000, citing Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §470.) But to justify a claim under this exception the court must be satisfied that the speech (a) was directed or intended toward the goal of producing imminent lawless conduct, and (b) was likely to produce the imminent conduct. (202 C.A.3d 1000, citing Hess v. Indiana (1973) 414 U.S. 105, 94 S.Ct. 326, 38 L.Ed.2d 303, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §458.)

(2) "We can find no such intent or likelihood here. Apart from the 'unintelligible' lyrics quoted above from 'Suicide Solution,' ... there is nothing in any of Osbourne's songs which could be characterized as a command to an immediate suicidal act. ... Merely because art may evoke a mood of depression as it figuratively depicts the darker side of human nature does not mean that it constitutes a direct 'incitement to imminent violence.' The lyrics sung by Osbourne may well express a philosophical view that suicide is an acceptable alternative to a life that has become unendurable--an idea which, however unorthodox, has a long intellectual tradition." (202 C.A.3d 1001.) And musical lyrics and poetry are not intended to be and should not be read literally; they are figurative expressions, and no rational person would mistake them for commands or directives to immediate action. (202 C.A.3d 1002.)

(3) Although no California case has dealt directly with recorded music and lyrics, fictional depictions in the film and electronic media have been the subject of several decisions, and tort liability has been rejected on First Amendment grounds. (202 C.A.3d 1002, citing Olivia N. v. National Broadcasting Co. (1981) 126 C.A.3d 488, 178 C.R. 888, supra, §915.)

(4) "Musical composers and performers, as well as record producers and distributors, would become significantly more inhibited in the selection of controversial materials if liability for civil damages were a risk to be endured for publication of protected speech. The deterrent effect of subjecting the music and recording industry to such liability because of their programming choices would lead to a self-censorship which would dampen the vigor and limit the variety of artistic expression. Thus, the imposition here of postpublication civil damages, in the absence of an incitement to imminent lawless action, would be just as violative of the First Amendment as a prior restraint." (202 C.A.3d 1003.)

(b) No legal duty to plaintiffs.

(1) "The threshold and, in this case, dispositive question with respect to the assertion of a claim for negligence is whether any duty was owed to the plaintiffs." (202 C.A.3d 1003.) The foreseeability factor is adequately considered in Olivia N., which placed Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914, in its proper perspective. Osbourne's music and lyrics had been recorded and produced years before the broadcast, and John's tragic self-destruction was not a reasonably foreseeable risk or consequence of defendants' remote artistic activities. (202 C.A.3d 1005.)

(2) "Plaintiffs' case is not aided by an examination of the other factors which are a part of the duty analysis. It cannot be said that there was a close connection between John's death and defendants' composition, performance, production, and distribution years earlier of recorded artistic musical expressions. Likewise, no moral blame for that tragedy may be laid at defendants' door. John's suicide, an admittedly irrational response to Osbourne's music, was not something which any of the defendants intended, planned or had any reason to anticipate. Finally, and perhaps most significantly, it is simply not acceptable to a free and democratic society to impose a duty upon performing artists to limit and restrict their creativity in order to avoid the dissemination of ideas in artistic speech which may adversely affect emotionally troubled individuals. Such a burden would quickly have the effect of reducing and limiting artistic expression to only the broadest standard of taste and acceptance and the lowest level of offense, provocation and controversy. No case has ever gone so far. We find no basis in law or public policy for doing so here." (202 C.A.3d 1005.)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
C. Due Care in Specific Situations.
12. Radio, Television, or Motion Picture Production.
d. Unauthorized Viewing of Movie.

[§ 917] Unauthorized Viewing of Movie.

In Delgado v. American Multi-Cinema (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1403, 85 C.R.2d 838, A, a 13-year-old, and two other minors viewed an R-rated film at defendant's theatre. Defendant had adopted the Motion Picture Association's voluntary system prohibiting those under 17 from seeing an R-rated film unless accompanied by an adult, but had failed to check the age of A and his friends. During the movie, which was particularly violent, A became very agitated and stated that he was going to have to shoot someone. Immediately after the movie ended, A walked to a street corner near the theatre and shot and killed plaintiffs' son. Plaintiffs sued defendant for negligence in admitting A to the movie unaccompanied by an adult. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs argued that, in adopting the movie industry rating system, defendant had assumed a duty of care to the public at large. This argument is without merit. The purpose of the rating system is to advise parents in advance so that they may determine whether a particular film is appropriate for children, and the duty is not owed to the public at large, but to the parents of children planning to attend a specific film. Thus, defendant breached no duty to plaintiffs by allowing A to view a movie that he should not have seen without an adult. (72 C.A.4th 1406.)

(b) Plaintiff's reliance on Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914, is misplaced. In that case, it was foreseeable that defendant radio station's promotional stunt was one designed to encourage speeding. Here, on the other hand, plaintiffs did not allege that defendant encouraged A to commit violence, but merely that it failed to prevent him from watching an R-rated movie, that his parents (or any other adult) could have permitted had they been with him. Plaintiffs also argued that there was a "functional connection" between defendant's property and their son's death. This position too is unavailing, because the physical condition of defendant's theatre was not at issue and because defendant had no control over the deadly street corner more than a block away. (72 C.A.4th 1407.)

(c) Plaintiffs maintained that even if defendant was not liable for negligence, it was liable under the premises liability doctrine, which imposes liability for third-party criminal conduct where the defendant failed to exercise care over property that he or she owned or controlled. However, the cases supporting this doctrine, e.g., Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, supra, §39, are inapposite, because defendant here did not own or control the street corner where plaintiffs' son was killed. (72 C.A.4th 1408.) (See 22 J. Juvenile Law

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
1. Dangerous Activities or Devices.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 918

[§ 918] In General.

Whether expressed in terms of the "degree" or "amount" of care (see supra, 869), the law requires more care in dealing with dangerous devices or appliances and in other dangerous activities than in ordinary nondangerous activities. In other words, the care must be commensurate with and proportionate to the danger. (See Fairbairn v. American River Elec. Co. (1915) 170 C. 115, 118, 148 P. 788 [electricity; "Where death may be caused by an agency lawfully in use, ordinary care requires that every means known, or that with reasonable inquiry would be known, must be used to prevent it"]; Polk v. Los Angeles (1945) 26 C.2d 519, 525, 159 P.2d 931 [power line wires passing through branches of trees]; Holmes v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1947) 78 C.A.2d 43, 55, 177 P.2d 32 [destruction of house and personal property by negligent maintenance of electric wires; instructions on duty of "great" care and "highest degree of care practicable," though criticized, were upheld as having been approved in prior cases]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §295 et seq.)

A strong statement of the doctrine was made in Been v. The Lummus Co. (1946) 76 C.A.2d 288, 293, 173 P.2d 34, where defendant's negligence consisted of allowing a wire cable to project across a roadway where plaintiff drove his truck, the wire being slightly above his range of vision: "When human life is at stake the rule of due care and diligence requires that without regard to difficulties or expense every precaution be taken reasonably to assure the safety and security of any person lawfully coming into the immediate proximity of the dangerous agency or device which is a peril to others." Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 310, 317, 282 P.2d 12, contains similar language: "The risk incident to dealing with fire, firearms, explosive or highly inflammable matters, corrosive or otherwise dangerous or noxious fluids requires a great deal of care to be exercised. In other words, the standard of care required of the reasonable person when dealing with such dangerous articles is so great that a slight deviation therefrom will constitute negligence." (Cf. questionable decision in Bartholomai v. Owl Drug Co. (1940) 42 C.A.2d 38, 42, 108 P.2d 36 [welding done with flying sparks, in close proximity to paper-covered ceiling and paper pennants, was not sufficient evidence of negligence].)

Activities and devices within this class include electricity (see infra, §919), firearms (see infra, §920), explosives (see infra, §921), and gas and other inflammable materials (see infra, §922).

See Weaver v. Chavez (2005) 133 C.A.4th 1350, 1354, 35 C.R.3d 514 [federal regulation requiring operators of commercial motor vehicles to use "extreme caution" when driving in inclement weather imposed higher duty of care than California's basic speed law; thus, failure to instruct jury on federal standard was prejudicial error].

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

1. Dangerous Activities or Devices.

b. Electricity.

[§ 919] Electricity.

A great amount of care, e.g., in insulation and continual inspection, is required of those placing electric wires along a highway or otherwise maintaining them where there is danger of injury to persons or property. (See Fairbairn v. American River Elec. Co. (1915) 170 C. 115, 119, 148 P. 788; Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1954) 43 C.2d 265, 273, 272 P.2d 745 [defendant was notified that level of ground had been raised but failed for 27 hours to take steps to raise high-tension wires]; Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 225, 231, 282 P.2d 69; Beresford v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 738, 745, 290 P.2d 498; Holmes v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1947) 78 C.A.2d 43, 55, 177 P.2d 32; Couch v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1947) 80 C.A.2d 857, 864, 183 P.2d 91 [defendant was negligent in leaving uninsulated live wires hanging in house, after removing heater].)

However, in some instances, a public utility has been held to have exhibited the requisite increased amount of care. (See Pascoe v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1951) 102 C.A.2d 254, 257, 227 P.2d 555 [no negligence in maintaining uninsulated high tension wires across highway at sufficient height as not to endanger normal use for travel or other proper purposes]; Krongos v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 387, 397, 9 C.R.2d 124, infra, §1127 [public utility was not liable for construction worker's death by electrocution, where power line met applicable standards; citing Pascoe]; White v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1994) 25 C.A.4th 442, 448, 451, 30 C.R.2d 431 [public utility had no duty to driver injured in automobile accident to maintain streetlight in operable condition; citing Krongos and Pascoe].)

Commentary and practice works are numerous. (See 27A Am.Jur.2d (1996 ed.), Energy and Power Sources §215 et seq.; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 451 [defective wiring as cause of fire]; 11 *Loyola L.A. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

1. Dangerous Activities or Devices.

c. Firearms and Ammunition.

[§ 920] Firearms and Ammunition.

One who handles or discharges firearms is bound to use extraordinary care or extreme caution to avoid injury to others. (Rudd v. Byrnes (1909) 156 C. 636, 640, 105 P. 957; Jensen v. Minard (1955) 44 C.2d 325, 328, 282 P.2d 7 [boy shot at bird in place where children just passed, and ricochet was slight possibility]; see 13 Proof of Facts 3d 315 [negligent shooting by hunter]; 15 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [injury to bystander resulting from use of firearm against fleeing criminal]; 26 A.L.R.3d 561 [hunter's liability for unintentionally shooting third person]; 47 A.L.R.3d 620 [standard for minor handling firearm]; 49 A.L.R.3d 762 [shooting contest or target practice]; 88 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability of firearm or ammunition manufacturer or seller for injuries from use of gun in commission of crime]; cf. Tucker v. Lombardo (1956) 47 C.2d 457, 462, 303 P.2d 1041 [person using firearms must exercise degree of care commensurate with and in proportion to danger involved]; Miller v. Kennedy (1987) 196 C.A.3d 141, 145, 241 C.R. 472 [police officer is not held to higher standard of care in handling firearms; following Tucker v. Lombardo].)

The same rule applies to the manufacture of ammunition. In Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 310, 282 P.2d 12, plaintiff, watching in a shooting gallery, was struck in the eye by a particle from a bullet that ricocheted from the metal backstop. Defendant O, manufacturer of the "Kant-Splash" bullets, designed to disintegrate into dust when striking the target or backstop, was held liable for negligence in manufacture and inspection. The evidence showed that test shooting had been done under ideal conditions (unpitted backstop and 90-degree angle), that no tests were made under actual shooting gallery conditions, and that even defendant's tests showed no complete disintegration but particles ricocheting the length of an ordinary gallery. (44 C.2d 317.) (On strict products liability, see Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 101 C.R. 314, infra, §1500.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

1. Dangerous Activities or Devices.

e. Gas and Other Flammable Materials.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 922

[§ 922] Gas and Other Flammable Materials.

Volatile gases that are highly inflammable or may explode must be handled with the utmost care. (See Signorelli v. Potter (1954) 43 C.2d 541, 543, 275 P.2d 449 [butane]; Borenkraut v. Whitten (1961) 56 C.2d 538, 545, 15 C.R. 635, 364 P.2d 467 [gasoline poured into carburetor to prime it, and engine started]; Salas v. Whittington (1946) 77 C.A.2d 90, 94, 174 P.2d 886 [can of shellac and alcohol, highly combustible, left accessible to children]; Johnson v. Nicholson (1958) 159 C.A.2d 395, 406, 324 P.2d 307 [gasoline furnished to clean concrete floor in vicinity of tile layer with blowtorch]; Reynolds v. Natural Gas Equipment (1960) 184 C.A.2d 724, 736, 7 C.R. 879, citing the text [explosion of gas burner used to dry sand and gravel for road paving mix]; 14 Am.Jur. Trials 343 [Liquefied Petroleum Gas Fires and Explosions]; 23 Proof of Facts 447 [gas explosions]; 96 A.L.R.2d 1007 [gas escaping from main]; 30 A.L.R.3d 685 [pipelines]; 41 A.L.R.3d 782 [bottled gas]; 70 A.L.R.3d 1060 [duty to odorize natural gas]; BAJI, Nos. 3.12, 3.41; CACI, No. 414.)

A gas company does not install pipes within the owner's premises, has no control over them or duty to repair, and consequently is not liable in the ordinary case for injuries caused by a leak in the interior pipes. But, because of its superior knowledge of dangers to be guarded against, it may become liable in two situations: (1) When gas is first turned on, it must exercise care to determine the conditions, and is liable if it fails to inspect for uncapped or otherwise defective pipes. (2) If, after service has commenced, it becomes aware of defects, such as rust or corrosion, that might result in the escape of gas, it must either cause repairs to be made by the person responsible for them or must shut off the gas. "Thus ownership of the pipes or appliances is not an indispensable requisite to liability of a gas company." (Ambriz v. Petrolane Ltd. (1957) 49 C.2d 470, 478, 319 P.2d 1; see Mendoza v. Easton Gas Co. (1988) 197 C.A.3d 781, 785, 243 C.R. 136 [gas company has duty to inspect before first releasing gas; following Ambriz]; Salazar v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1370, 1375, 63 C.R.2d 522 [no duty to warn of danger of using flammable liquids near unelevated water heater or to disconnect service to heater; gas company's duty is limited to ensuring that gas lines and connections are safe; citing and distinguishing Ambriz]; 13 A.L.R.2d 1396 [duty of gas company after discontinuing service]; 26 A.L.R.2d 136 [defects in service lines; gas company's liability]; 71 A.L.R.3d 1174 [liability of gas company for failure to inspect or supervise work of contractors digging near gas pipes].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

2. Carriers.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 923

[§ 923] In General.

Except where a passenger is carried gratuitously (see C.C. 2096), a common carrier of passengers is held to a high degree of care to its passengers. (C.C. 2100 ["utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage"]; see Kline v. Santa Barbara Consol. Ry. Co. (1907) 150 C. 741, 745, 90 P. 125; Smith v. O'Donnell (1932) 215 C. 714, 717, 12 P.2d 933; Lopez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 40 C.3d 780, 785, 221 C.R. 840, 710 P.2d 907, infra, 930 [C.C. 2100 implies duty on carrier "to do all that human care, vigilance, and foresight reasonably can do under the circumstances"]; Moeller v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1938) 27 C.A.2d 562, 566, 81 P.2d 475; Terrell v. Key System (1945) 69 C.A.2d 682, 684, 159 P.2d 704 [duty to protect against assault by fellow passenger]; Finley v. San Francisco (1952) 115 C.A.2d 116, 120, 251 P.2d 687; Berger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 144 C.A.2d 1, 6, 300 P.2d 170 [duty to protect against assault by employee]; Cooper v. National R. Passenger Corp. (1975) 45 C.A.3d 389, 395, 119 C.R. 541 [high degree of care of high-speed passenger train, and duty to furnish safe toilet facility]; Nash v. Fifth Amendment (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1106, 1111, 279 C.R. 465 infra, §926; San Francisco v. Superior Court (1994) 31 C.A.4th 45, 48, 36 C.R.2d 372, infra, §931; McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1011, 1016, 67 C.R.2d 516 [no duty to assist inebriated passenger ordered off train; carrier-passenger relationship terminated once passenger exited train and was on platform]; Vinnick v. Delta Airlines (2001) 93 C.A.4th 859, 863, 113 C.R.2d 471 [plaintiff was struck by another passenger's carry-on bag; because claim did not relate to rates, routes, or services, federal Airline Deregulation Act did not preempt common carrier's duty of care]; Ingham v. Luxor Cab Co. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1045, 1050, 113 C.R.2d 587 [taxi has duty to deliver passenger to address given to driver, and ejection at another place may be actionable even if it occurs at relatively safe place; distinguishing McGettigan]; cf. DeRoche v. Commodore Cruise Line, Ltd. (1994) 31 C.A.4th 802, 807, 46 C.R.2d 468 [duty of care of owner of cruise ship is matter of federal maritime law; that duty is "to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances," and owner ordinarily has no duty to insure health or safety of passengers].)

In Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court (1970) 3 C.A.3d 356, 83 C.R. 343, plaintiffs, passengers injured in a Greyhound bus collision, alleged negligence of Greyhound in failing to equip the bus with safety belts. Greyhound contended that a safety belt requirement could only be made by general legislation or administrative regulation. Held, the issue was one of fact for the jury.

(a) It is a matter of common knowledge that safety belts are effective in reducing fatalities and minimizing injuries in motor vehicle collisions. (3 C.A.3d 358.)

(b) Carriers must keep pace with modern improvements; and, although there is no precedent for the requirements, "[t]he toll of highway injury and death is such that judicial policy should be against deferment to legislative inaction and in favor of having juries pass upon the question until such time as the Legislature may choose to adopt supervising safety regulations." (3 C.A.3d 360.) (See McNeil v. Yellow Cab Co. (1978) 85 C.A.3d 116, 118, 147 C.R. 733 [following Greyhound; whether failure to provide visible seatbelts in taxicab was negligence presented fact question of proximate cause for jury]; 49 A.L.R.3d 295 [liability of operator of vehicle or aircraft for failure to furnish or require use of seat belt].)

Where a dangerous condition is involved, the high degree of care required may impose a greater duty to inspect, but knowledge or notice must be shown. "To hold otherwise would be, in effect, to make the carrier an insurer of the safety of the passenger, contrary to the settled principles defining the degree of its legal responsibility and holding the carrier not to be an insurer." (Gray v. San Francisco (1962) 202 C.A.2d 319, 330, 20 C.R. 894 [plaintiff, boarding defendant's streetcar, slipped on metal strip of platform, which had some moisture on it].)

In Rubin v. United Air Lines (2002) 96 C.A.4th 364, 377, 117 C.R.2d 109, a passenger who, due to a mix-up, lost her first-class seat, entered the first-class area without authorization, refused to follow safety instructions, and caused other passengers to become upset and unruly. Held, the airline had power under the Federal Aviation Act to make her deplane.

Commentary and practice works on the liability of common carriers are numerous. (See 65 Am.Jur.2d, Railroads (2001 ed.) §364 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Guide 3d, Chap. 5; Cal. [§ 924] What Constitutes Carrier.

In addition to the typical railroad, streetcar, bus, and taxi companies, carriers within the rule include the following:

(1) A sleeping car company. (Berger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 144 C.A.2d 1, 6, 300 P.2d 170 [not technically a common carrier but subject to same obligations].)

(2) A passenger elevator. (Champagne v. A. Hamburger & Sons (1915) 169 C. 683, 690, 147 P. 954; Parker v. Manchester Hotel Co. (1938) 29 C.A.2d 446, 454, 85 P.2d 152; see 26 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Elevators and Escalators §12; 7 Am.Jur. (3) An escalator. (Hendershott v. Macy's (1958) 158 C.A.2d 324, 327, 322 P.2d 596; see 26 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Elevators and Escalators §12; 1 A.L.R.4th 144 [liability for escalator injury]; BAJI, No. 6.50; CACI, Nos. 900, 901.)

(5) Ski resort chair lift. (Squaw Valley Ski Corp. v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1499, 1508, 3 C.R.2d 897.)

[§ 925] Private Carrier for Hire.

In Webster v. Ebright (1992) 3 C.A.4th 784, 4 C.R.2d 714, the issue was which standard of care is applicable to private carriers for hire (in this case a stable that rented horses for recreational riding). Held, the standard was ordinary care.

(a) C.C. 2100 imposes the more stringent duty of utmost care on a "carrier of persons for reward." The phrase is sufficiently broad to include both common carriers for reward, i.e., those bound to accept anyone who tenders the price of carriage, and private carriers for reward, i.e., those bound only to accept carriage pursuant to specific agreement. However, the statute is merely a codification of the common law. (3 C.A.4th 788, citing Kline v. Santa Barbara Consol. Ry. Co. (1907) 150 C. 741, 90 P. 125.) The common law imposes the more stringent standard on common carriers alone. Private carriers need exercise only ordinary care. (3 C.A.4th 789, citing Gornstein v. Priver (1923) 64 C.A. 249, 221 P. 396, infra, §1305, Shannon v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist. (1933) 133 C.A. 124, 23 P.2d 769, infra, §999, and Carpena v. Los Angeles (1960) 183 C.A.2d 541, 7 C.R. 889.)

(b) The statement in Lopez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 40 C.3d 780, 785, 221 C.R. 840, 710 P.2d 907, infra, §930, that C.C. 2100 applies to public as well as private carriers meant "private carriers" in the sense of nongovernmental common carriers, and the phrase was used within the context of the court's rejection of the defendant's position that common carrier duties should not be applied to a governmental common carrier. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 926

In Nash v. Fifth Amendment (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1106, 279 C.R. 465, the court set forth the unusual facts and the issue raised as follows: "A bar charts an excursion ship for the purpose of having a Halloween party. The ship is owned and operated by a common carrier. During the party a passenger is killed by a bullet fired from a handgun that struck the deck after falling from beneath the costume of another passenger who is a peace officer authorized to carry a concealed weapon while not on duty. The question presented is whether a duty of care was owed by the bar to the passenger. Our answer is no." (228 C.A.3d 1109.)

(a) Plaintiff alleged that defendant bar failed to properly screen the persons who came aboard the ship. But the measures specified would naturally occur immediately before the ship was boarded; and even before its passengers were actually on board its ship, the carrier owed them a duty of care. (228 C.A.3d 1112.)

(b) The duty plaintiff would impose on defendant was substantially identical to that already required of common carriers. "There is little if any convenience in duplicating legal duties; the overlap could only confuse a system whose notable simplicity is founded upon easily comprehended common sense concepts of possession and control. That system already reflects a 'social judgment as to where the loss should fall'--on the carrier. Nor is this a situation where an injured party is denied all recovery; the carrier settled for $ 150,000 and plaintiff obtained a large judgment against Clark" (the peace officer). (228 C.A.3d 1113.)

(c) "Accidents happen. Clark's handling of his weapon displayed an almost unbelievable stupidity. Defendant simply had the misfortune to charter the ship on which this freakish tragedy occurred. The current state of the law represents an established and sensible allocation of responsibility based upon the realities of social and commercial intercourse. ... We will not upset it." (228 C.A.3d 1115.)

e. When Plaintiff Is Passenger.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 927

[§ 927] In General.

It has been held that a passenger retains this status not only while on a car, but while alighting, and until he or she has safely left it. (Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. (1920) 182 C. 93, 98, 187 P. 2; McBride v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 113, 116, 279 P.2d 966 [duty of porter to keep steps of car clean and to assist crippled or other incapacitated person to alight]; Brandelius v. San Francisco (1957) 47 C.2d 729, 735, 306 P.2d 432 [place of alighting had too narrow a clearance between cars]; Parker v. San Francisco (1958) 158 C.A.2d 597, 602, 323 P.2d 108 [bus discharged passengers into area of danger from other cars]; see 38 Proof of Facts 2d 677 [carrier's negligence in boarding or alighting]; 13 Proof of Facts 3d 475 [liability of school or school bus driver for injury to child going to or from school bus]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 219 [prospective bus passenger]; 9 A.L.R.2d 938 [liability of motorbus to passenger injured when alighting from vehicle]; 58 A.L.R.2d 932 [liability of motor carrier for injury or death of passenger inflicted by vehicle from which he or she has alighted]; 61 A.L.R.2d 1113 [liability of air carrier to passenger injured while boarding or alighting]; 75 A.L.R.2d 988 [passenger injured while boarding taxi]; 98 A.L.R.3d 822 [passenger injured while alighting from taxi]; 7 A.L.R.4th 1031 [passenger alighting at place other than regular bus stop]; 28 A.L.R.4th 748 [injury from fall into space between loading platform and entrance]; 16 A.L.R.5th 1 [alighting bus passenger struck by another vehicle]; BAJI, Nos. 6.51, 6.53, 6.54.5, 6.55; CACI, No. 902 et seq.; cf. Dayton v. Yellow Cab Co. of San Francisco (1948) 85 C.A.2d 740, 743, 193 P.2d 959 [no error in instruction on "highest degree of care" where plaintiff, at end of taxi ride, got out, quarreled with driver, and was injured in fight]; Orr v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1989) 208 C.A.3d 1467, 1473, 257 C.R. 18 [only ordinary care is required in scanning hand luggage at airport check point]; DeRoche v. Commodore Cruise Line, Ltd. (1994) 31 C.A.4th 802, 807, 46 C.R.2d 468 [no liability of cruise line predicated on substandard medical care available to passenger treated in port for injuries sustained there; applying federal maritime law requiring only "reasonable care under the circumstances"].)

However, it may not be negligence for a bus driver to stop away from an obstructed curb, and there is no duty as to the condition of the street that the passenger must traverse after safely alighting. (MacLean v. San Francisco (1954) 127 C.A.2d 263, 271, 273 P.2d 698.)

A narrow distinction has been made between two situations: (1) the plaintiff is on the platform or other premises of the carrier, waiting to board the car (ordinary care only): see Falls v. San Francisco & North Pac. R. Co. (1893) 97 C.

114, 119, 31 P. 901; Sellars v. Southern Pac. Co. (1917) 33 C.A. 701, 704, 166 P. 599); (2) the plaintiff, having purchased a ticket, is being conducted by the carrier's agent to the point of departure (passenger, full degree of care): see Sanchez v. Pacific Auto Stages (1931) 116 C.A. 392, 396, 2 P.2d 845.

It has also been held that the relationship of carrier and passenger may arise without boarding or purchasing a ticket, where a person goes to a designated place of departure, and the carrier indicates acceptance as a passenger. (Lagomarsino v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1945) 69 C.A.2d 388, 395, 158 P.2d 982 [plaintiff, while standing between tracks waiting to board standing streetcar, was struck by another passing car].)

2. Airline Passenger Changing Planes.

[§ 928] Airline Passenger Changing Planes.

In Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 C.A.3d 84, 110 C.R. 416, plaintiff had an airline ticket covering a flight from New York to Berkeley; defendant United provided the flight as far as the San Francisco Airport and defendant SFO provided a helicopter flight to Berkeley. Plaintiff arrived at the San Francisco Airport, and, while walking through the building on her way to the SFO facility, fell on a defective step. In her damage action against United for personal injuries, the court stated the major question as follows: "Does a common carrier airline company have a statutory or common law duty to a passenger to exercise care in the maintenance of an airport building area, over which it has no ownership or right of control, but which must be traversed by the passenger when changing planes to an independent connecting airline, passage on which has been arranged for by, and the fare for which has been paid to, the first airline as agent for the second." Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) The carrier's high duty of care to a passenger ends when he or she is discharged into a safe place, and this was the case here. Plaintiff had left the landing area with its hazards. (35 C.A.3d 87.)

(b) United was not the owner or lessee of the stairway where the accident occurred, and had no right of control over it; hence, it owed no duty of care as to its maintenance. (35 C.A.3d 88.)

(c) There was no duty to warn plaintiff. If the defect in the step was hidden, there could be no inference of United's knowledge of it; if it was obvious it was equally observable by plaintiff and there is no duty to warn in that case. (35 C.A.3d 90.)

(d) There was no implied contract to furnish plaintiff nonnegligent passage from New York to Berkeley; i.e., United did not hold itself out as a common carrier to a place beyond the limits of its own operation. (35 C.A.3d 90, 91.) (See 14 A.L.R.5th 662 [liability of air carrier for injury from condition of airport premises].)

[§ 929] Carrier's Duty Owed to Stranger.

A carrier may be negligent toward persons other than passengers. In Brandenburg v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 282, 169 P.2d 909, plaintiff, his wife, and children stepped off defendant's streetcar into a safety zone. Without warning, the motorman then turned the corner, the rear of the car overlapping the safety zone by two feet and striking plaintiff. Held, defendant was liable. Although the city and not defendant was responsible for the improper location of the safety zone, and although no general duty exists to warn adults of the swing of a turning streetcar, the danger of the improper safety zone under the circumstances was a foreseeable risk; hence, there was a duty on the part of the motorman to warn any person (not just a passenger), and there was a similar duty on the part of defendant company to instruct the motorman to give the warning. (28 C.2d 286.) Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

2. Carriers.

g. Carrier's Duty To Prevent Assault.

1. Occurrence or Allegation of Prior Assault.

[§ 930] Occurrence or Allegation of Prior Assault.

In Lopez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 40 C.3d 780, 221 C.R. 840, 710 P.2d 907, defendant RTD was a public corporation operating buses as a common carrier. Plaintiffs, on board a bus as fare-paying passengers, were injured when a group of juveniles engaged in a fight. The complaint alleged that defendant negligently operated the bus by failing to take measures to protect passengers from assaults by fellow passengers, despite knowledge of many of these assaults. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) C.C. 2100, imposing a duty of care on carriers (supra, §923), applies to public as well as private carriers. (40 C.3d 785.) Although Govt.C. 815 makes public entity liability wholly statutory (see supra, §223), the statutes imposing liability need not be in the Government Code, and C.C. 2100 comes within the "otherwise provided by statute" language of Govt.C. 815. (40 C.3d 785, footnote 2.)

(b) The duty imposed by C.C. 2100 includes a duty to protect passengers from assaults by other passengers. This is the California rule under Terrell v. Key System (1945) 69 C.A.2d 682, 159 P.2d 704, and the overwhelming weight of authority. (40 C.3d 786, citing Rest.2d, Torts §§314A, 315, Comment c.) The dictum in Taeleifi v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1982) 130 C.A.3d 366, 369, 181 C.R. 697, that a driver's only duty is to "drive the bus and collect fares," is disapproved. (40 C.3d 787, footnote 4.)

(c) The objections urged by defendant to imposition of this liability on public carriers are not persuasive.

(1) The asserted financial burden of providing an armed security guard on every bus assumes that this is the only way to perform the duty, but there are other steps that might be sufficient, i.e., warning unruly passengers to quiet down or get off the bus; alerting the police and summoning their assistance; ejecting unruly passengers; providing radio communication between the bus driver and local police or bus headquarters to enable the driver to call for assistance; equipping buses with alarm lights to alert nearby police of ongoing criminal activity; and training bus drivers to recognize and deal with potentially dangerous situations. (40 C.3d 787.)

(2) The contention that a public carrier has no duty to protect passengers from third-party assaults is based on a mistaken interpretation of Williams v. California (1983) 34 C.3d 18, 192 C.R. 233, 664 P.2d 137, supra, §291, a case dealing with a police officer. "Implicit in our discussion in Williams is the recognition that some relationships by their very nature are 'special' ones giving rise to an 'initial duty' to come to the aid of others, regardless of whether there has been detrimental reliance in a particular case. The relationship between a common carrier and its passengers is just such a special relationship." In fact, the special relationship between passenger and carrier is especially strong. (40 C.3d 789.)

(3) The opinion in Hernandez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 1063, 191 C.R. 436, is unclear; but to the extent that it holds that there is no special relationship between a public carrier and its passengers, it is disapproved. (40 C.3d 790.)

(4) "In summary, we hold that Civil Code section 2100 imposes upon all common carriers--public or private--a duty of utmost care and diligence to protect their passengers from assaults by fellow passengers." However, carriers are not insurers of their passengers' safety and are thus liable for an assault by one passenger upon another only where, in the exercise of the required degree of care, the carrier has or should have knowledge from which it may reasonably be apprehended that an assault on a passenger may occur, and has the ability in the exercise of that degree of care to prevent the injury. (40 C.3d 791.)

(d) Defendant has no statutory immunity. Govt.C. 845, stating the immunity for failure to provide police protection (supra, §§290, 291, 302, 304), is inapplicable. The complaint did not plead negligence in failure to furnish police or armed guards, but merely alleged that the bus driver did nothing to protect plaintiffs. (40 C.3d 792.) Govt.C. 820.2, stating the immunity for discretionary acts (supra, §351 et seq.), is likewise inapplicable, because a bus driver must act to protect passengers, and the alternative measures available do not make the choice a policy decision. (40 C.3d 794.)

(e) Because liability under the Tort Claims Act is statutory, the facts material to the existence of liability must be pleaded with particularity. (40 C.3d 795.) However, the complaint was sufficient: "Plaintiffs allege the RTD is a common carrier, that plaintiffs were passengers on board one of RTD's buses, that RTD knew assaults regularly occurred on this bus route, and that the bus driver had been specifically notified that a violent argument had erupted among the passengers. These facts, if true, give rise to a duty of care on behalf of RTD to protect plaintiffs from assaults by fellow passengers." (40 C.3d 795.)

g. Carrier's Duty To Prevent Assault.
2. No Occurrence or Allegation of Prior Assault.

[§ 931] No Occurrence or Allegation of Prior Assault.

In San Francisco v. Superior Court (1994) 31 C.A.4th 45, 36 C.R.2d 372, a woman who was suddenly stabbed by another passenger without warning while riding on a city-operated bus brought a personal injury action against the city, alleging negligence in failing to prevent the stabbing. The trial judge denied the city's motion for summary judgment. Held, mandamus issued commanding the trial judge to grant the motion.

(a) Any liability of the city for failing to prevent the assault would stem from its duty of care as a common carrier to protect the safety of its passengers. Under C.C. 2100, a common carrier must use the utmost care and diligence for the safe carriage of its passengers, must provide everything necessary for that purpose, and must exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill. Lopez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 40 C.3d 780, 221 C.R. 840, 710 P.2d 907, supra, §930, construes this duty to require a common carrier to do all that human care, vigilance, and foresight reasonably can do under the circumstances. The duty includes protecting passengers from assaults by others, including fellow passengers. (31 C.A.4th 48.)

(b) Common carriers are not, however, insurers of their passengers' safety. Instead, the degree of care and diligence that they must exercise is only such as can reasonably be exercised consistent with the character and mode of conveyance adopted and the practical operation of the business of the carrier. Perhaps for this reason, the duty to protect passengers from assault lies only when the common carrier knows or should know that an assault is about to occur. (31 C.A.4th 48.)

(c) No California case has held a common carrier liable for a sudden assault that occurs without warning. There was no triable issue of fact whether the driver had or should have had warning of the attack, because the evidence showed that the attack came without warning. (31 C.A.4th 49.)

[§ 932] Carrier's Duty To Collect Evidence.

In De Vera v. Long Beach Public Trans. Co. (1986) 180 C.A.3d 782, 225 C.R. 789, plaintiff sustained injuries when defendant's bus was rear-ended by a third party's vehicle. The complaint alleged that defendant negligently lost or failed to obtain the identity of the vehicle and its driver, and that as a result, plaintiff was deprived of his opportunity to pursue a claim against the driver and other related parties. Held, judgment on jury verdict for plaintiff affirmed.

(a) "We find no case, and plaintiff cites none, in which a carrier's duty has been held to extend beyond the duty to protect its passengers from physical harm and to see that they are cared for if injured." (180 C.A.3d 793.) This case raises the question whether the carrier is under a duty to assist its passengers in pursuing civil litigation against third parties who cause them harm. (180 C.A.3d 794.)

(b) The relevant considerations of policy are strongly in favor of recognizing this duty. "A carrier can readily foresee the possibility of harm to its passengers by reason of its failure to collect and preserve information concerning a motorist involved in an accident with the carrier's vehicle, in that the passengers could be foreclosed, as was plaintiff, from recovery against such a motorist for any injuries they sustained in the accident. The duty to collect and preserve accident-related information imposes no undue burden upon a carrier, which would presumably, as did defendant, have a procedure in place for the reporting of accidents by its drivers, if only for its own benefit." (180 C.A.3d 795.)

(c) "Conversely, absent such a duty on the part of the carrier, each passenger would be obliged to alight from the carrier's vehicle and seek the requisite information for himself or herself. Such a practice would be unwieldy, unduly time-consuming, and possibly even dangerous. It would also require the cooperation of the carrier's driver in waiting for passengers to collect the information, a process that could seriously interfere with the carrier's schedule." (180 C.A.3d 795.)

(d) "We hold that, following an accident between its vehicle and that of another, a common carrier has a duty to collect and preserve information concerning the other vehicle and its driver for use by the carrier's passengers in future civil litigation." (180 C.A.3d 795.)

[§ 933] Degree of Skill or Care.

A physician, surgeon, or dentist must exercise that degree of skill or care usual in the profession in the place in which he or she practices; i.e., the standard is set by doctors of good standing practicing in that locality. In Osborn v. Irwin Memorial Blood Bank (1992) 5 C.A.4th 234, 7 C.R.2d 101, infra, §1188, plaintiffs, whose son had contracted AIDS from blood supplied by defendant blood bank, argued that defendant was negligent in failing to conduct anti-HBC blood testing even though at that time (1983) no blood bank in the country was doing so. Held, this position was without merit; in effect, plaintiff was arguing that the entire blood banking industry was negligent. While custom and practice are not conclusive on the standard of care in cases of ordinary negligence, "professional prudence is defined by actual or accepted practice within a profession, rather than theories about what 'should' have been done." (5 C.A.4th 282.) (For other blood bank cases, see Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 C.3d 399, 131 C.R. 69, 551 P.2d 389, infra, §972; *Wilson v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 934

[§ 934] Ordinary Versus Professional Negligence.

Only one standard of care applies, and the same breach of duty cannot give rise to distinct causes of action for both ordinary and professional negligence. (Flowers v. Torrance Memorial Hosp. Med. Center (1994) 8 C.4th 992, 1000, 1001, 35 C.R.2d 685, 884 P.2d 142 [patient's fall from emergency room gurney]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1752 [Flowers].)

The distinction between ordinary and professional negligence was discussed in Bellamy v. Appellate Dept. (1996) 50 C.A.4th 797, 57 C.R.2d 894, a patient's municipal court action against a hospital for injuries sustained in falling off an X-ray table. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the 1-year statute of limitations governing personal injury actions. Plaintiff opposed the demurrer, arguing that she was subject to the notice requirement for actions based on a health care provider's "professional negligence," that she served the required notice within 90 days of expiration of the limitations period, that her time for filing suit was thus extended 90 days after service of notice, and that her complaint was timely filed under C.C.P. 364(d) (infra, §953 et seq.). The municipal court found, however, that the action was based on ordinary, rather than professional, negligence and that C.C.P. 364 was inapplicable. It therefore sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action, and the appellate department of the superior court affirmed. Held, reversed. The complaint sufficiently alleged professional negligence, bringing it within C.C.P. 364 so as to extend the limitations period. The statutory definitions of "professional negligence" in C.C.P. 340.5(2) and 364(f)(2) focus on whether negligence occurs in rendering professional services, rather than whether a high or low level of skill is required. Thus, professional negligence is not restricted to a breach of the duty to provide professional skill, procedure, and diligence. Here, defendant was rendering professional services in taking X-rays, and, accordingly, any negligence arising in rendering those services was professional negligence. (50 C.A.4th 805.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

3. Medical Practitioners.

a. In General.

3. Physician-Patient Relationship.

[§ 935] Physician-Patient Relationship.

Liability for malpractice arises where there is a relationship of physician-patient between the plaintiff and the defendant doctor; the relationship gives rise to the duty of care. (Keene v. Wiggins (1977) 69 C.A.3d 308, 312, 313, 138 C.R. 3.) (See 40 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1617 [Expanding the Potential Tort Liability of Physicians: A Legal Portrait of "Nontraditional Patients" and Proposals for Change]; 17 A.L.R.4th 132 [what constitutes physician-patient relationship for malpractice purposes].)

In Keene, plaintiff was injured in an industrial accident. His employer's workers' compensation carrier sent him to defendant doctor to be examined for the purpose of rating the injury. Defendant examined him and reported to the carrier that no further treatment was necessary. Plaintiff alleged that he received a copy of the report and relied on it to his detriment. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The authorities uniformly hold that there is no physician-patient relationship where the doctor acts as an agent of the insurance carrier to examine the injured person and report to the carrier. (69 C.A.3d 313.)

(b) Although the modern approach in California stresses foreseeability of harm and other factors, the same conclusion must be reached here, for the physician could not reasonably expect the claimant to rely on his opinion. "[T]here are claimant's doctors and insurance company doctors and the claimant cannot assume the insurance company's physician will be as generous as his own physician when assessing the injury to be rated." (69 C.A.3d 314.) The situation would be different if the carrier's physician treated the claimant or otherwise sought to provide a benefit to him or her; but in the absence of special circumstances it is not foreseeable that a claimant would rely on medical reports of the employer's insurance carrier. (69 C.A.3d 314.)

(c) This position is supported by Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 C.3d 335, 134 C.R. 375, 556 P.2d 737, infra, §1180, rejecting a claim of legal malpractice. (69 C.A.3d 315.)

In Felton v. Schaeffer (1991) 229 C.A.3d 229, 279 C.R. 713, an employer sent plaintiff job applicant to defendant medical center for a preemployment physical. Because of an allegedly erroneous opinion by defendant doctor that plaintiff was not taking his antihypertension medication regularly, plaintiff did not get the job, and he sued defendants for negligence and medical malpractice. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; there was no physician-patient relationship between the parties.

(a) Keene is controlling. "In Keene, as here, the physician was hired by the employer rather than the examinee, and his role was to provide a report for the benefit of the employer rather than the examinee. In Keene, as here, the examinee neither received medical treatment or advice nor relied upon the report for medical treatment or advice. Most importantly, in both Keene and this case the physician's sole function was to provide information to aid the employer's decisionmaking process, not to serve either as an advocate for the employee or an impartial arbiter of a dispute. Under these circumstances we cannot perceive any reason to depart from Keene." (229 C.A.3d 236.)

(b) Plaintiff relied on Coffee v. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 551, 105 C.R. 358, 503 P.2d 1366, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §127, and a federal decision, holding that when an employer voluntarily undertakes to protect an employee from physical harm, such as by ascertaining his physical fitness for a job, negligent failure to detect a disability that causes the employee physical harm is actionable negligence. However, plaintiff did not claim that defendants undertook but negligently failed to discover extant physical problems; he argued that they were negligent for failing to discover that he was not physically impaired. More importantly, plaintiff made no claim that he was physically damaged by reliance on the misdiagnosis. (229 C.A.3d 238.)

(c) Plaintiff would have suffered no harm except for defendants' publishing to the employer an injurious falsehood concerning his physical disability. Allowing a negligence claim under these facts would substantially undermine libel law, allowing plaintiffs to avoid the defenses applicable to libel claims merely by pleading that the defendant was negligent in believing the defamatory information to be true. (229 C.A.3d 239, citing Flynn v. Higham (1983) 149 C.A.3d 677, 197 C.R. 145, Grimes v. Carter (1966) 241 C.A.2d 694, 50 C.R. 808, supra, §655, and Lerette v. Dean Witter Organization (1976) 60 C.A.3d 573, 131 C.R. 592, supra, §577.) (Cf. Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1466, 1478, 37 C.R.2d 769 [employee, who was injured during examination, had cause of action for malpractice against doctor who checked him, although doctor was requested and paid for by employer; doctor had duty not to injure patient during examination; distinguishing Keene and Felton].)

3. Medical Practitioners.

4. Health Care Provider.

[§ 936] Health Care Provider.

(1) Scope of Liability. C.C. 1714.8(a) clarifies the liability of health care providers: "No health care provider shall be liable for professional negligence or malpractice for any occurrence or result solely on the basis that the occurrence or result was caused by the natural course of a disease or condition, or was the natural or expected result of reasonable treatment rendered for the disease or condition. This section shall not be construed so as to limit liability for the failure to inform of the risks of treatment or failure to accept treatment, or for negligent diagnosis or treatment or the negligent failure to diagnose or treat." (See 10 Pacific L. J. 598.)

A plaintiff may claim punitive damages against a health care provider only if the court, on determining that there is a substantial probability that the plaintiff will prevail, issues an order allowing an amended pleading that includes the claim. (C.C.P. 425.13; see infra, §1600 et seq.)

(2) Who Are Health Care Providers. A "health care provider" is defined broadly in C.C. 1714.8(b) to include the following licensed or certified professionals:

- (1) Chiropractors. (B. & P.C. 1000 et seq.)
- (2) Clinical laboratory technologists. (B. & P.C. 1200 et seq.)
- (3) Dentists. (B. & P.C. 1600 et seq.)
- (4) Physicians and surgeons. (B. & P.C. 2000 et seq.)
- (5) Research psychoanalysts. (B. & P.C. 2529 et seq.)
- (6) Speech pathologists and audiologists. (B. & P.C. 2530 et seq.)
- (7) Opticians. (B. & P.C. 2550 et seq.)

- (8) Dietitians. (B. & P.C. 2585, 2586)
- (9) Physical therapists. (B. & P.C. 2600 et seq.)
- (10) Nurses. (B. & P.C. 2700 et seq.)
- (11) Vocational nurses. (B. & P.C. 2840 et seq.)
- (12) Psychologists. (B. & P.C. 2900 et seq.)
- (13) Optometrists. (B. & P.C. 3000 et seq.)
- (14) Hearing aid dispensers. (B. & P.C. 3300 et seq.)
- (15) Physicians' assistants. (B. & P.C. 3500 et seq.)

- (17) Respiratory therapists. (B. & P.C. 3700 et seq.)
- (18) Nursing home administrators. (Health & S.C. 1416 et seq.)
- (19) Pharmacists. (B. & P.C. 4000 et seq.)
- (20) Psychiatric technicians. (B. & P.C. 4500 et seq.)
- (21) Veterinarians. (B. & P.C. 4800 et seq.)
- (22) Acupuncturists. (B. & P.C. 4925 et seq.)
- (23) Marriage and family therapists. (B. & P.C. 4980 et seq.)
- (24) Social workers. (B. & P.C. 4990 et seq.)

The term also includes any certified county medical facility personnel (Health & Saf.C. 1440 et seq.) and any licensed clinic, health dispensary, or health facility (Health & Saf.C. 1200 et seq.). (C.C. 1714.8(b).) (See 29 *McGeorge L. D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
a. In General.
5. HMO.

[§ 937] HMO.

(1) Action Against Health Maintenance Organization (HMO). In 1999, the Legislature provided a cause of action for HMO members against plans that negligently deny, delay, or modify medically necessary treatment. (C.C. 3428.) (See 66 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [liability of health maintenance organizations]; 21 California Lawyer 56 (August 2001) [right to sue HMOs].) In 2004, Aetna Health v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S.Ct. 2488, 159 L.Ed.2d 312, held that this and similar state statutes were preempted by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA).

Plaintiffs, a participant and an unrelated beneficiary in employee benefit plans regulated by ERISA, sued their respective HMOs. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants' refusal to cover requested services (to pay for a prescribed drug and to extend a hospital stay) violated a duty imposed by a Texas statute to exercise ordinary care when making health care treatment decisions and that this violation proximately caused their injuries. Plaintiffs sued in state court, but defendants, arguing that the causes of action were preempted by ERISA, removed to federal court. The district court agreed and declined to remand the cases to state court. On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeals reversed.

(a) Congress enacted ERISA to protect the interests of participants in employee benefit plans and their beneficiaries by setting out comprehensive regulatory requirements for these plans and by providing for appropriate remedies, sanctions, and ready access to the federal courts. For example, essential to the purpose of creating comprehensive regulation is an integrated system of procedures for enforcement. ERISA §502(a) (29 U.S.C., §1132(a)), which contains six carefully integrated civil enforcement procedures, clearly indicates that Congress did not intend to authorize other remedies that it forgot to expressly incorporate. Hence, any state-law cause of action that duplicates, supplements, or supplants the ERISA civil enforcement remedy conflicts with the clear congressional intent to make the ERISA remedy exclusive, and is thus preempted. (124 S.Ct 2495, 159 L.Ed.2d 326, citing Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux (1987) 481 U.S. 41, 107 S.Ct. 1549, 95 L.Ed.2d 39, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §14.)

(b) The preemptive force of ERISA is made still stronger by the fact that its language is similar to §301 of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (LMRA; see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §§537, 538). And because LMRA §301 is one of those provisions with "extraordinary preemptive power" that converts state causes of action into federal ones for purposes of determining the propriety of removal (see Avco Corp. v. Aero Lodge No. 735, Int. Assn. of Machinists & Aerospace Workers (1968) 390 U.S. 557, 88 S.Ct. 1235, 20 L.Ed.2d 126), so too does ERISA §502(a). (124 S.Ct. 2497, 159 L.Ed.2d 329.)

(c) ERISA §502(a)(1)(B) provides for a civil action to recover benefits due under the plan, to enforce plan rights, and to clarify the right to future rights. Under this provision, a participant or beneficiary who believes that benefits promised under the terms of the plan are not being provided may bring suit seeking those benefits. It follows that if an individual brings suit complaining of a denial of coverage, the cause of action falls within ERISA §502(a)(1)(B), at least where the individual is entitled to such coverage only because of the terms of the plan and where no legal duty independent of ERISA or the plan terms is violated. Here, by alleging that defendants failed to pay for a drug prescribed by a primary care physician and refused to authorize more than a single day of hospital care despite the advice of the treating physician, it is clear that plaintiffs are complaining only about denial of coverage. (124 S.Ct. 2497, 159 L.Ed.2d 329.)

(d) Upon the denial of rights, plaintiffs could have paid for the treatment themselves and then sought reimbursement through a §502(a)(1)(B) action, or sought a preliminary injunction. However, plaintiffs contended that (1) defendants' actions violated the duty to use ordinary care, a duty that allegedly arose under a state statute independent of ERISA; and (2) an action to enforce this duty was thus not within the scope of ERISA. This contention is without merit. If a managed care entity correctly concludes that a particular treatment is not covered, the entity's denial of coverage is not the proximate cause of any injuries resulting from that denial. Rather, the failure of the plan itself to cover the requested treatment is the proximate cause. Moreover, the relevant state statute clearly provides that the standards contained therein create no obligation on the part of an HMO to provide coverage that is not covered by the health plan. Hence, plaintiffs bring suit only to rectify a wrongful denial of benefits promised under ERISA-regulated plans, and do not attempt to remedy any violation of a legal duty independent of ERISA. (124 S.Ct. 2498, 159 L.Ed.2d 330, following Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S.Ct. 1904, 85 L.Ed.2d 206, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §551, and distinguishing Caterpillar v. Williams (1987) 482 U.S. 386, 107 S.Ct. 2425, 96 L.Ed.2d 318, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §553.)

(e) Besides the independent duty theory, the Court of Appeals based its conclusion on the following reasoning: (1) plaintiffs asserted a tort claim for tort damages rather than a contract claim for contract damages; and (2) Rush Prudential HMO v. Moran (2002) 536 U.S. 355, 122 S.Ct. 2151, 153 L.Ed.2d 375, said that the preemptive force of ERISA §502(a) was limited to situations in which a state cause of action "precisely" duplicated a cause of action under ERISA. Both contentions are without merit: (1) Distinguishing between preempted and nonpreempted claims based on the label affixed to them would elevate form over substance. Moreover, the mere fact that a state cause of action attempts to authorize remedies beyond those authorized by §502(a) does not put the cause of action outside the ERISA civil enforcement mechanism. (124 S.Ct. 2499, 159 L.Ed.2d 331, citing Pilot Life, supra, Ingersoll-Rand Co. v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 111 S.Ct. 478, 112 L.Ed.2d 474, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §14), and Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (1987) 481 U.S. 58, 107 S.Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed.2d 55, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §410.) (2) The part of the Rush decision relied on was meant to explain why a particular state cause of action was preempted (attempted to convert an equitable remedy into a legal remedy), not to require precise duplication between a state cause of action and one under ERISA. (124 S.Ct. 2499, 159 L.Ed.2d 331.)

(f) Plaintiffs argued that the applicable state statute, being one that regulates insurance, is saved from exemption by ERISA §514(b)(2)(A), which provides that ERISA does not exempt person from state statute regulating insurance. However, §514(b)(2)(A) must be interpreted in light of the congressional intent underlying the enactment of §502(a), i.e., to create an exclusive federal remedy. Hence, even if a state statute can arguably be characterized as regulating insurance, it will nevertheless be preempted if it provides a separate vehicle (one outside or in addition to ERISA's remedial scheme) to assert a claim for benefits. (124 S.Ct. 2500, 159 L.Ed.2d 332, citing Pilot life.)

benefit plan and hence are not preempted. However, in Pegram, the plaintiff sued a physician-owned and operated HMO, where the treating physician was also the person charged with administering the plaintiff's benefits. Pegram concluded that the physician eligibility and treatment decisions were inextricably mixed and that the defendant HMO was not acting as a fiduciary. However, a benefit determination under ERISA that is not mixed with treatment decisions, as here, is a fiduciary act, and Pegram is not controlling. The fact that a benefits determination is infused with medical judgments does not alter this result. (124 S.Ct. 2500, 159 L.Ed.2d 333.)

(2) Independent Review. Every health care service plan contract must provide enrollees, with the opportunity to seek external, independent medical review, under an Independent Medical Review System established in the Department of Managed Care, whenever health care services have been denied, modified, or delayed by the plan or one of its providers based on a finding that the services are not medically necessary. (See Health & Saf.C. 1374.30 et seq.) The application for review may be based on a recommendation by an out-of-plan provider. (Health & Saf.C. 1374.30(j)(1)(c).) Other enrollee grievances, including grievances relating to coverage, are eligible for review by the department. (Health & Saf.C. 1374.30(d)(1).) (On similar legislation providing independent review of decisions by disability insurers, see Ins.C. 10169 et seq.)

c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
1. Nature and Purpose of Act.

[§ 940] Nature and Purpose of Act.

The Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA), enacted in 1975, was a response to the medical malpractice "crisis" of that year. The Legislature found that "there is a major health care crisis in the State of California attributable to skyrocketing malpractice premium costs and resulting in a potential breakdown of the health delivery system, severe hardships for the medically indigent, a denial of access for the economically marginal, and depletion of physicians such as to substantially worsen the quality of health care available to citizens of this state. The Legislature, acting within the scope of its police powers, finds the statutory remedy herein provided is intended to provide an adequate and reasonable remedy within the limits of what the foregoing public health and safety considerations permit now and into the foreseeable future." (Stats. 1975, Second Extraordinary Session, Chap. 2, §1(b).) (See Barme v. Wood (1984) 37 C.3d 174, 178, 207 C.R. 816, 689 P.2d 446, infra, §957; Roa v. Lodi Med. Group (1985) 37 C.3d 920, 930, 211 C.R. 77, 695 P.2d 164, infra, §943; Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 158, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665, infra, §957; *Barris v. In American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 C.3d 359, 204 C.R. 671, 683 P.2d 670, infra, §941, the court said: "In broad outline, the act (1) attempted to reduce the incidence and severity of medical malpractice injuries by strengthening governmental oversight of the education, licensing and discipline of physicians and health care providers, (2) sought to curtail unwarranted insurance premium increases by authorizing alternative insurance coverage programs and by establishing new procedures to review substantial rate increases, and (3) attempted to reduce the cost and increase the efficiency of medical malpractice litigation by revising a number of legal rules applicable to such litigation." (36 C.3d 363.)

The Act regulates three general areas of law: (1) medical malpractice litigation; (2) the practice of medicine; and (3) the insurance industry. (See 7 Pacific L. J. 544 et seq.) (On provisions to ensure quality medical services, see 7 Pacific L. J. 552; on insurance regulations, see 7 Pacific L. J. 555.) To expedite resolution of questions raised by the Act, a special statute was enacted in 1976 as an emergency measure. It authorizes insurers, health care providers, and "potentially aggrieved" persons to bring declaratory actions to determine their rights, duties, or obligations. (Stats. 1976, Chap. 207, §1; see 8 Pacific L. J. 399.)

Commentary on MICRA issues is extensive. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §253; C.E.B., 21 Civil Litigation Reporter 125 (June 1999) [statutory intent in MICRA]; Cal. Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
2. Constitutionality of Act.

[§ 941] Constitutionality of Act.

American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 C.3d 359, 204 C.R. 671, 683 P.2d 670, involved a constitutionality challenge to the periodic payments provision of the Act (C.C.P. 667.7, infra, §966 et seq.). The Supreme Court first declared it unconstitutional in a 4-3 opinion, and then, on rehearing, upheld the statute in another 4-3 opinion.

Plaintiff admitted to defendant hospital for removal of a brain tumor, fell in a shower stall and suffered severe burns as a result of overheated water. The burns caused months of disability and inability to work, and at the time of trial--14 months after the accident--plaintiff still suffered residual disability, had a permanent cosmetic deformity, and would probably require future surgery. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendant's negligence had led to her fall and the burns, and the jury rendered a general verdict for $ 198,069.88. Defendant hospital moved for an order of periodic payment of future damages, and the trial judge denied the motion on the ground that C.C.P. 667.7 was an unconstitutional denial of equal protection and due process. Held, the statute is constitutional.

(a) Common law and reform proposals. Under the common law rule, a plaintiff is compensated for both past and future damages through a lump sum judgment. But in the past 30 years, scholars, noting that lump sum awards are often dissipated by improvident expenditures or investments, have advocated the legislative adoption of a periodic payment procedure as a reform measure that would benefit both plaintiffs and defendants. Many states have enacted these provisions in a variety of tort fields, and in 1980, a Model Periodic Payment of Judgments Act was approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. C.C.P. 667.7 represents the California Legislature's initial adoption of this concept into our tort law. (36 C.3d 366.)

(b) No violation of due process. The due process attack is based on the contention that the periodic payment procedure diminishes the value of malpractice actions without providing an adequate quid pro quo. This is unsound:

(1) It is both unnecessary and inappropriate for a court to balance relative benefits and detriments of legislation. A plaintiff has no vested property right in a particular measure of damages, and the Legislature has broad authority to modify their scope and nature. "So long as the measure is rationally related to a legitimate state interest, policy determinations as to the need for, and desirability of, the enactment are for the Legislature." (36 C.3d 369.)

(2) The provision is rationally related to a legitimate state interest. (a) The Legislature could conclude that it furthers the fundamental goal of matching losses with compensation by helping to ensure that the money paid will in fact be available when the plaintiff incurs the anticipated expenses or losses in the future. (b) The Legislature could also determine that the public interest would be served by eliminating the "windfall" obtained by a plaintiff's heirs when they inherit a portion of the lump sum judgment intended to compensate him for losses that he or she in fact never sustained. (36 C.3d 369.)

(3) The additional argument is made that the provision violates the vested community property right of the victim's spouse by authorizing termination of a portion of the award on the plaintiff's death. But the rights of a surviving spouse are contingent on the nature of the judgment and the statutory measure of damages; the spouse has no greater constitutional right than the victim to a damage award that continues beyond the victim's life. (36 C.3d 369.)

(c) No denial of equal protection. The equal protection challenge is based on the legislative singling out of medical malpractice cases, providing a special benefit to one class of negligent tortfeasors, and withholding the benefits of lump sum awards from one class of persons suffering negligently inflicted injury. This too is unsound:

(1) Virtually every state has passed one or more statutory provisions to deal with the medical malpractice insurance problem, and the overwhelming majority of state and federal courts have rejected this constitutional challenge. (36 C.3d 370.)

(2) A periodic payment of damages could reasonably be applied across the entire tort spectrum, but the Legislature may implement a reform measure one step at a time and strike at the evil where it is felt most. (36 C.3d 371; see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §979.)

(3) The periodic payment provision is rationally related to the objective of reducing insurance costs. The legislative history indicates that one of the factors contributing to high costs was the need to retain large reserves to pay out sizable lump sum awards; the periodic payment procedure permits insurers to retain fewer liquid reserves and to increase investments. In addition, the provision for termination of a significant portion of the remaining future damage payments in the event of the plaintiff's death is obviously related to the goal of reducing insurance costs. (36 C.3d 372, 373.)

(4) Amici curiae contend that C.C.P. 667.7 (and by logical inference all of MICRA) should be held unconstitutional because statistics indicate that the overall costs of medical and hospital care rose considerably in the years since the enactment of MICRA. (a) The Legislature did not intend to hold down overall costs of medical care, but rather to reduce the cost of medical malpractice insurance, which amount to only a small percentage of overall medical costs. (36 C.3d 373.) (b) The rise in medical costs could not properly be attributed to a failure of C.C.P. 667.7, for that section, pending the decision on the constitutional challenge, has never been fully implemented. (36 C.3d 373.) (c) The constitutionality of a measure does not depend on the court's assessment of the empirical success or failure of its provisions. (36 C.3d 374.)

(5) The legislative choice of a $ 50,000 threshold for the periodic payment procedure was properly based on a determination that the administrative costs involved would not justify applying the procedure to smaller future damage claims. (36 C.3d 374.)

(1) C.C.P. 667.7 is ambiguous on the roles that the jury and court are to play in formulating a periodic payment judgment; in particular, it does not make clear whether the jury or the court determines the amount of the "future damages" component of the overall award. (36 C.3d 374, 375.) However, the court in Jehl v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 66 C.2d 821, 59 C.R. 276, 427 P.2d 988, upholding the additur procedure (see Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §130), indicated that new procedures can change the common law jury practice if there is no impairment of the substantial features of a jury trial or improper interference with the jury's decisions. (36 C.3d 375, 376.)

(2) Construing C.C.P. 667.7 to avoid unconstitutionality, the section "should be interpreted to require the jury to designate the portion of its verdict that is intended to compensate the plaintiff for future damages." (36 C.3d 376.) This future damage figure plays a number of crucial roles: "(1) it identifies the amount that the jury has determined as attributable to past and present damages, an amount that the plaintiff will be entitled to receive in an immediate lump sum payment at the time of judgment, and (2) it determines whether the periodic payment procedure will be applicable to the case or not--depending on whether future damages are found to equal or exceed $ 50,000." (36 C.3d 376.) If the finding were left solely to the court, the judge might seriously underestimate the award the jury intended as compensation for losses already incurred, and significantly undermine the statutory purpose of affording a fair correlation between sustaining of losses and payment of damages. (36 C.3d 376.)

(3) Once the jury has designated the amount of future damages, the court's authority to fashion the details of a periodic payment schedule does not infringe on the constitutional right to jury trial. (36 C.3d 376.)

(4) "[T]rial courts would be well advised to permit liberal use of the special verdict procedure so that the individual components of the jury's future damage award can be ascertained and the periodic payment schedule can be knowledgeably established." (36 C.3d 377.) And "it would generally be wise to have the jury designate the portion of the future damage award which is intended to compensate the plaintiff for the loss of future earnings." This figure becomes important if the plaintiff dies before the judgment is fully paid, because C.C.P. 667.7(c) provides that those damages must continue to be paid to dependents after the plaintiff's death. (36 C.3d 377, footnote 14.)

In two elaborate dissenting opinions, three justices disagreed with the reasoning and holding of the majority and concluded that the periodic payment provision should have been declared unconstitutional. (36 C.3d 378, 36 C.3d 387.) (See 41 A.L.R.4th 275 [validity of statute providing for periodic payment of future damages].)

(1) Maximum Amount. Contingent fee contracts are limited by B. & P.C. 6146. The limits are 40% of the first $ 50,000 recovered; 33 1/3% of the next $ 50,000; 25% of the next $ 500,000; and 15% of any excess over $ 600,000. (See Wienholz v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1989) 217 C.A.3d 1501, 1504, 1507, 267 C.R. 1 [1987 amendment increasing maximum contingency fee was not retroactive, and contingency fee agreement entered into prior to its effective date (January 1, 1988) is governed by statute's prior provisions]; 26 A.L.R.5th 245 [validity, construction, and application of state laws limiting amount of recovery in medical malpractice actions].) These limits apply "whether the recovery is by settlement, arbitration, or judgment, or whether the person for whom recovery is made is a responsible adult, an infant, or a person of unsound mind." (B. & P.C. 6146(a); see 19 Pacific L. J. 694.) "Recovered" is defined as the net sum recovered after deducting disbursements and costs, but neither the costs of medical care nor the attorney's office-overhead costs may be deducted. (B. & P.C. 6146(c)(1).)

(2) Scope of Limitation. The limits apply to actions against a "health care provider" for "professional negligence." (B. & P.C. 6146(a).) "Health care provider" is defined in B. & P.C. 6146(c)(2), and includes legal representatives. (On similar definition in C.C. 1714.8, see supra, §936.) (See Coe v. Superior Court (1990) 220 C.A.3d 48, 53, 269 C.R. 368 [blood bank is health care provider].) "Professional negligence" is defined by B. & P.C. 6146(c)(3) as "a negligent act or omission to act by a health care provider in the rendering of professional services, which act or omission is the proximate cause of a personal injury or wrongful death, provided that the services are within the scope of services for which the provider is licensed and which are not within any restriction imposed by the licensing agency or licensed hospital." It has been suggested that actions on the theory of battery for lack of informed consent may not be subject to the limits. (See 7 Pacific L. J. 546.)

(3) Future Damages. If periodic payments of future damages are ordered under C.C.P. 667.7 (see infra, §966 et seq.), the court must "place a total value on these payments based upon the projected life expectancy of the plaintiff and include this amount in computing the total award from which attorney's fees are calculated." (B. & P.C. 6146(b).) (See 7 Pacific L. J. 549.)

(4) Excess Recovery Prohibited. The statute contains no provision authorizing an award of fees in excess of the prescribed limits, and the trial court cannot grant a client's petition for "extraordinary attorneys' fees." (Hathaway v. Baldwin Park Community Hosp. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1247, 1253, 231 C.R. 334.) Nor does MICRA contain a provision on attorneys' fees, and the ordinary rule that each party bears the cost of his or her own attorneys' fees prevails. (Salgado v. Los Angeles (1998) 19 C.4th 629, 650, 80 C.R.2d 46, 967 P.2d 585, infra, §964.)

c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
3. Limitations on Attorney's Compensation.
bb. Constitutionality.

[§ 943] Constitutionality.

In Roa v. Lodi Med. Group (1985) 37 C.3d 920, 211 C.R. 77, 695 P.2d 164, plaintiffs sued defendants medical group, hospital, and doctor for injuries suffered as a result of negligent treatment and care during the birth of plaintiff child. A settlement agreement with the medical group and doctor provided for payment of $ 500,000, the total policy limits of their insurance coverage. The trial judge approved the settlement and awarded the attorneys for plaintiffs fees in the amount of $ 90,800 under the schedule in B. & P.C. 6146. The attorneys, who had a contingency fee agreement for 25% of the child's net recovery, asked for $ 122,800, challenging the constitutionality of the statute. Held, the statute is constitutional and the award was proper.

(a) No violation of due process.

(1) The right to counsel is protected by the constitutional guarantee of due process, but the validity of statutory limits on attorneys' fees has been established by decisions in a number of jurisdictions. (37 C.3d 926, noting regulations applicable to workers' compensation proceedings and probate matters as well as medical malpractice.) Plaintiffs assert that the limits of B. & P.C. 6146 are so low that injured persons will be unable to obtain counsel; but other statutory schemes indicate that the limits are not unusually low. (37 C.3d 928.)

(2) The contention that the sliding scale nature of the fee schedule creates a conflict of interest between attorney and client, reducing the attorney's incentive to pursue a higher award (with its decreasing percentage), is simply answered. Potential conflicts of interest are inherent in all contingent fee arrangements. And the American Bar Association report in 1977 recommended a sliding scale, "reasonably generous in the lower recovery ranges and thus unlikely to deny potential plaintiffs access to legal representation." (37 C.3d 929.)

(3) The final contention, that the fee limits statute will drive the most competent attorneys out of medical malpractice litigation into other areas of personal injury practice, is unsupported by any factual showing; and the same challenge could be made against any of the statutes that limit attorneys' fees in a particular field. (37 C.3d 930.)

(b) No denial of equal protection.

(2) The contention that limitations on contingency fees will not reduce the costs of medical malpractice defendants and their insurers is unsound. The Legislature could reasonably have believed that unregulated contingency fee contracts play at least some part in pursuit of malpractice claims that ultimately prove unsuccessful. (37 C.3d 931.) Also, in view of other provisions of MICRA that may tend to reduce a plaintiff's recovery (e.g., limitation on recovery for noneconomic losses, admission of evidence of collateral source benefits; infra, §956 et seq.), the Legislature may reasonably have concluded that a limitation on contingency fees was an appropriate means of protecting the already diminished compensation from further reduction. (37 C.3d 932.)

(3) The contention that equal protection is denied because the statute places no limits on defense counsel fees is unpersuasive. The Legislature could have determined that there was a special need to protect plaintiffs from having their recoveries diminished by high-contingency fees; and many similar statutes have been upheld in other jurisdictions. (37 C.3d 932.)

(4) The final contention, that the decreasing sliding scale component discriminates against seriously injured malpractice victims, and makes it more difficult to obtain counsel willing to undertake the additional effort required to obtain high awards, is likewise unpersuasive. "[T]he Legislature could reasonably have concluded that the sliding-scale approach in fact produces more equitable fees than the traditional flat contingency fee, helping to ensure that an attorney does not obtain a 'windfall' simply because his client is very seriously injured and guaranteeing that the most seriously injured plaintiffs will retain the lion's share of any recovery secured on their behalf." (37 C.3d 933.)

(c) No violation of separation of powers doctrine. The contention that the question of appropriateness of attorneys' fees is a matter committed solely to the judicial branch has been answered by California cases upholding the legislative power to impose limits on these fees in a variety of fields. (37 C.3d 933.)

Three justices joined in a strong dissent.

cc. Hybrid Action.

[§ 944] Hybrid Action.

In Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 C.3d 424, 220 C.R. 666, 709 P.2d 469, plaintiff engaged defendant attorney to sue Dr. S, her psychiatrist, for medical malpractice consisting of coercion to participate in sexual conduct with him. The complaint alleged negligence and intentional misconduct, and the action was eventually settled for $ 200,000, the limits of Dr. S's insurance policy. Defendant attorney claimed fees of 40% of the net recovery, based on the usual tort action contingency fee agreement. Plaintiff contended that the MICRA limits of B. & P.C. 6146 applied. The trial judge gave summary judgment for defendant on the ground that most of the damage was outside the scope of professional negligence and hence not covered by the statute. In reversing the judgment for a determination of the triable issues of defendant's advice and plaintiff's consent, the court made the following points:

(a) The record shows that the complaint in the first action was a hybrid, seeking recovery both on theories of negligence and intentional tort. Even if the allegations of intentional misconduct had been established, it would not follow that recovery was based solely on an intentional tort theory; it could have rested in part on negligence, within the generally insured risks of a doctor's policy. (40 C.3d 434, 435.)

(b) MICRA does not specifically address the question of how a hybrid proceeding should be treated; but there is no legislative history to indicate that the statute requires an election between MICRA and non-MICRA theories of recovery. (40 C.3d 436.) For a plaintiff, there are both potential benefits and detriments in proceeding on a non-MICRA theory when a MICRA action may also be maintained. (40 C.3d 437, listing the relevant statutory provisions.)

(c) Where, as here, a hybrid proceeding is settled without specifying the theory on which recovery is based, it is impossible to determine with certainty what role the non-MICRA liability played. However, it is reasonable to assume that the possibility of recovery in excess of MICRA's limits will have some effect on the amount of the settlement; and it would be inequitable for a plaintiff who obtained a larger settlement award on a non-MICRA theory to insist that his attorney's fee should be limited by the statute. "For this reason, we conclude that when a plaintiff knowingly chooses to proceed on both non-MICRA and MICRA causes of action, and obtains a recovery that may be based on a non-MICRA theory, the limitations of section 6146 should not apply." (40 C.3d 437.)

(d) Because of the potential conflict of interest, an attorney who seeks a larger fee than that authorized by B. & P. C. 6146 "must specifically advise the client or potential client of the pros and cons of alternative litigation strategies, including potential attorney fees, and obtain the client's consent to pursue and settle a non-MICRA action as well as a MICRA claim." (40 C.3d 438.)

3. Limitations on Attorney's Compensation.
dd. Computation of Fee.

[§ 945] Computation of Fee.

(1) Contingent and Appellate Fees. In Yates v. Law Offices of Samuel Shore (1991) 229 C.A.3d 583, 280 C.R. 316, defendant attorney, in computing his fee for a $ 452,887 judgment obtained in a wrongful death action based on medical malpractice, used the percentages set forth in B. & P.C. 6146. However, rather than applying the percentages to the entire net recovery, he divided the amount into six shares (one for each plaintiff) and applied the percentages to each. For example, instead of applying a 40% factor to only the first $ 50,000 of the judgment, defendant applied this factor to each plaintiff's first $ 50,000, so that the resulting fee of $ 157,813 was nearly twice what it would have been had the statutory percentages been applied to the judgment as a whole. In addition, in submitting his statement of reimbursable costs, defendant deducted from the judgment $ 9,175 that he had paid to an outside attorney engaged at an hourly rate to handle the appeal. In this action by the heirs to recover the alleged excessive fees, the trial judge, after finding that defendant had erred in both instances, awarded summary judgment for plaintiffs in the aggregate sum of $ 87,523. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) The contingent fee calculation.

(1) The language of B. & P.C. 6146 is not clear on the issue of what fees are permitted for representing multiple heirs in a single wrongful death action; e.g., it refers to contingency fees for representing "any person," as well as to the "net sum recovered." On a consideration of the statute as a whole, its purposes, and their relation to kindred statutes, and the factual situation in question, the most reasonable construction is one requiring that the percentage contingent fee limitations apply to the overall recovery in a wrongful death action based on professional negligence. (229 C.A.3d 588, 590.)

(2) In reducing the award rendered in the underlying action from $ 1,603,560 to $ 353,560, the Court of Appeal held that C.C. 3333.2, another section of MICRA, permitted plaintiffs to recover only one award of $ 250,000 for noneconomic damages. (229 C.A.3d 589, citing Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 C.A.3d 195, 239 C.R. 383, infra, §958.) There are important similarities between B. & P.C. 6146 and C.C. 3333.2, e.g., B. & P.C. 6146 fixes contingent fees in connection with an action against a health care provider based on "professional negligence," a term defined identically in both statutes. "These specifications parallel the related legal reality that a wrongful death, caused by an incident of medical malpractice, necessarily gives rise to one action only." (229 C.A.3d 589.)

(3) The Legislature may reasonably have concluded that a limitation on contingency fees in this area was appropriate in view of other statutes limiting the amount of a plaintiff's recovery. "This is not to say that plaintiffs' loss of more than 75 percent of their ... jury award" because of C.C. 3333.2 compels that their lawyer's calculated fee also be cut. "What it does mean is that the perceived legislative purpose of section 6146, independently and in relation to ... section 3333.2, substantially favors construing the former to limit the overall contingent fee a lawyer may charge for a single action that is subject to the constraints of both statutes." (229 C.A.3d 590.)

(4) Given the statute's limitation on noneconomic damages, together with the traditional limit of a major part of pecuniary damages to the decedent's earning capacity, the potential recovery in a wrongful death action is relatively stable regardless of the number of plaintiffs. Under plaintiff's attorney's approach, "the size of the attorney's fee would largely turn on how many close relatives the decedent left. This is not a rational intention to attribute to the Legislature." (229 C.A.3d 590.)

(b) The appellate fee.

(1) B. & P.C. 6146 limits the contingent fee that may be charged in connection with an action, which, under C.C.P. 1049, includes an appeal taken after judgment (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §1). Hence, the statute fixes the maximum allowable contingent fee for a medical malpractice action as a whole, including an appeal, and this limitation may not be avoided by charging separate fees for parts of the case or by charging both contingent and hourly fees. (229 C.A.3d 591.)

(2) This conclusion is not affected by the subsequently enacted B. & P.C. 6147(a)(3) (1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §206) which, with respect to contingent fee agreements generally, requires that they state to what extent the plaintiff may be required to pay compensation for related matters not covered by the agreement. Whatever the meaning of this provision, it does not affect agreements subject to B. & P.C. 6146. These agreements retain their original inclusivity and exclusivity, as recognized by B. & P.C. 6147(a)(5), requiring that agreements subject to B. & P.C. 6146 state that the rates set forth in that statute are the maximum allowed. (229 C.A.3d 591.)

(3) Defendant was not entitled to recover the appellate fee simply by characterizing it as part of the costs plaintiffs agreed to pay. Such a fee is not generally within the scope of chargeable costs, and it does not appear in the definition of costs in the agreement itself. (229 C.A.3d 592.) Rather, the fee appears to come within the provision in the agreement authorizing defendant to associate any other attorney in his discretion, but at no expense to plaintiffs. Another provision purporting to exclude appellate work from the scope of defendant's engagement fails to comport with the statutory regulation of contingent fees for a medical malpractice "action," and hence is not controlling. (229 C.A.3d 592.)

(2) Periodic Payments. In Nguyen v. Los Angeles County Harbor/UCLA Med. Center (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1433, 48 C.R.2d 301, infra, §970, the court discussed the computation of fees in cases where periodic payments (infra, §966 et seq.) have been awarded: In determining maximum attorneys' fees allowable under B. & P.C. 6146(b) (supra, §942), the trial court must place a "total value" on periodic payments based on the plaintiff's life expectancy and include this value in computing the fee award. In resolving how the periodic payments of future damages should be valued for these purposes, the court may treat the cost of an annuity as the presumptive value of the periodic payments. The total value of periodic payments of future damages is then calculated as the present value of the product of the periodic payments multiplied by the number of years remaining in the plaintiff's projected life expectancy. (40 C.A.4th 1448.) The fact that this "cost" approach (i.e., presuming the cost of the annuity to be the total value of the periodic payments) generally yields a lower value than the "present value" approach (i.e., applying a discount rate to the total sum of future payments to reduce that sum to its value in today's dollars) is not ground for rejecting the cost approach. However, plaintiff's attorneys must be given the opportunity to show that the cost of the annuity does not reflect the reasonable present cash value of the periodic payments. (40 C.A.4th 1453.)

C.C.P. 1295 authorizes compulsory arbitration agreements in medical service contracts. These agreements must be the first article of the contract, and must follow the prescribed wording of the statute. (C.C.P. 1295(a).)

C.C.P. 1295(b) requires the following notice immediately before the signature line in at least 10-point bold red type: "NOTICE: BY SIGNING THIS CONTRACT YOU ARE AGREEING TO HAVE ANY ISSUE OF MEDICAL MALPRACTICE DECIDED BY NEUTRAL ARBITRATION AND YOU ARE GIVING UP YOUR RIGHT TO A JURY OR COURT TRIAL. SEE ARTICLE 1 OF THIS CONTRACT." (See Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group (1997) 15 C.4th 951, 973, 982, 64 C.R.2d 843, 938 P.2d 903, 6 *Cal. The agreement may be rescinded in writing within 30 days of signature, but once signed governs "all subsequent open-book account transactions for medical services." (C.C.P. 1295(c).)

A contract signed by a minor's parent or legal guardian for medical services to the minor is not subject to disaffirmance. (C.C.P. 1295(d); see *Michaelis v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 947

[§ 947] Subsequent Medical Services.

Hilleary v. Garvin (1987) 193 C.A.3d 322, 238 C.R. 247, involved the issue whether an arbitration agreement entered into when plaintiff first visited defendant to determine whether she was pregnant extended to a follow-up operation to remove fibroid tumors that might cause future miscarriages. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration of a malpractice claim arising out of the follow-up surgery was denied on the ground that the arbitration agreement failed to delineate a specific course of treatment, and hence was ambiguous. Held, this was erroneous.

(a) Plaintiff's argument that C.C.P. 1295 contemplates only underlying contracts that are reduced to writing is untenable. The clear meaning of the statute is that, with the exception of certain licensed health care service plans covered in C.C.P. 1295(f), it covers any contract for health care, whether written or oral, express or implied. (193 C.A.3d 327.)

(b) "To impose upon a physician, during a continuous doctor-patient relationship, the extra burden of having to renew the arbitration agreement each time there is a variation in treatment or ailment would be impractical, and would frustrate the purpose of the statute, which is to facilitate, not emasculate, the arbitration process." (193 C.A.3d 326.)

In Cochran v. Rubens (1996) 42 C.A.4th 481, 49 C.R.2d 672, the issue was whether a 1990 arbitration agreement between the parties governed allegedly negligent surgery that defendant performed on plaintiff in 1993. Plaintiff was referred to defendant for consultation and evaluation by his family physician in 1990, at which time the agreement was executed, but plaintiff failed to return for a recommended follow-up visit and did not see defendant again until 1993 on a second referral by the family physician. The trial court denied defendant's petition to compel arbitration. Held, affirmed; the 1993 treatment was not, as required by C.C.P. 1295(c) (supra, §946 et seq.), an open book account transaction for medical services for which the contract was signed.

(a) Whether a book account exists, and whether it is open or closed, are questions of fact. While an open book account has been defined as an account with one or more items unsettled, it also includes an account with dealings still continuing. Thus, the open or closed nature turns not on the account balance per se, but on whether the parties expect possible future transactions, which is a question of fact. In the physician-patient context, this depends on whether there is a continuing physician-patient relationship. Because the outcome of the petition to compel arbitration turns on whether plaintiff's book account closed before he returned to the physician in 1993, the issue on appeal is whether substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding on that question of fact. (42 C.A.4th 485.)

(b) There was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that there was no continuing physician-patient relationship between the parties, and therefore, no expectation of future medical transactions between them. The parties had no contact between 1990 and 1993. Plaintiff had an ongoing physician-patient relationship with his family doctor, and only saw defendant when his family doctor referred him. Implicit in the court's finding is the finding that the book account established in 1990 between the parties was no longer open at the time of the second referral in 1993. (42 C.A.4th 486.)

[§ 948] Persons Who Did Not Sign: In General.

In Baker v. Birnbaum (1988) 202 C.A.3d 288, 248 C.R. 336, the court held that an arbitration agreement signed only by plaintiff's wife was not binding on plaintiff's claim for loss of consortium: "A party cannot be compelled to arbitrate a dispute it has not elected to submit." (202 C.A.3d 291, following Rhodes v. California Hosp. Med. Center (1978) 76 C.A.3d 606, 143 C.R. 59.

The opposite position was taken in later decisions. In Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 C.A.3d 771, 253 C.R. 820, the court, applying the reasoning of Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 C.A.3d 718, 215 C.R. 477, made the following points:

(a) "It is true a physician may inquire into, and if honestly answered ascertain, a patient's marital status at the time of the initial visit, but relationships change. Consequently, to insure the inviolability of an arbitration agreement a doctor, at a minimum, would be required to reinterrogate the patient at every visit, and postpone further treatment if a recently acquired spouse is not present to join in the execution of a new agreement. We have previously rejected such a potential solution as unworkable and undesirable ... and one which would appear certain to have a deleterious effect on the physician-patient relationship." (206 C.A.3d 781.)

(b) "Among the factors which have been identified as contributing to the growth in patients' suits against their doctors is the increasing depersonalization in their relationships. ... This unfortunate trend could only be exacerbated by injecting the specter of litigation, even indirectly, into each contact between doctor and patient." (206 C.A.3d 781.) "In addition, were patients to be less than candid concerning their marital status, should their duplicity be permitted to involuntarily expose to the expense and trauma inherent in a civil suit those whom they ask to minister to their medical needs? On the other hand, were we to protect the physician from such deception, would we not be allowing mendacity to achieve that which integrity could not, i.e., the binding of a nonsignatory to an arbitration agreement?" (206 C.A.3d 781.)

(c) "Finally, and in our view the most significant consideration, to authorize an intrusion into a patient's confidential relationship with a physician as the price for guaranteeing a third person, even a spouse, access to a jury trial on matters arising from the patient's own treatment, poses problems of a particularly serious nature. One might hope that spouses will voluntarily communicate with each other regarding their respective medical treatment, whether it involves a routine matter or a most intimate and sensitive procedure such as a vasectomy or the termination of a pregnancy. Nonetheless, it would be impermissible to adopt a rule that would require them, or their physicians, to do so, or that would permit one spouse to exercise a type of veto power over the other's decisions. Yet construing section 1295 to require a spouse's concurrence in an arbitration agreement would, in certain situations at least, have exactly that effect." (206 C.A.3d 782.)

Subsequent decisions have followed Gross. (See Bolanos v. Khalatian (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1586, 1590, 283 C.R. 209; Michaelis v. Schori (1993) 20 C.A.4th 133, 139, 24 C.R.2d 380 [following Bolanos and Gross]; Mormile v. Sinclair (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1508, 1513, 1514, 26 C.R.2d 725 [following Bolanos, Gross, and Michaelis, and rejecting the rule of Baker, that a party cannot be required to arbitrate if it has not agreed to do so].)

[§ 949] Persons Who Did Not Sign: Cross-Complainants.

In Contra Costa v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan (1996) 47 C.A.4th 237, 54 C.R.2d 628, the court held that an agreement to arbitrate between a patient and a defendant health care provider does not bind a cross-complainant who was not a party to the agreement and who seeks equitable indemnity from the health care provider. Plaintiff, a pedestrian who was struck by a vehicle while crossing an intersection to reach a bus stop, brought an action against the driver of a vehicle that struck that vehicle, the county, and the county's transit authority under various theories, and also sued her health care provider under a malpractice theory. The other defendants cross-complained against the health care provider for equitable indemnity. The trial judge denied its motion to compel arbitration under an arbitration agreement with plaintiff. Held, affirmed.

(a) The California cases binding nonsignatories to arbitrate their medical malpractice claims fall into two categories. In some cases, a nonsignatory is required to arbitrate a claim because a benefit was conferred on the nonsignatory as a result of the contract, making the nonsignatory a third-party beneficiary of the arbitration agreement. In other cases, the nonsignatory is bound to arbitrate the dispute because there was a preexisting relationship between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement, making it equitable to compel the nonsignatory to also be bound to arbitrate his or her claim. (47 C.A.4th 242.) These cases are all distinguishable here. (47 C.A.4th 243.)

(b) While public policy favors arbitration as an expedient and economical method of resolving disputes, thus relieving crowded civil court calendars, arbitration assumes that the parties have elected to use it as an alternative to the judicial process. (47 C.A.4th 244.) Even the strong public policy in favor of arbitration does not extend to those who are not parties to an arbitration agreement or who have not authorized others to act for them in executing an agreement. The right to arbitration depends on a contract. In essence, an action to compel arbitration is a suit in equity to compel specific performance of that contract. Lacking a written agreement, or a preexisting relationship or authority to contract for another that might substitute for an arbitration agreement, courts sitting in equity may not compel third-party nonsignatories to arbitrate their disputes. (47 C.A.4th 245.)

(c) To hold the cross-complainants bound by the arbitration agreement would be to ignore the constitutional and procedural rights of nonsignatory third parties who had no prior connection to the signatory party. In addition, policy considerations that prompted other appellate courts to compel nonsignatories to arbitration are not present in this case. First, unlike loss of consortium cases (see Gross v. Recabaren (1988) 206 C.A.3d 771, 253 C.R. 820, supra, §948), there is no judicially declared preference for joining direct negligence claims with related indemnity claims. (47 C.A.4th 245.) A cause of action for equitable indemnity does not even accrue for statute of limitations purposes until the party seeking indemnity has suffered an actual loss by being compelled to pay damages. Second, as the cross-complainants have no preexisting relationship with plaintiff or defendant, there is no risk that they might interfere with the patient-physician relationship or with plaintiff's privacy rights. Third, in contrast to Harris v. Superior Court (1986) 188 C.A.3d 475, 478, 233 C.R. 186, the cross-complainants were not third-party beneficiaries of the arbitration agreement who by benefiting from the agreement should also be bound by it. For all these reasons, the trial court properly concluded that the cross-complainants were not required to arbitrate their cross-claims and thus properly denied defendant's motion to compel arbitration. (47 C.A.4th 246.)

c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
4. Compulsory Arbitration Agreements.

[§ 950] Retroactive Agreements.

In Coon v. Nicola (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1225, 21 C.R.2d 846, plaintiff was treated by defendant physician for injuries sustained in a fall down a mine shaft. On a subsequent office visit, plaintiff signed a physician-patient arbitration agreement that included a clause making the agreement applicable to disputes stemming from the care provided by defendant prior to the date the agreement was executed. Held, retroactive agreements are valid.

(a) Defendant argued that the wording in C.C.P. 1295(c) referring to "subsequent open-book transactions" precluded any authorization of a retroactive application of an arbitration agreement. However, although C.C.P. 1295 states that medical malpractice arbitration agreements must include certain provisions, there is nothing in the statute stating expressly or implicitly that these agreements may not also include additional provisions. Indeed, the possibility of additional provisions is supported by the wording of C.C.P. 1295(a), which requires certain mandatory language to be set forth in the "first article of the contract," thereby implying that other articles may be added depending upon the needs of the parties. (17 C.A.4th 1232.)

(b) The question then becomes whether parties may contract to submit precontractual claims to arbitration. C.C.P. 1281 validates agreements to submit to arbitration "an existing controversy or a controversy thereafter arising," subject to the right to revoke upon such grounds as exist for the revocation of any contract (see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §36). However, C.C.P. 1281 et seq. apply to medical malpractice arbitration agreements only to the extent that they do not conflict with the specific provisions of C.C.P. 1295. (17 C.A.4th 1233, citing Rosenfield v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 198, 191 C.R. 611, supra, §946.) Hence, "[i]t would follow that as long as the provisions of section 1295 are met as to a medical malpractice arbitration agreement, parties may legally agree to arbitrate pre-agreement claims subject to the same grounds for revocation as exist for any contract, as stated in section 1281 et seq." (17 C.A.4th 1233.)

[§ 951] Intentional Torts.

In Herrera v. Superior Court (1984) 158 C.A.3d 255, 204 C.R. 553, the court was faced with the issue whether the statute compelled arbitration of a malpractice case alleging an intentional tort. Plaintiff's complaint, originally based on misdiagnosis and improperly performed surgery, was amended to allege causes of action for battery and fraud (wrong surgery, failure to inform; see supra, §§395, 396). Held, arbitration was required.

(a) Plaintiff's contention was based on the language of C.C.P. 1295(a), referring to a dispute as to "professional negligence," defined in C.C.P. 1295(g)(2) as "a negligent act or omission." But C.C.P. 1295(b), states that a patient who signs an arbitration provision is agreeing to arbitrate "any dispute as to medical malpractice, that is as to whether any medical services rendered under his contract were unnecessary or unauthorized or were improperly, negligently or incompetently rendered." (158 C.A.3d 260, 261.)

(b) The language of C.C.P. 1295(a) was designed to "set the threshold" of the type of action; but the language of C.C.P. 1295(b), which the Legislature specified must be included in the arbitration provision, shows that the Legislature intended arbitration "to extend beyond negligence." (158 C.A.3d 262.)

c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
4. Compulsory Arbitration Agreements.
gg. Punitive Damages.

[§ 952] Punitive Damages.

In Baker v. Sadick (1984) 162 C.A.3d 618, 208 C.R. 676, plaintiff employed defendant doctor to perform breast reduction surgery, and on admission to the hospital, signed an arbitration agreement in the form prescribed by C.C.P. 1295. Serious post-injury problems developed, requiring extensive corrective surgery, and she made her medical malpractice claim pursuant to the arbitration agreement. Without objection by either party, issues of liability and compensatory and punitive damages were submitted, and the arbitrator awarded compensatory damages of $ 300,000 (reduced by the superior court to the statutory limit of $ 250,000) and punitive damages of $ 300,000. The judge rejected defendant's contention that the arbitrators had no authority to award punitive damages, and confirmed the award. Held, judgment confirming award affirmed.

(a) An arbitration agreement is subject to the rules of interpretation of contracts, including the rule that in a standard form agreement, ambiguities are to be resolved against the drafter. (162 C.A.3d 624, 625, 626.) Also, arbitration agreements are favored, and ambiguities in the scope of arbitration are resolved in favor of coverage. (162 C.A.3d 623, 624.)

(b) Defendant contended that C.C.P. 1295 applies only to claims for "professional negligence" as the term is defined in C.C.P. 1295(g)(2). But the statute also covers "any dispute as to medical malpractice, that is as to whether any medical services rendered under this contract were unnecessary or unauthorized or were improperly, negligently or incompetently rendered," and the required notice refers to "any issue of medical malpractice." (162 C.A.3d 624, 625, 626.) Thus, the agreement presents an ambiguity, which should be construed in favor of the plaintiff (nondrafter), and as so construed, covers the issue of punitive damages. (162 C.A.3d 626.)

(c) Plaintiff's charges of malpractice were based in part on intentional tort principles. The surgery was unnecessary, she was fraudulently induced to consent to it, defendant falsified her medical records, and defendant failed to administer post-operative treatment. These charges were appropriate factual bases for punitive damages. (162 C.A.3d 625.)

(d) C.C. 3333.2, limiting the amount of general compensatory damages to $ 250,000, refers only to negligence, and does not preclude an award of punitive damages on proof of fraud, wilful neglect, or malicious acts. (162 C.A.3d 626, 627.)

(e) C.C. 3294 provides for punitive damages in "an action." McRae v. Superior Court (1963) 221 C.A.2d 166, 34 C.R. 346, held that an arbitration proceeding is not an "action" for the purposes of ordering depositions. But the rationale of McRae was that judicial interference with arbitration proceedings by ordering depositions was incompatible with the strong public policy favoring speedy settlement of disputes. This rationale has no application here. (162 C.A.3d 628.) Moreover, arbitration is designed to serve as a substitute for court proceedings; and "arbitration would not be encouraged by a decision which effectively holds a claim which may otherwise be asserted in a court of law may not be asserted in arbitration." (162 C.A.3d 628.)

(f) Punitive damages awards in civil actions are subject to judicial review, while arbitration awards are not; hence, defendant argues that agreements to arbitrate will be discouraged. A holding that punitive damages may be awarded under an arbitration agreement as broad as the one involved here "does not divest the parties of their power to control the scope of arbitration by the terms of their agreement." (162 C.A.3d 630.) (See 20 Cal. Western L. Rev. 312; 35 A.L.R.5th 145 [allowance of punitive damages in medical malpractice action].)

[§ 954] Extension of Applicable Statute of Limitations.

When the notice is served within 90-days of the running of the applicable statute of limitations (C.C.P. 340.5), the time is extended 90 days from the service of the notice. (C.C.P. 364(d); see Anson v. Merced (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1195, 1204, 249 C.R. 457 [6-month period mandated by Govt.C. 945.6 for initiating action after public entity's denial of claim was extended by C.C.P. 364(d)]; Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1466, 1479, 37 C.R.2d 769 [action against doctor requested and paid for by employer for allegedly injuring employee during examination was action for medical malpractice, subject to 90-day extension under C.C.P. 364]; Camarillo v. Vaage (2003) 105 C.A.4th 552, 560, 130 C.R.2d 26, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §656 [sending notice in last 90 days before statute of limitations runs tolls statute for 90 days against both known and unknown defendants; notice to unknown defendant is not required before amending complaint to add fictitiously named defendant]; 7 Pacific L. J. 547; on C.C.P. 340.5, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §533 et seq.)

Despite the literal meaning of the statutory language, it has been held that the statute of limitations is tolled for 90 days and not merely extended by 90 days from the date of service of the notice. Hence, when the notice of intent to sue has been given within the last 90 days of the limitations period, the plaintiff has 90 days from the expiration of the period in which to file the lawsuit. (Woods v. Young (1991) 53 C.3d 315, 325, 279 C.R. 613, 807 P.2d 455, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th) Actions, §657 [construction adopted to resolve conflict between several statutes]; see Hanooka v. Pivko (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1553, 1559, 1560, 28 C.R.2d 70, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §656.) The Woods tolling rule applies not only to the 1-year "discovery" period of C.C.P. 340.5, but also to the 3-year "outside" period of that statute. (Russell v. Stanford University Hosp. (1997) 15 C.4th 783, 788, 64 C.R.2d 97, 937 P.2d 640, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §657, disapproving Rewald v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 27 C.A.4th 480, 487, 32 C.R.2d 411.) The rule also applies to the 3-year period for minors set forth in the statute. (Newman v. Burnett (1997) 54 C.A.4th 722, 724, 62 C.R.2d 175, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §657.)

Moreover, C.C.P. 364(d) applies to equitable indemnity actions based on professional negligence. This is true even though the actions are governed by non-MICRA statutes of limitations, such as the general limitations period for personal injury actions. (*Preferred Risk Mut. Ins. Co. v. [§ 955] Government Tort Claim Is Not Notice of Intent To Sue.

A government tort claim, although allegedly containing the same information as that required in a notice of intent to sue, does not, in the absence of evidence that the claimant intended otherwise, constitute the required notice so as to render a subsequent notice of intent to sue a nullity. The claims filing requirements of the Tort Claims Act (supra, §216 et seq.) and C.C.P. 364 are similar in purpose, inasmuch as both were designed to encourage settlements. However, filing a tort claim does not necessarily evidence an intent to sue, and a notice of intent to sue, given after a tort claim has been denied, will further the purposes of MICRA by offering the parties a second opportunity to resolve the claim. Thus, the 6-month period of Govt.C. 945.6 for initiating action after denial of a government tort claim is extended by the 90-day period of C.C.P. 364(d). (Wurts v. Fresno (1996) 44 C.A.4th 380, 383, 51 C.R.2d 689.)

c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
6. Evidence of Collateral Sources.
aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 956

[§ 956] In General.

(1) Nature of Statute. Under C.C. 3333.1, evidence of certain benefits payable to the plaintiff may be introduced by the defendant at the trial: social security payments, state or federal disability or compensation payments, health or income disability payments, and benefits received under group health plans. If this evidence is introduced, however, the plaintiff may prove the cost of the benefits. (C.C. 3333.1(a); see 29 Western State L. Rev. 173 [case for repealing C.C. 3333.1(a)].)

"No source of collateral benefits introduced ... shall recover any amount against the plaintiff nor shall it become subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against a defendant." (C.C. 3333.1(b).) (See 7 Pacific L. J. 547.)

In California Physicians' Service v. Superior Court (1980) 102 C.A.3d 91, 162 C.R. 266, the court observed that C.C. 3333.1 was enacted as part of a legislative response to a "crisis" in the field of medical malpractice coverage, and added: (1) The first objective (C.C. 3333.1(a)) is to eliminate double recovery of special damages; (2) the second objective (C.C. 3333.1(b)) "is to shift the cost of the special damages ... from the malpractice insurance carriers to the providers of medical and hospital insurance, leaving to the malpractice insurance carriers the cost of general damages." (102 C.A.3d 97.)

(2) No Credit in Workers' Compensation Case. C.C. 3333.1 overrides the right to credit when an employee settles a malpractice action and the settlement excludes workers' compensation benefits. In Graham v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1989) 210 C.A.3d 499, 258 C.R. 376, the court said: "To harmonize Civil Code section 3333.1 with the Labor Code credit provisions, we interpret section 3333.1 as impliedly creating an exception to the credit provisions whenever an injured party has demonstrably had his recovery reduced to reflect collateral source contributions. A more restrictive construction would shift a portion of the costs of medical malpractice to the injured party, contrary to the purposes of both MICRA and the workers' compensation statutes. In this case, the parties in the underlying medical malpractice case made an adequate factual record that Graham's settlement was reduced to exclude any recovery for collateral source benefits." (210 C.A.3d 508.) (For full discussion of Graham, see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §74.)

(3) Taxability. While evidence that the plaintiff is receiving disability insurance benefits is admissible under C.C. 3333.1, evidence of the tax treatment of those benefits is not. The statute makes admissible "evidence of any amount payable as a benefit to the plaintiff," but there is no language in the statute suggesting an intent to allow the trier of fact to consider whether that amount is also taxable. (Cox v. Superior Court (2002) 98 C.A.4th 670, 673, 120 C.R.2d 45 [vacation of order denying plaintiff's motion to preclude evidence that income disability payments were not taxable].)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
6. Evidence of Collateral Sources.
bb. Constitutionality and Construction.

[§ 957] Constitutionality and Construction.

Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665, upheld the constitutionality of C.C. 3333.1(a) (allowing evidence of collateral source payments).

(a) Construction of statute. As originally drafted, C.C. 3333.1(a) required deduction of collateral source benefits in computing damages; as enacted, it merely provides that the defendant may introduce evidence of these benefits, and, if the defendant does so, the plaintiff may introduce evidence of the amounts he or she has paid (e.g., in insurance premiums) to secure the benefits. The statute does not specify how the jury should use the evidence, but "the Legislature apparently assumed that in most cases the jury would set plaintiff's damages at a lower level because of the awareness of plaintiff's 'net' collateral source benefits." (38 C.3d 164.)

(b) Constitutionality. The plaintiff has no vested right in a particular measure of damages; and the statute is rationally related to the legitimate state interest of reducing the costs incurred by malpractice defendants and their insurers. (38 C.3d 137.) Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, infra, §1632, recognized that legal commentators criticize the collateral source rule as affording the plaintiff a double recovery, and that many jurisdictions had either restricted or repealed it; but the opinion stated that a change, if desirable, would be more effectively accomplished through legislative reform. (38 C.3d 167.) And California is only one of many states to include a modification of the collateral source rule as a part of medical malpractice reform. (38 C.3d 167.) (See 74 A.L.R.4th 32 [validity and construction of statute abrogating collateral source rule in medical malpractice actions].)

Barme v. Wood (1984) 37 C.3d 174, 207 C.R. 816, 689 P.2d 446, upheld the constitutionality of C.C. 3333.1(b) (precluding subrogation by provider of medical expense or other benefits). The general constitutional challenges were rejected for the reasons set forth in American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 C.3d 359, 204 C.R. 671, 683 P.2d 670, supra, §941. The court also answered the charge that the legislation is arbitrary because it shifts some of the cost of medical malpractice from negligent health care providers to nonnegligent employers or insurers:

(a) Insurers who are burdened by the provision have been paid a fee or premium to provide the health or other benefits covered by their policies. Employers who are self-insured, "presumably have decided that it is in their self-interest to do so in order to save the insurance premium they would otherwise incur." (37 C.3d 181.)

(b) The Legislature may well have determined that "only by shifting some of the costs of malpractice from a negligent defendant to the victim's own 'first party' insurers, would the victim retain a realistic opportunity to obtain any damages from malpractice insurance. Insistence on having malpractice defendants and their insurers bear all of the loss might have meant that no malpractice insurance would have been offered or that many doctors would have practiced uninsured." (37 C.3d 181.) (See Miller v. Sciaroni (1985) 172 C.A.3d 306, 312, 313, 218 C.R. 219 [following Barme].)

In Canister v. Emergency Ambulance Service (2008) 160 C.A.4th 388, 72 C.R.3d 792, plaintiff police officer, while accompanying an arrestee in the back of defendant's ambulance, alleged that defendant caused him injury when the ambulance hit a curb. At the time of the injury, one employee of defendant was driving, and another was attending to the arrestee. Each was a licensed Emergency Medical Technician-1 (EMT) acting within the scope of employment. The trial judge ruled that plaintiff's action was subject to MICRA. Based on this ruling, defendant was permitted to introduce evidence that plaintiff's medical expenses and lost earnings were paid by a collateral source. Based on evidence that the driver hit the curb to avoid a vehicle that had crossed into the driver's lane and that plaintiff was not using a seat belt, judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court's ruling that the action was subject to MICRA was erroneous. Held, affirmed.

(a) Introduction. By its terms, C.C. 3333.1 applies to a personal injury action against a health care provider based upon professional negligence. Thus, the main issues in this case are whether defendant's EMTs were health care providers and whether the case was based on professional negligence. (160 C.A.4th 394.)

(b) EMTs are health care providers under MICRA.

(1) C.C. 3333.1(c)(1) defines "health care provider" as someone licensed under Chapter 2.5 of Division 2 of the Health and Safety Code (Health & Saf.C. 1440 et seq.). However, the EMTs were licensed under Division 2.5 of the Health and Safety Code (Health & Saf.C. 1797.1 et seq.), the Emergency Services (EMS) Act. (160 C.A.4th 392.)

(2) When the MICRA provisions were enacted in 1975, they included paramedics licensed under former Health & Saf.C. 1480 to provide emergency services for people being transported to the hospital. However, the EMS Act, which created a comprehensive system to govern prehospital emergency medical services, repealed former Health & Saf.C. 1480, thereby raising an issue whether the repeal was intended to remove those persons licensed under the former statute from MICRA. It was not. (160 C.A.4th 398.)

(3) In 1988, the Legislature enacted Health & Saf.C. 1797.4, providing that any reference in any provision to mobile intensive care paramedics subject to former Health & Saf.C. 1480 was deemed to be a reference to persons holding valid certificates under the EMS Act as EMTs. Defendant correctly argued that the Legislature added this provision to assure that all EMTs would be treated the same as mobile intensive care paramedics, who were originally covered by MICRA, a conclusion supported by both the statute's language and its legislative history. (160 C.A.4th 399.) Moreover, this conclusion is supported by Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Service (1999) 20 C.4th 928, 86 C.R.2d 107, 978 P.2d 571, 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §585. (160 C.A.4th 403.)

(c) Negligent operation of an ambulance constitutes professional negligence.

(1) C.C. 3333.1(c)(2) defines "professional negligence" as that negligence that occurs while the health care provider is providing services that are within the scope of services for which the provider is licensed. The relevant test is not the degree of skill required, but whether the negligence occurred in the rendering of services for which a provider is licensed. Although the act of operating an ambulance may be performed by someone without special knowledge, skill, or care as a member of the medical profession, this does not mean that the employees here were not acting as health care providers in transporting the patient to a medical facility. (160 C.A.4th 404.)

(2) The EMS Act defines "emergency medical services" in terms of the services utilized in responding to a medical emergency. And the Act's definition of "emergency" encompasses the situation where emergency medical personnel perceive that the need for immediate medical attention might potentially arise. Accordingly, "emergency ambulance service" includes all services rendered by emergency ambulances, even if the ambulance is engaged in nonemergency interfacility transfers, as was the case here. (160 C.A.4th 405.)

(3) Plaintiff argued that an EMT's "professional services" can extend only to those services for which the EMT is licensed, and that the only services for which EMTs are licensed as professionals are medical services, such as basic life support and CPR. This argument is without merit. EMTs are licensed to provide transport to patients. Further, the term "professional services" encompasses more than the distinct services that a health care provider is licensed to perform. Courts have broadly construed "professional negligence" to mean negligence occurring during the rendering of services for which the health care provider is licensed (see, e.g., Bellamy v. Appellate Dept. (1996) 50 C.A.4th 797, 57 C.R.2d 894, text, §934). Thus, an EMT's operation of an ambulance qualifies as "professional negligence" when the EMT is rendering services for which the EMT is licensed or when a claim for damages is directly related to the provision of ambulance services by the EMT. (160 C.A.4th 406.)

(4) That plaintiff was not a patient does not affect application of MICRA. By its statutory terms, MICRA applies to negligent conduct by a health care provider in rendering professional services and is not limited to actions by the recipient of professional services. (160 C.A.4th 407.)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
7. Maximum Recovery for Noneconomic Loss.
aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 958

[§ 958] In General.

C.C. 3333.2 permits recovery for noneconomic losses, i.e., "pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, disfigurement and other nonpecuniary damages," but limits the amount of this recovery to $ 250,000. (C.C. 3333.2(a), (b).) (See Pressler v. Irvine Drugs (1985) 169 C.A.3d 1244, 1248, 215 C.R. 807; 67 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1609 [evaluation of effectiveness of C.C. 3333.2]; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 99 [right of jury to reject MICRA ceiling on noneconomic damages].)

The $ 250,000 limit on recovery of noneconomic damages applies only to "clinics," "health dispensaries," and "health facilities" licensed under Division 2 of the Health and Safety Code; a residential care facility, even though licensed under Division 2, does not fit into one of these categories. (Kotler v. Alma Lodge (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1381, 1390, 74 C.R.2d 721; see Lathrop v. HealthCare Partners Med. Group (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1412, 1419, 8 C.R.3d 668 [unincorporated medical group was not "health care provider"].)

In Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 C.A.3d 195, 239 C.R. 385, the court rejected the contentions that the statute did not apply to wrongful death actions, and that the limitation should be applied to each of several plaintiffs individually. (a) "Its plain language unequivocally manifests a desire to place a $ 250,000 cap on awards for noneconomic damages in all medical malpractice litigation, whether recovery is sought by patients who have themselves suffered personal injuries or by the survivors of such victims who initiate suits for wrongful death." (194 C.A.3d 199.) (b) Because the cause of action for wrongful death is single and indivisible, use of the word "action" in the statute represents a legislative intent to limit the total recovery in these suits to $ 250,000. (194 C.A.3d 201.)

When a medical employer's liability rests on respondeat superior, it is entitled to the protection of C.C. 3333.2. (Lathrop v. HealthCare Partners Med. Group, supra, 114 C.A.4th 1421 [limiting damages imposed on vicariously liable employer to exact amount that could be recovered from employee ensures that employee is not required to reimburse employer for more than employee's own liability].)

In Flores v. Natividad Med. Center (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1106, 238 C.R. 24, the court held that C.C. 3333.2 did not apply to a prisoner's action against the state under Govt.C. 845.6 for failure to summon medical assistance (see supra, §295).

(a) Although the failure to summon medical assistance could have established professional negligence on the part of the state's doctors, this does not change the true nature of the action against the State into one for professional negligence. (192 C.A.3d 1116.)

(b) C.C. 3333.2 applies to actions against a "health care provider," which is defined to include the provider's legal representatives. The purpose of this provision was to extend the protections of the statute to the heirs of a physician in an action against his or her estate, not to make the state the legal representative of its employees. (192 C.A.3d 1116, footnote 3.)

(c) Even if plaintiff's complaint were construed to be based, in the alternative, on negligence, the holding of Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 C.3d 424, 220 C.R. 666, 709 P.2d 469, supra, §944, that the limitations of MICRA do not apply where recovery might be based on a non-MICRA theory, would preclude application of C.C. 3333.2 in this case. (192 C.A.3d 1115.)

7. Maximum Recovery for Noneconomic Loss.
bb. Constitutionality.

[§ 959] Constitutionality.

Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665, upheld the constitutionality of C.C. 3333.2 (supra, §958) on reasoning similar to that set forth in the other cases dealing with the constitutionality of MICRA provisions (supra, §§941, 943, 957).

(a) No violation of due process.

(1) A plaintiff has no vested property right in a particular measure of damages. (38 C.3d 157.) Although C.C. 3333.2 differs from the periodic payment provision in that it places a dollar limit on the amount of damages, this does not alter the due process standard of review: The Legislature has broad control over the measure as well as the timing of damages. (38 C.3d 158.)

(2) The statute is rationally related to the legitimate state interest in reducing the costs of malpractice defendants and their insurers. (38 C.3d 158, 159.) Although the statute will result in recovery of a lower judgment than before its enactment, the Legislature placed no limits on the right to recover for all of the economic, pecuniary damages, and allowed a recovery of up to $ 250,000 for the noneconomic damages. (38 C.3d 159.) Although the general propriety of noneconomic damages is "firmly imbedded in our common law jurisprudence," no California case has "suggested that the right to recover for such noneconomic injuries is constitutionally immune from legislative limitation or revision." (38 C.3d 159.)

(b) No denial of equal protection.

(1) The contention that the statute impermissibly discriminates between medical malpractice victims and other tort victims has previously been answered (see supra, §§941, 943, 957). (38 C.3d 162.)

(2) The contention that it improperly discriminates within the class of medical malpractice victims by denying complete recovery only to those plaintiffs with noneconomic damages exceeding $ 250,000 is equally unavailing. "The

equal protection clause certainly does not require the Legislature to limit a victim's recovery for out-of-pocket medical expenses or lost earnings simply because it has found it appropriate to place some limit on damages for pain and suffering and similar noneconomic losses." (38 C.3d 162.)

(3) The assertion that the Legislature could have realized its hoped-for cost savings by mandating a fixed-percentage reduction of all noneconomic damage awards does not constitute a constitutional objection. The Legislature could reasonably have determined that an across-the-board limit would provide a more stable base on which to calculate insurance rates, and that a fixed limit would promote settlements by eliminating the unknown possibility of phenomenal awards for pain and suffering that can make litigation worth the gamble. Or the Legislature simply may have felt that it was fairer to reduce only the very large noneconomic damage awards rather than to diminish the more modest recoveries in the great bulk of cases. (38 C.3d 163.) (See 29 West L.A. L. Rev. 357 [MICRA cap on noneconomic damages as equal protection violation].)

In *McAdory v. The trial judge reduced the $ 370,000 to the MICRA limit of $ 250,000, added the $ 30,000 to make a total of $ 280,000, and then reduced it by $ 61,000 (representing the 22% comparative negligence), leaving a net judgment of $ 218,400. Held, reversed with directions to award plaintiff the full limit of $ 250,000 in noneconomic damages. [§ 961] Action by Spouse for Loss of Consortium.

In Atkins v. Strayhorn (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1380, 273 C.R. 231, judgment was awarded to the plaintiff husband for his injuries and to the plaintiff wife for loss of consortium. Defendant doctor contended that a single $ 250,000 limit should have been applied to this single injury-causing act of professional negligence. In rejecting this contention, the court pointed out that, although joinder in one action is the preferred method for asserting a claim for loss of consortium, the action can be maintained independently of the action by the physically injured spouse (see infra, §1679); and that, if the wife had brought a separate action, there would be no doubt of her entitlement to a separate $ 250,000 limit. "Where, as here, a claim for loss of consortium is joined with a spouse's claim for physical injuries in an action for medical malpractice, each spouse is entitled to recover up to $ 250,000 for his or her separate noneconomic losses." (223 C.A.3d 1394.)

[§ 962] Action for Equitable Indemnity.

In Western Steamship Lines v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 8 C.4th 100, 32 C.R.2d 263, 876 P.2d 1062, a steamship company settled an action brought against it under federal maritime law by an employee who had been attended for several days at sea by the company's medical staff and then suffered irreversible brain damage after being rushed to a hospital on land. The steamship company brought an action seeking indemnification from the hospital and the doctor who had treated the employee there. Before trial, the doctor settled, and the jury fixed the relative fault of the doctor at 50%, the hospital at 30%, and the steamship company at 20%. The trial judge determined that MICRA did not apply, and entered judgment against the hospital for $ 1.8 million (30% of the $ 6 million paid by the steamship company to settle the underlying action). The Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) C.C. 3333.2 limits the recovery of noneconomic damages by an injured party against a health care provider to $ 250,000, and a health care provider may invoke this limit in an action for partial equitable indemnity based on professional negligence. To the extent the statute precludes recovery for noneconomic damages against health care providers in excess of $ 250,000, it concomitantly limits their joint liability irrespective of proportionate fault. Concurrent tortfeasors therefore have no right of indemnification beyond that amount. (8 C.4th 111, 116.)

(b) Application of the statute in this case neither contravenes nor implicates the Supremacy Clause. Allowing the hospital to invoke C.C. 3333.2 does not impair the company's rights or interests under federal maritime law; "it simply leaves one concurrent tortfeasor to pay more of the loss than its proportionate fault." (8 C.4th 117, footnote 13.)

(c) The hospital was not a party to the underlying action, and the record does not show that it received notice of the proposed settlement. Nevertheless, the trial judge accepted the settlement amount as a reasonable basis for fixing liability. On remand, plaintiff must carry the burden of proving the amount of the employee's damages, including an allocation of economic and noneconomic loss. (8 C.4th 118.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1308 [Western Steamship Lines].)

[§ 963] Action Under Federal Patient-Dumping Statute.

In Barris v. Los Angeles (1999) 20 C.4th 101, 83 C.R.2d 145, 972 P.2d 966, plaintiff sued defendant county under the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act (EMTALA) (42 U.S.C., §1395dd), a federal statute enacted to prevent "patient dumping." The jury returned a special verdict for plaintiff after finding that a county hospital had failed to stabilize the emergency medical condition of plaintiff's infant daughter before transferring her to another hospital, where she died. The trial judge reduced the jury's $ 1.35 million noneconomic damages award to $ 250,000, pursuant to the MICRA cap on noneconomic damages in actions "based upon professional negligence." Held, affirmed. The damages cap of C.C. 3333.2 applied, because plaintiff's statutory claim was based on professional negligence.

(a) EMTALA expressly incorporates state substantive limits on "damages available for personal injury" (see 42 U.S.C., §1395dd(d)(2)(A)). Congress' choice of the term "personal injury" was intended to be inclusive, i.e., to incorporate not only any general provisions for personal injury damages, but also any specific provisions, such as limits applicable to malpractice damages. Congress was not required to refer specifically to malpractice damages caps or limitations on noneconomic damages, or to use other explicitly limiting language in order to incorporate these limits. (20 C.4th 112.)

(b) The court's task in determining whether the MICRA cap applies to a particular kind of EMTALA claim, such as a claim for failure to stabilize, properly involves examining the legal theory underlying the particular claim and the nature of the conduct challenged to determine whether, under California law, it would constitute professional negligence subject to C.C. 3333.2. Here, MICRA applies. (20 C.4th 113.) Professional negligence, for purposes of California law, constitutes medical treatment falling below the professional standard of care. Although not identical to a state malpractice claim because it includes additional requirements, an EMTALA claim for failure to stabilize is based on professional negligence. A plaintiff must prove that the hospital did not, within its available staff and facilities, provide a patient known to be suffering from an emergency medical condition with medical treatment necessary to assure, within reasonable medical probability, that no deterioration of the condition would likely occur. The standard of "reasonable medical probability" is an objective one, inextricably interwoven with the professional standard for rendering medical treatment. (20 C.4th 114.)

[§ 964] Periodic Payments.

In Salgado v. Los Angeles (1998) 19 C.4th 629, 80 C.R.2d 46, 967 P.2d 585, a medical malpractice case, plaintiff sought both economic and noneconomic damages, i.e., recovery for medical costs and for pain and suffering. The jury was instructed that there was no definite standard or method for determining noneconomic damages. They were also charged that they were to arrive at the present cash value for economic damages but were not informed that they were to determine the present cash value of noneconomic damages. For plaintiff's noneconomic injuries, the jury awarded $ 10,000 for past and $ 550,000 for future pain and suffering. The trial court applied the MICRA statutory cap of $ 250,000 and, subtracting the $ 10,000 award, reduced the award for future pain and suffering to $ 240,000. On motion by defendant, it ordered the $ 240,000 to be paid in periodic installments over the course of plaintiff's life expectancy of 66.8 years, funded by a $ 61,785 annuity purchased by defendant. The Court of Appeal generally affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) This matter involves the application of two provisions of MICRA. C.C.P. 667.7 allows the court, at the request of either party, to order that an award for future damages exceeding $ 50,000 in an action against a health care provider be paid on a periodic basis rather than in a lump sum. C.C. 3333.2 places a cap of $ 250,000 on the liability of a health care provider in an action based on professional negligence. (19 C.4th 638.)

(b) The "present value rule"--that future damages must be reduced to the present value if awarded in a lump sum--does not apply to pain and suffering damages. A jury award for future pain and suffering has generally been regarded as the jury's rough estimate of the amount of money paid at the time of judgment that would compensate the plaintiff for all future pain and suffering, rather than as an amount, like future lost earnings or other future economic loss, that should be discounted to present value. It follows, in the absence of any legislative history to the contrary, that when the Legislature capped medical malpractice awards at $ 250,000, it meant the limit to apply to a lump sum paid at the time of the judgment, or the present value of periodic future payments, and not to the gross sum of all of these future payments that would be funded by an annuity in a smaller amount. The record in the present case indicates that the jury calculated the value of noneconomic losses in current dollars; they were not instructed to discount the award or told that the award might be disbursed in periodic payments. Thus, plaintiff was entitled to the equivalent of a $ 240,000 lump sum as of the date of judgment, not a total of $ 240,000 over the course of his lifetime. (19 C.4th 643.)

(c) "[W]hen future noneconomic damages are sought, the jury should be instructed expressly that they are to assume that an award of future damages is a present value sum, i.e., they are to determine the amount in current dollars paid at the time of judgment that will compensate a plaintiff for future pain and suffering. In the absence of such instruction, unless the record clearly establishes otherwise, awards of future damages will be considered to be stated in terms of their present or current value." (19 C.4th 646.) (See BAJI, No. 14.13 [measure of damages for pain and suffering from medical malpractice]; BAJI, No. 16.01 [special verdict in medical malpractice case]; CACI, Nos. 3905A and VF-500 [same].)

[§ 965] Intentional Torts.

In Perry v. Shaw (2001) 88 C.A.4th 658, 106 C.R.2d 70, following a substantial loss of weight, plaintiff asked defendant doctor to surgically remove excess skin. Various types of breast enlargement and lifting were also discussed, but, four times, plaintiff declined to undergo these procedures. Plaintiff finally signed a form that included consent to breast lifting, but only after she was medicated, taken to the operating room, and reassured by defendant that he would not perform breast surgery. Nevertheless, when plaintiff awoke from the skin removal surgery, she found that defendant had augmented her breasts from a 34B to a 40DD. Plaintiff sued, alleging both negligence and battery, and obtained an award of $ 1,030,000. Held, affirmed; C.C. 3333.2, limiting recovery for noneconomic losses to $ 250,000, does not apply to intentional torts.

(a) When a doctor obtains consent for one type of treatment and subsequently performs a substantially different treatment for which consent was not obtained, a battery has occurred. However, if an undisclosed, but known-to-be-possible complication results that requires deviation from the treatment consented to, the authorities are divided. The prevailing view is that the resulting action is one for negligence. In the present case, however, it is clear that defendant performed a battery. (88 C.A.4th 663, citing Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 C.3d 229, 104 C.R. 505, 502 P.2d 1, supra, §397.)

(b) Based on the legislative history and slight variations in language, courts have held that some provisions of MICRA apply to intentional torts and some do not. For example, Noble v. Superior Court (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1189, 237 C.R. 38, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §656, held that C.C.P. 364 applies only to causes of action based on negligence, but Herrera v. Superior Court (1984) 158 C.A.3d 255, 204 C.R. 553, supra, §951, concluded that C.C.P. 1295 encompasses all theories that might be included in a medical malpractice action, including intentional torts. (88 C.A.4th 664.)

(c) Although the cap on noneconomic damages, which is an integral part of MICRA, could arguably be construed broadly in order to effectuate the Act's purpose of controlling the size of medical malpractice awards, C.C. 3333.2 states that the cap applies to actions based on "professional negligence," and there is nothing in the legislative history of MICRA generally or C.C. 3333.2 specifically suggesting that the Legislature intended to extend the $ 250,000 limitation to intentional torts. In fact, Cobbs was decided 3 years before the enactment of MICRA, and the Legislature thus knew, when it defined "professional negligence," that there existed a species of battery that the California Supreme Court had held was not negligence. Given the draconian nature of C.C. 3333.2, it must be narrowly construed. (88 C.A.4th 668.)

(d) Defendant contended that he was entitled to an allocation of the noneconomic damages between negligence and battery. This contention is without merit. Waters v. Bourhis (1985) 40 C.3d 424, 220 C.R. 666, 709 P.2d 469, supra, §944, supports the rule that when a plaintiff knowingly chooses to proceed on both a non-MICRA and a MICRA cause of action, and obtains a recovery that may be based on a non-MICRA theory, the limitations of the MICRA statutes do not apply. This rule is applicable in the present case. (88 C.A.4th 669.)

(e) Defendant further contended that limiting the cap on noneconomic damages to negligence cases would defeat MICRA's policy of cost containment. However, in the 26 years since MICRA was enacted, this is the first time that this issue has reached the appellate level. "If the floodgates are there, they are holding back droplets, not a deluge." (88 C.A.4th 671.)

[§ 966] Authorization.

(1) In General. The court, on request of either party, must order periodic payments for future damages when the damages equal or exceed $ 50,000. (C.C.P. 667.7(a).) (See 7 Pacific L. J. 548.) "Future damages" include damages for future medical treatment, care, or custody, loss of future earnings, loss of bodily function, and future pain and suffering. (C.C.P. 667.7(e)(1).) "Periodic payments" means payment of money or delivery of property "at regular intervals." (C.C.P. 667.7(e)(2).) (On meaning of total value of payments for purpose of computing contingent fees, see Schneider v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1311, 1317, 264 C.R. 227, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §213; for rejection of award of interest on periodic payments, see Schiernbeck v. Haight (1992) 7 C.A.4th 869, 9 C.R.2d 716, infra, §969; on use of gross award in fashioning periodic payments and the duration of these payments, see Holt v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1999) 73 C.A.4th 871, 876, 881, 86 C.R.2d 752; on propriety of crediting bulk of settlement to past lost wages and past expenses, rather than to apportioning it between past and future expenses, see Deocampo v. Ahn (2002) 101 C.A.4th 758, 771, 125 C.R.2d 79, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §81.)

The statute is mandatory not discretionary. (Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665 (supra, §957.)) (On rejection of constitutional challenges to C.C.P. 667.7, see American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 C.3d 359, 204 C.R. 671, 683 P.2d 670, supra, §941.)

(2) Earnings During Lost Years. In Hurlbut v. Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 C.A.3d 388, 254 C.R. 840, involving brain injury to plaintiff child resulting from defendant hospital's failure to perform a timely cesarean section, the jury returned a special verdict for plaintiff for $ 350,000 for loss of future earnings. Defendant's request that the judgment provide for monthly payments of $ 36,892 commencing at age 18 and payable through plaintiff's life expectancy of 27.5 years was denied. Held, this was correct procedure in view of defendant's failure to propose sufficient special findings.

(a) Although C.C.P. 667.7 ordinarily requires the trial judge, when requested, to order periodic payment of an award for loss of future earnings, Fein recognized a limited exception for an award for loss of earnings during a plaintiff's "lost years," i.e., the time by which his life expectancy was diminished by the defendant's negligence. (207

C.A.3d 405.) Only that portion of such an award that would likely be spent on the plaintiff's dependents is subject to periodic payment, and the defendant has the burden of establishing this portion. (207 C.A.3d 406.)

(b) Here, plaintiff was entitled to lost earnings resulting from disability during her lifetime, i.e., from age 18 through age 27.5, as well as lost years damages, but only the portion of the award stemming from disability is subject to periodic payment. However, defendant, although obtaining a special verdict as to the amount of lost future earnings, neither presented evidence nor sought special findings on apportionment of those earnings. And it is impossible to determine whether the jury awarded damages for losses during plaintiff's shortened life expectancy only, or for the entire period of her normal expected work life. (207 C.A.3d 406.)

(c) Trial judges should permit extensive use of the special verdict procedure so that the individual components of future damages can be ascertained and the periodic payment schedule knowledgeably established. (207 C.A.3d 407.)

"It is the intent of the Legislature in enacting this section to authorize the entry of judgments in malpractice actions against health care providers which provide for the payment of future damages through periodic payments rather than lump-sum payments. By authorizing periodic payment judgments, it is the further intent of the Legislature that the courts will utilize such judgments to provide compensation sufficient to meet the needs of an injured plaintiff and those persons who are dependent on the plaintiff for whatever period is necessary while eliminating the potential windfall from a lump-sum recovery which was intended to provide for the care of an injured plaintiff over an extended period who then dies shortly after the judgment is paid, leaving the balance of the judgment award to persons and purposes for which it was not intended. It is also the intent of the Legislature that all elements of the periodic payment program be specified with certainty in the judgment ordering such payments and that the judgment not be subject to modification at some future time which might alter the specifications of the original judgment." c. Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA).
8. Periodic Payments.
cc. Procedure.

[§ 968] Procedure.

(1) In General. A request for periodic payments must be made prior to entry of judgment. (Craven v. Crout (1985) 163 C.A.3d 779, 784, 209 C.R. 649.) After a timely request, the court must make a specific finding of the dollar amount of periodic payments that will compensate for future damages, and, if the defendant is not adequately insured, the court must require the posting of adequate security as a condition to the payments. (C.C.P. 667.7(a).)

The judgment must specify the recipient or recipients, the dollar amount, the interval between payments, and the number or period of payments. Payments may be modified only on the death of the judgment creditor. (C.C.P. 667.7(b)(1).) But in this event, payments must continue to those to whom the judgment creditor owed a duty of support immediately prior to his or her death. (C.C.P. 667.7(c).)

The Insurance Code specifies certain provisions that may not be included in an agreement to transfer periodic payment rights of the plaintiff. Inclusion of a prohibited provision makes the agreement void and unenforceable, and these requirements may not be waived. (See Ins.C. 10134(i), 10134(o), 10138; on structured settlements, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §31.)

In Hrimnak v. Watkins (1995) 38 C.A.4th 964, 45 C.R.2d 514, defendant doctor failed to timely diagnose and treat plaintiff, then 10 months old, for meningitis. The jury, by a special verdict, awarded plaintiff damages that included future damages over $ 50,000. Defendant moved to schedule periodic payments under C.C.P. 667.7. The trial judge ordered most of the judgment paid over 15 years annually "on [a certain date] commencing in January 15, 1994 ... including interest at the legal rate [10 percent] until the 15th year in which all remaining sums ... shall be paid in full." Held, reversed in part; in applying C.C.P. 667.7, the trial judge made the following errors:

(a) The trial judge failed to specify the amount of the periodic payments. C.C.P. 667.7 specifically requires that "the dollar amount of the payments" be specified. (38 C.A.4th 974.)

(b) The trial judge erred by periodizing the present value of future economic damages instead of their gross amount.

If the present value award is periodized, a plaintiff may not be fully compensated for future losses. In effect, the judgment will be discounted twice: first, by reducing the gross amount to present value, and second, by deferring payment. (38 C.A.4th 974.)

(c) The trial judge erred in awarding interest at the legal rate on the future damages. Through this award of interest, the trial judge tried to counteract the double discount factor. The proper approach, however, is for the jury to determine the gross amount and the judge to determine a periodic payment schedule for that amount. "This approach more accurately reflects future damages, is more in tune with the respective roles for the jury and the court in implementing section 667.7, and does not implicate the problem of interest being awarded on periodic payments that are not yet due." (38 C.A.4th 974.)

(d) In structuring a periodic payment schedule, a trial judge is guided by the evidence of future damages introduced at trial. The basic goal is to match losses with compensation. However, by ordering annual installments for 15 years, beginning in 1994, the trial judge ignored the fact that plaintiff was just 4 years old at the time of trial in 1993. In other words, she would be just starting her working life when her periodic payments would end. (38 C.A.4th 975, citing American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 C.3d 359, 204 C.R. 671, 683 P.2d 670, supra, §941.)

(e) The trial judge also did not fairly correlate the evidence of plaintiff's future economic needs with their periodic payment. The 15-year periodic payment schedule did not correlate these future economic needs with the evidence of when they would arise. Although a precise match between future losses and compensation is not required, a periodic payment schedule must, nevertheless, have evidence to support it. (38 C.A.4th 976, citing American Bank & Trust Co.) (See Salgado v. Los Angeles (1998) 19 C.4th 629, 643, 80 C.R.2d 46, 967 P.2d 585 [MICRA limit on noneconomic damages applies to present value of periodic payments, not to gross sum of those payments].)

(2) Period Less Than Plaintiff's Life Expectancy. In Atkins v. Strayhorn (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1380, 273 C.R. 231, the jury found plaintiff's life expectancy to be 6 years, and defendant doctor argued that the payments should be uniform over a 6-year period. Instead, the judge ordered payments over 4 years, "implicitly finding" that plaintiff's anticipated expenses and losses in the future would be incurred in a shorter period of time than his projected life expectancy. Held, this determination was a proper exercise of discretion. "Nowhere in the statutory scheme or legislative history is the court's periodic payment schedule necessarily dependent on, nor must it directly correspond to, a plaintiff's life expectancy. Instead, life expectancy is one of several factors for the court to consider in structuring a periodic payment schedule 'for whatever period is necessary.' ... The fact periodic payments may cease before a plaintiff's death does not defeat the statutory purposes of providing sufficient compensation to meet the plaintiff's needs and preventing a windfall in the event of the plaintiff's early death." (223 C.A.3d 1397.)

(3) Failure To Make Payments. If the court finds a "continuing pattern" of failure to make payments, it must find the judgment debtor in contempt, and order payment of all damages caused by the failure to make payments, including costs and attorneys' fees. (C.C.P. 667.7(b)(2).)

[§ 969] No Interest on Periodic Payments.

In Schiernbeck v. Haight (1992) 7 C.A.4th 869, 9 C.R.2d 716, plaintiff brought a malpractice action against defendant doctor and obtained a verdict that included $ 178,000 for future economic damages and $ 100,000 for future noneconomic damages. On defendant's motion under C.C.P. 667.7, the trial judge ordered that a lump sum payment of $ 50,000, to be taken equally from both future economic damages and future noneconomic damages, be paid within 30 days. The balance of the future economic damages ($ 153,000) was to be paid in equal monthly installments over 16 years, and the balance of the future noneconomic damages ($ 75,000) was to be paid in equal annual installments over 10 years. On the assumption that the verdict reflected an award of future damages in present value terms, the trial judge ordered that the periodic payments bear interest at 10% annually. Held, judgment modified to strike the award of interest and, as modified, affirmed.

(a) Interest is not constitutionally mandated. Cal. Const., Art. XV, §1, specifying the rate of interest on judgments (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §273), does not apply to the question presented here, i.e., when, instead of whether, interest should accrue. "The California Constitution does not say interest must accrue before the judgment or any part of it is due. Where a party will suffer no loss until a future date, constitutional considerations do not require interest to accrue on such sum before the damages are sustained, even though the party may have a judgment to enforce the future loss when and if the installments due under the judgment are not timely paid. We therefore hold the interest award here cannot be supported on the basis of" Cal. Const., Art. XV, §1. (7 C.A.4th 873.)

(b) No interest on payments for future losses not reduced to present value. An unpaid balance reflecting future loss that has not been reduced to present cash value should not bear interest. If the future damages provision of the award is not paid when judgment is entered, the plaintiff suffers no detriment, because the injury for which the payment is intended to compensate has not yet occurred. In other words, a periodic payment due on some future date is not unpaid until that date. Hence, interest, which is only awarded to compensate a delay in payment, is inappropriate, because compensation for future needs involves no delay. Although there is considerable appeal to the argument that interest is proper where the award for future damages has been reduced to present value, there is no need to address this matter, because the verdict here contained no reduction. (7 C.A.4th 874.)

(c) Award for future economic damages was not reduced to present value. Plaintiff produced three witnesses to support his future economic damage claim, but none of them indicated that he was calculating damages in present value terms. Without this evidence, there was no basis for the trial judge's conclusion that the future economic damages award had been reduced to present value. (7 C.A.4th 875.) Plaintiff argued that, based on the ambiguity of the verdict and the record in the case, the trial judge correctly interpreted the verdict in his favor. This position is without merit. Although, with respect to future economic losses, the trial judge instructed the jury to award the present cash value of future medical expenses and of lost earning capacity, he did not, based on agreement of counsel for both parties, give the instruction (BAJI, No. 14.70) explaining the meaning of "present cash value." Furthermore, there was also no evidence on how to determine the present value of future loss, such as evidence of compounding or discounting factors, including how to calculate an appropriate rate of return throughout the relevant years. (7 C.A.4th 876.) And, except for a brief ambiguous reference by plaintiff's attorney, the present value concept was not presented in either counsel's closing argument. Under these circumstances, the jury would have been forced to engage in sheer speculation in determining the present sum of money that would pay to plaintiff the equivalent of his future economic loss. (7 C.A.4th 877.)

(1) Plaintiff argued that defendant, as the drafter of the special verdict form, waived his right to complain about the trial judge's interpretation of the verdict in present value terms. This argument was based on the contract principle that ambiguities are to be resolved against the drafting party. However, the rule is inapplicable to the preparation of a special verdict form where, as here, the form was prepared under the trial judge's supervision, each party had equal power to object to any portion of the form, and the trial judge specifically approved the form before he submitted it to the jury. (7 C.A.4th 878.)

(2) Defendant did not waive his right to object to the trial judge's interpretation by failing to submit present value instructions or evidence. When a party requests periodic future payments under C.C.P. 667.7, the trial judge must fashion the payments based on the gross amount of future damages. (7 C.A.4th 878, citing Gorman v. Leftwich (1990) 218 C.A.3d 141, 266 C.R. 671, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §353.) "Thus, where as here, the evidence will probably result in a verdict of at least $ 50,000 in future damages, the defendant has no obligation to present evidence, request instructions, or submit a special verdict form regarding present value." (7 C.A.4th 878.) And no such duty is imposed by Hurlbut v. Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 C.A.3d 388, 254 C.R. 840, supra, §966. That decision, which involved the defendant's failure to request special findings to clarify which part of lost future earnings was based on reduced life expectancy and hence was not subject to periodic payments, is not applicable to the present case, which involves no allegations of a shortened life span. (7 C.A.4th 878.)

(3) There is also no merit to plaintiff's contention that defendant's failure to seek clarification of the verdict before the jury was dismissed constituted a waiver. A party adversely affected by an ambiguous verdict waives the right to complain only where the failure to object is designed to reap a technical advantage or engage in a litigious strategy. (7 C.A.4th 879, citing Woodcock v. Fontana Scaffolding & Equipment Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 452, 459, 72 C.R. 217, 445 P.2d 881, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §379.) Here, given the lack of evidence and instructions on the subject of present value, defendant could not have known that the verdict was ambiguous at the time that it was rendered. It was only after plaintiff began arguing that the verdict was stated in present value terms that the issue arose. (7 C.A.4th 879.)

(e) No interest on future noneconomic damages.

(1) The rationale for denying interest on periodic payments of future economic awards does not apply where the jury awards future noneconomic damages capped at $ 250,000 under C.C. 3333.2 (supra, §958). If the actual amount of the damages is, for example, $ 3 million rather than $ 250,000, the periodic payments, which are based on the latter figure, will not compensate the plaintiff for his or her suffering. In that situation, an award of interest on the periodic payments would not overcompensate the plaintiff, because it would not represent payment for damages to be suffered in the future. (7 C.A.4th 880.)

(2) This unfairness can be reduced or possibly eliminated if the jury is not told of the $ 250,000 ceiling for noneconomic damages. Then if the jury verdict is substantially greater than this ceiling, the trial judge can tailor the amount and timing of the periodic payments so that the compensation the plaintiff will be receiving periodically will more accurately mirror his or her pain and suffering. For example, if the jury finds that the plaintiff will suffer noneconomic damages of at least $ 250,000 during the first year following the trial, the trial judge can periodicize the $ 250,000 over that relatively brief period of time, thereby preventing the plaintiff from being denied compensation for noneconomic damages already incurred. (7 C.A.4th 881.)

(3) The potential unfairness resulting from the statutory ceiling on noneconomic damages does not require an award of interest in this case. After being instructed on the statutory ceiling, the jury awarded the maximum of $ 250,000 ($ 150,000 for past noneconomic damages and $ 100,000 for future noneconomic damages). Although it is impossible to determine for certain whether the award for future noneconomic damages would have been greater had the jury not been so constrained, it is probable that the award would not have exceeded the $ 150,000 requested by plaintiff's attorney, i.e., $ 3,600 annually for his life expectancy of 50 years. However, under the 10-year payment schedule, plaintiff will receive $ 7,500 annually ($ 100,000 minus the lump sum payment of $ 25,000 divided by 10), thereby recouping his loss for pain and suffering over a shorter period and in greater annual amounts than would have been the case had the jury awarded the amount of $ 150,000. Hence, because each installment will fully compensate plaintiff for his future noneconomic damages, no unfairness resulted, and the award of interest was improper. (7 C.A.4th 881.)

[§ 970] Attorneys' Fees When Periodic Payments Are Awarded.

In Nguyen v. Los Angeles County Harbor/UCLA Med. Center (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1433, 48 C.R.2d 301, plaintiff's attorneys requested future damages in periodic payments under C.C.P. 667.7. The request made no mention of how attorneys' fees were to be paid from the judgment. The trial court granted this request and provided in the judgment for a cash payment for past damages plus periodic payments of future damages. The attorneys, thereafter realizing that their fees might exceed the cash payment, requested the court to determine fees under B. & P.C. 6146 (supra, §942) and amend the judgment to have defendant pay the fee award directly to the attorneys and offset it against the periodic payments. In this way, the attorneys would recover the full amount of their fees at present, instead of receiving a small percentage out of each future periodic payment to the plaintiff. Held, order denying attorneys' request affirmed; the trial court lacked jurisdiction to amend the periodic payments portion of the final judgment.

(a) Generally, the preferable approach when a damage award is split between a current cash payment and periodic payments of future damages is to satisfy the attorneys' fees immediately out of the cash payment. (40 C.A.4th 1444.) The plaintiff's attorney has done what he or she was retained to do once the judgment has been entered. If the fee is to be paid over time out of periodic payments, the attorney may never receive it, should the plaintiff die before the fee is recovered. Under C.C.P. 667.7, periodic payments ordinarily cease on the plaintiff's death. If the plaintiff's expected life span is cut short, the tortfeasor whose negligence was responsible for the plaintiff's injury receives a windfall at the expense of the attorney whose labor produced the judgment. This was clearly not the intent of the Legislature in enacting C.C.P. 667.7. (40 C.A.4th 1445.)

(b) Situations may occur in which it would be contrary to the client's best interests to allow full recovery of attorneys' fees out of the cash payment, e.g., where the plaintiff has fallen deeply in debt due to substantial medical bills and inability to work, and payment of attorneys' fees would eat up virtually all of the cash payment under the judgment. (40 C.A.4th 1445.) In that situation, at least a portion of the attorneys' fees would have to be deferred and paid out of the future periodic payments awarded to the client. One approach that allows the full amount of attorneys' fees to be paid immediately is to reduce all or a part of the periodic payments by an amount sufficient to cover the balance of attorneys' fees and add that sum to the cash payment under the judgment. This is permissible under C.C.P. 667.7(a), which gives the trial court authority to order future damages to be paid "in whole or in part by periodic payments." (40 C.A.4th 1446.)

(c) Under the "pay-and-recoup" plan suggested by plaintiff's attorneys, the defendant would pay the plaintiff an advance against future periodic payments in an amount sufficient to meet the plaintiff's attorneys' fees in full; the defendant would then recover this advance by reducing the future periodic payments to the plaintiff by a percentage to be determined by the court until the amount of the advance has been recouped. The first advantage to this approach is that the plaintiff's attorneys receive the full fee immediately rather than having to wait years for its payment. The second is that the tortfeasor defendant, rather than plaintiffs' attorneys, bears the risk of the plaintiff's death, at least as to the fees for the legal work that held the tortfeasor accountable. This is an appropriate allocation of risk. (40 C.A.4th 1447.)

(d) Unfortunately, plaintiffs' attorneys failed to appreciate and deal with the dilemma faced in collecting their fees at a time when they had the opportunity to do so. By requesting future damages by means of periodic payments, the attorneys are now locked into that judgment. The judgment is final, and it may not be amended to alter the provision regarding periodic payments. The time had long passed to amend the pleadings under C.C.P. 473 (5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1126 et seq.), and the modification could not be justified as the correction of a clerical error in the judgment. Furthermore, the modification would conflict with C.C.P. 667.7(f), which states that a judgment ordering periodic payments is not "subject to modification at some future time which might alter the specifications of the original judgment." (40 C.A.4th 1447.) While the judgment may be amended to reflect the correct amount of attorneys' fees, it may not be amended to alter the periodic payment provisions. (40 C.A.4th 1448.)

(e) Even experienced attorneys may encounter pitfalls in collecting fees in a MICRA case. Attorneys like counsel here should request the trial court to stay entry of judgment, under C.C.P. 664 (7 Cal. Proc.(4th), Trial, §438), until the amount and method of payment of attorneys' fees have been determined. The court can then enter judgment dividing future damages between lump sum and periodic payments as appropriate; and the plaintiff, if dissatisfied with the judgment, will have a clear path to appellate review. (40 C.A.4th 1448.) (See Deocampo v. Ahn (2002) 101 C.A.4th 758, 774, 125 C.R.2d 79, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §81 [trial judge did not err in refusing to use portion of periodic payments of future damages to pay plaintiff's attorney fee; following Nguyen].)

[§ 972] Diagnosis of Battered Child Syndrome.

In Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 C.3d 399, 131 C.R. 69, 551 P.2d 389, plaintiff, a minor, brought this action in 1971 against F, a doctor, and S Hospital, for damages for failure to diagnose the condition of battered child syndrome and take appropriate action. The complaint alleged that plaintiff had been badly beaten by her mother and her mother's common law husband, who then took her to the hospital; Dr. F negligently failed to take X-rays that would have revealed a skull fracture and the true condition, and negligently released her to the mother and husband who beat her again; later, she was brought to a different hospital where her condition was diagnosed and a report made to the authorities; and thereafter, the mother and husband were convicted of child abuse, and plaintiff was placed with foster parents. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed.

(a) Standard of care. Medical and legal literature in recent years has recognized the battered child syndrome (injuries not inflicted by accidental means) as one that can be medically diagnosed. However, the court cannot declare, as a matter of law, that a reasonably prudent physician in 1971 would have made this diagnosis. The question is one of fact to be decided on the basis of expert testimony, and the trial court erred in concluding as a matter of law that the standard of professional care did not include this diagnostic and treatment procedure. (17 C.3d 409, 410.)

(b) Foreseeable intervening cause. The continued beating of plaintiff after her original release from the hospital was an intervening act. It would not be a superseding cause if it was reasonably foreseeable. (17 C.3d 411; see infra, §1215.) But foreseeability, both as to duty and causation, is generally a question of fact, and the trial judge erred in concluding as a matter of law that the further beating was not foreseeable. Plaintiff is entitled to prove that defendants should reasonably have foreseen that plaintiff's caretakers were likely to inflict further injuries on her. (17 C.3d 412.)

(c) Suspected Child Abuse. Plaintiff also pleaded a "cause of action" for failure to report suspected child abuse, as required by the Penal Code (see supra, §250 et seq.). The purpose of this alternative theory was to raise the presumption of negligence per se under Ev.C. 669 (supra, §871 et seq.) (17 C.3d 413.) But to rely on the statute, plaintiff must prove the state of mind of the doctor; and, although the statute is ambiguous on this, the proper construction is to resolve the ambiguity in favor of the offender and require a showing that it actually appeared to him or her that the injuries were intentionally inflicted on the child. (17 C.3d 415.) (See 73 A.L.R.4th 782 [validity and effect of state statute requiring doctor or other person to report child abuse].)

In Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 C.A.3d 388, 239 C.R. 454, the complaint alleged that plaintiff sought treatment from defendant physician for a physical disorder, and that he initiated and maintained a sexual relationship with her during the course of treatment. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) An action for professional negligence arises out of breach of the duty of care owed to the patient within the scope of the patient-physician relationship; and the cases uphold recovery where the patient is induced to have sexual relations on the pretext that this is a necessary part of the treatment. (194 C.A.3d 393; see supra, §416.)

(b) Here, there was no allegation that an inducement; the only basis for the complaint was that the treatment and sexual relations took place over the same period of time. "Essentially, appellant complains that she had an unhappy affair with a man who happened to be her doctor." (194 C.A.3d 393.)

Under the rule denying recovery unless the patient is induced to have sexual relations on the pretext that the relations are a necessary part of the treatment, the term "pretext" has been defined broadly to refer to "all the surrounding circumstances that would lead a reasonable person, given his or her peculiar situation, to interpret the doctor's conduct to be a part of the treatment for the patient's particular injury or illness." Thus, the rule does not mean that the doctor must directly inform the patient that the sexual conduct is a part of the therapy. (McNall v. Summers (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1300, 1313, 30 C.R.2d 914 [nonsuit was improperly granted; patient testified that she thought sexual intercourse with him was part of treatment, and expert testified that patient acted under compulsion of regressive sexual transference resulting from mishandled therapy].)

d. Diagnosis or Treatment.

4. Delayed Diagnosis.

[§ 974] Delayed Diagnosis.

In Dumas v. Cooney (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1593, 1 C.R.2d 584, plaintiff brought a malpractice action against defendant doctors based on their alleged failure in 1984 to discover his lung cancer. The diagnosis was not made until 1986, at which time plaintiff had the tumor and part of his right lung removed. There was a reoccurrence in 1989, and plaintiff died 6 days after the jury rendered a verdict in his favor. At trial, plaintiff's expert, after opining that plaintiff's tumor was at stage 3A in 1986 but only at stage 1 in 1984, testified that the chances for surviving disease-free for 5 years were 67% for stage 1, 33% for stage 2, and 15% for stage 3. The jury was instructed that damages for medical malpractice could be based on evidence that it was a reasonable medical probability that plaintiff would have benefited by possible cure, lengthening of life, or improved personal comfort from more prompt diagnosis or treatment. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; the instruction, which incorporated the theory of lost chance, was prejudicial error.

(1) Under the traditional rule of causation in malpractice cases, causation must be proved within a reasonable medical probability based on competent expert testimony. And malpractice as a possible cause of an injury becomes a probable cause when, in the absence of other reasonable causal explanation, it becomes more likely than not that the injury was a result of its action. (235 C.A.3d 1603.)

(2) The most fundamental argument against this traditional rule of causation is that, through negligence, a physician can reduce a patient's chances of survival from as high as 50% to, for example, 10%, and yet remain unanswerable in the law of tort. Faced with a lost chance and this traditional "all or nothing" prospect, some courts in other jurisdictions have allowed recovery by adopting a relaxed standard of causation that permits recovery when the plaintiff establishes a substantial possibility of causation. Other courts have adopted the lost chance theory. (235 C.A.3d 1604.)

(3) Under the lost chance approach, the injury to be redressed is not the plaintiff's death or failure to have a better result, but rather the loss of a chance at survival or better result. Where the testimony establishes a probability of a better result absent a doctor's negligence, a finding for the plaintiff is consistent with existing principles of proximate cause. On the other hand, where the evidence indicates that there is less than a probability that proper conduct by the doctor would have produced a better result, i.e., a 50% possibility or a mere chance, there can be no recovery under the traditional approach. Nevertheless, under the lost chance theory, damages may be recovered for the loss of chance of a better result where that chance is substantial and can be identified and quantified without resort to conjecture. (235 C.A.3d 1605.)

(b) Rejection of lost chance theory.

(1) There are several arguments against expanding damages in medical malpractice cases to include damages for loss of chance. The lost chance theory produces more statistical errors than the traditional analysis. " 'To compare the two rules, assume a hypothetical group of 99 cancer patients, each of whom would have had a 33 1/3% chance of survival. Each received negligent medical care, and all 99 died. Traditional tort law would deny recovery in all 99 cases because each patient had less than a 5[1]% chance of recovery and the probable cause of death was the pre-existing cancer not the negligence. Statistically, had all 99 received proper treatment, 33 would have lived and 66 would have died; so the traditional rule would have statistically produced 33 errors by denying recovery to all 99. The loss of chance rule would allow all 99 patients to recover, but each would recover 33 1/3% of the normal value of the case. Again, with proper care 33 patients would have survived. Thus the 33 patients who statistically would have survived with proper care would receive only one-third of the appropriate recovery, while the 66 patients who died as a result of the pre-existing condition, not the negligence, would be overcompensated by one-third. The loss of chance rule would have produced errors in all 99 cases.' " (235 C.A.3d 1608, quoting a Maryland case.)

(2) Applying the lost chance rule in medical malpractice actions would lead to its application in actions involving other professions, including the legal profession. For example, if an unsuccessful litigant could show that there was a 40% chance of winning the case, but that his or her lawyer's negligence reduced that chance by some degree, the litigant would be able to pursue an action based on the lost chance doctrine. (235 C.A.3d 1609.)

(3) Although the lost chance approach is based on the theory that the lost chance is the injury, in reality it focuses on causation rather than injury and damages. A lost chance of survival or better result cannot be proved unless and until the death or adversity occurs. Otherwise, a court could be placed in a position of awarding damages with no injury, as in the case of a patient who miraculously recovers despite the negligence and unfavorable odds. Hence, the recognition of a lost chance as a cognizable injury is necessarily based on the reasoning that, but for the defendant's negligence, the plaintiff might have avoided an adverse result. And redefining lost chance as a new form of injury, as plaintiff attempted to do by placing a damage label on the instruction given here, does not diminish the fact that the theory radically alters the meaning of causation. (235 C.A.3d 1610.)

(c) Error was prejudicial. Plaintiff argued that the lost chance instruction was not prejudicial, because the verdict in his favor was based on his expert's testimony of a 67% chance of long-term survival for a stage 1 tumor, and hence, did not implicate the lost chance concept, but rather was consistent with the traditional rule of causation. This position is without merit. Plaintiff's expert also conceded that very few lung cancer patients are diagnosed at stage 1 and testified about the less-than-even chances for a long-term survival of patients diagnosed at stages 2 and 3. Hence, the jury could have concluded that plaintiff's cancer was actually at a more advanced stage that offered a less-than-even chance of long-term survival and still found for him under the lost chance theory. Because the probable effect of the instruction was to mislead the jury, it constituted prejudicial error. (235 C.A.3d 1612.) (See Bromme v. Pavitt (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1487, 1506, 7 C.R.2d 608, infra, §1188; *Duarte v. Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
e. Surgery.

[§ 976] Surgery.

(1) In General. Negligently performed surgery is another common foundation for a malpractice suit. (See Valdez v. Percy (1950) 35 C.2d 338, 342, 217 P.2d 422 [removal of breast as result of misdiagnosis]; Gluckstein v. Lipsett (1949) 93 C.A.2d 391, 396, 209 P.2d 98 [plastic surgery].)

In Custodio v. Bauer (1967) 251 C.A.2d 303, 59 C.R. 463, plaintiff sued three doctors for malpractice. Her complaint alleged that they recommended a sterilization operation because of her physical condition, she gave them a written agreement, they operated negligently and she became pregnant. Held, a cause of action was stated for negligent performance of the operation and for postoperative negligent failure to advise or prescribe for her to prevent conception. (251 C.A.2d 312.) The pleading also supported recovery on the theory of breach of contract. (251 C.A.2d 315.) Proximate cause was shown--the reasonably foreseeable sexual relations between plaintiff and her husband. (251 C.A.2d 316, citing the text.)

In Clark v. Gibbons (1967) 66 C.2d 399, 58 C.R. 125, 426 P.2d 525, plaintiff fractured her ankle and was operated on by Dr. G, an orthopedic surgeon, with Dr. S as anesthesiologist. She was given a spinal anesthetic because of having eaten a few hours before. Dr. G expected the operation to take 2 to 3 hours. The anesthetic selected could have been made by additions to last over 4 hours, but the anesthetic began to wear off too soon, Dr. G terminated the operation prematurely, and plaintiff suffered from permanent arthritis that concededly could have been a result of the failure to complete the operation. Held, independently of res ipsa loquitur (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §114 et seq.), the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict for plaintiff. The court listed the possible elements of negligence as follows: (a) Dr. S, selecting an anesthetic designed to last for a time insufficient for that estimated for the operation. (b) Dr. S, administering the anesthetic without noting its progress. (c) Dr. G, failing to warn Dr. S of the need for an anesthetic sufficient for an unusually long operation. (d) Dr. G, terminating the operation with knowledge of the danger involved and without considering the possibility of extending the anesthesia. (66 C.2d 406.)

(2) "Captain of the Ship" Doctrine. Under the "captain of the ship" doctrine, a surgeon is responsible for the acts and omissions of persons who assist the surgeon in the operating room under his or her direction. (See Ales v. Ryan (1936) 8 C.2d 82, 104, 64 P.2d 409; Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 C.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, infra, §1194; Armstrong v. Wallace (1935) 8 C.A.2d 429, 439, 47 P.2d 740; BAJI, No. 6.06; CACI, No. 510.)

In Thomas v. Intermedics Orthopedics (1996) 47 C.A.4th 957, 962, 55 C.R.2d 197, the doctrine was held inapplicable to the failure of a prosthetic supplier's agent to make available the correct prosthetic during a hip replacement operation. The doctrine requires that the negligence for which the surgeon is sought to be held liable (a) occur during the surgical procedure, and (b) be by a medical professional who is actively assisting the surgeon in carrying out the operation. The doctrine has never been applied to persons other than "medical personnel lending hands-on assistance within the surgical arena during the medical procedure." (47 C.A.4th 966.) (On liability of principal for torts of agent, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §163 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
f. Wrongful Birth: Action by Parent.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 977

[§ 977] In General.

(1) Wrongful Birth of Impaired Child. Originally, courts were reluctant to recognize any cause of action for negligent birth because of the public policy extolling the sanctity of fetal life. But the recognition of the constitutional right of a person to use contraceptives or procure an abortion (see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §560 et seq.) undermined the public policy objection, and courts today recognize an action by the parent of an impaired child against a doctor or medical laboratory for negligent failure to prevent conception or to terminate pregnancy. Typical examples of alleged negligence are unsuccessful vasectomies, sterilizations, and abortions, failure to advise the parent of the risks of bearing a deformed child, and improperly prescribed birth control drugs. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §288 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §5.10 et seq.; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 125 [drugs capable of causing birth defect]; 11 Cal. Western L. Rev. 136 [failure of oral contraceptives and sterilization]; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 2017 [case against legislative curtailment]; 17 Hastings L. J. 400; 36 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1677 [compensation for wrongful birth]; 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 530 [same]; 74 A.L.R.4th 798 [liability for tortiously causing another's birth].)

(2) Wrongful Birth of Unwanted Healthy Child. In Stills v. Gratton (1976) 55 C.A.3d 698, 127 C.R. 652, plaintiff, an unmarried and unemployed woman with a history of emotional problems, consulted defendant Dr. G about a suspected pregnancy. He confirmed it and performed a therapeutic abortion that was unsuccessful, and plaintiff gave birth to a healthy child. This action was brought by both the mother and the child against Dr. G and one other doctor, based on alleged negligence in performing the operation and in postoperative care. Held, the mother had a cause of action, and was improperly nonsuited; the child did not.

(a) The courts of some jurisdictions deny the mother's claim, assuming that the benefits of a child as a matter of law outweigh the burdens, or they limit the recovery to actual expenses and anxieties attending the unexpected pregnancy. (55 C.A.3d 707.)

(b) Other courts allow damages to the mother in accordance with ordinary tort principles; and Custodio v. Bauer (1967) 251 C.A.2d 303, 312, 59 C.R. 463, supra, §976, on similar facts, approves this view. (55 C.A.3d 708.)

In Morris v. Frudenberg (1982) 135 C.A.3d 23, 37, 185 C.R. 76, plaintiff sued defendant doctor for negligence in performing a tubal ligation, causing plaintiff's pregnancy and eventually the delivery of a healthy daughter. Plaintiff sought damages for loss of earnings and the cost of raising the child to age 18; the jury awarded only $ 1,708, the medical expenses in connection with the delivery. Held affirmed; the jury acted properly, in accordance with instructions, in taking into account the special benefits inherent in the parent-child relationship as an offset to the award of damages to plaintiff. (135 C.A.3d 37.) (See Foy v. Greenblott (1983) 141 C.A.3d 1, 190 C.R. 84, infra, §983 [no cause of action for wrongful birth where incompetent mother (conservatee) alleged only that defendants should have taken proper methods to prevent her from bearing child]; 89 A.L.R.4th 632 [recoverability of cost of raising normal healthy child born as result of physician's negligence or breach of contract or warranty].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
f. Wrongful Birth: Action by Parent.
2. Proximate Cause.

[§ 978] Proximate Cause.

In Simmons v. West Covina Med. Clinic (1989) 212 C.A.3d 696, 260 C.R. 772, plaintiffs, a mother and infant child, brought this action against defendant doctor and a hospital, alleging that defendants negligently failed to provide the mother with appropriate genetic testing and counseling; that the child was born with Down's syndrome; and that, had she learned of the abnormality, the mother would have terminated the pregnancy. The mother's action was for wrongful birth, the child's was for wrongful life. (212 C.A.3d 699, footnote 1; on wrongful life actions, see infra, §979 et seq.) The trial judge gave summary judgment for defendants on the ground that, assuming negligence, proximate cause was not established, because the AFP test identifies only 20% of pregnant women who are at risk with respect to Down's syndrome. Held, affirmed.

(a) Proximate cause was not established. Jones v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. (1985) 163 C.A.3d 396, 209 C.R. 456, infra, §1195, points out that there is an obvious distinction between a reasonable medical probability and a medical possibility. A possible cause only becomes probable when, "in the absence of other reasonable causal explanations, it becomes more likely than not that the injury was a result of its action." (212 C.A.3d 702.) Here, the 20% chance did not establish a reasonably probable causal connection. (212 C.A.3d 702.)

(b) Lost chance theory of recovery rejected.

(1) A number of cases in other jurisdictions have adopted the "lost chance theory" of recovery in medical malpractice cases where the defendants' negligence deprived the plaintiffs of a less than even chance of survival. (212 C.A.3d 704.) Many of these cases rely on Rest.2d, Torts §323, stating that one who undertakes to render services necessary for the protection of another is liable for physical harm resulting from failure to exercise reasonable care if the failure "increases the risk of such harm." (212 C.A.3d 705.)

(2) There is, however, a fundamental distinction between negligently reducing a patient's chance of survival and negligently depriving a woman of the chance to abort a genetically defective child. "[I]n the case of a genetically deformed child, it cannot be said that the hereditary condition was caused by the medical practitioner's negligence when no degree of medical intervention would have worked a cure. And where, as here, the probability of predicting the genetic defect is only 20 percent, we think established tort principles fairly impose liability only where there is a reasonable medical probability of predicting the outcome of the pregnancy." (212 C.A.3d 705.)

(3) To establish a more lenient standard of causation would be contrary to sound logic, legal precedent, and public policy. "It would unwisely encourage costly and unreasonable overtesting and overtreatment for defensive purposes. Physicians would find it necessary to place the requirements of the legal system before the needs and the finances of the patient. In addition, the physicians' increased exposure to liability would adversely impact already high medical malpractice premiums, resulting in an upward spiral of consumer costs. The uncertainty fostered by such a ruling would undoubtedly open the proverbial floodgates of our overburdened judicial system." (212 C.A.3d 706.)

(4) It is up to the Legislature to decide whether to provide a remedy for genetically defective children and their parents who are unable to prove to a reasonable medical certainty that medical negligence deprived the mother of the chance to terminate her pregnancy. (212 C.A.3d 706.) (See 12 Pepperdine L. Rev. 873; 54 A.L.R.4th 10; 81 A.L.R.4th 485 [medical malpractice: measure and elements of damages in actions based on loss of chance].)

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 979

[§ 979] In General.

An action for "wrongful life" is brought by an injured child against a doctor or medical institution on the theory that the child's very existence is wrongful and that he or she is entitled to recover damages from the defendant whose negligence resulted in the birth. A typical example is the failure of a pregnant woman's doctor to inform her that her illness--German measles--could cause defects in her child. Recovery by the child has been denied on the dual grounds that (1) a legal remedy contradicts the fundamental belief that human life has value, and (2) measuring damages by comparison of an impaired life with nonexistence is impossible. (See C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §5.1 et seq.; 22 Proof of Facts 3d 83 [brain-damaged infants]; 52 Am.Jur. Trials 347 [same]; 90 *Cal. L. [§ 980] Cause of Action Recognized.

Curlender v. Bio-Science Laboratories (1980) 106 C.A.3d 811, 165 C.R. 477, dealt with a question of first impression in California. "What remedy, if any, is available in this state to a severely impaired child--genetically defective--born as the result of defendants' negligence in conducting certain genetic tests of the child's parents--tests that, if properly done, would have disclosed the high probability that the actual, catastrophic result would occur?" (106 C.A.3d 814.)

Plaintiff, a baby girl, suing by her father as guardian ad litem, alleged that her parents retained defendant laboratories to administer tests to discover whether her parents were carriers of genes that would result in the conception and birth of a child with Tay-Sachs disease (amaurotic familial idiocy, a hereditary degenerative disease of the nervous system); that the tests were negligently performed, and incorrect information was given to plaintiff's parents; and that the parents, relying on these incorrect results, failed to avail themselves of amniocentesis (drawing of amniotic fluid to determine whether the child would be born with the disease) and a eugenic abortion. The complaint further alleged mental retardation, disability, physical suffering, and emotional distress, and sought compensatory damages for deprivation of life (based on an actuarial life expectancy of 70 years and actual expectancy of only 4 years). (106 C.A.3d 830.) Punitive damages of $ 3 million were also sought on allegations that defendants (the laboratory and doctor) knew that the test procedures were substantially inaccurate and that a false negative result would have catastrophic consequences to plaintiff, and therefore acted "in conscious disregard of the health, safety and well-being" of plaintiff. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed; the complaint stated a cause of action.

(a) Existing law rejecting action for wrongful life. These actions have been unsuccessfully brought in various jurisdictions on behalf of healthy children born illegitimate, and by genetically injured children. (106 C.A.3d 819.) Despite strong dissenting opinions challenging both of the grounds for denying recovery (106 C.A.3d 819, discussing New Jersey cases), the law of other states and California remains opposed to recovery. (106 C.A.3d 824, citing Stills v. Gratton (1976) 55 C.A.3d 698, 127 C.R. 652, supra, §977; on grounds for denying recovery, see supra, §979.)

(b) No action for birth of illegitimate or unwanted child. This action should not be recognized. In present society, illegitimacy may or may not prove to be an overwhelming obstacle to a normal life; hence, a necessary element of a tort cause of action--injury and damage resulting from that injury--is missing. (106 C.A.3d 825.)

(c) New approach to action for birth of impaired child. (1) There has been a gradual retreat from the position that impossibility of measuring damages is the sole ground for barring the infant's right of recovery--as seen in the cases allowing the parents of the impaired child to recover. (106 C.A.3d 826.) (2) There is no universal acceptance of the metaphysical or religious notion that the respect for "sanctity of life" calls for denial of recovery. The dissenting opinions in the child's action cases "have emphasized that considerations of public policy should include regard for social welfare as affected by careful genetic counseling and medical procedures." (106 C.A.3d 826.) (3) Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §561, determining that parents have a constitutional right to obtain an abortion, is of considerable significance in wrongful-life litigation. (106 C.A.3d 820, 826.) Another important factor is the increase in medical knowledge and skill needed to avoid genetic disaster. (106 C.A.3d 826.)

(d) New rule on birth of impaired child.

(1) Under the basic principles of duty laid down in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, a cause of action was stated. "We have no difficulty in ascertaining and finding the existence of a duty owed by medical laboratories engaged in genetic testing to parents and their as yet unborn children to use ordinary care in administration of available tests for the purpose of providing information concerning potential genetic defects in the unborn. The public policy considerations with respect to the individuals involved and to society as a whole dictate recognition of such a duty." (106 C.A.3d 828.)

(2) "The real crux of the problem is whether the breach of duty was the proximate cause of an injury cognizable at law." That injury is not the particular defect with which the plaintiff is afflicted, but the birth of plaintiff with that defect. (106 C.A.3d 828.) "The reality of the 'wrongful-life' concept is that such a plaintiff both exists and suffers, due to the negligence of others. It is neither necessary nor just to retreat into meditation on the mysteries of life. We need not be concerned with the fact that had defendants not been negligent, the plaintiff might not have come into existence at all. The certainty of genetic impairment is no longer a mystery. In addition, a reverent appreciation of life compels recognition that plaintiff, however impaired she may be, has come into existence as a living person with certain rights." (106 C.A.3d 829.)

(3) These considerations, together with the general statutes on damages for detriment from wrongful acts or omissions (C.C. 3281, 3282), and the principle that there should be a remedy for every wrong (C.C. 3523; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §5), support the conclusion that a cause of action should be recognized. (106 C.A.3d 829, 830.)

(1) Plaintiff is not entitled to damages based on a normal life expectancy; her right must be considered on the basis of her mental and physical condition at birth and her expected condition during the short anticipated life span. (106 C.A.3d 830.)

(2) There can be no evaluation of a claimed right not to be born; damages are recoverable for the pain and suffering to be endured during the limited life span and any special pecuniary loss resulting from the impaired condition. (106 C.A.3d 831.) Costs of care are an appropriate item if no action is brought by the parents to recover for this pecuniary loss; but if the parents also sue, the trial court should consider consolidation of the action to prevent duplication of effort and possible double recovery. (106 C.A.3d 831.)

(3) Plaintiff has adequately pleaded a claim for punitive damages. "We see no reason in public policy or legal analysis for exempting from liability for punitive damages a defendant who is sued for committing a 'wrongful-life' tort." (106 C.A.3d 832.)

[§ 981] No Cause of Action Against Parent.

Curlender v. Bio-Science Laboratories (1980) 106 C.A.3d 811, 165 C.R. 477, supra, §980, stated in dicta that an action by the child against his or her parents would be maintainable only when the parents deliberately disregarded advice not to become parents. (106 C.A.3d 829.) The dictum in Curlender was repudiated by the 1981 Legislature.

(1) No Action Against Parents. "No cause of action arises against a parent of a child based upon the claim that the child should not have been conceived or, if conceived, should not have been allowed to have been born alive." (C.C. 43.6(a).)

(2) Parents' Failure To Act Is Not a Superseding Cause. "The failure or refusal of a parent to prevent the live birth of his or her child shall not be a defense in any action against a third party, nor shall the failure or refusal be considered in awarding damages in any such action." (C.C. 43.6(b).) (See 13 Pacific L. J. 781.)

(3) Scope of Statute. Turpin v. Sortini (1982) 31 C.3d 220, 182 C.R. 337, 643 P.2d 954, infra, §982, rejected the contention that C.C. 43.6(b) impliedly created a cause of action against third parties: "Although subdivision (b) of the provision implicitly recognizes that, under Curlender, a wrongful life action may lie against a 'third party,' we do not think that the statute can properly be viewed as a legislative codification of the Curlender holding, transforming the common law tort perceived in Curlender into a statutory cause of action. ... [T]he purpose of the legislation was simply to eliminate any liability or other similar economic pressure which might induce potential parents to abort or decline to conceive a potentially defective child. Nothing in the statutory language or legislative history suggests that the new provision was intended to impose liability on any party. Under these circumstances, the section cannot properly be read as creating a statutory wrongful life cause of action against third parties." (31 C.3d 229.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
3. Medical Practitioners.
g. Wrongful Life: Action by Child.
4. Recovery Limited to Special Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 982

[§ 982] Recovery Limited to Special Damages.

Turpin v. Sortini (1982) 31 C.3d 220, 182 C.R. 337, 643 P.2d 954, rejected the holding in Curlender v. Bio-Science Laboratories (1980) 106 C.A.3d 811, 165 C.R. 477, supra, §980, allowing a child to recover general damages in a wrongful life action, but held that the child could obtain special damages. In so doing, the case questioned the sanctity-of-life basis for denying recovery of general damages, but relied on the difficulty-in-assessing-damages ground. (See supra, §979.)

The complaint alleged the following: Mr. and Mrs. T brought their daughter H to defendant rehabilitation center for testing of a hearing defect, and defendant doctor S negligently failed to diagnose it as an hereditary affliction. Relying on S's diagnosis, Mr. and Mrs. T conceived a second child, born totally deaf from the same hereditary affliction. The parents and J sued defendants for "wrongful birth" and "wrongful life." The trial judge, on demurrer, entered judgment of dismissal as to the child's action. Held, the child's action could be maintained for special damages (medical expenses necessary to treat the ailment), but not for general damages.

(a) General law prior to Curlender. The courts have permitted parents to recover some elements of damages but have uniformly rejected the claims of children, either on the ground that no legally cognizable injury was sustained or that appropriate damages are impossible to ascertain. (31 C.3d 225, 226.) In California, Stills v. Gratton (1976) 55 C.A.3d 698, 127 C.R. 652, supra, §977, relying on other state decisions, rejected a claim of damages for wrongful life where the child was born healthy. (31 C.3d 226.)

(b) Legislative response to Curlender. The enactment of C.C. 43.6 (supra, §980) did not create a statutory wrongful life cause of action. Rather, the issue is "whether, and to what extent, such a cause of action should be recognized as a matter of California common law." (31 C.3d 229.)

(c) Analysis of Curlender reasoning on legally cognizable injury.

(1) "The basic fallacy of the Curlender analysis is that it ignores the essential nature of the defendants' alleged wrong and obscures a critical difference between wrongful life actions and the ordinary prenatal injury cases noted above. In an ordinary prenatal injury case, if the defendant had not been negligent, the child would have been born healthy; thus, as in a typical personal injury case, the defendant in such a case has interfered with the child's basic right to be free from physical injury caused by the negligence of others. In this case, by contrast, the obvious tragic fact is that plaintiff never had a chance 'to be born as a whole, functional human being without total deafness'; if defendants had performed their jobs properly, she would not have been born with hearing intact, but--according to the complaint--would not have been born at all." (31 C.3d 231.)

(2) A plaintiff's remedy in tort is compensatory in nature, and damages are generally intended to restore an injured person as nearly as possible to the position he or she would have been in had the wrong not been done. (31 C.3d 232, citing the text.) "Because nothing defendants could have done would have given plaintiff an unimpaired life, it appears inconsistent with basic tort principles to view the injury for which defendants are legally responsible ... without taking into consideration the fact that if defendants had not been negligent she would not have been born at all." (31 C.3d 232.)

(3) If the relevant injury is that the child has been born with a hereditary ailment rather than not being born at all, some courts have concluded that he or she has suffered no legally cognizable injury because public policy dictates that life, even with the most severe of impairments, is always preferable to nonlife. This view is questionable: (a) "[I]t is hard to see how an award of damages to a severely handicapped or suffering child would 'disavow' the value of life." (31 C.3d 233.) (b) California public policy does not establish as a matter of law that impaired life is preferable to nonlife; e.g., statutes recognize the right of an adult to terminate life-sustaining procedures. (31 C.3d 233.) (c) Although the unborn child cannot personally make a choice about the relative value of life or death, parents may do so, considering both their interests and those of the future child. (31 C.3d 233.) (d) In the instant case, in which plaintiff's only affliction is deafness, it is unlikely that a jury would conclude that life with such a condition is worse than not being born at all; but in other cases (e.g., Curlender), the conditions have been far more serious. "Considering the short life span of many of these children and their frequently very limited ability to perceive or enjoy the benefits of life, we cannot assert with confidence that in every situation there would be a societal consensus that life is preferable to never having been born at all." (31 C.3d 234.)

(4) Thus, it "seems doubtful" that a child's claim for general damages should be denied on the theory that the value of impaired life, as a matter of law, always exceeds the value of nonlife. (31 C.3d 234.)

(d) Rejection of Curlender reasoning and holding on recovery of general damages.

(1) "[T]here is a profound qualitative difference between the difficulties faced by a jury in assessing general damages in a normal personal injury or wrongful death action, and the task before a jury in assessing general damages in a wrongful life case. In the first place, the problem is not ... simply the fixing of damages for a conceded injury, but the threshold question of determining whether the plaintiff has in fact suffered an injury by being born with an ailment as opposed to not being born at all." (31 C.3d 235.)

(2) The practical problems are exacerbated when it comes to the matter of arriving at an appropriate award of damages. In the ordinary personal injury action, jurors have some frame of reference in general experience to appreciate what the plaintiff has lost: normal life without pain and suffering. In the wrongful life action, plaintiff has lost the "unknowable status" of never having been born. "In this context, a rational, nonspeculative determination of a specific monetary award in accordance with normal tort principles appears to be outside the realm of human competence." (31 C.3d 236.)

(3) The difficulty of measuring an appropriate award is also reflected in the application of the "benefit" doctrine in tort damages (see Rest.2d, Torts §920), calling for offset of benefits conferred by the defendant's conduct. Here, the harmed interest is the child's general physical, emotional, and psychological well-being; but as an incident of defendant's negligence, plaintiff has obtained a physical existence with the capacity both to receive and give love and pleasure as well as to experience pain and suffering. "Because of the incalculable nature of both elements of this harm-benefit equation, we believe that a reasoned, nonarbitrary award of general damage is simply not obtainable." (31

(1) The parents may recover for the extraordinary expenses incurred during the child's minority, and both cannot recover for the same expenses. However, to restrict the cause of action to the parents might make the afflicted child's receipt of necessary medical expenses depend on whether the parents are available to sue or whether they are incurred at a time when the parents remain legally responsible for this care (normally only during minority). (31 C.3d 238.)

(2) A defendant's negligence in failing to diagnose an hereditary ailment places a significant medical and financial burden on the whole family unit. And, unlike the child's claim for general damages, the damage here is both certain and readily measurable. Hence, it is consistent with the basic liability principles of C.C. 1714 "to hold defendants liable for the cost of such care, whether the expense is to be borne by the parents or by the child." (31 C.3d 238.) And permitting plaintiff to recover is consistent with the "benefit" doctrine: "[D]efendants' negligence has conferred no ... offsetting benefit to this interest of plaintiff [economic loss involved in extraordinary expenses]." (31 C.3d 239.)

Two justices joined in a dissent, arguing that Curlender was correct, and that there was "no persuasive reason to either abandon its doctrine, or to dilute its effectiveness by limiting recovery to special damages." (31 C.3d 240.) (See 71 Cal. L. Rev. 1278; 13 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 369; 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 445.)

In Andalon v. Superior Court (1984) 162 C.A.3d 600, 208 C.R. 899, the court attempted to give concrete meaning to the Turpin statement that the child may not recover "general damages." (162 C.A.3d 612.) The child was born with Down's syndrome allegedly not diagnosed by the doctor, and sought recovery for loss of earning capacity attributable to this genetic defect. Held, the reasoning of Turpin was a bar. "There is no loss of earning capacity caused by the doctor in negligently permitting the child to be born with a genetic defect that precludes earning a living. One cannot lose what one never had. The plaintiff-child never had a wage-earning capacity that was taken away by the conduct of the doctor and cannot, therefore, claim compensation for its loss. His inability to earn wages is attributable to his genes and, for the present at least, it is meaningless to speak of a doctor altering or ameliorating this circumstance." (162 C.A.3d 614.) (See Call v. Kezirian (1982) 135 C.A.3d 189, 185 C.R. 103 [child with Down's syndrome should have been permitted to amend prayer to limit damages to kind of damages authorized by Turpin].)

aa. Failure To Prevent Birth.

[§ 983] Failure To Prevent Birth.

Foy v. Greenblott (1983) 141 C.A.3d 1, 190 C.R. 84, deals with unusual aspects of both wrongful birth (supra, §977) and wrongful life (supra, §979). Plaintiff V had been adjudicated a gravely disabled and incompetent person under the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.). The court appointed the county public guardian her conservator, and placed her in a licensed private mental health facility. This action was brought by V and her child R against the doctors, the facility, and the county. The complaint alleged that defendants, aware of V's medical history of irresponsible sexual behavior, failed to supervise her or to provide her with contraceptives or counseling; that she became pregnant, and defendants failed to diagnose her pregnancy until 2 weeks before she delivered; that she gave birth to R; and that defendants' negligence in failing to prevent the birth deprived the mother and child of "fully knowing, caring for, loving and enjoying" one another. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed as to all but one of the causes of action stated.

(a) Immunity of county. The conservator's selection of the facility was immune as a discretionary decision Under Govt.C. 820.2 (see supra, §351). The conservator's continuing responsibility to see that V received adequate care involved ministerial acts not immunized by Govt.C. 820.2, but did come within Govt.C. 854.8(a)(2) (injury to inpatient of mental institution, see supra, §317). (141 C.A.3d 6.)

(b) No liability for deprivation of normal parent-child relationship. Under Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, infra, §1683, and Baxter v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 461, 138 C.R. 315, 563 P.2d 871, infra, §1684, neither a parent nor a child may recover for loss of consortium; and under the reasoning of Turpin v. Sortini (1982) 31 C.3d 220, 182 C.R. 337, 643 P.2d 954, supra, §982, damages cannot be awarded for the creation of an impaired parent-child relationship in place of no relationship at all. (141 C.A.3d 7, 8.)

(c) Liability to mother for wrongful birth.

(1) A mother may hold medical personnel liable for their negligent failure to prevent or to terminate a pregnancy. (141 C.A.3d 8, citing Custodio v. Bauer (1967) 251 C.A.2d 303, 312, 59 C.R. 463, supra, §976, and Stills v. Gratton (1976) 55 C.A.3d 698, 127 C.R. 652, supra, §977.) Here, however, plaintiff mother did not allege that she sought from defendants contraceptive or gynecological care; her theory was that defendants should have taken the necessary precautionary measures to prevent her--an incompetent--from bearing a child. (141 C.A.3d 8, 9.) This contention is unsound: A conservatee or other institutionalized mental patient has the same fundamental rights as other persons (except as specifically denied by law or court order); and "courts have been unwilling to give conservators and other guardians free rein to substitute their own judgment for that of mentally disabled patients in matters affecting reproductive rights, such as sterilization operations." (141 C.A.3d 9, citing many leading cases.)

(2) This does not mean that mental health personnel can never restrict consensual sexual activities of a patient, or that a conservator is precluded from obtaining court authorization for an abortion in a non-life-threatening situation. But the statutes and cases "express a public policy of maximizing patients' individual autonomy, reproductive choice, and rights of informed consent." And mental health professionals "are expected to opt for the treatments and conditions of confinement least restrictive of patients' personal liberties." (141 C.A.3d 11.)

(3) The complaint did allege omissions of defendants that could be actionable: failure to make contraceptive counseling and medication available to her, and failure to diagnose her condition until too late to abort the pregnancy. (141 C.A.3d 12.) However, she must prove causation; i.e., that had contraceptive care been available, she would have taken advantage of it and that it would have been effective; and on failure to diagnose, that she would have consented to an abortion or that her conservator would have been able to make the necessary showing for a court authorization of it. (141 C.A.3d 13.)

(d) No liability to child for wrongful life. The complaint does not show that R has suffered any legally cognizable injury. Thus, there is no allegation of an hereditary trait or other physiological condition that should have led defendants to predict that a child conceived by V would be born impaired, and R does not allege that he actually was born impaired. It appears that the injury of which R complains is simply that of being born to an incompetent mother who is unable to care properly for him. That injury is not actionable. (141 C.A.3d 14.) (See Johnson v. Superior Court (2002) 101 C.A.4th 869, 886, 124 C.R.2d 650 [action against sperm bank and two physician employees by parents of child born with birth defect was one for wrongful life, and, under Turpin, general damages or damages for lost earnings were not recoverable].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Lanterman-Petris-Short Act:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §80 et seq.

See Ermoian v. Desert Hosp. (2007) 152 C.A.4th 475, 513, 61 C.R.3d 754 [treating physicians were not negligent in failing to advise mother to have elective abortion, after ultrasound test taken when fetus was approximately 26 weeks old suggested minimal prominence of lateral ventricles in fetal head, where expert testified that, given age of fetus, recommending or performing abortion would fall below standard of care, and that ultrasound test results raised possibility that child would be born normal].

In Barragan v. Lopez (2007) 156 C.A.4th 997, 68 C.R.3d 73, plaintiff twins were born prematurely with cerebral palsy. Through their guardian ad litem, they filed a wrongful life action against Dr. L, their mother's obstetrician-gynecologist, claiming that he should have advised their mother that she had the right to abort her pregnancy. From February 22 to March 26, the mother was examined regularly, and her pregnancy had progressed normally, without serious complaints and without evidence of preterm labor or other complications. On March 27, after being told she was leaking fluid, L immediately sent her to the hospital, where it was determined that one of the amniotic sacs had spontaneously ruptured. The mother remained in the hospital on bed rest until April 30, and, during this time, there was no evidence of infection, abnormally low amniotic fluid levels, pregnancy-induced hypertension, or fetal distress. On April 30, when plaintiffs' estimated gestational age was just over 29 weeks, the mother began having contractions, and L performed a cesarean section delivery of plaintiffs. The trial court granted L's motion for summary judgment, finding that, in view of the normalcy of the pregnancy, L did not owe the mother a duty to advise her of the right to an abortion. Citing the declaration of their expert, Dr. W, that the premature delivery caused their cerebral palsy, plaintiffs appealed, contending that this declaration established that L breached a duty to advise the mother of her right to terminate her pregnancy under Health & Saf.C. 123462. Held, summary judgment affirmed.

(a) Here, there was no alleged failure to perform any genetic test that might have revealed hereditary defects. Nor was there any indication, during the time in which the mother had a right to voluntarily abort plaintiffs, that plaintiffs had any defects that were substantially certain to occur. L thus had no duty to advise the mother that she had a right to abort plaintiffs. (156 C.A.4th 1005.)

(b) Under Health & Saf.C. 123468, performance of an abortion is not authorized if the fetus is viable and continuation of the pregnancy poses no risk to the life or health of the pregnant woman. It would thus have been improper for L to have advised the mother that she had a right to an abortion, because plaintiffs were viable fetuses, a fact established by expert medical testimony. (156 C.A.4th 1006.)

(c) Once L met his burden of establishing that he did not owe the mother a duty to advise her of the right to an abortion, it was incumbent upon plaintiffs to demonstrate that there remained triable issues of material fact as to the duty element. They attempted to do so by showing that (1) the mother was at greater risk of complications because her last pregnancy was more than 120 months earlier; (2) the record stated that she had a vaginal discharge, a condition that was much more serious than the "questionable discharge" testified to by L; and (3) the American College of Obstetrician and Gynecologists Abortion Policy stated that a pregnant woman should be fully informed by the clinician about all options, including abortion. However, the mother's vaginal bleeding, which according to the medical records was not serious and may have been from a scratch, did not trigger a duty by L to advise the mother of the right to an abortion. Moreover, the abortion policy was also of little, if any, import here, because it concerned what a physician should discuss when providing informed consent to a patient considering terminating her pregnancy. (156 C.A.4th 1006.)

[§ 984] Failure To Diagnose Spina Bifida.

In Gami v. Mullikin Med. Center (1993) 18 C.A.4th 870, 22 C.R.2d 819, defendants negligently failed to inform N's pregnant mother of the need for a second blood sample for AFP testing. As a result, her mother did not have the opportunity to learn that N could have been afflicted with a neural tube defect, commonly known as spina bifida. Subsequently, N was born with this condition and instituted the present action for wrongful life, in which defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings. The trial judge granted the motion, without leave to amend, on the ground that N was unable to state a cause of action for wrongful life under Turpin v. Sortini (1982) 31 C.3d 220, 182 C.R. 337, 643 P.2d 954, supra, §982, because that case applies only to preconception, rather than postconception, torts. Held, reversed; N might be able to state a cause of action for wrongful life even though her condition resulted from postconception negligence.

(a) Defendants argued that the only injury resulting from their alleged negligence was the loss of the mother's right, under Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §561), to choose an abortion, and that, therefore, only she had standing to seek damages. This position is without merit. Even though other jurisdictions do not recognize a cause of action for wrongful life, the California Supreme Court has done so in Turpin, where a defendant's negligence is the proximate cause of the child's need for extraordinary medical care and training (special damages). (18 C.A.4th 882.)

(b) Claims for wrongful life are essentially actions for malpractice based on negligent genetic counseling. The counseling may be (1) preconception counseling, which is related to fertility and to the chance for conceiving a child with a genetic defect; or (2) postconception counseling, which relates to tests conducted while the child is in utero to determine if the fetus suffers from a genetic defect. "In either situation, negligence by a medical provider results in the birth of an afflicted child who must exist with that impairment. Defendants' argument that a child should only be able to recover for injuries caused by preconception negligence is a distinction without a difference. And we cannot find a legal justification for that distinction." (18 C.A.4th 883.)

(c) Although Turpin involved preconception negligence, it recognized a child's right to recover for injury resulting from postconception negligence. Turpin was ultimately concerned with compensating injured children, not with the timing of the negligence that caused the injury. (18 C.A.4th 881.)

[§ 985] Failure To Secure Consent of Husband for Artificial Insemination.

In Alexandria S. v. Pacific Fertility Med. Center (1997) 55 C.A.4th 110, 64 C.R.2d 23, a child conceived by artificial insemination by a donor filed a complaint against the fertility clinic and doctors for failing to certify the signatures of the mother and her then husband on the consent form pursuant to Family C. 7613(a) (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §43), which resulted in a ruling in a separate dissolution of marriage proceeding that the former husband had no legal duty toward plaintiff. The trial judge sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal. Held, affirmed.

(a) Public policy mandates finding of no cognizable injury. Plaintiff premised her claim of negligence on essentially two theories: (1) defendants deprived her of a legal father, and (2) defendants' negligence resulted in her being born.

(1) Regarding the "no legal parent" claim, policy reasons do not permit plaintiff to sue for being deprived of a legal parent. The result of recognizing a tort for deprivation of a legal parent has the potential of vastly expanding the tort law to permit children to sue physicians, single parents, lesbian and gay parents, or sexual partners of their parent for causing them to have only one or no legal parent. (55 C.A.4th 121.) Also, it cannot be presumed that a child without two legal parents suffers an injury from that occurrence; illegitimacy is a status that may or may not prove to be a hindrance to one so born, depending on a multitude of other facts. (55 C.A.4th 122.)

(2) Regarding the "wrongful life" claim, although courts do recognize a wrongful life claim by an "impaired" child for special damages, no court has expanded tort liability to include wrongful life claims by children born without mental or physical impairment. Courts have disallowed these claims, finding no legally cognizable injury or no rationally ascertainable damages. (55 C.A.4th 122.) Whether plaintiff's claim is for denying her (a) a legal parent, (b) child support, or (c) any other attribute uniquely related to the parent/child relationship, the claim is akin to a wrongful life claim by a healthy child and is not cognizable. (55 C.A.4th 123.)

(b) Defendants' acts were not proximate cause of any injury. Moreover, the dissolution court's finding that plaintiff was not entitled to child support because the documents were not certified as required by Family C. 7613(a) is erroneous. Certification is not required to establish consent under the statute, and defendants' failure to certify was thus not the proximate cause of plaintiff's alleged damage. (55 C.A.4th 123.) Nothing in the language of the statute, or in its legislative history suggests that a failure to certify should defeat the objective of the statute, which is to establish two legal parents. Family C. 7613(a) specifically states that the failure to certify "does not affect the father and child relationship." Plaintiff's proper remedy, which she unfortunately neglected to pursue, was to appeal the erroneous ruling of the dissolution court. (55 C.A.4th 126.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
 X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

4. Hospitals.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 986

[§ 986] In General.

On principles of respondeat superior (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §165 et seq.) and corporate negligence (see infra, §1255), a hospital may be held liable for its employees' negligent conduct. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §252; 40 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.) Hospitals and Asylums §27 et seq.; 31 A.L.R.3d 1114 [administration of anesthetics]; 21 Hastings L. J. 1; 7 *U.C. Davis L. A hospital operated for the care of alcoholics has a higher duty of care than that owed by land occupiers generally. It must exercise such reasonable care as the patient's known condition may require. (Emerick v. Raleigh Hills Hosp. (1982) 133 C.A.3d 575, 581, 184 C.R. 92, discussing Wood v. Samaritan Institution (1945) 26 C.2d 847, 161 P.2d 556, infra, §987.) And rest homes have the same general duty as hospitals. (Mast v. Magpusao (1986) 180 C.A.3d 775, 778, 225 C.R. 689 [plaintiff injured by another resident whose aggressive tendencies were known to defendant proprietors; nonsuit reversed].) (See 83 A.L.R.3d 871 [negligence of rest, convalescent, or nursing home].)

Health & Saf.C. 1317.2 et seq. prescribe the procedures governing the transfer of emergency patients from one hospital to another. (See 19 Pacific L. J. 624.) Persons and medical facilities harmed by a violation of the procedures may recover damages from the transferring or receiving hospital. (Health & Saf.C. 1317.6(j).)

The following types of conduct illustrate areas giving rise to liability:

(1) Negligent Emergency Room Care. (See 67 Am.Jur. Trials 271 [liability of emergency room provider for injury to patient or visitor]; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [liability for negligence of emergency room physician]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 203 [negligence by hospital emergency room nurse]; 22 *Santa Clara L. (3) Staffing Issues. (See 14 Proof of Facts 3d 433 [negligent selection of staff physician]; 15 Proof of Facts 3d 181 [negligent retention of staff physician]; 9 Cal. Western L. [§ 987] Improper Restraints.

In Wood v. Samaritan Institution (1945) 26 C.2d 847, 161 P.2d 556, plaintiff, a chronic alcoholic, voluntarily entered defendant's sanitarium in the early evening for a course of treatment. Although attendants observed that she was suffering from the delusion that she was in an insane asylum and wanted to get out, no physical restraint was placed on her, no nurse was in close attendance, and no measures were taken to secure her windows. Some 27 hours after her admission, she was found in the courtyard beneath the window of her second-story room; apparently, she had pushed open the windows, and had either jumped or fallen. Held, the trial court's order directing a verdict for defendant was improper. A sufficient showing was made that means of harm were at hand (the physical surroundings), and defendant had knowledge or notice of the likelihood that plaintiff would injure herself unless precautions were taken to prevent the harm. (26 C.2d 853.) (See *Gin Non Louie v. Chinese Hosp. [§ 988] Negligent Postoperative Care.

In Thomas v. Seaside Memorial Hosp. of Long Beach (1947) 80 C.A.2d 841, 183 P.2d 288, plaintiff's baby, age 8 months, underwent a minor operation under anesthetic, and then was returned to her room and left alone without regular observation for over an hour. She died from collapse of the lung (atelectasis). Held, it was negligent to fail to maintain a frequent check on the child's condition. (80 C.A.2d 848.)

In Valentin v. La Societe Francaise De Bienfaisance Mutuelle De Los Angeles (1946) 76 C.A.2d 1, 172 P.2d 359, plaintiff's 20-year-old son underwent a successful hernia operation. While recuperating in the hospital, he developed alarming pathological symptoms, but the attending nurses delayed calling a doctor for several days. The diagnosis was tetanus, but the antitetanic treatments were given late. Held, it was negligent for the nurse to permit the patient to suffer these symptoms without procuring medical attention. (76 C.A.2d 7.)

In Rice v. California Lutheran Hosp. (1945) 27 C.2d 296, 163 P.2d 860, plaintiff, a woman of 60, a few days after a major operation, was in bed in a weakened physical condition and still under the effects of a narcotic for relief of pain. Defendant's employee, on instructions of plaintiff's doctor, served her with tea by leaving a tray with teapot of hot water, cup, and tea bag on a bedside table. In an unexplained manner, plaintiff was burned by the spilling of the water. Held, the jury could find it negligent to leave her alone in that manner, without an attendant. (27 C.2d 301.)

d. Scope of Immunity Statute.

[§ 989] Scope of Immunity Statute.

In Jacobs v. Grossmont Hosp. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 69, 133 C.R.2d 9, plaintiff attempted suicide by overdosing on medication. The medical staff of defendant hospital's emergency room determined that she posed a danger to herself and placed her on 72-hour hold under Welf.C. 5150 of the Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act (Welf.C. 5000 et seq.). During the hold and pursuant to a doctor's orders, a nurse assisted plaintiff as she walked down a hospital corridor. Plaintiff's slipper caught on the floor, causing her to fall and fracture a bone in her leg. Plaintiff sued for negligence and premises liability, but defendant's demurrer was sustained on the ground that plaintiff's causes of action were barred by the immunity provisions of Welf.C. 5278 (see supra, §448). Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Welf.C. 5278 provides in part that individuals authorized to detain a person for 72-hour treatment and evaluation are not criminally or civilly liable for "exercising this authority" in accordance with the law. Clearly this statute grants immunity to those authorized to detain a person for a 72-hour hold. However, it is not certain whether the immunity pertains only to the decision to detain (as plaintiff maintains), to the detention itself and its inherent attributes, or to anything that may occur in the course of the evaluation or treatment (as defendant maintains). (108 C.A.4th 74.)

(c) However, Heater does not support an interpretation of Welf.C. 5278 that would confer blanket immunity for any act that might occur during a 72-hour hold, no matter how negligent, wrongful, or criminal. Defendant's invitation to limit liability to outrageous acts not rationally related to treatment or detention is not helpful, because this interpretation would still expose the mentally ill to the possibility of grossly negligent or intentional mistreatment, with no legal recourse, and thus would subvert the intent of the LPS Act to protect the mentally ill. Thus, Welf.C. 5278 does not provide immunity for injuries proximately caused by negligence or other wrongful acts or omissions that may occur during the course of an otherwise valid detention. (108 C.A.4th 78.)

(d) The trial judge incorrectly assumed that under Welf.C. 5278 defendant was exempt from all liability for any negligence that may have occurred during the 72-hour stay. However, the relevant inquiry is whether defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries proximately caused by its failure to use due care in administering her course of treatment. (108 C.A.4th 80.) (See Cruze v. National Psychiatric Services (2003) 105 C.A.4th 48, 53, 129 C.R.2d 65 [term "individual," as used in Welf.C. 5278, applies to hospitals, as well as to natural persons]; Gonzalez v. Paradise Valley Hosp. (2003) 111 C.A.4th 735, 739, 3 C.R.3d 903 [Welf.C. 5278 did not apply to negligent failure to treat patient's psychosis during 72-hour hold, but extended only to claims based on facts inherent in involuntary detention; relying on Jacobs].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
5. Accountants.
b. Duty to Unintended Recipients of Information.
1. Former Foreseeability Approach.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 991

[§ 991] Former Foreseeability Approach.

In International Mortg. Co. v. John P. Butler Accountancy Corp. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 806, 223 C.R. 218, the court was asked "to declare, for the first time that a certified public accountant (CPA) owes a duty of care to reasonably foreseeable plaintiffs who rely on alleged negligently prepared and issued unqualified audited financial statements." (177 C.A.3d 809.)

Westside was a mortgage company that arranged financing for real property, and sold its loans to other mortgage bankers. Defendant Butler audited Westside's financial statement showing a corporate net worth of $ 175,036, in major part based on a $ 100,000 note receivable that in fact was worthless. Westside used the financial statement to negotiate an agreement with plaintiff IMC to buy and sell FHA loans. Butler knew at the time of the audit that Westside needed a net worth of $ 100,000 to qualify for FHA business. Westside defaulted on its obligations to IMC, and IMC sued Butler, alleging negligence and negligent misrepresentation, relied on by plaintiff in doing business with Westside. Butler's defense was that it had no knowledge of IMC at the time of the audit and was unaware of IMC's reliance on the financial statement. The lower court granted summary judgment on the ground that a CPA owes no duty of care to a third party not specifically known as an intended recipient of the financial statement. Held, reversed.

(a) Ultramares case. Beginning with Justice Cardozo's seminal opinion in Ultramares Corp. v. Touche (1931) 255 N.Y. 170, 174 N.E. 441, certified public accountants have been shielded from liability for negligence in the preparation and issuance of unqualified audited financial statements when the plaintiff was only a member of a foreseeable class. Liability, based on a duty analysis, was limited to those in privity with the accountant and more recently to those intended recipients of the information. (177 C.A.3d 811.)

(b) Analysis and criticism of Ultramares. The "tide of precedent" has washed away the "privity" protection for all other professions, "leaving accountancy as some ennobled species specially protected by the 'citadel.'" (177 C.A.3d 812.) Rest.2d, Torts §552 rejects the Ultramares requirement of privity, and adopts the reasoning of the earlier New York case of Glanzer v. Shepard (1922) 233 N.Y. 236 135 N.E. 275, in requiring "knowing reliance." "When the harm that is caused is only pecuniary loss, the courts have found it necessary to adopt a more restricted rule of liability, because of the extent to which misinformation may be, and may be expected to be, circulated, and the magnitude of the losses which may follow from reliance upon it." (177 C.A.3d 816, and footnote 3, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §552, Comment a.)

(c) Role of the independent certified public accountant. Butler argues that basic differences between the accounting profession and others requires a more limited rule of liability; e.g., manufacturers, attorneys, architects, and doctors control their products and records, while the accountant does not control either the client's records or the client's use of the audit product. (177 C.A.3d 816.) This is a misconception of the accountant's role:

(1) "An independent auditor (as opposed to an in-house accountant) is employed to analyze a client's financial status and make public the ultimate findings in accord with recognized accounting principles. This undertaking is imbued with considerations of public trust, for the accountant must well realize the finished product, the unqualified financial statement, will be relied upon by creditors, stockholders, investors, lenders or anyone else involved in the financial concerns of the audited client." (177 C.A.3d 817.)

(2) "Under a foreseeability standard, the auditor would be liable only to those third-parties who reasonably and foreseeably rely on the audited statements. The accountant's lack of control over ultimate users is not prejudicial; the foreseeability standard holds everyone, including accountants, liable to only reasonably foreseeable users." (177 C.A.3d 818.)

(d) California rule declared. The protectionist rule of privity announced in Ultramares "is no longer viable" in view of the change in the role of the accountant; and the Restatement limitation of liability to those to whom the information is intended to be supplied "does not meet California's concept of tort liability for negligence." (177 C.A.3d 820.) (See 20 Proof of Facts 3d 289 [liability to third party for negligence]; 45 Am.Jur. Trials 113 [accountant's third-party liability involving prospective financial statements used in securities offerings]; 46 A.L.R.3d 979 [liability to third person]; 48 A.L.R.5th 389 [independent accountant's liability to investors or shareholders].)

[§ 992] Liability Limited to Client.

Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C.4th 370, 11 C.R.2d 51, 834 P.2d 745, answers the question "whether and to what extent an accountant's duty of care in the preparation of an independent audit of a client's financial statements extends to persons other than the client." (3 C.4th 375.) Since Ultramares Corp. v. Touche (1931) 255 N.Y. 170, 174 N.E. 441, supra, §991, this issue has been frequently considered and debated by courts and commentators. (3 C.4th 376.)

The Osborne Computer Corporation began a series of transactions and sought to raise capital by warrants entitling investors to purchase blocks of stock at favorable prices. The company then retained defendant Arthur Young, a public accounting firm, to perform accounting services, and defendant issued a number of "clean" audit opinions, on which plaintiff investors relied in purchasing warrants. Thereafter, the company's business sharply declined, the public offering of stock never materialized, the company filed for bankruptcy, and plaintiffs lost their investments.

The present actions were based on three theories: fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and professional negligence. The jury exonerated defendant on the allegations of intentional fraud and negligent misrepresentation, but returned a verdict of $ 4.3 million in compensatory damages for professional negligence. The Court of Appeal affirmed the resulting judgment, but the Supreme Court reversed with directions to enter judgment in favor of defendant.

(a) The audit function in public accounting. The end product of an audit is the audit report or opinion, generally expressed in a letter addressed to the client. The body of the report refers to the specific client-prepared financial statements that are attached. (3 C.4th 380.) "[A]udits of financial statements and the resulting audit reports are very frequently (if not almost universally) used by businesses to establish the financial credibility of their enterprises in the perceptions of outside persons." (3 C.4th 382.)

(b) Approaches to problem of liability to third persons.

(1) Privity of relationship. The privity rule arose in Ultramares and was further developed in later New York cases, such as Credit Alliance Corp. v. Arthur Andersen & Co. (1985) 65 N.Y.2d 536, 483 N.E.2d 110, 493 N.Y.S.2d 435. "As one moves from privity of contract to privity of relationship ... ,the auditor is placed on notice of a specific risk of liability that accompanies the audit engagement. Yet, under the Credit Alliance test, the auditor appears to have no liability in this situation in the absence of further, distinct conduct 'linking' the auditor to the third party in a manner that 'evinces [auditor] understanding' of third party reliance." (3 C.4th 387.)

(2) Foreseeability. Justice Howard Wiener of the California Court of Appeal, in a law review article, argued that accountants should be liable to third persons on the same basis as other tortfeasors; and he proposed a rule based on foreseeability of injury to third persons. (3 C.4th 389.) A few state courts have endorsed foreseeability rules. (3 C.4th 389.) However, in the nearly 10 years since it was formally proposed, this approach has not attracted a substantial following; and four state supreme courts have explicitly rejected it. (3 C.4th 391.)

(3) Intent to benefit third persons. Rest.2d, Torts §552 (see supra, §825) states a general principle that one who negligently supplies false information for the guidance of others in their business transactions is liable for economic loss suffered by the recipients in justifiable reliance on the information. But the supplier is liable only if he or she intends to supply the information for the benefit of one or more third parties in a specific transaction or type of transaction identified to the supplier. (3 C.4th 392.) Under the Restatement rule, an auditor retained to conduct an annual audit and to furnish an opinion for no particular purpose generally undertakes no duty to third parties. (3 C.4th 393.)

(4) Federal securities law. Several federal statutes dealing with securities impose liability on accountants. Under these statutes, "an auditor's liability to third persons on theories akin to common law negligence is limited to those situations in which the third party suffers a loss in the purchase or sale of a security in reliance on an auditor's misstatement in a public registration statement or other public document filed with the SEC for use in connection with an identified securities registration." (3 C.4th 396.)

(1) Factors to consider in assessing duty. The threshold element of a cause of action for negligence is the existence of a duty to use due care toward an interest of another that enjoys legal protection against unintentional invasion. (3 C.4th 397.) The court has employed a checklist of factors to consider in assessing legal duty in the absence of privity of contract. (3 C.4th 397, discussing Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179.) In light of these factors, "we decline to permit all merely foreseeable third party users of audit reports to sue the auditor on a theory of professional negligence. Our holding is premised on three central concerns: (1) Given the secondary 'watchdog' role of the auditor, the complexity of the professional opinions rendered in audit reports, and the difficult and potentially tenuous causal relationships between audit reports and economic losses from investment and credit decisions, the auditor exposed to negligence claims from all foreseeable third parties faces potential liability far out of proportion to its fault; (2) the generally more sophisticated class of plaintiffs in auditor liability cases (e.g., business lenders and investors) permits the effective use of contract rather than tort liability to control and adjust the relevant risks through 'private ordering'; (3) the asserted advantages of more accurate auditing and more efficient loss spreading relied upon by those who advocate a pure foreseeability approach are unlikely to occur; indeed, dislocations of resources, including increased expense and decreased availability of auditing services in some sectors of the economy, are more probable consequences of expanded liability." (3 C.4th 398.)

(2) Liability out of proportion to fault. The following factors tend to limit the auditor's fault: (a) Audits are performed in a client-controlled environment. (b) The client has interests in the audit that may not be consonant with those of the public. (c) Client control predominates in the dissemination of the audit report. (d) Although the auditor's role in the financial reporting process is secondary, the liability it faces in a negligence suit by a third party is primary and personal, because the other parties are usually in government-supervised liquidation or the bankruptcy court. (3 C.4th 399,400.)

(3) The prospect of private ordering. Courts advocating unlimited auditor liability often analogize the auditor's opinion to a consumer product, but this analogy lacks persuasive force: (a) The maker of a consumer product has complete control over the design and manufacture; the auditor merely expresses an opinion about its client's financial statements. (b) The class of third persons is different: Investors, creditors, and other sophisticated persons who rely on audit reports are not the equivalent of ordinary consumers. (3 C.4th 403.)

(4) The effect on auditors of negligence liability to third persons. Courts and commentators advocating negligence liability predict that it might deter auditor mistakes, promote more careful audits, and result in a more efficient spreading of the risk of inaccurate financial statements. No empirical data on these prognostications has been offered, and deleterious economic effects appear at least as likely to occur. Auditors may rationally respond to increased liability by simply reducing audit services in fledgling industries where the business failure rate is high, reasoning that they will inevitably be singled out and sued when their client goes into bankruptcy, regardless of the care or detail of their audits. (3 C.4th 404.) For these reasons, "an auditor's liability for general negligence in the conduct of an audit of its client financial statements is confined to the client, i.e., the person who contracts for or engages the audit services. Other persons may not recover on a pure negligence theory." (3 C.4th 406.)

(1) This is a separate tort, a species of the tort of deceit, distinct from the tort of negligence. (3 C.4th 407, citing and quoting the text.) But the class of persons entitled to rely upon the representations is restricted to those to whom or for whom the misrepresentations were made. (3 C.4th 408, quoting the text.)

(2) The Rest.2d Torts, §552(b) is most consistent with the elements and policy foundations of the tort of negligent misrepresentation, and thus represents a reasoned approach to the problem. (3 C.4th 408, 409.) The "intent to benefit" language of the Restatement creates an objective standard that looks to the specific circumstances (e.g., supplier-client engagement and supplier's communications with third party) "to ascertain whether a supplier has undertaken to inform and guide a third party with respect to an identified transaction or type of transaction." (3 C.4th 410.) The Restatement approach is also the only one that achieves consistency in the law of negligent misrepresentation among the various professionals. (3 C.4th 410.)

(3) "By allowing recovery for negligent misrepresentation (as opposed to mere negligence), we emphasize the indispensability of justifiable reliance on the statements contained in the report." (3 C.4th 413.)

(e) Intentional misrepresentation. There is no authority for immunizing auditors from liability to third parties for intentional misrepresentation; the auditor's actual knowledge of the false or baseless character of its opinion is not required. If the defendant has no belief in the truth of the statement, and makes it recklessly, the element of scienter is satisfied. (3 C.4th 415.)

(f) Disapproval. The contrary general negligence rule and foreseeability approach of International Mortg. Co. v. John P. Butler Accountancy Corp. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 806, 223 C.R. 218, supra, §991, is rejected. (3 C.4th 415.)

Two justices joined in a strong dissent, asserting that "[t]he effect of these holdings is to give negligent accountants broad immunity for their professional malpractice in rendering audit opinions." (3 C.4th 417.) (See Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 58, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513; *Industrial Indem. Co. v. 3. Audit Filed With Insurance Commissioner.

[§ 993] Audit Filed With Insurance Commissioner.

In Arthur Andersen v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1481, 79 C.R.2d 879, defendant, a major international accounting firm, audited an insurance company. As required by Ins.C. 900.2, the audit was filed with the Insurance Commissioner, whose staff relied on it in concluding that the insurance company's financial statements showing it to be solvent fairly presented its financial position. In fact, the insurance company was insolvent; its financial statements misrepresented its true financial condition by failing to disclose that a significant portion of its assets were encumbered as a result of related party transactions. By the time the commissioner had discovered the company's true condition, its insolvency had increased, and liquidation proceedings were instituted. The commissioner then sued defendant for negligence and negligent misrepresentation. After its motion for summary judgment was denied, defendant petitioned for mandamus. Held, denied.

(a) The commissioner is not attempting to recover damages for the benefit of the policyholders. There is a significant distinction between pursuing a claim of negligent misrepresentation on behalf of the liquidation estate versus pursuing the idiosyncratic claims of numerous policyholders. Here, some policyholders had claims against the insurance company's estate, and the commissioner was simply assembling funds to pay these claims. Although the commissioner was suing for the benefit of policyholders in the sense that he was attempting to recover for the liquidation estate and because funds in that estate would be used to pay policyholder claims, it was clear that the commissioner was not asserting the claim of any particular individual for a negligent misrepresentation made directly to that individual. (67 C.A.4th 1497.)

(b) Ins.C. 900.2 requires insurers doing business in this state to have an annual audit and to file the audit report with the Insurance Commissioner. When this statute was enacted, case law held that an auditor owed a duty of care to all reasonably foreseeable users of the audit report, and with the enactment of Ins.C. 900.2, the commissioner became such a user. Hence, consistent with the presumption that the Legislature knows the law, it may be concluded that the Legislature intended to bring the commissioner into the universe of potential plaintiffs to whom an auditor would owe a duty of care when auditing an insurance company. Although Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C.4th 370, 11 C.R.2d 51, 834 P.2d 745, supra, §992, constricted this universe, it did nothing to controvert the conclusion that the commissioner remained inside this universe. Bily held that, consistent with Rest.2d, Torts §552, an auditor's liability on a professional misrepresentation theory is limited to parties whom the auditor intends to influence or whom the auditor knows will rely on the audit report. Hence, if an insurance company commissions an audit report to satisfy its filing requirement under Ins.C. 900.2, the auditor can be liable to the Insurance Commissioner if the report contains negligent misrepresentations. (67 C.A.4th 1501.)

(c) Defendant claimed that it could not be liable to the Insurance Commissioner under Rest.2d, Torts §552, because it did not "intend" or "know" that the audit report would be supplied to the commissioner. In other words, it pleaded ignorance of Ins.C. 900.2. This argument erroneously equates factual knowledge with legal knowledge. While defendant is correct in stating that, under Rest.2d, Torts §552, lack of factual knowledge that an audit report will be supplied to a particular third party will generally preclude auditor liability to that third party, a lack of legal knowledge is quite another matter. Ignorance of the law does not excuse its consequences. A firm such as defendant is charged with knowledge of the law pertaining to insurance company audits whether it was actually aware of the law or not. (67 C.A.4th 1505.)

(d) "[W]e hold that an auditor, when auditing an insurance company, owes a duty of due care not to make negligent misrepresentations to the Insurance Commissioner in his capacity as the representative of policyholders and creditors. ... If the Insurance Commissioner relies on negligent misrepresentations in ... an audit report, and if the claims-paying ability of the insurance company is damaged as a consequence, an award of damages may be made to the Insurance Commissioner and against the auditor on behalf of the policyholders and other creditors." (67 C.A.4th 1507.)

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
5. Accountants.
c. Litigation Support.

[§ 994] Litigation Support.

In Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 820, 60 C.R.2d 780, plaintiff sued an accounting firm for malpractice, alleging that defendants' negligence in providing accounting litigation support services led to dismissal of plaintiff's federal lawsuit against a third party. The trial judge instructed the jury that it had only to determine if defendant's actions caused plaintiff to suffer harm, and that no definite standard or method of calculation was prescribed by law by which to fix reasonable compensation for the loss of a legal claim. Judgment was entered on verdicts in favor of plaintiff. Held, reversed. The "trial-within-a-trial" standard for attorney malpractice (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §334) applied.

(a) Plaintiff's cause of action is analogous to a malpractice case in which an attorney is accused of losing a plaintiff's case through negligence, and the same evidentiary burden applies. Accordingly, plaintiff has the burden to establish that, had defendant properly handled the underlying case, plaintiff would have prevailed against the third party. (52 C.A.4th 831.) While some arguments of its critics have merit, the trial-within-a-trial burden is the most effective safeguard yet devised against speculative and conjectural claims in this era of ever expanding litigation. It is a standard of proof designed to limit damages to those actually caused by a professional's malfeasance. Certainly to date, no other approach has been accepted by the courts. (52 C.A.4th 834.) Accountants and other litigation support professionals often play as great a role in organizing and evaluating a client's case as do lawyers. Thus, in situations where alleged negligent conduct is analogous to an attorney's mishandling litigation, a plaintiff should be held to the same burden. (52 C.A.4th 835.)

(b) The instructions given were wrong and misleading. There is a definite standard and a method of calculation for the loss of a legal claim, and those elements are ascertained by the trial-within-a-trial approach. The trial-within-a-trial approach avoids the specter that the damages claimed by a plaintiff are a matter of pure speculation and conjecture. Also, to enable a plaintiff merely to assign value to a case would render professionals liable as guarantors, because almost all cases have some value. (52 C.A.4th 841.)

(c) The following instruction on liability, based on BAJI, No. 6.37.5, is appropriate on retrial: "In order to recover damages from a professional for negligence in the handling of a lawsuit, which negligence resulted in the plaintiff's loss of the prior lawsuit, the plaintiff must establish: (1) the professional was negligent in the handling of the prior lawsuit;

(2) the professional's negligence was a substantial factor in the plaintiff's loss of the prior lawsuit; and (3) the proper handling of the prior lawsuit by the professional would have resulted in a collectible judgment in plaintiff's favor." (52 C.A.4th 844.)

BAJI, No. 6.37.5, which had been limited to attorney malpractice, was revised in 1997 to extend the trial-within-a-trial standard to professional negligence generally. However, the BAJI instruction is expressly limited to actions in which the plaintiff claims that the professional's negligence caused the loss of a prior case. (BAJI, No. 6.37.5, Use Note; see 25 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1 [misapplication of attorney malpractice paradigm to accounting firm performing litigation services].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

7. Children.

a. Duty Owed by Child.

1. General Principle.

[§ 998] General Principle.

Before adoption of the comparative negligence doctrine (see infra, §1327 et seq.), the question of a child's duty of care was usually presented in connection with a plea of contributory negligence as a bar to recovery, but the test is identical whether the issue is negligence or contributory negligence. A child of immature years is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult, but only to the degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of similar age, mental capacity, and experience. (See Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 310, 315, 253 P.2d 675; Olsen v. McGillicuddy (1971) 15 C.A.3d 897, 903, 93 C.R. 530, quoting the text; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §124 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §183; 32 A.L.R.4th 56 [modern trends as to children's contributory negligence]; BAJI, No. 3.35; CACI, No. 402.) The same rule applies where the child's act is a violation of statute, which would be negligence per se if the child were an adult. (See infra, §896.)

There are no particular ages at which a child is deemed either wholly without capacity or fully accountable, and the question of capacity is usually for the jury. (Courtell v. McEachen (1959) 51 C.2d 448, 454, 334 P.2d 870 [reversible error for judge to determine it as matter of law]; Todd v. Orcutt (1919) 42 C.A. 687, 690, 183 P. 963; Moeller v. Packard (1927) 86 C.A. 459, 467, 261 P. 315; Patania v. Yellow-Checker Cab Co. (1929) 102 C.A. 600, 603, 283 P. 295; Shannon v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist. (1933) 133 C.A. 124, 132, 23 P.2d 769; Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 191, 260 P.2d 663; see Rest.2d, Torts §283, 464; 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 335; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 552; 42 A.L.R.2d 930, 935 [injury to or death of child from burns caused by hot ashes, cinders, or other hot waste material]; 67 A.L.R.2d 570 [child of tender years]; 11 A.L.R.3d 1168 [child climbing over or through train blocking crossing]; on duty owed by older child, see Calandri v. Ione Unified School Dist. of Amador (1963) 219 C.A.2d 542, 547, 33 C.R. 333, infra, §999; on duty owed by child automobile driver, see infra, §1000.)

However, children under 4 are almost universally held incapable of contributory negligence, and children over 5 have frequently been held capable. (See Conroy v. Perez (1944) 64 C.A.2d 217, 225, 148 P.2d 680 [2-year-old child is conclusively presumed incapable of foreseeing danger, and submitting issue of contributory negligence to jury was error]; Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 310, 315, 253 P.2d 675 [4-year-old does not possess mental capacity to foresee harm; hence, may not be liable for negligence but may be liable for battery, supra, §25].) In Christian v. Goodwin (1961) 188 C.A.2d 650, 10 C.R. 507, the court, dealing with the period between 4 and 5 years, followed the weight of authority and prior California dicta in holding the child not capable and therefore not barred by contributory negligence. (188 C.A. 2d 652.) (See Untalan v. Glass (1961) 190 C.A.2d 474, 476, 12 C.R. 1 [children under 4 have insufficient capacity to be guilty of negligence]; Greene v. Watts (1962) 210 C.A.2d 103, 105, 26 C.R. 334.)

A special rule applies to a child acting in obedience to the parent's directions; the child cannot be found negligent. (Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 777, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465.)

In Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co. (1928) 205 C. 396, 271 P. 97, a 15 year-old boy purchased gunpowder from defendant, constructed a toy cannon, and was injured when it exploded. Held, he was old enough to appreciate the danger of firearms and explosives, and was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. (205 C. 398.) (See Mathews v. Albany (1939) 36 C.A.2d 147, 148, 97 P.2d 266 [12-year-old boy was contributorily negligent when he ignited powder taken from unexploded fireworks bomb]; and 47 A.L.R.3d 630 [application of adult standard of care to child handling firearms].)

Bolar was distinguished in Calandri v. Ione Unified School Dist. of Amador (1963) 219 C.A.2d 542, 33 C.R. 333. Plaintiff, a 15-year-old boy, constructed a bronze cannon 53/4 inches long, with a 1/4-inch bore, as a manual training project under the supervision of defendant G, the teacher. G knew that this and other cannons made by students were to be fired, and plaintiff obtained information from G about purchasing gunpowder. Nevertheless, G never warned plaintiff or the other boys of the dangers, and gave no instruction on a safe type of fuse or its application. Plaintiff, having had some hunting experience, took a shotgun shell apart, loaded the cannon with powder, wadding, and shot, then mixed powder with match heads and worked this combination into the touchhole. The cannon fired and injured his hand. Held, judgment for defendants, G, and the school district, reversed for refusing to instruct the jury on the duty of care owed by an adult to a child. On the issue of contributory negligence, a crucial fact was deemed sufficient to make the Bolar decision inapplicable: The boy in Bolar worked in secret, having knowledge of the danger and having been warned of it. (219 C.A.2d 550.)

In Moeller v. Packard (1927) 86 C.A. 459, 261 P. 315, an 8-year-old girl was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law when, to retrieve some article, she suddenly ran from the side of a highway directly into the path of an automobile. (86 C.A. 460.) (See Raggio v. Mallory (1938) 10 C.2d 723, 728, 76 P.2d 660 [boy of 12 who jumped back in path of approaching automobile to escape discovery by victim of mischief was contributorily negligent].)

In Shannon v. Central-Gaither Union School Dist. (1933) 133 C.A. 124, 23 P.2d 769, plaintiff, a 10-year-old boy alighted from a school bus in a rural district and ran across the highway toward his home, without looking for oncoming vehicles. The driver of the bus had not warned him, and another car obstructed his view. He was struck by a passing car.

Held, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury. (133 C.A. 130.) (See Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 191, 260 P.2d 663 [contributory negligence of high school student operating machine was question for jury; nonsuit reversed]; Singer v. Marx (1956) 144 C.A.2d 637, 643, 301 P.2d 440 [whether 9-year-old boy, throwing rocks at people, had requisite capacity was question for jury].)

All of these contributory negligence cases should now be treated as comparative negligence cases (see infra, §1329).

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
7. Children.
a. Duty Owed by Child.
3. Child Vehicle Driver.

[§ 1000] Child Vehicle Driver.

In Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 C.A.2d 17, 43 C.R. 250, defendant driver, 16 years old, failed to stop at an intersection at the top of a steep hill, and plaintiff was injured in the resulting accident. The trial judge refused defendant's proposed instruction that a child, though violating a statute or ordinance, is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult. Held, refusal was proper.

(a) "We hold that when a minor engages in an activity such as driving, which is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required, an exception to the general rule arises, and the minor should be held to the ordinary standard of care." (233 C.A.2d 21.)

(b) "A person observing children at play with toys, throwing balls, operating tricycles or velocipedes, or engaged in other childhood activities may anticipate conduct that does not reach an adult standard of care or prudence. However, one cannot know whether the operator of an approaching automobile, airplane, or powerboat is a minor or an adult, and usually cannot protect himself against youthful imprudence even if warned." (233 C.A.2d 22.)

(c) "A member of the traveling public has the right to expect that others using our highways, regardless of their age and experience, will obey the traffic laws and exercise the adult standard of ordinary care. To permit minors a more lenient standard is unrealistic, contrary to expressed legislative policy and inimical to the public safety." (233 C.A.2d 23.) (See 6 Santa Clara Lawyer 97.)

The same view was taken in Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 727, 47 C.R. 904, 408 P.2d 360, disapproving contrary rulings in several earlier cases. Plaintiff, a 17-year-old motorcycle delivery boy, approached a familiar busy intersection at 15-20 miles per hour, and saw a taxicab about to make a left turn into his path. With ample time to avoid a collision, he continued straight ahead and struck the cab. Held, the trial judge properly refused to give the ordinary instruction on the lesser duty of care of a minor. (63 C.3d 732.) (See Ev.C. 669(b)(2), supra, §§873, 874; 97 A.L.R.2d 872 [age of minor operator of motor-powered vehicle as affecting negligence]; BAJI, No. 3.45; CACI, Nos. 418, 421.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
 X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.

7. Children.

b. Duty Owed to Child.

1. General Principle.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1001

[§ 1001] General Principle.

The same underlying consideration, namely, the child's lack of capacity to appreciate risks and to avoid danger (see supra, §998), leads to the imposition of a greater degree of care on the part of others to children. (See Hilyar v. Union Ice Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 30, 36, 286 P.2d 21 [duty of motorist to exercise care to discover presence of children and look out for their safety]; Fowler v. Seaton (1964) 61 C.2d 681, 688, 39 C.R. 881, 394 P.2d 697 [duty of nursery school to supervise children]; Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 C.2d 232, 243, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68, infra, §1062; Brizzolari v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1935) 7 C.A.2d 246, 248, 46 P.2d 783 [duty of carrier to child passenger]; Marino v. Valenti (1953) 118 C.A.2d 830, 842, 259 P.2d 84 [duty of possessor of explosives to avoid injury to children who might have access to them]; Grant v. Mueller (1958) 160 C.A.2d 804, 808, 325 P.2d 680 [driver's obligation to exercise extra care towards children]; Raymond v. Paradise Unified School Dist. of Butte (1963) 218 C.A.2d 1, 10, 31 C.R. 847, supra, §861; Calandri v. Ione Unified School Dist. of Amador (1963) 219 C.A.2d 542, 545, 33 C.R. 333, supra, §999; Wright v. Arcade School Dist. (1964) 230 C.A.2d 272, 277, 40 C.R. 812; Casas v. Maulhardt Buick (1968) 258 C.A.2d 692, 697, 66 C.R. 44 [criticizing inaccurate instructions]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §189; 2 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [negligent sale or entrustment of toy]; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 579 [negligence of private nursery school or day-care center]; 13 Proof of Facts 3d 475 [school's liability for injury to child going to or from school bus]; 41 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [social worker's malpractice for failing to protect foster children]; 20 A.L.R.2d 8, 24 [proprietor's liability for injury to patron caused by pushing of other patrons]; 30 A.L.R.2d 5 [duty of motorist approaching place where children are gathered]; 31 A.L.R.2d 789 [railroad's duty to children walking along railroad tracks]; 26 A.L.R.3d 317 [duty to warn child of danger]; 35 A.L.R.3d 9 [railroad's liability to child trespasser on train]; 88 A.L.R.3d 1236 [liability of youth camp for injury to child participant in program]; 58 A.L.R.4th 240 [liability of private nursery school or day care center for injury to child while attending]; BAJI, No. 3.38; CACI, No. 412.)

This rule is occasionally applied to minor children approaching adult years. (See Hernandez v. Murphy (1941) 46 C.A.2d 201, 208, 115 P.2d 565 [boy of 15]; Satariano v. Sleight (1942) 54 C.A.2d 278, 283, 129 P.2d 35 [boy of 18; "even boys of seventeen and eighteen years ... are not accustomed to exercise the same amount of care for their own safety as persons of more mature years"]; Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 191, 260 P.2d 663.)

Statutes sometimes deal with specific hazards; e.g., P.C. 402b makes it a misdemeanor to abandon a refrigerator, icebox, or freezing locker with a latching mechanism that may entrap a child. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §394.)

A homeowner's duty of supervision to a visiting child may be removed by the presence of the child's parent. (See Padilla v. Rodas (2008) 160 C.A.4th 742, 747, 73 C.R.3d 114, Supp., infra, §1058 [homeowners had no duty to supervise child who drowned in their backyard pool, where child was accompanied by his mother].)

In Wishart v. Claudio (1962) 207 C.A.2d 151, 24 C.R. 398, defendant P, an instructor in a summer day camp, took some of the boys on a nature walk. They met three boys out hunting, one carrying his rifle awkwardly. P, aware of the danger of shooting in the area, did not warn the hunters, or observe them to see if they went a safe distance; and he did not remove his own boys to a place of safety after he heard the gun fired twice. A third shot struck plaintiff, one of his own group. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed; the trial judge could infer the foreseeability of a careless firing, which reasonable precautions could have prevented. (207 C.A.2d 155.)

In Suess v. Westwood (1966) 246 C.A.2d 849, 55 C.R. 269, defendants parked their automobile in a trailer park. The radio antenna, dull in color and difficult to see at night, extended into the pedestrian area at eye level. Plaintiffs' 15-year-old son, a resident of the area, ran into it while playing and was killed. Held, a cause of action for wrongful death was stated. Cases dealing with encroachments of windows, automobiles, or loads onto a public sidewalk are equally applicable to this projection on private property. The allegation that decedent was a resident justified the inference that he was entitled to play there and that defendants should have anticipated his presence. This being so, the trier of fact could conclude that parking in that place would subject persons in his class to an unreasonable risk of harm. (246 C.A.2d 850.)

Childish curiosity and propensity to intermeddle must be taken into account. In Kataoka v. May Dept. Stores Co. (1943) 60 C.A.2d 177, 140 P.2d 467, a 4-year-old boy caught his finger in an escalator, when accompanying his mother on a shopping trip to defendant's store. Held, the jury could find negligence in failure to provide an attendant or guard. (60 C.A.2d 182.) And in Crane v. Smith (1943) 23 C.2d 288, 296, 144 P.2d 356, the same holding was made where a 3-year-old child caught his finger in the unguarded spout of a coffee grinder left standing in an aisle of defendant's market. (See Roberts v. Del Monte Properties Co. (1952) 111 C.A.2d 69, 73, 243 P.2d 914 [furniture and mattresses piled near open window in hall of hotel; 7-year-old boy, son of tenant, played on them and fell out window]; Amos v. Alpha Property Management (1999) 73 C.A.4th 895, 898, 87 C.R.2d 34 [landlord and manager of apartment building had duty to take reasonable precautions to prevent infant from falling from window in second-floor hallway; citing Roberts].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
D. Degree or Kind of Care in Special Situations.
8. Person With Mental or Physical Disability.

[§ 1003] Person With Mental or Physical Disability.

(1) Mental Deficiency. Unless the actor is a child (see supra, §998 et seq.), insanity or other mental deficiency does not relieve the actor from liability for conduct that does not conform to the standard of a reasonable person under like circumstances. (Rest.2d, §283B; see 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§863, 864.) Thus, mental deficiency does not excuse conduct that would otherwise be negligence. (Fox v. San Francisco (1975) 47 C.A.3d 164, 169, 173, 120 C.R. 779.)

In De Martini v. Alexander Sanitarium (1961) 192 C.A.2d 442, 13 C.R. 564, plaintiff, suffering from depression, voluntarily entered defendant hospital, on the recommendation of his psychiatrist, for shock treatment. To overcome his aversion to hospitalization and this treatment, his doctor recommended, and he and his wife approved, a minimum security facility. While in the hospital patio with the nurse temporarily absent, plaintiff climbed the 6-foot wall, jumped down, and fractured his ankle. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The principal contention is that the jury should have been instructed that plaintiff was incapable of contributory negligence as a matter of law. This is incorrect. There is a dearth of authority, but Prosser suggests that the same test should be applied to an insane person as to a child: "[T]he issue of contributory negligence of a mentally disturbed person is a question of fact; unless, of course, the evidence discloses that the person whose actions are being judged is completely devoid of reason. If he is so mentally ill that he is incapable of being contributorily negligent, he would be entitled to have the jury so instructed, since his position would be comparable to the child of tender years that is incapable of contributory negligence as a matter of law." (192 C.A.2d 447.)

(b) Here, plaintiff had never been adjudicated mentally ill or incompetent, and his actions, though impulsive and irrational, were voluntary. Under the circumstances, reasonable minds might differ on his accountability, and the question was one of fact for the jury. (192 C.A.2d 448.) (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §16.7; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §186; 91 A.L.R.2d 392 [contributory negligence of mentally incompetent or emotionally disturbed].)

(2) Physical Disability. If the actor is ill or otherwise physically disabled, the standard of conduct to which he or she must conform to avoid being negligent is that of a reasonable person under like disability. So far as physical characteristics are concerned, the hypothetical reasonable person may be said to be identical with the actor. Physical infirmities, such as blindness or deafness, or the weaknesses of age, as well as physical illnesses are treated merely as part of the "circumstances" under which a reasonable person must act. Thus, the standard of conduct for a blind person becomes that of a reasonable person who is blind. This is not a different standard from that of the reasonable person, but an application of it to the special circumstances of the case. (Rest.2d, 283C, Comments a, b; see *Jones v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
1. In General.
a. Nature of Tort.

[§ 1004] Nature of Tort.

(1) In General. The problem of recovery for "fright and shock" or, in the modern terminology, for emotional distress, arises in several branches of the law of torts. (See generally 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.4; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §308 et seq.; 38 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Fright, Shock, and Mental Disturbance §1 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §11.81 et seq.; 29 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 343 [analysis of negligent infliction of emotional distress cases in California]; 91 A.L.R.5th 545 [recovery for emotional distress due to treatment of pets and animals]; BAJI, No. 12.80; on construction of insurance policy to cover emotional distress under "bodily injury" clause, see Employers Cas. Ins. Co. v. Foust (1972) 29 C.A.3d 382, 386, 105 C.R. 505.)

(2) Distinctions.

(a) Damage. Emotional distress is a common additional element of damages for various intentional torts and for negligence, subject usually to the limitation that there must have been either some physical impact or a physical injury without impact. (See >Long v. PKS (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1293, 16 C.R.2d 103 [driver injured in collision could recover damages for emotional distress arising out of witnessing injury and death of passenger, her foster daughter]; infra, §1671.)

(b) Intentional Tort. The intentional causing of emotional distress is recognized as an independent tort for which damages can be recovered without proof of (1) a conventional tort, or (2) physical impact or injury. (See supra, §450.)

(c) Negligence. The negligent causing of emotional distress is not an independent tort but the tort of negligence, involving the usual duty and causation issues. Recovery is generally allowed where there is physical impact. (See, e.g., Di Mare v. Cresci (1962) 58 C.2d 292, 297, 300, 23 C.R. 772, 373 P.2d 860 [fall injuring hip and leg, leaving plaintiff suspended in air and causing emotional trauma]; Brewer v. Teano (1996) 40 C.A.4th 1024, 1029, 47 C.R.2d 348, infra, §1218) [physical impact]; Macy's Calif. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 C.A.4th 744, 748, 48 C.R.2d 496 [traditional negligence elements of duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages apply]; Lawson v. Management Activities (1999) 69 C.A.4th 652, 656, 81 C.R.2d 745 [policy of designating tort as negligent infliction of emotional distress often incorrectly results in its being treated as independent tort].) And some jurisdictions, including California, recognize liability where, even though there is no impact, there is physical injury. (See infra, §1005 et seq.)

Recovery for negligent causing of emotional distress is in some jurisdictions denied in the absence of either impact or physical injury (see infra, §1022), but is allowed in California (see infra, §1022).

(3) Categories of Claims. Negligent infliction of emotional distress cases are generally divided into two categories:

(b) Bystander. A "bystander" claim alleges emotional distress from witnessing negligently inflicted injury on a person closely related to plaintiff. (See Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, infra, §1009; Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008.)

(4) Restatement. Some difficulty in analysis has resulted from the Rest.2d, Torts §312, which states that "intentionally and unreasonably" subjecting the plaintiff to emotional distress when the likelihood of illness or other physical harm is foreseeable, is a form of negligence, i.e., the actor intends to inflict only the mental suffering, but his or her intentional act creates an unreasonable risk of an unintended result--the physical harm. Although his or her conduct amounts to something less than extreme outrage, the actor should recognize that bodily harm will result from the unreasonable risk. (Rest.2d, Torts §312, Comment b.) The Restatement rule, however, "does not give protection to mental and emotional tranquillity in itself." (Rest.2d, Torts §312, Comment a.) (See 44 Cal. L. Rev. 55; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 142.)

(5) Claims Against Public Policy. With respect to certain claims, courts have concluded that allowing a remedy in tort for infliction of emotional distress would be contrary to public policy. (See Dunkin v. Boskey (2000) 82 C.A.4th 171, 193, 98 C.R. 44 [allowing nonbiological parent to recover damages for developing close relationship with child misrepresented to be his and performing parental acts "is not 'damage' that should be compensable under the law"].)

[§ 1005] Injury Without Impact.

Even where there is no physical impact, recovery is usually allowed if the fright results in a physical injury or illness. (See *Dillon v. X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
1. In General.
c. Imputation of Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1006

[§ 1006] Imputation of Negligence.

When a plaintiff "asserts a claim that derives from the defendant's tort against a third person, negligence of the third person is imputed to the plaintiff with respect to that claim." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(a); on imputation of negligence to the plaintiff generally, see infra, §1324 et seq.) This rule extends to "claims for emotional distress based on the fact that the defendant caused personal injury to a person other than the plaintiff." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(a), Comment b.) The recovery is also reduced by the plaintiff's own negligence. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(a).)

The negligence of one plaintiff asserting an emotional distress claim is not imputed to another plaintiff unless it otherwise meets the standards of imputed negligence. For example, the negligence of one parent who witnesses the defendant causing injury to a child is not imputed to the other parent who also witnesses the accident. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(a), Comment f.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
a. Former Law: No Recovery.

[§ 1007] Former Law: No Recovery.

California, following the majority view, formerly denied recovery where the fear or shock resulted from danger to someone other than the plaintiff. In Reed v. Moore (1957) 156 C.A.2d 43, 319 P.2d 80, plaintiff wife alleged that she suffered shock, fright, and a miscarriage as a result of witnessing a collision between defendant's automobile and the one in which her husband was riding. The court approved the following rule: "[N]o recovery is permitted for a mental or emotional disturbance, or for a bodily illness resulting therefrom, in the absence of a contemporaneous bodily contact or independent cause of action, or an element of wilfulness, wantonness or maliciousness, in cases in which there is no injury other than one to a third person, even though recovery would have been permitted had the wrong been directed against the plaintiff." (156 C.A.2d 45.) (See Clough v. Steen (1934) 3 C.A.2d 392, 393, 39 P.2d 889 [plaintiff's shock from learning of death of her son]; Rest.2d, Torts §313(2); 38 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Fright, Shock, and Mental Disturbance §24 et seq.; 16 Cal. L. Rev. 550; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 229; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 201; 11 So. Cal. L. Rev. 381; 29 A.L.R.3d 1337 [right to recover damages in negligence for fear of injury to another, or shock or mental anguish at witnessing injury].)

The issue was reexamined and the majority view again followed by a 4-3 decision in Amaya v. Home Ice, Fuel & Supply Co. (1963) 59 C.2d 295, 29 C.R. 33, 379 P.2d 513. Plaintiff alleged that while pregnant, she observed defendant's negligently driven truck run over her 17-month-old son, and suffered shock and injury to her nervous system. Held, no cause of action was stated. The court found no American cases squarely supporting recovery for shock induced solely by apprehension of danger to a third person, and pointed out that the Second Torts Restatement followed this overwhelming weight of authority. Approving these decisions, the court emphasized the danger of opening the way to fraudulent claims, and the virtual impossibility of placing logical or practical limitations on the classes of third persons, the time of the shock, or the presence of the plaintiff at the scene. (59 C.2d 299.) (See 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 740; 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 299.) Amaya was later overruled. (See infra, §1008.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
b. Current Law: Recovery Allowed.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1008

[§ 1008] Current Law: Recovery Allowed.

Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, overruled Amaya v. Home Ice, Fuel & Supply Co. (1963) 59 C.2d 295, 29 C.R. 33, 379 P.2d 513, supra, §1007, and established a broad rule of liability. Defendant, allegedly driving negligently, ran over and killed a young child. Plaintiff mother sued on three causes of action: (1) wrongful death of the child; (2) emotional distress resulting in pain and physical injury of the mother, in close proximity and having witnessed the accident; (3) emotional distress resulting in pain and injury of another infant daughter, also in close proximity and having witnessed the accident. Held, judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Legal duty analysis rejected. The court first reexamined the conventional legal duty approach and found it no longer acceptable (see supra, §839); the new approach looks to foreseeability of the risk. (68 C.2d 739.)

(b) New factors as guidelines. In lieu of fixed categories of liability and nonliability, the court set forth general guidelines to resolve the issue: "In determining, in such a case, whether defendant should reasonably foresee the injury to plaintiff, or, in other terminology, whether defendant owes plaintiff a duty of due care, the courts will take into account such factors as the following: (1) Whether plaintiff was located near the scene of the accident as contrasted with one who was a distance away from it. (2) Whether the shock resulted from a direct emotional impact upon plaintiff from the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident, as contrasted with learning of the accident from others after its occurrence. (3) Whether plaintiff and the victim were closely related, as contrasted with an absence of any relationship or the presence of only a distant relationship." (68 C.2d 740.) Evaluation of these factors indicates the degree of defendant's foreseeability; the court will then determine whether the accident and harm were reasonably foreseeable. (68 C.2d 741.)

(c) Guidelines applied. These factors, present here, established a prima facie case; i.e., a negligent driver who causes the death of a young child may reasonably expect that the mother will not be far distant and will on witnessing the accident suffer emotional trauma. (68 C.2d 741.)

(d) Conclusion. The holding rests on general concepts of negligence, proximate cause, and foreseeability, which work successfully in other situations involving emotional trauma, and should not be regarded as unworkable in "the most egregious case of them all." (68 C.2d 747.)

The three dissenters observed that the Amaya court considered every argument advanced here and rejected all of them, and that every American jurisdiction denied liability. They further described the guidelines as arbitrary and calling for inexplicable distinctions, and insisted that the matter should have been left to the Legislature. (68 C.2d 752.)

The Dillon rule and the factors determining its proper application have been applied in many subsequent cases (see infra, §1010 et seq.), and the decision has been the subject of extensive comment. (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.4; C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §11.83; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [bystander recovery for negligently inflicted mental distress]; 16 Proof of Facts 3d 189 [negligent infliction of emotional distress by health care provider]; 58 Cal. Rev.* 177 [California cases]; 29 A.L.R.3d 1337 [recovery of damages for fear of injury to another, or emotional distress at witnessing injury]; 77 A.L.R.3d 447 [injury to or death of member of plaintiff's family arising from physician's or hospital's wrongful conduct]; 89 A.L.R.5th 255 [recovery under state law requiring bystander plaintiff seeking to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress to suffer physical impact or be in zone of danger]; 90 A.L.R.5th 179 [bystander recovery for emotional distress from witnessing another's injury in products liability context]; 96 A.L.R.5th 107 [recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress under rule of Dillon or refinements of that rule]; 98 A.L.R.5th 609 [relationship between victim and bystander plaintiff as affecting right to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress due to witnessing injury to another where plaintiff is not member of victim's immediate family]; 99 A.L.R.5th 301 [immediacy of observation of injury as affecting right to recover for shock or mental anguish from witnessing injury to another]; BAJI, No. 12.83.)

The United States Supreme Court has rejected the "relative bystander" test of Dillon in the context of an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C., §51 et seq.). (See Consolidated Rail Corp. v. Gottshall (1994) 512 U.S. 532, 114 S.Ct. 2396, 2411, 129 L.Ed.2d 427, 448.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
c. Dillon Guidelines Are Binding.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1009

[§ 1009] Dillon Guidelines Are Binding.

In Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 646, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, the fundamental issue was whether the "guidelines" enunciated in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, see supra, §1008, are adequate, or if they should be refined to create greater certainty in this area of the law.

Plaintiff mother was nearby when her son was struck by defendant's automobile. She neither saw nor heard the accident, but was told of it by her daughter, and then rushed to the scene where she saw her bloody and unconscious child, who she believed was dead. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant on the ground of lack of contemporaneous sensory perception of the accident. The Court of Appeal, relying on Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, reversed, holding that contemporaneous awareness of a sudden accident was not a prerequisite to recovery. Held, Court of Appeal judgment reversed. The Dillon guidelines are binding.

(a) Originally emotional distress was merely an aggravation of damages sought under intentional tort theories; e.g., assault, abuse of process, false imprisonment, libel, invasion of privacy. (48 C.3d 649, citing the text.) Later it was recognized as a distinct tort. (48 C.3d 650, and footnotes 2, 3.)

(b) Recovery for emotional distress in negligence actions initially was recognized where the victim (1) was injured, and emotional distress was a "parasitic" item of damages, or (2) was in the zone of danger and, despite lack of impact, suffered physical injury. (48 C.3d 651.) Amaya v. Home Ice, Fuel & Supply Co. (1963) 59 C.2d 295, 29 C.R. 33, 379 P.2d 513, supra, §1007, refused to burden the rule to allow recovery by a bystander. (48 C.3d 651, 652.) It was overruled 5 years later in Dillon but the Dillon court, to give some initial definition of the expansion of the cause of action for NIED, enunciated "guidelines." (48 C.3d 654.) However, the parameters of third-party NIED actions remain uncertain. (48 C.3d 655.) The case-to-case approach that misled the Court of Appeal in this case has provoked inconsistent rulings in the lower courts and much critical comment by scholars. (48 C.3d 661, 662, citing law review articles and notes.)

question and thus affords the court a better opportunity to create a clear rule. "In so doing we balance the impact of arbitrary lines which deny recovery to some victims whose injury is very real against that of imposing liability out of proportion to culpability for negligent acts. We also weigh in the balance the importance to the administration of justice of clear guidelines under which litigants and trial courts may resolve disputes." (48 C.3d 664.)

(d) Among the concerns of the Amaya court was the social cost of imposing liability on a negligent tortfeasor for all foreseeable emotional distress suffered by relatives who witness the injury. (48 C.3d 664.) In Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, infra, §1683, denying a child's right to recovery for loss of a parent's consortium, multiplication of the defendant's liability was an additional concern. (48 C.3d 665.) "In identifying those persons and the circumstances in which the defendant will be held to redress the injury, it is appropriate to restrict recovery to those persons who will suffer an emotional impact beyond the impact that can be anticipated whenever one learns that a relative is injured, or dies, or the emotion felt by a 'disinterested' witness. The class of potential plaintiffs should be limited to those who because of their relationship suffer the greatest emotional distress." (48 C.3d 667.)

(e) "[A] plaintiff may recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person if, but only if, said plaintiff: (1) is closely related to the injury victim; (2) is present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time it occurs and is then aware that it is causing injury to the victim, and (3) as a result suffers serious emotional distress--a reaction beyond that which would be anticipated in a disinterested witness and which is not an abnormal response to the circumstances." (48 C.3d 667.)

(f) "The dictum in Ochoa suggesting that the factors noted in the Dillon guidelines are not essential in determining whether a plaintiff is a foreseeable victim of defendant's negligence should not be relied on. The merely negligent actor does not owe a duty the law will recognize to make monetary amends to all persons who may have suffered emotional distress on viewing or learning about the injurious consequences of his conduct. To the extent they are inconsistent with this conclusion, Nazaroff v. Superior Court ... and Archibald v. Braverman ... are disapproved. Experience has shown that, contrary to the expectation of the Dillon majority, and with apology to Bernard Witkin, there are clear judicial days on which a court can foresee forever and thus determine liability but none on which that foresight alone provides a socially and judicially acceptable limit on recovery of damages for that injury." (48 C.3d 668.) (On Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 C.A.3d 553, 145 C.R. 657, and Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, see supra, §1011.)

One justice concurred and two justices dissented. (48 C.3d 670.) (See Wright v. Los Angeles (1990) 219 C.A.3d 318, 350, 268 C.R. 309 [only family member present was not aware that victim was being injured by paramedic's negligence; following Thing]; Fife v. Astenius (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1090, 1092, 284 C.R. 16 [plaintiffs heard sound of vehicle collision, but did not learn that family member was involved until several seconds thereafter; following Thing]; 24 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 89.)

In Wilks v. Hom (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1264, 3 C.R.2d 803, an explosion in plaintiff's home due to a negligently installed propane system severely injured her daughter. At the time of the explosion, plaintiff was in the living room and the daughter was in her bedroom. Plaintiff felt the force of the explosion, which was strong enough to propel her out the front door, saw a flash emanate from a bedroom immediately adjacent to her daughter's and heard her daughter scream. Held, in accordance with the Dillon principles as refined in Thing, plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for emotional distress. Following Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022, supra, §1012, "it is not necessary that a plaintiff bystander actually have witnessed the infliction of injury to her child, provided that the plaintiff was at the scene of the accident and was sensorially aware, in some important way, of the accident and the necessarily inflicted injury to her child." (2 C.A.4th 1271.)

[§ 1010] Nearness of Plaintiff.

The first Dillon factor is set forth in the opinion: "Whether plaintiff was located near the scene of the accident as contrasted with one who was a distance away from it." (Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 740, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008.) (See Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 256, 79 C.R. 723, infra, §1011; Arauz v. Gerhardt (1977) 68 C.A.3d 937, 949, 137 C.R. 619 ["[S]ince plaintiff was not at the scene of the accident at the time of the impact and not near enough to the scene to have any sensory perception of the impact, it cannot be said that any injuries she may have suffered were caused by the direct emotional impact of her sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident"]; Meighan v. Shore (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1025, 1044, 40 C.R.2d 744 [wife, who was not at hospital when her husband had heart attack because hospital employees had told her to go home, could not recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress].)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
e. Contemporaneous Observance.
1. Condition Met: Recovery Allowed.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1011

[§ 1011] Condition Met: Recovery Allowed.

The second Dillon factor considers whether the shock and emotional impact arose from a sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident. In Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, defendant illegally sold gunpowder to plaintiff's 13-year-old son. It exploded and caused serious injuries. Within moments afterward, plaintiff mother arrived, observed her son's condition, and suffered shock. Held, the contemporaneous observance criterion of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 740, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008 was met. Observance in a strict sense was lacking, for the mother was not present at the scene; but the emotional trauma was fairly contemporaneous with the accident. "Manifestly, the shock of seeing a child severely injured immediately after the tortious event may be just as profound as that experienced in witnessing the accident itself." (275 C.A.2d 256.)

In Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 C.A.3d 553, 145 C.R. 657, plaintiff's declaration stated that she had been standing in front of property adjacent to defendants' home when she heard a scream, that she ran to defendants' yard and saw her 3-year-old son being pulled from the pool, and that she aided in unsuccessful attempts to revive him. Held, summary judgment for defendants was improper.

(a) The attempts to revive the child and the observation of his degenerating physical condition were like the subsequent sensory perceptions found too remote in Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, infra, §1012, and Arauz v. Gerhardt (1977) 68 C.A.3d 937, 949, 137 C.R. 619, infra, §1012, but Archibald suggests a different result. (80 C.A.3d 565, 566.)

(b) Hence, there were triable issues of fact "whether the alleged physical harm to the mother resulted from an emotional shock proximately caused by the direct emotional impact from the contemporaneous observation of the immediate consequences of the defendants' negligent act, which was the proximate cause of the injury and death." (80 C.A.3d 566.) In other words, the scream from the pool area may have permitted plaintiff to reconstruct the scene as well as the plaintiff in Archibald; thus, her knowledge of what had occurred would be derived from her own senses and not from another's recital. (80 C.A.3d 566.)

(c) A swimming pool is dangerous because of the inability of an unattended infant to appreciate the inherent danger; but Dillon requires a contemporaneous observance, and if the shocked mother were present, she could have prevented the accident. (80 C.A.3d 567.) (See Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 646, 668, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009 [contemporaneous observation "guideline" of Dillon is binding rule].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
e. Contemporaneous Observance.
2. Condition Not Met: Recovery Denied.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1012

[§ 1012] Condition Not Met: Recovery Denied.

In Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022, plaintiff husband was seated in his car parked at a curb, and his wife was shutting the car door. Defendant, approaching from the rear, straddled the curb, hit plaintiff's car, injuring plaintiff, and killing his wife. In addition to his cause of action for wrongful death (see infra, §1691), plaintiff sought to recover for emotional trauma incident to witnessing his wife's death. The judge instructed the jury that he could recover for emotional distress suffered "as a result of being present" at the time. Held, the instruction was incorrect in part, and the defect, in view of the conflict in the evidence, was reversible error.

(a) Element of sensory and contemporaneous observance. This, as pointed out in Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, supra, §1011, does not require a visual perception of the impact. Hence, although plaintiff did not see his wife hit, he perceived the fact because he knew her position, observed defendant's vehicle approach her at a high speed, and realized that she had been struck. Hence, he was "a percipient witness to the impact." (19 C.3d 76.)

(b) Element of physical injury. The traumatic shock must result in some form of physical injury, and there was substantial evidence of a gastric disturbance for which plaintiff was treated. But the evidence was conflicting whether it was caused by witnessing his wife's death (recovery proper), or by feelings of anger against defendant or grief and sorrow over the loss of his wife (recovery improper). The instruction to the jury incorrectly permitted plaintiff to recover because of his mere presence at the scene, without regard to the cause of his emotional distress, and this was prejudicial error. (19 C.3d 77.)

In Deboe v. Horn (1971) 16 C.A.3d 221, 94 C.R. 77, Mr. D was seriously injured in an automobile accident. Mrs. D was summoned to the hospital to which he had been taken, observed him there, and was told that he was totally paralyzed. Both sued defendant, the negligent driver. Held, the wife could not maintain a cause of action for emotional distress. The facts, established by stipulation, showed that she was neither an actual witness to the accident nor a person in close proximity in time, but was merely advised of its occurrence by others. (16 C.A.3d 223.)

In Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Center of East Bay (1973) 31 C.A.3d 22, 106 C.R. 883, plaintiff mother alleged that her 5-year-old daughter was admitted to defendant hospital; that due to defendant's negligence, the child died painfully from a gastrointestinal hemorrhage; and that the mother was with the child during her last hours and suffered emotional trauma from witnessing the death. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, "contemplates a sudden and brief event causing the child's injury." (31 C.A.3d 24.) Also, the event must be one that can be the subject of sensory perception; i.e., visibility of the tortious act itself, not merely the result, is essential. To extend the Dillon rule to the entire area of injury to a parent by improper diagnosis of a child's ailment is contrary to that opinion's counsel of moderation. (31 C.A.3d 24, 25.) (For disapproval of Jansen requirement of sudden occurrence, see Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, infra, §1013.)

In Hair v. Monterey (1975) 45 C.A.3d 538, 119 C.R. 639, the court took note of Dillon's counsel of "moderation," and observed that "[w]e choose to heed that caution." (45 C.A.3d 544.) Recovery was denied where plaintiff mother was in a waiting room while surgery was being performed on her child, and serious permanent injury did not develop until 2 days later. (45 C.A.3d 543.)

In Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, infra, §1382, plaintiff husband alleged that he was in a hospital delivery room where plaintiff wife was in labor, witnessed disturbing developments and emergency procedures and his wife's pain, and was present when the attending doctor announced that the fetus had died. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. The allegations of the complaint show only physical presence; they do not allege a shock resulting from a "sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident." The event, by its very nature, was hidden from his perception: He did not see the injury to the victim or otherwise sense it. (19 C.3d 584.) The disturbing developments induced a sense of anxiety, but it did not become shock until he was actually informed of the death by the doctor. "In short, the impact derived not from what he saw and heard during the attempted delivery, but from what he was told after the fact." (19 C.3d 585.)

In Scherr v. Hilton Hotels Corp. (1985) 168 C.A.3d 908, 214 C.R. 393, plaintiff alleged that she watched a live news coverage of a fire at defendant's hotel, with knowledge that her husband was there at the time, and that he suffered injuries in the fire. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Her contemporaneous observance was only of the fire; she did not witness her husband's injuries as they were being inflicted and could not plead that she suffered shock from doing so. (168 C.A.3d 910.) (See 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 65.)

In Hurlbut v. Sonora Community Hosp. (1989) 207 C.A.3d 388, 254 C.R. 840, plaintiffs, mother, father, and child, sued for medical malpractice in performance of a cesarean section resulting in the child being born with severe brain damage. Because plaintiff father was not present, and plaintiff mother was unconscious during the delivery, neither could meet the requirement, and recovery was precluded by Justus. (217 C.A.3d 399, 400, 401.)

Many other cases stress the requirement of contemporaneous observance in denying recovery. (See Powers v. Sissoev (1974) 39 C.A.3d 865, 874, 114 C.R. 868; Arauz v. Gerhardt (1977) 68 C.A.3d 937, 949, 137 C.R. 619; Parsons v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 506, 512, 146 C.R. 495 [following Krouse and Arauz; "there has been no showing that real parties saw, heard, or otherwise sensorily perceived the injury-producing event"]; Cortez v. Macias (1980) 110 C.A.3d 640, 649, 650, 167 C.R. 905 [following Justus]; Hathaway v. Superior Court (1980) 112 C.A.3d 728, 734, 169 C.R. 435 ["A steady flow of Court of Appeal cases have continued to strictly apply a contemporaneous sensory perception requirement of Dillon"]; Madigan v. Santa Ana (1983) 145 C.A.3d 607, 610, 193 C.R. 593; Wiggins v. Royale Convalescent Hosp. (1984) 158 C.A.3d 914, 917, 206 C.R. 2; *Ebarb v.  e. Contemporaneous Observance.
 3. Event Need Not Be Sudden.

[§ 1013] Event Need Not Be Sudden.

In Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, R, a 13-year-old boy in the custody of Santa Clara Juvenile Hall, became ill on March 23. Plaintiffs, his parents, visited him in the infirmary, found him in great pain, and repeatedly requested increased medical care, which was not given. He died of pneumonia on March 26. Plaintiffs filed a complaint in several causes of action against defendant county and four alleged agents and employees, and the lower court sustained demurrers to the chief causes of action. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacation of the order.

(a) Plaintiffs clearly satisfied the first and last requirements of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008 (located near the scene, closely related to the victim). The issue here is whether, in order to state a cause of action, "the child's injury must have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by the plaintiff." Dillon and many cases following it involve this fact situation. (39 C.3d 167.) Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Center of East Bay (1973) 31 C.A.3d 22, 106 C.R. 883, supra, §1012, stated it as a requirement, and Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, supra, §1014, approved Jansen's statement. (39 C.3d 167, 168.)

(b) A review of other cases, however, leads to the conclusion that the "sudden occurrence" requirement "is an unwarranted restriction on the Dillon guidelines." "Such a restriction arbitrarily limits liability when there is a high degree of foreseeability of shock to the plaintiff and the shock flows from an abnormal event, and, as such, unduly frustrates the goal of compensation--the very purpose which the cause of action was meant to further." (39 C.3d 168.) The cases allowing recovery have applied the Dillon criteria with some degree of flexibility; e.g., Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022, supra, §1012, and Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, supra, §1011, indicate that Dillon does not require a visual perception of the impact causing the death or injury; and Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 C.A.3d 553, 145 C.R. 657, supra, §1011, held a complaint sufficient where the shock resulted from the contemporaneous observation of the immediate consequences of the defendants' act. (39 C.3d 168, 169.)

(c) Plaintiffs' position is similar to that of the plaintiffs in these cases, and Jansen is distinguishable: "Here Mrs.

Ochoa was aware of and observed conduct by the defendants which produced injury in her child. She was aware of the fact that her child was in need of immediate medical attention. To her knowledge the defendants had failed to provide the necessary care. As her complaint alleges, she 'experienced extreme mental and emotional distress and concern for her son ... while she was present.' Like the parents in both Nazaroff and Archibald, she was able to perceive, and suffered shock from, the connection between defendants' conduct and her child's injury. By contrast, in Jansen, the mother's distress stemmed only from the sight of her child's suffering. Any distress she may have suffered as a result of perceiving the impact of defendant's conduct upon her child was the result of 'learning of the accident from others after its occurrence.' ... In this regard, the mother's situation in Jansen was no different from that of any parent who witnessed the pain and suffering of his or her child due to illness or injury and is unaware that the defendant's conduct is a contributing factor to the continued pain and suffering." (39 C.3d 169.)

(d) Although Jansen may be distinguished on the ground that in that case, the plaintiff there did not perceive defendant's tortious conduct, "we by no means suggest," as the court did in Hair v. Monterey (1975) 45 C.A.3d 538, 544, 119 C.R. 639, that the plaintiff must be aware of the tortious nature of the defendant's actions. As the court observed in Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 583, 127 C.R. 720, that requirement would lead to the anomalous result that a mother who saw her child struck by a car could not recover because she did not realize that the driver was intoxicated. (39 C.3d 170.) "[W]hen there is observation of the defendant's conduct and the child's injury and contemporaneous awareness the defendant's conduct or lack thereof is causing harm to the child, recovery is permitted." (39 C.3d 170.) (See 17 Pacific L. J. 1027; 27 Santa Clara L. Rev. 91; 20 U.S.F. L. Rev. 361; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 65.)

[§ 1014] Plaintiff May Be Voluntarily Present.

In Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, supra, §1012, the court, in a strong dictum, laid down a special limitation on a cause of action under the guidelines of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008: A plaintiff voluntarily at the scene of a traumatic event cannot recover. This dictum was repudiated in Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 171, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013).

The court in Ochoa declared that the rule undercuts the foundation on which Dillon rests: "A distinction between the involuntary and voluntary presence of the close relative of the injured or dead person thus appears to relieve the defendant of liability for the very risk which should have been foreseen. While in a proper case it may be said that a bystander assumed the risk of traumatic shock, we cannot say that in the ordinary course of events the voluntary or involuntary presence of the plaintiff should be a decisive factor in determining whether plaintiff has stated a Dillon cause of action. To the extent that Justus makes a contrary suggestion, it is disapproved." (39 C.3d 171.)

5. Seriousness of Event Must Be Apparent.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1015

[§ 1015] Seriousness of Event Must Be Apparent.

In Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 C.4th 910, 123 C.R.2d 465, 51 P.3d 324, one of the plaintiffs took her mother, a cancer patient, into the hospital to undergo an outpatient surgical procedure--the insertion of a catheter to be used during chemotherapy. The procedure was to take only 21 minutes, but after an hour elapsed, there was an urgent call for a thoracic surgeon (which plaintiff believed was related to her mother's surgery). After another hour, plaintiff was told by one of defendant doctors that the operating team thought that plaintiff's mother had had a mild stroke. (This proved to be incorrect.) One more hour passed, at which time plaintiff observed her mother being rushed to the critical care unit. She was a blue color, her feet were elevated, and her head was almost touching the floor. Shortly thereafter, a doctor told plaintiff that an artery or vein had been nicked during the operation, causing the patient's blood to go into her chest, and that they planned to insert a drainage tube to keep her alive until the arrival of a vascular surgeon. About 10 minutes later, plaintiff saw the same doctor running down the hall with multiple units of blood. By this time, the other plaintiff, also a daughter of the patient, had arrived and was given the same information, with the additional fact that her mother's angle was designed to keep her blood moving toward the heart. Plaintiffs then witnessed their mother, in the same condition as before, being rushed to an operating room, accompanied by about 10 doctors and nurses. (The patient survived, but succumbed to cancer about a year later.) Based on these events, plaintiffs alleged negligent infliction of emotional distress. Defendants successfully moved for summary judgment, relying on the holding in Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 668, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009, that one of the three requirements for pleading a bystander's negligent infliction of emotional distress action (the only requirement at issue in this case) is that the plaintiff be "present" at the scene of the injury-producing event and be aware that it is causing injury to the victim. Held, summary judgment for defendants was proper.

(a) Plaintiffs cannot base their negligent infliction of emotional distress claim solely on the transection of their mother's artery, because it is undisputed that no plaintiff was in the operating room when this event occurred. The requirement in Thing that the plaintiff be contemporaneously aware has not been interpreted as requiring visual perception of the injury-producing event. For example, a plaintiff who hears an explosion in a room known to be occupied by a relative can recover. (28 C.4th 916, citing Wilks v. Hom (1992) 2 C.A.4th 1264, 3 C.R.2d 803, supra, §1009.) However, plaintiffs in this case had no sensory perception whatsoever of the transection when it occurred (the emergency call for a thoracic surgeon carried no clear information to a bystander in the waiting room as to the operation's progress). (28 C.4th 917.)

(b) Plaintiffs seek to redefine the injury-producing event as including defendants' failure to diagnose and treat the damaged artery. The problem with this definition is that plaintiffs, being laypersons, could not meaningfully perceive any such failure. In other words, plaintiffs knew that their mother was in serious condition, but they were not then aware that the treatment that she was receiving was inadequate. This does not mean that a layperson can never perceive medical malpractice. Witnessing a relative's sound limb being amputated is but one example of a doctor's conduct that is not beyond a layperson's understanding and that will thus support a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress, but the same cannot be said for medical malpractice generally. (28 C.4th 917, citing Golstein v. Superior Court (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1415, 273 C.R. 270, infra, §1016.)

(c) Plaintiffs' reliance on Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, does not support their position, because the injury-producing event in that case, i.e., the failure of custodial authorities to respond to obviously serious symptoms, was not hidden from the understanding of a layperson. This is not true for misdiagnosis, unsuccessful treatment, or treatment that turns out, only in retrospect, to have been inappropriate. Plaintiff's reliance on Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 127 C.R. 720, infra, §1019, is also misplaced. That case suggested that the bystander's contemporaneous observation of the results of the defendant's infliction of harm was enough to support a negligent infliction of emotional distress cause of action. However, Mobaldi was decided before Thing, is irreconcilable with it, and does not survive that decision. (28 C.4th 919, citing Golstein.)

6. Event Must Be Visible.

[§ 1016] Event Must Be Visible.

In Golstein v. Superior Court (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1415, 273 C.R. 270, D, 8 years old, was undergoing treatment for curable cancer in defendant hospital. In this action by his parents for wrongful death, the complaint alleged that, as a result of the negligence of defendant Dr. C, D was given an overdose of radiation that resulted in his death; that plaintiffs thereafter witnessed the results of the radiation poisoning (the "grotesque alteration" of D's appearance), and suffered emotional distress. Plaintiffs were not present at the time of the radiation, and were obviously unable to meet the condition of contemporaneous observance of the injury-causing event; but they contended that where, as here, the injury-causing event (overdose) was not capable of observation by the senses, a cause of action could be stated because they did witness the results of the injury-causing event. Held, the complaint did not state a cause of action.

(a) "The Dillon cause of action has undergone a tortuous development. ... Like many new causes of action, Dillon recovery expanded beyond its initial source as a stream broadens to a river; but like a river flowing over rocks, the law of Dillon recovery encountered various contexts and fact patterns and resulted in an irregular mosaic of currents and depths. In Thing the Supreme Court dammed much of the river's flow and attempted to channel Dillon recovery into the order and predictability of a man-made canal. Unfortunately, the Thing opinion did not discuss or resolve the troublesome side-current of the traumatic but invisible injury-causing event, an event which either cannot be perceived or cannot be perceived with meaningful understanding. California law remains analytically confused regarding bystander recovery for injury-causing events which are themselves invisible, but which leave visible manifestations witnessed by distressed family members." (223 C.A.3d 1419, citing Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008 and Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009.)

(b) Much of the inconsistency in the cases on the factor of contemporaneous observance arises from "positing the opposite poles of direct contemporaneous observance versus learning of an accident after the fact." (223 C.A.3d 1420.) Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, supra, §1011, permitted recovery by a mother who came upon the scene "within moments" to observe her child lying wounded; subsequent decisions refused to extend beyond a few moments in time the Archibald exception to contemporaneous observation. (223 C.A.3d 1420.) "The confusion was exacerbated by the problem of the injury-causing event which--unlike the paradigmatic accident, such as a traffic collision or explosion--is essentially invisible to the plaintiff, either because it is incapable of sensory perception or it cannot be meaningfully perceived by a layperson." (223 C.A.3d 1422.)

(c) This latter problem arose when the second Dillon factor was applied to the medical setting as opposed to the standard accident scenario. (223 C.A.3d 1421 et seq., discussing Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, supra, §1012, Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Center of East Bay (1973) 31 C.A.3d 22, 106 C.R. 883, supra, §1012, and Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 127 C.R. 720, infra, §1019.) Then, in Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, the court "apparently" approved Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 C.A.2d 253, 79 C.R. 723, supra, §1011, Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 C.A.3d 553, 145 C.R. 657, supra, §1011, Mobaldi, and Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022, supra, §1012, "all examples of flexible Dillon application." (223 C.A.3d 1424.) But "Ochoa left unresolved the problem of the essentially invisible injury-causing event." (223 C.A.3d 1425.)

(d) However, Thing makes it clear that understanding perception of the injury-causing event is essential, and that where an event cannot be perceived distress recovery is not allowed. (223 C.A.3d 1427.)

(e) "Petitioners argue that since radiation is invisible its fatal dosage cannot be seen, and it is unjust to deny them recovery based on rules having their origins in fact patterns involving visible events such as accidents. Were it not for Thing, petitioners would have a compelling case. However, we interpret Thing's policy statement as a requirement that Dillon plaintiffs experience a contemporaneous sensory awareness of the causal connection between the negligent conduct and the resulting injury." (223 C.A.3d 1427.)

X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
e. Contemporaneous Observance.
7. Observation May Be While Event Is Occurring.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1017

[§ 1017] Observation May Be While Event Is Occurring.

Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 646, 668, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009, stated the requirement that a plaintiff may recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third party only if the plaintiff was present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time it occurred and was then aware that it was causing injury to the victim.

In Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 C.A.3d 178, 285 C.R. 728, Mr. and Mrs. O worked for their employer on plastic injection molding machines. Mr. O was a foreman responsible for keeping the machines running, and Mrs. O went to tell him to fix a machine that had stopped. However, she found that her husband, in an attempt to repair another machine, had become trapped inside the mold area of that machine while it was still running. After seeing his limp body and dripping blood, she summoned help. In this action, Mrs. O sought recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge, relying on Thing, granted a nonsuit. Held, reversed.

(a) Thing is distinguishable; in that case the plaintiff did not contemporaneously observe the injury-producing event. Here, Mrs. O observed her husband trapped in the machine, with his skin discolored, his body limp, no appearance of breathing, and blood flowing from his arm. This evidence supports the inference that Mr. O was being deprived of oxygen during the time that she observed him. (234 C.A.3d 184.)

(b) A footnote in Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, quoted with approval in Thing, distinguishes contemporaneous observation from merely receiving news. And in the present case, as in Ochoa, plaintiff personally observed the event while it was still occurring. "We do not believe that the bright line drawn in Thing v. La Chusa was intended to deny recovery to a plaintiff who personally observes an injury-producing event in progress. The limitation, instead, excludes those plaintiffs who come upon the scene after the event, and whose observation is solely of the consequences of the occurrence." (234 C.A.3d 185.)

injury. "Even if she could not 'perceive' the full extent of the damage resulting from oxygen deprivation, she was clearly aware that his body was limp, that blood was running down his arm, and that he did not respond when she spoke to him." (234 C.A.3d 186.) This evidence would have supported a finding that "the injury-producing event was still occurring at the time Mrs. [O] discovered Mr. [O] trapped in the machine, and that she was then aware that it was causing injury to him, so as to meet the contemporaneous observation requirement." (234 C.A.3d 186.) (Cf. Johnson v. Ventura (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1400, 1405, 35 C.R.2d 150, supra, §319 [plaintiffs, who did not see victim being stabbed by hospital patient, but who witnessed her suffering, were not entitled to recover].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
f. Close Relationship.
1. Family Relationship.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1018

[§ 1018] Family Relationship.

One of the guidelines of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 741, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, is "[w]hether plaintiff and the victim were closely related, as contrasted with an absence of any relationship or the presence of only a distant relationship." This guideline has been usually regarded as requiring a close family relationship, e.g., husband and wife or parent and child. (See Drew v. Drake (1980) 110 C.A.3d 555, 557, 168 C.R. 65, infra, §1020; Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 583, 195 C.R. 902.)

In Trapp v. Schuyler Construction (1983) 149 C.A.3d 1140, 1142, 197 C.R. 411, plaintiff minors alleged that they had a close relationship with their first cousin, and witnessed his drowning in defendant's swimming pool. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. The cases limit reasonable foreseeability to persons related by law to the victim; there is no authority for extending the concept of "close relationship" to include first cousins. (149 C.A.3d 1142, 1143; see Moon v. Guardian Postacute Services (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1005, 1009, 116 C.R.2d 218 [son-in-law did not fulfill "closely related" requirement, even though he alleged that decedent stayed with him from time to time before going into nursing facility and that emotional bond between them was strong].)

In Kriventsov v. San Rafael Taxicabs (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1445, 229 C.R. 768, plaintiff's action was based on his observation of the hit-and-run death of his nephew. The complaint alleged that he lived with his nephew and the latter's parents and grandmother "in the intimate and mutual interdependence of a single home," and that they had "a close, warm and loving relationship, analogous to that of parent and child." Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 195 C.R. 902, infra, §1021, and Trapp, supra, 149 C.A.3d 1142, are distinguishable. "In Kately the relationship was not based on blood, marriage or a functioning family unit. In Trapp a blood relationship was present, but the plaintiffs and the decedent did not live together. ... In contrast, plaintiff herein was not only the natural uncle of the decedent, but had been and was living with him in the same household as part of the family unit." (186 C.A.3d 1449.)

aunts and uncles, all of whom may be expected to have assumed responsibilities for child rearing and the attendant emotional relationships with children that normally accompany such circumstances." (186 CA.3d 1449.)

In Quesada v. Oak Hill Imp. Co. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 596, 261 C.R. 769, following the death of L, his body was taken by the coroner's office for an autopsy and was later transferred to Oak Hill pursuant to burial arrangements made by his widow. Plaintiffs, decedent's sister and niece, filed a complaint against the county and Oak Hill to recover for emotional distress, alleging that the defendants negligently handled the body so as to bury another man instead of L; and ridiculed and mocked plaintiffs and the widow when they saw the body of a stranger and informed Oak Hill of the fact. The stranger's body was buried, but 5 days later the county admitted the mix-up to the widow, Oak Hill exhumed the body, and L's body was buried in its proper place. Defendants settled with the widow, and the trial court sustained demurrers to the complaints of the sister and niece. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed.

(a) Defendants and the trial court relied on Cohen v. Groman Mortuary (1964) 231 C.A.2d 1, 41 C.R. 481, in which a brother and sister and other relatives sought recovery against a mortuary that substituted the body of another for their sister at her funeral. Cohen denied recovery because the brother and sister were not parties to the contract with the mortuary, and had no legal right to dispose of the deceased's remains, and therefore the mortuary owed them no duty. (213 C.A.3d 601.)

(c) "The facts before us clearly support a finding of foreseeability of injury to close friends and relatives flowing from respondents' mishandling of the corpse." (213 C.A.3d 605.) (1) Parties charged with care of the remains of a deceased reasonably should know that the surviving friends and relatives are emotionally vulnerable. (213 C.A.3d 605.) (2) The nature of a funeral makes it not only foreseeable but inevitable that close friends and family members will be present. (213 C.A.3d 606.) (3) The allegations of Oak Hill's ridicule makes that defendant's behavior more than simple negligence. (213 C.A.3d 606.)

(d) Recent Supreme Court decisions indicate the court's concern about expanding imposition of liability for intangible injuries such as emotional distress, and the caution that foreseeability alone is not enough: the determination is tempered by policy considerations. (213 C.A.3d 607, 608, citing Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009.) "Applying these considerations ... it appears appropriate to limit the class of potential plaintiffs to close family members in order to avoid expansive liability and to be assured that those claiming damages by way of the negligent handling of a corpse truly suffered serious emotional distress." (213 C.A.3d 608.)

(f) The deceased's sister clearly falls within this class; the niece does not, but is not necessarily excluded: "[T]he deceased, usually aged, frequently will leave few, if any, family members of close blood relationship; death may rob us of those naturally closest to us. One cousin may stand at the funeral of another or a niece may sit alone at her aged aunt's funeral. The simple expedient of calculation of the degree of consanguinity in order to assess liability is not, of itself, a sufficient basis to reject the niece's claim. Whether the niece can plead and prove her relationship to the decedent was one falling within the category of 'exceptional circumstances' remains to be demonstrated." (213 C.A.3d 610.) (See 98 A.L.R.5th 609 [relationship between victim and bystander plaintiff as affecting right to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress due to witnessing injury to another where plaintiff is not member of victim's immediate family].)

[§ 1019] Foster Parent.

In Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 127 C.R. 720, plaintiffs Mr. and Mrs. R were the foster parents of John, a young child who suffered from a congenital kidney ailment. Mrs. R took him to U.C.L.A. Medical Center for a pyelogram, and at the request of the attending physician, held the frightened child in her arms while an injection of glucose solution and dye was made. The doctor negligently used 50% instead of 5% glucose, and the child became spastic, convulsant, and finally comatose, and suffered permanent injuries. Mrs. R's shock resulted in depression and the need for psychiatric treatment. Held, a cause of action was stated. The rule of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, is not confined to relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption. Mrs. R and John held themselves out to the public as mother and child, the child was treated as a filial member of the family, and the doctor treated the two as mother and child. "Because the relationship possesses all of the incidents of parent and child except those flowing as a matter of law and because the latter incidents such as inheritance are essentially irrelevant to considerations limiting recovery in tort directly damaging the plaintiff, the relationship is analogous to that existing in Dillon." (55 C.A.3d 583.)

Mobaldi was distinguished on its special facts (doctor's knowledge of the foster parent relationship) in Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 584, 195 C.R. 902, infra, §1020. Further, language in Mobaldi inconsistent with the conclusion in Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 C.3d 267, 250 C.R. 254, 758 P.2d 582, was disapproved in that opinion.

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
f. Close Relationship.
3. Unmarried Cohabitant.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1020

[§ 1020] Unmarried Cohabitant.

(1) In General. The right of an unmarried cohabitant to recover on a cause of action under Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, for negligent infliction of emotional distress, or for loss of consortium (see infra, §1685) had been the subject of much comment and conflicting decisions of the Courts of Appeal. (See 26 Cal. Western L. Rev. 175; 41 Hastings L. J. 477; 15 Pacific L. J. 925.)

In Drew v. Drake (1980) 110 C.A.3d 555, 168 C.R. 65, plaintiff alleged that she and M had lived together as "de facto spouses" for 3 years, and that she suffered emotional distress when she witnessed M's death in an automobile collision. The court observed that no reported decision holds that "friends or housemates" meet the Dillon test of "close relationship." (110 C.A.3d 557.) There was a strong dissent.

In Ledger v. Tippitt (1985) 164 C.A.3d 625, 210 C.R. 814, Jennifer, aged 15, began cohabiting with Richard, aged 19, in 1981, and they planned to be married December 6, 1981. Just prior to their wedding date, Richard was injured in an automobile accident; on his recovery, the two went to Nevada to be married, but failed to bring necessary papers, and returned to California. Their son was born, they lived together as a family, and Richard provided the sole support. In March 1983, the three were in their automobile and narrowly avoided a collision with defendant's car. The cars stopped, the drivers got out and engaged in a verbal altercation, and then defendant without warning stabbed Richard. Jennifer saw what happened, rushed to Richard's aid, and he died in her arms 20 minutes later. In this action by Jennifer for loss of consortium and negligent infliction of emotional distress, the trial judge gave judgment on demurrer for defendant. Held, judgment affirmed on loss of consortium (infra, §1685), but reversed on emotional distress. (164 C.A.3d 646.)

In Coon v. Joseph (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1269, 237 C.R. 873, plaintiff male alleged that he and his male friend E had been living in a stable and emotionally significant relationship as exclusive life partners; that they attempted to board a municipal bus driven by defendant, but defendant denied plaintiff entry and verbally abused E and struck his face; and that plaintiff observed the assault and suffered great emotional distress. In this action against the bus driver and the city for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, judgment on demurrer was rendered for defendants. Held, affirmed.

(a) "To include the 'emotionally significant,' 'stable,' and 'exclusive' relationship pled by appellant as a 'close relationship' within the meaning of Dillon v. Legg, would invite inconsistent results because recovery would be dependent upon the personal, completely subjective viewpoints of the trier of fact. For this reason, among others, California courts have denied liability for loss of consortium absent a legal husband-wife relationship at the time of the occurrence of the injury." (192 C.A.3d 1276.)

(b) In Ledger, the complaint pleaded facts establishing a "de facto" marital relationship; here, plaintiff and E were both males, and "the Legislature has made a determination that legal marriage is between a man and a woman." (192 C.A.3d 1277.)

In Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 C.3d 267, 250 C.R. 254, 758 P.2d 582, plaintiff R was a passenger in a car driven by L when it was struck by a car driven by defendant. Plaintiff was injured and L was killed. Plaintiff filed a complaint seeking recovery in three causes of action: (1) negligent injury to himself, (2) negligent infliction of emotional distress suffered as a result of witnessing the injury to L, and (3) loss of consortium. The complaint referred to L as his "de facto spouse," and alleged that he had an "unmarried cohabitation relationship" with her "which was both stable and significant and parallel to a marital relationship." The trial court sustained a demurrer, and the parties settled the personal injury claim and stipulated to entry of judgment against plaintiff in order to preserve his right to appeal from the dismissal of his other two causes of action. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Negligent infliction of mental distress.

(1) The third prong of the foreseeability test set forth in Dillon--whether plaintiff and the victim were closely related--has not been extended to cover friends or distant relatives, but a few cases have allowed recovery where the plaintiff and victim shared a relationship that was the functional and emotional equivalent of a family relationship. (46 C.3d 271, citing Leong v. Takasaki, a Hawaii case involving a stepfather's mother; Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 127 C.R. 720, supra, §1019, involving a foster mother, and Ledger involving an unmarried cohabitant.)

(2) Plaintiff, relying on Ledger and Mobaldi, argued that the marked increase in the number of unmarried cohabitants makes it foreseeable that two persons occupying the same vehicle may be such cohabitants whose relationship parallels that of a legally married couple. However, as Dillon recognized, policy considerations may justify rejection of the cause of action. (46 C.3d 274.)

(3) The state has a strong interest in the marriage relationship, and to the extent that unmarried cohabitants are granted the same rights as married persons that interest is inhibited. (46 C.3d 274.) "Our emphasis on the state's interest in promoting the marriage relationship is not based on anachronistic notions of morality. ... Formally married couples are granted significant rights and bear important responsibilities toward one another which are not shared by those who cohabit without marriage. ... Plaintiff does not suggest a convincing reason why cohabiting unmarried couples, who do not bear such legal obligations toward one another, should be permitted to recover for injuries to their partners to the same extent as those who undertake these responsibilities." (46 C.3d 275.)

(4) Allowance of the cause of action would impose a difficult burden on the courts. It would require an inquiry into the relationship to determine whether the "emotional attachments of the family relationship" existed, and whether the relationship was "stable and significant" under the test set forth in Butcher v. Superior Court (1983) 139 C.A.3d 58, 188 C.R. 503, infra, §1685. Authorities in this state and elsewhere have rejected the Butcher test as inviting "mischief and inconsistent results." (46 C.3d 275, 276, citing Ledger, and out-of-state cases.) The determination would call for "a massive intrusion into the private life of the partners," and would not provide a definite and predictable test. (46 C.3d 276.)

(5) It is necessary to limit the number of persons to whom a negligent defendant owes a duty of care. As Prosser observes: "It would be an entirely unreasonable burden on all human activity if the defendant who has endangered one man were to be compelled to pay for the lacerated feelings of every other person disturbed by reason of it, including every bystander shocked at an accident, and every distant relative of the person injured, as well as his friends. And obviously the danger of fictitious claims, and the necessity of some guarantee of genuineness, are even greater here than before." (46 C.3d 276.)

(6) "The need to draw a bright line in this area is essential. ... The temptation to give legal effect to close emotional ties between unrelated or distantly related persons is often strong, for it cannot be denied that in some cases such relationships offer as much affection, support and solace as is provided by immediate family members, and that the emotional trauma suffered as the result of injury to a person in such a relationship may be as devastating as that suffered by a member of the immediate family. Yet we cannot draw a principled distinction between an unmarried cohabitant who claims to have a de facto marriage relationship with his partner and de facto siblings, parents, grandparents or children. The 'problems of multiplication of actions and damages' that would result from such an extension of liability ... would place an intolerable burden on society." (46 C.3d 277.) Hence, plaintiff has failed to state a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. (46 C.3d 277, disapproving the holding of Ledger and language in Mobaldi inconsistent with this conclusion.)

(b) Loss of consortium. Nearly all cases subsequent to Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, infra, §1679, have refused to extend the cause of action to unmarried cohabitants. (46 C.3d 278.) Butcher is the sole exception in this state. And, in addition to the virtual absence of authority to support plaintiff's position, some of the factors recited above in the discussion of the cause of action for emotional distress apply equally to this claim for loss of consortium. "[T]he state's interest in promoting the responsibilities of marriage and the difficulty of assessing the emotional, sexual and financial relationship of cohabiting parties to determine whether their arrangement was the equivalent of a marriage, reinforce our conclusion." (46 C.3d 279, disapproving Butcher insofar as it is contra.)

(2) Domestic Partner. If an unmarried cohabitant qualifies as a "domestic partner" as defined in Family C. 297 (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §27, he or she is entitled to recover damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress "to the same extent that spouses are entitled to do so under California law." (C.C. 1714.01.)

In Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 195 C.R. 902, cross-complainant Kately purchased a boat from Gateway that had been manufactured by Marine, for use in waterskiing. Kately, her daughter Rebecca, age 14, and Rebecca's friend Rhonda, also age 14, took the boat out to ski. While Rhonda was being towed as a skier, the steering column on the boat locked, the boat circled and struck Rhonda, causing serious injuries from which she died. Kately and Rebecca alleged that they regarded Rhonda as a "filial member" of the Kately family, and suffered great emotional distress from the accident. Held, no cause of action under Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, was stated. The relationship was only that of a friend, and to hold that sufficient would be to abandon the Dillon admonition that the courts exclude the remote and unexpected. (148 C.A.3d 585.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Rodriguez v. Kirchhoefel (2005) 128 C.A.4th 427, 26 C.R.3d 891, plaintiff, who was 14 years old at the time of the accident, alleged that she suffered severe emotional distress as a result of seeing defendant's car hit decedent. To establish the necessary close relationship, plaintiff submitted evidence that (1) she and her mother had lived with decedent and her family "on and off" for "several extended periods of time"; (2) she had been living with decedent for 2 or 3 years at the time of her death; (3) she and decedent shared a bedroom when they lived together; and (4) she and decedent had known each other since plaintiff was 6 years old, and were very close, regularly referring to themselves as sisters. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) A blood or marital relationship is required. (128 C.A.4th 430.)

(b) Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 668, footnote 10, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, text, §1009, states that "[a]bsent exceptional circumstances, recovery should be limited to relatives residing in the same household, or parents, siblings, children, and grandparents of the victim." Rather than indicating that a marital or blood relationship is not required in exceptional circumstances, this means that recovery is limited to persons who are (1) parents, siblings, children, or grandparents of the victim, regardless of whether they reside with the victim; (2) other relatives of the victim if they reside with the victim; or (3) other relatives of the victim, even if they do not reside with the victim, if exceptional circumstances are present. Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
2. Physical Trauma Present: Third Person Injured.
g. (New) Defective Product as Source of Emotional Distress.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1021A

[§ 1021A] (New) Defective Product as Source of Emotional Distress.

In Gu v. BMW of North America, LLC (2005) 132 C.A.4th 195, 33 C.R.3d 617, plaintiff purchased a vehicle from defendant distributor. It was involved in a one-car collision while being driven by plaintiff's sister, L, who lost control and was killed. Plaintiff did not observe the accident. Nevertheless, claiming that the vehicle's head protection system afforded inadequate protection in a side-impact collision case and that, as the purchaser, she was the "direct victim" of this negligence, plaintiff brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff alleged that defendant breached its duty to her to use reasonable care in the vehicle's manufacture, design, and assembly and that it was foreseeable that she would suffer emotional injury if the purchased vehicle malfunctioned and killed a member of her family. Defendant alleged that the contemporaneous observation requirement was not satisfied. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) In California, the law of negligent infliction of emotional distress is typically analyzed under the bystander theory or the direct victim theory. Only the latter theory is involved here. In its decisions addressing the direct victim theory (see, e.g., Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.4th 1064, 9 C.R.2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197, text, §1029; Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, text, §1036), the California Supreme Court emphasized that there is no independent tort of negligent infliction of emotional distress; the tort involved is negligence, an essential element of which is a duty to the plaintiff. The Potter case established that there is no duty to avoid negligently causing emotional distress to another. Thus, for plaintiff to recover, there must be some other legal duty, the breach of which proximately caused her emotional distress. A legal duty may exist by virtue of a special relationship, may be imposed by law or may be assumed by the defendant. In asserting that defendant was liable, plaintiff contended that a duty arose from a special relationship and also was imposed by the laws of negligence. (132 C.A.4th 204, citing Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C.4th 543, 87 C.R.2d 886, 981 P.2d 978, text, §1037.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that, because she was a purchaser of defendant's product, a special relationship existed between them that created a duty of care. This argument is without merit for the following reasons. (1) Defendant's duty to use reasonable care in the design of the vehicle extended only to persons using the vehicle as intended, such as the driver and passengers, or to other persons within the range of potential danger from the vehicle. Because plaintiff was not present at the time of the accident (and thus was outside the range of potential danger), defendant owed no duty of care to her. For the same reason, plaintiff's contention that defendant's duty arose because plaintiff was using the car in a foreseeable manner by lending it to her family on the belief that it was safe to do so is rejected. Lending a vehicle to others "does not constitute use of the vehicle for its intended purpose of transportation." (132 C.A.4th 206.) (2) No special relationship arose by virtue of the purchase agreement. When the express object of the contract is the mental and emotional well-being of one of the contracting parties, the breach of the contract may give rise to damages for mental suffering or emotional distress. However, plaintiff did not allege a breach of the purchase agreement, which, in any event, was not a contract with her mental or emotional well-being as its express object. (132 C.A.4th 206.) In short, cases permitting recovery for emotional distress typically involve mental anguish stemming from more personal relationships, such as that of physician-patient (see Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, text, §1022) or psychotherapist-patient (see Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, text, §1024). (132 C.A.4th 207.)

(c) With respect to a duty imposed by law, plaintiff contended that under C.C. 1714, defendant owed her a duty not to cause her emotional distress (unless public policy clearly dictated otherwise) and that Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, text, §1086, required recognition of this duty. However, the factors listed in Rowland as determining the existence of a duty (text, §833) do not support plaintiff's position: (1) Plaintiff suffered foreseeable emotional distress as a result of her sister's death, but the mere presence of a foreseeable risk of injury to third persons is not sufficient, standing alone, to impose liability for negligent conduct (see Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C.4th 370, 11 C.R.2d 51, 834 P.2d 745, text, §992). (2) Plaintiff did not allege that defendant committed any morally reprehensible act in connection with the head protection system, such as failing to include a head protection system of any kind or intentionally failing to provide an adequate head protection system. (3) To deter the manufacture and sale of defective products, it is not necessary to impose a duty to avoid negligently causing emotional distress to product owners who lend a defective product to a family member, because the manufacturers and sellers of defective products are already liable for damages resulting from the injuries suffered by the users of those defective products. (4) Currently, manufacturers and sellers are exposed to claims of emotional distress suffered by persons injured while using a defective product (see Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 195 C.R. 902, text, §1509). Allowing their close relatives, who were not present at the injury-producing event, also to recover emotional distress damages would inevitably increase both insurance costs and the demands for payment from the pool of available insurance funds. (132 C.A.4th 207.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
3. Physical Trauma Present: No Impact or Injury.
a. Development of Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1022

[§ 1022] Development of Rule.

In this borderland of tort liability, the California law was in accord with the majority view that no liability is incurred where neither physical injury nor impact is shown. (See Espinosa v. Beverly Hosp. (1952) 114 C.A.2d 232, 249 P.2d 843 [no recovery for mental suffering in absence of physical injury]; Gautier v. General Tel. Co. (1965) 234 C.A.2d 302, 307, 44 C.R. 404 [following Espinosa]; Quezada v. Hart (1977) 67 C.A.3d 754, 761, 136 C.R. 815, infra, §1031; 38 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Fright, Shock, and Mental Disturbance §14; 38 A.L.R.4th 998 [intentional infliction of emotional distress as independent tort].) (See Allen v. Jones (1980) 104 C.A.3d 207, 216, 163 C.R. 445 [concurring opinion; ridiculing traditional rule].)

In Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, the court, citing Allen, abrogated the rule. Plaintiff husband's complaint against defendant hospital and a staff physician set forth two causes of action. (1) Mental suffering: The doctor negligently examined the wife and erroneously advised her that she had contracted syphilis; she underwent treatment including massive doses of penicillin, and suffered injury to her body and nervous system; defendants instructed her to advise plaintiff of the diagnosis, and he was required thereafter to undergo blood tests to ascertain whether he was the source of his wife's purported infection; as a result of the negligently erroneous diagnosis, his wife suspected him of extramarital sexual activities, and the resulting tension caused a breakup of their marriage; as a consequence, he suffered extreme emotional distress, and incurred medical expenses for counseling in an effort to save the marriage. (2) Loss of consortium: As a consequence of these acts, plaintiff was deprived of the love, companionship, etc., of his wife. Held, both causes of action were maintainable. (For holding on loss of consortium, see infra, §1676.)

(a) Duty of care owed to husband. In Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, plaintiff was not directly injured: she was a witness to injury to a third person (her child), and Dillon sets forth guidelines to limit recovery in that kind of situation. In the instant case, plaintiff was a direct victim of the negligent act, and the guidelines of Dillon are inapplicable; instead, the general principle of foreseeability of harm, set forth in Dillon, applies. It was reasonably foreseeable that the erroneous diagnosis and its probable source would produce marital discord and resultant emotional distress to the married patient's spouse; and the doctor's advice to have the husband examined made plaintiff a foreseeable victim of the negligent diagnosis, for it was to be anticipated that both parties would experience suspicion and hostility when confronted with medical evidence of a particularly noxious infidelity.

(b) Recovery for emotional distress without physical injury.

(1) Traditional rule. The courts and commentators have debated the issue since the turn of the century, but the general rule, as declared in Sloane v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1896) 111 C. 668, 680, 44 P. 320, limits recovery for emotional distress to "parasitic damages." Vanoni v. Western Airlines (1967) 247 C.A.2d 793, 56 C.R. 115, supra, §1022, Espinosa v. Beverly Hosp. (1952) 114 C.A.2d 232, 249 P.2d 843, supra, §1022, and other cases hold that there can be no recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress unaccompanied by physical injury. (27 C.3d 924, 925.)

(2) Analysis and criticism of rule. The primary justification for the requirement of physical injury is that it serves as a screening device to minimize a presumed risk of feigned injuries and false claims. (27 C.3d 925.) While most courts adhere to this view, scholars consider that the artificial barrier to recovery is unnecessary. The problem is one of proof, and the remedy should not be denied in all cases because some claims may be false. (27 C.3d 926.) In California, our courts have devised various means for giving compensation for infliction of emotional distress where there is some assurance of the validity of the claim: (a) where physical injury occurs contemporaneously with or is a consequence of emotional distress; (b) where the plaintiff asserts an independent cause of action apart from personal injury, e.g., where an insurer wrongfully refuses to settle a claim (Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Connecticut (1967) 66 C.2d 425, 58 C.R. 13, 426 P.2d 173, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §258); (c) where the defendant intentionally engages in extreme and outrageous conduct (Alcorn v. Anbro Engineering (1970) 2 C.3d 493, 86 C.R. 88, 458 P.2d 216, supra, §461, and State Rubbish Collectors Assn. v. Siliznoff (1952) 38 C.2d 330, 240 P.2d 282, supra §461). (27 C.3d 926, 927.)

(3) Repudiation of rule. The traditional rule is unnecessary to guard against fraudulent claims. (a) The unqualified requirement of physical injury is both overinclusive and underinclusive. It permits recovery where there is any physical injury, no matter how trivial; and it mechanically denies claims that could be proved valid. (27 C.3d 928.) (b) It encourages extravagant pleading and distorted testimony--exaggeration of symptoms of headache, nausea, insomnia, etc., to make out a technical case of bodily injury on which to predicate a parasitic recovery for the more grievous emotional distress suffered. (27 C.3d 929.) (c) The attempted distinction between physical and psychological injury is unclear, and the essential question whether the plaintiff has suffered a serious injury should not turn on that classification. (27 C.3d 929, 930.)

(4) Cause of action stated. "The negligent examination ... and the conduct flowing therefrom are objectively verifiable actions by the defendants that foreseeably elicited serious emotional responses in the plaintiff and hence serve as a measure of the validity of plaintiff's claim for emotional distress. As yet another corroborating factor, we note the universally accepted gravity of a false imputation of syphilis: by statute it constitutes slander per se." (27 C.3d 930.)

Two justices dissented, asserting that it is for the Legislature to create new causes of action and to fix the limits of recovery; and that the court should not have created this new, independent tort of recovery for emotional distress without physical injury: "The fundamental problem is not foreseeing (by unguided hindsight) the consequences of unintentional conduct, but rather realistically limiting liability for those consequences." (27 C.3d 936.) (See 69 Cal. L. Rev. 1142; 33 Hastings L. J. 291; 33 Hastings L. J. 583, 601; 35 Hastings L. J. 494; 13 Pacific L. J. 179; 14 Pacific L. J. 1215 [arguing that DES daughters may sue manufacturers for negligent infliction of emotional distress resulting from fear of cancer]; 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 534, 817; 19 Pepperdine L. 3. Physical Trauma Present: No Impact or Injury.
b. Cases Upholding Recovery.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1023

[§ 1023] In General.

A number of Court of Appeal decisions have applied the rule of Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, in favor of plaintiffs. (See Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, infra, §1024; Accounts Adjustment Bureau v. Cooperman (1984) 158 C.A.3d 844, 848, 204 C.R. 881, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §542; Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Service (1984) 162 C.A.3d 1236, 1250, 209 C.R. 189; Holliday v. Jones (1989) 215 C.A.3d 102, 264 C.R. 448, infra, §1025.)

In Wooden v. Raveling (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1035, 71 C.R.2d 891, plaintiff was standing in her front yard when defendant's vehicle was propelled into the yard after negligently colliding with another vehicle. Plaintiff was not struck, but feared for her life. She brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, to which defendant successfully demurred. Held, reversed.

(a) Negligent infliction of emotional distress cases are of two main categories: "bystander" cases in which the plaintiff was not physically impacted or injured, but instead witnessed someone else being injured because of the defendant's negligence; and direct victim cases in which the plaintiff's claim of emotional distress was based on the violation of a duty owed directly to the plaintiff. "Direct victim" cases do not require physical injury, and the present case is in that category. (61 C.A.4th 1037.)

(b) In direct victim cases that do not involve impact, Bro v. Glaser (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1398, 27 C.R.2d 894, imposed two requirements: (1) a consensual preexisting relationship; and (2) outrageous conduct. However, neither requirement is mandated by the relevant decisions. The requirement of a preexisting relationship was derived from Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.4th 1064, 9 C.R.2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197, infra, §1029. Although Burgess did factually involve a consensual preexisting relationship, it actually stated that the requisite duty could have three origins: (1) a duty assumed by the defendant, (2) a duty imposed on the defendant by law, or (3) a duty arising out of a preexisting relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant. Thus, a preexisting relationship is not a sine qua non of a direct victim claim. (61 C.A.4th 1038.)

(c) With respect to the outrageous conduct element, no recent case has required that the defendant's conduct rise to the level of being "outrageous," and this element was specifically rejected by Mercado v. Leong (1996) 43 C.A.4th 317, 50 C.R.2d 569. (61 C.A.4th 1046.) The relevant precedents simply treat an emotional distress claim as a species of negligence in which damages caused by a breach of duty are compensable. The duty may arise in one of the aforementioned three ways, and the conduct need only be "negligent," not "outrageous." (61 C.A.4th 1042.)

In Andalon v. Superior Court (1984) 162 C.A.3d 600, 208 C.R. 899, plaintiffs, father and mother, sued defendant doctor for medical malpractice, consisting of improper prenatal care of the mother that resulted in the unwanted birth of a child afflicted with Down's syndrome. Held, mandamus issued directing the trial court to vacate its order granting defendant's motion for partial summary judgment. The distinction between direct victims and bystanders may be made on an application of the factors in Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179:

(a) "What flows from viewing Molien as a Biakanja case? Importantly, the issue of 'direct' or 'bystander' modality is informed by the Biakanja criteria which condition foreseeability as the measure of actionability. It removes the cause of action in Molien from the amorphous nether realm of negligent infliction of emotional distress to medical malpractice. The root problem with viewing a tort, the gist of which is negligent infliction of mental distress, from the perspective of a new cause of action is that foreseeability of the harm looms as the paramount criterion. But foreseeability, without more, provides what Borer would describe as an unworkable delineation of the extent of a tortfeasor's liability. This problem is alleviated if the analysis is recharted from within the established doctrines of recognized torts that address the question of the foreseeable victim. Then the focus shifts to the policy calculus by which an exiting duty is extended." (162 C.A.3d 610; on Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, see infra, §1683.)

(b) "In this case we perceive both parents to be direct victims of the malpractice alleged. Mrs. Andalon was a party to the contract with the defendant and no issue of his duty to advise her concerning mongolism is tendered at this stage of the action. Mr. Andalon's interest in the receipt of information and advice on this topic mirrors hers. His injury is not merely derivative of Mrs. Andalon's injury but flows from his role as a participant in the reproductive life of the marital couple and its lawful choices. The burden of parental responsibility falls directly upon his shoulders. The tort duty arising from the contract, between defendant and Mrs. Andalon, runs to him, not merely because of the foreseeability of emotional harm to him, but because of the nexus between his significant interest and the 'end and aim' of the contractual relationship. He is manifestly a direct beneficiary of tort-duty imposed by virtue of the doctor-patient relationship." (162 C.A.3d 611.)

In Newton v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1986) 184 C.A.3d 386, 229 C.R. 890, plaintiffs Rebecca and Robert were the parents of a child born with a paralysis of the upper arm resulting from improper use of forceps during delivery. In this action against defendant hospital, the lower court, applying the guidelines of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, sustained a demurrer on the ground that, at the time of the birth, Rebecca was unconscious and Robert was not present; hence, neither perceived the wrongful act. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed; plaintiffs were direct victims under the Molien theory.

(a) Defendant contended that plaintiffs were not direct victims because the malpractice was aimed at the child, not the parents. But Andalon furnishes the answer: "[I]n both Molien and Andalon the doctor-patient relationship with the wife directly implicated the interest of the husband." (184 C.A.3d 391.)

(b) In the present case, an obstetrician-patient relationship existed. The mother was a direct victim of the negligence committed in the execution of this relationship, which resulted in injuries to her child; and the relationship between defendant and the mother implicated the reproductive efforts of the couple, which personally interested the father. (184 C.A.3d 392.) (See 18 Pacific L. J. 1303.)

b. Cases Upholding Recovery.
2. Counseling.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1024

[§ 1024] Counseling.

In Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, the court, in three separate opinions with a majority consisting of only three regular justices, made some difficult conceptual distinctions. Plaintiff mother and her minor sons came to defendant's clinic for counseling. Defendant's therapist treated the mother as well as the children, believing that each child's psychological problems arose in part from difficulties in the mother-son relationship. Nearly 2 years later, the mother discovered that the therapist had sexually molested her sons, and so advised defendant clinic; the director told them that the therapist had done nothing illegal, but that he would no longer be assigned minor patients; and the therapist wrote plaintiffs stating that he would undergo psychotherapy.

The present action for negligent infliction of emotional distress resulted in judgment for defendants on demurrer. The Court of Appeal affirmed on the ground that no cause of action was stated either under the "bystander" theory of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008 or the "direct victim" theory of Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022 (because the mother was neither present at the time the acts occurred nor the target of the therapist's unprofessional conduct). Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Negligent causing of emotional distress is not an independent tort but the tort of negligence, and the traditional elements of duty and causation apply. (48 C.3d 588, citing the text.)

(b) In Molien, this court pointed out that the Dillon factors were not the sole means of determining a duty of care, but applied only in the context of a bystander witness. (48 C.3d 589, footnote 4.) Damages for severe emotional distress are recoverable "when they result from the breach of a duty owed the plaintiff that is assumed by the defendant or imposed on the defendant as a matter of law, or that arises out of a relationship between the two." (48 C.3d 590.) By directing that the husband be told of a diagnosis that would disrupt the marital relationship, the doctor in Molien assumed a duty to convey accurate information, and the husband was accordingly a direct victim of the doctor's negligence. (48 C.3d 590.)

(c) In the present case, "the counseling was not directed simply at each mother and son as individuals, but to both in the context of the family relationship." (48 C.3d 590.) And the therapist knew or should have known that his sexual molestation of the child would directly injure and cause severe emotional distress to his other patient, the mother, as well as to the parent-child relationship that was also under his care. "His abuse of the therapeutic relationship and molestation of the boys breached his duty of care to the mothers as well as to the children." (48 C.3d 591.)

(d) In Richard H. v. Larry D. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 591, 243 C.R. 807, supra, §724, plaintiff husband, consulting a psychotherapist for marital counseling, stated a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress where the therapist had sexual relations with plaintiff's wife. "It is no less foreseeable that a mother who consults a therapist for purposes of stabilizing and improving her relationship with her son, and who commits herself and her son to the therapist's care, would feel betrayed and suffer emotional distress upon learning that the therapist had, during the course of the treatment, sexually molested her son." (48 C.3d 591.)

A concurring opinion by the author of the main opinion, with another justice concurring, advanced an additional theory: "I believe that what we have before us is a case of outrageous conduct, atrocious and offensive acts committed within a relationship of trust, that might permit the imposition of liability for the intentional infliction of emotional distress." (48 C.3d 592, discussing cases and Restatement of Torts.)

An additional concurring opinion of three justices disagreed with the majority's theory that plaintiff mother was a direct victim under Molien, and offers a different theory of recovery:

(a) "The majority's reliance on Molien in this case, and its suggestion that permitting recovery is somehow novel although not a 'dramatic step' are inexplicable. The explanation in Molien that the plaintiff was a 'direct victim' did no more than distinguish and explain why the Molien plaintiff had not stated a cause of action as a 'bystander' victim whose emotional distress injury was caused by observation of an injury to another. ... Identification of the plaintiff as a 'direct victim' of the defendant's negligence did not, however, explain the source of the duty which obligated the defendant for emotional distress damages--recovery which is normally permitted only as an interim of 'parasitic' damages when the defendant is liable for another injury. The majority's explanation here that the therapist's 'tortious conduct' was directed at both the children and their mothers suffers from the same defect. It does not identify any tort other than negligence that supports the recovery of damages for emotional distress, and thus supports negligent infliction of emotional distress as an independent cause of action." (48 C.3d 600.)

(b) "Neither reliance on, nor analogy to, Molien is appropriate in this case. Each of the members stated a cause of action for professional malpractice. When a professional relationship involves counseling or therapy for the purpose of treating an emotional or psychiatric condition, the right to recover for malpractice which worsens that condition and in so doing causes severe emotional distress is clear. Indeed, the majority cite ample authority for such recovery, but for reasons that are unclear, refuse to acknowledge that professional malpractice is the sole basis for holding that the mother stated a cause of action in their complaint." (48 C.3d 600.) (See Jacoves v. United Merchandising Corp. (1992) 9 C.A.4th 88, 110, 11 C.R.2d 468 [parents whose son committed suicide after being released from defendant hospital were direct victims, where they were treated as patients in therapy sessions and utilized as active instrumentalities of their son's treatment]; 22 Pacific L. J. 189.)

[§ 1025] Legal Malpractice.

In Holliday v. Jones (1989) 215 C.A.3d 102, 264 C.R. 448, plaintiff H was convicted of involuntary manslaughter related to the killing of his wife. His conviction was reversed on the ground of incompetency of defendant J, his defense counsel, and he was acquitted on retrial. He brought the present action against Jones, for himself and his minor children, seeking damages for professional negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge found defendant J liable as a matter of law, based on the facts set forth in the unpublished opinion reversing H's conviction, and awarded $ 6,173.53 general and special damages. Held, judgment for H affirmed. (For the portion of the opinion reversing the judgment for the children, see infra, §1028.)

(a) Defendants, conceding that H suffered severe emotional distress, nevertheless contended that Quezada v. Hart (1977) 67 C.A.3d 754, 136 C.R. 815, infra, §1031, follows the American majority rule that damages for emotional distress cannot be recovered in a legal malpractice action except upon a showing of affirmative misconduct or bad faith. (215 C.A.3d 112.)

(b) Quezada was based on the former rule requiring physical injury in order to recover emotional distress damages. This rule was abrogated in Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, and the Molien theory was applied to a legal malpractice case in Betts v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1984) 154 C.A.3d 688, 717, 201 C.R. 528, although the opinion in Betts does not refer to Quezada. (215 C.A.3d 113, 114.) To reject the Betts holding would create a special rule benefiting only negligent lawyers. "If as a result of improper psychiatric diagnosis an individual is mistakenly committed to a mental hospital, Molien plainly allows recovery of emotional distress damages against the negligent psychiatrist. If the same individual is mistakenly committed as a result of the negligence of his lawyer and suffers the same damages, defendants' argument would require that recovery be denied." (215 C.A.3d 114.)

(c) In most of the out-of-state cases cited for the majority rule, the only interest harmed by the attorney's malpractice was a property interest; and recovery was denied primarily for that reason, i.e., that the interest invaded was solely "an economic one." (215 C.A.3d 114, 115, 116.) Where, as here, the interest is in liberty--a more fundamental and personal right--and the emotional distress is not only foreseeable but "virtually a guaranteed result," the U.S. Court of Appeals decision in Wagenmann v. Adams (1st Cir. 1987) 829 F.2d 196, distinguishes Quezada and supports recovery. (215 C.A.3d 117, 118, 119.)

(d) "[R]ecover of damages for emotional distress in a legal malpractice case--if it is to be limited at all--should turn on the nature of plaintiff's interest which is harmed and not merely on the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct." In light of the liberty interest here, the general rule of damages applies and J should be liable for emotional distress damages he caused." (215 C.A.3d 119.)

(e) The court added the following observation on problems not resolved by its opinion:

(1) The holding involves privately retained counsel, and the question whether it applies to a defendant represented by appointed counsel or a public defender is best left to the Legislature. (215 C.A.3d 119.)

(2) The possible chilling effect of the decision on the quality of legal representation of defendants cannot be considered in the absence of evidence on this issue; it cannot be said as a matter of law that the elimination of this single element of damages would improve legal representation by privately retained counsel, or that failure to limit damages will decrease the quality of this representation. (215 C.A.3d 119.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
3. Physical Trauma Present: No Impact or Injury.
c. Cases Denying Recovery.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1026

[§ 1026] In General.

Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, involved a child who died of pneumonia after allegedly not receiving proper care. The court held that a cause of action was stated under Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, but that the attempt to state a cause of action under Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, could not be sustained: "In Molien defendant's misdiagnosis was, by its very nature, directed at both the wife and the husband. ... By contrast, here the defendants' negligence in the instant case was directed primarily at the decedent, with Mrs. Ochoa looking on as a helpless bystander as the tragedy of her son's demise unfolded before her. While she was a foreseeable plaintiff to whom the defendants owed a duty of care pursuant to our holding in Dillon, the duty was owed to her as a percipient witness, not as a direct victim of negligence." (39 C.3d 172.)

In Budavari v. Barry (1986) 176 C.A.3d 849, 222 C.R. 446, plaintiff alleged that defendant doctors did not investigate indications of her husband's possible cancer until it had reached a terminal state, and that she suffered emotional distress while her husband was dying and after his death. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer sustained. In Molien, there was an inaccurate diagnosis of a frightening disease and a communication of the diagnosis to a family member who would foreseeably suffer emotional harm from hearing it. Here, the negligence consisted of a failure to diagnose cancer; there was no communication of distressing false information directly to plaintiff; hence, she was not a direct victim. Because damages recoverable for wrongful death do not include compensation for grief or sorrow (see infra §1690), plaintiff's case "amounts to an effort to recover this nonrecoverable element by filing a complaint for negligent infliction on emotional distress rather than for wrongful death." (176 C.A.3d 854.)

In Kossel v. Superior Court (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1060, 231 C.R. 183, the issue was whether a plaintiff can state a Molien cause of action "where she first learns of a favorable but erroneous diagnosis about her spouse's physical condition then learns he has a fatal illness." (186 C.A.3d 1062.) The complaint alleged that in November 1983, defendant doctor diagnosed the condition of plaintiff's husband as a benign tumor; that in March 1984, it was determined that he was suffering from Hodgkin's disease, which had progressed from a curable to an incurable condition, and caused his death in September 1984; that plaintiff, after being informed of the original misdiagnosis, suffered continual emotional distress. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) "This case is a nearly perfect illustration of the arbitrariness of the 'rules' courts have imposed on claims of negligent infliction of emotional distress and the confusion which reigns in their wake. It also highlights the tension found within the leading Supreme Court opinions in this field." (186 C.A.3d 1063.) These opinions contain language suggesting that emotional distress claims are to be judged by flexible application of the general principles of foreseeability; but they also established "narrow, rigid tests--sometimes labeled 'guidelines'--for what can be deemed to create a foreseeable risk of emotional distress." (186 C.A.3d 1064.) And most Courts of Appeal have treated the guidelines as fixed criteria. (186 C.A.3d 1064, listing cases.)

(b) "Thus, for most California courts it is not enough that a plaintiff demonstrates a defendant could reasonably foresee his negligence would cause significant emotional distress among persons in the plaintiff's class. The claimant must also show she or he fits into one of two narrowly defined classes of emotional injurees--either a 'bystander' to a traumatic incident injuring a close relative or a 'direct victim' who was a target of the defendant's negligent conduct." (186 C.A.3d 1064.)

(c) Although some of the broad language in Molien suggests that recovery could be had on the broad foreseeability theory (186 C.A.3d 1065), Ochoa underscores the limiting language of Molien (186 C.A.3d 1066), which governs here. "Dr. Judkins' misdiagnosis was directed at Edward Kossel not the petitioner. Indeed the doctor did not even mention the misdiagnosis to Mrs. Kossel in this case while the doctors did tell Mrs. Ochoa her son only had a slight infection. But this direct communication from doctor to the patient's mother was not enough to make her a direct victim. Although it was foreseeable Mr. Kossel would tell his wife the good news about the benign tumor, petitioner does not allege Dr. Judkins asked Mr. Kossel to tell his wife of the diagnosis. Neither was the diagnosis of her husband's benign tumor one that would directly affect the physical health of Mrs. Kossel in the same way as the diagnosis his wife had a communicable disease like syphilis affected the husband in Molien." (186 C.A.3d 1067.)

A number of other decisions also deny recovery. (See Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 C.A.3d 86, 221 C.R. 374 [Molien doctrine did not apply to emotional distress suffered by parents on observing their son in hospital after vehicle collision caused by drunken driver]; Martinez v. Los Angeles (1986) 186 C.A.3d 884, 890, 891, 892, 231 C.R. 96 [following Ochoa and Budavari]; Krupnick v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 185, 196, 34 C.R.2d 39 [plaintiffs settled auto injury claim and then brought action against other driver's insurer based on manner in which defendant had conducted settlement negotiations; judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed]; Klein v. Children's Hosp. Med. Center (1996) 46 C.A.4th 889, 897, 54 C.R.2d 34 [parents of child who was misdiagnosed as having terminal cancer had no action for negligent infliction of emotional distress]; Fluharty v. Fluharty (1997) 59 C.A.4th 484, 496, 69 C.R.2d 244 [son struggled with father causing father's shotgun to fire, injuring son's wife; family relationship alone is insufficient basis for imposing duty of care to refrain from negligently causing emotional distress]; Aguirre-Alvarez v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1058, 1067, 79 C.R.2d 580 [where hospital owed no common law or statutory duty to patient's relatives to notify them of patient's death, it was not liable when patient's body was cremated by coroner without relatives' knowledge; citing Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Calif. (1993) 6 C.4th 124, 24 C.R.2d 587, 862 P.2d 148, infra, §1030]; Spates v. Dameron Hosp. Assn. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 208, 212, 7 C.R.3d 597 [for purposes of direct victim theory, hospital that gave patient's body to county for cremation owed no duty to patient's daughter; 9 months before patient died, daughter gave hospital new contact address; nor did it owe duty by virtue of Health & Safety C. 7104, because statute was designed to protect county treasury, not responsible parties].)

3. Physical Trauma Present: No Impact or Injury.

2. Airplane Crash.

[§ 1027] Airplane Crash.

In Lawson v. Management Activities (1999) 69 C.A.4th 652, 81 C.R.2d 745, plaintiffs witnessed an airplane crash nearby. The crash was so close that for a brief instant they feared that the plane would hit them. Although no one was injured in the crash, plaintiffs sued various parties connected with the aircraft for emotional damages caused by the fear in which they had been placed. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. Held, affirmed.

(a) Rowland factors. In order to determine whether the duty of care imposed on airline operators extends to the emotional distress sustained by spectators of plane crashes who are physically untouched, but who reasonably fear for their own safety, it is necessary to apply the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. These factors, on balance, weigh against liability. The factors that tilt in the direction of liability do not tilt very far, and the factors against liability weigh decidedly against. (69 C.A.4th 657.)

(1) With respect to the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, it takes no imagination to realize that people on the ground who are close to an airplane crash are going to be very frightened. However, while it is foreseeable that the fright will be intense, though short-lived, a person's psychological reaction to the crash is not foreseeable. Thus, emotional distress is actuarially imprecise and inherently limitless. In short, foreseeability does not count for much, one way or the other, on the question under discussion. (69 C.A.4th 657.)

(2) Certainty of injury is a factor that squarely weighs against liability. Although one can always worry oneself sick, the reality of psychological injury remains a subject of intense philosophical debate. Also, psychological symptoms are much more susceptible to being faked than are the more palpable effects. Suffice it to say that for purposes of this case, certainty of injury is not present. (69 C.A.4th 658.)

(3) The closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered tilts in the direction of liability. There is no reasonable doubt that the fear for one's safety caused by being near a plane crash is going to be traumatic. However, how traumatic it will be to people with different psychological makeups is uncertain. Some people will "fall to pieces," and others will act heroically. (69 C.A.4th 659.)

(4) In favor of no liability is the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct. Airplane crashes are usually caused by some error in the maintenance or operation of the plane, not by any kind of moral indifference to the possibility of injury, and thus nothing is to be gained by extending liability to the emotional distress of ground spectators. (69 C.A.4th 659.)

(5) The policy of preventing future harm is similar to moral blame in that little would be gained by extending liability for plane crashes to emotionally distressed bystanders. The high likelihood of death, the inevitable liability of the responsible parties, and the extensive regulation of air safety are more than sufficient to deter future harm. (69 C.A.4th 659.)

(6) The final two factors--the extent of the burden to the defendant and the consequences to the community if the duty under consideration is imposed--also weigh against liability. To hold airlines responsible for all nonpassengers flown over would expose the airlines to virtually limitless tort liability. Moreover, extending liability in this manner would dilute the recovery pool and make air transportation harder to insure. (69 C.A.4th 660.)

(1) In re Air Crash Disaster Near Cerritos, Calif. (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1490, 1491, concluded that California law would permit recovery of emotional distress when a bystander was frightened, but unharmed, by a plane crash. This is incorrect, because (a) permitting a lawsuit whenever anyone was frightened would completely overwhelm the courts, and (b) the cases on which the Ninth Circuit relied, Sloane v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1896) 111 C. 668, 44 P. 320, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §140, and Cook v. Maier (1939) 33 C.A.2d 581, 92 P.2d 434, supra, §1005, were based on the principle that all stimuli generating an emotional effect also led to a physical effect and thus constituted a physical injury. (69 C.A.4th 660.)

(2) The "nervous shock equals physical injury" rationale destroys the distinction between what the ordinary person would think of as emotional distress and palpable damages (like an ensuing heart attack). This is recognized by the insurance cases, such as Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange (1995) 11 C.4th 1, 44 C.R.2d 370, 900 P.2d 619, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §277, holding that "bodily injury" does not include the emotional distress produced by some trauma-producing event, such as losing one's life savings in an investment scam, even though physical manifestations may have occurred. In other words, the attempted distinction between physical and psychological injury is artificial, so duty must be analyzed in terms of foreseeability and various policy considerations. There are no shortcuts. (69 C.A.4th 665, 666.)

(3) Wooden v. Raveling (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1035, 71 C.R.2d 891, supra, §1023, reached the opposite conclusion in a case involving bystanders to an automobile collision. It is distinguishable. There is a difference between car crashes and airplane accidents, as they relate to bystanders; automobile drivers must necessarily be aware of the surrounding area, while airplane operators need not. Moreover, Wooden did not analyze a bystander's fear for his or her safety in terms of the Rowland factors, and thus hardly stands for the proposition that these factors mandate a broad fear-for-one's-safety or zone of danger rule. (69 C.A.4th 667, 668.)

3. Legal Malpractice.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1028

[§ 1028] Legal Malpractice.

In Holliday v. Jones (1989) 215 C.A.3d 102, 264 C.R. 448, after plaintiff H was convicted of involuntary manslaughter related to the killing of his wife, his conviction was reversed on the ground of incompetency of defendant J, his defense counsel, and he was acquitted on retrial. He then brought the present action against J for himself and his minor children, seeking damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge found defendant J liable as a matter of law based on the facts set forth in the unpublished opinion reversing H's conviction, and awarded general and special damages. Held, judgment for children reversed. (For the portion of the opinion affirming the judgment for H, see supra, §1025.)

(a) The evidence clearly establishes that defendant's negligence caused the children to suffer emotional distress, and that this distress was foreseeable. (215 C.A.3d 106.) But recent cases and some commentators have "expressed concern over potential costs, particularly when it appeared that on a clear judicial day courts could foresee forever." (215 C.A.3d 107, citing Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009.)

(b) Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, supra, §1024, emphasizes that Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, did not purport to create a cause of action based solely on foreseeability of emotional distress. (215 C.A.3d 107.) Thing likewise observes that foreseeability "provides virtually no limit on liability for non-physical harm." (215 C.A.3d 108.) Thing refers to Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, infra, §1683, in which the court refused to recognize a child's right to recover for loss of a parent's consortium, on the grounds that damages were difficult to measure, of questionable recompense, and resulted in inordinate costs. (215 C.A.3d 108.)

(c) "Perhaps the resolution of this issue would be more difficult if [H] had been wrongfully convicted of murdering his children, and his wife sought to recover for her emotional distress." (215 C.A.3d 109, citing Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, infra, §1679.) Under Borer, however, children are not entitled to recover loss of consortium damages resulting from injury to a parent. And here the emotional distress suffered by the children was not wholly caused by the tortfeasor's negligence: A substantial part of their anguish was their awareness that their father had been tried on a charge of murdering their mother, and that distress would have been suffered even if H had been represented by competent counsel. (215 C.A.3d 109.)

(e) "We are frank to admit that Dillon, Molien and to a lesser extent Hedlund can be read to suggest an expansive new rule in which the only limitation on the recovery of negligently inflicted emotional distress damages is the principle of foreseeability. In such a legal environment, the categories of 'direct victims' and 'bystanders' would be unnecessary. They are, in a sense, arbitrary limitations on the recovery of compensation for damages which, to the individual plaintiff involved, are very real. Clearly, however, our emotional distress vistas have been restricted by recent cases such as Ochoa, Marlene F. and Thing. As both Marlene F. (a 'direct victim' case) and Thing (a 'bystander' case) make clear, foreseeability is not the only consideration. The Supreme Court has made a policy determination that the costs associated with attempting to compensate intangible losses are socially significant and can no longer be ignored. The lines are being drawn; the question is simply one of location." (215 C.A.3d 111.)

(f) "If the results in these cases can be synthesized, it would appear that in order to recover for negligently inflicted emotional distress damages, a plaintiff must either have a special relationship to the defendant (Marlene F.), be the direct object of some aspect of the defendant's conduct (Molien) or personally witness a negligently caused physical injury to a closely related primary victim (Dillon; Ochoa; Thing). Beyond these categories, the only exception seems to be the recovery by spouses of loss of consortium damages." (215 C.A.3d 111.)

(g) Here, the Holliday children have no contractual or other relationship with Jones, his malpractice was not directed at them, and they did not witness a physical injury to their father. As to loss of consortium, they are barred by Borer. "We cannot see how a rational standard could exist which would award emotional distress damages to the [H] children and at the same time deny them to children of parents who are physically injured." (215 C.A.3d 111.)

[§ 1029] Childbirth.

In Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.4th 1064, 9 C.R.2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197, the court commenced its opinion with a statement of the issue and holding: "Can a mother recover damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress against a physician who entered into a physician-patient relationship with her for care during labor and delivery if her child is injured during the course of the delivery? Because the professional malpractice alleged in this case breached a duty owed to the mother as well as the child, we hold that the mother can be compensated for emotional distress resulting from the breach of the duty. For public policy reasons that have been previously articulated by this court, however, these damages do not extend to emotional distress due to loss of affection, society, companionship or similar harm that the mother may incur in adjusting to and living with the child's impairments." (2 C.4th 1069.)

Plaintiff Julia Burgess was admitted to a hospital under the care of defendant Dr. Gupta, her obstetrician. At 12:50 p.m., Gupta artificially ruptured Burgess' membranes. She suffered a prolapsed cord, and preparations were begun for a cesarean section. About 21 minutes later, Burgess was taken to emergency surgery, having heard the doctor's excited warnings that the baby was not getting enough oxygen, and being told that "something" was wrong with her boy. Joseph, the child, was deprived of sufficient oxygen through his umbilical cord for 44 minutes before delivery, and sustained permanent brain and nervous system damage.

This action was brought by Joseph, Burgess, and Moody (the father) against Dr. Gupta and the hospital. Burgess and Moody sought recovery for emotional distress suffered as a result of defendants' negligence. Moody's claim was dismissed for failure to comply with discovery requests, and the right of a father to recover was no longer in issue. The trial court, relying on Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009, granted defendants' motion for summary adjudication. The Court of Appeal issued mandamus to vacate the order, holding that Thing was not controlling because Burgess was a direct victim under Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal modified to direct reversal of the order of summary adjudication.

(a) Doctor's duty of care to mother. The law of negligent infliction of emotional distress in California is typically analyzed by reference to the bystander theory and the direct victim theory; but "confusion has reigned" as to the applicable theory. (2 C.4th 1071, and footnote 5, listing cases.)

(1) The distinction between the bystander and direct victim cases is found in the source of the duty: (a) The bystander cases all arose in the context of negligent conduct of a defendant with whom the plaintiff had no preexisting relationship, and to whom the defendant had not previously assumed a duty of care beyond that owed to the public. (2 C.4th 1072.) Because the class of potential plaintiffs could be limitless, this court has circumscribed the class of bystanders. (2 C.4th 1073.) (b) In contrast, the direct victim cases are those in which there is a breach of duty owed the plaintiff that is assumed by the defendant or imposed on the defendant as a matter of law, or that arises out of a relationship between the two; and well-settled principles of negligence determine whether the elements of a cause of action are present. (2 C.4th 1073, citing Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, supra, §1024.)

(2) "The broad language of the Molien decision coupled with its perceived failure to establish criteria for characterizing a plaintiff as a 'direct victim' rather than a 'bystander,' has subjected Molien to criticism from various sources, including this court. ... The great weight of this criticism has centered upon the perception that Molien introduced a new method for determining the existence of a duty, limited only by the concept of foreseeability. To the extent that Molien ... stands for this proposition, it should not be relied upon and its discussion of duty is limited to its facts." (2 C.4th 1074.)

(3) "Nevertheless, other principles derived from Molien ... are sound: (1) damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress may be recovered in the absence of physical injury or impact, and (2) a cause of action to recover damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress will lie, notwithstanding the criteria imposed upon recovery by bystanders, in cases where a duty arising from a preexisting relationship is negligently breached. ... In fact, it is this later principle which defines the phrase 'direct victim.' That label signifies nothing more." (2 C.4th 1074.)

(5) To accept Gupta's argument "would require us to ignore the realities of pregnancy and childbirth." (2 C.4th 1076.) [D]uring pregnancy and delivery it is axiomatic that any treatment for Joseph necessarily implicated Burgess's participation since access to Joseph could only be accomplished with Burgess's consent and with impact to her body." (2 C.4th 1076.) In addition to the physical connection between a woman and her fetus, there is an emotional relationship. "[T]he mother's emotional well-being and the health of the child are inextricably intertwined." (2 C.4th 1076.)

(6) Thus, the Court of Appeal correctly determined that the alleged negligent actions resulting in physical harm to Joseph breached a duty owed to both Joseph and Burgess. (2 C.4th 1076.) As in Marlene F., Burgess' claim for emotional distress may simply be viewed as an ordinary professional malpractice claim, which seeks as an element of damage compensation for her serious emotional distress. (2 C.4th 1077.) And this holding has been foreshadowed by several decisions of the Courts of Appeal. (2 C.4th 1077, listing cases.)

(7) The issue of a father's recovery is not involved in this case. However, "the physician-patient relationship critical to a mother's cause of action is almost always absent in a father's claim. It, therefore, appears that a father must meet the criteria set forth in Thing ... , if he is to state a viable claim." (2 C.4th 1078, footnote 8.)

(b) Lack of physical injury is no bar to claim. Gupta argued that Burgess did not suffer any physical injury wholly unrelated to the emotional distress stemming from Joseph's injuries, and that this fact relegated her to bystander status. This argument is unpersuasive. (1) Burgess pleaded injury to her "nervous system and person." (2) Even if she had failed to allege physical injuries, physical injury is not a prerequisite for recovery of damages for serious emotional distress, when, as here, there is a "guarantee of genuineness in the circumstances of the case." (2 C.4th 1079, quoting Molien.)

(c) Public policy considerations. Recognition of liability in this case is consistent with the doctrine of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, and with the factors that should be considered in determining the existence of a duty. (2 C.4th 1079.)

(1) Foreseeability and certainty of mother's injury in labor and delivery cases. It is obvious that, during pregnancy, the mother and child are a unique physical unit, and that a mother has formed a sufficiently close bond with her fetus that injury to the fetus during labor and delivery will cause her severe emotional distress. (2 C.4th 1080.)

(2) Closeness of connection between the conduct and the injury. An obstetrician's negligent delivery of a child, resulting in the child's injury, "is closely (even inextricably) related to any emotional distress incurred by the mother upon her realization of the injury to her child." (2 C.4th 1081.)

(3) Moral blame. Liability is not found unless there is some deviation by the physician from the legal standard of care; and the plaintiff must convince the trier of fact "that the physician's peers would consider his act to be blameworthy." (2 C.4th 1081.)

(4) Prevention of future harm. (a) In the area of birth injury, it is possible that the child's cause of action may be an adequate deterrent of future similar harm. (2 C.4th 1081.) (b) However, relegating mothers to the status of bystanders could create incentives for physicians unrelated to the standard of care. "Thus, an alert mother would pose a higher risk of a successful lawsuit for an obstetrician than a heavily or completely sedated mother. The incentives established by such a rule, therefore, could undermine advances in obstetrical care related to reducing the use during labor and delivery of sedative and anesthetic drugs that are potentially damaging to the fetus." (2 C.4th 1082.) (c) Also, the failure to find a duty of care owed to the mother would be inconsistent with prior decisions upholding a claim against an obstetrician whose negligence results in stillbirth of, rather than injury to, the child. (2 C.4th 1082, citing Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, and Johnson v. Superior Court (1981) 123 C.A.3d 1002, 177 C.R. 63, supra, §1012.) Because an action by a stillborn child is barred (on the ground that a child's cause of action for prenatal injuries is contingent upon live birth), failure to recognize the obstetrician's duty to the mother might mean that a doctor could escape all civil liability for negligence that caused a stillbirth. (2 C.4th 1082, and footnote 9.)

(5) Consequences of imposition of liability. This decision "will not unduly burden the community or health care providers in the field of obstetrics or result in the imposition of damages disproportionate to fault." (2 C.4th 1083.) (a) The Legislature, in enacting the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA, see supra, §940), has taken action to ameliorate the impact of increasing costs of liability coverage for health care providers. (2 C.4th 1083.) (b) MICRA has established a restrictive statute of limitations for medical malpractice claims brought by adults. Thus, in the context of labor and delivery, the potential for long-delayed liability for emotional distress is slight. (2 C.4th 1084.) (c) The class of potential plaintiffs is limited to pregnant women with whom the defendant established a physician-patient relationship; hence, there is no possibility of unlimited liability. (2 C.4th 1084.)

(d) Limitations on recovery of damages for emotional distress. Public policy concerns support the California rule that parents may not recover damages for loss of filial consortium. (2 C.4th 1084, quoting Baxter v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 461, 138 C.R. 315, 563 P.2d 871, infra, §1684.) However, while some portion of Burgess' emotional distress may have arisen from her loss of Joseph's consortium, other portions may have distinct origins that would not subject them to the bar mandated by the policy concerns underlying the prohibition of the loss of filial consortium claim. "Thus, we hold that damages arising from loss of Joseph's affection, society, companionship, love and disruption of Burgess's 'normal' routine of life to care for Joseph cannot be recovered by Burgess no matter how her claim for these damages is denominated. ... We further hold to the extent, however, that Burgess's emotional distress arose from the 'abnormal event' of participating in a negligent delivery and reacting to the unexpected outcome of her pregnancy with resulting 'fright, nervousness, grief, anxiety, worry, mortification, shock, humiliation and indignity, as well as physical pain' ... resulting from defendant's breach of duty, then Burgess's emotional distress is of the type for which we have previously recognized recovery should be provided." (2 C.4th 1084.) (See Bro v. Glaser (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1398, 1411, 27 C.R.2d 894 [review of emotional distress cases postdating Molien, including Burgess]; Mercado v. Leong (1996) 43 C.A.4th 317, 327, 50 C.R.2d 569 [following Burgess]; Zavala v. Arce (1997) 58 C.A.4th 915, 68 C.R.2d 571 [following Burgess even though there was no live birth]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 864 [Burgess].)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
3. Physical Trauma Present: No Impact or Injury.
c. Cases Denying Recovery.
5. Incorrect Prescription.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1030

[§ 1030] Incorrect Prescription.

In Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Calif. (1993) 6 C.4th 124, 24 C.R.2d 587, 862 P.2d 148, the issue arose as follows: "In filling a prescription for plaintiffs' 2-month-old son, defendant pharmacy wrote directions for five times the dosage ordered by the doctor. Plaintiffs seek to hold the pharmacy liable for their emotional distress from having unwittingly injured their son by administration of the overdose." (6 C.4th 126.) Plaintiffs initially urged both a "bystander" theory and a "direct victim" theory. The Court of Appeal rejected bystander recovery but held that plaintiffs could state a claim as direct victims. On review in the Supreme Court plaintiffs relied solely on the direct victim theory. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) The Court of Appeal concluded that a pharmacist automatically assumes a duty of care toward a patient's closely related caregivers simply by filling a prescription with actual or constructive knowledge that the patient is an infant or is otherwise helpless. "That conclusion comports neither with California case law nor with sound public policy." (6 C.4th 130.)

(1) "Since Molien was decided, we have made clear that despite its broad references to foreseeability, the opinion should be read as basing the defendant doctor's direct-victim liability only upon his assumption of a direct duty toward the husband." (6 C.4th 130, citing Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022.) That limitation was confirmed in Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013, and Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.4th 1064, 9 C.R.2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197, infra, §1029. (6 C.4th 130, 131.)

(2) Where the plaintiff is not the defendant's patient, the courts have not extended the Molien direct victim cause of action to emotional distress derived solely from a reaction to another's injury. (6 C.4th 131, citing Martinez v. Los Angeles (1986) 186 C.A.3d 884, 231 C.R. 96.) As pointed out in Burgess, the physician-patient relationship critical to a mother's cause of action is almost always absent in a father's claim. (6 C.4th 131, citing Schwarz v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 226 C.A.3d 149, 276 C.R. 470.) In the present case, the prescription was to provide medical treatment for plaintiffs' infant son. "He, not plaintiffs, was the only patient being served by the transaction." (6 C.4th 132.)

(b) "There is no material distinction between the professional duties of pharmacists and the duties of other health providers that allows the parent of a child patient for whom a prescription is negligently filled to recover from the pharmacist as a direct victim." (6 C.4th 132.) Although recent regulations require the pharmacist to provide oral consultation to the patient "or the patient's agent," the obvious purpose of requiring consultation with the agent has nothing to do with the agent's personal welfare; the purpose is simply to assure that the pharmacist's advice is put to good use for the benefit of the patient even in situations in which the patient would be unable to understand the advice. (6 C.4th 132.)

(c) Plaintiffs sought to differentiate their claims from those of other parents who contract for a health care provider's services on the ground that the medical care for which they contracted (filling of a prescription) necessarily involved their personal participation. The Court of Appeal agreed, but the theory is unacceptable, for it would apply to practically all outpatient care of an infant. "A pediatrician typically prescribes routines of diet, hygiene, medication, etc., all of which must be administered by the parent or other home caregiver. Even in the doctor's office, the parent may be asked to physically restrain a child who is to receive a 'shot' from the doctor or nurse." (6 C.4th 133.)

(d) If a child is seriously injured by negligent medical treatment, the parent is practically certain to suffer correspondingly serious emotional distress. "But even if it were deemed reasonably foreseeable to a pediatrician, or a pharmacist, that a parent's realization of unwitting participation in the child's injury would itself be a source of significant emotional distress from guilt, anxiety, or otherwise, that foreseeability would not warrant our establishing a new right of recovery for intangible injury." (6 C.4th 133.)

(e) "The duty that the Court of Appeal would impose upon pharmacists would inevitably enlarge the potential liabilities of practically all providers of medical goods and services obtained by parents solely for the treatment of their children, or by other caregivers solely for the treatment of dependent family members. All those providers, unlike the providers of care to competent adult patients, would be exposed to new claims of emotional distress allegedly incurred in administering the prescribed medication or treatment to the patient. That expansion of potential liability not only would increase medical malpractice insurance costs but also would tend to 'inject undesirable self-protective reservations' impairing the provision of optimal care to the patient." (6 C.4th 133.)

Two justices joined in two separate dissenting opinions, both expressing agreement with the judgment of the Court of Appeal. (6 C.4th 133, 135.) (See Moon v. Guardian Postacute Services (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1005, 1014, 116 C.R.2d 218 [Huggins direct victim theory did not apply to son-in-law who admitted mother-in-law to nursing home, where she later died due to its neglect]; Ess v. Eskaton Properties (2002) 97 C.A.4th 120, 127, 118 C.R.2d 240 [under Huggins theory, incidental emotional distress felt by plaintiff when her sister developed pressure ulcer in nursing home and was raped by unknown intruder could not support direct victim cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 897 [Huggins].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
4. Physical Trauma Not Present.
a. Financial Injury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1031

[§ 1031] Financial Injury.

In limited circumstances, recovery for infliction of emotional distress has been allowed for financial injury in the absence of a physical trauma. (See Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C.3d 566, 108 C.R. 480, 510 P.2d 1032, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §247; Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Connecticut (1967) 66 C.2d 425, 58 C.R. 13, 426 P.2d 173, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §258; Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 C.A.3d 917, 938, 122 C.R. 470, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §361; BAJI No. 12.85.)

Broad language in Jarchow was given a restricted interpretation in Quezada v. Hart (1977) 67 C.A.3d 754, 136 C.R. 815. Plaintiffs sued defendant attorneys for malpractice, alleging that they had negligently allowed the 5-year period to run on a quiet title action that was then dismissed for lack of prosecution. The trial judge found that plaintiffs would have prevailed in the quiet title action, and that by reason of defendants' negligence they lost the family home. Damages were awarded for this loss, but damages for emotional distress was denied. Held, this ruling was correct.

(a) The general rule allows damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress only where there is physical impact or physical injury. (67 C.A.3d 761.) But recovery has been allowed "when the tortfeasor's conduct, although negligent as a matter of law, contains elements of intentional malfeasance or bad faith." (67 C.A.3d 761, citing Jarchow, Crisci, Gruenberg, and other cases.) Jarchow states that negligent infliction of emotional distress is actionable, but that case involved a wilful refusal of the title company to take action to clear a title, and thus was an act of bad faith. (67 C.A.3d 762.)

(b) "To the extent that the court in Jarchow purported to extend the doctrine of the foregoing cases to allow recovery for emotional suffering damages in cases involving negligence without bad faith and without physical injury, the extension was unwarranted by California law, for all prior cases contain some element of intentional or affirmative wrongdoing by defendant." (67 C.A.3d 762, citing Fuentes v. Perez (1977) 66 C.A.3d 163, 136 C.R. 275, supra, §451.) The instant case involves only negligence without affirmative wrongdoing, and emotional suffering damages were not recoverable. (67 C.A.3d 763.)

In Branch v. Homefed Bank (1992) 6 C.A.4th 793, 8 C.R.2d 182, plaintiff, who was induced by defendant's negligent misrepresentation to leave his former job and accept a position with defendant, was awarded $ 45,163 in economic damages and $ 60,000 in emotional distress damages. Held, the award of emotional distress damages was improper.

(a) Because the damages recoverable for fraud in property transactions are governed by C.C. 3343, which does not allow recovery of emotional distress damages (see infra, §1714), plaintiff argued that where the fraud does not relate to the purchase or sale of property as here, the situation is subject to the broad measure of damages provided by C.C. 3333, i.e., the amount that will compensate for all detriment proximately caused thereby (see infra, §1553). This position is supported by the holding in Sprague v. Frank J. Sanders Lincoln Mercury (1981) 120 C.A.3d 412, 174 C.R. 608, infra, §1714, that damages for mental pain and suffering are recoverable in a tort action of "deceit," which is defined by C.C. 1710 as including both intentional and negligent misrepresentation (see supra, §767). But the critical determination is whether the tort is intentional or negligent, rather than whether it fits within the broad definition of deceit. (6 C.A.4th 799.)

(b) The inclusion of both negligent and intentional misrepresentation in the definition of deceit does not signal uniformity in the availability of damages for the two torts. For example, although C.C. 3294(c)(3) permits the recovery of punitive damages for deceit (see infra, §1540), the cases uniformly hold that punitive damages are not recoverable in that branch of deceit that is mere negligence. (6 C.A.4th 799, citing Delos v. Farmers Group (1979) 93 C.A.3d 642, 155 C.R. 843, infra, §1563, and Reid v. Moskovitz (1989) 208 C.A.3d 29, 255 C.R. 910, infra, §1587.) Sprague and other decisions upholding damages for emotional distress involved intentional, rather than negligent, misrepresentation. Hence, on the principle that the recovery for negligent misrepresentation should match that available in negligence actions generally, plaintiff, "incurring neither physical impact nor physical damage, and whose loss (other than emotional distress) is solely economic, is entitled neither to punitive damages nor to a recovery for emotional distress." (6 C.A.4th 799, citing Quezada.)

(c) Recovery of emotional distress damages has been allowed, without impact or physical injury, in certain specialized classes of cases, such as where the negligence causes highly unusual distress or arises in a situation involving breach of fiduciary duties, or where the plaintiff witnesses an injury to a close relative. (6 C.A.4th 800, citing Allen v. Jones (1980) 104 C.A.3d 207, 163 C.R. 445, supra, §1022, Gruenberg, Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, and other cases.) But this case fits into none of these exceptions to the general rule: Plaintiff suffered no physical impact that caused injury; while damages as the result of plaintiff's reliance on defendant's negligent misrepresentations could have been anticipated, nothing in the case suggests any peculiarly sensitive emotional trauma; and defendant's conduct, while blameworthy, in no sense can be described as extreme or outrageous. Hence, the consequential injury in terms of emotional distress resulting from plaintiff's direct economic loss is not compensable. (6 C.A.4th 801.)

A number of other decisions deny recovery. (See Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C.4th 543, 552, 87 C.R.2d 886, 981 P.2d 978, infra, §1037 [preexisting contractual relationship, without more, will not support recovery for emotional distress where tortious conduct has resulted only in economic loss]; Merenda v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1, 11, 4 C.R.2d 87 [legal malpractice; damages for emotional distress were not recoverable]; *Smith v. In Cooper v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 1008, 200 C.R. 746, plaintiff alleged that, while she and her children were away from their home, defendants negligently allowed an excavator's tractor to roll away from its parking place and run into plaintiff's home, causing damage to the house, grounds, and swimming pool. She attempted to state a cause of action for damages for emotional distress, alleging such matters as the necessity of moving to a hotel, and psychological trauma. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) The vast majority of cases decided after Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, and Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, arose out of witnessing human injury. No California case has allowed recovery for emotional distress arising solely out of property damage, unless there was a threshold showing of some preexisting relationship or intentional tort. (153 C.A.3d 1012.)

(b) Decisions allowing recovery include *Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. [§ 1033] Report Causing Arrest.

In Pool v. Oakland (1986) 42 C.3d 1051, 232 C.R. 528, 728 P.2d 1163, plaintiff, cashed a paycheck at a bank, received several $ 100 bills, and used one of them to buy groceries at defendant Safeway, a supermarket. Safeway had been receiving an inordinate number of counterfeit $ 100 bills, and had instructed its employees to screen these bills. The assistant manager, finding the bill lacking the motto "In God We Trust," called the police. Despite plaintiff's protests, and without explaining the nature of the charge, police officers arrested plaintiff, handcuffed him, searched him in public view, and took him to the station where he was fingerprinted, photographed, and subjected to a strip search. Within minutes after his arrival at the station, the police ascertained that the bill was one of a series that omitted the motto. Nevertheless, they held plaintiff overnight on unsubstantiated charges of interfering with a police investigation, and did not release him until the following afternoon. In this action against Safeway, on the cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, the jury returned a verdict for $ 45,000. Held, judgment on the verdict affirmed.

(a) Safeway owed its customers a duty of due care to avoid exposing them to foreseeable harms; and, except in rare cases, the jury determines whether the defendant's conduct satisfies the applicable standard of care. (42 C.3d 1061, and footnote 8, citing the text.) The jury could have found that an innocent customer suspected of counterfeiting would be subjected to a police investigation, and perhaps arrested, and would suffer emotional distress as a result. (42 C.3d 1062.) The jury could likewise have found that Safeway could have instructed its employees to telephone the Treasury Department (as the police eventually did) to verify the legitimacy of the bill. (42 C.3d 1062.)

(b) Safeway contended that even if it acted unreasonably, the negligence of the police officers in failing to ascertain the validity of the bill before arresting plaintiff was a superseding cause. But foreseeability, like reasonableness, is also a question of fact for the jury. (42 C.3d 1063.) And accusing an innocent customer of felonious conduct and calling in the police could foreseeably lead to a police investigation and arrest, causing emotional distress. (42 C.3d 1064.)

(c) Safeway's status as a merchant under P.C. 490.5 (supra, §432) only justified detention; it did not give protection from liability for summoning the police. (42 C.3d 1065, 1066.)

[§ 1034] Wrongful Termination of Employment.

In Anderson v. Northrop Corp. (1988) 203 C.A.3d 772, 250 C.R. 189, plaintiff alleged negligent infliction of emotional distress based on defendant's wrongful termination of her husband's employment while they were stationed in Saudi Arabia. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Although it was foreseeable that plaintiff would be upset when she learned of her husband's termination, this foreseeability could not impose a duty on defendant to protect her from harm unless there was also tortious conduct directed at plaintiff. This requirement was not met here, because defendant did nothing to include plaintiff within the scope of its allegedly improper actions, i.e., it did not expressly or impliedly advise plaintiff's husband to inform plaintiff of his termination. (203 C.A.3d 777.) Because plaintiff was unable to establish a legal duty, the fact that she was living in Saudi Arabia, which would go to the degree and certainty of damages, was irrelevant. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1035

[§ 1035] Assisting in Removal of Child.

In Schwarz v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 226 C.A.3d 149, 276 C.R. 470, plaintiff and his wife had undergone a bitter divorce, and their son M suffered from an adjustment disorder. Plaintiff agreed to pay for therapy by defendants with the hope of improving M's relationships with his parents. Although the parents had joint legal and physical custody, the therapist recommended that M live solely with his mother. Later M's mother advised the therapist that she was moving with M to England and that she did not wish plaintiff to know their whereabouts. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that the therapist assisted the mother in implementing her plan; that plaintiff after a prolonged search learned that M was residing in England and attempted without success to gain custody; and that the therapist, by assisting in removal of M from California, had disrupted the family relationships, causing plaintiff to suffer severe emotional distress. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) "It is clear from the general tenor of the discussion in Thing v. La Chusa ... that the Supreme Court intends to dismantle entirely the 'direct victim' distinction drawn in Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. ... and further expounded in Ochoa v. Superior Court. ... The majority opinion expresses open scorn for the distinction." (226 C.A.3d 159, citing Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 C.3d 644, 257 C.R. 865, 771 P.2d 814, supra, §1009, Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, and Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, supra, §1013.) However, in Thing, the plaintiff was not in the immediate vicinity, and the defendant's conduct obviously was not directed at her. Thus, "whatever clear signal" the court may have sent in Thing concerning the viability of a direct victim theory of recovery, "this dictum is not controlling precedent." (226 C.A.3d 160.) "As matters stand now, we deem it wise to assume a 'direct victim' theory, as illuminated and limited by Marlene F. and Ochoa ... , remains viable." (226 C.A.3d 160, citing Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, supra, §1024.)

(b) There is a clear contrast between the allegations considered dispositive in Marlene F. and those of plaintiff's complaint. He alleged that defendants, as psychotherapists and mental health care providers for M owed legal duties to provide therapy and counseling to M; and the complaint described therapy sessions with M. These allegations leave no basis for determining that plaintiff was himself a patient being treated jointly with M. (226 C.A.3d 162.) The treatment was directed at improving M's mental health and resolving his particular problems not at treating the general dysfunction in the family unit. "Even in the absence of negligence, the treatment of the emotional problems of one family member well may have an adverse effect on the relationship of the patient with one or more other members of the family. Distancing the patient from some or all other family members may be the only available route to mental health. That a third party thus suffers an adverse consequence does not mean the defendant's conduct is directed at the third party." (226 C.A.3d 163.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
4. Physical Trauma Not Present.
f. Fear of Contracting Disease.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1036

[§ 1036] Fear of Contracting Disease.

(1) Fear of Developing Cancer. In Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, the principal issue was "whether emotional distress engendered by a fear of cancer or other serious physical illness or injury following exposure to a carcinogen or other toxic substance is an injury for which damages may be recovered in a negligence action in the absence of physical injury." (6 C.4th 973.)

From 1963 until 1980, defendant Firestone operated a tire manufacturing plant near Salinas. In 1967, Firestone contracted with the Salinas Disposal Service (SDS), which operated the Crazy Horse landfill, for disposal of its industrial wastes. Crazy Horse is a Class II landfill, which prohibits toxic substances and liquids because of the danger that they will leach into the groundwater; and SDS informed Firestone that no solvents, cleaning fluids, oils, or liquids were permitted. Despite assurances of compliance, Firestone sent large quantities of toxic wastes to Crazy Horse to avoid the high cost of sending the materials to a Class I landfill.

In 1984, plaintiffs, owners of property adjacent to Crazy Horse discovered that toxic chemicals had contaminated their domestic water wells. In 1985, they filed suits against Firestone stating causes of action for negligence, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and strict liability/ultrahazardous activity. The trial judge found in favor of plaintiffs on nearly all of their claims, and awarded damages as follows: (a) for lifelong fear of cancer and resultant emotional distress, $ 800,000; (b) for the cost of periodic medical monitoring to detect the onset of disease and increase the chances of effective treatment, $ 142,975, the present value of the costs based on plaintiffs' life expectancies; (c) for psychiatric illness and the cost of treating it, $ 269,500; (d) for general disruption of plaintiffs' lives and invasion of their privacy, $ 108,110; and (e) for Firestone's conscious disregard for the rights and safety of others, punitive damages of $ 2.6 million.

The Court of Appeal reversed the awards for medical monitoring costs, but otherwise affirmed the judgment. Because of its conclusion that the negligence and intentional infliction of emotional distress causes of action supported the damage awards, the Court of Appeal did not reach the issue of ultrahazardous activity. The Supreme Court granted review, and addressed the following issues: (a) whether the fear of cancer component of the emotional distress award, the award for medical monitoring costs, and the award for punitive damages were proper; (b) whether Firestone may be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress; (c) whether comparative fault principles regarding plaintiffs' smoking are properly invoked. Not at issue was the award for the general disruption of plaintiffs' lives, which was not challenged by Firestone. (6 C.4th 980.)

(a) Negligence: Fear of cancer.

(1) Parasitic recovery. Recovery for emotional distress caused by injury is available in California as an item of parasitic damages; i.e., where a plaintiff can show a physical injury, anxiety specifically due to a reasonable fear of a future harm attributable to the injury may constitute a proper element of damages. (6 C.4th 981, citing Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Connecticut (1967) 66 C.2d 425, 58 C.R. 13, 426 P.2d 173, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §258, and Merenda v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1, 4 C.R.2d 87, infra, §1555.)

Although the availability of parasitic damages for emotional distress engendered by a fear of developing cancer appears to be an issue of first impression in California, other jurisdictions have held that parasitic damages are recoverable when they are derivative of a claim for serious physical injuries. (6 C.4th 981.) In these cases, the existence of a present physical injury, rather than the degree of probability that the disease may actually develop, is determinative. (6 C.4th 982.)

Whether impairment of the immune system response and cellular damage constitute physical injury is an issue on which courts of other jurisdictions have reached differing conclusions. (6 C.4th 982 et seq.) Because the statement of decision in this case made no mention of immune system response, cellular system, or cells, "we lack an appropriate factual record for resolving whether impairment to the immune response system or cellular damage constitutes a physical injury for which parasitic damages for emotional distress ought to be available." (6 C.4th 984.)

(2) Nonparasitic recovery. There is no independent tort of negligent infliction of emotional distress; the tort is negligence, a cause of action in which a duty to the plaintiff is an essential element. That duty may be imposed by law, be assumed by the defendant, or exist by virtue of a special relationship. (6 C.4th 984, 985.) "[U]nless the defendant has assumed a duty to plaintiff in which the emotional condition of the plaintiff is an object, recovery is available only if the emotional distress arises out of the defendant's breach of some other legal duty and the emotional distress is proximately caused by that breach of duty. Even then, with rare exceptions, a breach of the duty must threaten physical injury, not simply damage to property or financial interests." (6 C.4th 985.) Here, however, Firestone did violate a duty imposed by law to dispose of toxic waste only in a Class I landfill. Thus, plaintiffs' fear of cancer was proximately caused by Firestone's conduct. (6 C.4th 985.)

Damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress may be recovered in the absence of physical injury or impact, where there exists a guarantee of genuineness in the circumstances of the case. (6 C.4th 986.) Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, pointed out the significant difficulties with the physical injury requirement, including the encouragement of extravagant pleading and distorted testimony. (6 C.4th 987.) "Our reasons for discarding the physical injury requirement ... remain valid today and are equally applicable in a toxic exposure case. That is, the physical injury requirement is a hopelessly imprecise screening device--it would allow recovery for fear of cancer whenever such distress accompanies or results in any physical injury, no matter how trivial, yet would disallow recovery in all cases where the fear is both serious and genuine but no physical injury has yet manifested itself." (6 C.4th 988.)

The question whether recovery for emotional distress caused by fear of cancer should depend on a showing that there is a probable likelihood of developing cancer is a matter of hot debate. The Court of Appeal erred in concluding that reasonableness is established by the mere fact of an exposure or a significant increase in the risk of cancer. That approach attaches undue significance to the mere ingestion of a carcinogen, and focuses on the increased risk of cancer in isolation. (6 C.4th 989.) Emotional distress caused by the fear of a cancer that is not probable should generally not be compensable in a negligence action for the following public policy reasons:

(a) First, we all are potential fear-of-cancer plaintiffs, and a single class action may involve hundreds, if not thousands, of claims. The tremendous societal cost of this demonstrates the necessity of imposing some limits on the class. (6 C.4th 991.)

(b) Second, unrestricted fear liability would have an unduly detrimental impact in the health care field. The threat of many large awards and the cost of insuring against liability could diminish the availability of new drugs or increase their price beyond the reach of those who need them most. (6 C.4th 991.) And the fear-of-cancer liability in the context of physicians prescribing drugs will exacerbate the medical malpractice crisis. (6 C.4th 992.)

(c) Third, allowing recovery to all victims who have a fear of cancer may work to the detriment of those who sustain actual physical injury and those who ultimately develop cancer as a result of toxic exposure; i.e., defendants and their insurers might be unable to ensure compensation for the latter. (6 C.4th 993.)

(d) Fourth, supporting the imposition of a more-likely-than-not limitation is the need for a sufficiently definite and predictable threshold for recovery to permit consistent application from case to case. Without this threshold, the likelihood of inconsistent results increases, because juries may differ over the point at which a plaintiff's fear is genuine and reasonable. (6 C.4th 993.)

(e) Finally, a more-likely-than-not limitation is sometimes necessary to limit the class of potential plaintiffs. Thus, restricting the liability of a negligent tortfeasor for emotional loss may be warranted in consideration of the factors of intangible nature of the loss, inadequacy of monetary damages, difficulty of measuring the damage, and societal cost of attempting to compensate the plaintiff. "These considerations are equally relevant to fear of cancer claims in toxic exposure cases." (6 C.4th 994.)

In summary, "with respect to negligent infliction of emotional distress claims arising out of exposure to carcinogens and/or other toxic substances: Unless an express exception to this general rule is recognized, in the absence of a present physical injury or illness, damages for fear of cancer may be recovered only if the plaintiff pleads and proves that (a) as a result of the defendant's negligent breach of a duty owed to the plaintiff, the plaintiff is exposed to a toxic substance which threatens cancer; and (b) the plaintiff's fear stems from a knowledge, corroborated by reliable medical or scientific opinion, that it is more likely than not that the plaintiff will develop the cancer in the future due to the toxic exposure. Under this rule, a plaintiff must do more than simply establish knowledge of a toxic ingestion or exposure and a significant increased risk of cancer. The plaintiff must further show that based upon reliable medical or scientific opinion, the plaintiff harbors a serious fear that the toxic ingestion or exposure was of such magnitude and proportion as to likely result in the feared cancer." (6 C.4th 997.)

(3) Oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious conduct. Aggravated conduct of the defendant calls for an exception to the general rule, focusing on the totality of circumstances in evaluating a defendant's conduct. (6 C.4th 999.) "[I]n the absence of a physical injury or illness, a plaintiff may recover damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress engendered by a fear of cancer without meeting the more-likely-than-not threshold if the plaintiff pleads and proves that: (a) as a result of the defendant's negligent breach of a duty owed to the plaintiff, he or she is exposed to a toxic substance which threatens cancer; (b) the defendant, in breaching its duty to the plaintiff, acted with oppression, fraud or malice as defined in Civil Code section 3294; and (c) the plaintiff's fear of cancer stems from a knowledge, corroborated by reliable medical or scientific opinion, that the toxic exposure caused by the defendant's breach of duty has significantly increased the plaintiff's risk of cancer and has resulted in an actual risk of cancer that is significant." (6 C.4th 999, 1000.) Firestone's conduct brings this case within the exception. (6 C.4th 1000.)

(b) Intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge ruled that Firestone's continued dumping of its hazardous wastes at Crazy Horse amounted to outrageous conduct, and that plaintiffs suffered severe emotional distress as a result of Firestone's intentional acts. The Court of Appeal agreed; but after rendition of its decision, Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 C.3d 868, 2 C.R.2d 79, 820 P.2d 181, supra, §460, was decided, and the issue on review is the impact of that opinion on the award for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

It is not enough that the conduct be intentional and outrageous; it must be conduct directed at the plaintiff, or occur in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant is aware. Here, knowledge of these particular plaintiffs is lacking. "For guidance of the lower courts should the Court of Appeal determine that a retrial on this claim is appropriate, we hold that recovery of fear of cancer damages in actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress should not depend on a showing of a medically corroborated belief that it is more likely than not that the plaintiff will develop the feared cancer as a result of the toxic exposure." (6 C.4th 1003.)

The reasons for not applying the more-likely-than-not threshold are: (1) intentional infliction requires a high degree of culpability justifying recovery of greater damages by a broader group of plaintiffs than in negligence actions; (2) where a defendant engages in extreme and outrageous conduct toward the plaintiff, the concern that liability will be imposed out of proportion to fault is not present; and (3) the requirement of outrageous conduct places adequate limitations on the class of potential plaintiffs. (6 C.4th 1003.) "[I]t must nevertheless be established that the plaintiff's fear of cancer is reasonable, that is, that the fear is based upon medically or scientifically corroborated knowledge that the defendant's conduct has significantly increased the plaintiff's risk of cancer and that the plaintiff's actual risk of the threatened cancer is significant." (6 C.4th 1004.)

(c) Medical monitoring costs. The trial judge awarded medical monitoring damages to plaintiffs. The Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that C.C. 3283 requires proof that the occurrence of the disease is reasonably certain. But the analysis in Miranda v. Shell Oil Co. (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1651, 26 C.R.2d 655, stressing policy considerations, supports the award. (6 C.4th 1005.) "[T]he cost of medical monitoring is a compensable item of damages where the proofs demonstrate, through reliable medical expert testimony, that the need for future monitoring is a reasonably certain consequence of a plaintiff's toxic exposure and that the recommended monitoring is reasonable. In determining the reasonableness and necessity of monitoring, the following factors are relevant: (1) the significance and extent of the plaintiff's exposure to chemicals; (2) the toxicity of the chemicals; (3) the relative increase in the chance of onset of disease in the exposed plaintiff as a result of the exposure, when compared to (a) the plaintiff's chance of developing the disease had he or she not been exposed, and (b) the chances of the members of the public at large of developing the disease; (4) the seriousness of the disease for which the plaintiff is at risk; and (5) the clinical value of early detection and diagnosis. Under this holding, it is for the trier of fact to decide, on the basis of competent medical testimony, whether and to what extent the particular plaintiff's exposure to toxic chemicals in a given situation justifies future periodic medical monitoring." (6 C.4th 1009.)

(d) Smoking and comparative fault. Plaintiffs were longtime cigarette smokers, and defendant Firestone argued that comparative fault principles should reduce or entirely preclude a recovery for fear of cancer. The Court of Appeal rejected the argument on the ground that comparative fault is applicable only if the plaintiff's negligence is a proximate cause of the injury. The Court of Appeal erred in its reasoning. Under comparative fault principles, damages are apportioned based upon the various causes contributing to a plaintiff's harm, as opposed to a particular defendant's negligence. Therefore, the fact that plaintiffs' smoking did not contribute to the contamination of their well water is not determinative. (6 C.4th 1011.) Nevertheless, the Court of Appeal reached the proper conclusion, that Firestone failed to establish a causal link between plaintiffs' smoking and the harm they suffered--their fear of a significantly increased risk of cancer. (6 C.4th 1011.) However, when a defendant demonstrates that a portion of the plaintiff's fear of developing cancer is attributable to smoking, comparative fault principles may be applied to reflect the proportion of the damages for which the plaintiff should properly bear the responsibility. (6 C.4th 1011.) "[E]vidence of smoking by a plaintiff is relevant to whether the plaintiff's fear is reasonable and genuine. Thus, if a plaintiff had smoked heavily for 20 years without fearing cancer, the trier of fact may consider that evidence in assessing the legitimacy of the plaintiff's fear of cancer claim." (6 C.4th 1011, 1012.)

The majority opinion was signed by four justices. Concurring and dissenting opinions were filed by three justices. (6 C.4th 1025.) Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
E. Negligent Causing of Emotional Distress.
4. Physical Trauma Not Present.
g. Negligent Construction.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1037

[§ 1037] Negligent Construction.

In Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C.4th 543, 87 C.R.2d 886, 981 P.2d 978, a homeowners' action against the contractor who built their house, plaintiffs testified that they suffered emotional distress as a result of the defective condition of the house and defendant's invasive and unsuccessful repairs. The jury found that defendant breached his construction contract by negligently constructing the house and awarded plaintiffs not only the cost of repairs but also damages for emotional distress. Held, reversed. Emotional distress damages are not recoverable for the negligent breach of a construction contract alone.

(a) A contractual obligation may create a legal duty and the breach of that duty may support an action in tort. However, conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract and arising from principles of tort law. An omission to perform a contract obligation is never a tort, unless that omission is also an omission of a legal duty. Tort damages have been permitted in contract cases where a breach of duty directly causes physical injury, for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing in insurance contracts, for wrongful discharge in violation of fundamental public policy, or where the contract was fraudulently induced. In each of these cases, the duty that gives rise to tort liability is either completely independent of the contract or arises from conduct that is both intentional and intended to harm. Mere negligent breach of a contract is not sufficient to support tort damages for violation of an independent tort duty. (21 C.4th 550.)

(b) Even assuming that defendant's negligence constituted a breach of a sufficient independent duty to plaintiffs, that finding would not entitle them to emotional distress damages on the facts alleged. The breach--the negligent construction of the house--did not cause physical injury. The only physical injury alleged was one plaintiff's heart disease, which flowed from the emotional distress and not directly from the negligent construction. A preexisting contractual relationship, without more, will not support a recovery for mental suffering where the defendant's tortious conduct has resulted only in economic injury to the plaintiff. (21 C.4th 552.)

(c) Not only are tort damages unavailable, but damages for emotional distress may not be recovered here as consequential or special damages in a contract claim. In California, damages for mental suffering and emotional distress are generally not recoverable in an action for breach of an ordinary commercial contract. Recovery for emotional disturbance will be excluded unless the breach also caused bodily harm or the contract or the breach is of such a kind that serious emotional disturbance was a particularly likely result. Breach of a contract to build a home is not such a case. (21 C.4th 558.) (On recovery of contract damages for mental or physical suffering, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §884 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

a. General Principle.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1038

[§ 1038] General Principle.

A person who has not created a peril is ordinarily not liable in tort merely for failure to take affirmative action to assist or protect another, no matter how great the danger in which the other is placed, or how easily he or she could be rescued, unless there is some relationship between them that gives rise to a duty to act. (See Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 65, 271 P.2d 23; Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050; *Zelig v. Legal scholars have strongly criticized the refusal of courts to recognize the moral obligation to aid another in peril when the aid may be given without danger and at little cost in effort. (See Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 C.A.3d 443, 447, 190 C.R. 310, infra, §1081; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.6; 15 Pacific L. J. 1261 [argument for general legal duty to rescue]; 25 *Stanf. And the Rest.2d, Torts §314, Comment c declares: "[i]t appears inevitable that, sooner or later, such extreme cases of morally outrageous and indefensible conduct will arise that there will be further inroads upon the older rule."

1. Probation Department.

[§ 1039] Probation Department.

In J.A. Meyers & Co. v. Los Angeles County Probation Dept. (1978) 78 C.A.3d 309, 144 C.R. 186, K, a convicted embezzler, was placed on probation. He obtained employment with plaintiff on representations of his business skill and experience, and business references verified his previous satisfactory employment. Pursuant to the terms of his probation, K notified his probation officers and they verified the fact of his employment with plaintiff, but did not reveal to plaintiff the facts of K's criminal record and probationary status. K embezzled $ 100,000, and plaintiff sued defendant county probation department and the probation officers, relying on Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, and Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050. Held, judgments for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The unique status of a probationer distinguishes both of the cited cases. (1) The individual defendants were bound by the terms of probation determined by the judge and by the statutory requirements of privacy in the rehabilitative program. The effort would be self-defeating if they, on their own initiative, advised an employer of K's criminal record. (2) A different result might be required if the probation officers had sought to place K in plaintiff's employ. There was no act of placement here, as there was in Johnson. (78 C.A.3d 314, and footnote 7.)

(b) The special relationship situations generally involve some kind of dependency or reliance. Here there was none. Plaintiff did not rely on defendants in any way, but hired K directly, and, by investigation, security bond, or other procedure, was in the best position to protect itself from the hazards complained of. (78 C.A.3d 315.)

A. In General.

2. Intoxicated Patron of Business Establishment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1040

[§ 1040] Intoxicated Patron of Business Establishment.

In Andrews v. Wells (1988) 204 C.A.3d 533, 251 C.R. 344, decedent, plaintiff's son, often stopped at defendant's bar for a drink. Defendant W, the bartender, knew that decedent could not hold liquor well, and on two occasions, at decedent's request, he was able to find another patron to drive him home. On the night of the accident, decedent appeared to be intoxicated and W refused to serve him more than one drink. Decedent then asked W to get him a ride, W was too busy to do so, and decedent walked across a state road and was struck and killed by a vehicle. Because the cause of action for serving liquor to an intoxicated person was abrogated by the Legislature (see infra, §1070), plaintiff attempted to state a cause of action for breach of a duty of care in failing to act on an inebriated customer's request to arrange transportation by a ride with a patron or a taxicab. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Actionable negligence involves the breach of a legal duty of care that proximately causes injury. (204 C.A.3d 538, citing and quoting the text and Rest.2d, Torts §314.) The situation here is one of nonfeasance. Defendants did not create a risk of harm to decedent by any affirmative action, and the question is whether they had a duty to save him from the risks of his intoxication. (204 C.A.3d 539.)

(b) Such a duty depends on the existence of a special relationship, and a number of cases reject liability in the absence of a showing of expectation that assistance would be provided and reliance on that expectation, or a showing that the victim was otherwise dependent on the defendant for assistance. (204 C.A.3d 540, citing Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 C.A.3d 208, 219 C.R. 845, infra, §1064, and other cases.)

(c) The refusal to give legal recognition to a moral obligation to aid another in peril has been criticized. (204 C.A.3d 541, quoting Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 C.A.3d 443, 190 C.R. 310, infra, §1081, and citing Rest.2d, Torts §314, Comment c.) But in the present case plaintiff's assertion of a duty fails. "There is no sufficient showing of special factors giving rise to a duty of assistance, nor is there any evidence of morally outrageous and indefensible conduct. The evidence ... showed that decedent had been going to the Timberlanes bar for two or three months prior to his death. He had never requested defendants to call a taxicab for him and they had never done so. On four or five occasions decedent requested W to arrange a ride for him and on two occasions W had succeeded in asking another patron to drive decedent home. The mere fact that defendants had accommodated decedent in the past does not mean that they had a continuing duty to do so." (204 C.A.3d 541.)

In Knighten v. Sam's Parking Valet (1988) 206 C.A.3d 69, 253 C.R. 365, plaintiffs were hit by V, a drunk driver. In their action against El Torito Restaurants, which served the driver alcohol, and Valet, which returned her car to her, the primary issue was whether a restaurant or valet service has a duty to withhold automobiles from intoxicated patrons. Held, no duty exists.

(a) This situation is analogous to cases holding police officers not liable for injuries caused by drunk drivers whom they stopped and detained, but then allowed to proceed. (206 C.A.3d 74, citing Jackson v. Clements (1983) 146 C.A.3d 983, 194 C.R. 553, supra, §307, Lehto v. Oxnard (1985) 171 C.A.3d 285, 217 C.R. 450, supra, §307, and Sunnyvale v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 839, 250 C.R. 214.) "If police officers have no special relationship with intoxicated citizens under such circumstances, El Torito and Valet can hardly be said to have any such relationship with [V]. Similarly, if police officers have no duty to protect the general public by preventing drunk driving, restaurants and parking services can hardly be charged with such a duty." (206 C.A.3d 74.)

(b) The fact that defendants withheld keys from intoxicated patrons on previous occasions does not establish a special relationship with either plaintiffs or V. Plaintiffs alleged no previous incident involving V, or any reliance by her or plaintiffs on previous incidents involving other drivers. And even an allegation that defendants withheld V's car on a previous occasion would not establish a duty to withhold it on every occasion. (206 C.A.3d 75.)

(c) Because all California citizens have a right to interfere with an attempt to commit a crime (such as drunk driving), defendants could have lawfully retained the vehicle under the circumstances alleged here. "The right to act, however, is far different from a duty to act. The two should not be confused." (206 C.A.3d 76.)

(d) Defendants, as bailees of the car, did not "entrust" it upon returning it to V, and hence cannot be held liable for negligent entrustment. (206 C.A.3d 75.) Blake v. Moore (1984) 162 C.A.3d 700, 208 C.R. 703, infra, §1075, holding a host who supplied a guest with both alcohol and the host's car liable for negligent entrustment, specifically stated that the host would have been immune from liability had the guest been driving his own car. (206 C.A.3d 78.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

b. Illustrations: Situations Where No Duty Arises.

3. Knowledge of Another's Violent Tendencies.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1041

[§ 1041] Knowledge of Another's Violent Tendencies.

In Hansra v. Superior Court (1992) 7 C.A.4th 630, 9 C.R.2d 216, Joginder shot and killed his wife, Juanita, and then killed himself. Plaintiffs, the children and estate of Juanita, brought a wrongful death action against defendants, the mother and brother of Joginder, who allegedly knew that Joginder was prone to violence, but failed to warn Juanita. The complaint alleged (a) that defendants disapproved of Juanita because she had caused the dissolution of Joginder's previous marriage, which had been arranged by defendants, and because of her race, her four children by previous relationships, her lack of independent financial means, and her unwillingness to work in the family business; (b) that defendants attempted to undermine the marriage by speaking derogatorily of Juanita and by pressuring Joginder to divest himself of certain real estate and to take steps to obtain child support from the father of one of Juanita's four children; (c) that defendants knew that Joginder was mentally unstable, had a weapon, and had been both disciplined at work and involved with law enforcement officials because of threatened violence; (d) that, when informed of Juanita's decision to terminate the marriage, Joginder informed defendants of his hostility towards Juanita and of his intention to prevent her departure by any means at his disposal; and (e) that despite this knowledge defendants failed to warn Juanita so that she could take steps to protect herself, thereby proximately causing her death. The trial judge denied defendants' motion for summary judgment, and they sought mandamus. Held, writ granted, directing the trial judge to treat the summary judgment motion as one for judgment on the pleadings, and to grant the motion without leave to amend.

(a) No duty under general negligence principles. Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, lists the criteria for determining the existence of a duty of care, the primary one being the foreseeability of harm. Here, the allegation that Joginder informed defendants that he intended to prevent Juanita's departure at any cost implies that Joginder would take action against those who were attempting to assist Juanita's departure, i.e., defendants, rather than against Juanita herself, who was the object of his desires. (7 C.A.4th 642.) Hence, this allegation does not establish the foreseeability of Juanita's murder. (7 C.A.4th 642.) The complaint also fails to establish the requisite connection between defendants' conduct and the injury suffered. "It is one thing to allege that defendants undertook a campaign designed to foment marital discord and hasten a separation, but quite another to conclude therefrom that the separation would be effected by murder rather than the less drastic means commonly used by estranged spouses." (7 C.A.4th 643.)

(b) No duty based on relationships between defendants and Juanita. These relationships, of mother-in-law and daughter-in-law and brother-in-law and sister-in-law, do not give rise to an independent duty of care. "[T]o say that a 'special relationship' exists is to say nothing other than the factors favoring imposition of a duty of care in particular circumstances outweigh the countervailing factors (one of which is that the harm was caused by a third person). The existence of a 'special relationship' does not create the duty. 'Special relationship,' rather, is simply a label expressing the conclusion that the facts, considered in light of the pertinent legal considerations, support the existence of a duty of care." (7 C.A.4th 646.) "The only difference between the general negligence claim and the special relationship claim is the so-called special relationship itself. Yet this fact is not really new at all, since our analysis of the general negligence claim necessarily considered defendants' conduct and knowledge in light of the relationship between defendants and Juanita." (7 C.A.4th 646.) Furthermore, treating the special relationship claim independently would not change the conclusion that the absence of either foreseeability of harm or a close causal connection between defendants' conduct and the injury suffered is dispositive of the duty question. (7 C.A.4th 646.)

(c) No duty based on relationships between defendants and Joginder. These relationships, based on the blood relationships of mother and son and brother and brother, would give rise only to a duty to control Joginder, rather than a duty to warn Juanita. However, the complaint contains no allegations that defendants had the ability to control Joginder; rather, the allegations make it clear that he was uncontrollable. (7 C.A.4th 645.)

In Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 C.A.4th 1444, 23 C.R.2d 34, plaintiff broke up with L, and L told defendant that he was going to kill plaintiff. Defendant, who was L's employer and who had lived with L approximately 9 years earlier, warned plaintiff of L's threat. Shortly thereafter, L confronted plaintiff and held a gun to her head, but her screams frightened him away. Upon learning of this assault, defendant convinced L to join Alcoholics Anonymous and to commence psychiatric treatment. She also obtained L's gun and ammunition and informed plaintiff of this fact. Approximately 1 month later, defendant, without informing plaintiff, returned the gun and ammunition to L because he appeared stable and was not making any threats against plaintiff. Two days later, L shot and severely injured plaintiff, and she instituted this negligence action against defendant. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; defendant had no duty to warn plaintiff that L again had possession of his gun and ammunition.

(a) No duty based on relationship between defendant and L. Because L's actions were in no way related to his employment by defendant, the employer-employee relationship that existed between them could not impose on defendant a duty to warn plaintiff. Nor could the duty to warn be based on the past sexual relationship between L and defendant. A primary characteristic of these casual relationships is their potential of termination without regard to consequences. Finally, defendant's undertaking to assist L in his rehabilitation may evidence some sort of continuing concern for him, but does not impose an obligation upon defendant in terms of duty to either plaintiff or L. (18 C.A.4th 1452.)

(b) No duty based on relationship between defendant and plaintiff.

(1) There is a duty to warn persons in peril when the actor has done something to cause the imperiled person to rely on the future care of the actor and the actor is in a position of peculiar authority or knowledge such as to make the performance of this duty to warn reasonable. This principle is best illustrated in cases involving governmental authority or health care professionals. (18 C.A.4th 1453.)

(2) "[W]hile professionals may have a duty to warn or take precautions to prevent injury to known, or even unknown, victims of their dangerous patients, this duty is based upon special professional expertise and is not extended to nonprofessionals attempting to assist friends or subjects with problems." (18 C.A.4th 1457.) Hence, even though defendant undertook significant efforts to assist L in his rehabilitation, as a nonprofessional volunteer she should not be held to have assumed a duty of continued assistance with respect to either L or plaintiff. (18 C.A.4th 1457.)

(3) Similarly, when defendant volunteered information to plaintiff, originally in the form of a warning and later with the advice that the danger had subsided, she should not be held to have assumed a duty to provide future warnings if and when circumstances changed. Imposing a duty to warn under these circumstances, where there is no aspect of professional or governmental control and no familial, commercial, agency, or other relationship, would be contrary to the strong public policy favoring the encouragement of voluntary acts of assistance. (18 C.A.4th 1457.)

(4) The public policy of encouraging voluntary acts of assistance is especially strong in the area of domestic disputes, such as was involved here. These disputes are increasingly common, and it is natural for friends of the parties to attempt to be of some assistance. "We should not dissuade people from trying to help those in domestic distress by fastening upon them ... the obligation of continued tries just because they made one effort to assist." (18 C.A.4th 1458.)

(5) It can be argued that when defendant told plaintiff of her possession of L's gun, plaintiff reasonably became reliant upon defendant for any new information to the contrary. However, this argument would be meritless. Defendant's only action supporting any continuing obligation to act was a fleeting communication designed to assist in a domestic dispute. "Even though this communication related to what might be thought a very important matter, it would be unreasonable for the beneficiary of that service to expect that the person volunteering such information had undertaken any continuing obligation to warn." (18 C.A.4th 1458.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

b. Illustrations: Situations Where No Duty Arises.

4. Faith Healer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1042

[§ 1042] Faith Healer.

In Quigley v. First Church of Christ, Scientist (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1027, 76 C.R.2d 792, plaintiff's 12-year-old son was in the care and custody of her ex-husband J. Around December 11, the boy became sick, but did not complain until around December 16. J made the decision to care for his son with Christian Science treatment, rather than with conventional medicine. Several persons of that faith administered to the boy, but his condition only worsened, until it reached the point that J called 911. However, on arrival at the hospital, the boy was pronounced dead of juvenile diabetes. Plaintiff then sued the church and the participating members, alleging that they had breached a duty of due care by failing to refer decedent to conventional medical care until it was too late. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Defendants had no duty of care to the decedent. Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, infra, §1043, held that there was no special relationship in the spiritual counselor situation, and thus no duty of care even though the counselor was aware that the person counseled might commit suicide. That decision is controlling here. Plaintiff's attempts to distinguish Nally are unpersuasive. (65 C.A.4th 1034.)

(b) Plaintiff asserts that decedent was a mere child who, unlike the deceased in Nally, was not able to exercise choice in his treatment options, and that the doctrine of parens patriae requires that higher standards be imposed on those who render services to a child. However, this doctrine, which refers to the state's obligation to act as guardian for children, does not create a general duty of care owed by all persons to all children. The courts should be hesitant to impose new tort duties when to do so would involve complex policy decisions better left to the Legislature. Moreover, as in the case with virtually all children, the decedent's treatment was chosen by a qualified adult who had the legal duty to do so. (65 C.A.4th 1034.)

(c) Plaintiff asserts that the Christian Science healers had much more control over the decedent's treatment than did the spiritual adviser in Nally. This position is undercut by the involvement of the decedent's father. Plaintiff claims that the decedent was dependent on the healers and thus developed a relationship with them. However, the evidence established that his dependency was on his father who, as a healthy adult, was free to arrange the decedent's affairs as he saw fit. (65 C.A.4th 1035.)

(d) Plaintiff asserts that imposing a duty on Christian Science healers to refer patients to medical care would not have a chilling effect on religious freedom. According to plaintiff's complaint, it is considered unethical to provide Christian Science treatment to any patient receiving medical care. Thus, requiring healers to encourage medical care would directly interfere with their own religious practices. (65 C.A.4th 1035.)

(e) Plaintiff argued that defendants voluntarily assumed a duty of due care regarding decedent's illness, in that the decedent's physical well-being was entrusted to the church's nationally coordinated system for treating seriously ill children. However, as plaintiff expressly acknowledged, Christian Science treatment, which perceives disease to be an error of the mind, is intended to address only a spiritual, not a physical, problem. And the fact that decedent's problem turned out not to be spiritual, but was physical in nature, did not change the fact that defendants undertook no responsibility to evaluate the severity of, or otherwise address, the decedent's physical condition or medical needs. (65 C.A.4th 1035.)

[§ 1043] Clergy.

In Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, plaintiffs' son, committed suicide after a long period of depression and religious counseling by defendant pastors of defendant Protestant Church. Plaintiffs brought this action for "clergyman malpractice," i.e., negligence and outrageous conduct in failing to prevent the suicide. Defendants offered evidence to show that they held themselves out as pastoral counselors, not as professional, medical, or psychiatric counselors. The trial judge granted a nonsuit, and the Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed with directions to enter judgment affirming the judgment of nonsuit.

(a) A tort involves the violation of a legal duty (47 C.3d 292, citing the text), and one is ordinarily under no duty to protect another from harm in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control (47 C.3d 293).

(b) Prior cases have imposed a duty to prevent a foreseeable suicide when a special relationship existed between the suicidal individual and the defendant or its agents. (47 C.3d 293, citing Vistica v. Presbyterian Hosp. & Med. Center of San Francisco (1967) 67 C.2d 465, 62 C.R. 577, 432 P.2d 193, and Meier v. Ross General Hosp. (1968) 69 C.2d 420, 71 C.R. 903, 445 P.2d 519, supra, §319.) But the duty recognized in these cases was severely circumscribed: (1) In both cases, the patient was in the care of hospital physicians who were aware of his unstable condition; (2) in both, the suicide occurred while the patient was confined in a hospital psychiatric ward; (3) liability was imposed because the defendants failed to take precautions to prevent the suicide even though the medical staff knew that the patient was likely to attempt to take his own life. (47 C.3d 294.) Neither case suggested extending the duty to nonprofessional personal or religious counseling relationships. (47 C.3d 294.)

(c) Bellah v. Greenson (1978) 81 C.A.3d 614, 146 C.R. 535, infra, §1045, does not support plaintiffs' theory. That court there concluded that licensed medical professionals have no duty to disclose to third persons manifestations of suicidal tendencies on the part of a person treated as an outpatient. (47 C.3d 295.) Bellah recognized that a cause of action may exist for professional malpractice when a psychiatrist's (or hospital's) treatment of a suicidal patient falls below the standard of care for the profession, thus giving rise to a traditional malpractice action. "Bellah held that courts should not extend Tarasoff to require psychiatrists to disclose the confidences of their patients when harm to a third party is not contemplated." (47 C.3d 296; on Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, see infra, §1050.)

(d) Factors of foreseeability and closeness of causal connection enunciated in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §833, were not established. The contention that mere knowledge on the part of defendants that decedent may have been suicidal should give rise to a duty to refer "necessarily would imply a general duty on all nontherapists to refer all potentially suicidal persons to licensed medical practitioners." (47 C.3d 297.) And mere foreseeability of the harm or knowledge of the danger is insufficient to create a legally cognizable special relationship giving rise to a legal duty to prevent harm. (47 C.3d 297.)

(e) Public policy is opposed to the imposition of a duty to prevent suicide. (1) Neither the Legislature nor the courts have ever imposed an obligation on persons to take affirmative steps to prevent the suicide of one who is not under the care of a physician in a hospital. (2) The Legislature has exempted the clergy from the licensing requirements applicable to marriage, family, child, and domestic counselors. (3) The legislative trend is to encourage private assistance efforts. (47 C.3d 298.) And, even assuming that workable standards of care could be established, it would be difficult to identify with precision those to whom the duty should apply. "Because of the differing theological views espoused by the myriad of religions in our state and practiced by church members, it would certainly be impractical, and quite possibly unconstitutional, to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. Such a duty would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity." (47 C.3d 299.) (See 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 467 [Nally]; 75 A.L.R.4th 750 [cause of action for clergy malpractice].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

b. Illustrations: Situations Where No Duty Arises.

5. Suicide Prevention.

bb. Police Officer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1044

[§ 1044] Police Officer.

In Adams v. Fremont (1998) 68 C.A.4th 243, 80 C.R.2d 196, plaintiffs sued defendant city and numerous police officers, claiming that the officers had negligently caused decedent to commit suicide. Decedent, who had a history of depression and threatening suicide, especially when drunk, became belligerent after attending a party, terrorized family members, and ended up in a closet with a gun. Plaintiffs called the police after hearing decedent fire a shot. When the police arrived, they knew that decedent was armed, but did not know whether he was injured. Using a dog, they located decedent in the backyard and tried unsuccessfully to convince him to surrender his weapons. Plaintiffs claimed negligence in the fact that at least eight armed officers were nearby, that a dog was used to locate decedent, that only 16 minutes had elapsed from the time that decedent was located to the time that he shot and killed himself, and that the officers' allegedly confrontational conduct caused decedent to become more, rather than less, agitated. Held, judgment for plaintiffs reversed; "police officers responding to a crisis involving a person threatening suicide with a loaded firearm have no legal duty under tort law that would expose them to liability if their conduct fails to prevent the threatened suicide from being carried out." (68 C.A.4th 248.)

(a) Duty.

(1) The legal question whether a duty exists and the factual question whether a particular defendant was negligent are not coterminous. Fulfilling the court's responsibility to determine if a legal duty exists necessarily requires consideration and balancing of sometimes competing public policies that may be irrelevant to the jury's factual determination whether the challenged conduct fell below the prevailing standard of care. These different roles are best reflected with respect to foreseeability. On the one hand, foreseeability is part of the calculus to which a court looks in defining the boundaries of duty. On the other hand, the jury considers "foreseeability" in two more focused, fact-specific settings. First, the jury may consider the likelihood or foreseeability of injury in determining whether, in fact, the particular defendant's conduct was negligent in the first place. Second, foreseeability may be relevant to the jury's determination whether the defendant's negligence was a proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's injury. (68 C.A.4th 265.)

(2) Because of these distinct roles of court and jury, an appellate court is not constrained by factual evidence submitted on a specific issue. Thus, the opinions of plaintiffs' expert witnesses, who testified that the police had caused decedent's suicide and had violated the applicable standard of care by increasing the anxiety level or by rushing the situation, were irrelevant to the determination whether a legal duty existed. (68 C.A.4th 265.)

(3) In assessing the question of duty in cases challenging the conduct of law enforcement personnel, appellate courts have usually applied the multifactor duty analysis first articulated in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. Other courts have relied on the more amorphous "special relationship" doctrine to explain cases that imposed a duty on police officers to protect individual members of the public in some contexts. Although the California Supreme Court has sometimes engaged in a duty analysis under both standards, the interrelationship between the traditional duty analysis and the special relationship doctrine has never been clearly defined. Moreover, the Supreme Court has yet to determine whether, or to what extent, a common law duty of care to control another's conduct is owed to individual members of the public by public safety professionals engaged in tactical field operations resulting from a citizen's request for crisis intervention. (68 C.A.4th 266.)

(b) Application of Rowland factors.

(1) Foreseeability. When police officers respond to an armed person threatening suicide, it is foreseeable that an actual suicide will result. However, hindsight reveals that practically every alternative is also "foreseeable." Because the "bar of foreseeability" is thus set so low, foreseeability alone is insufficient to create a legal duty to prevent harm. (68 C.A.4th 268.)

(2) Degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury and closeness of causal connection. The nexus between the acts or omissions of defendants and the harm suffered by plaintiffs contemplated by a duty analysis is significantly different from that needed to satisfy a factual determination of proximate cause. Proximate causation requires simply that the act or omission of the defendant be a "substantial factor" in causing the harm suffered. Determining the existence of a legal duty, on the other hand, requires an assessment not only of the fact that a causative relationship exists, but also a quantification of that connection in balance with the other Rowland factors. Decedent in this case suffered injury. The more troubling question is, to what extent was it inexorably linked to the conduct of defendants? Undisputed testimony established that decedent had been depressed and had considered suicide in the past. Immediately preceding the arrival of the police officers, decedent had a significant altercation with his wife, secreted himself in a closet with a gun, and responded to his stepdaughter's efforts at communication by discharging his weapon. When the police located decedent, he was clad only in his underwear, sitting in his backyard with a gun clutched to his chest. To the extent that the actions of defendants were linked to the decedent's tragic decision to end his life, they were indirect and inferential. None of the evidence demonstrated that the police suggested or encouraged decedent to turn the gun on himself. Thus, the degree of certainty between the manner in which the police officers responded to the incident and decedent's suicide is weak, and the closeness of the connection is remote. (68 C.A.4th 269.)

(3) Moral blame. To avoid redundancy with the other Rowland factors, the moral blame that attends ordinary negligence is generally not sufficient to tip the balance in favor of liability. Instead, courts have required a higher degree of moral culpability. The conduct of the police officers in this case was not morally blameworthy, as this term is understood in its legal context. The police officers promptly responded to a citizen's call for help. Knowing little about the circumstances they would be facing, they went to the scene and encountered decedent, who was armed with a loaded firearm, who had been engaging in behavior that was decidedly both suicidal and assaultive, and who adamantly refused to do the one thing that would have alleviated the police officers' safety concerns--surrender his weapon. Although defendants could have responded in a less confrontational manner, there was certainly no evidence that they intended or planned to cause the decedent's suicide or had actual or constructive knowledge that their behavior would lead to a suicide. Nor could the officers' attempts to investigate the situation, disarm decedent, and dissuade him from attempting suicide be described as inherently harmful acts. (68 C.A.4th 270.)

(4) Burden and costs of preventing future harm. Imposing liability for the negligent handling of a threatened suicide would improperly elevate the interests in preserving the life of the person threatening suicide over the interests of public safety and the physical safety of police officers. (68 C.A.4th 271.) Moreover, imposition of a tort duty on public safety officers engaged in disarming suicidal persons would be likely to result in a more tentative police response to these crises, or it could prevent them from responding at all. Certainly, the risk of inhibiting law enforcement intervention necessary for the preservation of community welfare and peace outweighs the importance of ensuring nonnegligent treatment of persons threatening suicide. (68 C.A.4th 272.)

(5) Availability of insurance. Insurance may be available to cover public entities for the negligence of their employees, yet this factor has little relevance where significant policy considerations militate against the imposition of a duty of care. The risk of liability will affect police conduct regardless of whether an adverse judgment is covered by insurance, because only the most irresponsible police officers would ignore the possibility of a judgment holding them personally liable for another's suicide solely because monetary damages were covered by insurance. Moreover, an inordinate amount of public time, and thus money, would be consumed in the litigation of private claims that otherwise could be utilized in increasing the quality of police services. (68 C.A.4th 274.)

(6) Agency's powers and limitations. Law enforcement's public safety function imposes no duty on police officers to protect individual constituents as opposed to the general public. Admittedly, law enforcement largely acts to preserve the peace by its interactions with individual members of the public. Nevertheless, the role of law enforcement in society is to act in the general public interest. Permitting potential suicide victims and their families to hold police officers personally liable for the negligent handling of a suicide crisis conflicts with the public nature of protection services police officers provide to the community at large (public duty rule). (68 C.A.4th 274.) Moreover, imposing a duty on law enforcement to take reasonable steps to prevent a threatened suicide would have significant budgetary implications and improperly insinuate the civil justice system into the allocation of law enforcement resources. (68 C.A.4th 276.)

(7) Balancing. "On balance, the relevant public policy considerations militate against imposing a legal duty on police officers to take reasonable steps to prevent a threatened suicide from being carried out. The foreseeability and certainty of harm suffered are factors which favor imposing a duty. The absence of moral blame, the remoteness of the connection between the conduct of appellants and the harm suffered, the policy of preventing future harm, consequences to the community, the role of law enforcement in society, and the potential detriment to the public in imposing judicial allocation of resources all heavily favor shielding law enforcement personnel from tort liability in instances such as this." (68 C.A.4th 276.)

(c) Duty of care analysis under special relationship exception.

(1) The "public duty" rule is subject to a narrow exception for unusual police conduct that creates a special relationship between the police officer and an individual member of the public, and plaintiffs contend that such a relationship arose between decedent and defendants. In the area of suicide prevention, however, Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, supra, §1043, holding that the special relationship creating a duty to use due care to prevent suicide has been limited to hospital-patient relationships, refused to extend the duty to nonprofessional counseling relationships where the counselor had no control over the person being counseled. (68 C.A.4th 276.)

(2) Many cases have held that a special relationship with a person in peril is not established merely because police officers respond to a call for assistance. (68 C.A.4th 279.) In fact, only a few courts have actually imposed a duty of care on law enforcement officers under the special relationship exception, and those cases involved police officers who had made misrepresentations that induced detrimental reliance. The conduct challenged in these decisions did not involve deliberate tactical choices made by police officers while intervening in an unfolding life-threatening crisis. (68 C.A.4th 279.) Here, defendants made no express or implied promises that they would prevent decedent's suicide or that they would approach him in a nonconfrontational manner. Nor have plaintiffs alleged that detrimental reliance occurred. While a promise and reliance thereon are not indispensable elements of a special relationship, the plaintiff must still plead and prove that police conduct in a situation of dependency lulled the plaintiff into a false sense of security, inducing detrimental reliance on the police for protection. Defendants did not do this. (68 C.A.4th 297, distinguishing Johnson v. Los Angeles (1983) 143 C.A.3d 298, 191 C.R. 704, supra, §301.)

(3) Plaintiffs, citing McCorkle v. Los Angeles (1969) 70 C.2d 252, 74 C.R. 389, 449 P.2d 453, supra, §356, and Mann v. California (1977) 70 C.A.3d 773, 139 C.R. 82, supra, §309, argued that the special relationship exception imposes a duty of care whenever a law enforcement officer's affirmative conduct increases a preexisting risk of harm. However, the cited cases involved a changed risk, and Mann additionally emphasized the individual's situation, reliance on the officer's conduct, and the fact that the officer lulled the individual into a false sense of security. While defendants' conduct arguably increased the preexisting risk that the decedent would commit suicide, none of the other factors was present. (68 C.A.4th 282.) Moreover, even if the creation of a special relationship bears some association to the degree to which the conduct increases a risk of harm, no authority exists for imposing a duty where police conduct only incrementally increases the risk to which the injured person was already exposed. In volatile situations, one can always argue that the arrival of police officers causes an incremental increase in tension at the scene, and thus increases the risk of injury occurring. Yet, despite the fact that basic police work often involves anxiety-producing conduct, the social utility of involving police in suicidal standoffs weighs against the imposition of liability. (68 C.A.4th 284.)

(4) If a duty of care were imposed in each case where there was some progressive, increased chance of injury stemming from a preexisting harm, the special relationship doctrine would be in irremediable conflict with the traditional duty analysis derived from Rowland. Accordingly, where police conduct results in some increase in a preexisting risk of harm, but an analysis of the traditional Rowland factors weighs against the imposition of a duty, no special relationship duty may be imposed. (68 C.A.4th 285.)

[§ 1045] Mental Health Practitioner.

The holding in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050, i.e., that a psychotherapist has a duty to warn if a patient threatens violence, was given a restricted scope in Bellah v. Greenson (1978) 81 C.A.3d 614, 146 C.R. 535. Plaintiffs, parents of decedent daughter, who committed suicide while being treated in an outpatient setting, brought an action against defendant, her psychiatrist. The complaint alleged that defendant knew that the daughter was disposed to suicide and failed to warn plaintiffs of her condition and her consorting with heroin addicts in plaintiffs' home during their absence. Recovery was sought for wrongful death and thefts from the home by the addicts. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Cases involving patients confined in a hospital are distinguishable. The hospital has an institutional duty of care different from that of a psychiatrist treating on an out-patient basis. (81 C.A.3d 620.)

(b) Defendant had a duty to take appropriate measures to prevent the daughter's suicide; but the nature and extent of the measures were factual questions not before the court on the demurrer. The theory of the complaint was that, under Tarasoff, defendant was required to breach the doctor-patient confidential relationship by disclosure of the danger of suicide. This is not correct. Tarasoff holds that disclosure is required where the risk is the danger of violent assault, not where the risk is of self-inflicted harm or mere property damage. (81 C.A.3d 621, 622.) The imposition of a duty to disclose "vague or even specific manifestations of suicidal tendencies" of a patient being treated in an outpatient setting could destroy confidentiality and inhibit psychiatric treatment. (81 C.A.3d 621.) (See Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 C.A.4th 491, 71 C.R.2d 552, infra, §1056 [no reasonable basis for distinguishing between outpatient and hospitalized patient]; 7 A.L.R.4th 1128 [liability of doctor, psychiatrist, or psychologist for failure to take steps to prevent patient's suicide].)

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

b. Illustrations: Situations Where No Duty Arises.

6. Clergy.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1046

[§ 1046] In General.

In Jacqueline R. v. Household of Faith Family Church (2002) 97 C.A.4th 198, 118 C.R.2d 264, plaintiffs, who were experiencing marital problems, went to defendant church for marriage counseling. Before their first joint session, defendant pastor made sexual advances to plaintiff wife. She halfheartedly resisted, but indicated that the reason for her resistance was that she was afraid that they would be caught. Subsequently, the sexual contact between plaintiff and defendant increased for a short period before it ended. Plaintiffs then sued defendants for fraud, negligence, sexual harassment, and other torts, and the trial judge granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment. Held, affirmed.

(a) This suit is one for alienation of affections, but that cause of action was abolished by the enactment of C.C. 43.5 (see supra, §§723, 724). Nevertheless, Smith v. Pust (1993) 19 C.A.4th 263, 23 C.R. 364, supra, §724, and Richard H. v. Larry D. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 591, 243 C.R. 807, supra, §724, recognize that, even when the substance of a suit is alienation of affections, a cause of action may exist based on an independent duty of care, if a plaintiff can show that there was a professional relationship and a connection between the purpose of that relationship and the wrongful conduct. Here, plaintiff husband first sought counseling and revealed that there were sexual problems in the marriage. Defendant pastor then purportedly used that information to interfere with plaintiffs' marriage while continuing to provide them with marriage counseling. Under these facts, and in light of the cases just mentioned, one could argue that an independent duty of care existed on the part of defendant to refrain from engaging in behavior harmful to plaintiffs' marriage. However, the cases cited involved claims against licensed professionals, and thus are not dispositive of the issue here, i.e., whether a duty to refrain from sexual conduct that is harmful to the person being counseled exists in the context of pastoral counseling. (97 C.A.4th 203, citing the text.)

(b) For policy reasons, Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, supra, §1043, held that pastoral counselors should not be held to the same standard of care that might apply to a licensed therapist under similar circumstances. Nally dealt with the duty to prevent a suicide, and sexual misconduct is tangibly different from suicide counseling in that licensed professionals are prohibited by B. & P.C. 6146(c)(3) (supra, §942) and C.C. 43.93 (supra, §416) from engaging in sexual misconduct with their clients. However, it is undisputed that defendant was not a licensed marriage counselor and that pastoral counselors are expressly exempt from state licensing requirements under B. & P.C. 4980.01(b) (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §16). (97 C.A.4th 205.) (97 C.A.4th 206.)

(c) Plaintiffs relied on two federal cases recognizing a cause of action against a pastor for professional negligence. However, both cases are factually distinguishable, because the defendants there explicitly held themselves out as having the education and training of licensed marriage counselors. Here, there is no evidence that defendant did or said anything that would subject him to professional counseling standards. Consequently, he did not owe plaintiffs the same independent duty of care required of licensed professionals. (97 C.A.4th 206.) (See Roman Catholic Bishop of San Diego v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1556, 50 C.R.2d 399, infra, §1190 [no special relationship creating heightened duty of care results from priest-parishioner relationship].)

bb. Duty Provable, but Not Established.

[§ 1047] Duty Provable, but Not Established.

In Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 C.A.4th 257, 130 C.R.2d 601, plaintiff alleged that defendant priest had sexual relations with her in the rectory of the church in which he was the priest and she was a parishioner. She claimed that she acceded to his wishes due to his persistent sexually suggestive phone calls, his denial of ever having had sexual relations with other women, which was false, and his stated desire to retire in the area of their parish so that he could remain near her. Plaintiff further alleged that she was deeply religious and thus readily subject to manipulation and control by clergy. Plaintiff's complaint stated numerous causes of action including breach of fiduciary duty, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and fraud. On demurrer, the trial judge entered judgment for defendant. Held, affirmed, but not before concluding that there are circumstances in which a clergyman's sexual misconduct with a parishioner will result in tort liability for breach of a fiduciary duty, but that these circumstances are not present in this case.

(a) All of plaintiff's causes of action stem from conduct that could fairly be termed "sexual seduction." However, C.C. 43.5(c) provides that there is no cause of action for "seduction of a person over the age of legal consent" (see supra, §723). Thus, because this statute means that it is no longer possible for two consenting adults in California to engage in illicit intercourse, plaintiff cannot prevail on her causes of action unless she can establish that defendant's alleged conduct breached a duty of care independent of that cause of action. In other words, plaintiff cannot plead an abolished cause of action by simply renaming it; the question is whether the essence of the pled cause of action is something other than seduction. Here, plaintiff argued that defendant breached a duty independent of any duty not to seduce her, because, as a clergyman, he stood in a special relationship with her comparable to the doctor-patient or lawyer-client relationship. She also claimed that he stood in a fiduciary relationship with her and that his conduct breached the fiduciary duty arising out of that relationship. (106 C.A.4th 266.)

(b) Richard H. v. Larry D. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 591, 243 C.R. 807, supra, §724, McDaniel v. Gile (1991) 230 C.A.3d 363, 281 C.R. 242, supra, §461, and other cases in which a cause of action for sexual seduction is based on a special relationship are inapposite, because they involve malpractice against physicians, attorneys, and psychotherapists, and there is no such thing as clerical malpractice. As explained in Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, supra, §1043 because of the differing theological views espoused by the myriad religions in California, it would be impracticable to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. The fact that no state or federal court recognizes a cause of action for clerical malpractice reflects widespread acceptance of the Nally view that this malpractice cannot be reconciled with either of the constitutional religion clauses (free exercise of religion or prohibition against the establishment of religion). (106 C.A.4th 268.)

(c) Courts in other jurisdictions are split on the question whether the First Amendment confers immunity from tort liability on members of the clergy who allegedly breach their fiduciary relationship with their parishioners by engaging in sexual misconduct. No California court has dealt with this question, but, without discussing the constitutional question, California has recognized that a priest and parishioner may have a confidential relationship giving rise to tort liability for breach of a fiduciary relationship. (106 C.A.4th 273, citing Vai v. Bank of America (1961) 56 C.2d 329, 15 C.R. 71, 364 P.2d 247, 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §353.) Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, although not involving a fiduciary relationship, analyzed the extent to which the religion clauses permit a religious organization to be exposed to tort liability. It expressed views far more consistent with the courts that have allowed actions against religious officers whose sexual conduct was alleged to have breached a fiduciary duty than with the courts finding these actions barred by the First Amendment. Molko endorsed the view that religious organizations may be held liable where liability can be adjudicated on the basis of neutral principles requiring no inquiry into the validity of a religious belief. "Accordingly, we conclude that a pastor may be subject to tort liability for sexually inappropriate and injurious conduct that breaches a fiduciary duty arising out of a confidential relation with a parishioner, provided the alleged injurious conduct was not dictated by a sincerely held religious belief or carried out in accordance with established beliefs and practices of the religion to which the pastor belongs, and there is no other reason the issues cannot be framed for the trier of fact in secular rather than sectarian terms." (106 C.A.4th 273.)

(d) In this case, plaintiff failed to allege that defendant's claimed exploitation of her arose in the context of a counseling relationship, such as one for marital, family, or financial advice, and it is the existence of a counseling relationship that usually obviates the need for a constitutionally impermissible inquiry into religious beliefs. Also, instead of alleging any of the reasons usually relied on to show that a party to a confidential relation is in a vulnerable position, such as age, ill health, or lack of education, plaintiff alleged that her vulnerability rested solely on her deeply held religious beliefs. Thus, the questions whether plaintiff was vulnerable to defendant and unable to protect herself would focus on the nature and depth of her religious beliefs, and their basis, if any, in Roman Catholic doctrine. These are, of course, profoundly religious questions as to which the courts may not constitutionally inquire. (106 C.A.4th 280.)

(1) Driver. In California Body & Trailer Mfrs. v. Albrecht (1971) 16 C.A. 3d Supp. 1, 94 C.R. 238, defendant drove down a one-way street and parked his car on the left side of the street. His guest opened the door on his side, into the path of oncoming traffic, and plaintiff's car struck it. Held, defendant had no duty to control the acts of his guest, in the absence of facts to put him on notice that the guest was incompetent to act in this situation; hence, defendant was not negligent toward plaintiff. (16 C.A.3d Supp. 3.)

In McGarvey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1971) 18 C.A.3d 555, 95 C.R. 894, H, an employee of defendant company, was driving to work. He made a U-turn and struck plaintiff motorcyclist. Plaintiff sued defendant company on the theory that the company failed to provide adequate parking space for all employees, and that this accident occurred while H was seeking a parking place on the street. Held, no cause of action was stated; there is no duty of the type alleged toward persons using the streets.

(2) Private Rehabilitation Institution. In Beauchene v. Synanon Foundation (1979) 88 C.A.3d 342, 151 C.R. 796, plaintiff alleged that defendant was a voluntary private rehabilitation institution for drug addicts and others with character disorders; that courts sometimes sent convicted persons to Synanon rather than to jail or prison; that B, a convicted burglar with a long history of behavioral difficulties and escape attempts, was given probation on condition that he enter the Synanon program; that he escaped from Synanon and went on a "crime spree," killing several people and injuring plaintiff. The theory of the suit was that defendant had a duty to exercise due care in accepting convicted persons, or a duty to prevent B from leaving. Held, judgment on demurrer affirmed. A public entity is immune from liability in these circumstances under Govt.C. 845.8 (supra, §298); and the same public policy--to encourage rehabilitation programs--should give immunity to private institutions of this kind. [§ 1049] In General.

A number of relationships have been recognized as giving rise to affirmative duties. (See Rest.2d, Torts, §314B; Rest.2d, Agency §512, and Appendix, Rep. Note, p. 740; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §83 et seq.; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 63; infra, §1077 [statutory duty]; infra, §§1078, 1179 [contractual duty].) The following are of note:

- (1) Landowner or possessor and person coming on the land. (See infra, §1082 et seq.)
- (2) Manufacturer or other supplier of goods and buyer or user. (See infra, §1168 et seq.)
- (3) Vendor, lessor, or contractor and purchaser, lessee or owner of real property. (See infra, §1158 et seq.)
- (4) Common carrier and passenger. (See supra, §§923, 925.)
- (5) Innkeeper and guest. (See Gray v. Kircher (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1069, 1073, 236 C.R. 891, citing the text [hotel keeper]; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §513.)
- (6) Product endorser and consumer. (See supra, §§823 824.)
- (7) Negligent person and rescuer. (See infra, §1306.)

The liability of an employer to an employee is now almost entirely covered by workers' compensation and employers' liability legislation. (See 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §§24, 118.) But there may be situations not arising out of the employment in which ordinary tort principles apply. Anderson v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1947) 31 C.2d 117, 126, 187 P.2d 729, was an action for wrongful death under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Plaintiff alleged that decedent, a conductor on defendant's passenger train, fell from the rear vestibule while working, and lay in a helpless condition on the right-of-way; that defendant's other employees negligently failed to take prompt steps to search for him; and that he died of exposure to the cold weather. The California Supreme Court upheld judgment for defendant on the theory that the federal courts had not established a legal duty on the part of the carrier employer without notice of the injury to exercise ordinary care to ascertain the whereabouts of a missing employee. (31 C.2d 126.) On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed the decision in a brief opinion declaring that the pleaded facts set forth defendant's failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances. (333 U.S. 821, 68 S.Ct. 854, 92 L.Ed. 1108.) The Court thus recognized a legal duty, which the California court had thought not yet established as controlling federal law.

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

c. Illustrations: Relationships Giving Rise to Duty.

2. Psychotherapist's Duty To Warn.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1050

[§ 1050] In General.

In Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, P, a mental outpatient receiving therapy at C Hospital of the University of California, informed M, his therapist, that he was going to kill a girl (readily identifiable as Tatiana), when she returned home from Brazil. M notified the police, requesting assistance in confining P. Defendant officers took him into custody, but released him, relying on his rational appearance and promise to stay away from Tatiana. Defendant, director of the hospital's department of psychiatry, then ordered M's letter to the police returned and all notes on M's therapy destroyed, and that no action to place P in confinement be taken. No warning of Tatiana's danger was given to plaintiffs, her mother and father. When Tatiana returned, P killed her. Held, a cause of action could be stated for negligent failure to warn, against defendants M, the director, other staff therapists and the Regents, but not against the police officers.

(a) Affirmative duty to warn based on relationship. The general rule is that one person owes no duty to control the conduct of another or to warn those endangered by the conduct, but the rule is subject to exceptions. The exception applicable in this case is that a person in a special relationship may be under a duty to warn. Here, the relationship of therapist and patient between defendants and P gave rise to a duty, similar to that of a hospital to exercise care to control a patient, or of a doctor to warn his or her patient if the patient's condition or medication makes certain conduct dangerous to others. (17 C.3d 436, 437.) A relationship to the victim is not essential; e.g., a doctor is liable to persons infected by his or her patient if the doctor negligently fails to diagnose a contagious disease, or, having diagnosed it, fails to warn members of the patient's family. And a federal case held the Veterans Administration liable for wrongful death when it arranged for a mental patient to work on a local farm without warning of his dangerous history, and he killed his wife. (17 C.3d 436, 437.)

(b) Answers to defendants' arguments.

(1) Defendants asserted that therapy patients often express thoughts of violence but rarely carry them out; and that the therapist has a difficult judgment to make. However, though evaluation is difficult, the therapist is only held to the normal professional standard of care. (17 C.3d 438.) Here, the complaint alleges that defendants did in fact predict that P would kill. (17 C.3d 438.)

(2) Defendants contended that even though the therapist does determine, or under applicable professional standards should have determined, that a patient poses a serious danger of violence to others, the therapist nevertheless has no duty to act to protect the victim. This is unsound. While discharge of the duty of care will necessarily vary with the facts of each case, the adequacy of the therapist's conduct must be measured against the traditional negligence standard of reasonable care under the circumstances. (17 C.3d 439.)

(3) People v. Burnick (1975) 14 C.3d 306, 328, 121 C.R. 488, 535 P.2d 352, does not call for a contrary conclusion. The court there took note of the uncertain character of therapeutic prediction and held that a person cannot be committed as a mentally disordered sex offender except by proof beyond a reasonable doubt. The issue here, however, is not whether the patient should be incarcerated, but whether the therapist should take any steps at all to protect the threatened victim; e.g., by a warning. (17 C.3d 439.) "The risk that unnecessary warnings may be given is a reasonable price to pay for the lives of possible victims that may be saved." (17 C.3d 440.)

(4) Defendants contended that giving a warning would constitute a breach of trust in revelation of confidential communications, and endanger the free communication essential to psychotherapy. But the interest in safeguarding the confidential character of the communication must be weighed against the public interest in safety from violent assault; and the Legislature has done so in establishing the "dangerous patient" exception of Ev.C. 1024 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §226). (17 C.3d 440, 441.) Moreover, the American Medical Association has stated that no breach of professional ethics is involved where the physician reveals confidences in accordance with the requirements of law or where this is necessary to protect the welfare of the individual or of the community. (17 C.3d 441.) Thus, "[t]he protective privilege ends where the public peril begins." (17 C.3d 442.)

(5) The provisions of the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29) governing release of confidential information apply only to proceedings under the Act. (17 C.3d 443.)

(c) Immunity from liability for failing to confine P. Govt.C. 856 creates a broad immunity of public entities and their employees from liability for injury resulting from determining "in accordance with any applicable enactment" whether to confine a person for mental illness. (See supra, §319.) "[T]he scope of the immunity extends not only to the final determination to confine or not to confine the person for mental illness, but to all determinations involved in the process of commitment." (17 C.3d 448.)

(d) No immunity from liability for failure to warn. Govt.C. 820.2, stating the immunity for discretionary acts (see supra, §351 et seq.) does not protect defendant therapists. Under the tests of Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, a failure to warn of dangers is not a basic policy decision giving absolute immunity. The publicly employed therapist must exercise the same quantum of care as a private therapist. (17 C.3d 447.)

(e) Police defendants are not liable. (1) The police officers were in no special relationship to either T or P to impose on them a duty to warn. (17 C.3d 444.) (2) They are also free from liability for failure to confine P, under Welf.C. 5154, which provides an immunity for a peace officer responsible for detainment of a person for the 72-hour treatment and evaluation under the statute. (17 C.3d 449.)

One justice issued a concurring and dissenting opinion, and two justices dissented. (17 C.3d 452.) (See Gross v. Allen (1994) 22 C.A.4th 354, 362, 27 C.R.2d 429 [psychiatrist who knew patient was likely to attempt suicide had duty to take preventive measures]; *Johnson v. because he was no longer danger to self or others; because case did not involve failure to warn known victim, Tarasoff was inapplicable]; 43 Proof of Facts 2d 657 [physician's liability for failing to protect third person from nonpsychiatric patient]; 2 Proof of Facts 3d 327 [liability of psychotherapist for failing to protect third person]; 14 Cal. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

c. Illustrations: Relationships Giving Rise to Duty.

2. Psychotherapist's Duty To Warn.

bb. Statutory Limitation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1051

[§ 1051] Statutory Limitation.

The psychiatrist's duty to warn and protect, as declared in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §1050, was limited by the enactment of C.C. 43.92 in 1985. The statute provides as follows:

(1) No cause of action arises except where the patient has communicated to the psychotherapist "a serious threat of physical violence" against "a reasonably identifiable victim or victims." (C.C. 43.92(a).)

(2) If there is a duty to warn and protect under these limited circumstances, the duty is discharged by the psychotherapist making "reasonable efforts to communicate the threat to the victim or victims and to a law enforcement agency." (C.C. 43.92(b).)

In Barry v. Turek (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1241, 267 C.R. 553, defendant provided psychological services to J, a 17-year-old Afghani war veteran who was admitted to the hospital for reconstructive surgery. J, who was 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighed approximately 105 pounds, was permitted to roam freely on the seventh floor of the hospital and, on numerous occasions over a 10-day period, had followed the nurses in "inappropriately close ways" and attempted to grab and kiss them. Approximately 10 days after these incidents, he sexually assaulted plaintiff, who worked on the seventh floor as an office manager. In plaintiff's action for negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress, the trial judge granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff failed to meet her burden of proving that the case was within the exception to the immunity provided by C.C. 43.92(a). Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff established that she was part of a group of reasonably identifiable victims. Based on J's pattern of conduct, any female working full-time on the seventh floor, whether as a nurse or in any other capacity, was reasonably identifiable as a victim of J's inappropriate sexual behavior. (218 C.A.3d 1245.) Thompson v. Alameda (1980) 27 C.3d 741, 167 C.R. 70, 614 P.2d 728, supra, §299, is distinguishable, because there an entire neighborhood would have had to be alerted, while here only the female employees on one floor were involved. Furthermore, a warning could have been given to these employees effectively at minimal cost and with little chance of causing undue alarm. (218 C.A.3d 1245, footnote 5.)

(b) However, plaintiff failed to show that defendant ought to have been aware that J presented a serious threat of physical violence. J never made verbal threats of violence within the hearing of defendant or his assistants, and when defendant instructed J not to touch the nurses, he, on at least one occasion, nodded affirmatively. (218 C.A.3d 1243.) Although the nurses found J's behavior annoying, there was no physical violence involved, and the nurses' notes suggested that, rather than being frightened by J's conduct, they attempted to correct the problem by setting limits that he could understand. (218 C.A.3d 1246.)

A number of other decisions are illustrative. (See Tilley v. Schulte (1999) 70 C.A.4th 79, 85, 82 C.R.2d 497 [C.C. 43.92 did not prevent application of firefighter's rule even though psychiatrist failed to warn supervisor and police of patient's feelings of hostility toward his supervisor, where plaintiff police officer, who had never been mentioned by patient, was shot; thus, there was no duty to warn plaintiff]; Bragg v. Valdez (2003) 111 C.A.4th 421, 434, 3 C.R.3d 804 [immunity of C.C. 43.92 applies to treatment setting, and thus had no applicability where patient was released from involuntary confinement for improper reason]; Ewing v. Goldstein (2004) 120 C.A.4th 807, 817, 15 C.R.3d 864 [communication from patient's family member to patient's therapist, made for purpose of advancing patient's therapy, is "patient communication" within meaning of C.C. 43.92, notwithstanding that statute refers only to patient's communication to his or her psychotherapist]; Ewing v. Northridge Hosp. Med. Center (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1289, 1296, 16 C.R.3d 591 [it is irrelevant that communicating family member is not patient of psychotherapist]; on immunity of psychiatrist for acts of person released early under LPS Act, see Michael E. L. v. San Diego (1986) 183 C.A.3d 515, 530, 228 C.R. 139; Ford v. Norton (2001) 89 C.A.4th 974, 979, 107 C.R.2d 776.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Calderon v. Glick (2005) 131 C.A.4th 224, 231, 31 C.R.3d 707 [where psychotherapists directly asked patient, who suffered from delusion that former girlfriend had given him fatal disease, if he had any intention to harm her, and patient's negative response was not contradicted by his body language, they had no duty under C.C. 43.92 to warn former girlfriend's family members, who were later harmed during shooting spree by patient]; 36 *Golden Gate L. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1052 [§ 1052] Medical Consultant.

An extraordinary extension of the reasoning of Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §1050, was applied to different facts in Brousseau v. Jarrett (1977) 73 C.A.3d 864, 141 C.R. 200.

Plaintiff minor suffered personal injuries when struck by an uninsured hit-and-run motorist. He was an insured under his father's Allstate policy, and was entitled to compensation for damages up to the policy limit of $ 15,000. Defendant doctor was consulted by plaintiff to diagnose and treat the injury, and to prepare reports containing a prognosis about residual disability. Plaintiff brought this action against defendant doctor, alleging that Allstate requested such a report; that defendant furnished one in which he stated that he believed that plaintiff would have no residual disability; that he knew or should have known that plaintiff's injuries were more serious than the report stated; that as a result Allstate offered only $ 7,500 in settlement, and that plaintiff incurred attorneys' fees and litigation costs of $ 3,897.11 before obtaining a settlement for the full policy limit. Plaintiff prayed for $ 3,897.11 in actual damages and $ 250,000 in punitive damages. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed.

The pleading was insufficient to justify an award of punitive damages (73 C.A.3d 872) but sufficient to state a cause of action for negligence. "When the word 'consulted' is liberally construed in a contractual sense, these allegations sufficiently plead a duty on defendant's part to use reasonable care to furnish an objective prognosis, a duty which arose from defendant's employment to perform the specific professional service." (73 C.A.3d 871.)

A lengthy dissenting opinion asserted that this decision on a point of first impression in the country improperly extends the scope of recovery of financial damages without considering the socio-economic consequences (73 C.A.3d 876); that "there is no duty on the part of a physician to his patient to write a nonnegligent medical report" (73 C.A.3d 878); that the guidelines set forth in the Tarasoff do not support the court's conclusion (73 C.A.3d 886). The dissenting justice also criticized the majority for treating the complaint as one based on general negligence instead of medical malpractice, thus allowing the jury to determine whether the defendant was negligent, applying lay standards instead of the standard established by expert medical witnesses. (See 47 Proof of Facts 2d 525 [wrongful claim review by physician]; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 331 [wrongful medical evaluation]; 32 U.S.F. L. Rev. 105 [physician's duty to disclose

In Marois v. Royal Investigation & Patrol (1984) 162 C.A.3d 193, 208 C.R. 384, F was the owner of a drive-in restaurant located in an area where there was loitering and beer-drinking in the parking lot. F contracted with defendant R, a private security service, to provide security guards to give protection under F's guidelines. While guards P and M were on duty, H, his face and clothes bloody, entered the restaurant and was told to leave. H left, but later, in the parking lot, struck plaintiff with a baseball bat despite verbal attempts by P and M to dissuade him from the attack. In this action against the security service and the guards, the trial judge granted a nonsuit. Held, reversed.

(a) The relationship between a business and its customers requires the business to take affirmative action to control the wrongful acts of third persons toward invitees where there is reasonable cause to anticipate the acts. (162 C.A.3d 199, citing Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793, infra, §1137.) A security guard hired by the business should be similarly liable. "By contracting with the business to provide security services, the security guard creates a special relationship between himself and the business' customers. This relationship, in and of itself, is sufficient to impose on the guard the obligation to act affirmatively to protect such customers while they are on the business premises." (162 C.A.3d 200.)

(b) The evidence on the issue whether P and M failed to act in a reasonable and appropriate manner was sufficient to go to the jury. "Where an individual is being physically assaulted, or where another individual is approached by a bat-wielding assailant, it requires no mastery of metaphysical philosophy or economic risk analysis to appreciate the strong possibility of serious injury." 5. School District.

[§ 1054] School District.

In Phyllis P. v. Superior Court (1986) 183 C.A.3d 1193, 228 C.R. 776, plaintiff's 8-year-old daughter Ciera was sexually molested at her school by a 13-year-old male student. The school authorities provided counseling for Ciera and warned the male student that his parents would be notified if he continued to bother Ciera, but plaintiff was not notified of the incidents. In this action against the school district and school authorities for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, the court held that a cause of action was stated. "While Ciera attended school, her care was entrusted to defendants. Defendants stood in loco parentis and owed a duty of care not only to Ciera, but under the circumstances of this case, to Ciera's mother as well. When defendants first learned of the sexual assaults upon Ciera, they took it upon themselves to withhold that information from petitioner, then dealt with the perpetrator of the assaults with what amounted to a slap on the wrist. ... Petitioner's emotional distress was compounded when she learned of the rape, which she felt could have been prevented, and when she thereafter witnessed the physical and emotional deterioration of her child." (183 C.A.3d 1196.)

In Rodriguez v. Inglewood Unified School Dist. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 707, 230 C.R. 823, the court, finding a special relationship between a school district and a student, relied on a series of recent statutory pronouncements:

(a) The Compulsory Education Law, making school attendance compulsory. (186 C.A.3d 714.)

(b) Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(c), part of Proposition 8, giving students and staff of public primary schools "the inalienable right to attend campuses which are safe, secure and peaceful." (186 C.A.3d 714.)

(c) P.C. 627, stating the legislative intent to implement Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(c) by restricting access of unauthorized persons to school campuses. (186 C.A.3d 714.)

(d) The Interagency School Safety Demonstration Act (Educ.C. 32260 et seq.), reiterating the legislative recognition of the right to safe schools. (186 C.A.3d 715.)

The opinion states the effect of these statutes and prior case law as follows: "[A] special relationship is formed between a school district and its students so as to impose an affirmative duty on the district to take all reasonable steps to protect its students." (186 C.A.3d 715; on holding that no statutory liability was shown, see supra, §§267, 268.) (See Virginia G. v. ABC Unified School Dist. (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1848, 1853, 19 C.R.2d 671 [following Rodriguez]; 49 U.C.L.A. L. 6. Suicide Prevention.

aa. Care Facility for Elderly.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1055

[§ 1055] Care Facility for Elderly.

In Klein v. Bia Hotel Corp. (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1133, 49 C.R.2d 60, a duty to prevent foreseeable suicide was recognized on the part of a residential care facility for the elderly. In this wrongful death action brought by the survivors of a facility resident who died in a fall from the roof, plaintiffs alleged negligence per se premised on defendant's violation of state regulations. Defendant asserted that the decedent had committed suicide, that she had a constitutionally protected right to do so, and that defendant had no duty to prevent her from doing so. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) This defense would have more meaning if defendant owned, for example, a parking facility, a mall, an athletic stadium, or an office building, and the decedent had taken her life there. However, she took her life at a facility where defendant was required by law to monitor her health and well-being, to inform certain persons of changes in her condition, and to determine whether the facility would be able to continue to care for her because of those changes. The obligations imposed on defendant were obviously designed to prevent decedent's mental and physical problems from going unnoticed and untreated, so that harm to her could be avoided. When one puts oneself in the care of another to that extent, one is impliedly saying that she desires the care facility to prevent harm from coming to her, even self-inflicted harm of the type that occurred in this case. Thus, while decedent may have otherwise had a per se right to end her life, a question not relevant here, under the circumstances of this case, her act of placing her mental health in the observatory care of defendant indicated that she wanted to have that right impacted. (41 C.A.4th 1140.)

(b) Defendant was not a guarantor of decedent's health and well-being; it had no absolute duty to prevent her suicide. However, defendant had duties under regulations that, if followed, might have prevented her death. Decedent was a member of the class of persons designed to be protected by the regulations. Clearly, the regulations were designed to protect residents of residential care facilities for the elderly from, among other things, harm such as decedent experienced. Clearly plaintiff's loss resulted from "an occurrence of the nature which" the regulations were designed to prevent under Ev.C. 669 (supra, §§873, 874). By taking decedent as a resident at its care facility, defendant agreed, for her benefit, to abide by the regulations. (41 C.A.4th 1141.)

(c) Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 C.3d 278, 253 C.R. 97, 763 P.2d 948, supra, §1043, imposed a duty to prevent a foreseeable suicide only when a special relationship existed between the suicidal individual and the defendant or its agents. (41 C.A.4th 1141.) Defendant here did, in fact, assume a special relationship with decedent when it agreed to have her as a resident in its facility and thereby expressly, or at least impliedly, agreed to execute the duties imposed on it to monitor her and report changes and conditions in her physical and mental health. Obviously, besides simply monitoring the decedent and reporting changes and conditions, defendant would also have the duty to exercise reasonable care to prevent her from harming herself if it had knowledge or notice of facts from which it might reasonably conclude that harm was likely unless protective measures were taken. (41 C.A.4th 1142.)

(d) Thus, triable issues of fact, precluding summary judgment, remain to be determined. For example: Did defendant live up to its obligations as defined in the regulations? Did defendant have knowledge or notice of facts from which it could reasonably conclude it needed to take protective measures on decedent's behalf? Did defendant exercise reasonable care to prevent decedent from harming herself? Was any dereliction of duty by defendant a substantial factor in causing the death? Those questions can be answered on remand. (41 C.A.4th 1142.)

[§ 1056] Mental Health Practitioner.

In Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 C.A.4th 491, 71 C.R.2d 552, the court recognized an affirmative duty in a psychiatrist to prevent a patient's suicide, even though he was only an outpatient. A depressed individual being treated as an outpatient at a clinic committed suicide. His wife filed a wrongful death action against the clinic and the treating psychiatrist. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants on the ground that a psychiatrist has no duty to prevent the suicide of an outpatient. Held, reversed; the decedent's status as an outpatient did not decide the issue of duty as a matter of law.

(a) Under traditional tort law principles, a person is not ordinarily liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another person from harm. An affirmative duty to protect may arise, however, where a special relationship exists. A special relationship typically occurs where the plaintiff is particularly vulnerable and dependent on the defendant who, correspondingly, has some control over the plaintiff's welfare. The relationship between a therapist and a patient satisfies this requirement. The parameters of a therapist's duty of care and the adequacy of the diagnosis and treatment of the particular patient under particular circumstances will necessarily vary with the facts, measured against professional standards of reasonableness. These determinations require expert testimony. (61 C.A.4th 498.)

(b) Psychiatrists owe an affirmative duty of care, consistent with professional standards, to provide appropriate treatment for a potentially suicidal patient. This duty exists whether the patient is hospitalized or not. There is no reasonable basis for such a distinction; doctors must use reasonable care with all of their patients in diagnosing suicidal intent and implementing treatment plans. If those who are caring for and treating mentally disturbed patients know of facts from which they could reasonably conclude that the patients would be likely to inflict harm on themselves in the absence of preventative measures, then those caretakers must use reasonable care under the circumstances to prevent this harm from occurring. Whether the decedent's psychiatrist acted within the duty of care under the circumstances involves factual determinations that must be resolved by the opinions and specialized knowledge of experts in the field. (61 C.A.4th 501.) (For case treating outpatient differently than hospitalized patient, see Bellah v. Greenson (1978) 81

7. Party Endangering Unidentified Victim.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1057

[§ 1057] Party Endangering Unidentified Victim.

In Myers v. Quesenberry (1983) 144 C.A.3d 888, 193 C.R. 733, defendant doctors were treating A for diabetes and pregnancy. They advised an abortion, and directed A to drive immediately to a hospital. A, emotionally upset, had a diabetic attack while driving, and struck plaintiff as he was standing by the side of the road. Plaintiff brought this action on the theory that defendant doctors were negligent in failing to warn their patient of the foreseeable and dangerous consequences of driving in an irrational and uncontrolled diabetic condition, and that this negligence was a proximate cause of injuries to him. The trial judge entered judgment of dismissal for defendants on demurrer. Held, reversed.

(a) General rule on liability for nonfeasance. The law imposes this liability where the defendant bears some special relationship to the dangerous person or to the potential victim. And a dictum in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §1050, is directly on point: A doctor must warn a patient if the patient's condition or medication renders such conduct as driving a car dangerous to others. (144 C.A.3d 892.)

(b) Foreseeability. The fact that plaintiff was not a readily identifiable victim of A's driving does not preclude liability: The danger to plaintiff and others along the way to and from the hospital was foreseeable. And, though the doctors could not have effectively warned plaintiff, they could have warned A, and she would presumably have followed their advice in this as in other professional recommendations. (144 C.A.3d 892, 893.)

(c) No policy objections to imposition of negligence liability. Concerns over governmental immunity and the impairment of public functions are not relevant here, and there are no significant problems in requiring physicians to warn patients not to engage in foreseeably dangerous conduct. They are already obligated to do this for the protection of the patient. "Thus, even though it may appear that the scope of liability has been expanded to include injuries to foreseeable victims other than the patient, the standard of medical care to the patient remains the same." (144 C.A.3d 894.)

(d) Reasonable steps doctors should take. "When a physician furnishes medicine causing drowsiness, he should warn his patient not to drive or engage in other activities which are likely to cause injury. ... Similarly, if a physician knows or should know a patient's condition will impair her mental faculties and motor coordination, a comparable warning is appropriate." (144 C.A.3d 894.) (See Reisner v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1195, 1198, 37 C.R.2d 518 [following Tarasoff and Myers; defendant physicians, who knew patient to be HIV-positive for 5 years but did not tell her, could be sued by plaintiff, who got AIDS from patient, even though plaintiff was unknown to them; defendants had duty to warn patient that she was HIV-positive and of proper precautions to take]; cf. *Thompson v. Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

c. Illustrations: Relationships Giving Rise to Duty.

8. Person Inviting Child into Home.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1058

[§ 1058] Person Inviting Child into Home.

In Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 C.A.3d 206, 169 C.R. 282, plaintiffs, three minor girls, were sexually assaulted by defendant husband while defendant wife was at work. The complaint alleged that defendant wife knew of her husband's record as a child molester, and knew that the children were invited to swim in their pool while she was at work, but did not warn the children or their parents or notify the police. Held, a cause of action was stated against the wife. The trend has been to expand the list of special relationships; and defendant wife, in inviting the children to her home and assuring their parents that they would be safe, assumed such a special relationship. (112 C.A.3d 211.)

Chaney v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 152, 46 C.R.2d 73, agreed with the holding in Pamela L. that a special relationship arises from inviting children into the home but found insufficient evidence of negligence. Plaintiff alleged (a) that a close personal friend of her family sexually assaulted her while she was in his home over an 8-year period beginning when she was 10 years of age, (b) that the assailant's wife caused plaintiff to suffer damages by negligently supervising her while she was in their home, and (c) that her assailant paid "excessive attention" to her and was "excessive" in his gift-giving. The wife's alleged negligence consisted of failing to recognize these "signs" as indicative of the possibility that her husband was sexually molesting plaintiff, causing her to fail to investigate the situation. As a result, the wife "unintentionally provided unchecked access" to plaintiff. Held, no cause of action was stated against the wife.

(a) Where a complaint alleges injuries resulting from the criminal acts of third persons, the common law, reluctant to impose liability for nonfeasance, generally does not impose a duty on a defendant to control the conduct of another or to warn of that conduct unless the defendant stands in some special relationship either to the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, or to the foreseeable victim. Pamela L. recognized that where a wife invites a child into her home she assumes such a special relationship based on the child's dependence on her. (39 C.A.4th 157.)

(b) However, the wife's duty of reasonable care to the injured child depends on whether the husband's behavior was reasonably foreseeable. Without knowledge of her husband's deviant propensities, a wife will not be able to foresee that he poses a danger and thus will not have a duty to take measures to prevent the assault. Although a wife's knowledge may be proven by circumstantial evidence, that inference must reflect the wife's actual knowledge and not merely constructive knowledge or notice. (39 C.A.4th 157.) The facts alleged by plaintiff, standing alone, were insufficient to show that the wife had knowledge of her husband's deviant propensities such that it would cause her to take measures to prevent the sexual abuse alleged. (39 C.A.4th 158.)

In Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1068, 107 C.R.2d 801, defendants' son, with their permission, invited 13-year-old R and 16-year-old J to spend the afternoon at defendants' house. R was dropped off by her mother, who was told by defendants that, because they would be gardening, the teenagers would be supervised. As promised, defendants checked on the minors several times, before leaving for about an hour to buy food. During this time, J sexually assaulted R. R and her mother then sued defendants for negligent supervision, and the trial judge, concluding that defendants owed a duty of care to R, denied their summary judgment motion. Held, mandamus issued directing summary judgment for defendants.

(a) Types of misconduct. Nonfeasance exists when the defendant, by failing to act as a Good Samaritan, does not give aid to the plaintiff through beneficial intervention. In this situation, liability is largely limited to circumstances in which some special relationship can be established. However, if the act complained of is one of misfeasance, i.e., the improper performance of an act that is otherwise proper, the question does not depend on the existence of a special relationship, but is governed by the standards of ordinary care. (89 C.A.4th 1079.)

(1) By inviting R into their home, defendants assumed a special relationship towards her, which carried with it a general duty to use due care. (89 C.A.4th 1080.) However, the primary issue is whether the scope of that duty includes an adult's duty to prevent one minor invitee from being sexually assaulted by another minor invitee, and no decisional authority addresses this issue. "We believe, however, that sound public policy requires that where one invitee minor sexually assaults another in the defendant's home, the question of whether the defendant owed a duty of reasonable care to the injured minor depends on whether the assailant minor's conduct was reasonably foreseeable, but that conduct will be deemed to have been reasonably foreseeable only if the defendant had actual knowledge of the assaultive propensities of the teenage assailant." (89 C.A.4th 1081.)

(2) Under Chaney, supra, actual knowledge can be proved by circumstantial evidence, but this knowledge will not be inferred unless the evidence establishes that the defendant must have known, not should have known, of the assailant's violent tendencies. In other words, constructive knowledge is inadequate. The Chaney duty rule is adopted here. (89 C.A.4th 1082.)

(3) In addition to incorrectly relying on defendants' constructive knowledge, plaintiffs presented no evidence that defendants had actual knowledge that J had engaged in numerous acts of misconduct at school, including sexual harassment of female students. Plaintiffs claimed that because one defendant had experience as a mother, adoptive parent, and foster parent of 23 teenage children, she must have known that R and J would be likely to have sexual relations if they were left unsupervised. However, there is no authority requiring adults to assume that a male teenager will sexually assault a female teenager simply because the adults are away from the house for an hour. It is not enough to plead that this occurrence is conceivable. (89 C.A.4th 1086.)

(4) Although, as a matter of law, plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to show that defendants owed a duty to R to protect her from sexual assault by J, plaintiffs further contended that defendants' assumption of such a duty was shown by R's mother's statement that she would not leave her child anywhere unsupervised and by defendants' statement that they would be gardening in the backyard. At most, this evidence only established that defendants, at the moment in question, had no other plans than backyard gardening. That it did not constitute a promise to supervise R every moment of her visit is shown by the additional evidence that R's mother had consented to allowing the teenagers to walk to the local drugstore without adult supervision. (89 C.A.4th 1089.)

(1) By alleging that defendants represented to plaintiffs that their home was safe and by further alleging that defendants knew that J was engaging in abnormal sexual behavior, plaintiffs pleaded the theory of defendants' misfeasance. These allegations indicate that plaintiffs were claiming that defendants did not merely fail to prevent J from harming R, but that by their own acts they increased the risks that this harm would occur. (89 C.A.4th 1090.)

(2) Hence, the question of duty is governed by the standards of ordinary care as measured by the factors specified in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. The most crucial factor is that of foreseeability, and, as discussed above, plaintiffs presented no evidence to support a reasonable inference that defendants were aware of any facts to put a reasonable person on notice that J posed a threat of sexual assault to R. Imposition of a duty to protect a teenage invitee from an unforeseeable assault by another teenager would place parents in the untenable position of either excluding teenagers from their home or ensuring that at least one parent was physically present in close proximity to the teens at all times. In addition, it would place all teens under a cloud of suspicion and force them to congregate in unsupervised locations. (89 C.A.4th 1092.)

See Margaret W. v. Kelley R. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 141, 152, 42 C.R.3d 519 [mother who hosted teenage sleepover was not responsible for alleged sexual assault of 15-year-old girl who voluntarily left sleepover in drunken state with boys while mother was out, because criminal assault was not foreseeable].

In Padilla v. Rodas (2008) 160 C.A.4th 742, 73 C.R.3d 114, plaintiff and her 2-year-son were invited to defendants' home for an overnight visit. The home had a backyard swimming pool; plaintiff knew that her son did not know how to swim. On the following day, he was playing in the front yard with two children, ages 7 and 9. Plaintiff and one defendant were present. On receiving a call on his cordless phone, defendant moved to an open iron gate that led to the swimming pool area, a location from which he could not observe the children. On being asked by one of the children for a glass of water and after requesting the children to watch her son, plaintiff entered the house for about 5 minutes. When she returned, neither the children nor defendant, who was still at the iron gate, knew where her son was. He was found face down in the pool. Plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death and an action for negligence against defendants, asserting two theories of liability: negligent supervision and premises liability based on an allegedly defective gate. Defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendants had no duty to supervise plaintiff's son.

(1) With respect to the theory of liability based on negligent supervision, plaintiff contended that defendants assumed a joint parental duty to supervise her son while he was on their premises. This is incorrect. Whether defendants owed a duty of care under these circumstances is a question of law to be decided on the basis of the factors enumerated in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, text, §833. (160 C.A.4th 747.)

(2) The following criteria in Rowland militate against the imposition of a duty of supervision on defendants: (a) It was not reasonably foreseeable that plaintiff would leave her son outside unattended, or under the supervision of other young children, while she went inside the house. (b) Assuming for the purpose of argument that the defendant at the house had accepted the joint responsibility of supervising the son at the time of the accident, he abandoned that undertaking when he left the front yard to talk on the telephone, leaving plaintiff watching her son. (c) Plaintiff knew that defendant had abandoned any supervisory responsibility before she went into the house, because she saw him walk to the side of the house to talk on the telephone, was aware that he was not watching the children, and asked the other children to make sure that her son did not run into the street. (d) There was no indication that defendant knew that plaintiff had gone into the house and was no longer supervising her son. (e) Under these circumstances, moral blame could not attach to either defendant. (160 C.A.4th 747.)

(3) Imposing a duty under the circumstances of this case would unreasonably burden social and family relationships by requiring homeowners to provide babysitting services for their guests' young children when the children's parents are also on the premises. Imposition of such a duty on homeowners would make them insurers of their guests' children's safety even when the parents are also present, a burden that is beyond all reasonable expectations of both homeowners and their guests. (160 C.A.4th 748.)

(b) Plaintiff cannot establish causation element for premises liability theory. Where there is evidence that the harm could have occurred even in the absence of the defendant's negligence, proof of causation cannot be based on mere speculation, conjecture, and inferences drawn from other inferences to reach a conclusion unsupported by any real evidence. Here, plaintiff was unable to show that it was more probable than not that a self-latching gate would have prevented the drowning. The probabilities were evenly balanced whether the son gained entrance to the pool through the iron gate or through one of the other entrances to the pool. Accordingly, plaintiff could not establish that defendants' failure to provide a self-latching gate was a substantial factor in causing the drowning. (160 C.A.4th 752.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

1. Necessity of Relationship.

c. Illustrations: Relationships Giving Rise to Duty.

9. Other Relationships.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1059

[§ 1059] Other Relationships.

(1) Mortuary. In Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 C.A.3d 533, 185 C.R. 396, plaintiff entrusted the remains of his deceased wife to defendant mortuary where, due to its failure to lock a door, the body was sexually assaulted by an intruder. In plaintiff's action for negligent interference with his right to dispose of the remains, defendant contended that it owed plaintiff no duty of care. Held, a duty existed as a matter of law. "Once a mortuary ... undertakes to accept the care, custody and control of the remains, a duty of care must be found running to the members of decedent's bereaved family." (135 C.A.3d 538.) Whether this duty was breached by defendant's failure to lock the door is a question of fact for the jury. (135 C.A.3d 538.) (See 28 Proof of Facts 3d 319 [cemetery's liability in interring body].)

(2) Restaurant. Restaurants have a legal duty to come to the assistance of customers who become ill or need medical attention. (Breaux v. Gino's (1984) 153 C.A.3d 379, 382, 200 C.R. 260.) But in Breaux, the court considered the new question of what physical acts they and their personnel are required to perform. Defendant restaurant owner had posted the notice required by former Health & Saf.C. 28689 (now Health & Saf.C. 114180) of state-approved first aid instructions for removal of food stuck in a person's throat; and when decedent choked, an assistant manager called an ambulance. But no one attempted to give first aid to decedent, who was alive when the ambulance arrived. In this action for wrongful death, summary judgment was entered for defendant. Held, affirmed. The statute provides that "Nothing in this section shall impose any obligation on any person to remove food which has become stuck in another person's throat." This statute "establishes as a matter of law that a restaurant meets its legal duty to a patron in distress when it summons medical assistance within a reasonable time." (153 C.A.3d 382.) (See 2 A.L.R.5th 966 [duty to assist patron choking on food].)

(3) County and Dependent Child. In Ronald S. v. San Diego (1993) 16 C.A.4th 887, 20 C.R.2d 418, R, a dependent child of defendant county, was placed with M and K, who eventually sought to adopt him. Defendant approved the adoption, and R was later sexually assaulted by M. Held, there was a special relationship between R and defendant that imposed upon defendant a duty to exercise due care in selecting adoptive parents.

(a) As a dependent child, R's disposition was totally in defendant's control. If defendant failed adequately to investigate the qualifications of proposed foster or adoptive parents, it was foreseeable that harm would come to R, who was wholly dependent upon the good offices of defendant to supervise his placement. (16 C.A.4th 895, citing Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §1050, Carpenter v. Los Angeles (1991) 230 C.A.3d 923, 281 C.R. 500, and Lopez v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1985) 40 C.3d 780, 221 C.R. 840, 710 P.2d 907, supra, §930.)

(b) The special relationship between R and defendant existed only during the period prior to adoption when he was solely dependent upon defendant. It did not extend to the period after adoption when R became dependent upon the adoptive parents. After the adoption, defendant's relationship to R was the same as its relationship to any child and was governed by the rules requiring special circumstances to exist in order to establish the "special relationship" needed to create a duty of care. (16 C.A.4th 895, footnote 4.)

(4) Miscellaneous Relationships. (See Doe 1 v. Murrieta (2002) 102 C.A.4th 899, 913, 126 C.R.2d 213 [under Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 C.A.4th 377 97 C.R.2d 12, infra, §1190, city had duty to girls participating in youth explorer program to prevent sexual molestation by adviser, where supervisor was aware of girls' infatuation with adviser]; 2 A.L.R.5th 369 [franchisor's liability for injuries caused by assault or other criminal activity on or near franchise premises]; 2 A.L.R.5th 396 [liability of travel publication or agent for personal injury or death of traveler]; 46 A.L.R.5th 821 [liability of nursing home for violating statutory duty to notify third party concerning patient's medical condition].)

(2) Restaurant. Health & Saf.C. 114180 was repealed in 2006.

a. Voluntary or Gratuitous Undertaking.

1. Liability for Negligent Performance.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1060

[§ 1060] Liability for Negligent Performance.

An exception to the rule that there is no affirmative duty in the absence of a special relation (supra, §1038) is found in the Good Samaritan rule. A person not required to perform services for another may sometimes do so in a voluntary or gratuitous undertaking, and in that case, is under a duty to exercise due care in performance. (See Perry v. D.J. & T. Sullivan (1933) 219 C. 384, 389, 26 P.2d 485; Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 C.2d 232, 238, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68, infra, §1062; *Coffee v. A typical example is the case of the landlord who, in the absence of a covenant or other obligation to repair, nevertheless voluntarily makes repairs and is negligent. (See Janofsky v. Garland (1941) 42 C.A.2d 655, 657, 109 P.2d 750; McDaniel v. Sunset Manor Co. (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1, 10, 269 C.R. 196 [landlord that voluntarily erected fence between its property and nearby creek had duty to maintain reasonably sturdy or defect-free fence]; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §641.) Likewise, one who voluntarily takes charge of a helpless person must exercise care for his or her safety. (Rest.2d, Torts §324; see Griffin v. Colusa (1941) 44 C.A.2d 915, 923, 113 P.2d 270 [nurses neglected delirious patient]; Hitson v. Dwyer (1943) 61 C.A.2d 803, 806, 143 P.2d 952; 13 Proof of Facts 2d 709 [failure to use reasonable care in aiding injured person in peril].) (On possible liability of private hospital maintaining emergency ward for refusal to admit patient, see 14 Stanf. L. Rev. 910.)

In Merrill v. Buck (1962) 58 C.2d 552, 25 C.R. 456, 375 P.2d 304, defendant realtor and defendant saleswoman showed plaintiff, a prospective tenant, a dwelling house owned by defendant owner. Defendants did not advise plaintiff of a dangerous flight of stairs leading to the basement, and plaintiff was injured in a fall. Defendant owner was held liable as a landlord who failed to warn of a known hazard. (See 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §642.) The other defendants had no landowners' duties, but were also held liable on the theory that they were engaged in a business transaction to earn a commission by inducing plaintiff to become a tenant, and thereby assumed the duty to warn plaintiff of any latent hazard known to them that might foreseeably result in injury. (58 C.2d 562, 563.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

a. Voluntary or Gratuitous Undertaking.

2. Conditions for Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1061

[§ 1061] Conditions for Liability.

"One who undertakes, gratuitously or for consideration, to render services to another which he should recognize as necessary for the protection of a third person or his things, is subject to liability to the third person for physical harm resulting from his failure to exercise reasonable care to protect his undertaking, if (a) his failure to exercise reasonable care increases the risk of such harm, or (b) he has undertaken to perform a duty owed by the other to the third person, or (c) the harm is suffered because of reliance of the other or the third person upon the undertaking." (Rest.2d, Torts §324A.)

In Artiglio v. Corning (1998) 18 C.4th 604, 76 C.R.2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313, silicone breast implant recipients sued the implant manufacturer's parent corporation, alleging that defendant negligently discharged an undertaking to provide silicone toxicology research to the manufacturer, making it directly liable for injuries suffered by plaintiffs under the "negligent undertaking" theory of Rest.2d, Torts §324A. Defendant conducted and reported the research to the manufacturer many years before plaintiffs' implantation procedures. Held, the trial court properly granted summary judgment to defendant; defendant, as a matter of law, owed no duty of care to plaintiffs.

(a) Under the negligent undertaking theory of liability, sometimes referred to as the Good Samaritan rule, one who, having no initial duty to do so, undertakes to come to the aid of another has a duty to exercise due care and is liable if his or her failure to exercise care increases the risk of harm, or if harm is suffered because of the other's reliance. Under Rest.2d, Torts §324A, a negligent undertaking claim of liability to third parties requires evidence that (1) the actor undertook, gratuitously or for consideration, to render services to another; (2) the services rendered were of a kind the actor should have recognized as necessary for the protection of third persons; (3) the actor failed to exercise reasonable care in the performance of its undertaking; (4) the failure to exercise reasonable care resulted in physical harm to the third persons; and (5) either the actor's carelessness increased the risk of physical harm, or the undertaking was to perform a duty owed by the other to the third persons, or the harm was suffered because of the reliance of the other or the third persons on the undertaking. (18 C.4th 613.)

(b) The duty of a Good Samaritan is thus limited. Recovery requires proof of each of the well-known elements of any negligence cause of action, i.e., duty, breach of duty, proximate causation, and damages. In addition, a Good Samaritan who has performed a voluntary act is not required to continue to render aid indefinitely. The foundational requirement of the Good Samaritan rule is that the actor must specifically have undertaken to perform the task that he or she is charged with having performed negligently. Whether the alleged actions, if proven, would constitute an undertaking sufficient to give rise to an actionable duty of care is a legal question for the court. (18 C.4th 614.)

(c) Plaintiffs failed to establish that a duty of care running to them under Rest.2d, Torts §324A arose from defendant's undertaking. That undertaking was not sufficient to create an actionable duty to ensure the safety of all of the manufacturer's silicone products. Moreover, many years elapsed between defendant's toxicology research activities on behalf of the manufacturer and plaintiffs' alleged injuries. When defendant conducted and reported the silicone toxicology research for the manufacturer, any risk of harm to plaintiffs--who years later allegedly received medical treatments traceable to its influence--from negligent performance of that undertaking was unforeseeable. Thus, it could not be reasonably concluded that defendant should have recognized that those services were necessary for the protection of plaintiffs; therefore, no duty of care could be imposed. (18 C.4th 615.)

In Paz v. California (2000) 22 C.4th 550, 93 C.R.2d 703, 994 P.2d 975, plaintiff, who was injured in a traffic accident at an intersection controlled by a single stop sign, asserted that the intersection was dangerous because of obstructed sight lines. Defendants, a developer and two contractors, were to design and install traffic signals at the intersection as a condition of approval of a new condominium development, but failed to obtain the permits necessary to complete the installation until after plaintiff's accident. Plaintiff alleged that they negligently delayed providing the traffic lights that would have negated the intersection's dangerous condition before his accident. Held, summary judgment for defendants was proper.

(a) As stated in Artiglio, the Good Samaritan rule of Rest.2d, Torts §324A is a settled principle firmly rooted in the common law of negligence. Section 324A prescribes the conditions under which a person who undertakes to render services for another may be liable to third persons for physical harm resulting from a failure to act with reasonable care. Liability may exist if (1) the failure to exercise reasonable care increased the risk of harm, (2) the undertaking was to perform a duty the other person owed to the third persons, or (3) the harm was suffered because the other person or the third persons relied on the undertaking. (22 C.4th 553.)

(b) In this case, none of these conditions for liability was present, and plaintiff thus failed to state a cause of action for negligent undertaking. First, the evidence failed to support an inference that defendants' conduct increased the risk of physical harm to plaintiff beyond that which existed at the intersection. Plaintiff alleged that the intersection was dangerous because of restricted sight lines. However, nothing suggests that defendants did anything that increased the risk to motorists that existed because of those sight lines. Instead, defendants simply did not succeed in completing a project that might have reduced the preexisting hazard at the intersection. Second, in agreeing to install the traffic signal, defendants did not undertake to perform a duty that the city owed to plaintiff; cities generally have no affirmative duty to install traffic control signals. Third, there was no evidence that plaintiff was harmed because either he or the city relied on defendants' timely installation of traffic control signals. (22 C.4th 561.)

Williams v. Saga Enterprises (1990) 225 C.A.3d 142, 274 C.R. 901 reached the opposite result. C, driving a car while intoxicated, struck a car in which plaintiff was riding, and plaintiff suffered serious injuries. Plaintiff filed this action against C, and joined defendant S, the owner of a restaurant at which C had been drinking. The restaurant employees had received C's car keys before serving him drinks, and had returned the keys to him after he had become intoxicated. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. Held, reversed.

(a) Under B. & P.C. 25602 (infra, §1070), furnishing alcoholic beverages to a person is not the proximate cause of injuries resulting from his intoxication; hence "the furnishing of an intoxicated driver's keys to him cannot logically be the cause of such injuries either." (225 C.A.3d 148.)

(b) This was not a case of liability of an owner for negligent entrustment of a vehicle to an incompetent driver (see infra, §1222); the vehicle driven by C belonged to him, not to defendant or his employees. (225 C.A.3d 153.) But there was evidence to present a triable issue of liability under Rest.2d, Torts §324A, of a person who voluntarily undertakes to render necessary services to another and fails to exercise reasonable care to protect his or her undertaking. (225 C.A.3d 151.)

(c) The evidence to make §324A applicable was the testimony of N, defendant's manager for the restaurant on the night of the accident, given at the criminal prosecution of C. N testified that C was a customer of the restaurant who constantly drank to excess; that C would turn his keys over to N every time he came to the restaurant; that on the night of the accident, C, in N's presence, gave the keys to the bartender; and that he (N) would not have returned the keys to C if the latter had been intoxicated. "I felt it was my duty and responsibility as a friend, not only as the manager of the establishment, to make sure that he was able to drive before I was able to give him his keys." (225 C.A.3d 150.) This testimony would support the inference that C had an arrangement or agreement on the night of the accident that N would determine whether C was able to safely drive the car, and would not return the keys if C was intoxicated. (225 C.A.3d 150, 153.) (See 40 Santa Clara L. Rev. No. 4 [symposium on Good Samaritan laws]; 40 Santa Clara L. Rev. 957 [debate over duty to rescue]; 40 Santa Clara L. A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

a. Voluntary or Gratuitous Undertaking.

3. Illustration: Street Vendor's Duty to Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1062

[§ 1062] Illustration: Street Vendor's Duty to Child.

A street vendor who sells ice cream, pastry, or similar products to children on the street owes a high duty of care for their safety. The principles underlying this liability were discussed at length in Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 C.2d 232, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68. Defendant's truck, with an assortment of pastries, passed plaintiff 4-year-old boy. Plaintiff dashed over to the truck and asked the driver to wait while he went home and got a dime for a doughnut. The driver told him to meet him on his route up W Street. Plaintiff got his money, came to the place, and ran out from behind a parked car into the path of another car. Held, judgment of nonsuit reversed.

(a) When the driver arranged to meet the boy up the street, he assumed a duty of care toward him; i.e., he undertook to direct plaintiff's activities, and could be found negligent in giving directions that exposed the child to an obvious danger without adequate warning or protection. (67 C.2d 242.)

(b) The driver also was in the position of an invitor to a business invitee, for he solicited the child's business and arranged to sell him his product at an appointed location. (67 C.2d 242.) Normally, the duty to an invitee concerns conditions or activities on private property, not a public street; but in this case defendant's business consisted of selling bakery goods from a truck. "In coming to the truck for the convenience of defendants, patrons used the public streets and sidewalks as means of access for the special benefit of defendants' business. Defendants may therefore be held liable for an injury occurring to their customer in the immediate vicinity of the truck if the circumstances causing the injury are within the range of defendants' reasonable supervision and control." (67 C.2d 243, footnote 10.)

(c) From the point of view of either negligence (breach of duty) or proximate cause, the jury could find that the driver should have anticipated the result; i.e., he was aware of the normal characteristics of a 4-year-old, had actual knowledge of plaintiff's heedlessness when he first came to the truck, and could have foreseen that the child would carelessly run into the street and that a motorist driving in gathering twilight would fail to see him coming from behind a parked car in the middle of the block. (67 C.2d 244.) (See 8 Proof of Facts 3d 477 [liability of mobile vendor for injuring child]; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1769; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 209; 84 A.L.R.3d 826 [liability of vendor for attracting into street child injured by another's motor vehicle].)

The street vendor theories of invitation and control do not apply to a store in a shopping center. In Nevarez v. Thriftmart (1970) 7 C.A.3d 799, 87 C.R. 50, defendant's chain grocery was in a building set back about 75-85 feet from the street, with parking space in the intervening area. For its grand opening defendant provided such carnival attractions as a Ferris wheel and merry-go-round and free ice cream and candy. Plaintiff 3-year-old child, who lived across the street, left his home and ran into the street where he was struck and injured by a passing motorist. Held, defendant was not liable. It did not invite children to do business in a particular place or over a predictable route, and it did not bring wares into the street. Because small children are notoriously curious and attracted to anything, there would be no limits on a duty of care such as that sought to be imposed. "Retail establishments would be cast in the role of a modern-day Pied Piper and, as such, obligated to act as parent or babysitter for every tot in the neighborhood who might decide to dash across a public street in order to bask in the store's allure. The attractions offered by appellant and the generalized invitation to enjoy them, thus do not analogize to the conduct of a street vendor." (7 C.A.3d 806.)

[§ 1063] Distinction: Casual Advice.

In Bland v. Reed (1968) 261 C.A.2d 445, 67 C.R. 859, the complaint alleged that plaintiff, a union steelworker, was injured in the course of his employment and received an award from the Industrial Accident Commission; that defendant R was defendant Union's representative to advise members on compensation claims; and that R negligently and fraudulently gave advice that caused plaintiff to omit filing a suit against a third-party tortfeasor until the statute of limitations had run. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

Plaintiff's theory was that R undertook to protect plaintiff's interest by advising him concerning his injury, and either negligently or intentionally represented to him that filing a third-party suit would hurt his compensation claim. A dissenting justice agreed. (261 C.A.2d 455.) But the majority found this theory unconvincing. (a) Plaintiff knew that R was not a lawyer, and that the union had not authorized him to give legal advice, but only to file compensation claims for union members. (b) There was no showing that R knew anything about the particulars of the accident or the third party's alleged negligence. (c) Because the Legislature has authorized nonlawyer practice before the Commission, with knowledge of its dangers, it is improper to hold a nonlawyer to a lawyer's degree of care, particularly when the negligence charged does not relate to a claim before the Commission. (d) The complaint did not allege any kind of promise or undertaking by R other than the filing of a claim before the Commission. (261 C.A.2d 452.)

[§ 1064] Distinction: Medical Proctor.

In Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 C.A.3d 208, 219 C.R. 845, defendant, a member of the joint credentials committee of two hospitals, functioned as a proctor in observing a surgical operation performed by Dr. L and reporting on his competence as a candidate for membership on a hospital medical staff. Defendant had no contact with the patient, did not "scrub in" but remained outside "the sterile field," and took no part in the operation. Plaintiff, alleging injuries resulting from the alleged negligence of Dr. L, sued defendant on the theory that defendant had a duty to intervene in the operation to ensure that the surgical treatment met the proper standard of care. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Proctoring is an established procedure at hospitals throughout California, and the role of the proctor is not to supervise but to observe and report. Defendant never entered into any contractual relation with the patient or the proctored surgeon, was not requested to act as a consultant and did not volunteer to do so, and was not authorized to supervise or control the actions of the surgeon. Thus, there was no special relationship to give rise to a duty. (174 C.A.3d 216, 217.)

(b) Defendant's proctoring did not constitute a voluntary undertaking to come to plaintiff's aid. Indeed, he might have been liable to plaintiff had he intervened, for he was not plaintiff's doctor, had never examined her, and was not prepared to perform surgery; hence, participation in the operation without consent of the plaintiff could constitute a battery. (174 C.A.3d 218, citing the text; see supra, §394.)

(c) Important considerations of public policy weigh heavily against imposition of a duty of care on medical proctors. There is a strong public interest in supporting medical peer review programs, and the Legislature has made this clear in enacting various statutes providing protection for activities aimed at maintaining professional standards on medical staffs. (174 C.A.3d 220, citing C.C. 43.7(b), supra, §155, and Ev.C. 1157, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §9 et seq.) (See Armato v. Baden (1999) 71 C.A.4th 885, 894, 84 C.R.2d 294 [under Clarke, physicians who were retained as independent contractors by medical group, but did not treat plaintiff and were not consulted regarding her treatment, had no special relationship with plaintiff so as to support liability for failure to supervise physician assistant's treatment of plaintiff].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

a. Voluntary or Gratuitous Undertaking.

6. No Liability for Failure To Perform.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1065

[§ 1065] No Liability for Failure To Perform.

The mere failure to perform a promised gratuitous undertaking is ordinarily not actionable. There is no contract liability in the absence of consideration or promissory estoppel (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §§202, 244), and there is no tort liability where the defendant has not actually commenced performance. (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.6; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 913.)

On the other hand, nonfeasance may give rise to tort liability where a person, in reasonable reliance, suffers harm, as by refraining from securing other necessary assistance. (See Morgan v. Yuba (1964) 230 C.A.2d 938, 944, 41 C.R. 508, supra, §299, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §323(b); 64 Harv. L. Rev. 913.)

The extent of the duty to render future aid arising from the past, voluntary rendering of aid was considered in Baker v. Los Angeles (1986) 188 C.A.3d 902, 233 C.R. 760. In January 1977, plaintiff B had a quarrel with her husband M, who, while intoxicated, threatened her with a gun. She called police, and officer W confiscated the gun. M was later convicted of an assault on a police officer, and was sentenced to 10 days in jail, with 3 years' probation on the condition that he not possess a dangerous weapon. Nevertheless, M picked up his confiscated gun at the police station. After a separation the parties were reconciled, but had another argument in September 1977, at which time plaintiff told the officers that M had the gun, and asked them to take it. The officers suggested that plaintiff leave the apartment, but she decided to stay, and, after the police left, M shot her, inflicting serious injuries. In this action against defendant city, the trial judge decided that a special relationship existed, and that the duty was breached by returning the gun to M. Held, there was no breach of duty.

(a) When he took the gun, officer W entered into a special relationship with plaintiff "for the limited purpose of protecting her from the potential harm that threatened her at the moment." He did not become a guarantor of her future safety, and his duty ended when he left the gun at the police station, in accordance with established police procedures. (188 C.A.3d 907, 908.). He had no duty to check the record for conditions attached to the probation. (188 C.A.3d 908.)

(b) There was no detrimental reliance on an implied promise to render further aid. Officer W made no representations to plaintiff about when and under what circumstances the gun would be returned to M, and she knew that he had the gun but nevertheless remained in the apartment with him. (188 C.A.3d 909.)

Santee v. San Diego (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1006, 259 C.R. 757, involved an injury to a bicyclist that was allegedly the result of a nonfunctioning streetlight at a city intersection. The city's cross-complaint against the county was based on the theory that voluntary acts by county deputy sheriffs in reporting light outages in the past had established a special relationship between the parties that brought the county within the Good Samaritan rule, and imposed on it a duty to continue rendering this assistance into the indefinite future. Held, no duty existed.

(a) No continuing duty from past acts.

(1) All of the cases that have imposed a "special relationship" duty on an officer to aid an imperiled citizen have involved a single, discrete transaction, where the officer's conduct either increased the risk to which the citizen was exposed during that episode, or induced the citizen to forego taking protective measures in reliance on the officer's assistance. (211 C.A.3d 1013, citing Williams v. California (1983) 34 C.3d 18, 192 C.R. 233, 664 P.2d 137, supra, §291, and Mann v. California (1977) 70 C.A.3d 773, 139 C.R. 82, supra, §309.) By imposing liability in these instances, the courts have held that an officer who starts a protective undertaking must finish it. However, it is a far different matter to require an officer to commence a protective undertaking merely because he previously provided similar aid, and the courts have declined to impose this duty on law enforcement officers. (211 C.A.3d 1014, citing Baker v. Los Angeles.)

(2) The county's failure to report the light outage did not increase the risk of harm; it merely failed to decrease the risk. (211 C.A.3d 1015.) "[N]onfeasance which results in failure to eliminate a preexisting risk is not equivalent to nonfeasance which increases a risk of harm." (211 C.A.3d 1016, citing Von Batsch v. American Dist. Tel. Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1111, 222 C.R. 239, supra, §291.)

(3) The county's reporting of light outages in the past did not entitle the city to detrimentally rely on the county to confer future benefits. "A voluntary, discretionary protective undertaking by an officer on one occasion may, if unreasonably abandoned, leave the victim in a worse position through the victim's detrimental reliance on the conduct of the officer if such conduct induces the victim to refrain from protecting himself on that occasion. In that context, the officer's actions have begun (in Prosser's words) to 'adversely affect' the plaintiff's interests. However, if the same victim is exposed to a similar plight in the future, and no officer ever arrives on the scene to offer assistance, there is nothing which dissuades the victim from protecting himself on that subsequent occasion. While the victim ... might hope for police aid in a time of peril, the mere fact that police (in the exercise of their discretion) had rendered similar aid in the past does not entitle the victim to expect, or detrimentally rely on an officer for, aid on later occasions. In that latter context, the officer has done nothing more than (in Prosser's words) failed to 'confer a benefit.' " (211 C.A.3d 1016.)

(b) Special relationship obligates only party who volunteered. The city argued that the voluntary act of one or two deputies in reporting outages entitled it to expect the same assistance from all deputies. However, there is no authority holding that the voluntary act of one officer allows the victim to conscript all other officers into an army of Good Samaritans. (211 C.A.3d 1017.) "This distinction is sound. The volunteer can reasonably be expected to use due care once he has elected to provide aid to the victim. However, to expand the network of obligated Good Samaritans (who may be unaware of either the nature of the aid rendered or the identity of the beneficiary who received the aid) would result in imposing potential liability on entirely blameless individuals and/or agencies for nonfeasance merely because they are employed by the same agency which employs the Good Samaritan." (211 C.A.3d 1018.)

(c) Public policy precludes extending Good Samaritan rule to future aid. "If future obligations to assist can be imposed based on past acts, the natural consequence will be to discourage volunteers from coming to the aid of imperiled fellow citizens." (211 C.A.3d 1018.) This result would be particularly inappropriate if applied to law enforcement officers. Police departments would order their officers to never provide aid, "since one officer's act of kindness could forever become an obligatory function of all officers, enforceable through tort liability." (211 C.A.3d

In Weissich v. Marin (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1069, 274 C.R. 342, the complaint alleged that in 1955 decedent W, while district attorney of defendant county, prosecuted S for arson. S was convicted and sentenced to 20 years in prison, and at the time he threatened the lives of W and others. In the years following his release on parole, S continued his threats and engaged in continuing criminal behavior including possession of firearms. During this period representatives of the state Department of Justice and the Department of Corrections, together with county law enforcement officials, "undertook, impliedly promised and agreed to coordinate and share information" with W concerning S's continuing threat, but on a number of occasions they failed to warn W of events that indicated that the danger still existed. In 1986 S shot and killed W, and then committed suicide.

Based on these factual allegations, the complaint alleged that defendants voluntarily assumed a duty to warn W of S's continuing criminal behavior; and that as a proximate result of W's dependence on defendants' assurances, he failed to take additional measures to protect himself. The trial court rendered judgment for defendants on demurrer. Held, affirmed.

(a) Generally one has no duty to warn persons endangered by the conduct of another; but the duty may arise when it is voluntarily assumed. (224 C.A.3d 1076, 1077.) The complaint sufficiently alleged a voluntary assumption of some protective duty toward W. (224 C.A.3d 1077.)

(b) The critical issue is the scope and duration of this duty. "[T]he duty of a Good Samaritan is of limited duration; a person who has performed a voluntary duty is not required to render aid indefinitely. ... The relationship established by the voluntary act of a Good Samaritan is also limited; thus the voluntary conduct of one police officer may obligate that officer, but does not impose a duty of care on all other officers in the employing police department." (224 C.A.3d 1077, 1078.)

(c) Unlike Baker and Santee, this case involves allegations that unnamed representatives of defendants impliedly promised future action; "no express promise of open-ended duration is alleged." (224 C.A.3d 1079.) "We do not consider it reasonably foreseeable that a convicted felon who has threatened those involved in his prosecution will wait over 30 years after his conviction, including over 11 years after his release from prison, before attempting to carry out fatal revenge." (224 C.A.3d 1079.)

(d) "[T]he practical obstacles to imposing an open-ended duty on all members of a police agency to the potential victims of a vengeful released felon are obvious and significant. Ordinary personnel changes alone would make the administration of any such extended and prolonged obligation extremely complicated and difficult, if not impossible. The burden on the community of imposing that duty would be substantial, as police agencies might well entirely forego any promises to warn rather than risk potential perpetual liability." (224 C.A.3d 1080.) (For holding against liability for negligent misrepresentation, see supra, §4821, 822.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

1. Common Law Rule of Nonliability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1066

[§ 1066] Common Law Rule of Nonliability.

(1) Common Law and Statutes. At common law, no action would lie against the seller of liquor to an intoxicated customer where the latter injured himself or herself, or a third person. The theory was that the consumption, not the sale, was the proximate cause of the injury. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §332; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Intoxicating Liquors §501; 43 Am.Jur. Trials 527 [liquor provider's liability]; 57 Cal. L. Rev. 1000; 97 A.L.R.3d 528 [sale or gift of liquor or habit-forming drug]; 98 A.L.R.3d 1230 [furnishing liquor].)

A number of states enacted laws ("Dram-Shop Acts") that created a duty and imposed liability for furnishing liquor under certain conditions, e.g., to an already intoxicated person. (See 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 420; 6 A.L.R.2d 798 ["injury in person or property"]; 78 A.L.R.2d 998 [settlement or release as releasing liability under civil damage act]; 4 A.L.R.3d 1332 ["injury to means of support"]; 8 A.L.R.3d 1412 [selling or furnishing liquor otherwise than in operation of regularly established liquor business]; 18 A.L.R.3d 1323 ["owner" of premises on which liquor is sold]; 26 A.L.R.3d 1112 [third person's participating in or encouraging drinking as barring recovery under dram shop act]; 31 A.L.R.3d 438 [right of one liable under dram shop act to contribution or indemnity from intoxicated person]; 64 A.L.R.3d 849 [contributory negligence]; 64 A.L.R.3d 882 [causation]; 64 A.L.R.3d 922 [consumption by third person]; 78 A.L.R.3d 1199 [recovery for mental anguish, embarrassment, loss of affection or companionship, or the like].) Other states rejected the narrow view of causation and held that the sale, rather than the consumption, may be the proximate cause of harm to a third person. (See Rest.2d, Torts §696, 697, 705; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 91; 36 A.L.R.3d 900 [wife's right for loss of consortium].)

(2) California's Adoption of Common Law Rule. Cole v. Rush (1955) 45 C.2d 345, 289 P.2d 450, held that no duty arises in the absence of legislation. Plaintiff widow and minor children sued defendants, owners of a bar, alleging that decedent husband was normally a quiet person but quarrelsome when intoxicated, that this was known to defendants, that plaintiff had repeatedly requested defendants not to sell liquor to him sufficient to cause intoxication, that defendants refused, and that on one occasion decedent, intoxicated, engaged in a fist fight, was struck, fell, hit his head on the pavement, and died. Held, on demurrer, no cause of action was stated.

The court followed the earlier cases of Fleckner v. Dionne (1949) 94 C.A.2d 246, 248, 210 P.2d 530 (sale to an intoxicated person knowing he was going to drive a car; plaintiffs injured by his negligent driving), and Hitson v. Dwyer (1943) 61 C.A.2d 803, 807, 143 P.2d 952 (sale to an intoxicated plaintiff who fell off a bar stool and was injured). The analysis was in terms of causation rather than duty: "[I]t is established both by the common law and by the decisional law in this state (a) that as to a competent person it is the voluntary consumption, not the sale or gift, of intoxicating liquor which is the proximate cause of injury from its use; (b) that the competent person voluntarily consuming intoxicating liquor contributes directly to any injury caused thereby; and (c) that contributory negligence of the decedent bars recovery by his heirs or next of kin in a wrongful death action." (45 C.2d 356.) (See 6 Hastings L. J. 402; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 272.)

(3) Criticisms and Distinctions. Anticipating Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, infra, §1067, the court in Fuller v. Standard Stations (1967) 250 C.A.2d 687, 694, 58 CR. 792, suggested that Fleckner and Cole were based on outmoded reasoning and might be "ripe" for disapproval. (See 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 214; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 253.)

Liability of a bar owner was recognized in two distinguishable situations:

(a) A bar operator, like an innkeeper, restaurateur, or other person whose premises are open to the public, owes a duty to invitees to exercise reasonable care in maintaining order for their safety. (See infra, §1129.) If liquor is knowingly furnished to a person dangerous when drunk, and the latter injures a peaceful guest, an action will lie. (See Cole v. Rush, supra, 45 C.2d 352; Thomas v. Bruza (1957) 151 C.A.2d 150, 153, 311 P.2d 128 [common law liability of person furnishing intoxicating liquor for injury or death of consumer].)

(b) A duty may be voluntarily assumed (see supra, §1060 et seq.). In Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1968) 264 C.A.2d 69, 70 C.R. 136, plaintiff pleaded facts sufficient to overcome the general rule of nonliability. The complaint alleged that defendant was the employer of H, a 19-year-old minor; that H came to an employees' Christmas party given by defendant; that defendant served liquor and solicited drinking by those present; that H became grossly intoxicated, but nevertheless defendant put him in his automobile and directed him to drive home through traffic; and that he struck plaintiffs' car, causing injuries. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendant reversed. The additional facts alleged were: (1) The relationship between H and defendant: the latter assumed responsibility for the conduct of the minor, not only for his protection but for the protection of the general public. This was a voluntary undertaking, carrying with it a duty of care. (264 C.A.2d 72.) (2) The acts of defendant: furnishing liquor to a minor, a crime; aiding and abetting the crime of driving while drunk; placing the intoxicated minor in the car and ordering him to go home through traffic, which "activated the tort." (264 C.A.2d 72.) (See 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 243.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

2. Former Judicial Rule of Liability.

aa. Liability to Third Person.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1067

[§ 1067] Liability to Third Person.

In Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, the causation approach was rejected, and the analysis in terms of duty established the dramshop theory of liability. The complaint alleged the following: S owned and operated a roadhouse selling liquor to the public. At 10 p.m., he began serving drinks to defendant O, and continued to do so after the 2 a.m. closing time, until 5:15 a.m., with knowledge of O's intoxication and O's intention to drive away on a steep and narrow mountain road. O drove and struck plaintiff's vehicle, and plaintiff sustained personal injury and property damage. Held, judgment for S on demurrer reversed.

(a) Causation. The negligent act of the intoxicated driver was foreseeable. "Insofar as proximate cause is concerned, we find no basis for a distinction founded solely on the fact that the consumption of an alcoholic beverage is a voluntary act of the consumer and is a link in the chain of causation from the furnishing of the beverage to the injury resulting from intoxication. Under the above principles of proximate cause, it is clear that the furnishing of an alcoholic beverage to an intoxicated person may be a proximate cause of injuries inflicted by that individual upon a third person. If such furnishing is a proximate cause, it is so because the consumption, resulting intoxication, and injury-producing conduct are foreseeable intervening causes, or at least the injury-producing conduct is one of the hazards which makes such furnishing negligent." (5 C.3d 164.)

(b) Duty. A duty may be imposed by a criminal statute (see supra, §875), and B. & P.C. 25602 is such a statute: It provides that "[e]very person who sells, furnishes, gives, or causes to be sold, furnished, or given away, any alcoholic beverage to any habitual or common drunkard or to any obviously intoxicated person is guilty of a misdemeanor." (5 C.3d 165.) The legislative purpose was to promote the safety of people generally, and plaintiff was a member of the protected class. Hence, if the allegations of the complaint were true, Ev.C. 669 applied and defendant's conduct was negligence per se. (5 C.3d 165.)

(c) Inconsistent Decisions. To the extent inconsistent, Cole v. Rush (1955) 45 C.2d 345, 289 P.2d 450, Fleckner v. Dionne (1949) 94 C.A.2d 246, 248, 210 P.2d 530, and Hitson v. Dwyer (1943) 61 C.A.2d 803, 807, 143 P.2d 952, supra,

Vesely was followed in Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 87, 100 C.R. 752. (See 3 Proof of Facts 3d 697 [liability of social host for negligent driving of intoxicated adult guest]; 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 441 [Vesely]; 5 Pacific L. J. 186 [proposed legislation]; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 46 [review of prior law and recent cases]; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 66 [Brockett]; 62 A.L.R.4th 16 [social host's liability for injuries incurred by third parties as result of intoxicated guest's negligence].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

2. Former Judicial Rule of Liability.

bb. Liability to Intoxicated Person.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1068

[§ 1068] Liability to Intoxicated Person.

Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, supra, §1067, left open the question of liability to the intoxicated person or his or her heirs for the intoxicated person's own injuries or death. In subsequent cases, the Courts of Appeal denied liability. (See Carlisle v. Kanaywer (1972) 24 C.A.3d 587, 591, 101 C.R. 246; Sargent v. Goldberg (1972) 25 C.A.3d 940, 944, 102 C.R. 300; Cooper v. National R. Passenger Corp. (1975) 45 C.A.3d 389, 393, 119 C.R. 541; Venzor v. Santa Barbara Elks Lodge (1976) 56 C.A.3d 209, 215, 216, 128 C.R. 353; Kindt v. Kauffman (1976) 57 C.A.3d 845, 852, 129 C.R. 603; Rose v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (1976) 58 C.A.3d 276, 279, 129 C.R. 736; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 71 [Carlisle]; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 469 [Kindt]; 76 A.L.R.3d 1218 [Cooper].)

In Ewing v. Cloverleaf Bowl (1978) 20 C.3d 389, 143 C.R. 13, 572 P.2d 1155, prior decisions were disapproved, and a broad rule of liability was declared for injuries to the intoxicated person or for his or her wrongful death. Decedent, having just reached his 21st birthday, accepted an invitation from a friend to go to defendant's bowling alley for a drink. The two, accompanied by other guests, arrived in the evening. Decedent's friend told L, the bartender, to give decedent the strongest drink in the house. L then served decedent full shot glasses of 151 proof rum. Decedent, despite warnings from other guests, drank 10 glasses and two beer chasers during a period of less than an hour and a half, and died sometime later. The present action for wrongful death was brought by his two children against defendant, the employer of the bartender. The case was tried before Li v. Yellow Cal Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329, and hence was governed by the former rule of contributory negligence. The trial judge granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and plaintiffs appealed from the judgment. Held, reversed. Under the rule governing review of a judgment of nonsuit, the evidence most favorable to the plaintiffs must be accepted as true; and, on the record before the court, the jury could have reasonably determined the issues of fact in favor of recovery.

(a) General duty of bartender and employer. The earlier holdings that the furnisher of liquor to an intoxicated customer was not liable as a matter of law were repudiated in Vesely, and the questions of causality, foreseeability, and reasonableness, as well as the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, are for the jury. (20 C.3d

(b) Duty to patron. Defendant contended that the doctrine of Vesely does not apply where the patron or his or her representatives sue; i.e., that insofar as the patron is concerned, the consumption and not the sale is the sole cause of injury or death. This is unsound; Vesely's repudiation of the proximate cause fiction applies equally in both contexts. "We hold that Vesely and Bernhard govern regardless of whether a third party injured by an intoxicated customer or a customer himself sues a bartender: the bartender's liability in both circumstances depends upon the application of the principle that an individual is liable for foreseeable injuries caused by his failure to exercise reasonable care." (20 C.3d 400.) "To the extent that the decisions in Rose and Cooper rest on the obsolete proximate cause fiction, we disapprove of them. We also disapprove of Kindt v. Kauffman ... insofar as dicta in the majority opinion ... suggest that bartenders owe no duty of care to their patrons." (20 C.3d 401, footnote 8.) (On Bernhard v. Harrah's Club (1976) 16 C.3d 313, 128 C.R. 215, 546 P.2d 719, see supra, §192.)

(c) Bartender's wilful misconduct. Viewing plaintiffs' evidence in its most favorable light, thereby viewing L's conduct as unfavorably as the evidence will permit, the jury could reasonably conclude that L was guilty of wilful misconduct, i.e., an intentional or reckless act (see supra, §870). (1) He intentionally selected and served 151 proof rum. (2) He knew that it had more than twice the potency of ordinary liquors. (3) He knew that decedent was a young and inexperienced drinker, not fully aware of the radical difference in potency of the rum. (4) He knew that decedent intended to get drunk, and that his warning to "take it easy" after pouring the third round had been without effect. (5) As an experienced bartender, he knew or should have known that consumption of alcohol beyond a certain level creates an immediate health hazard, and should have concluded that decedent might consume this amount. (6) He acted in violation of two rules of practice of his employer: he filled the shot glasses beyond the seven-eighths line, and he continued to serve decedent after decedent was manifestly intoxicated. (20 C.3d 403.) Although this is not the only interpretation that a jury could attach to L's conduct it is "one reasonable interpretation." (20 C.3d 404.)

(d) Decedent's ordinary negligence. Again viewing plaintiffs' evidence in the light most favorable to them: (1) Decedent intended to get drunk, not to consume a fatal overdose of alcohol. (2) He was inexperienced and had no reason to know of the possibility of alcohol poisoning; and his failure to inquire into the consequences of the differences in proof was not reckless. Hence, a reasonable jury could conclude that he was merely negligent, and contributory negligence would not bar recovery from a defendant guilty of wilful misconduct. (20 C.3d 407.) The holding in Kindt, that a patron is guilty of wilful misconduct as a matter of law when he or she consumes sufficient liquor to reach a state of intoxication, is disapproved. (20 C.3d 404, footnote 10.)

(e) No assumption of risk. The jury could reasonably conclude that decedent did not assume the risk of L's wilful misconduct. (1) Rose and Cooper are not controlling, for they misinterpreted the rules governing assumption of risk. The evidence must show that the victim appreciated the specific danger involved (see infra, §1289), in this case the danger of acute alcohol poisoning. (20 C.3d 406.) (2) The evidence presented by plaintiffs did not show this knowledge; decedent's inexperience and naivete' were recognized by both the waitress and the bartender. (20 C.3d 407.) (3) The evidence did not necessarily call for the conclusion, as a matter of law, that all consumers of great quantities of 151 proof rum know the peril involved. (20 C.3d 407.)

A single justice dissented. (See Paula v. Gagnon (1978) 81 C.A.3d 680, 684, 146 C.R. 702 [wrongful death; following Ewing]; cf. *Sissle v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1069

[§ 1069] Liability to Social Guest.

In Coulter v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 144, 145 C.R. 534, 577 P.2d 669, plaintiff Mr. C was injured while riding as a passenger in a car driven by W. In this action by Mr. and Mrs. C against defendant owner and defendant manager of an apartment complex, plaintiffs alleged that defendant manager had served W large quantities of liquor in a recreation room; that he knew or should have known that W was becoming excessively intoxicated, that she customarily drank to excess, and that she intended to drive after drinking. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Liability based on statute. B. & P.C. 25602 and B. & P.C. 25658 prohibit persons from furnishing liquor to habitually or obviously intoxicated persons and to minors. The cases have given the word "person" in both statutes a broad interpretation. (See 21 C.3d 150, citing Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 87, 100 C.R. 752, supra, §§1066, 1067.) This justifies the holding that it is not limited to commercial suppliers but includes social hosts. (21 C.3d 150.) Moreover, the Legislature, put on notice by Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, supra, §1067, failed to amend the statute to exclude this liability. (21 C.3d 151.)

(b) Liability based on common law principles: alternative ground of decision. Vesely rested on the statute alone; but Bernhard v. Harrah's Club (1976) 16 C.3d 313, 128 C.R. 215, 546 P.2d 719, supra, §192, explained that "the clear import" of Vesely was that "there was no bar to civil liability under modern negligence law." (21 C.3d 152.) Furnishing liquor to an obviously intoxicated person with knowledge that he or she intends to drive a motor vehicle constitutes a violation of a duty of reasonable care: (1) The primary factor, reasonable foreseeability of the risk of injury to those on the highway, is clear. (21 C.3d 152.) (2) The other factors, as set forth in Rowland v. Christian 1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, are also present under the facts alleged in the complaint. (21 C.3d 153.)

(1) The degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury: The allegations of substantial injury are sufficient. (21 C.3d 153.)

(2) The close connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury is likewise clear from the circumstances alleged.

(3) The moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct: "While, traditionally, no moral blame attaches to the social host who entertains his guests by serving cocktails to them, it is not unfair to ascribe such blame to anyone who increases the obvious intoxication of a guest under conditions involving a reasonably foreseeable risk of harm to others. In this connection, we further note that it is small comfort to the widow whose husband has been killed in an accident involving an intoxicated driver to learn that the driver received his drinks from a hospitable social host rather than by purchase at a bar. The danger of ultimate harm is as equally foreseeable to the reasonably perceptive host as to the bartender. The danger and risk to the potential victim on the highway is equally as great, regardless of the source of the liquor." (21 C.3d 153.)

(4) The policy of preventing future harm. The enormous cost and personal and economic impact of automobile accidents incident to alcohol abuse are shown by statistics; and the policy is served by requiring the exercise of reasonable restraint by the social host. (21 C.3d 154.)

(5) The extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing the duty. These are not so serious as to justify a contrary holding. "Doubtless, the spectre of civil liability may temper the spirit of conviviality at some social occasions, especially when reasonably observant hosts decline to serve further alcoholic beverages to those guests who are obviously intoxicated and perhaps becoming hostile. Nonetheless, in this context, we must surely balance any resulting moderation of hospitality with the serious hazard to the lives, limbs and property of the public at large, and the great potential for human suffering which attends the presence on the highways of intoxicated drivers." (21 C.3d 154.)

(6) The availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved. "[W]e may assume that insurance coverage (doubtless increasingly costly) will be made available to protect the social host from civil liability in this situation." (21 C.3d 153.)

Two justices joined in a concurrence with qualifications, and one justice dissented. (See 12 Loyola L. Rev. 396; 10 Pacific L. J. 95; 16 San Diego L. Rev. 361.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

3. Legislative Abrogation of Liability.

aa. Statutory Rules.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1070

[§ 1070] Statutory Rules.

(1) In General. The 1978 Legislature, by amendments to B. & P.C. 25602 and C.C. 1714, abrogated the judicial rule establishing liability. (See 16 Pepperdine L. Rev. 21 [California Liquor Liability: A Decade After Coulter v. Superior Court]; 54 A.L.R.5th 313 [social host's liability for injuries incurred by person served alcohol]; supra, §1067 et seq.) Selling or furnishing alcohol to an obviously intoxicated person is a misdemeanor (B. & P.C. 25602(a).) It may be enjoined in a proceeding brought by the Director of Alcoholic Beverage Control. (B. & P.C. 25602.2.) However, imposition of civil liability for furnishing liquor to an adult was expressly prohibited, and the original California rule of no liability, i.e., the rule prior to Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, see supra, §1066, was reinstated.

(2) No Civil Liability. "No person who sells, furnishes, gives, or causes to be sold, furnished, or given away, any alcoholic beverage" under B. & P.C. 25602(a) "shall be civilly liable to any injured person or the estate of such person for injuries inflicted on that person as a result of intoxication by the consumer of such alcoholic beverage." (B. & P.C. 25602(b).)

B. & P.C. 25602(b) bars suit against persons who simply permit alcoholic beverages to be consumed on their premises, as well as against those who supply the alcohol. (Leong v. San Francisco Parking (1991) 235 C.A.3d 827, 834, 1 C.R.2d 41, citing Andre v. Ingram (1985) 164 C.A.3d 206, 210 C.R. 150, and De Bolt v. Kragen Auto Supply (1986) 182 C.A.3d 269, 227 C.R. 258, infra, §1076.) However, this statute does not preclude all actions against innkeepers merely because they furnish alcohol. The proprietor of a place where liquors are dispensed owns a duty of reasonable care to protect patrons from injury at the hands of fellow guests. (Cantwell v. Peppermill (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1797, 1801, 31 C.R.2d 246.)

(3) Prior Case Law Restored. B. & P.C. 25602 "shall be interpreted so that the holdings in cases such as Vesely v. Sager (5 Cal.3d 153), Bernhard v. Harrah's Club (16 Cal.3d 313) and Coulter v. Superior Court (21 Cal.3d 144) be abrogated in favor of prior judicial interpretation, finding the consumption of alcoholic beverages rather than the serving of alcoholic beverages as the proximate cause of injuries inflicted upon another by an intoxicated person." (B. & P.C. 25602(c).) (See C.C. 1714(b) [same effect].)

(4) Social Host. "No social host who furnishes alcoholic beverages to any person shall be held legally accountable for damages suffered by such person, or for injury to the person or property of, or death of, any third person, resulting from the consumption of such beverages." (C.C. 1714(c).) (See Fosgate v. Gonzales (1980) 107 C.A.3d 951, 959, 166 C.R. 233 [1978 amendments operate prospectively]; Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1148, 1156, 221 C.R. 675 [same]; Bass v. Pratt (1986) 177 C.A.3d 129, 134, 137, 222 C.R. 723 [social host immune]; 12 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 404; 10 Pacific L. J. 108, 591; 16 San Diego L. Rev. 355; 11 Southwestern L. Rev. 1451; 12 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 191; 25 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 463; 62 A.L.R.4th 16 [social host's liability for injuries incurred by third party as result of intoxicated guest's negligence].)

In Cully v. Bianca (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1172, 231 C.R. 279, the court rejected an attempt to impose liability on the nondriving passengers in a car operated by an intoxicated driver by alleging a "conspiracy" or "concerted action." The allegations that the two passengers went to the liquor store and jointly purchased the liquor were held insufficient to establish the "substantial assistance or encouragement" constituting a breach of duty under Rest.2d, Torts §876. (186 C.A.3d 1176, 1178.)

In Biles v. Richter (1988) 206 C.A.3d 325, 253 C.R. 414, plaintiff alleged that defendants failed to supervise their intoxicated social guests who smoked, one of whom started a fire that caused injuries to plaintiff while he was sleeping after having been "put to bed" by defendants. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Even assuming that defendants (as the owners of the land where the accident occurred or as Good Samaritans for having put plaintiff to bed) had a duty to protect plaintiff, they were immune from liability by C.C. 1714(c) to the extent that plaintiff's injuries were caused by the guests' consumption of alcohol furnished by defendants. "If a plaintiff could hold a social host liable for failure to supervise those to whom he had furnished alcohol, the immunity afforded by subdivision (c) of section 1714 would be seriously eroded. This is because the duty of supervision is premised upon the need to look after those whose coordination and judgment have been adversely affected by the consumption of alcohol. If allowed, the duty would appear to exist in many if not most cases where alcohol is furnished by social hosts." (206 C.A.3d 331.)

(b) If the allegations concerning consumption of alcohol are disregarded, defendants are still not liable, because they had no obligation to fulfill their duty to plaintiff by supervising sober guests merely because they smoke. Sober adult smokers do not pose so great a risk that a social host can fulfill his or her duty to a sleeping guest only by personally supervising the guests who smoke. (206 C.A.3d 332.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

3. Legislative Abrogation of Liability.

bb. Constitutionality of Statutes.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1071

[§ 1071] Constitutionality of Statutes.

The immunity statutes (see supra, §1070) were construed and upheld against constitutional challenge in Cory v. Shierloh (1981) 29 C.3d 430, 174 C.R. 500, 629 P.2d 8. Defendant S, a minor, hosted a party at which he furnished liquor to plaintiff C, who was also a minor. C became intoxicated, attempted to drive home, and was injured when he lost control of his car. He brought this action on various theories. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Construction of immunity statutes. (1) B. & P.C. 25602(b) immunizes the furnisher of liquor from liability to any person injured as a result of intoxication by the consumer of the liquor. (2) C.C. 1714(b) and B. & P.C. 25602(c) apply only to injuries inflicted on a third person by the intoxicated consumer. These provisions are not substantive grants of immunity but mere descriptions of the prior judicial view of liability of the furnisher. (3) Hence, B. & P.C. 25602(b), reasonably construed, "bars a suit by the intoxicated consumer as well as by third persons injured by him. Any other construction would produce a singularly anomalous result, permitting a tort recovery against the provider by the intoxicated consumer, while barring recovery against the same provider by an innocent third person who was injured by the same consumer." (29 C.3d 437.)

(b) Constitutionality of general rule of immunity: rational basis reasonably related to legitimate state purpose. (1) The Legislature may have acted upon the premise that it is unfair to require the provider (and his or her insurer) to share both the supervisory responsibility and the legal blame with the consumer whose consumption "is perhaps the more direct and immediate cause" of the injuries. This is a rational position, consistent with the judicially established rule prior to Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, supra, §1067. (2) The Legislature also reasonably might have assumed that imposition of sole liability on the consumer "would encourage some heightened sense of responsibility in the drinker for his acts, thereby ultimately reducing the frequency of alcohol-caused injuries." (29 C.3d 440.)

(c) Constitutionality of special rule of liability for licensed providers serving intoxicated minors. The legislation contains inconsistencies and anomalies; e.g., a licensed seller is liable but a nonlicensed, presumably illegal seller, is not; and the intoxicated minor and those injured by him or her have a cause of action against the seller, but an adult consumer and those injured by him or her do not. (B. & P.C. 25602.1.) "Accordingly, whether or not the selling or supplying of the liquor is a tortious cause of a resultant injury turns on the license status of the supplier and the age of the consumer. Causation in a common law sense, whether actual or physical, proximate or legal, has never pivoted on such a perilous and seemingly irrelevant fulcrum." (29 C.3d 440.) Nevertheless, a reasonable basis for the statutes exists:

(1) Limiting liability to licensed commercial providers may be reasonable, because presumably these persons are experienced and can more readily detect signs of intoxication among patrons. It is also probable that licensed commercial providers are in a better position to defray the costs of liability and insurance than a social host or other unlicensed provider. (29 C.3d 440, 441.)

(2) Limiting the class of protected consumers to minors might reasonably have been based on the determination that, because of comparative inexperience in both drinking and driving, they are more in need of safeguarding from intoxication than adults. This determination might justify suspending the theory of the other statutes that consumption of the liquor, not furnishing, is the proximate cause of any injury. (29 C.3d 441.) (See Knighten v. Sam's Parking Valet (1988) 206 C.A.3d 69, 78, 253 C.R. 365, supra, §1040 [rejecting contention that B. & P.C. 25602(b) violated Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(b), establishing right to restitution for crime victims].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

3. Legislative Abrogation of Liability.

cc. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Minor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1072

[§ 1072] Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Minor.

(1) In General. B. & P.C. 25602.1 retains civil liability for one type of case: An action may be brought by or on behalf of any person who has suffered injury or death proximately caused by the furnishing of alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor. As originally enacted in 1979, the exception applied only where the provider of the alcoholic beverage was licensed: hence, where defendants held a social gathering at their home, they could not be held liable even though they charged admission and sold liquor to persons attending. (See Zieff v. Weinstein (1987) 191 C.A.3d 243, 248, 236 C.R. 536.)

The statute was amended in 1986, and the action may now be maintained against (a) any person licensed, or required to be licensed, under California law to sell alcohol, or authorized to sell alcohol on a military base, who sells, furnishes, or gives alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor, and (b) any other person who sells alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor. (See Baker v. Sudo (1987) 194 C.A.3d 936, 943, 240 C.R. 38 [1986 amendments were not retroactive]; 10 Pacific L. J. 111, 592; 16 San Diego L. Rev. 375.)

B. & P.C. 25602.1 authorizes an action by "any person" for injuries sustained by "such person." In Chalup v. Aspen Mine Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 973, 221 C.R. 97, the court, giving these words their ordinary and usual meaning, held that the minor is included. Plaintiff, an 18-year-old girl, was served a number of drinks at defendant's bar, left while intoxicated, ran across the street against the traffic signal, and was struck by a passing vehicle. Held, a cause of action could be stated under B. & P.C. 25602.1. (175 C.A.3d 979.)

The words "obviously intoxicated" are different in meaning from "driving under the influence," as that phrase is used in the Vehicle Code. In Jones v. Toyota Motor Co. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 364, 369, 243 C.R. 611, the jury was instructed to consider such outward manifestations of obvious intoxication as "incontinence, unkempt appearance, alcoholic breath, loud or boisterous conduct, bloodshot or glassy eyes, incoherent or slurred speech, flushed face, poor muscular coordination or unsteady walking, loss of balance, impaired judgment, or argumentative behavior." This instruction was correct. (198 C.A.3d 370.) (See Schaffield v. Abboud (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1133, 1140, 19 C.R.2d 205

[following Jones, and upholding instruction defining "obvious intoxication" as sufficient exhibition of specified outward signs of intoxication to cause reasonable person to believe minor was intoxicated]; Elizarraras v. L.A. Private Sec. Services (2003) 108 C.A.4th 237, 241, 133 C.R.2d 302 [exception from immunity for sale to intoxicated minors is limited to providers of alcohol; it does not extend to security guards even though guards may have special relationship with business patrons in some circumstances]; BAJI, No. 4.50.)

(2) No Liability for Injury From Intoxication of Person to Whom Intoxicated Minor Gives Liquor. In Salem v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 595, 259 C.R. 447, G and M, both minors, had drunk a good deal of beer, and then came to defendant's store. G, who was "obviously intoxicated," bought a 12-pack of beer from which he gave a bottle to M, which he drank; then both got into M's car, which M drove. An accident resulted in death of the victim, and blood tests showed that M was legally intoxicated. In this action against defendant S and others, the trial court denied their motions for summary judgment. Held, mandamus issued to compel granting the motions. B. & P.C. 25602.1 should be strictly construed "to require that the negligence resulting in liability of the alcohol purveyor be that of the very person who purchased the beverage." (211 C.A.3d 600.) The insertion of the "proximate cause" limitation must have been intended to restrict, rather than to expand, potential application of this one exception to liability. "It is indeed foreseeable that the furnishing of liquor to an intoxicated minor will result in his increased or continued inebriation, which may result in damage to someone else. It is clearly less foreseeable that the intoxicated minor will give the liquor so purchased to someone else, whose subsequent intoxication will cause injury. ... The misuse of the alcohol by the third party (whether he be a minor or an adult) is at least arguably, to use proximate cause language, 'remote' and not the 'natural and probable consequence' of the sale to the minor." (211 C.A.3d 603.)

(3) No Liability by Owner of Building in Which Alcohol Is Served. In Hernandez v. Modesto Portuguese Pentacost Assn. (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1274, 48 C.R.2d 229, a wrongful death action arising out of an intoxicated minor's automobile accident was brought against the owner of the building rented by the sponsor of a dance at which alcohol was served to the minor on the evening of the accident. Plaintiffs contended that B. & P.C. 25602.1, imposing liability on any person who "causes to be sold" any alcoholic beverage to an obviously intoxicated minor, could fairly be read to support the imposition of liability on a landlord who leases property to a third person for the sale of alcohol and who takes no action to prevent alcohol from being sold there to intoxicated minors. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Strict construction. B. & P.C. 25602.1 is a narrow exception to the Legislature's enactment of what California Supreme Court has termed "sweeping civil immunity" from liability for injuries to third persons resulting from furnishing alcohol to another. (40 C.A.4th 1281, quoting Strang v. Cabrol (1984) 37 C.3d 720, 724, 209 C.R. 347, 691 P.2d 1013, infra, §1073.) As the sole exception to statutory immunity, B. & P.C. 25602.1 must be strictly construed to effect the Legislature's intent. (40 C.A.4th 1281.)

(b) Malfeasance required; mere inaction is insufficient. In their ordinary sense, the words "causes to be sold" imply some type of affirmative act by the person causing alcohol to be sold that is directly related to the act of selling alcohol. This ordinary usage of the phrase, and the fact that B. & P.C. 25602.1 articulates no duty to act affirmatively to prevent others from selling alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor, compels the construction that the statute requires malfeasance, not acquiescence. In other words, the phrase "causes to be sold" requires an affirmative act directly related to sale of alcohol, which necessarily brings about the resultant action to which the statute is directed, i.e., the sale of alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor. (40 C.A.4th 1282.) Neither defendant's rental of the ballroom nor its acquiescence in the liquor license application is sufficiently related directly to the sale of alcohol to warrant imposition of liability. Defendant was not in a position to detect signs of intoxication among the consumers of alcohol at the dance or to control the sale of alcohol to an obviously intoxicated minor. (40 C.A.4th 1283.)

dd. Furnishing Liquor to Sober Minor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1073

[§ 1073] Furnishing Liquor to Sober Minor.

Burke v. Superior Court (1982) 129 C.A.3d 570, 181 C.R. 149, declared a narrow exception to the legislative abrogation of liability: An action would lie for furnishing liquor to a sober minor who later consumed the liquor and drove while intoxicated. (129 C.A.3d 578.)

Burke was disapproved in Strang v. Cabrol (1984) 37 C.3d 720, 209 C.R. 347, 691 P.2d 1013. The complaint alleged that defendant liquor store sold alcoholic beverages to P, a sober minor, who in turn furnished them to B, another minor; B became intoxicated, and plaintiff, a passenger in B's vehicle, was injured as a result of his driving. Held, no cause of action was stated under B. & P.C. 25658.

(a) B. & P.C. 25602(a) makes it a misdemeanor to furnish liquor to a drunkard or obviously intoxicated person, but B. & P.C. 25602(b) expressly provides that there shall be no civil liability to any person injured as a result of intoxication by the consumer of the beverage. B. & P.C. 25658 makes it a misdemeanor to furnish liquor to a minor, but contains no express language of civil immunity. (37 C.3d 723, 724.)

(b) Notwithstanding the absence of this language in B. & P.C. 25658, general principles of statutory construction call for application of "the sweeping civil immunity" now provided by C.C. 1714 and B. & P.C. 25602. (37 C.3d 724.) The single exception is for sale to an obviously intoxicated minor provided by B. & P.C. 25602.1 (supra, §1072). "If the Legislature had intended also to exclude sales to sober, underage persons from the reach of the superseding statute, it could have said so directly" by amending B. & P.C. 25658. (37 C.3d 725.) The majority opinion in Burke "stands alone as contrary authority," and is disapproved. (37 C.3d 728.)

Three justices dissented, concluding that the revival of the rule existing prior to Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151, supra, §1067, concerning proximate cause was limited to the situations covered by the two specific immunities: the social host and the person who serves common drunkards and obviously intoxicated persons. (37 C.3d 730.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

b. Furnishing Liquor to Intoxicated Person.

3. Legislative Abrogation of Liability.

ee. Furnishing Liquor to Disabled Person.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1074

[§ 1074] Furnishing Liquor to Disabled Person.

Whether furnishing liquor to a disabled person creates liability is unsettled. In Cantor v. Anderson (1981) 126 C.A.3d 124, 178 C.R. 540, the complaint alleged that plaintiff maintained a home for developmentally disabled persons; that E, such a person, was served liquor by defendant neighbors with full knowledge of his disability; that as a result of his consumption of the liquor E became violent, and plaintiff was injured when she attempted to render aid to him. Held, liability could be imposed on a properly framed complaint.

(a) Defendants relied on B. & P.C. 25602(b) and C.C. 1714(c), precluding liability of a social host furnishing liquor "to any person" (supra, §1070). But the contention that "any person" covers all persons of whatever mental or physical condition is unsound. C.C. 1714(b) states that the legislative intent is to reinstate prior judicial interpretation of "proximate cause" (supra, §1070), and thereby requires that C.C.1714(c) be read with reference to a specific common law rule. (126 C.A.3d 129.) The common law rule followed in Cole v. Rush (1955) 45 C.2d 345, 289 P.2d 450, supra, §1066, and similar cases was based on the theory that voluntary consumption of liquor by an ordinary person or a competent person was the proximate cause of the injury. (126 C.A.3d 129, 130.) Thus, the common law rule did not affect liability for furnishing of liquor to a person unable to voluntarily resist its consumption. (126 C.A.3d 130.)

(b) C.C. 1714(a), under accepted principles of statutory interpretation, is limited by the common law theory of causation. "By this theory the proximate cause of injuries to or by an ordinary intoxicated person is his voluntary decision to consume the alcohol. But the theory does not preclude liability rooted in a concurrent proximate cause emanating from the exceptional physical or mental condition of the consumer. Thus, where an injury is the joint product of an exceptional mental or physical condition and alcohol, such condition is a 'concurrent proximate cause' of the injury upon which liability may be predicated. ... Moreover, where an injury is the proximate result of concurrent conditions, one of which is statutorily immunized from liability, the one that is not immunized may form the basis of liability." (126 C.A.3d 130.)

(c) C.C. 1714 also makes no distinction between commercial and noncommercial furnishers of alcohol, and thus was not meant to revive the distinctions that existed prior to Coulter v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 144, 145 C.R. 534, 577 P.2d 669, supra, §1069). Rather, for claims not affected by C.C. 1714, "the common law development of negligence principles is left unimpaired." And foreseeability is the key component necessary to establish liability. (126 C.A.3d 131.)

(d) The complaint as it stands is insufficient in failing to allege that the injuries suffered by plaintiff were a foreseeable and concurrent product of E's mental condition. "However, if plaintiff is able to plead and prove that defendants not only knew of [E]'s disability but also knew or should have known the effect that liquor would have on him by reason of his disability (i.e., that it would cause him to lose control and become violent), she then has a cause of action not limited by" C.C. 1714. (126 C.A.3d 131.)

(e) "Our decision is a narrow one. We hold, simply, that where a social host knows his guest is one who because of some exceptional physical or mental condition should not be served alcoholic beverages and is or should be aware of the risks included in providing such person with alcohol, the host is not protected by" C.C. 1714(b) and (c). (126 C.A.3d 132.) (See Bass v. Pratt (1986) 177 C.A.3d 129, 136, 222 C.R. 723 [Cantor was distinguished where no sufficient showing of incompetency was made].)

Hepe v. Paknad (1988) 199 C.A.3d 412, 244 C.R. 823, refused to extend Cantor, to cases involving service of liquor to known alcoholics. (199 C.A.3d 418, quoting Strang v. Cabrol (1984) 37 C.3d 720, 209 C.R. 347, 691 P.2d 1013, supra, §1073.)

Cardinal v. Santee Pita (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1676, 286 C.R. 275, on facts similar to Cantor contended that Cantor was wrongly decided. (234 C.A.3d 1682.) "Because the mentally infirm, incompetent or retarded range from those whose disability is not immediately evident to those requiring constant care, we leave it to the Legislature, guided by qualified professionals, to determine whether this large and diversified group is to be treated similarly to minors for purposes of" the exclusion under B. & P.C. 25602.1. (234 C.A.3d 1682.)

ff. Entrusting Vehicle to Intoxicated Driver.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1075

[§ 1075] Entrusting Vehicle to Intoxicated Driver.

In Blake v. Moore (1984) 162 C.A.3d 700, 208 C.R. 703, plaintiff and defendant, friends who had driven to Bakersfield, decided to go to Las Vegas in defendant's car with plaintiff driving. Each had consumed liquor in Bakersfield and both continued drinking in the vehicle. Plaintiff drove at an excessive speed, lost control of the car, and was injured in a crash. He brought this action on the theory of negligent entrustment (infra, §1222), alleging that he was obviously intoxicated at the time that defendant gave him the keys to the car. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) Although the statute makes consumption rather than furnishing the proximate cause, in this case, more than liquor was supplied. "[T]he immunity for the supplier of alcoholic beverages protects only against the risks directly flowing from the supply of the liquor. It does not provide immunity for the entrustment of the car. Therefore, two concurrent causes were at work when plaintiff lost control of the vehicle." (162 C.A.3d 702.)

(b) Plaintiff, however, will face a practical difficulty if he is unable to excuse his voluntary intoxication. A comparative fault trial should result in a weighing of defendant's fault in entrusting his car to plaintiff with knowledge of the intoxication, and the fault of plaintiff in drinking and then driving. (162 C.A.3d 707.) (See Knighten v. Sam's Parking Valet (1988) 206 C.A.3d 69, 75, 253 C.R. 365, supra, §1040 [no negligent entrustment when bailee returns car to its owner].)

[§ 1076] Failure To Prevent Driving.

In De Bolt v. Kragen Auto Supply (1986) 182 C.A.3d 269, 227 C.R. 258, a wrongful death action, the complaint alleged the following: Defendant conducted a beach party for its employees, and an employee invited C, a minor, to attend; defendant served liquor to C, she became intoxicated and disorderly, and defendant asked her to leave; defendant knew she intended to drive her car, but did not offer any safer alternative (e.g., taxi, or call to police or parents); C drove, and struck a motorcycle from behind, killing the driver and passenger. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs contended that they had stated a cause of action sounding in general negligence, based not on selling or furnishing liquor but rather on allowing C to drive in a condition that created an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons. (182 C.A.3d 273.) They also contended that defendant was guilty of the affirmative act of forcing C to leave, and that therefore no special relationship was needed for imposition of liability. (182 C.A.3d 274.) But the immunity cannot be avoided by alleging the wrong to be forcing a person to leave or failing to provide safe transportation. Under the statute the consumption of the beverage is the proximate cause of the injuries inflicted by an intoxicated person. (182 C.A.3d 274, citing Strang v. Cabrol (1984) 37 C.3d 720, 209 C.R. 347, 691 P.2d 1013, supra, §1073.) "If we found liability possible here, soon complaints would be easily couched in language apart from furnishing or selling liquor. Plaintiffs would claim liability for inviting a person to a party where drinks are served knowing he/she might become intoxicated, failing to keep someone from driving ... , or any number of possibilities." (182 C.A.3d 275.)

(b) No other legal theory supports the complaint. (1) The exception for furnishing liquor to a person unable to resist its consumption in Cantor v. Anderson (1981) 126 C.A.3d 124, 178 C.R. 540, supra, §1074, is inapplicable, for no such facts are alleged. (182 C.A.3d 275.) (2) The theory of employer's liability for serving alcohol to employees at office parties does not apply because C was only a guest and not defendant's employee. (182 C.A.3d 276.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

c. Statutory Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1077

[§ 1077] Statutory Duty.

An affirmative duty may arise by statute.

(1) Duty of Driver To Render Aid. Statutes commonly require the driver of a vehicle involved in an accident to stop and render assistance to an injured person. (See Veh.C. 20001 et seq.; 80 A.L.R.2d 299 [violation of statute requiring one involved in accident to render aid]; 36 A.L.R.4th 907 [amnesty for hit-and-run driver who files accident report within statutorily specified time]; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §249 et seq.) Under such a statute, it is immaterial whether the driver is at fault or the injured person is free from contributory negligence; the liability arises not from any act causing the injury, but from an independent duty to render aid to one whose helpless condition is or should be known to the driver. (See Brooks v. E. J. Willig Truck Trans. Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 669, 678, 255 P.2d 802; Summers v. Dominguez (1938) 29 C.A.2d 308, 312, 84 P.2d 237; Rest.2d, Torts §322.)

(2) Duty To Seek Medical Care for Child. In Quigley v. First Church of Christ, Scientist (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1027, 76 C.R.2d 792, a 12-year-old boy in the custody of plaintiff's ex-husband died of juvenile diabetes after being treated by Christian Science healers (see supra, §1042). In addition to suing the Christian Science church and various healers, plaintiff sued decedent's grandmother who had some custody of decedent on the 3 days before he died and who played some role in selecting the healers. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Defendant was accused of violating P.C. 273a (child abuse). (See 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §188.) Although the statute refers to "anyone," People v. Heitzman (1994) 9 C.4th 189, 37 C.R.2d 236, 886 P.2d 1229, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §170, held that a duty of care can be imposed only on a person with actual custody and control over a dependent or on a person with the legal duty to control the person with custody or control. (65 C.A.4th 1038.)

(b) Here, plaintiff contended that in caring for the decedent during the week of his death and participating in his care on the day of his death defendant shared joint custody of the decedent during the critical hours before he died. However, the evidence showed nothing more than that defendant acted as a baby-sitter, with the consent of the decedent's father, during the week before the death, when it was undisputed that the decedent did not appear to be seriously ill. Agreeing to look after a child, on and off, for period of a few days, does not transform the caretaker into a de facto parent, with legal rights and responsibilities coequal to the actual parent. (65 C.A.4th 1038.)

(c) In applying the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, to determine whether defendant, as a baby-sitter, had a duty to seek medical care for a child who did not appear to be seriously ill and whose parent had elected not to do so, it should be remembered that imposing a duty of care on baby-sitters would encourage them to protect themselves from liability whenever the child cared for complained of a minor illness, especially because there are situations, as in the present case, when summoning medical care might save the child's life. Moreover, baby-sitters, as temporary caregivers, generally do not have as much information as the parents about a child's day-to-day needs and are thus handicapped in evaluating the child's health care requirements. And finally, imposing on baby-sitters a duty equal to that of the parents would encourage conflict and would potentially undermine parental authority in opposition to the legislative policy of favoring primacy of parental responsibilities in the health care area. (65 C.A.4th 1040.)

(3) Duty of Dog Owner To Render Aid for Bite. California's dog-bite statute imposes liability for damages on the dog's owner to a person bitten by the dog. (C.C. 3342, infra, §§1408, 1409.) After a person has been bitten, the owner has an affirmative duty "to take such reasonable steps as are necessary to remove any danger presented to other persons from bites by the animal." (C.C. 3342.5(a).)

If the dog has bitten a person on at least two separate occasions, or on one occasion if the dog was trained to fight, attack, or kill, and the bite caused substantial physical injury, any person, including the district attorney or city attorney, may bring an action against the owner, to determine whether the conditions (of treatment or confinement) or other circumstances have so changed as to remove the danger. Venue is in the county where a bite occurred. The court, after a hearing, may make an appropriate order "including, but not limited to, the removal of the animal from the area or its destruction if necessary." (C.C. 3342.5(b), (c).)

No action may be brought under the two-bite provision for a bite inflicted on a trespasser, or for a bite by a dog performing military or police work. (C.C. 3342.5(d).)

(4) Duty of Automobile Dealer To Give Notice of Insurance. Veh.C. 5604 requires a dealer transferring a motor vehicle to notify the buyer if the required insurance policy does not cover public liability of the operator or owner. In Dana v. Sutton Motor Sales (1961) 56 C.2d 284, 14 C.R. 649, 363 P.2d 881, the court held that this statute imposed a duty, for violation of which a tort action could be maintained against the dealer. "[T]he Legislature has, from the experience of the community, formulated a standard of conduct for automobile dealers who procure insurance for their customers, and prohibited conduct by them which is likely to cause harm. Defendants failed to comply with the formulated standard, which was an appropriate measure for their conduct, and in the absence of legal excuses defendants would therefore be guilty of negligence." (56 C.2d 287.)

A. In General.

2. Exceptions: Affirmative Duty Without Relationship.

d. Contractual Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1078

[§ 1078] Contractual Duty.

A duty may arise out of a contract, and negligent performance may be a tort as well as a breach of contract. (See Eads v. Marks (1952) 39 C.2d 807, 810, 249 P.2d 257; North Amer. Chemical Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 764, 773, 69 C.R.2d 466 [packaging and shipping contract imposed duty of reasonable care, breach of which supported negligence action by shipping party]; Rest.2d, Torts §323; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §110 et seq.; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 216; supra, §2; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §141 et seq.; on duty of lessor arising from covenant to repair, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §640.)

The early cases laid great stress on the privity requirement, and denied liability for negligence of the promisor where the plaintiff was neither the promisee nor an express third party beneficiary. But the privity doctrine was later subjected to exceptions; e.g., the manufacturer's duty (infra, §1168) and the building contractor's duty (infra, §1160). And a progressive opinion of the California Supreme Court virtually abolishes the limitation and recognizes a broad area of liability to persons intended to be benefited by the performance. (See infra, §1179; and see also Rest.2d, Torts §324A; FNS Mortg. Service Corp. v. Pacific General Group (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1564, 1575, 1576, 29 C.R.2d 916 [following Rest.2d, Torts §324A; nonprofit organization inspecting pipe manufacturers and delisting noncomplying manufacturers had duty to consumers to exercise reasonable care in performing these undertakings].)

e. Active Force Under Defendant's Control.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1079

[§ 1079] Active Force Under Defendant's Control.

The general rule that there is no affirmative duty in the absence of a special relationship (supra, §1038 et seq.) does not apply where there is some active force under the defendant's control. The defendant is considered to be directing the force. (See Rest.2d, Torts §302; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.6.) Thus, where a defendant furnishes gas or steam to buildings, and is notified of a leaking pipe and the possible dangers from it, a defendant who fails to make reasonable efforts to shut off the flow is negligent, regardless of the fact that the defective pipes are not owned by the defendant and he or she has no obligation to maintain or repair them. [§ 1080] Creation of Peril.

In Bastian v. San Luis Obispo (1988) 199 C.A.3d 520, 245 C.R. 78, a negligence action against a county and its deputy sheriff, plaintiff newspaper photographer alleged that defendant deputy placed an empty vodka bottle alongside the body of a driver who was killed in an automobile accident; that shortly thereafter plaintiff photographed the scene in defendant's presence without receiving a warning that it was contrived; and that the decedent's family, having become suspicious about the conspicuous position of the vodka bottle (which remarkably was still intact after the accident), accused plaintiff and the newspaper of staging the photograph, with the result that plaintiff's relationship with his employer deteriorated to the point of his being fired and suffering injury to his reputation. The trial judge sustained a demurrer to the complaint. Held, reversed. "One who creates a foreseeable danger not readily discoverable by the endangered persons has the duty to warn them of the potential peril. ... In this situation, a special relationship is not required to impose the duty." (199 C.A.3d 530.) Hence, because defendant created a peril by placing the vodka bottle alongside the body, he had a duty to warn plaintiff that the accident scene was contrived. And this duty existed irrespective of whether defendant was a law enforcement officer. (199 C.A.3d 529.)

g. Interference With Attempt To Aid.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1081

[§ 1081] Interference With Attempt To Aid.

In Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 C.A.3d 443, 190 C.R. 310, a patron of Happy Jack's Saloon went across the street to the Circle Inn, informed the bartender that a man had been threatened at Happy Jack's, and asked the bartender either to call the police or allow him to make the call. The bartender refused both requests. On the same day, plaintiff's father was shot and killed by V in Happy Jack's saloon, and plaintiff brought this action for wrongful death against defendant owner of the Circle Inn. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) There was no special relationship between defendant and the deceased, or between defendant and the patron who wished to summon aid; but the special circumstances of this case call for a reexamination of the common law rule of nonliability for nonfeasance (supra, §1038 et seq.). Official organizations have emphasized that citizen assistance is vital to crime control, and statutes such as Govt.C. 13970 recognize that rescuing a person in danger benefits the entire public. (141 C.A.3d 449, and footnote 7.) The Legislature has in several statutes also recognized the importance of the telephone system in reporting crime and in summoning emergency aid. (141 C.A.3d 450.) These statutes suggest that current societal conditions call for a new approach to legal duty in cases such as this. (141 C.A.3d 450.)

(b) Applying the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086: "(1) The harm to the decedent was abundantly foreseeable; it was imminent. ... The employee was a bartender. As such he knew it is foreseeable that some people who drink alcohol in the milieu of a bar setting are prone to violence. (2) The certainty of decedent's injury is undisputed. (3) There is arguably a close connection between the employee's conduct and the injury: the patron wanted to use the phone to summon the police to intervene. The employee's refusal to allow the use of the phone prevented this anticipated intervention. ... (4) The employee's conduct displayed a disregard for human life that can be characterized as morally wrong: he was callously indifferent to the possibility that [decedent] would die as the result of his refusal to allow a person to use the telephone. Under the circumstances before us the bartender's burden was minimal and exposed him to no risk: all he had to do was allow the use of the telephone. ... (5) Finding a duty in these circumstances would promote a policy of preventing future harm. ... (6) [T]he liability which is sought to be imposed here is that of employee negligence, which is covered by many insurance policies. (7) The extent of the burden on the defendant was minimal." (141 C.A.3d 451.)

(c) Rest.2d, Torts §427 states that one who knows or has reason to know that a third person is giving or is ready to give aid to another necessary to prevent physical harm to him, and "negligently prevents or disables the third person from giving such aid," is liable for the harm. The facts of this case "come very nearly" within this section (141 C.A.3d 452); and, to the extent that this holding expands the section's reach, it represents logical and needed growth of the common law. (141 C.A.3d 453, 455.) (See 41 Proof of Facts 2d 305 [tortious refusal to allow use of telephone]; 15 Pacific L. J. 1261, 1273; 37 A.L.R.4th 1196 [uninvolved person's liability for harm caused by refusal to phone, or to allow others to phone, for help].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1082

[§ 1082] Nature of Liability.

A landowner or possessor (see infra, §§1083, 1084) owes certain affirmative duties of care as to conditions or activities on the land, to persons who come on the land (see infra, §1085 et seq.), and sometimes to persons outside the land (see infra, §§1088, 1089). (See Rest.2d, Torts §328E et seq.; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.1 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §231 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Guide 3d, Chap. 10; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Premises Liability, Chap. 16; California Premises Liability, §1:1 et seq.; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 1211 [proposal of strict enterprise liability for injuries from use of premises]; 62, 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.) Premises Liability §1 et seq.; 40 Proof of Facts 3d 111 [negligent operation of gymnasium, health club, or similar facility]; 41 Proof of Facts 3d 109 [governmental liability for failure to maintain trees near public way]; 45 Proof of Facts 3d 115 [liability of ski area operator for skiing accident]; 28 A.L.R.5th 603 [liability of excavator on private property for injury to public utility cables]; 44 A.L.R.5th 525 [liability of owner or operator of business premises for injuries from electrically operated door]; 49 A.L.R.5th 659 [liability of owner of wire, structure, or pole struck by aircraft]; 62 A.L.R.5th 475 [landlord's liability for injuries occasioned by swimming pool maintained for tenants]; 64 A.L.R.5th 1 [owner's liability for injury or death from residential swimming pool accident].)

The nature of the duty owed must have a relationship to the degree of control conferred by the scope of the ownership interest. Thus, in Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 C.A.4th 1232, 1240, 112 C.R.2d 593, vicious dogs escaped and attacked plaintiff on an access road. Defendant easement owner, who possessed a right only to pass over the road, owed no duty to plaintiff. (92 C.A.4th 1240, distinguishing Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 C.A.3d 407, 209 C.R. 445, supra, §40.)

The liability is to persons; there is no duty to keep premises safe for trespassing animals. In Lenk v. Spezia (1949) 95 C.A.2d 296, 213 P.2d 47, defendant notified plaintiff of his intention to dust a tomato crop with arsenic from an airplane. Plaintiff, who nevertheless allowed his bees to remain at large, was denied recovery for bees poisoned. (95 C.A.2d 303.) (See P.C. 596 [no liability for killing with poisoned bait if signs are posted]; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 414; 12 A.L.R.3d 1103 [injury to trespassing stock from poisonous substances].)

In some cases, the defect may be so trivial or insignificant that, as a matter of law, the landowner has no duty of care. This principle, which recognizes that land need not be maintained in an absolutely perfect condition, has been referred to as the "trivial defect defense." (See Caloroso v. Hathaway (2004) 122 C.A.4th 922, 928, 19 C.R.3d 254 [crack in landowner's walkway of less than one-half inch elevation was trivial as matter of law].) However, defects that are ordinarily considered to be trivial may become dangerous in view of the surrounding conditions. In those cases, the usual duty of care applies. (See Johnson v. Palo Alto (1962) 199 C.A.2d 148, 150, 18 C.R. 484 [shadow cast by overhead trees].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §27.1 et seq.; 39 McGeorge L. Rev. 131 [policy oscillation in law of premises liability]. Trivial defect doctrine: See Kasparian v. AvalonBay Communities (2007) 156 C.A.4th 11, 26, 66 C.R.3d 885 [conflicting evidence whether drain was embedded in walkway of apartment complex in manner required by industry guidelines presented genuine issue of material fact whether drain was "trivial defect" and precluded summary judgment for landlord in premises liability action by tenant who tripped over drain; trivial defect doctrine is not affirmative defense but rather aspect of duty that plaintiff must plead and prove].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

b. Owner or Possessor.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1083

[§ 1083] In General.

(1) Basic Rule. The liability is imposed on an owner or possessor. "The important thing in the law of torts is the possession, and not whether it is or is not rightful as between the possessor and some third person. Thus a disseisor is a possessor from the moment that his occupation begins, although as between the disseisor and the true owner he is not legally entitled to possession until his adverse possession has ripened through lapse of ownership." (Rest.2d, §328E, Comment a; see 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.2.)

(2) Owner. An owner may be an "invitor" though not in actual occupancy. (Green v. Menveg Properties (1954) 126 C.A.2d 1, 9, 271 P.2d 544; see Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 C.A.4th 1110, 1115, 114 C.R.2d 831 [express permission to enter property must be given by underlying fee owner; easement owner is incapable of giving this permission].) (On general rule of nonliability of owner of leased land, see Rest.2d, Torts §355 et seq.; on exceptions under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §§639, 644); on liability of holder of bare legal title, see infra, §1084.)

(3) Occupier. An occupier who is not an owner may be liable. (See Fitch v. LeBeau (1969) 1 C.A.3d 320, 324, 81 C.R. 722 [defendants living in mobilehome parked in trailer park and used as residence were governed by land occupier principles]; Rest.2d, Torts §328E [defining "possessor"]; 44 A.L.R.3d 943 [liability based on tenant's obligations under lease].)

(4) Trespasser. A trespasser may be a possessor subject to the rule. In Yee Chuck v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University (1960) 179 C.A.2d 405, 3 C.R. 825, defendant trustees of Stanford University leased land to flower growers. Then, without terminating the leases, they engaged defendant independent contractor to make soil tests. The contractor dug a test hole, negligently left it without a railing or warning sign, and plaintiff, an employee of a sublessee, fell into the hole and was injured. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. Defendant trustees had no right to be on the land without permission of the lessee; hence, their status was that of trespassers who had taken possession (as distinguished from casual trespassers). And a trespasser who takes possession is, in respect of his or her rights and liabilities as to third persons, an owner. Hence, they were liable to plaintiff invitee. (179 C.A.2d 410.)

(5) No Liability Without Ownership or Control. If, however, there is neither ownership nor control of the premises, there can be no liability. (Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 134, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653; Preston v. Goldman (1986) 42 C.3d 108, 123, 227 C.R. 817, 720 P.2d 476, infra, §1159; Gray v. America West Airlines (1989) 209 C.A.3d 76, 84, 256 C.R. 877.)

In Steinmetz v. Stockton City Chamber of Commerce (1985) 169 C.A.3d 1142, 1146, 214 C.R. 405, defendant leased premises in an industrial park, and decedent attended a business "mixer" there, hosted by defendant lessee and sponsored by defendant Chamber of Commerce. Defendant lessee had parking space for only a few cars, and decedent, like others, used additional space within the park. After leaving the mixer to return to her parked car, decedent was stabbed by an unknown assailant. Plaintiffs' theory was that defendants failed to provide a safe place for invitees to park their cars, and that lack of security and inadequate lighting in the other parking areas contributed to decedent's death. Held, summary judgments for defendants affirmed.

(a) There is no authority holding a landowner or possessor liable for injuries to an invitee from criminal activity occurring outside his or her premises. (169 C.A.3d 1146.)

(b) Defendants were under no duty to insure safe ingress and egress to the leased property. "The instant case cannot be distinguished from that of a movie theater showing the latest academy award winning movie, or a department store holding its annual clearance sale, neither of which is able to afford sufficient parking for the number of invitees seeking to enter the premises. We are aware of no obligation upon the movie theater or department store owner to provide additional lighting on the city streets or hire security guards to patrol those streets for the safety of its invitees. Nor can the instant situation be distinguished from that of a homeowner whose business guests must park on city streets because there is not sufficient parking on the premises. It is not legally incumbent upon the homeowner to provide additional lighting or hire security guards to escort his guests to their cars." (169 C.A.3d 1147.)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

b. Owner or Possessor.

2. Holder of Bare Legal Title.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1084

[§ 1084] Holder of Bare Legal Title.

The liability of an active trustee of an express trust is clear. (See Johnston v. Long (1947) 30 C.2d 54, 61, 181 P.2d 645, supra, §31; 21 So. Cal. L. Rev. 199.) But where the trustee merely holds the legal title and has no duties in connection with the land, a difficult problem is presented.

In Richman v. Green (1956) 143 C.A.2d 470, 299 P.2d 890, an elevator fell and injured plaintiff. Held, F, the beneficial owner, was liable, but G, who took title to the building as an accommodation and became a resulting trustee, was not. (143 C.A.2d 472.)

Richman was distinguished in Bianchi v. Western Title Ins. & Guaranty Co. (1970) 14 C.A.3d 235, 96 C.R. 750. A group of 13 owners of shares in a building made an agreement with defendant, under which the latter held title, but was exempted from liability for any act relating to the property. Plaintiff, a maintenance man, was injured as a result of allegedly unsafe condition of the building. He sued defendant and a nonsuit was granted. Held, judgment of dismissal reversed. The opinion left open the general question whether the holder of a bare legal title is immune; however, the facts (14 C.A.3d 240) showed a greater involvement by defendant:

- (a) Defendant applied for and obtained a permit in its own name to operate elevators in the building.
- (b) Inspection of the elevators was done by its insurance company, and the engineer's report on the condition of the property was under defendant's name.
- (c) After a prior claim of injury, the insurance company's agent described defendant as the assured in his "notice of loss."
- (d) Defendant and all the beneficial owners were insured under the same policy with the same company, and defendant gave the company control over defense of the litigation.
- (e) If the "syndicate" did not maintain the premises or pay insurance premiums, defendant could require corrective action or withdraw.

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

c. Duty to Person Coming on Land.

1. Traditional Status Classification.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1085

[§ 1085] Traditional Status Classification.

A distinction has traditionally been made as to the duties owed to three classes of persons: trespassers (infra, §1094), licensees (infra, §1100), and invitees (infra, §1113). (See generally Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 C.2d 133, 136, 148 P.2d 19; Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 113, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.1; Rest.2d, Torts §§333 et seq., 340 et seq.; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §68 et seq.; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 72; 22 A.L.R.4th 294 [modern status of rules conditioning landowner's liability on injured party's status as invitee, licensee, or trespasser].)

Although the great majority of American cases still continue to use the invitee-licensee-trespasser approach, it has been criticized by writers and courts as unsound in theory and undesirable in practice. "Such an approach requires a court to first determine the precise status of the visitor, which is sometimes a most difficult task, and then to determine from the cases whether the owner has violated any duty owed to a member of such a class. Such an approach is unrealistic, arbitrary, and inelastic. The point where the duties toward members of each of the classes begins or ends, or where it should begin or end, or where the duty not to act becomes supplemented by the duty to act, is almost impossible of perception. It is no wonder that exceedingly fine distinctions have been developed so that the law is most confused in this field." (Fernandez v. Consolidated Fisheries (1950) 98 C.A.2d 91, 96, 219 P.2d 73; see Boucher v. American Bridge Co. (1950) 95 C.A.2d 659, 667, 213 P.2d 537 [comparing California cases and Restatement]; *Carey v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

c. Duty to Person Coming on Land.

2. Repudiation of Traditional Classification.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1086

[§ 1086] Repudiation of Traditional Classification.

In Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, the California Supreme Court repudiated the trespasser-licensee-invitee classification and substituted the basic approach of foreseeability of injury to others. Plaintiff was the social guest of defendant in her apartment. The knob of the cold water faucet on the bathroom basin had been cracked, and, one month before the accident, defendant had asked her lessors to replace it. Plaintiff, using the bathroom, received severe injuries to his hand when the faucet broke. The trial judge gave summary judgment for defendant, following the general rule that a social guest is only a licensee, to whom the possessor owes no duty to warn of a dangerous condition. (See infra, §1101.) Held, reversed.

(a) General principle of liability for negligence. Under C.C. 1714, all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent injury to others, unless an exception is recognized for reasons of public policy, in accordance with broad criteria newly declared. (69 C.2d 111.) (See supra, §833.)

(b) Traditional licensee rule and exceptions. The rule that a licensee takes the premises as he or she finds them has lately been subjected to two chief exceptions: (1) Where there is active negligence, and (2) where the known dangerous condition is a trap. (See infra, §1101.) Cases on both are indicative of "the subtleties and confusion" resulting from application of the common law principles and from attempted definitions of licensee and invitee. "The distinctions which the common law draws between licensee and invitee were inherited from a culture deeply rooted to the land, a culture which traced many of its standards to a heritage of feudalism. In an effort to do justice in an industrialized urban society, with its complex economic and individual relationships, modern common-law courts have found it necessary to formulate increasingly subtle verbal refinements, to create subclassifications among traditional common-law categories, and to delineate fine gradations in the standards of care which the landowner owes to each. Yet even within a single jurisdiction, the classifications and subclassifications bred by the common law have produced confusion and conflict. As new distinctions have been spawned, older ones have become obscured. Through this semantic morass the common law has moved, unevenly and with hesitation, towards 'imposing on owners and occupiers a single duty of reasonable care in all the circumstances.' " (69 C.2d 116.)

(c) Classifications repudiated. The immunities and the exceptions to the immunities often do not reflect the major facts that should govern liability; some courts have rejected the common law distinctions and have approached the issue on the basis of ordinary principles of negligence; and continued adherence to the classifications can only lead to injustice and further fictions and confusion. "We decline to follow and perpetuate such rigid classifications. The proper test to be applied to the liability of the possessor of land in accordance with section 1714 of the Civil Code is whether in the management of his property he has acted as a reasonable man in view of the probability of injury to others, and, although the plaintiff's status as a trespasser, licensee, or invitee may in the light of the facts giving rise to such status have some bearing on the question of liability, the status is not determinative." (69 C.2d 119.)

(d) New rule applied. Because the case was presented on a motion for summary judgment, it was assumed that defendant had knowledge of the dangerous condition, that the defect was not obvious, that plaintiff was about to come in contact with it, and that defendant neither remedied the condition nor warned plaintiff of it. "Where the occupier of land is aware of a concealed condition involving in the absence of precautions an unreasonable risk of harm to those coming in contact with it and is aware that a person on the premises is about to come in contact with it, the trier of fact can reasonably conclude that a failure to warn or to repair the condition constitutes negligence. Whether or not a guest has a right to expect that his host will remedy dangerous conditions on his account, he should reasonably be entitled to rely upon a warning of the dangerous condition so that he, like the host, will be in a position to take special precautions when he comes in contact with it." (69 C.2d 119.)

(e) Alternate theories. The same result could have been reached by applying the active negligence or trap exceptions, or by expanding the concept of invitee to include any person invited. (69 C.2d 120.)

Two justices dissented. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §237; 58 Cal. L. Rev. 311; 9 Santa Clara Lawyer 179; 22 A.L.R.4th 294 [modern status of rules conditioning landowner's liability on injured party's status as invitee, licensee, or trespasser].)

The approach of Rowland v. Christian has been applied in many later cases. The following are illustrative of decisions on liability of landowners and possessors:

(1) Licensee. (See Carlson v. Ross (1969) 271 C.A.2d 29, 30, 76 C.R. 209, infra, §1102; Fitch v. LeBeau (1969) 1 C.A.3d 320, 81 C.R. 722, infra, §1102.)

(5) Liability of landlord. (See Brennan v. Cockrell Inv. (1973) 35 C.A.3d 796, 111 C.R. 122; Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 C.A.3d 504, 513, 118 C.R. 741; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §644.)

Following the decision in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, the BAJI Committee eliminated its previous instructions defining trespasser, licensee, business visitor, public invitee, and social guest, and substituted one general instruction on "Duty of Owner, Occupant or Lessor of Premises." BAJI No. 8.01 provides as follows:

"The [owner] [occupant] [lessor] of premises is under a duty to exercise ordinary care in the [use] [maintenance] [or] [management] of such premises in order to avoid exposing [persons] [or] [other property] to an unreasonable risk of harm. [Such duty exists whether the risk of harm is caused by the natural condition of such premises or by an artificial condition created on such premises.] [Such duty exists even when the unreasonable risk of harm is caused by the criminal conduct of a third person which, in the exercise of reasonable care, is or should be foreseeable [or where the [owner] [occupant] [lessor] of the premises maintains the property in such a way as to increase the risk of criminal activity].] [Such duty is owed to persons on the premises and to persons off the premises.] A failure to fulfill this duty is negligence."

"[Ordinary care is that care which persons of ordinary prudence would use in order to avoid injury to themselves or others under circumstances similar to those shown by the evidence.]"

"[This duty of care is owed only to such persons as the [owner] [occupant] [lessor], as a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances should have foreseen would be exposed to such a risk of harm.]"

"[You shall determine whether a person under the same or similar circumstances as the defendant ____ should have foreseen that the plaintiff ____ would be exposed to an unreasonable risk of harm. If you so find, you are instructed that the defendant ____ owed plaintiff ____ such a duty of care and you should determine if the defendant exercised such care, considering all the surrounding circumstances shown by the evidence.]"

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

BAJI, No. 8.01 was revised in 2008 without substantive change. CACI instructions related to premises liability: CACI, No. 1009 was repealed in 2007 and replaced by CACI, No. 1009A [Liability to Employees of Independent Contractors for Unsafe Concealed Conditions] and CACI, No. 1009B [Liability to Employees of Independent Contractors for Unsafe Conditions--Retained Control or Defective Equipment]. In 2008, the title of CACI, No. 1003 was changed to "Unsafe Conditions" and the title of CACI, No. 1011 was changed to "Constructive Notice Regarding Dangerous Conditions on Property."

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

d. Duty to Person Outside Land.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1088

[§ 1088] In General.

(1) General Rule. Normally, the duties of landowners and possessors do not extend to persons outside the land, e.g., on adjacent land or on the highway. (Scott v. Chevron U.S.A. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 510, 516, 6 C.R.2d 810 [landowner who erected fixed object near highway had no duty to motorists injured when their car was hit by drunk driver who had hit guardrail erected near the object]; see Medina v. Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 C.A.4th 477, 481, 46 C.R.2d 871, infra, §1152, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §363 et seq.; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 473 [dioxin contamination]; 37 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [injury from environmental condition on neighboring land]; 57 Am.Jur. Trials 395 [toxic tort litigation]; 8 A.L.R.5th 177 [liability for injury or death from collision with guy wire].)

(2) Exceptions. There are some exceptions:

(a) Dangerous Activity. The owner or possessor is under the usual liability to any persons, including those outside the land, where his or her dangerous activities cause harm. (Rest.2d, Torts §371.)

(b) Artificial Condition or Dangerous Disrepair. The owner or possessor is liable for creating or maintaining dangerous artificial conditions, or for permitting dangerous disrepair. (See Gerberich v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1935) 5 C.2d 46, 51, 53 P.2d 948 [unmarked and unlighted power pole, located on dirt shoulder of highway]; Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 C.4th 1149, 1158 60 C.R.2d 448, 929 P.2d 1239, infra, §1092 [landowner exercising control over adjacent city-owned property had duty to protect others from injury from city-owned meter box]; Coole v. Haskins (1943) 57 C.A.2d 737, 741, 135 P.2d 176 [defendant restaurant keeper negligently allowed garbage to accumulate, attracting rats, which infested living quarters in adjoining premises and bit plaintiff tenants]; Rest.2d, Torts §364, 365; 1 U.S.F. L. Rev. 321 [duty to warn aircraft of presence of high structures]; 81 A.L.R.2d 897 [glass falling from window, door, or wall]; 97 A.L.R.2d 1431 [falling objects].)

(c) Deceptive Strip Adjacent to Public Way. Liability is incurred where the landowner paves or otherwise improves, maintains, or alters a strip of his or her own land next to the highway or street in such a manner as to deceive persons into thinking the strip is part of the public way. (Barlow v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1950) 96 C.A.2d 979, 985, 216 P.2d 903; Rest.2d, Torts §367, and Special Note; see 19 A.L.R.2d 1053, 1075 [liability for injury on parking or strip between sidewalk and curb].) In Barlow, defendant constructed a drainage channel and a pavement similar to the street without a barrier or other protection. On a dark night, decedent walked on the pavement and fell into the channel. Held, following the Restatement rule, defendant was liable. (See Hayashi v. Alameda County Flood Control & Water Conservation Dist. (1959) 167 C.A.2d 584, 590, 334 P.2d 1048, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §970 [property damage from negligently maintained levee; following Restatement]; 44 A.L.R.3d 355 [defective condition of private road or driveway].)

(d) Excavation or Condition Dangerous to Travelers. A further ground of liability is the maintenance of an excavation or other dangerous artificial condition on the landowner's own land, but so near the highway as to involve an unreasonable risk to travelers who might be forced off the road by other traffic, or skid or slip while walking. (See Carlton v. Pacific Coast Gasoline Co. (1952) 110 C.A.2d 177, 184, 242 P.2d 391 [defendant lessee of land plowed it up to within 3 feet of paved area of highway]; Rest.2d, Torts §368.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

d. Duty to Person Outside Land.

2. Natural Conditions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1089

[§ 1089] Natural Conditions.

The common law rule of nonliability for harm caused by natural conditions was abrogated in Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 C.3d 358, 178 C.R. 783, 636 P.2d 1121. Defendant owned a 90-acre parcel of land in Malibu, California, which contained a landslide extending beyond its boundaries. The landslide, evident since the early 1900s, exhibited periodic cycles of activity and dormancy. It was a natural condition, not affected by any of defendant's activities on the 90-acre parcel. In 1978, heavy rains triggered a major movement of the slide, causing plaintiff's home to press against the home of his neighbor S. S sued plaintiff to enjoin the encroachment, and plaintiff filed a cross-complaint against defendant for damages to his home, alleging defendant's negligent failure to correct or control the landslide condition. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Common law rule. The possessor of land is liable for harm caused by artificial conditions, but the common law gave an absolute immunity for harm caused by conditions considered natural in origin. "[N]o matter how great the harm threatened to his neighbor, or to one passing by, and no matter how small the effort needed to eliminate it, a possessor of land had no duty to remedy conditions that were natural in origin." (30 C.3d 362.)

(b) Developing case law rejecting distinction. In recent years, 13 states and the District of Columbia have begun to apply ordinary negligence principles in determining a possessor's liability for harm caused by a natural condition. (30 C.3d 364.) The cases all involved injuries caused by falling trees (30 C.3d 365), but the decisions do not merely create a specific exception to the general rule of nonliability. "Instead, the courts are moving toward jettisoning the common law rule in its entirety and replacing it with a single duty of reasonable care in the maintenance of property." (30 C.3d 365.) And the duty has not been imposed solely on possessors of land in urban and suburban areas; some cases extend it to rural areas. (30 C.3d 365.)

(c) Modern Restatement Rule. Rest.2d, Torts §840(2), recognizing liability for natural conditions of land, still limits the reach of the duty to persons traveling on the public streets and highways; but the Comment notes that at the time of formulation of the new rule, authority was insufficient to support a position on a duty to adjoining landowners. (30 C.3d 366.)

(d) Effect of Rowland case. The broad declaration in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, has resulted in the striking down of common law immunities that could not withstand critical scrutiny. (30 C.3d 363.) The theory that failure to prevent a natural condition from causing harm is mere nonfeasance is no longer tenable. Modern cases recognize that, after Rowland, a possessor of land has a duty to act affirmatively for the protection of individuals who come on the land, based on possession and the attendant right to control and manage the premises. (30 C.3d 368, 369, 370.)

(e) Policy considerations. Under the old rule, a possessor of land in California would owe a duty of care to protect trespassers, invitees, and licensees, but not neighbors, from harm threatened by a natural condition of the land. "It is difficult to see why this court should support a rule which would allow a trespasser to bring an action in negligence that would be denied a neighbor, where both were standing on either side of the possessor's boundary line and were both struck by a dead limb from his tree." (30 C.3d 370.)

(f) New rule declared. The erosion of the doctrinal underpinning of the rule of nonliability is evident from even a cursory review of the case law. Also evident is the lack of congruence between the old common law rule of nonliability and the relevant factors that should determine whether a duty exists. All this leads to but one conclusion: "The distinction between artificial and natural conditions should be rejected." (30 C.3d 371.) (See 30 C.3d 372, footnote 9, disapproving inconsistent language in prior cases, including Coates v. Chimm (1958) 51 C.2d 304, 308, 332 P.2d 289; Potter v. Empress Theatre Co. (1949) 91 C.A.2d 4, 12, 204 P.2d 120; Wisher v. Fowler (1970) 7 C.A.3d 225, 228, 86 C.R. 582; Moeller v. Fleming (1982) 136 C.A.3d 241, 245, 186 C.R. 24 [under Sprecher, liability could be imposed for allowing roots of tree on property to cause break in adjacent public sidewalk]; Pultz v. Holgerson (1986) 184 C.A.3d 1110, 1115, 229 C.R. 531 [following Moeller]; 41 Proof of Facts 3d 109 [governmental liability for failure to maintain trees near public way]; 16 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 625 [Nonfeasance Immunity Slides by the California Supreme Court]; 54 A.L.R.2d 1195 [tree or limb overhanging street or highway]; 94 A.L.R.3d 1160 [tree or limb falling onto highway]; 100 A.L.R.3d 510 [tree or stump on land abutting highway]; 54 A.L.R.4th 530 [tree or limb falling onto adjoining property]; 66 A.L.R.4th 885 [vegetation obscuring view at railroad crossing]; 69 A.L.R.4th 1092 [vegetation obscuring view at highway intersection].)

In Swann v. Olivier (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1324, 28 C.R.2d 23, Sprecher was treated as applying an exception to the general rule precluding one from being held liable, as a landowner, for injuries that occur on property outside his or her ownership, possession, or control, and it was held that this exception did not apply to a person who was invited to a private beach, but who was injured while in public waters. (22 C.A.4th 1329, footnote 8.) Plaintiff was the friend of a guest at a party being given on the private beach by an acquaintance of two members of the association. Plaintiff sued the association for failing to warn him of the hazards in the surf that was slightly beyond the private beach. Held, summary judgment for the association affirmed.

(a) A corollary to the general rule is that the landowner has no duty to warn of dangers beyond his or her own property unless the landowner created those dangers. (22 C.A.4th 1329, 1330.) "In the present case ... any thought of 'control' over the area of injury is out of the question." (22 C.A.4th 1333.) Moreover, no recognized exception to the no-duty-to-warn rule applies, because defendant received no commercial benefit from plaintiff's use of the surf area, and it did not impose or create any palpable external effect on the area. (22 C.A.4th 1333.)

(b) In two cases where potential liability for injuries sustained in the surf was recognized--Buchanan v. Newport Beach (1975) 50 C.A.3d 221, 123 C.R. 338, and Gonzales v. San Diego (1982) 130 C.A.3d 882, 182 C.R. 73, supra, §254--the surf was publicly owned and the defendant was a public entity. Moreover, the holding in Buchanan was based on the special statutory obligation imposed on public entities by Govt.C. 835 (see supra, §258). Here, defendant is a private owner not subject to that statute. (22 C.A.4th 1334, 1335.) (See Princess Hotels Int. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 C.A.4th 645, 648, 39 C.R.2d 457 [hotel had no duty to warn patrons of tides and other dangers at adjacent beach; following Swann].)

Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 C.4th 1149, 1162, 60 C.R.2d 448, 929 P.2d 1239, infra, §1092, disapproved Swann and Princess Hotels Int. to the extent that they held that a landowner may be found liable for an injury on adjacent property only if he or she not only exercised control over that property, but also derived a commercial benefit from the portion of the property that was in a dangerous condition.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Garcia v. Paramount Citrus Assn. (2008) 164 C.A.4th 1448, 1459, 80 C.R.3d 512 [owner of private road did not owe duty of care to place warning sign on road alerting drivers to approaching intersection with public road, even though intersection was obscured by owner's trees from vantage point outside public right-of-way; burden of imposing asserted duty was relatively high, foreseeability of harm to injured party traveling on public road was low, landowner was not "morally blameworthy," and speeding drivers, such as other driver here, might not have time to react to warning].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

e. Conditions or Activities Outside Land.

1. General Rule of Nonliability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1090

[§ 1090] General Rule of Nonliability.

(1) In General. The duty of the landowner or possessor relates to conditions or activities on the land; he or she is ordinarily not liable for harm resulting from conditions or activities outside, on adjoining land or on the highway, street, or sidewalk. (Corcoran v. San Mateo (1953) 122 C.A.2d 355, 359, 265 P.2d 102 [adjoining land]; Seaber v. Hotel Del Coronado (1991) 1 C.A.4th 481, 491, 2 C.R.2d 405 [fact that crosswalk was installed in front of hotel for benefit of its patrons did not render it liable for injury, where crosswalk was used by general public as well]; Hamilton v. Gage Bowl (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1706, 1712, 8 C.R.2d 819 [sign extending slightly over defendant's parking lot, but attached to building on adjacent land; defendant had no control over sign, and hence no duty to check it for safety]; Swann v. Olivier (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1324, 1333, 28 C.R.2d 23, supra, §1089 [homeowners association had no duty to warn plaintiff of surf dangers off its private beach]; see California Premises Liability, §1:56 et seq.)

The most common illustration is the unsafe street or sidewalk in front of the premises. In the absence of statute or ordinance, abutting owners are under no obligation to keep it in safe condition for the public. (Bolles v. Hilton & Paley (1931) 119 C.A. 126, 127, 6 P.2d 335; Schaefer v. Lenahan (1944) 63 C.A.2d 324, 326, 146 P.2d 929; Winston v. Hansell (1958) 160 C.A.2d 570, 572, 325 P.2d 569; see Rest.2d, Torts §349; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 77.)

In Galiano v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 534, 67 P.2d 388, defendant maintained a canal over which a highway was later constructed. The state Highway Department made the usual concrete slab and dirt shoulder; but placed no railings or markers indicating the existence of the canal. On a dark night, decedent's car collided with another near this point, and decedent, apparently with the intention of throwing away liquor, walked over to the side of the highway and stepped or fell into the canal. Held, defendant was not liable; the highway itself was safe, and only when decedent left the car and went off the highway for personal reasons was there any danger. Assuming, however, that the absence of a barrier or markers was a negligent omission, the liability would rest on the Highway Department, and not on the owner of the canal, for the duty to maintain a highway in condition safe for travel rests upon the public authorities, and not upon the owner of land that it crosses. (20 C.A.2d 539.)

(2) Statutory Duty. Sts. & H.C. 5610 et seq. require abutting owners, upon notice by the superintendent of streets, to repair streets or sidewalks when they are in a dangerous condition, and makes them liable for failure to do so, after notice. But the liability thus created is to pay for the repairs or reimburse the city for doing so, and not to pay damages to an injured individual. (Schaefer v. Lenahan, supra, 63 C.A.2d 332; Holdridge v. Drewes (1968) 257 C.A.2d 626, 629, 65 C.R. 189, citing the text; Williams v. Foster (1989) 216 C.A.3d 510, 521, 265 C.R. 15; Selger v. Steven Bros. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1585, 1590, 1591, 272 C.R. 544; Contreras v. Anderson (1997) 59 C.A.4th 188, 195, 69 C.R.2d 69 [city ordinance requiring abutting landowners to maintain public sidewalks did not impose legal duty of care toward members of public; following Schaefer and Williams]; see Rest.2d, Torts §288, Comment a; 30 Proof of Facts 2d 643 [sidewalk defects]; 71 A.L.R.2d 793 [pedestrian injured by snow in street]; 82 A.L.R.2d 998 [snow removal statutes]; 88 A.L.R.2d 331 [condition of sidewalk]; 39 A.L.R.3d 579 [condition of adjacent premises]; 58 A.L.R.3d 1085 [liability of abutting owner for injury to municipal employee engaged in constructing or repairing sewers or drains]; BAJI, No. 8.50.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.1071, 1125, 1150

(2) Statutory Duty. See 86 Proof of Facts 3d 327 [liability of abutting owner for sidewalk defects; superseding 30 Proof of Facts 2d 643, text, p. 420].

(3) (New) No Preemption. A city ordinance that makes an adjacent landowner liable to third persons who are injured as a result of dangerous conditions on a city-owned sidewalk is not preempted by state law. (Gonzales v. San Jose (2004) 125 C.A.4th 1127, 1133, 23 C.R.3d 178.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

e. Conditions or Activities Outside Land.

2. Defective Structure.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1091

[§ 1091] Defective Structure.

The owner's freedom from liability for conditions on the sidewalk or street (supra, §1090) disappears when he or she builds something there, such as a lightwell or a driveway. The owner is then under a duty to keep it in repair. (See Monsch v. Pellissier (1922) 187 C. 790, 792, 204 P. 224 [vault under sidewalk with iron grating and glass; hole in glass]; Granucci v. Claasen (1928) 204 C. 509, 512, 269 P. 437 [wooden driveway with loose planks]; Peters v. San Francisco (1953) 41 C.2d 419, 423, 260 P.2d 55 [slope on sidewalk to reach garage 11 inches below sidewalk level]; San Francisco v. Ho Sing (1958) 51 C.2d 127, 129, 330 P.2d 802 [sidewalk skylight with crack 2 inches wide and 18 inches long]; Rest.2d, Torts §350; 31 A.L.R.2d 1334 [liability of owner or occupant for condition of covering over opening or vault in sidewalk]; 51 A.L.R.4th 602 [private utility's liability for collision with pole within or beside highway]; cf. Winston v. Hansell (1958) 160 C.A.2d 570, 576, 325 P.2d 569 [mere allegation that defendant used sidewalk as driveway was insufficient where there was no structure or alteration]; BAJI, No. 8.50.)

The duty to maintain structures or artificial conditions built outside one's property "runs with the land"; i.e., the landowner is liable even though the condition was created by a predecessor in title or possession. (Sexton v. Brooks (1952) 39 C.2d 153, 157, 245 P.2d 496; Peters v. San Francisco, supra, 41 C.2d 423.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

e. Conditions or Activities Outside Land.

3. Hazardous Condition.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1092

[§ 1092] Hazardous Condition.

(1) In General. An owner who creates a hazardous condition by placing or leaving materials on the land, e.g., escaping oil or scattered debris, is liable. (Kopfinger v. Grand Cen. Public Market (1964) 60 C.2d 852, 859, 37 C.R. 65, 389 P.2d 529; see 18 A.L.R.3d 428 [ice formed on sidewalk due to artificial conditions on abutting property]; 5 A.L.R.5th 1 [pollution from underground storage tank]; BAJI, Nos. 8.50.1, 8.51.)

In Kopfinger, plaintiff, an elderly woman, slipped and fell on the sidewalk in front of the entrance to defendant's market, which she was about to enter. The cause of the fall was a small piece of meat. The evidence showed that defendant M, operating retail meat stalls, took numerous deliveries of meat by wheeling or dragging it from the trucks. The stalls were regularly swept every 15 or 20 minutes, but sweeping the sidewalk followed no regular pattern. Held, reversing judgment of nonsuit, an inference could have been drawn that defendants permitted a dangerous condition to exist for a period of time in excess of that which would constitute due care. The fact that the deliveries were made by independent contractors was immaterial, for the negligence consisted of failure to clean up after the deliveries. (60 C.2d 858.) As to the duty, the court generalized its rule as follows: "When the activities of a business enterprise, conducted for its economic benefit, are such as to create a hazard on the public sidewalk, of which fact the defendants know or have reason to know, and particularly when, as here, the sidewalk is immediately adjacent to the nonenclosed aisles of a large supermarket catering to the passing pedestrian traffic, there exists a duty to protect from injury those so endangered." (60 C.2d 857.)

However, in Jones v. Deeter (1984) 152 C.A.3d 798, 199 C.R. 825, the court emphasized that, under the special circumstances involved, defendant was not responsible for the hazard on the adjoining property. Defendant owned property abutting on a sidewalk and parkway. The sidewalk and parkway were both dedicated to the city, and under Sts. & H.C. 5610, the owner had a duty to maintain them. Magnolia trees growing in the parkway had roots that pressed up underneath the concrete of the sidewalk, causing a break on which plaintiff tripped and fell. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The abutting owner is liable to pedestrians for a defect in the sidewalk attributable to his or her own negligence;

e.g., where the abutting owner left dangerous material on the sidewalk or altered it for his or her own benefit. (152 C.A.3d 803, citing Kopfinger and Moeller v. Fleming (1982) 136 C.A.3d 241, 245, 186 C.R. 24, supra, §1089.)

(b) If the condition is not attributable to the owner, he or she is not liable. Here, the owner merely mowed and watered the parkway; the city habitually maintained the trees and surface, and thereby assumed the duty to keep them in reasonably safe condition. (152 C.A.3d 805.) If the city wished to place that duty on the abutting owner, it could do so under Sts. & H.C. 5600 et seq.; but, until this is done, "it would be fundamentally unfair to hold an abutting owner liable to pedestrians injured by defects in the sidewalk and parkway, when past practice has given that owner every reason to believe that the City has undertaken the responsibility to repair these defects." (152 C.A.3d 806.)

(2) Duties of Landowner Exercising Control Over Adjoining Property. In Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 C.4th 1149, 60 C.R.2d 448, 929 P.2d 1239, defendants owned land adjacent to a 10-foot strip of city property. On the portion of this property immediately bordering defendant's land was a water meter box embedded in the lawn with the cover either broken or missing. Plaintiff tripped over this box and sued defendants for the resulting personal injuries. The trial judge sustained defendants' demurrer on the ground that the box and the property on which it was located were not in defendants' control. Held, reversed.

(a) The proper test to be applied to the liability of the possessor of land is whether the possessor has managed the land as would a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others. This duty of safe management requires persons to maintain land in their possession and control in a reasonably safe condition. The duty exists even where the dangerous condition on the land is caused by an instrumentality that the landowner does not own or control. Thus, in the present case, if the condition of the meter box created a dangerous condition on land that was in defendants' possession or control, defendants owed a duty to take reasonable measures to protect persons on the land from that danger, whether or not defendants owned, or exercised control over, the meter box itself. (14 C.4th 1155.)

(b) Hamilton v. Gage Bowl (1992) 6 C.A. 4th 1706, 8 C.R.2d 819, supra, §1090, is distinguishable. The issue there was whether defendants had a duty to discover a dangerous condition located on property that they did not own. In the present case, in addition to evidence that defendants controlled the adjacent property, there is some proof that defendants knew that the meter box lacked a cover and was in a dangerous condition. (14 C.4th 1156.)

(c) It is clear that defendants did not own the land on which the meter was located. However, a long line of cases has established that a person who exercises "control" over land has a duty to maintain it in a safe condition. Whether defendants exercised this control is a question of fact. (14 C.4th 1157.) This is so, because evidence was introduced that defendants maintained the two-foot strip on which the meter was located, and that, after plaintiff's accident, they fenced their entire lawn, including the strip. Essentially, they treated the land as if it were an extension of their lawn. This evidence, although not conclusively establishing that defendants controlled the property, was sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact regarding control. (14 C.4th 1161.)

(d) Defendants did not have possession or control of the meter box itself, and therefore lacked the power to repair it. However, because it was located on property that they did control, they had a duty, in view of evidence that they had knowledge that the meter box posed a dangerous condition, to protect others from it. This duty could have been performed by a warning sign or by erecting a fence around the box. They did not have to actually repair it. (14 C.4th 1157.)

(e) A dissenting justice maintains that a landowner may be held liable for an injury on adjacent property only if he or she both exercises control over that property and derives a commercial benefit from the portion of the property that was in a dangerous condition. This position is without merit. It is true that some decisions have held that "commercial benefit" is a factor in determining whether a landowner has exercised control over certain property, but no decision has held that it is required. (14 C.4th 1162.) (See Contreras v. Anderson (1997) 59 C.A.4th 188, 197, 69 C.R.2d 69 ["neighborly maintenance" by sweeping and gardening in adjoining city-owned planting strip was insufficient to support finding of control; distinguishing Alcaraz].)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

1. In General.

e. Conditions or Activities Outside Land.

4. City's Liability and Right of Indemnity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1093

[§ 1093] City's Liability and Right of Indemnity.

(1) City's Concurrent Liability to Injured Person. The argument has been unsuccessfully made by cities that the primary statutory duty as to conditions on a sidewalk or street is on the landowner (see supra, §§1091, 1092), and that the city's liability is derivative only. It is now established that the city's statutory liability to the injured person is that of a concurrent tortfeasor (see supra, §49) and can be enforced independently of that of the landowner. (Peters v. San Francisco (1953) 41 C.2d 419, 429, 260 P.2d 55.)

(2) City's Right of Indemnity From Landowner. Another unsuccessful argument, made by landowners, was that, because the city is a concurrent tortfeasor, if it is compelled to pay a judgment it cannot obtain reimbursement from the landowner because of the rule against contribution between tortfeasors. If contribution (sharing the loss proportionately) were involved, the contribution statute (supra, §105) would be a complete answer. But contribution is not involved. As between the city and the landowner, the primary responsibility for the safe condition of a structure created for the landowner's exclusive benefit is on the landowner, and a city that is compelled to pay an injured party is entitled to indemnity, i.e., reimbursement of the entire sum from the landowner. (San Francisco v. Ho Sing (1958) 51 C.2d 127, 138, 330 P.2d 802; Reinach v. San Francisco (1958) 164 C.A.2d 763, 769, 331 P.2d 1006; see 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 293; supra, §112 et seq.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

2. Trespassers.

a. Who Are Trespassers.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1094

[§ 1094] Who Are Trespassers.

Although the trespasser classification has lost much of its importance, it still has some significance. (See infra, §1096 et seq.)

(1) Trespasser on Land. A trespasser comes on the land without privilege or consent. (Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. (1935) 4 C.2d 499, 501, 50 P.2d 803; Kirkpatrick v. Damianakes (1936) 15 C.A.2d 446, 449, 59 P.2d 556 [plaintiff who drove her car into private alley by mistake was trespasser]; see Rest.2d, Torts §329; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.3; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §232; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §121;.)

Several cases, difficult to distinguish, deal with the situation where the plaintiff is a trespasser but the defendant is not the owner of the land.

In Leslie v. Monterey (1934) 139 C.A. 715, 719, 34 P.2d 837, plaintiff was held a trespasser as to a power company while working on a strip of land over which it had placed power lines under a franchise. (See 30 A.L.R.3d 777 [trespasser injured on land over which electricity supplier ran wires that caused harm].) And in Hamakawa, plaintiff went out on a pier for a social visit. Defendant stevedoring company, though not the owner, had the right of control over the pier, and therefore plaintiff was a trespasser as to it. (See Palmquist v. Mercer (1954) 43 C.2d 92, 101, 272 P.2d 26 [oil company, using flood control district property with express permission of district, had no greater duty than landowner towards persons using land by sufferance].)

On the other hand, in Langazo v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1939) 32 C.A.2d 678, 90 P.2d 825, decedent, walking across a field, was killed by contact with an abandoned telephone line, negligently allowed to sag in violation of a Railroad Commission safety order. Held, defendant power company was liable. (a) The company merely held an easement on the land, and, though decedent was a trespasser as to the landowner, this defense was unavailable to defendant. (32 C.A.2d 686.) (b) Even if defendant was regarded as the landowner, it might still be liable for breach of a statutory duty to the general public; the Commission's order had the force of law, and plaintiff, though a trespasser, was a member of the class intended to be protected. (32 C.A.2d 690.) (See Dunn v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1954) 43 C.2d 265, 276, 272 P.2d 745 [approving Langazo].)

(2) Trespasser on Personal Property. Most of the cases deal with trespass on real property, but the same rules apply to trespass on personal property. (See Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 170, 176, 101 C.R. 908, 496 P.2d 1276, infra, §1096; Albers v. Shell Co. of Calif. (1930) 104 C.A. 733, 738, 286 P. 752 [plaintiff rode with truck driver in violation of company rules]; Fernandez v. Consolidated Fisheries (1950) 98 C.A.2d 91, 97, 219 P.2d 73 [plaintiff climbed on delivery truck]; Billeter v. Rhodes & Jamieson (1951) 104 C.A.2d 137, 144, 231 P.2d 93 [invitee, employee of general contractor, exceeding scope of invitation by climbing defendant subcontractor's concrete mixer]; Herrera v. Southern Pac. Ry Co. (1961) 188 C.A.2d 441, 447, 10 C.R. 575 [boys hopped on empty freight car in motion]; Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 129, 135, 84 C.R. 449, infra, §1097; 65 A.L.R.2d 798 [liability of owner or operator of motor vehicle to adult trespasser].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

2. Trespassers.

b. Former Limited Duties.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1095

[§ 1095] Former Limited Duties.

The following summary of the general law preceding Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, and infra, §1102, will be helpful in determining the effect of the decision.

(1) Unknown Trespasser. The landowner had merely to refrain from intentional harms or "wilful or wanton injury," and no duty was owed to keep the premises in safe condition or to carry on activities carefully. (Toomey v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1890) 86 C. 374, 379, 24 P. 1074; Giannini v. Campodonico (1917) 176 C. 548, 550, 169 P. 80; Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. (1935) 4 C.2d 499, 502, 50 P.2d 803; Flick v. Ducey & Attwood Rock Co. (1945) 70 C.A.2d 70, 78, 160 P.2d 569; Wilson v. Long Beach (1945) 71 C.A.2d 235, 238, 162 P.2d 658, 163 P.2d 501; Strother v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1949) 94 C.A.2d 525, 529, 211 P.2d 624; Boucher v. American Bridge Co. (1950) 95 C.A.2d 659, 667, 213 P.2d 537; Hume v. Hart (1952) 109 C.A.2d 614, 615, 241 P.2d 25; see Rest.2d, Torts §333; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §206; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 427.)

(2) Known Trespasser. Where the defendant knew or should have known that a trespasser had come on the land, he or she had the duty to warn of artificial conditions constituting concealed dangers, and to exercise reasonable care in carrying on activities. (Rest.2d, Torts §336, 337.) This same result had been reached under the theory that failure to warn of a trap or pitfall, or to conduct activities with due care toward a known trespasser, amounted to "wilful or wanton" conduct. (Rest.2d, Torts §336, Special Note; see Blaylock v. Jensen (1941) 44 C.A.2d 850, 852, 113 P.2d 256; Fernandez v. Consolidated Fisheries (1950) 98 C.A.2d 91, 97, 219 P.2d 73; Fernandez v. American Bridge Co. (1951) 104 C.A.2d 340, 343, 231 P.2d 548; 70 A.L.R.3d 1125 [duty to trespasser in peril through no fault of landowner].)

(3) Habitual Trespasser at Particular Place. Although a railroad company owed no duty of care to discover trespassers on its tracks, and was liable only after their presence became known, a special rule had developed to cover the situation where people had habitually and notoriously crossed the tracks, for a long period of time, with the acquiescence of the company. The company was held to a duty of care both to discover and to avoid injury to them. (Smithwick v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1929) 206 C. 291, 303, 274 P. 980; Staggs v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1955) 135 C.A.2d 492, 500, 287 P.2d 817.) The Restatement refers to these persons as trespassers who constantly intrude upon a limited area, and specifies the same duties as are owed to known trespassers. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§334,

B. Landowners and Possessors.

2. Trespassers.

c. Current Bases of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1096

[§ 1096] Current Bases of Liability.

(1) Doctrine of Rowland v. Christian. Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, involving a licensee, rejected the status classifications that limited the duties that were owed to licensees and trespassers. (See supra, §1086.) "The status of a claimant at the time of his injury no longer affects the general duty of a possessor of property to exercise ordinary care with respect to reasonable foreseeable risks of personal injury to persons coming on the property. The possessor's duty of ordinary care extends to invitees and trespassers alike, although the foreseeability of injury, and hence the degree of care required of a possessor, continues to be influenced by the likelihood that persons will be present on the property at a particular time and place, a likelihood normally considerably greater for invitees than for trespassers." (Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 129, 136, 84 C.R. 449, infra, §1097; see Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 170, 176, 101 C.R. 908, 496 P.2d 1276 ["The active passive negligence concept ... no longer represents an inflexible limitation upon the imposition of liability to trespassers or licensees"]; Cappa v. Oscar C. Holmes (1972) 25 C.A.3d 978, 983, 102 C.R. 207 [trespasser on property under construction; "in the determination whether industrial safety orders apply to persons other than workmen, no distinction may be made between trespassers, licensees, and invitees"].) In other words, under Rowland, liability to a trespasser is not precluded, but neither is it automatic. For example, the owner of undeveloped property was held not liable to trespassing migrant workers who, without his knowledge, lived on the property. (Lucas v. Pollock (1992) 7 C.A.4th 668, 675, 8 C.R.2d 918; see Jarvis v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 246, 253, 191 C.R. 29 [fact of trespass, although not determinative, has some bearing on liability].)

(2) Trespasser on Personal Property. The Rowland rule applies to persons coming on personal property as well as real property. In Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., supra, 7 C.3d 177, defendant's bent street lamp cast a bright light into decedent's apartment, making sleep difficult. (See infra, §1323.) Decedent climbed on the power pole from his fire escape to unscrew the bulb, and was electrocuted. Held, it was error to grant a nonsuit. Under the former law, defendant would not have been liable because it was not actively negligent; the danger was only from a passive condition on its property. (7 C.3d 176.) However, applying the Rowland factors, there was evidence "that PG&E knew, or at least should have known, that Calvin or his roommates had been unscrewing the bulb of the lamp post; that the presence of high voltage current constituted a high risk of harm to anyone tampering with the bulb; that reasonable safety precautions (such as straightening the bent post, locking the canopy in place, or warning of high voltage) could have been taken; and that PG&E's failure to take such precautions rendered the lamp post and bulb unsafe." (7 C.3d 178.) Hence the jury could have concluded that defendant's failure to warn or repair constituted negligence. (On contributory negligence issue, see infra, §1323.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

2. Trespassers.

d. Trespasser on Railroad Car.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1097

[§ 1097] In General.

In Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 129, 84 C.R. 449, plaintiff, a 14-year-old boy, came on to defendant's right of way. A slow-moving freight car approached, plaintiff grasped the handle bar of a box car to pull himself aboard, and the sill step gave way. He fell beneath the train, losing both legs. Held, under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, his status as a trespasser no longer precluded recovery (4 C.A.3d 136); and the older view that this conduct constituted assumption of risk as a matter of law could no longer be followed (4 C.A.3d 139).

The reasoning of this opinion seems in accord with the Rowland doctrine, but the holding has been nullified by statute. "No person who is injured while getting on, or attempting to get on, a moving locomotive or railroad car, without authority from the owner or operator of the railroad, or who, having gotten on a locomotive or railroad car while in motion without such authority, is injured while so riding or getting off, shall recover any damages from the owner or operator thereof for such injuries unless proximately caused by an intentional act of such owner or operator with knowledge that serious injury is the probable result of such act, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the probable result of such act." (C.C. 1714.7.)

The constitutionality of C.C. 1714.7 was upheld in Durham v. Los Angeles (1979) 91 C.A.3d 567, 572, 154 C.R. 243, against a number of equal protection challenges. (1) The purpose of the section is reasonable, especially in the light of P.C. 587b, making train jumping a misdemeanor. (2) The concept of statutory exceptions to the general rule of C.C. 1714 has been approved in several cases. (91 C.A.3d 573; see infra, §1103.) (See Wiley v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1990) 220 C.A.3d 177, 191, 269 C.R. 240 [child climbed onto stationary car and was injured when it began to move; C.C. 1714.7 did not apply].)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

2. Trespassers.

d. Trespasser on Railroad Car.

2. Authority Must Be Express.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1098

[§ 1098] Authority Must Be Express.

In Perez v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1990) 218 C.A.3d 462, 267 C.R. 100, plaintiff, a 13-year-old boy, was injured while attempting to board a moving railroad car owned by defendant. He argued (1) that he had defendant's implied permission to board the train, and (2) that defendant's conduct was committed with wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff declared that defendant knew that hundreds of children were jumping on and off of its trains but never told them to stop, thereby leading plaintiff to believe that he had implied permission to engage in this behavior. Plaintiff also argued that C.C. 1714.7 (supra, §1097) was intended to revive the "habitual trespasser" theory (company with knowledge of habitual trespassers has duty to protect them), in cases where trespassers habitually jump aboard moving locomotives. However, C.C. 1714.7 expressly states the only circumstances under which a train jumper may recover, i.e., he or she has express authorization to do so, or the railway is guilty of wilful misconduct. "To allow a claimant such as plaintiff the opportunity to show that he was somehow 'impliedly invited' aboard the train by railroad personnel based on nothing more than the railroad's failure to inform a claimant that he is trespassing and likely to be hurt in so doing would be to emasculate the immunity established by the statute." (218 C.A.3d 469.)

(b) Plaintiff's argument that C.C. 1714.7 did not apply because defendant's conduct was reckless was based on evidence that, although defendant knew that its tracks were used by many children as a short cut between a residential area and a park, it neither warned them of the danger nor erected barriers to stop this use. At most, plaintiff raised a triable issue of fact as to defendant's negligence, but the language of C.C. 1714.7 has been equated with wilful misconduct. (218 C.A.3d 470, citing Goncalves v. Los Banos Mining Co. (1962) 58 C.2d 916, 26 C.R. 769, 376 P.2d 833, and Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 737, 140 C.R. 905, infra, §1104.)

(c) "[T]he failure of Southern Pacific to erect barriers to prevent the public from crossing the train tracks was not, as a matter of law, wilful misconduct. While it may be argued that an accident such as plaintiff experienced might be anticipated, it is only where a defendant's conduct amounts to a wanton and reckless disregard, as opposed to a mere failure to perform a duty that a defendant can be held liable for wilful misconduct." (218 C.A.3d 470.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors. 2. Trespassers. e. Person Committing Serious Felony.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1099

[§ 1099] Person Committing Serious Felony.

(1) In General. C.C. 847, enacted after Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, provides that an owner, including a public entity, is not liable for injury or death occurring on his or her property during or after the commission of specified felonies by the injured or deceased person. (C.C. 847(a); see 17 Pacific L. J. 797; C.C. 847(b) [listing felonies, most of which involve force or violence].)

(2) Conditions. This limitation on an owner's liability is subject to the following conditions and qualifications:

- (a) It is in addition to any other available defense. (C.C. 847(g).)
- (b) It extends from the moment the felony commences until the felon leaves the property. (C.C. 847(c).)
- (c) It arises only upon the charge and conviction of the felony or a lesser included offense. (C.C. 847(e).)
- (d) The commission of the felony must be a proximate cause of the injury or death. (C.C. 847(d).)
- (e) The owner or his agent remains liable "for willful, wanton, or criminal conduct, or for willful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity. (C.C. 847(f).)

(3) Trespasser Killed or Injured. Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 C.4th 714, 80 C.R.2d 506, 968 P.2d 65, concerns the effect of C.C. 847 when the owner's actions are intentionally injurious. Plaintiff, who was shot by an employee during the robbery of a store, sued the store, its owners, and its employees, seeking compensation for his injuries. Plaintiff had been convicted of attempted grand theft in connection with the robbery, a felony listed in C.C. 847. The trial court entered summary judgment for defendants on the basis that the action was barred by that statute. Held, reversed and remanded. Limited liability under C.C. 847 may extend to the intentional use of deadly force, but use of that force must be justifiable.

(a) C.C. 847 limits the liability of the owner of real property for injuries that occur on the property during or after the injured person's commission of any one of 25 enumerated felonies. By its own terms, however, the statute "does not limit the liability of an owner or an owner's agent which otherwise exists for willful, wanton, or criminal conduct, or for willful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity." (19 C.4th 723.)

(b) The immunity conferred by C.C. 847 is not restricted to conduct relating solely to physical conditions or uses of land. By delineating only conduct-based exceptions to its provision limiting liability "for any injury or death that occurs on [the] property," the statute necessarily implies that conduct not falling within those exceptions is immunized when the statutory elements have been shown. This reading is entirely consistent with the statute's underlying purpose to protect landowners and possessors from lawsuits brought by persons injured on the property during the commission of a crime. (19 C.4th 725.)

(c) Thus, when the statutory predicates have been established, an owner is entitled to immunity unless liability otherwise exists for either wilful, wanton, or criminal conduct, or for wilful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity. Consistent with established principles of tort law, the statutory reference to wilful or wanton conduct relates to intentional wrongful conduct, done either with a knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. So construed, the immunity granted extends not only to negligent conduct, but also to intentionally injurious acts that are justifiable under the circumstances and hence not "wrongful." For instance, under C.C. 50, a person is privileged to use any necessary force to protect or defend his or her person or property from wrongful injury. (19 C.4th 727.)

(d) Although defendants' intentional use of deadly force is not actionable if not wrongful, the summary judgment must be reversed, because the record gives rise to conflicting inferences whether defendants' use of force was justified under the circumstances. It could not be said, as a matter of law, that defendants' use of force reasonably appeared necessary to prevent an impending injury. (19 C.4th 735.)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

3. Licensees.

a. Who Are Licensees.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1100

[§ 1100] Who Are Licensees.

Although the licensee classification has lost much of its importance, it still has some significance. (See infra, §1103 et seq.)

(1) In General. A licensee comes on the land by consent or permission, but usually for purposes of his or her own, having no relation to the business of the owner or occupant. (See Lindholm v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1926) 79 C.A. 34, 37, 248 P. 1033; Aguilar v. Riverdale Cooperative Creamery Assn. (1930) 104 C.A. 263, 264, 285 P. 889; Fraters v. Keeling (1937) 20 C.A.2d 490, 491, 67 P.2d 118; Boucher v. American Bridge Co. (1950) 95 C.A.2d 659, 667, 213 P.2d 537; Allen v. Jim Ruby Const. Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 428, 431, 291 P.2d 991; Miller v. Desilu Productions (1962) 204 C.A.2d 160, 163, 22 C.R. 36, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §330; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.8; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §233; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §184 et seq.)

In Fisher v. General Petroleum Corp. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 770, 776, 267 P.2d 841, defendant landowner granted a right of way to a gas company, and decedent, a bulldozer operator, was killed as a result of a dangerous condition (infra, §1101 et seq.). The written instrument referred to "a right of way and easement," but was without consideration, and recited that it was "personal to Grantee and shall not be assigned." Held, despite the loose use of the word "easement," this was a mere license or personal privilege, and the duty owed to the gas company and its employees was merely that owed to a licensee. (123 C.A.2d 776.) (See 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 130.)

(2) Social Guest. Even though "invited," a social guest is not an "invitee" in the legal sense of a business visitor (infra, §1113) but is only a licensee. (See Ashley v. Jones (1954) 126 C.A.2d 328, 332, 271 P.2d 918; Saba v. Jacobs (1955) 130 C.A.2d 717, 718, 279 P.2d 826; Free v. Furr (1956) 140 C.A.2d 378, 385, 295 P.2d 134; Simpson v. Richmond (1957) 154 C.A.2d 27, 29, 315 P.2d 435; Nelsen v. Jensen (1960) 177 C.A.2d 270, 271, 2 C.R. 180; Bylling v. Edwards (1961) 193 C.A.2d 736, 739, 14 C.R. 760; Huselton v. Browne (1964) 229 C.A.2d 487, 494, 40 C.R. 384 [social guest who renders services that are not merely incidental to social purpose of visit is invitee].)

(3) Firefighter and Police Officer. A number of jurisdictions, including California, hold that a firefighter, though entering under imperative necessity, and in performance of a public duty, is only a licensee. (See Wilson v. Union Iron Works Dry Dock Co. (1914) 167 C. 539, 544, 140 P. 250; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.14.) The same conclusion has been reached as to police officers. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.14.) But some courts either depart from this classification or enlarge the duty so as to impose liability for negligent activities or dangerous conditions. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.14; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §416 et seq.; 11 A.L.R.4th 597 [liability to firefighter coming on premises in discharge of duty]; 30 A.L.R.4th 81 [liability to police officer coming on premises in discharge of duty].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

3. Licensees.

b. Former Limited Duties.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1101

[§ 1101] Former Limited Duties.

(1) Nonliability for Dangerous Condition. Under the general law, where no active negligence is involved, the duty owed to a licensee is practically no greater than that owed to a trespasser; i.e., the licensee assumes the risks incident to the condition of the premises, and can recover only for "wilful or wanton injury." This means that the landowner need not inspect the land to discover possible or probable dangers. (See Means v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1904) 144 C. 473, 480, 77 P. 1001; Powers v. Raymond (1925) 197 C. 126, 131, 239 P. 1069; Palmquist v. Mercer (1954) 43 C.2d 92, 101, 272 P.2d 26; Hall v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1934) 137 C.A. 449, 453, 30 P.2d 1013; Robbins v. Yellow Cab Co. (1950) 100 C.A.2d 174, 176, 223 P.2d 80; Allen v. Jim Ruby Const. Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 428, 432, 291 P.2d 991; Free v. Furr (1956) 140 C.A.2d 378, 383, 295 P.2d 134; Simpson v. Richmond (1957) 154 C.A.2d 27, 30, 315 P.2d 435; Nelsen v. Jensen (1960) 177 C.A.2d 270, 272, 2 C.R. 180; Bylling v. Edwards (1961) 193 C.A.2d 736, 742, 14 C.R. 760; Rest.2d, Torts §342; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §188.)

(2) Exception Where Condition Is Known. Rest.2d, Torts, §342 recognizes a limited duty with respect to condition of the premises: The landowner is not bound to inspect and keep them safe but, if he or she knows of a dangerous condition and has reason to believe that the licensee would not discover it, the landowner must either remedy the condition or warn the licensee. Prior to Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, the California cases were in conflict on this point. (See Newman v. Fox West Coast Theatres (1948) 86 C.A.2d 428, 432, 194 P.2d 706 [approving Restatement rule]; Fisher v. General Petroleum Corp. (1954) 123 C.A.2d 770, 780, 267 P.2d 841 [contra]; Ward v. Oakley Co. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 840, 844, 271 P.2d 536 [contra, and distinguishing Newman]; Saba v. Jacobs (1955) 130 C.A.2d 717, 719, 279 P.2d 826 [dictum to same effect]; Hansen v. Richey (1965) 237 C.A.2d 475, 479, 46 C.R. 909 [Restatement rule is not California law]; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 318; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 130, 132; 2 U.S.F. L. Rev. 230.)

(3) Exception Where Safety Regulation Is Violated. A landowner may be liable even to a trespasser where he or she has violated a safety regulation prescribed for the benefit of the general public (see supra, §1094.) It necessarily follows that the owner is liable to a licensee under these circumstances. (See Longway v. McCall (1960) 181 C.A.2d 723, 734, 5 C.R. 818.)

(4) Due Care in Activities. As in the case of trespassers, where the presence of the licensee is or should reasonably be known, there is a duty to carry on activities with reasonable care. Consequently the licensee may recover for "active negligence" or an "overt act of negligence." In Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 C.2d 133, 138, 148 P.2d 19 (quoting Prosser), the court said the defendant "must run his train, operate his machinery, or back his truck with due regard for the possibility that the permission given may have been accepted and the guest may be present." (See Lucas v. Walker (1913) 22 C.A. 296, 301, 134 P. 374; Gay v. Cadwallader-Gibson Co. (1939) 34 C.A.2d 566, 570, 93 P.2d 1051; Smith v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1940) 36 C.A.2d 433, 436, 97 P.2d 863; Dunlavy v. Nead (1940) 36 C.A.2d 478, 482, 97 P.2d 1003; Yamauchi v. O'Neill (1940) 38 C.A.2d 703, 707, 102 P.2d 365; *Tesone v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

3. Licensees.

d. No Liability to Recreational Licensees.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1103

[§ 1103] In General.

(1) No Duty Where Purpose Is Recreational. Under C.C. 846, an "owner" (see infra, §§1109, 1110) owes no duty to keep his or her premises safe or to warn of hazards as to persons entering with permission for "any recreational purpose." The term includes such activities as "fishing, hunting, camping, water sports, hiking, spelunking, sport parachuting, riding, including animal riding, snowmobiling, and all other types of vehicular riding, rock collecting, sightseeing, picnicking, nature study, nature contacting, recreational gardening, gleanings, hang gliding, winter sports, and viewing or enjoying historical, archaeological, scenic, natural, or scientific sites." (On activities within definition, see infra, §§1105, 1107; on abrogation of requirement that property be suitable for recreational use, see infra, §1108.)

Except as provided in C.C. 846, the owner does not extend assurances that the premises are safe for a recreational purpose, constitute the person "the legal status of an invitee or licensee to whom a duty of care is owed," or "assume responsibility for or incur liability for any injury to person or property caused by any act of such person." (C.C. 846.) (See Charpentier v. Von Geldern (1987) 191 C.A.3d 101, 107, 111, 236 C.R. 233; Shipman v. Boething Treeland Farms (2000) 77 C.A.4th 1424, 1427, 92 C.R.2d 566 [protection afforded to private landowners by C.C. 846 is not limited to dangers presented by premises per se, but extends to dangers presented by drivers of vehicles]; Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 C.A.4th 1110, 1115, 114 C.R.2d 831 [express permission to enter property must be given by underlying fee owner; easement owner is incapable of giving this permission]; 47 A.L.R.4th 262 [effect of statute limiting landowner's liability to recreational user]; on statute's inapplicability to navigable waters, see Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1983) 145 C.A.3d 253, 257, 259, 193 C.R. 336, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §919; on constitutionality, see infra, §1104.)

(2) Exceptions: Where Liability Is Imposed. C.C. 846 recognizes existing liability for (a) wilful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity (see infra, §1111); (b) injury suffered where permission was granted for a consideration (other than that paid to the landowner by the state), or where consideration was received from others for the same purpose; and (c) injury to persons expressly invited rather than merely permitted. (See Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 310, 316, 26 C.R.2d 148 [exception was inapplicable where consideration paid did not apply to landowner, which allowed plaintiff's employer to use land for company picnic on condition that it sign hold harmless agreement; this did not constitute consideration].)

(3) Rowland v. Christian Is Not Applicable. In English v. Marin Mun. Water Dist. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 725, 136 C.R. 224, the court rejected the contention that C.C. 846 was abrogated by Rowland.

(a) In adopting the fundamental rule of C.C. 1714, i.e., that all persons are liable for injury caused by lack of care in the management of their property, the Rowland court recognized two methods of creating exceptions: legislative enactments and common law rules supported by public policy. However, the court considered only the latter method, and did not address the effect of statutory exceptions, such as C.C. 846. (66 C.A.3d 730.)

(b) The Rowland court had no power to invalidate C.C. 846 on the ground that it contravenes public policy. "As a legislative enactment it becomes public policy." (66 C.A.3d 730.) And by enacting amendments to C.C. 846 broadening the scope of its immunities, the Legislature demonstrated a clear intention to create an exception to the rule of C.C. 1714. (66 C.A.3d 731.) (See Parish v. Lloyd (1978) 82 C.A.3d 785, 788, 147 C.R. 431; 11 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 367 [agricultural landowners; argument for repeal of C.C. 846 and application of Rowland].)

(4) Recovery of Attorneys' Fees. In prescribed circumstances, the state Board of Control must allow a claim for reasonable attorneys' fees incurred by an owner of real property who gives permission to the public to enter or use the property under an agreement with a public or nonprofit agency for recreational trail use and is sued by a person who allegedly suffers injury or damage on the property or who seeks to restrict, prevent, or delay public use of the property. The claim for fees must be allowed where (a) the court dismisses the action on a demurrer or motion for summary judgment by the owner or on its own motion for lack of prosecution, (b) the action is dismissed by the plaintiff without payment from the owner, or (c) the owner prevails in the action. (C.C. 846.1(a), (c), (d).)

(5) No Immunity for Agent of Landowner. Jenson v. Kenneth I. Mullen Consulting Engineers (1989) 211 C.A.3d 653, 259 C.R. 552, involving injuries to a motorcyclist who crashed into a percolation test hole dug by the landowner's agent, rejected the contention that the agent of a landowner should share in the landowner's immunity under C.C. 846. An agent's liability to a third person does not depend on the agent's relationship with the principal; and the purpose of C.C. 846, i.e., to encourage property owners to allow the general public to use their land for recreational purposes, would not be promoted by extending immunity to a landowner principal's agents. (211 C.A.3d 659.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Exceptions: Where Liability Is Imposed. Consideration: See Miller v. Weitzen (2005) 133 C.A.4th 732, 739, 35 C.R.3d 73 [horse rider's payment to riding club and club's subsequent payment to organization that maintained public riding trail did not trigger "consideration" exception, where trail was open to any member of public without charge of any kind; following Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 310, 26 C.R.2d 148, text, p. 435].

(4) Recovery of Attorneys' Fees. C.C. 846.1, as amended in 2006, refers to the California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board rather than the state Board of Control.

2. Constitutionality of Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1104

[§ 1104] Constitutionality of Statute.

C.C. 846 was challenged in Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 737, 140 C.R. 905, on grounds of "underinclusion" and "overinclusion." Held, neither challenge was good.

(a) Underinclusion. The Legislature has enumerated the major activities undertaken by persons entering another's property; the fact that other activities may be thought of does not demonstrate arbitrariness. (73 C.A.3d 748.)

(b) Overinclusion. Plaintiff contended that unnecessary exemptions were granted to premises generally unsuited for recreation. But the statute was not designed to exempt only owners of properties ordinarily entered by persons seeking recreation: "It applies to those who without it would fence their lands, to those who, with it, fence them anyway, and to those who do not know of its existence. The Legislature probably decided not only that freedom of recreation should be encouraged, but also that it is unfair to permit claims for negligence in favor of persons who choose to enter the lands of others for the described activities." (73 C.A.3d 749.) (See Parish v. Lloyd (1978) 82 C.A.3d 785, 787, 147 C.R. 431 [classifications of C.C. 846 bear rational relationship to legitimate state interest of encouraging landowners to open their property for recreational use].)

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1105

[§ 1105] In General.

In Valladares v. Stone (1990) 218 C.A.3d 362, 267 C.R. 57, the court, in support of its holding that tree climbing comes within the statute, first made it clear that the list of activities (see supra, §1103) is merely illustrative, and that other recreational activities similar to those listed are covered. (218 C.A.3d 369.)

(a) The dictionary defines "recreational purpose" as one intended to refresh the body or mind by diversion, amusement, or play. "Clambering about in trees is such an activity. With fond memories of the tree-scaling days of our youth, we conclude that climbing a tree for play is, as a matter of law, a recreational purpose within the meaning of section 846. Certainly, it is a form of 'nature contacting' contemplated by the statute." (218 C.A.3d 369.)

(b) Domingue v. Presley of Southern Calif. (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1060, 1065, 243 C.R. 312, held only that the fact that the plaintiff was riding his bicycle did not automatically make his trip across the defendant's land a recreational use. Here, however, it was undisputed that plaintiff entered defendant's vacant lot for the purpose of climbing and playing in a tree. (218 C.A.3d 369.)

In Gerkin v. Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. (1979) 95 C.A.3d 1022, 157 C.R. 612, plaintiff fell from a two-plank bridge while either walking or walking with her bicycle across it. Summary judgment was granted in favor of defendant on the ground that plaintiff's activity was "hiking." Held, reversed; the term refers to recreational hiking in its commonly understood meaning, i.e., taking a long walk for pleasure or exercise. (95 C.A.3d 1027.) (See Domingue v. Presley of Southern Calif., supra [whether bicyclist using defendant's land as shortcut to friend's house was "recreational purpose" was question of fact]; Gordon v. Havasu Palms (2001) 93 C.A.4th 244, 256, 112 C.R.2d 816 [eating lunch in restaurant was not recreational purpose]; *Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1106

[§ 1106] Playing on Machinery.

In Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 C.4th 1095, 17 C.R.2d 594, 847 P.2d 560, defendant R owned a large parcel of property in the city of Delano in Kern County, adjacent to a residential subdivision. One part of defendant's property was used for crops, another contained a small rental house, and a third was an open area used for storage of old farm equipment, machinery, and irrigation pipes.

Plaintiff, 8 years old, lived with his family in the residential subdivision. On the day of the accident, plaintiff and five other children were playing in the storage area. Several of the children were on top of a piece of old machinery when a metal pipe dislodged and fell on plaintiff, causing injuries. Plaintiff was not on the equipment, but was sitting nearby playing with a toy; his mother had cautioned him several times not to play on defendant's property.

Plaintiff, by his guardian ad litem, filed a complaint for personal injury. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground of C.C. 846 immunity. The trial judge granted the motion. The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that C.C. 846 was inapplicable because the portion of the land used to store defendant's equipment had no legitimate recreational use. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) The examples included in C.C. 846 (supra, §1103) range from risky activities to more sedentary pursuits amenable to almost anyone, indoors as well as outdoors; and the statute draws no distinction between natural and artificial conditions. (4 C.4th 1101.)

(b) Plaintiff contended that he raised a triable issue whether he entered the property to play on the equipment, or merely accompanied the other children for unspecified reasons. However, in either case his presence was occasioned by the recreational use of the property, and his injury was the product of it. "We discern no meaningful distinction, for purposes of section 846, between the passive spectator and the active participant. Both take advantage of the recreational opportunities offered by the property; neither, therefore, may be heard to complain when injury results." (4 C.4th 1102.)

(c) "Accordingly, because the list of examples provided by the Legislature does not effectively limit the meaning of 'recreational purpose,' we conclude that entering and using defendant's property to play on his farm equipment invokes the immunity provisions of section 846. As noted, a recreational injury may result as readily from playing on a manmade object as on a natural edifice. Therefore, for our purposes here, clambering about on farm equipment is no different in kind from scaling a cliff or climbing a tree." (4 C.4th 1101.)

3. Licensees.

d. No Liability to Recreational Licensees.

4. Land Unsited for Recreation.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1107

[§ 1107] In General.

In a number of decisions, the applicability of C.C. 846 depended on whether the property was considered suitable for recreation.

In Paige v. North Oaks Partners (1982) 134 C.A.3d 860, 184 C.R. 867, plaintiff child was injured while jumping over an open trench in a temporary project near the loading dock of a market in an urban shopping center. Held, this was not the type of property to which the statute was intended to apply. (134 C.A.3d 865.)

Potts v. Halstead Financial Corp. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 727, 191 C.R. 160, held that the statute did not apply to a building under construction on beachfront property within a residential area. (142 C.A.3d 730.) The court noted that Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 737, 140 C.R. 905, supra, §1104, had taken a contrary position, holding the statute applicable to property unsited for recreation, but declared that this view was not supported by the statutory language or history, and would lead to results that the Legislature could not have intended. (142 C.A.3d 731.)

Page and Potts were distinguished in Colvin v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1306, 240 C.R. 142, holding that C.C. 846 rendered defendant electric company immune from liability for injuries sustained by plaintiff when he grabbed a guy wire dangling from one of defendant's poles. "Obviously defendant's physical facilities were not designed or suitable for recreational use. This is not true, however, of the total area defendant had permission to use. That area included space under the suspended transmission and guy wires, and space required to gain access and do required maintenance and repairs. This extended area consisted of natural terrain. It was open to anyone for hiking, cycle riding, exploring, roaming, and (in terms of §846) 'enjoying ... natural ... sites.' Furthermore, such use was reasonably foreseeable. Therefore it did not fall within the exception to section 846 as an area unsuitable for recreation." (194 C.A.3d 1314.)

In Myers v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1990) 224 C.A.3d 752, 274 C.R. 122, the statute was applied to deny recovery to plaintiff motorcycle driver injured when the vehicle fell into a ditch created by a culvert. "The aspect of Santa Fe's right-of-way that purportedly makes it unsuitable for recreational use is the potential for injury or death from being struck by a passing train. Here, as in Lostritto, Myers was not injured by a train, but by her use of Santa Fe's property to ride a motorcycle." (224 C.A.3d 760.) (See Wineinger v. Bear Brand Ranch (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1003, 1010, 251 C.R. 681 [land withdrawn from recreational use]; on abrogation of suitability requirement, see infra, §1108.)

4. Land Unsited for Recreation.

bb. Suitability Requirement Abrogated.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1108

[§ 1108] Suitability Requirement Abrogated.

In Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 C.4th 1095, 17 C.R.2d 594, 847 P.2d 560, Plaintiff, 8 years old, and several other children were playing on a part of defendant's property used to store various machinery. The injury occurred when a metal pipe dislodged and struck plaintiff, who was then sitting nearby playing with a toy. Plaintiff attempted to recover, despite the immunity extended to defendant by C.C. 846, by arguing that, under the "suitability" requirement, the land in question was not suitable for recreational use. Held, argument rejected; the suitability requirement is not supported by either statutory language or practical considerations, and is thus abrogated.

(a) In a series of decisions, the Courts of Appeal recognized what amounts to a third, nontextual element of immunity: The property must also be "suitable" for a recreational pursuit. (4 C.4th 1103; see supra, §1105.) Prior to the present case, all of the decisions have involved construction sites and many have involved minors. (4 C.4th 1104.) Here, the Court of Appeal concluded that defendant withdrew his property from recreational use when he stored his dangerous equipment on it. The instant case is thus the first to extend the suitability rule beyond the construction site context. (4 C.4th 1105.)

(b) The suitability requirement is a purely judicial construct, without any basis of support in the statutory language. The plain language of the statute admits of no exceptions, either for property unsuitable for recreational use or otherwise. (4 C.4th 1105.)

(c) Courts may disregard even plain language that leads to absurd results or contravenes clear evidence of a contrary legislative intent. But the Legislature could reasonably determine that a landowner should not in fairness be held liable for injuries sustained by a trespasser from the recreational use of the owner's property; i.e., the statute may be read to mean precisely what it says. (4 C.4th 1105, citing Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 737, 140 C.R. 905, supra, §1104.)

has engendered disparate application; and it can only thwart the laudable goal of inducing owners to make their properties available for recreation. (4 C.4th 1106.) Moreover, the rule has resulted in the perverse anomaly that landowners who make the most efforts to safeguard their property are the least likely to benefit from the statute. (4 C.4th 1107, discussing Wineinger v. Bear Brand Ranch (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1003, 251 C.R. 681.) The dissent's argument that the Legislature, by amending C.C. 846 to include additional activities while failing to reject the suitability exception, impliedly adopted this requirement, does not bear scrutiny. legislative inaction is "a weak reed upon which to lean." (4 C.4th 1107.)

(e) In sum, the suitability requirement is not compelled by law or logic. "On the contrary, assuming, as we must, that the Legislature chose its words carefully, the broad language of the statute suggests that the Legislature consciously eschewed any restrictions on the property subject to the statute in order to provide clear guidance to landowners, to encourage access to recreationists, and to fairly balance the interests of both. One who avails himself of the opportunity to enjoy access to the land of another for one of the recreational activities within the statute may not be heard to complain that the property was inappropriate for the purpose." (4 C.4th 1108.) (See 25 Pacific L. J. 1131; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1048; 32 San Diego L. Rev. 857; for complete statement of facts of Ornelas, see supra, §1106.)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

3. Licensees.

d. No Liability to Recreational Licensees.

5. Owner of Estate or Interest in Real Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1109

[§ 1109] Owner of Estate or Interest in Real Property.

The statute protects "an owner of any estate or any other interest in real property, whether possessory or nonpossessory." (C.C. 846.) This broad language immunizes persons holding various interests.

(1) Owner of Easement. Darr v. Lone Star Industries (1979) 94 C.A.3d 895, 901, 157 C.R. 90, held that the protection given to "an owner of any estate in real property" did not extend to the owner of an easement, which is nonpossessory and cannot be an estate. However, the 1980 Legislature nullified the holding by amending the statute to include nonpossessory interests. (See Colvin v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1987) 194 C.A.3d 1306, 1312, 240 C.R. 142; 12 Pacific L. J. 599.)

(2) Owner of License. In O'Shea v. Claude C. Wood Co. (1979) 97 C.A.3d 903, 159 C.R. 125, defendant had a license to stockpile earth, and the court held that whether he had a possessory interest and thus was protected by C.C. 846 was a question of fact. (97 C.A.3d 910, 911.) The 1980 amendment, supra, makes this question irrelevant, because the holder of a nonpossessory interest is protected. (See Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 C.4th 1095, 17 C.R.2d 594, 847 P.2d 560, supra, §1106.)

(3) Owner of Property Subject to Public Easement. In Collins v. Tippet (1984) 156 C.A.3d 1017, 203 C.R. 366, defendant owned a home built on a cliff above a beach. A piece of gunite broke off the cliff and fell on plaintiff, who was sunbathing on the beach. Held, defendant was immune. (a) She was the owner of the beach despite the fact that it was subject to a public easement by implied dedication. (b) Plaintiff contended that the immunity existed only as to the condition of the beach to which the public had access, and not to the condition of the cliff which the owner kept closed. This construction of the statute could lead beachfront property owners to close their entire areas; a construction that gives immunity where they permit public use only of the beach area is more likely to achieve the goal of keeping as much private land as possible open for public recreational use. (156 C.A.3d 1020.)

(4) Owner of Federal Grazing Permit. The holder of a permit to graze livestock on federal lands in California is an owner of an interest in real property for purposes of immunity under C.C. 846. (Hubbard v. Brown (1990) 50 C.3d 189,

(5) Distinction: Business Invitee of Landowner. A business invitee working on the property of a landowner is not immune. "Although such invitee may be entitled to be present on the property during such time as the work is being performed, such presence does not convey any estate or interest in the property." (Jenson v. Kenneth I. Mullen Consulting Engineers (1989) 211 C.A.3d 653, 658, 259 C.R. 552.)

6. Exception for Public Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1110

[§ 1110] Exception for Public Property.

In English v. Marin Mun. Water Dist. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 725, 136 C.R. 224, the court assumed without express comment that C.C. 846 applied to defendant district, a public entity. The same assumption was made in Gerkin v. Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. (1979) 95 C.A.3d 1022, 157 C.R. 612, and Blakley v. California (1980) 108 C.A.3d 971, 975, 167 C.R. 1. In Moore v. Torrance (1979) 101 C.A.3d 66, 72, 166 C.R. 192, the court said: "Since English was reported, the state Legislature has by amendment broadened section 846 but it did not remove public entities from its protection. The Legislature is presumed to have had knowledge of the existing judicial decision and therefore it is reasonable to expect that it intended public entities to also benefit from the immunity."

However, in Nelsen v. Gridley (1980) 113 C.A.3d 87, 169 C.R. 757, the court refused to follow Moore's "uncritical reliance" on English and rejected the notion that the Legislature could be presumed to be cognizant of "the isolated English decision," which did not directly deal with the issue. (113 C.A.3d 96, 97.) Nelsen elaborately examines the legislative and judicial history of governmental liability for dangerous condition of property and of the recreational license statute, and concludes that the phrase "owner of any estate in real property" was intended to refer to a private landowner defendant, for the purpose of reducing landowner tendency to remove real property from recreational access. (113 C.A.3d 91.) "It would make little sense to apply the section's broad immunity to all types of public properties. If, for example, the publicly owned property in question were a city park intended solely as a public recreational facility, a statutory grant of immunity on such property would not further encourage recreational usage. Or, as in the case of a public road the very purpose of which is to provide an avenue for public travel, there would be no rational basis for granting immunity based on the injured person's use of the road for a recreational purpose as opposed to some other purpose." (113 C.A.3d 91.)

Nelsen was affirmed by the California Supreme Court in Delta Farms Reclamation Dist. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 C.3d 699, 707, 190 C.R. 494, 600 P.2d 1168, disapproving "the English-Gerkin-Moore line of cases."

7. Liability for Wilful Misconduct.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1111

[§ 1111] Liability for Wilful Misconduct.

In New v. Consolidated Rock Products Co. (1985) 171 C.A.3d 681, 217 C.R. 522, defendant had a gravel quarry with a road constantly used by motorcyclists, despite "No Trespassing" signs that warned that the property might be used at any time for excavation. Defendant enlarged an excavation pit by cutting away the end of a two-lane haul road, leaving a 20-foot cliff. There was a dispute about the precautions taken to avoid injuries, but plaintiffs' evidence was that a single earthen barrier only 12 inches high had been constructed to prevent defendant's trucks from going over the cliff, and that cyclists believed that it was a jump. Plaintiffs, two motorcyclists, drove over the cliff and sustained serious injuries. The trial judge instructed the jury on the elements of wilful misconduct, and the verdict was for plaintiffs. Held, affirmed.

(a) Under established law, wilful misconduct may consist of conscious disregard of probable results, and may be based on constructive knowledge measured by an objective standard. (17 C.A.3d 688, 689, 690; see supra, §870.)

(b) Defendant argued that by using the phrase "willful or malicious" in C.C. 846, the Legislature intended to impose liability only where the defendant acted with a subjectively culpable state of mind. But the cases have applied the standard tort definition. (171 C.A.3d 692, citing Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 737, 140 C.R. 905, supra, §1104.) If the term is to have a more restrictive meaning, the Legislature must express that intent. (171 C.A.3d 692.) (See Nazar v. Rodeffer (1986) 184 C.A.3d 546, 552, 229 C.R. 209; Charpentier v. Von Geldern (1987) 191 C.A.3d 101, 113, 236 C.R. 233; *Bacon v. Southern Calif. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1113

[§ 1113] In General.

California originally followed the limited test of potential economic benefit, adopted by the first Restatement: An invitee enters at the "express or implied invitation" of the occupant, for a purpose "of common interest or mutual benefit" to the owner or occupant and the invitee, or in connection with the business of the occupant. (See Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 C.2d 133, 137, 148 P.2d 19; Smith v. Kern County Land Co. (1958) 51 C.2d 205, 208, 331 P.2d 645; Bush v. Co. (1932) 128 C.A. 94, 98, 16 P.2d 807.)

The term "invitee" is, however, misleading. A social guest may be invited, and will still be only a licensee (supra, §1100). But laborers coming on the property to do work, and customers coming into a shop to look at goods displayed, are invitees if led by the owner's conduct reasonably to believe that they would be willingly received, whether expressly invited or not. (Rest.2d, Torts §332; see infra, §1117.) The distinguishing characteristic of the invitee is a mutual business interest with the occupant, and the more modern term "business visitor" is now commonly used. (See Hinds v. Wheadon (1942) 19 C.2d 458, 460, 121 P.2d 724; Crane v. Smith (1943) 23 C.2d 288, 297, 144 P.2d 356; *Royal Ins. Co. v. [§ 1114] Nonbusiness Activity as Business.

Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen (1946) 27 C.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729, makes it clear that one may be an invitee, even though the activity is a social affair, where the defendant's business consists of the social activity. Defendant Hollywood Canteen was a corporation created chiefly for the purpose of providing recreational facilities for men in the armed services. Plaintiff, a professional dancer who acted gratuitously as a hostess at dances to which servicemen were admitted without charge, was held to be an invitee, for she was clearly conferring a benefit on defendant by aiding in the carrying out of its corporate objectives. (27 C.2d 809.)

The same reasoning was employed in Fernquist v. San Francisco Presbytery (1957) 152 C.A.2d 405, 409, 313 P.2d 192, where plaintiff, a member of defendant church, rendered carpentry services in construction of a church dormitory. (See *Cain v. [§ 1115] Circumstances and Custom.

The status of a business visitor may arise from such circumstances as the conduct of the possessor, the arrangement of the premises, or local custom. (See Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 C.2d 133, 136, 148 P.2d 19; Rest.2d, Torts §332.) Ordinarily, a bystander who performs services at the unauthorized request of an employee is not an invitee, even though the employee pays for the services. (Giannini v. Campodonico (1917) 176 C. 548, 551, 169 P. 80.) But the authority or consent of the employer need not be express; it may be implied from the nature of the work, or from conduct by the employer or employee. In Dyer v. McCorkle (1929) 208 C. 216, 280 P. 965, defendant corporation employed defendant driver to deliver milk, and the driver, without authority, engaged small boys to help him, paying them with milk, candy, and small sums of money. Plaintiff, while so engaged, was injured as a result of lack of ordinary care on the part of the driver. Held, the custom of engaging boys in this manner was so notorious that defendant corporation must have known of it, and its consent could be implied. (208 C. 219.)

The same principle of implied invitation was applied where a short line logging or freight railroad, not a common carrier of passengers, customarily permitted employees and others residing in the vicinity to ride the trains for their own convenience. (Brown v. Feather River Lumber Co. (1928) 203 C. 493, 496, 265 P. 203; see Strong v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1939) 34 C.A.2d 335, 339, 93 P.2d 649 [newsboy on airport runway to receive delivery of newspapers, by implied invitation arising out of custom of defendant operating airport].)

4. Invitees or Business Visitors.

a. Who Are Invitees.

2. Theory of Public Invitation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1116

[§ 1116] Theory of Public Invitation.

The theory of the first Restatement, that invitees are "business visitors" (supra, §1113) has been usefully applied to store customers, hotel guests, passengers in carriers, deliverymen, repairmen, and others of similar character. (See infra, §1117.) Another theory, coexisting though not always articulated, broadens the class to cover "public invitees." As defined in the Rest.2d, Torts §332, a public invitee as "a person who is invited to enter or remain on land as a member of the public for a purpose for which the land is held open to the public." And the Comment states: "Where land is held open to the public, it is immaterial that the visitor does not pay for his admission, or that the possessor's purpose in so opening the land is not a business purpose, and the visitor's presence is in no way related to business dealings with the possessor, or to any possibility of benefit or advantage, present or prospective, pecuniary or otherwise, to the possessor." (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.12; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §§91, 97; 95 A.L.R.2d 992 ["economic benefit" or "public invitation" as test of licensee-invitee status].)

Language in several California cases indicates support for this extension of the class of invitees. (See O'Keefe v. South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 C.2d 729, 739, 51 C.R. 534, 414 P.2d 830; Farrier v. Levin (1959) 176 C.A.2d 791, 803, 1 C.R. 742 [plaintiff, at request of friend, accompanied her to defendant's store where friend made purchases]; Weyburn v. California Kamloops (1962) 200 C.A.2d 239, 242, 19 C.R. 357; 55 Cal. L. Rev. 366.)

4. Invitees or Business Visitors.

a. Who Are Invitees.

3. Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1117

[§ 1117] Illustrations.

The circumstances giving rise to the relationship of landowner and invitee are too numerous to classify, but the following cases cover the common situations and some unusual ones:

(2) A customer coming to a restaurant. (Chance v. Lawry's (1962) 58 C.2d 368, 374, 24 C.R. 209, 374 P.2d 185.)

(3) A salesman of a wholesaler delivering goods to a retail store. (Madigan v. O.A. Hale & Co. (1928) 90 C.A. 151, 154, 265 P. 574.)

(4) A person rendering a service. (Tharp v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1938) 27 C.A.2d 554, 557, 81 P.2d 443 [deliveryman]; Stockovich v. Acme Spray Painters (1954) 129 C.A.2d 81, 84, 276 P.2d 1 [bridge inspector]; see 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.14; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §412 et seq.; 28 A.L.R.2d 891 [building inspector]; 28 A.L.R.2d 1344 [meter reader]; 32 A.L.R.2d 9 [deliveryman]; 36 A.L.R.2d 610 [garbageman]; 69 A.L.R.4th 207 [window washer].)

(5) An employee of an independent contractor doing work on the owner's premises. (Hinds v. Wheadon (1942) 19 C.2d 458, 460, 121 P.2d 724; Florez v. Groom Dev. Co. (1959) 53 C.2d 347, 354, 1 C.R. 840, 348 P.2d 200; Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 955, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129; Dobbie v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1928) 95 C.A. 781, 787, 273 P. 630; Biondini v. Amship Corp. (1947) 81 C.A.2d 751, 762, 185 P.2d 94; Moran v. Zenith Oil Co. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 236, 241, 206 P.2d 679; Boucher v. American Bridge Co. (1950) 95 C.A.2d 659, 669, 213 P.2d 537; Bickham v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 815, 819, 263 P.2d 32; Gonzales v. Robert Hiller Const. Co. (1960) 179

C.A.2d 522, 530, 3 C.R. 832 [employee of subcontractor is invitee as to general contractor]; Scott v. John E. Branagh & Son (1965) 234 C.A.2d 435, 440, 44 C.R. 384 [same]; Grahn v. Tosco Corp. (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1373, 1396, 68 C.R.2d 806 [hirer has duty to maintain premises in reasonably safe condition for independent contractor's employees].)

(6) A tenant of a rented home who remains on the premises by permission of house movers during removal. (Donahoo v. Kress House Moving Corp. (1944) 25 C.2d 237, 242, 153 P.2d 349.) The tenant of an owner of a building is also an invitee as to an independent contractor doing construction or repair work on the premises. (Hall v. Barber Door Co. (1933) 218 C. 412, 419, 23 P.2d 279.)

(7) An employee of a tenant of a building. (De Graf v. Anglo Calif. Nat. Bank of San Francisco (1939) 14 C.2d 87, 93, 92 P.2d 899.)

(8) A guest of a tenant of an office building. (Blumberg v. M. & T. (1949) 34 C.2d 226, 229, 209 P.2d 1; see 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417.) One who enters premises to do business with a tenant and is injured in an entrance or hallway used in common. (Brown v. Pepperdine (1921) 53 C.A. 334, 336, 200 P. 36.)

(9) A prospective tenant or purchaser. (Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 C.2d 133, 137, 148 P.2d 19; see 3 A.L.R.3d 976 [liability to prospective tenant or purchaser for injury resulting from condition of premises].)

(10) A guest of a hotel or inn, and the guest's own invited guest. (Goldstein v. Healy (1921) 187 C. 206, 211, 201 P. 462; see 55 A.L.R.5th 463 [motel, resort, etc. operating swimming pool].)

(11) A member of the public in a railway depot to meet passengers arriving or departing. (Kircher v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 176, 186, 195 P.2d 427.)

(12) A student brought to a factory for instruction, by arrangement with school authorities, as part of school work, this being one means of advertising the manufactured product. (McDonald v. Standard Gas Engine Co. (1935) 8 C.A.2d 464, 472, 47 P.2d 777.)

(13) A member of the family of a country club member. (See Lucas v. Hesperia Golf & Country Club (1967) 255 C.A.2d 241, 247, 63 C.R. 189.)

(14) A passenger at an airport. (See 14 A.L.R.5th 662 [air carrier's liability for injury from condition of airport premises].)

(15) Person invited or permitted to accompany patient in hospital during emergency room treatment. (See 90 A.L.R.4th 478.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

4. Invitees or Business Visitors.

b. Bases of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1118

[§ 1118] Bases of Liability.

(1) Traditional Approach. It is usually said that the duties owed to an invitee include the lesser duty owed to a licensee of due care in activities, and in addition, the further obligations to correct or warn against known dangerous conditions (see infra, §§1119, 1120) and to make a reasonable inspection to discover defects not known (see infra, §1121). (See generally Rest.2d, Torts §341; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.12; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §235; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §160 et seq.; 41 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 861 [slip-and-fall cases; arguing for adoption of rebuttable presumption of negligence by store owner and retention of knowledge requirement].)

(2) Effect of Rowland v. Christian. Although Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, greatly enlarged the duties owed to licensees and trespassers, it had less effect on the already broad scope of duties owed to invitees. In Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 C.A.2d 20, 77 C.R. 914, plaintiff, a golfer and business invitee of defendant golf club, put on her golf shoes in the parking lot, and used a rough-surfaced concrete walk to reach the starting area. There were other means of access, including an oiled rock passageway. A rubber mat had been placed on a portion of the concrete walk, but plaintiff slipped and fell before she reached that point. The evidence established that nearly 4,000 people had traversed the area each month with no record of accidents; that there were no defects in the walk and no foreign matter on it; that the cleats on plaintiff's shoes were half-worn and lacked normal traction; and that plaintiff, an experienced golfer, who had played the course regularly, knew that her footing on concrete would not be as stable as on grass. On the other hand, she was unfamiliar with the walk, and no one had told her that it was slippery. Held, judgment of nonsuit reversed.

(a) Present significance of status classifications. As the court observed in Rowland, status still has some relevancy. "The term 'invitee' has not been abandoned, nor have 'trespasser' and 'licensee.' In the minds of the jury, whether a possessor of the premises has acted as a reasonable man toward a plaintiff, in view of the probability of injury to him, will tend to involve the circumstances under which he came upon defendant's land and the probability of exposure of plaintiff and others of his class to the risk of injury, as well as whether the condition itself presented an unreasonable risk of harm, in view of the foreseeable use of the property. In turn, that reinvolves the degree to which those on the property could be expected to be there, and the use they could be expected to make of the premises. In this, there is a wide difference between a trespasser, who actually may be forbidden the use of the property, and an invitee, invited or urged to be there." (273 C.A.2d 25.)

(b) Invitee rules still applicable. "[T]he legal duties declared to exist in favor of the invitee upon the premises have been the highest judicially imposed upon the possessor of land. We do not believe they have been jettisoned by Rowland v. Christian, supra. Likewise, we do not believe that such established decisional principles have been abandoned and free-wheeling by the triers of fact substituted in their stead. If guidelines are withdrawn from juries relative to the invitor and invitee, proof of fault might tend to consist of the fact of plaintiff's injury and defendant's ability to pay, assumed to exist since a reasonably prudent man would be silly not to have insurance. If withdrawal of such guidelines expanded the discretion of juries on the one hand, it would limit pro tanto the power of the court to control abuses on the other, for want of yardsticks applicable to appropriate categories of situations." (273 C.A.2d 26.) (For Beauchamp holding on obvious dangers, see infra, §1127.)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1119

[§ 1119] In General.

California cases, both before and after Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, followed the general law, declaring a duty to exercise ordinary care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition. (See Hinds v. Wheadon (1942) 19 C.2d 458, 460, 121 P.2d 724; Laird v. T.W. Mather (1958) 51 C.2d 210, 215, 331 P.2d 617; Chance v. Lawry's (1962) 58 C.2d 368, 374, 24 C.R. 209, 374 P.2d 185 [open planter box, without barricade or warning sign, 30 inches wide and 18 inches deep, in narrow foyer leading to defendant's restaurant]; Markley v. Beagle (1967) 66 C.2d 951, 955, 59 C.R. 809, 429 P.2d 129 [defective guardrail on stairs leading to roof]; Bush v. Weed Lumber Co. (1923) 63 C.A. 426, 432, 218 P. 618; Bigbee v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 451, 454, 155 C.R. 545 [improper siting of telephone booth]; Dobbie v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1928) 95 C.A. 781, 788, 273 P. 630; Williams v. Carl Karcher Enterprises (1986) 182 C.A.3d 479, 488, 227 C.R. 465 [wet tile floor; trial judge instructed on general duty to use reasonable care, but erred in refusing to give specific instructions of duty to correct or warn]; Lopez v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 705, 714, 52 C.R.2d 821 [lessor of produce market; floor littered with grapes]; Craddock v. Kmart Corp. (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1300, 1306, 107 C.R.2d 881 [fact that store patrons' attention is often attracted by displays, etc., can be considered in determining whether store used ordinary care]; Rest.2d, Torts §343; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.12; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §471 et seq.; cf. Jones v. Bridges (1940) 38 C.A.2d 341, 346, 101 P.2d 91 [landowner is not an insurer of safety].)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1120

[§ 1120] Knowledge of Condition.

Liability is particularly appropriate where the landowner has actual knowledge of the danger, e.g., where the landowner has created the condition. (See Laird v. T.W. Mather (1958) 51 C.2d 210, 216, 331 P.2d 617 [department store catering to elderly customers, basement stairway with handrail not running full length of stairway]; Foster v. A.P. Jacobs & Associates (1948) 85 C.A.2d 746, 750, 193 P.2d 971 [linoleum floor in building vestibule and corridor, waxed unevenly and slippery in places]; Lopez v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 705, 716, 52 C.R.2d 821 [grapes littering floor of produce market leased by defendant to another]; Moore v. Wal-Mart Stores (2003) 111 C.A.4th 472, 475, 3 C.R.3d 813 [where plaintiff slipped on food dropped by third party on store floor, it was error not to instruct that defendant had to have actual or constructive knowledge of dangerous condition; in California, "mode of operation" does not eliminate store patron's duty of proving actual or constructive knowledge]; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §163; BAJI, No. 8.20.)

The knowledge of an employee may be imputed to the landowner, as where the employee, acting within the scope of employment, creates the condition. (Hatfield v. Levy Bros. (1941) 18 C.2d 798, 806, 117 P.2d 841; Lorenz v. Santa Monica City High School Dist. (1942) 51 C.A.2d 393, 401, 124 P.2d 846; *Gilbert v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1121

[§ 1121] Failure To Inspect: Recovery Allowed.

The landowner's lack of knowledge of the dangerous condition is not a defense. He or she has an affirmative duty to exercise ordinary care to keep the premises in reasonably safe condition, and therefore must inspect them or take other proper means to ascertain their condition. And if, by the exercise of reasonable care, the landowner would have discovered the dangerous condition, he or she is liable. (See Mondine v. Sarlin (1938) 11 C.2d 593, 597, 81 P.2d 903; Blumberg v. M. & T. (1949) 34 C.2d 226, 229, 209 P.2d 1; Swanberg v. O'Mectin (1984) 157 C.A.3d 325, 330, 203 C.R. 701, citing the text; Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1128, 1135, 32 C.R.2d 755, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §647 [commercial landlord had duty to conduct reasonable inspection for presence of dangerous dogs]; Lopez v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 705, 716, 52 C.R.2d 821 [produce market lessor had duty of reasonable inspection of floor that became littered with grapes]; Rest.2d, Torts §343; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.12; 44 Proof of Facts 3d 449 [constructive notice to landlord of unsafe condition on premises]; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 417.) (On employee duty to inspect workplace, see Devens v. Goldberg (1948) 33 C.2d 173, 178, 199 P.2d 943, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §126.)

Many cases allow the jury to determine whether the condition existed for a long enough period to be discoverable by ordinary care in inspection, and emphasize the fact that the place was one to which a large number of people were invited, and therefore called for more frequent inspection. (See, e.g., Lehman v. Richfield Oil Corp. (1953) 121 C.A.2d 261, 264, 263 P.2d 13 [phone booth at gas station; oily spot on step]; McKenney v. Quality Foods (1957) 156 C.A.2d 349, 356, 319 P.2d 448 [supermarket; plaintiff slipped on lettuce scraps].)

In Bridgman v. Safeway Stores (1960) 53 C.2d 443, 2 C.R. 146, 348 P.2d 696, plaintiff testified that she selected a pumpkin from defendant's self-service market stand, and that negligently placed pumpkins fell and knocked her down. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed. If the condition is caused by a customer disarranging merchandise, the store owner is liable only if he or she had actual knowledge, or if the condition lasted long enough that a proper inspection would have revealed it. However, in a self-service store, where customers are allowed to inspect and replace goods, exercise of ordinary care may require greater precautions and more frequent inspections, and the sufficiency of the inspection is a jury question. (53 C.2d 449.)

In Ortega v. Kmart Corp. (2001) 26 C.4th 1200, 114 C.R.2d 470, 36 P.3d 11, plaintiff, while shopping in defendant grocery store, slipped on a puddle of milk and suffered substantial knee injuries. He sued for personal injuries and obtained a verdict for $ 47,000, even though he was unable to present evidence showing how long the milk had been on the floor. Held, affirmed.

(a) Under Girvetz v. Boys' Market (1949) 91 C.A.2d 827, 206 P.2d 6, infra, §1123, a store is not an insurer of the safety of its patrons. However, the owner does owe them the duty to exercise ordinary care in keeping the premises reasonably safe, and the owner can fulfill this duty by making reasonable inspections of areas open to customers. To establish liability, the plaintiff must prove that the owner had actual or constructive knowledge of the alleged defect in sufficient time to have corrected it. The basic question is: "[I]f the plaintiff has no evidence of the source of the dangerous condition or the length of time it existed, may the plaintiff rely solely on the owner's failure to inspect the premises within a reasonable period of time in order to establish an inference that the defective condition existed long enough for a reasonable person exercising ordinary care to have discovered it?" (26 C.4th 1203.)

(b) The plaintiff need not show actual knowledge where the evidence suggests that the dangerous condition was present for a sufficient period of time to charge the owner with constructive knowledge. And whether the dangerous condition existed for the requisite amount of time can be established by circumstantial, as well as direct, evidence. Although numerous cases have considered the owner's inspection practice as one of several factors in determining the length of time a condition existed prior to an accident, none has held that this failure alone can satisfy the plaintiff's burden to prove constructive knowledge. However, Sapp v. W.T. Grant Co. (1959) 172 C.A.2d 89, 341 P.2d 826, and Bridgman v. Safeway Stores, supra, support this proposition. (26 C.4th 1206.)

(c) A plaintiff may prove that a dangerous condition existed for an unreasonable time with circumstantial evidence. As Bridgman observed, "evidence that an inspection has not been made within a particular period of time prior to an accident may warrant an inference that the defective condition existed long enough so that a person exercising reasonable care would have discovered it." (26 C.4th 1210.) It is then a question of fact for the jury whether, under all the circumstances, the defective condition existed long enough so that it would have been discovered and remedied by an owner exercising reasonable care. The burden of proof of this fact remains on the plaintiff. (26 C.4th 1207, 1212.)

(d) Here, defendant's manager testified that the store kept no written inspection records, that all of defendant's employees were trained to look for and clean up spills, and that every 15 to 30 minutes an employee usually walked the aisle where plaintiff slipped, but that the milk could have been on the floor for as long as 2 hours. (26 C.4th 1204.) This evidence was sufficient to justify a reasonable inference that the dangerous condition existed long enough for it to have been discovered by defendant. (26 C.4th 1212.)

(e) Allowing an inference of constructive knowledge from a failure to inspect a reasonable time prior to the accident does not change the rule that if a store owner has taken care in the discharge of its duty, by inspecting its premises in a reasonable manner, then no breach of duty will be found, even if a plaintiff does suffer injury. (26 C.4th 1211.)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - c. Dangerous Physical Condition.
 - 4. No Breach of Duty: Recovery Denied.
 - aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1122

[§ 1122] In General.

It has been frequently emphasized that the landowner is not an insurer of the personal safety of the invitee, and that his or her duty is performed by a reasonable inspection. (See Adams v. Dow Hotel (1938) 25 C.A.2d 51, 54, 76 P.2d 210; 8 Hastings L. J. 335; BAJI, No. 8.20.)

Other cases absolve a defendant who has no actual or constructive knowledge of the condition. In Crawford v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. (1937) 22 C.A.2d 448, 71 P.2d 333, plaintiff, an invitee in defendant's hotel, fell on a slippery bathroom floor. In the absence of evidence showing knowledge by the defendant of the condition, or its existence for so long a time as to charge defendant with notice, a judgment for plaintiff could not be sustained. (22 C.A.2d 449.)

In Dingman v. Mattock Co. (1940) 15 C.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26, plaintiff, an invitee of defendant contractor, was injured when a defective plank on which he was walking broke. Held, the dangerous condition was not apparent, there was no evidence that defendant knew of it, and defendant could not be liable without this knowledge. (15 C.2d 626.) (See Perbost v. San Marino Hall-School for Girls (1948) 88 C.A.2d 796, 803, 199 P.2d 701; Girvetz v. Boys' Market (1949) 91 C.A.2d 827, 829, 206 P.2d 6; Oldenburg v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1957) 152 C.A.2d 733, 742, 314 P.2d 33.)

In Laico v. Chevron U.S.A. (2004) 123 C.A.4th 649, 20 C.R.3d 307, plaintiff was an employee of a company that operated facilities on land owned by defendant. When the chemicals that he worked with caused injuries, plaintiff successfully sued defendant owner under a premises liability theory. Held, reversed. Absent evidence of a danger present at the site when the company took possession, and absent evidence of the property owner's knowledge of and ability to control hazardous practices by the company's employees, there is no basis for imposing on the owner a duty to avert the harm plaintiff incurred in the course of his employment. Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1128, 1135, 32 C.R.2d 755, supra, §1121, is distinguished. Here there is no evidence defining the relationship between the owner and the occupier, landlord-tenant or otherwise; thus, it is impossible to determine when the owner is entitled to enter the property and inspect the occupier's facilities. (123 C.A.4th 665.)

Some of the foregoing cases seem to place too much emphasis on the knowledge factor and fail to give sufficient consideration to the duty of inspection.

4. No Breach of Duty: Recovery Denied.

bb. Where Inspection Would Not Disclose Defect.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1123

[§ 1123] Where Inspection Would Not Disclose Defect.

(1) Short Duration. Some cases turn on the circumstance that the dangerous condition was of such short duration that the defendant, though reasonably diligent in inspection, could not have discovered it. (See Owen v. Beauchamp (1944) 66 C.A.2d 750, 752, 152 P.2d 756.) In Girvetz v. Boys' Market (1949) 91 C.A.2d 827, 206 P.2d 6, plaintiff, walking along the aisle of a market, slipped on a banana peel, and a judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict was affirmed. The court distinguished Louie v. Hagstrom's Food Stores (1947) 81 C.A.2d 601, 606, 184 P.2d 708, on the ground that in that case, there was evidence that the syrup had been on the floor for a substantial period of time, while here, the only evidence bearing on the issue was the testimony of a witness who had observed the banana on the floor "a good minute and a half" before the accident, and this period was too short. (91 C.A.2d 831.) The distinction seems to be a thin one, for the jury's determination of the time the condition existed, from "circumstantial evidence," seems as much (or as little) a matter of guesswork in the one as in the other case.

(2) Hidden or Trivial Defect. Recovery is denied where the defect is so hidden or so trivial that a reasonable inspection would not bring it to light. (See Reinhard v. Lawrence Warehouse Co. (1940) 41 C.A.2d 741, 747, 107 P.2d 501.) In Graves v. Roman (1952) 113 C.A.2d 584, 248 P.2d 508, plaintiff caught her foot on leaving the elevator of defendant's office building. The alleged negligence was in maintaining stripping in front of the elevator, in some places one-eighth inch above the adjacent linoleum. In denying recovery, the court referred to the sidewalk cases involving municipalities (supra, §212), and declared that the underlying basis of these cases "is a practical recognition of the impossibility of maintaining heavily traveled surfaces in a perfect condition and that minor defects such as differences in elevation are bound to occur in spite of the exercise of reasonable care by the party having the duty of maintaining the area involved." (113 C.A.2d 586.)

(2) Hidden or Trivial Defect. See Kasparian v. AvalonBay Communities (2007) 156 C.A.4th 11, 27, 66 C.R.3d 885

["trivial defect" doctrine permits court to determine triviality as matter of law and allows elimination from court system of unwarranted litigation that attempts to impose on property owner what amounts to absolute liability for injury to persons who come upon property].

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - c. Dangerous Physical Condition.
- 4. No Breach of Duty: Recovery Denied.
 - cc. Injury From Insect Bite.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1124

[§ 1124] Injury From Insect Bite.

In Brunelle v. Signore (1989) 215 C.A.3d 122, 263 C.R. 415, plaintiff spent a weekend at defendant's vacation home, a structure abutting on a desert. He was bitten by a brown recluse spider, and the venom caused serious injuries. His complaint alleged negligent maintenance of the property and failure to warn of a dangerous condition. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) "Plaintiff has not cited nor has our research revealed any California case that discusses the issue of whether an owner or occupier of a residence, a business or a hotel/motel may be held liable for plaintiff's injury as a result of an insect or spider bite sustained on the premises." (215 C.A.3d 122.) No out-of-state case has been found on liability of an owner or occupier of a private residence, and the very few cases dealing with the owner of a business or hotel are split on the issue. (215 C.A.3d 128.)

(b) "Our consideration of the Rowland factors leads us to the conclusion in this case that an owner or occupier of a private residence does not have a duty to protect or prevent bites from harmful insects where: (1) it is not generally known that the specific insect is indigenous to the area; (2) the homeowner has no knowledge that a specific harmful insect is prevalent in the area where his residence is located; (3) the homeowner has on no occasion seen the specific type of harmful insect either outside or inside his home; and (4) neither the homeowner nor the injured guest has seen the specific insect that bit the guest either before or after the bite occurred. To impose a duty under these circumstances, where the owner or occupier of the premises had no reason to anticipate or guard against such an occurrence would be unfair and against public policy. ... Further, the task of defining the duty and the measures required of the owner or occupier of private residences to meet that duty would be difficult in the extreme." (215 C.A.3d 129; on Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, see supra, §1086.)

(c) Plaintiff contended that because defendant had general knowledge of the prevalence of other harmful insects around his home, he had a duty to use professionals to clean the house when he was not in residence. "However, that foreseeability which an owner or occupier of a residence shares with the public at large does not, per se, impose a duty on such owner or occupier to procure professional exterminators and/or cleaning crews to 'de-bug' his residence, inside and out, on a periodic basis." (215 C.A.3d 130.) (See Butcher v. Gay (1994) 29 C.A.4th 388, 398, 34 C.R.2d 771 [citing Brunelle; homeowner, who had no warning that Lyme disease was danger in his area, was not under duty to protect overnight guest from getting it].)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - c. Dangerous Physical Condition.
 - 5. Obvious Dangers.
- aa. Theory of Contributory Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1125

[§ 1125] Theory of Contributory Negligence.

Where the danger is so obvious that a person could reasonably be expected to see it, the plaintiff's failure to take precautions is regarded by many cases as contributory negligence. (See Jones v. Bridges (1940) 38 C.A.2d 341, 346, 101 P.2d 91; Robinson v. King (1952) 113 C.A.2d 455, 248 P.2d 477; Markwell v. Swift & Co. (1954) 126 C.A.2d 245, 251, 272 P.2d 47; Scott v. Alpha Beta Co. (1980) 104 C.A.3d 305, 310, 163 C.R. 544 [plaintiff, with "trick knee" and wearing house slippers, slipped and fell in rainwater that had been tracked onto floor of defendant's store]; 83 A.L.R.5th 589 [comparative negligence, contributory negligence, and assumption of risk in action against owner of store, office, or similar place of business by invitee falling on tracked-in water or snow]; 29 Proof of Facts 2d 657 [proceeding into darkened interior premises]; cf. Donahoo v. Kress House Moving Corp. (1944) 25 C.2d 237, 245, 153 P.2d 349 [plaintiff was allowed to recover despite some familiarity with condition].)

The effect of the contributory negligence approach is sometimes to limit the landowner's obvious danger defense. Thus, where the plaintiff is a customer in a store, and the defective condition consists of a slippery or otherwise dangerous floor, he or she may be allowed to recover even though the condition could have been seen on an examination of the floor. The customer may properly give his or her attention to the display of goods and need not watch the floor. (Wills v. J.J. Newberry Co. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 595, 603, 111 P.2d 346; see Thompson v. B.F. Goodrich Co. (1941) 48 C.A.2d 723, 727, 120 P.2d 693; Louie v. Hagstrom's Food Stores (1947) 81 C.A.2d 601, 610, 184 P.2d 708.) In Sommerfield v. Miratti (1942) 49 C.A.2d 450, 454, 121 P.2d 746, where plaintiff fell down waxed, slippery steps, it was held that she could recover despite some prior experience with the same steps; she could assume that the slippery condition was not permanent but would be corrected by defendant in the exercise of due care.

In Florez v. Groom Dev. Co. (1959) 53 C.2d 347, 1 C.R. 840, 348 P.2d 200, defendant general contractor had an employee who placed a four-foot by six-foot plank across a ditch in loose dirt, inadequate to span it properly. Plaintiff employee of a subcontractor walked on it in the course of his work, it gave way, and he fell into the ditch. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. Defendants contended that if the plank was too narrow or too short, these defects were obvious; but the quantum of care required of invitor and invitee are not identical. An invitee may assume that he or she may use the area to which the invitation extends without danger; the invitee is not required to look for hidden traps. Likewise, a workman may pay attention to his or her work, and is not required to exercise the same quantum of care as other invitees. Moreover, the plank was knowingly set in loose dirt, which was unsafe. If plaintiff was charged with seeing the obvious, he was still not bound to examine either the plank or the bank with care. (53 C.2d 358.)

The existence and extent of a duty is a question of law, while contributory negligence is a question of fact. In Neel v. Mannings (1942) 19 C.2d 647, 122 P.2d 576, plaintiff struck her head on a projecting ceiling board, while ascending the steps of a restaurant. The board was in plain sight, and plaintiff was familiar with the stairway, but her attention was distracted by the necessity of avoiding collision with people coming downstairs and she forgot the danger. Held, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury and it was error to give judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict. (19 C.2d 656.) In Henderson v. McGill (1963) 222 C.A.2d 256, 34 C.R. 897, plaintiff, an invitee at defendants' cafe, walked on a paved strip alongside the building, and tripped on a faucet protruding four-five inches above the ground, five-six inches from the building wall. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. Even though a condition is physically obvious, liability is not precluded where the circumstances are such that a person would not necessarily observe it, and this is a fact question for the jury. Here, e.g., the jury could find that a distraction was provided by the building window, a water tank in the path, or rain, which might focus the person's attention away from the ground. (222 C.A.2d 262.) (See Chance v. Lawry's (1962) 58 C.2d 368, 374, 24 C.R. 209, 374 P.2d 185 [whether plaintiff, under circumstances, should have seen danger, was question of fact decided against defendant by jury]; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 623.)

[§ 1126] Theory of No Breach of Duty.

The landowner does not necessarily have to eliminate the defective condition; the landowner may choose to discharge his or her duty by giving adequate warning of the danger. However, if the danger is so obvious that a person could reasonably be expected to see it, the condition itself serves as a warning, and the landowner is under no further duty unless harm was foreseeable despite the obvious nature of the danger. Under this analysis, the defendant is not negligent; i.e., he or she has not violated any duty of care. (See Shanley v. American Olive Co. (1921) 185 C. 552, 555, 197 P. 793; Mautino v. Sutter Hosp. Assn. (1931) 211 C. 556, 561, 296 P. 76; Pauly v. King (1955) 44 C.2d 649, 653, 284 P.2d 487 [unsupported flashing obvious to plaintiff, an experienced roofer]; *Ambrose v. [§ 1127] Effect of Rowland Case.

In Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 C.A.2d 20, 77 C.R. 914, plaintiff, a golfer wearing worn golf shoes, slipped and fell on a concrete walk that she used instead of a safer means of access to the course. (See supra, §1118.) Defendant set up the defenses of no duty to warn of an obvious danger and contributory negligence, and the trial judge granted a nonsuit. Held, reversed; in view of plaintiff's previous unfamiliarity with the walk, the issues of her appreciation of the risk of using it with her badly worn shoes, or her contributory negligence, were for the jury. (273 C.A.2d 34.) Under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, "the obvious nature of the risk, danger, or defect ... can no longer be said per se to abridge the invitation given by the possessor of land, or to derogate his or her duty of care, so as to make the possessor's liability solely a matter of law to be determined on a nonsuit. By that decision, this matter of law for the court is transmuted to a question of fact for the jury; namely, whether a possessor of land even in respect to the obvious risk has acted reasonably in respect to the probability of injury to an invitee; and whether or not the invitee used the property reasonably in full knowledge of any obvious risk entering into a subsequent injurious incident." (273 C.A.2d 33.)

In Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 C.A.3d 104, 273 C.R. 457, discussing Florez v. Groom Dev. Co. (1959) 53 C.2d 347, 1 C.R. 840, 348 P.2d 200, supra, §1125, and Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course, the court said: "The unspoken but operative principle in Beauchamp, as well as in Florez, is foreseeability: it is foreseeable that even an obvious danger may cause injury, if the practical necessity of encountering the danger, when weighed against the apparent risk involved, is such that under the circumstances, a person might choose to encounter the danger. The foreseeability of injury, in turn, when considered along with various other policy considerations such as the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to remedy such danger ... , may lead to the legal conclusion that the defendant 'owes a duty of care to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by his conduct, with respect to all risks which make the conduct unreasonably dangerous.'" (224 C.A.3d 121.)

In Krongos v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 387, 9 C.R.2d 124, a construction worker was electrocuted when a cable he was holding touched an overhead high-voltage wire that passed over land owned by defendant and leased to the decedent's employer for use as a "job yard" during a highway construction project. At the time of the accident, the decedent was assisting the operator of a boom truck by attaching the boom cable to bundles of timber. The decedent was killed when the operator was blinded by the sun and swung the boom into the overhead power line. In the ensuing wrongful death action by plaintiff heirs, the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendant. Held, reversed; defendant owed a general duty of due care to persons coming on his land to protect them from the hazard presented by the high voltage lines.

(a) The general duty of care established by Rowland applies to lessors who are not in possession of the leased premises. (7 C.A.4th 392, citing Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C.3d 454, 213 C.R. 213, 698 P.2d 116, infra, §1507, Wylie v. Gresch (1987) 191 C.A.3d 412, 236 C.R. 552, infra, §1147, and Mora v. Baker Commodities (1989) 210 C.A.3d 771, 258 C.R. 669, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §653.) Hence, defendant had a duty to exercise due care to protect third persons, such as the decedent, who come onto the leased premises, but this does not answer the specific question whether he had a duty to protect the decedent against the obvious danger of operating a boom truck near high voltage lines. (7 C.A.4th 392.)

(b) Despite the obviousness of the danger, it was reasonably foreseeable by defendant that a person might be electrocuted by the boom's coming into contact with the overhead power lines. "[T]he practical necessity of encountering the danger (i.e., the necessity of using the boom truck to move materials), when weighed against the apparent risk involved (electrocution by contact with electrical wires), is such that under the circumstances, a person might (and in fact did) choose to encounter the danger." (7 C.A.4th 394, citing Osborn.) However, although the decedent's injury was "foreseeable" as it pertains to a general duty of care, the fact-finder is still free to find that the injury was not foreseeable in light of this particular defendant's conduct. (7 C.A.4th 394.)

(c) Defendant's general duty to use due care to protect people coming on his land from the obvious hazard of electrocution is supported not only by foreseeability, but also by the sum total of the policy considerations enunciated in Rowland: the decedent clearly suffered injury; there is a strong policy of preventing future harm of the kind that happened here; defendant could have easily discharged his burden either by refusing to rent the land for the purpose for which it was used or by specifically prohibiting the use of boom trucks on the premises; and the risk involved is likely to be covered by a standard landlord's liability policy. Whether defendant breached this duty with respect to the decedent is, however, an issue that should be left to the fact finder to decide. (7 C.A.4th 395.) (See Martinez v. Chippewa Enterprises (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1179, 1184, 18 C.R.3d 152 [although obviousness of danger may obviate duty to warn, if it is foreseeable that danger may cause injury despite being obvious, e.g., when necessity requires persons to encounter it, there may be duty to remedy danger, and breach of that duty may form basis for liability].)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - c. Dangerous Physical Condition.
 - 6. Exceeding Scope of Invitation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1128

[§ 1128] Exceeding Scope of Invitation.

(1) Early Rule of Restricted Scope. It was formerly held that the duty of the owner extended only to that portion of the premises where the invitee would, under the circumstances, be entitled to go; and this depended on various factors, such as the character of the place and the nature of the business to be transacted. An invitee who went to other parts of the premises exceeded the scope of the invitation and became a mere licensee or trespasser, toward whom no duty was owed as to the condition of the premises. In Powers v. Raymond (1925) 197 C. 126, 239 P. 1069, plaintiff, an employee of a hotel, desiring to go to the railroad station, chose a dark bypath instead of the well-lighted roadway, and was injured by reason of a defect in the walk. While the invitation to the employee included not only the use of the building but also of a safe means of ingress and egress, this was provided in the roadway, and in the use of the bypath, plaintiff was a mere licensee. (197 C. 131.) (See Medcraft v. Merchants Exchange (1931) 211 C. 404, 406, 295 P.2d 822 [plaintiff, in search of washroom, entered darkened room and stepped through door into air shaft]; Billeter v. Rhodes & Jamieson (1951) 104 C.A.2d 137, 144, 231 P.2d 93 [plaintiff climbed concrete mixer in improper manner, disregarding safe method]; Robinson v. King (1952) 113 C.A.2d 455, 248 P.2d 477 [plumber doing repair work in hotel went to unfamiliar unlighted place and stepped through doorway into flight of stairs]; Powell v. Jones (1955) 133 C.A.2d 601, 606, 284 P.2d 856 [baby-sitter left premises for personal reasons and returned by unfamiliar outside stairway]; Rest.2d, Torts §332, Comment l; 58 A.L.R.2d 1201, 1204 [duty and liability of innkeeper to visitor or caller of registered guest].)

(2) Relaxation of Rule. Later cases rejected the notion that an invitee loses his or her status whenever the invitee goes beyond the place where actual business is to be transacted. (See Rest.2d, Torts §332, Comment l.) Thus:

(a) The use of washrooms is generally considered within the scope of the invitation unless some notice to the contrary is given. (Stewart v. Lido Cafe (1936) 13 C.A.2d 46, 51, 56 P.2d 553; Sheridan v. Ravn (1949) 91 C.A.2d 112, 115, 204 P.2d 644 [jury could find implied invitation to use washroom].)

(b) The invitation includes the right to use any means of ingress or egress that reasonably appears to have been provided. (Johnston v. De La Guerra Properties (1946) 28 C.2d 394, 399, 170 P.2d 5; see Tschumy v. Brook's Market (1943) 60 C.A.2d 158, 165, 140 P.2d 431 [customer of market, on foot, was still invitee when leaving by crossing market's parking lot]; DeLay v. Braun (1944) 63 C.A.2d 8, 10, 146 P.2d 32 [plaintiff, after unsuccessfully ringing defendant's doorbell for business purpose, was still invitee when she walked to rear of house to make further inquiry]; Keane v. McIndoe (1949) 93 C.A.2d 82, 84, 207 P.2d 1059 [tenant authorized by landlord to put garbage in can located on landlord's adjacent lot was invitee while on lot disposing of garbage]; Danisan v. Cardinal Grocery Stores (1957) 155 C.A.2d 833, 837, 318 P.2d 681 [customer in food market slipped in aisle used for customers of different lessees].)

(c) Other parts of the premises may be considered within the scope of the invitation. (See Christy v. Ulrich (1931) 113 C.A. 338, 340, 298 P. 135 [state engineer, inspecting highway bridge under construction, was injured while voluntarily carrying tool to worker]; Koppelman v. Ambassador Hotel Co. of Los Angeles (1939) 35 C.A.2d 537, 540, 96 P.2d 196 [defendant company maintained shops and bank on its lower floor; plaintiff, having bank business, was instead attracted by sightseeing crowd, and followed it along corridor where she tripped over timber on floor]; Miller v. Contra Costa (1951) 106 C.A.2d 304, 307, 235 P.2d 76 [pilot at airport was invitee not only as to field and runway, but as to shoulder negligently maintained with dirt mound].)

Under the doctrine of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, (supra, §1086), the test of the scope of the invitation has lost most of its significance.

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 1. Nature of Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1129

[§ 1129] Nature of Duty.

(1) Duty To Control Activity. The landowner's duty is not limited to keeping the physical property in safe condition. The premises alone may involve no dangers, but the condition may be unsafe because of the activity taking place. As pointed out in the Rest.2d, Torts §344, the possessor has a duty to take appropriate measures to restrain conduct by third persons of which the possessor should be aware and that the possessor should realize is dangerous. (See Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134; Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 121, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793, infra, §1137 [duty "to take affirmative action to control the wrongful acts of third persons which threaten invitees where the occupant has reasonable cause to anticipate such acts and the probability of injury resulting therefrom"]; Baley v. J.F. Hink & Son (1955) 133 C.A.2d 102, 111, 283 P.2d 349 [storekeeper may be liable for permitting dogs in store aisle where they may cause a customer to stumble or trip]; Winn v. Holmes (1956) 143 C.A.2d 501, 504, 299 P.2d 994 [complaint alleged that guest in defendant's restaurant was threatened and assaulted by two other guests while defendant was present]; Thomas v. Bruza (1957) 151 C.A.2d 150, 154, 311 P.2d 128 [duty of bar operator to protect guests]; Bartosh v. Banning (1967) 251 C.A.2d 378, 384, 59 C.R. 382 [bar operator must exercise control over customer when operator has reason to believe from observation or past experience that customer's conduct will be dangerous to another]; Orser v. George (1967) 252 C.A.2d 660, 672, 60 C.R. 708 [member of duck club participating in practice shoot, under duty to control shooting by other members]; Barker v. Wah Low (1971) 19 C.A.3d 710, 716, 97 C.R. 85 [drive-in restaurant with bumper stops inadequate to stop patron's car, which jumped barrier and killed decedent]; Musgrove v. Ambrose Properties (1978) 87 C.A.3d 44, 51, 52, 150 C.R. 722 [plaintiff injured by bicycle ridden by boy on passageway in shopping center; defendant knew that bicycles were ridden on premises and took no precautions to minimize risk of striking pedestrian]; Cantwell v. Peppermill (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1797, 1801, 31 C.R.2d 246 [bar and restaurant operator has duty to take reasonable steps to protect guests from aggressive conduct of other persons on premises]; Hassoon v. Shamieh (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1191, 1199, 107 C.R.2d 658 [landowner has no legal duty to take measures to prevent violence from occurring outside property, even when foreseeable]; Sakiyama v. AMF Bowling Centers (2003) 110 C.A.4th 398, 402, 1 C.R.3d 762 [all night rave parties are not inherently dangerous].)

(2) Control Over Third Person. In addition to notice, the landowner must have some control over the conduct of the third person. (See Nevarez v. Thriftmart (1970) 7 C.A.3d 799, 804, 87 C.R. 50, supra, §1062.) Young v. Desert View Management Corp. (1969) 275 C.A.2d 294, 79 C.R. 848, rejected an unwarranted extension of duty. Plaintiff was a part-time employee in defendant's restaurant, off duty, when a robbery was committed. One waitress said "Help, I have been robbed," and another waitress said "A man ... just robbed Helen. Help. Let's get a license number." Plaintiff went out, saw a man walking, and asked him if he saw the robbers. The man drew a gun and plaintiff fled but was shot in the back. Held, defendant was not liable. The theory that plaintiff responded to a request to go into a zone of danger was not supported by this evidence; the only justifiable inference was a reasonable belief by the waitress that a robber was making a getaway, not that he was lurking outside. As to the "social value" of his conduct, the Legislature has covered the field of indemnification of Good Samaritans (see Govt.C. 13970 et seq.); there is no reason to impose liability on the initial victim. (275 C.A.2d 300.)

(3) Duration of Activity. One practical difference between liability for conditions and for activities is that usually the physical condition is continuous and discoverable by inspection, while the dangerous activity may sometimes be temporary. The question then is whether it was so obvious and had continued for such a period as to charge the defendant with notice of it.

In Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen (1946) 27 C.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729, plaintiff, a volunteer hostess at a servicemen's dance conducted by defendant corporation, was injured when a Marine with whom she was dancing threw her around in "wild jitterbug antics," disregarding her protest and screams for help. Defendant was held liable on a showing that the objectionable activity continued for 3 or 4 minutes before the accident. (27 C.2d 810; see 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 494.) (Cf. Hunter v. Mohawk Petroleum Corp. (1959) 51 C.2d 439, 441, 334 P.2d 193 [customer at self-service gas station negligently repairing his car injured plaintiff, another customer; no notice and no liability]; Porter v. California Jockey Club (1955) 134 C.A.2d 158, 160, 285 P.2d 60 [plaintiff at racetrack was struck by running spectator; no notice and no liability].)

(4) Joint and Several Liability. Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §14, a person "who is liable to another based on a failure to protect the other from the specific risk of an intentional tort" is jointly and severally liable for both the person's share of comparative responsibility and the intentional tortfeasor's share. (On Restatement rule of comparative responsibility generally, see infra, §§1297, 1328.)

(5) Commentary. The following sources may be consulted on the possessor's duty to control the conduct of third persons. (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.7; 62, 62A Am.Jur.2d (1990 ed.), Premises Liability §§40 et seq., 563 et seq.; California Premises Liability, §1:41 et seq.; 7 Proof of Facts 2d 635 [tavern owner's liability for third person's assault]; 42 Proof of Facts 2d 173 [landowner's liability for failing to provide security against criminal attack by third person]; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 497 [bank's liability for criminal attack at ATM or night depository]; 17 California Lawyer 48 (October 1997) [premises liability for criminal acts]; 23 Cal.  RELATIONSHIPS

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
- 2. Foreseeability: Activity of Third Person.
 - aa. In General: Prior Incidents.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1130

[§ 1130] In General: Prior Incidents.

Liability is imposed only where the possessor has reasonable cause to anticipate the misconduct of third persons; when the injury results from a sudden, intentional criminal act, which the possessor has no reasonable opportunity to anticipate or prevent, there is no breach of duty. (See Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134; Jamison v. Mark C. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 327, 338, 133 C.R.2d 425 reversing nonsuit against gas station customer assaulted for racial reasons, where station's manager had earlier been robbed at knifepoint by same perpetrator, that attack had been reported to defendant, and there had been other robberies and assaults on premises; prior assaults need not have been racially motivated, because they must only be similar, not identical]; Sakiyama v. AMF Bowling Centers (2003) 110 C.A.4th 398, 406, 1 C.R.3d 762 [landowner who rented facility for all night rave party did not owe duty of care to person injured hours later at remote location as result of voluntary drug use, even if owner knew or could assume that drugs would be used by some attendees, where owner did nothing to promote drug use and even took steps to prevent it; distinguishing Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914]; Rest.2d, Torts §314A, Comment e; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 165; BAJI, No. 8.21.)

A number of Court of Appeal decisions contained language to the effect that in the absence of prior similar accidents, the landowner was not bound to anticipate the criminal activities of strangers. (See Rogers v. Jones (1976) 56 C.A.3d 346, 351, 128 C.R. 404; Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing (1976) 63 C.A.3d 538, 542, 134 C.R. 29, infra, §1143; Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co., supra; Wingard v. Safeway Stores (1981) 123 C.A.3d 37, 43, 176 C.R. 320; Riley v. Marcus (1981) 125 C.A.3d 103, 109, 177 C.R. 827, infra, §1143; Jubert v. Shalom Realty (1982) 135 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 6, 185 C.R. 641; infra, §1143; Anaya v. Turk (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1092, 199 C.R. 187, infra, §1144.) This rigid rule was rejected, and these cases were disapproved on that point, in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp., supra, 38 C.3d 125, 126.) However, the rejection of this rule by Isaacs was substantially modified by Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, infra, §1136, in which the court said: "[T]he requisite degree of foreseeability rarely, if ever, can be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents of violent crime on the landowner's premises." (6 C.4th 679.)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.

 - 2. Foreseeability: Activity of Third Person.
 - bb. Assault Involving Firearms.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1131

[§ 1131] Assault Involving Firearms.

In Lopez v. McDonald's Corp. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 495, 238 C.R. 436, J entered defendant McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, armed with several guns, and indiscriminately shot at patrons and employees, killing 21 and wounding 11, until he was killed by a police officer. He did not seek to rob or take hostages; his single apparent purpose was to kill as many people as possible before he himself was killed. Plaintiffs sued for damages for wrongful death and personal injuries, alleging that defendant failed to provide adequate safety devices or security personnel to protect customers from dangerous and known risks. Their pleadings and evidence on defendant's motion for summary judgment showed that the restaurant was in a high-crime area involving robberies, theft, and assaults with deadly weapons; that defendant had rejected a proposed offer of a security firm to provide uniformed security officers at $ 5.75 per hour; and that a number of other businesses in the area had various kinds of security systems. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The special relationship between a business establishment and its customers imposes an affirmative duty to take reasonable precautions to protect patrons from reasonably foreseeable criminal conduct of unknown third parties. (193 C.A.3d 504.) "Thus, the primary issue here is not whether a fast-food proprietor has a duty to protect plaintiffs from the potential criminal attacks perpetrated by unknown third parties, but rather to determine whether the boundaries of McDonald's general 'duty' encompasses the burden to protect against once-in-a-lifetime massacres." (193 C.A.3d 504.)

(b) The issue of duty is for the court, to be determined by applying the factors and policy considerations set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134, and other cases. (193 C.A.3d 506, 507, 508, and footnotes 5, 6, and 7.) Applying the foreseeability factor: "[T]he theft-related and property crimes of the type shown by the history of its operations, or the general assaultive-type activity which had occurred in the vicinity bear no relationship to purposeful homicide or assassination. In other words, under all the circumstances presented, the risk of a maniacal, mass murderous assault is not a hazard the likelihood of which makes McDonald's conduct unreasonably dangerous. Rather, the likelihood of this unprecedented murderous assault was so remote and unexpected that, as a matter of law, the general character of McDonald's nonfeasance did not facilitate its happening." (193 C.A.3d 509.)

(c) Applying other Rowland factors: "[A]lthough the policy of preventing future harm is great, the extent of the burden to the defendant and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to protect against heavily-armed suicidal murderers is onerous. ... Finally, without infringing upon the issue of causation, what protective measures should be pursued to protect against a mass murderous assault truly defy exact delineation, because how can one know what measures will be effective against a degenerate, a psychopath, or a psychotic." (193 C.A.3d 512.) (For the holding on causation, see infra, §1214.)

The reasoning and holding of Lopez were followed in Thai v. Stang (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1264, 263 C.R. 202. Plaintiff was standing outside the entrance of defendant's roller rink when an automobile drove by and its occupants fired shots at the entrance with an automatic rifle. Plaintiff was not the intended victim; the target was his companion, a rival gang leader. Here, as in Lopez, there was no evidence that would have reasonably forecast a potentially homicidal act. Plaintiff has not presented any admissible evidence that would have put defendant on notice "that a daytime drive-by shooting of someone on his premises was a real possibility, let alone a likely event." As a matter of law, the drive-by shooting here was an unforeseeable attack by a third party. (214 C.A.3d 1273.)

In Gray v. Kircher (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1069, 236 C.R. 891, defendant advertised his hotel as "gay managed," and plaintiff, who was gay, selected it as a permanent residence. He and other residents became concerned with the "anti-gay" attitude of M, a transient, and complained to defendant. Subsequently, plaintiff was involved in a confrontation with M over excessive noise from M's stereo, and M shot plaintiff. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed. While lack of similar incidents was not automatically fatal to plaintiff's case, the other, undisputed facts supported the judgment.

(a) There was no prior history of violence by M, no evidence that anyone was aware that he possessed a gun, and no evidence that defendant knew or should have known of any risk to other hotel guests occasioned by M's presence; and it was not reasonably foreseeable that a noisy tenant might criminally assault another guest. (193 C.A.3d 1074.)

(b) Plaintiff's suggestion that M might have him expelled or moved to another part of the hotel because of his alleged "anti-gay" philosophy was untenable. This type of discrimination by a provider of public accommodations would be contrary to the Unruh Civil Rights Act (C.C. 51). (193 C.A.3d 1078.)

[§ 1132] Assault Not Involving Firearms.

The element of causation was emphasized in Noble v. Los Angeles Dodgers (1985) 168 C.A.3d 912, 214 C.R. 395. Plaintiffs, husband and wife, were returning to their car in defendant's parking lot after attending a night baseball game. Plaintiff husband became involved in an altercation with two drunks and was knocked down. The theory of the action was defendant's failure to provide adequate security, and the jury brought in a verdict for plaintiffs despite its special finding that the husband was 55% responsible for his injuries. Held, judgment on verdict reversed. Plaintiffs made no showing that there were any reasonable steps that defendant could have taken to prevent the occurrence or that defendant's inaction was the cause of the injury. (168 C.A.3d 915.) Their expert witness offered an opinion on inadequacy of security measures, but defendant's evidence showed that 69 security guards were on duty, one for every 900 customers. (168 C.A.3d 917.) The case "is a classic example of a plaintiff establishing what could be described as abstract negligence, in the context that the Dodgers' security didn't comport with plaintiffs' expert's or the jury's notion of 'adequacy,' but failing to prove any causal connection between that negligence and the injury." (168 C.A.3d 918.)

In Wiener v. Southcoast Childcare Centers (2004) 32 C.4th 1138, 12 C.R.3d 615, 88 P.3d 517, defendant day care center was located on property leased from defendant property owner and was so situated that its playground, which was surrounded by a four-foot-high chain link fence, was a few feet from a busy street corner. A intentionally drove his vehicle through this fence and onto the playground, killing two children unrelated to each other and injuring several others. A was eventually convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to life without parole. Plaintiffs (the parents of the deceased children) sued defendants for negligence and premises liability, claiming that the harm (if not the manner in which it was perpetrated) was foreseeable and that the fence afforded inadequate protection. As evidence of foreseeability, plaintiffs relied on a prior incident in which a momentarily unattended, parked mail truck had crashed through the fence (no one was injured) and on a few minor traffic accidents that had occurred near the fence. Contending that A's murderous rampage was a wholly unforeseeable criminal act that could not give rise to negligence liability, defendants successfully moved for summary judgment, but the Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that an errant motorist crashing through the fence was a foreseeable event that could have been prevented by a stronger fence.

Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Wingard v. Safeway Stores (1981) 123 C.A.3d 27, 176 C.R. 320, held that third party criminal acts were not foreseeable in the absence of prior similar incidents, but this "prior similar incidents" rule was apparently modified by Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, 1134, which held that foreseeability was to be determined by the "totality of the circumstances." When this latter rule caused confusion, especially in cases involving third party criminal acts, it was further refined in Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, infra, §1136, by the adoption of the present-day balancing test under which the decision to impose a duty of care to protect against criminal assaults requires balancing the foreseeability of the harm against the burden of the duty to be imposed. Hence, the greater the burden, the higher the degree of foreseeability required. (32 C.4th 1146.)

(b) The Court of Appeal below ignored the balancing test of Ann M. and looked instead to whether defendants' playground was generally vulnerable to "errant" traffic. In so doing, the Court of Appeal observed that the threatened harm--being struck by an automobile driven onto the playground--was not dependent on the driver's criminal state of mind. The court relied on Robison v. Six Flags Theme Parks (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1294, 75 C.R.2d 838, infra, §1134, in which a third party was held liable for injuries that occurred when his car, operated by a developmentally disabled person while it was being pushed, left a parking lot driveway and inadvertently veered into a nearby picnic area. Robison was given as an example of the type of harm that should have been guarded against in the present case. (32 C.4th 1148.)

(c) Robinson correctly realized that the precise details of how a third party's negligence cause injury are not overly significant, but where the third party acts criminally, the manner in which the injury results is highly relevant. In fact, in noting that Ann M. was inapplicable in that case because it was based on a criminal act, Robison acknowledged that the California cases analyze third-party criminal acts differently from ordinary negligence, and require courts to apply a heightened sense of foreseeability before holding a defendant liable for the criminal acts of third parties. This is because (1) it is difficult if not impossible in today's society to predict where and when a criminal might strike; and (2) if a criminal decides on a particular goal or victim, it is extremely difficult to remove his or her every means for achieving that goal. Hence, under Ann M.'s balancing test, defendants owed no duty to plaintiffs. (32 C.4th 1148.) There has been no showing that plaintiffs can prove that A's murderous act was foreseeable. "Without prior similar criminal acts, or even any indication of prior criminal acts or intrusions of any type in the surrounding businesses, defendants here could not have been expected to create a fortress to protect the children, or to take further steps to deter or hinder a vicious murderer, unconcerned about the safety of innocent children, from committing his crime." (32 C.4th 1149.)

(d) "[E]ven if we were to treat this case as one involving ordinary landlord negligence, and looked at the 'kind of harm' the children suffered, rather than the criminal act itself, we would still distinguish the action from Robison. ... There, the property's physical layout, traffic pattern, and inviting recreational area, made an injurious automotive intrusion on the proximately located picnic area foreseeable. By contrast, in the present action, the one freak accident involving a runaway mail truck in which no one was injured could have occurred anywhere, at any time. That fact, together with the evidence indicating the physical layout of defendants' fence and the playground had adequately protected the children against all other intrusions, was simply inadequate to make any automobile intrusion through the fence foreseeable." (32 C.4th 1149.)

A concurring opinion, in which one other justice joined, argued that it was only necessary to consider whether the third party's act was foreseeable and that it was unnecessary to focus on whether the third party's action was negligent or intentional.

Unknown persons--probably vandals--opened waste oil drums, and the oil ran onto the sidewalk, where plaintiffs slipped and fell. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed. "[T]he harm, though foreseeable, was minimally so. There was no relationship between the vandals and either plaintiff or defendant. There was no close connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; the spillage was entirely the result of the third party's action, there being nothing inherently unstable or vulnerable about the barrels which were not so placed as to advertise their presence. The element of moral blame attached to defendant's conduct is virtually nonexistent. The oil was stored to satisfy conservation and environmental obligations of defendant." (112 C.A.3d 580.)

[§ 1134] In General.

In Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, plaintiff doctor, affiliated with defendant private hospital, arrived at the hospital with his wife at 8:30 p.m., and parked his car in the hospital's research parking lot. When leaving at 10 p.m., plaintiff was grabbed by an assailant with a gun, and while turning, was shot and seriously injured. This action was brought against defendant hospital and Exchange, its insurance carrier. The complaint alleged that the hospital failed to provide adequate security measures to protect invitees and licensees against the criminal acts of third persons on its premises, and that Exchange negligently participated in the hospital's decision to disarm its security guards. At the trial, plaintiff produced evidence showing that the hospital was located in a high crime area, that many assaults and threatened assaults had occurred elsewhere on the premises, that security guards were few and unarmed, and that the lighting in the parking lot was inadequate. The trial judge granted Exchange's motion for summary judgment, and at the close of plaintiff's case, granted the hospital's motion for nonsuit, mainly on the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove notice of prior crimes of the same or similar nature in the same or similar portion of defendant's premises. Held, summary judgment for Exchange affirmed, and judgment of nonsuit for defendant reversed.

(a) Foreseeability to establish landowner's liability.

(1) "The primary question presented by this appeal is whether foreseeability, for the purposes of establishing a landowner's liability for the criminal acts of third persons on the landowner's property, may be established other than by evidence of prior similar incidents on those premises." (38 C.3d 123.)

(2) Rest.2d, Torts §344, Comment f, states in part: "If the place or character of his business, or his past experience, is such that he should reasonably anticipate careless or criminal conduct on the part of third persons, either generally or at some particular time, he may be under a duty to take precautions against it, and to provide a reasonably sufficient number of servants to afford a reasonable protection." (38 C.3d 124.)

(3) Foreseeability is a flexible concept: the degree necessary to warrant a finding of a duty will vary from case to case. Thus, where the burden of preventing future harm is great, a high degree of foreseeability may be required; but where there are strong policy reasons for preventing the harm, or the harm can be prevented by simple means, a lesser degree may be required. (38 C.3d 125, quoting Gomez v. Ticor (1983) 145 C.A.3d 622, 193 C.R. 600, supra, §1139.)

(b) Court of Appeal opinions disapproved. A line of Court of Appeal cases "has rigidified the foreseeability concept" in these cases by stating the rule that in the absence of prior similar incidents, the landowner is not bound to anticipate the criminal activities of third persons, particularly where the wrongdoer was a stranger to both the landowner and the victim and where the crime came about precipitously. (38 C.3d 125, citing Rogers v. Jones (1976) 56 C.A.3d 346, 351, 128 C.R. 404, supra, §1130; Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing (1976) 63 C.A.3d 538, 542, 134 C.R. 29, infra, §1143; Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co. (1980) 112 C.A.3d 570, 580, 169 C.R. 399, supra, §1133; Wingard v. Safeway Stores (1981) 123 C.A.3d 37, 43, 176 C.R. 320, supra, §1132; Riley v. Marcus (1981) 125 C.A.3d 103, 109, 177 C.R. 827, infra, §1143; Jubert v. Shalom Realty (1982) 135 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 185 C.R. 641, infra, §1143; Anaya v. Turk (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1092, 199 C.R. 187, infra, §1144.) "This rule is fatally flawed in numerous aspects":

(1) The rule discourages landowners from taking adequate measures to protect premises that they know are dangerous, thus contravening the policy of preventing future harm; and the first victim always loses. "Surely, a landowner should not get one free assault before he can be held liable for criminal acts which occur on his property." (38 C.3d 126.)

(2) The rule leads to arbitrary results and distinctions: (a) how "similar" must the prior accidents be; (b) how close in time do they have to be; (c) how near in location must they be? (38 C.3d 126.)

(3) "The rule erroneously equates foreseeability of a particular act with previous occurrences of similar acts." This notion has been rejected; i.e., the mere fact that a particular kind of accident has not happened before does not show that it might not reasonably have been anticipated. (38 C.3d 126, quoting Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914.)

(4) Finally, the rule improperly removes too many cases from the jury's consideration. Prior similar incidents are helpful in determining foreseeability, but are not necessary; and a rule that limits evidence of foreseeability to prior similar incidents deprives the jury of its role in determining that question of fact. (38 C.3d 127.)

(c) Court of Appeal decisions approved. Several decisions have properly recognized that evidence of prior similar incidents is not essential to a finding of foreseeability. (38 C.3d 127, 128, 129, discussing Kwaitkowski v. Superior Trading Co. (1981) 123 C.A.3d 324, 176 C.R. 494, infra, §1142, Gomez v. Ticor (1983) 145 C.A.3d 622, 193 C.R. 600, infra, §1139, and Cohen v. Southland Corp. (1984) 157 C.A.3d 130, 203 C.R. 572, infra, §1140.) Gomez and Cohen, after analyzing foreseeability in light of all the circumstances and in terms of the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, point out that prior incidents, whether similar or not, may constitute evidence of foreseeability and that other types of evidence, such as the nature, condition, and location of the defendant's premises, may also establish it. (38 C.3d 129.)

(d) Evidence in present case required submission to jury. The hospital was located in a high-crime area; several threatened assaults had occurred in the emergency room area directly across from the research parking lot; there had been thefts in the area; incidents involving harassment were common; emergency room facilities and surrounding areas were dangerous; parking lots create an especial temptation and opportunity for criminal misconduct; the research parking lot was poorly lighted; there was no security there at the time, while another parking lot on the hospital premises had a security guard and a monitoring TV camera. (38 C.3d 130.) The fact that the injury was brought about by the criminal act of a third person is of no consequence. (38 C.3d 131, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §449, and citing Bigbee v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1983) 34 C.3d 49, 192 C.R. 857, 665 P.2d 947, infra, §1206.)

(e) Conclusion. "Foreseeability of harm should ordinarily be determined by a jury. That determination calls for the consideration of what is reasonable in light of all the circumstances. One such circumstance is whether the occurrence of prior similar incidents placed the defendant on notice that its security measures were not adequate to prevent harm to persons who used the defendant's premises. While prior similar incidents are helpful to determine foreseeability, they are not required to establish it. Other circumstances may also place the landowner on notice of a dangerous condition. A rule which limits proof of foreseeability to evidence of prior similar incidents automatically precludes recovery to first-injured victims. Such a rule is inherently unfair and contrary to public policy." (38 C.3d 135.) (See Onciano v. Golden Palace Restaurant (1990) 219 C.A.3d 385, 392, 393, 268 C.R. 96 [following Isaacs]; Robison v. Six Flags Theme Parks (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1294, 1297, 75 C.R.2d 838 [amusement park was liable when car struck picnickers, where picnic area was island in parking lot without barriers; some accident was foreseeable, even though particular way accident occurred, i.e., slow learner, unlicensed driver involved in effort to push-start car, was not foreseeable]; 23 Cal. - B. Landowners and Possessors.

 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
- 3. Foreseeability: Absence of Prior Incidents.
 - bb. Parking Garages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1135

[§ 1135] Parking Garages.

In Sharon P. v. Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 C.4th 1181, 91 C.R.2d 35, 989 P.2d 121, plaintiff paid a monthly fee to park in an assigned space in her office building's underground parking garage. On a Thursday morning at approximately 11 a.m., plaintiff parked in the garage, and was sexually assaulted at gunpoint as she was preparing to leave her car. Plaintiff sued the owner of the building and the parking services provider on the ground that their failure to provide adequate security resulted in the attack. Defendants moved for summary judgment, contending that, because the attack was not reasonably foreseeable, neither defendant owed a duty to plaintiff to make the garage more secure.

The evidence supporting and opposing the motions showed that the garage was about 200 feet by 225 feet; the building manager knew of no incident in which anyone was physically assaulted on the premises or was confronted with a firearm in the garage in the last 10 years; armed robberies had occurred at the bank on the ground floor of the building, but none had involved criminal activity in the garage or personal injury; police records showed that, in the immediately preceding year, a total of 363 crimes, including 2 rapes, occurred in the 50 square blocks surrounding the office building, and that for the first quarter of the year of the assault, 72 crimes, but no rapes, were recorded; several lights in the garage were out; the smell of urine was present; and the garage security camera was not working. The trial judge granted defendants' summary judgment motions, but the Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that a sexual assault was foreseeable despite the absence of prior incidents, because parking garages were, as a matter of law, "inherently dangerous." Held, on supreme court review, judgment of trial court affirmed.

(a) General considerations. The critical issue in this case is whether a sexual assault in the garage was sufficiently foreseeable to support a requirement that defendants secure the area against that crime. Plaintiff argued that garages, being inherently dangerous, carry with them a higher foreseeability of violent attacks, with a corresponding obligation to provide more than just minimal security measures, and that security guards were thus justified (but not required). Plaintiff further argued that even if security guards were not mandatory, the facts imposed on defendants a minimum duty of protection, i.e., a clean, brightly lit garage with working security cameras and periodic walk-throughs by existing personnel. (21 C.4th 1188.)

(b) Security guards.

(1) Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, supra, §1136, clarified that a landowner's general duty of maintenance includes the duty to take reasonable steps to secure common areas against foreseeable criminal acts of third parties that are likely to occur in the absence of these precautions. It is thus necessary to resolve whether the sexual attack on plaintiff was sufficiently foreseeable to require hiring security guards. (21 C.4th 1189.) Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, supra, §1134, held that foreseeability depends on the totality of the circumstances and that prior similar incidents, although helpful, are not necessary to prove foreseeability. In contrast, in concluding that a "high degree of foreseeability" was required in order to require landowners to hire security guards, Ann M. noted that this degree of foreseeability could rarely, if ever, be established in the absence of prior similar incidents on the landowner's premises. (21 C.4th 1189.)

(2) The foregoing analysis leads to the conclusion that defendants were not required to provide security guards for the garage. The prior robberies, all of which targeted a bank elsewhere on the premises and which did not involve violent attacks, were not sufficiently similar to the sexual assault inflicted on plaintiff to establish the requisite high degree of foreseeability. Moreover, this degree of foreseeability was not proved by evidence of the crime rate in the surrounding 50-block area, even if considered in combination with the bank robberies and with evidence that persons had slept and urinated in the garage prior to the assault. (21 C.4th 1191.)

(3) Plaintiff relied on a footnote in Ann M., which indicated that parking garages are so inherently dangerous that, even in the absence of prior similar incidents, landowners might be required to provide security guards. However, "[u]pon careful deliberation, we reject" this view. (21 C.4th 1191.) First, there is no evidence or authority indicating that underground structures, regardless of their physical characteristics, are prone to violence. Moreover, several cases indicate that aboveground commercial and residential buildings are just as prone to sex crimes by unknown third parties. Second, while Gomez v. Ticor (1983) 145 C.A.3d 622, 193 C.R. 600, supra, §1139, stated that violent crime in parking garages may be foreseeable, it did not hold that, as a matter of law, violent assaults in these structures are foreseeable. (21 C.4th 1192.)

(4) Because all businesses attract some crime, they could all be characterized as "inherently dangerous," a description often justified in hindsight by the fact that a crime has occurred on the premises. To hold that parking garages are inherently dangerous as a matter of law would lead to endless litigation over what other businesses could be similarly described. In the present case, adoption of plaintiff's position would mean that defendants would be saddled with the burden of hiring security guards merely because an underground garage was involved, without regard either to the dissimilarity of prior criminal incidents elsewhere on the premises or the garage's 10-year history of crime-free existence. Such a holding would ignore the fact that many businesses are economically viable precisely because they do not require on-site labor. (21 C.4th 1193.)

(c) Other security measures.

(1) Plaintiff argued that even if there was not the high degree of foreseeability requiring defendants to hire security guards, the occurrence of violent crime in underground parking garages was sufficiently foreseeable to require defendants to provide less burdensome methods of protection, such as a brightly lit and clean garage, a working security camera, and periodic walk-throughs by existing personnel. Plaintiff's reasoning is flawed, because it is questionable whether plaintiff's proposed measures would have been effective against the type of violent assault that occurred here and whether these measures would have been any less burdensome than hiring security guards. (21 C.4th 1195.)

(2) Some cases have criticized the view that adequate lighting is a simple and well-defined security measure effective in preventing crime. Others have rejected claims of abstract negligence pertaining to the lighting and maintenance of property where no connection to the alleged injuries was shown. (21 C.4th 1196.) Cohen v. Southland Corp. (1984) 157 C.A.3d 130, 203 C.R. 572, supra, §1140, and Gomez, provide a somewhat broader concept of foreseeability with regard to assaults occurring on properties that have some history of nonassaultive crime. These courts reasoned that it would be foreseeable that a violent crime would occur if a person were present at an otherwise foreseeable offense or if that person interrupted such a crime. Here, however, plaintiff offered no evidence suggesting that her attack had any connection to an otherwise foreseeable crime on the premises (i.e., the bank robberies). Accordingly, the assault on plaintiff falls outside the even broader scope of reasonable foreseeability contemplated in these cases. (21 C.4th 1197.)

(3) The police department records of nearby crimes do not aid plaintiff's case. Although it is possible that violent crime may be foreseeable in the absence of prior similar incidents if violent crimes previously occurred at a substantially similar business in the immediate vicinity, plaintiff provided no evidence regarding the exact location of any of the reported crimes that occurred within the 50-block area and no indication of their proximity to the garage. In fact, plaintiff never even showed that defendants were aware of the police statistics. In short, the evidence of nearby crimes provides no tenable basis for establishing foreseeability. (21 C.4th 1198.)

(d) Conclusion. "It is difficult to quarrel with the abstract proposition that the provision of improved lighting and maintenance, operational surveillance cameras and periodic walk-throughs of the tenant garage owned and operated by defendants might have diminished the risk of criminal attacks occurring in the garage. But absent any prior similar incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults in that location, we cannot conclude defendants were required to secure the area against such crime." (21 C.4th 1199.) (See Lopez v. Baca (2002) 98 C.A.4th 1008, 1016, 120 C.R.2d 281 [nightclub's violation of statute prohibiting payment of commission to persons who solicit patrons to buy drinks did not render club "inherently dangerous" within meaning of Sharon P.]; *Alvarez v. [§ 1136] Other Structures.

In Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, the issue was "whether the scope of the duty owed by the owner of a shopping center to maintain common areas within its possession and control in a reasonably safe condition includes providing security guards in those areas." Held, under the facts of this case, the owner did not owe such a duty.

Defendant Pacific Plaza Shopping Center entered into a commercial lease with Photo Co. for operation of a photo processing service located in a secluded area of the Center. The lease granted the Center the exclusive right to control the common areas, but did not impose an obligation to police either the common areas or those under the exclusive control of the tenants. Plaintiff, an employee of Photo Co., opened the store for business at 8 a.m. on June 17, 1985. A man, armed with a knife, entered the store, raped plaintiff, robbed the store, and fled. Plaintiff sued Pacific Plaza and others, and Pacific Plaza moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion on a finding that Pacific Plaza owed no duty of care to plaintiff. The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment on the ground that, although a duty was owed to both tenants and their employees, the evidence presented was insufficient to support the conclusion that Pacific Plaza acted unreasonably in failing to provide security patrols. Held, affirmed.

(a) This is a proper case to apply the rules specifying the duty of a landowner to its tenants and patrons. Although plaintiff was not Pacific Plaza's tenant, her employer was; and "in the commercial context where the tenant generally is not a natural person and must, therefore, act through its employees, it cannot be seriously asserted that a tort duty that a landlord owes to protect the personal safety of its tenant should not extend to its tenant's employees." (6 C.4th 675.)

(b) Pacific Plaza argued that it owed no duty, because the crime occurred on property not within its possession and control. This argument was rejected in O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 798, 142 C.R. 487, infra, §1142, and Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 C.3d 490, 229 C.R. 456, 723 P.2d 573, supra, §39. Frances T. extended the reasoning of O'Hara to a residential condominium. The plaintiff, a unit owner, was raped inside the unit and not in a common area; nevertheless, the association was held liable for negligent failure to install adequate lighting in the common area. (6 C.4th 676.)

(c) Because the existence of a duty is not precluded in this case either by the lack of a direct landlord-tenant relationship or by the lack of control over the premises where the crime occurred, the basic issue is whether Pacific Plaza had reasonable cause to anticipate that criminal conduct such as rape would occur in the shopping center unless it provided security patrols. This issue calls for a reexamination of the case of Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, supra, §1134. (6 C.4th 674.) Isaacs is the court's most comprehensive analysis to date of the foreseeability required to establish the existence of a business landowner's duty to take reasonable steps to protect its tenants and patrons from third party crime. The court held that foreseeability could be established despite the absence of prior similar incidents on the premises. (6 C.4th 677.)

(d) Lower court opinions have questioned the wisdom of abandoning the "prior similar incidents" rule. (6 C.4th 677, citing Nola M. v. University of Southern Calif. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 421, 20 C.R.2d 97, infra, §1189, and Onciano v. Golden Palace Restaurant (1990) 219 C.A.3d 385, 268 C.R. 96, supra, §1134.) "Upon further reflection and in light of the increase in violent crime, refinement of the rule enunciated in Isaacs ... is required. We are not reluctant to revisit the rule ... because it was unnecessary for this court to consider the viability of the 'prior similar incidents' rule in order to decide the Isaacs case: the record contained evidence of prior, violent, third party attacks on persons on the hospital's premises in close proximity to where the attack at issue in that case occurred." (6 C.4th 678.) Moreover, broad language used in Isaacs has tended to confuse duty analysis. The opinion can be read to hold that foreseeability is normally a question of fact for the jury. Any such reading is in error; foreseeability is a question of law for the court. (6 C.4th 678.)

(e) The scope of the duty is determined in part by balancing the foreseeability of the harm against the burden of the duty to be imposed; and in cases where the burden of preventing future harm is great, a high degree of foreseeability may be required. (6 C.4th 678.) The hiring of security guards will rarely, if ever, be found to be a "minimal burden." The obligation to provide patrols adequate to deter criminal conduct is not well defined, and the social costs of imposing the duty are not insignificant. "For these reasons, we conclude that a high degree of foreseeability is required in order to find that the scope of a landlord's duty of care includes the hiring of security guards. We further conclude that the requisite degree of foreseeability rarely, if ever, can be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents of violent crime on the landowner's premises. To hold otherwise would be to impose an unfair burden upon landlords and, in effect, would force landlords to become the insurers of public safety, contrary to well-established policy in this state." (6 C.4th 679.)

(f) In the present case, violent criminal assaults were not sufficiently foreseeable to impose that duty. (1) Pacific Plaza did not have notice of prior similar incidents; it had a standard practice to note instances of violent crime, and its records contained no reference to violent criminal acts prior to the rape of plaintiff. (2) Even assuming that it had notice of other incidents, they were not similar to the violent assault suffered by plaintiff. (3) Neither evidence regarding the presence of transients nor evidence of the statistical crime rate of the surrounding area is of a type sufficient to satisfy the burden. (6 C.4th 679.)

One justice dissented, contending that the unanimous opinion in Isaacs should have been controlling, and that the majority opinion "in effect resurrects an improper test discarded by this court eight years ago." (6 C.4th 680, 683.) (See Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 C.A.4th 950, 959, 30 C.R.2d 690, supra, §1143 [landlord and condominium association had no duty to protect plaintiff from assault and rape in her home, in absence of similar incidents; following Ann M.]; Arendell v. Auto Parts Club (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1261, 1264, 35 C.R.2d 83 [no public policy that storeowner provide security guards, even though there had been robberies in store before]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 339 [Ann M.].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 4. Warning of Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1137

[§ 1137] Warning of Danger.

A landowner may discharge his or her duty, without correcting a dangerous condition, by a sufficient warning of it. (See supra, §1086.) And there has been some tendency to regard any clear warning as sufficient, without inquiring into its adequacy under the circumstances. But Rest.2d, Torts §344(b) sets up a stricter test: The landowner or possessor must exercise reasonable care to "give a warning adequate to enable the visitors to avoid the harm, or otherwise to protect them against it." And Comment d states: "In many cases a warning is sufficient care if the possessor reasonably believes that it will be enough to enable the visitor to avoid the harm, or protect himself against it. There are, however, many situations in which the possessor cannot reasonably assume that a warning will be sufficient. He is then required to exercise reasonable care to use such means of protection as are available, or to provide such means in advance because of the likelihood that third persons, or animals, may conduct themselves in a manner which will endanger the safety of the visitor."

This approach was approved and applied in Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793. Plaintiff drove to defendant's bowling alley, parked in its lot, and went to the bar. She was accosted by W with an indecent proposal; she rebuffed him and he left. He repeated the proposal 2 hours later and was again rebuffed. B, defendant's bouncer, was within hearing distance at the second episode, and plaintiff reported W's offensive behavior to B. Shortly before closing time, B told plaintiff, "don't go outside because that goofball is out there." Plaintiff replied that she had to go home and go to work, and B saw her to the door of the parking lot with a final admonition, "please be careful." When plaintiff reached her car, W, waiting for her, told her again that he wanted her. She told him to "go to hell," and he attacked her with a knife, inflicting severe and permanent injuries.

Plaintiff sought to prove by police officers that the alley, located in an economically depressed area, was frequently the scene of disturbances resulting in arrests for assaults, mayhem, drunkenness and other serious offenses. Objections were sustained, and a directed verdict was entered for defendant. Held, reversed. This evidence was admissible, and plaintiff's showing was sufficient to support a verdict for her. The court approved the Restatement test, with its explanatory comment. (65 C.2d 124.) The warnings were insufficient: (1) They did not inform plaintiff of the specific nature of the danger, known to defendant, of an actual assault. (65 C.2d 123.) (2) Even if they had done so, plaintiff still had to leave, and heeding the warning would have required her to give up her right to do so. She was entitled to protection without sacrifice of this right, and the protection could easily have been given by B accompanying her to her car. (65 C.2d 124.) (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1191.)

In Martin v. Barclay Distr. Co. (1970) 13 C.A.3d 828, 91 C.R. 817, plaintiff and her husband came to defendant's restaurant for dinner. While waiting in a narrow, crowded corridor for the hostess, plaintiff was jostled and her finger caught in the door. Held, judgment of nonsuit reversed. Whether defendant acted reasonably in permitting patrons to congregate in the small foyer without warning, and the foreseeability of the harm, were fact questions for the jury. (13 C.A.3d 832.)

The warning was held sufficient in Slater v. Alpha Beta Acme Markets (1975) 44 C.A.3d 274, 118 C.R. 561. Defendant's store was robbed by an armed robber, defendant notified police, and the police conducted a surveillance of the checkout stands. About 2 months later, the same robber appeared, the police officers drew their weapons, and the robber fired a shot into the ceiling. Plaintiff, a customer, was pushed to the floor by another customer, and suffered injuries. She sued on the theory that defendants failed to warn her of the prior robberies or the surveillance. Held, judgment based on a motion for judgment under C.C.P. 631.8 affirmed; the trial judge could reasonably find that defendant adequately discharged its duty to its customers by notifying the police and cooperating in the surveillance. (44 C.A.3d 279.) (See 72 A.L.R.3d 1269 [liability of storekeeper for death or injury to customer in course of robbery].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 5. Proximate Cause.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1138

[§ 1138] Proximate Cause.

A plaintiff injured by criminal conduct on a defendant's premises must show that the defendant's negligence was a substantial factor in causing the injury. In Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 C.4th 763, 107 C.R.2d 617, 23 P.2d 1143, plaintiff was assaulted and nearly raped after attempting to make a daytime delivery of a package to a resident of defendants' apartment complex. Prior to the assault, plaintiff had observed two of the attackers loitering outside an open security gate and a third attacker on the premises. Plaintiff presented ample evidence showing the dangerous condition of defendants' property, i.e., during the year before the attack, defendants had received 41 reports of trespass and 45 reports concerning inoperable perimeter fences and gates; sheriff's officers had come to the apartment complex approximately 50 times; and a gang headquartered in one of defendants' buildings was conducting drug transactions and intimidating people on the premises. In addition, plaintiff's expert opined that the attack would not have occurred had defendants provided daytime security and made a greater effort to keep the gates repaired and closed. The trial judge concluded that the evidence established a high foreseeability that violent crime would occur on the premises, thus establishing a duty to provide increased security, but nevertheless granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had failed to show a reasonably probable causal connection between defendants' breach of duty and plaintiff's injuries. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) A party attempting to obtain summary judgment under C.C.P. 437c (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §178 et seq.) has the initial burden of proving a right to summary judgment, but on a showing that one or more elements of a cause of action cannot be established, the burden then shifts to the opposing party. Hence, defendants were initially required to show that plaintiff had not established, and could not reasonably expect to establish, a prima facie case of causation (25 C.4th 767, citing Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Const. Co. (1999) 69 C.A.4th 64, 81 C.R.2d 360, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §216.) Plaintiff was then required to establish that defendants' breach of duty was a substantial factor in causing her injuries. (25 C.4th 772.)

(b) Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates (1996) 43 C.A.4th 472, 50 C.R.2d 785, infra, §1189, holding that expert opinion testimony on the need for increased security was too speculative to furnish a causal link between a landowner's negligence and an assault, observed that the plaintiff could not survive summary judgment merely because of the possibility that the attacker might have entered through a broken gate. Nola M. v. University of Southern Calif. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 421, 20 C.R.2d 97, infra, §1189, emphasized that a plaintiff may not establish causation by criticizing, usually by the testimony of security experts, the adequacy of the defendant's security measures. (25 C.4th 774.) "Here, by reason of the prior criminal assaults and incidents on the premises, defendants may have owed a duty to provide a reasonable degree of security to persons entering them. For purposes of discussion, we assume defendants breached that duty by failing (1) to keep all entrance gates locked and functioning, and (2) to provide additional daytime security guards to protect persons such as plaintiff. But the evidence fails to show that either breach contributed to plaintiff's injuries in this case." (25 C.4th 775.)

(c) The purpose of security measures is to keep unauthorized persons out. However, there was no evidence that plaintiff's assailants were of this type. In view of the substantial number of incidents involving defendants' tenants, it is quite likely that the assault was by tenants having authority to enter and remain on defendants' premises. This being so, plaintiff was unable to show, even by her expert testimony, that defendants' failure to provide increased security was a substantial factor, i.e., more probable than not, in causing her injuries. "To characterize a landowner's failure to deter ... violence of a third person as the 'cause' of the victim's injuries is ... to make the landowner the insurer of the absolute safety of everyone who enters the premises." (25 C.4th 777.)

(d) The present case is substantially different from Rosh v. Cave Imaging Systems (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1225, 32 C.R.2d 136, infra, §1215, in which a security firm with advance notice that a particular assailant was on the premises was held liable for taking inadequate security measures. No advance notice was involved here. Furthermore, language in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, infra, §1134, indicating that a finding of foreseeability would establish a close connection between the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's injuries only meant, in the context of the present case, that there was a general foreseeability of criminal activity, not that the particular crime against plaintiff was foreseeable. (25 C.4th 777.)

(e) The Court of Appeal applied a practical approach, under which the complete absence of security measures would necessarily be a contributing cause of most crimes occurring on the property. Despite the fact that there was not a "complete absence" of security measures in the present case, a more fundamental weakness with the Court of Appeal's position is that it would prevent summary judgment on the causation issue in every case in which the defendant refused to adopt increased security measures of some kind. Under existing law, the plaintiff must establish some substantial link between omission and injury, and under the Court of Appeal's approach, the omission itself would constitute "the missing link." (25 C.4th 778.)

(f) The Court of Appeal also adopted a novel approach whereby defendants' flagrant failure to provide adequate daytime security justified shifting the burden of proof to defendants to conclusively establish the absence of a causal link between its breach and plaintiff's injury. However, the breach in this case was not "flagrant," because the evidence showed that most crimes occurred in the nighttime and that, even in the daytime, defendants attempted to keep gates repaired. Moreover, no matter how inexcusable a defendant's conduct might appear, it must still be a substantial factor in causing the injury. Otherwise, a defendant might be held liable for conduct that actually caused no harm, contrary to the policy against making the landowner the insurer of the safety of all those who enter the premises. (25 C.4th 779.) Finally, the Court of Appeal's burden-shifting approach is counter to C.C.P. 437c. Under the statute, "a moving defendant need not support his motion with affirmative evidence negating an essential element of the responding party's case" but may "point to the absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's case." The burden then shifts to the plaintiff to present evidence showing a triable issue of material fact. (25 C.4th 780, citing Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, infra, §1492.)

In Gomez v. Tigor (1983) 145 C.A.3d 622, 193 C.R. 600, decedent, visiting his attorney in defendant's building, left at 8:45 p.m. and entered the building garage where his car was parked. An armed robbery was in progress, and decedent was shot and fatally wounded by one of the robbers. In this action for wrongful death, the trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant, relying on Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing (1976) 63 C.A.3d 538, 134 C.R. 29, infra, §1143. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiffs offered evidence of 16 acts of theft or vandalism in the 3 years prior to the killing, thus establishing foreseeability of such an act. A triable issue of fact was therefore raised whether it was foreseeable that a patron of the garage returning at the time of such an act would be subject to violent attack by the thief or vandal. (145 C.A.3d 628.)

(b) Prior decisions, upholding or denying liability, called for a balancing process (145 C.A.3d 629, 630, 631), and do not justify a fixed rule on whether prior similar events are required (145 C.A.3d 630). Plaintiffs' evidence did not show prior assaults, but did support a minimal duty to provide the "first line of defense" mentioned in Kwaitkowski v. Superior Trading Co. (1981) 123 C.A.3d 324, 176 C.R. 494, infra, §1142). "[T]he peculiar attraction which a large commercial building's unattended parking structure poses for the criminal may necessitate some minimal human or mechanical means of protecting patrons." (145 C.A.3d 632.)

(c) Plaintiffs offered evidence that the security system monitoring the structure was not functional on the night of the attack. "[H]ad they been operational and effectively deployed, the security measures employed in defendant's building would have exceeded the level of precautions required to fulfill this duty." (145 C.A.3d 633.) (See *Sharon P. v. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1140

[§ 1140] Store Owner.

In Cohen v. Southland Corp. (1984) 157 C.A.3d 130, 203 C.R. 572, plaintiff drove into the parking lot of a 7-Eleven store in the early morning hours intending to buy a sandwich. A man with a gun approached plaintiff's car and stated that he intended to rob the store, take plaintiff hostage, and use plaintiff's car as the getaway vehicle. The robber then entered the store with plaintiff following, approached defendant W, the store employee, and displayed the gun. Plaintiff seized the robber from behind, but in the ensuing struggle, plaintiff was shot and the robber escaped. Defendant W, observing the struggle, retreated to the back office, barricaded the door, and did not emerge until the police arrived. In this action against the store owner, the franchisee, and the employee, the trial judge granted summary judgment for defendants. Held, reversed.

(a) Nearly all courts are agreed that possessors of business premises owe a duty to take affirmative steps to control a third person's foreseeable wrongful conduct. (157 C.A.3d 138, and footnote 1.) Defendants contended that plaintiff's injury was not foreseeable because no prior injury-producing armed robbery had occurred at this store in the preceding 6 years. But the foreseeability required is of the general character of the event or harm, not its precise nature or manner of occurrence. (157 C.A.3d 140, citing Gomez v. Ticor (1983) 145 C.A.3d 622, 193 C.R. 600, supra, §1139.)

(b) Here, there was evidence of past armed robberies of 7-Eleven stores. Moreover, in the very operation of an all-night convenience store, defendants created "an especial temptation and opportunity for criminal misconduct." (157 C.A.3d 141.) Accordingly, foreseeability was a triable issue of fact for the jury. (157 C.A.3d 140, 141.)

(c) The adequacy of measures to take in fulfillment of the duty was also a question of fact for the jury, which could consider evidence that the store was not well lit, the parking lot was dark, and security measures were inadequate. (157 C.A.3d 144.)

Cohen and Gomez were distinguished in Gregorian v. National Convenience Stores (1985) 174 C.A.3d 944, 220 C.R. 302. Plaintiff, shopping in defendants' market, was attacked and beaten by a marauding youth gang. In upholding summary judgment for defendants, the court pointed out that there was no evidence of prior similar incidents and that the store was not located in an area of gang activity and criminal assaults. (174 C.A.3d 949, 950.) "While the proprietor of an all-night convenience store may, in this day and age, reasonably anticipate that his place of business will be a target of armed robbers, the same cannot be said for a crime resulting from gang violence. ... Unlike Cohen, plaintiff's injuries were the result of an extraordinarily malicious criminal act that, based on defendants' past experience and knowledge, could not have been anticipated." (174 C.A.3d 950.) (See Jefferson v. Qwik Korner Market (1994) 28 C.A.4th 990, 995, 996, 34 C.R.2d 171 [convenience store was not liable to customer injured while standing in front of store when car jumped over parking block and curb; there were no prior similar incidents and nothing required customers to remain next to parking area]; Hassoon v. Shamieh (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1191, 1194, 107 C.R.2d 658 [in absence of similar incidents, store owed no duty of care to patron who, while in store, was shot by someone outside, even though shooting occurred immediately after employee had given refuge to beating victim and beaters had threatened to return and kill victim]; 31 A.L.R.5th 550 [liability of shopping center owner, operator, or business for patron's injury from criminal attack by third party]; BAJI, Nos. 8.05, 8.24.)

[§ 1141] No Duty To Comply With Criminal's Demand.

In Kentucky Fried Chicken of Calif. v. Superior Court (1997) 14 C.4th 814, 59 C.R.2d 756, 927 P.2d 1260, plaintiff, a customer in defendant restaurant, brought an action for negligence based on the conduct of defendant's employee during an armed robbery. Plaintiff was the only customer in the restaurant when she was accosted by R, who put a gun to her back. She surrendered her cash and wallet to R, who then demanded that defendant's employee, C, give him the money from the cash register. When C said she would have to go to the back of the restaurant for a key, R became extremely agitated, shoved his gun harder into plaintiff's back, and told C he would shoot plaintiff if C did not "quit playing games" and open the cash register immediately. Only after plaintiff, who believed that she was going to die because of C's actions, screamed at C, did C open the register and give R the money. The trial judge denied defendant's summary judgment motion. Held, mandamus granted.

(a) Rest.2d, Torts §§314A, 344 establish the generally accepted test of liability of a business owner for injuries on the business premises caused by third-party criminal conduct. A landowner must act as a reasonable person to avoid harm from intentional attacks by third persons who have entered the land. The landowner is required to take action when he or she has reason to believe, from observation or past experience, that the conduct of a third person will be dangerous to an invitee, but not if there is no reason to anticipate a problem. The standard of a "reasonable prudent person under the circumstances" is the general standard of care, but in particular situations a more specific standard may be established by judicial decision, statute, or ordinance. (14 C.4th 823.)

(b) California has never recognized a duty to surrender property to an armed robber to protect others, and neither the Restatement rules nor the Supreme Court's past decisions, in which general principles of negligence law were applied to determine the duty of a landowner to prevent injury to persons present on the land, create a duty to acquiesce in an unlawful demand for the surrender of property. Further, no other state has held that the law imposes a duty to comply with a robber's demands. While some cases from other states hold that a shopkeeper may actively resist the robbery attempt only if the resistance is reasonable in light of the threat to third persons, none holds that the duty to avoid harm to patrons or others on the premises is breached if the shopkeeper simply refuses to surrender property. (14

(c) C.C. 1714, which states the general rule making every person responsible for negligent conduct, does not impose a duty on a shopkeeper to comply with a robber's demands in order to prevent possible injury to patrons. That statute states a civil law principle that is the foundation of California's negligence law, but it has never been construed as imposing a duty to comply with an unlawful demand that property be surrendered. (14 C.4th 828.)

(d) No duty to comply with a robber's unlawful demands should be imposed on a shopkeeper on the theory that compliance may lessen the danger to other persons on the premises. Both Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, and C.C. 50 recognize the right of any person to defend property with reasonable force. Recognizing a duty to comply with an unlawful demand to surrender property would be inconsistent with the public policy reflected in these provisions. Because this case does not involve a situation in which active resistance to a robbery resulted in injury to a third person, it need not be decided if the right to defend property with reasonable force is qualified by the duty to avoid injury to third persons or if a duty exists to avoid physical resistance that might provoke a robber into carrying out a threat to harm third persons. "We hold only that there is no duty to comply with a robber's unlawful demand for the surrender of property. Simple refusal to obey does not breach any duty to third persons present on the premises." (14 C.4th 829.)

(e) The public interest would not be served by recognition of a duty to comply with a robber's demands. Persons who commit armed robbery may become aware of and be encouraged by the existence of that duty. Moreover, there is no basis on which to conclude that compliance actually prevents injury to robbery victims. The public as a whole is much better served if would-be robbers are deterred by knowledge that their victims have no legal duty to comply with the robber's demands and are under no duty to surrender their property in order to protect third persons from possible injury. (14 C.4th 829.)

Three justices dissented, primarily on the ground that a business proprietor's immunity should not be determined as a matter of law, but should be left to the jury to be decided on a case by case basis. (14 C.4th 830.) (See Vandermost v. Alpha Beta Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 771, 778, 210 C.R. 613 [defendant was not liable; distinguishing Winn v. Holmes (1956) 143 C.A.2d 501, 504, 299 P.2d 994, supra, §1129, and Taylor v. Centennial Bowl (1966) 65 C.2d 114, 52 C.R. 561, 416 P.2d 793, supra, §1137 on ground that in both cases, potential assailant had focused attention on plaintiff]; 25 Western State L. Rev. 369 [Kentucky Fried Chicken of Calif.].)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 7. Liability of Landlord.
 - aa. Liability Upheld.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1142

[§ 1142] Liability Upheld.

In O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 798, 142 C.R. 487, supra, §817), plaintiff, a tenant in defendant's apartment complex, was raped in her apartment. Her complaint alleged that defendants were aware of previous rapes of tenants, but did not disclose the information and assured her that the premises were safe. Held, a cause of action was stated for fraud (see supra, §817) and for negligence. On the negligence issue, the court reasoned as follows:

(a) In recent years, a few courts have departed from the traditional rule that a landlord has no duty to safeguard his or her tenants from criminal acts of others. The landlord is in a position to secure common areas, and has a duty to protect against types of crimes of which he or she has notice and that are likely to recur. (75 C.A.3d 802, 803, citing Kline v. 1500 Massachusetts Avenue Apartment Corp. (DC Cir. 1970) 439 F.2d 477.)

(b) Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing (1976) 63 C.A.3d 538, 134 C.R. 29, infra, §1143, involving a sudden unexpected outburst, is distinguishable: Plaintiff here was the victim of the same type of criminal conduct previously inflicted on other tenants by the same assailant, whose appearance was known to defendants; and defendants not only failed to provide adequate security, but failed to warn about the suspected assailant and misrepresented the security measures in force. (75 C.A.3d 803.)

(c) The fact that the assault took place inside plaintiff's apartment instead of in the common areas is not determinative. Failure to take reasonable precautions to safeguard the common areas could have contributed substantially to plaintiff's injuries. (75 C.A.3d 803.)

(d) Liability could be based on the analysis in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, because foreseeability of danger and failure to act by warning or providing adequate security was sufficiently alleged. (75 C.A.3d 804.) Liability is also suggested by Rest.2d, Torts §302B: An act or omission may be negligent if the actor realizes or should realize that it involves an unreasonable risk of harm to another through the conduct of a third person (see infra, §1215). (75 C.A.3d 804.)

O'Hara was followed in Kwaitkowski v. Superior Trading Co. (1981) 123 C.A.3d 324, 176 C.R. 494. Plaintiff tenant was raped, assaulted, and robbed in the lobby of an apartment building. The landlords had notice that the building was in a high crime area, that the lock of the lobby entrance door was defective, and that strangers had easy access to the premises. The landlord contended, however, that despite knowledge of a prior assault and robbery, this was the first rape, and it was not reasonably foreseeable. Held, a cause of action was stated; cases from other jurisdictions hold landlords liable even for the first crime of a particular type. (123 C.A.3d 329 et seq.) 7735 Hollywood Boulevard Venture v. Superior Court (1981) 116 C.A.3d 901, 172 C.R. 528, is distinguishable. There the landlord had no more knowledge than any local citizen concerning violent crimes in the area. (123 C.A.3d 333.)

Other decisions deal with landlord liability. (See Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 C.A.4th 451, 457, 76 C.R.2d 457 [lessor who allowed workers to reside in huts on his land, who exercised control over the housing, and who received direct economic benefit from workers had duty to maintain housing in safe condition; any duty imposed by Employee Housing Act was declaratory of existing law, rather than a new duty]; Vasquez v. Residential Inv. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 269, 276, 12 C.R.3d 846 [apartment owners could be liable, based on failure to replace windowpane, when resident was killed by former boyfriend who entered through missing pane, where there had been complaints to manager of missing pane, another intruder had attempted to enter victim's apartment, and there had been reports of assaultive crimes in other apartments in building]; 2 Proof of Facts 3d 393 [liability of landlord for injury caused by tenant's dog]; 35 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [landlord's liability for lead-based paint hazard]; 35 Am.Jur. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1143

[§ 1143] Liability Denied.

(1) Absence of Prior Similar Acts. The observation in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, that status may have "some bearing" on the question of liability is illustrated in Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing (1976) 63 C.A.3d 538, 134 C.R. 29. Plaintiff C, a minor, was visiting her boyfriend, a tenant in an apartment house operated by defendant nonprofit corporation for low income people. While she was sitting in the laundry room, a fight erupted between two strangers. One of them fired a pistol and plaintiff was hit by stray bullets. Plaintiff brought this action for damages, and the court described the issue as one of first impression: "whether a landlord may be held liable for injuries caused to a stranger, who happens to be on the premises, by the criminal attack of other strangers." Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The general rule is that in the absence of a special relationship or special circumstances, a private person has no duty to protect another from a criminal attack by a third person. (63 C.A.3d 541, citing the text and Rest.2d, Torts §§314, 315.) The two main exceptions in the landowner cases involve injuries to an invitee in a business establishment (see infra, §§1139, 1140) and injury to a tenant or his employee (see supra, §1142). However, these cases, and Rest.2d, §314A, Comment e, recognize that the duty to control wrongful acts of third persons arises only where the landowner has reasonable cause to anticipate both the acts and the probability of injury from them. (63 C.A.3d 542.)

(b) Plaintiff's complaint did not state a cause of action within these exceptions: (1) She was not an invitee, but only a licensee; and (2) she did not allege any knowledge by defendant of specific prior similar incidents that would make him anticipate the wrongful acts. (63 C.A.3d 543.) The general allegation that the commission of violent crimes was foreseeable in the apartment house area was insufficient. (63 C.A.3d 544.)

(c) Rowland does not support plaintiff's claim. Applying its guidelines: (1) The injury was inflicted by persons not in any legal relationship to either the victim or the landlord. (2) The harm was not reasonably foreseeable by the defendant. (3) There was no close connection between defendant's conduct and the injury: the incident probably could not have been prevented by employment of a security guard. (4) Defendant was not morally culpable or blameworthy

"for its failure to protect an unidentified group of victims on its premises against the criminal attacks of an equally unidentified or unidentifiable group of criminals." (5) The burden on the defendant and the consequences to the community of imposing liability would be extremely onerous: Defendant, a nonprofit organization, would be unable to absorb the heavy insurance expense, and the increased cost would be passed on to the low income tenants. (63 C.A.3d 545.)

(d) The creation of a new duty in the present situation would also be patently unfair, for both the duty and the means of its discharge defy exact delineation; e.g., to what multifamily houses would it apply; to what kind of offenses; and what protective measures should be employed? "[P]olice protection, which essentially is demanded by appellants here, is and should remain the duty of the government." (63 C.A.3d 546.) (See 12 Proof of Facts 2d 497 [landlord's liability to tenant for allowing dangerous activities by other tenants or by third persons]; 43 A.L.R.5th 207 [landlord's liability for failure to protect tenant from criminal acts of third persons].)

In Riley v. Marcus (1981) 125 C.A.3d 103, 177 C.R. 827, plaintiff, a tenant in defendants' apartment building, was raped at 4 a.m. by a burglar who forced his way into her apartment by removing a louver from the window and unlatching the chain lock. She sued on the theory that defendants had negligently failed to maintain the premises in a safe condition, by reason of inadequate locks and outside lighting going off at 1 or 1:30 a.m. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) "[T]here was no history of any rapes or similar acts of violence which had occurred on the premises and which, unless adequate steps were taken, would likely reoccur. Moreover, defendants were not aware of any risks attendant to the premises which they concealed from plaintiff. The manner of the installation of the locks on plaintiff's doors did not constitute a representation that the doors were secure against intruders, or that the premises were safe against such risks." (125 C.A.3d 109.)

(b) Plaintiff argues that despite the absence of any duty, defendants undertook to provide security (by installing locks and outside lighting), and failed to do so adequately, and liability should be imposed on that theory. These items are commonplace and furnished by virtually every landlord to every tenant. "Moreover, a landlord's efforts to make his premises more secure against criminal activity should not be greeted by a pronouncement that if such efforts are later found to be inadequate he will incur a liability which would have been nonexistent had he done nothing. Absent a duty to take reasonable precautions to prevent the reoccurrence of criminal acts which are known to be likely to reoccur, a landlord incurs no liability by attempting, albeit unsuccessfully or inadequately, to make his premises less vulnerable to criminal intrusions." (125 C.A.3d 109.) (See Jubert v. Shalom Realty (1982) 135 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 185 C.R. 641 [owner of apartment building was not liable for damage to car parked in building's parking lot, even though he permitted unauthorized persons to loiter nearby and there had been previous vandalism to cars].)

(2) Effect of Isaacs and Ann M Cases. Totten, Riley, and Jubert, supra, were disapproved in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 125, 126, 127, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, supra, §1134, to the extent that they suggested that in the absence of prior similar accidents, the landowner was not bound to anticipate the criminal activities of strangers. However, the Isaacs rule was refined in Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, supra, §1136, as follows: (a) foreseeability is a question of law for the court; (b) a high degree of foreseeability is required in order to find that the scope of a landlord's duty includes hiring security guards; and (c) the requisite degree of foreseeability can rarely, if ever, be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents on the premises. In the opinion of the dissenting justice, these refinements had the effect of resurrecting the "prior similar incidents" test that Isaacs had rejected. (6 C.4th 680.)

In Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 C.A.4th 950, 30 C.R.2d 690, plaintiff sued her landlords and the condominium association governing her residence, alleging that she would not have been assaulted and raped in her home if defendants had met their duty of protecting her from third-party criminal conduct. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. Held, affirmed. Plaintiff alleged that a burglary had occurred in another unit of the complex, but even assuming that defendants had notice of this incident, it is not similar to the violent assault plaintiff suffered. (25

C.A.4th 959.) Because the attack on plaintiff appeared to be by someone who was stalking her, it is possible that only armed guards could have forestalled it. "[N]either the landlord nor the four-member condominium association in this case could reasonably be placed under a duty to have provided a level of security likely to have prevented the attack." (25 C.A.4th 959.) (See Sturgeon v. Curnutt (1994) 29 C.A.4th 301, 305, 34 C.R.2d 498 [homeowners, who rented property to tenant known to have alcohol troubles and to have firearm, but who had never posed problem before, did not owe duty to protect guest, who was accidentally shot when tenant swung firearm around wildly]; Pineda v. Ennabe (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1403, 1407, 72 C.R.2d 206 [landlord had no duty to assure that tenant's child did not fall out of ordinary second story windows that met all code regulations; child's fall was caused by parents' negligence in placing bed beneath window and in failing to supervise child]; cf. Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates (1996) 43 C.A.4th 472, 480, 50 C.R.2d 785, infra, §1189 [no causal connection shown between landlord's negligent failure to repair garage security gate and tenant's rape, even assuming duty owed to tenant].)

(2) Effect of Isaacs and Ann M Cases. See Castaneda v. Olsher (2007) 41 C.4th 1205, 1219, 63 C.R.3d 99, 162 P.3d 610, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, Supp., §646A [despite previous incidents and allegedly harassing conduct by suspected gang members, mobilehome park owner had no duty to evict suspected gang members prior to shootout between rival gangs at park, in which resident was injured, because prior incidents did not render shootout highly foreseeable].

 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 8. Liability of Lessee to Guest.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1144

[§ 1144] Liability of Lessee to Guest.

In Anaya v. Turk (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1092, 199 C.R. 187, plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendants were lessees of an apartment; that he was present at the apartment as a social guest of defendants; that they negligently allowed W, a dangerous ex-criminal, on the premises; and that W shot and severely injured plaintiff. The first cause of action was based on defendants' failure to warn plaintiff of W's known dangerous propensities. The second cause of action contained allegations that defendants were engaged in the sale of narcotics, that W was a customer, and that defendants knew or should have known that such a person was likely to be an addict and to attack, rob, or injure persons at the scene of a drug transaction. Defendants moved for summary judgment, and the trial judge granted the motion. Held, reversed.

(a) First cause of action is not maintainable. The question on this cause was whether a lessee has a duty to control criminal conduct of third persons or to warn social guests about criminal propensities of other persons on the premises. (151 C.A.3d 1097.) Plaintiff was only a licensee, but under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, status is not controlling, and in Rowland, a social guest was entitled to recover from a lessee for injuries suffered in using a defective faucet. (151 C.A.3d 1098.) In the present case, plaintiff seeks to establish defendants' duty without evidence of prior specific acts of violence, solely on the fact that defendants knew that W was an ex-convict. This general knowledge cannot be the basis of a finding of foreseeability of harm. "An apartment dweller cannot be held to have a duty to protect friends and acquaintances from the violent criminal conduct of others on the premises unless he has reasonable cause to anticipate such conduct. Mere knowledge that [W] had been in federal prison did not constitute reasonable cause to anticipate his violent conduct." (151 C.A.3d 1101.)

(b) Second cause of action is maintainable. Here, as in Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914, and Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 C.A.3d 206, 169 C.R. 282, supra, §1058, the cause of action is not based on mere nonfeasance (failure to intervene to protect plaintiff), but on acts of defendants that created the risk of harm that resulted in the injury: conducting illicit drug transactions from the apartment. The allegation that defendants were engaged in this dangerous activity was supported by plaintiff's counteraffidavit on the motion for summary judgment, and presented a triable issue. (151 C.A.3d 1101, 1102, 1103.)

 - d. Dangerous Activity on Premises.
 - 9. Injury to or Loss of Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1145

[§ 1145] Injury to or Loss of Property.

The landowner's duty extends to the property of an invitee. In La Malfa v. Piombo Bros. (1945) 70 C.A.2d 840, 161 P.2d 964, plaintiffs rented their truck to defendants, but plaintiffs' agent, in violation of instructions and therefore in excess of authority, also furnished a driver. The truck was damaged on defendants' premises as a result of negligent conduct of another independent contractor. Held, defendants were liable. "The truck ... was on defendants' private roadway at defendants' invitation and on defendants' business. It was there in the control of a driver who was a business invitee of defendants." (70 C.A.2d 846.)

This theory has an important practical effect on the liability of storekeepers for valuables stolen from a customer. "A retailer impliedly invites the public to enter his store and do business, and thereby undertakes to exercise reasonable care for the protection of property which the customer properly brings there and necessarily lays aside while doing business pursuant to the invitation." (Fuller v. I. Magnin & Co. (1951) 104 C.A.2d 517, 522, 232 P.2d 36.) In Fuller, plaintiff, an old customer of defendant, was wearing a diamond brooch. The saleslady, who knew her and the brooch, mistakenly took plaintiff's dress with the brooch attached from the fitting room to the stockroom, where the brooch was stolen. In upholding judgment for plaintiff, the court distinguished cases where customers voluntarily laid aside purses or other valuables, as follows: (a) A clothing storekeeper must exercise care for the protection of the customer's garments which he or she necessarily removes in trying on new clothes. (b) The clothing storekeeper has a similar duty to protect other articles (money, watch, jewelry, etc.) that the customer must lay aside while being fitted, where notice is brought home to him or her. (c) The storekeeper is particularly liable where, as here, defendant's employee takes the valuables from a place of safety to a place of hazard (affirmative act, i.e., active negligence). (104 C.A.2d 525.)

[§ 1146] In General.

An owner may sometimes be held liable for injuries caused to another by his or her negligence even though the injury was inflicted beyond the limits of the defendant's property. (See 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability, §688.) Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §14, without qualification as to the location of an injury, provides that a person "who is liable to another based on a failure to protect the other from the specific risk of an intentional tort" is jointly and severally liable for both the person's share of comparative responsibility and the intentional tortfeasor's share. (On Restatement rule of comparative responsibility generally, see infra, §§1297, 1328.)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - e. Dangerous Activity Off Premises.
 - 2. Vicious Dog In Neighborhood.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1147

[§ 1147] Vicious Dog In Neighborhood.

In Wylie v. Gresch (1987) 191 C.A.3d 412, 236 C.R. 552, the court held that "a landlord has no duty to warn a prospective tenant of the presence of a vicious dog in the neighborhood." (191 C.A.3d 414.) The complaint alleged that plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. W, leased a residence from defendant G; defendants Mr. and Mrs. B, who lived next door in rented property, owned a pit bull dog that had attempted to attack persons and animals; the dog had previously broken through the fence separating the backyards of the two properties, but defendant G did not warn plaintiffs of the dog's vicious propensities; on a day when plaintiffs' 12-year-old daughter was on their property, the dog broke his leash, defendant Mr. B "invited and permitted" the child to pet the dog, and the dog bit her, inflicting severe injuries. Held, no cause of action was stated against defendant G.

(a) General duty to ensure safety of premises. Although Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, and cases following it have greatly expanded the landlord's duty to ensure the safety of the premises (191 C.A.3d 418, 419), "[n]o case that we have found ... imposes a duty on a landlord to protect against dangerous conditions off the premises (that is, in the neighborhood), or against dangerous persons (or animals) over which the landlord has no control, which come onto the property in a location or manner over which the owner has no control." (191 C.A.3d 419.) Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 C.A.3d 504, 118 C.R. 741, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §644, is distinguishable. In that case, the vicious dog was kept by a tenant on the leased premises, and the landlord had actual knowledge and the right to control by removing the tenant and retaking possession of the premises. Here, the dog was kept by strangers on premises over which the landlord had no control. (191 C.A.3d 420.)

(b) No special relationship giving rise to common law duty to warn. The facts alleged do not indicate that defendant landlord created a dangerous situation or that plaintiffs relied on defendant to warn them of any possible danger. (191 C.A.3d 423.) "[I]t would be unreasonable to extend the resulting duty in the landlord beyond the duty imposed on landlords to disclose defective conditions on their leased premises; and in cases involving that type of defect the rule is that before a duty is found ... [t]he lessor must ... have reason to believe that the lessee will not discover the condition, or that [the lessee] will not realize the risk." (191 C.A.3d 423, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §358, Comment b.) That is the situation here. "Landlords in respondent's position could reasonably expect that appellants would discover the presence of the dog for themselves, and, unfortunately, a vicious dog is a danger one might expect to encounter anywhere in our society." (191 C.A.3d 424.)

(c) Extension of landlord's duty is undesirable. It would be unreasonable to extend the duty beyond the basis of the relationship--the property: "Insofar as dangers in the neighborhood are concerned, the tenant's position is no different from that of any member of the general public. Neither the tenant nor members of the public rely on a landlord to warn them of such dangers." (191 C.A.3d 424.) A requirement that landlords warn prospective tenants of dangers in the neighborhood would produce a large volume of warnings that would add little effective protection, and would place the landlord in the position of a purveyor of gossip and groundless warnings. (191 C.A.3d 424.)

- B. Landowners and Possessors.
 - 4. Invitees or Business Visitors.
 - e. Dangerous Activity Off Premises.
- 3. Failure To Correct or Warn of Flammable Structure.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1148

[§ 1148] Failure To Correct or Warn of Flammable Structure.

In Lucas v. George T. R. Murai Farms (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1578, 19 C.R.2d 436, L and R were working as migrant farm labors and residing in an encampment known as the cancha, located on undeveloped land that was adjacent to the ranches owned by defendants M and N. L and R lived in a structure that they had built from materials taken from the trash dump areas on defendants' ranches. The cancha was patrolled by a company (RIPCO) that had contracted with defendants to provide security services to their ranches. In addition, M provided some services and amenities to workers living in the cancha, such as allowing them to use water and toilet facilities on the M ranch and to receive their mail there. One night, the structure built by L and R caught fire, apparently from a candle that R was using to read by. L suffered serious injuries and R was killed. In this action by the L and R heirs based on defendants' alleged duty to make safe the conditions on the cancha property or to warn plaintiffs of the dangerous conditions created by the flammable structures, the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendants. Held, affirmed; no such duty existed.

(a) To support their assertion that defendants had sufficient control over the cancha area to impose on them a duty of care, plaintiffs argued that RIPCO was an agent of defendants such that its activities at the cancha, such as banning alcohol and prostitutes, showed control over the entire premises. This position is without merit. Both defendants presented evidence showing that their contracts with RIPCO did not cover off-premises areas. Hence, it does not appear that any actions of defendants were relied on by L and R to create the impression that RIPCO was the defendants' agent for purposes of insuring overall camp safety. (15 C.A.4th 1588.)

(b) Plaintiffs also based their assertion of defendants' control over the adjacent property on the fact that defendants' foremen instructed workers living at the camp to pick up trash, and allegedly permitted scrap materials to be taken from defendants' dumps for use in building living structures. However, the evidence showed that defendants made an effort to stop the workers from taking building materials from the ranch dumps. And although the foremen apparently did not succeed in prohibiting this practice, public policy is against imposing a duty of care in this situation. Foreseeability of the type of harm that occurred is questionable, and the necessary connection between defendants' conduct and the injury is missing. The accident was caused by something over which defendants had no control, i.e., the use of an open-flame candle. (15 C.A.4th 1590.)

(c) L and R were not business patrons, and no third party criminal acts were inflicted upon them. Instead, these workers were faced with an obvious danger, i.e., using fire in the temporary structure, but they chose to confront it anyway. Hence, there is no basis for imposing a duty on defendants to warn of dangers inherent in the use of structures just off their premises, nor any duty to make those structures safe for the inhabitants. (15 C.A.4th 1590.)

(d) By allowing the workers to use water and toilet facilities on the M property and by failing to prevent the use of building materials taken from their property, defendants were somewhat analogous to Good Samaritans. However, these actions are not equivalent to an undertaking to perform the duties allegedly owed to plaintiffs. Whatever aid defendants rendered "did not increase the risk of harm to plaintiffs, nor did plaintiffs rely upon the services provided and thereby suffer further harm. Construction of the shelters and use of them with candles to provide illumination went on independent of any actions by these defendants." (15 C.A.4th 1591.)

 - 4. Failure To Build Barrier.

[§ 1149] Failure To Build Barrier.

In Barnes v. Black (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1473, 84 C.R.2d 634, plaintiff and his family lived in defendant's apartment complex. In front of the complex was a private sidewalk, leading to a children's play area. A private driveway extended from the sidewalk down a steep slope to a busy public street. There was no barrier between the sidewalk and the driveway, a dangerous condition causing several residents to complain, unsuccessfully, to defendant's apartment manager. Plaintiff's son was riding a tricycle back and forth on this sidewalk when he apparently lost control, causing his tricycle to veer down the driveway and into the public street, where he was hit and killed by a car. Plaintiff sued defendant on multiple causes of action, and defendant moved for summary adjudication. Held, judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) A landowner's duty of care to avoid exposing others to a risk of harm is not limited to injuries that occur on premises owned or controlled by the landowner. Instead, the duty of care encompasses a duty to avoid exposing persons to risks of injury that occur off site, if the landowner's property is maintained in such a manner as to expose persons to an unreasonable risk of injury off site. The scope of this duty is determined by application of the factors listed in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086. (71 C.A.4th 1477.)

(b) Defendant had the burden to negate a duty of care, and the only evidence introduced for this purpose was that the injury occurred on property that it neither owned nor operated. "This fact is not dispositive under the Rowland analysis. [Defendant] does not offer any evidence to show the injury was not foreseeable, the injury was not actually suffered, or the slope of the driveway and configuration of the sidewalk, play area, and driveway were not closely connected to the injury, or to negate any of the other Rowland factors." With respect to the claim that there was no close connection between its conduct and the injury in question, defendant introduced no evidence rebutting the inference that the lack of a barrier between the sidewalk and the steep driveway leading to the public street was what created a condition that contributed to the injury. (71 C.A.4th 1479.)

(c) To support its contention that a landowner owes no duty to erect a fence to protect children from off-site dangers, defendant cited Brooks v. Eugene Burger Management Corp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1611, 1624, 264 C.R. 756, which held that the manager of an apartment complex had no duty to fence the premises to keep children inside. In Brooks, however, which involved a child struck by an automobile after walking into a street in front of an apartment complex, plaintiff did not allege that the configuration of defendant's property ejected or propelled the child into the public street against his will, there was no close connection between defendant's conduct and the child's injuries, and little or no moral blame attached to that conduct. (71 C.A.4th 1479.)

[§ 1150] Near School.

In Donnell v. California Western School of Law (1988) 200 C.A.3d 715, 246 C.R. 199, plaintiff, a student at defendant law school, left defendant's building after dark and headed towards his car. While walking on a public sidewalk bordering the building, he was attacked by an unknown assailant. Plaintiff alleged that, by failing to provide parking for its students, defendant forced him to walk through a high crime area and, despite knowledge of the danger, provided neither warning nor other protective measures, such as security guards or lights or monitors on the building. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The special relationship between a school and its minor students (see Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City School Dist. (1978) 22 C.3d 508, 150 C.R. 1, 585 P.2d 851, supra, §327; Satariano v. Sleight (1942) 54 C.A.2d 278, 129 P.2d 35, supra, §1001; Raymond v. Paradise Unified School Dist. of Butte (1963) 218 C.A.2d 1, 31 C.R. 847, supra, §861; is not applicable here to impose on defendant a duty to insure the safety of its adult students once they have left its premises. Because these students are generally considered business invitees, the issue is the extent of defendant's premises liability to plaintiff. (200 C.A.3d 720.)

(b) Premises liability is based on ownership, possession, or control. (200 C.A.3d 725.) Plaintiff argued that defendant's alleged duty to take reasonable steps to protect its invitees from foreseeable criminal assaults on the sidewalks providing immediate access to its building was based on its power to "control" the sidewalk by placing lights or monitors on its own building. However, merely having the power to influence or affect adjoining property does not amount to control under premises liability law. (200 C.A.3d 720.)

(c) Unlike the situations in Kopfinger v. Grand Cen. Public Market (1964) 60 C.2d 852, 37 C.R. 65, 389 P.2d 529, supra, §1092, Johnston v. De La Guerra Properties (1946) 28 C.2d 394, 170 P.2d 5, supra, §1128, or Ross v. Kirby (1967) 251 C.A.2d 267, 59 C.R. 601, there is no evidence that defendant created a dangerous condition on the adjoining property or actually assumed control over it, or that the property was modified or built specifically to benefit defendant's property. (200 C.A.3d 721.) And the "elastic concept of business premises" applied in Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd.

(1967) 67 C.2d 232, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68, supra, §1062, has never been extended to a business conducted on private property at a fixed location. (200 C.A.3d 725, citing Steinmetz v. Stockton City Chamber of Commerce (1985) 169 C.A.3d 1142, 214 C.R. 405.)

(d) Requiring defendant to use lighting or monitors to influence or affect the condition of the sidewalk would go beyond the limits of any existing case. It would also establish an indefinable duty, because, depending on location, building configuration, and technology, defendant might have the potential to influence or affect adjoining property at various distances from its own property. (200 C.A.3d 725.) On the other hand, the existing standard for premises liability, based on ownership, possession, or control, provides predictability and reasonably clear limits. (200 C.A.3d 726.)

- 5. Criminal Acts of Third Parties: Location of Assault.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1151

[§ 1151] Near Business.

In Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 656, 250 C.R. 57, plaintiff was attacked by three unknown men in a vacant, unpaved parking lot adjacent to defendants' convenience store while returning to his car after making purchases at the store. Defendants, claiming that they had no duty as a matter of law to a customer after he or she left the premises, petitioned for mandamus to compel the trial judge to grant their motion for summary judgment. Held, denied; there were triable issues of fact as to defendants' control over the lot and the foreseeability of the assault.

(a) A business proprietor's duty to protect invitees, even from criminal attack, may extend to property that the proprietor neither owns nor possesses, but over which the proprietor exercises actual or apparent control. (203 C.A.3d 664.) Here, there was sufficient evidence to allow a jury to conclude that defendants' control over the adjacent lot was sufficient to permit imposition of a duty to those customers using it. For example, (1) only eight marked parking spaces were provided on the store's premises and these often proved inadequate, (2) customers, including plaintiff, regularly used the adjacent lot to park while shopping at the store, (3) defendants' lease apparently authorized the nonexclusive use of the adjacent lot for customer parking, (4) defendants were aware that their customers regularly used the lot and took no action to limit or discourage this use, (5) a reasonable inference can be drawn that defendants realized a significant commercial benefit from their customers' use of the lot, (6) the store premises and the adjacent lot had become a hangout for local juveniles, among whom fist fights sometimes broke out, and (7) the store employees had, on a number of occasions, taken action, including the request of police assistance, to remove juvenile loiterers from both the store premises and the adjacent lot. (203 C.A.3d 666.)

(b) The fact that no prior criminal attacks had occurred on the store premises did not establish that the attack on plaintiff was unforeseeable as a matter of law. (203 C.A.3d 668.) A triable issue of fact on this issue was raised by the evidence of previous fistfights among juvenile loiterers on defendants' premises and the need to seek police assistance. (203 C.A.3d 669.)

In Balard v. Bassman Event Sec. (1989) 210 C.A.3d 243, 258 C.R. 343, plaintiff restaurant customer was assaulted by some inebriated men who were in a car parked across the street from the restaurant. Defendant, a security contractor hired by the restaurant, failed to warn plaintiff of the danger, although defendant was aware that an incident of harassment involving the same men had occurred approximately 15 minutes earlier. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendant affirmed.

(a) A security contractor hired to protect business premises owes no greater duty toward patrons of the business than is owed by the business owner under premises liability law; and such an owner has no duty to protect patrons from criminal activity occurring off his premises. (210 C.A.3d 247.)

(b) Both Southland Corp. and Marois v. Royal Investigation & Patrol (1984) 162 C.A.3d 193, 208 C.R. 384, supra, §1053, are distinguishable. Southland imposed liability for a criminal attack on a patron that occurred on property not owned by the business, but over which it had a leasehold right to use and otherwise exercised control. (210 C.A.3d 248.) Marois imposed liability for a criminal attack that occurred on the business premises. And nothing in Marois supports plaintiff's contention that there is a special relationship between a business' security guards and its customers that results in a greater liability than that existing between the business itself and its customers. (210 C.A.3d 249.)

(c) Plaintiff's argument that, even if defendant had no duty to intervene, it at least had a duty to warn of a known danger existing off the premises, must be rejected despite its surface appeal. "The problem is that a duty to warn in the context of dangers existing off premises will seldom be as simple as passing along unverified information. Inevitably, we would be imposing not just a duty to warn but a duty to investigate, monitor and evaluate reports of off-premises dangers. Given the potential scope of this duty, we are reluctant to impose it at all." (210 C.A.3d 250.)

Delgado v. Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 C.4th 224, 30 C.R.3d 145, 113 P.3d 1159, involved the duty of the proprietor of a bar to intervene in an altercation involving a patron of which the proprietor has actual notice. Plaintiff was assaulted in the parking lot of defendant's bar by other patrons who followed him outside. One of defendant's security guards had anticipated that a confrontation might occur within the bar and asked plaintiff and his wife to leave, but failed to escort them to their car. In plaintiff's premises liability action, the Court of Appeal reversed a jury verdict for plaintiff on the ground that there was no evidence of any prior criminal incident that would have put defendant on notice that such an occurrence might reasonably be anticipated. Held, reversed.

(a) Special relationship doctrine. As a general matter, there is no duty to act to protect others from the conduct of third parties. As an exception to this general rule, however, a defendant may owe an affirmative duty to protect another from the conduct of third parties if the defendant has a special relationship with the other person. Courts have found special relationships in cases involving proprietors of businesses such as shopping centers, restaurants, and bars and their tenants, patrons, or invitees. Accordingly, Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center (1993) 6 C.4th 666, 25 C.R.2d 137, 863 P.2d 207, text, §1136, recognized as "well established" the proposition that a business proprietor has a duty to take reasonable steps to secure common areas against foreseeable criminal acts of third parties that are likely to occur in the absence of these precautionary measures. (36 C.4th 235.)

(b) Duty to provide security guards is limited. Only in limited circumstances, however, does the scope of a business proprietor's special-relationship duty to patrons or invitees include a duty to provide security guards. (36 C.4th 236.) Under Ann M. and Sharon P. v. Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 C.4th 1181, 91 C.R.2d 35, 989 P.2d 121, text, §1135, it is only when there is "heightened foreseeability" of third-party criminal activity on the premises--shown by prior similar incidents, or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults, in that location--that the proprietor's special-relationship duty includes an obligation to provide guards to protect patrons. To hold otherwise would be to impose an unfair burden on business proprietors and, in effect, force them to become insurers of public safety. (36 C.4th 237.)

(c) Other special-relationship duties may apply. A business proprietor that has no duty under Ann M. and Sharon P. to hire security guards or to undertake other burdensome preventative measures still owes a duty of due care to patrons and invitees by virtue of the special relationship, and there are other circumstances that may give rise to liability based on that relationship. For example, restaurant or bar proprietors have a duty to warn patrons of known dangers and, in circumstances in which a warning alone is insufficient, a duty to take other reasonable and appropriate measures to protect patrons and invitees from imminent or ongoing criminal conduct. These measures may include telephoning the police or 911 for assistance, or providing an escort to the parking lot by existing security personnel. (36 C.4th 240.)

(d) Showing of heightened foreseeability is not always required. Relying on Hassoon v. Shamieh (2001) 89 C.A.4th 1191, 107 C.R.2d 658, defendant asserted that a showing of heightened foreseeability, generally including proof of prior similar incidents, is always required when a plaintiff seeks to impose on a proprietor special-relationship liability related to the criminal conduct of a third party. (36 C.4th 242.) This position is inconsistent with Ann M. and its progeny, all of which, when articulating and applying the heightened foreseeability doctrine, expressly reaffirm the sliding-scale balancing formula articulated prior to and in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, text, §1134. These decisions recognize that, as a general matter, imposition of a high burden requires heightened foreseeability, but that a minimal burden may be imposed on a showing of a lesser degree of foreseeability. Thus, to the extent Hassoon "suggests that a showing of heightened foreseeability is required in all premises liability cases--regardless of the extent of the burden sought to be imposed upon the defendant--that aspect of Hassoon is disapproved." (36 C.4th 244.)

(e) Analysis of present case. Here, defendant owed a duty to plaintiff under the special relationship doctrine. (36 C.4th 244.)

(1) To the extent plaintiff's claim rests on a duty to provide guards to protect patrons from assaults, plaintiff must demonstrate heightened foreseeability. Heightened foreseeability is satisfied by a showing of prior similar criminal incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of a violent criminal assault in that location. It does not require a showing of prior nearly identical criminal incidents, as suggested by the Court of Appeal. Nevertheless, although the record refers to a few prior altercations between patrons, plaintiff produced insufficient evidence of either prior similar incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of a violent criminal assault that would have imposed on defendant an obligation to provide security guards. (36 C.4th 244.)

(2) However, the absence of heightened foreseeability in this case merely signifies that defendant owed no special-relationship duty to provide guards or undertake other burdensome preventative measures to protect plaintiff; it does not signify that defendant owed no other special-relationship duty to plaintiff, such as a duty to respond to unfolding events by undertaking reasonable, relatively simple, and minimally burdensome measures. Indeed, the record clearly establishes the existence of a duty here. Under the circumstances, it was foreseeable that an assault would occur absent separation of plaintiff and his subsequent attackers. Accordingly, defendant had a special-relationship duty to respond by taking minimally burdensome steps to address the imminent danger. These measures may have included, for example, the guard's attempt to dissuade the subsequent attackers from following plaintiff from the bar, or the guard's confirmation that defendant's outside guard was at his post in the parking lot, available to help maintain the desired separation. (36 C.4th 245.)

(f) Proprietor, by employment of security guards, does not assume duty to protect. Review was granted in this case largely in light of conflict between the Court of Appeal opinion in this case and the earlier Court of Appeal opinion in Mata v. Mata (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1121, 130 C.R.2d 141. In Mata, the appellate court, reversing an order granting summary judgment to the defendant, held that when a proprietor voluntarily employs a guard on its premises, the proprietor has assumed a "duty to protect" its patrons from criminal assault "and therefore the issue of foreseeability becomes irrelevant." (36 C.4th 234.) Like the Court of Appeal, this court finds the analysis in Mata to be overbroad and misleading. First, the scope of any duty assumed depends on the nature of the undertaking. Merely because a business chooses to have a security program does not signify that the proprietor has assumed a duty to protect invitees from third-party violence. For example, a store that hires a security officer to guard its interior cash office does not assume a duty to protect a customer who is injured in the store's exterior parking lot by the criminal act of a third party. Second, a defendant's undertaking will support finding a duty to another only if (1) the defendant's action increases the risk of harm to another or (2) the other person reasonably relies on the undertaking to his or her detriment. Finally, foreseeability remains a highly relevant factor--even in cases in which a legal duty is found (and regardless of the doctrine under which it is found). For example, even when a proprietor voluntarily employs guards and owes a duty to patrons, foreseeability remains relevant to the factfinder's determination of breach and causation. (36 C.4th 248.)

(g) Conclusion. The Court of Appeal erred in reversing the trial court's judgment for plaintiff on the ground that defendant owed no duty. A business proprietor with "actual notice of an impending assault" has a special-relationship duty that includes "an obligation to take reasonable, relatively simple, and minimally burdensome steps to attempt to avert that danger." (36 C.4th 250.) Whether there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's determinations of breach of duty and causation are matters to be addressed by the Court of Appeal on remand. (36 C.4th 250.)

Two justices dissented on the ground that the attack at issue here was not foreseeable. (36 C.4th 250.)

See 36 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 59 [Delgado].

Morris v. De La Torre (2005) 36 C.4th 260, 30 C.R.3d 173, 113 P.3d 1182, involved a restaurant proprietor's duty to summon aid for an invitee who was attacked outside the restaurant. Plaintiff customer was injured by third-party criminals in the parking lot of defendant's all-night restaurant while defendant's employees watched from inside, failing to phone 911 or otherwise summon aid. In the course of the attack, one of the criminals entered the restaurant to take a knife, which he then used to stab plaintiff. The Court of Appeal reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant. Held, affirmed; after applying the principles enunciated in Delgado, the court made the following points unique to this case:

(a) Foreseeability analysis. Foreseeability analysis in a case like this--involving a proprietor's duty to respond reasonably to criminal conduct that is imminent or ongoing in his or her presence--contrasts fundamentally with the type of foreseeability at issue in cases such as Ann M. v. Pacific Shopping Plaza, which involve a proprietor's duty to take preventative measures to guard against possible future criminal conduct. Defendant's employees could readily foresee the immediate danger posed to plaintiff. The question in the present case is thus whether those employees (as agents of defendant) owed any duty to plaintiff to take reasonable action for his protection at some point during the ongoing criminal conduct. The answer depends on whether there was a special relationship between defendant and plaintiff. (36 C.4th 271.)

(b) Special relationship existed between defendant and plaintiff. Defendant contended that no special relationship existed between himself and plaintiff because plaintiff, who merely accompanied friends to the restaurant and did not plan to eat, was not a customer at the time of the attack. However, a special relationship exists not only between a business proprietor and patrons or customers, but also between the proprietor and invitees. Also, courts long have recognized that a person may be an invitee even if he or she is not a paying customer at the time of injury. Potential customers on the premises of a business open to provide services are easily invitees by any definition. Moreover, when consistent with the purpose for which the invitation is implicitly or explicitly issued, those who accompany an invitee are themselves invitees. Accordingly, plaintiff was an invitee for purposes of the special relationship doctrine. (36 C.4th 271.)

(c) Special relationship status is not precluded by occurrence of assault outside defendant's physical structure. The conclusion that plaintiff was an invitee for purposes of the special relationship doctrine is not altered by the circumstance that the attack occurred outside the restaurant. It is well established that a proprietor's special-relationship duty to customers and invitees extends beyond the structure of a premises to areas within the proprietor's control. A finding of sufficient control in this case can be based on a number of factors: (1) apparently customers and invitees regularly used the parking lot when patronizing defendant's restaurant; (2) defendant was aware of this use, and posted in its windows advertising that could be read from the parking lot; (3) the area of the parking lot where the attack occurred was directly in front of the restaurant's windows; (4) defendant's lease authorized the nonexclusive use of the parking lot for customers' and invitees' cars; and (5) a reasonable inference can be drawn that defendant realized a significant commercial benefit from his customers' use of the parking lot. (36 C.4th 274.)

(d) Duty to summon assistance. Because defendant stood in a special relationship with plaintiff, defendant owed an obligation to respond to ongoing criminal conduct by undertaking such "appropriate action as is reasonable under the circumstances" to protect plaintiff and other patrons and invitees. (36 C.4th 274, citing Kentucky Fried Chicken of Calif. v. Superior Court (1997) 14 C.4th 814, 823, 59 C.R.2d 756, 927 P.2d 1260, text, §1141.) Plaintiff argued that measures reasonable under the circumstances included calling 911 to summon assistance. (36 C.4th 274.) Neither a business proprietor nor his or her employees have an absolute obligation to call 911 in the face of ongoing criminal conduct: in some situations, doing so actually might increase the danger to customers or invitees or might unreasonably place proprietors or their employees in danger. Nevertheless, on the disputed facts presented here, the record does not establish, as a matter of law, that defendant's employees had no obligation to call 911 or undertake other similar measures to summon aid. (36 C.4th 275.) Calling 911 is a well-recognized and generally minimally burdensome method of seeking assistance. Although there may be situations in which the appropriate and reasonable response does not include making such a call, as a general matter a proprietor's special-relationship duty to patrons and invitees includes an obligation to do so. (36 C.4th 277.)

(e) Conclusion. The judgment of the Court of Appeal reversing summary judgment for defendant is accordingly affirmed. However, the conclusion that defendant owed plaintiff a legal duty of care, of course, will not prevent defendant from presenting evidence at trial and arguing to the jury that his employees did not in fact breach any duty owed because they acted reasonably in light of their fear that placing a 911 call would endanger their own safety. Furthermore, even if the jury finds a breach of duty, it also would be required to consider whether the breach was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, that is, whether the failure of defendant's employees to act caused plaintiff to incur greater injury than he would have suffered had defendant's employees taken appropriate action. (36 C.4th 278.)

[§ 1152] Near Apartment.

Medina v. Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 C.A.4th 477, 46 C.R.2d 871, was a wrongful death action brought against the owner of an apartment complex by the mother of a young man who was killed by a gang near the complex. Plaintiff's son was killed off the premises, in the public street, by a member of the gang who was not a tenant. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. Held, affirmed.

(a) In California, a landowner owes a duty to exercise ordinary care in the use and management of his or her land. Normally, the duty does not extend to persons outside the land, e.g., on adjacent land or on the highway. Lacking a special relationship, the landowner has no duty to protect members of the public against criminal activities occurring on a public sidewalk or street. (40 C.A.4th 481, citing C.C. 1714(a), supra, §833; Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 119, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086; and the text.)

(b) Defendant owed no duty to protect members of the public from gang members who congregated around the property and assaulted individuals on adjacent public streets. The rule governing Martinez v. Pacific Bell (1990) 225 C.A.3d 1557, 275 C.R. 878, infra, §1153, applies here: A property owner is not liable for criminal acts of third parties committed on the premises of another. Premises liability is based on the concept that possession includes the attendant right to manage and control; no facts were alleged to show that the decedent entered the apartment complex or was assaulted on property controlled by defendant. (40 C.A.4th 483.) Although the congregation of gangs poses a foreseeable risk of harm to the public, the foreseeability of the criminal assault does not compel the ruling that landowners owe a duty to protect the public from gang-related crimes or assume a special relationship with members of the public who use adjacent streets and sidewalks. (40 C.A.4th 486.)

(c) Although P.C. 186.20 et seq. (13 Summary (10th), Equity, §150), which provide that a building used for criminal gang activities constitutes an actionable nuisance, these statutes are not intended to expand a landowner's vicarious liability for personal injuries occurring off the premises. A plaintiff may not invoke the statutes and sue for wrongful death damages based on the theory that he or she is abating a private nuisance. The essence of a private nuisance is an interference with the use and enjoyment of land; without it, the fact of personal injury, or of interference with some purely personal right, is not enough for such a nuisance. (40 C.A.4th 484.)

In Rosenbaum v. Security Pac. Corp. (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1084, 50 C.R.2d 917, the plaintiff's theory of liability was deemed "even more attenuated than the one rejected in Medina." (43 C.A.4th 1093.) Plaintiff, who was attacked as she parked her car across the street from her apartment, contended that defendant apartment owner breached its duty of care by failing to adequately light its premises, thereby causing plaintiff to decide not to use her assigned garage out of fear for her safety and to park on the street instead. The trial court entered judgment notwithstanding the verdict for defendant. Held, affirmed.

(a) A landlord has a duty to take reasonable steps to secure common areas of the premises against foreseeable criminal acts of third parties. Further, the location of the crime does not necessarily determine the landowner's liability for injuries resulting from criminal acts. (43 C.A.4th 1090.) However, there is liability for injuries occurring off the property only if the harm was foreseeable and (1) the owner controlled the site of the injury, (2) the owner affirmatively created a dangerous condition on the site, or (3) there was a functional connection between the owner's conduct and the injury suffered. The duty of a landlord to protect the tenant from criminal activity is not a general one, but arises only where the landlord's negligence facilitates the criminal act. The landlord is not the insurer of the tenant's safety. In other words, a duty is imposed on the landlord where there is a "close, or functional, connection" between the landlord's conduct and the harm suffered. (43 C.A.4th 1091.)

(b) The duty to secure the common areas with adequate lighting, locks, and other appropriate security measures is imposed to protect tenants against the risk of unauthorized entry into the apartment building. Because only the landlord is in the position to secure common areas, he or she has a duty to protect against types of crimes of which the landlord has notice and that are likely to recur if the common areas are not secure. Patently, however, muggings on public streets are not the foreseeable result of the landlord's negligence in maintaining adequate lighting in the apartment building's common areas. (43 C.A.4th 1094.) To adopt plaintiff's theory of liability would impose an unfair burden on landlords and, in effect, force them to become insurers of their tenants' safety, contrary to the well-established policy of this state. (43 C.A.4th 1095.)

[§ 1153] Near Public Telephone.

In Martinez v. Pacific Bell (1990) 225 C.A.3d 1557, 275 C.R. 878, plaintiff, operator of a parking lot, worked on the premises in an attendant's booth. Defendant placed a public telephone on a public sidewalk about 20 feet from the booth. Plaintiff's complaint alleged the following: The telephone attracted large numbers of youths who harassed parking lot customers; on two prior occasions, after being assaulted, he requested defendant to remove the booth, but his request was ignored; on a later occasion he was robbed and shot by persons attracted to the telephone. He sought to impose liability on theories of premises liability and nuisance. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) No legal duty.

(1) Premises liability is imposed for tortious conduct on the premises where the defendant owns or controls the premises. No liability can be imposed on a defendant who does not have this control and who could not exclude third parties intent on committing crime. (225 C.A.3d 1561, citing Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hosp. (1985) 38 C.3d 112, 211 C.R. 356, 695 P.2d 653, supra, §1134, Owens v. Kings Supermarket (1988) 198 C.A.3d 379, 243 C.R. 627, and Balard v. Bassman Event Sec. (1989) 210 C.A.3d 243, 258 C.R. 343, supra, §1151.)

(2) Plaintiff relied in part on the theory of the street vendor case, Nevarez v. Thriftmart (1970) 7 C.A.3d 799, 87 C.R. 50, supra, §1062, in which child patrons were allowed to recover from vendors for injuries received when they ran into public streets to the trucks selling sweets. But the analogy fails: (a) Plaintiff was not induced by defendant's solicitations to patronize defendant's telephones; he remained on his own premises; (b) in the street vendor case, the vendor was doing business from a mobile vehicle, and could have parked his truck in a safe place. (225 C.A.3d 1562.)

(3) Defendant owner of a pay telephone had no legal right to prevent members of the public from approaching the booth used by plaintiff in his parking lot. And to impose tort liability on solvent owners of property for criminal acts committed by third parties on another's property is wholly inconsistent with the principles underlying premises liability; while the tortious conduct of third persons might have been foreseeable, the defendant's lack of control made it impossible to institute preventive measures. (225 C.A.3d 1563, 1564.)

(b) Alleged nuisance is not a proximate cause.

(1) Plaintiff advanced the theory that there was a question of fact whether the pay telephone, which allegedly became a place of resort for criminals, constituted a nuisance. But whether it was or not, the alleged nuisance was not the legal cause of the robbery; the independent intervening intentional act was the cause. (225 C.A.3d 1564, 1565.) Whether the theory of liability is negligence or nuisance, it extends only to injury legally caused by the defendant's conduct. (225 C.A.3d 1565.)

(2) No policy reason exists for the extension of liability for a nuisance that does not proximately cause the injury. Criminals may come to a specific area for a variety of reasons; and, under modern conditions, members of the public move freely about, subject to maintenance of public order and prevention of crime by law enforcement officials. "[A]n owner of publicly used personal property, having no law enforcement power toward or control over persons using that property, incurs no civil liability to persons injured by the commission of an intervening criminal act such users commit in the neighborhood of that property." (225 C.A.3d 1569.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors.

5. Trespassing Children.

a. Former Doctrine of Attractive Nuisance.

1. Rule and Classification.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1154

[§ 1154] Rule and Classification.

In this and the next two sections, the law established prior to Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 119, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, will be briefly summarized.

(1) Exception to Trespasser Rule. The "attractive nuisance doctrine" grew up as an exception to the general rule that the landowner owes no affirmative duty of care to trespassers. The conventional doctrine has been stated as follows: "One who places an attractive but dangerous contrivance in a place frequented by children, and knowing, or having reason to believe, that children will be attracted to it and subjected to injury thereby, owes the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent such injury to them, and this because he is charged with knowledge of the fact that children are likely to be attracted thereto and are usually unable to foresee, comprehend, and avoid the dangers into which he thus knowingly allures them." (Cahill v. Stone (E.B. & A.L.) & Co. (1908) 153 C. 571, 574, 96 P. 84; see Marino v. Valenti (1953) 118 C.A.2d 830, 843, 259 P.2d 84; Copfer v. Golden (1955) 135 C.A.2d 623, 627, 288 P.2d 90; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.5; 62 Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Premises Liability §271 et seq.; 80 Am.Jur. Trials 535 [attractive nuisance litigation]; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 138; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 610; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 428; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 348; 3 Hastings L. J. 38; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 214; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 86; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 504; 16 A.L.R.3d 25 [age and mentality as affecting attractive nuisance doctrine]; 19 A.L.R.3d 184 [private owner's liability to trespassing children for injury sustained in engaging in sliding sports on landowner's property].)

(2) Theory of Balancing Conveniences. The doctrine involves a "balancing of the opposing conveniences." The duty is "to use ordinary prudence and foresight to prevent an injury to children which might be expected where it can be guarded against without placing an undue burden upon the owner of the land and his right to make a beneficial use of it." (Melendez v. Los Angeles (1937) 8 C.2d 741, 745, 68 P.2d 971; see Hernandez v. Santiago Orange Growers' Assn. (1930) 110 C.A. 229, 235, 293 P. 875; Rest.2d, Torts §339, Comment n; 39 A.L.R.2d 1452 [duty to erect fence or other device]; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 149; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 615; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 463; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 534.)

(3) Artificial Contrivance or Structure. The theory developed that the attraction must be an artificial contrivance or structure of some sort, such as a machine or vehicle, and not a natural condition such as a body of water. (See Puchta v.

Rothman (1950) 99 C.A.2d 285, 287, 221 P.2d 744; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 613.) Under the Restatement rule, the attraction must be an artificial condition, but it need not be a contrivance. (Rest.2d, Torts §339; see infra, §1155.)

(4) Classification. The conventional approach to child trespasser problems has been to classify the instrumentality or structure either as an attractive nuisance or not. In California, this approach has been applied in numerous cases, and a variety of machines, appliances, and contrivances has been held to be an attractive nuisance. (See Clark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1931) 118 C.A. 344, 5 P.2d 58 [power poles containing spikes close to the ground, which could be climbed by children]; Marino v. Valenti, supra, 118 C.A.2d 842 [uninhabited and dilapidated shack, with broken board offering easy entrance, near place where school bus discharged children]; Lambert v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1933) 135 C.A. 81, 26 P.2d 824 [dynamite caps left abandoned in accessible place where children play]; Walker v. Fresno Distr. Co. (1965) 233 C.A.2d 840, 44 C.R. 68 [large 400-pound gate in chain-link fence, moving on wheels on track]; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 138; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 610; 3 A.L.R.2d 758 [attractive nuisance doctrine as applied to vehicles or their contents]; 23 A.L.R.2d 1157 [oil and gas tanks, pipes, and pipelines as attractive nuisance]; 62 A.L.R.2d 898 [machines other than vehicles as attractive nuisance]; 86 A.L.R.2d 709 [liability for injury or death of child in refrigerator]; 64 A.L.R.3d 1069 [animals as attractive nuisance].)

B. Landowners and Possessors.

5. Trespassing Children.

a. Former Doctrine of Attractive Nuisance.

2. Extension of Liability Under Restatement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1155

[§ 1155] Extension of Liability Under Restatement.

The general policy, which imposes a special duty toward foreseeable child trespassers, is almost universally accepted. But the rigid formula approach, which sought to list various kinds of instrumentalities or structures as attractive nuisances and to exclude liability where the object did not come within the classification, was criticized. (See Knight v. Kaiser Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 778, 781, 312 P.2d 1089 [where facts are undisputed, classification is question of law; strong argument against categorization in dissenting opinion]; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 614, 618.) Rest. 2d, Torts §339 takes a different and broader view: The landowner is liable for harm to young trespassing children caused by an artificial condition if "(a) the place where the condition exists is one upon which the possessor knows or has reason to know that children are likely to trespass, and (b) the condition is one of which the possessor knows or has reason to know and which he realizes or should realize will involve an unreasonable risk of death or serious bodily harm to such children, and (c) the children because of their youth do not discover the condition or realize the risk involved in intermeddling with it or in coming within the area made dangerous by it, and (d) the utility to the possessor of maintaining the condition and the burden of eliminating the danger are slight as compared to the risk to young children involved, and (e) the possessor fails to exercise reasonable care to eliminate the danger or otherwise protect the children."

The later California cases rejected the categorization approach and embraced the Restatement version of the doctrine. (See Reynolds v. Willson (1958) 51 C.2d 94, 99, 103, 331 P.2d 48; Garcia v. Soogian (1959) 52 C.2d 107, 110, 338 P.2d 433; King v. Lennen (1959) 53 C.2d 340, 343, 1 C.R. 665, 348 P.2d 98; Copfer v. Golden (1955) 135 C.A.2d 623, 628, 288 P.2d 90; *Edler v. 5. Trespassing Children.

a. Former Doctrine of Attractive Nuisance.

3. Application in Particular Situations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1156

[§ 1156] Application in Particular Situations.

(1) Concealed Traps and Artificial Ponds. Natural bodies of water were excluded from the operation of the attractive nuisance doctrine because they are not artificial conditions, and artificially created bodies of water, such as reservoirs, irrigation ditches, or pools created by clogged sewers or storm drains were formerly excluded because they were considered common and familiar dangers. However, under a theory designed to escape some of the consequences of the rigid formula without wholly dispensing with it, recovery was allowed where either a natural or artificial body of water contained an additional artificial contrivance constituting a concealed danger or trap. (See Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co. (1928) 205 C. 515, 517, 271 P. 1060; Reynolds v. Willson (1958) 51 C.2d 94, 99, 103, 331 P.2d 48; Schaffer v. Claremont Country Club (1959) 168 C.A.2d 351, 355, 336 P.2d 254; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 618; 8 Hastings L. J. 305, 306; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 204; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 487.)

(2) Building and Building Materials. Earlier California cases placed a building under construction, and machinery or other materials in it, outside the attractive nuisance classification. (See Camp v. Peel (1939) 33 C.A.2d 612, 614, 92 P.2d 428; Puchta v. Rothman (1950) 99 C.A.2d 285, 289, 221 P.2d 744 [second floor overlaid with tar paper concealing hole for ventilator and skylight; completed stairway giving access to floor].) The explanation given in Puchta is that "a building under construction, being immobile for one thing, is readily distinguishable from an attractive, moving vehicle or piece of machinery," and that to require a barricade of sufficient size and strength to keep out children would be too great a burden on the property owner. (99 C.A.2d 289.) In Woods v. San Francisco (1957) 148 C.A.2d 958, 964, 307 P.2d 698, the court rejected the supposedly inflexible rule of Puchta, and held that liability may be imposed if the four conditions of the Restatement rule are met. (See Crain v. Sestak (1968) 262 C.A.2d 478, 485, 68 C.R. 849; 44 A.L.R.2d 1253 [building under construction]; 64 A.L.R.2d 972 [building being demolished].)

(3) Common and Familiar Dangers. It was long thought that the contrivance or condition must be of such a nature that children are not likely to realize the risk involved in coming near it or meddling with it. Hence, whatever the court considered to be common and familiar dangers were not classified as attractive nuisances and were excluded from the operation of the rule. (See Melendez v. Los Angeles (1937) 8 C.2d 741, 68 P.2d 971; Hernandez v. Santiago Orange Growers' Assn. (1930) 110 C.A. 229, 233, 293 P. 875; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 615; C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d, §6.17.)

The principal application of this exclusionary rule was to ponds, reservoirs, swimming pools, and other natural or artificially created bodies of water. (See Peters v. Bowman (1896) 115 C. 345, 47 P. 113; Melendez v. Los Angeles, supra; Demmer v. Eureka (1947) 78 C.A.2d 708, 710, 178 P.2d 472; Betts v. San Francisco (1952) 108 C.A.2d 701, 702, 239 P.2d 456; Ward v. Oakley Co. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 840, 845, 271 P.2d 536; Lake v. Ferrer (1956) 139 C.A.2d 114, 293 P.2d 104; Van Winkle v. King (1957) 149 C.A.2d 500, 506, 308 P.2d 512; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 159; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 616; 8 Hastings L. J. 300; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 204.)

Similarly, the doctrine was held inapplicable in other situation. (See Loftus v. Dehail (1901) 133 C. 214, 217, 65 P. 379 [open cellar or excavation]; Allred v. Pioneer Truck Co. (1918) 179 C. 315, 176 P. 455 [vehicles in common use]; Doyle v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1936) 6 C.2d 550, 59 P.2d 93 [ladder]; Solomon v. Red River Lumber Co. (1922) 56 C.A. 742, 746, 206 P. 498 [playground swing intended for children]; Giddings v. Superior Oil Co. (1951) 106 C.A.2d 607, 611, 235 P.2d 843 [oil well pump]; Lopez v. Capitol Co. (1956) 141 C.A.2d 60, 66, 296 P.2d 63 [scaffolding on public sidewalk].)

In Garcia v. Soogian (1959) 52 C.2d 107, 110, 338 P.2d 433, the common and familiar danger rule, applied objectively as a matter of law to any child without inquiry as to the capacity and understanding of the child, was expressly repudiated. "The circumstance that a condition giving rise to injury is common in character does not necessarily exclude liability. ... What is important is not whether conditions are common in character but whether their dangers are fully understood by children." (52 C.2d 111.) (See 48 Cal. L. Rev. 348; 13 Hastings L. J. 38; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 349.)

Nevertheless, the common and familiar danger concept remained implicit in some of the decisions applying the conditions of the Restatement rule. (See Davis v. Goodrich (1959) 171 C.A.2d 92, 98, 340 P.2d 48 [abandoned roller coaster having no moving parts]; Hickey v. Nulty (1960) 182 C.A.2d 237, 241, 5 C.R. 914 [hay mowing machine]; Kemline v. Simonds (1964) 231 C.A.2d 165, 168, 41 C.R. 653 [sliding glass panel door fronting on patio, new swimming pool].) (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 366, 1187.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

B. Landowners and Possessors. 5. Trespassing Children. b. New Foreseeable Risk Approach.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1157

[§ 1157] New Foreseeable Risk Approach.

With the abandonment of status classifications and the substitution of the foreseeable risk approach in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 119, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, there is little reason to consider liability to a child on the basis of the attractive nuisance exceptions to the trespasser rule (supra, §1154 et seq.).

In Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 129, 135, 84 C.R. 449, although its precise holding was later nullified by statute (see supra, §1097), the court took a strong position to this effect: "Under Rowland v. Christian, the liability of a possessor of property to trespassing children is no longer limited by the conditions set out in Restatement Second Torts, §339 ... , or by the terms of other special doctrines and theories created as exceptions to a general rule barring trespassers from recovery for negligence, but is governed by Civil Code, section 1714, which imposes general liability on every person for injuries occasioned to others by want of ordinary care in the management of his property. ... [T]he extent of a possessor's duty is controlled by the foreseeability of the risk and not by the status of the person injured."

"Since a person's status as a trespasser is now largely immaterial and no longer determines that he assumed the risk of personal injuries caused by a possessor's negligence, it follows that the various exceptions to the former rule prohibiting trespassers from recovery for negligence no longer serve their intended purpose. ... Under the attractive nuisance exception a trespassing child had the burden of proving his lack of appreciation of the risk involved in coming on the property ... and also the burden of proving the feasibility to the possessor of eliminating the dangerous condition. ... [P]roof of trespass no longer creates a presumption that the trespasser took the property as he found it, and a trespassing adult need not rebut the presumption that he assumed the risk of the possessor's negligence in going upon the property. A fortiori, a trespassing child is entitled to the benefit of the same rule. Hence the defense of assumption of risk must be established by defendant in some manner other than mere proof that plaintiff was a trespasser."

In Smith v. Americania Motor Lodge (1974) 39 C.A.3d 1, 7, 113 C.R. 771, the court, citing Beard, declared that Rowland "in effect, abolishes the attractive nuisance doctrine in California." (See also 88 A.L.R.3d 1197 [note on Smith case; liability of swimming facility operator for injury to or death of trespassing child].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

C. Real Property: Vendor, Lessor, and Contractor.

1. Vendor and Lessor.

a. General Rule of Nonliability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1158

[§ 1158] General Rule of Nonliability.

After transfer to the purchaser, the vendor of real property is ordinarily not liable for injuries resulting from defects in the premises. The reason is that the vendor no longer has control of the property, and therefore has neither the right nor the duty to enter to inspect or repair or take any other precautions to protect persons coming on the property. The liability of a landowner or possessor thus shifts to the purchaser. (See Preston v. Goldman (1986) 42 C.3d 108, 115, 227 C.R. 817, 720 P.2d 476, infra, §1159; Stone v. Heyman Bros. (1932) 124 C.A. 46, 48, 12 P.2d 126; Copfer v. Golden (1955) 135 C.A.2d 623, 630, 288 P.2d 90; Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1684, 1687, 30 C.R.2d 210 [under general rule of nonliability for prior owners or possessors, previous tenant was not liable to present tenant when cabinet, installed by defendant, fell on plaintiff; installation of cabinet did not turn defendant into contractor so as to make rule inapplicable]; Lewis v. Chevron USA (2004) 119 C.A.4th 690, 693, 14 C.R.3d 636 [rule of nonliability applies even if prior owner negligently created condition]; Rest.2d, Torts §351 et seq.; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §27.18; 34 Proof of Facts 3d 465 [contractual allocations of environmental risk]; 57 Am.Jur. Trials 395 [toxic tort litigation]; 59 Am.Jur. Trials 231 [contractual indemnifications and releases from environmental liability]; 25 A.L.R.3d 383 [liability of vendor of new dwelling for loss, injury, or damage occasioned by defective condition]; 48 A.L.R.3d 1027, 1035 [liability of vendor or grantor for personal injury to purchaser or third person due to premises' defective condition].)

The Restatement recognizes two bases of liability:

(1) Where the vendor fails to disclose concealed dangerous conditions known to the vendor and that the purchaser is not likely to discover. (Rest.2d, Torts §353.) (On disclosure requirement, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §471 et seq.)

(2) Where the vendor created, or negligently permitted to remain, a structure or other artificial condition involving an unreasonable risk of harm to persons outside the land. In this situation, liability continues until the purchaser has discovered or has had a reasonable opportunity to discover the condition. (Rest.2d, Torts §373.)

The same general rule of nonliability applies to lessors of real property, but the exceptions to the rule are more numerous and important. (See Rest.2d, Torts §355 et seq.; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §638 et seq.); BAJI, No. 8.20.1.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

C. Real Property: Vendor, Lessor, and Contractor.

1. Vendor and Lessor.

b. Former Owner's Liability for Improvement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1159

[§ 1159] Former Owner's Liability for Improvement.

In Preston v. Goldman (1986) 42 C.3d 108, 227 C.R. 817, 720 P.2d 476, defendant K, in 1972, built a small pond with a 12-inch wall in the backyard of their residence. In 1973, they sold the property to G, and in November, 1974, G entered into a lease-option-to-buy agreement with the Rs. The Rs improved the pond with a new brick facing and coping; in the process, they emptied the pond and were aware of its depth and configurations. In May, 1976, plaintiff child, 22 months old, was visiting the Rs with his parents. He was left alone for a short time and was found immersed in the pond. He suffered brain damage and quadriplegia.

Plaintiff's complaint, filed in April, 1978, named G and the Rs as defendants, and in September, 1980, it was amended to add the Ks. At trial, the jury verdicts were in favor of all defendants. On plaintiff's appeal, the Court of Appeal held that the Ks were not insulated from liability by their sale of the property, and the Supreme Court granted review solely to consider this issue: "Should former owners, allegedly negligent in constructing an improvement on their property, be subject to liability for injuries sustained on that property long after they have relinquished all ownership and control?" Held, they should not, except under special circumstances.

(a) The general rule of nonliability is stated in Copfer v. Golden (1955) 135 C.A.2d 623, 288 P.2d 90, and in Rest.2d, Torts §352 (supra, §1158). The trial judge thought Copfer was not controlling because plaintiff alleged that defendant K had been actively negligent in their design and construction of the pond. The judge therefore instructed the jury on the theory of liability based on affirmative conduct. But Copfer cannot be distinguished on this ground; its language indicates that the active or passive role of the former owner is irrelevant, because, having parted with possession, the former owner can do nothing about the alleged dangerous condition. (42 C.3d 114.)

(b) "The development of the law of predecessor landowners' liability has been, in fact, somewhat murky." (42 C.3d 114.) Three separate approaches have arisen:

(1) The doctrine of caveat emptor is generally followed; i.e., termination of liability occurs on transfer of control except under specified circumstances. (42 C.3d 115, citing Rest.2d, Torts §§352, 353.) The reason, as pointed out in Comment a to Rest.2d, Torts §352, is that the purchaser is expected to make his or her own inspection of the premises, and the vendor is not responsible for their defective condition at the time of transfer. (42 C.3d 115.)

(2) Both the Restatement and Prosser recognize the two exceptions to the general rule: (a) The vendor is under a duty to disclose any hidden defects that he or she may anticipate that the purchaser will not discover; and (b) the vendor may be liable where the land, when transferred, is in such condition that it involves an unreasonable risk of harm to those outside the premises. (42 C.3d 115; see supra, §1158.)

(3) A third view is that the vendor should be liable, notwithstanding transfer of title, if he or she negligently created a dangerous condition. (42 C.3d 115.)

(c) As to private property, most jurisdictions follow the common law rule of caveat emptor. (42 C.3d 116.) Plaintiff's theory of liability, which was based not on the Ks' status as landowners but rather as the creators of a negligent condition, does not withstand analysis; except as to professional developer/owners, the principles of negligence applied to manufacturers of chattels have usually not been extended to negligent conditions on land. (42 C.3d 117.)

(d) Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 C3d 358, 178 C.R. 783, 636 P.2d 1121, supra, §1089, extending liability of landowners to cover natural conditions on land, emphasized the possession of the premises and the attendant right to control and manage them. (42 C.3d 118.) "Thus, generally, we have continued to treat ownership and control as a fundamental requirement for ascribing liability." (42 C.3d 119.) This theory is also reflected in the usually applicable insurance coverage: The Ks' renters' insurance on their new residence would not cover liability arising from and connected with other premises. (42 C.3d 120, 121.) And the same implication is found in the statute of limitations on actions for liability based on patent and latent defects (C.C.P. 337.1, 337.15; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§557, 558.) The defect here was patent, and the provision on patent defects demonstrates, by its shorter limitations period as well as by its exemptions for professionals engaged in home improvements, that the Legislature intended to limit liability for those who did not have the continuing opportunity to discover and correct these defects. (42 C.3d 125.)

(e) "After consideration of the relevant variables reviewed above, we have concluded that we should not depart from the existing rules restricting liability of predecessor landowners. Our recent emphasis on the importance of possession and control as a basis for liability comports with our conclusions, as does our analysis of the factors enunciated in" Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086. (42 C.3d 125.) (See 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 23.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

C. Real Property: Vendor, Lessor, and Contractor.

2. Contractor.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1160

[§ 1160] In General.

(1) Former Rule of Nonliability. Some courts have been reluctant to apply the rule of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, infra, §1168, to a general contractor who constructs a building, after the owner has taken possession. (See 70 A.L.R.5th 261 [exceptions to traditional "completed and accepted" rule, protecting contractor from liability for injury to third person after completion and acceptance of work].) Among the reasons advanced for distinguishing between the liability of a manufacturer of a chattel and the building contractor are:

(a) The manufacturer produces standardized goods over which he or she has complete control, while the building contractor constructs individual units and often in conformity with another's plans.

(b) The owner, assuming a landowner's duty, usually inspects the building, and this inspection makes it reasonable to terminate the contractor's liability on acceptance.

(c) Liability imposed for defects in real property would cover a much longer period than that for defects in personal property, which are likely to cause the harm in a relatively short time. (See 62 Harv. L. Rev. 145 [discussing and criticizing the distinction].)

(2) Modern Theory of Liability. Rest.2d, Torts §385 repudiates this approach and makes the contractor liable for the negligent creation of a dangerous condition of the structure in the same manner as the manufacturer of a chattel. (See C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d, §6.1 et seq.; 51 Am.Jur. Trials 493 [plumbing contractor's negligence]; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 145; 30 McGeorge L. Rev. 299 [negligence liability for construction defects]; 58 A.L.R.2d 865 [negligence of contractor as ground of liability for injury or damage to third person occurring after completion and acceptance of the work]; 61 A.L.R.3d 792 [liability of builder or subcontractor for insufficiency of building resulting from latent defect in materials]; 73 A.L.R.3d 1213 [duty of contractor to warn owner of defects in subsurface conditions].)

This view has been adopted in California, although it is expressed in terms of an "exception" to the "general rule" of nonliability of an independent contractor after the work is accepted. In Johnston v. Long (1943) 56 C.A.2d 834, 837,

133 P.2d 409, where the injury was caused by an unsafe overhead door at a delivery entrance, the court said that "the contractor is liable if the work done and turned over by him is so negligently defective as to be imminently dangerous to third persons, provided the contractor knows, or should know, of the dangerous situation created by him, and the owner does not know ... and would not discover it by reasonable inspection." (See Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 802, 809, 110 C.R. 543; Kent v. Bartlett (1975) 49 C.A.3d 724, 730, 122 C.R. 615 [negligent survey by surveyor employed by plaintiffs' predecessor in title]; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 782, 785; infra, §1161; on right of homeowner to bring action against contractor or others for construction defects, see infra, §1162 et seq.)

The result is different when the owner has knowledge of the defect. In Sanchez v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1461, 1466, 55 C.R.2d 415, plaintiff slipped and fell and sued the general contractor of the building. The building had been completed by defendant and accepted by the owner, and the cause of the accident, pooled water on the floor, was observed by the owner's agents on several occasions before the accident. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The latency of the defect is essential to a contractor's negligent-construction liability after the owner has accepted the structure. (47 C.A.4th 1470.) It was undisputed that the owner's agents observed the dangerous condition and appreciated the risk it entailed. Even if the defect initially could have been considered latent, once it was discovered, it became patent. That the owner failed to take precautions until after plaintiff was injured did not change the nature of the defect. (47 C.A.4th 1471.)

Liability is, of course, dependent on proof of original negligence in construction or knowledge of a dangerous condition; the contractor has no more duty than a vendor to maintain the property in a safe condition after acceptance by the owner. (See Hogan v. Miller (1957) 153 C.A.2d 107, 111, 314 P.2d 230.)

Nor is the contractor responsible for the negligence of another who is not in a relationship (such as agent or subcontractor; infra, §1236 et seq.) giving rise to liability. Thus, in Hamilton v. Harkins (1956) 146 C.A.2d 566, 304 P.2d 82, a city engineer's office negligently prepared defective sewer plans, defendant general contractors were successful bidders and installed the sewers accordingly, and plaintiffs suffered damage to their property from a landslide. Held, defendants were not liable; i.e., the contractor is not liable despite the inherently dangerous plan where he or she does not know of or is not chargeable with knowledge of the defect. (146 C.A.2d 574.) (See De Lima v. Magnesite Waterproofing & Refinishing (1987) 191 C.A.3d 776, 781, 236 C.R. 519, quoting the text [contractor who installed outside stairs was not liable for second contractor's negligence in resealing them 1 year later without adding sand to the sealer to prevent slipperiness].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Modern Theory of Liability. See Stonegate Homeowners Assn. v. Staben (2006) 144 C.A.4th 740, 750, 50 C.R.3d 709 [in action by homeowners association against subcontractor for defective work on retaining walls, trial court erred in precluding association from presenting expert testimony to establish that subcontractor, in performing waterproofing and drainage work, met standard of care expected within industry]; Jones v. P.S. Dev. Co. (2008) 166 C.A.4th 707, 82 C.R.3d 882 [contractors' work in installing mounting bolts securing explosive detection system machine was completed and accepted by Transportation Security Administration (TSA) within meaning of "completed and accepted" doctrine, shielding contractors from liability in negligence action by TSA employee who tripped over mounting bolts, in absence of evidence that contractors performed work on, or retained control of, machine after bolts had been installed; TSA employees were aware of hazard].

C. Real Property: Vendor, Lessor, and Contractor.

2. Contractor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1161

[§ 1161] Illustrations.

In Hale v. Depaoli (1948) 33 C.2d 228, 201 P.2d 1. Defendant and F, his partner, built a house in 1925 and sold it. Defendant reacquired it in 1937 and leased it to plaintiff's mother. Plaintiff was injured when a back porch railing collapsed, 18 years after the building was constructed. Held, a nonsuit was improperly granted. (a) Testimony of a witness that the railing had been improperly nailed was sufficient to warrant an inference by the jury that sound building practice had not been followed; and the liability of a building contractor, like that of a manufacturer of a chattel, is not limited to things "imminently" dangerous, but extends to situations where a thing is "reasonably certain to place life and limb in peril when negligently made." (33 C.2d 231.) (b) Defendant was liable if he knew or should have known of the dangerous condition, and the knowledge of the carpenters was imputed to him and his partner. (33 C.2d 231.) (c) Whether the railing failed because of the original defect, or through the wearing effect of the elements during the intervening period, was a question of fact for the jury. (33 C.2d 232.) (See Freeman v. Mazzera (1957) 150 C.A.2d 61, 63, 309 P.2d 510 [citing Hale; defective iron latticework on stairway landing; accident 3 years after construction]; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 505; on issue of imputed notice, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §152.)

In Chance v. Lawry's (1962) 58 C.2d 368, 24 C.R. 209, 374 P.2d 185, the court applied this theory to a new situation. Plaintiff came into defendant L's restaurant with others for dinner, and while allowing persons to pass in the crowded narrow foyer, fell into a recessed planter box under construction by defendant S, a general contractor. Held, judgment for damages against both defendants affirmed.

(a) Defendant contractor knew that the restaurant was open for business during the remodeling, and that the foyer was the only means of ingress and egress for patrons; hence, plaintiff was a person to whom a duty was owed. (58 C.2d 379.) The jury could well have decided that a reasonable contractor in his position would have put a board over the planter box or installed a barricade or warning sign before he left the job. (58 C.2d 379.)

(b) "The imposition of a legal duty by precisely defining the status of the injured person vis-a-vis the tortfeasor is hard enough and often arbitrary where the defendant is an owner or occupier of real property. ... But where the defendant is not an owner or occupier the application of these legal distinctions becomes impossible in fact and is without reason. ... Justice will not be served by trying to fit each case involving an independent contractor into a Procrustean bed bounded by the concepts of 'invitee' at the head and 'licensee' at the foot." (58 C.2d 376.) In brief, the contractor has a general duty to use reasonable care to prevent injury "to persons whom he may reasonably expect to be affected by his work." (58 C.2d 378.)

In Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 C.2d 857, 13 C.R. 521, 362 P.2d 345, general contractor W agreed to construct a swimming pool, and subcontractor C did the concrete work by the gunite process. C's work was negligent, the pool cracked, and escaping water undermined the house of plaintiff owner. Held, C, though not in privity with plaintiff owner, was nevertheless liable to him. The old privity requirement was abandoned in Dow v. Holly Mfg. Co. (1958) 49 C.2d 720, 724, 321 P.2d 736, and by the test of Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, and the liability of a contractor or subcontractor must be determined by the Biakanja test. "Here it was obvious that the pool for which [C] provided the gunite work was intended for the plaintiffs and that property damage to them--and possibly to some of their neighbors--was foreseeable in the event the work was so negligently done as to permit water to escape. It is clear that the transaction between [W and C] was intended to specially affect plaintiffs." (55 C.2d 863.) (On finding of proximate cause, see infra, §1211; and see Sabella v. Wisler (1963) 59 C.2d 21, 28, 27 C.R. 689, 377 P.2d 889 [following Stewart; contractor was liable to owner for damage to home, which subsided because of negligent compacting of earth]; 4 Santa Clara Lawyer 141 [Sabella].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

D. Construction Defects.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1162

[§ 1162] In General.

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 C.4th 627, 101 C.R.2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125, defendants developed and built a condominium project and a subdivision of tract homes. Plaintiff homeowners in both subsequently discovered a variety of construction defects and brought suit for negligence and strict liability, seeking damages for the cost of repair and for diminution in the value of their residences. The trial judge granted defendants' in limine motions to exclude any evidence of defects that had not caused property damage. Plaintiffs' petition for mandamus challenging these rulings was denied in the Court of Appeal. Held, affirmed. Homeowners may not recover in negligence for prospective property damage from construction defects.

(a) Tort remedies are limited by economic loss rule. The question whether homeowners may recover damages in negligence for construction defects that have not caused property damage is not simple, because it arises from the nebulous and troublesome margin between tort and contract law. Generally, tort law provides a remedy for construction defects that cause property damage or personal injury. Focusing on the conduct of persons involved in construction, courts in this state have found such a remedy in the law of negligence. Viewing the home as a product, courts have also found a tort remedy in strict products liability. For defective products and negligent services that have caused neither property damage nor personal injury, however, tort remedies have been uncertain. Any construction defect can diminish the value of a house. But the difference between price paid and value received, and deviations from standards of quality that have not resulted in property damage or personal injury, are primarily the domain of contract and warranty law or the law of fraud, rather than of negligence or strict liability. In actions for negligence or strict liability, a manufacturer's liability is limited to damages for physical injuries. Under Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 18, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, infra, §1514, no recovery is allowed for economic loss alone. This general principle, the so-called economic loss rule, is the primary obstacle to plaintiffs' claim. (24 C.4th 635.)

(b) Rule applies to strict liability claims for construction defects. Plaintiffs asserted strict liability claims at trial but now concede that that cause of action is unavailable here. California courts have applied strict liability to mass-produced homes, reasoning that there is no meaningful distinction between the mass production and sale of homes and the mass production and sale of other products, and that the overriding policy considerations are the same. However, a remedy in strict liability is denied for defects that have not caused property damage or personal injury. This was the holding in Seely. While a consumer should not be charged at the will of the manufacturer with bearing the risk of physical injury when the consumer buys a product on the market, the consumer can be fairly charged with the risk that the product will not match his or her economic expectations unless the manufacturer agrees that it will. (24 C.4th 640.)

(c) No action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage. Seely added a dictum that the economic loss rule also applies in negligence cases, and the rule has since been routinely applied in negligence as well as strict liability cases to distinguish recoverable damages for physical injury from unrecoverable damages representing the benefit of a contractual bargain. Plaintiffs urge that an action nevertheless lies for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, as described in J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 804, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, supra, §751. According to plaintiffs, when the parties occupy the "special relationship" defined in J'Aire, there is both a duty to avoid negligently injuring a person's economic interests and a right to recover for that injury, even though unaccompanied by damage to person or property. On analysis, however, such a cause of action does not arise here. (24 C.4th 643.)

(d) Balancing of Biakanja/J'Aire factors indicates that no duty arises.

(1) J'Aire relied on this court's earlier decision in Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, which held that a defendant's negligent performance of a contractual obligation resulting in damage to the property or economic interests of a person not in privity can support recovery if the defendant was under a duty to protect those interests. The Biakanja court articulated a case-by-case test for identifying a duty involving the balancing of six factors. These include (a) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (b) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (c) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (d) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (e) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (f) the policy of preventing future harm. J'Aire, a negligence action by the tenant of a building used as a restaurant against a contractor hired by the building's owner for business income lost when the contractor failed to complete the project with due diligence, applied the Biakanja factors to find a "special relationship" that permitted recovery of economic damages under the facts of that case. (24 C.4th 643.)

(2) To apply the multifactored Biakanja balancing test followed in J'Aire tends to involve a court in making fairly subjective judgments. In this case, however, a relatively objective obstacle to plaintiffs' claim appears in the third factor, which looks to the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury. This would obviously not include construction defects that have not ripened into property damage, or at least into involuntary out-of-pocket losses. Plaintiffs argue that the cost of repairs is an accepted measure of damage for construction defects and that plaintiffs could make the cost of repairs certain by voluntarily repairing defects and obtaining a receipt for money spent. This confuses the measurement of alleged damages with the ability of particular facts to support a tort action. (24 C.4th 644.)

(3) The other factors similarly provide no adequate justification. The sixth factor, the policy of preventing future harm, is probably plaintiffs' strongest argument. In some sense, that policy might be served by a rule of tort liability making builders, in effect, the insurers of building code compliance, even as to defects that have not caused property damage or personal injury. Moreover, as plaintiffs argue, to require builders to pay to correct defects as soon as they are detected rather than after property damage or personal injury has occurred might be less expensive. On the other hand, this rule would likely increase the cost of housing by an unforeseeable amount as builders raised prices to cover the increased risk of liability. The rule should also be unnecessary to the extent buyers timely enforce their contract, warranty, and inspection rights, and to the extent building authorities vigorously enforce the applicable codes for new construction. (24 C.4th 644.)

(e) Liability should be imposed, if at all, by Legislature. The many considerations of social policy that this case implicates emphasize that certain choices are better left to the Legislature. Home buyers in California already enjoy protection under contract and warranty law for enforcement of builders' and sellers' obligations; under the law of negligence and strict liability for acts and omissions that cause property damage or personal injury; under the law of fraud for misrepresentations about the property's condition; and an exceptionally long 10-year statute of limitations for latent construction defects (C.C. 337.15). While the Legislature may add whatever additional protections it deems appropriate, the facts of this case do not present a sufficiently compelling reason to preempt the legislative process with a judicially created rule of tort liability. (24 C.4th 650.)

Two justices dissented, arguing that homeowners should be provided a cause of action to remedy serious defects caused by negligent construction that pose a significant risk of damage to persons or property. (24 C.4th 653.) (See Keru Inv. v. Cube Co. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1412, 1418, 74 C.R.2d 744 [contractor who did seismic retrofitting was not liable to subsequent purchaser; contractor was not developer who knew that buildings would be resold, and it had not retrofitted building in expectation that it would be transferred to third party]; Siegel v. Anderson Homes (2004) 118 C.A.4th 994, 1000, 13 C.R.3d 462 [absent proof that original owners of homes suffered economic injuries from construction defects, they had no action against builder that precluded subsequent owners from maintaining action]; 93 Am.Jur. Trials 405 [condominium construction litigation]; 30 Pepperdine L. Rev. 529 [toxic mold litigation].)

Construction defect legislation in response to Aas and other construction defects cases was adopted in 2002. (See C.C. 895 et seq.; infra, §1163 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

D. Construction Defects.

2. Scope of Legislation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1163

[§ 1163] Scope of Legislation.

C.C. 895 et seq., governing recovery for construction defects, apply to new residential units where the purchase agreement with the buyer was signed by the seller on or after January 1, 2003. (C.C. 938.) The statutes are limited to original construction intended to be sold as an individual dwelling unit, and do not apply to condominium conversions. (C.C. 896.)

A "homeowner" or "claimant," within the scope of C.C. 895 et seq., is an individual owner of a single-family home, an individual unit owner of an attached dwelling, and, in the case of common interest developments, an association as defined in C.C. 1351(a) (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §97). (C.C. 895(f).) A "builder" is generally defined as a builder, developer, general contractor, contractor, or original seller of a new residential unit who, at the time of sale, was also in the business of selling residential units to the public for the property subject to the homeowner's claim or was in the business of building, developing, or constructing residential units for public purchase for the property subject to the homeowner's claim. Excepted is any entity or individual whose involvement with the residential unit is limited to his or her capacity as a general contractor or contractor and who is not a partner, member of, subsidiary of, or otherwise similarly affiliated with the builder; these nonaffiliated general contractors and nonaffiliated contractors are treated the same as subcontractors, material suppliers, individual product manufacturers, and design professionals. (C.C. 911.)

No other cause of action for a claim covered by C.C. 895 et seq. or for damages recoverable under C.C. 895 et seq. is allowed. On the other hand, the statutes are expressly made inapplicable to "any action by a claimant to enforce a contract or express contractual provision, and to any action for fraud, personal injury, or violation of a statute." (C.C. 943(a).) Providers of independent quality reviews are immune from liability for construction defects in prescribed circumstances. (See C.C. 43.99, supra, §160.)

The provisions, standards, rights, and obligations set forth in C.C. 895 et seq. are binding on all original purchasers and their successors in interest. (C.C. 945.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

D. Construction Defects.

3. Actionable Defects.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1164

[§ 1164] Actionable Defects.

(1) Liability Based on Violation of Statutory Standards. In an action to recover damages arising out of, or related to deficiencies in, residential construction, and the design, specifications, surveying, planning, supervision, testing, or observation of that construction, builders, general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, individual product manufacturers, and design professionals are liable for violations of specified standards. Similarly, the claimant's claims or causes of action are limited to these violations. (C.C. 896; on liability of general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, individual product manufacturers, and design professionals generally, see C.C. 936, infra, §1167.) The standards, which set forth in detail what is expected of the finished components, relate to the following:

- (a) Water issues. (C.C. 896(a).)
- (b) Structural issues. (C.C. 896(b).)
- (c) Soil issues. (C.C. 896(c).)
- (d) Fire protection issues. (C.C. 896(d).)
- (e) Plumbing and sewer issues. (C.C. 896(e).)
- (f) Electrical system issues. (C.C. 896(f).)
- (g) Issues regarding other areas of construction. (C.C. 896(g).)

These standards are intended to address every function or component of a structure. To the extent that a function or component of a structure is not so addressed, it is actionable if it causes damage. (C.C. 897.)

(2) No Requirement of Resulting Personal Injury or Property Damage. There is no requirement of resulting personal injury or property damage, as set forth in Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 C.4th 627, 101 C.R.2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125, supra, §1162. (Stats. 2002, Chap. 722 §1.)

(3) Enhanced Protection Agreements. A builder may offer greater protection in its express contract with the homeowner than that set forth in the statutory standards; this is termed an "enhanced protection agreement." On the other hand, the builder is prohibited from limiting the application of the statutory standards or lowering their protection through the express contract. (C.C. 901, 902.) The homeowner's acceptance of an enhanced protection agreement must be in writing no later than the close of escrow. (C.C. 903.) If a builder has elected to use an enhanced protection agreement, and a homeowner alleges that the particular provision of the agreement is not greater than or equal to the statutory standards, the homeowner may enforce the application of the relevant standard. The homeowner must give the builder written notice of intent to do so at the time of filing the homeowner's notice of claim. (C.C. 904; see C.C. 905 [prescribing procedure].)

(4) Warranty of Fit and Finish. A builder is required to provide a home buyer with a minimum 1-year express written limited warranty covering the "fit and finish" of cabinets, mirrors, flooring, interior and exterior walls, countertops, paint finishes, and trim. If the builder fails to provide the warranty, there is deemed to be a warranty for these items for a period of 1 year. The warranty does not apply to damage caused by defects in other components governed by C.C. 895 et seq. (C.C. 900.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

D. Construction Defects.

4. Right To Repair and Other Prelitigation Requirements.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1165

[§ 1165] Right To Repair and Other Prelitigation Requirements.

(1) In General. Prescribed prelitigation procedures must be followed before an action for violation of the statutory standards may be filed. These requirements include permitting the builder to repair the defect in lieu of litigation. (See C.C. 910 et seq.) A builder must "record on title" a notice of these prelitigation requirements, and a notice that they impact the legal rights of the homeowner. This information must also be included with the original sales documentation and must be initialed and acknowledged by the purchaser and the builder's sales representative. (C.C. 912(f).) (See 44 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1249 [prelitigation requirements in construction defect actions].)

If a claim combines causes of action or damages not covered by C.C. 895 et seq., such as for personal injuries, fraud, or other statutory remedies, or involving a class, the claimed unmet standards must nevertheless be administered according to the prelitigation requirements, although evidence of the property in its unrepaired condition may be introduced to support the elements of the other causes of action. (C.C. 931.)

(2) Alternative Procedures. These statutory procedures are nonadversarial. At the time the sales agreement is executed, the builder must notify the homeowner whether the builder intends to engage in these procedures or attempt to enforce alternative nonadversarial contractual provisions. If the builder elects to use alternative nonadversarial contractual provisions in lieu of these procedures, the election is binding, regardless of whether the builder's alternative nonadversarial contractual provisions are successful. (C.C. 914 [referring to alternative dispute resolution methods, contractual arbitration, judicial reference, and similar procedures].)

(3) Notice of Violation. The claimant must initially serve notice of the violation on the builder. The notice has the same force and effect as a notice of commencement of a legal proceeding. (C.C. 910.) The builder must acknowledge receipt of the notice within 14 days after receipt. (C.C. 913.)

(4) Production of Documents. Within 30 days of a written request by the homeowner, the builder must supply prescribed documents, including copies of relevant plans, specifications, reports, engineering calculations, and preventative maintenance recommendations that pertain to the residence and of the builder's limited contractual warranties in effect at the time of the original sale of the residence. (C.C. 912.)

(5) Inspection or Testing. If the builder elects to inspect and test concerning the violation, the builder must complete the initial inspection and testing within 14 days after acknowledgment of receipt of the notice of the claim, at a mutually convenient date and time. If the builder deems a second inspection or testing reasonably necessary, and specifies the reasons in writing within 3 days following the initial inspection, the builder may conduct a second inspection or testing; the second inspection or testing must be completed within 40 days of the initial one. (C.C. 916.)

(6) Offer To Repair. Within 30 days of the initial or, if requested, second inspection or testing, the builder may offer in writing to repair the violation. The offer to repair must also compensate the homeowner for all recoverable damages. The offer must be accompanied by a detailed statement identifying the particular violation that is being repaired, explaining the nature, scope, and location of the repair, and setting a reasonable completion date. The offer must also include the names and other specified information relating to the contractors whom the builder intends to have perform the repair. (C.C. 917.)

On receipt of the offer to repair, the homeowner has 30 days to authorize the builder to proceed with the repair or, alternatively, request a choice of alternative contractors to perform the repair. Within 35 days after the request for alternative contractors, the builder must present the homeowner with a choice of contractors. Within 20 days after that presentation, the homeowner must authorize the builder or one of the alternative contractors to perform the repair. (C.C. 918.) The offer to repair may be accompanied by an offer to mediate the dispute if the homeowner so chooses. (C.C. 919.) Repairs must be conducted in a prescribed manner. (See C.C. 921 et seq.)

The builder is prohibited from obtaining a release or waiver in exchange for the mandated repair work. (C.C. 926.)

(7) Cash Offer in Lieu of Offer To Repair. The builder has the option of making only a cash offer and no repair. In this situation, the homeowner is free to accept the offer, or may reject the offer and file an action. (C.C. 929.)

(8) Mediation. If the builder has invoked the prelitigation procedure and completed a repair, the homeowner must request mediation in writing prior to filing an action, unless there has been previous mediation between the parties. The mediation is limited to 4 hours, except as otherwise mutually agreed, before a nonaffiliated mediator selected and paid for by the builder. At the homeowner's sole option, the homeowner may agree to split the cost of the mediator and if he or she does so, the mediator is selected jointly. (C.C. 928.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(8) Mediation. See 100 Am.Jur. Trials 45 [alternative dispute resolution in resolving construction disputes].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

D. Construction Defects.

5. Action and Relief.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1166

[§ 1166] Action and Relief.

(1) When Action May Be Commenced. If the builder fails to make an offer to repair, properly complete a repair, or otherwise strictly comply with the prelitigation requirements within the times specified (see supra, §1165), the claimant is released from the prelitigation requirements and may proceed with filing an action. (C.C. 920, 925.)

No action may be brought under C.C. 895 et seq. more than 10 years "after substantial completion of the improvement but not later than the date of recordation of a valid notice of completion." However, this limitation "may not be asserted by way of defense by a person in actual possession or control, as owner, tenant or otherwise, of the improvement, at the time a deficiency in the improvement constitutes the proximate cause for which it is proposed to make a claim or bring an action." (C.C. 941.)

(2) Showing Required. To make a claim for violation of the statutory standards, a homeowner need only demonstrate, in accordance with the applicable burden of proof, that the home does not meet the applicable standard, subject to the affirmative defenses set forth in C.C. 945.5. No further showing of causation or damages is required to meet the burden of proof, provided that the violation arises out of, pertains to, or is related to, the original construction. (C.C. 942.)

(3) Damages Recoverable. If a claim for damages is made under C.C. 895 et seq., the homeowner is only entitled to recovery for the following (C.C. 944):

- (a) The reasonable value of repairing violations of the standards.
- (b) The reasonable cost of repairing damages caused by the repair efforts.
- (c) The reasonable cost of repairing and rectifying damages resulting from the failure of the home to meet the standards.
- (d) The reasonable cost of removing and replacing improper repair by the builder.
- (e) Reasonable relocation and storage expenses.

(f) Lost business income if the home was used as a principal place of a business licensed to be operated from the home.

(g) Reasonable investigative costs for each established violation.

(h) All other costs or fees recoverable by contract or statute.

Damages awarded for these items in other causes of action, i.e., for breach of contract, personal injury, fraud, or violation of statute, must be reduced by the amounts recovered for them pursuant to C.C. 895 et seq. (C.C. 943(a).)

As to claims involving a detached single-family home, the homeowner's right to the reasonable value of repairing any nonconformity is limited to the repair costs, or the diminution in current value of the home caused by the nonconformity, whichever is less, subject to the personal use exception as developed under common law. (C.C. 943(b).)

(4) Affirmative Defenses. Under the principles of comparative fault pertaining to affirmative defenses, a builder, general contractor, subcontractor, material supplier, individual product manufacturer, or design professional may be excused, in whole or in part, from any obligation, damage, loss, or liability if able to demonstrate any of the following affirmative defenses:

(a) To the extent the obligation, damage, loss, or liability is caused by an unforeseen act of nature that caused the structure not to meet the standard. An "unforeseen act of nature" means a weather condition, earthquake, or manmade event such as war, terrorism, or vandalism, in excess of the design criteria expressed by the applicable building codes, regulations, and ordinances in effect at the time of original construction. (C.C. 945.5(a).)

(b) To the extent the obligation, damage, loss, or liability is caused by a homeowner's unreasonable failure to minimize or prevent those damages in a timely manner, including the failure of the homeowner to allow reasonable and timely access for inspections and repairs under this title. This includes the failure to give timely notice to the builder after discovery of a violation, but does not include damages due to the untimely or inadequate response of a builder to the homeowner's claim. (C.C. 945.5(b).)

(c) To the extent the obligation, damage, loss, or liability is caused by the homeowner or his or her agent, employee, subcontractor, independent contractor, or consultant by virtue of their failure to follow the builder's or manufacturer's recommendations, or commonly accepted homeowner maintenance obligations. In order to rely on this defense as it relates to a builder's recommended maintenance schedule, the builder must show that the homeowner had written notice of these schedules and recommendations and that the recommendations and schedules were reasonable at the time they were issued. (C.C. 945.5(c).)

(d) To the extent the obligation, damage, loss, or liability is caused by the homeowner or his or her agent's or an independent third party's alterations, ordinary wear and tear, misuse, abuse, or neglect, or by the structure's use for something other than its intended purpose. (C.C. 945.5(d).)

(e) To the extent that the time period for filing actions bars the claimed violation. (C.C. 945.5(e).)

(f) As to a particular violation for which the builder has obtained a valid release. (C.C. 945.5(f).)

(g) To the extent that the builder's repair was successful in correcting the particular violation of the applicable standard. (C.C. 945.5(g).)

As to causes of action to which C.C. 895 et seq. do not apply, all applicable affirmative defenses are preserved. (C.C. 945.5(h).)

6. Liability of Contractors, Suppliers, Product Manufacturers, and Design Professionals.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1167

[§ 1167] Liability of Contractors, Suppliers, Product Manufacturers, and Design Professionals.

(1) In General. Apart from the provisions relating to prelitigation requirements (see C.C. 910 et seq., supra, §1165), C.C. 895 et seq. apply to general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, individual product manufacturers, and design professionals to the extent that those persons caused, in whole or in part, a violation of a particular standard as the result of a negligent act or omission or a breach of contract. (C.C. 936.)

In addition to the affirmative defenses set forth in C.C. 945.5 (supra, §1166), a general contractor, subcontractor, material supplier, design professional, individual product manufacturer, or other entity may also offer common law and contractual defenses as applicable to a claimed violation of a standard. (C.C. 936.)

All actions by a claimant or builder to enforce an express contract against a general contractor, subcontractor, material supplier, individual product manufacturer, or design professional are preserved. Nothing in C.C. 895 et seq. modifies the law pertaining to joint and several liability for general contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, individual product manufacturer, and design professionals that contribute to any specific violation. (C.C. 936.)

(2) Strict Liability Cases. C.C. 936 does not apply to a general contractor, subcontractor, material supplier, individual product manufacturer, or design professional to which strict liability would apply. (C.C. 936; on strict liability respecting home construction, see infra, §1501 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

1. In General.

a. Privity Requirement Repudiated

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1168

[§ 1168] Privity Requirement Repudiated

The strict "privity doctrine" was established in the early case of Winterbottom v. Wright (1842) 152 Eng. Rep. R. 402: A repairer, seller, or manufacturer of defective goods was liable for injuries sustained by persons using them only on contract principles, and the liability did not extend beyond the immediate buyer--the person with whom direct dealings were had. Hence, while the buyer might sue the seller or repairer on warranty, he or she could not hold the manufacturer liable, there being no "privity of contract" between them.

In MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, infra, §1175, the doctrine was repudiated, and the duty of a manufacturer to exercise due care was extended to anyone to whom a risk of harm could be foreseen. (See exhaustive review of American decisions in 74 A.L.R.2d 1111 [privity of contract as essential]; and see Reynolds v. Natural Gas Equipment, Industrial Indem. Co., Intervener (1960) 184 C.A.2d 724, 736, 7 C.R. 879; 3, 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.5, 28.1; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §286 et seq.; 22 Cal. L. Rev. 359; 69 Harv. L. E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

1. In General.

b. Restatement and California Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1169

[§ 1169] Restatement and California Law.

(1) Duties of Suppliers. The Restatement recognizes a general liability on the part of anyone supplying chattels, whether as seller, lessor, bailor, repairer, donor, or lender, in three situations: (a) Where the chattel is known or should be known to be dangerous for the intended use. (Rest.2d, Torts §388.) (b) Where it is known or should be known to be incapable of safe use, or unlikely to be used safely. (Rest.2d, Torts §389.) (c) Where it is for the use of a person known to be incompetent by reason of youth, inexperience, or otherwise. (Rest.2d, Torts §390.) The liability is not only to those to whom the chattel is supplied (i.e., buyer, hirer, donee, etc.), but also to others whom the supplier should expect to use it with consent of the original party.

In the first Restatement, the liability was further extended to persons whom the supplier should have expected to be "in the vicinity" of the chattel's probable use. This qualification was changed in the Second Restatement to protect those persons whom the supplier should have expected "to be endangered" by the probable use. (Rest.2d, Torts §388.) These same rules apply to manufactures. (See supra, §442 et seq.)

(2) Person Selling Product as Own. If a dealer obtains a product from a manufacturer, and substitutes his or her label for that of the manufacturer (or otherwise represents that it is the dealer's own product), he or she induces others to rely on his or her care and skill rather than that of the true manufacturer. A number of courts, and Rest.2d, Torts §400, hold that under these circumstances, the dealer is subject to the same liability as though he or she were the manufacturer. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.28.)

(3) California Law. The doctrine of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, infra, §1175, as elaborated in the Restatement, is widely followed today, and the California cases frequently cite the Restatement sections as authoritative. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

1. In General.

c. Injury to Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1170

[§ 1170] Injury to Property.

"Will an action lie against the manufacturer of an article that, if negligently made, is likely to produce injury to person or property, for damages resulting from an accident caused by the negligence, where the damages are confined to destruction or harm to the article itself?" (Fentress v. Van Etta Motors (1958) 157 C.A.2d Supp. 863, 864, 323 P.2d 227.) The usual answer to this question had been no; i.e., the doctrine of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, infra, §1175, was generally confined to personal injuries, and recovery in tort was denied where there was only physical damage to the article itself or economic loss suffered through its use. (See 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 725.)

Fentress gave an affirmative answer. Plaintiff alleged that his Mercury automobile was wrecked as a result of defective brakes and wheel bearings. He sued defendant seller on warranty and defendant manufacturer in tort. Held, a cause of action was stated against the manufacturer. The court, influenced partly by Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, disapproved its own contrary decision in Judson-Pac. Murphy v. Thew Shovel Co. (1954) 127 C.A.2d Supp. 828, 275 P.2d 841, and accepted the theory of a New York case.

(a) "[I]t would be illogical to hold that a person driving a car with negligently fabricated brakes could recover from the manufacturer if he suffered personal injury, but if he had jumped from the vehicle and escaped personal injury, and the automobile was destroyed, he could not recover for the damage to the car." (157 C.A.2d Supp. 865.) "If his property happens to be the article negligently made, he is entitled to damages no less than is a total stranger to the property. In fact, his purchase, though not directly from the manufacturer, may have promoted the latter's business, and his position should not be inferior to that of others. Nothing is added to the required quantum of care, because the manufacturer must observe that duty in order to avoid responding to strangers, in any event, where the articles are of the nature described above. The amount of care itself required is not enlarged, but the owner of the article is regarded as not being excluded from the protection afforded to the entire public." (157 C.A.2d Supp. 867.)

(b) The rule does not make a manufacturer a virtual warrantor to ultimate users. (1) Negligence must be proved. (2) The article must be one that if negligently made is likely to produce harm (thus excluding articles that could become harmful only under remote possibilities or bizarre circumstances). (3) An accident must have resulted, i.e., a casualty involving some violence or collision with external objects, and not mere deterioration or ruin caused by an internal defect. (157 C.A.2d Supp. 868.) (See Pedroli v. Russell (1958) 157 C.A.2d 281, 283, 320 P.2d 873 [dictum that MacPherson doctrine applies where only foreseeable risk is of danger to tangible property]; Rest.2d, Torts §395, Comment n; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.9; 29 So. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

2. Knowledge of Danger and Duty To Warn.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1171

[§ 1171] In General.

Where the article is or should be known to be dangerous for the intended use, either inherently or because of defects, there is a duty to warn, i.e., to disclose the danger. (Rest.2d, Torts §§388, 394, 399, 400; see 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.7; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §§324 et seq.; 6 Proof of Facts.2d 175 [manufacturer's duty to warn ultimate user directly of product-connected danger]; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 227 [failure to warn consumer of allergenic nature of product].)

This rule applies not only to inherently dangerous things such as poisons or explosives mislabeled so as not to show their nature, but also to a nondangerous article that, by reason of a defect, is unsafe. (Lewis v. Terry (1896) 111 C. 39, 44, 43 P. 398 [folding bed]; Martin v. Food Machinery Corp. (1950) 100 C.A.2d 244, 250, 223 P.2d 293 [defective scaffold]; Monroe v. East Bay Rental Service (1952) 111 C.A.2d 574, 576, 245 P.2d 9 [small gasoline-driven plow ("Roto-Tiller") rented to plaintiff without instruction or warning of danger of getting out of control]; Ghera v. Ford Motor Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 639, 650, 55 C.R. 94; DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 336, 343, 195 C.R. 867, infra, §1454, citing the text; see 11 A.L.R.2d 1028 [explosives or other dangerous articles]; 76 A.L.R.2d 9 [manufacturer's or seller's duty to warn]; BAJI, No. 9.20; supra, §1169.)

In Reynolds v. Natural Gas Equipment, Industrial Indem. Co. (1960) 184 C.A.2d 724, 737, 7 C.R. 879, defendant A Co. manufactured a gas burner used to dry sand and gravel for black-top road paving mix, and defendant N Co. installed it in the place of business of plaintiff's employer. There was evidence that if operated with an air passage closed, it could explode, and that neither defendant had warned of this danger. Held, both were under a duty to warn and their failure constituted negligence. (184 C.A.2d 737.)

There is, however, no duty to warn of dangers normally involved in the use of a common article. (See Morris v. Toy Box (1962) 204 C.A.2d 468, 473, 22 C.R. 572 [bow and arrow sold to mother for 10-year-old son]; Bojorquez v. House of Toys (1976) 62 C.A.3d 930, 933, 133 C.R. 483 [slingshot sold to 10-year-old boy; to hold seller negligent in selling this toy to class for which it was intended would amount to judicial ban of sales].)

In Holmes v. J.C. Penney Co. (1982) 133 C.A.3d 216, 220, 183 C.R. 777, defendant retailer sold CO2 cartridges to defendant minor. The minor used them to power a pellet gun, shot at birds, and a stray pellet struck plaintiff. Held, no cause of action was stated. (a) These cartridges are sold for a variety of uses (in toys, air brushes, seltzer bottles, etc.), and while the Legislature has evidenced an intention to control the sale of pellet guns to minors, it has not evidenced an intention to control the sale of devices that power those guns. (133 C.A.3d 219.) (b) The cartridges do not by their appearance suggest the use to which they were put, and pose an even lesser potentiality for harm than toy slingshots. (133 C.A.3d 220.)

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

2. Knowledge of Danger and Duty To Warn.

b. Dangerous Chemicals.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1172

[§ 1172] Dangerous Chemicals.

In Tingey v. E.F. Houghton & Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 97, 179 P.2d 807, defendant manufacturer supplied to a tool company two chemical salts in separate drums, for heat-treating tool steel. While the salts were being used, an explosion occurred, causing death and injury to employees of the tool company. Liability of the manufacturer was upheld on two theories: (a) Evidence of discoloration of one of the salts, and testimony showing that the contents of the drum were untouched until used, justified the inference of contamination by improper preparation, and of defendant's negligence in failing to discover the condition. (30 C.2d 101.) (See infra, §1175.) (b) Evidence that the two salts were explosive when mixed justified an inference that the products were properly manufactured and then were mixed by the tool company's employees, but the manufacturer was nevertheless liable for negligent failure, by appropriate label or otherwise, to warn of the dangers of such a mixture. (30 C.2d 102.)

In Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 303, 239 P.2d 48, defendant S Co. produced sulphuric acid in drums and sold it to a retailer who sold it to U Co. The latter left it in the sun, where the gas eventually burst two drums and killed an invitee. On conflicting evidence, the jury found that there were no labels on the drums warning against heat and the need to vent regularly to expel gas. Held, defendant was liable for wrongful death. (108 C.A.2d 310.)

In Larramendy v. Myres (1954) 126 C.A.2d 636, 272 P.2d 824, a mail-order smoke-making device (igniting powder with an electric wire) was ordered for a dancing exhibition, and it caused an explosion and fire. Held, defendant was liable for negligent failure to warn of the danger from fire; the directions warned only to hold the device away from the user's face so that the puff would not strike him. (126 C.A.2d 641.)

In Crane v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1963) 218 C.A.2d 855, 32 C.R. 754, plaintiff, desiring to paint the interior of premises, bought a liquid surface preparer manufactured by defendant Universal according to a formula furnished by defendant Sears, with a label provided by defendant Sears. The label warned that the material was flammable and that its fumes were poisonous, but did not mention its combustibility (highly volatile and low flash point). While being used, it exploded, burning plaintiff severely. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. Sufficiency of the warning was a question of fact, and Universal was not exempt merely because it carried out the express directions of Sears; it had an independent duty to determine that adequate warning was given. (218 C.A.2d 859.) (See 28 Am.Jur. Trials 427

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

2. Knowledge of Danger and Duty To Warn.

c. State of Emergency.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1173

[§ 1173] State of Emergency.

In Macias v. California (1995) 10 C.4th 844, 42 C.R.2d 592, 897 P.2d 530, plaintiffs, a minor and his parents, brought suit against the manufacturers and distributors of malathion, which was used by the state to eradicate an infestation of the Mediterranean fruit fly (medfly) as part of a state of emergency declared under the Emergencies Services Act (Govt.C. 8550 et seq.). Plaintiff son was injured when he was sprayed with malathion. His injury was untreated until it was too late, and eventually resulted in legal blindness. Insecticides such as malathion are regulated by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (7 U.S.C., §136 et seq.). Because EPA-approved labeling did not include use of the insecticide against the medfly, the state obtained "a special local needs registration" that permitted it to undertake an "off label" use of malathion, on the condition that it inform the public of the "precautions listed on the product label." The EPA-approved labeling warned the public, if exposed, to flush with water and to see a doctor as soon as possible. However, the state instead proceeded pursuant to provisions of the Food and Agricultural Code enacted for this purpose. The public information protocol that was developed and disseminated, in addition to giving relevant information (when, where, and what was going to be sprayed), included the statement that malathion posed no health hazard. Plaintiffs argued that, if properly warned, their son would not have gone outside or, if exposed, would have washed with water and seen a doctor in time to prevent the legal blindness, instead of waiting until it was too late. Plaintiffs contended that defendants knew of the state's inadequate warning, and yet did nothing, allowing the state to not only fail to inform the public, but mislead the public into thinking that malathion was safe. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) The basic issue here is whether it was reasonable for defendants to rely on the state to give the proper medfly warning, or whether they should have intervened in the state's prosecution of this crisis by providing a more effective warning. The state was aware of the EPA-approved labels, because it had applied for "off label" use of malathion, a condition of which was that it inform the public of "the precautions listed on the product label." In addition, the state's decision to produce the allegedly inadequate warning was made unilaterally under the statutory authority provided by the Emergency Services Act. (10 C.4th 853.)

(b) In a state of emergency, the state may exercise its sovereignty to the fullest extent possible. The Emergency Services Act grants to the Governor broad powers to deal swiftly and effectively with an emergency, including the power to suspend regulations, commandeer persons and property, make expenditures, and coordinate the efforts of all agencies. (10 C.4th 855.)

(c) "To hold in these circumstances that a private citizen or corporation was compelled, at the risk of potentially substantial civil damages, to interfere with the state's comprehensive efforts to respond to the medfly emergency would be truly extraordinary. Plaintiffs ask this court, in effect, to recognize a private tort duty to judge independently the adequacy of the state's emergency warning protocol and, if found wanting, to undertake a separate public information campaign in direct conflict with that promulgated by the state. Alternatively, they would have us impose on defendants a duty to demand that the state modify its public notices to include the EPA-approved warnings and, should the state fail to comply, a further duty to halt future shipments of the pesticide." (10 C.4th 857.)

(d) "We have recognized that certain areas of law are peculiarly appropriate to legislative judgment, and have deferred in such cases to the policies implicit in statutes and administrative regulations in determining a tort duty of care. ... This is plainly such a case. Defining the locus of power and responsibility during 'conditions of disaster or ... extreme peril to life, property, and the resources of the state' is a task for which the Legislature is peculiarly well suited, and the state is the natural and logical repository of this power and responsibility. In the Emergency Services Act and related provisions of the Food and Agricultural Code, the Legislature has provided a clear framework of authority, so that, as we observed in a somewhat analogous situation, 'affected persons and entities, in both the private and public spheres, know exactly what is expected of them.' " (10 C.4th 858, quoting Ramirez v. Plough (1993) 6 C.4th 539, 25 C.R.2d 97, 863 P.2d 167, infra, §1472.)

(e) It is not suggested that the state may withhold critical information during an agricultural emergency. On the contrary, the Food and Agricultural Code clearly requires full disclosure. But it is the state's responsibility to design and implement an informational protocol, and that responsibility, as a practical or prudential matter, cannot be divided during an emergency. When deciding whether to expand a tort duty of care, courts must consider the potential social and economic consequences. The court has in the past considered the impact that expanded liability would have on activities that are important to society. A centralized and well-coordinated governmental response to a public emergency is essential to the security and welfare of the citizens of California. The imposition of a private tort duty to warn or otherwise intervene in these circumstances could severely compromise the state's efforts, and thereby place in jeopardy the lives, property, and resources of these citizens. (10 C.4th 859, citing Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 51 C.3d 120, 271 C.R. 146, 793 P.2d 479, supra, §460, Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Calif. (1993) 6 C.4th 124, 24 C.R.2d 587, 862 P.2d 148, supra, §1030, and Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, infra, §1670.) One justice dissented. (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1444 [Macias]; 31 U.S.F. L. Rev. 85 [same].)

Most of the cases are now decided on the theory of strict products liability (see infra, §§1449, 1450), but the alternative negligence theory is frequently urged, and is a necessary basis for recovery if the elements of strict liability are not shown. Thus, in Putensen v. Clay Adams (1970) 12 C.A.3d 1062, 1076, 91 C.R. 319, plaintiff entered a hospital for a heart catheterization. The doctor used a length of plastic tubing from a roll manufactured by defendant C. The tubing kinked after insertion and had to be removed by surgery. The action was brought against the doctor, hospital, and manufacturer, and plaintiff appealed from a judgment on nonsuit in favor of the manufacturer and judgment on verdicts in favor of the doctor and hospital. Held, nonsuit judgment reversed.

(a) There was no basis for strict liability, for the element of reaching the consumer without a substantial change in condition was not established. (12 C.A.3d 1072; infra, §1530.)

(b) The following evidence would, however, support a verdict for negligence, either as to design or for the failure to give warning of a dangerous condition: (1) The tubing kinked easily when heated or soaked, and once kinked, did not recover. (2) Defendant C knew that the tubing was being used in heart catheterization; the jury could infer that it was aware of methods used in adapting it for this use and did not take the necessary precautions. (3) Defendant C conducted no tests of the tubing; the jury could have found that reasonable inspection would have disclosed the propensity to kink. (12 C.A.3d 1078.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

2. Knowledge of Danger and Duty To Warn.

e. (New) Sophisticated User Defense.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1174A

[§ 1174A] (New) Sophisticated User Defense.

In Johnson v. American Standard (2008) 43 C.4th 56, 74 C.R.3d 108, 179 P.3d 905, plaintiff, a trained and certified heating, ventilation, and air conditioning (HVAC) technician, brought a products liability action against defendant, an air conditioning equipment manufacturer, for negligence and strict liability. Plaintiff alleged that his work on equipment manufactured by defendant involved a refrigerant, R-22, that, when exposed to the heat generated by welding, decomposed into phosgene gas, causing him to develop pulmonary fibrosis. Plaintiff's theory was that defendant, knowing that servicing its equipment would create a known harmful gas, failed to provide plaintiff with an adequate warning. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, claiming that it had no duty to warn about the risks of R-22 exposure because it could assume that the group of trained professionals to which plaintiff belonged was aware of those risks. The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the sophisticated user defense, which had been adopted by the federal courts, applied in California and that plaintiff was a sophisticated user. Held, affirmed.

(a) Nature and development of sophisticated user defense.

(1) Generally speaking, manufacturers have a duty to warn consumers about the hazards inherent in their products. (43 C.4th 64, citing Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 C.3d 987, 281 C.R.2d 528, 810 P.2d 549, text, §1477.) However, where a sophisticated user is involved, the sophisticated user defense exempts manufacturers from their typical obligation to provide product users with warnings about potential hazards and acts as an affirmative defense that negates the manufacturer's duty to warn. The rationale supporting the defense is that the failure to provide warnings about risks already known to a sophisticated user usually is not a proximate cause of harm resulting from those risks, because the user's knowledge of the dangers is equivalent to prior notice. (43 C.4th 64.)

(2) Rest. 2d, Torts §388, provides that a supplier of goods is liable for physical harm that the goods cause if (a) the supplier knows or should know that the items are likely to be dangerous, (b) it fails to reasonably warn of the danger, and (c) it "has no reason to believe that those for whose use the chattel is supplied will realize its dangerous condition." Courts have interpreted the quoted language to mean that, if the manufacturer reasonably believes that the user knows or should know about a product's risk, the manufacturer need not warn that user of that risk. Federal decisions that have adopted the sophisticated user defense have cited Rest. 2d, Torts §388, as a basis for doing so. While California has not expressly adopted the sophisticated user defense, it adopted Rest. 2d, Torts §388, in Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C.3d 51, 107 C.R. 45, 507 P.2d 653, text, §1177. (43 C.4th 66.)

(3) Bojorquez v. House of Toys (1976) 62 C.A.3d 930, 133 C.R. 483, recognizes the obvious danger rule, which provides that there is no need to warn of known risks under either a negligence or strict liability theory. The sophisticated user defense is a natural outgrowth of the obvious danger rule, because the sophisticated user defense recognizes that, for those who know or should know about a product's potential dangers, i.e., sophisticated users, the dangers are obvious. "Just as a manufacturer need not warn ordinary consumers about generally known dangers, a manufacturer need not warn members of a trade or profession ... about dangers generally known to that trade or profession." (43 C.4th 67.)

(4) In Fierro v. International Harvester Co. (1982) 127 C.A.3d 862, 179 C.R. 923, the court, in dictum, addressed the sophisticated user defense in the strict liability context. The Court of Appeal, after affirming the trial court's judgment on the ground that the plaintiff had not properly raised at trial the issue of failure to warn, impliedly adopted the sophisticated user defense in rationalizing its affirmance of that judgment. Numerous federal courts have taken notice of Fierro and have predicted that the sophisticated user defense would eventually be adopted in California. (43 C.4th 69, disapproving the reasoning in Selma Pressure Treating Co. v. Osmose Wood Preserving Co. of America (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1601, 271 C.R. 596, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §155, to the extent that it might lead to the conclusion that the sophisticated user defense should not be adopted.)

(b) Public policy. Requiring manufacturers to warn their users in all instances would place an onerous burden on them and would invite mass consumer disregard and ultimate contempt for the warning process. The sophisticated user defense fits into this understanding of the role of warnings. It helps ensure that warnings will be heeded. In addition, although manufacturers are responsible for products that contain dangers of which the public is unaware, they are not insurers, even under strict liability, for the mistakes or carelessness of consumers who should know of the dangers involved. "Accordingly, we adopt the defense in California." (43 C.4th 70.)

(c) Operation of sophisticated user defense in California.

(1) A manufacturer is not liable to a sophisticated user of its product for failure to warn of a danger if the sophisticated user knew or should have known of the danger. "[I]ndividuals who represent that they are trained or are members of a sophisticated group of users are saying to the world that they possess the level of knowledge and skill associated with that class," and, if they do not actually possess that knowledge and skill, that fact should not give rise to liability on the part of the manufacturer. "Under the 'should have known' standard there will be some users who are actually unaware of the dangers. However, the same could be said of the currently accepted obvious danger rule," where the courts employ an objective test and do not inquire into the user's subjective knowledge. Thus, under the sophisticated user defense, even if a user is truly unaware of a product's hazards, that fact is irrelevant if the danger is objectively obvious. (43 C.4th 71.)

(2) Noting that some federal decisions recognize the sophisticated user defense in negligence actions but reject it in strict products liability actions, plaintiff contended that the "should have known" requirement of the sophisticated user defense conflicts with principles of strict liability and that the defense should thus be limited to cases where the plaintiff has actual knowledge. This contention is without merit. In the context of the sophisticated user defense, because intended users are deemed to know of the risks, manufacturers have no obligation to warn. The focus of the defense, therefore, is whether the danger in question is so generally known within the trade or profession that a manufacturer should not have been expected to provide a warning specific to the group to which plaintiff belonged. Consequently, there is no reason why the sophisticated user defense should not be as available against strict liability causes of action as it is for negligence causes of action. In both instances, the sophisticated user's knowledge eliminates the manufacturer's need for a warning. "In addition, even if the 'should have known' standard is considered more closely aligned with a negligence concept, we have repeatedly held that strict liability products liability law in California may incorporate negligence concepts without undermining the principles fundamental to a strict liability claim." The sophisticated user defense is thus applicable to both negligence and strict liability causes of action. (43 C.4th 71, 73.)

(3) The sophisticated user's knowledge of the risk is measured from the time of the plaintiff's injury, rather than from the date the product was manufactured. The timeline focuses on the general population of sophisticated users, rather than on the plaintiff's actual knowledge, and conforms to the defense's purpose to eliminate any duty to warn when the expected user population is generally aware of the risk at issue. (43 C.4th 73.)

(d) Plaintiff is sophisticated user. Plaintiff completed a year-long course on HVAC systems at a technical institute. He received additional training and certifications, including an Environmental Protection Agency universal certification allowing those certified to work on and purchase refrigerants for large commercial air conditioning systems. The dangers and risks associated with R-22, including decomposition and the release of toxic gases when in contact with heat, were noted on the Material Safety Data Sheet for R-22, which was given to plaintiff every time he purchased that refrigerant. In addition, defendant's expert testified that, throughout his 28 years as an HVAC technician, it was widely known among HVAC technicians that R-22, when heated, could decompose into toxic byproducts, including phosgene. From this evidence, it is clear that plaintiff knew or should have known of the dangers of R-22 heat exposure and that he was thus a sophisticated user. Plaintiff's claims that he had read the data sheets for R-22 but did not understand that he should avoid heating R-22 and that he had never heard of phosgene gas were irrelevant under the circumstances. (43 C.4th 74.) (See BAJI, No. 9.06 [Sophisticated User Defense]; BAJI, No. 9.07 [Obvious Danger Defense]; CACI, No. 1244 [Affirmative Defense--Sophisticated User].)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

3. Duty To Inspect.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1175

[§ 1175] Duty To Inspect.

(1) In General. Where the article is dangerous if not carefully made, liability is imposed for negligence in manufacturing or assembling. This was the holding of the leading case of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050. Defendant manufactured and assembled automobiles, using wheels furnished by another company; plaintiff bought a car from a retail dealer; injuries were sustained by reason of a defective wheel; and inspection by defendant would have revealed the defect. Held, defendant was liable.

A number of California cases are in accord. (See Dahms v. General Elevator Co. (1932) 214 C. 733, 738, 7 P.2d 1013 [repairer]; Nebelung v. Norman (1939) 14 C.2d 647, 654, 96 P.2d 327 [manufacturer; retreaded auto tire with "mold-pinch"]; McNeal v. Greenberg (1953) 40 C.2d 740, 742, 255 P.2d 810 [lessor of tractor with defective brakes]; Jaehne v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1951) 105 C.A.2d 683, 688, 234 P.2d 165 [supplier of hotel switchboard with defective cord]; Phillips v. Ogle Aluminum Furniture (1951) 106 C.A.2d 650, 655, 235 P.2d 857 [seller of aluminum tubular kitchen chair]; see Rest.2d, Torts §395; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.11; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §305 et seq.; 9 A.L.R.2d 1337, 1350 [manufacturer of automobile]; 3 A.L.R.3d 1016 [manufacturer's responsibility for defective component supplied by another and incorporated in product]; 6 A.L.R.3d 91 [manufacturer's duty to test or inspect]; BAJI, No. 9.24.)

In Post v. Alameda Amusement Co. (1953) 117 C.A.2d 588, 256 P.2d 580, the court made clear the difference between the duty owed by the manufacturer and that owed by a retailer or other immediate supplier. Defendant Heater Company manufactured portable electric heaters that defendant Theatre Company used in its drive-in theatres, advertising this fact. Plaintiff was shocked and burned by a heater with a defective switch. Held, although the manufacturer was clearly liable, the Theatre Company (also a supplier) was not; the defective condition of the switch could not be discovered except by opening the heater, and only the manufacturer had the special tools necessary to do this. (117 C.A.2d 592.)

In Saporito v. Purex Corp. (1953) 40 C.2d 608, 255 P.2d 7, a bottle of bleaching solution exploded when plaintiff tried to open it. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed on evidence that the container was a weak glass bottle only visually inspected and not tested for strength or defects; and there was no sufficient testing of the venting device necessary for gas accumulation. "A serious risk of harm to consumers is created when a product which might explode is offered to the public as a safe household commodity. Defendant was under a duty to employ techniques and practices in the preparation and bottling which were reasonably designed to prevent dangerously defective bottles of the solution from reaching the market." (40 C.2d 611.) (On application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to bursting bottles, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §135.)

(2) What Constitutes Reasonable Care. The difficult problem presented by the cases is whether the affirmative duty of care has been fulfilled, which usually resolves itself into the question whether there was a sufficient inspection for the purpose of discovering defects. Where the device or other product is capable of doing great harm, e.g., explosives, electrical equipment for high voltage current, and internal combustion engines, reasonable care requires extra precautions. But where the product is not of a dangerous type, a lesser amount of care is deemed sufficient; i.e., the kind of inspection required varies with the nature of the thing to be inspected. (See Kalash v. Los Angeles Ladder Co. (1934) 1 C.2d 229, 233, 34 P.2d 481; Edison v. Lewis Mfg. Co. (1959) 168 C.A.2d 429, 442, 336 P.2d 286; Rest.2d, Torts §395; Comment e; cf. Sheward v. Virtue (1942) 20 C.2d 410, 413, 126 P.2d 345 [collapse of beauty parlor chair leg; custom of other manufacturers to make no special examination for fractures in castings was not a defense].)

In O'Rourke v. Day & Night Water Heater Co. (1939) 31 C.A.2d 364, 88 P.2d 191, defendant manufacturer sold a water heater with a defective "safety pilot," the latter having been furnished in quantity lots and in sealed units by another company that had regularly inspected and tested them. Held, it was sufficient for defendant to make an external inspection of the safety pilot and to test its operation; it was not necessary to take it apart and test each part. (31 C.A.2d 370.)

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods. 5. Drugs and Cosmetics.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1177

[§ 1177] Drugs and Cosmetics.

The rule on medicine, drugs, soap, and cosmetics is the same as that on food and beverages (supra, §1176). (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §7 [liability of commercial seller or distributor for harm caused by defective prescription drugs and medical devices]; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 543 [tetracycline as cause of tooth damage]; 7 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [injuries from drugs]; 56 *Cal. In Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 C.A.2d 378, 395, 38 C.R. 183, plaintiff patient sued defendant doctor and defendant manufacturer for damages for illness (aplastic anemia) resulting from the use of the drug chloromycetin. There was no showing of negligence in manufacture; the theory of the action was failure to warn of potential dangers in the use of the drug. The manufacturer had a strong defense: This was a prescription-dispensed drug, and adequate warnings had been given to doctors, on labels and packages, in advertising and in letters. This would ordinarily have discharged its duty; or, in terms of causation, the doctor's misuse of the drug in the face of the warnings would have been a superseding cause. (226 C.A.2d 395.) Nevertheless, the following evidence was held sufficient to establish the manufacturer's liability: Despite the warnings, it vigorously pushed sales through "detail men" who minimized the dangers and urged a wider use than experts thought safe; thus, it "watered down its regulations-required warnings." (226 C.A.2d 402.) "[I]f the overpromotion can reasonably be said to have induced the doctor to disregard the warnings previously given, the warning given is thereby withdrawn or cancelled and if, furthermore, the jury could have found that the doctor here actually prescribed the drug to cure an infection for which the company's advertising or its detail men had actually recommended its use, then the pharmaceutical company's negligence remains as an inducing cause coinciding with the negligence of the doctor to produce the result." (226 C.A.2d 400.) (See Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 C.3d 51, 65, 107 C.R. 45, 507 P.2d 653 [death from use of chloromycetin; following Love and affirming judgment for plaintiff].)

The plaintiff made a much stronger case in Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 702, 60 C.R. 398. Defendant marketed Mer/29 for treatment of arteriosclerosis. The drug had serious toxic effects, particularly in causing cataracts of the eye. Laboratory testing by defendant disclosed bad effects on animals, and doctors using the drug in the short period it was on the market began to report dangers. Nevertheless, defendant engaged in the greatest promotional effort ever made by it, falsified records, made misrepresentations in advertising, and withheld information from the FDA. Plaintiff, who took the drug as prescribed by his physician, developed cataracts and a serious emotional condition from fear of other effects. He sued on theories of negligence and breach of express and implied warranties. The jury returned a general verdict for $ 175,000 and $ 500,000 punitive damages. Remission of $ 250,000 of punitive damages was accepted, and judgment for plaintiff was affirmed. (See 13 A.L.R.4th 52 [punitive damages in products liability case].)

The duty to warn is discharged by warning of hazards to doctors who may in the exercise of their medical judgments decide to use the drug. This is explained in Fogo v. Cutter Laboratories (1977) 68 C.A.3d 744, 137 C.R. 417, quoting from a law review article: "(1) The doctor is intended to be an intervening party in the full sense of the word. Medical ethics as well as medical practice dictate independent judgment, unaffected by the manufacturer's control, on the part of the doctor. (2) Were the patient to be given the complete and highly technical information on the adverse possibility associated with the use of the drug, he would have no way to evaluate it, and in his limited understanding he might actually object to the use of the drug, thereby jeopardizing his life. (3) It would be virtually impossible for a manufacturer to comply with the duty of direct warning, as there is no sure way to reach the patient." (68 CA.3d 754.)

E. Manufacturers and Other Suppliers of Goods.

6. Secondhand Equipment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1178

[§ 1178] Secondhand Equipment.

The seller of defective secondhand equipment does not have quite the same liability to the immediate buyer on warranties as does the seller of new equipment. (See 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §73.) But the seller's tort liability to the buyer and others under the doctrine of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, supra, §1168, is much the same as that of the seller or supplier of new equipment.

In Benton v. Sloss (1952) 38 C.2d 399, 240 P.2d 575, J, a 19-year-old minor without a driver's license, bought a used car from defendant dealer. J's father refused to sign the contract (so defendant remained the owner). J took the minor plaintiffs for a ride, and in a reckless race with another driver, the defective brakes failed and plaintiffs were injured in a collision with a telephone pole. Held, judgment against defendant dealer affirmed.

(a) His duty "extended not only to the prospective buyer, but to third persons who could reasonably be expected to be in the vicinity of the probable use of the automobile." The injury to J's guests was therefore within the limits of the risk created by defendant's negligence. (38 C.2d 406.) Although a used car dealer need not disassemble the car and examine the parts, the dealer must make a reasonable inspection for defects that would make the car a menace on the highways; in particular, this duty is breached where the dealer fails (as here) to inspect the brakes, and a reasonable inspection would have disclosed the defects. (38 C.2d 404.)

(b) Defendant challenged the result as anomalous in that if he had driven the car as owner, the former guest law (infra, §1280) would have protected him from liability for this ordinary negligence. However, his liability was not based on responsibility for the driver's conduct, but on his liability to anyone injured because of his failure to maintain the machine in proper mechanical condition. (38 C.2d 403.) (See 31 Proof of Facts 2d 639 [dealer's liability for defective used car]; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 290; cf. Eason v. Kelly Pipe Co. (1936) 16 C.A.2d 88, 93, 60 P.2d 488 [defendant supplier of defective pipe was not liable because supplier was not informed of intended use for installation of light pole].)

The same theory of liability applies to the lessor or bailor of defective secondhand equipment: He or she must from time to time make such inspections as a reasonably careful person would make, for the lessee or bailee of a chattel intended for immediate use cannot be expected to make more than a cursory inspection. (See McNeal v. Greenberg (1953) 40 C.2d 740, 742, 255 P.2d 810 [tractor (skip loader) with defective brakes]; Jones v. Johnston Testers (1955)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

F. Negligent Performance of Ordinary Contract.

1. Recovery Allowed.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1179

[§ 1179] Recovery Allowed.

California formerly followed the traditional view that no tort cause of action arises from negligent breach of a contractual duty in the absence of privity of contract between the plaintiff and defendant. (See Buckley v. Gray (1895) 110 C. 339, 342, 42 P. 900; Bilich v. Barnett (1951) 103 C.A.2d Supp. 921, 924, 229 P.2d 492; Mickel v. Murphy (1957) 147 C.A.2d 718, 721, 305 P.2d 993; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 725.)

In Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, the Supreme Court took a revolutionary step forward, overruling Buckley and Mickel. Defendant notary public had prepared the will of plaintiff's brother, leaving the entire estate to plaintiff. By reason of defendant's negligence, the will was improperly attested, and plaintiff received by intestate succession only one-eighth of the estate. Held, defendant was liable for the difference between the amount plaintiff would have received and the amount distributed.

(a) There is little question as to the breach of duty--the negligent act; defendant was not qualified to draw a will and was illegally practicing law. This conduct "should be discouraged and not protected by immunity from civil liability, as would be the case if plaintiff, the only person who suffered a loss, were denied a right of action." (49 C.2d 651.)

(b) The difficulty is in recognizing a duty to plaintiff. The modern development of tort liability for negligent performance of a contract by manufacturers and suppliers, to a person not in privity, for injury to person or tangible property (see supra, §1168 et seq.), also justified repudiation of the privity doctrine as to intangible interests. (49 C.2d 650.)

(c) There is not unlimited liability in favor of any person who might have been benefited by a contract negligently performed. Here, benefit to the plaintiff was the "end and aim" of the transaction, and the particular loss was clearly foreseeable; but this will not always be true. "The determination whether in a specific case the defendant will be held liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy and involves the balancing of various factors, among which are the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to him, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm." (49 C.2d 650.)

Many later cases apply the rule and test. (See J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 804, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, supra, §751; Adams v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1975) 50 C.A.3d 37, 123 C.R. 216, supra, §751; Huber, Hunt & Nichols v. Moore (1977) 67 C.A.3d 278, 301, 136 C.R. 603; Jackson v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. (1979) 93 C.A.3d 838, 841, 846, 155 C.R. 905; Ales-Peratis Foods Int. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 277, 285, 209 C.R. 917, supra, §752; North Amer. Chemical Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 764, 783, 69 C.R.2d 466; The Ratcliff Architects v. Vanir Const. Management (2001) 88 C.A.4th 595, 604, 106 C.R.2d 1; Ochs v. PacifiCare of Calif. (2004) 115 C.A.4th 782, 788, 9 C.R.3d 734 [when health care provider delegated its payment responsibilities to contracting medical provider that became insolvent, it could be liable for emergency services if it acted negligently in delegating those responsibilities]; C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §11.99 et seq.; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 851; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 380; 9 Hastings L. J. 330; 33 San Diego L. Rev. 137; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 681.)

The Biakanja rule and test are equally applicable to an action by the intended beneficiary of a will against an attorney draftsman. (Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 C.2d 583, 588, 15 C.R. 821, 364 P.2d 685, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §322; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 62; 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 580; 65 A.L.R.2d 1363 [liability of one drawing an invalid will].)

Biakanja and Lucas upheld recovery either in contract (on third-party beneficiary principles, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §688) or in tort. In Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 C.2d 223, 74 C.R. 225, 449 P.2d 161, the court declared that the contract theory "is conceptually superfluous," for the beneficiary's right arises from a breach of duty growing out of the relationship. The attorney "realistically and in fact assumes a relationship not only with the client but also with the client's intended beneficiaries." (70 C.2d 228.) And the beneficiary's interests are actually greater. Failure of the testamentary scheme deprives him or her of a bequest, while the estate is injured only to the extent of fees paid. "We impose this duty because of the relationship between the attorney and the intended beneficiary; public policy requires that the attorney exercise his position of trust and superior knowledge responsibly so as not to affect adversely persons whose rights and interests are certain and foreseeable." (70 C.2d 229.)

The Biakanja criteria were applied to impose liability on a lender for defective homes built by the borrower. (See Connor v. Great Western Savings & Loan Assn. (1968) 69 C.2d 850, 865, 73 C.R. 369, 447 P.2d 609, infra, §1279.) But the decision was later nullified by statute. (See infra, §1279.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. NEGLIGENCE: AFFIRMATIVE DUTIES ARISING FROM SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

F. Negligent Performance of Ordinary Contract.

2. Recovery Denied.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1180

[§ 1180] Recovery Denied.

In Gill v. Mission Savings & Loan Assn. (1965) 236 C.A.2d 753, 46 C.R. 456, plaintiffs alleged that the owners of land obtained a $ 20,000 construction loan from defendant, secured by a first deed of trust; the owners also borrowed money from plaintiffs, secured by subordinated (second) deeds of trust; the owners agreed that the money lent by defendant would be used solely for construction; defendant, with knowledge of this agreement, so negligently supervised disbursement of the money that construction was not completed, the property was not sold, plaintiffs' notes became delinquent, and they were forced to make certain expenditures. Held, no cause of action was stated. Defendant did not participate in the transaction between plaintiffs and the owners, and did not undertake to manage distribution of the loan funds. Moreover, plaintiffs could have protected themselves by making this restriction on use of the money a part of their subordination agreement. (236 C.A.2d 757.) (See Norton v. Hines (1975) 49 C.A.3d 917, 921, 123 C.R. 237, supra, §510; Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 484, 489, 125 C.R. 549 [Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, supra, §1179, factors applied and found inapplicable].)

In Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 C.3d 335, 134 C.R. 375, 556 P.2d 737, plaintiffs sued defendant attorney for fraud. The complaint alleged that defendant negligently advised his clients, corporate officers, that certain corporate shares could be issued to them as stock dividends and sold to others without SEC registration; that plaintiffs were prospective buyers, and defendant failed to disclose to plaintiffs' attorney material facts affecting the transaction; that plaintiffs bought the shares, the SEC suspended their exemption, and the stock became valueless. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Defendant could not be held liable to plaintiffs for negligent advice to his own clients unless he owed a duty to plaintiffs. The attorney's liability to his client's intended beneficiary (see, supra, §1179) is distinguishable; plaintiffs were not intended beneficiaries of defendant's clients, but bargained with them at arm's length. And to make an attorney liable for negligent confidential advice not only to the client but to the other parties to the transaction "would inject undesirable self-protective reservations into the attorney's counseling role," thereby preventing the attorney from devoting his or her entire energies to the client's interests. (18 C.3d 344.) Two justices dissented. (18 C.3d 354.) (See Parnell v. Smart (1977) 66 C.A.3d 833, 838, 136 C.R. 246 [following reasoning in Goodman and holding that attorney for adverse party (defendant) owes no duty to plaintiff].)

In Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 C.A.3d 166, 156 C.R. 745, the adverse party was held entitled to sue the attorney for malicious prosecution (see supra, §510), but the court, following Norton, Goodman, and cases from other jurisdictions, rejected the theory that the attorney could be sued for negligence in investigation of the facts before filing a complaint. (95 C.A.3d 179 et seq.) "[I]f an attorney owes no duty of care to foreseeable third parties with whom his client might deal in a non-litigated, arm's length transaction, by no logical stretch of the imagination could such a duty arise in favor of adverse third parties in litigation." (95 C.A.3d 182.) "[E]xcept in those isolated instances where the basic intent and purpose of the attorney's service is to create rights for specific third parties as in a will or trust, or to induce specific action on the part of third parties, ... his liability should be limited strictly to his client." (95 C.A.3d 182, footnote 4.)

There are numerous other cases applying the Biakanja criteria, but denying recovery for negligent performance of a contract. (See Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 58, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513 [title insurer's refusal to issue insurance to prospective purchasers of tax-defaulted properties did not state cause of action in prospective sellers of property acquired at tax sale]; Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1439, 1446, 37 C.R.2d 790; Diediker v. Peelle Financial Corp. (1997) 60 C.A.4th 288, 296, 70 C.R.2d 442 [trustee under deed of trust owed no duty to future purchasers and their title insurers to locate IRS liens of record and give notice to IRS before conducting foreclosure sale]; Adelman v. Associated Int. Ins. Co. (2001) 90 C.A.4th 352, 359, 108 C.R.2d 788 [homeowners association insurer, which allegedly failed to timely perform its indemnity obligations, was not liable to condominium unit owners for forcing them to delay repairing their own units]; Desert Healthcare Dist. v. PacifiCare FHP (2001) 94 C.A.4th 781, 791, 114 C.R.2d 623 [hospital provided services to health care plan's subscribers through intermediary that went bankrupt and could not make payments to hospital; under Biakanja, health care plan, in its contract with intermediary, had no duty to ensure intermediary's financial stability].)

Cases applying Biakanja but denying recovery: See Weseloh Family Ltd. Partnership v. K.L. Wessel Const. Co. (2004) 125 C.A.4th 152, 164, 22 C.R.3d 660 [engineers who designed retaining walls under contract with subcontractor owed no duty of care to property owners or general contractor, in absence of contractual privity, so as to establish liability for failure of walls]; *Richard B. CHAPTER IX - Torts

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

1. Nature of Doctrine.

a. Development.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1181

[§ 1181] Development.

The breach of duty--the negligent act or omission--must be the "proximate cause" (termed "legal cause" in the Torts Restatement) of the plaintiff's injury. (See Rest.2d, Torts §430; infra, §1182.)

The following are illustrations of early attempts by California courts to lay down rules of proximate cause: "Consequences which follow from the original wrong in unbroken sequence, without an intervening sufficient independent cause, are natural and proximate, and for these the original wrongdoer is responsible." (Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1910) 158 C. 499, 503, 111 P. 534.) "A person guilty of negligence should be held responsible for all the consequences which a prudent and experienced man, fully acquainted with all the circumstances which in fact existed (whether they could have been ascertained by reasonable diligence or not) would, at the time of the negligent act, have thought reasonably possible to follow, if they had occurred to his mind." (Williams v. San Francisco Northwestern Ry. Co. (1907) 6 C.A. 715, 724, 93 P. 122.) "The primary cause may be the proximate cause ... though it may operate through successive instruments. ... The question always is: Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and injury, a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury?" (Catlin v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1916) 31 C.A. 597, 606, 161 P. 29.) (See Hale v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1919) 42 C.A. 55, 58, 183 P. 280; Newman v. Steuernagel (1933) 132 C.A. 417, 420, 22 P.2d 780; Inai v. Ede (1941) 42 C.A.2d 521, 109 P.2d 400; Weck v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1947) 80 C.A.2d 182, 189, 181 P.2d 935; Werkman v. Howard Zink Corp. (1950) 97 C.A.2d 418, 424, 218 P.2d 43; Kettman v. Levine (1953) 115 C.A.2d 844, 847, 253 P.2d 102; Maupin v. Widling (1987) 192 C.A.3d 568, 573, 237 C.R. 521 [modern terminology].)

Despite the foregoing generalizations, proximate cause remains an elusive concept, and both its rules and their application were the subject of continual debate by courts and writers. (For general discussions, see 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.4; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §409 et seq.; 15 Cal. L. Rev. 1; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 229, 396; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 369; 52 Cal. L. Rev. 459, 764 [analytical study]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 1691; 14 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1, 115, 416; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 187, 304, 427; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1, 61, 275; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 99; 50 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 293.)

However, the Torts Restatement analysis and progressive approach (see infra, §§1182, 1183) has had a strong liberalizing influence on the California law. (See, e.g., Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 213, 218, 157 P.2d 372, infra, §1207; Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 C.2d 772, 776, 285 P.2d 269, supra, §842.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Elusive concept: See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §20.4.

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

1. Nature of Doctrine.

b. Restatement 2d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1182

[§ 1182] Restatement 2d.

Chapter 16 of Rest.2d, Torts, entitled "The Causal Relation Necessary to Responsibility for Negligence," is divided into two topics: Topic 1 deals with causal relation necessary to the existence of liability, and Topic 2 deals with causal relation affecting the extent of liability (see infra, §§1553, 1554).

"Legal cause" is defined in Rest.2d, Torts §431: "The actor's negligent conduct is a legal cause of harm to another if (a) his conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm, and (b) there is no rule of law relieving the actor from liability because of the manner in which his negligence has resulted in the harm."

Comment a explains: "The word 'substantial' is used to denote the fact that the defendant's conduct has such an effect in producing the harm as to lead reasonable men to regard it as a cause, using that word in the popular sense, in which there always lurks the idea of responsibility, rather than in the so-called 'philosophic sense,' which includes every one of the great number of events without which any happening would not have occurred."

Comment b adds: "In many cases the question before the court is whether the actor's negligence was in fact the cause of the other's harm--that is, whether it had any effect in producing it--or whether it was the result of some other cause, the testimony making it clear that it must be one or the other, and that the harm is not due to the combined effects of both. In such a case, the question, whether the defendant's negligence has a substantial as distinguished from a merely negligible effect in bringing about the plaintiff's harm, does not arise if the testimony clearly proves that the harm is from a cause other than the actor's negligence. Indeed, the testimony often makes it clear that, if the defendant's conduct had any effect, the effect was substantial. It is only where the evidence permits a reasonable finding that the defendant's conduct had some effect that the question whether the effect was substantial rather than negligible becomes important." (See Wilson v. Blue Cross of Southern Calif. (1990) 222 C.A.3d 660, 673, 271 C.R. 876 [Rest.2d, Torts §431 "correctly states California law as to the issue of causation in tort cases"].)

The considerations important in determining whether negligent conduct is a substantial factor are set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §433: "(a) the number of other factors which contribute in producing the harm and the extent of the effect which they have in producing it; (b) whether the actor's conduct has created a force or series of forces which are in continuous and active operation up to the time of the harm, or has created a situation harmless unless acted upon by other forces for which the actor is not responsible; (c) lapse of time."

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

1. Nature of Doctrine.

c. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1183

[§ 1183] Restatement 3d.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26 addresses the apportionment of liability when damages can be divided by causation.

When damages for an injury can be divided by causation, the fact-finder "first divides them into their indivisible component parts and separately apportions liability for each indivisible component part" under the general Restatement rules for apportioning liability. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26(a); on Restatement rules for apportioning liability generally, see supra, §§51, 75, 104, 113,), and infra, §§1297, 1328, 1341, 1332.) In other words, a two-step apportionment is undertaken. "[D]ivisible damages are first divided by causation into indivisible parts, and then each indivisible part is apportioned by responsibility." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26, Comment a.)

Damages can be divided by causation when the evidence provides a reasonable basis for the fact-finder to determine both (a) that any legally culpable conduct of a party or other relevant person to whom the fact-finder assigns a percentage of responsibility was a legal cause of less than the entire damages for which the plaintiff seeks recovery, and (b) the amount of damages separately caused by that conduct. Otherwise, the damages are indivisible, and liability respecting the entire injury is apportioned under the general Restatement rules for apportioning liability. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26(b).)

The burden of proving the divisibility of the damages and the magnitude of the divisible parts rests on the party who seeks division. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26, Comment h.)

Should the court determine that the two-step process of apportionment is administratively unsuitable because the case is too complex for a jury to find the requisite facts, it may decide to use a one-step process in which the fact-finder determines the total recoverable damages and then assigns percentages of responsibility to each person who caused some of the damages. When assigning percentages of responsibility, the fact-finder takes into account both evidence relevant to comparative responsibility and evidence relevant to causation. However, the two-step process "is preferable." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §26, Comment j.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
A. In General.
2. Question of Fact or Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1184

[§ 1184] Question of Fact or Law.

Proximate cause, like negligence (supra, §866) is generally held to be a question of fact for the jury. (Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1942) 20 C.2d 141, 144, 124 P.2d 51; Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City School Dist. (1978) 22 C.3d 508, 520, 150 C.R. 1, 585 P.2d 851, supra, §327, citing the text; Bigbee v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1983) 34 C.3d 49, 56, 192 C.R. 857, 665 P.2d 947, infra, §1206; Stockwell v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University (1944) 64 C.A.2d 197, 204, 148 P.2d 405; Jackson v. Utica Light & Power Co. (1944) 64 C.A.2d 885, 894, 149 P.2d 748; Been v. The Lummus Co. (1946) 76 C.A.2d 288, 292, 173 P.2d 34; Jones v. South San Francisco (1950) 96 C.A.2d 427, 435, 216 P.2d 25; Hill v. Matthews Paint Co. (1957) 149 C.A.2d 714, 723, 308 P.2d 865; Parker v. San Francisco (1958) 158 C.A.2d 597, 608, 323 P.2d 108; Fowler v. Callis (1958) 159 C.A.2d 746, 749, 324 P.2d 728; Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 451, 456, 155 C.R. 545; see Rest.2d, Torts §434; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §446 et seq.)

In a medical malpractice case, the evidence must be sufficient to allow the jury to infer that, in the absence of the defendant's negligence, there was a reasonable medical probability that the plaintiff would have obtained a better result. (Morgenroth v. Pacific Med. Center (1976) 54 C.A.3d 521, 533, 126 C.R. 681; see Burford v. Baker (1942) 53 C.A.2d 301, 306, 127 P.2d 941; *Cullum v. Occasionally, however, on undisputed facts, the question is regarded as one of law. (See Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 8 C.2d 631, 668, 67 P.2d 678; Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 310, 319, 282 P.2d 12; Burdette v. Rollefson Const. Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 720, 726, 344 P.2d 307; *Traylen v. XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

3. Cause in Fact and Proximate Cause.

a. Cause in Fact.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1185

[§ 1185] Cause in Fact.

The first element of legal cause is cause in fact: i.e., it is necessary to show that the defendant's negligence contributed in some way to the plaintiff's injury, so that "but for" the defendant's negligence the injury would not have been sustained. If the accident would have happened anyway, whether the defendant was negligent or not, then his or her negligence was not a cause in fact, and of course cannot be the legal or responsible cause. The "but for" rule has traditionally been applied to determine cause in fact. (See Lammers v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1921) 186 C. 379, 384, 199 P. 523; Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 8 C.2d 631, 637, 67 P.2d 678; Akins v. Sonoma (1967) 67 C.2d 185, 199, 60 C.R. 499, 430 P.2d 57, citing the text; Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 C.A.2d 234, 237, 87 P.2d 917; Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 494, 508, 509, 124 C.R. 467, citing the text; *Sagadin v. The Restatement formula uses the term substantial factor "to denote the fact that the defendant's conduct has such an effect in producing the harm as to lead reasonable men to regard it as a cause." (Rest.2d, Torts §431, Comment a; see supra, §1182.) And "the actor's negligent conduct is not a substantial factor in bringing about harm to another if the harm would have been sustained even if the actor had not been negligent." (See Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 C.3d 1041, 1 C.R.2d 913, 819 P.2d 872, infra, §1187; Greathouse v. Amcord (1995) 35 C.A.4th 831, 837, 41 C.R.2d 561; Rest.2d, Torts §432(1); 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §458 et seq.)

b. Proximate Cause.

[§ 1186] Proximate Cause.

The doctrine of proximate cause limits liability; i.e., in certain situations where the defendant's conduct is an actual cause of the harm, the defendant will nevertheless be absolved because of the manner in which the injury occurred. Thus, where there is an independent intervening act that is not reasonably foreseeable, the defendant's conduct is not deemed the "legal" or proximate cause. Rules of legal cause, therefore, operate to relieve the defendant whose conduct is a cause in fact of the injury, where it would be considered unjust to hold him or her legally responsible. (See Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 C.3d 1041, 1 C.R.2d 913, 819 P.2d 872, infra, §1187; *PPG Industries v. Transamerica Ins. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

3. Cause in Fact and Proximate Cause.

c. Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1187

[§ 1187] Instructions.

In Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 C.3d 1041, 1 C.R.2d 913, 819 P.2d 872, the court disapproved the traditional "proximate cause" or "but for" instruction (former BAJI, No. 3.75) and approved the "substantial factor" instruction (BAJI, No. 3.76) for negligence cases. The opinion begins with an important observation: "We emphasize that despite the use of the terms proximate cause and legal cause, BAJI, Nos. 3.75 and 3.76 are instructions on cause in fact. Issues that are properly referred to as questions of proximate or legal cause are contained in other instructions." (54 C.3d 1044, footnote 2.)

Plaintiffs were parents of 12-year-old D, who went to a picnic at a lake with his friend L, 14 years old. Although L knew that D could not swim, L, Y, and D rented a paddleboard and went out into the deep water of the lake, where they engaged in horseplay. L rocked the paddleboard, it tipped over, and D fell off and was drowned. In this wrongful death action against L and his parents, the complaint alleged negligence, and defendants asserted comparative negligence.

Plaintiffs requested an instruction under BAJI, No. 3.76; the trial judge denied the request and instructed under BAJI, No. 3.75. The jury, by special verdict, concluded that defendants were negligent but that the negligence was not a cause of the death. (Hence, no verdict was reached on comparative negligence.) The judge then denied plaintiffs' motions for new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict. On plaintiffs' appeal, the Court of Appeal reversed, holding that BAJI, No. 3.75 is potentially misleading, and that the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to give BAJI, No. 3.76. Held, Court of Appeal decision affirmed.

(a) Both BAJI, Nos. 3.75 and 3.76 relate to "actual cause" or "cause in fact." They are alternative instructions that should not jointly be given in a single lawsuit. (54 C.3d 1049, citing Maupin v. Widling (1987) 192 C.A.3d 568, 237 C.R. 521.) "It has generally been recognized that the 'but for' test contained in BAJI, No. 3.75 should not be used when two 'causes' concur to bring about an event and either one of them operating alone could have been sufficient to cause the result. ... In those few situations, where there are concurrent [independent] causes, our law provides one cannot escape responsibility for his negligence on the ground that identical harm would have occurred without it. The proper rule for such situations is that the defendant's conduct is a cause of the event because it is a material element and a substantial factor in bringing it about." (54 C.3d 1049.) In such a situation BAJI, No. 3.76 should be given. (54 C.3d 1049.)

(b) BAJI, No. 3.75 should not be given in any negligence action.

(1) Criticism of the term "proximate cause" by courts and commentators has been continuous. As Prosser and Keeton observed: "The word 'proximate' is a legacy of Lord Chancellor Bacon, who in his time committed other sins. The word means nothing more than near or immediate; and when it was first taken up by the courts it had connotations of proximity in time and space which have long since disappeared. It is an unfortunate word, which places an entirely wrong emphasis upon the factor of physical or mechanical closeness." (54 C.3d 1050.) In Fraijo v. Hartland Hosp. (1979) 99 C.A.3d 331, 347, 160 C.R. 246, the court said: "We agree that BAJI, No. 3.75--the proximate cause instruction--is far from constituting a model of clarity in informing a jury as to what is meant by proximate causation." (54 C.3d 1051.)

(2) "We believe the foregoing authorities properly criticize BAJI, No. 3.75 for being conceptually and grammatically deficient. The deficiencies may mislead jurors, causing them, if they can glean the instruction's meaning despite the grammatical flaws, to focus improperly on the cause that is spatially or temporally closest to the harm." (54 C.3d 1052.)

(c) BAJI, No. 3.76 is the proper instruction and should be given.

(1) This instruction states the "substantial factor" test developed by Rest.2d, Torts §431. Prosser and Keeton observed that it is "sufficiently intelligible to any layman to furnish an adequate guide to the jury, and it is neither possible nor desirable to reduce it to lower terms." (54 C.3d 1052.) Moreover, it subsumes the "but for" test. "If the conduct which is claimed to have caused the injury had nothing at all to do with the injuries, it could not be said that the conduct was a factor, let alone a substantial factor, in the production of the injuries." (54 C.3d 1052, quoting Doupnik v. General Motors Corp. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 849, 275 C.R. 715, infra, §1527)

(2) The substantial factor instruction also aids in the disposition of two other troublesome types of situations: "One is where a similar, but not identical result would have followed without the defendant's act; the other where one defendant has made a clearly proved but quite insignificant contribution to the result, as where he throws a lighted match into a forest fire. But in the great majority of cases, it produces the same legal conclusion as the but-for test. Except in the classes of cases indicated, no case has been found where the defendant's act could be called a substantial factor when the event would have occurred without it; nor will cases very often arise where it would not be such a factor when it was so indispensable a cause that without it the result would not have followed." (54 C.3d 1053, quoting Prosser & Keeton.)

(3) BAJI, No. 3.76 has been criticized for use of the confusing term "legal cause," and a "Psycholinguistic Study" has recommended substitution of the simple term "cause." (54 C.3d 1053.) Moreover, many critics have pointed out ambiguities in the term "substantial," and have criticized its use in cases where a defendant's conduct is clearly a "but for" cause, but defense counsel argues that the conduct made an insubstantial contribution to the outcome. "Such a use of the 'substantial factor' test undermines the principles of comparative negligence, under which a party is responsible for his or her share of negligence and the harm caused thereby. We are confident, however, that proper argument by counsel and instruction by the court will prevent any confusion from occurring." (54 C.3d 1053.)

(d) Giving a BAJI, No. 3.75 instruction and refusing to give a BAJI, No. 3.76 instruction constituted reversible error. "It seems that the jury did follow BAJI No. 3.75 but was misled by the instruction's flaws. Having found the defendants negligent, it is illogical and inconsistent on this record to conclude that they were not a cause in fact of [D]'s death. Accordingly, we conclude it is reasonably probable that the jury was confused by BAJI No. 3.75 and overemphasized the 'but for' nature of the instruction, improperly focusing on the factor operative at the closest temporal proximity to the time of death, [D]'s inability to swim." (54 C.3d 1055.)

One justice dissented, criticizing the majority for invalidating an instruction used for 50 years and embodying well-established law, and for delegating responsibility for defining proximate cause to the BAJI Committee instead of providing guidance to the Committee. (54 C.3d 1056.) (See Sandoval v. Bank of America (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1378, 1386, 115 C.R.2d 128 [instruction and answer to jury question stating that proper question was whether absence of defendant's negligence "would" have prevented injury was prejudicial error; jury need only determine that it was more probable than not that injury would not have occurred in absence of that negligence]; Viner v. Sweet (2003) 30 C.4th 1232, 135 C.R.2d 629, 70 P.3d 1046, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §334 [in malpractice action against corporate lawyer who had negotiated plaintiffs' sale of company and employment termination agreement, plaintiffs were required to prove that more favorable result would have been obtained "but for" alleged negligence; Mitchell did not repudiate "but for" test].)

BAJI, No. 3.75 has been revoked. BAJI, No. 3.76 was given a new title, "Cause--Substantial Factor Test," and redrafted to read as follows: "The law defines cause in its own particular way. A cause of injury, damage, loss or harm is something that is a substantial factor in bringing about an injury, damage, loss or harm." This instruction was substantially repeated in the 9th edition, published in 2002: "The law defines cause in its own particular way. A cause of [injury] [damage] [loss] [or] [harm] is something that is a substantial factor in bringing about an [injury] [damage] [loss] [or] [harm]."

CACI, Nos. 430 and 431 read as follows:

"A substantial factor in causing harm is a factor that a reasonable person would consider to have contributed to the harm. It must be more than a remote or trivial factor. It does not have to be the only cause of the harm." (CACI, No. 430.)

"A person's negligence may combine with another factor to cause harm. If you find that [name of defendant]'s negligence was a substantial factor in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm, then [name of defendant] is responsible for the harm. [Name of defendant] cannot avoid responsibility just because some other person, condition, or event was also a substantial factor in causing [name of plaintiff]'s harm." (CACI, No. 431.)

See Mayes v. Bryan (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1075, 1095, 44 C.R.3d 14 [in medical malpractice action, trial court did not err in refusing to instruct on "but for" causation as to doctor's negligence, because jury was instructed on "substantial factor" test, and "but for" test was subsumed under "substantial factor" test]. Viner case:

1. Negligence of Medical Personnel or Facility.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1188

[§ 1188] Negligence of Medical Personnel or Facility.

In Osborn v. Irwin Memorial Blood Bank (1992) 5 C.A.4th 234, 7 C.R.2d 101, plaintiffs, who had read about AIDS and whose son Michael was about to undergo heart surgery, found 7 family members and 35 friends who were willing to donate blood to defendant blood bank to be used during the operation. However, plaintiffs were incorrectly informed by defendant that it did not allow directed donations, and Michael contracted AIDS from the 12 units of blood that were used. Plaintiffs sued defendant on several causes of action, including negligent misrepresentation. Defendant offered to prove that, because of Michael's rare blood type, none of his family could have donated blood for him, and that the 35 friends could have provided only a small fraction of the rare blood he needed. However, the trial judge excluded evidence of Michael's blood type. Held, judgment for plaintiffs reversed; the excluded evidence was relevant on the issue of cause in fact.

(a) Defendant was not entitled to judgment. Defendant argued that plaintiffs could not establish a prima facie case that denial of directed donations was the cause in fact of Michael's contracting AIDS, because there is no scientific evidence that blood from family and friends is any safer than blood from routine (homologous) donations by the general public. This argument is without merit, even conceding the lack of scientific proof of the relative safety of directed donations. There is a clear chain of cause and effect: Michael received blood from defendant's donor pool because of its misrepresentation about its policy on directed donations, and he contracted AIDS because defendant's blood was contaminated. If the chance of contracting AIDS from any 12 units of blood is less than 50%, as was evidently conceded by defendant, then it is more probable than not that Michael would not have contracted AIDS had he been allowed to use directed donations. Plaintiffs need show no more than this to establish cause in fact. (5 C.A.4th 253.)

(b) Defendant was entitled to new trial. Negligent conduct is not a substantial factor in causing harm to another if the harm would have occurred even had there been no negligence. (5 C.A.4th 254, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §432.) Here, had the evidence concerning Michael's rare blood type been admitted, it might have caused the jury to conclude that the misrepresentation precluding directed donations did not affect the outcome of his case, because directed donations for him would not have been feasible and most of the blood used in the operation would, in any event, have come from homologous donations. Hence, the exclusion of blood type evidence was erroneous (5 C.A.4th 254) and, given the close nature of the case, the error was prejudicial (5 C.A.4th 256). Whether the blood type evidence, once admitted, will justify nonsuit will be for the trial judge to determine after all the evidence is in. (5 C.A.4th 257.)

In Bromme v. Pavitt (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1487, 7 C.R.2d 608, plaintiff brought an action for the wrongful death of his wife, who had died of colon cancer in 1984 allegedly due to defendant doctor's negligent delay in making the diagnosis. Defendant first saw decedent in June 1980, when she was complaining of abdominal pain, but he did not diagnose its cause, allegedly because he failed to conduct the proper tests. As a result, the cancer was not discovered until September 1981. There was expert testimony that before June 1981, it was medically probable that the cancer, if detected, could have been treated successfully, but that thereafter successful treatment became medically improbable, i.e., less than 50%. At the close of plaintiff's case, the trial judge granted a partial nonsuit precluding the jury from considering any alleged negligent acts by defendant after June 1981. Thereafter, the jury returned a verdict for defendant on the allegations of negligence through June 1981. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that the partial nonsuit was error because California recognizes a cause of action for wrongful death even where the decedent had less than 50% chance for survival. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Under C.C.P. 377 (infra, §1381) plaintiff was required to prove that defendant's negligence caused the death, i.e., that it was a substantial factor in bringing it about. To accomplish this, plaintiff had to establish a reasonable medical probability that the negligence was sufficient of itself to bring about the death. (5 C.A.4th 1498.)

(b) The trial court correctly concluded that plaintiff did not meet this burden of proof with respect to any negligence after June 1981. The expert witnesses agreed that decedent's chance of surviving the colon cancer was less than 50% after June 1981. Even with proper medical intervention, it was more likely than not she would die from the cancer. Because proper care after June 1981 would not have averted decedent's death, the absence of that care was not of itself sufficient to bring about her death. Consequently, defendant's alleged negligence after June 1981 was not a substantial factor (cause in fact) of decedent's death. (5 C.A.4th 1499.)

A. In General.

3. Cause in Fact and Proximate Cause.

2. Negligence Resulting in Violent Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1189

[§ 1189] Negligence Resulting in Violent Act.

In Nola M. v. University of Southern Calif. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 421, 20 C.R.2d 97, plaintiff was raped on the campus of defendant University of Southern California. The attack occurred after dark while plaintiff was walking on a sidewalk in front of the human resources center and was grabbed from behind by an unknown assailant and dragged to some bushes in front of the center. Plaintiff's expert described the inadequacy of defendant's security measures, and the ways in which they could have been improved, but could not say that 2 or 10 or 20 more guards or other security measures would have prevented plaintiff's injuries. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; even assuming that defendant breached its duty to protect plaintiff from foreseeable criminal assault, there was no proof of any causal connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's injury.

(a) "We think it comes down to this: When an injury can be prevented by a lock or a fence or a chain across a driveway or some other physical device, a landowner's failure to erect an appropriate barrier can be the legal cause of an injury inflicted by the negligent or criminal act of a third person. ... But where, as here, we are presented with an open area which could be fully protected, if at all, only by a Berlin Wall, we do not believe a landowner is the cause of a physical assault it could not reasonably have prevented." (16 C.A.4th 436, citing Noble v. Los Angeles Dodgers (1985) 168 C.A.3d 912, 214 C.R. 395, supra, §1132.)

(b) "Otherwise, where do we draw the line? How many guards are enough? Ten? Twenty? Two hundred? How much light is sufficient? Are Klieg lights necessary? Are plants of any kind permissible or is USC to chop down every tree and pull out each bush? Does it matter if the campus looks like a prison? Should everyone entering the campus be searched for weapons? Does every shop, every store, every manufacturing plant, have to be patrolled by private guards hired by the owner? Does a landowner have to effectively close his property and prevent its use altogether? ... To characterize a landowner's failure to deter the wanton, mindless acts of violence of a third person as the 'cause' of the victim's injuries is (on these facts) to make the landowner the insurer of the absolute safety of everyone who enters the premises." (16 C.A.4th 437.)

(c) Police protection is, and should remain, a governmental and not a private obligation. Making landowners insurers of absolute safety would force businesses in high crime areas to either close or charge such high prices that the poor would be unable to meet their basic needs. (16 C.A.4th 438.) It would also create a form of victim compensation that has not been legislatively sanctioned. (16 C.A.4th 438.)

The element of causation imposes rational limits on the liability that otherwise attaches under the judiciary's expansive view of duty. "If the theoretical underpinnings of the duty cases are correct, there must be a legally sound approach to the causation issue and that is what we have attempted to articulate in this case. If there is a flaw in our analysis, we suggest it may be time for the Supreme Court to reexamine the concept of duty ... in the context of a society which appears unable to effectively stem the tide of violent crime. But unless we as judges limit the duty we created, it appears inevitable that the Legislature will do it for us." (16 C.A.4th 438.)

In Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates (1996) 43 C.A.4th 472, 50 C.R.2d 785, plaintiff tenant, who was raped in the garage of defendant landlords' apartment building, sued on the ground that they had negligently failed to repair a broken security gate. Deposition testimony by plaintiff's security expert and by investigating police officers, offered when defendant moved for summary judgment, indicated that the deponents did not in fact know how the rapist entered or left the garage, although the expert offered his opinion that the rapist was attracted to the garage because of the broken gate. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed; there was insufficient evidence of causation.

(a) The causation element of negligence is satisfied when the plaintiff establishes that the defendant's breach of duty (negligent act or omission) was a substantial factor in bringing about the plaintiff's harm, and that there is no rule of law relieving the defendant of liability. (43 C.A.4th 481, citing Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 C.3d 1041, 1052, 1 C.R.2d 913, 819 P.2d 872, supra, §1187, and Nola M.) In the context of a case involving a duty to secure areas against foreseeable criminal acts of third parties, the causation analysis is unaffected by the fact that an assailant's conduct is criminal and not merely negligent. The assailant's attack is not a superseding cause and does not, in itself, relieve the defendant of liability. The question is therefore whether there is evidence supporting plaintiff's claim that defendants' negligence was the legal cause of her injuries. (43 C.A.4th 481.)

(b) It is clear from the evidence presented that causation was not--and could not be--established. (43 C.A.4th 482.) Plaintiff did not raise a triable issue of material fact about whether, but for defendants' negligence, the rape would not have occurred. There was no direct evidence that the rapist entered or departed through the broken gate (or even that the broken gate was the only way he could have entered or departed). The opinion testimony of plaintiff's expert did not constitute substantial evidence of causation. (43 C.A.4th 483.)

(c) A landlord is not the insurer of the absolute safety of everyone who enters the premises against the ravages of today's violent society. (43 C.A.4th 489.) If as a matter of public policy the Legislature concludes that it is proper to impose this obligation, then it is the legislative branch of government that must make that decision and adopt a rule of strict liability. Until that time, "this case and others like it expose a victim's damage suit against her landlord for what it is--an artificial scheme designed not to fairly assess culpability but to reach into the deepest pocket." (43 C.A.4th 490.)

A. In General.

3. Negligent Hiring of Tortfeasor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1190

[§ 1190] Negligent Hiring of Tortfeasor.

In Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 C.A.4th 828, 10 C.R.2d 748, plaintiffs sued the Hughson Methodist Church and the Annual Conference of the church of which Hughson was a member, for sexual molestation by a pastor. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants, and the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment in part. The opinion deals with the issues raised by the motions for summary judgment and the responses to it.

The Conference learned that M had sexually molested adolescent males in 1971, and in 1972 the Conference advised M that, if he would "step down" from the ministry, no formal charges would be made and he would retain his ordination. M agreed, and he worked for some years as a counselor at a secular high school. In 1977, he requested an appointment as the youth director of Hughson Church. D, district superintendent of the Conference, supported his appointment, despite information that M had been fired from his counselor position because of sexual molestation charges. Neither the Conference nor D informed Hughson Church or the pastor-parish relations Conference Committee of these matters, although when M sought and obtained reappointment to the active ministry in 1982, the Committee was aware that M had been charged with inappropriate sexual behavior. In 1985, M sexually molested plaintiff E, 13 years old. Two weeks later E sexually molested his younger sister, plaintiff EY, 6 years old. Based on his molestations of E, M was convicted of committing lewd acts with a child.

In 1990, E, EY, and their parents sued the Conference, Hughson Church, M, and D. "The cornerstone of the suit--at least as it pertains to Conference and Hughson Church--is a cause of action for the negligent hiring of M. There was also a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation of M's pedophile history. Negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress were also alleged; these claims arose out of the molestations themselves and the defendants' counseling of and ministry to all plaintiffs." (8 C.A.4th 833.) The trial court ruled that the parents' causes of action were time-barred; that EY could not recover from Conference, D, or M; and that Hughson Church was entitled to summary judgment against all plaintiffs because it had no knowledge of M's sexual history. Held, summary judgment regarding EY affirmed, but summary judgment on E's negligent hiring cause reversed.

(a) Proximate cause: policy considerations.

(1) EY's action invokes policy concerns regarding the limits of liability, and the trial court appropriately analyzed this action in the context of the policy considerations component of proximate cause. (8 C.A.4th 834, citing Maupin v. Widling (1987) 192 C.A.3d 568, 237 C.R. 521, Prosser & Keeton, and the text.) Causation in fact is not involved here. The Conference's hiring of M as the pastor at Hughson Church can be deemed a substantial factor and thus a cause in fact of EY's injury. (8 C.A.4th 835, citing Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 C.3d 1041, 1 C.R.2d 913, 819 P.2d 872, supra, §1187.)

(2) "As a practical matter, legal responsibility must be limited to those causes which are so closely connected with the result and of such significance that the law is justified in imposing liability. ... This limitation is to some extent associated with the nature and degree of the connection in fact between the defendant's acts and the events of which the plaintiff complains. Often to greater extent, however, the legal limitation on the scope of liability is associated with policy--with our more or less inadequately expressed ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient." (8 C.A.4th 835, quoting Prosser and Keeton.)

(b) Policy considerations preclude EY's negligent hiring action against Conference.

(1) An employer may be liable to a third person for negligently hiring an incompetent or unfit employee. California follows the rule of Rest.2d, Agency §213, explained in Comment d: "The principal may be negligent because he has reason to know that the servant or other agent, because of his qualities, is likely to harm others in view of the work ... entrusted to him. ... An agent, although otherwise competent, may be incompetent because of his reckless or vicious disposition, and if a principal, without exercising due care in selection, employs a vicious person to do an act which necessarily brings him in contact with others while in the performance of a duty, he is subject to liability for harm caused by the vicious propensity." (8 C.A.4th 836.) A related rule is stated in Rest.2d, Torts §449 (infra, §1215): "[I]n a large number of situations the very reason why the defendant's conduct is negligent is that it creates the risk of the particular intervening criminal act." (8 C.A.4th 836, quoting the text.)

(2) "[EY] wants to sue Conference for negligently hiring [M] because the victim of [M]'s molestation, [E], in turn molested her. But [EY]'s position is a step removed from the negligently hired employee and a step removed from that employee's conduct. ... [T]he theory of negligent hiring here encompasses the particular risk of molestation by an employee with a history of this specific conduct. It does not encompass acts done by nonemployees, such as [E], or consequences involving less particular, even speculative, hazards." (8 C.A.4th 837.) To conclude otherwise would impose liability on "the person who hired the person who molested the person who molested the person in [EY]'s position." This "convoluted syntax" graphically illustrates the problem of imposing liability for negligent hiring in light of plaintiffs' theory of "molestation perpetuation." (8 C.A.4th 837.)

(3) "Aside from the question of how the molestation victim might 'act out,' there is the question of when the victim might act, if at all. How long is the span of liability? Since we are dealing with child molestation, conceivably the child could wait for many years until the age of majority to sue." (8 C.A.4th 837.)

(4) "Finally, it must be realized that [EY]'s action for negligent hiring against Conference is based on two intervening criminal acts of molestation. In the past, courts were reluctant to impose civil liability when a single criminal act had intervened." (8 C.A.4th 838, citing the text, §§1214, 1215.) "This reluctance has given way in more recent times, particularly in the negligent hiring-criminal act arena where it is necessarily incompatible. ... But where two or more criminal acts have intervened, this reluctance may still be justified." (8 C.A.4th 838.)

(c) EY cannot maintain related causes of action. EY's cause of action for emotional distress is asserted as an element of damages arising out of the negligent hiring of M; and the fall of her negligent hiring action spells the fall of her emotional distress claim. (8 C.A.4th 838.) The policy concerns and doctrinal limitations which defeat her cause of action against Conference apply with equal force to her identical actions against Hughson Church. (8 C.A.4th 841.)

(1) The trial court granted summary judgment because the church had no actual knowledge of M's history. (8 C.A.4th 842.) However, under the rule and Comment in the Agency Restatement discussed above, "an employer can be held liable for negligent hiring if he knows the employee is unfit, or has reason to believe the employee is unfit or fails to use reasonable care to discover the employee's unfitness before hiring him." (8 C.A.4th 843.)

(2) "The summary judgment evidence viewed most liberally to [E] shows the following: Hughson Church hired [M] for the youth director position it created in 1977. This hiring took place without an investigation, but was based on the knowledge that [M] was a Methodist minister working as a counselor at a secular high school and on the fact that several parishioners in the church knew and recommended [M]. When the pastor position at Hughson Church became available in 1982, [M] approached the relevant committee at the church. ... [M] informed the Committee that he was no longer employed as a school counselor, that he was available to return to full-time ministry as the church's pastor and that he would enjoy the Committee's support in obtaining the position. Pursuant to the pastor appointment procedure, Committee informs the Conference of the vacancy, consults with the Conference regarding the appointment and then approves or disapproves the Conference's selection. Committee agreed to support [M]--with [E]'s father as the sole dissenter--if he was reinstated, permitted to return to full-time ministry." (8 C.A.4th 843.)

(3) Although the Church had no actual knowledge of M's past, "the evidence recounted above presents triable issues of material fact regarding whether the Church had reason to believe M was unfit or whether the Church failed to use reasonable care in investigating M." (8 C.A.4th 843.) (See Roman Catholic Bishop of San Diego v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1556, 50 C.R.2d 399 [charge of negligent hiring of parish priest who sexually abused 15-year-old girl; distinguishing Evan F.]; Doe v. Capital Cities (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1038, 58 C.R.2d 122 [complaint for negligent hiring and supervision failed where, although it alleged that employer knew that its casting director purchased drugs and used his position to gain sexual favors, no facts were alleged showing that it was employer's negligent hiring and supervision that resulted in director's sexual assault of plaintiff]; Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 1207, 1213, 69 C.R.2d 370 [employer must be chargeable with facts that would warn reasonable person that employee presents undue risk of harm to third persons in light of particular work to be performed; defendant hairstyling college was not negligent in hiring employee, who had been convicted of sexually molesting juveniles, to supervise training of adults]; Mendoza v. Los Angeles (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1333, 1342, 78 C.R.2d 525 [no "but for" (cause in fact) connection between city's negligent hiring of police officer and permitting him to carry concealed weapon while off duty and officer's act of killing his fiancée with his own weapon during domestic argument]; 101 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability of church or religious organization for negligent hiring, retention, or supervision of clergy member based on sexual misconduct].)

Agilent Technologies* (2006) 145 C.A.4th 790, 815, 52 C.R.3d 376 [employer whose employee transmitted Internet threats using employer's computer system was not liable, under negligent supervision theory, to threat recipients; employer owed recipients no duty in absence of business relationship or close connection with recipients' injuries, and, even assuming existence of duty, employer did not breach any duty to recipients, as it was unaware of employee's conduct]; Deutsch v. Masonic Homes of Calif. (2008) 164 C.A.4th 748, 783, 80 C.R.3d 368 [tort of negligent hiring or supervision allows for liability of principal for acts of agent where principal is either negligent or reckless in hiring or supervising agent; trial court correctly refused to give instruction that principal was required to have actual knowledge or specific warning that agent had engaged in unlawful sexual conduct, and properly ruled that standard to be used was actual or constructive knowledge].

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

A. In General.

3. Cause in Fact and Proximate Cause.

d. Illustrations.

4. Other Acts of Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1191

[§ 1191] Other Acts of Negligence.

In Arthur v. Santa Monica Dairy Co. (1960) 183 C.A.2d 483, 490, 6 C.R. 808, H, a boy driving a car, was looking on the floor for a burning cigarette for some 10 seconds. He ran into defendant's illegally double-parked milk truck, in plain sight. Although H was barred by contributory negligence, plaintiff, his guest, was not, and seemingly had a right to recover; but the court held that defendant's negligence was neither the actual nor the proximate cause of the accident.

(a) Not a cause in fact. This accident would have happened even if the truck had been going slowly, had legally stopped for a traffic signal or other reason, or if the thing H ran into had been any other obstruction in the street. "[T]he driver simply was not looking and thus would have struck anything in front of him." (183 C.A.2d 488, citing the text.)

(b) Not a proximate cause. The independent intervening act of H, in taking his eyes from the road, was not reasonably likely to happen and was not foreseeable within the test of proximate cause. "[I]t would hardly be expected that the driver of the milk truck should or would have been expected to reasonably anticipate that any driver would run head-on into his truck parked ahead of him which was in plain sight and had been stopped for some time." (183 C.A.2d 490.) (See 13 Hastings L. J. 160 [criticism of decision].)

In Williams v. Wraxall (1995) 33 C.A.4th 120, 39 C.R.2d 658, plaintiff was convicted of murder and related offenses, partly on the basis of the testimony by a forensic serologist presented by the prosecution. In this action, plaintiff sued a private forensic serologist hired by plaintiff's brother, who was charged with the same crimes. Plaintiff claimed that defendant serologist's failure or refusal to testify on his behalf was a cause of his conviction. Essentially, the prosecution serologist placed plaintiff in the class of persons who might have contributed the samples, while the testimony of defendant serologist was unable to include or exclude him from the secretor class. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed.

(a) Under the substantial factor test, plaintiff must prove that defendant serologist's negligence was a substantial factor in causing the harm. His failure or refusal to testify need not have been the sole cause of the harm, but plaintiff must show that there was a probability that, but for the negligence, plaintiff would have obtained a more favorable result, i.e., he would have been acquitted. Plaintiff cannot recover damages based on a mere possibility that the negligence of the defendant caused the harm. (33 C.A.4th 132.) Here, there was no credible evidence that defendant's test results would have resulted in a judgment of acquittal in plaintiff's first murder trial. Defendant's test results, although inconsistent with those of the prosecution's expert, are not particularly exculpatory in nature. Plaintiff's guilt was established by the testimony of many witnesses and that the testimony of the prosecution's serologist was mere corroborating evidence that was rebutted by another witness. (33 C.A.4th 133.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that causation was established under the "lost chance" theory developed in medical malpractice cases, where the defendant's malpractice deprived the plaintiff of a statistically measurable chance of survival. The "lost chance" theory essentially reduces a plaintiff's burden of proof from a probability to a possibility that medical malpractice resulted in the loss of a chance to live. This theory has been rejected in California on legal and policy grounds. (33 C.A.4th 135, citing Simmons v. West Covina Med. Clinic (1989) 212 C.A.3d 696, 260 C.R. 772, supra, §978.) Even where recognized, the theory has been limited to medical malpractice cases. (33 C.A.4th 135, citing Bromme v. Pavitt (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1487, 1506, 7 C.R.2d 608, supra, §1188.)

(c) Finally, plaintiff argued that the burden should be shifted to defendants. It is true that in negligence and products liability cases, the burden of proof is sometimes shifted to the defendant. This is especially true where the defendant is obviously guilty, but where his or her negligence has made it impossible for the plaintiff to prove that defendant is guilty. In products liability cases, no definitive or general rule exists that delineates the circumstances under which the defendant in such a case must bear the burden of proof. Here, while the serologist's test results were not presented, the evidence was not lost and was available to both parties to prove causation. Further, plaintiff failed to establish a substantial probability of causation, which is a condition precedent to shifting the burden of proof. Under these conditions, there is no policy reason to shift the burden of proof to defendants. (33 C.A.4th 136.) (See Nelson v. Los Angeles (2003) 113 C.A.4th 783, 790, 6 C.R.3d 650 [expert's opined that police hog-tying procedure was substantial factor in causing arrestee's death, and fact that he rejected defendant's claims of causation did not render his opinion unreasonable].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
B. Direct Causation.

1. Liability for Unforeseeable Consequences.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1192

[§ 1192] Liability for Unforeseeable Consequences.

In cases of direct causation (without an intervening force), the traditional view is that foreseeability is immaterial. The defendant is liable for all consequences that follow in unbroken sequence from his or her negligent act, regardless of whether the defendant could have anticipated them. This has been termed the "direct consequence rule" or "natural and proximate consequence rule," and is illustrated by the famous case of In re Polemis (1921) 3 K.B. 560. Defendants' employees negligently dropped a plank into the hold of a ship, and it struck metal, causing a spark to explode gasoline vapor in the hold, destroying the ship. Defendants were held liable. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §187 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §494 et seq.; 15 Cal. L. Rev. 1, 8; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 473; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 391, 399.)

Rest.2d, Torts §435 offers the following rationalization:

(1) If the actor's conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm, he or she is liable despite unforeseeability of the extent of the harm or the manner in which it occurred.

(2) However, the conduct may be held not a legal cause "where after the event and looking back from the harm to the actor's negligent conduct, it appears to the court highly extraordinary that it should have brought about the harm."

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
B. Direct Causation.
2. Concurring Causes.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1193

[§ 1193] Concurring Causes.

The defendant's negligent act need not be the sole cause of the injury; it is enough that it be a cause. When the separate and distinct negligent acts of two persons are in substantially simultaneous operation, and contribute to cause the injury, "each is and both are the proximate cause," and the plaintiff may recover in full from either of the parties, or both. (See Canvin v. General Brewing Corp. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 49, 53, 66 P.2d 691; Modica v. Crist (1954) 129 C.A.2d 144, 147, 276 P.2d 614; Eramdjian v. Interstate Bakery Corp. (1957) 153 C.A.2d 590, 607, 315 P.2d 19; Hughey v. Candoli (1958) 159 C.A.2d 231, 240, 323 P.2d 779; *Thomsen v. A familiar example is the collision of two vehicles, driven by two negligent drivers, resulting in injury to the plaintiff, who is either a pedestrian, a passenger in one of the cars, or a driver or passenger in another vehicle. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
B. Direct Causation.
3. Concurrent Negligence but Single Unidentified Cause.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1194

[§ 1194] Concurrent Negligence but Single Unidentified Cause.

A significant doctrine, phrased in terms of burden of proof but having a clear substantive effect, was announced in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1. Plaintiff and defendants T and S were hunting quail. With knowledge of plaintiff's location and with an unobstructed view, defendants both fired their shotguns in plaintiff's direction. The major injury for which damages were sought was caused by a pellet entering plaintiff's eye, which could have come only from one of the guns, and the lower court could not determine which defendant had fired it. Held, judgment against both defendants was proper. (a) Both defendants were negligent toward plaintiff. (b) Although only one defendant's act was the proximate cause of the major injury, defendants were in a better position than plaintiff to offer evidence on the issue of causation, and fairness required that the burden of proof be shifted to them. "They brought about a situation where the negligence of one of them injured the plaintiff, hence it should rest with them each to absolve himself if he can. The injured party has been placed by defendants in the unfair position of pointing to which defendant caused the harm. If one can escape the other may also and plaintiff is remediless." (33 C.2d 86.)

The court was greatly influenced by the similar result reached in Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 C.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, under the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, but two distinctions might be noted: (a) In Ybarra, involving injury to an unconscious patient during an operation, the issue was whether one or more defendants were negligent; in the instant case, negligence was established, and the issue was causation. (2) In Ybarra, the defendants might well have been able to offer evidence to escape liability; in the instant case it was actually impossible to identify the gun that caused the injury, so that, in practical effect, the shifting of the burden of proof necessarily resulted in joint liability.

Discussion of the reasoning and effect of Summers has been extensive. (See Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 773, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465, infra, §1195; *Dumin v. Rev. 82; 63 A.L.R.5th 195 ["concert of activity," "alternative liability," "enterprise liability," or similar theory as basis for imposing liability on one or more manufacturers of defective uniform product, in absence of identification of manufacturer of precise unit or batch causing injury]; and see BAJI, No. 3.80 [when precise cause cannot be identified]; CACI, No. 434 [alternative causation].)

In Vahey v. Sacia (1981) 126 C.A.3d 171, 178 C.R. 559, A's car stopped on a highway and was hit by B's car; C ran into B; plaintiff's car, driven by her husband, hit C's car; defendant's car then hit plaintiff's car. Other evidence could have supported the conclusion that plaintiff's husband stopped and then defendant ran into him and pushed him into C. Plaintiff suffered injury either in the collision with C or the collision with defendant, but there was evidence that she would not have been injured if she had been wearing a seat belt. The negligence of A, B and/or C as a contributing cause of plaintiff's injury was clear, and plaintiff requested BAJI, No. 3.80 on the Summers doctrine of shifting the burden of proof on causation. The trial judge refused to so instruct. Held, reversed.

Defendant's arguments against application of the Summers doctrine here are unconvincing. Thus, the fact that plaintiff settled with all parties except defendant is immaterial; Summers applies to multiple tortfeasors, not multiple defendants. And the introduction of comparative negligence did not obviate the reason for the Summers rule. (126 C.A.3d 171.) (See Use Note to BAJI, No. 3.80 [revised to provide that, depending on facts, instruction may or may not be appropriate in multiparty traffic accident cases].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
B. Direct Causation.
4. Unknown Cause.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1195

[§ 1195] Unknown Cause.

An extraordinary substantive advance, again expressed in procedural terms (see supra, §1194), was made in Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465. Defendants operated a large motel with a swimming pool violating safety regulations (no lifeguard or notice thereof or warning of depth). Plaintiffs were a mother and daughter. The father and 5-year-old son, both of whom were unable to swim, went into the pool on rubber rafts. They were later discovered drowned in the deep end. There was no direct evidence of the circumstances, and the jury verdict was for defendants. Held, judgment reversed. The evidence of negligence was overwhelming, but causation presented a more difficult problem.

(a) Defendant's basic contention was that its statutory duty would be satisfied by either a lifeguard or a warning; and that, because decedents were the only people in the pool at the time, the absence of a lifeguard was as obvious as if there had been a notice; hence, the failure to post a notice of an obvious fact (no lifeguard) could not be the proximate cause of their death. This reasoning would, however, subvert the major purpose of the statute. Accordingly it was held that plaintiffs sustained their initial burden by showing violation of the statute, and that the burden then shifted to defendants to show that their violation was not a proximate cause. (3 C.3d 768, 769.)

(b) The remaining question was how to determine the issue of causation in the absence of any direct evidence as to the precise manner in which the drownings occurred. (1) The negligent failure to provide a lifeguard "not only stripped decedents of a significant degree of protection to which they were entitled, but also deprived the present plaintiffs of a means of definitively establishing the facts leading to the drownings." (3 C.3d 771.) (2) The situation is similar to that in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, and Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 C.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687: "Because no persons witnessed the drownings (in part a result of the very negligence at issue) and because neither of the victims survived, plaintiffs can no more adduce definitive evidence of causation than the injured hunter in Summers or the unconscious patient in Ybarra." (3 C.3d 773.) In some respects the case is stronger than Summers. There, uncertainty of proof was not a foreseeable consequence; here, the lack of evidence on causation is a direct and foreseeable result of defendants' negligence. (3 C.3d 773.)

(c) Thus, to prevent nullification of the statutory protection, the burden of proof must shift to the defendant whose negligent act made evidence of causation unavailable: "Since the pool-owner violates the statute, since he creates the dangerous condition and exercises control over it, since the death occurs upon his premises, he cannot take refuge in the position that the burden of proof rests with the probable victim of his statutory violation." (3 C.3d 776.)

(d) This holding is consistent with "the emerging tort policy of assigning liability to a party who is in the best position to distribute losses over a group which should reasonably bear them." (3 C.3d 775, footnote 20.) (See 23 Hastings L. J. 650.)

Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel was distinguished in Smith v. American Motor Lodge (1974) 39 C.A.3d 1, 113 C.R. 771. Plaintiff's two children, ages 10 and 11, were drowned in defendant's pool. In the wrongful death action, plaintiffs offered evidence that the safety rope and buoys required by a state safety regulation to mark the break from shallow to deep water were not in place, and that the children drowned where the line should have been situated. On the basis of this evidence, they asked for an instruction on shifting the burden of proving proximate cause, which was refused. Held, judgment on a verdict for defendant affirmed. (a) Haft involved decedents who were not contributorily negligent; here, the children, who could read, and knew they could not swim, entered a pool with a posted notice warning of the absence of a lifeguard and stating that children should be accompanied by an adult. (b) The lack of evidence of causation in Haft was due to the defendant's negligent failure to provide a lifeguard; the absence of a safety rope did not make it more difficult for plaintiffs to prove their case. (39 C.A.3d 1.)

Haft was also distinguished in Jones v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. (1985) 163 C.A.3d 396, 209 C.R. 456, where the evidence of an instrumentality that caused the injury was lacking. Plaintiff, alleging that her cancer of the cervix was caused by ingesting defendant's contraceptive drug, was nonsuited on the ground that the experts testified that the causal connection was less than a 50-50 possibility. (163 C.A.3d 404, 405.)

The Haft approach was employed in Harris v. Irish Truck Lines (1974) 11 C.3d 373, 113 C.R. 489, 521 P.2d 481. Plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision when the brakes on defendant's truck failed. The judge instructed the jury on the presumption of negligence from violation of Veh.C. 26453 (brakes maintained in good working order), gave former BAJI, No. 3.45, and also instructed that, in rebutting the presumption, defendant must show "the cause of the failure." Held, the instruction was proper, and judgment for plaintiff affirmed; evidence is often unavailable, for the defendant will repair the brakes before any claim is made by the plaintiff. "When a defendant seeks to excuse his failure to control his car on the ground of brake failure, he concedes the statutory violation and assumes the burden of rebutting the presumption of negligence. When examination of the vehicle subsequent to the accident fails to reveal a defect which caused the alleged brake failure, the plaintiff should not be penalized; absence of evidence of a defect renders the entire claim of brake failure highly suspect and indicates that the defendant's failure to control his vehicle was most likely due to inattentiveness or other lack of care. On the other hand, when evidence of the causative defect is available, such evidence will often by itself vitiate any claim by the defendant of compliance with the nondelegable duty to carefully maintain brakes; a defendant who is in a better position to discover and preserve such evidence should not be permitted to profit from the plaintiff's inability to produce it." (11 C.3d 379.)

In Fagerquist v. Western Sun Aviation (1987) 191 C.A.3d 709, 236 C.R. 633, the judge instructed the jury that defendant airline had the burden of establishing that its failure to comply with Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) regulations was not the proximate cause of a plane crash that killed plaintiff's father. In holding that this instruction was improper, the court distinguished Haft on two grounds: First, the evidence, i.e., a defective cylinder, was not destroyed in the crash so as to prevent accident reconstruction, analysis, and scientific examination. Second, the FAA violations, i.e., noncompliance with inspection and maintenance procedures, did not directly go to plaintiff's inability to establish causation; compliance with the regulations would not have eased plaintiff's burden of proving that defendant's negligent inspection and maintenance proximately caused the accident. (191 C.A.3d 726.)

Other decisions are illustrative. (See Thomas v. Lusk (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1709, 1719, 34 C.R.2d 265 [malpractice action against attorney who, in products liability action, had failed to obtain defective hammer that caused injury to plaintiff; plaintiff failed to establish substantial probability of causation so as to shift burden of proof; distinguishing Haft]; Ochoa v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1480, 1485, 72 C.R.2d 232 [plaintiff's expert's "feeling" that leak of some unspecified gas probably aggravated plaintiff's respiratory problems (because there was no other possible cause) was insufficient to rebut two defense experts who stated that, assuming methane gas leak in plaintiff's home, this exposure could not have caused her symptoms]; Galanek v. Wismar (1999) 68 C.A.4th 1417, 1424, 81 C.R.2d 236 [in attorney malpractice action based on spoliation of evidence, burden of proving causation shifted to defendants, because requiring plaintiff to establish causation would have allowed defendants to take advantage of lack of proof resulting from attorney's own negligence; following Haft].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
C. Normal Intervening Forces.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1196

[§ 1196] Normal Intervening Forces.

Where the defendant's negligent conduct is the stimulus for some other act or force that then causes the harm, there is no break in the chain of causation. The intervening force that is the normal reaction to the defendant's negligent conduct is characterized by Rest.2d, Torts §443 as a "normal intervening force," and it is not a superseding cause. (See Werkman v. Howard Zink Corp. (1950) 97 C.A.2d 418, 425, 218 P.2d 43; Brewer v. Teano (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1024, 1037, 47 C.R.2d 348, infra, §1218) [prosecution of plaintiff for leaving scene of accident was not normal intervening force].)

A frequent example is found in the acts of persons frightened by the defendant's negligence. In Champagne v. A. Hamburger & Sons (1915) 169 C. 683, 147 P. 954, defendant's crowded elevator fell as a result of negligent maintenance; plaintiff was thrown to the floor; the other passengers, panic-stricken, rushed out, trampling upon her and causing injuries. Held, the intervening act was the natural and probable result of the original negligence, and defendant was liable. (169 C. 689.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §444; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.5; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§644, 645.)

In Titlow v. Florence Trading Co. (1917) 35 C.A. 457, 170 P. 172, defendant negligently delivered gasoline (instead of kerosene) that plaintiff's wife placed in a kerosene lamp. Noticing the peculiar flame, she rushed out to call a neighbor, instead of attempting to get rid of the lamp. Held, defendant was liable for damages from the resulting explosion. (35 C.A. 459.)

The same principle is involved where the defendant's negligence puts someone's property or person in danger, and that person or a third person makes reasonable attempts at protection. In Haverstick v. Southern Pac. Co. (1934) 1 C.A.2d 605, 37 P.2d 146, a grass fire started through the negligence of the employees of defendant railroad, and plaintiff, without negligence, was injured while attempting to save his property. Held, his act was not a superseding cause, and he could recover not only for damage to his property, but also for his personal injuries. (1 C.A.2d 611.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §445; 42 A.L.R.2d 494 [liability of one negligently causing fire for injuries sustained in fighting the fire or attempting to save life or property].) (On the rescue rule, see infra, §1306.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

D. Independent Intervening Act.

1. Test of Foreseeability.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1197

[§ 1197] In General.

Where, subsequent to the defendant's negligent act, an independent intervening force actively operates to produce the injury, the chain of causation may be broken. It is usually said that if the risk of injury might have been reasonably foreseen, the defendant is liable, but that if the independent intervening act is highly unusual or extraordinary, not reasonably likely to happen and hence not foreseeable, it is a superseding cause, and the defendant is not liable. (See generally Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1910) 158 C. 499, 504, 111 P. 534; Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 8 C.2d 631, 637, 67 P.2d 678; Mosley v. L. Rev. 1, 10; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 496, 507; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 398; BAJI, No. 3.79.)

In Premo v. Grigg (1965) 237 C.A.2d 192, 46 C.R. 683, the court quoted Prosser: "The virtually unanimous agreement that the liability must be limited to cover only those intervening causes which lie within the scope of foreseeable risk, or have at least some reasonable connection with it, is based upon a recognition of the fact that the independent causes which may intervene to change the situation created by the defendant are infinite, and that as a practical matter responsibility simply cannot be carried to such lengths." (237 C.A.2d 197.)

In this wrongful death action, plaintiff was a part-time dishwasher and janitor in defendants' restaurant. While he and his wife were cleaning at night, they allowed their 4-year-old daughter to roam about. She received fatal burns from a bucket of extremely hot water drawn by plaintiff for his mop. Plaintiff's theory, that defendants were liable for permitting the hot water system to supply waters at excessive temperatures, was rejected. Applying the general criteria of Rest.2d, Torts §442, the harm brought about by the intervening force (plaintiff filling the bucket) was different in kind and extraordinary. (237 C.A.2d 198.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

D. Independent Intervening Act.

1. Test of Foreseeability.

b. Precise Act or Harm Need Not Be Foreseen.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1198

[§ 1198] Precise Act or Harm Need Not Be Foreseen.

The foreseeability required is of the risk of harm, not of the particular intervening act. In other words, the defendant may be liable if his or her conduct was "a substantial factor" in bringing about the harm, though the defendant neither foresaw nor should have foreseen the extent of the harm or the manner in which it occurred. (See Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 152, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665, citing the text; Monterrosa v. Grace Line (1949) 90 C.A.2d 826, 832, 204 P.2d 377; Osborn v. Whittier (1951) 103 C.A.2d 609, 616, 230 P.2d 132; Ferroggiaro v. Bowline (1957) 153 C.A.2d 759, 763, 315 P.2d 446; Bigbee v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 451, 455, 155 C.R. 545; Jackson v. Ryder Truck Rental (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1830, 1848, 20 C.R.2d 913; Rest.2d, Torts §435; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.5; 13 Hastings L. J. 160.)

This rule was applied in Gibson v. Garcia (1950) 96 C.A.2d 681, 216 P.2d 119, where defendant street railway maintained defective wooden poles at curbs, and defendant G, negligently striking the pole, caused it to fall on plaintiff. "Respondent [railway] appears to contend that it is absolved from liability since it was not foreseeable that a motorist would negligently collide with its pole with such force as to cause it to fall upon plaintiff. However, in order to prevent an intervening act from being a superseding cause which will relieve the defendant of responsibility for his negligence, the law does not inevitably require that the precise act be foreseeable. Numerous cases have declared that if the defendant's conduct exposes persons in the class to which plaintiff belongs to a foreseeable risk of injury, and his act or omission contributes substantially to injury of that nature actually occurring, he may be held liable notwithstanding the fact that an unforeseeable independent intervening act is a concurring cause." (96 C.A.2d 684.)

In Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 C.A.3d 205, 186 C.R. 847, the top of a tall tree in decedent's yard was dangerously close to defendant's uninsulated power line. Decedent decided to trim it himself and was electrocuted. In this wrongful death action the jury, instructed on foreseeability of intervening acts, but not on foreseeability of the harm, returned a special verdict finding defendant negligent but also determining that its negligence was not a legal cause of the death. Held, reversed for error in instructions. "If properly instructed, the jurors could only have concluded, even though they found SDG&E could not have reasonably foreseen the specific nature of decedent's negligent conduct, its original negligence in installing an uninsulated, high-voltage wire, or in failing to trim the tree away from the wire, exposed persons within decedent's class to a foreseeable risk of electrocution." (137 C.A.3d 211.) Here, the injury sustained was precisely the result to be expected when a person trimming a tree on his residential property is exposed to the high-voltage charge from a power line passing through its foliage. Thus, decedent was within the class of persons exposed to danger, and there was no factual issue of superseding cause. (137 C.A.3d 211.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
D. Independent Intervening Act.
2. Natural Forces and Animals.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1199

[§ 1199] Natural Forces and Animals.

An "act of God," i.e., an extraordinary natural force, that brings about harm different from that threatened by the defendant's negligence is a superseding cause; but if it merely increases or accelerates the results of the defendant's negligence, it is not. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§450, 451; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.5; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §666 et seq.; 6 Proof of Facts 3d 319 [Act of God]; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 406; 46 A.L.R.4th 1170 [liability for injury or damage from lightning].)

Thus, if a person starts a fire on his or her land, and it is communicated to other property by a sudden and unexpected rising of the wind after the fire was started, this may be a superseding cause. (McVay v. Central Calif. Inv. Co. (1907) 6 C.A. 184, 188, 91 P. 745.) But where a power company maintained its wires close to a tree, without protection, a sudden wind that blew branches against the wire, causing it to sag, was held not to be a superseding cause; the power company was liable for the death of a pedestrian coming in contact with the charged wire. (Rocca v. Tuolumne County Elec. Power & Light Co. (1926) 76 C.A. 569, 583, 245 P. 468.) And where a rubbish dump fire was maintained during high winds, its spread to distant property was foreseeable. (Osborn v. Whittier (1951) 103 C.A.2d 609, 616, 230 P.2d 132.) (See 24 A.L.R.2d 241, 271 [liability for spread of fire purposely and lawfully kindled]; 17 A.L.R.5th 547 [liability of property owner for spread of accidental fire].)

In cases involving alleged "unprecedented" rainstorms, it has generally been held that occasional heavy rainfall is a hazard that may reasonably be anticipated, and is not an act of God. (See Southern Pac. Co. v. Los Angeles (1936) 5 C.2d 545, 549, 55 P.2d 847; Jefferis v. Monterey Park (1936) 14 C.A.2d 113, 117, 57 P.2d 1374 [where one obstructs a natural watercourse, he or she may be liable for flooding though an extraordinary storm is a concurring cause]; Conlin v. Coyne (1937) 19 C.A.2d 78, 87, 64 P.2d 1123; Diamond Springs Lime Co. v. American River Constructors (1971) 16 C.A.3d 581, 598, 94 C.R. 200.)

In Royal Indem. Co. v. Midland Counties Public Service Corp. (1919) 42 C.A. 628, 183 P. 960, defendant negligently allowed a guy wire supporting a pole carrying power lines to become unfastened and uninsulated. A horse became entangled in the guy wire, broke it, and live wires came in contact with it, killing the horse and injuring the rider. Held, the accident should reasonably have been anticipated. A legally irresponsible act will usually not be a superseding cause. Thus, the impulsive acts of a child are frequently held not to break the chain. (*Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. a. Object Left in Path of Vehicle.

In this group of cases, the defendant negligently leaves some object or obstruction in a street, highway, or other place where vehicles are driven, and later a negligent driver runs into the object. Most of the cases uphold recovery.

In Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 C. 97, 29 P.2d 781, defendant negligently left an electric light pole in a roadway. A third person, whose car plaintiff was attempting to enter, negligently tried to start the vehicle, hurling the pole in the air so that it struck and injured plaintiff, who had been thrown onto the ground. Held, defendant was liable; the dangerous condition created by its negligence continued until it concurred with the other negligent act to cause the injury. (220 C. 98.)

In Burke v. W.R. Chamberlin & Co. (1942) 51 C.A.2d 419, 125 P.2d 120, stevedores negligently left blocks of wood in the path of a lumber carrier, which ran into them, catapulting one into space, and striking plaintiff. Held, this possibility should have been foreseen. (51 C.A.2d 423.)

In Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co. (1925) 74 C.A. 303, 240 P. 53, defendant negligently maintained a gas pipe line without adequate support. An automobile, negligently driven, struck and broke the pipe, and escaping gas ignited and burned plaintiff, a passenger in the automobile. Held, defendant was liable. (74 C.A. 308.) (See Sawyer v. Hooper (1926) 79 C.A. 395, 402, 249 P. 530.)

b. Obstruction Diverting Pedestrian From Safe Place.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1202

[§ 1202] Obstruction Diverting Pedestrian From Safe Place.

In this group of cases, the defendant negligently obstructs a sidewalk, safety zone, or other safe place, forcing the injured party to detour and come into the street or highway, exposed to traffic and to the risk of being struck by negligently driven vehicles. One view, stressing the distinction between an active cause and a passive "condition," is that the defendant is not liable for his creation of the condition because the intervening active force is a superseding cause. In Klarquist v. Chamberlain & Proctor (1932) 124 C.A. 398, 12 P.2d 664, defendant contractor, constructing a building, obstructed the sidewalk. Decedent, a pedestrian, was compelled to walk into the street, where he was killed by a collision between a negligently driven automobile and a parked car. Held, the contractor was not liable; the obstruction was merely an actual cause (under the "but for" rule) but not the proximate cause. (124 C.A. 401.) (See dictum in Sweet v. Los Angeles Ry. Co. (1947) 79 C.A.2d 195, 201, 179 P.2d 824, infra, §1205.)

This so-called distinction is, however, generally rejected. And later opinions either attempt to distinguish the Klarquist case on a reinterpretation of its facts (see Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 C. 97, 103, 29 P.2d 781; Inai v. Ede (1943) 59 C.A.2d 549, 553, 139 P.2d 76, infra, §1203, or repudiate its holding. Thus, in Jones v. South San Francisco (1950) 96 C.A.2d 427, 216 P.2d 25, the court said: "If the case stands for the broad proposition that one who negligently blocks a sidewalk, as a matter of law, is not liable to one who is injured by the negligence of a third person while walking about the obstruction, the case is wrong and should be disapproved." (96 C.A.2d 438.)

The correct view is that the defendant who creates the condition should foresee the danger of the subsequent negligent act. Thus, in Hansen v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1923) 64 C.A. 426, 221 P. 955, a water company negligently left a large dirt pile on a street close to the car tracks, without lights. Plaintiff, a pedestrian, was forced to skirt the obstruction, and was struck by a negligently operated streetcar which gave no warning signal. Held, the water company was liable. (64 C.A. 430.)

c. Illegal Parking.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1203

[§ 1203] Illegal Parking.

(1) Superseding Cause. In Newman v. Steuernagel (1933) 132 C.A. 417, 22 P.2d 780, defendant double-parked his car, a wrongful act, leaving his guest in it; another driver wanted to get out, and the guest started the car negligently and struck plaintiff. Held, defendant was not liable. If the car had been badly parked under such circumstances that it moved of itself, the proximate cause would clearly have been the original parking; but here there was an independent act of the guest in moving the machine, which was not reasonably to be anticipated. (132 C.A. 423.) (See McMillan v. Thompson (1934) 140 C.A. 437, 441, 35 P.2d 419; Arthur v. Santa Monica Dairy Co. (1960) 183 C.A.2d 483, 487, 6 C.R. 808, supra, §1191; 13 Hastings L. J. 160 [criticism].)

(2) Foreseeable Intervening Act. A jury's determination of the issue resulted in a somewhat doubtful conclusion in Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1942) 20 C.2d 141, 124 P.2d 51. Defendant F, an employee of defendant company, parked a truck between the curb and safety zone, and defendant M turned his jitney bus to avoid the truck and drove along the car tracks, striking plaintiff in a pedestrian zone. Defendant company contended that the jitney bus driver had time to turn back into the proper lane after passing the truck, and that his subsequent careless driving was a superseding cause. Held, the question was for the jury and a verdict for plaintiff was upheld. (20 C.2d 144.)

Recovery was properly upheld in Inai v. Ede (1941) 42 C.A.2d 521, 109 P.2d 400, Inai v. Ede (1943) 59 C.A.2d 549, 139 P.2d 76. Defendant T unlawfully parked his car, obstructing the traveled portion of a narrow highway, and plaintiff, in walking around it, was struck by defendant E's car after it had collided with the parked car. Held, it might be found that the negligent parking proximately contributed to plaintiff's injuries, and defendant T was liable. (42 C.A.2d 523.) (See Sipperly v. San Diego Yellow Cabs (1949) 89 C.A.2d 645, 652, 201 P.2d 543 [taxi driver who parked on wrong side of street at too great distance from curb should have anticipated that another driver might run into his cab].)

d. Accident Leaving Plaintiff Helpless.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1204

[§ 1204] Accident Leaving Plaintiff Helpless.

A situation frequently arises in which a negligent driver, by a collision or by running down the victim, leaves the victim helpless in the highway, and a second driver negligently runs down or otherwise becomes the immediate cause of the victim's injury or death. In Christensen v. Los Angeles Electrical Supply Co. (1931) 112 C.A. 629, 297 P. 614, the decedent was struck by defendant's negligently driven truck, and, before the driver could reach him to pick him up, another car ran over him. Held, the second "independent" act was "disconnected in time and nature," and no recovery could be had without showing which one of the automobiles actually caused the death. (112 C.A. 632.)

This reasoning is plainly unsound, because it ignores the question of foreseeability of the "independent," "disconnected" act. The correct rule is applied in Hill v. Peres (1934) 136 C.A. 132, 28 P.2d 946, where a first collision due to defendant's negligence threw decedent into the highway, and 15 minutes later another negligently driven car crashed into defendant's car and swung it against the decedent, causing her death. Held, the intervening act was foreseeable, and defendant was liable. (136 C.A.138, following Sawdey v. Producers' Milk Co. (1930) 107 C.A. 467, 479, 290 P. 684, on substantially similar facts, and distinguishing Christensen on point immaterial to proximate cause issue.) (See Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 87, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, disapproving Christensen.)

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
D. Independent Intervening Act.
4. Negligent Act or Omission of Third Person.
e. Intervening Negligent Driver.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1205

[§ 1205] In General.

The illustrations of foreseeable negligent automobile drivers in the preceding sections do not, of course, exhaust the possible situations, and the same principle is involved in other cases. In Ferroggiaro v. Bowline (1957) 153 C.A.2d 759, 315 P.2d 446, plaintiff alleged that defendant T negligently struck and rendered a highway intersection traffic signal inoperative, and that thereafter, plaintiff was injured by a collision between the car in which he was a passenger and another car, both negligently driving at the intersection. Held, a cause of action was stated against defendant T; it could reasonably have been anticipated that cars might collide at the intersection with nonfunctioning traffic signals. (153 C.A.2d 763.) (See Benton v. Sloss (1952) 38 C.2d 399, 405, 240 P.2d 575, supra, §1178 [negligent sale of defective secondhand car, foreseeable negligent operation]; George A. Hormel & Co. v. Maez (1979) 92 C.A.3d 963, 970, 155 C.R. 337 [following Ferroggiaro].)

A contrary result, which seems erroneous, was reached in Sweet v. Los Angeles Ry. Co. (1947) 79 C.A.2d 195, 179 P.2d 824. Plaintiff, a passenger in defendant's bus, had no seat, and was injured when the bus stopped suddenly to avoid striking an automobile driver who was negligently making a U-turn without signaling. Judgment for defendant was upheld. Although the opinion first takes the position that the bus driver was not negligent, the court then goes on to hold that if negligence were assumed (from overcrowding of the bus), defendant would nevertheless not be liable, because the intervening negligence of the other driver could not reasonably have been anticipated, and it was the sole proximate cause. (79 C.A.2d 200.)

Parker v. San Francisco (1958) 158 C.A.2d 597, 323 P.2d 108, presents essentially the same issue as Sweet and reaches the correct conclusion. Defendant's bus driver, finding the parking zone partly obstructed, parked 10 1/2 feet from the curb, in violation of a regulatory ordinance. Plaintiff, alighting, was struck by a negligently driven car. Held, defendant was liable. (158 C.A.2d 604.) (See Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 C.2d 232, 240, 244, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68, supra, §1062.)

In Schrimsher v. Bryson (1976) 58 C.A.3d 660, 130 C.R. 125, defendant, an intoxicated driver involved in a collision, was arrested by plaintiff highway patrolman. Plaintiff, while on the shoulder of the freeway engaged in his investigation of the accident, was injured when S, another drunken driver, struck defendant's car and knocked it into plaintiff. Held, defendant was not liable. It was foreseeable that a traffic officer would be on the scene to investigate the first collision, but the intervening negligent and criminal act of S and its effect could not reasonably have been anticipated, and S's act was therefore a superseding cause. (58 C.A.3d 665.) (See Whitton v. California (1979) 98 C.A.3d 235, 159 C.R. 405 [following Schrimsher]; 17 A.L.R.4th 897 [note on Whitton]; cf. Jackson v. Ryder Truck Rental (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1830, 1849, 20 C.R.2d 913 [it was reasonably foreseeable that driver who left negligently maintained truck would be hit by negligently operated vehicle; distinguishing Schrimsher and Whitton].)

2. Realizable Likelihood of Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1206

[§ 1206] Realizable Likelihood of Act.

In Bigbee v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1983) 34 C.3d 49, 192 C.R. 857, 665 P.2d 947, plaintiff was standing in a public telephone booth in the parking lot of a liquor store. An intoxicated driver lost control of her car, veered off the street into the parking lot, and crashed into the booth. The complaint alleged that plaintiff, seeing the approaching car, attempted to flee, but the booth was defectively designed or manufactured or was negligently installed or maintained, and the door stuck, trapping him inside. A settlement was reached with the driver and those who furnished liquor to her, and this action was brought against several companies allegedly responsible for the design, location, installation, and maintenance of the booth. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendants on the ground that the intoxicated driver's negligence was a superseding cause. Held, reversed; there was a triable issue of fact.

(a) Foreseeability as question of fact. The issue, whether the risk that a car might crash into the phone booth and injure plaintiff, was reasonably foreseeable. Under Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, supra, §914, foreseeability is ordinarily a question of fact and the question is whether there is room for a reasonable difference of opinion on foreseeability of this risk. (34 C.3d 56, 57.)

(b) Test of foreseeability. "[F]oreseeability is not to be measured by what is more probable than not, but includes whatever is likely enough in the setting of modern life that a reasonably thoughtful [person] would take account of it in guiding practical conduct." (34 C.3d 57, quoting Harper & James.) "One may be held accountable for creating even 'the risk of a slight possibility of injury if a reasonably prudent [person] would not do so' "; and what is required to be foreseeable is the general character of the event or harm, not its precise nature or manner of occurrence. (34 C.3d 57, 58.)

(c) Test applied here. Defendants placed a telephone booth, which was difficult to exit, in a parking lot 15 feet from the side of a major thoroughfare and near a driveway; there was evidence that a booth at this same location had previously been struck; in view of the expected swift traffic late at night, and the tendency of speeding and/or intoxicated drivers to lose control of their cars and crash into poles, buildings, or other objects along the road, the very accident could reasonably have been foreseen. (34 C.3d 58.)

(d) No superseding cause. Rest.2d, Torts §449 (infra, §1215), and Weirum make it clear that the negligent or reckless acts of the intoxicated driver do not preclude liability: the risk that a car might hit the booth could be found to constitute one of the hazards to which plaintiff was exposed. (34 C.3d 58, 59.)

One justice, concurring on the theory of liability for a sticky door, disagreed on the other issue, citing Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 63, 271 P.2d 23, supra, §840, for the point that foreseeability may sometimes be a question of law where the defendant's responsibility for the activities of third persons is involved. (34 C.3d 60, 61.) (See 17 A.L.R.4th 1308 [telephone company's liability for condition or location of booth].)

[§ 1207] Unknown Intervening Act.

In Schwartz v. California Gas & Elec. Corp. (1912) 163 C. 398, 125 P. 1044, defendant's employee negligently dropped an insulator on plaintiff's land. Plaintiff's horse stepped on it and was injured; but the evidence showed that the injury occurred at an entirely different place from that where it was dropped, raising the inference that someone had picked it up and left it in the other place. The court held that if this were true, defendant would not be liable. (163 C. 402.)

Schwartz was overruled in Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 213, 157 P.2d 372. Defendant negligently left a pile of crates on a public parkway. Two of them were displaced in some undetermined manner, and obstructed the sidewalk, hidden by weeds. Plaintiff's weed-mowing tractor struck them, causing his injuries. Held, defendant should have foreseen the possibility of crates falling off, being moved by children, or being pushed aside by pedestrians. (26 C.2d 216.) (See Devens v. Goldberg (1948) 33 C.2d 173, 181, 199 P.2d 943; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 411.)

The court in Mosley relied in part on Rest.2d, Torts §449 (see infra, §1215). The same Restatement rule was stressed in Reid & Sibell v. Gilmore & Edwards Co. (1955) 134 C.A.2d 60, 285 P.2d 364. Defendant, occupier of the basement and first floor of a building, negligently stored a large quantity of flammable paint thinner on its premises, which were separated from plaintiff's second floor area by oil-soaked wooden floors. Held, defendant was liable for the spread of a fire of unknown origin that destroyed plaintiff's goods. g. Manufacturer's Negligence and Intervening Negligence.
1. Intervening Party's Knowledge.

[§ 1208] Intervening Party's Knowledge.

The liability of the manufacturer or seller (supra, §1168) may be greatly restricted where an intervening party, e.g., a retailer or middleman, knows of the defect and nevertheless sells or supplies the goods to the ultimate user. The sale or supplying with this knowledge is an independent negligent act that may be regarded as unforeseeable and a superseding cause. In Stultz v. Benson Lumber Co. (1936) 6 C.2d 688, 59 P.2d 100, plaintiff, a painter, was injured when the main plank of his scaffolding collapsed. He sued, alleging that defendant lumber company knowingly furnished defective wood to his employer with knowledge of its intended use, and that defendant employer also knew that it was unsafe. There was obviously no cause of action against the employer, the remedy under the Workers' Compensation Act being exclusive. Held, the lumber company's demurrer should be sustained; the intervening negligence of the employer in using the defective plank with knowledge of its danger was a superseding cause. (6 C.2d 692.) (See Waterman v. Liederman (1936) 16 C.A.2d 483, 487, 60 P.2d 881; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 247; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 409.)

The same conclusion has been reached where the ultimate purchaser or user has knowledge of the defect; whether the defense is considered from the point of view of duty of the manufacturer to warn of concealed danger, or of proximate cause or contributory negligence, makes no difference in the result. (See Gutelius v. General Elec. Co. (1940) 37 C.A.2d 455, 458, 99 P.2d 682 [plaintiff knew her washing machine had defective stop lever, but used it and was injured when her hair caught and lever stuck]; Youtz v. Thompson Tire Co. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 672, 676, 116 P.2d 636.)

The early leading case of Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1910) 158 C. 499, 111 P. 534, took a different view. Defendant gas company was negligent in discovering and repairing a broken gas pipe, and gas escaped into a restaurant. The restaurant keeper kept his stove lighted, though told to extinguish all lights. The resulting explosion injured plaintiff, a customer. Held, defendant company was liable. Its negligence continued up to the time of the injury, and the independent wrongful act, in order to supersede the original primary cause, "must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage occasioned was in no way a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission." (158 C. 504.) (See 5 Cal. L. Rev. 178; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 247; for rule that strict liability of manufacturer cannot be excused by reason of negligent act or omission of retail dealer, see infra, §1480.)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1209

[§ 1209] Intervening Party's Failure To Inspect.

If the retailer or other intervening party had no knowledge of the defect, but could have discovered it by the exercise of reasonable care in inspection or testing, his or her failure to inspect is a negligent omission, and there is some earlier authority holding that this breaks the chain of causation. (See Catlin v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1916) 31 C.A. 597, 604, 161 P. 29 [defendant manufacturer negligently furnished gasoline instead of kerosene to grocer; grocer's negligent act in selling it without proper tests broke chain]; Solomon v. Red River Lumber Co. (1922) 56 C.A. 742, 754, 206 P. 948 [disapproved in principle by Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 213, 220, 157 P.2d 372, supra, §1207].)

This view is repudiated in Rest.2d, Torts §§393, 396 and by later California cases treating the question as one of fact. In Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. of Milwaukee v. Rogers Pattern & Aluminum Foundry (1946) 73 C.A.2d 442, 166 P.2d 401, defendant manufacturer regularly sent aluminum alloy castings to N Co. to be heat treated. On this occasion, a shipment was described in the purchase order as the usual aluminum alloy, but a few castings were of magnesium and, when the treatment (immersion in a chemical solution) was given, an explosion resulted. Held, defendant was liable despite the fact that N Co.'s manager noticed the slight difference in color and weight of the odd castings but nevertheless proceeded in the usual manner in reliance on the description. (73 C.A.2d 444.) (See Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 310, 319, 282 P.2d 12 [negligent manufacturer of bullets, intervening negligence of operator of shooting gallery]; *Gall v. [§ 1210] Intervening Negligent Act of Stranger.

In Poore v. Edgar Bros. Co. (1939) 33 C.A.2d 6, 90 P.2d 808, the driver bought a secondhand 1936 Ford from defendant, and plaintiff, while a passenger in the car, was cut by broken glass when the car collided with another vehicle. Plaintiff's theory was that shatter-proof glass was standard advertised equipment of 1936 Ford cars and would have prevented the injuries, and that defendant was negligent in knowingly replacing it with inferior glass. Held, assuming that this was true, the negligence could not be the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, because the accident in such a case would always be immediately and directly caused by an outside source with which the defendant had no connection. (33 C.A.2d 9.) The decision seems clearly wrong, because it assumes that an intervening act must necessarily be a superseding cause, whereas the act here was foreseeable, i.e., the very purpose of the safety glass was to avoid injury from a foreseeable intervening "blow from an outside source." (See Rest.2d, Torts §449; Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 213, 219, 157 P.2d 372, supra, §1207; infra, §1215; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 411.)

The correct view is declared in McEvoy v. American Pool Corp. (1948) 32 C.2d 295, 195 P.2d 783. Defendant negligently supplied dangerous chemicals for transportation by its service employee. Plaintiff, a guest in the employee's car, was burned by the chemicals following a collision with a hit and run driver. The court, following Rest., Torts §449 and Mosley, held that the intervening act of the stranger was foreseeable, "in view of the frequency of automobile accidents." (32 C.2d 298.) (See Reid & Sibell v. Gilmore & Edwards Co. (1955) 134 C.A.2d 60, 65, 285 P.2d 364, supra, §1207 [following principle declared in McEvoy].)

[§ 1211] Subcontractor's Negligence and Contractor's Intervening Negligence.

In Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 C.2d 857, 13 C.R. 521, 362 P.2d 345, supra, §1161, subcontractor C, engaged by general contractor W, negligently performed concrete work on plaintiff's swimming pool, which cracked, leaked, and allowed water to escape, resulting in damage to plaintiff's home. C contended that his negligence was not the proximate cause because W had knowledge of the cracking and leaking for 2 months before informing C; that W undertook to repair the pool himself and prevent the damage and did so negligently. Thus, the contention was that intervening negligent acts and omissions were superseding causes. Held, C's negligent act was a proximate cause.

(a) Under Rest.2d, Torts §447, an intervening negligent act does not supersede "if a reasonable man knowing the situation existing when the act of the third person is done would not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person so acted or the act is a normal response to a situation created by the defendant's conduct and the manner in which the intervening act is done is not extraordinarily negligent." (55 C.2d 864.)

(b) Under Rest.2d, Torts §452, "[t]he fact that a third person does not perform his duty to protect the plaintiff from harm, either because he makes no effort or through his negligence does not succeed, is not a superseding cause." (55 C.2d 864.)

(c) Stultz v. Benson Lumber Co. (1936) 6 C.2d 688, 59 P.2d 100, supra, §1208, is distinguishable on the ground that an intervening act done with full awareness of the danger may be considered "highly extraordinary." (55 C.2d 865.) (See Sabella v. Wisler (1963) 59 C.2d 21, 28, 27 C.R. 689, 377 P.2d 889; 4 Santa Clara Lawyer 141.)

Rest.2d, Torts §447 uses the phrase "normal consequence of" instead of "normal response to." Rest.2d, Torts §452(2) states that the original actor is relieved from liability where "because of lapse of time or otherwise," the duty and responsibility for the situation has been shifted to a third person.

D. Independent Intervening Act.

4. Negligent Act or Omission of Third Person.

i. Intervening Negligence of Hospital Staff.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1212

[§ 1212] Intervening Negligence of Hospital Staff.

In Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 C.A.3d 620, 128 C.R. 807, plaintiffs' 14-year-old son, watching a major league baseball game, was struck by a foul ball and rendered unconscious for about one minute. He received emergency first aid by one of the defendants, Dr. J, who operated the baseball club's medical facility, and was later sent to a hospital where he died 4 days later from an intracerebral hemorrhage. In this wrongful death action by his parents against the baseball club and Dr. J, a nonsuit disposed of the cause of action against the club, and the case proceeded on the issue of alleged malpractice of Dr. J. Plaintiffs' experts testified on direct examination that Dr. J was negligent in failing to properly diagnose the patient's condition and to send him to a hospital immediately after the injury; but under cross-examination they testified that there was still time to save him by emergency surgery at the time he was admitted to the hospital and that surgery was not performed. Defendants' counsel therefore argued that the intervening negligent hospital omission was a superseding cause, and the trial judge refused to instruct that it was not a defense. The jury verdict was for defendants. Held, reversed; refusal of the requested instruction was prejudicial error.

(a) BAJI, No. 3.79 on intervening cause refers to Rest.2d, Torts §452, and calls for a distinction between intervening conduct that is the immediate cause of the injury and conduct that merely constitutes the failure to prevent harm. The failure of a third person to act to prevent harm to the plaintiff threatened by the defendant's negligent conduct is not a superseding cause. "If the third person is under a duty to the other to take such action, his failure to do so will subject him to liability for his own negligence, which is concurrent with that of the actor, for the resulting harm which he has failed to prevent; but his failure to perform his duty does not relieve the original actor of liability for the results of his own negligence." (56 C.A.3d 636, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §452, Comment b.)

(b) The Restatement section was approved in Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 C.2d 857, 13 C.R. 521, 362 P.2d 345, supra, §1211. The section was thereafter amended to add the following: "Where, because of lapse of time or otherwise, the duty to prevent harm to another threatened by the actor's negligent conduct is found to have shifted from the actor to a third person, the failure of the third person to prevent such harm is a superseding cause." The Comments and illustrations indicate that this exception applies only in exceptional situations recognized by authorities in some jurisdictions; and the examples are not comparable to the situation in the instant case. (56 C.A.3d 638.) Moreover, Stewart applied only the original version of the Restatement section, and no subsequent decision of the court has approved the exception. (56 C.A.3d 639.)

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

D. Independent Intervening Act.

4. Negligent Act or Omission of Third Person.

j. Intervening Negligence of Attorney.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1213

[§ 1213] Intervening Negligence of Attorney.

Rest.2d, Torts §952, discussed in Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 C.A.3d 620, 128 C.R. 807, supra, §1212, was applied to attorneys' malpractice in Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 C.A.3d 174, 135 C.R. 838. Plaintiff wife engaged attorney W to file a complaint for divorce, and he did so, listing specific items of community property and adding a catch-all allegation covering unknown property. After the husband had answered and cross-complained, plaintiff substituted attorney S, who filed an answer to the cross-complaint. Although the husband's declaration mentioned his receipt of monthly payments of Air Force retirement pay, attorney S did not claim a community property interest in it, and plaintiff received her decree of divorce without reference to the pension. Plaintiff brought the present action against both attorneys, alleging that they so negligently represented her as to cause her to lose this community interest. Attorney W demurred, and the trial court, taking judicial notice of the file, sustained his demurrer and dismissed the action against him. The court's theory was that W had been relieved as attorney before the pretrial and trial proceedings, and therefore his alleged negligence could not have been a proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff. Held, reversed; the issue of proximate cause was one of fact for the trier of fact.

(a) The alleged failure of W to assert his client's community property interest in the federal pension could support a factual inference of negligence, under Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 C.3d 349, 118 C.R. 621, 530 P.2d 589, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §344. The alleged failure of S to do so was likewise negligence. (66 C.A.3d 178.) "We disagree with the dissent's conclusion that as a matter of law the standard of reasonable care does not require an attorney to conduct at least a cursory investigation of the facts bearing on his client's claim to relief in the early stages of litigation. Here nothing more than a careful client interview would have disclosed the pension. In our view, the question must be treated as one of fact and not law. Otherwise, it is unduly influenced by the personal view of the practice of law held by an individual judge." (66 C.A.3d 178.)

(b) The intervening act of S would be a superseding cause, relieving W of liability, only if it was highly unusual or extraordinary and hence not reasonably foreseeable. (66 C.A.3d 178, citing the text.) And reasonable foreseeability was a question of fact that could not be determined on demurrer. (66 C.A.3d 178.)

(c) Under Rest.2d, Torts §452 (1), approved in Fish, the failure of S to prevent the harm flowing from W's negligence was not a superseding cause unless, as stated in subdivision (2), unusual circumstances shifted the duty to S to prevent the harm. This raises an issue of public policy not previously considered in California: "Is the substitution of another lawyer for one whose prior representation of the client in the matter has been negligent such an exceptional circumstance that all duty and responsibility for the prevention of harm normally flowing from the negligence passes to substituted counsel?" (66 C.A.3d 179.)

(d) The answer is not. "Except for a still developing certification of a few specialties, the bar supplies no means of assessing the qualifications of its members. A member of the public seeking the services of a lawyer thus has no real means of determining his capability. Nor has a member of the public engaging the services of a lawyer any real means of gauging the quality of service performed. Where a lawyer originally retained is relieved and another substituted, the client is likely to have some general dissatisfaction with the quality of service of the original lawyer but is unlikely to be aware of any specific reason for the dissatisfaction although a legitimate reason exists. The same lack of means to assess lawyer quality which results in the retention of a negligent lawyer in the first instance may well result in his being replaced by another negligent lawyer when the client acquires the vague uneasiness that the first is not doing what he should." (66 C.A.3d 180.)

(e) Just as a negligent physician is not relieved of the consequences of his lack of care when a subsequent physician could have avoided the injury, a negligent lawyer is not so relieved when replaced by another. "True enough, the new lawyer assumes full responsibility for the matter and has exclusive control over it; but so also does the new physician assume full responsibility and have full control." (66 C.A.3d 181.)

The dissenting justice took the position that an attorney representing the plaintiff in a contested divorce action does not have the duty of determining what is community property at the outset of the litigation, and that W followed the accepted practice in making his general catch-all allegation on unknown property (66 C.A.3d 187, 189); that the attorney-client relationship and legal services are so distinct that the physician-patient analogy is inappropriate and unwise (66 C.A.3d 187, 188); and that the majority opinion tells the members of the family law bar that they must be "swamis with soothsaying capability as to the competency of subsequent counsel without a say in the selection of subsequent legal representation." (66 C.A.3d 190.)

5. Intentional Act of Third Person.
a. Unforeseeable Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1214

[§ 1214] Unforeseeable Act.

Some cases take the view that an intervening criminal act or intentional tort is less foreseeable than an intervening negligent act, and ordinarily is to be regarded as a superseding cause. (See Angelis v. Foster (1938) 24 C.A.2d 541, 543, 75 P.2d 650 [negligent failure to provide safe transportation for school child; intervening act of intoxicated automobile driver, who continued course after seeing plaintiff, was superseding cause]; Blunk v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1950) 97 C.A.2d 229, 232, 217 P.2d 494, [negligent littering of employees' change room; deliberate placing of brake shoe and tube in dangerous position was superseding cause].)

In Gonzalez v. Derrington (1961) 56 C.2d 130, 14 C.R. 1, 363 P.2d 1, the court employed proximate cause analysis rather than duty analysis (supra, §837). Two men, B and C, bought gasoline in an open five-gallon can from a service station of defendant Union Oil Co. The station was owned and operated by defendant D, and the gasoline was given to them by defendant L, an employee. B and C threw the gasoline into a bar and set fire to it, causing injuries and deaths, for which these actions were filed. Held, judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdicts for plaintiffs, affirmed. (a) Negligence was established by proof of violation of the Los Angeles Municipal Code, which prohibited sale of gasoline from public gas stations except into gas tanks or all-metal covered containers of not over two gallons' capacity. (b) But this was not the proximate cause of the injuries; the intentional misconduct of B and C was an independent intervening cause, neither foreseeable nor one of the dangers the ordinance was designed to protect against. "There is nothing about purchasing gasoline in an open 5-gallon can that makes it more likely that it will be used intentionally to injure others than that purchased in a closed 2-gallon can." (56 C.2d 133.) (See Ewart v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 163, 46 C.R. 631, infra, §1216.)

In Lopez v. McDonald's Corp. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 495, 238 C.R. 436, supra, §1131, where a gunman entered defendant's restaurant and killed a number of people, the court held that, assuming the existence of a duty to provide a security guard, in the light of the record, the failure to do so could not be considered a substantial factor in causing the harm: "[I]t paints a portrait of a demented, mentally unbalanced man, bent on murder and self-destruction, who viewed the nearby McDonald's restaurant with his binoculars from his apartment, kissed his wife goodbye and stated he was going 'hunting for humans'. Huberty set out to kill the most people possible and went to the restaurant, unconcerned with detection, dressed in camouflage fatigue pants and heavily armed. Upon entry into the restaurant, he immediately began firing his weapons indiscriminately at everything and everyone in sight, reloading his weapons periodically and walking up and down the aisles slaughtering those he found still alive. His only apparent motive was killing." (193 C.A.3d 516.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

D. Independent Intervening Act.

5. Intentional Act of Third Person.

b. Likelihood of Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1215

[§ 1215] Likelihood of Act.

The view set forth in the preceding section--that an intervening criminal act is by its very nature a superseding cause--is rejected by many courts and writers as an illogical and undesirable formula. They point out that in a large number of situations the very reason why the defendant's conduct is negligent is that it creates the risk of the particular intervening criminal act, and that it is absurd to invoke the very fact that establishes negligence to absolve the negligent person from liability.

Rest.2d, Torts §449 sets forth the modern rule as follows: "If the likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes the actor negligent, such an act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious or criminal does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused thereby." And Comment b states: "The happening of the very event the likelihood of which makes the actor's conduct negligent and so subjects the actor to liability, cannot relieve him from liability. The duty to refrain from the act committed or to do the act omitted is imposed to protect the other from this very danger. To deny recovery because the other's exposure to the very risk, from which it was the purpose of the duty to protect him resulted in harm to him, would be to deprive the other of all protection and to make the duty a nullity." (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.5; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §540 et seq.; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 403; 9 A.L.R. 3d 1172 [tort liability of insurer insuring life policy to beneficiary without insurable interest, where beneficiary kills or injures insured].)

Most California cases have fully accepted this theory. (See Lillie v. Thompson (1947) 332 U.S. 459, 68 S.Ct. 140, 92 L.Ed. 73 [railroad telegrapher was negligently placed in isolated building at night; railroad was liable for assault by stranger]; *Terrell v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
D. Independent Intervening Act.
5. Intentional Act of Third Person.
c. Act Not Highly Extraordinary.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1216

[§ 1216] Act Not Highly Extraordinary.

In nearly all of the California opinions dealing with intervening negligent acts, the test of superseding cause has been foreseeability. (See supra, §1201 et seq.) This test is set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §447(a). But §447(b) states a distinct additional test: Whether "a reasonable man knowing the situation existing when the act of the third person was done would not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person had so acted."

Comment b explains: "The actor at the time of his negligence may have no reason to realize that a third person might act in the particular negligent manner in which the particular third person acts, because his mind is not centered upon the sequence of events which may result from his act and therefore he has no reason to realize that it will create the situation which the third person's intervening act makes harmful. However, when the situation is known to exist, the likelihood that some negligent act may make it dangerous may be easily realizable or even obvious." (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §20.5.)

In Ewart v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 163, 46 C.R. 631, the court, emphasizing the distinction between the two tests and the importance of the second one, reversed a judgment for defendants for error in instructing solely on the first.

(a) Decedent was employed by M, constructing a 30-inch water pipeline underground, with covering earth tamped, and asphalt paving. Covered manholes left at intervals were not airtight. The line crossed utility lines of defendant Gas Co., which maintained a regular inspection service to protect its property and the public. Defendant E, subcontractor to compact the covering earth, damaged a gas connection that leaked 800,000 cubic feet of gas before the leak was discovered. The evidence supported an inference that the gas--odorless methane--filtered through the earth into the manhole and pipe. While the pipe was being cleaned, an explosion occurred, and decedent was killed inside the pipe by carbon monoxide poisoning, a product of the explosion. (237 C.A.2d 166.)

(b) From these facts, defendant E could have been found negligent in damaging the gas pipe while compacting; and defendant Gas Co. could have been found negligent in that, while it promptly notified M of the leak, it gave no information as to the quantity of gas that escaped, made no attempt to determine where the gas had gone, and made no tests of the nearly completed water pipe. But M, decedent's employer (hence not liable in tort), was an intervening actor guilty of almost unbelievable negligence, including violation of industrial safety orders: permitting men to smoke inside the pipe after knowledge of the leak, making no tests for gas, having no safety regulations or safety instructions, and failing to provide blowers to ventilate the pipe. (237 C.A.2d 167.)

(c) "The jury may have felt that it was not foreseeable as a probability that [M] would be as callously indifferent to the safety of its employees in the pipe as the evidence justified it in finding. On the other hand if the jury had been permitted to apply both applicable tests of the Restatement ... a different result might well have been reached." (237 C.A.2d 172.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE

D. Independent Intervening Act.
5. Intentional Act of Third Person.
d. Act of Responsible Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1217

[§ 1217] Act of Responsible Child.

(1) Unforeseeable Act. The irresponsible act of a child will not break the chain. (See supra, §1200.) But where the child is old enough to be deemed responsible, the earlier cases tended to apply the formula (supra, §1214) that an intentionally wrongful act is normally unforeseeable and a superseding cause. In Hale v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1919) 42 C.A. 55, 183 P. 280, defendant stored dynamite caps in a tin box on a shelf in an open porch. An 8-year-old boy entered, pried open the box, took a number of caps, and gave some to plaintiff, a 7-year-old boy, who was injured while playing with them. Held, assuming that defendant was negligent in leaving the caps thus exposed, the proximate cause of the injury was the theft knowingly committed by the other boy, who testified that he knew his act was wrongful. (42 C.A. 59.) (See Frace v. Long Beach City High School Dist. (1943) 58 C.A.2d 566, 572, 137 P.2d 60 [intervening theft by high school boy]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §608 et seq.)

(2) Foreseeable Act. The later cases tend to escape from the formula by finding foreseeability in the particular situation.

In Katz v. Helbing (1928) 205 C. 629, 271 P. 1062, the complaint alleged that defendant contractors left mortar in a box on a sidewalk, to which small boys had access, and that plaintiff was struck by a handful of mortar thrown by a child. The court held that a cause of action was stated. (205 C. 635.) At the trial, a stronger case was presented, the evidence showing that defendants had notice of the fact that the children were playing with the lime. (Katz v. Helbing (1932) 215 C. 449, 452, 10 P.2d 1001.)

In Stockwell v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University (1944) 64 C.A.2d 197, 148 P.2d 405, plaintiff, on a university campus, was injured by BB shot fired by an unidentified boy. Defendants, university authorities, had knowledge of children hunting there, although the land was a game refuge. Held, the jury could consider whether defendants were negligent in failing to police the area adequately, and whether the intervening act was foreseeable. (64 C.A.2d 200.)

In Salas v. Whittington (1946) 77 C.A.2d 90, 174 P.2d 886, defendant manufacturer, with knowledge of danger to children from explosive materials, left his fence unlocked. Children found a can of shellac and alcohol, took it to plaintiff's adjoining yard, and ignited it, causing injuries to plaintiff, an 8-year-old boy. Held, the intervening act of the child who carried the can away did not break the chain of causation. (77 C.A.2d 95.) (See Marino v. Valenti (1953) 118 C.A.2d 830, 845, 259 P.2d 84 [comparing Hale and Katz]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§610, 611.)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1218

[§ 1218] Arrest and Prosecution by Authorities.

In Brewer v. Teano (1996) 40 C.A.4th 1024, 47 C.R.2d 348, plaintiff filed a complaint against an estate alleging that the decedent negligently and recklessly drove his car so that it repeatedly collided with plaintiff's car, and sought compensation not only for damage to plaintiff's car and for physical injury and emotional distress, but also for expenses stemming from his ensuing arrest and prosecution for leaving the scene (as a result of his fear of the decedent). The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. Held, reversed and remanded. The complaint was "a sufficient conventional pleading for physical and emotional injury." (40 C.A.4th 1029.) On the other hand, plaintiff failed to state a cause of action based on his prosecution, which operated as a superseding cause. Further, the complaint did not state facts sufficient to justify a conclusion that the arrest was a superseding cause as a matter of law.

(a) Liability for damages from prosecution. It cannot be said that the intervening force consisting of the prosecution of formal criminal charges against plaintiff was "foreseeable" from the decedent's conduct, however characterized. The harm from that proceeding was different in kind from that which could be expected to result from the kind of conduct alleged. It was an extraordinary, rather than a normal, result of the decedent's act. The decisions of prosecutors to file a complaint against plaintiff, and of the magistrate or grand jury to hold him to answer felony charges, operated independently from anything that the decedent did; they could not be described as a normal result of his negligent driving. Whether the decedent's conduct was negligent or deliberate, it would be an unwarranted extension of liability to hold the estate liable for these remote official acts of independent public officers. Thus, as a matter of law, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the damages he suffered as a result of the filing of the criminal charges and the subsequent proceedings in the criminal case. (40 C.A.4th 1037.)

(b) Liability for damages from arrest. On plaintiff's claim for damages for his arrest, the principal issue, as before, is superseding cause. Depending on the circumstances, an arrest by police may or may not be a superseding cause, cutting off liability for what has gone before. (40 C.A.4th 1037, citing Pool v. Oakland (1986) 42 C.3d 1051, 1064, 232 C.R. 528, 728 P.2d 1163, supra, §1033.) But unlike the issue of superseding cause as it relates to the criminal prosecution, where enough may be gleaned to decide the legal issues, "the complaint is too sparse to justify a conclusion that the arrest was superseding as a matter of law." Resolution of the causation issue will have to await development of the facts. (40 C.A.4th 1037.)

XII. NEGLIGENCE: PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE
D. Independent Intervening Act.
6. Suicide.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1219

[§ 1219] Suicide.

In Tate v. Canonica (1960) 180 C.A.2d 898, 5 C.R. 28, supra, §461, an action for wrongful death from acts causing emotional distress leading to suicide, the second count of the complaint was based on negligence, and raised a question of first impression in California: whether suicide is a superseding cause. Earlier cases held that it is, but the modern view of the Restatement and text writers was adopted: When the insanity prevents the decedent from realizing the nature of his or her act or controlling his or her conduct, it is no more a superseding cause than unconsciousness or delirium brought about by an injury.

"[W]here the negligent wrong only causes a mental condition in which the injured person is able to realize the nature of the act of suicide and has the power to control it if he so desires, the act then becomes an independent intervening force and the wrongdoer cannot be held liable for the death. On the other hand, if the negligent wrong causes mental illness which results in an uncontrollable impulse to commit suicide, then the wrongdoer may be held liable for the death. Some cases speak of 'insanity,' and of 'delirium or frenzy,' and take the view that if the defendant knew what he was doing, the suicide is an independent intervening cause. We think, in the light of modern knowledge as to mental illness, that this view is too narrow. It should not make any difference that the defendant 'knew what he was doing.' If defendant is to avoid liability, the decedent's act must be voluntary, not in that sense but in the sense that he could, in spite of his mental illness, have decided against suicide and refrained from killing himself." (180 C.A.2d 915.)

The court suggested, but did not decide, that even if the suicide were voluntary and hence an independent intervening act, the defendant could be liable if, under the particular circumstances, it was a reasonably foreseeable result of defendant's wrongdoing. (180 C.A.2d 918.) (See Lucas v. Long Beach (1976) 60 C.A.3d 341, 349, 351, 131 C.R. 470 [distinguishing Tate; suicide of 17-year-old boy in juvenile detention cell under influence of drugs an unforeseeable act and was superseding cause]; *Grant v. CHAPTER IX - Torts

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
A. Circumstances Justifying Vicarious Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1220

[§ 1220] Circumstances Justifying Vicarious Liability.

(1) General Rule. Tort liability of a person for the acts of others does not exist unless there is some relationship or other circumstance justifying the imposition of this liability. (See Matthias v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 752, 755, 67 C.R. 511, supra, §865, citing the text; Rubio v. Swiridoff (1985) 165 C.A.3d 400, 404, 211 C.R. 338, citing the text; Thomas v. Intermedics Orthopedics (1996) 47 C.A.4th 957, 962, 55 C.R.2d 197, supra, §976 [discussing "captain of the ship" negligence doctrine of surgeon's liability for not assisting persons]; Rest.2d, Torts §315; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.1 et seq.; 57B Am.Jur.2d, Negligence (2004 ed.), §1096 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Liability for Acts of Others, Chap. 3.)

(2) Vicarious Liability Present. In the following situations, vicarious liability is generally recognized by common law or statute:

(a) Special Relationship Between Defendant and Wrongdoer. Where a special relationship exists between the defendant and the wrongdoer, such as agency or employment (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §163 et seq.), joint enterprise (see infra, §1235), and in some situations, employer and independent contractor (see infra, §1236 et seq.). (See also Rest.2d, Torts §319 [duty of those in charge of person having dangerous propensities]; 42 A.L.R.4th 586 [liability of physician to third person for prescribing drug to known drug addict]; 43 A.L.R.4th 153 [liability of physician to third person for failure to disclose driving-related impediment]; 25 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability of adult assailant's family for physical assault on third party].)

(b) Special Relationship Between Defendant and Plaintiff. Where a special relationship exists between the defendant and the plaintiff, so that the defendant owes an affirmative duty of care toward the plaintiff; e.g., landowner and person coming on the land. (See Rest.2d, Torts §344; supra, §1129).

(c) Statutory Liability. Where a statute imposes this liability; e.g., the limited liability of a parent for torts of a child (see infra, §1229 et seq.), or an owner for negligence of one driving a car with permission (see infra, §1260 et seq.), and of an insurance company for negligence of an insured driver (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §§309, 310).

(d) Dangerous Instrumentality. Where the defendant entrusts a dangerous instrumentality to an improper person. (See infra, §§1221, 1222.)

(3) No Vicarious Liability. In the following situations, vicarious liability is not generally recognized:

(a) Family Relationship. Family relationships normally do not give rise to vicarious liability. Thus, a parent is not, as such, liable for the torts of his or her child except by statute in special situations and to a limited extent (see infra, §1227 et seq.). And one spouse is not liable for the torts of another. (Family C. 1000.) (On liability of community property, see 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §175 et seq.)

In Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1008, 272 C.R. 222, defendant's husband mounted a sniper attack from the roof of his home, and injured a number of passing motorists, including plaintiffs, before taking his own life. Plaintiffs sued defendant widow, alleging that decedent husband was "a human time bomb" with a long history of erratic and violent behavior and an arsenal of weapons; and that defendant was negligent in permitting decedent to occupy the house without doing anything to protect or warn others in the zone of danger. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) No special relationship was shown, for decedent's behavior was beyond the control of anyone, and the type of attack was not foreseeable. (222 C.A.3d 1008.)

(b) Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 C.A.3d 206, 169 C.R. 282, supra, §1058, is distinguishable. In that case defendant wife, who allegedly knew of her husband's history of child molestation, invited minor girls to use the swimming pool in their home while she was at work. (222 C.A.3d 1014.)

(b) Landlord-tenant Relationship. The landlord and tenant relationship also falls outside the vicarious liability rules; a landlord is not liable for the negligence of a tenant. (Mundt v. Nowlin (1941) 44 C.A.2d 414, 415, 112 P.2d 782; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 725 [argument that landlord has duty of care in selection of tenant, hence should be liable for foreseeable injuries inflicted by a foreseeably dangerous tenant].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
B. Entrustment of Dangerous Instrumentality.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1221

[§ 1221] In General.

Even where no duty arises by reason of a relationship (see supra, §1220), it has been recognized that entrusting an instrumentality to an improper or incompetent person, under circumstances that indicate a likelihood of misuse, may be grounds for liability. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§308, 390; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.10; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §330.) The principal example is entrustment of a motor vehicle to an incompetent, reckless, or intoxicated driver. (See infra, §1222.)

In Jacoves v. United Merchandising Corp. (1992) 9 C.A.4th 88, 11 C.R.2d 468, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against defendant sporting goods store (Big 5) for negligently selling a firearm to their son Jonathan. The complaint alleged that Jonathan first attempted to buy a handgun, but did not do so when he learned that there was a statutory waiting period. Later, Jonathan returned and was sold a rifle and ammunition (for which there was no waiting period) and instructed on its use, even though he appeared youthful, confused, distraught, and trembling. On the same day, he used the rifle to commit suicide. Held, the allegations failed to state a cause of action for negligent entrustment.

"In order to impose a duty on Big 5 to refuse to sell the rifle and ammunition to Jonathan, the complaint must allege that Big 5 knew, or had reason to know, that Jonathan was reasonably likely to use the rifle to harm himself. The complaint does not allege that Big 5 knew Jonathan intended to commit suicide with the rifle. Nor are facts alleged which can reasonably be said to have given Big 5 reason to know that Jonathan intended to commit suicide. The facts, if proved, establish only that Jonathan, a young adult, wanted to purchase a firearm without waiting two weeks for its delivery and was confused, distraught and trembling. A salesclerk in a sporting goods store cannot reasonably be expected to have concluded, from these observations alone, that Jonathan intended to commit suicide. Jonathan's alleged demeanor was not on such a scale so as to manifest to the ordinary observer that Jonathan was mentally impaired, incompetent or irresponsible with regard to the handling of firearms. In the circumstances alleged in this case, there was, as a matter of law, no reason for Big 5 to anticipate a violent act on the part of Jonathan." (9 C.A.4th 118.) (See Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 C.A.4th 253, 260, 261, 23 C.R.2d 490 [action against parents whose adult son took his rifle from parents' house and accidentally shot plaintiff; causal connection between bailment of rifle and harm suffered was too tenuous to state claim for negligent entrustment]; 37 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [negligent entrustment of firearm]; 39 A.L.R.4th 517 [liability for providing firearm or ammunition to adult who shoots another]; on permitting child access to firearm, see infra, §§1233, 1234.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
B. Entrustment of Dangerous Instrumentality.
2. Incompetent, Reckless, or Intoxicated Driver.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1222

[§ 1222] In General.

Liability of a defendant who permits an incompetent, reckless, or intoxicated person to drive his or her motor vehicle has long been recognized. (See Rocca v. Steinmetz (1923) 61 C.A. 102, 109, 214 P. 257; Kanananako v. Badalamente (1931) 119 C.A. 231, 233, 6 P.2d 338; Knight v. Gosselin (1932) 124 C.A. 290, 293, 12 P.2d 454; McCalla v. Grosse (1941) 42 C.A.2d 546, 550, 109 P.2d 358; Jones v. Ayers (1963) 212 C.A.2d 646, 652, 28 C.R. 223 [entrustment to 15-year-old boy with only instruction permit]; Reclusado v. Mangum (1964) 228 C.A.2d 8, 10, 39 C.R. 157 [same]; Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. v. Abdullah (1979) 94 C.A.3d 81, 91, 156 C.R. 254, citing the text [entrustment by used car dealer]; Allen v. Toledo (1980) 109 C.A.3d 415, 420, 167 C.R. 270, citing the text; Dodge Center v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 332, 338, 244 C.R. 789, citing the text; White v. Inbound Aviation (1999) 69 C.A.4th 910, 920, 82 C.R.2d 71 [evidence supported finding that FAA-licensed pilot who had not received high-altitude training was "incompetent"]; 7A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Automobile and Highway Traffic §790 et seq.; 14 Hastings L. J. 436; 41 So. Cal. L. Rev. 440; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 539; 30 A.L.R.4th 838 [negligent entrustment of vehicle--where owner admits liability on another theory]; 91 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability for entrusting automobile to one who is known to be intoxicated or known to be excessive user of intoxicants]; BAJI, No. 13.80; CACI, No. 724.)

In Caccamo v. Swanston (1949) 94 C.A.2d 957, 212 P.2d 246, a husband and wife were business partners and registered coowners of an automobile. The wife left the car while her husband was in the driver's seat and the engine was running, with knowledge of his intoxication. Held, she was liable for injuries suffered by plaintiffs in the ensuing accident that killed the husband, and the statutory limitations on amount recoverable (infra, §1261) were inapplicable. (94 C.A.2d 967.)

The fact that the driver was unlicensed makes a prima facie case of negligence in entrusting the car. (Owens v. Carmichael's U-Drive Autos (1931) 116 C.A. 348, 352, 2 P.2d 580; see Shifflette v. Walkup Drayage & Warehouse Co. (1946) 74 C.A.2d 903, 907, 169 P.2d 996 [citing Veh.C. 14606, prohibiting owner of vehicle from authorizing unlicensed person to drive]; Nault v. Smith (1961) 194 C.A.2d 257, 267, 14 C.R. 889; 55 A.L.R.4th 1100 [negligent entrustment of vehicle to unlicensed driver].) But a driver is not incompetent merely because he or she does not have liability insurance. (Skerlec v. Wells Fargo Bank (1971) 18 C.A.3d 1003, 1008, 96 C.R. 434.)

In Grafton v. Mollica (1965) 231 C.A.2d 860, 42 C.R. 306, defendant brought his car to a service station for lubrication, and asked plaintiff, the attendant, to check the automatic transmission fluid. This necessitated starting of the engine, and defendant did so, leaving his 21/2-year-old son on the front seat. Plaintiff got in front of the car and lifted the hood, whereupon it gave a lurch forward and crushed him against a wall. The trial judge directed a verdict for defendant on the theory that defendant owed no duty to control the acts of a third person. Held, reversed: "We consider that leaving an active 21/2-year-old boy alone in the front seat of an automobile with the engine running, is at least comparable to placing a loaded firearm in his hands." (231 C.A.2d 863.)

In Mettelka v. Superior Court (1985) 173 C.A.3d 1245, 1249, 219 C.R. 697, the car was coowned by the father and the incompetent driver. Held, a cause of action could be stated for negligent entrustment by the father. (173 C.A.3d 1249.)

The theory of these cases has so far been applied only to the supplier of the car; an automobile financing agency cannot be held liable. (Drake v. Morris Plan Co. (1975) 53 C.A.3d 208, 215, 125 C.R. 667; Altman v. Morris Plan Co. (1976) 58 C.A.3d 951, 959, 130 C.R. 397.)

b. No Duty To Inquire into Competency.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1223

[§ 1223] No Duty To Inquire into Competency.

In Osborn v. Hertz Corp. (1988) 205 C.A.3d 703, 252 C.R. 613, E, while sober, and holding a valid driver's license, rented a car from defendant Hertz. Later, while drunk, he drove the car into a tree, injuring plaintiff, his passenger. Plaintiff sued defendant on the theory of negligent entrustment, contending that defendant should have inquired into E's competency, and that the inquiry would have disclosed two convictions for drunken driving (the most recent, 7 years before the accident). Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Liability of negligent entrustment of a car to an incompetent driver is well established, and a rental agency by statute is prohibited from renting to an unlicensed driver. (205 C.A.3d 709, citing Veh.C. 14608.) However, because E had a valid license and was sober when he rented the car, no basis existed for liability under these rules. (205 C.A.3d 710.)

(b) No authority supports plaintiff's contention that defendant should have questioned E on his prior record of drunk driving. (205 C.A.3d 710.) And if the question had been asked and answered, there is no authority for a rule that would make it practically impossible for a person previously convicted of drunk driving to rent a car. (205 C.A.3d 711.)

(c) Plaintiff's final theory was that a rental agency is under a duty to screen out potential drunk drivers by asking questions and warning the driver of the dangers of driving while drunk. (205 C.A.3d 713.) But defendant acted reasonably in relying on E's license as a screening device. (205 C.A.3d 714.)

c. Seller of Vehicle Is Not Liable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1224

[§ 1224] Seller of Vehicle Is Not Liable.

In Dodge Center v. Superior Court (1988) 199 C.A.3d 332, 244 C.R. 789, an adult with an expired driver's license and a driving record with several Vehicle Code violations bought a car from Dodge. He told Dodge employees that he had a license, and no employee was aware of the truth. While driving the car he collided with a motorcycle. Plaintiffs, the motorcycle riders, sustained injuries, and brought this suit against Dodge. Held, mandamus issued directing the trial court to grant Dodge's motion for summary judgment.

(a) Both the common law cause of action for negligent entrustment, and the statutory action under Veh.C. 14606, require a showing of knowledge of the incapacitating condition. (199 C.A.3d 338, citing Johnson v. Casetta (1961) 197 C.A.2d 272, 17 C.R. 81.) And Veh.C. 14606 "refers only to the act of allowing another to drive a vehicle owned by the entrustor or under his control; it does not refer to a sales transaction in which ownership and control pass from the seller to the purchaser." (199 C.A.3d 339.)

(b) "Although it has been suggested that the sale of an automobile to an unlicensed and inexperienced person with actual or presumptive knowledge that the incompetent is going to drive it may form a basis for imposing tort liability for negligent entrustment under some circumstances ... , no California decision actually appears to have based such liability upon the automobile transaction. ... The California decisions involve loans or permissive use transactions where the entrustor retains an ownership interest in the vehicle." (199 C.A.3d 339.)

(c) In the absence of statute, to impose on the seller a duty of inquiry as to the buyer's driver's license status would violate the general principle that "it may be presumed that every person will obey the law. ... It follows that a retail seller of motor vehicles may normally assume that a purchaser is either legally entitled to drive the vehicle, or, if not himself qualified, will arrange for a legally qualified driver's services." (199 C.A.3d 342; on duty to inquire into competency, see supra, §1223.) (See Johnson v. Casetta (1961) 197 C.A.2d 272, 276, 17 C.R. 81 [used car dealer's sale of automobile to unlicensed person with virtually no driving experience].)

2. Incompetent, Reckless, or Intoxicated Driver.
d. Gift of Vehicle.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1225

[§ 1225] Gift of Vehicle.

In Talbott v. Csakany (1988) 199 C.A.3d 700, 245 C.R. 136, decedent's estate alleged that defendant C gave an automobile to their daughter and her husband as a wedding present, with knowledge that the husband was a habitual drunken driver; and that the husband, driving while intoxicated, killed decedent. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants affirmed, although the opinion recognizes that under some circumstances a cause of action based on such a gift could be stated.

(a) A person who lends a car to another who is known to the lender as an incompetent driver may be liable for negligent entrustment. (199 C.A.3d 703; see supra, §1222.)

(b) The question of liability of a person who gives a car has been the subject of conflicting decisions in other jurisdictions. A Tennessee case and other cases take the position that in the absence of a relationship constituting legal control, liability should be imposed only if the receiving party is intoxicated or otherwise incapacitated at the time of delivery of possession and control. Moreover, causation is too tenuous and remote, because there are many probable intervening events and conditions between the gift of the car and the negligent operation. Legal scholars have criticized the reasoning of these cases, and a Maryland case rejects their holdings. (199 C.A.3d 704.)

(c) In California, the issue should be approached on a consideration of the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §833). And the tort of negligent entrustment of an instrumentality to an incompetent person under circumstances indicating a likelihood of misuse is committed even if the instrumentality is transferred. (199 C.A.3d 706, citing the text.) Hence, "even when there is no evidence of control, since the foreseeability of injury from a known habitual drunk driver is strong and the policy of preventing drunk driving is compelling, it is appropriate to allow liability where the facts show sufficient causation." (199 C.A.3d 706.)

(d) In the Maryland case where a father purchased the car as a gift to his son, sufficient causation was in evidence that the donee's income was minimal and that he obtained money from his father several times a week; this permitted a reasonable conclusion that he would not have had a car if his father had not bought it for him. (199 C.A.3d 706.) Here, however, "the pleaded facts do not support an inference that the act of giving the car was peculiarly the means which afforded the adult, licensed, albeit habitually drunk, driver the means to injure the plaintiff." (199 C.A.3d 707.) (See 22

A.L.R.4th 738 [liability of donor of motor vehicle for injuries from owner's operation].)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1226

[§ 1226] Respondeat Superior Liability Distinguished.

An employer cannot be held vicariously liable for the negligence of an employee if the employee is exonerated. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §167.) But an employer may be directly liable for his or her own tort of negligent entrustment of a dangerous instrumentality to an incompetent employee.

In Syah v. Johnson (1966) 247 C.A.2d 534, 55 C.R. 741, defendant partners, operating an automobile sales agency, employed defendant H as a pickup and delivery man. H suffered a dizzy spell and ran an automobile over a curb; he also had a collision with a car door. The service manager arranged for a doctor's appointment. H gave the doctor a disarming medical history; the doctor made a cursory examination and told him to come back if he had any further dizziness. H reported the examination to the service manager and nothing further was done. Then, while driving a customer's car, H had an epileptic seizure, blacked out, ran through a stop signal at high speed and struck another car, killing decedent. Held, judgment on verdicts against defendant partners and in favor of defendant H affirmed. The duty of a retail automobile sales firm, not to entrust the car to an incompetent driver, was not satisfied by merely arranging a doctor's appointment. (247 C.A.2d 545.)

C. Torts of Child.
1. General Rule of Nonliability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1227

[§ 1227] General Rule of Nonliability.

In the absence of statute, a parent is not liable for the torts of his or her minor child. (See generally Hagerty v. Powers (1885) 66 C. 368, 369, 5 P. 622; Hudson v. Von Hamm (1927) 85 C.A. 323, 326, 259 P. 374; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.13; 54 A.L.R.3d 974 [legal responsibility of parent for intentional act of child]; 70 A.L.R.3d 611 [legal responsibility of parent for injury caused by child riding bicycle].)

Apart from situations in which the child is an agent or employee of the parent (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §163 et seq.), there are four principal exceptions:

- (1) Where the parent has knowledge of the child's prior misconduct (infra, §1228).
- (2) Where the parent has signed the child's driver's license or the child drives the parents' car with permission (infra, §§1256, 1257, 1260).
- (3) Where the child is guilty of wilful misconduct (infra, §1229 et seq.).
- (4) Where the child is given ready access to a firearm (infra, §§1233, 1234).

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
C. Torts of Child.
2. Exceptions.
a. Knowledge of Past Misconduct.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1228

[§ 1228] Knowledge of Past Misconduct.

The parent is liable for the child's tort if, knowing or having reason to know (e.g., from past misconduct of the child) that it is necessary to control the child, the parent fails to exercise reasonable care to do so. This rule is set forth in the Rest.2d, Torts §316, and is explained in Singer v. Marx (1956) 144 C.A.2d 637, 644, 301 P.2d 440, supra, §25), quoting Prosser: "[T]he parent has a special power of control over the conduct of the child, which he is under a duty to exercise reasonably for the protection of others. He may thus be liable for a failure to take the gun away from the child when he finds him with it, or to make reasonable efforts to restrain and correct him when he manifests a tendency to beat other children with a stick, or to shoot at horses in the street. Probably, however, the effect of the decided cases is that there is no liability upon the parent unless he has had an opportunity to correct a specific propensity on the part of the child, and that it is too much to hold the parent responsible for general incorrigibility and a bad disposition. He may, however, be under a duty to warn others who may suffer from such characteristics." (See 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.13; 6 Hastings L. J. 102; 54 A.L.R.3d 974 [liability of parent for injury or damage inflicted by minor]; BAJI, No. 13.75; CACI, No. 410; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §878; cf. Martin v. Barrett (1953) 120 C.A.2d 625, 628, 261 P.2d 551 [rule recognized but complaint held insufficient for lack of allegations of habitual misconduct and knowledge of it]; Reida v. Lund (1971) 18 C.A.3d 698, 702, 96 C.R. 102, infra, §1233 [evidence was insufficient to show negligent control, but liability was possible for permitting access to firearm]; Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1281, 232 C.R. 634, infra, §1230 [mother, lacking physical custody and control at critical time, was not liable; mere legal custody is insufficient].)

In Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 C.A.2d 310, 253 P.2d 675, supra, §25, the complaint of plaintiff, a baby-sitter injured by a young child, was upheld where she alleged that the child had habitually attacked people with violence, and that defendant parents negligently failed to warn her of these traits. (116 C.A.2d 317.) And in Singer, (a) the evidence showed continual rock throwing by a child and complaints by neighbors to the mother, justifying the inference that she had notice of his dangerous proclivities and did not administer effective discipline; but (b) there was no evidence of personal knowledge on the part of the father, and a nonsuit as to him was affirmed. (144 C.A.2d 646.)

The rule is not restricted to the parent-child relationship; others with custody and control of the child may be liable. In Poncher v. Brackett (1966) 246 C.A.2d 769, 55 C.R. 59, citing the text, plaintiff alleged that defendants, grandparents of a minor boy, had custody and control over him; that, knowing he was emotionally disturbed and potentially dangerous, they permitted him to move freely about, giving no warnings of his dangerous propensities and taking no precautions to protect the public; and that the boy assaulted plaintiff. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed; a cause of action was stated. This liability is not based on general incorrigibility but on specific manifested dangerous tendencies. (246 C.A.2d 771.) And ability to control the child, not the relationship, is the crucial factor. (246 C.A.2d 772.) (See Costello v. Hart (1972) 23 C.A.3d 898, 900, 100 C.R. 554 [grandmother with custody of 4-year-old boy].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

C. Torts of Child.

2. Exceptions.

b. Statutory Liability for Wilful Misconduct.

1. Nature and Scope of Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1229

[§ 1229] Nature and Scope of Statute.

(1) In General. "Any act of willful misconduct of a minor that results in injury or death to another person or in any injury to the property of another must be imputed to the parent or guardian having custody and control of the minor for all purposes of civil damages, and the parent or guardian having custody and control are jointly and severally liable with the minor for any damages resulting from the willful misconduct." (C.C. 1714.1(a).) (See 43 Cal. L. Rev. 877; 20 Cal. Western L. Rev. 187 [proposed Model Parental Liability Act]; 7 Hastings L. J. 98 [insurer's liability for damage caused by wilful misconduct of insured's child, as affected by C.C. 1714.1]; 6 Pacific L. J. 422; 11 Pacific L. J. 655; 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 621 [use of parental liability laws to control juvenile delinquency]; 8 A.L.R.3d 612 [validity and construction of statutes making parents liable for torts committed by their minor children].)

The liability imposed under the statute is the one authorized at the time the act of wilful misconduct was committed. (C.C. 1714.1(d).) It "is in addition to any liability now imposed by law." (C.C. 1714.1(a).)

(2) Amount. The joint and several liability of the parent or guardian may not exceed $ 25,000 for each tort of the minor, and in the case of injury to a person, imputed liability is further limited to medical, dental, and hospital expenses not to exceed $ 25,000. (C.C. 1714.1(a).)

C.C. 1714.1 also establishes liability for wilful misconduct resulting in the defacement of property with paint or a similar substance. The same maximum ($ 25,000) is specified, but the liability also includes court costs and attorneys' fees. (C.C. 1714.1(b).) (On parents' joint and several liability for expense of correcting minor's graffiti, see Govt.C. 38772, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §154.)

The $ 25,000 amount is adjusted in odd numbered years by the Judicial Council to reflect increases in the California Consumer Price Index. On or before January 1 of each odd-numbered year after 1997, the Judicial Council must compute and publish the adjusted amounts. (See C.C. 1714.1(c); C.R.C., Appendix, Division VII.)

(3) Insurer's Liability. Nothing in the statute has the effect of imposing liability on an insurer for a loss caused by an insured's wilful act for purposes of Ins.C. 533 (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §100 et seq.). Moreover, an insurer is not liable for the conduct imputed to a parent or guardian by C.C. 1714.1 for any amount in excess of $ 10,000. (C.C. 1714.1(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Amount. As amended in 2007, C.C. 1714.1(c) requires the Judicial Council to compute and publish the adjusted amounts on or before July 1 of each odd numbered year. As of the 2009 adjustment, the amount is $ 37,100.

In 2006, C.R.C., Appendix VII was redesignated C.R.C., Appendix B.

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

C. Torts of Child.

2. Exceptions.

b. Statutory Liability for Wilful Misconduct.

2. Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1230

[§ 1230] Illustrations.

In Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1281, 232 C.R. 634. Roy, a minor, was the son of divorced parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. In January, 1982, 5 days before he became 18, he robbed a store and, in the process, shot and killed Mrs. R. Plaintiff Mr. R brought this action for wrongful death against Mrs. W, based on common law negligence in controlling and supervising Roy (see supra, §1229), and on C.C. 1714.1 (see supra, §1229) and C.C. 1714.3 (liability of parent for minor's discharge of firearm, see infra, §1234). The divorce decree of 1978 had awarded defendant Mrs. W sole legal custody of Roy, with child support, and Roy lived with her until 1979 when he moved in with his father and later with his employer. He returned briefly to his mother's home in 1981, and in 1982, recommenced living with his father. Roy had been introduced to firearms in his youth, and his mother knew that he possessed guns, but she had no knowledge of their misuse. Roy also was a user of liquor and narcotics, but neither his mother nor his father took any action other than counseling and imposing rules on his behavior. Defendant, who had remarried, testified that she and her ex-husband had agreed that Roy was to stay with his father, for guidance and counseling, and that she had no plans for Roy to move back to her home. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) As C.C. 1714.1 read prior to its 1983 amendment, an act of wilful misconduct resulting in injury or death to person or injury to property "shall be imputed to the parent or guardian having custody or control of the minor." (187 C.A.3d 1291.) Defendant had legal custody pursuant to court order, but the record clearly shows that she did not have physical custody at the time of the act of wilful misconduct. (187 C.A.3d 1292.)

(b) The obvious purpose of the law was to provide a remedy (with statutory limits on damages) to innocent third parties injured by a minor where no practical remedy was available under the common law. In view of this purpose, "requiring actual physical custody of the child by the parent would not in our view adequately further the objective of the statute." (187 C.A.3d 1293.) And by use of the disjunctive phrase "custody or control," the Legislature must have intended that either would be sufficient for application of the statutory liability. Hence, the showing of mere legal custody by the divorce decree was a proper basis for a cause of action under C.C. 1714.1(a), and it was error to grant summary judgment as to that cause of action. (187 C.A.3d 1293, 1294, 1295.)

(c) The 1983 amendment, not applicable to this case, substituted "custody and control" for the former disjunctive phrase. "We are concerned here with only the former, more capacious statutory language, however. As it currently stands, the only apparent distinction between section 1714.1, subdivision (a) and common law negligence liability, is that the former does not require a showing that the parent had knowledge of the child's dangerous tendencies." (187 C.A.3d 1294, footnote 5.)

Cynthia M. v. Rodney E. (1991) 228 C.A.3d 1040, 279 C.R. 94, raised the issue whether the parents of R, a minor who impregnated C, his 16-year-old girlfriend, were liable for damages resulting from uncovered hospitalization bills incurred after the birth of the child. Held, R's parents were not liable; consensual sexual intercourse between minors is not "wilful misconduct" within the meaning of C.C. 1714.1.

(a) Although R committed the crime of unlawful sexual intercourse (P.C. 261.5), it is too simplistic to say that his actions constituted "wilful misconduct." The damages sought here resulted from C's becoming pregnant as a result of having intercourse with R, not from the intercourse itself. And the pregnancy could as easily be attributed to negligence, i.e., the failure to practice birth control, as it could be to R's wilful misconduct. (228 C.A.3d 1045.)

(b) While the criminal law does not recognize consent by a minor as a defense, the civil law is replete with examples of situations in which a child over 14 is deemed to have the capacity to consent to various kinds of bodily invasions. Hence, in determining civil liability under C.C. 1714.1, the consent of a person under 18 is a permissible consideration. (228 C.A.3d 1045.)

(c) As a parental responsibility statute in derogation of the common law, C.C. 1714.1 should be strictly construed. (228 C.A.3d 1046.) Given the important distinction between a party who was injured through no fault of his or her own and one who willingly participated in the offense about which a complaint was made, it is unlikely that the Legislature intended C.C. 1714.1 to encompass torts in which the injured party was a willing participant in the wilful misconduct. (228 C.A.3d 1047, citing Robertson.)

In Curry v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 180, 24 C.R.2d 495, a high school student who had been molested by a minor brought an action against the school district and its employees for failure to control the minor. Defendants cross-complained against the minor's parents for indemnity under C.C. 1714.1. The trial judge overruled the parents' demurrer. Held, affirmed. The modern trend favors the equitable sharing of losses among tortfeasors, and even if the statute "was designed to afford relief to injured third parties by imposing liability on a presumably financially responsible parent, we can see no reason why that liability should not run in favor of a concurrently liable tortfeasor." If plaintiff had joined the parents as defendants, their liability would be obvious, and the fact that she did not should not insulate them from a duty to contribute. (20 C.A.4th 189.)

In Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, supra, §720, plaintiff, a telephone long-distance carrier, sued defendants, the parents of teenage boys who, along with some friends, used the family computer to crack plaintiff's system and make long-distance phone calls without paying. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed as to liability. C.C. 1714.1 is applicable here. Although the sons' friends participated in the hacking, they acted in concert with the sons, and whatever losses plaintiff incurred arose from use of the defendants' family computer. One of the sons knowingly permitted the friends to use the computer for the improper purpose and knew that this was wrong. Thus, the trial court correctly determined his conduct to be intentional and wilful. It is of no consequence that plaintiff did not plead a conspiracy between the sons and their friends or seek to amend the complaint after trial to conform to proof. A variance between pleading and proof is material only if it actually misleads the adverse party to his or her prejudice in maintaining the defense on the merits. That did not occur here. Defendants knew that plaintiff sued them based on their sons' conduct. (46 C.A.4th 1571.) (See Jamshid-Negad v. Kessler (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1704, 1709, 19 C.R.2d 621, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §149 [out-of-state parents' act of sending their son to college in California gave California personal jurisdiction over them in action under C.C. 1714.1].)

[§ 1231] Injury to School Students, Personnel, or Property.

(1) Liability of Parent or Guardian. Notwithstanding C.C. 1714.1 (supra, §1229), Educ.C. 48904 makes the parent or guardian of any minor liable for damages caused by (a) the minor's wilful misconduct resulting in injury or death to a student, employee, or volunteer for a school district or private school, or (b) his or her wilful cutting, defacement, or other injury to real or personal school property, or personal property of a school employee. (Educ.C. 48904(a).) The liability is limited to $ 10,000, but the parent or guardian is also liable for any reward, not exceeding $ 10,000, paid by the district pursuant to Govt.C. 53069.5. (Educ.C. 48904(a).)

The parent or guardian of a minor is liable to a school district or private school for all property belonging to the district or school loaned to the minor and not returned on demand of an employee of the district or school authorized to make the demand. (Educ.C. 48904(a).)

(2) Withholding Grades, Diplomas, and Transcripts. Educ.C. 48904 authorizes withholding grades, diplomas, and transcripts until damages are paid or a voluntary work program has been completed. (Educ.C. 48904(b).)

(3) Request for Legal Action. An employee of a school district whose personal property is injured or damaged by the wilful misconduct of a student who attends school in the district may request the district to pursue legal action against the student who caused the injury or damage, or the student's parent or guardian pursuant to Educ.C. 48904. 4. Theft From Merchant or Library.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1232

[§ 1232] Theft From Merchant or Library.

If an unemancipated minor's wilful misconduct would constitute petty theft involving merchandise taken from a merchant's premises or a book or other library materials taken from a library, an injured merchant or library may bring a civil action against the parent or legal guardian having control and custody of the minor. "For the purposes of those actions the misconduct of the unemancipated minor shall be imputed to the parent or legal guardian having control and custody of the minor." (P.C. 490.5(b); see 8 Pacific L. J. 276.)

The parent or legal guardian is jointly and severally liable with the minor to a merchant or library for damages of $ 50 to $ 500, plus costs. In addition to these damages, the parent or legal guardian is jointly and severally liable to the merchant for the retail value of the merchandise if it is not recovered in a merchantable condition, or to the library for the fair market value of its book or other library materials. The recovery is in addition to, and is not limited by, any other provision of law limiting the liability of a parent or legal guardian for the tortious conduct of a minor. (P.C. 490.5(b).)

An action to recover damages under P.C. 490.5 may be brought in small claims court if the total damages do not exceed the court's jurisdictional limit, or in any other appropriate court. However, total damages, including the value of the merchandise or book or other library materials, may not exceed $ 500 for each action brought under the statute. (P.C. 490.5(b).)

The provisions of P.C. 490.5(b) are in addition to other civil remedies and do not preclude the merchants or other persons from electing to pursue other civil remedies, except that the provisions of C.C. 1714.1 (supra, §1229) do not apply. (P.C. 490.5(b).)

[§ 1233] Common Law.

The older California cases, applying the general rule of nonliability of a parent for the child's tort (supra, §1227 denied recovery even where the parent permitted the child to have access to a firearm and the child shot the victim. (See Figone v. Guisti (1919) 43 C.A. 606, 611, 185 P. 694; Martin v. Barrett (1953) 120 C.A.2d 625, 627, 261 P.2d 551; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 874; 6 Hastings L. J. 102; 68 A.L.R.2d 782 [permitting child to have gun or leaving gun in accessible place].) The majority rule is contra; allowing access to firearms or other deadly instrumentalities is regarded as actionable negligence. (See 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.13; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §314; 37 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [negligent sale, entrustment, or storage of firearm]; 68 A.L.R.2d 782 [firearms]; 75 A.L.R.3d 825 [liability of defendant who has made gun available with which minor or other incompetent has shot and injured or killed himself or herself]; 4 A.L.R.4th 331 [liability of one who sells gun to child for injury to third party].)

In Reida v. Lund (1971) 18 C.A.3d 698, 96 C.R. 102, M, a 16-year-old boy, took his father's automobile and converted Mauser rifle without permission, stationed himself on a hill, and killed three persons and wounded others. When police approached, he killed himself. Actions for wrongful death and personal injuries were brought against M's estate and his parents. Summary judgment was granted for defendants. Held, reversed. Although the rifle and ammunition were kept in a locked cabinet, defendant parents admitted that the location of the key was known to the boy. And the modern trend, as indicated by the out-of-state cases and the 1970 California statute (infra, §1234), justified imposition of liability. Defendant father's declaration raises a triable question of fact whether his act in leaving a lethal weapon in a place accessible to his children amounted to a proper exercise of due care or whether it amounted to negligent safeguard of a deadly weapon." (18 C.A.3d 707.) (See Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 C.A.4th 253, 259, 23 C.R.2d 490 [summary judgment for parents whose 27-year-old son took his gun from parents' house and accidentally shot plaintiff; parent-child relationship did not create duty of care absent parents' ability to control son, who had threatened no one, exhibited no violent conduct, and intended no harm].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
C. Torts of Child.
2. Exceptions.
c. Permitting Access to Firearm.
2. California Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1234

[§ 1234] California Statute.

"Civil liability for any injury to the person or property of another proximately caused by the discharge of a firearm by a minor under the age of 18 years shall be imputed to a parent or guardian having custody and control of the minor for all purposes of civil damages, and such parent or guardian shall be jointly and severally liable with such minor for any damages resulting from such act, if such parent or guardian either permitted the minor to have the firearm or left the firearm in a place accessible to the minor." (C.C. 1714.3.)

No person, or group of persons collectively, may incur liability under this section in any amount exceeding $ 30,000 for injury to or death of one person as a result of any one occurrence or, subject to the limit as to one person, exceeding $ 60,000 for injury to or death of all persons as a result of any one occurrence. (C.C. 1714.3.)

The liability, like that for wilful misconduct (supra, §1229), is in addition to any liability otherwise imposed by law. (C.C. 1714.3.) (See 37 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [negligent sale, entrustment, or storage of firearm].)

Liability under C.C. 1714.1 (supra, §1229) is for the child's tort (wilful misconduct); liability under C.C. 1714.3 is for the act of "discharge of a firearm," which may be intentional, negligent, or accidental and nontortious. Thus, the literal terms of the section would appear to establish strict liability without any wrongful act by the child. However, in a case not within the statute (e.g., minor over 18), or where damages in excess of the statutory limit are sought, an action may still be brought for the child's tortious firing under the nonstatutory liability for negligent safeguard of a deadly weapon. (See Reida v. Lund (1971) 18 C.A.3d 698, 705, 96 C.R 102, supra, §1233; 2 Pacific L. J. 465.)

Because the liability is for permitting the use of a firearm or leaving it in a place accessible to the minor, it could not be imposed on a parent with whom the minor did not reside. (See Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1281, 1295, 232 C.R. 634.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
D. Members of Joint Enterprise.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1235

[§ 1235] Members of Joint Enterprise.

The mere fact that two or more persons have certain interests in common, as where they drive together in an automobile for pleasure, is an insufficient ground upon which to impute liability to one for the negligence of another. The necessary elements of a joint enterprise that will justify the imputation of liability are (1) a community of interest in the object of the undertaking, and (2) an equal right to control, i.e., to direct and govern the conduct of each other with respect to the undertaking. (See Leming v. Oilfields Trucking Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 343, 350, 282 P.2d 23; Holtz v. United Plumbing & Heating Co. (1957) 49 C.2d 501, 506, 319 P.2d 617; Ramirez v. Long Beach Unified School Dist. (2002) 105 C.A.4th 182, 193, 129 C.R.2d 128 [school district that recommended nonaffiliated camp was not liable, on joint enterprise theory, for death of student attending camp; school district had no right to control camp or its counselors]; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.13; 46 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Joint Ventures §42; 6 Proof of Facts 583 [joint ventures]; 3 A.L.R.5th 1 [modern status of rule imputing motor vehicle driver's negligence to passenger on joint venture theory]; BAJI, Nos. 13.35, 13.40, 13.41; CACI, Nos. 3711, 3712.)

As the court said in Roberts v. Craig (1954) 124 C.A.2d 202, 208, 268 P.2d 500: "The negligence of one person is not imputed to another nonparticipant except in the clearest of cases and where the interests of justice demand it. The fundamental rule is that one person, himself free from fault, shall not be required to bear the consequences of the actions of another. Vicarious liability is the exception. It is only where a person actually acts through another to accomplish his own ends that the law will or should impose such vicarious liability. Right of control over the other person is a test of the required relationship, but it is not itself the justification for imposing liability. Aside from such legal relationships as master and servant, principal and agent, etc., before the courts will find that the parties were joint adventurers there must be a clear evidence of a community of interest in a common undertaking in which each participant has or exercises the right of equal or joint control and direction." The relationship giving rise to liability under this theory is variously called "joint enterprise," "joint venture," or "joint adventure." But a helpful practice is to use the term "joint enterprise" for noncommercial undertakings, and "joint venture" for the mutual business association closely resembling a partnership.

Even a pleasure trip may meet the tests. In Shook v. Beals (1950) 96 C.A.2d 963, 217 P.2d 56, plaintiff leased an airplane to B and four others for a fishing trip. The plane was damaged by the negligence of B, the pilot. Held, all five were liable. (a) A community of interest was shown by the common purpose and sharing of expenses. (b) The necessary control was shown by the joint hiring; i.e., where the parties themselves, or through their authorized agent, jointly own or hire an automobile or airplane, this, as a matter of law, gives each the right of control. "Each, legally, had the right of control over the plane and the driver, if he were their agent in operating the plane for them. It was not necessary to establish the fact that some one or all of the defendants, excluding [B], personally knew how to pilot the plane themselves." (96 C.A.2d 970.) (Cf. DeSuza v. Andersack (1976) 63 C.A.3d 694, 701, 133 C.R. 920 [parties on trip for pleasure and independent errands; no joint enterprise found].)

Most of the joint enterprise or joint venture tort cases deal with the imputation of contributory negligence as a limitation on recovery, which is governed by the same principle. (See infra, §1325.) There are, however, a few decisions upholding liability. (See Shook, Leming and Holtz; Buck v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1958) 157 C.A.2d 230, 239, 321 P.2d 67.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS E. Employers of Independent Contractors. 1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1236

[§ 1236] In General.

(1) General Rule of Nonliability. Many cases state the general rule as one of nonliability; i.e., an employer is ordinarily not liable for the negligence or other tort of an independent contractor or of the contractor's employees. (See Green v. Soule (1904) 145 C. 96, 99, 78 P. 337; Schmidlin v. Alta Planing Mill Co. (1915) 170 C. 589, 591, 150 P. 983; McDonald v. Shell Oil Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 785, 790, 285 P.2d 902; Williams v. Fairhaven Cemetery Assn. (1959) 52 C.2d 135, 139, 338 P.2d 392; Slyter v. Clinton Const. Co. of Calif. (1930) 107 C.A. 348, 353, 290 P. 643; Gaskill v. Calaveras Cement Co. (1951) 102 C.A.2d 120, 123, 226 P.2d 633; Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club (1952) 112 C.A.2d 263, 266, 246 P.2d 716; Gonzales v. Robert Hiller Const. Co. (1960) 179 C.A.2d 522, 527, 3 C.R. 832; Hickey v. Nulty (1960) 182 C.A.2d 237, 245, 5 C.R. 914; Safeway Stores v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (1962) 202 C.A.2d 99, 110, 20 C.R. 820; West v. Guy F. Atkinson Const. Co. (1967) 251 C.A.2d 296, 299, 59 C.R. 286; Rest.2d, Torts §409; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.11; 41 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Independent Contractors §29; C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d, §§6.3, 6.13; 29 Am.Jur. Trials 267 [negligent hiring and retention of employee]; 13 Hastings L. J. 147; 15 Hastings L. J. 604; on the distinction between agent or employee and independent contractor, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §21 et seq.)

(2) Modern Exceptions. The rule is, however, subject to exceptions of such wide scope that they leave only a small area in which the so-called general rule operates. (See Kinney v. CSB Const. (2001) 87 C.A.4th 28, 32, 103 C.R.2d 594 [general rule of nonliability is primarily important as preamble to catalog of exceptions]; Rest.2d, Torts §410 et seq.; 32 Cal. L. Rev. 196; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 762; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 690; infra, §1237 et seq.) Accordingly, it seems proper to say that nonliability is now the exception; i.e., the so-called general rule is followed only where no good reason is found for departing from it. And considerations of policy frequently call for departure: "Some of the principal ones are that the enterprise, notwithstanding the employment of the independent contractor, remains the employer's because he is the party primarily to be benefited by it, that he selects the contractor, is free to insist upon one who is financially responsible, and to demand indemnity from him, that the insurance necessary to distribute the risk is properly a cost of the employer's business, and that the performance of the duty of care is of great importance to the public." (Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C.2d 245, 253, 66 C.R. 20, 437 P.2d 508, infra, §1243; see Walker v. Capistrano Saddle Club (1970) 12 C.A.3d 894, 898, 90 C.R. 912; Fonseca v. Orange (1972) 28 C.A. 3d 361, 365, 104 C.R. 566, citing the text; LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Const. Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 754, 762, 145 C.R. 244; Henderson Bros. Stores v. Smiley (1981) 120 C.A.3d 903, 910, 174 C.R. 875, quoting the text; Caudel v. East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. (1985) 165 C.A.3d 1, 5, 211 C.R. 222, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §409, Comment b; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.11; 41 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Independent Contractors §30 et seq., 45 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Construction Contracts and Disputes 3d, §6.1 et seq.; on liability of public entity, see supra, §244.)

(3) Former Statutory Duty of Employer. Lab.C. 6400 and 6401 require an "employer" to provide a reasonably safe and healthful place of employment, and to furnish safety devices and safeguards and use reasonably adequate methods to insure safety, etc. Safety orders and regulations may be issued to make these duties specific. (Lab.C. 6308; see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §363 et seq.) The term "employer" as defined in Lab.C. 6304 formerly extended beyond the strict employer-employee relationship to impose liability on the owner or general contractor who controlled the premises or instrumentality causing an injury and exercised general supervision over the job. (See Souza v. Pratico (1966) 245 C.A.2d 651, 657, 54 C.R. 159; Merzerkor v. Texaco (1968) 266 C.A.2d 76, 89, 72 C.R. 1; Morehouse v. Taubman Co. (1970) 5 C.A.3d 548, 558, 85 C.R. 308; Widman v. Rossmoor Sanitation (1971) 19 C.A.3d 734, 743, 97 C.R. 52, citing the text; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 117; cf. Stanford v. Ontario (1972) 6 C.3d 870, 878, 882, 101 C.R. 97, 495 P.2d 425 [statute was not applicable where owner or general contractor had no supervisory power over operative details]; Elder v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 650, 663, 136 C.R. 203 [evidence insufficient to establish requisite control].) (On concurrent negligence of employer-subcontractor, see Short v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1975) 52 C.A.3d 104, 109, 125 C.R. 15 [negligence barred credit for subsequent compensation under Witt v. Jackson (1961) 57 C.2d 57, 17 C.R. 369, 366 P.2d 641, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §92].)

In 1971, Lab.C. 6304 was amended to delete the language referring to persons in control and to restore, by cross-reference to Lab.C. 3300, the ordinary definition of employer. (See Smith v. ACandS (1994) 31 C.A.4th 77, 89, 37 C.R.2d 457 [even under former law, premises owner was not employer subject to safety orders, where independent contractors, instead of premises owner, were responsible for asbestosis contamination].)

Rest.2d, Torts §414 states a rule similar to the former provision of Lab.C. 6304: The employer of an independent contractor who retains control of any part of the work may be liable for failure to exercise that control with reasonable care. (See Hooker v. Department of Trans. (2002) 27 C.4th 198, 206, 115 C.R.2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081, infra, §1241 [independent contractor's employee may sue hirer of contractor for tort of negligent exercise of retained control set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §414, if contractor affirmatively contributes to employee's injuries; disapproving Grahn v. Tosco Corp. (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1373, 1393, 68 C.R.2d 806]; McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores (2002) 27 C.4th 219, 225, 115 C.R.2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094, infra, §1241 [same]; Holman v. California (1975) 53 C.A.3d 317, 327, 124 C.R. 773, citing the text [question of fact whether defendant state, through its chief engineer, had right to order independent contractor to remove unsafe equipment from job, and had actual knowledge of dangerous condition of the equipment].)

[§ 1237] Employment of Incompetent Contractor.

An employer who negligently fails to employ a competent and careful contractor may be liable to third persons for injuries due to the contractor's lack of skill or failure to exercise due care. (See Risley v. Lenwell (1954) 129 C.A.2d 608, 622, 277 P.2d 897; Holman v. California (1975) 53 C.A.3d 317, 336, 124 C.R. 773, citing the text; *Golden v. No duty is recognized to see that the contractor is financially responsible, e.g., that he or she carries workers' compensation insurance. (Coleman v. Silverberg Plumbing Co. (1968) 263 C.A.2d 74, 81, 69 C.R. 158; see Rest.2d, Torts §411, Comment g.)

[§ 1238] Defective Plans.

Where the plans and directions are proper, and the duty to make the premises safe is performed, the owner will not be liable for "collateral negligence" of an independent contractor, i.e., negligence in some detail of the work. Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
2. Where Employer Is at Fault.
d. No Liability to Independent Contractor's Employee for Negligent Hiring.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1240

[§ 1240] No Liability to Independent Contractor's Employee for Negligent Hiring.

In Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 C.4th 1235, 108 C.R.2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096, defendant hirer, a dairy, contracted with an independent contractor to scrape manure out of its corrals and to haul it away. Decedent, an employee of the contractor, was killed when the tractor that he was driving rolled over. Decedent's wife and children sued defendant for wrongful death on the theory, among others, that defendant was negligent in hiring the contractor (because defendant failed to determine whether decedent was qualified to operate the tractor safely). Held, defendant's motion for summary judgment was properly granted. The rationale of Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, infra, §1245, and Toland v. Sunland Housing Group (1998) 18 C.4th 253, 74 C.R.2d 878, 955 P.2d 504, infra, §1246, which barred actions by employees of an independent contractor under the peculiar risk doctrine, likewise applies to bar actions by an independent contractor's employees for negligent hiring of the contractor. (25 C.4th 1238.)

(a) Privette exception to peculiar risk doctrine. Under the doctrine of peculiar risk, a person who hires an independent contractor to do inherently dangerous work can be held liable for tort damages when the contractor causes injury to others by negligently performing the work. In Privette, the court refused to extend the peculiar risk doctrine to the hired contractor's employees. The rationale for this exception is that the hirer should not have to pay for injuries to the contractor's employees that are caused by the contractor's negligent performance, because the workers' compensation system already covers those injuries. The rule of workers' compensation exclusivity, which shields an independent contractor who pays workers' compensation insurance premiums from further liability to its employees for on-the-job injuries, should equally protect a property owner who, in hiring the contractor, is indirectly paying for the cost of coverage, which has been calculated into the contract price. Also, to allow an independent contractor's employees to additionally seek tort damages under the doctrine of peculiar risk from the person who hired the contractor would give those employees an unwarranted windfall denied to other workers. (25 C.4th 1238.)

(b) Toland case: application of Privette rationale to either "direct" or "vicarious" peculiar risk liability. The doctrine of peculiar risk is described in Rest.2d, Torts §§413, 416. Under Rest.2d, Torts §413, a person who hires an independent contractor to do inherently dangerous work, but who fails to provide in the contract or in some other manner that special precautions be taken to avert the peculiar risks of that work, can be liable if the contractor's negligent performance of the work causes injury to others. Because §413 rests the liability of the hiring person on that person's omission to provide for special precautions in the contract or in some other manner, it is sometimes described as a rule of "direct liability." Under Rest.2d, Torts §416, even if the hiring person has provided for special precautions, the hiring person can nevertheless be liable if the contractor fails to exercise reasonable care to take those precautions and the contractor's performance of the work causes injury to others. Because the hiring person's liability under §416 flows from the independent contractor's negligent failure to take special precautions in performing the inherently dangerous work, the hiring person's liability is often referred to as "vicarious liability." Toland rejected the argument that Privette bars recovery only for vicarious liability under §416. Peculiar risk is not a traditional theory of direct liability for the risks created by one's own conduct: Liability under both sections is in essence "vicarious" or "derivative" in the sense that it derives from the act or omission of the hired contractor, who has caused the injury by failing to use reasonable care in performing the work. Toland held that Privette bars employees of a hired contractor who are injured by the contractor's negligence from seeking recovery against the hiring person, irrespective of whether recovery is sought under the theory of peculiar risk set forth in §416 or §413. (25 C.4th 1240.)

(c) Negligent hiring liability. Under Rest.2d, Torts §411, an employer is liable for physical harm to third persons caused by failure to exercise reasonable care to employ a competent and careful contractor "to do work which will involve a risk of physical harm unless it is skillfully and carefully done," or "to perform any duty which the employer owes to third persons." (25 C.4th 1241.)

(d) Application of Privette/Toland rationale to negligent hiring. For the reasons expressed in Privette and Toland, an employee of an independent contractor should not be considered a "third person" for purposes of Rest.2d, Torts §411 and should be barred from seeking recovery from the hirer for negligent hiring. Admittedly, the hirer under §411 is, in a sense, being taxed with the hirer's own negligence under a theory of direct liability. However, the same can be said with regard to an action under the peculiar risk theory in §413. More importantly, under both §411 and §413, the liability of the hirer is essentially vicarious in that it derives from the contractor's act or omission. Therefore, in a negligent hiring case under the theory set forth in §411, just as in peculiar risk cases under the theories set forth in §413 and §416, it would be unfair to impose liability on the hiring person when the liability of the contractor, the one primarily responsible for the worker's on-the-job injuries, is limited to providing workers' compensation coverage. (25 C.4th 1241.) (On application of Privette/Toland/Camargo policy considerations to actions by independent contractor's employees for hirer's negligent exercise of retained control, see infra, §1241; on liability for employment of incompetent contractor generally, see supra, §1237.) (See Lopez v. C.G.M. Dev. (2002) 101 C.A.4th 430, 437, 124 C.R.2d 227 [peculiar risk doctrine does not permit employee of independent contractor to sue landowner, even if contractor has no workers' compensation, because doctrine is based on equity and public policy, neither of which is served by penalizing property owner for contractor's wrongdoing; moreover, mere retention of ability to control safety conditions does not make landowner liable to employee, where evidence shows that landowner did not actually supervise work]; Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 606, 133 C.R.2d 757, infra, §1252.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

E. Employers of Independent Contractors.

2. Where Employer Is at Fault.

e. Limited Liability to Independent Contractor's Employee for Negligent Exercise of Retained Control.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1241

[§ 1241] Limited Liability to Independent Contractor's Employee for Negligent Exercise of Retained Control.

In Hooker v. Department of Trans. (2002) 27 C.4th 198, 115 C.R.2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081, defendant hired a general contractor to work on a highway project. As a result of defendant's failure to block off traffic around the construction site, cranes working on the site frequently had to retract their outriggers to permit traffic to pass. Plaintiff's husband, a crane operator, was killed when he attempted to swing the crane boom while the outriggers were retracted and the crane fell over. Plaintiff sued for wrongful death, alleging defendant's negligent exercise of retained control. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The hirer of an independent contractor is not liable to an employee of the contractor merely because the hirer retained control over safety conditions at the work site. However, the hirer is liable to an employee of the contractor insofar as the hirer's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries. Here, plaintiff failed to raise triable issues of material fact whether defendant actually exercised retained control so as to affirmatively contribute to the death of plaintiff's husband.

(a) Denial of hirer's liability under doctrines of peculiar risk and negligent hiring. In a series of cases, the court has considered whether an employee of an independent contractor may sue the hirer of the contractor under tort theories covered in chapter 15 of the Restatement Second of Torts. Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, infra, §1245, and Toland v. Sunland Housing Group (1998) 18 C.4th 253, 74 C.R.2d 878, 955 P.2d 504, infra, §1246, held that an employee of a contractor may not sue the hirer of the contractor under either of the alternative versions of the peculiar risk doctrine set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §§413 and 416. Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 C.4th 1235, 108 C.R.2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096, supra, §1240, held that an employee of a contractor may not sue the hirer of the contractor under the negligent hiring theory set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §411. In each of these situations, it was deemed unfair to impose liability on the hiring person when the liability of the contractor, the one primarily responsible for the employee's on-the-job injuries, is limited to providing workers' compensation coverage. Permitting the employee to also collect tort damages from the hirer would give the employee an unwarranted windfall. (27 C.4th 203.)

(b) Same rationale applies to doctrine of negligent exercise of retained control where hirer fails to intervene. The question presented in this case is whether an employee of a contractor may sue the hirer of the contractor for the tort of negligent exercise of retained control set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §414 (see supra, §1236). Under Rest.2d, Torts §414, one who entrusts work to an independent contractor but retains control over any part of the work is liable for physical harm to others for whose safety the employer owes a duty to exercise reasonable care, where the harm is caused by the hirer's failure to exercise that control with reasonable care. The rationale applied in Privette, Toland, and Camargo applies insofar as Rest.2d, Torts §414 might permit the imposition of liability on a hirer for mere failure to intervene in a contractor's working methods or procedures, without evidence that the hirer affirmatively contributed to the employment of those methods or procedures. Similarly, because the liability of the contractor, the person primarily responsible for the employee's on-the-job injuries, is limited to providing workers' compensation coverage, it would be unfair to impose tort liability on the hirer of the contractor merely because the hirer retained the ability to exercise control over safety at the work site. (27 C.4th 206.)

(c) Test of liability is whether hirer affirmatively contributes to injuries. The imposition of tort liability on a hirer for negligent exercise of retained control must, in fairness, depend on whether the hirer exercised the control that was retained in a manner that affirmatively contributed to the injury of the contractor's employee. If an employee of an independent contractor can show that the hirer of the contractor affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries, permitting the employee to sue the hirer for negligent exercise of retained control cannot be said to give the employee an unwarranted windfall. The tort liability of the hirer is warranted by the hirer's own affirmative conduct. The rule of workers' compensation exclusivity does not preclude the employee from suing anyone else whose conduct was a proximate cause of the injury, and when affirmative conduct by the hirer of a contractor is a proximate cause contributing to the injuries of an employee, the employee should not be precluded from suing the hirer. The hirer's liability where it affirmatively contributes to the injury is direct, rather than vicarious or derivative as in Privette, Toland, and Camargo. (27 C.4th 211.)

(d) Summary judgment was proper here. Here, while plaintiff raised triable issues of material fact whether defendant retained control over safety conditions at the work site, plaintiff failed to raise triable issues of material fact whether defendant actually exercised the retained control so as to affirmatively contribute to the death of plaintiff's husband. There was no evidence that defendant's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributed to the dangerous practice by the crane operator that led to his death. There was, at most, evidence that defendant's safety personnel were aware of an unsafe practice and failed to exercise the authority they retained to correct it. (27 C.4th 215.)

One justice dissented. (27 C.4th 215.)

The Hooker "affirmative contribution" test was applied in McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores (2002) 27 C.4th 219, 115 C.R.2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094. Defendant hired an independent contractor, plaintiff's employer, to install sound systems in its stores. Defendant requested that the contractor use defendant's forklifts whenever possible in performing the work, but the request was understood not to be a directive. The forklift furnished was defective, and plaintiff was injured. The jury found that defendant was negligent in providing unsafe equipment, and judgment was entered on the verdict. Held, affirmed. A hirer is liable to an employee of an independent contractor insofar as unsafe equipment provided by the hirer affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury. Under Hooker, the defendant is liable.

(a) The reasons supporting the rule of liability of a hirer that affirmatively contributes to a contractor's employee's injuries apply to the facts here. Where a hiring party contributes to the injury by supplying defective equipment, it is the hiring party's own negligence that renders it liable, not that of the contractor. Defendant's contribution to the injury was active, rather than passive; its contention that it should not be held liable for providing the unsafe equipment because it merely requested, and did not insist, that the contractor use its forklift must be rejected. (27 C.4th 225.)

(b) The contractor had several contracts with defendant for the installation of sound systems in its stores, and defendant, the world's largest retailer, was a customer the contractor did not want to displease. Defendant presumably believed that the forklift it provided was safe, and plaintiff may well have believed that refusal to use it would have generated ill will. The extra expense of renting a forklift would have been chargeable to defendant. Moreover, renting a forklift would have entailed delaying the installation project. (27 C.4th 225.) (See Ray v. Silverado Constructors (2002) 98 C.A.4th 1120, 1131, 120 C.R.2d 251 [employer retained control over particular facet of safety operations, i.e., traffic control, and independent contractor was prohibited from undertaking certain safety measures without employer's approval]; Sheeler v. Greystone Homes (2003) 113 C.A.4th 908, 920, 6 C.R.3d 683 [no recovery under theory of retained control where there was no evidence that hirer exercised its retained control over construction site by scheduling cleanups solely to ensure safety; sweeps of site were mainly to facilitate painting, not for safety]; BAJI, No. 8.30; CACI, No. 1009; on liability generally for negligent exercise of retained control, see supra, §1236.)

Pomona College* (2008) 166 C.A.4th 661, 671, 82 C.R.3d 869 [any control that owner and general contractor retained over pressurized polyvinyl chloride pipe that broke and released water, injuring subcontractor's employee, did not affirmatively contribute to employee's injuries, even though only owner and contractor had ability to turn off water once accident occurred; owner and contractor delegated safety measures to subcontractor, and subcontractor made no request to turn off water].

In 2007, CACI, No. 1009 [Liability to Employees of Independent Contractors for Dangerous Conditions] was repealed and CACI, No. 1009A [Liability to Employees of Independent Contractors for Unsafe Concealed Conditions] and CACI, No. 1009B [Liability to Employees of Independent Contractors for Unsafe Conditions--Retained Control or Defective Equipment] were adopted.

(New) Breach of regulatory duty: In Barclay v. Jesse M. Lange Distributor (2005) 129 C.A.4th 281, 28 C.R.3d 242, plaintiff, an employee of an independent contractor, was cleaning a fuel tank on property owned by defendant, a "bulk plant" facility where fuel was stored for later distribution. When the tank exploded, plaintiff sustained serious injuries. The Fire Code, a part of the California Code of Regulations, required that fire extinguishers of a specified rating be located within 75 feet of those portions of a bulk plant facility where fires were likely to occur, and plaintiff claimed that the breach of this duty affirmatively contributed to his injuries. The trial judge entered summary judgment for defendant on the ground that plaintiff had failed to present evidence showing that defendant had retained control over safety conditions and exercised that control so as to affirmatively contribute to plaintiff's injuries, which would have brought the case within the exception to the doctrine of Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, text, §1245, stated in Hooker. Held, reversed.

(a) Defendant's summary judgment motion was based on the doctrine of Privette, which held that a nonnegligent property owner is not liable for injuries to an employee of an independent contractor doing work on the owner's premises. The flaw in defendant's motion is in assuming that Privette and its progeny resolved all potential theories of liability, precluding liability unless the owner actually retained control of the project. However, none of the cases relied on by defendant addressed the theory of liability asserted by plaintiff in this case, i.e., breach of regulatory duties (Rest.2d, Torts, §424). Instead, those cases addressed other theories of liability, e.g., peculiar risk (Rest.2d, Torts §§413, 416), negligent hiring (Rest.2d, Torts §411), and retained control (Rest.2d, Torts §414). Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 133 C.R.2d 757, text, §1252, has addressed this theory, and it held that an owner may be liable if its breach of regulatory duties affirmatively contributed to injury of a contractor's employee. (129 C.A.4th 290.)

(b) Hooker concluded that the hirer of an independent contractor is not liable to an employee of the contractor merely because the hirer retains control over safety conditions at a worksite, but that a hirer becomes liable if his or her exercise of retained control affirmatively contributes to the employee's injuries. Imposing liability when the hirer's conduct has affirmatively contributed to the injuries is consistent with Privette and its progeny, because the hirer's liability is not vicarious or derivative in the sense that it derives from the act or omission of the independent contractor. However, the affirmative contribution need not always be in the form of actively directing a contractor or a contractor's employee. There are times when a hirer will be liable for its omissions, as where the hirer's failure to undertake a particular safety measure, as promised, leads to an employee's injury. Here, plaintiff is arguing that defendant's omission contributed to the hazard, not that it directly caused the explosion. (129 C.A.4th 293.)

(c) Rest.2d, Torts §424 states that where specific precautions are required by statute or regulation for the safety of "others," the party upon whom the duty is imposed is subject to liability to the others for whose protection the duty is imposed. The Park decision implicitly indicates that employees of contractors may be "others" for purposes of Rest.2d, Torts §424, subject to the limitation that the hirer's conduct must have affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries. (129 C.A.4th 295.)

(d) Plaintiff introduced the following evidence: (1) expert testimony that a bulk plant facility was required by the Fire Code and by custom to have suitable fire extinguishers within 75 feet of tanks; (2) a witness' testimony that he saw no fire extinguisher "in the area" and had to run approximately 50 yards before finding one; and (3) a doctor's testimony that had the flames on plaintiff's clothing been extinguished more rapidly, his injuries would not have been as severe. This evidence raised triable issues of material fact about whether defendant breached a regulatory duty to provide fire extinguishers, and whether the breach affirmatively contributed to plaintiff's injuries. (129 C.A.4th 298.) (See Evard v. Southern Calif. Edison (2007) 153 C.A.4th 137, 147, 62 C.R.3d 479 [triable issue of fact whether failure of billboard owners to comply with nondelegable billboard safety regulation to assure that safety belt or harness was secured affirmatively contributed to injury to employee of independent contractor who fell from billboard; citing Barclay].)

1. Restatement 2d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1242

[§ 1242] Restatement 2d.

Several sections of the Restatement deal with the liability of the employer where there is a risk of harm inherent in the work itself. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§413, 416, 427, 427A; Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C.2d 245, 253, 66 C.R. 20, 437 P.2d 508; Griesel v. Dart Industries (1979) 23 C.3d 578, 585, 153 C.R. 213, 591 P.2d 503, infra, §1243; Toland v. Sunland Housing Group (1998) 18 C.4th 253, 267, 74 C.R.2d 878, 955 P.2d 504, infra, §1246 [theories of liability in Rest.2d, Torts §§413 and 416 overlap]; Jimenez v. Pacific Western Const. Co. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 102, 109, 229 C.R. 575; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.11; 41 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Independent Contractors §57, 60 et seq.; 34 A.L.R.4th 914 [liability of employer of independent contractor for injuries sustained by employees of contractor while engaged in inherently dangerous work]; BAJI, Nos. 13.21, 13.21.4, 16.04; CACI, Nos. 3708, VF-407.)

Rest.2d, Torts §413, applicable where the employer makes no provision in the contract or otherwise for taking of required precautions by the contractor, states that "[o]ne who employs an independent contractor to do work which the employer should recognize as likely to create, during its progress, a peculiar unreasonable risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken," is liable for harm caused by the absence of these precautions.

Comment b explains that the section is not concerned with routine precautions that any careful contractor could reasonably be expected to take against ordinary dangers that may arise in the course of the work; it is concerned with "special risks, peculiar to the work to be done, and arising out of its character, or out of the place where it is to be done." And "peculiar" does not mean that the risk must be abnormal to the type of work done, or that it must be an abnormally great risk: "It has reference only to a special, recognizable danger arising out of the work itself."

Rest.2d, Torts §416 imposes liability where needed precautions are not taken even though the employer does make provision for them in the contract or otherwise. (See Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C.2d 245, 253, 66 C.R. 20, 437 P.2d 508; Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 C.4th 1235, 108 C.R.2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096, supra, §1240.) In such a case, the employer is still liable, but the contractor is under a duty to indemnify the employer for any liability that the contractor's negligence may bring upon him or her. (Rest.2d, Torts §416, Comment c.)

inherent in or normal to the work." Comment a to §416 explains: "The rules stated in the two Sections have been applied more or less interchangeably in the same types of cases, and frequently have been stated in the same opinion as the same rule, or as different phases of the same rule. The rule stated in this Section is more commonly stated and applied where the employer should anticipate the need for some specific precaution, such as a railing around an excavation in the sidewalk. The rule stated in §427 is more commonly applied where the danger involved in the work calls for a number of precautions, or involves a number of possible hazards, as in the case of blasting, or painting carried on upon a scaffold above the highway."

Rest.2d, Torts §427A deals with liability where the work involves "an abnormally dangerous activity." The employer "cannot be permitted to escape the responsibility for the abnormal danger created by the activity which he has set in motion, and so cannot delegate the responsibility for harm resulting to others to the contractor." (Comment b.) (On nondelegable duty, see infra, §1247 et seq.)

In Griesel v. Dart Industries (1979) 23 C.3d 578, 153 C.R. 213, 591 P.2d 503, the court observed that "peculiar" does not mean "abnormal;" it is sufficient that the risk is peculiar to the work to be done, and is likely to arise in the course of the ordinary and usual method of doing the work or the particular method that the employer knows that the contractor will adopt. (23 C.3d 586.) Hence, where plaintiff was injured when a trench in which he was working caved in, it was error for the trial judge to instruct the jury that "[t]renching is an ordinary and customary danger of construction work, and trenching in and of itself is not a 'peculiar risk'." The key issue in the case was whether defendant should have recognized a likelihood that someone might enter the trench before the piping and concrete work was to be done. "The question was not therefore whether the trenching work involved a peculiar risk in the abstract but whether it involved a peculiar risk at the time that plaintiff was injured." (23 C.3d 587.)

It is not necessary that the owner know of the contractor's failure to take precautions. The duty is imposed to make the most responsible party (for whose benefit the work is done) charged with protection of those likely to be injured. A requirement that the employer know that the independent contractor is not taking the requisite precautions would contravene this rationale. (McDonald v. Oakland (1965) 233 C.A.2d 672, 676, 43 C.R. 799.) (On abrogation of peculiar risk doctrine as to employees of independent contractor, see infra, §1245.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

E. Employers of Independent Contractors.

3. Inherently Dangerous Work.

b. Distinction: Collateral Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1244

[§ 1244] Distinction: Collateral Negligence.

Rest.2d, Torts §416 does not apply, and the employer is not vicariously liable, where the injury is caused by a risk apart from the work itself, such as a defect in the equipment furnished by the contractor or the negligence of another employee. (See Holman v. California (1975) 53 C.A.3d 317, 330, 124 C.R. 773 [defective equipment].)

In Smith v. Lucky Stores (1976) 61 C.A.3d 826, 132 C.R. 628, defendant hired a contractor to remove the letters of a large and heavy sign from its store. The contractor's employees lowered them to the sidewalk with a crane, and an employee then leaned one of the letters against the truck, releasing his hold. While plaintiff was walking in front of the store a gust of wind blew the sign against her, causing injuries. Held, defendant was not liable. Once the letter reached the pavement, defendant's responsibility for negligence of the contractor's employee ceased; i.e., the employee's conduct was "collateral" negligence because it did not involve the risk that made the work dangerous. (61 C.A.3d 829, 830.)

In Stark v. Weeks Real Estate (1979) 94 C.A.3d 965, 156 C.R. 701, the court observed that it had found no case in which the doctrine had been applied to the negligent use of hand tools by the independent contractor or its employees. "If this type of risk were held to be a special or peculiar risk within the meaning of the doctrine, then one would be hard put to imagine any type of negligence of the contractor or his employees for which the owner could not be held liable." (94 C.A.3d 972.) (See Hughes v. Atlantic Pac. Const. Co. (1987) 194 C.A.3d 987, 1000, 240 C.R. 200 [following Stark].)

Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 C.A.3d 120, 177 C.R. 204, explains this concept of "collateral" or "casual" negligence in a case involving a window washer, working from suspended equipment, who fell after a fellow-employee mistakenly removed weighted sand bags: Peculiar risks are encountered by window washers not adequately protected by safety devices or attaching mechanisms; but dangers resulting from negligence of a fellow worker in removing the means of attachment cannot be reasonably foreseen by the landowner and are "collateral to the risks that normally arise out of that activity." (124 C.A.3d 137.)

In Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 C.A.4th 123, 1 C.R.2d 747, plaintiff, an employee of an independent contractor hired to insulate defendant oil refinery's steam line, was injured when he fell from a partially assembled single-stage scaffold erected by another independent contractor. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was standing on an inverted bucket placed on top of the first section of the scaffold, which was about six feet above the ground, and was reaching for a barely accessible pipe fitting. Held, defendant was not liable under the peculiar risk doctrine. Plaintiff's injury resulted from the combination of a defective piece of equipment, which was commonly used in the construction industry and did not pose a high risk of harm, and plaintiff's negligent use of the equipment. "Both of these elements of negligence lay outside the peculiar risk doctrine." (1 C.A.4th 134.)

In Jordy v. Humboldt (1992) 11 C.A.4th 735, 14 C.R.2d 553, plaintiff, a juvenile who had been placed in a foster home by defendant county, was injured while driving an all-terrain vehicle with the permission of his foster parent. Testifying that he was returning to his parents' home when the accident occurred, plaintiff argued that the risk that he would attempt to flee from the foster home was a foreseeable danger inherent in the placement of a ward with foster families against which defendant should have taken special precautions. Held, the peculiar risk doctrine was not applicable in this situation. Even assuming that there was a risk that plaintiff would flee, it was not a risk of physical harm to plaintiff or anyone else. And for the peculiar risk doctrine to apply there must be some evidence linking the risk, i.e., here, the risk of flight, with some special harm against which the employer should guard. (11 C.A.4th 747.)

The distinction between "collateral" negligence and negligence that will render the employer liable is "a shadowy one at best," and is a question of fact. (Caudel v. East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. (1985) 165 C.A.3d 1, 8, 9, 211 C.R. 222 [reversing summary judgment for defendant].) Moreover, the distinction is often unnecessary under the current law providing that the peculiar risk doctrine does not apply to employees of independent contractors. (See infra, §§1245, 1246.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
3. Inherently Dangerous Work.
c. Distinction: Claim by Employee of Independent Contractor.
1. Peculiar Risk Doctrine Is Not Applicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1245

[§ 1245] Peculiar Risk Doctrine Is Not Applicable.

In Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, P, the owner of a duplex, hired K Roofing to install a new tar and gravel roof. K's foreman directed employee C to carry buckets of hot tar up a ladder to the roof, and, while performing this task, C fell off the ladder and was burned by hot tar. C sought workers' compensation benefits for his injuries, and also sued P under the peculiar risk doctrine. The trial court denied P's motion for summary judgment, and the Court of Appeal denied P's petition for mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; the peculiar risk doctrine, imposing liability on the person who hires an independent contractor for the negligent performance of the contractor (supra, §§1242, 1243), does not apply in favor of the contractor's employee.

(a) Injuries to third parties.

(1) The courts adopted the peculiar risk exception to the general rulemaking an employer nonliable for the negligence of a general contractor to ensure that innocent third parties injured by the negligence of an independent contractor hired by a landowner to do inherently dangerous work would not have to depend on the contractor's solvency in order to receive compensation for the injuries. The risk of loss was more fairly allocated to the person for whose benefit the job was undertaken, and spreading the risk of loss to this person would promote workplace safety. (5 C.4th 694.)

(2) A person held liable under the peculiar risk doctrine is entitled to equitable indemnity from the independent contractor at fault. Thus, though the doctrine is sometimes described as a "nondelegable duty" rule, it is in effect a form of vicarious liability. (5 C.4th 695, and footnote 2.)

(3) The term "peculiar risk" means neither a risk that is abnormal to the type of work done, nor a risk that is abnormally great; it simply means "a special recognizable danger arising out of the work itself." (5 C.4th 695, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §413, Comment b.) For that reason, the term "special risk" is probably more accurate. (5 C.4th 695, citing Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 502, 156 C.R. 41, 595 P.2d 619.)

(b) Injuries to contractor's employees, and exclusive remedy provision of Workers' Compensation Act.

(1) A minority of American jurisdictions expanded the peculiar risk doctrine to allow recovery by the contractor's employees, and California approved this expansion of liability in Woolen v. Aerojet General Corp. (1962) 57 C.2d 407, 20 C.R. 12, 369 P.2d 708, and several later decisions, including Ferrel v. Safway Steel Scaffolds (1962) 57 C.2d 651, 21 C.R. 575, 371 P.2d 311, Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C.2d 245, 66 C.R. 20, 437 P.2d 508, Griesel v. Dart Industries (1979) 23 C.3d 578, 153 C.R. 213, 591 P.2d 503, and Aceves. (5 C.4th 696.) But Woolen and its progeny require reexamination in light of the availability and exclusivity of remedies under the Workers' Compensation Act. (5 C.4th 696.)

(2) The Act's exclusivity provision gives efficacy to the theoretical "compensation bargain" between employer and employee; and it applies to work-related injuries regardless of fault, including the employer's failure to provide a safe workplace. (5 C.4th 697.) It does not, however, preclude the employee from suing anyone else whose conduct was a proximate cause of the injury (5 C.4th 697), or apply in favor of employers who fail to obtain workers' compensation insurance (5 C.4th 698).

(3) Expansion of the peculiar risk doctrine to allow recovery against the person who hired the contractor for injuries to the contractor's employee "produces the anomalous result that a nonnegligent person's liability for the injury is greater than that of the person whose negligence actually caused the injury." (5 C.4th 698.) And most courts that have considered the issue have refused to allow such an employee to recover tort damages from the hiring party. These courts have concluded that the property owner should not have to pay for injuries caused by the contractor's negligent performance of the work when workers' compensation statutes already cover those injuries. (5 C.4th 698, 699.)

(4) Courts and commentators have also expressed concern that the minority rule gives the employees an unwarranted windfall. To permit recovery gives them something that is denied to other workers, i.e., the right to recover tort damages for industrial injuries caused by their employer's failure to provide a safe working environment. This in effect would exempt a single class of employees from the statutory limits of workers' compensation, and would penalize those individuals who hire experts to perform dangerous work rather than assigning this activity to their own inexperienced employees. (5 C.4th 700.)

(5) When a property owner is held liable under the peculiar risk doctrine for injuries to an innocent bystander or an owner of neighboring land, the owner may obtain equitable indemnity from the independent contractor responsible for the injuries. However, when the person injured is an employee of the independent contractor, the Welfare and Institutions Code shields the negligent contractor from an action seeking equitable indemnity. Thus, in this situation, a significant policy justification for imposing peculiar risk liability on a nonnegligent party, i.e. the ability of that party to be made whole by the party responsible for the injury, is missing. (5 C.4th 701.)

(c) Repudiation of Woolen holding. Considered in light of the various goals that the workers' compensation statutes seek to achieve, the conclusion in Woolen that peculiar risk liability should extend to the employee of the independent contractor, "does not withstand scrutiny." (5 C.4th 701.) And, "to the extent that they hold to the contrary," Woolen and its progeny are overruled. (5 C.4th 702, footnote 4.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 648 [Privette].)

A number of decisions follow the Privette rule. (See Whitford v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1054, 1058, 40 C.R.2d 688 [Privette did not require reversal, where liability was based on contractor's negligence, instead of on imputable negligence of subcontractor under peculiar risk doctrine, and judgment for noneconomic damages had already been reduced to reflect contractor's percentage of fault]; Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1117, 1122, 63 C.R.2d 359 [rule that peculiar risk doctrine does not apply to employee of independent contractors applies whether person hiring independent contractor is owner or lessee]; Redfeather v. Chevron USA (1997) 57 C.A.4th 702, 707, 67 C.R.2d 159 [under Privette, owner is not liable for injuries suffered by independent contractor's employees, even if express contract provision requires contractor to indemnify owner against all liability for injury to contractor's employees]; Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 600, 133 C.R.2d 757, infra, §1252; Sheeler v. Greystone Homes (2003) 113 C.A.4th 908, 918, 6 C.R.3d 683 [even if tile worker's injuries were not result of employer's negligence, tile worker could not claim liability, under peculiar risk theory, against hirer who subcontracted tile work to employer].)

Owens v. Giannetta-Heinrich Const. Co. (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1662, 29 C.R.2d 11, finding no compelling reason to depart from the usual rule of retroactive application of tort decisions, held that Privette is retroactive. (23 C.A.4th 1669.) (See Redfeather v. Chevron USA, supra, 57 C.A.4th 707 [citing Owens, and holding Privette to be retroactive].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) No liability of hirer's agent: In Ruiz v. Herman Weissker (2005) 130 C.A.4th 52, 29 C.R.3d 641, a gas and electric company hired defendant agent to be "responsible for reviewing plans to ensure proper planning and feasibility and for monitoring the construction work for safety and contract compliance." (130 C.A.4th 56.) The company then chose an independent contractor to replace insulators on two of its transmission lines, and the contract between the hirer and the contractor specified that the latter was to be responsible for both the work methodology and the safety of its employees. Because the equipment to be used was not high enough to reach all of the insulators, the contractor planned to use a ladder, and defendant agent approved of this technique. When the uppermost insulators had been replaced, one of the contractor's employees was electrocuted as he was preparing to descend. Plaintiff's estate then sued defendant. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The peculiar risk doctrine (text, §1242 et seq.) is based in part on ensuring that the party who ultimately benefited from the independent contractor's work (the hirer) will bear responsibility for an injury to a contractor's employee. Defendant did not benefit from the contractor's work. Moreover, the negligent contractor's liability is limited by workers' compensation. It would thus be unfair to impose greater vicarious liability on defendant than the law would impose on the contractor for its direct liability. This principle, enunciated in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, text, p. 629, is the same whether the suit is against the hirer or its agent. (130 C.A.4th 59.)

(b) Under Hooker v. Department of Trans. (2002) 27 C.4th 198, 115 C.R.2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081, text, §1241, a hirer has a nondelegable duty (see text, §1247 et seq.) to maintain its premises in a reasonably safe condition for the employees of its independent contractors. However, under Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 133 C.R.2d 757, text, §1252, a hirer's liability for breach of this duty is subject to the limitations announced in Privette and its progeny. Even assuming that the hirer is liable under the nondelegable duty doctrine, there is no authority establishing that the hirer's attempt to delegate such a duty to an agent creates liability on the part of the agent. (130 C.A.4th 62.)

(c) Under Hooker, supra, the hirer of an independent contractor remains liable to an employee of the contractor who is injured during the course of the work, where the hirer retains control over the details of the work, and its conduct affirmatively contributes to the employee's injuries. For example, if the hirer's negligent breach of a promise to undertake a particular safety measure results in injury to a contractor's employee, the hirer is liable. However, a hirer's mere failure to correct an unsafe practice of which it was aware and that it had the authority to correct does not affirmatively contribute to the employee's injury, and thus will not support a claim against the hirer. Here, because there was no evidence that defendant agent asserted authority over the contractor's employees or instructed them about what safety procedures to use, the evidence did not show that defendant contributed to the employee's death by some negligent act or omission that was independent of the contractor's negligence. Rather, it was defendant's failure to exercise control, rather than a negligent exercise of control, that is at the heart of plaintiff's case. In other words, although defendant was authorized to stop the work if the contractor failed to comply with its contractual obligations, its failure to use that authority is not sufficient to establish liability. (130 C.A.4th 65, distinguishing Ray v. Silverado Constructors (2002) 98 C.A.4th 1120, 120 C.R.2d 251, text, §1241.)

(New) Hirer's liability to independent contractor of independent contractor: The Privette doctrine applies, and for the same reasons, whether the injured party is an employee of the independent contractor or whether he or she is an independent contractor of the contractor. (Michael v. Denbeste Trans. (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1082, 1093, 40 C.R.3d 777.)

(New) Exception: Landowner's liability to employee of independent contractor for injury caused by hazardous condition on premises: The hirer as the landowner may be liable to an independent contractor's employee, even if it does not retain control over the work, if "(1) it knows or reasonably should know of a concealed, preexisting hazardous condition on its premises; (2) the contractor does not know and could not reasonably ascertain the condition; and (3) the landowner fails to warn the contractor." (Kinsman v. Unocal Corp. (2005) 37 C.4th 659, 36 C.R.3d 495, 123 P.3d 931 [verdict holding landowner liable to independent contractor's employee who contracted cancer from exposure to asbestos was reversed because instruction failed to make clear that hazard had to be known or knowable to contractor; exhaustive analysis of case law]; see Padilla v. Pomona College (2008) 166 C.A.4th 661, 676, 82 C.R.3d 869 [under Kinsman, owner and general contractor were not liable, on basis of failure to disclose hazardous condition, for subcontractor's employee's injury from pressurized water after employee accidentally broke polyvinyl chloride pipe; pressurization in pipe was fully disclosed to subcontractor, who then failed to take necessary precautions to protect pipe from harm]).

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
3. Inherently Dangerous Work.
c. Distinction: Claim by Employee of Independent Contractor.
2. Direct and Vicarious Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1246

[§ 1246] Direct and Vicarious Liability.

In Toland v. Sunland Housing Group (1998) 18 C.4th 253, 74 C.R.2d 878, 955 P.2d 504, plaintiff worker was injured at a housing development under construction when a wall fell on him. Plaintiff not only sought recovery from his employer, the framing subcontractor, under the Workers' Compensation Act, but also sued defendant, the project's owner and general contractor, alleging that raising the wall created a peculiar risk of injury for which defendant should have required the subcontractor to take special precautions. Defendant moved for summary judgment in the trial court, asserting that plaintiff's action was barred under Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, supra, §1245. In opposing the motion, plaintiff argued that Privette had eliminated peculiar risk liability for employees of independent contractors only in actions based on Rest.2d, Torts §416 (supra, §1242; hiring person is liable for contractor's negligence in spite of providing that the contractor take special precautions), but that Privette had no effect on an action brought under Rest.2d, Torts §413 (supra, §1242; hiring person who fails to provide for special precautions is liable for contractor's negligence). Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; all suits by an independent contractor's employee against the hiring party under the peculiar risk doctrine are barred.

(a) Restatement provisions relating to peculiar risk doctrine. The doctrine of peculiar risk, as relevant here, is described in two sections of the Restatement. Under Rest.2d, Torts §413, a person who hires an independent contractor to do inherently dangerous work, but who fails to provide in the contract or in some other manner that special precautions be taken to avert the peculiar risks of that work, may be liable if the contractor's negligent performance of the work causes injury to others. Because this section rests the liability of the hiring person on his or her omission to provide for special precautions in the contract or in some other manner, it is sometimes described as a rule of "direct liability." Under Rest.2d, Torts §416, even if the hiring person has provided for special precautions "in the contract or otherwise," the hiring person may nevertheless be liable if the contractor fails "to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions" and the contractor's performance of the work causes injury to others. Because the hiring person's liability under this section flows from the independent contractor's negligent failure to take special precautions in performing the inherently dangerous work, as required by "the contract or otherwise," the hiring person's liability is often referred to as "vicarious liability." (18 C.4th 259.)

(b) Privette case and its progeny. In Privette, this court unanimously held that, under the peculiar risk doctrine, the hiring person's liability does not extend to the hired contractor's employees. Privette pointed out that the policy reasons supporting imposition of peculiar risk liability on the hiring person for injuries to neighboring property owners or innocent bystanders are absent when the person injured by the independent contractor's negligence is an employee of the contractor. The neighboring landowner or innocent bystander may have no other source of compensation for injuries resulting from the contractor's negligence. In contrast, an employee of the negligent contractor can recover under the workers' compensation system regardless of the solvency of the contractor. Privette noted that another policy justification for imposing peculiar risk liability on the hiring person--namely the hiring person's right to equitable indemnity from the independent contractor--is also absent; the exclusivity provisions of the workers' compensation scheme shield the negligent contractor from that action. (18 C.4th 260.) However, there has been some disagreement in the trial courts and the Courts of Appeal whether Privette bars recovery only in actions brought under Rest.2d, Torts §416, or also those described in Rest.2d, Torts §413. (18 C.4th 262.)

(c) No action lies by independent contractor's employee under peculiar risk doctrine. Contrary to plaintiff's assertion, Privette bars a hired contractor's employees who are injured by the contractor's negligence from seeking recovery against the hiring person, irrespective of whether recovery is sought under the theory of peculiar risk set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §416 or 413. The reasoning in Privette applies in either circumstance. Labeling Rest.2d, Torts §413 as "direct liability" and Rest.2d, Torts §416 as "vicarious liability" is misleading. While the hiring person's liability is cast in both sections in the form of the hiring person's breach of a duty to see that special precautions are taken to prevent injuries to others and is, to that degree, "direct," liability under both is in essence "vicarious" or "derivative" in the sense that it derives from the hired contractor's failure to use reasonable care in performing the work. In fact, the two theories of liability overlap, and most courts have refused to distinguish cases brought under the two sections. (18 C.4th 267.) Ultimately, however, the conclusion that employees of independent contractors cannot recover under either section is premised on policy: In either situation, it would be unfair to impose liability on the hiring person when the liability of the contractor, the one primarily responsible for the worker's on-the-job injuries, is limited to providing workers' compensation coverage. This view is shared by an overwhelming majority of courts that have considered the issue. (18 C.4th 269.) (See 27 Western State L. Rev. 425 [Toland].)

Later decisions are in accord. (See Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 C.4th 1235, 1238, 108 C.R.2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096, supra, §1240.) [Privette/Toland rationale, barring actions by employees of independent contractor against contractor's hirer under peculiar risk doctrine, likewise applies to bar actions by independent contractor's employees for negligent hiring of contractor]; Hooker v. Department of Trans. (2002) 27 C.4th 198, 206, 115 C.R.2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081, supra, §1241 [Privette/Toland rationale applies to bar actions by independent contractor's employees for hirer's negligent exercise of retained control where hirer fails to intervene but not where hirer affirmatively contributes to injuries]; McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores (2002) 27 C.4th 219, 225, 115 C.R.2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094, supra, §1241 [same]; Smith v. ACandS (1994) 31 C.A.4th 77, 94, 37 C.R.2d 457 [Privette holds that negligence is not imputed to premises owner for negligence of any independent contractor that injures any employee]; Zamudio v. San Francisco (1999) 70 C.A.4th 445, 450, 82 C.R.2d 664 [under vicarious liability theory, subcontractor's injured employee, who had received workers' compensation, could not shift liability from his immune employer to owner of project and construction manager; no evidence that project owner and manager were directly liable for plaintiff's injury].)

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

E. Employers of Independent Contractors.

4. Nondelegable Duty.

a. Theory of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1247

[§ 1247] Theory of Liability.

Where the employer is under a duty to do certain work carefully, or maintain property in safe condition, he or she cannot escape responsibility by delegating the work to an independent contractor. (See Clark v. Dziabas (1968) 69 C.2d 449, 451, 71 C.R. 901, 445 P.2d 517, infra, §1251; Delgado v. W.C. Garcia & Associates (1963) 212 C.A.2d 5, 8, 27 C.R. 613; Ramsey v. Marutamaya Ogatsu Fireworks Co. (1977) 72 C.A.3d 516, 525, 140 C.R. 247; LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Const. Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 754, 772, 145 C.R. 244; Bonner v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 1023, 1035, 275 C.R. 337, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §93 [in view of employer's statutory duty to maintain safe workplace (Lab.C. 6400), it could not delegate to building manager task of removing spilled liquid]; Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 C.A.3d 447, 455, 283 C.R. 463 [mortgage loan broker's fiduciary duty to provide home loan investors with full disclosure of material facts cannot be delegated to independent appraiser]; Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1117, 1126, 63 C.R.2d 359 [neither owner nor lessee had contractually agreed to comply with safety standards]; Rest.2d, Torts §424; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §26.11; 41 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Independent Contractors §48; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 768; 13 Hastings L. J. 149; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 690; 33 A.L.R.2d 7, 89 [death from excavation and refill work]; 96 A.L.R.3d 1213 [storekeeper's liability for independent contractor's negligence in performing alterations or repair work]; BAJI, No. 13.22; infra, §1248 et seq.; cf. Felmler v. Falcon Cable TV (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1032, 1036, 43 C.R.2d 158 [cable owner did not have nondelegable duty to cable repairman, who was injured fixing cable television line while working for independent contractor].)

"Unlike strict liability, a nondelegable duty operates, not as a substitute for liability based on negligence, but to assure that when a negligently caused harm occurs, the injured party will be compensated by the person whose activity caused the harm and who may therefore properly be held liable for the negligence of his agent, whether his agent was an employee or an independent contractor. To the extent that recognition of nondelegable duties tends to insure that there will be a financially responsible defendant available to compensate for the negligent harms caused by that defendant's activity, it ameliorates the need for strict liability to secure compensation." (Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 C.2d 442, 446, 71 C.R. 897, 445 P.2d 513, infra, §1251.)

The nondelegable duty rule is a form of vicarious liability, because it is not based on the personal liability of a landowner who hires an independent contractor. Thus, the nondelegable duty rule is incompatible with the limitations on a hirer's liability to an employee of an independent contractor established by Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5

C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, supra, §1245). An employee of an independent contractor cannot recover against the hirer under a nondelegable duty theory unless the hirer has control of the dangerous condition and affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury. (Sheeler v. Greystone Homes (2003) 113 C.A.4th 908, 921, 6 C.R.3d 683.)

A county has no nondelegable duty to prevent ordinary negligence by foster parents. The juvenile court law is designed to prevent only intentional abuse and systematic neglect. (Jordy v. Humboldt (1992) 11 C.A.4th 735, 743, 14 C.R.2d 553.)

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

E. Employers of Independent Contractors.

4. Nondelegable Duty.

b. Work Under Public License.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1248

[§ 1248] Work Under Public License.

(1) In General. Where the employer has a license to excavate for sewers, water pipes, etc., or to grade or pave streets, and by the terms of a municipal ordinance is required to exercise certain precautions and to avoid dangerous conditions, the employer is liable for injuries due to any failure in these respects by an independent contractor engaged by the employer to do the work. (Colgrove v. Smith (1894) 102 C. 220, 223, 36 P. 411; Luce v. Holloway (1909) 156 C. 162, 165, 103 P. 886; Robbins v. Hercules Gasoline Co. (1926) 80 C.A. 271, 273, 251 P. 697; Sawaya v. De Cou (1943) 60 C.A.2d 146, 149, 140 P.2d 98 [same rule where owner failed to obtain permit]; see Rest.2d, Torts §417; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 769; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 47.)

(2) Effect of "Reasonableness" of Delegation Where Delegatee Violates Statutory or Regulatory Requirement. In California Assn. of Health Facilities v. Department of Health Services (1997) 16 C.4th 284, 294, 65 C.R.2d 872, 940 P.2d 323, the Supreme Court discussed the general rule of nondelegable duties of public licensees, though in the context of liability for civil penalties rather than tort liability. Health & Saf.C. 1424 provides that a long-term health care licensee may be assessed civil monetary penalties for violations of state and federal statutes and regulations, but requires the citation to be dismissed if the licensee proves that, despite a violation, it "did what might reasonably be expected of a long-term health care facility licensee, acting under similar circumstances, to comply with the regulation." Here, plaintiff, an association representing long-term health care facility licensees, sought a declaratory judgment that this defense was intended to relieve licensees of vicarious liability for their employees who acted unreasonably. The trial court granted summary judgment for plaintiff and the Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) Under the common law, duties of public licensees are nondelegable. The essential justification for this rule is one of ensuring accountability of licensees to safeguard the public welfare. The principle that a licensee will be held liable for the acts of its agents is one that has been applied whether the agent is an independent contractor or an employee. (16 C.4th 296.) Thus, the duties of licensees under Health & Saf.C. 1424 cannot be delegated to their employees, unless the statutory "reasonable licensee defense" is applicable. (16 C.4th 297.)

(b) This statutory defense is modeled after Ev.C. 669 (supra, §§873, 874, 890). That provision allows a presumption of negligence per se arising from a violation of law to be rebutted by a showing of reasonableness. It is reasonable to presume that the Legislature in enacting the reasonable licensee defense was aware of judicial interpretations of the Evidence Code provision on which it was patterned and intended that the defense be given a comparable construction. (16 C.4th 297.) Cases construing Ev.C. 669 have held that the statute does not negate or repeal the common law principles either of nondelegable duty or of respondeat superior liability. (16 C.4th 298, citing Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 C.2d 442, 444, 71 C.R. 897, 445 P.2d 513, infra, §1251, on nondelegable duty, and respondeat superior, see Grant v. Petronella (1975) 50 C.A.3d 281, 288, 123 C.R. 399.)

(c) Pursuant to this judicial construction of Ev.C. 669, and following the presumption against implied repeal of the common law, plaintiff similarly should not be excused from liability here. These statutory defenses in the Evidence Code and Health and Safety Code do not apply when the independent contractor or employee to whom the licensee's duty is delegated acts unreasonably. The defenses are not intended to preclude vicarious liability of the licensee, but rather strict liability. A licensee is not permitted to defend by showing that the licensee reasonably delegated its duties, but rather by showing that the licensee and its agents acted reasonably under the circumstances, despite the statutory or regulatory violation. (16 C.4th 299.)

(3) Distinction: Mortuary May Delegate Duty to Crematorium. In Hansell v. Santos Robinson Mortuary (1998) 64 C.A.4th 608, 75 C.R.2d 361, plaintiffs, family members of decedents whose bodies were improperly cremated by a crematorium, sued defendant mortuaries that had contracted with the crematorium for its cremation services. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, finding that they had no duty to control the improper cremation practices of the crematorium. Held, affirmed. As licensed funeral directors, defendants were authorized to direct and supervise the burial or disposal of human remains. However, defendants did not have a license to perform cremation, which is a separately licensed activity in which nonlicensed persons, such as funeral directors, have no say. Thus, there is no merit to plaintiffs' contention that by virtue of their license as funeral directors, defendants had a duty to supervise the cremations to ensure that they were properly carried out. The power to control the conduct of crematories rests with the licensing authority, not with the referring mortuaries. (64 C.A.4th 612.)

[§ 1249] Creation of Nuisance.

Where the owner of property having a permit to construct a building employs a contractor, and the contractor creates a nuisance on the premises, as by smoke or uncovered piles of materials, the owner, as well as the contractor, is liable. (Snow v. Marian Realty Co. (1931) 212 C. 622, 624, 299 P. 720; see Spence v. Schultz (1894) 103 C. 208, 212, 37 P. 220.)

This rule was applied where the contractor left a spike projecting from planks on a sidewalk (Wile v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. (1905) 2 C.A. 190, 192, 83 P. 271), and where uncrated metal roof capping was delivered and left on the sidewalk with the knowledge of the owner (*Wise v. XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
4. Nondelegable Duty.
d. Performance of Owner's or Possessor's Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1250

[§ 1250] Performance of Owner's or Possessor's Duty.

A lessor who has undertaken the duty to make repairs is liable where his or her contractor negligently fails to make the premises safe. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§419, 420.) And the same is true where the contractor is negligent in inspection or maintenance of parts of the building retained by the lessor for the use of all the tenants. (Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation (1943) 23 C.2d 256, 259, 143 P.2d 929 [elevators]; see Bowater v. Tasse (1947) 81 C.A.2d 651, 654, 184 P.2d 931; 32 Cal. L. Rev. 196; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 772; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 141.)

Similarly, any other possessor who has a duty to repair or to place a building in reasonably safe condition cannot avoid liability by delegating the work to an independent contractor. (See Rest.2d, Torts §422.) This rule is limited to buildings, structures, or things affixed to them. In Knell v. Morris (1952) 39 C.2d 450, 247 P.2d 352, a borderline case, M, a plumbing contractor, was called to repair a leaking water heater in a building. Held, it could reasonably be inferred that the heater was attached to the building by gas and water pipes, and hence, that the owner was charged with the nondelegable duty. (39 C.2d 456.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
4. Nondelegable Duty.
e. Automobile Driver's Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1251

[§ 1251] Automobile Driver's Duty.

A startling innovation, almost approaching strict liability, was launched in Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 C.2d 442, 71 C.R. 897, 445 P.2d 513, with only one justice dissenting. Plaintiff stopped his car at a traffic signal. Defendant, coming from behind, stepped on the brake pedal, the brakes failed, and a collision occurred. Defendant had engaged a service station operator 3 months previously to overhaul the brakes, and 2 weeks previously to inspect and repair the car. At the time of repair, the defect--a hole in the hydraulic hose caused by rubbing against the right front wheel--could have been detected by a qualified person inspecting the brakes. But defendant neither knew nor had reason to know of the defect. Held, judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) There was no liability under the negligence per se doctrine, for defendant rebutted the presumption of negligence by evidence that she had the car inspected and that the defect was not apparent to anyone but a mechanic. (69 C.2d 444; see supra, §890.)

(b) Despite growing dissatisfaction with the law of negligence in cases of this sort, judicially imposed strict liability would result in chaos; only the Legislature can safely do this by a comprehensive compensation plan. (69 C.2d 445.)

(c) Liability should, however, be imposed under the nondelegable duty doctrine. An improperly maintained motor vehicle threatens a grave risk; responsibility properly rests on the person who owns and operates the vehicle, for the owner is the party primarily benefited, the owner selects the contractor (and can choose one financially responsible, and may demand indemnity); the cost of the owner's liability insurance distributes the risk; and the discharge of his or her duty is of the utmost importance to the public. (69 C.2d 448.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 328; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 201; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 330.)

The Maloney rule was applied in Clark v. Dziabas (1968) 69 C.2d 449, 71 C.R. 901, 445 P.2d 517, with emphasis on the possible defense against the new liability. The record did not show that defendant's independent contractor was negligent. The court held that the defendant should have the opportunity to prove, if he or she can, that the defective condition existed before he or she bought the used car, and that it would not have been discoverable by reasonable inspection thereafter; i.e., that neither the defendant nor the independent contractor was negligent, and therefore that the defendant's nondelegable duty to exercise reasonable care to maintain brakes was not violated. (69 C.2d 451.)

In Dutcher v. Weber (1969) 275 C.A.2d 961, 80 C.R. 378, defendant's brakes failed and his car collided with plaintiff's car. There was no evidence on the actual cause of the failure. Held, judgment on jury verdict for defendant reversed. Defendant produced evidence that the car had been serviced and the brake system checked; hence, he overcame the presumption of negligence per se. (275 C.A.2d 964; see supra, §890.) However, under the Maloney rule, a defendant must also show that the failure was not owing to the negligence of an independent contractor. There was no evidence on that point, because there was no evidence on the cause of the brake failure. (275 C.A.2d 964.) (See Harris v. Irish Truck Lines (1974) 11 C.3d 373, 377, 113 C.R. 489, 521 P.2d 481 [following Maloney and Clark]; Kaley v. Catalina Yachts (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1187, 1201, 232 C.R. 384 [same]; Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 608, 133 C.R.2d 757, infra, §1252.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
4. Nondelegable Duty.
f. Hazardous Waste Disposal.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1252

[§ 1252] Hazardous Waste Disposal.

In Park v. Burlington Northern Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 C.A.4th 595, 133 C.R.2d 757, plaintiff was an employee of defendant hazardous waste disposal company (the independent contractor), which was retained by defendant railway company (the hirer) to remove hazardous materials, including used batteries, from specified locations. A few days before plaintiff's accident, another employee of defendant independent contractor went to a yard of the hirer, collected batteries packed in plastic totes, and repacked them in 55-gallon drums before transporting them. He and his crew did not remove the leads from the batteries, as is usually done. Then, as an agent of the hirer, the other employee signed a manifest certifying that everything had been done for proper packing and shipping. A few days later, plaintiff was injured when a drum that he was moving exploded, and he recovered damages from both defendants totaling $ 1.75 million. However, because plaintiff's employer's liability was limited to workers' compensation benefits, the entire burden of the judgment fell on defendant railway company. Held, reversed; defendant railroad company was not liable for plaintiff's injuries.

(a) Nondelegable duty theory.

(1) Under Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 689, 21 C.R.2d 72, 854 P.2d 721, supra, §1245, and Toland v. Sunland Housing Group (1998) 18 C.4th 253, 74 C.R.2d 878, 955 P.2d 504, supra, §1246, plaintiff, as an employee who had received workers' compensation benefits, could not recover from the hirer on the peculiar risk theory. Because the nonapplicability of the peculiar risk theory removed the possibility of the hirer's being vicariously liable, any liability of that party necessarily had to be based on the existence of a duty to plaintiff. (108 C.A.4th 605.)

(2) State and federal statutes and regulations impose nondelegable duties on the generator of hazardous waste to see that the waste is properly disposed of. The hirer was, therefore, under a nondelegable duty to see that its used storage batteries were properly disposed of, and it could not avoid that duty by hiring an independent contractor to do the disposal work. However, the fact that the duty was nondelegable does not necessarily mean that the hirer was liable to plaintiff for injuries caused by the independent contractor's negligence. (108 C.A.4th 609.)

(3) The current test for determining liability in this situation was stated in Hooker v. Department of Trans. (2002) 27 C.4th 198, 115 C.R.2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081, supra, §1241, retained control over safety conditions at the worksite does not support liability unless the plaintiff proves that the exercise of the retained control affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries. Although the duties imposed on the generator of hazardous waste by statute and regulation are nondelegable duties, which survive Privette, the generator is not liable to the employee of a subcontractor who is employed to dispose of the hazardous waste unless it is shown that the generator's conduct affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries. (108 C.A.4th 610.)

(4) Here, the hirer packed the used batteries in totes, not sealed drums, and there was no evidence that the hirer's packaging was inadequate. Although the leads remained on the batteries in many cases, there was no danger of explosion, because the plastic totes used by the hirer were open at the top and thus provided for ample ventilation for the hydrogen released by the batteries. In fact, the accident would not have occurred had the independent contractor not repackaged the batteries in sealed drums. Thus, this repackaging, without removing the leads, must be viewed as a legally superseding cause. (108 C.A.4th 611.)

(b) Agency theory.

(1) Plaintiff argued that the hirer's conduct affirmatively contributed to his injuries because the actions of the other employee, as an authorized agent of the hirer, were attributable to the hirer. Although the jury found that plaintiff's employer was the hirer's agent for signing the manifest and its independent contractor for packing the batteries, and although it was the packing of the drums that led to plaintiff's injuries, plaintiff nevertheless contended that the hirer was directly liable for the torts of its agent because it authorized and ratified them. This contention must be rejected. Even assuming that the duties of the independent contractor to collect and pack the batteries for shipment can be divided so that the independent contractor was an agent for purposes of signing the manifests and an independent contractor for purposes of packing the batteries for shipment, plaintiff's injuries were obviously caused by the negligent packing of the drums, not by the certification that they had been properly packed. Hooker's retention of control theory applies if plaintiff can show that the hirer's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributed to his injuries. No affirmative contribution is shown by the fact that the hirer authorized signing hazardous waste manifests on its behalf, even though this was done negligently. The same reasoning would apply even if the independent contractor was considered to be the hirer's agent in both respects. (108 C.A.4th 612.)

(2) The issue then is whether the hirer's retained control over signing the hazardous waste manifest was exercised in a manner that contributed to plaintiff's injuries. Plaintiff argued that it was and pointed to the hirer's failure to investigate a prior accident involving still another of the independent contractor's employees. However, this argument neglected the jury finding that, although the hirer was negligent in failing to investigate the prior accident, this negligence was not a cause of that employee's injuries. Because substantial evidence supported this conclusion, it cannot be said that the hirer's failure to investigate the prior accident contributed to plaintiff's injuries. Nor can it be said that the hirer was liable because it knew of the unsafe packing methods used by the independent contractor and that, by the receipt of the signed manifests, it was certifying batteries for transport that were not safely packaged for this purpose. Again, this argument fails because plaintiff did not show that the hirer affirmatively exercised its retained control. (108 C.A.4th 613.)

(3) In summary, the hirer hired a licensed hazardous waste disposal company to properly dispose of its hazardous waste. Although the hirer remained ultimately responsible for the disposal, the overwhelming evidence of the independent contractor's negligence cannot lead to hirer's liability for the entire verdict without a showing that hirer did something to affirmatively contribute to plaintiff's injuries. The Supreme Court's decisions in Privette, Toland, and Hooker require a finding that the hirer is not liable for the injuries to plaintiff, the employee of the independent contractor. (108 C.A.4th 614.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
5. Public Franchise to Employer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1253

[§ 1253] Public Franchise to Employer.

If a carrier or other public service corporation operates under a public franchise, it is liable for the negligence of an independent contractor engaged to act. (See Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 C.2d 594, 604, 110 P.2d 1044 [franchise to furnish garbage removal service]; Gamboa v. Conti Trucking (1993) 19 C.A.4th 663, 665, 668, 23 C.R.2d 564; Serna v. Pettey Leach Trucking (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1475, 1479, 2 C.R.3d 835 [under nondelegable duty theory, interstate carrier operating under public franchise was liable for negligence of trucking company that it used as independent contractor; fact that company's cargo, poultry, was exempt from regulation had no bearing on carrier's liability]; Rest.2d, Torts §428; 41 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Independent Contractors §49; 34 A.L.R.2d 1121 [liability of lessor motor carrier for lessee's torts or nonperformance of franchise duties].)

In Eli v. Murphy (1952) 39 C.2d 598, 248 P.2d 756, CMT, licensed by the Public Utilities Commission as a highway common carrier, contracted with M to transport goods. Held, CMT was liable for M's negligence. The highway common carrier is engaged in a business attended with considerable risks, and legislative safety regulations and financial responsibility to the public would be impaired if the franchised carrier could conduct its business through another over whom it had no control. "Accordingly, both to protect the public from financially irresponsible contractors, and to strengthen safety regulations, it is necessary to treat the carrier's duties as nondelegable." (39 C.2d 600.) (See Lehman v. Robertson Truck-A-Way (1953) 122 C.A.2d 82, 84, 264 P.2d 653 [same rule applied where defendant, licensed by ICC, engaged independent contractors to carry some freight]; Klein v. Leatherman (1969) 270 C.A.2d 792, 796, 76 C.R. 190 [common and contract carrier was liable for negligence of subhauler operating with revoked permit and cancelled insurance]; cf. Hill Brothers Chemical Co. v. Superior Court (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1001, 1010, 20 C.R.3d 530 [public policy does not support extension of nondelegable duty rule to private carriers, i.e., those who use highways only to transport own products incidental to their business, as opposed to for hire carriers, who use public highways as business; distinguishing Eli].)

The principle was somewhat extended in Snyder v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 793, 285 P.2d 912. Defendant, a public utility distributing electricity, engaged W, an independent contractor, to construct lines. W negligently installed a power pole in violation of a Commission Safety Order. Held, defendant was liable, despite the contention that the installation of poles is merely incidental to the main business authorized by its franchise. The construction and maintenance of its lines is a necessary part of the utility's business. "Whether we speak of the existence of a nondelegable duty as arising from defendant's franchise to do business or a special duty imposed by statute or rule or as a common law principle is not important. ... If a common law principle is involved, defendant, as the possessor of land, is answerable for the negligent failure of ... the independent contractor to put or maintain structures, the poles, in reasonably safe condition." (44 C.2d 802.)

If, however, the employer is not a common carrier operating under a certificate of public convenience and necessity and subject to the Commission's safety regulations, but is a mere contract carrier who engages another contract carrier to carry goods, the special exception does not apply and the case falls within the general rule of nonliability for negligence of an independent contractor. (Gaskill v. Calaveras Cement Co. (1951) 102 C.A.2d 120, 125, 226 P.2d 633; cf. Gilbert v. Rogers (1953) 117 C.A.2d 712, 714, 256 P.2d 574 [same rule applied to radial highway common carrier and licensed highway contract carrier, both standing on equal footing and no nondelegable duty involved]; see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 770.)

Obviously, the exception applies only where the work is carried on under a public franchise, not merely because the general contractor contracted with the state or other public entity to perform work. (West v. Guy F. Atkinson Const. Co. (1967) 251 C.A.2d 296, 301, 59 C.R. 286.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
6. General Contractor's Liability for Subcontractor's Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1254

[§ 1254] General Contractor's Liability for Subcontractor's Negligence.

In Dow v. Holly Mfg. Co. (1958) 49 C.2d 720, 321 P.2d 736, defendant B, a general contractor, prepared plans and built a home, and defendant D, his plumbing subcontractor, installed gas heaters. The owner sold the home to another, and it was finally acquired by plaintiffs. They brought this action for wrongful death of the father and two children of the family, caused by asphyxiation from a defective heater. Held, B was liable.

(a) A general contractor is liable for his or her own negligence under the modern rule dispensing with privity and applying the manufacturer's liability theory to building constructors (supra, §1160). A landowner or possessor is liable for harm caused by a dangerous condition on his or her property, despite the fact that the landowner or possessor employs an independent contractor to do the work. (See supra, §1247.) The same rule applies here; i.e., a general contractor, who has control over and is primarily responsible for the construction, should inspect installations, and is liable for the harm despite the fact that a subcontractor (independent contractor) did the particular work. (49 C.2d 725.) (See 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 203.)

(b) The supplier of chattels who furnishes a product made by another, and is thereby deemed to have vouched for them as his or her own, and to assume the same liability as the manufacturer (see supra, §1169) is analogous. The contractor produces a completed house, including gas heaters, that appear as the contractor's. "Surely there is no valid distinction between a general contractor constructing a building and using subcontractors to install equipment therein, and the manufacturer of an automobile buying parts not fabricated by it to install in the car, and selling the assembled car." (49 C.2d 727.) (See 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 205 [criticism].)

A general contractor is liable to an invitee where the contractor has knowledge that the work is being done in a dangerous manner. (Gardner v. Stonestown Corp. (1956) 145 C.A.2d 405, 412, 302 P.2d 674; see La Malfa v. Piombo Bros. (1945) 70 C.A.2d 840, 848, 161 P.2d 964 [defendants, engaged in constructing airport, negligently allowed independent truck drivers to operate in unsafe manner on defendants' private road, injuring plaintiffs' truck]; Rest.2d, Torts §414, Comment b; cf. Ambriz v. Petrolane, Ltd. (1957) 49 C.2d 470, 481, 319 P.2d 1 [gas company cannot insulate itself from liability for inherently dangerous activity by having independent contractor deliver gas]; and see generally 62 A.L.R.2d 1052 [independent contractor's or subcontractor's liability for injury or death of third person occurring during excavation work not in street or highway].)

The general contractor may also be liable to the negligent subcontractor's employee. In Kuntz v. Del E. Webb Const. Co. (1961) 57 C.2d 100, 18 C.R. 527, 368 P.2d 127, defendant W, a general contractor, employed M, a subcontractor, to install steel decking. Plaintiff, a worker employed by another subcontractor, was injured in a fall from a defective installation. The evidence showed that W exercised no control over M's work of installation, but that, by reason of a notice by a state safety engineer, W had knowledge of the dangerous condition. Held, W had a duty toward plaintiff, an invitee, to keep the premises safe or warn of the dangers. "[W]here a general contractor knows from matters coming to his attention that work done by a subcontractor has created a type of dangerous condition which may reasonably be expected to recur unless precautions are taken and that employees of other subcontractors may be exposed to the danger without being aware of its existence, he has a duty to exercise reasonable care to protect those employees and may be held liable if his failure to do so is a proximate cause of injury to them." (57 C.2d 105.) (See Jean v. Collins Const. Co. (1963) 215 C.A.2d 410, 415, 30 C.R. 149 [general contractor was liable where he left steel rods protruding vertically from foundation, creating dangerous condition for subcontractor's men working on structure above]; 15 Hastings L. J. 610; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 120.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
E. Employers of Independent Contractors.
7. Hospital's Liability for Doctor's Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1255

[§ 1255] Hospital's Liability for Doctor's Negligence.

"The pivotal question presented by this appeal is whether a hospital is liable to a patient under the doctrine of corporate negligence for negligent conduct of independent physicians and surgeons who, as members of the hospital staff, avail themselves of the hospital facilities, but who are neither employees nor agents of the hospital." (Elam v. College Park Hosp. (1982) 132 C.A.3d 332, 335, 183 C.R. 156.) S, a licensed podiatrist, had been granted podiatric surgery privileges by defendant Hospital, but he was an independent contractor operating his own office and paid directly by the patient. The Hospital's patient care evaluation committee reviewed his medical charts along with those of other doctors, and never reported any reason to consider him unqualified to practice podiatric surgery. However, the Hospital had notice of a malpractice suit against S more than 4 months before plaintiff's surgery. Plaintiff alleged that S performed negligent surgery, and that defendant Hospital breached its duty of insuring the competency of its staff physicians. Held, summary judgment for defendant Hospital reversed.

(a) California decisions have established hospital liability for a doctor's malpractice when the doctor is actually employed by or is ostensibly an agent of the hospital. (132 C.A.3d 337; see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §39.) But whether a hospital is liable in the absence of the employment relationship, under the doctrine of "corporate negligence," is a question of first impression in California. (132 C.A.3d 337, 338; see footnote 5, defining term to describe hospital liability based not on vicarious liability but on violation of corporate duty owed directly to patient.)

(b) Defendant Hospital argues that it does not owe its patients a legal duty to exercise reasonable care in selecting, reviewing, and evaluating the competency of the doctors whom it permits to treat patients within its facilities; hence, even if its acts were a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, it cannot be held liable for negligence. Thus, as a basis for holding that the doctrine of corporate hospital liability should be applied, a legal duty of care must be found. (132 C.A.3d 338.) This raises a question of law for the court. (132 C.A.3d 339.)

(c) There is a legal duty. The fundamental policy is embodied in C.C. 1714, and Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, lists the major factors to be considered. (132 C.A.3d 339, 340.) The case law has recognized a hospital's duty to use reasonable care to protect patients from harm, including the discovery and treatment of their medical conditions; its business is caring for ill persons, and it is under a duty to observe and know their conditions. (132 C.A.3d 340, citing Rice v. California Lutheran Hosp. (1945) 27 C.2d 296, 163 P.2d 860, supra, §988.) This duty of due care encompasses the duty to insure the competence of its medical staff through careful selection and review. (132 C.A.3d 341.) The statutory authority recognizing hospital accountability for the quality of medical care and the competence of medical staff furnishes additional support for this conclusion. (132 C.A.3d 341 et seq., listing a number of statutes and administrative regulations.)

(d) The conclusion is also consonant with the public's perception of the modern hospital as "a multifaceted, health-care facility responsible for the quality of medical care and treatment rendered." The patient receives care from a number of individuals of varying capacities, and relies on a highly integrated system of activities; consequently, the concept that a hospital does not undertake to treat patients or act through its doctors and nurses, but only procures them to act on their own responsibility, no longer reflects the fact. (132 C.A.3d 344.) Further, the hospital is in the best position to evaluate the competence of physicians allowed to practice in its premises, for it is the only institutional vehicle available to coordinate the delivery of health care to large numbers of people. (132 C.A.3d 345.)

(e) "In summary, we hold a hospital is accountable for negligently screening the competency of its medical staff to insure the adequacy of medical care rendered to patients at its facility. ... [T]he articulated public policy considerations support the imposition of this general duty and outweigh the potential effect of corporate hospital liability upon the structure of medical malpractice insurance in California. Moreover, imposing hospital-corporate liability does not interfere with the Legislature's comprehensive efforts to ameliorate the integrity and quality of the health care system ... , but rather supplements the efforts by encouraging hospitals to actively oversee the competence of their medical staff and the quality of the medical treatment rendered on their premises, while providing victims with an additional avenue for relief. Simply stated, the Legislature has not attempted to immunize the hospital from liability arising from its negligence. Instead, the underlying statutory intent of the cited legislative campaign is the protection and furtherance of the health care interest of the patient." (132 C.A.3d 346.)

This innovative decision has given rise to much comment, and its evidentiary problems have been considered in later cases. (See 6 Proof of Facts 2d 647 [hospital's failure to supervise private physician using hospital]; 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 429; 22 Cal. Western L. Rev. 317; 8 Pacific L. J. 141; 14 *Pacific L. Witkin Summary of California Law XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile. 1. Parent or Custodian of Minor. a. Signer of Driver's License.

[§ 1256] Signer of Driver's License.

(1) License of Minor. Persons under 18 years of age are minors for the purposes of civil liability of the signer of a driver's license. (Veh.C. 17700; for similar general law, see Family C. 6500, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §26.) A minor's application for a driver's license cannot be granted unless it is signed and verified (a) by the parents, if both are living and have custody, or (b) by the living parent with custody, or (c) if neither parent is living or has custody, by the guardian, or if none, by a person having custody. (Veh.C. 17701.)

If the minor is a dependent or ward, the application may be signed by a grandparent, sibling over 18, aunt, uncle, or foster parent with whom the minor resides. If the dependent or ward files proof of financial responsibility, the application may be signed and verified by the probation officer or child protective services worker, but the officer or worker must first notify the foster parents or other responsible party of his or her intent to sign and verify the application. (Veh.C. 17701.) If a minor under the age of 18 years is married, the application may be signed and verified by the adult spouse of the minor or by the parents of either spouse; in lieu of the signature, the minor may file proof of financial responsibility, as defined in Veh.C. 16430 et seq. (Veh.C. 17702.)

The persons required to sign may consent to an application signed by the minor's employer; the employer then becomes liable and the consenting parents, etc., are not. (Veh.C. 17706.)

(2) Liability of Signer. The signer of the application is liable for the minor driver's automobile tort. (Veh.C. 17707; for similar statutes, see 45 A.L.R.4th 87.) (See BAJI, No. 13.67; CACI, No. 723; for driving with permission law, see Veh.C. 17150, infra, §1260.)

No liability may be imposed under Veh.C. 17707 on the state or county, or on a probation officer or child protective services worker acting as an officer of the court, for damages caused solely by the minor's negligence or wilful misconduct, where the minor's application was signed by the officer or worker while the minor was a dependent or ward of the court. (Veh.C. 17707.)

The signer is also not liable where the minor is acting as another's agent or employee. (Veh.C. 17710.)

F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

1. Parent or Custodian of Minor.
- b. Minor Driving With Permission.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1257

[§ 1257] Minor Driving With Permission.

Originally, a parent who knowingly permitted a child to drive without a license escaped liability. (See Perry v. Simeone (1925) 197 C. 132, 136, 239 P. 1056; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 305.) Now, if a minor, whether licensed or not, drives a motor vehicle upon a highway with the express or implied permission of his or her parents, guardian, or custodian, any civil liability of the minor is imposed on the persons granting the permission. (Veh.C. 17708; see Hughes v. Wardwell (1953) 117 C.A.2d 406, 409, 255 P.2d 881; BAJI, No. 13.66; CACI, No. 722.)

No liability may be imposed under Veh.C. 17708 on the state or county, or on a probation officer or child protective services worker acting as an officer of the court, for damages caused solely by the minor's negligence or wilful misconduct, where the minor's application was signed by the officer or worker while the minor was a dependent or ward of the court. CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile. 1. Parent or Custodian of Minor. c. Nature and Scope of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1258

[§ 1258] Nature and Scope of Liability.

The following conditions of liability under Veh.C. 17707 and 17708 (supra, §§1256, 1257) should be noted:

(1) Maximum Liability. In the absence of agency, i.e., unless the minor acts as the agent of the parent, guardian, or employer, the liability of the signer is limited to $ 15,000 for injury or death of one person, $ 30,000 for more than one, and $ 5,000 for property damage. (Veh.C. 17709.) A judgment in excess of the statutory maximum is not void, but it may be reduced on appeal. (Rogers v. Foppiano (1937) 23 C.A.2d 87, 93, 72 P.2d 239.)

The liability does not extend to punitive damages imposed on the minor. (Veh.C. 17709(b).) And there is no cumulative liability where two statutes apply. (Veh.C. 17714, infra, §1261.)

Veh.C. 17709 is a limitation only on the liability based on signing the minor's application for a license (Veh.C. 17707) and the liability of a parent or guardian permitting the minor to drive (Veh.C. 17708). It is not a limitation on the liability of a licensed driver for negligent supervision of a driver with a learner's permit (Veh.C. 12509). (Kostecky v. Henry (1980) 113 C.A.3d 362, 369, 370, 170 C.R. 197.)

(2) Statute of Limitations. The liability is similar to that of a bondsman, and the statute of limitations is the same as that governing the right of action for the injury, i.e., 1 year. (McFarland v. Cordiero (1929) 99 C.A. 352, 355, 278 P. 889; Franceschi v. Scott (1935) 7 C.A.2d 494, 46 P.2d 764; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §520.)

(3) Act of Another Driver. The signer is liable only where the applicant is the driver of the car; a parent will not be held liable when the child permits a friend to drive and the latter's negligence is the cause of the injury. (Lundquist v. Lundstrom (1928) 94 C.A. 109, 112, 270 P. 696; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 305; for different rule under driving with permission law, see infra, §1272.)

(4) Contribution. There is no liability for contribution. In Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. Dolan (1972) 27 C.A.3d 534, 104 C.R. 131, a person injured in a collision with a railroad handcar and an automobile was given judgment against the railroad company and the minor driver of the automobile. The railroad company paid more than half and became entitled to contribution from the minor. The minor was unable to pay, and the company then sought to enforce the judgment for contribution against the minor's parents, on a showing that he had driven the car with their permission. Held, not entitled. Although the broad language of Veh.C. 17708 is not free from ambiguity, the purpose of the statutes imposing vicarious liability on owners and signers of license applications is to protect innocent third persons from careless use of automobiles; there was no legislative intent to permit a tortfeasor to obtain contribution from the owner or signer whose liability is only for another's tort. (27 C.A.3d 540.) (See Dow v. Britt (1974) 37 C.A.3d 868, 871, 112 C.R. 710 [partial satisfaction of judgment against son, by son's insurance carrier, in amount that equaled statutory liability of defendant parents, released parents from their statutory liability].)

1. Parent or Custodian of Minor.
d. Termination of Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1259

[§ 1259] Termination of Liability.

Liability of the parent, guardian, or custodian (see supra, §1256 et seq.) may terminate in a number of ways:

- (1) By cancellation of the license, on receipt by the Department of Motor Vehicles of satisfactory evidence of the death of the signer. (Veh.C. 17712(a).)
- (2) By cancellation of the license, on the request of the signer. (Veh.C. 17711, 17712(b).)
- (3) By cancellation of the license, on receipt by the department of satisfactory evidence of a change in custody and request of the person or persons to whom custody has been transferred. (Veh.C. 17712(c).)
- (4) By cancellation of the license, on receipt by the department of satisfactory evidence that a minor has left the employ of an employer who signed the license. (Veh.C. 17712(d).)
- (5) By revocation of the license as a penalty under Veh.C. 13101. If the department revokes, the privilege of driving is terminated, and application by the parent under Veh.C. 17711 would be superfluous and is not required. (Hamilton v. Dick (1967) 254 C.A.2d 123, 125, 61 C.R. 894.)
- (6) By the minor giving proof of the ability to respond in damages, e.g., by insurance policy or bond. This may be accomplished by an application with the consent of the persons required to sign, or, if the minor is emancipated other than by marriage, by an application of the minor alone. F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

2. Driving With Permission.

a. In General.

1. Statutory Development.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1260

[§ 1260] Statutory Development.

(1) Law Prior to 1967. It was formerly the rule in California that the owner of a car who allowed another to drive it was not liable for the driver's torts, even though the driver was a member of his or her family. The "family purpose doctrine" was not followed, and liability arose only from agency or joint enterprise. (See Spence v. Fisher (1920) 184 C. 209, 214, 193 P. 255; 9 Cal. L. Rev. 250; 8 A.L.R.3d 1191 [family purpose doctrine in other jurisdictions].)

A 1929 statute provided that the owner of a motor vehicle should be responsible for injuries or death resulting from the negligence of "any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner." (See generally Sparks v. Berntsen (1942) 19 C.2d 308, 310, 121 P.2d 497 [what constitutes proper verdict against owner and driver]; Ridley v. Young (1944) 64 C.A.2d 503, 510, 149 P.2d 76 [minor owner liable, despite statutory prohibition against delegation of power; liability not based on agency]; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 75; 31 Cal. L. Rev. 572; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 242; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 517; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 174.)

(2) Amendments in 1967. The 1967 Legislature dropped the theory of imputed negligence and enlarged the scope of liability. Veh.C. 17150 now states that the owner "is liable and responsible" for death or injury to person or property resulting from "a negligent or wrongful act or omission" by the driver with permission. (See Veh.C. 17707, supra, §1256 [similar rule on liability of parent, etc., signing minor's driving license]; Veh.C. 17154, infra, §1269 [same, executor or bailee]; Veh.C. 17159, infra, §1269 [same, executor or administrator].) (For statute imposing liability on motor vehicle lessor for damage caused by operation of rented vehicle, see 41 A.L.R.4th 933; for instructions, see BAJI, No. 13.50 et seq.; CACI, No. 720 et seq.)

(3) Constitutionality and Construction. The statute is constitutional. (See Milgate v. Wraith (1942) 19 C.2d 297, 303, 121 P.2d 10; Sutton v. Tanger (1931) 115 C.A. 267, 269, 1 P.2d 521; O'Neill v. Williams (1932) 127 C.A. 385, 387, 15 P.2d 879.) It has been said that because it creates a new statutory liability, the statute must be strictly construed (Weber v. Pinyan (1937) 9 C.2d 226, 229, 70 P.2d 183), but this theory is questionable in view of C.C. 4 (general preference for liberal construction). (See Baugh v. Rogers (1944) 24 C.2d 200, 209, 148 P.2d 633; Bayless v. Mull (1942) 50 C.A.2d 66, 69, 122 P.2d 608.)

(4) Independent Liability. Liability of the owner is not dependent on a judgment against the operator. (See Holland v. Kodimer (1938) 11 C.2d 40, 42, 77 P.2d 843; Baugh, supra, 24 C.2d 209.) In Van Meter v. Reed (1962) 207 C.A.2d 866, 869, 24 C.R. 688, plaintiff, employee of an automobile agency, was struck by a car driven by defendant fellow employee with the permission of defendant owner. Held, a cause of action was stated against defendant owner even though the workers' compensation law precluded any judgment against the fellow employee. (207 C.A.2d 869.) (See Galvis v. Petito (1993) 13 C.A.4th 551, 559, 560, 16 C.R.2d 560 [holding that Baugh was not affected by amendment to Veh.C. 17150 deleting imputation language or by amendments to Lab.C. 3601 and 3864 abrogating owner's right to indemnity against operator who is coemployee of injured party].)

(See Veh.C. 17155 [settlement limits total is $ 30,000]; *Young v. (2) No Cumulative Liability. [§ 1262] Vehicle and Operation.

(1) Motor Vehicle. Most "self-propelled" vehicles come within the statute. (See Veh.C. 415 [excluding certain self-propelled machines used by the disabled].) Hence, liability could be imposed for the operation of a bulldozer, irrespective of the facts that it was used on private property and exceeded the weight and other limits for lawful movement on the highway. (Lambert v. Southern Counties Gas Co. of Calif. (1959) 52 C.2d 347, 351, 340 P.2d 608.) And for purposes of Veh.C. 3000 et seq. (Veh.C. 415(c).)

(2) Place Where Driving Occurs. Webster v. Zevin (1947) 77 C.A.2d 855, 176 P.2d 960, made clear that the liability of an owner is not limited to cases of driving on a public highway. Defendant lent the car to the driver, who parked it on a slope, in the lot of a nightclub; he alighted, and the car immediately rolled down the slope, killing decedent. Held, defendant was liable for the negligent operation of the car by the driver on private property, because former Veh.C. 402 (now Veh.C. 17150) indicated no legislative intent to confine liability to accidents occurring on public highways. (77 C.A.2d 856.) (See 18 A.L.R.3d 814 [what constitutes "using"]; 103 A.L.R.5th 339 [what constitutes "operation" or "negligence in operation"].)

4. Effect of Settlement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1263

[§ 1263] Effect of Settlement.

(1) Settlement With Owner. A plaintiff does not, by settlement with the owner, discharge the liability of the driver unless the settlement and release is in full satisfaction of the claim. Under C.C.P. 877 (supra, §§71, 72) a partial satisfaction received from one joint tortfeasor discharges the other only to the extent of the payment made. (Kemp v. Barnett (1976) 62 C.A.3d 245, 249, 250, 132 C.R. 823.)

(2) Settlement in Full Satisfaction. In Burton v. Gardner Motors (1981) 117 C.A.3d 426, 172 C.R. 647, plaintiff was injured in a collision with a car lent by defendant owner G to C. C's offer to compromise for $ 6,500 was accepted by plaintiff, judgment was entered in that amount, and the judgment was satisfied. Held, summary judgment for defendant G affirmed. Under the statute, G and C were considered joint tortfeasors, and a full satisfaction against one discharged the liability of the other. (117 C.A.3d 431, citing the text.) Kemp v. Barnett, supra, is distinguishable. Because the driver's liability is unlimited, the driver is discharged only to the extent of the payment made by the owner with limited liability. The Kemp rule does not apply where the payment is made by the driver and the owner's liability is fixed by the amount of the driver's liability and the statutory maximum. (117 C.A.3d 432.) Where both the permittee (C) and the owner (G) are before the court, the permittee by settling violates the statutory policy favoring a joint judgment against all defendants; and allowing the plaintiff to pursue the claim against the owner after settling with the permittee would impair the owner's right to subrogation against the permittee. (117 C.A.3d 433.) (See Lindgren v. Baker Engineering Corp. (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1351, 1354, 243 C.R. 476 [settlement with driver for $ 25,000 discharged owner's statutory liability of $ 15,000, despite reservation of right to proceed against owner's assets].)

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

2. Driving With Permission.

a. In General.

5. Effect of Unsatisfied Judgment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1264

[§ 1264] Effect of Unsatisfied Judgment.

Walker v. Belvedere (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1663, 20 C.R.2d 773, presents the issue whether an unsatisfied judgment against the operator, exceeding the owner's statutory $ 15,000 liability, precludes a judgment against the owner.

Plaintiff Walker was injured when her vehicle was struck by one owned by defendants B and A. At the time of the collision, A was the driver and B was a passenger. W brought two causes of action, negligent operation of the vehicle and negligent entrustment by B. Because A's negligence was admitted, the jury was asked to decide only the negligent entrustment cause of action. It found for B, and the trial judge entered judgment against A's estate for $ 335,000 (A died prior to commencement of the action). Two weeks later, W asked the trial judge to set aside the judgment and enter a new judgment that included recovery against B under Veh.C. 17150 and 17151. The trial judge declined to do so. Held, this was error; obtaining a judgment against a negligent permissive driver does not, by itself, extinguish the Vehicle Code statutory liability of the vehicle's owner.

"Here, it is uncontested that the judgment had not yet been satisfied to any extent when Walker asked the trial court for entry of a judgment against Belvedere based on statutory liability. In spite of the existence of an insurance policy, there was no settlement with its implied promise of forthcoming payment. The mere existence of a judgment does not meet the legislative purpose of protecting the injured party first and the owner second. Accordingly, the jury's verdict and consequent judgment did not extinguish Belvedere's liability prior to satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of Belvedere's statutory liability. Walker had proven what she needed in order to secure a Vehicle Code statutory judgment against Belvedere." (16 C.A.4th 1669, citing Heves v. Kershaw (1961) 198 C.A.2d 340, 17 C.R. 837, infra, §1270, Burton v. Gardner Motors (1981) 117 C.A.3d 426, 172 C.R. 647, supra, §1263, and *Lindgren v. Witkin Summary of California Law
F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.
2. Driving With Permission.
b. Liability of Owner.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1265

[§ 1265] In General.

(1) Registered and Actual Owners. Ordinarily, "owner" means the registered owner. Indeed, a registered owner may be liable even though he or she procures the registration wrongfully and is a converter as to the true owner. (Irvine v. Wilson (1955) 137 C.A.2d Supp. 843, 848, 289 P.2d 895.) (See 74 A.L.R.3d 739 [who is "owner" within statute].) However, where defendant owner permitted an incompetent person to drive and for the purpose of avoiding liability had the car registered in the driver's name, defendant was held liable on proof of actual ownership. (McCalla v. Grosse (1941) 42 C.A.2d 546, 549, 109 P.2d 358; see 29 Cal. L. Rev. 777.)

(2) Seller as Owner. A seller under a conditional sale, prior to repossession, and a chattel mortgagee out of possession are not deemed to be owners for purposes of liability; but the "purchaser under a security agreement" is an owner. (Veh.C. 17156; see Veh.C. 460 [definition of "owner"].) Whether repossession has occurred is a question of fact. (Campbell v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1976) 62 C.A.3d 379, 385, 133 C.R. 77.)

A problem arises, however, both in ordinary sales and conditional sales, where the transfer does not comply with the formalities required by Veh.C. 5600, 5601. This failure may render the transfer ineffective, and thus defeat the passage of title (see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §237), with the result that the seller remains the owner for purposes of liability. (See Dorsey v. Barba (1952) 38 C.2d 350, 353, 240 P.2d 604; Stoddart v. Peirce (1959) 53 C.2d 105, 112, 346 P.2d 744; Bunch v. Kin (1934) 2 C.A.2d 81, 86, 37 P.2d 744; Schmidt v. C.I.T. Corp. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 92, 94, 57 P.2d 1016; Guillot v. Hagman (1939) 30 C.A.2d 582, 586, 86 P.2d 865 [accident occurred day after sale, notice of transfer was not received by Department of Motor Vehicles until 13 days after sale]; Helmuth v. Frame (1941) 46 C.A.2d 372, 376, 115 P.2d 846; Gutknecht v. Johnson (1944) 62 C.A.2d 315, 319, 144 P.2d 854; Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. (1955) 130 C.A.2d 158, 162, 278 P.2d 493; Harbor Ins. Co. v. Paulson (1955) 135 C.A.2d 22, 27, 286 P.2d 870; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 70; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 398; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 414.)

In Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1541, 71 C.R.2d 190, a mechanic whose arm was severed by a fan blade that broke loose from a truck engine sued the truck's former owner for negligent failure to have the fan replaced in response to a recall notice. The defense was based on evidence that defendant had sold the truck before the recall notice went out. The trial judge excluded this evidence, based on defendant's failure to comply with the vehicle transfer requirements of Veh.C. 5600. Held, this was error. Defendant's failure to comply with Veh.C. 5600 was irrelevant. The issue was simply whether the defective vehicle had been "effectively transferred" at the time that the recall notice went out, not whether defendant had complied with the owner liability law incident to the sale. (60 C.A.4th 1568.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

2. Driving With Permission.

b. Liability of Owner.

2. Notification to Department.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1266

[§ 1266] Notification to Department.

For protection, a seller who has made a bona fide sale or transfer of a vehicle and has delivered possession of the vehicle to the purchaser must fulfill either of the following requirements:

(1) Properly endorse and deliver the certificate of ownership. (Veh.C. 5602(a).)

(2) Deliver or mail to the Department (a) the notice provided in Veh.C.4456(b), 5900, or 5901 or (b) the appropriate documents and fees for registration of the vehicle to the new owner pursuant to the sale or transfer. (Veh.C. 5602(b).) A "bona fide sale or transfer" includes a gift. (See Brown v. Fix (1978) 86 C.A.3d 809, 813, 150 C.R. 431.)

Originally, the notice was required "immediately," and a dealer who failed to give such notice was held liable where the accident occurred on the night of the sale. (See Weinberg v. Whitebone (1948) 87 C.A.2d 319, 325, 196 P.2d 963; Rosenthal v. Harris Motor Co. (1953) 118 C.A.2d 403, 405, 257 P.2d 1034; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 400.) The time for notification has been extended numerous times and is presently 5 calendar days for ordinary owners (Veh.C. 5900(a)) and 5 calendar days not counting the day of sale for dealers and lessor-retailers (Veh.C. 5901(a)).

Failure to give timely notification does not necessarily result in liability; it is sufficient if the notice reaches the Department prior to the accident. (Stoddart v. Peirce (1959) 53 C.2d 105, 121, 346 P.2d 744; Borjesson v. Simpson (1960) 177 C.A.2d 365, 371, 2 C.R. 366; Richie v. Tate Motors (1971) 22 C.A.3d 238, 242, 99 C.R. 223.)

Compliance with the notification requirements is an affirmative defense, and the burden of proof is on the defendant. (Enis v. Specialty Auto Sales (1978) 83 C.A.3d 928, 936, 939, 148 C.R. 255.)

The first requirement, i.e., endorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership to the buyer means that delivery alone is not enough. (Larson v. Barnett (1950) 101 C.A.2d 282, 285, 225 P.2d 297).

Informal steps, such as the buyer giving the seller a power of attorney to execute necessary documents, will not constitute compliance with the statute. (Weinberg v. Whitebone, supra, 87 C.A.2d 326.) And delivery of an undated certificate is not a sufficient compliance with Veh.C. 5753, and therefore does not give immunity under Veh.C. 5602. ( Laureano v. Christensen (1971) 18 C.A.3d 515, 521, 95 C.R. 872; Nuss v. Pacht (1971) 22 C.A.2d 553, 557, 99 C.R. 460.)

Strict compliance with the requirement of delivery is required; an attempted delivery by mail to the buyer's last known address is not sufficient. (Brennan v. Gordon Ball (1985) 163 C.A.3d 832, 837, 838, 839, 210 C.R. 32.)

[§ 1267] Minor Who Disaffirms.

In Scollan v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1963) 222 C.A.2d 181, 35 C.R. 40, defendant F sold a car to three minors under 15, and all formalities of transfer were complied with. Then one of the minors had an accident, following which they all disaffirmed the contract. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §31.) The trial judge, applying the fiction of relation back of rescission, decided that disaffirmance left title in F from the beginning, so that as a matter of law he was an owner who permitted the minor to drive within Veh.C. 17150. Held, reversed. The statutory purpose was to impose liability on one who gave over control to another. Here, the sale was in fact executed, title passed to the buyers, and defendant F, the seller, had no right of control and could give none. "We think it was not the intent of the Legislature to place this liability upon one who had no voice in that selection. ... The fiction of relation, while proper enough within its sphere, cannot be used to make that happen which did not happen, to raise permission where none was given, and within the statutory frame of reference could not have been given." (222 C.A.2d 185.)

Under prior law, the husband, with certain exceptions, had the right to manage and control community property. The attempt to apply Veh.C. 17150 (see supra, §1260) to family cars gave rise to a number of problems. (See Wilcox v. Berry (1948) 32 C.2d 189, 195 P.2d 414 [registration in both names, and husband drove with wife's permission; wife liable]; *Dorsey v. 2. Driving With Permission.
d. Liability of Operator.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1270

[§ 1270] Liability of Operator.

The negligent operator is, of course, subject to unlimited liability for his or her own tort. Under the statute, the operator must be made a party defendant when possible; recourse must first be had against the operator, and the owner who pays is subrogated to the injured party's rights against the operator. (Veh.C. 17152 et seq.; see Brown v. Regan (1938) 10 C.2d 519, 523, 75 P.2d 1063 [verdict against owner alone is erroneous]; Aynes v. Winans (1948) 33 C.2d 206, 208, 200 P.2d 533; Cook v. Superior Court (1936) 12 C.A.2d 608, 610, 55 P.2d 1227 [execution cannot be levied on owner's property until means of satisfaction against operator are exhausted]; Enterprise Rent-A-Car Co. v. Workmen's Auto Ins. Co. (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1543, 1549, 68 C.R.2d 725 [liability of permissive driver is primary and that of owner is secondary]; Mercury Cas. Co. v. Hertz Corp. (1997) 59 C.A.4th 414, 418, 69 C.R.2d 9 [same].)

There are some practical qualifications of this rule. In Holland v. Kodimer (1938) 11 C.2d 40, 77 P.2d 843, after judgment against both the owner and operator, the operator disaffirmed on grounds of minority. Held, the owner remained liable, though his right of recourse was waived by failure to request appointment of a guardian ad litem. (11 C.2d 43.)

In Castro v. Giacomazzi Bros. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 39, 206 P.2d 688, a judgment against the owner was affirmed notwithstanding failure to join the operator. He was not an indispensable party in the jurisdictional sense; hence, the defendant's failure to raise the point at the trial was a waiver of the objection. (92 C.A.2d 44.)

In Baugh v. Rogers (1944) 24 C.2d 200, 213, 148 P.2d 633, the owner was held liable, despite the fact that the driver was the employer of plaintiff, and therefore immune from liability except for compensation under the Workers' Compensation Act.

In Heves v. Kershaw (1961) 198 C.A.2d 340, 17 C.R. 837, plaintiff, injured in an automobile accident, recovered judgment against B, the operator, H, the parent signer of his license, and K, the owner of the automobile. The judgment was for $ 19,000, and by stipulation it was limited to $ 5,000 against H and K, respectively, and $ 9,000 additionally against B. Partial satisfaction by payment of $ 10,000 (not made by K) was acknowledged. K then contended that his $ 5,000 liability was fully satisfied. Held, this was correct. The legislative intent was to satisfy the joint liability of the owner and operator before satisfying the primary separate liability of the operator; and, as between the operator and the owner, the owner's liability is secondary. Hence, the proper procedure should be (a) first satisfy the joint and several liability of the operator and parent signer and the joint and several liability of the operator and owner; (b) then satisfy the separate liability of the operator. (198 C.A.2d 346.)

If the operator negligently injures the owner who permitted operator to drive the car, the owner may recover damages from the operator. (Mason v. Russell (1958) 158 C.A.2d 391, 393, 322 P.2d 486; see 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 174.)

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

2. Driving With Permission.

e. Permission.

1. Express and Implied Permission.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1271

[§ 1271] Express and Implied Permission.

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove that the owner gave permission to the operator to drive. (Bradford v. Sargent (1933) 135 C.A. 324, 330, 27 P.2d 93 [permission expressly refused]; Helmuth v. Frame (1941) 46 C.A.2d 381, 383, 115 P.2d 852; Mucci v. Winter (1951) 103 C.A.2d 627, 630, 230 P.2d 22 [negligent failure of owner to recover car key was not equivalent of permission]; Irvine v. Wilson (1955) 137 C.A.2d Supp. 843, 848, 289 P.2d 895.)

The permission need not be express; it may be implied from the circumstances. (Burgess v. Cahill (1945) 26 C.2d 320, 324, 158 P.2d 393 [knowledge of intended use is not essential to inference of implied permission]; Scheff v. Roberts (1950) 35 C.2d 10, 15, 215 P.2d 925; Burford v. Huesby (1939) 35 C.A.2d 643, 647, 96 P.2d 380 [practice of owner to lend car to intimate friends]; Hanna v. O'Conner (1951) 106 C.A.2d 760, 766, 236 P.2d 181.)

Permission may be restricted (infra, §1272) or unlimited. Thus, where an automobile salesman drove his employer's car with the employer's permission, without restrictions on either place or time of use, the employer was liable even though at the time of the accident the employee was acting outside the scope of his employment and on business of his own. (Bayless v. Mull (1942) 50 C.A.2d 66, 72, 122 P.2d 608; see Burgess v. Cahill, supra [defendant company allowed employee to use truck for personal purposes without objection]; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 242; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 522.)

In Elkinton v. California State Auto. Assn., Interstate Ins. Bureau (1959) 173 C.A.2d 338, 343 P.2d 396, plaintiff recovered judgment for personal injuries sustained in an accident with the negligent driver. The driver was the 15-year-old daughter of the insured mother and unlicensed. In this action on the insurance policy, the issue was sufficiency of proof of driving with the mother's permission, the sole witness on this being the mother. Held, judgment against insurer affirmed.

(a) "Where the issue of implied permissive use is involved, the general relationship existing between the owner and the operator is of paramount importance. Where, for example, the parties are related by blood ... , or marriage ... , or where the relationship between the owner and the operator is that of principal and agent ... , weaker direct evidence will support a finding of such use than where the parties are only acquaintances ... , or strangers. ... Of the above cases only those falling within the last group (mere acquaintances and strangers) hold that the evidence of permissive use was insufficient as a matter of law." (173 C.A.2d 344.)

(b) The showing held sufficient here was: (1) the keys were accessible to the daughter; (2) the mother had shown the daughter how to start a car, and had never told her she could not drive that car; (3) the mother knew that her daughter was driving other cars; (4) the mother had expressed a desire that her daughter learn to drive and get a driver's license in a few months; (5) the keys had been moved (allowing inference that the mother had learned that her daughter was driving the car). (173 C.A.2d 345.)

In Peterson v. Grieger (1961) 57 C.2d 43, 17 C.R. 828, 367 P.2d 420, defendant owner left his car with C at the entrance to C's main parking lot, which was full. L, a 17-year-old boy, occasionally visited teenage employees of C, and, though unlicensed, was allowed by C to park cars. On this occasion C authorized L to take defendant's car to an overflow lot, and L struck plaintiff. Held, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding of implied permission. The jury could infer that the permission extended to parking in another connected place pursuant to a routine procedure used on busy nights. (57 C.2d 52.) Defendant's entrustment of the car to C gave C the same authority to select an operator as defendant had in the first instance. (57 C.2d 54.) (See 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 396.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Unlimited permission: See Taylor v. Roseville Toyota (2006) 138 C.A.4th 994, 1004, 42 C.R.3d 68 [evidence supported finding that auto dealer gave permission to employee to use its vehicle, where employee testified that key shack attendant told him that "it was okay" to use vehicle for personal errand during lunch break if he brought it back, and where, although evidence of attendant's actual authority to give permission was lacking, there was evidence of his ostensible authority to give permission].

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS

F. Statutory Liability for Operation of Automobile.

2. Driving With Permission.

e. Permission.

2. Restricted Permission.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1272

[§ 1272] Restricted Permission.

(1) Major Deviation. Permission may be granted for a limited time or restricted use, and in that case the owner is not liable if the accident occurs during a substantial violation of the restrictions. Thus, in Henrietta v. Evans (1938) 10 C.2d 526, 75 P.2d 1051, defendant dealer let defendant buyer take possession of a used car before the transfer papers were executed, but gave him permission solely to drive into the dealer's shop the next day to sign them. The buyer drove past the shop towards another destination, where the accident happened. Held, the dealer was not liable. The court thought the rule was analogous to that of deviation in employer-employee cases (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §§179, 180), and held that substantial violation of provisions as to time, place, or purpose of use will absolve the owner from liability. (10 C.2d 528.) (See Engstrom v. Auburn Auto Sales Corp. (1938) 11 C.2d 64, 72, 77 P.2d 1059; Barcus v. Campbell (1949) 90 C.A.2d 768, 772, 204 P.2d 65 [burden on plaintiff]; Rose v. Porter (1950) 101 C.A.2d 333, 337, 225 P.2d 245; BAJI, No. 13.53; CACI, No. 721.)

(2) Unsubstantial Violation. In Henrietta v. Evans, supra, the court observed that unsubstantial violation do not absolve the owner. "[I]f the owner permitted the use of the car for a particular purpose or in a certain locality, though he gave specific instructions as to the manner of operation, the speed and care in driving, etc., it would not be reasonable to hold that the use was without permission if any of these detailed instructions were violated, for in such case the liability of the owner could in almost every case be defeated by some showing of violation of authority." (10 C.2d 529.)

(3) Restriction Against Lending to Another. In Souza v. Corti (1943) 22 C.2d 454, 139 P.2d 645, defendant habitually allowed his son to drive, and on the night of the accident again gave permission, but added: "Don't lend the car to anyone else." In arranging for a group of persons to reach a dance hall, the son allowed defendant C to drive the father's car, while the son rode in another. Plaintiff received injuries from C's negligence. Held, the father was liable, because the person with permission (the son) was using the car for his purposes, though a third person was operating it; and, in view of the permission given for general use, the "secret restriction" was ineffective. The case thus apparently distinguishes between valid restriction on purpose or time of use, and restriction of use to a single person. (22 C.2d 460.) (See Herbert v. Cassinelli (1946) 73 C.A.2d 277, 281, 166 P.2d 377 [following Souza]; 31 Cal. L. Rev. 572; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 326; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 523.)

To be contrasted is Norris v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1952) 39 C.2d 420, 247 P.2d 1. P, the owner, gave his son G permission, expressly prohibiting lending. G nevertheless lent it to I, a minor, who negligently injured others. In this action for declaratory relief, I's father (who was liable on his son's driver's license) sought a determination that defendant, P's insurer, was liable under the omnibus clause of its policy. Held, the insurer was not liable; the clause did not cover a use that the owner had expressly forbidden. (39 C.2d 424.) The theory of the opinion appears to be that liability of the owner under Veh.C. 17150 and the Souza case is not conclusive on the issue of insurance coverage, which extends only to cases of driving with actual permission. (See Marquez v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1997) 53 C.A.4th 319, 322, 61 C.R.2d 557 [car rental company whose renter allowed another person to drive was not responsible for accident by that person, where renter initialed box in rental contract indicating that he did not want permission for others to drive car].)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
G. Statutory Liability for Operation of Vessel.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1273

[§ 1273] Statutory Liability for Operation of Vessel.

Harb. & Nav.C. 661 establishes a driving with permission law applicable to undocumented vessels (see Harb. & Nav.C. 651(y) ["undocumented vessel" is one lacking valid marine document issued by U.S. Coast Guard]; 71 A.L.R.3d 1018 [liability of owner of power boat].)

(1) Every owner of an undocumented vessel "is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence in the operation of such vessel, in the business of the owner or otherwise, by any person using and operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of the owner, and the negligence of such person shall be imputed to the owner for all purposes of civil damage." (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(a).) Knowledge and consent of the owner are presumed when the operator is an immediate member of the owner's family. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(a).) The statute does not "relieve any person from any liability which he would otherwise have," and does not "authorize or permit any recovery in excess of injury or damage actually incurred." (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(a).)

(2) The limits of liability for imputed negligence are $ 10,000 for injury or death of one person, $ 20,000 for more than one, and $ 10,000 for property damage, unless the owner's liability arises through the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(b).)

(3) Where two or more persons are injured or killed in one accident, the owner may settle and pay any bona fide claims, whether reduced to judgment or not; and the payments will diminish to that extent the owner's total liability. Payments aggregating $ 20,000 "extinguish all liability of the owner for death or personal injury arising out of the accident which exists by reason of imputed negligence." (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(f).)

(4) Where the operator may be reached by personal service within the state, he or she must be made a party defendant; and on recovery of judgment, recourse must first be had against the operator's property. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(c).) The owner is subrogated to the rights of the injured party, and may recover from the operator the total amount of any judgment and costs recovered against the owner. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(d).) If the bailee of the owner permits another to operate the vessel, both the bailee and the operator are operators. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(e).)

(5) If a vessel is sold under a conditional sale contract, the seller or the seller's assignee is not an owner for purposes of imputed negligence; the buyer or the buyer's assignee is the owner until the seller or his assignee retakes possession of the vessel. Similarly, a chattel mortgagee out of possession is not an owner for purposes of imputed negligence. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(g).)

(6) No action based on imputed negligence abates by reason of the death of an injured person or of a person liable or responsible under the statute. In an action for physical injury by the executor, administrator, or personal representative of a deceased person, the damages recoverable are the same as those recoverable under C.C.P. 377.20, 377.22, 377.30, 377.34, 377.40, and 377.42. (Harb. & Nav.C. 661(h); see supra, §23.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
H. Statutory Liability for Operation of Aircraft.
1. Owner's Liability.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1274

[§ 1274] In General.

(1) Injury or Death to Passengers. Pub.Util.C. 21404 applies the driving with permission law to the owner of an aircraft. "Liability of the owner or pilot of an aircraft carrying passengers for injury or death to the passengers is determined by the rules of law applicable to torts on the land or waters of this state, arising out of similar relationships. Every owner of an aircraft is liable and responsible for death or injury to person or property resulting from a negligent or wrongful act or omission in the operation of the aircraft, in the business of the owner or otherwise, by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of the owner."

(2) Limited Liability. The liability of an owner, the bailee of an owner, or the personal representative of a decedent, imposed by Pub.Util.C. 21404 and not arising through the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant, is limited to $ 15,000 for injury or death of one person, $ 30,000 for more than one, and $ 5,000 for property damage. (Pub.Util.C. 21404.1(a).) (See White v. Inbound Aviation (1999) 69 C.A.4th 910, 930, 82 C.R.2d 71 [where jury's verdict established that aircraft owner's negligence was attributable solely to his vicarious liability for pilot's negligence, owner was entitled to limitation of his liability to $ 15,000 amount authorized by Pub.Util.C. 21404 and 21404.1].)

An owner, the bailee of an owner, or the personal representative of a decedent is not liable, for purposes of imputed negligence, for punitive damages; but damages may be imposed for his or her own wrongful conduct. (Pub.Util.C. 21404.1(b).)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
H. Statutory Liability for Operation of Aircraft.
1. Owner's Liability.
b. Who Is Owner of Aircraft.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1275

[§ 1275] Who Is Owner of Aircraft.

Pub.Util.C. 21404 (supra, §1274) states that liability of the "owner" is determined by "the rules of law applicable to torts on the land or waters of this state, arising out of similar relationships." And Pub.Util.C. 24237 defines "owner" as (1) a person who holds legal title, (2) a lessee, or (3) a conditional buyer, trustee under a trust receipt, mortgagor, or other person holding an aircraft subject to a security interest.

In Cummins v. Sky Cruisers (1976) 59 C.A.3d 983, 130 C.R. 897, defendant Sky Cruisers, before the accident, sold the plane to R in a sale and lease back plan. R thereby became the legal owner under a document that was never recorded, and Sky Cruisers remained the registered owner on the records of the Federal Aviation Administration. Held, Sky Cruisers was not liable.

(a) California statutes on motor vehicles and watercraft establish a system under which ownership liability is tied directly to the ownership registration procedures. (Veh.C. 5602, 9905; see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §§235 et seq., 262.) There is no similar statute on aircraft ownership liability. (59 C.A.3d 986.)

(b) The federal statutory registration system preempts the area of required registration. Its purpose, however, was to facilitate leasing or financing and to give notice of security interests; it does not create tort liability. (59 C.A.3d 987.) And it differs from California's automobile and watercraft registration systems. There is no certificate of ownership issued to registered owners, and the burden is on the buyer of an aircraft (not on the seller) to record or register the transfer. (59 C.A.3d 987.)

(c) Liability is therefore determined by our common law governing ownership of personal property; and plaintiff's cause of action was against the actual owner, R, and not the registered owner, Sky Cruisers. (59 C.A.3d 988.)

XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
H. Statutory Liability for Operation of Aircraft.
2. Uniform Aircraft Financial Responsibility Act.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1276

[§ 1276] In General.

The Uniform Aircraft Financial Responsibility Act (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 21) was adopted in California in 1968 with variations, omissions, and additions. (See Pub.Util.C. 24230 et seq.) The Act establishes "minimum standards for aircraft financial responsibility." (Pub.Util.C. 24410.) "Minimum liability coverage is required for third party, nonpassenger claimants injured or killed as a result of the accident. ... The legislation is designed to provide coverage protection to ground victims otherwise unable to foresee or guard against risk of loss or injury due to small aircraft in flight." (Franks v. Amelia Reid Aviation (1985) 163 C.A.3d 1207, 1209, 210 C.R. 127.) In addition, a party in any action or proceeding may employ "other processes provided by law." (Pub.Util.C. 24245.)

The Act does not apply to the following:

(1) Aircraft owned and operated by or leased to and subject to the sole control of the United States, a state, or a foreign country. (Pub.Util.C. 24243(a), (b), (c).)

(2) Commercial air operators. (Pub.Util.C. 24243(d).)

(3) Aircraft operated by operators subject to specified provisions of the Food and Agriculture Code. (Pub.Util.C. 24243(e).)

(4) Any person who maintains in effect an insurance policy meeting the requirements of Pub.Util.C. 24350 (infra, §1277) and who has filed with the Department of Aeronautics a certificate of insurance issued by the insurance company that issued the policy. (Pub.Util.C. 24243(f); see Franks v. Amelia Reid Aviation, supra, 163 C.A.3d 1210 [owner's compliance with Pub.Util.C. 24243(f) removed any duty to fulfill notice requirements of Pub.Util.C. 24362, infra, §1277]; "neither that section nor any other substantive provision of the Act could serve as a statutory basis for civil liability".)

Because operators of aircraft are licensed by the federal Government, the Act does not contain the sanction of license suspension. It does, however, impose criminal penalties on those who fail to comply with its provisions. (See Pub.Util.C. 24400 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Aviation k.142, 153

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The Uniform Aircraft Financial Responsibility Act has been withdrawn as obsolete (see 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 3). The California statutes remain in effect.

b. Security Following Accident.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1277

[§ 1277] Security Following Accident.

(1) Accident Report. The operator of an aircraft involved in an accident in this state, resulting in bodily injury or death, or damage of more than $ 400 to another's property, must report the accident to the Department of Aeronautics not later than 15 days after the occurrence. If the operator is physically incapacitated, the owner must make the report within 15 days after learning of the accident. (Pub.Util.C. 24300.)

(2) Security. Not later than 30 days after receipt of the report, the department determines the amount of security required (not to exceed $ 50,000 for injury or death of one person, $ 100,000 for more than one, and $ 50,000 for property damage). (Pub.Util.C. 24325, 24350.) The owner or operator must deposit the required security not later than 30 days after entry of the order. (Pub.Util.C. 24326.) A pilot or operator of a rental aircraft must be notified in writing of the existence or nonexistence of liability coverage. (Pub.Util.C. 24362.)

(3) Exceptions to Security Requirements. The security requirements do not apply:

(a) "To the operator of an aircraft involved in an accident in which no injury was caused to the person of anyone other than the operator or guests, and no damage in excess of four hundred dollars ($ 400) was caused to property not owned, rented, occupied or used by such operator, nor in his care, custody or control, nor carried in or on the aircraft." (Pub.Util.C. 24327(a).)

(b) "To the operator or owner of an aircraft if at the time of the accident the aircraft was stationary, without passengers thereon or boarding the aircraft or alighting therefrom and the aircraft was parked in an area legally used for aircraft parking with no engine running nor in the process of being started." (Pub.Util.C. 24327(b).)

(c) "To the owner of an aircraft if at the time of the accident the aircraft was being operated, or was parked, without his permission, express or implied." (Pub.Util.C. 24327(c).)

(d) "To the owner or operator if there is in effect at the time of the accident a liability insurance policy or bond covering the aircraft or accident." (Pub.Util.C. 24327(d), (e), (f).)

(e) "To any person qualified as a self-insurer under Section 24353, or to any person operating an aircraft for the self-insurer for whose acts the self-insurer is legally responsible." (Pub.Util.C. 24327(g).)

(f) "After there is filed with the department satisfactory evidence that the person otherwise required to deposit security has (1) been released from liability, or (2) been adjudicated not to be liable by judgment, or (3) executed a written agreement with all claimants providing for payment of an agreed amount with respect to all claims for injuries or damages resulting from the accident." XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
H. Statutory Liability for Operation of Aircraft.
2. Uniform Aircraft Financial Responsibility Act.
c. Insurance Coverage.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1278

[§ 1278] Insurance Coverage.

(1) Policy Exclusions. The Act does not have the mandatory requirement of insurance coverage for operation with permission that the Insurance Code imposes for automobiles under the doctrine of Wildman v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §170. Hence, a policy excluding coverage where the aircraft is operated by an unqualified pilot is valid. (National Ins. Underwriters v. Carter (1976) 17 C.3d 380, 387, 131 C.R. 42, 551 P.2d 362; see 4 Pepperdine L. Rev. 447; 86 A.L.R.3d 118 [coverage and exclusion].)

The policy or bond need not cover the following:

(a) Liability for bodily injury to or death of an employee of the owner or operator, while the employee is engaged in the duties of his or her employment. (Pub.Util.C. 24351(a).)

(b) An obligation for which the owner or operator, or the insurer, may be held liable under any workers' compensation law. (Pub.Util.C. 24351(b).)

(c) "A guest, or any other person, riding in or upon any aircraft without giving compensation." (Pub.Util.C. 24351(c).)

(d) Liability for bodily injury or death of an occupant riding in an aircraft for purposes of skydiving or sport parachuting when that occupant's injury or death is solely related to hazardous risks associated with skydiving or sport parachuting. However, a notice must be provided in at least 14-point type to any person engaging in skydiving or sport parachuting who is not covered under a liability insurance policy in connection with these activities, disclosing the fact of noncoverage. (Pub.Util.C. 24351(d).)

(2) No Duty To Investigate Insured's Qualification as Pilot. In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 75 C.A.3d 627, 142 C.R. 249, defendant insurers issued an aircraft liability policy to H, installment buyer of a plane. The policy excluded coverage of pilots without a license, and H had only a student pilot's certificate. Plaintiffs were injured in an accident while H was piloting the plane. They sued the insurers, contending that, under Barrera v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. (1969) 71 C.2d 659, 79 C.R. 106, 456 P.2d 674, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §311, the insurers had a duty to investigate the competence of the pilot, and that breach of this duty was a proximate cause of the injury to plaintiffs, because if the insurers had discovered that H was not insurable, they would not have issued the policy and the seller of the plane would have repossessed it. Held, no cause of action was stated. After an extensive discussion of Barrera, National Ins. Underwriters, and other cases, the court pointed out that liability insurance may be issued to any vehicle or aircraft owner who may or may not be qualified as a driver or pilot and may not even have the intention of operating the vehicle or plane himself or herself. (75 C.A.3d 637.) As observed in National Ins. Underwriters, the statutory public policy that compelled the result in Barrera does not apply to aircraft insurers. (75 C.A.3d 637.) (See American Continental Ins. Co. v. C & Z Timber Co. (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1271, 1277, 1279, 241 C.R. 466 [following Fireman's Fund].)

(3) Cancellation. There is no coverage where the policy has been cancelled for nonpayment of premiums prior to the accident. Pub.Util.C. 24361, requiring 30 days' notice to the Department of Transportation before cancellation, applies only to policies that have been proffered to the department after the accident as proof of financial responsibility. (Escobedo v. Estate of Snider (1997) 14 C.4th 1214, 1219, 60 C.R.2d 722, 930 P.2d 979.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIII. NEGLIGENCE: LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF OTHERS
I. Distinction: Financing Agency Is Not Liable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1279

[§ 1279] Distinction: Financing Agency Is Not Liable.

(1) Connor Case. In Connor v. Great Western Savings & Loan Assn. (1968) 69 C.2d 850, 73 C.R. 369, 447 P.2d 609, the Supreme Court, in a 4-3 decision, announced an extraordinary doctrine of vicarious liability: A builder's financing agency was held liable to home buyers for the builder's negligence. The actual holding was immediately repudiated by the Legislature (infra, this section); but the reasoning of the majority and minority opinions has implications apart from the particular situation, and is also a necessary basis for an understanding of the effect of the statute.

G and B, without substantial capital and inexperienced in tract housing construction, organized Conejo, to buy land in Ventura County and build a large number of homes. Great Western was the financing agency. The financing arrangement ("land warehousing") involved purchase of the land by Great Western, and holding it until the developers could show prospective sales. Conejo built and sold a number of homes. They were constructed without proper care as to foundations, and 2 years later rainstorms caused serious damage. Plaintiff homeowners sued Conejo and Great Western. Holders of notes and second deeds of trust cross-complained, alleging that their security had been impaired, and seeking liens on any recovery. The trial judge granted a nonsuit in favor of Great Western. Held, reversed.

(a) No joint venture liability. The first theory of plaintiffs was that Great Western was in a joint venture with Conejo and liable for Conejo's negligence. But the writings and the testimony showed express disclaimer of this relationship, and the evidence did not establish an inference of it. It showed that the parties combined property and skill and shared control, but there was no community or joint interest in the undertaking. Great Western participated as buyer and seller of the land and lender of the funds, Conejo as builder and seller of the homes; neither shared in profits or losses of the other, and neither had any interest in the payments received by the other. (69 C.2d 863.)

(b) New liability as active participant in enterprise. Great Western, assisting in development of the project, "became much more than a lender content to lend money at interest on the security of real property. It became an active participant in a home construction enterprise." It had extensive control, and received not merely interest on loans but substantial fees for making them, plus a 20% capital gain for "warehousing" the land. (1) Because the value of the security depended on construction of sound homes, it owed a duty of care to its shareholders to exercise its powers of control to prevent construction of defective homes, and breached that duty. (2) It also owed a duty to home buyers, which was similarly breached. (69 C.2d 865.)

(c) Biakanja factors. Each of the criteria of Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, supra, §1179, was met here: (1) Great Western's transactions were intended to affect the plaintiffs significantly." The success of its transactions with Conejo depended on the ability of the parties to induce plaintiffs to buy homes and finance with it. (69 C.2d 866.) (2) "Great Western could reasonably have foreseen the risk of harm to plaintiffs." It knew or should have known of G's and B's lack of experience, and of Conejo's dangerously thin capitalization. (69 C.2d 866.) (3) "It is certain that plaintiffs suffered injury." (69 C.2d 866.) (4) "The injury suffered by plaintiffs was closely connected with Great Western's conduct." It controlled the course of the development, and by reasonable care would have discovered that the "prepackaged plans" bought by Conejo required correction. (69 C.2d 867.) (5) "Substantial moral blame attaches to Great Western's conduct." (69 C.2d 867.) It violated the obligation owed to its own shareholders and to the buyers, in failing to exercise reasonable care to avoid major structural defects in the homes; it knew that the usual buyer is ill-equipped to discern defects, and that a home is not only a major investment but the buyer's only shelter. (69 C.2d 867.) (6) "The admonitory policy of the law of torts calls for the imposition of liability. ... Rules that tend to discourage misconduct are particularly appropriate when applied to an established industry." (69 C.2d 867.)

(d) Answers to objections:

(1) That imposition of this duty will increase housing costs, drive marginal builders out of business, and decrease the total housing at a time of great need. Answer: This is conjectural, and there is no social utility in fostering construction of seriously defective homes. Imposing a duty at the point of effective financial control of tract building will insure responsible building practices. (69 C.2d 867.)

(2) That the Legislature should resolve the policy question after marshaling relevant economic and social data. Answer: There is no assurance that the Legislature will; and, in the absence of actual or prospective legislative action, the court is free to resolve the issue before it, "and indeed must resolve it in terms of common law." (69 C.2d 868.)

(3) That lending institutions have relied on the rule of nonliability, hence the new rule should operate prospectively. Answer: This limitation might be justified where earlier decisions are overruled, or where the general consensus is opposed to extension of liability. But, since MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, supra, §1175, there has been a steady expansion of liability for failure to exercise reasonable care to protect others from reasonably foreseeable risks; by the time of Sabella v. Wisler (1963) 59 C.2d 21, 27 C.R. 689, 377 P.2d 889, supra, §1211, this liability had been imposed on a builder. Those in the business of financing tract builders could therefore have foreseen this liability, and they have always been under such a duty to their own shareholders. (69 C.2d 868.)

(4) That the negligent acts of Conejo and the county building inspectors were superseding causes. Answer: Under Rest.2d, Torts §449 (supra, §§1206,1215), the risk of Conejo's negligence was the primary hazard that gave rise to Great Western's duty, and the negligence of building inspectors in conducting their inspection could not diminish the negligence of the lender. (69 C.2d 869.)

(e) Distinction: No liability to mortgagees. Great Western owed no independent duty of care to cross-complainants--investors in or pledgees of notes secured by second deeds of trust. (1) The foreseeability of harm was substantially less; they lent only 43% of the face value of notes, hence, they had a margin of safety. (2) Great Western's negligence was not so closely connected with their injury, which would occur only if plaintiffs defaulted on notes and the homes were insufficient security. (3) Substantially less moral blame attaches to Great Western's conduct toward them. They were also investors in a business enterprise, and dealt with Conejo as creditors, not as buyers of homes; as substantial creditors of Conejo, they were voluntary coparticipants with Great Western and Conejo in the enterprise; and, unlike plaintiffs, they were in a position to protect themselves by investigation. (69 C.2d 870.)

The main dissenting opinion was extremely critical: "This result is (a) unsupported by statute or precedent; (b) inconsistent with accepted principles of tort law; (c) likely to be productive of untoward social consequences." (69 C.2d 872.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 119, 6 San Diego L. Rev. 320; 42 So. Cal. L. Rev. 353; 16; 4 U.S.F. L. Rev. 188; 20 A.L.R.3d 499 [financing agency's liability to purchaser of new home for consequences of construction defects].)

(2) Legislative Abrogation of Connor Rule. The 1969 Legislature enacted C.C. 3434: "A lender who makes a loan of money, the proceeds of which are used or may be used by the borrower to finance the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification or improvement of real or personal property for sale or lease to others, shall not be held liable to third persons for any loss or damage occasioned by any defect in the real or personal property so designed, manufactured, constructed, repaired, modified or improved or for any loss or damage resulting from the failure of the borrower to use due care in the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification or improvement of such real or personal property, unless such loss or damage is a result of an act of the lender outside the scope of the activities of a lender of money or unless the lender has been a party to misrepresentations with respect to such real or personal property." (See Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 484, 488, 125 C.R. 549.)

(3) Automobile Financing Agency. In Drake v. Morris Plan Co. (1975) 53 C.A.3d 208, 125 C.R. 667, plaintiff sued for wrongful death, alleging that defendant financed the sale of an automobile from a dealer to S; that S was unlicensed and an incompetent driver with a long record of driving offenses; that these facts were known or should have been known by defendant; and that S drove negligently and killed decedent. Plaintiff's theory was that the rule of entrustment of a car to an incompetent driver (see supra, §1222) could be applied to a financing agency that knowingly made it possible for the incompetent driver to obtain the car. Held, no cause of action was stated. Under the Biakanja tests and the reasoning of Connor the allegations showed only the acts of a conventional money lender. Defendant's "participation in the sale of the vehicle was so minimal and restricted that the transaction did not create a legal duty on the part of the lender to protect plaintiffs from damages caused by [S's] illegal use of his automobile." (53 C.A.3d 213.) (See Skerlec v. Wells Fargo Bank (1971) 18 C.A.3d 1003, 96 C.R. 434; Altman v. Morris Plan Co. (1976) 58 C.A.3d 951, 960, 130 C.R. 397.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
A. Available Defenses.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1280

[§ 1280] Available Defenses.

(1) Plaintiff's Negligence. Contributory negligence (see infra, §1295 et seq.) of the plaintiff was formerly a complete bar to recovery; now, under the doctrine of comparative negligence adopted in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329, the plaintiff's negligence diminishes his or her recovery in proportion to the amount of fault attributable to the plaintiff. (See infra, §§1295, 1329.)

(2) Assumption of Risk. After Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, infra, §1339, primary assumption of risk remains as an independent defense that completely bars recovery; secondary assumption of risk is merged into the comparative negligence system and reduces recovery. In determining the type of assumption of risk that is involved, the presence or absence of duty is the determining factor. (See infra, §1283.)

(3) Failure To Mitigate Damages. Failure to take steps to minimize the harmful effects of the defendant's completed wrongful act can be shown for the purpose of reducing the amount of recoverable damages. (See infra, §1624 et seq.)

(4) Intentional Wrong. American Employer's Ins. Co. v. Smith (1980) 105 C.A.3d 94, 163 C.R. 649, presented the unique situation of a defendant sued for negligence asserting his intentional wrong as a defense. Defendant set fire to business properties and pleaded guilty to arson. Plaintiff insurers paid the owners for the fire damage, and brought suit against defendant for negligence. Defendant's parents had a homeowner's policy with United States Fidelity, which covered defendant and obligated the insurer to pay the insureds all sums they had to pay others by reason of liability imposed upon them. United States Fidelity refused to indemnify or defend because defendant's acts were intentional. In plaintiffs' negligence action, the trial judge granted a nonsuit on the ground that proof of an intentional tort (arson) could not support a verdict on a negligence cause of action. Held, reversed.

(a) If plaintiffs had recovered on a cause of action for the actual tort--an intentional act or wilful misconduct--indemnification of defendant's insurer would have been precluded. To protect its right to indemnity it alleged a wrongful act of a lesser degree or kind. (105 C.A.3d 98, 101.)

(b) Defendant's position has some technical support in the language of Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co. (1941) 18 C.2d 863, 118 P.2d 465, distinguishing negligence from wilful misconduct. But in Donnelly, the court was asked to determine whether evidence that would support a finding of negligence would also support a finding of wilful misconduct; here the reverse of this question is presented, i.e., whether evidence that would support a finding of wilful misconduct or intentional wrongdoing could also support a finding of negligence. (105 C.A.3d 99.) "This question is answered when the court determines whether the conduct shown by the evidence passes the minimum threshold necessary to impose liability." (105 C.A.3d 100.)

(c) The insurance issue is not before the court; and whether plaintiffs may satisfy a judgment through defendant's insurance is irrelevant on the issue of whether they may obtain a judgment against defendant. (105 C.A.3d 101, 102.) The only question arising on the motion for nonsuit was whether the evidence as a matter of law supported a cause of action for negligence, and it was error to grant the nonsuit because "[a] showing of willfulness does not as a matter of law negate negligence." (105 C.A.3d 102.)

(5) Federal Preemption. In some actions, the defendant may raise the defense of federal preemption. (See Evraets v. Intermedics Intraocular (1994) 29 C.A.4th 779, 787, 34 C.R.2d 852, infra, §1540 [negligence claim against manufacturer and distributor of allegedly defective intraocular lens was preempted by federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act regulations].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(6) (New) Statute of Limitations. CACI, No. 454 [Affirmative Defense--Statute of Limitations], adopted in 2007, states the common law rule that a negligence action accrues on the date of injury. CACI, No. 455 [Statute of Limitations--Delayed Discovery], adopted in 2007, states the "delayed-discovery" or "discovery" rule that the accrual date of the cause of action is delayed until the plaintiff is aware of the injury and its negligent cause.

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

1. In General.

a. Definition.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1281

[§ 1281] Definition.

Assumption of risk is the voluntary and knowing exposure of oneself to obvious dangers incident to certain activities. Strictly speaking, the defense of assumption of risk is distinct from that of contributory negligence (see infra, §1295 et seq.), and is more like the defense of consent to an act (see supra, §126). (On type of assumption of risk that is merely a variant of contributory negligence, see infra, §1336 et seq.) The theory is that the defendant's conduct involves certain dangers or risks, which the plaintiff voluntarily accepts. (See Morton v. California Sports Car Club (1958) 163 C.A.2d 685, 688, 329 P.2d 967; Rest.2d, Torts, §496A; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §21.3; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §211 et seq.; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §759 et seq.; 23 California Lawyer 40 (June 2003) [modern doctrine of assumption of risk]; 24 *Cal. XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

1. In General.

b. Relation Contributory Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1282

[§ 1282] Relation Contributory Negligence.

The distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence, as well as the significance to the former of the element of knowledge, was emphasized in Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (1954) 42 C.2d 158, 161, 265 P.2d 904: "Contributory negligence arises from a lack of due care. The defense of assumption of risk on the other hand, will negative liability regardless of the fact that plaintiff may have acted with due care. It is available when there has been a voluntary acceptance of a risk and such acceptance, whether express or implied, has been made with knowledge and appreciation of the risk. ... Where the facts are such that the plaintiff must have had knowledge of the hazard, the situation is equivalent to actual knowledge, and there may be an assumption of the risk, but where it merely appears that he should or could have discovered the danger by the exercise of ordinary care, the defense is contributory negligence and not assumption of risk." (See Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp. (1952) 38 C.2d 375, 385, 240 P.2d 580; Inouye v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1959) 53 C.2d 361, 367, 1 C.R. 848, 348 P.2d 208 [instruction on assumption of risk was properly refused where only contributory negligence was pleaded and mentioned in pretrial order]; Ziesemer v. McCarty (1945) 71 C.A.2d 378, 381, 162 P.2d 857; Hedding v. Pearson (1946) 76 C.A.2d 481, 484, 173 P.2d 382; Lilienthal v. Hastings Clothing Co. (1955) 131 C.A.2d 343, 344, 280 P.2d 824; Ward v. Knapp (1955) 134 C.A.2d 538, 540, 286 P.2d 370; Kingery v. Southern Calif. Edison (1961) 190 C.A.2d 625, 635, 12 C.R. 173; Rostant v. Borden (1961) 192 C.A.2d 594, 598, 13 C.R. 553; Chase v. Shasta Lake Union School Dist. (1968) 259 C.A.2d 612, 615, 66 C.R. 517, infra, §1288; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §769 et seq.; 2 Proof of Facts 177 [assumption of risk]; 82 A.L.R.2d 1218 [distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence].)

In language that foreshadows Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, infra, §1339, the distinguishing factors were succinctly stated in Fonseca v. Orange (1972) 28 C.A.3d 361, 368, 104 C.R. 566, infra, §1291, as follows: "Assumption of risk involves the negation of defendant's duty; contributory negligence is a defense to a breach of such duty; assumption of risk may involve perfectly reasonable conduct on plaintiff's part, contributory negligence never does; assumption of risk typically embraces the voluntary or deliberate incurring of known peril; contributory negligence frequently involves the inadvertent failure to notice danger."

Rest.2d, Torts §496A, Comment d gives a more complete analysis: "A subjective standard is applied to assumption of risk, in determining whether the plaintiff knows, understands, and appreciates the risk. (See §496D.) An objective standard is applied to contributory negligence, and the plaintiff is required to have the knowledge, understanding, and judgment of the standard reasonable man. (See §464, 289 and 290.) Assumption of risk operates as a defense against liability not only for negligent conduct, but also for reckless conduct, and conduct for which the defendant is subject to strict liability. Contributory negligence, on the other hand, is not a defense where the defendant's conduct is reckless. (See §488 and 503.) It is a defense to strict liability only when it amounts to voluntarily encountering a known unreasonable risk, or in other words, to assumption of risk. (See §515 and 524.) It is also possible that where the plaintiff is injured by the concurring negligence of two persons, he may be barred from recovery against one by his contributory negligence, and against the other by his assumption of risk."

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

1. In General.

c. Relation to Comparative Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1283

[§ 1283] Relation to Comparative Negligence.

Assumption of risk may be express, i.e., contractual (see infra, §1292 et seq.), or it may be implied, as where the plaintiff's conduct demonstrates that he or she was aware of a risk and voluntarily confronted it (see infra, §1284 et seq.). In turn, implied assumption of risk, before Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, infra, §1339, was often classified as either "reasonable" or "unreasonable" depending on the nature of the plaintiff's conduct in encountering the risk. (See infra, §§1337, 1338; on effect of defendant's negligence on assumption of risk doctrine, see infra, §1284.) After the adoption of comparative negligence (see infra, §1327 et seq.), express assumption of risk remains an independent defense and a complete bar to the plaintiff's recovery. (Segoviano v. Housing Authority (1983) 143 C.A.3d 162, 169, 191 C.R. 578; on contributory negligence, see infra, §1295 et seq.; on comparative negligence, see infra, §1327 et seq.)

Unlike the Third Restatement (see infra, §1341), California has only partially abolished implied assumption of risk as a separate defense, depending initially on whether it was classified as reasonable or unreasonable. Thus, the leading case of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 824, 829, 119 C.R., 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §§1329, 1336, held that the form of assumption of risk that is but a variant of contributory negligence, i.e., unreasonable implied assumption of risk, was merged into the comparative negligence doctrine and abolished as a separate defense. Subsequent decisions disagreed as to Li's effect upon reasonable implied assumption of risk (see infra, §1338). The matter was resolved in Knight v. Jewett, supra, but the analysis was not based on the reasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct, but on whether the defendant either owed plaintiff no duty of care or breached an existing duty, i.e., whether the assumption of risk was primary or secondary, respectively. Thus, where the defendant owes no duty to protect the plaintiff from the particular risk involved and the plaintiff assumes that risk, whether reasonably or unreasonably, primary assumption of risk remains as an independent defense and, as before, completely bars recovery. However, where a duty of care is owed and the plaintiff, again whether acting reasonably or unreasonably, assumes the risk resulting from a breach of the duty, the case is one of secondary assumption of risk and recovery is reduced, i.e., the defense is merged into the comparative negligence system.

At times, the reasoning in the older cases that follow is at odds with the foregoing analysis. However, the cases contain many assumption of risk principles that continue to be valid and describe situations that, even in the post-Knight world, either bar the plaintiff from all recovery or at least result in reduced recovery under the comparative negligence doctrine. (See infra, §1284 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

2. Implied.

a. In General.

1. Risk of Defendant's Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1284

[§ 1284] Risk of Defendant's Negligence.

(1) In General. The contention that the plaintiff does not assume the risk of dangers resulting from a defendant's negligence was rejected in Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (1954) 42 C.2d 158, 162, 265 P.2d 904, supra, §1282: "[T]he elements of the defense ... are a person's knowledge and appreciation of the danger involved and his voluntary acceptance of the risk. It follows that a person, if he is fully informed, may assume a risk even though the dangerous condition is caused by the negligence of others. ... Indeed, the cases in which this defense is applied usually involve dangerous conditions created by the negligence of another."

(2) Exceptions. The plaintiff does not, however, assume a risk by surrendering his or her better judgment on assurance by the defendant that the activity will be safe. (Woodall v. Wayne Steffner Productions (1962) 201 C.A.2d 800, 819, 20 C.R. 572 [assurance that driver of stunt car furnished by defendant would be expert; actually he was inexperienced].) And the defendant's violation of safety regulations will make the doctrine inapplicable. (See infra, §1291.)

Another obvious exception applies where the plaintiff is under a duty to act and cannot avoid the risk. (See Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 C.A.2d 536, 544, 6 C.R. 65, supra, §868 [highway patrolman acted under legal and moral duty to clear highway by pushing heavy steel rolls off of it].)

Curran v. Green Hills Country Club (1972) 24 C.A.3d 501, 505, 101 C.R. 158, infra, §1289, suggests another exception. Plaintiff was the owner of a home adjacent to a golf course. Defendant club promised to build an adequate protective fence but failed to do so. Plaintiff was struck by a misdirected shot. Although the decision rested on the ground of no knowledge of the specific danger (see infra, §1289), the court added this observation: "[T]he doctrine of assumption of risk should not be applied with liberality, if it be applicable at all, where the injury takes place on plaintiff's own property, which in itself is safe and which is rendered dangerous only by invasion of missiles from adjacent land. Otherwise, the owner of the neighboring property could force the homeowner to remain out of his yard and his swimming pool during hours when it was possible that golfers might hit their shots on his property. To a limited extent he would be a prisoner within his home. ... Moreover, if this were the law, there would be no particular reason for the defendant to remedy the situation, unless it were moved by humanitarian reasons."

The Second Restatement recognized implied assumption of risk as an independent defense (see supra, §1280), but the Third Restatement abolished this rule (see infra, §1293).

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

2. Implied.

a. In General.

2. Plaintiff's Knowledge of Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1285

[§ 1285] Plaintiff's Knowledge of Danger.

(1) Actual Knowledge. The distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence is not merely a matter of correct use of descriptive terminology. The former standard instruction that one assumes a risk "when he knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care would know, that a danger exists" is erroneous. It may be contributory negligence to fail to discover the danger, but there is no assumption of risk without actual knowledge arrived at, e.g., through experience, observation, or warning. (See Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp. (1952) 38 C.2d 375, 384, 240 P.2d 580; Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (1954) 42 C.2d 158, 161, 265 P.2d 904, supra, §1282; Shahinian v. McCormick (1963) 59 C.2d 554, 567, 30 C.R. 521, 381 P.2d 377; Vierra v. Fifth Avenue Rental Service (1963) 60 C.2d 266, 271, 32 C.R. 193, 383 P.2d 777; Plotts v. Albert (1953) 120 C.A.2d 105, 106, 260 P.2d 621; Gold v. Hliviak (1955) 131 C.A.2d 39, 41, 280 P.2d 71; Sloboden v. Time Oil Co. (1955) 131 C.A.2d 557, 562, 281 P.2d 85; Guerrero v. Westgate Lumber Co. (1958) 164 C.A.2d 612, 617, 331 P.2d 107; Perry v. First Corp. (1959) 167 C.A.2d 359, 366, 334 P.2d 299; Mullen v. Bruce (1959) 168 C.A.2d 494, 498, 335 P.2d 945; Hidden v. Malinoff (1959) 174 C.A.2d 845, 851, 345 P.2d 499; Hook v. Point Montara Fire Protection Dist. (1963) 213 C.A.2d 96, 100, 28 C.R. 560; Rodriguez v. Lompoc Truck Co. (1964) 227 C.A.2d 769, 777, 39 C.R. 117; Goodwin v. Bryant (1964) 227 C.A.2d 785, 791, 39 C.R. 132; Cooper v. Lunsford (1965) 234 C.A.2d 554, 559, 44 C.R. 530; Gilbert v. Los Angeles (1967) 249 C.A.2d 1006, 1010, 58 C.R. 56; Chase v. Shasta Lake Union School Dist. (1968) 259 C.A.2d 612, 615, 66 C.R. 517, infra, §1288; Keeton v. Henning (1969) 1 C.A.3d 50, 56, 81 C.R. 424; Allabach v. Santa Clara County Fair Assn. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1007, 1012, 54 C.R.2d 330, citing the text; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §775 et seq.)

As in other situations, however, direct evidence of knowledge is not essential. The circumstances, including the conduct of the parties, may support a jury inference of knowledge. (See Gallegos v. Nash, San Francisco (1955) 137 C.A.2d 14, 19, 289 P.2d 835 [plaintiff automobile owner took car with knowledge that his brakes caused skidding]; Morton v. California Sports Car Club (1958) 163 C.A.2d 685, 688, 329 P.2d 967, infra, §1286.)

(2) Knowledge of Particular Danger. The doctrine requires knowledge of the particular risk and appreciation of its magnitude. (See Vierra v. Fifth Avenue Rental Service (1963) 60 C.2d 266, 270, 32 C.R. 193, 383 P.2d 777; Curran v. Green Hills Country Club (1972) 24 C.A.3d 501, 504, 101 C.R. 158; Carr v. Pacific Tel. Co. (1972) 26 C.A.3d 537, 542, 103 C.R. 120, infra, §1289.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

2. Implied.

b. Illustrations of Risk Assumed.

1. Spectator at Athletic Contest.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1286

[§ 1286] Spectator at Athletic Contest.

The most common example of assumed risk is that of a spectator at a baseball or hockey game or other contest involving dangers. (See Quinn v. Recreation Park Assn. (1935) 3 C.2d 725, 729, 46 P.2d 144 [unscreened seat in grandstand of baseball park]; Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club (1950) 99 C.A.2d 484, 487, 222 P.2d 19 [same]; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 429; 2 Lincoln L. Rev. 75; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 67; 2 U.S.F. L. Rev. 114; 89 A.L.R.2d 1163 [basketball game]; 8 A.L.R.3d 1427 [trampoline]; 14 A.L.R.2d 993 [wrestling or boxing match]; 14 A.L.R.3d 1018 [hockey game]; 91 A.L.R.3d 24 [spectator at baseball game hit by ball or injured as a result of other hazards of game]; cf. Mann v. Nutrilite (1955) 136 C.A.2d 729, 732, 289 P.2d 282 [same rule applied to plaintiff chaperone at girls' softball game]; 10 A.L.R.3d 446 [injury to referee or umpire].)

In Morton v. California Sports Car Club (1958) 163 C.A.2d 685, 329 P.2d 967, plaintiff, a member of a sports car racing club, witnessed a race at a turn in the track protected only by a 4-foot picket fence. Held, he assumed the risk of injury from a car that went into a spin. "He ignored this hazard in his desire to observe the races from the best (rather than safest) location." (163 C.A.2d 688.)

The authority of Quinn was questioned in Rudnick v. Golden West Broadcasters (1984) 156 C.A.3d 793, 202 C.R. 900, a decision with separate views expressed by three justices. Plaintiff, seated in an unscreened section of Anaheim Stadium near first base at an Angels game, was struck by a foul ball. The trial court granted summary judgment on the Quinn rule: Spectators who choose to sit in unscreened seats assume the risk of being struck by batted balls, and management has no duty to protect them "so long as a sufficient number of screened seats are provided for those who might request them." (156 C.A.3d 796.) Held, reversed.

(a) Reversal for insufficient showing to support summary judgment. The main opinion written by one of the justices assumes that Quinn is still good law, but finds the declaration of defendant's stadium manager insufficient to support the judgment: (1) It states that 2,300 screened seats are provided without mentioning what is a matter of common knowledge: that the Angels regularly draw crowds 10 to 20 times that size. (2) It does not correlate the number of screened seats with the number of requests reasonably to be expected, and does not say that any screened seats are truly available to fans who are not longtime season ticket holders. (156 C.A.3d 796.) The second justice concurred in this part of the opinion, and the third concurred only in the result.

(b) Effect of Quinn as authority. The main opinion discusses the effect of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 824, 829, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329, on the Quinn rule, quoting at some length from a number of commentators, and concluding: "Despite the enormous changes in California tort law over the last 50 years, there is no reason to doubt the continuing vitality of the duty analysis of the Quinn line of cases. A baseball club complying with Quinn's screening standard has fulfilled its limited duty to spectators as a matter of law and is entitled to summary judgment. Whether baseball fans are viewed as participants in the game itself ... or merely passive spectators, one thing is certain: the chance to apprehend a misdirected baseball is as much a part of the game as the seventh inning stretch or peanuts and Cracker Jacks. Reasonable screening is defined in the expectations of the fans and the traditions of the national pastime itself. The law of torts imposes no higher standard." (156 C.A.3d 802.) Application of the Quinn theory gives the defendant two choices: (1) provide adequate unreserved screened seats; or (2) get insurance for the statistically predictable numbers who will suffer injury. (156 C.A.3d 802, footnote 5.)

Another justice, in a separate opinion, asserted that the Quinn theory has been abrogated by Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, and Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (156 C.A.3d 803.) (See 19 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 589.)

In Neinstein v. Los Angeles Dodgers (1986) 185 C.A.3d 176, 229 C.R. 612, the court reviewed the Quinn and Rudnick opinions, and observed that other jurisdictions that adopted the comparative fault system have continued to follow the Quinn rationale. Here: "[P]laintiff impliedly consented to take her own chances that she would not be injured. She voluntarily elected to sit in a seat which was clearly unprotected by any form of screening. Rather than request a seat in a section where injury was unlikely to occur, plaintiff chose to accept a highly sought after seat, close to the sphere of action, where the likelihood of foul balls entering the stands remained a possibility. She was sufficiently warned of the risk by common knowledge of the nature of the sport and by the warning provided on the back of her ticket. The Dodgers were under no duty to do anything further to protect her from that hazard." (185 C.A.3d 184.)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1287

[§ 1287] Dangerous Activity or Appliance.

A person who uses a slide, swing, or other apparatus in an amusement park or gymnasium obviously assumes the normal risks arising from doing so. (See Chardon v. Alameda Park Co. (1934) 1 C.A.2d 18, 21, 36 P.2d 136, infra, §1290.)

The same is true of a participant in an athletic contest or exhibition. (See Hoyt v. Rosenberg (1947) 80 C.A.2d 500, 503, 182 P.2d 234 [children playing "kick the can," a type of hide and seek; the can, kicked by defendant, struck plaintiff]; *Knowles v. B. Assumption of Risk.

c. When Risk Is Not Assumed.

1. No Actual Knowledge of Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1288

[§ 1288] No Actual Knowledge of Danger.

It is usually a jury question whether the plaintiff had the requisite actual knowledge of the particular danger (supra, §1285).

In Thurman v. Ice Palace (1939) 36 C.A.2d 364, 97 P.2d 999, plaintiff, voluntarily selecting an unscreened seat at her first hockey game, was struck by a flying puck. Held, the game was relatively new, the dangers to spectators were not generally known, and it could not be said as a matter of law that she assumed the risk. (36 C.A.2d 366.) (See Shurman v. Fresno Ice Rink (1949) 91 C.A.2d 469, 473, 205 P.2d 77 [following Thurman]; Hidden v. Malinoff (1959) 174 C.A.2d 845, 851, 345 P.2d 499; Hook v. Point Montara Fire Protection Dist. (1963) 213 C.A.2d 96, 106, 28 C.R. 560; Goade v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks, Pomona, Calif., Lodge No. 789 (1963) 213 C.A.2d 189, 193, 28 C.R. 669 [spectator at sports car race, unfamiliar with sport, was struck by car that went out of control and through fence into spectator area]; Keeton v. Henning (1969) 1 C.A.3d 50, 56, 81 C.R. 424; Timmons v. Assembly of God Church (1974) 40 C.A.3d 31, 41, 115 C.R. 917 [fact that volunteer wirecutter admitted that he forgot to secure roll he was cutting established constructive, but not actual, knowledge of danger of recoil]; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 373.)

In Chase v. Shasta Lake Union School Dist. (1968) 259 C.A.2d 612, 66 C.R. 517, plaintiff was a member of an adult evening softball league that used a diamond of defendant district. Playing in left field for the first time, and pursuing a fly ball, he ran into an unfenced concrete incinerator with a protruding base. The trial judge found no contributory negligence but did find that he had assumed the risk. Because plaintiff's injuries produced retrograde amnesia, he had no memory of the accident, and the element of knowledge of the danger had to be inferred. Held, judgment for defendants reversed. The dual findings were that plaintiff was aware of the danger or should have been aware of it. These were contradictory, and only the first supported the defense, for assumption of risk requires actual knowledge. (259 C.A.2d 615.)

In Sperling v. Hatch (1970) 10 C.A.3d 54, 88 C.R. 704, plaintiffs, husband and wife, purchased a used car from defendant dealer. The car had brake trouble (grabbing at high speed), but defendant assured plaintiff wife that it was imaginary. While the wife was driving at over 45 miles per hour, she applied the brakes, they grabbed, and the car went out of control, injuring both plaintiffs. Held:

(a) Plaintiff husband was properly nonsuited. His testimony revealed experience with automobile brakes, knowledge that these were defective, and appreciation of the particular risk; nevertheless, he willingly rode with his wife at the high speed. (10 C.A.3d 62.)

(b) Plaintiff wife was improperly nonsuited. There was no unequivocal evidence of her appreciation of the risk, and defendant's assurance that the brake problem was imaginary made the issue one of fact for the jury. (10 C.A.3d 62.)

B. Assumption of Risk.

c. When Risk Is Not Assumed.

2. No Knowledge of Particular Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1289

[§ 1289] No Knowledge of Particular Danger.

The rule that mere general knowledge of a danger is not enough to bring the assumption of risk doctrine into operation (see supra, §1285) was applied in Curran v. Green Hills Country Club (1972) 24 C.A.3d 501, 101 C.R. 158. Plaintiff purchased a home immediately adjacent to the golf course of defendant country club, of which he was a member. At the time of purchase, he knew that golf balls frequently went over the property line and that the 6-foot high grape stake fence was inadequate protection, but members of defendant's board assured him that a proper fence would be erected. This was not done, and plaintiff normally avoided use of his yard and swimming pool until 6 or 7 o'clock at night. On Saturdays, golfers usually finished by 4 p.m., and on one Saturday plaintiff, in his pool at about 5 p.m., followed his customary practice of looking for approaching players, but saw none. He was nevertheless struck by a ball, and brought this action for personal injuries. The trial judge gave an instruction on assumption of risk, and the jury verdict was for defendant. Held, judgment reversed. The court expressed doubt whether the doctrine of assumption of risk could be applied at all to a person using his own property (see supra, §1284), but rested its decision mainly on the point that plaintiff, though aware of the danger of a misdirected golf shot, was not shown to be aware of golfers in the vicinity of his house at the time of the accident. (24 C.A.3d 504.)

The same emphasis on knowledge of the specific danger appears in Carr v. Pacific Tel. Co. (1972) 26 C.A.3d 537, 103 C.R. 120. A large backyard tree was uprooted in a windstorm and fell on a garage and house, and also on defendant's telephone lines. The homeowners employed T Tree Service to remove the tree, and also notified defendant of the fact that it was on its lines. Defendant secured the lines by tying ropes around the lines and two trees, thereby creating considerable tension. Decedent, an experienced tree trimmer employed by T, declined assistance and commenced to cut the trunk into removable lengths. After some cuts from the top, the remainder--an 8-to-10-foot trunk--was flung into the air by the cables and landed on decedent, causing injuries and resulting death. Held, it was error to instruct on assumption of risk. Decedent was presumably aware of the danger that the lines burdened with the weight of the tree could snap; but there was no evidence of knowledge of the danger that, by reason of the peculiar method of securing them, the trunk of the tree would be propelled into the air. (26 C.A.3d 543.) (See Celli v. Sports Car Club of America (1972) 29 C.A.3d 511, 522, 105 C.R. 904 [car race spectator injured in pit area bordering straightway had no actual knowledge that vehicle would go out of control at that location].)

3. Unusually Dangerous Condition or Activity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1290

[§ 1290] Unusually Dangerous Condition or Activity.

Although the user of an amusement device assumes the normal risks, if the contrivance is negligently constructed or maintained in an unsafe condition, the defendant may be liable. (Chardon v. Alameda Park Co. (1934) 1 C.A.2d 18, 21, 36 P.2d 136; cf. Ratcliff v. San Diego Baseball Club of Pac. Coast League (1938) 27 C.A.2d 733, 736, 81 P.2d 625 [plaintiff at ball game, walking along a passageway, was struck by a flying bat; defendant was liable for failure to screen that portion of passageway]; see 24 Cal. L. Rev. 433.)

The same is true where negligent maintenance or supervision permits unusually dangerous activity to continue. In Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen (1946) 27 C.2d 802, 167 P.2d 729, supra, §1129, plaintiff, a volunteer hostess at a servicemen's dance, was injured when a Marine with whom she was dancing spun her around despite her protests and attempts to escape. Held, she did not assume the risks of his reckless conduct. (27 C.2d 811.) (See Hairston v. Studio Amusements (1948) 86 C.A.2d 735, 739, 195 P.2d 498 [plaintiff fell while skating at defendant's roller skating rink, lay for several minutes without attention by guards, and was struck by a reckless patron skating backwards].)

B. Assumption of Risk.

2. Implied.

4. Violation of Safety Regulations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1291

[§ 1291] Violation of Safety Regulations.

The defense of contributory negligence applies even though the defendant has violated a statute (see infra, §1301), and the defense of assumption of risk applies where the defendant is guilty of ordinary negligence (supra, §1284). But a distinction was made in Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co. (1950) 35 C.2d 409, 431, 218 P.2d 17: "Where an ordinance is a police regulation, made for the protection of human life, ... the doctrine of assumption of the risk does not apply. Public policy forbids that the duty which the defendant owes to the plaintiffs should be waived by plaintiffs' mere passive quiescence, even though with knowledge of the infraction of the ordinance. ... Since the fundamental purpose of such statutes would be defeated if the plaintiff were permitted to assume the risk, it is generally held that he cannot do so, either expressly or by implication. The workman has no alternative but the loss of his livelihood, it is his 'poverty and not his will' which consents, and economically he is no more free to leave his employment than a soldier or a sailor." (See Shahinian v. McCormick (1963) 59 C.2d 554, 565, 30 C.R. 521, 381 P.2d 377; Maia v. Security Lumber & Concrete Co. (1958) 160 C.A.2d 16, 20, 324 P.2d 657; Guerrero v. Westgate Lumber Co. (1958) 164 C.A.2d 612, 618, 331 P.2d 107; Longway v. McCall (1960) 181 C.A.2d 723, 732, 5 C.R. 818, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §650; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §786.)

Fonseca v. Orange (1972) 28 C.A.3d 361, 104 C.R. 566, is a particularly instructive illustration of this distinction. Defendant county engaged L Co. to erect a bridge. L Co. employed plaintiff as a cement finisher. In violation of industrial safety orders, L Co. failed to install scaffolding and railings around the perimeter of the bridge. Plaintiff slipped on wet cement and fell from the bridge, sustaining injuries. L Co.'s insurer paid workers' compensation, and plaintiff sued defendant county. The jury, in response to special interrogatories, found that the violation of the safety orders was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. However, the trial judge instructed on contributory negligence, and the verdict was for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff's conduct was clearly an assumption of the risk. He was an experienced worker, familiar with safety orders; when he arrived on the job, he told the county engineer that scaffolding and railings should be installed; nevertheless, he proceeded to work, with actual knowledge of the specific danger and its magnitude. (28 C.A.3d 369.) However, this defense, though established by the facts, was unavailable as a matter of law under the rule set forth above. (28 C.A.3d 368.)

(b) Contributory negligence could be a defense under the law, but was not established by the evidence. Conduct that is reasonable may constitute an assumption of risk but not contributory negligence; for the latter to be found, the conduct must be unreasonable, i.e., negligent. (28 C.A.3d 369.) And here, plaintiff was not guilty of any negligence in performing his duties as a cement finisher; he merely continued to work despite the known danger. "Consequently, we hold that it is not unreasonable and not contributory negligence for a worker to continue work despite his employer's preexisting violation of safety orders, whether or not the worker recognizes and appreciates the hazard. By our holding we do not eliminate contributory negligence as a defense in actions arising from a violation of safety orders. We merely limit its scope in deference to the enlightened policy factors underlying safety orders." (28 C.A.3d 370.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

3. Express.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1292

[§ 1292] In General.

By contract, a person may expressly agree to assume the risk of another person's negligence, and the agreement is valid unless it contravenes public policy. (Coates v. Newhall Land & Farming (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1, 8, 236 C.R. 181; see Saenz v. Whitewater Voyages (1990) 226 C.A.3d 758, 765, 276 C.R. 672; Buchan v. United States Cycling Federation (1991) 227 C.A.3d 134, 147, 277 C.R. 887; Westlye v. Look Sports (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1715, 1729, 22 C.R.2d 781 [rejecting contention that express contractual assumption of risk applied to all potential defendants, instead of being limited to parties]; Paralift v. Superior Court (1993) 23 C.A.4th 748, 757, 29 C.R.2d 177 [skydiving company's release, signed by decedent skydiver 3 years before fatal jump, which occurred in different location than where activities covered by release originally began, constituted complete defense]; Allabach v. Santa Clara County Fair Assn. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1007, 1013, 54 C.R.2d 330, citing the text [release enforced against plaintiff injured by defective barrier while observing automobile race]; Leon v. Family Fitness Center (#107) (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1227, 1231, 71 C.R.2d 923 [health club's release stating that patron assumed all risks connected with participation in sport or exercise did not apply to injury plaintiff suffered when bench collapsed beneath him while he was using sauna]; Benedek v. PLC Santa Monica (2002) 104 C.A.4th 1351, 1358, 129 C.R.2d 197 [fitness center release was broad enough to cover nonsports-related injuries (moving TV set)]; Moser v. Ratino (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1211, 1217, 130 C.R.2d 198 [release given to "event holders, sponsors and organizers" applied only to those parties, and not to coparticipants in bicycle race, even though release acknowledged risks involved]; Sweat v. Big Time Auto Racing (2004) 117 C.A.4th 1301, 1304, 12 C.R.3d 678 [express release did not relieve racetrack from liability, because negligence involved (collapse of grandstand) was not reasonably related to purpose of release (requiring patron to assume risk of injury resulting from being near dangerous activity); distinguishing Benedek]; 33 Proof of Facts 3d 421 [avoiding effect of recreational activity liability release]; 24 Cal. Western L. Rev. 127 [Playing with Liability: The Risk Release in High Risk Sports]; BAJI, No. 4.30; CACI, No. 451; 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §671 et seq.)

In Sanchez v. Bally's Total Fitness Corp. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 62, 79 C.R.2d 902, a fitness center was given a release "for any claims for injuries or damages" arising out of use of the fitness center. Held, the release rendered the center immune to a negligence claim for injuries during a slide aerobics class. Use of the term "negligence" is not required to validate an otherwise unambiguous exculpatory clause, especially where the remainder of the clause indicates that negligent conduct is the main activity covered by the release. (68 C.A.4th 65.)

Coates v. Newhall Land & Farming, supra, explained the difference between an advance waiver of liability, and an express assumption of risk. By an advance waiver, a potential plaintiff promises not to exercise the right to sue for harm caused in the future by the wrongful behavior of a potential defendant, eliminating a remedy for wrongdoing. By express assumption of risk, the potential plaintiff agrees not to expect the potential defendant to act carefully, thus eliminating the potential defendant's duty of care, and acknowledging the possibility of negligent wrongdoing. "Both agreements permit behavior that normally would be actionable as tortious, although an express assumption of risk goes further, more clearly authorizing this behavior." (191 C.A.3d 7.)

In National & Int. Brotherhood of Street Racers v. Superior Court (1989) 215 C.A.3d 934, 264 C.R. 44, the court deplored the frequent technical challenges of releases in cases arising from hazardous recreational pursuits (here race car driving): "Drafters of releases always face the problem of steering between the Scylla of simplicity and the Charybdis of completeness. Apparently no release is immune from attack. If short and to the point, a release will be challenged as failing to mention the particular risk which caused a plaintiff's injury ... or as insufficiently comprehensive. ... It will be attacked as totally ineffective if a key word is placed in the caption for emphasis but not repeated in the text ... , or if, despite unambiguous language, the word 'negligence' is not used. ... If the drafter avoids these shortcomings by adding details and illustrations, the plaintiff invokes the doctrine expressio unius exclusion alterius est and characterizes the causative hazard as one not found among those listed in the release, but if the list ends with an inclusive term--"and all other risks not specifically enumerated"--it will be argued, under the principle ejusdem generis, that the risk encountered is nonetheless not assumed, because its nature is different from those listed. If the drafter strives to be comprehensive, the release is attacked as unduly lengthy ... , but if he fits it onto a single page, the type size will be criticized as inadequate. ... If the significance of the release is emphasized by its repetition in two documents, any variation in wording fuels a challenge." (215 C.A.3d 937.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Zipusch v. LA Workout (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1281, 1287, 66 C.R.3d 704 [assumption of risk clause whereby health club member agreed to exculpate club from injuries to member caused by others and indemnify club for injuries to others caused by member did not explicitly exculpate club from its own negligence so as to bar member's negligence action against club for injuries she sustained on treadmill; distinguishing Benedek v. PLC Santa Monica, LLC (2002) 104 C.A.4th 1351, 129 C.R.2d 197, text, p. 686, on ground that it involved "all" injuries sustained on premises]; Cohen v. Five Brooks Stable (2008) 159 C.A.4th 1476, 1485, 72 C.R.3d 471 [release was ambiguous in enumerating only inherent risks of horseback riding and stating that it also applied to "other unknown or unanticipated risks" "not specifically identified," and thus, under rule resolving ambiguity against stable as drafter of release, release did not exculpate stable from its own negligence or that of its employee in causing horses to gallop without warning].

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

B. Assumption of Risk.

3. Express.

b. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1293

[§ 1293] Restatement 3d.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability reaffirms contractual assumption of risk. A contract between the plaintiff and another person specifically absolving the person of liability for future harm bars recovery from that person for the harm. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2.) This rule "is drawn from and replaces" Rest.2d, Torts §496B. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment a.) The rule extends to claims based on a defendant's intentional or reckless conduct. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comments f and g.) In contrast, Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2 abrogates sections in the Second Restatement, including Rest.2d, Torts §496E, that recognized implied assumption of risk as an independent defense. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment i; supra, §1283.)

A contractual limitation on liability may arise by written agreement, express oral agreement, or conduct that creates an implied-in-fact contract. Whether there is such an agreement is determined by the applicable rules of contract law. The agreement may be general, relieving the other party of all obligation to protect the plaintiff, or it may be limited to specific conduct and risks, and it may absolve liability entirely or may limit liability to a specific amount. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment c.) However, particular contractual limitations on liability may be unenforceable under substantive rules (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment h) or as a matter of public policy (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment e).

Unlike a plaintiff's negligence (infra, §1327 et seq.), a valid contractual limitation on liability does not provide an occasion for the factfinder to assign a percentage of responsibility to any party or other person. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2.) A valid contractual limitation on liability, within its terms, creates an absolute bar to a plaintiff's recovery from the other party to the contract. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment b.)

B. Assumption of Risk.

3. Express.

c. Release in Wrongful Death Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1294

[§ 1294] Release in Wrongful Death Action.

In Madison v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 589, 250 C.R. 299, plaintiffs' son was drowned while participating in a Y.M.C.A. scuba diving training course. In this wrongful death action, defendant Y.M.C.A. relied on a detailed release of all liability for personal injury or wrongful death (203 C.A.3d 594, 603). Held, assuming that the death was due to negligence, the agreement was a bar to plaintiffs' claim.

(a) Release does not bar wrongful death action. The right to sue for wrongful death belongs to the heirs, and the decedent had no power to waive that cause of action. (203 C.A.3d 596, citing Scroggs v. Coast Community College Dist. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1399, 239 C.R. 916.)

(b) Plaintiffs are subject to defenses. The plaintiff in a wrongful death action is subject to any defenses that could have been asserted against the decedent, including an agreement by the decedent to waive the defendant's negligence and assume all risks. "In other words, a distinction must be made between the legal ineffectiveness of a decedent's pre-injury release of his heir's subsequent wrongful death action and the legal effectiveness of an express release of negligence by a decedent which provides a defendant with 'a complete defense.' " (203 C.A.3d 597.)

(c) Release as assumption of risk. Although the words "assumption of risk" were not used, it was expressly stated that decedent intended to exempt defendants from any liability for their negligence; and by this language decedent "expressly manifested his intent to relieve the defendants of any duty to him and to assume the entire risk of any injury." (203 C.A.3d 597, relying on Coates v. Newhall Land & Farming (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1, 236 C.R. 181, supra, §1292.)

(d) Validity. The release agreement was valid; it did not involve the public interest, and the language was clear and explicit. (203 C.A.3d 598, 599, citing Kurashige v. Indian Dunes (1988) 200 C.A.3d 606, 246 C.R. 310, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §333.)

In Coates, supra, the court made the following observation: "Behavior which is authorized is not wrongful and, logically, cannot be the basis of a wrongful death action." Assumption of risk means that the plaintiff has given express consent to relieve the defendant of an obligation of conduct toward him or her; the defendant is relieved of legal duty to the plaintiff and cannot be charged with negligence. (191 C.A.3d 9.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

a. Contributory Negligence and Comparative Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1295

[§ 1295] Contributory Negligence and Comparative Negligence.

(1) Common Law Doctrine of Contributory Negligence. The traditional and widely followed doctrine makes contributory negligence a complete defense if it is causally connected with the injury, even though the defendant's negligence is greater or more serious than that of the plaintiff, and even though it can be characterized as "gross" or "wanton." (See Tucker v. United R. of San Francisco (1916) 171 C. 702, 704, 154 P. 835; Bickford v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1932) 120 C.A. 542, 550, 8 P.2d 186; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.1 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§199, 200; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §796 et seq.)

(2) Criticisms of Doctrine and Attempts To Limit Its Application. Condemnation of the strict contributory negligence doctrine was vigorous (see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 810, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329; infra, §1327), and various exceptions and distinctions have been judicially developed, including the following:

(a) The doctrine of last clear chance. (See Brandelius v. San Francisco (1957) 47 C.2d 729, 743, 306 P.2d 432; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.13; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §889 et seq.)

(b) Inapplicability of the defense where the defendant's conduct was wilful, wanton, or reckless. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.6; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §841 et seq.)

(3) Adoption of Comparative Negligence Doctrine. In Li v. Yellow Cab Co., supra, the traditional "all or nothing" defense of contributory negligence was abolished, and the "pure form" of comparative negligence was adopted in its place. (See infra, §1329.) (On effect of new doctrine, and continued vitality of standards and rules developed in contributory negligence cases, see infra, §1327; see also 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.14; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §954 et seq.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

b. Pleading and Proof.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1296

[§ 1296] Pleading and Proof.

(1) Pleading. Contributory negligence must be pleaded as an affirmative defense unless it appears on the face of the complaint or from the evidence in the plaintiff's case. (See 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1029.) But the pleading is not an admission of negligence by the defendant. (See Hoffman v. Southern Pac. Co. (1927) 84 C.A. 337, 346, 258 P. 397; Brooks v. Monterey (1930) 106 C.A. 649, 653, 290 P. 540; 21 Cal. L. Rev. 367.) In other words, the defendant may deny his or her own negligence, and also raise the defense of plaintiff's contributory negligence, and both issues must go to the jury. Hence, it is improper to charge a jury that "contributory negligence admits actionable negligence on the part of the defendant." (Sheets v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 212 C. 509, 514, 299 P. 71; Harveld v. Milani (1934) 1 C.A.2d 157, 160, 36 P.2d 393; Soares v. Barson (1936) 12 C.A.2d 582, 584, 55 P.2d 1283; see 21 Cal. L. Rev. 367.)

(2) Proof. The burden of proving contributory negligence is on the defendant. (Rush v. Lagomarsino (1925) 196 C. 308, 314, 237 P. 1066; Anthony v. Hobbie (1945) 25 C.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826; Gyerman v. United States Lines Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 488, 503, 102 C.R. 795, 498 P.2d 1043, infra, §1299; Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 190, 260 P.2d 663.) A defendant who has met this burden has no further burden to produce particular evidence about the precise percentage of responsibility the factfinder should assign to the plaintiff. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §4, Comment a.)

In proving the plaintiff's negligence, the defendant may use any of the methods available to a plaintiff in proving a defendant's negligence. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §4.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

c. Standard of Due Care.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1297

[§ 1297] In General.

(1) Negligence and Contributory Negligence. Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3, "plaintiff's negligence is defined by the applicable standard for a defendant's negligence." Thus, the standard of negligence employed to evaluate a plaintiff's conduct is the same as that employed to evaluate a defendant's conduct. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3, Comment a; on evidence of custom, see Gyerman v. United States Lines Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 488, 502, 102 C.R. 795, 498 P.2d 1043, infra, §1299; on whether "accident proneness" of plaintiff ought to be taken into account, see 63 Harv. L. Rev. 769, 782, 786, 794.)

"Special ameliorative doctrines," set forth in the Second Restatement in defining a plaintiff's negligence, are abolished. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3.) Included are the doctrines of last clear chance, mitigation of damages, and avoidable consequences. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3, Comment b and §7, Comment o.) These doctrines, which are "designed to avoid the harsh effects of contributory negligence as an absolute bar" to recovery, are deemed no longer appropriate because, under comparative responsibility, a plaintiff's negligence only reduces the amount of recovery. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3, Comment a.) Thus, the standard of care set forth in Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3 applies to all types of plaintiff's conduct, "regardless of the relative timing of the defendant's conduct, the plaintiff's conduct, and the accident." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §3, Comment b.)

(2) Imminent Peril. The imminent peril doctrine, which recognizes a lesser quantum of care as reasonable in an emergency (see supra, §900), may be of help to the plaintiff. Thus, in Miller v. Contra Costa (1951) 106 C.A.2d 304, 235 P.2d 76, an airplane while landing was hit by a gust of wind and went into a ground loop. The pilot chose the alternative of gunning the motor to see if he could become airborne again. Held, although this was more difficult than to "ride out" the ground loop, the trier of fact could find it reasonable under the circumstances. (106 C.A.2d 309.) (See 47 A.L.R.2d 6, 11 [negligence of motorist colliding with vehicle approaching in wrong lane]; 47 A.L.R.2d 119 [negligence of motorist avoiding collision with vehicle approaching in wrong lane]; 52 A.L.R.2d 1433, 1436 [contributory negligence of one jumping from moving vehicle].)

(3) Dangerous Situation. Although a person dealing with dangerous things such as explosives or highly flammable materials is required to exercise extreme care (see supra, §918 et seq.), a worker whose employment compels him or her to work in a dangerous situation may be limited in the amount of caution that the worker can take for his or her own safety. In this situation a lesser amount of caution will meet the requirement of ordinary care under the circumstances. (See McDonald v. Oakland (1967) 255 C.A.2d 816, 827, 63 C.R. 593; BAJI, No. 3.40; CACI, No. 415.)

Thus, whether a plaintiff's age or physical or mental ability is taken into account is determined by the same rules that determine whether a defendant's age or physical or mental ability is considered. Rest.2d, Torts §464 is abrogated. 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1299

[§ 1299] Causal Connection With Injury.

The negligence of the plaintiff must be a proximate cause of the injury, and the usual rules of causation apply. (Rush v. Lagomarsino (1925) 196 C. 308, 314, 237 P. 1066; Gaster v. Hinkley (1927) 85 C.A. 55, 61, 258 P. 988; Hartford v. Pacific Motor Trucking Co. (1936) 16 C.A.2d 378, 380, 60 P.2d 476; Clark v. California (1950) 99 C.A.2d 616, 623, 222 P.2d 300; Asplund v. Driskell (1964) 225 C.A.2d 705, 716, 37 C.R. 652 ["[n]egligence unrelated to the cause or causes of the accident is not a bar"]; Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 129, 140, 84 C.R. 449; Helsley v. Kern (1974) 42 C.A.3d 97, 105, 116 C.R. 518; see 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §881 et seq.; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 416; BAJI, No. 3.50; CACI, No. 405.)

In Signorelli v. Potter (1954) 43 C.2d 541, 275 P.2d 449, plaintiffs negligently maintained a 50-gallon butane gas storage tank close to their house wall and hot water heater. Defendant supplier's serviceman, filling it, negligently kept pumping it on a windy day despite a gas odor indicating a hose leak. A fire (probably from the heater pilot light) suddenly started and destroyed the house. Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed. Applying the Restatement "substantial factor" test, if the fire would have occurred even though the tank had been safely located 10 feet from the house (industrial safety order), its improper location was not a contributing cause. And here, the trial court could conclude that a large amount of the volatile escaping gas could have been blown 10 feet or more to the pilot light. (43 C.2d 546.)

In Gyerman v. United States Lines Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 488, 102 C.R. 795, 498 P.2d 1043, plaintiff longshoreman was working in a warehouse adjacent to a dock. His job was to take 100-pound burlap sacks of fishmeal stacked on wooden pallets, and break down the stacks with a forklift so they could be easily loaded by truckers. On the day of his injury stacks were improperly delivered, with too many sacks to a pallet and not "bulkheaded" (tied in by proper packing). He allegedly complained to the chief marine clerk, received the advice to do his best, and proceeded with his work until a load fell, causing his injuries. The trial judge found defendant negligent and plaintiff contributorily negligent, and gave judgment for defendant. Held, reversed, for retrial of the issue of contributory negligence.

(a) The evidence supported the trial judge's finding that plaintiff, faced with a safety hazard, had a right to stop work, complain to his union steward, and set arbitration process in motion; that instead he merely complained to the clerk, and therefore failed to use ordinary care for his own protection. (7 C.3d 502.)

(b) However, there was no evidence in the record to support the conclusion that if plaintiff had reported the dangerous condition to his employer's supervisor the stacks would have been made safer. In view of the complete lack of evidence on this critical issue, defendant did not meet its burden of proof. (7 C.3d 505.)

A plaintiff's negligence does not affect his or her recovery unless it was a legal cause of plaintiff's injury. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment f.) Except where negligence of another is imputed to the plaintiff (see infra, §1324 et seq.), the defendant has the burden to prove that negligence of the plaintiff was such a cause. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §4; on general rules of causation, see supra, §1181 et seq.)

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

e. Question of Law or Fact.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1300

[§ 1300] Question of Law or Fact.

Like negligence (supra, §§860, 866), contributory negligence is ordinarily a question for the jury, and becomes a question of law only when the court determines that but one inference can reasonably be drawn from the evidence. (See Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co. (1911) 160 C. 237, 241, 116 P. 513; Flores v. Fitzgerald (1928) 204 C. 374, 376, 268 P. 369; Kirk v. Los Angeles Ry. Golding (1948) 85 C.A.2d 146, 150, 192 P.2d 489; Cendali v. Barber (1948) 89 C.A.2d Supp. 929, 932, 201 P.2d 88; Dennis v. Gonzales (1949) 91 C.A.2d 203, 207, 205 P.2d 55; Ribble v. Cook (1952) 111 C.A.2d 903, 907, 245 P.2d 593; Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 260 P.2d 663; Laymon v. Simpson (1964) 225 C.A.2d 50, 52, 36 C.R. 859; Crooks v. Pirrone (1964) 228 C.A.2d 549, 554, 39 C.R. 622, quoting the text; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §942 et seq.; 11 Hastings L. J. 353; on contributory negligence per se, see infra, §1315 et seq.)

In Gibson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1955) 137 C.A.2d 337, 290 P.2d 347, plaintiff, standing on an asphalt pathway by defendant's train (pathway treated here as a platform), was struck by an engine having an overhang extending 1 foot, 21/2 inches over the platform. Held, affirming a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, plaintiff's conduct was contributory negligence as a matter of law. "Of course, the platform constituted an invitation from defendant for people to use it, just as any railroad platform does, but it is an invitation to use it with ordinary care. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is dangerous to stand close to a fast moving train, both because of overhang and suction. To hold that it is a question of fact whether a person is using ordinary care in walking in any portion of the danger zone which everyone knows exists, without making any effort to determine whether he is without the overhang and suction area, means that the liability of a railroad to a person on its platforms or pathways is absolute." (137 C.A.2d 353.) (See 6 Hastings L. J. 396.)

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, the respective functions of the judge and jury "are the same with respect to a determination of a plaintiff's negligence as with respect to a defendant's negligence." Questions of negligence and legal cause are questions for the jury, "unless the judge determines that the jury can reasonably come to only one conclusion and a judgment as a matter of law is warranted." The appropriate percentage of responsibility to be assigned to each party is a question for the factfinder, "unless the judge determines that no reasonable jury could assign a given magnitude of responsibility to a particular party." Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

f. Action Based on Negligence Per Se.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1301

[§ 1301] Action Based on Negligence Per Se.

The defendant may set up the defense of contributory negligence even when the defendant's negligence consists of the violation of a statute, ordinance, or administrative regulation (supra, §871 et seq.). (See Mula v. Meyer (1955) 132 C.A.2d 279, 284, 282 P.2d 107 [the argument that, "because respondent was guilty of negligence per se, the defense of contributory negligence has been eliminated, simply confuses negligence as a matter of law with the doctrine of absolute liability"]; Fonseca v. Orange (1972) 28 C.A.3d 361, 367, 104 C.R. 566; Smith v. Americana Motor Lodge (1974) 39 C.A.3d 1, 9, 113 C.R. 771; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §843 et seq.; 10 A.L.R.2d 853 [contributory negligence as defense to cause of action based on violation of statute].)

In Travelers Indem. Co. v. Titus (1968) 265 C.A.2d 515, 71 C.R. 490, tenants, in violation of a statute, burned debris in an improperly located and maintained incinerator, and the house was destroyed. Plaintiff insurer paid the landlord, then sued the tenants for negligence. Held, the landlord was negligent in furnishing the improper incinerator, and his contributory negligence, though passive, barred recovery by his subrogee--the insurer. (265 C.A.2d 519.)

An exception is generally recognized, however, for certain acts designed to protect persons unable to protect themselves, where the effect of the statute is to place the entire responsibility on the defendant. (See Rest.2d, Torts §483 and Comment c; Appendix, Reporter's Notes to §483, listing, among others, child labor acts, acts for protection of workers, acts regulating sale of dangerous articles to minors; see 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §947 et seq.)

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability applies the comparative responsibility doctrine "even though a party's conduct violated a statute, ordinance, or administrative regulation, unless the purpose of the statute, ordinance, or administrative regulation is to place the entire responsibility for such harm on the party." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment d.)

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

g. When Doctrine Is Not Applicable.

1. Intentional Tort and Wilful Misconduct.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1302

[§ 1302] Intentional Tort and Wilful Misconduct.

(1) Intentional Tort. It is generally held that contributory negligence is not a defense to an action based on an intentional tort, such as fraud (supra, §813) or battery (Bartosh v. Banning (1967) 251 C.A.2d 378, 385, 59 C.R. 382).

The Third Restatement, after noting that some courts have held that a plaintiff's negligence may serve as a comparative defense to an intentional tort, but that most have not, has taken no position on that issue. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §1, Comment c.)

(2) Wilful Misconduct. Where the defendant's act goes beyond "gross negligence" and reaches "reckless disregard for the plaintiff's safety," i.e., wilful misconduct, the plaintiff is not barred by mere negligence, but only by equally serious fault, such as knowing and reckless exposure to the danger. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.6; BAJI, No. 3.52.)

In Goldman v. House (1949) 93 C.A.2d 572, 209 P.2d 639, defendant landlord, seeking to evict plaintiffs, two elderly tenants, turned off the electricity in their flat. As a result, plaintiff wife fell down a stairway. Rejecting defendant's argument that plaintiff wife was negligent in failing to use a candle for illumination, the court said that contributory negligence need not be considered "since the present action is based on wilful misconduct." (93 C.A.2d 575.)

In Lovett v. Hitchcock (1961) 192 C.A.2d 806, 14 C.R. 117, there was evidence that plaintiff minor was standing on a country road with his back to the roadway when defendant driver ran him down. The jury was instructed that if defendant was guilty of wilful or wanton misconduct, contributory negligence could not be a defense. The court, following the Restatement, approved the rule and its application to the facts: "Here there is testimony from which the jury could find that defendant saw plaintiff 196 feet away in the paved portion of the roadway, and neither slowed nor sounded his horn. There is also the testimony that defendants' car swerved toward plaintiff immediately before the impact. Thus the evidence could support a jury finding that defendant was guilty of wilful or wanton misconduct." (192 C.A.2d 811.) The opinion, however, contains two cautions:

(a) There is no wilful misconduct unless the defendant knows or should know of the danger, and he or she must have actual knowledge of the circumstances (which may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct evidence). "Wilful or wanton misconduct cannot be found by charging a driver with knowledge which he did not have, but which would have been known to the man of ordinary prudence, and predicating upon that assumed knowledge a disregard which would have been reckless in the mind of a man of ordinary prudence." (192 C.A.2d 812.)

(b) Cases warranting the instruction on wilful misconduct seldom arise, and it should rarely be given. Moreover, "so far as its effect is concerned, the rule concerning such misconduct in almost every case overlaps the doctrine of last clear chance." (192 C.A.2d 813; on the abolition of last clear chance, see supra, §1329.) (See Mahoney v. Corralejo (1974) 36 C.A.3d 966, 974, 112 C.R. 61 [pleaded factors found inadequate to show wanton and reckless disregard of consequences; hence, complaint alleged only negligence, and judge's refusal to instruct on wilful misconduct was proper]; Morgan v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1974) 37 C.A.3d 1006, 1015, 112 C.R. 695, citing the text [evidence was sufficient to show wilful misconduct].)

In Levizon v. Harrison (1961) 198 C.A.2d 274, 18 C.R. 284, decedent went to defendant's auto wrecking lot to purchase a part. Defendant had none in stock but told him he could have one off a used car. Defendant's helper H was out, plaintiff said he was in a hurry, so defendant showed him the car and gave him a wrench and bumper jack. Decedent raised the car, crawled under, and was killed when the car fell. There was evidence that blocks and a hydraulic jack were available and not furnished and that H observed decedent under the "teetering" car in a perilous position and merely said to decedent, "I wouldn't crawl under a car like that." (198 C.A.2d 279.) Held, it was error to grant a nonsuit. Plaintiff's contributory negligence in creating the dangerous condition was not a defense if defendant was guilty of wilful or reckless misconduct; and the evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that H, defendant's agent, with knowledge of the danger of the unbalanced car, consciously failed to act by departing from the scene after his brief remark. (198 C.A.2d 281, 282.) (See Williams v. Carr (1968) 68 C.2d 579, 583, 68 C.R. 305, 440 P.2d 505; Pelletti v. Membrilla (1965) 234 C.A.2d 606, 609, 44 C.R. 588.)

In Palazzi v. Air Cargo Terminals (1966) 244 C.A.2d 190, 52 C.R. 817, defendant C backed his truck into a loading dock, using side mirrors. Plaintiff, waiting there for merchandise, was struck. Upholding a judgment for defendant, the court used language indicating the type of conduct that might have been a sufficient showing of defendant's wilful misconduct: "It is not suggested or inferred that he failed to look behind at all or that he backed up suddenly or with excessive speed. It is not suggested either that customers of the store usually stood below the dock in the area where plaintiff was standing to await delivery of merchandise or that, if such was the practice, that defendant Canales knew or should have known of it." (244 C.A.2d 196.)

The Third Restatement is contra: The comparative negligence doctrine applies "even though the conduct of a defendant was reckless." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment b.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

1. In General.

g. When Doctrine Is Not Applicable.

2. Injury to Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1303

[§ 1303] Injury to Property.

(1) In General. The doctrine of contributory negligence apparently has no place in actions for damages for injuries to property. In Kleinclaus v. Marin Realty Co. (1949) 94 C.A.2d 733, 211 P.2d 582, defendant, dredging a canal, pumped water onto property adjoining plaintiff's airfield. The water seeped into plaintiff's land, where it drained into a ditch, but the ditch was clogged and the accumulated water flooded the land. Negligence of defendant (in continuing to pump with knowledge of the flooding) was clear, but defendant contended that plaintiff's failure to clean out the ditch was contributory negligence. Held, the defense was unsound. (a) A person may use his or her own property for any lawful purpose, and cannot be required to curtail or change his or her method of use by reason of the wrongful acts of others; "it is not contributory negligence to neglect to take precautions to avoid future injury which can only occur as the result of another's negligence." (94 C.A.2d 738.) (b) The failure to clear the ditch was, however, relevant to the issue of minimizing damages, on which the lower court failed to find. The evidence showed that, some time after the flooding, plaintiff did clear the obstruction; the court should consider whether the delay was excusable, and, if so, the reasonable cost of the work should be recoverable as part of plaintiff's damages. (94 C.A.2d 739.)

Kleinclaus was followed in Atlas Assur. Co. v. California (1951) 102 C.A.2d 789, 229 P.2d 13. In the negligent operation of a railway, a freight car was thrown down an embankment. It fell against a power pole, broke it, and caused a short circuit, fire, and damage to the generating station. In this action by the power company's insurer, defendant sought to show the inadequacy of the substation equipment to handle a short circuit of this magnitude. Held, objections were properly sustained and judgment for plaintiff was affirmed; the doctrine of contributory negligence was out of place. Quoting from a United States Supreme Court decision the court said: "That one's uses of his property may be subject to the servitude of the wrongful use by another of his property seems an anomaly. It upsets the presumptions of law and takes from him the assumption and the freedom which comes from the assumption, that the other will obey the law, not violate it. It casts upon him the duty of not only using his own property so as not to injure another, but so to use his own property that it may not be injured by the wrongs of another." (102 C.A.2d 795.)

Kleinclaus emphasized the owner's right to make a lawful use of his or her own property without anticipating an invasion by others. It was distinguished on that ground in Humboldt v. Shelly (1963) 220 C.A.2d 194, 33 C.R. 758. Decedent negligently drove his truck over plaintiff county's bridge and demolished it. Plaintiff sued decedent's administrator, who set up the defense of failure to maintain the bridge in a safe condition. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed; the county was bound to anticipate use of the bridge, and under simple concepts of fairness and justice the doctrine of contributory negligence should apply. (220 C.A.2d 203.)

(2) Comparative Negligence. In Tint v. Sanborn (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1225, 259 C.R. 902, the court held that comparative negligence may be asserted as a defense in an action for damages to real property resulting from the negligent maintenance of a nuisance. (211 C.A.3d 1233, 1234.) Kleinclaus and Atlas Assur. Co. were explained as decided on the alternative ground that the actions of the plaintiffs did not specifically involve nuisance claims arising from negligent conduct. (211 C.A.3d 1231, 1232.) (For a full discussion of Tint, see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §168.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

2. Illustrations of Contributory Negligence.

a. Voluntary Exposure to Danger.

1. Rule and Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1304

[§ 1304] Rule and Illustrations.

(1) In General. It is contributory negligence for the plaintiff to voluntarily expose himself or herself to the danger that may arise from the defendant's negligence. (See 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§808, 812 et seq.; 33 A.L.R.4th 790 [failure to reveal medical history to physician].) If the voluntary exposure is unreasonable, it is sometimes confusingly called "assumption of risk." (See infra, §§1336, 1337.)

The following situations are illustrative of contributory negligence:

(a) Riding with a driver known to be, or who should be known to be, intoxicated. (See Jones v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1930) 104 C.A. 47, 57, 285 P. 709; Whitsett v. Morton (1934) 138 C.A. 628, 630, 33 P.2d 54; Knickrihm v. Hazel (1935) 3 C.A.2d 721, 728, 40 P.2d 305; Smith v. Maloney (1938) 26 C.A.2d 97, 100, 78 P.2d 1034; 15 A.L.R.2d 1165 [guest's knowledge that driver has been drinking as precluding recovery, under guest statute or equivalent common law rule].)

(c) Standing on a railroad platform in such close proximity to the train as to be within the line of its ordinary overhang. (McKeown v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 324, 326, 66 P.2d 1250; Gibson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1955) 137 C.A.2d 337, 347, 290 P.2d 347.)

(d) Walking into a known open space between two platforms, misjudging the distance. (Fletter v. San Francisco (1952) 110 C.A.2d 820, 824, 244 P.2d 59.)

(e) Installing a boiler with only fire brick (a conductor of heat) separating it from a wood floor that caught fire. (

Pedroli v. Russell (1958) 157 C.A.2d 281, 285, 320 P.2d 873.)

(f) Assisting the owner of a stalled automobile to move it from a parking lot onto the highway, where a truck hit it. (Vasquez v. Alameda (1958) 49 C.2d 674, 676, 321 P.2d 1.) (See 3 A.L.R.3d 780 [liability of owner or operator of stalled or ditched car to person assisting in extricating or starting it]; 27 A.L.R.3d 144 [person engaged about stalled or disabled vehicle on highway].)

(g) Grasping a cable in contact with a live power wire, after being warned not to touch it. (Bartuluci v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corp. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 376, 385, 69 P.2d 440.)

(h) Going onto a public dump to salvage scrap, and suffering injury from a cave-in. (Anderson v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1936) 17 C.A.2d 244, 248, 61 P.2d 1209.)

(2) Seat Belts. A lively debate has centered around the question whether the failure of an automobile driver or passenger to use a seat belt constitutes contributory negligence. (See Von Beltz v. Stuntman (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1467, 1481, 1482, 255 C.R. 755, infra, §1338; 4 Cal. Western L. Rev. 199; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 925; 18 Hastings L. J. 613; 10 Santa Clara Lawyer 370; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 733; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 91 [Mandatory Seat Belt Use Legislation]; 1 U.S.F. L. Rev. 277; 92 A.L.R.3d 9 [failure to use seat belt as contributory negligence]; 85 A.L.R.4th 365 [motorcyclist's failure to wear helmet or other protective equipment]; 62 A.L.R.5th 537 [nonuse of seat belt as failure to mitigate damages].)

In Truman v. Vargas (1969) 275 C.A.2d 976, 80 C.R. 373, the court held that it was a question of fact for the jury, to be resolved from a consideration of all the circumstances and expert testimony about the efficacy of seat belts. (275 C.A.2d 982.) Under Truman, the burden is on the defendant to prove that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff should have used a seat belt, and what the consequences to him or her would have been had seat belts been used. In Franklin v. Gibson (1982) 138 C.A.3d 340, 188 C.R. 23, the court reaffirmed the Truman rule despite its rejection by a majority of American jurisdictions, but stressed the necessity of expert testimony on the consequences issue. (138 C.A.3d 344.) (See Lara v. Nevitt (2004) 123 C.A.4th 454, 458, 19 C.R.3d 865 [jury reasonably concluded that passenger in sleeper berth of truck was negligent for failing to wear seat belt, notwithstanding testimony that truckers did not usually wear restraints in sleeper berth and that there was no law requiring restraints; expert testimony, although unnecessary under circumstances, was helpful in proving that absence of restraints increased injury].)

The Truman-Franklin position was codified in the mandatory seat belt law (Veh.C. 27315, supra, §908): Violation does not constitute "negligence per se for comparative fault purposes, but negligence may be proven as a fact without regard to the violation." (Veh.C. 27315(i); on failure to maintain seat belts in police cars as not constituting negligence per se for comparative fault purposes, see Veh.C. 27315.3, supra, §908.)

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1305

[§ 1305] Distinctions.

(1) Different Risk. One who assumes the risk of certain obvious dangers does not assume the risk of all dangers. (See Perry v. First Corp. (1959) 167 C.A.2d 359, 334 P.2d 299.) In Gornstein v. Priver (1923) 64 C.A. 249, 256, 221 P. 396, defendant contracted to carry a number of persons to a picnic in motor trucks. Plaintiff and other passengers sat on the floor of one machine with their legs hanging over the end. The driver of plaintiff's vehicle stopped it suddenly, and the following truck, which was negligently driven too closely, bumped into it, striking plaintiff's legs before she could draw them up. Held, plaintiff could recover. She assumed the risks of danger ordinarily incident to the position she took, such as swaying of the truck; hence, she might have had no remedy if bounced off during ordinary driving, just as a passenger in a railroad car who puts his or her arm or head outside the window and is struck by some object properly there cannot recover. But she did not assume the risk of any unusual danger created by defendant's negligence; and the driver of the second car, seeing her position, was bound to regulate the speed of his vehicle and the distance from the first car. (64 C.A. 256.)

(2) Familiar Premises. In Russo v. Burch (1964) 224 C.A.2d 403, 36 C.R. 682, plaintiff, leaving the flat where she took her music lesson, fell down the stairs. Defendant landlord had negligently failed to replace a burned-out light bulb. But the judge instructed that "[w]alking through an unlighted, unfamiliar area in the dark constitutes negligent conduct." Held, the instruction was erroneous. Plaintiff had been going to the place for 2 years and was familiar with the stairway. The jury could therefore have found that she acted reasonably in trying to descend because of her knowledge of the staircase based on her prior experience. (224 C.A.2d 413.)

aa. The Rescue Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1306

[§ 1306] The Rescue Rule.

"The cases have developed the rule that persons injured in the course of undertaking a necessary rescue may, absent rash or reckless conduct on their part, recover from the person whose negligence created the peril which necessitated the rescue." (Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (1971) 6 C.3d 361, 368, 99 C.R. 29, 491 P.2d 821; see Henshaw v. Belyea (1934) 220 C. 458, 461, 31 P.2d 348, infra, §1308; Scott v. Texaco (1966) 239 C.A.2d 431, 434, 48 C.R. 785, infra, §1307; Bryant v. Glastetter (1995) 32 C.A.4th 770, 38 C.R.2d 291, supra, §862; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §§926, 927; 7 Proof of Facts 3d 415 [imminent peril inviting rescue attempt]; 91 A.L.R.3d 1202 [liability to person other than firefighter who attempts to control fire or to save life or property]; 75 A.L.R.4th 875 [applicability of comparative negligence principles to rescue doctrine].)

In Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., supra, defendant contractor, building a dam, violated safety orders in excavating for a spillway, and two of his employees were pinned in a trench by a landslide. Plaintiff doctor, who had contracted to furnish emergency medical care to employees on the job, went to the site and was escorted by another employee down a steep slope to the trapped men. On the way down, he slipped and fell, sustaining serious injuries, but nevertheless completed the task of treating the injured employees. In plaintiff's action for personal injuries, defendant offered the analogy of the firefighter who cannot complain of negligence in setting the fire because his very occupation exposes him to that risk (see supra, §845 et seq.). Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. He had agreed only to furnish medical aid to injured employees; he did not agree to expose himself to the risk of the steep, slippery embankment or any other hazards not necessarily inherent in the performance of his services. (6 C.3d 369.)

Three aspects of the rescue rule necessarily call for separate treatment:

(1) The normal requirement of a duty of care owed to the plaintiff (supra, §§835, 836) is subjected to a policy exception; i.e., the rescuer may sue, despite the fact that the defendant is negligent only toward a third party victim, not the rescuer. (See Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., supra, 6 C.3d 368.) Some decisions have gone so far as to allow recovery by the rescuer where the rescued person was the negligent defendant. (See 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §649; cf. 53 A.L.R.2d 1002 [standing in highway to warn motorists of danger].)

(2) The independent intervening act of the rescuer is not considered a superseding cause. "The theory which underlies the rescue rule is, in essence, that 'rescuers, as a class, are always foreseeable when the defendant's negligence endangers anyone.' ... Thus, if defendant creates a situation of peril for one person (the victim), defendant properly may be charged with having proximately caused not only that peril but also the rescue and any injury suffered during its course." (Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., supra, 6 C.3d 368.)

(3) The doctrine of contributory negligence is inapplicable; i.e., it is not a defense that the plaintiff voluntarily left a position of safety and exposed himself or herself to the danger. The question for the jury is whether under all the circumstances, including the extent of the peril, the amount of the risk, and the chance of success, the plaintiff acted reasonably or in so reckless a manner as to affect his or her right of recovery. (Henshaw v. Belyea, supra; Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co., supra, 6 C.3d 368; Lolli v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 166, 169, 110 P.2d 436; Paris v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1947) 78 C.A.2d 950, 952, 179 P.2d 1 [concurring opinion].) Mere negligence on the rescuer's part will not prevent recovery. (Petersen v. Lang Trans. Co. (1939) 32 C.A.2d 462, 467, 90 P.2d 94.)

bb. Peril Not Created by Defendant.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1307

[§ 1307] Peril Not Created by Defendant.

In its basic form, the rescue rule applies where a third person is placed in danger by the defendant's negligence.

In Scott v. Texaco (1966) 239 C.A.2d 431, 48 C.R. 785, defendant Renault driver negligently overturned his car in the left lane of a two-lane transition road connecting freeways. Plaintiff drove by, stopped in the same lane, got out to set flares, and stood there, shouting warnings to other cars. A Volkswagen driver stopped in the right lane in response to plaintiff's signal. Defendant Texaco driver, with a heavy load on his truck, negligently came around the turn too fast, saw both lanes blocked, but was unable to stop, and hit plaintiff, her car, and the Volkswagen. The jury verdict was for all defendants. Held, reversed for failure to instruct on the rescue rule.

The rule was clearly applicable against defendant Renault driver whose negligence created the original peril. Was it also applicable to the Texaco driver, not involved in the original negligence? In holding that it was, the court said of Texaco's argument: "We do not accept this narrow view ... which would focus attention on the person creating the original danger and not on the person of the rescuer. We think the force of the rule should properly be centered on the rescuer, for it is the quality of his conduct which is being weighed. Whether he was induced to enter a position of danger as a result of the act of a particular defendant or as a result of some outside force is inconsequential to the process of evaluating the quality of his behavior. ... The critical element in the rule lies in the rescuer's behavior in the face of the crisis which confronts him and not in the factors which brought him there. We hold the rescue rule applies to all defendants, regardless of the source and creation of the original peril." (239 C.A.2d 435.)

There is some disagreement among the authorities where the danger is only to property. In Henshaw v. Belyea (1934) 220 C. 458, 31 P.2d 348, plaintiff ran from a safe place on the sidewalk in an attempt to save his employer's truck from slipping downhill by placing a block under a wheel, and his foot was crushed. The court approved the extension of the rescue doctrine to such a case. (220 C. 463.) (See 23 Cal. L. Rev. 110; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 159.)

2. Illustrations of Contributory Negligence.

b. Forgetfulness of Known Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1309

[§ 1309] Forgetfulness of Known Danger.

Sometimes the plaintiff exposes himself or herself to a danger known but forgotten. The older cases took the view that, where the danger is familiar and easily discernible, the plaintiff's conduct is negligent, provided the forgetfulness is not induced by sudden peril, emergency, or other adequate disturbing cause. (Jacobson v. Oakland Meat & Packing Co. (1911) 161 C. 425, 430, 119 P. 653; Reynolds v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1912) 162 C. 327, 328, 122 P. 962; Meindersee v. Meyers (1922) 188 C. 498, 503, 205 P. 1078; Benard v. Vorlander (1948) 87 C.A.2d 436, 443, 197 P.2d 42 [workman carrying long steel rods swung them into contact with uninsulated power wire, of which he was aware and which was plainly marked "High Voltage"]; Lazzarotto v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1958) 157 C.A.2d 455, 461, 321 P.2d 29 [failure of auto driver to look for trains at familiar railroad track].)

Other cases find excuses for momentary forgetfulness. And, despite occasional decisions such as Benard and Lazzarotto, the theory that forgetfulness of a known danger is contributory negligence as a matter of law has been virtually abandoned.

In Schleif v. Grigsby (1927) 88 C.A. 174, 181, 263 P. 255, defendant negligently maintained a telephone wire strung over a highway so low that plaintiff, standing on the body of his loaded truck, was struck and knocked off. The evidence showed that, several months before, plaintiff had struck the same wire, and had observed it thereafter occasionally; but it was practically concealed by heavy foliage, and difficult to discern. Held, the jury might find that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent. (88 C.A. 183.)

In Andre v. Allyn (1948) 84 C.A.2d 347, 190 P.2d 949, nonslip cork covering on a ramp connecting floors of a high school building had been worn and slippery for over a year, and many children had slipped on it. Plaintiff, a 16-year-old boy, who knew of the condition but was greeting a friend and "wasn't thinking of it," fell, breaking his leg. Held, judgment of nonsuit reversed. "The courts are getting away from the principle established in Reynolds v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. ... to the effect that the sudden and disturbing cause which excuses forgetfulness of a known peril, and takes it out of the category of contributory negligence as a matter of law, must be an extreme situation of emergency." (84 C.A.2d 355.) Spendlove v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 632, 634, 184 P.2d 873, "illustrates the fact that in the last few years the tendency of the Supreme Court has been away from the stricter view of preceding years, where frequently contributory negligence was established as a matter of law, to the present situation in which such cases 'are rare'." (84 C.A.2d 354.) "In our case, at the very least, the question of whether the accident could have resulted only from plaintiff's momentary forgetfulness and raising his hand to greet a friend is one upon which reasonable minds may differ, and therefore, one which must be left to the jury." (84 C.A.2d 352.)

In Rogers v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1955) 45 C.2d 414, 289 P.2d 226, plaintiff, a passenger in defendant's bus on a hot day, rested his arm on the window sill with his elbow protruding outside 2 to 4 inches. Defendant L's truck was parked with an open door extending 4 inches beyond the fender. The bus driver went too close, and plaintiff's elbow was struck by the truck door. Held, sustaining a verdict for plaintiff, resting the arm on the sill was not contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the jury could conclude that plaintiff did not have actual knowledge and appreciation of the danger involved so as to consent to the risk. (45 C.2d 418.)

In Ross v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 185, 260 P.2d 663, plaintiff, a junior high school student in a machine shop class, buffed leather reins without goggles, and suffered an eye injury. Held, reversing judgment of nonsuit: (a) Defendant school district was negligent in failing to keep an adequate supply of unbroken goggles on hand and in failing to supervise the boy's use of the buffer or to warn of the danger of buffing long flexible reins. (b) The evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding of contributory negligence in that the boy admitted that he knew goggles should be worn, that he had been instructed on safety precautions, and that he had used the buffer with goggles 75 or 80 times. But this did not compel a finding of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Plaintiff's testimony, which the jury could believe, was that, although he searched, he found no good set of goggles. Moreover, knowledge of the existence of a danger, which might bar an adult, will not necessarily bar a child. (120 C.A.2d 190.) (See Neel v. Mannings (1942) 19 C.2d 647, 655, 122 P.2d 576, supra, §1125; Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 225, 234, 282 P.2d 69; De La Torre v. Valenzuela (1951) 102 C.A.2d 586, 592, 228 P.2d 13; Bickham v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1953) 120 C.A.2d 815, 822, 263 P.2d 32; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §818 et seq.; 74 A.L.R.2d 950 [momentary forgetfulness of danger as contributory negligence].)

C. Contributory Negligence.

2. Illustrations of Contributory Negligence.

c. Negligent Failure To Discover Danger.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1310

[§ 1310] In General.

The most common form of contributory negligence is the plaintiff's failure to look around to discover a danger arising from the defendant's negligence. The many cases dealing with pedestrians walking along highways or crossing streets, and failing to keep a lookout for streetcars or automobiles or other pedestrians, are illustrations. (See 41 Proof of Facts 3d 65 [application of "plain view doctrine" to trip and fall cases]; 88 A.L.R.2d 1143 [collision between pedestrians]; BAJI, No. 5.50 et seq.; CACI, Nos. 710, 711.)

Negligence may consist not only in failure to look, but also in failure to observe what is in plain sight. In White v. Davis (1930) 103 C.A. 531, 542, 284 P. 1086, the court said: "Where the injured party fails to look at all, or looks straight ahead without glancing to either side, or is in a position where he cannot see, or in other words, where he takes no precaution at all for his own safety, it is usually a question for the court. Where he looks but does not see an approaching automobile, or seeing one, erroneously misjudges its speed or distance, or for some other reason assumes he could avoid injury to himself, the question is usually one for the jury." (See Burgesser v. Bullock's (1923) 190 C. 673, 677, 214 P. 649; Callahan v. Gray (1955) 44 C.2d 107, 111, 279 P.2d 963; Ross v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1919) 39 C.A. 658, 660, 179 P. 538 [failure of person alighting from streetcar to look for other cars from opposite direction before attempting to cross street]; Nickell v. Rosenfield (1927) 82 C.A. 369, 374, 255 P. 760; Long v. Barbieri (1932) 120 C.A. 207, 210, 7 P.2d 1082; Francis v. Riddle (1936) 15 C.A.2d 282, 285, 59 P.2d 532; Taha v. Finegold (1947) 81 C.A.2d 536, 539, 184 P.2d 533 [discussing instructions on duty of pedestrian crossing street]; Mitchell v. Kluber (1961) 196 C.A.2d 18, 20, 16 C.R. 292 [collision of two pedestrians]; Richardson v. Oliveri (1966) 244 C.A.2d 369, 373, 53 C.R. 59, quoting the text.)

It has been said that there is a continuing duty of care while crossing a street, which in some circumstances may not be satisfied by a mere preliminary look before starting. (Gibb v. Cleave (1936) 12 C.A.2d 468, 471, 55 P.2d 938; Fischer v. Keen (1941) 43 C.A.2d 244, 249, 110 P.2d 693.)

But this theory is not carried to extremes. (See King v. Unger (1938) 25 C.A.2d 632, 634, 78 P.2d 255 [no further duty to look to left after traffic signal had stopped vehicles coming from that direction]; Amendt v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 248, 256, 115 P.2d 588 ["it was not incumbent upon him to oscillate his head like the pendulum of a clock to avoid colliding with others ahead of him and at the same time to watch the approach of the car behind him"].) And in Salomon v. Meyer (1934) 1 C.2d 11, 14, 32 P.2d 631, and Francis v. San Francisco (1955) 44 C.2d 335, 339, 282 P.2d 496, it was held error to instruct, in unqualified form, that there is a continuing duty that is not met by looking once. Whether an ordinary and prudent person, crossing at that time and place and under the existing conditions of traffic, would have maintained such a constant lookout is a jury question.

2. Reliance on Defendant's Duty of Care.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1311

[§ 1311] In General.

An important qualification of the rule governing failure to discover danger (supra, §1310) is that it is not contributory negligence to place reasonable reliance upon another's duty of care. "The general rule is that one to whom a duty of care is owing by another has the right to assume that the person who owes such duty will perform it; and in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, it is not negligence on the part of the one to whom the duty is owing to assume that he will not be exposed to a danger which can come to him only through a violation of that duty by the person owing it." (Gornstein v. Priver (1923) 64 C.A. 249, 259, 221 P. 396; see Laird v. T.W. Mather (1958) 51 C.2d 210, 217, 331 P. 617 [elderly woman fell from lower step of store basement stairway where handrail ended; "it is not necessarily negligent to fail to watch for dangers in a business establishment when the ordinarily prudent person would not in fact expect to find the condition where it is, or where he is likely to have his attention distracted as he approaches it"]; Hechler v. McDonnell (1941) 42 C.A.2d 515, 517, 109 P.2d 426 [restaurant patron who saw employee mop under her seat could assume that it was mopped properly so as to dry surface]; Shearer v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1941) 43 C.A.2d 306, 308, 110 P.2d 690 [plaintiff who notified defendant of fallen power line, could assume 3 hours later that power had been turned off]; *Rice v. (On motorist's right to rely on signals at railroad crossing, see infra, §1322; cf. Boots v. Potter (1954) 122 C.A.2d 927, 933, 266 P.2d 176 [motorist was not entitled to rely absolutely on directions of flagman on construction job]; Pekus v. Lake Arrowhead Boat Co. (1967) 255 C.A.2d 864, 869, 63 C.R. 672 [although plaintiff may have relied on skill of expert welder, this did not preclude finding of contributory negligence in standing by operation and giving some directions].)

A person about to board or leave a train or streetcar has a right to assume that the railroad company will regulate car movements so that the tracks he or she must cross or stand by will be kept safe. (MacGregor v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1936) 6 C.2d 596, 600, 59 P.2d 123; Lagomarsino v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1945) 69 C.A.2d 388, 393, 158 P.2d 982; see BAJI, No. 6.55; CACI, No. 800.) And a person standing in a safety zone may rely on appearances, and need not anticipate that the rear of a turning streetcar will substantially overlap the zone. (Brandenburg v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 282, 287, 169 P.2d 909.)

Williamson v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 93 C.A.2d 484, 209 P.2d 146, held that a passenger in a bus was not bound to examine the condition of the overhead luggage rack. Hence, when she was injured by a falling suitcase, it was error to submit to the jury the question of contributory negligence, and a judgment for defendant was reversed. (93 C.A.2d 487.)

cc. Pedestrians.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1313

[§ 1313] Pedestrians.

A person alighting from a streetcar may assume that an automobile will be driven on the right hand side of the street. (Harris v. Johnson (1916) 174 C. 55, 58, 161 P. 1155.) A pedestrian traveling on a highway and keeping a reasonable lookout in the direction that he or she is going is not required, in the absence of a warning signal, to look back to discover vehicles approaching from the rear. (Devecchio v. Ricketts (1924) 66 C.A. 334, 340, 226 P. 11.) A pedestrian crossing a street may rely on a streetcar to sound its usual warning when approaching. (Amendt v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 248, 253, 115 P.2d 588.)

In Kirk v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1945) 26 C.2d 833, 161 P.2d 673, plaintiff, with two companions, was part way across the street when the signal changed. One companion grasped her arm, her purse fell, she snatched at it and was struck by defendant's streetcar. The defense of contributory negligence as a matter of law was rejected. (a) A pedestrian, caught on the street when a traffic signal changes, may assume that due care will be exercised by the vehicles released; and that pedestrian, faced with the dilemma of continuing across or retreating, is not guilty of contributory negligence merely because his or her judgment appears to have been faulty. (26 C.2d 839.) (b) Under the emergency caused by the change of signal and the oncoming streetcar, her instinctive act in reaching for her purse (rescue of property) was not so unreasonable as to constitute a lack of due care. (26 C.2d 840.)

The same rule applies to street defects; i.e., a pedestrian may assume that the sidewalk is in reasonably safe condition, and need not be on a constant lookout for danger. "Even if a defect is one which might be visible to a person who is looking for such a condition, it does not follow that a pedestrian is guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to see and avoid it. ... Whether plaintiff made reasonable use of her faculties and whether she should have observed the condition which caused her injury were questions of fact." (Peters v. San Francisco (1953) 41 C.2d 419, 424, 260 P.2d 55.) (See BAJI, No. 8.52; CACI, Nos. 1007, 1008.)

The rule of the Peters case applies to the elderly and handicapped to the same extent as to others. Thus, in Garber v. Los Angeles (1964) 226 C.A.2d 349, 38 C.R. 157, plaintiff, walking in broad daylight with no distraction to prevent her seeing what was ahead, stumbled on a sidewalk depression; her bifocal glasses obscured her vision of what was directly below her. Held, she was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; the city had a duty to keep its public ways "in a condition safe for use by persons such as plaintiff who suffer only from the infirmities common to most persons who have reached middle age and to many even younger." (226 C.A.2d 358, 359.)

d. Vehicle Guest's Failure To Protest.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1314

[§ 1314] Vehicle Guest's Failure To Protest.

(1) General Rule. The negligence of a driver is not imputed to his or her guest. (See infra, §1324.) But the guest himself or herself may be negligent. Thus, where the driver is obviously negligent or reckless, reasonable prudence may require the guest to warn the driver or protest, or in some cases to attempt to leave the car; and failure to do so presents a question for the jury whether this was actual contributory negligence on the part of the guest. (See Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co. (1928) 204 C. 679, 681, 269 P. 529; Curran v. Earle C. Anthony (1926) 77 C.A. 462, 471, 247 P. 236; Bencich v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 518, 528, 67 P.2d 398; Valencia v. San Jose Scavenger Co. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 469, 472, 69 P.2d 480; Miller v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1962) 207 C.A.2d 581, 590, 24 C.R. 785; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 433; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 158; 84 A.L.R.2d 448 [guest in vehicle engaging in racing or similar contests]; 1 A.L.R.4th 556 [motor vehicle passenger's contributory negligence or assumption of risk where accident resulted from driver's drowsiness, physical defect, or illness].) (On riding with driver known to be intoxicated, see supra, §1304.)

(2) Exception: Guest Unaware of Driver's Negligence. A guest is under no duty to warn of an approaching train where the driver appears to be vigilant; nor is it proper for the guest, even where danger of collision is imminent, to interfere with the control of the vehicle. (See Carpenter v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1921) 51 C.A. 60, 62, 195 P. 1073; Aungst v. Central Calif. Traction Co. (1931) 115 C.A. 113, 118, 1 P.2d 56; cf. Martindale v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 89 C.A.2d 400, 408, 201 P.2d 48 [extent of guest's duty is jury question]; BAJI, No. 3.72.)

In Robinson v. Cable (1961) 55 C.2d 425, 11 C.R. 377, 359 P.2d 929, plaintiffs, passengers in an automobile, were injured by the negligence of defendant and their own driver (decedent). The trial judge instructed that if any of the plaintiffs could by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered the approach of the other vehicle in time to warn the decedent and failed, they could not recover. Held, reversible error. The instruction put an unwarranted burden of care on plaintiff passengers to observe traffic and warn the driver. "In the absence of some fact brought to his attention which would cause a person of ordinary prudence to act otherwise, a person riding in an automobile is not charged with the responsibility of observing the condition of the traffic on the highway, and his mere failure to do so, without more, will not support a finding of contributory negligence." (55 C.2d 427.)

On the other hand, in Pobor v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1961) 55 C.2d 314, 324, 11 C.R. 106, 359 P.2d 474, plaintiff's proposed instruction that an automobile rider "is not necessarily contributorily negligent" because he does not request the driver to stop at a railroad crossing was properly rejected as incomplete; it did not explain when the guest is not required to protest.

2. Causation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1316

[§ 1316] Causation.

As in the cases previously discussed (see supra, §§895, 1299), causation is a frequent issue, and the plaintiff's violation of a statute or other regulation will not bar full recovery if the jury can find, on sufficient evidence, that it did not contribute to the injury. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment f; 46 A.L.R.3d 964 [antihitchhiking laws].)

In Farole v. Eichman (1952) 39 C.2d 822, 249 P.2d 261, plaintiff boy was riding on the handlebars of a bicycle in a pedestrian crosswalk. Defendant truck driver went into the intersection at 50 miles per hour without warning or applying the brakes and struck the bicycle. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. An ordinance forbade riding on handlebars, plaintiff's violation was not excusable or justifiable, and it therefore constituted negligence per se. But he had a right to be in the crosswalk at the time and place, and the jury could find that the accident would have happened even if he were on foot, i.e., that his riding on handlebars was not a "proximately contributing cause" of the accident. (39 C.2d 884.)

In Green v. Menveg Properties (1954) 126 C.A.2d 1, 271 P.2d 544, plaintiff was an unregistered electrician working on replacement of floodlights without a permit for the work, and was injured when a defective lighting pole collapsed. Held, defendant owner or possessor was liable for negligent failure to inspect, and there was no causal connection between plaintiff's violation of law and the accident. "A rotten pole is as apt to fall with a registered electrician working under a permit as with one who is unregistered and holds no permit. The purpose of the code is to insure proper performance of electrical work in order that property owners be not defrauded, and that the public safety be preserved. ... There is no reason to believe that there would have been less likelihood of an accident if [plaintiff] had been a registered electrician and a permit had been issued." (126 C.A.2d 11.) (See Sharick v. Galloway (1937) 19 C.A.2d 693, 697, 66 P.2d 185 [plaintiff walking on right-hand side of highway; proximate cause was jury question].)

a. In General.

3. Excuse.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1317

[§ 1317] Excuse.

Violation of law may be excusable (supra, §890). In Freeman v. Nickerson (1946) 77 C.A.2d 40, 174 P.2d 688, plaintiff, engaged to sand a hardwood floor of an apartment, disposed of highly flammable oak dust by dumping it into the incinerator, in reliance on defendant owner's negligent assurance that there was no fire there. The resulting flash fire caused injuries to plaintiff, but defendant contended that plaintiff's contributory negligence in removing the hopper from the incinerator, thus exposing herself to the flames, was a bar, citing a statute prohibiting the removal of safety devices. The court held that if, as the jury believed, defendant had assured plaintiff that there was no fire burning, there was no danger to be anticipated in removing the hopper. (77 C.A.2d 50, 51.)

In Espinoza v. Rossini (1966) 247 C.A.2d 40, 55 C.R. 205, plaintiff and other farm laborers were in their employer's farm tractor and trailer combination, traveling to a location to pick almonds. An inexperienced driver was at the wheel. Plaintiff stood on the drawbar (trailer hitch) to warn the driver of vehicles approaching from the rear and to advise him on driving. Defendant, driving his car at 30 to 35 miles per hour, struck the tractor-trailer with such violence that the occupants were thrown to the road. The evidence of defendant's negligence was sufficient, but the trial judge granted a motion notwithstanding the verdict on the ground of contributory negligence per se. Held, reversed. (a) Riding on the unauthorized part of the vehicle, in violation of Veh.C. 21712, could have been justified under the exception in the statute, for the jury could infer that plaintiff was performing implied duties of his job. (247 C.A.2d 47.) (b) The impact was so severe that the jury might have concluded that the injuries would have occurred even if plaintiff had been in the trailer with the other occupants who were thrown out. (247 C.A.2d 49.)

An employee's violation of a safety order may be excused where the evidence fails to show his or her awareness of it. In Morgan v. Stubblefield (1972) 6 C.3d 606, 100 C.R. 1, 493 P.2d 465, plaintiff electricians were working on a rolling scaffold. It moved, a wheel fell into an unguarded hole, and the scaffold overturned, causing serious injuries. Defendants contended that plaintiffs were deliberately moving the scaffold, in violation of a safety order, and sought an instruction on contributory negligence per se. The court pointed out that most safety orders are directed to the employer's conduct; and, although some relate to employees, it cannot be presumed that a worker would be acquainted with numerous and complex regulations. "We hold here, without considering other possible factual concepts, that where there is no substantial evidence an employee was actually aware of a safety order directed to his conduct he may not be deemed negligent as a matter of law for his violation of the order." (6 C.3d 615.) (See BAJI, No. 3.45, Use Note; CACI, No. 420 [rebuttal of presumption of negligence per se (violation excused)], No. 421 [rebuttal of presumption of negligence per se (violation by minor excused)].)

b. Violation of Traffic Rules.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1318

[§ 1318] Violation of Traffic Rules.

Contributory negligence per se is frequently found in violation of traffic rules laid down by the Vehicle Code or local ordinances. Examples are:

(1) Where city traffic is controlled by stop and go signals and bells, and a pedestrian crosses after the first bell that stops cross traffic, but before the second bell gives the "go" signal to the pedestrian. (Leek v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 374, 376, 66 P.2d 1232.)

(2) Where, on the open highways outside of business or residence districts, a pedestrian fails to walk close to the left-hand edge. (See Veh.C. 21956 [right side is acceptable if there is no safe way to cross]; Buchignoni v. De Haven (1937) 23 C.A.2d 76, 79, 72 P.2d 159; cf. Sharick v. Galloway (1937) 19 C.A.2d 693, 695, 66 P.2d 185 [may not be proximate cause of accident]; see 45 A.L.R.3d 658 [noncompliance with statute regulating pedestrian's travel along highway].)

(3) Where an automobile driver does not sound the horn before overtaking and passing another car. (Moore v. Miller (1942) 51 C.A.2d 674, 679, 125 P.2d 576.) (See BAJI, No. 5.50 et seq.; CACI, No. 700.)

c. Passenger in Wrong Place.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1319

[§ 1319] Passenger in Wrong Place.

Veh.C. 21712 makes it unlawful for a person (except an employee) to ride on any portion of a vehicle "not designed or intended for the use of passengers." Thus, riding on the steps or top of a streetcar, in violation of an ordinance, is contributory negligence per se. (Combs v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1947) 29 C.2d 606, 609, 177 P.2d 293, supra, §891; Schultheiss v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1936) 11 C.A.2d 525, 527, 54 P.2d 49.) But temporary use of the steps or platform, prior to alighting from the car, is not. (Connard v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1939) 14 C.2d 375, 377, 94 P.2d 567.)

In Gerritsma v. Vogelaar (1968) 266 C.A.2d 210, 72 C.R. 89, plaintiff went with defendant, her sister, to buy plywood sheets. They were loaded on top of defendant's Volkswagen microbus in the luggage carrier. On the return trip, plaintiff lay face down on the plywood, with arms stretched to hold the side rails of the luggage rack. Defendant drove at 25 miles per hour, in a breeze, and plaintiff fell off when the car passed a sharp curve in the road. Held, nonsuit affirmed. The argument that safety rules such as Veh.C. 21712 apply only to defendants was answered by a quotation from Prosser: "[I]t seems clear that safety statutes, such as speed laws and traffic rules, usually are designed for the broad purpose of preventing accidents or dangerous situations, in which the plaintiff is quite as likely to be hurt as the defendant; and it is not difficult to discover a purpose to protect him by setting up a standard of his own conduct, the unexcused violation of which is negligence in itself." 6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1320

[§ 1320] Drunken Pedestrian.

It has been held that mere drunkenness of a pedestrian who is struck by a negligent automobile driver is not contributory negligence as a matter of law, but presents a question for the jury whether it contributed to the injury. (Coakley v. Ajuria (1930) 209 C. 745, 749, 290 P. 33; see BAJI, No. 5.42.)

On the other hand, in Cloud v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1946) 74 C.A.2d 92, 168 P.2d 191, the decedent, while drunk, was walking or standing on a streetcar track and was struck by a car. In upholding a judgment for defendant, the court observed: "If there is any doubt whether a person who is dead drunk and unable to move can be guilty of contributory negligence ... there is none that an ambulatory person in a state of intoxication can be guilty of contributory negligence and is held to the standard of care of an ordinarily prudent person." e. Jay Walking.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1321

[§ 1321] Jay Walking.

In certain districts in cities, it is customary to provide marked crosswalks or lanes for pedestrians to cross streets. However, Veh.C. 21954(a) recognizes that the crosswalks might not be used, by providing that a pedestrian crossing outside the crosswalk must yield the right of way to vehicles "so near as to constitute an immediate hazard." On the other hand, some municipal ordinances have provided in substance that no pedestrian may cross outside the crosswalk. The issue of contributory negligence per se is thus complicated by the inconsistency between state and local law.

Where there is no ordinance and the Vehicle Code alone is invoked, or where the ordinance, like the Vehicle Code, merely requires the pedestrian to yield the right of way, it is not contributory negligence as a matter of law to cross outside the lane, and the question is for the jury. (See Genola v. Barnett (1939) 14 C.2d 217, 220, 93 P.2d 109; Quinn v. Rosenfeld (1940) 15 C.2d 486, 490, 102 P.2d 317; Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 C.2d 490, 495, 110 P.2d 384; Shipway v. Monise (1943) 59 C.A.2d 565, 571, 139 P.2d 60.) The situation is explained in Mitrovitch v. Graves (1938) 25 C.A.2d 649, 653, 78 P.2d 227, as follows: The pedestrian crossing outside the lane must yield the right of way, i.e., must stop and permit an automobile to pass; but this does not give vehicles a monopoly of streets or highways, or make the pedestrian venture out at his or her peril. Accordingly, where traffic was light, the street was wide and clear, and plaintiff stopped, but defendant unexpectedly changed course and struck him, recovery was possible. (25 C.A.2d 653.)

Where there is a prohibitory jaywalking ordinance, Meinke v. Oakland Garage (1938) 11 C.2d 255, 256, 79 P.2d 91, held that its violation, when causally connected with the injury, was a bar to recovery. In Pipoly v. Benson (1942) 20 C.2d 366, 369, 125 P.2d 482, this holding was substantially nullified, for the court reached the conclusion that a prohibitory ordinance was unconstitutional, because the Legislature, by Veh.C. 21954(a), had occupied the field. But subsequently, in 1943, Veh.C. 21961 was adopted to restore the Meinke rule. It states that the Vehicle Code "does not prevent local authorities from adopting ordinances prohibiting pedestrians from crossing roadways at other than crosswalks." (See 32 Cal. L. Rev. 341, 390.) However, Veh.C. 21961 merely authorizes local regulations that prohibit crossing except at crosswalks. In other respects, the Vehicle Code is supreme, and a local ordinance on the same subject is void under the Pipoly rule. (Holman v. Viko (1958) 161 C.A.2d 87, 93, 326 P.2d 551.)

f. Stop, Look, and Listen Rule Abrogated.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1322

[§ 1322] Stop, Look, and Listen Rule Abrogated.

Following the holding of the United States Supreme Court in Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Goodman (1927) 275 U.S. 66, 48 S.Ct. 24, 72 L.Ed. 167, a number of decisions established the following rule: A motorist approaching a railroad crossing where the view is obstructed must stop, look, and listen for trains, and, if necessary to obtain a sufficient view, must get out of the car. Failure to take these precautions is, under the rule, contributory negligence as a matter of law. (See Koster v. Southern Pac. Co. (1929) 207 C. 753, 761, 279 P. 788; Young v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1929) 208 C. 568, 576, 283 P. 61; Stephenson v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co. (1930) 208 C. 749, 752, 284 P. 913; 16 Cal. L. Rev. 238; 18 Cal. L. Rev. 203; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 395; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 40.)

A few years after Goodman, the United States Supreme Court virtually overruled it by holding that there is no absolute duty to get out and reconnoiter, and that the question of contributory negligence in these situations is for the jury. (Pokora v. Wabash Ry. Co. (1934) 292 U.S. 98, 54 S.Ct. 580, 78 L.Ed. 1149; see 23 Cal. L. Rev. 112.)

California decisions first relaxed the rule in situations where the driver relied on a flagman or signal that failed to work. In these cases, the issue of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury. (See Sheets v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 212 C. 509, 513, 299 P.71; Sheets v. Southern Pac. Co. (1934) 1 C.2d 408, 35 P.2d 121; Crawford v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 3 C.2d 427, 434, 45 P.2d 183; Toschi v. Christian (1944) 24 C.2d 354, 359, 149 P.2d 848; Startup v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1947) 29 C.2d 866, 870, 180 P.2d 896; Spendlove v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1947) 30 C.2d 632, 634, 184 P.2d 873; Vaca v. Southern Pac. Co. (1928) 91 C.A. 470, 475, 267 P. 346; Robbins v. Southern Pac. Co. (1929) 102 C.A. 744, 755, 283 P. 850; Ogburn v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1930) 110 C.A. 587, 591, 294 P. 491; Lindsey v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1931) 111 C.A. 482, 488, 296 P. 131; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 337; 16 So. Cal. L. Rev. 40, 45; 74 A.L.R. 2d 242 [motorist's liability for collision at intersection as affected by absence, displacement, or malfunctioning of traffic signal].)

In Green v. Key System Transit Lines (1953) 116 C.A.2d 512, 253 P.2d 780, plaintiff, driving a milk truck standing up, approached a blind intersection, slowed to 4 to 6 miles per hour, looked to the right and left, but did not stop, and was struck by a train. Held, judgment for plaintiff on verdict affirmed. The court referred to the "considerable change" in the law since the "unrealistic" doctrine was evolved and said: "A fair summation of the present rule with reference to the duty of a vehicle driver approaching a railroad crossing is that he is not necessarily required to stop. He is required to look. However, he does not necessarily have to look from the best possible available spot as long as the spot selected gives him a reasonably assuring view of the track." (116 C.A.2d 519.) "Nor does the fact that his view down the track in the direction from which the train eventually appears, is somewhat obstructed, make him necessarily guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Whether his failure to stop, the place from which he looks, and the character and extent of the obstruction, if any, are such that a reasonably prudent person would not have conducted himself as the driver did, are questions for the jury in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of fact." (116 C.A.2d 519.)

In Anello v. Southern Pac. Co. (1959) 174 C.A.2d 317, 344 P.2d 843, plaintiff drove across the tracks and was struck by a freight train. The atmosphere was dry and clear, the area level, the tracks and highway straight, and no buildings or other structures were located within 900 feet of the crossing. Held, it was reversible error to give the strict stop, look, and listen instruction. (174 C.A.2d 322.) (See Pennington v. Southern Pac. Co. (1956) 146 C.A.2d 605, 615, 304 P.2d 22; Martindale v. Mountain View (1962) 208 C.A.2d 109, 122, 25 C.R. 148; 65 A.L.R.2d 703 [duty of person with physical handicap, such as impaired vision or hearing, approaching railroad crossing]; BAJI, Nos. 6.40, 6.41, 6.42, 6.43; CACI, No. 806.)

Sometimes the court, in rejecting the strict rule, finds evidence supporting the signal exception. Thus, in Lucas v. Southern Pac. Co. (1971) 19 C.A.3d 124, 96 C.R. 356, decedent drove his truck onto the tracks of defendant railroad and was killed by the train. Defendant argued that decedent had an unobstructed view for 32 feet before reaching the track, that he was only going 5 miles per hour, and that therefore he had time to see the train and stop. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. The stop, look, and listen rule in its strict form of a positive rule of law is no longer recognized (19 C.A.3d 138); and here the record contained evidence to support the inference that decedent relied on a wigwag and whistle to warn him of approaching trains, and that neither signal was given (19 C.A.3d 139).

3. Contributory Negligence Per Se.
g. Exposure to Electrical Shock.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1323

[§ 1323] Exposure to Electrical Shock.

The danger of electrical shock is generally known. Hence, a person who, with this actual or presumed knowledge, disregards the risk and takes a position where he or she might come in contact with uninsulated wires carrying current or exposed terminals is often held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. (See Andrews v. Valley Ice Co. (1914) 167 C. 11, 20, 138 P. 699; Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 170, 180, 101 C.R. 908, 496 P.2d 1276, citing Andrews and Rest.2d, Torts §290, Illus. 1; 6 Hastings L. J. 396.)

However, in Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., supra, a split court held that the question was one of fact. C and three roommates rented an apartment. A bright street lamp maintained by defendant utility adjacent to their bedroom window disturbed their sleep. Acting upon their complaints, the city's street and lighting department directed defendant to examine the lamp, and an unsuccessful attempt was made by defendant to reduce the glare by a plastic canopy and black paint. Subsequently an automobile crashed into the pole, bending it toward the building. Defendant repaired the bulb and canopy, but left the bent pole 10 inches from the fire escape and 55 inches from the window, easily accessible to the tenants. C and his roommates thereafter, on several occasions, extinguished the light by removing the canopy and unscrewing the bulb. There was nothing in the appearance of the lamp to indicate any danger of high voltage, and defendant's employee, who screwed the bulb back, was unable to locate anyone to warn. One day C, attempting to remove the bulb, touched an uninsulated wire lead and was electrocuted. In plaintiffs' action for wrongful death, a nonsuit was granted in favor of defendant Co. Held, reversed. A duty of care, owed to the trespasser, was breached by failure to warn. (7 C.3d 178; see supra, §1096.) And contributory negligence was not established:

(a) No contributory negligence per se. A city ordinance made it unlawful for an unauthorized person to extinguish a public light. However, applying the elements of Ev.C. 669 (supra, §§873, 874), the purpose of the ordinance was to protect public property and assure adequate lighting, not to prevent injury or death from electrocution, and it was designed to protect the street-using public; hence, C was not within the class of persons for whose protection it was adopted. (7 C.3d 183, and footnote 10, citing the text.)

(b) No contributory negligence as matter of law. Although touching a high voltage power line has been held contributory negligence as a matter of law, there was no evidence that C knew or suspected that the street lamp carried high voltage current, and it was not shown that this was a matter of common knowledge. On retrial, defendant could attempt to prove such common knowledge, but in the absence of this proof the question was for the jury. (7 C.3d 181.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

4. Imputed Contributory Negligence.

a. Nature and Scope of Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1324

[§ 1324] Nature and Scope of Rule.

(1) In General. The principles governing imputed negligence determine imputed contributory negligence. A person's contributory negligence will be imputed to the plaintiff so as to bar his or her recovery only where the plaintiff would have been liable for that person's negligence. The important situations are agency, joint enterprise, and partnership (partners being liable as mutual agents). (See generally Bryant v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1917) 174 C. 737, 742, 164 P. 385; Pope v. Halpern (1924) 193 C. 168, 174, 223 P. 470; Peccolo v. Los Angeles (1937) 8 C.2d 532, 537, 66 P.2d 651; Williamson v. Fitzgerald (1931) 116 C.A. 19, 24, 2 P.2d 201; Wessling v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 116 C.A. 455, 457, 3 P.2d 25; Collins v. Graves (1936) 17 C.A.2d 288, 294, 61 P.2d 1198; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §1121 et seq.; 53 A.L.R.3d 604 [agency]; BAJI, No. 13.41.)

The negligence of another person is generally imputed to a plaintiff "whenever the negligence would have been imputed had the plaintiff been a defendant." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §5.) This provision adopts the so-called both ways rule, i.e., when a party would be responsible as a defendant for the negligence of a third person, the negligence of the third person is imputed to the party as a plaintiff. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §5, Comment b.) When negligence is imputed, the party who committed the tortious act or omission and the party to whom liability is imputed are treated as a single unit for the assignment of responsibility under the comparative negligence doctrine. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, Comment §7, Comment j.)

(2) Distinction: Action Between Joint Adventurers. The contributory negligence of one joint adventurer will bar the right of the other against a negligent third party, but where one nonnegligent joint adventurer sues for injuries resulting from the other joint adventurer's negligence, he or she can recover. To impute negligence to the plaintiff in this situation would permit the guilty defendant to gain protection from his or her own wrong. (Ledgerwood v. Ledgerwood (1931) 114 C.A. 538, 542, 300 P. 144; Williamson v. Fitzgerald (1931) 116 C.A. 19, 24, 2 P.2d 201; see Roberts v. Craig (1954) 124 C.A.2d 202, 209, 268 P.2d 500 [restating rule as alternative ground of recovery, assuming that parties were engaged in a joint enterprise]; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 458.)

(3) Distinction: Guest in Vehicle. A guest in a vehicle, including a person jointly engaged with the driver in a pleasure excursion, without a common purpose or right of control over the operation of the vehicle, is not affected by the contributory negligence of the driver. (Pope v. Halpern (1924) 193 C. 168, 173, 223 P. 470; Hoover v. Striegel (1950) 99 C.A.2d 833, 839, 222 P.2d 963.) (On guest's failure to protest, see supra, §1314.)

(4) Driving With Permission. The owner of a motor vehicle is liable for the negligence of a driver with permission (see supra, §1260), and contributory negligence of the driver was likewise imputed to the owner under the former provision of Veh.C. 17150 that negligence "shall be imputed to the owner for all purposes of civil damages." (See Milgate v. Wraith (1942) 19 C.2d 297, 299, 121 P.2d 10.) This provision was deleted in 1967, and in Hertz Corp. v. Pippin (1974) 38 C.A.3d 796, 113 C.R. 698, the court concluded that the legislative intent was to reinstate the original common law rule allowing an innocent bailor to recover from a tortfeasor for damages to a vehicle despite the contributory negligence of its bailee. (38 C.A.3d 799.)

The negligence of another person is not imputed to a plaintiff "solely because of the plaintiff's ownership of a motor vehicle or permission for its use by the other person." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §5.) However, this provision "does not preclude proving that the owner of the motor vehicle was independently negligent, such as by negligently entrusting the vehicle to the operator." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §5, Comment c.)

b. What Constitutes Joint Enterprise.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1325

[§ 1325] What Constitutes Joint Enterprise.

Although some recreational or social purposes may be the subject of a joint enterprise (see supra, §1235), usually there must be a business purpose. Thus, a minister, riding with another minister to mail tracts prepared for a Sunday School teachers' convention, was held not engaged in a joint enterprise with the other. (Wessling v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 116 C.A. 455, 457, 3 P.2d 25.) And plaintiff, riding home with her fiance' after a trip made to file a notice of intention to marry, was held not barred by his contributory negligence. (Morrissey v. Kirkelie (1935) 5 C.A.2d 183, 184, 42 P.2d 361.) (See Campagna v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1944) 24 C.2d 304, 309, 527, 149 P.2d 281 [plaintiff, adult son assisting father in vegetable delivery business in exchange for living expenses and pocket money, was employee, not engaged in joint enterprise]; Clark v. Janss (1940) 39 C.A.2d 523, 527, 103 P.2d 175; 12 Cal. L. Rev. 238; 14 Cal. L. Rev. 421; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §1136 et seq.)

In Roberts v. Craig (1954) 124 C.A.2d 202, 268 P.2d 500, defendant C had an "instruction permit" under Veh.C. 12509, allowing her to drive when "accompanied by, and under the immediate supervision of," a licensed operator. C had to go on a business trip, and R, a licensed driver, agreed to go as an accommodation. R was injured through the negligent driving of C. Held, judgment for plaintiff R affirmed. Defendant's theory was that under the statute, the licensed operator shared control of the vehicle, thus fulfilling the primary test of joint enterprise (supra, §1235). But the court held that the operator supervises the driver, not the vehicle, and that neither the statute nor common law established a joint enterprise under these circumstances. (124 C.A.2d 208.)

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

C. Contributory Negligence.

4. Imputed Contributory Negligence.

c. Rule Is Inapplicable to Domestic Relationships.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1326

[§ 1326] Rule Is Inapplicable to Domestic Relationships.

The relationships of parent and child or husband and wife in themselves furnish no basis for imputation of contributory negligence. (See Harpst v. Kirkpatrick (1972) 26 C.A.3d 482, 486, 102 C.R. 621; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §1143 et seq.; BAJI, Nos. 3.60, 3.61, 3.62, 3.63.)

(1) Husband and Wife. In Workman v. San Diego (1968) 267 C.A.2d 36, 72 C.R. 509, plaintiff, an elderly wife getting around only in a wheelchair, visited defendant's Sea World. While her husband was propelling the wheelchair, it dropped at an abrupt curb, injuring her. Held, it was error to instruct that the husband was her agent and that contributory negligence on his part was imputable to her. The husband was neither an agent nor an employee, and the parties were not engaged in a joint enterprise. The relationship was simply that of husband and wife, with the husband performing a duty of care arising from that relationship. (267 C.A.2d 40.) The former community property rule denying recovery for a wife's injuries where the husband was guilty of contributory negligence has been changed by statute. (See supra, §725; 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §186.)

(2) Parent and Child. There is no imputation of negligence even though the parent fails to control and protect the child, as where the parent permits the child to roam about the streets. The child, suing in his or her own right, may recover in these situations. (Zarzana v. Neve Drug Co. (1919) 180 C. 32, 35, 179 P. 203; see Bowen v. Kizirian (1930) 105 C.A. 286, 290, 287 P. 570.)

If, however, the parent sues for damages for loss of services of the child, the parent's negligence in permitting the child to play in dangerous places on the street will affect the parent's recovery. (Seperman v. Lyon Fire Proof Storage Co. (1929) 97 C.A. 654, 658, 275 P. 980.) And the parents' negligent supervision may become relevant in determining whether the defendant is in fact negligent, and whether causation is established. (Akins v. Sonoma (1967) 67 C.2d 185, 198, 60 C.R. 499, 430 P.2d 57; see Cardenas v. Turlock Irr. Dist. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 352, 360, 73 C.R. 69, supra, §274 [following Seperman; parents left young children unattended, they went swimming in irrigation canal and drowned]; Smith v. Americana Motor Lodge (1974) 39 C.A.3d 1, 8, 113 C.R. 771; 62 A.L.R.3d 541 [permitting child to walk to school unattended].)

(3) Person Gratuitously Caring for Child. The negligence of a third person gratuitously rendering the familial service of care at a parent's request will not be imputed to the parent who brings an action for injury or death of the child. (Casas v. Maulhardt Buick (1968) 258 C.A.2d 692, 703, 66 C.R. 44; Harpst v. Kirkpatrick, supra [distinguishing cases on hired nurse or babysitter, where employment relation is created].)
