SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

108 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
1. Nature and Purpose of Doctrine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1327

[§ 1327] Nature and Purpose of Doctrine.

(1) Criticisms of Contributory Negligence Defense. The objections to the traditional "all or nothing" doctrine of contributory negligence (see supra, §1295) are summed up in Prosser & Keeton as follows: "It places upon one party the entire burden of a loss for which two are, by hypothesis, responsible. The negligence of the defendant has played no less a part in causing the damage; the plaintiff's deviation from the community standard of conduct may even be relatively slight, and the defendant's quite extreme. The injured person is in all probability, for the very reason of his injury, the less able of the two to bear the financial burden of his loss, and the answer of the law to all this is that the defendant goes scot free of all liability, and the plaintiff bears it all. Nor is it any answer to say that the contributory negligence rule promotes caution by making the plaintiff responsible for his own safety. It is quite as reasonable to say that it encourages negligence, by giving the defendant reason to hope that he will escape the consequences. Actually any such idea of deterrence is quite unrealistic. In the usual case, the negligence on both sides will consist of mere inadvertence or inattention, or an error in judgment, and it is quite unlikely that forethought of any legal liability will in fact be in the mind of either party. No one supposes that an automobile driver, as he approaches an intersection, is in fact meditating upon the golden mean of the reasonable person or ordinary prudence, and the possibility of tort damages, whether for himself or for another." (See Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 812, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329; 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1594.)

(2) Comparative Negligence Doctrine. Some states responded to these criticisms legislatively by enacting comparative negligence statutes. Other states, including California, adopted the doctrine by judicial decision. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.15; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §201 et seq.; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §1128 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §15.2 et seq.; 21 Am.Jur. Trials 715 [comparative negligence defense]; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 1; 78 A.L.R.3d 339 [modern development of comparative negligence doctrine having applicability to negligence actions generally]; infra, §§1329, 1330.)

The three basic types of comparative negligence systems have been described in Prosser and Keeton as pure, modified, and slight-gross. Under the pure form (adopted in California; see infra, §1329), the plaintiff's contributory negligence reduces damages in proportion to his or her fault. The system in this form is said to be designed to compensate an injured party for all of the harm attributable to the wrongdoing of the defendant; when multiple defendants are involved, all are liable to the plaintiff for their respective shares of the loss, even though some may have been less negligent than the plaintiff.

(3) Uniform Act. The Uniform Comparative Fault Act, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123, was approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1977, and has been adopted in two states. It approves the pure form and seeks to solve the major problems involved in application of the doctrine. (See Prefatory Note, and 14 Pacific L. J. 835.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.459(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Comparative Negligence Doctrine. See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §22.15.

(3) Uniform Act. See Uniform Comparative Fault Act, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 121.

109 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
2. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1328

[§ 1328] Restatement 3d.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability adopts comparative responsibility. A plaintiff's negligence "that is a legal cause of an indivisible injury to the plaintiff reduces the plaintiff's recovery in proportion to the share of responsibility the factfinder assigns to the plaintiff." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7.) This replaces the rule of contributory negligence as an absolute bar to plaintiff's recovery provided in Rest.2d, Torts §467. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment a.)

The comparative responsibility doctrine also governs the negligence of another for whose negligence the plaintiff is responsible. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7.)

An injury is indivisible if "the plaintiff and each relevant person caused the entire injury." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment e.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.459(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

110 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
3. Adoption of Doctrine in California.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1329

[§ 1329] Adoption of Doctrine in California.

In Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, the court abrogated the complete defense of contributory negligence and substituted a judicially created system of comparative negligence. Plaintiff, driving north, made a left turn 70 feet before an intersection in order to enter the driveway of a service station. Defendant P, driving a cab south on the same street, came over the crest of a hill, passed through the intersection, and struck the rear of plaintiff's car, causing personal injury and property damage. The trial judge, sitting without a jury, found that (a) defendant P was traveling too fast at the time and place (30 miles an hour), and entered the intersection while the traffic light was yellow; (b) plaintiff's left turn across the southbound lanes was made when a vehicle was approaching from the opposite direction so close as to constitute an immediate hazard. He therefore concluded that plaintiff was barred by contributory negligence and entered judgment for defendants. Held, reversed.

(a) Traditional doctrine of "all or nothing" contributory negligence. The doctrine that any negligence of the plaintiff that is a legally contributing cause bars recovery is rooted in the principle that one should not recover for damages brought on oneself. It has been the law of California since the state began, is embodied in the Second Torts Restatement (§§463, 467), and has weathered attempts in California to change it by legislation or judicial decision. (13 C.3d 809, 810.) It has, however, been criticized by law writers as harsh and inequitable because it fails to distribute responsibility in proportion to fault. (13 C.3d 810, 811.) Also, practical experience shows that juries often, in a haphazard and unsatisfactory manner, do by compromise allow recovery in cases of contributory negligence. (13 C.3d 811.) Thus, logic, practical experience, and fundamental justice counsel against retention of the doctrine. (13 C.3d 812.)

(b) Abrogation of doctrine in other states. In 25 states, legislation has provided for assessment of liability in proportion to fault (negligence). (13 C.3d 812, footnote 6.) In Federal Employees' Liability Act cases since 1908 and Jones Act cases since 1920, the same change has taken place. (See 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §123.) And in 1973, Florida judicially abrogated the contributory negligence defense. (13 C.3d 812.)

(c) Major argument against abrogation. The chief obstacle to a judicial institution of a system of comparative negligence was the codification of the contributory negligence principle in C.C. 1714, a part of the original 1872 code and never amended. But defendants' contention that any change in the rule must come from the Legislature is unsound:

(1) The Civil Code was thought to have the advantages of codification of unwritten law as well as of systematic revision of statute law. But its brevity led to uncertainty whether it should be regarded as the exclusive or primary source of the law of private rights; and eventually the contrary position was taken by our Supreme Court. "The Civil Code was not designed to embody the whole law of private and civil relations, rights and duties; it is incomplete and partial; and except in those instances where its language clearly and unequivocally discloses an intention to depart from, alter, or abrogate the common-law rule concerning a particular subject matter, a section of the code purporting to embody such doctrine or rule will be construed in light of common-law decisions on the same subject." (13 C.3d 815.)

(2) The doctrine of contributory negligence is of common law origin. The Code Commissioners, in drafting C.C. 1714 (see supra, §833), intended simply to insure that the contributory negligence rule adopted would not be the harsh New York version but the rule as mitigated by the emerging doctrine of last clear chance. (13 C.3d 820.) The Legislature did not intend to restrict the courts from further development of these concepts according to evolving standards of duty, causation, and liability. Thus, although the statute expressly speaks of causation in terms of actual cause or cause in fact, this has not prevented judicial development of the twin concepts of proximate causation and duty of care, and has not hindered development of special rules permitting a finding of liability in the absence of direct evidence of causation. "By the same token we do not believe that the general language of section 1714 dealing with defensive considerations should be construed so as to stifle the orderly evolution of such considerations in light of emerging techniques and concepts. On the contrary we conclude that the rule of liberal construction ... together with the code's peculiar character as a continuation of the common law ... permit if not require that section 1714 be interpreted so as to give dynamic expression to the fundamental precepts which it summarizes." (13 C.3d 822.)

(d) Practical difficulties in judicial adoption of comparative negligence doctrine. An additional argument against abrogation stresses four main difficulties in implementing a judicial abrogation of contributory negligence:

(1) Multiple parties. When not all the responsible parties are before the court, it may be difficult for the jury to evaluate relative negligence, and the evaluation would not be res judicata in a subsequent suit against the absent wrongdoer; also problems of contribution and indemnity among joint tortfeasors can arise. (13 C.3d 823.) However, these problems are not involved in the instant case and they will not be considered at this time. (13 C.3d 826.)

(2) Process of factfinding. Assigning a specific percentage factor to the degree of negligence attributable to a particular party can be difficult; and this may involve personal attitudes and prejudices of jurors, and induce resort to a quotient verdict. (13 C.3d 824.) "These inherent difficulties are not, however, insurmountable. Guidelines might be provided the jury which will assist it in keeping focused upon the true inquiry ... and the utilization of special verdicts or jury interrogatories can be of invaluable assistance in assuring that the jury has approached its sensitive and often complex task with proper standards and appropriate reverence." (13 C.3d 824.)

(3) Last clear chance and assumption of risk. The status of these doctrines calls for a definition of the specific form of comparative negligence doctrine to be adopted. The better reasoned position is that when a true comparative negligence doctrine is adopted, the need for last clear chance as a palliative disappears and its retention results only in a windfall to the plaintiff. In the overlap area where assumption of risk is merely a variant of contributory negligence, it should be merged into the general scheme of assessment of liability in proportion to fault. (13 C.3d 824, 825.)

(4) Wilful misconduct. This is at present regarded as different in kind and not subject to the defense of contributory negligence; but in reality, it is a rule of comparative fault, and a comprehensive system of comparative negligence should allow apportionment of damages in cases of wilful misconduct falling short of intentional acts. (13 C.3d 825, 826.)

As to all of these practical objections, the comments set forth above should be sufficient guidance to enable trial courts to meet and resolve particular problems as they arise: "Our decision in this case is to be viewed as a first step in what we deem to be a proper and just direction, not as a compendium containing the answers to all questions that may be expected to arise." (13 C.3d 826.)

(e) Precise form of comparative negligence now adopted. The "50%" system is rejected. This calls for apportionment only up to the point where the plaintiff's negligence is equal to or greater than that of the defendant; after that, the plaintiff is barred from any recovery on the theory that one more at fault should not recover from one less at fault. But this view is strongly criticized by scholars as distorting the very principle of apportionment according to the extent of negligence, and leading to many appeals on the crucial issue whether the plaintiff was 49% or 50% responsible. (13 C.3d 827, 828.) The "pure" form, favored by most scholars and commentators, apportions liability in all cases; and this is adopted here. (13 C.3d 828, 829.)

(f) Conclusion. "For all of the foregoing reasons we conclude that the 'all-or-nothing' rule of contributory negligence as it presently exists in this state should be and is herewith superseded by a system of 'pure' comparative negligence, the fundamental purpose of which shall be to assign responsibility and liability for damage in direct proportion to the fault of the persons whose negligence has brought such damage about. Therefore, in all actions for negligence resulting in injury to person or property, the contributory negligence of the person injured in person or property shall not bar recovery, but the damages awarded shall be diminished in proportion to the amount of fault attributable to that person. The doctrine of last clear chance is abolished, and the defense of assumption of risk is also abolished to the extent that it is merely a variant of the former doctrine of contributory negligence; both of these are to be subsumed under the general process of assessing liability in proportion to fault. Pending future judicial or legislative developments, the trial courts of this state are to use broad discretion in seeking to assure that the principle stated is applied in the interest of justice and in furtherance of the purposes and objectives set forth in this opinion." (13 C.3d 828, 829.)

Two justices joined in a dissent from the substantive holding, contending that abrogation of contributory negligence was a function of the Legislature and accusing the majority of "judicial chauvinism." (13 C.3d 834.)

The Li opinion and its problems has been the subject of much critical comment. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.15 et seq.; 65 Cal. L. Rev. 4, 239; 7 Pacific L. J. 747, 770; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 73, 1029; 8 Southwestern U L. Rev. 1; 11 U.S.F. L. Rev. 405, 541; 8 West L.A. L. Rev. 23.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.459(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Critical comment: See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §22.15 et seq.

111 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
4. Limited Retroactivity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1330

[§ 1330] Limited Retroactivity.

Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, laid down the following rules to govern application of the new doctrine of comparative negligence to pending cases:

(a) Present plaintiff: Retroactive and applicable. Sometimes considerations of fairness and public policy require a purely prospective operation of a holding, as in Westbrook v. Mihaly (1970) 2 C.3d 765, 87 C.R. 839, 471 P.2d 487, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §308. On the other hand, to apply a new rule to the litigants who seek it provides an incentive in future cases for parties to raise issues involving renovation of unsound or outmoded legal doctrines. Hence, although the present litigant may be a chance beneficiary of a rule otherwise made prospective, sound principles call for applying the new rule to this case. (13 C.3d 829, 830.) (See concurring opinion, 13 C.3d 831, 832, approving this result, but asserting that the majority has impliedly overruled Westbrook and similar cases in which retroactive application was denied to litigants who helped develop new rules of law.)

(b) Cases in which trial not begun before Li decision final: Retroactive and applicable. (13 C.3d 829.)

(c) Cases in which the trial was begun before that date: Prospective and not applicable. However, if the judgment is reversed on appeal for other reasons, the new rule applies on the retrial. (13 C.3d 829.) (See 78 A.L.R.3d 421 [judicial adoption of comparative negligence as applicable retrospectively]; on application of the doctrine on retrial, see Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C.3d 530, 551, 138 C.R. 705, 564 P.2d 857.)

The Li rule was held inapplicable to a case in which the defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend on the contributory negligence defense and a dismissal was entered prior to the effective date of Li; i.e., the hearing on demurrer was a "trial." (See Venzor v. Santa Barbara Elks Lodge (1976) 56 C.A.3d 209, 214, 128 C.R. 353; Kindt v. Kauffman (1976) 57 C.A.3d 845, 862, 129 C.R. 603; Rose v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (1976) 58 C.A.3d 276, 279, 129 C.R. 736; 37 A.L.R.3d 1438 [retrospective application of state statute substituting rule of comparative negligence for that of contributory negligence].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

112 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
5. Joint and Several Liability Retained.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1331

[§ 1331] Joint and Several Liability Retained.

In American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, an action by a participant in a cross-country race against the American Motorcycle Association (AMA) and the Viking Motorcycle Club, defendant AMA contended that Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329), undermined the theory of joint and several liability of concurrent tortfeasors, and established a new rule of proportionate liability under which each concurrent tortfeasor would be liable only for a portion of plaintiff's recovery, determined on a comparative fault basis. Held, this contention is unacceptable.

(a) In some cases, it is impossible to determine whether a particular concurrent tortfeasor's negligence would alone have caused an indivisible injury, and a defendant would have no equitable claim to be relieved from liability to the injured plaintiff, because some other tortfeasor's negligence may also have caused the same harm. "In other words, the mere fact that it may be possible to assign some percentage figure to the relative culpability of one negligent defendant as compared to another does not in any way suggest that each defendant's negligence is not a proximate cause of the entire indivisible injury." (20 C.3d 589.)

(b) Abandonment of the joint and several liability rule is not warranted by the claim that a plaintiff is no longer innocent. (1) In many instances, a plaintiff will be entirely free from negligence; yet, under AMA's theory, he or she would be forced to bear a portion of the loss if any one of the concurrent tortfeasors should be financially unable to satisfy his or her share of the damages. (20 C.3d 589.) (2) Even if the plaintiff is partially at fault, his or her culpability is not equivalent to that of a defendant; i.e., the plaintiff's negligence is only a failure to use due care for his or her own safety, which is not tortious, while a defendant's negligence is a lack of due care for the safety of others, which is a tort. (20 C.3d 589, 590.)

(c) The BAJI Committee concluded that Li did not intend that the plaintiff's conduct be compared with each individual tortfeasor's negligence, but rather that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff should be proportioned to the combined negligence of the plaintiff and of all the tortfeasors whether joined or not (BAJI, No. 14.90). This is sound. "In determining to what degree the injury was due to the fault of the plaintiff, it is logically essential that the plaintiff's negligence be weighed against the combined total of all other causative negligence; moreover, inasmuch as a plaintiff's actual damages do not vary by virtue of the particular defendants who happen to be before the court, we do not think that the damages which a plaintiff may recover against defendants who are jointly and severally liable should fluctuate in such a manner." (20 C.3d 590, footnote 2.)

(d) Abandonment of the joint and several liability rule would have an adverse effect on the ability of the injured person to obtain full recovery despite the financial inability of one or more of the defendants to cover their liability. Fairness dictates that the wrongdoers should be left to work out any apportionment among themselves. (20 C.3d 590.)

(e) The overwhelming majority of jurisdictions that have adopted comparative negligence have retained the joint and several liability doctrine. (20 C.3d 591, citing the Uniform Comparative Fault Act §2(c) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123).) Hence, "we hold that after Li, a concurrent tortfeasor whose negligence is a proximate cause of an indivisible injury remains liable for the total amount of damages, diminished only 'in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering.' " (20 C.3d 591.) (On contribution and indemnity generally, see supra, §§103 et seq., 112 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §2(c), 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 135.

113 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
6. Assigning Shares of Responsibility.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1332

[§ 1332] Assigning Shares of Responsibility.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability, factors for assigning percentages of responsibility to each person whose legal responsibility has been established include the following:

(1) The "nature of the person's risk-creating conduct," including any awareness or indifference with respect to the risks created by the conduct and any intent with respect to the harm created by the conduct. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §8(a).) The nature of the person's risk-creating conduct includes such things as how unreasonable the conduct was under the circumstances, the extent to which the conduct failed to meet the applicable legal standard, the circumstances surrounding the conduct, the person's abilities and disabilities, and the person's awareness, intent, or indifference with respect to the risks. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §8, Comment c.)

(2) The "strength of the causal connection between the person's risk-creating conduct and the harm." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §8(b).) The comparative strength of the causal connection between the conduct and the harm depends on how attenuated the causal connection is, the timing of the person's conduct in causing the harm, and a comparison of the risks created by the conduct and the actual harm suffered by the plaintiff. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §8, Comment c.)

Under the Restatement, evidence may be relevant and admissible for the purpose of assigning percentages of responsibility, even if it is not relevant to the existence of a necessary element of the underlying claim or defense. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §8, Comment c.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

114 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
7. Defendant's Negligence or Other Fault.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1333

[§ 1333] Defendant's Negligence or Other Fault.

(1) Negligence and Causation. The plaintiff cannot recover without first establishing a prima facie case by proving that the defendant was negligent, and that his or her negligence was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries; until then, there is nothing against which the plaintiff's negligence can be compared. Hence, a nonsuit is justified where either element of proof is lacking. (Elder v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 650, 657, 136 C.R. 203; see Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123), and Comment.)

(2) Defendant's Wilful Misconduct. In Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 826, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, the court observed that a comprehensive system of comparative negligence should allow apportionment of damages in cases of wilful misconduct. And cases decided after extension of the comparative negligence doctrine to strict liability cases (see infra, §§1360, 1542) applied the doctrine to situations in which the defendant was guilty of this type of misconduct. (See Sorensen v. Allred (1980) 112 C.A.3d 717, 725, 169 C.R. 441; Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. California (1981) 115 C.A.3d 116, 121, 171 C.R. 187 [following Sorensen]; Zavala v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1981) 125 C.A.3d 646, 650, 178 C.R. 185 [same]; Allen v. Sundean (1982) 137 C.A.3d 216, 225, 186 C.R. 863 [same]; 10 A.L.R.4th 946 [Sorensen]; Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b), and Comment (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123).)

(3) Distinction: Intentional Tort. The comparative fault system does not apply to intentional torts. (See Allen v. Sundean, supra, 137 C.A.3d 226.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.502(2), 459(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Negligence and Causation. See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b) and Comment, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 125.

(2) Defendant's Wilful Misconduct. See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b) and Comment, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 125.

115 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
8. Plaintiff's Contributory Fault Generally.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1334

[§ 1334] Plaintiff's Contributory Fault Generally.

The Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123) defines "fault" as applied to conduct of either party, and the Comment explains its broad meaning as applied to the plaintiff or other claimant: " 'Contributory fault chargeable to the claimant' includes legally imputed fault as in the cases of principal and agent and of an action for loss of services of a spouse. It also covers a situation in which fault is not imputed but would still have barred recovery prior to passage of the Act--as, for example, a wrongful-death action in which the decedent's contributory negligence would have barred recovery even though it was not imputed to the person bringing the action." (See Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 1011, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 [action for damages for fear of cancer engendered by exposure to toxic substances; plaintiffs' smoking did not reduce recovery, because defendant failed to establish causal link between their smoking and fear of increased risk of cancer]; 22 Western State L. Rev. 191 [Potter]; 25 A.L.R.5th 343 [smoking as basis for reduction of damages].)

The Act (§1(a)) provides that contributory fault diminishes recovery "whether or not under prior law the claimant's contributory fault constituted a defense or was disregarded under applicable legal doctrines, such as last clear chance." (On abrogation of last clear chance doctrine, see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 824, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329; on plaintiff's assumption of risk as form of contributory negligence, see infra, §1336 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.459(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b), 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 125.

116 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
D. Comparative Negligence: In General.
9. Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1335

[§ 1335] Instructions.

(1) The following BAJI instructions are relevant to contributory and comparative negligence:

(a) Contributory Negligence and Assumption of Risk.

No. 3.00 [negligence; essential elements].

No. 3.50 [contributory negligence; definition].

No. 3.52 [recovery for intentional harm not diminished by contributory negligence].

No. 3.53 [contributory negligence of decedent].

No. 3.60 [contributory negligence; suit only for injury to minor 5 years or older].

No. 3.61 [contributory negligence; suit only for injury to minor under 5 years of age].

No. 3.62 [contributory negligence; suit for injury to minor 5 years or older and parents' special damages].

No. 3.63 [contributory negligence; suit for injury to minor under 5 years of age and for parents' special damages].

No. 3.72 [duty of passenger for own safety].

No. 4.30 [express assumption of risk].

(b) Damages.

No. 14.90 [reduction of recovery because of contributory negligence; general verdict].

No. 14.91 [guidelines in determining comparative negligence].

No. 16.00 [form of special verdict; negligence].

(c) Implied Indemnity.

No. 12.69 [implied indemnity; comparative fault among defendants].

No. 16.72 [form of special verdict; comparative implied indemnity; multiple defendants; negligence by plaintiff's employer] (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §92).

No. 16.73 [form of special verdict; comparative implied indemnity; multiple defendants; contributory negligence an issue].

(d) Products Liability.

No. 9.03 [products liability; negligence; comparative fault].

No. 9.04 [reduction of damages because of comparative fault; general verdict only].

No. 16.10 [form of special verdict; products liability; comparative fault].

No. 16.11 [form of special verdict; negligence and products liability; comparative fault].

No. 16.12 [form of special verdict; products liability; comparative fault and comparative implied indemnity between defendants].

(2) The following CACI instructions are relevant:

(a) Contributory Negligence and Assumption of Risk.

No. 400 [essential factual elements].

No. 405 [plaintiff's contributory negligence].

No. 406 [apportionment of responsibility].

No. 407 [decedent's contributory negligence].

No. 451 [express assumption of risk].

No. 711 [passenger's duty of care for own safety].

(b) Damages.

No. 3960 [contributory negligence; general verdict].

No. VF-401 [verdict form; negligence; single defendant; plaintiff's negligence at issue; fault of others not at issue].

No. VF-402 [verdict form; negligence; fault of plaintiff and others at issue].

(c) Equitable Indemnity.

No. 3800 [comparative fault between and among tortfeasors].

(d) Products Liability.

No. 1207 [strict liability; comparative fault; contributory negligence].

No. VF-1200 [verdict form; strict products liability; manufacturing defect; comparative negligence at issue].

No. VF-1204 [verdict form; products liability; negligence; plaintiff's contributory negligence at issue].

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.1746

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

117 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.
1. Former Law: Overlapping Defenses.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1336

[§ 1336] Former Law: Overlapping Defenses.

The term "assumption of risk" is often loosely applied to one form of contributory negligence, namely, the voluntary unreasonable exposure to danger created by the defendant's negligence, or assumption of the risk of negligent conduct. In other words, the defendant is guilty of a breach of a duty of care toward the plaintiff, but the plaintiff cannot recover, because his or her own negligence contributed to the injury. (Rest.2d, §466(a) and Comment d; §496A, Comment d; see Gornstein v. Priver (1923) 64 C.A. 249, 256, 221 P. 396; Doggett v. Lacey (1932) 121 C.A. 395, 397, 9 P.2d 257 [voluntarily riding with one-armed driver]; Potts v. Crafts (1935) 5 C.A.2d 83, 84, 42 P.2d 87; Ury v. Fredkin's Markets (1938) 26 C.A.2d 501, 502, 79 P.2d 749; 57B Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §772.)

The overlap was described in Fonseca v. Orange (1972) 28 C.A.3d 361, 104 C.R. 566, supra, §1291, as follows: "[T]he plaintiff's conduct in encountering a known risk may be in itself unreasonable, because the danger is out of all proportion to the advantage which he is seeking to obtain If that is the case, his conduct is a form of contributory negligence, in which the negligence consists in making the wrong choice and voluntarily encountering a known unreasonable risk. In such cases, it is clear that the defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence overlap, and are as intersecting circles, with a considerable area in common, where neither excludes the possibility of the other." (28 C.3d 369, quoting Prosser.)

In Grey v. Fibreboard Paper Products Co. (1966) 65 C.2d 240, 53 C.R. 545, 418 P.2d 153, the overlap led to an extraordinary result. The opinion discloses no substantial evidence of negligence on the part of defendant, and overwhelming evidence of plaintiff's assumption of risk and contributory negligence; nevertheless, verdict and judgment for plaintiff were affirmed.

Plaintiff machinist was sent by his employer to repair defendant's paper cutting machine. To smooth a set of rollers, he held emery cloth against the bottom roller while they were in motion. The cloth caught in the toothed wheels, drawing his hand between the rollers; he could not reach the power switch to turn off the machine, and no employee of defendant was near enough to help. The evidence showed that plaintiff was experienced in the characteristics of this type of machine; that he worked with it for about 3 hours before the accident; that he knew there were no employees in the area for emergency assistance; that he refused assistance by defendant's employee, stating that the job could best be performed by one man; and that he failed to position himself near a cut-off switch so that he could stop the machine. Judgment on a verdict for plaintiff was reversed by the Court of Appeal for error in refusing to instruct on assumption of risk, but the Supreme Court affirmed on the ground that an instruction on contributory negligence rendered the error harmless in this situation in which the two doctrines overlap.

(a) Plaintiff, aware of the specific danger that the machine would continue to operate and that he would be unable to stop it in time to avoid injury, continued to work under these conditions; hence, the evidence would have justified a finding of the element of knowledge for application of the doctrine of assumption of risk. (65 C.2d 244.)

(b) However, where a plaintiff unreasonably undertakes to encounter a specific known risk created by a defendant's negligence, the assumption of risk "is but a variant of contributory negligence." (65 C.2d 246.)

(c) Here, the jury was instructed that plaintiff could not recover if contributorily negligent; and their verdict "absolved plaintiff of any misconduct in jeopardizing his well-being, and necessarily determined that he did not unreasonably undertake to encounter a specific known risk, the prerequisite upon which the particular defense of assumption of risk must be based." (65 C.2d 246.)

The opinion follows settled law in its discussion of the nature and similarity of the two defenses, and the peculiar result is perhaps explained by the limited nature of the point raised on appeal (error in refusing to instruct). (See Dorobek v. Ride-A-While Stables (1968) 262 C.A.2d 554, 559, 68 C.R. 774 [following Grey].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

118 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.
2. Unreasonable Assumption of Risk: Defense Abolished.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1337

[§ 1337] Unreasonable Assumption of Risk: Defense Abolished.

The defense of unreasonable assumption of risk, to the extent that it is a form of contributory negligence, was abolished as a separate defense by the decision in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 824, 829, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, and merged into the comparative negligence system. (See Gonzalez v. Garcia (1977) 75 C.A.3d 874, 881, 142 C.R. 503; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.15; 64 Cal. L. Rev. 260; 7 Pacific L. J. 755; 16 A.L.R.4th 700 [effect of adoption of comparative negligence rules on assumption of risk].)

In Gonzalez v. Garcia, plaintiff was a passenger in a car driven by defendant. He knew that defendant was intoxicated, and had time to get out, but chose to remain in the car and was injured when defendant lost control and crashed. Held, defendant's proposed instruction on assumption of risk was properly refused. (a) The distinction between implied assumption of risk and contributory negligence is unclear (75 C.A.3d 878), but the "all or nothing" aspect of assumption of risk has made it a disfavored defense (75 C.A.3d 879). (b) Plaintiff's conduct fell into the overlapping area of "choosing an unreasonable alternative when reasonable ones were available, thereby evidencing a lack of due care for his own safety." Thus, it was both contributory negligence and assumption of risk, and under the Li holding, it was not available as a complete defense. (75 C.A.3d 881.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(6), 551, 552(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §22.15.

119 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

3. Reasonable Assumption of Risk: Conflict of Authority

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1338

[§ 1338] Reasonable Assumption of Risk: Conflict of Authority

(1) Defense Abolished. Segoviano v. Housing Authority (1983) 143 C.A.3d 162, 191 C.R. 578, not only abolished reasonable assumption of risk as a separate defense, but also held that, under the comparative negligence doctrine, it could not be used to reduce the plaintiff's recovery. Plaintiff played in a flag football game sponsored by defendant, and was injured when S, an opposing player, violated the rules by pushing him out of bounds. In this personal injury action, plaintiff objected to the introduction of any evidence on assumption of risk. After being instructed on contributory negligence, the jury found S negligent, but also found that plaintiff was negligent (30% at fault), and rendered its verdict accordingly. On appeal, plaintiff contended that it was prejudicial error for the trial judge to have instructed on contributory negligence. Held, this contention was meritorious, because it was conceded that plaintiff was not negligent during the game, and there was no evidence that his decision to play was unreasonable.

(a) Abolition of contributory negligence and unreasonable assumption of risk. Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 824, 829, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, abolished contributory negligence as a separate defense, including that type of assumption of risk in which a plaintiff unreasonably undertakes to encounter the risk imposed by defendant's negligence; this is in reality a form of contributory negligence. Both defenses were merged into the comparative negligence system. (143 C.A.3d 167.)

(b) Abolition of defense of reasonable assumption of risk. The Li language of "held to agree" has been thought by some authorities to retain both express and implied agreement to face the risk as separate defenses. (143 C.A.3d 168.) Others have interpreted the phrase as referring only to express assumption of risk. (143 C.A.3d 168, 169.) The latter view is more persuasive. "We interpret Li to mean that the separate defense of implied assumption of the risk is abolished under the comparative negligence law. It is only when the plaintiff expressly agrees to assume the risk that the defendant is relieved of a duty of care toward the plaintiff, thus barring any recovery." (143 C.A.3d 169.)

(c) Conclusion. The defense of reasonable assumption of risk "plays no part in the comparative negligence system of California; it is neither a bar to plaintiff's recovery on the theory that it forecloses the existence of a duty of care by the defendant toward the plaintiff nor is it a partial defense justifying allocation of a portion of the fault for the accident to the plaintiff on the theory that he or she was contributorily negligent in confronting the risk. It is only when the defendant proves that the plaintiff's decision to participate in the activity was unreasonable that a jury may allocate damages between the plaintiff and the defendant. Such an allocation is permissible because the defendant has proved that the plaintiff was negligent. Whether the plaintiff's decision to expose himself or herself to the risk of injury was unreasonable under all of the circumstances will be a question for the jury unless it can be held as a matter of law that the decision was reasonable. (143 C.A.3d 164.)

(2) Defense Not Abolished. In Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 C.A.3d 709, 211 C.R. 668, infra, §1410, the court held that Li applied only to the unreasonable assumption of a known risk. (165 C.A.3d 713.) A reasonable assumption of risk, such as that encountered in the firefighting and veterinary professions, remains a complete defense. (165 C.A.3d 714.) (See Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 C.A.3d 710, 719, 181 C.R. 311; 20 U.S.F. L. Rev. 225 [arguing for Nelson position].)

Segoviano was rejected and Nelson was approved in Ordway v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 98, 243 C.R. 536, holding that reasonable implied assumption of risk remains a viable defense after the adoption of comparative fault. "The correct analysis is this: The doctrine of reasonable implied assumption of risk is only another way of stating that the defendant's duty of care has been reduced in proportion to the hazards attendant to the event. Where no duty of care is owed with respect to a particular mishap, there can be no breach; consequently, as a matter of law, a personal injury plaintiff who has voluntarily--and reasonably--assumed the risk cannot prevail. Or stated another way, the individual who knowingly and voluntarily assumes a risk, whether for recreational enjoyment, economic reward, or some similar purpose, is deemed to have agreed to reduce the defendant's duty of care." (198 C.A.3d 104.)

In Von Beltz v. Stuntman (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1467, 255 C.R. 755, plaintiff, a stuntperson, was engaged by defendants to participate in a movie in which she was a passenger in an Aston-Martin sports car driven by N, a stunt driver. The stunt involved an encounter by the southbound Aston-Martin with northbound cars, including a Ford van. N was directed by defendant to cut across the opposing traffic onto the shoulder and then return to the highway. On the first take the maneuver was performed without incident. On the second take, defendant directed N to double the speed and weave in and out of oncoming cars in serpentine fashion, and this time N's car collided with the Ford van. Plaintiff sustained injuries resulting in permanent total paralysis. The court held that, under Ordway, reasonable assumption of risk remained a complete defense, but that it was inapplicable in this case, because defendant changed the nature of the stunt, without plaintiff's knowledge, and thereby increased the risk. However, plaintiff was contributorily negligent for failing to request an available seat belt. (207 C.A.3d 1480.) (See King v. Magnolia Homeowners Assn. (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1312, 1315, 253 C.R. 140 [following Ordway]; 25 U.S.F. L. Rev 647 [Von Beltz].) (On resolution of conflict by distinguishing primary from secondary assumption of risk, see infra, §1339 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(6), 551, 552(4), 554(6), 549(6), 551, 552(4), 554(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

120 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

a. In General.

1. Adoption of Theory

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1339

[§ 1339] Adoption of Theory

In Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, the court, in a plurality opinion of three justices, with two justices concurring and dissenting in separate opinions, and one justice dissenting, sought to resolve the conflict in Court of Appeal decisions on the proper application of the doctrine of assumption of risk (see supra, §1338).

Plaintiff and defendant participated in an informal game of touch football with other guests at the home of a mutual friend. In the course of the game, defendant ran into plaintiff, knocking her over, and stepped on her right hand, injuring the hand and little finger. After several operations, plaintiff's finger was amputated, and she brought this action for damages on theories of negligence and assault and battery. Defendant, relying on Ordway v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 98, 243 C.R. 536, supra, §1338, moved for summary judgment, contending that reasonable implied assumption of risk continues to operate as a complete defense after Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226. He asserted that the facts showed no intentional or reckless conduct, and that plaintiff was familiar with the risks associated with the sport of football. Plaintiff, relying on Segoviano v. Housing Authority (1983) 143 C.A.3d 162, 191 C.R. 578, supra, §1338, contended that the doctrine of reasonable implied assumption of risk had been eliminated by the adoption of comparative fault principles, and that plaintiff was entitled to have the action proceed under those principles. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. The Court of Appeal affirmed, concluding that Ordway should be followed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal, but applied different reasoning.

(a) Lead opinion of three justices.

(1) The assumption of risk doctrine has long caused confusion both in definition and application, because the phrase "assumption of risk" has been used in a number of very different factual settings involving analytically distinct legal concepts. (3 C.4th 303.) In some settings, e.g., sports-related injuries, the decisions largely have been concerned with the legal duty owed by a class of defendants (owners of baseball stadiums, ice hockey rinks, etc.). (3 C.4th 303; see supra, §1286.) In other settings, the terminology was applied in situations in which it was clear that the defendant had breached a legal duty of care to the plaintiff, and the issue was whether the plaintiff knowingly and voluntarily had chosen to encounter the specific risk of harm. (3 C.4th 304; see supra, §1281.)

(2) Prior to the adoption of comparative fault principles, there often was no need to distinguish between the different categories, because if a case fell into either category, recovery was totally barred. But the decision in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. made it necessary to determine which category should be merged into the comparative fault system and which should not. (3 C.4th 304, 305.)

(3) The Li decision "clearly contemplated that the assumption of risk doctrine was to be partially merged or subsumed into the comparative negligence scheme." (3 C.4th 306.) But a number of appellate decisions, focusing on Li language indicating that assumption of risk is in reality a form of contributory negligence where a plaintiff unreasonably undertakes to encounter a specific known risk, concluded that Li subsumed into the comparative fault scheme cases in which the plaintiff acts unreasonably, but retained the doctrine as a complete bar in cases in which the plaintiff acts reasonably. (3 C.4th 306, 307, and footnote 2.)

(4) "In our view, these decisions--regardless whether they reached the correct result on the facts at issue--have misinterpreted Li by suggesting that our decisions contemplated less favorable legal treatment for a plaintiff who reasonably encounters a known risk than for a plaintiff who unreasonably encounters such a risk." (3 C.4th 307.) "[T]he distinction to which the Li court referred was between (1) those instances in which the assumption of risk doctrine embodies a legal conclusion that there is 'no duty' on the part of the defendant to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk--the category of assumption of risk that the legal commentators generally refer to as 'primary assumption of risk'--and (2) those instances in which the defendant does owe a duty of care to the plaintiff but the plaintiff knowingly encounters a risk of injury caused by the defendant's breach of that duty--what most commentators have termed 'secondary assumption of risk.' Properly interpreted, the relevant passage in Li provides that the category of assumption of risk cases that is not merged into the comparative negligence system and in which the plaintiff's recovery continues to be completely barred involves those cases in which the defendant's conduct did not breach a legal duty of care to the plaintiff, i.e., 'primary assumption of risk' cases, whereas cases involving 'secondary assumption of risk' properly are merged into the comprehensive comparative fault system adopted in Li." (3 C.4th 308.)

(5) Although the difference in terminology may appear at first blush to be only semantic, the significance extends beyond mere rhetoric. "First, in 'primary assumption of risk' cases--where the defendant owes no duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm--a plaintiff who has suffered such harm is not entitled to recover from the defendant, whether the plaintiff's conduct in undertaking the activity was reasonable or unreasonable. Second, in 'secondary assumption of risk' cases--involving instances in which the defendant has breached the duty of care owed to the plaintiff--the defendant is not entitled to be entirely relieved of liability for an injury proximately caused by such breach, simply because the plaintiff's conduct in encountering the risk of such an injury was reasonable rather than unreasonable. Third and finally, the question whether the defendant owed a legal duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm does not turn on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct, but rather on the nature of the activity or sport in which the defendant is engaged and the relationship of the defendant and the plaintiff to that activity or sport. For these reasons, use of the 'reasonable implied assumption of risk' 'unreasonable implied assumption of risk' terminology, as a means of differentiating between the cases in which a plaintiff is barred from bringing an action and those in which he or she is not barred, is more misleading than helpful." (3 C.4th 309.)

(6) "Our reading of Li ... is supported not only by the language of Li itself and the authorities it cites, but also, and perhaps most significantly, by the fundamental principle that led the Li court to replace the all-or-nothing contributory negligence defense with a comparative fault scheme. In 'primary assumption of risk' cases, it is consistent with comparative fault principles totally to bar a plaintiff from pursuing a cause of action, because when the defendant has not breached a legal duty of care to the plaintiff, the defendant has not committed any conduct which would warrant the imposition of any liability whatsoever. ... By contrast, in the 'secondary assumption of risk' context, the defendant has breached a duty of care owed to the plaintiff. When a risk of harm is created or imposed by a defendant's breach of duty and a plaintiff who chose to encounter the risk is injured, comparative fault principles preclude automatically placing all of the loss on the plaintiff, because the injury in such a case may have been caused by the combined effect of the defendant's and the plaintiff's culpable conduct. To retain assumption of risk as a complete defense in such a case would fly in the face of Li's basic holding that when both parties are partially at fault for an injury, a rule which places all of the loss on one of the parties is inherently inequitable." (3 C.4th 310.)

(7) In criticizing the primary-secondary assumption of risk approach adopted in place of the traditional implied consent approach, the dissenting opinion suggests that, even when a defendant has breached its duty of care, a plaintiff who reasonably has chosen to encounter a known risk has "impliedly consented" to any harm. This contention does not withstand analysis:

First, this argument would logically apply as much to a plaintiff who unreasonably has chosen to encounter a known risk as to a plaintiff who reasonably has chosen to do so. But Li explicitly held that a plaintiff who unreasonably undertakes to encounter a specific known risk is not completely barred; thus, the implied consent argument is irreconcilable with Li. (3 C.4th 311.)

Second, the implied consent rationale rests on a legal fiction that is untenable, at least as applied to conduct that represents a breach of a defendant's duty of care. "[I]t is thoroughly unrealistic to suggest that, by engaging in a potentially dangerous activity or sport, an individual consents to (or agrees to excuse) a breach of duty by others that increases the risks inevitably posed by the activity or sport itself, even where the participating individual is aware of the possibility that such misconduct may occur." (3 C.4th 311.) "[L]egal liability for an injury which occurs during a sporting event is significantly affected by the assumption of risk doctrine, but only because the doctrine has been utilized in framing the duty of care owed by a defendant in the context of a sporting event, and not because the plaintiff in such a case has, in any realistic sense of the term, 'consented' to relieve the defendant of liability." (3 C.4th 312.)

Third, the implied consent analysis is untenable for another reason: "If the application of the assumption of risk doctrine in a sports setting turned on the particular plaintiff's subjective knowledge and awareness, summary judgment rarely would be available in such cases, for, as the present case reveals, it frequently will be easy to raise factual questions with regard to a particular plaintiff's subjective expectations as to the existence and magnitude of the risks the plaintiff voluntarily chose to encounter. By contrast, the question of the existence and scope of a defendant's duty of care is a legal question which depends on the nature of the sport or activity in question and on the parties' general relationship to the activity, and is an issue to be decided by the court, rather than the jury." (3 C.4th 313, citing the text.)

(8) "It may be helpful at this point to summarize our general conclusions as to the current state of the doctrine of assumption of risk. ... In cases involving 'primary assumption of risk'--where, by virtue of the nature of the activity and the parties' relationship to the activity, the defendant owes no legal duty to protect the plaintiff from the particular risk of harm that caused the injury--the doctrine continues to operate as a complete bar to the plaintiff's recovery. In cases involving 'secondary assumption of risk'--where the defendant does owe a duty of care to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff proceeds to encounter a known risk imposed by the defendant's breach of duty--the doctrine is merged into the comparative fault scheme, and the trier of fact, in apportioning the loss resulting from the injury, may consider the relative responsibility of the parties." (3 C.4th 314.)

(9) "Accordingly, in determining the propriety of the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant in this case, our inquiry does not turn on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of plaintiff's conduct in choosing to subject herself to the risks of touch football or in continuing to participate in the game after she became aware of defendant's allegedly rough play. Nor do we focus upon whether there is a factual dispute with regard to whether plaintiff subjectively knew of, and voluntarily chose to encounter, the risk of defendant's conduct, or impliedly consented to relieve or excuse defendant from any duty of care to her. Instead, our resolution of this issue turns on whether, in light of the nature of the sporting activity in which defendant and plaintiff were engaged, defendant's conduct breached a legal duty of care to plaintiff." (3 C.4th 315.)

(10) Although defendants generally have no legal duty to eliminate (or protect a plaintiff against) risks inherent in the sport itself, they do have a duty to use due care not to increase those risks. (3 C.4th 315.) In some situations, however, the careless conduct of others is treated as an inherent risk of a sport, thus barring recovery by the plaintiff. (3 C.4th 316, citing cases of carelessly thrown baseball and carelessly extended elbow in basketball.) The question how courts are to determine when careless conduct properly should be considered an inherent risk is best answered by the duty approach, rather than the implied consent approach. Liability turns on whether the defendant had a legal duty to avoid this conduct or to protect the plaintiff against a particular risk of harm. (3 C.4th 316.) "As already noted, the nature of a defendant's duty in the sports context depends heavily on the nature of the sport itself. Additionally, the scope of the legal duty owed by a defendant frequently will also depend on the defendant's role in, or relationship to, the sport." (3 C.4th 317.) This point is illustrated by cases involving injuries sustained by a spectator at a baseball game. (3 C.4th 317, discussing Ratcliff v. San Diego Baseball Club of Pac. Coast League (1938) 27 C.A.2d 733, 81 P.2d 625, infra, §1290.) These and cases dealing with ski resorts demonstrate that the nature of the applicable duty or standard of care frequently varies with the role of the defendant whose conduct is in issue. (3 C.4th 318.)

(11) In the present case, the question involves the circumstances under which a participant in a sport may be held liable for an injury sustained by another participant. The overwhelming majority of the cases have concluded that it is improper to hold a sports participant liable to a coparticipant for ordinary careless conduct committed during the sport, e.g., a carelessly thrown ball or bat during a baseball game, and that liability may be imposed only when he or she intentionally injures another player or engages in reckless conduct totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport. (3 C.4th 318, 319, 320, listing many cases.) "In our view, the reasoning of the foregoing cases is sound." (3 C.4th 320.)

(12) "As applied to the present case, the foregoing legal principle clearly supports the trial court's entry of summary judgment in favor of defendant. The declarations ... establish that defendant was, at most, careless or negligent in knocking over plaintiff, stepping on her hand, and injuring her finger. Although plaintiff maintains that defendant's rough play as described in her declaration and the declaration of [witness] properly can be characterized as 'reckless,' the conduct alleged in those declarations is not even closely comparable to the kind of conduct--conduct so reckless as to be totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport--that is a prerequisite to the imposition of legal liability upon a participant in such a sport." (3 C.4th 320.)

(b) First concurring and dissenting opinion of one justice. This justice concurred in the result and much of the analysis in the lead opinion, but would go farther: "I believe the time has come to eliminate implied assumption of risk entirely. The all-or-nothing aspect of assumption of risk is as anachronistic as the all-or-nothing aspect of contributory negligence." (3 C.4th 321.) This change would eliminate the doctrinal confusion that now surrounds apportionment of fault, and comparative fault principles would determine liability. (3 C.4th 322.)

(c) Second concurring and dissenting opinion of two justices. This opinion concurs solely with respect to the result reached--upholding the summary judgment. But on the governing law, these justices prefer the "consent-based" analysis set forth in the dissenting opinion. (3 C.4th 322.)

(d) Dissenting opinion of one justice. In an elaborate discussion of the background of case law before and after Li, the justice concludes that the lead opinion is wrong both in its decision to affirm summary judgment for defendant and in its analytic approach to the defense of assumption of risk. (3 C.4th 324.)

A number of decisions address the primary assumption of risk theory. (See Lucas v. Fresno Unified School Dist. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 866, 872, 18 C.R.2d 79 [in view of school district's supervisory duty, student who was injured during recess by thrown rock did not, as matter of law, assume risk under either duty or consent analysis of implied assumption of risk]; Marquez v. Mainframe (1996) 42 C.A.4th 881, 885, 50 C.R.2d 34 [firefighter's rule (supra, §845 et seq.) is variant of primary assumption of risk doctrine, as stated in Knight]; Allabach v. Santa Clara County Fair Assn. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1007, 1012, 54 C.R.2d 330 [distinguishing implied assumption of risk cases from cases involving express or written release (see supra, §1292 et seq.); release is effective without analysis of activity and relationship of parties to that activity required under Knight]; Distefano v. Forester (2001) 85 C.A.4th 1249, 1272, 102 C.R.2d 813 [primary assumption of risk doctrine requires participants in activity to refrain from intentionally injuring each other or acting recklessly; this doctrine is not abrogated by statutory duties, breach of which creates presumption of negligence]; Moser v. Ratnoff (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1211, 1223, 130 C.R.2d 198 [fact that defendant violated Vehicle Code provisions and was thus negligent per se did not eliminate assumption of risk defense; citing with approval Distefano]; Whelihan v. Espinoza (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1566, 1573, 2 C.R.3d 883 [Harb. & Nav.C. 655(a) and 655.7, setting standards for safe operation of boats and water skis, do not abrogate doctrine of primary assumption of risk, because statutes do not explicitly demonstrate clear intent to do so]; 29 Cal Western L. Rev. 409; 28 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1495 [criticizing Knight]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1649; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 372; 28 San Diego L. Rev. 477; 68 A.L.R.5th 663 [liability for accidents occurring during school athletic events].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(6), 551, 552(4), 554(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 45 San Diego L. Rev. 383 [assumption of risk; California's no-duty-for-sport regime]; 79 So. Cal. L. Rev. 265 [concept of duty in assumption of risk analysis]; 79 So. Cal. L. Rev. 329 [criticizing current assumption of risk theory].

121 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

a. In General.

2. Extension to Noncompetitive Recreational Activity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1340

[§ 1340] Extension to Noncompetitive Recreational Activity.

In Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 C.4th 339, 11 C.R.2d 30, 834 P.2d 724, a companion case to Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, the lead opinion, by one justice, was followed by a separate concurring opinion by three justices, a separate concurring and dissenting opinion by two justices, and a separate dissenting opinion by one justice.

Plaintiff, an experienced water-skier, was skiing barefoot and backward in a river channel. Defendant, his friend, was driving the boat that towed plaintiff. Plaintiff was injured when the back of his head struck a tree limb that extended over the channel from one of the river banks. In this action, plaintiff alleged that the accident was proximately caused by defendant's negligence in driving the boat too close to the river bank. Defendant moved for summary judgment, relying on the reasonable implied assumption of risk doctrine as reflected in Ordway v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 98, 243 C.R. 536, supra, §1338. The trial court granted summary judgment, the Court of Appeal affirmed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

(a) Lead opinion.

(1) Defendant was a coparticipant in the sports activity, and was, at most, careless in steering the boat. (3 C.4th 344.) Plaintiff argued, however, that the limited duty applied to a "competitive" sport such as the touch football game involved in Knight should not apply in the context of a "cooperative" sport such as waterskiing. (3 C.4th 345.)

(2) Although most of the authorities cited in Knight did involve competitive sport, the rationale of the decisions is equally applicable to waterskiing, an active sport, even when the parties are engaged in it on a noncompetitive basis. "[T]he skier has undertaken vigorous, athletic activity, and the ski boat driver operates the boat in a manner that is consistent with, and enhances, the excitement and challenge of the active conduct of the sport. Imposition of legal liability on a ski boat driver for ordinary negligence in making too sharp a turn, for example, or in pulling the skier too rapidly or too slowly, likely would have the same kind of undesirable chilling effect on the driver's conduct that the courts in other cases feared would inhibit ordinary conduct in various sports. As a result, holding ski boat drivers liable for their ordinary negligence might well have a generally deleterious effect on the nature of the sport of waterskiing as a whole. Additionally, imposing such liability might well deter friends from voluntarily assisting one another in such potentially risky sports. Accordingly, the general rule limiting the duty of care of a coparticipant in active sports to the avoidance of intentional and reckless misconduct, applies to participants engaged in noncompetitive but active sports activity, such as a ski boat driver towing a water-skier." (3 C.4th 345.)

(3) Harb. & Nav.C. 658(d) provides in part: "No person shall operate or manipulate any vessel, towrope, or other device by which the direction or location of water skis, an aquaplane, or a similar device may be affected or controlled so as to cause the water skis, aquaplane, or similar device, or any person thereon, to collide with or strike against, any object or person." Plaintiff contended that defendant violated this provision, and that under Ev.C. 669 (codifying the doctrine of negligence per se; see supra, §871 et seq.), there was a rebuttable presumption that defendant breached his duty of care. (3 C.4th 346.) The question is whether the statute was adopted only for the protection of third persons with whom a water-skier might collide or whose property might be damaged by a collision with the water-skier, or whether it was also intended to protect water-skiers themselves from collisions caused by their boat drivers. (3 C.4th 348.)

(4) Water-skiers are within the class of persons whose conduct the statute was intended to regulate. But the statute was not designed to create a duty of care on the part of the driver of the vessel to the persons being towed; it was intended to safeguard only the lives and property of third persons. Whether water-skiers also are within the class of persons whom the statute was intended to protect is another matter. (3 C.4th 349, 350.)

(b) Concurring opinion of three justices. In this opinion the author of the dissenting opinion in Knight again reviewed the case law and restated the arguments supporting the implied consent theory. (3 C.4th 351; see footnote 1: "Three justices embrace the primary-secondary approach to implied assumption of risk, three justices adhere to the traditional consent approach, and one justice would openly abolish the doctrine.") The concurring opinion asserts that "the justices forming the plurality in Knight ... , are in this case forced to take positions that defy either logic or common sense." (3 C.4th 352.) But the opinion concludes that the evidence submitted on the summary judgment motion established as a matter of law the complete defense of implied assumption of risk. (3 C.4th 364.)

(c) Concurring and dissenting opinion of two justices. In this opinion, the author concurred with the lead opinion on the duty approach to assumption of risk endorsed by the majority in Knight, as applicable to a ski boat driver towing a water-skier. (3 C.4th 364.) But he disagreed with the lead opinion's interpretation of Harb. & Nav.C. 658(d), concluding that the Legislature intended to protect not only third parties but also the towed water-skier. (3 C.4th 365, 367.) Accordingly, because the declarations raised a triable issue of fact whether defendant's conduct breached a legislatively created duty of care owed to plaintiff under Harb. & Nav.C. 658(d) and Ev.C. 669, he thought the judgment of the Court of Appeal should have been reversed to permit the case to proceed to trial. (3 C.4th 368.)

(d) Dissenting opinion of one justice. In a brief statement the dissenter (1) agreed with the prior concurring and dissenting opinion of two justices that Harb. & Nav.C. 658 required reversal of the Court of Appeal judgment; and (2) reiterated the position taken by him in his concurring and dissenting opinion in Knight, that California should abolish the anachronistic doctrine of implied assumption of risk. (3 C.4th 369.) (See Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 C.4th 1063, 1066, 68 C.R.2d 859, 946 P.2d 817, infra, §1349 [following Ford]; 29 Cal Western L. Rev. 409; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1649.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(6), 551, 552(4), 554(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

122 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

a. In General.

3. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1341

[§ 1341] Restatement 3d.

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability abrogates the Second Restatement rule recognizing implied assumption of risk as an independent defense. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment i; infra, §1293.) However, "questions of a defendant's primary liability (or duty) under tort law ... are not addressed" by the Third Restatement, which "neither supports nor precludes a determination that a particular actor has limited or no liability (or duty) in specific circumstances." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment j.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(6), 551, 552(4), 554(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

123 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

a. In General.

4. Determining Whether Primary Assumption of Risk Doctrine Applies.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1342

[§ 1342] Determining Whether Primary Assumption of Risk Doctrine Applies.

The procedure for resolving whether primary assumption of risk is a bar was discussed in Staten v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1628, 53 C.R.2d 657, infra, §1348.

(a) Primary assumption of risk requires absence of duty. The Supreme Court's opinion in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, distinguishes between cases of primary assumption of risk, in which the defendant owes no duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm, and cases of secondary assumption of risk, in which the defendant does owe a duty of care but the plaintiff knowingly encounters the risk. In the secondary assumption situation, liability is apportioned by comparative fault, while in the primary assumption situation, the lack of duty operates as a complete bar to recovery. The existence of a duty depends on the nature of the sport or other activity in question and on the parties' general relationship to the activity. (45 C.A.4th 1632.)

(b) Existence of duty is question of law. Whether the defendant owes a duty to the plaintiff is a legal question. Thus, the question of assumption of risk is often amenable to resolution by summary judgment, with the trial judge determining the question of duty as a function of the scope and definition of the activity's inherent risks. In many active sport cases, this principal determination of duty leads to a second duty analysis. While the defendant owes no duty to protect against the risks inherent in a sport, the defendant generally owes a duty not to increase the risks of the activity beyond the risks inherent in the sport. This second determination of duty, however, still hinges on the trial judge's determination of the question of duty in the first instance, by defining the risks inherent in the particular sport in issue. (45 C.A.4th 1632.)

(c) Expert opinions are irrelevant in determining duty. An expert witness' declaration is not admissible on the legal question of duty and should not be considered. It is thoroughly established that experts may not give opinions on matters that are essentially within the province of the court to decide. In Knight, the Supreme Court determined that legal questions of duty in primary assumption of risk cases are to be resolved by the trial judge without factual input by experts. The determinant of duty, i.e., inherent risk, is to be decided solely as a question of law and based on the general characteristics of the activity and the parties' relationship to it. This determination is necessarily reached from the common knowledge of judges, and not the opinion of experts. However, the Supreme Court "would do well to provide further guidance" in this area. Trial courts deciding these questions on summary judgment should not be faced with determining the inherent risks of an unfamiliar sport while bereft of the helpful factual input of experts. Perhaps, "a trial judge could receive expert evidence on the factual nature of an unknown or esoteric sports activity, but not expert evidence on the ultimate legal question of inherent risk and duty. This however, is not our call: it is for the Supreme Court, in baseball parlance, to declare this suggestion fair or foul." (45 C.A.4th 1635, 1636.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

124 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

1. Baseball.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1343

[§ 1343] Baseball.

(1) Participant or Player. In Wattenbarger v. Cincinnati Reds (1994) 28 C.A.4th 746, 33 C.R.2d 732, plaintiff, who was trying out as a pitcher for a major league baseball team, informed team personnel that he had "popped" his arm. They nevertheless gave him permission to continue pitching, and when he did so he suffered serious injury to the arm. In this action against the team and the team's supervisor of scouting, the trial judge granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) The primary assumption of the risk doctrine would bar plaintiff's recovery if he had stopped pitching after he "popped" his arm. There is no doubt that arm injuries are a risk inherent in the sport of baseball. However, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, a 17-year-old, it is reasonable to infer that when he informed team personnel he had "popped" his arm, he was seeking guidance as to how to proceed. (28 C.A.4th 752, 753.) Defendants were not coparticipants but were in control of the activity. "Under these circumstances, defendants owed a duty to plaintiff and the other participants not to increase the risks inherent in the game of baseball." (28 C.A.4th 754.)

(b) In addition to the foreseeability of the harm resulting from further use of an already injured limb, there are policy reasons why the primary assumption of the risk doctrine should not apply. The tryout was conducted for defendants' benefit. Imposition of a duty on them to prevent the aggravation of existing injuries would help prevent harm and would not unduly burden them or injured players. Moreover, the evidence indicated that the team was not only able to, but did, maintain insurance for tryout injuries. (28 C.A.4th 755, 756.)

In Balthazor v. Little League Baseball (1998) 62 C.A.4th 47, 72 C.R.2d 337, plaintiff, an 11-year-old baseball player, sued for injuries sustained when he was struck by an errant pitch during a game sponsored by defendant Little League. Plaintiff went to bat a few minutes before sunset, when it was difficult to see. He was wearing the standard uniform required by defendant, including a batting helmet without faceguard. He ducked to avoid the first pitch, but the second pitch struck him in the face. The pitcher had previously struck two other players in the game. The trial court granted defendant's request for summary judgment, concluding that recovery was barred by the doctrine of primary assumption of risk. Held, affirmed. Defendant did not breach its duty not to increase the risks inherent in baseball.

(a) Where a sport or activity, like baseball, is subject to the primary risk doctrine, liability attaches only when the defendant breaches its duty not to increase the risks inherent in the sport or activity. (62 C.A.4th 49.) Plaintiff contended that defendant breached this duty. However, there was nothing done in this game, no specific acts or directions given by defendant's officials, that increased the risk of injury beyond that present in any other game. (62 C.A.4th 51.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that defendant negligently supervised the game by failing to end it as sunset approached, contending that diminished lighting increased the risk of being hit by the ball. This argument is unpersuasive. Baseball is played under various lighting conditions, even during the day. Changing lighting conditions are inherent in the sport. (62 C.A.4th 51.)

(c) Plaintiff's contention that defendant was negligent in failing to remove the "wild pitcher" from the game is even more tenuous. Accuracy in pitching, especially from a teenager, has never been a prerequisite to being allowed to pitch. To so hold would alter the fundamental nature of the game and most certainly chill vigorous participation. (62 C.A.4th 52.)

(d) Plaintiff claimed that defendant had a duty to reduce the risk of injury from being struck by a baseball by providing helmets with faceguards. This shows a misunderstanding of the Supreme Court's mandate in Knight. Under primary assumption of risk, the defendant has a duty not to increase the risks inherent in the sport, not a duty to decrease the risks. (62 C.A.4th 52.) (See West v. Sundown Little League of Stockton (2002) 96 C.A.4th 351, 357, 116 C.R.2d 849 [primary assumption of risk case; risk of 10-year-old baseball player being hit by ball during practice due to sun's glare is risk inherent in baseball]; Sanchez v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 703, 711, 128 C.R.2d 529 [whether use of aluminum bat significantly increased risk that pitcher would be struck by batted ball was factual question that could not be decided on summary judgment].)

(2) Spectator. In Lowe v. California League of Professional Baseball (1997) 56 C.A.4th 112, 65 C.R.2d 105, plaintiff spectator was seriously injured when struck by a foul ball while attending a professional baseball game, and sued the baseball club and the league to which it belonged for negligence. At its home games, defendant club featured a dinosaur mascot standing seven feet tall and having a protruding tail. The person outfitted as the dinosaur, while performing his antics in the stands along the left field foul line, touched plaintiff from behind with the tail of the costume. Plaintiff was thereby distracted and turned toward the mascot. In the next moment, just as plaintiff returned his attention to the playing field, he was struck by a foul ball before he could react. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) Defendants persuaded the trial court, under the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk, that defendants owed no duty to plaintiff, as a spectator, to protect him from foul balls. This rationalization was faulty. Although Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, held that sports participants and spectators assume certain risks when they engage in or watch a particular sport, Knight also held that defendants have a duty not to increase the inherent risks to the participant or spectator. A triable issue of fact remained under the evidence here, namely, whether the mascot cavorting in the stands and distracting plaintiff's attention while the game was in progress constituted negligence by increasing the inherent risk to plaintiff of being struck by a foul ball. (56 C.A.4th 114.)

(b) Appellate review of a summary judgment is independent of that in the trial court but mirrors what occurs there; i.e., the appellate court makes a de novo evaluation whether there are disputed issues of material fact. The first step is to define the issues framed by the pleadings. (56 C.A.4th 122.) Plaintiff alleged that the mascot's antics distracted plaintiff and "prevented plaintiff from being able to protect himself from any batted ball and foreseeably increased the risk to [plaintiff] over and above those inherent in the sport." Thus, the complaint anticipated the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk as a defense and, on defendants' allegation of that defense, framed the dispositive issue of fact, namely, whether the mascot's antics and their resulting distraction of the plaintiff operated to increase the inherent risks assumed by him as a spectator at a baseball game. (56 C.A.4th 123.)

(c) The next step in the summary judgment analysis is to determine whether defendants' evidentiary filings in support of their motion were sufficient to provide the factual basis for their affirmative defense of primary assumption of risk, and shift the burden to plaintiff to demonstrate a triable issue of fact with reference to that defense. As prescribed by Knight, the burden to be surmounted by these filings was to show that any risk to spectators caused by the antics of the mascot did not operate to increase those inherent risks to which spectators at baseball games are unavoidably exposed. In other words, the key inquiry here is whether the risk that led to plaintiff's injury involved some feature or aspect of the game that is inevitable or unavoidable in the actual playing of the game. In the first instance, foul balls hit into the spectators' area clearly create a risk of injury. If foul balls were to be eliminated, however, it would be impossible to play the game. Thus, foul balls represent an inherent risk to spectators attending baseball games. Under Knight, this risk is assumed. But the same thing cannot be said about the antics of the mascot. The person who performed as the mascot stated in his deposition that there were occasional games played when he was not there. In view of this testimony, as a matter of law, it must be held that the antics of the mascot are not an essential or integral part of playing a baseball game. (56 C.A.4th 123.) Therefore, the summary judgment burden never shifted to plaintiff. Whether the mascot's antics increased the inherent risk to plaintiff is an issue of fact to be resolved at trial. (56 C.A.4th 124.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Participant or Player. See Avila v. Citrus Community College Dist. (2006) 38 C.4th 148, 163, 41 C.R.3d 299, 131 P.3d 383 [primary assumption of risk barred negligence action against community college by opposing college's baseball player who was allegedly intentionally hit in head with pitch during game, because being hit by pitch, including one intentionally thrown at batter, is inherent risk of game; fact that game was allegedly illegal did not increase inherent risks].

125 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

2. Boating and Rafting.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1344

[§ 1344] Boating and Rafting.

In Stimson v. Carlson (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1201, 14 C.R.2d 670, defendant sailboat owner and his six-person crew, including plaintiff, were sailing on San Francisco Bay. Plaintiff was an experienced sailor who had sailed with defendant at least 15 times and had been a member of defendant's crew in approximately 10 sailing competitions. As such, he knew that one of the dangers of sailing was being struck by the boom or mainsheets (the lines connecting the boom to the mainsail) during a course change called a jibe, in which the boom swings violently in the opposite direction. To minimize the danger of being struck by the boom, defendant customarily warned his crew before executing a jibe. However, on the occasion in question, defendant gave no warning, and plaintiff sustained injuries when he was struck by the mainsheets. In the subsequent personal injury action, defendant raised assumption of risk as a defense. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; defendant had no duty to protect plaintiff from the risk involved.

(a) In primary assumption of the risk cases, the defendant owes no duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm, regardless of whether the plaintiff's conduct in undertaking the activity was reasonable or unreasonable. Whether the defendant owes such a duty to the plaintiff must be determined in light of the nature of the activity in which they are engaged. (11 C.A.4th 1205, citing Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339.)

(b) Generally, defendants have no duty to protect plaintiffs against risks inherent in an active sport, and a swinging boom is a risk inherent in the sport of sailing. When an inherent sports risk is involved, the defendant is liable only if he or she intentionally injures another player or engages in conduct that is so reckless that it is totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in an active sport. That was not the case here. Defendant's failure to call out a course change was negligent, but it did not amount to intentional or reckless conduct. While defendant's conduct was unexpected, it did not alter the fundamental risk of sailing, i.e., the boom and its sheets remained the danger. (11 C.A.4th 1206.)

(c) "Particularly in the area of athletics and recreation, the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk prevents lawsuits among participants who are knowingly engaged in the normal activities, and inherent risks, of an active sport.

By eliminating liability for unintended accidents, the doctrine ensures that the fervor of athletic competition will not be chilled by the constant threat of litigation from every misstep, sharp turn and sudden stop. ... On a larger scale, participation in amateur athletics is a socially desirable activity that improves the mental and physical well-being of its participants. The freedom to enjoy such activity is preserved through application of the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk." (11 C.A.4th 1206.) (See Ferrari v. Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 C.A.4th 248, 252, 38 C.R.2d 65 [defendant had no duty to prevent plaintiff from striking her head in raft that used metal bar, which was industry norm; inherent risk of river rafting]; Shannon v. Rhodes (2001) 92 C.A.4th 792, 795, 112 C.R.2d 217 [primary assumption of risk doctrine did not constitute defense, where child was injured when she fell from ski boat in which she was riding as passenger; recreational boating cannot be grouped with competitive sports and, unlike sports, would not be altered if boat drivers were required to exercise due care]; Whelihan v. Espinoza (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1566, 1571, 2 C.R.3d 883 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied to sport of jet skiing]; Peart v. Ferro (2004) 119 C.A.4th 60, 78, 13 C.R.3d 885 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied, notwithstanding legislation pertaining to regulation and use of personal watercraft].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Ford v. Polaris Industries (2006) 139 C.A.4th 755, 43 C.R.3d 215, plaintiff was riding as a passenger on a two-seat personal watercraft with a jet-powered nozzle at the rear of the craft (referred to as jet skiing). She suffered severe orifice injuries when she fell to the rear and landed a foot from the jet nozzle. Plaintiff brought a negligence action against the owner-operator and a products liability action against the manufacturer based on design defect, i.e., inadequate method of holding on when gripping the operator was not feasible. The trial court entered summary judgment for defendant owner-operator under the primary assumption of risk doctrine, holding that, at most, her failure to call plaintiff's attention to certain warnings was mere negligence. The case proceeded to trial against defendant manufacturer, and judgment was entered for plaintiff. In rejecting the defense of primary assumption of risk with respect to defendant manufacturer, the trial court reasoned that plaintiff, by proving a design defect, established that defendant had increased the risks inherent in the sport of jet skiing and that, therefore, a special instruction that plaintiff must prove that defendant increased the risks was unnecessary. Held, affirmed.

(a) Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 C.A.4th 547, 19 C.R.2d 24, text, §1355, and Bunch v. Hoffinger Industries (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1278, 20 C.R.3d 780, text, §1350, stand for the proposition that a manufacturer's duty to produce defect-free products is not obliterated by primary assumption of the risk. However, Milwaukee Tool was not a sports case, and thus there was no need for the court to address the issue of inherent risks in assessing the scope and existence of the defendant's duty. On the other hand, Bunch was a sports case, but the issue was inadequate warnings, not design defect, and there was no charge in Bunch that imposing a duty on the manufacturer to provide effective and adequate warnings would change the nature of the sport or chill participation in it. Thus, these decisions did not deal with the scope of the manufacturer's duty to make nondefective products, a question that often arises in a recreational equipment defect case such as this when the defendant asserts that the purported defect is the failure of the product to eliminate or provide protection against an inherent risk of the sport. Under these circumstances, the court must assess the risks inherent in the sport as part and parcel of ascertaining the scope of the manufacturer's duty. (139 C.A.4th 771.)

(b) The norm in jet skiing is to hold on; orifice injuries and the conduct that causes them do not belong to the fundamental nature or habit of the sport. Thus, providing an alternative that would allow a jet skier to maintain a secure grip when holding onto the operator was not feasible would not alter the fundamental nature of the sport or deter vigorous participation. Under these facts, the trial court properly denied defendant manufacturer's motion for summary judgment on primary assumption of the risk. (139 C.A.4th 772.)

(c) Defendant maintained that its design met the standard of the industry, that this standard defined the sport and its inherent risks, and that the standard could not be attacked without running afoul of the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk. However, none of the cases cited by defendant stand for the proposition that primary assumption of the risk will preclude a strict products liability/design defect claim against a recreational equipment manufacturer simply because its equipment is essentially the same in design as that of other manufacturers. Moreover, a risk is inherent if its absence would significantly change the sport or deter enthusiastic participation, and not all design features that are "essentially the same" throughout an industry meet this definition. (139 C.A.4th 772.)

(d) Examination of duty under a primary assumption of risk inquiry also takes into account the defendant's role in, or relationship to, the sport in question. For example, in the process of analyzing the duty of proprietors of sports facilities, it is proper to define the risks inherent in the sport not only by virtue of the nature of the sport itself, but also by reference to the steps that the sponsoring business entity reasonably should take in order to minimize the risks without altering the nature of the sport. This approach is equally applicable to the role of manufacturing, supplying, and distributing defective recreational equipment. Thus, where the asserted design defect is the failure to incorporate protection against a serious injury into the design of the recreational equipment, the manufacturer's duty to design nondefective products can be rephrased as a duty to take reasonable steps to minimize inherent risks without altering the nature of the sport. (139 C.A.4th 774.)

(e) Defendant argued that a special instruction should have been given to the effect that, because a defendant generally has a duty to use due care not to increase the risks to a sports participant over and above those inherent in the sport, it could not be held liable absent a finding, supported by substantial evidence, that its design of the watercraft increased the risk of harm. Here, however, the trial court determined that a finding of a design defect in itself established that defendant increased the risk of harm inherent in jet skiing, i.e., simply falling into the water. Therefore, a special instruction also requiring plaintiff to prove that the defect increased the harm associated with that risk would be redundant and confusing. In other words, the very nature of the defect necessarily increased the likelihood that a passenger would fall rearward and suffer the extreme harm of orifice injuries, and thus, as a matter of law, the defect escalated the risk of harm beyond the inherent risk of falling into the water. With the jury's findings that the watercraft was defectively designed and that the defect caused plaintiff's injury, the standard instruction requiring defendant to prove that the benefits of the design outweighed the danger inherent in that design was adequate. (139 C.A.4th 775.)

Primary assumption of risk is a defense even though the person injured or killed in a collision involving a personal watercraft is merely a passenger. Like the operator, a passenger is a participant in an activity on a high-speed, open craft that involves enjoyment or thrill, requires physical exertion as well as skill, and includes a potential risk of injury. Moreover, primary assumption of risk is a defense even if operation of the personal watercraft is "casual," as opposed to the "extreme" operation that occurs in racing or exhibitions; the distinction between "casual" and "extreme" would prove impossible to apply on any consistent basis. (Truong v. Nguyen (2007) 156 C.A.4th 865, 879, 890, 67 C.R.3d 675.)

126 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

3. Dancing.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1345

[§ 1345] Dancing.

In Bush v. Parents Without Partners (1993) 17 C.A.4th 322, 21 C.R.2d 178, plaintiff was injured when she slipped and fell while dancing. The dance, which was held in a dance hall owned by defendant public agency, was sponsored by defendant club. On the evening of her accident, plaintiff observed a white substance on the dance floor which she knew from past experience was placed there to make it easier for the dancers' feet to slide over the floor. As was her normal practice, plaintiff did not begin to dance until the floor had been swept. It was during her third dance of the evening that plaintiff's accident occurred. Based on the theory that plaintiff had assumed the risk of injury, the trial judge granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) Under the primary assumption of risk doctrine set forth in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, a defendant's freedom from liability is based on the fact that he or she had no legal duty to eliminate the risks involved in a particular activity, or to protect the plaintiff from them. Knight applied this doctrine to the sports world, holding that the defendant had no duty to protect the plaintiff from the risks inherent in active sports. (17 C.A.4th 327.)

(b) Knight specifically declined to decide whether this limited duty of care rule applies to less active sports, such as archery or golf, but it indicated that the rule would apply only when one was engaging in a potentially dangerous activity or sport. Recreational dancing is not such a dangerous activity. Consequently, the present situation involves what Knight referred to as a "secondary assumption of risk" case, i.e., one where the defendant owes a duty of care to the plaintiff, who then proceeds to encounter the known risk imposed by the defendant's breach of duty. In this situation, the doctrine of assumption of risk, instead of constituting a complete bar to recovery, is merged into the comparative fault scheme. (17 C.A.4th 328.)

(c) Even assuming that falling is an inherent risk of social dancing and that this case, therefore, falls under primary assumption of risk, plaintiff correctly argued that defendants should nevertheless be held liable because they increased her risk beyond that inherent in the activity. Just as a ski resort has a duty to use due care to maintain its tow ropes in safe condition so as not to expose skiers to an increased risk of harm, so do dance hall operators and owners have a duty to maintain the dance floor in a safe and usable condition. Here, defendants breached that duty by adding a substance to the floor that made it too slippery, thereby increasing the dancers' risk of harm by falling. (17 C.A.4th 329.) Hence, whatever fault may have attached to plaintiff for dancing on the slippery floor, that fault does not operate as a complete bar to her recovery. (17 C.A.4th 330.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

127 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

4. Equestrian Activities.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1346

[§ 1346] Equestrian Activities.

In Harrold v. Rolling J Ranch (1993) 19 C.A.4th 578, 23 C.R.2d 671, plaintiff, a member of a resort operated by defendant, took advantage of the horseback riding offered by the resort. While riding with two friends, two other riders, and two wranglers, plaintiff wrapped the reins around the saddle horn and started to remove her jacket in order to give it to another rider, who was cold. Plaintiff's horse spooked and plaintiff was thrown to the ground. Plaintiff sued defendant, alleging that defendant negligently failed to warn her of her horse's unstable temperament and tendency to throw riders and failed to provide her with a safe horse. In opposing defendant's summary judgment motion, plaintiff presented evidence indicating that she was an experienced rider and that her horse, earlier the same day, had spooked and thrown another rider. Nevertheless, the trial judge granted the summary judgment motion. Held, affirmed.

(a) Commercial riding stables owe a narrow duty of due care to members of the general public who rent horses from them. This duty includes not providing faulty saddles, bridles, and other equipment, not providing dangerous trails, and not providing horses that are poorly shod. It does not include providing "ideal" riding horses. (19 C.A.4th 588.)

(b) While a riding stable would owe a duty of care to warn of the dangerous propensities of a particular horse, in this case the one prior incident did not rise to this level. "[T]o impose some sort of duty on a lessor of horses when a 'horse acts as a horse' is to tell the commercial world that strict liability is imposed for any action of a horse inherent in horseback riding, with the concomitant result that in all probability all commercial horseback riding will cease because of the risk involved to those that are self-insured or by reason of the prohibitive expense to obtain liability insurance for such an enterprise." (19 C.A.4th 588.) (See Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 C.4th 456, 481, 482, 63 C.R.2d 291, 936 P.2d 70, supra, §911; Shelly v. Stepp (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1288, 1291, 73 C.R.2d 323 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied to person who was exercising racehorse and was injured in collision with another horse; primary assumption of risk doctrine applies to practice as well as to competitive event]; Giardino v. Brown (2002) 98 C.A.4th 820, 829, 120 C.R.2d 77 [in action against provider of horses to girls' camp, plaintiff raised issues of fact whether horse causing injury was unsafe, whether this was known to defendant, and whether it increased inherent risk for child involved in beginners' horseback riding program; distinguishing Harrold].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Cohen v. Five Brooks Stable (2008) 159 C.A.4th 1476, 1491, 72 C.R.3d 471 [issue of material fact whether trail guide, while leading other horseback riders, suddenly accelerated to gallop in such reckless way as to be outside range of ordinary activity involved in horseback riding precluded summary judgment for trail ride operator on basis of doctrine of primary assumption of risk].

128 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

5. Football.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1347

[§ 1347] Football.

In Fortier v. Los Rios Community College Dist. (1996) 45 C.A.4th 430, 52 C.R.2d 812, a student sued a community college district to recover for injuries suffered in a "noncontact" advanced football class when he attempted to catch a pass and collided with another student who was attempting to intercept the pass. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The injuries were inherent in the sport of football, and thus plaintiff's claim was barred by primary assumption of the risk.

(a) Instructors, like commercial operators of recreational activities, have a duty to use due care not to increase the risks to a participant over and above those inherent in the sport. When an instructor acts so as to increase the risk of harm inherent in a particular sport, the instructor may not thereafter rely on primary assumption of the risk. (45 C.A.4th 435.)

(b) Here, however, the instructors did not increase the dangers to plaintiff by encouraging aggressive play or by keeping score of receptions and interceptions, because these are normal aspects of football. Although the game was called "noncontact," that meant that there was no tackling, and not that there would be no contact at all. Further, defendant did not increase the risk of harm by failing to require helmets. Even if a helmet would have prevented plaintiff's facial injuries, helmets are not a normal aspect of "noncontact" football, and they may actually increase the risk of harm by making players more aggressive. (45 C.A.4th 436.) (See Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

129 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

6. Skating.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1348

[§ 1348] Skating.

In Staten v. Superior Court (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1628, 53 C.R.2d 657, plaintiff figure skater was cut on the arm during a group skating session by the blade of another skater practicing an "outward backward spiral" with one leg extended. Plaintiff sued the other skater, the skating club that rented the rink, and the owner of the rink. Defendants moved for summary judgment, which the trial judge denied. Held, reversed. Being cut by the blade of another skater during a group skating session is an inherent risk of the sport, and the doctrine of primary assumption of risk bars the injured skater from recovery for personal injuries.

(a) Distinction between primary and secondary assumption of risk. The Supreme Court's opinion in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, has become the operative statement of the law of assumption of risk in California. Knight distinguishes between cases of primary assumption of risk, in which a defendant owes no duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm and the plaintiff is completely barred from recovery, and cases of secondary assumption of risk, in which the defendant does owe a duty of care but the plaintiff knowingly encounters the risk and in which liability is apportioned by comparative fault. Generally, the participation in an active sport is governed by primary assumption of risk, and a defendant owes no duty of care to protect a plaintiff against risks inherent in the sport. The existence of a duty depends on the nature of the sport or other activity in question and on the parties' general relationship to the activity. (45 C.A.4th 1632.)

(b) No duty of care owed. In the present case, the court must determine whether being cut by the blade of a fellow skater during a group skating session is, as a matter of law, a risk inherent in the sport of figure skating. (45 C.A.4th 1632.) The Knight rule is not limited to contact sports. Collisions with other skaters in group skating sessions, and the injuries that may result, are inherent risks of the sport of figure skating. Thus, skating is covered by the doctrine of primary assumption of risk, and plaintiff is completely barred from recovery. (45 C.A.4th 1633.) (See 33 A.L.R.3d 316 [liability of ice skater for injury to another skater].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See McGarry v. Sax (2008) 158 C.A.4th 983, 998, 70 C.R.3d 519 [primary assumption of risk barred negligence action against promoter by spectator at skateboard exhibition, who was injured in melee when professional skateboarder threw skateboard into crowd; activity had aspects of competitive sporting event, because desirable product was thrown into group of young athletic people who attempted to retrieve it].

130 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

7. Skiing and Snowboarding.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1349

[§ 1349] Skiing and Snowboarding.

In Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 C.4th 1063, 68 C.R.2d 859, 946 P.2d 817, the Supreme Court applied the principles of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, and Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 C.4th 339, 11 C.R.2d 30, 834 P.2d 724, supra, §1340, in the context of a skiing accident and a related safety ordinance. Plaintiff was injured in a collision with a fellow skier and sued him for negligence. Defendant admitted skiing too fast for existing conditions but denied intentionally colliding with plaintiff or acting recklessly. A county safety ordinance concerning skiing delineated certain "skier duties" relating to care on the slopes, violation of which constituted an infraction, but also stated that skiers assume the inherent risks of skiing, including collisions. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Primary assumption of the risk, when applicable, completely bars a plaintiff's recovery, while the doctrine of secondary assumption of the risk is merged into the comparative fault scheme, and the trier of fact, in apportioning the loss resulting from an injury, considers the relative responsibilities of the parties. Whether primary or secondary assumption of the risk applies turns on whether, in light of the nature of the activity in which the defendant and the plaintiff were engaged, the defendant's conduct breached a legal duty of care to the plaintiff. The test is objective; it depends on the nature of the sport or activity in question and on the parties' general relationship to the activity rather than the particular plaintiff's subjective knowledge and awareness. (16 C.4th 1067.)

(b) The general duty to use due care to avoid injury to others does not apply to coparticipants in a sport, where conditions or conduct that otherwise might be viewed as dangerous often are an integral part of the sport itself. In this respect, the nature of a sport is highly relevant in defining the duty of care owed by the particular defendant. Although defendants generally have no legal duty to eliminate risks inherent in the sport itself or protect a plaintiff against them, defendants generally have a duty to use due care not to increase the risks to a participant over and above those inherent in the sport. In some situations, the careless conduct of others is treated as an inherent risk of a sport, thus barring recovery by the plaintiff. Courts should not hold a sports participant liable to a coparticipant for ordinary careless conduct committed during the sport, because in the heat of an active sporting event, a participant's normal energetic conduct often includes accidentally careless behavior. Thus, the general test is that a participant in an active sport breaches a legal duty of care to other participants, i.e., engages in conduct that properly may subject him or her to financial liability, only if the participant intentionally injures another player or engages in conduct that is so reckless as to be totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport. Applying these common law principles, the doctrine of primary assumption of the risk bars plaintiff's action, because a collision is an inherent risk of downhill skiing, and because defendant did not act recklessly and did not intentionally collide with plaintiff. (16 C.4th 1068.)

(c) Even assuming that a local ordinance can supplant the primary assumption of risk doctrine, the ordinance here does not impose a higher duty than that established by the doctrine. Although the ordinance delineates certain duties of skiers, these duties do not govern tort liability between skiers. Instead, the ordinance expressly states that skiers must assume the inherent risks of skiing, including collisions with other skiers, thereby incorporating the doctrine. Nor does Ev.C. 669(a) (supra, §§ 873, 874), providing that a violation of law raises a presumption of failure to exercise due care, provide plaintiff a cause of action, because plaintiff failed to demonstrate that he was a member of the class of persons the county ordinance was designed to protect. Because the ordinance specifically states that skiers assume the risk of collision, plaintiff cannot be a member of the protected class. (16 C.4th 1069.)

In Mastro v. Petrick (2001) 93 C.A.4th 83, 112 C.R.2d 185, plaintiff and defendant were at a resort to ski and snowboard, respectively. Both were descending a slope where they had a right to be when defendant, the snowboarder (then traveling at 30 to 35 miles per hour), collided with plaintiff, the skier. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. Application of the doctrine of primary assumption of risk depends on the nature of defendant's activity and not on whether plaintiff and defendant were coparticipants in the same sport. Given the nature of snowboarding (descending a snow-covered mountain), and the relationship of plaintiff to that activity (descending the same snow-covered mountain on skis), it is clear that defendant owed no legal duty to protect plaintiff from the particular risk of harm that caused plaintiff's injuries (i.e., that a snowboarder may be negligent or careless). Put more generally, one who is pursuing a sport in an appropriate venue owes no duty of care to those who choose to occupy the same venue to engage in their (possibly different) activity simultaneously. Furthermore, assumption of risk protects a defendant from claims of negligence unless he or she creates a risk over and above those risks inherent in the sport in which he or she is engaged. Thus, even if plaintiff was correct in arguing that the nature of snowboarding increased the risk of harm to skiers on the same slope, "the snowboarder's duty is unaltered by this fact, because the nature of a defendant's duty is defined by the activity he or she engages in." (93 C.A.4th 90.)

A number of other decisions involve snow sports. (See Freeman v. Hale (1994) 30 C.A.4th 1388, 1391, 36 C.R.2d 418 [whether defendant's consumption of alcohol, which was not risk inherent to sport of skiing, increased chances of his colliding with plaintiff was question of fact]; Connelly v. Mammoth Mountain Ski Area (1995) 39 C.A.4th 8, 13, 45 C.R.2d 855, Van Dyke v. S.K.I. Ltd. (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1310, 1314, 79 C.R.2d 775 [primary assumption of risk did not apply to skiing accident where sign, both by its placement and method of erection, increased dangers inherent to skiing]; Kane v. National Ski Patrol System (2001) 88 C.A.4th 204, 209, 105 C.R.2d 600 [although ski patrol instructor had not properly assessed ability of his students or hazard posed by adjacent canyon, faulty assessment did not rise to level of recklessness needed to find instructor liable for injuries]; Solis v. Kirkwood Resort Co. (2001) 94 C.A.4th 354, 364, 114 C.R.2d 265 [whether ski resort had duty to warn skiers of unmarked ski jumps that it had constructed for race later on day of accident was question of fact; defendant resort failed to prove that injured skier could not prove that alterations were so profound and unforeseeable that duty to warn arose]; Vine v. Bear Valley Ski Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 577, 599, 13 C.R.3d 370 [in action by injured snowboarder against ski resort, trial court erred in failing to give resort's proposed secondary assumption of risk instruction that jury consider, in determining comparative fault, plaintiff's knowing encounter with risk of injury caused by defendant's breach of its duty of care]; 45 Proof of Facts 3d 115 [liability of ski area operator for skiing accident]; 46 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [liability of one skier for collision with another].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Mammoth Mountain Ski Area v. Graham (2006) 135 C.A.4th 1367, 1372, 38 C.R.3d 422 [teenage snowboarder was engaged in snowball fight when he struck instructor, who was standing still at side of ski run; whether conduct in striking ski instructor was so reckless as to be totally outside range of ordinary activity, thereby precluding defense of primary assumption of risk, was factual question that could not be determined by summary judgment]; Souza v. Squaw

Valley Ski Corp. (2006) 138 C.A.4th 262, 266, 41 C.R.3d 389 [child skier's collision with plainly visible aluminum snow-making hydrant located on ski run was risk inherent in sport of skiing, even if ski resort failed to pad hydrant adequately, and thus doctrine of primary assumption of risk barred skier's negligence action against ski resort]; Towns v. Davidson (2007) 147 C.A.4th 461, 468, 470, 54 C.R.3d 568 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied even though person with whom plaintiff collided was ski resort employee, who was coparticipant at time of accident; fact that employee was traveling 25 to 30 mph while practicing slalom technique and turned without looking when he collided with plaintiff did not establish conduct totally outside range of ordinary activity involved in sport of skiing]; 15 A.L.R.6th 161 [snowboarder's liability for injuries to or death of another person].

131 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

8. Other Sports.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1350

[§ 1350] Other Sports.

The distinction between primary and secondary assumption of risk enunciated in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, has been applied to numerous other sports. The following are illustrative:

(1) Golf. (See Morgan v. Fuji Country USA (1995) 34 C.A.4th 127, 130, 40 C.R.2d 249 [golfer primarily assumed risk of being hit by ball of another golfer, but only secondarily assumed risk that defendant golf club owner, by layout of the 4th and 5th holes and removal of trees, would increase risks inherent in golf]; Dilger v. Moyles (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1452, 1454, 63 C.R.2d 591 [primary assumption of risk doctrine protected golfer who hit another golfer with errant ball; getting hit by ball is inherent risk of golfing, and fact that golfing etiquette calls for warning does not create duty towards fellow golfers nor does failure to comply with this rule of etiquette constitute intentional conduct].)

(2) Track and Field. (See Yancey v. Superior Court (1994) 28 C.A.4th 558, 565, 33 C.R.2d 777 [primary assumption of risk doctrine did not apply in action by discus participant who was struck by another discus when she walked onto field to retrieve her own discus; careless conduct of discus player in throwing discus without first ascertaining that target area is clear is not inherent risk of sport].)

(3) Bicycle and Vehicle Racing. (See Branco v. Kearny Moto Park (1995) 37 C.A.4th 184, 189, 43 C.R.2d 392 [whether owner of bicycle motocross course had increased risks inherent in sport by alleged improperly designed jump was question of fact]; Distefano v. Forester (2001) 85 C.A.4th 1249, 1261, 102 C.R.2d 813 [parties were engaged in sport of "off-roading," where ordinary rules of road are inapplicable, and collided at top of blind hill when traveling in opposite directions; no liability under primary assumption of risk doctrine]; Moser v. Ratinoff (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1211, 1219, 130 C.R.2d 198 [that coparticipant will swerve into one's path is risk inherent in sport of bicycle racing].)

(4) Fishing. (See Mosca v. Lichtenwalter (1997) 58 C.A.4th 551, 553, 68 C.R.2d 58 [being struck in eye by sinker as nearby fisherman was attempting to free his line was inherent risk of sportfishing; it was irrelevant that neighboring fisherman used wrong technique to free line].)

(5) Rodeo. (See Domenghini v. Evans (1998) 61 C.A.4th 118, 121, 70 C.R.2d 917 [primary assumption of risk doctrine barred recovery by participant in cattle roundup, described as "sporting event," for injury sustained in wrestling calf to ground].)

(6) Wrestling. (See Lilley v. Elk Grove Unified School Dist. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 939, 942, 80 C.R.2d 638 [student broke arm while being instructed by coach on proper wrestling technique; under primary risk analysis, broken limbs are risk inherent to wrestling, and application of this theory is not precluded by Educ.C. 44807, which imposes on school authorities general duty of supervision].)

(7) Flying. (See Gordon v. Havasu Palms (2001) 93 C.A.4th 244, 249, 112 C.R.2d 816 [airport owner owed duty to pilot to design and maintain airstrip in compliance with applicable regulations; hence, primary assumption of risk doctrine was not applicable, and it did not become applicable merely because flying was dangerous activity and crashes were possible].)

(8) Distance Running. (See Saffro v. Elite Racing (2002) 98 C.A.4th 173, 178, 119 C.R.2d 497 [secondary assumption of risk; race organizer increased risks associated with marathon racing by failing to provide sufficient water and electrolyte replacement drinks].)

(9) Hockey. (See Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club, L.P. (2002) 103 C.A.4th 631, 635, 127 C.R.2d 10 [under primary assumption of risk theory, defendant owed plaintiff no duty to take extraordinary measures (screens) to prevent her from being struck by flying puck; fact that plaintiff's view was temporarily blocked by other spectators is one of risks inherent to watching hockey game].)

(10) Scootering. (See Childs v. Santa Barbara (2004) 115 C.A.4th 64, 68, 8 C.R.3d 823 [record did not establish as matter of law that child injured while riding scooter over uneven sidewalk was engaged in sport covered by primary assumption; scootering may be sport when done as part of contest or to test limits of one's ability, but there was no evidence that child was so engaged when injured].)

(11) Miscellaneous Water Activities. (See Kahn v. East Side Union High School Dist. (2003) 31 C.4th 990, 1002, 4 C.R.3d 103, 75 P.3d 30 [question of fact whether swimming coach increased dangers of team swimming by having novice swimmer execute racing dive into shallow water, even though swimmer was afraid to do so and had had little instruction in technique]; Record v. Reason (1999) 73 C.A.4th 472, 479, 86 C.R.2d 547 [for purposes of primary assumption of risk, tubing (riding inner tube connected to boat) is a sport; fact that plaintiff asked defendant, who was going faster than recommended speed, to slow down did not create cause of action, because negligence was inherent risk of sport that could not be unilaterally changed]; Bunch v. Hoffinger Industries (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1278, 1300, 20 C.R.3d 780 [manufacturer of liner for above-ground shallow pool had duty to provide defect-free product, and by supplying defective product increased risks inherent in sport of shallow pool diving; primary assumption of risk doctrine did not preclude liability].)

There is also extensive commentary involving sports litigation. (See 54 Hastings L. Rev. 1641 [criminal and civil liability of sports co-participants]; 29 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 971 [College Athletics: Testing the Boundaries of Contract and Tort]; 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1029 [analyzing recreational sports injury cases]; 51 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 339 [Rethinking Assumption of Risk and Sports Spectators]; 38 U.S.F. L. Rev. 599 [extreme sports and assumption of risk]; 29 Western State L. Rev. 125; 30 Proof of Facts 3d 161 [assumption of risk defense in sports or recreation injury litigation]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 87 [errant golf ball shots]; 71 Am.Jur. Trials 337 [bicycle litigation]; 89 Am.Jur. Trials 405 [fitness club and health spa injuries]; 34 A.L.R.5th 77 [liability for injury or death of waterskier]; 35 A.L.R.5th 731 [liability insurance policy exclusions for athletic or sports injuries]; 66 A.L.R.5th 1 [liability for accidents occurring in school physical education classes]; 92 A.L.R.5th 473 [liability for skydiving, parachuting, or parasailing accidents].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.565

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Golf. See Shin v. Ahn (2007) 42 C.4th 482, 499, 64 C.R.3d 803, 165 P.3d 581 [summary judgment for golfer in action against another golfer whose tee shot hit plaintiff in head was improper; whether defendant acted recklessly was issue of fact, and evidence did not conclusively establish when plaintiff and defendant made eye contact before defendant hit his shot and how far he was from plaintiff]; Hemady v. Long Beach Unified School Dist. (2006) 143 C.A.4th 566, 576, 49 C.R.3d 464 [being hit in head by golf club is not inherent risk in game of golf; thus, applying prudent person standard of care, rather than limited duty of care applicable to primary assumption of risk doctrine, did not require fundamental alteration of game of golf].

(3) Bicycle and Vehicle Racing. See Huff v. Wilkins (2006) 138 C.A.4th 732, 741, 41 C.R.3d 754 [in negligence action against father and minor son arising from collision of off-road vehicles, defendants were not entitled to summary judgment on ground of primary assumption of risk; defendants failed to show that minor's violation of statute and safety rule placing conditions on operation of all-terrain vehicles by minors did not increase inherent risk of sport of off-roading]. (11) Miscellaneous Water Activities. See Capri v. L.A. Fitness Int., LLC (2006) 136 C.A.4th 1078, 39 C.R.3d 425 [question of material fact whether algae on pool deck was known recreational hazard invoking primary assumption of risk defense precluded summary judgment for fitness club in action by member who slipped and fell on club's pool deck; distinguishing Kahn v. East Side Union High School Dist. (2003) 31 C.4th 990, 4 C.R.3d 103, 75 P.3d 30, text, p. 763]; 44 Cal. Western L. Rev. 557 [tort liability in surfing].

(12) (New) Use of Exercise Equipment. See Zipusch v. LA Workout (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1281, 1291, 66 C.R.3d 704 [health club's alleged negligent inspection and maintenance of exercise equipment, resulting in sticky substance remaining on treadmill for unreasonable length of time, was not inherent risk of exercising at club and did not bar member's negligence action against club for personal injuries sustained on treadmill].

Commentary involving sports litigation: See 37 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1273 [Fine Tuning California's Approach to Injured Participants in Active Sports].

132 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

b. Sports or Recreation.

9. Athletic Instruction.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1351

[§ 1351] Athletic Instruction.

In Tan v. Goddard (1993) 13 C.A.4th 1528, 17 C.R.2d 89, plaintiff, a 26-year-old man who wanted to be a jockey, enrolled in defendant racing school, where he was instructed by defendant D. Approximately 8 months after his enrollment, plaintiff was injured when the horse he was riding, Faraway Falcon, stepped on an object and went down. Immediately prior to this incident, plaintiff had informed D that Faraway Falcon was "off" due to an injury to its left foot, but D had nevertheless instructed plaintiff to jog the horse on the outside portion of the track even though there was a greater concentration of rocks in that location. In plaintiff's subsequent negligence action, defendants moved for summary judgment, arguing that plaintiff had released them from liability by reasonably assuming the risk of the injuries he had suffered. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) Under Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, reasonable implied assumption of the risk may diminish but does not bar recovery. Under Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 C.4th 339, 11 C.R.2d 30, 834 P.2d 724, supra, §1340, the assumption of risk doctrine is a complete bar to a plaintiff's action only where, in view of the nature of the activity at issue and the parties' relationship to that activity, the defendant's conduct did not breach a legal duty of care owed to the plaintiff. (13 C.A.4th 1534.)

(b) Although there are precedents reaching back for most of this century that find an absence of duty between coparticipants in a sports activity and, often, to spectators at sporting events, the law is otherwise as applied to coaches and students. Although coaches are not insurers and students may be held to notice of that which is obvious and to ask appropriate questions, the general rule is that coaches owe a duty of due care to the persons in their charge. (13 C.A.4th 1535.)

(c) Here, D, instead of being a coparticipant in the sport with plaintiff, was charged with teaching him how to ride a horse. It was D who assigned Faraway Falcon to plaintiff, knowing that the horse was "off" due to an injury; it was D who told plaintiff to jog the horse on the outer track; and it was D who knew, or should have known, of the rocky condition of that track. Under these circumstances, D owed plaintiff a duty of ordinary care to ensure that the horse he assigned to plaintiff was safe to ride under the conditions that he prescribed for that activity. And whether D breached that duty is a triable issue of fact. (13 C.A.4th 1535.)

A number of decisions apply the primary assumption of risk doctrine to athletic instruction. (See Galardi v. Seahorse Riding Club (1993) 16 C.A.4th 817, 823, 20 C.R.2d 270 [following Tan; instructor teaching plaintiff horse show jumping had duty to ensure that jumps were not beyond ability of horse or rider]; Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Superior Court (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1040, 1044, 48 C.R.2d 922 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied where student in defendant's rock climbing school was killed in fall when anchor system gave way; risk was inherent in rock climbing and there was no evidence that double-checking work of instructors would have prevented fall]; Bushnell v. Japanese-Amer. Religious & Cultural Center (1996) 43 C.A.4th 525, 529, 50 C.R.2d 671 [under primary assumption of risk doctrine, defendant judo school was not liable for injury received by student, who was merely being urged to learn skill more quickly, an inherent part of judo]; Allan v. Snow Summit (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1358, 1365, 59 C.R.2d 813 [under primary assumption of risk doctrine, ski instruction school was not liable for its instructor's negligence, where dangers faced by plaintiff, i.e., being challenged by instructor to do more, falling down, and slippery conditions, were risks inherent to ski instruction]; Aaris v. Las Virgenes Unified School Dist. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1112, 1117, 75 C.R.2d 801 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applies in action against instructor or coach, as well as coparticipant; cheerleader injured practicing gymnastic stunt was barred by doctrine where inherent danger of stunt was not increased and there was no evidence that defendant took team beyond its level of experience and capability]; Rodrigo v. Koryo Martial Arts (2002) 100 C.A.4th 946, 956, 960, 122 C.R.2d 832 [primary assumption of risk doctrine applied to tae kwon do student who, while in line waiting to kick leather pad, was injured, apparently by another student practicing while waiting; fact that student did not expect to be kicked was irrelevant in determining duty owed by instructor, and instructor did not increase risks when he warned students in line not to practice, but did not supervise to see whether his instructions were being followed].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

133 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

c. Job Performance.

1. Animal Care.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1352

[§ 1352] Animal Care.

In Cohen v. McIntyre (1993) 16 C.A.4th 650, 20 C.R.2d 143, defendant brought her dog, Lobo, to plaintiff veterinarian for a preneutering examination. Lobo had bitten three people in the past 2 years, and defendant believed that neutering would "mellow" him. When Lobo snapped at plaintiff while he was preparing to lift the dog from the floor, plaintiff had defendant muzzle the animal. Plaintiff then performed the preneutering examination, placed Lobo back on the floor, and, without seeking assistance from defendant, removed the muzzle. Lobo promptly bit plaintiff several times. Plaintiff did not ask for, and defendant did not volunteer, any information about whether Lobo had a propensity to bite. In this action, plaintiff alleged that defendant, despite knowing of Lobo's vicious propensities, failed to warn and concealed them from plaintiff. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; defendant had no duty to warn plaintiff.

(a) This case falls within the "primary" category of assumption of the risk referred to in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339. Plaintiff, a licensed veterinarian, was injured during the course of treating an animal under his control, an activity for which he was employed and compensated and one in which the risk of being attacked and bitten is well known. "Thus, this is a classic situation where a defendant's ordinary duty of care is negated due to the nature of the activity and the relationship of the defendant to the plaintiff." (16 C.A.4th 655, citing Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 C.A.3d 709, 211 C.R. 668, infra, §1410, and Willenberg v. Superior Court (1986) 185 C.A.3d 185, 229 C.R. 625, infra, §1410.)

(b) In the sporting context, Knight held that the defendant is liable only for intentional or reckless conduct. Applying this reasoning to the veterinary context, it follows that defendant owed no duty of care to plaintiff unless either she engaged in intentional concealment or misrepresentation, or her conduct was so reckless as to fall totally outside the range of behavior ordinarily expected of those who avail themselves of veterinary services. (16 C.A.4th 655.)

(c) Here, plaintiff did not ask why defendant wanted Lobo neutered, and she had no reason to believe that she needed to tell him. This was particularly so in view of Lobo's display of behavior that was so aggressive that it caused plaintiff to insist that the dog be muzzled. Hence, defendant's silence did not amount to the type of intentional or reckless conduct that would justify an exception to the normal "no duty" rule in a primary assumption of the risk case. (16 C.A.4th 656.)

(d) Relying on Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 362, 182 C.R. 629, 644 P.2d 822, supra, §853, and Von Beltz v. Stuntman (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1467, 255 C.R. 755, supra, §1338, plaintiff argued that this case falls within the exception to the primary assumption of the risk doctrine where the defendant misrepresents or changes the nature of the hazard that is encountered. However, Lipson and Von Beltz do not control here. In both of those cases, the defendants significantly altered the risk without the plaintiff's knowledge, and that type of behavior would logically fall within the reckless or intentional misconduct exception referred to in Knight. Here, however, the risk that Lobo might bite remained the same and was acknowledged by both parties. The only alteration of that risk was brought about by plaintiff when he removed the muzzle at the conclusion of the examination, thereby exposing himself to the very danger against which he had just guarded. (16 C.A.4th 656.) (See Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries (1994) 8 C.4th 532, 545, 34 C.R.2d 630, 882 P.2d 347, supra, §850 ["veterinarian's rule" is on shaky ground to extent that it rests on veterinarian's subjective acceptance of foreseeable occupational hazard of dog bites; however, it may be sound if based on defendant-veterinarian relationship, and defendant's conduct in entrusting animal to veterinarian]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 133 [assumption of risk as defense in dog bite case].) (On veterinarian's assumption of risk as defense to strict liability for injuries caused by dog, see infra, §1410.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

134 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

c. Job Performance.

2. Medicine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1353

[§ 1353] Medicine.

In Herrle v. Estate of Marshall (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1761, 53 C.R.2d 713, plaintiff, a nurse's aide in a convalescent hospital, was struck by a patient who suffered from senile dementia and Alzheimer's disease. Plaintiff sued the patient's estate, and the trial court ruled for defendant. Held, affirmed; the primary assumption of risk doctrine barred plaintiff from recovery.

(a) The situation here is precisely that covered under the primary assumption of risk doctrine. Plaintiff was engaged as an aide in a convalescent hospital to assume responsibility to care for mentally incompetent patients, many of whom are occasionally violent. The decedent was placed specifically in the hospital's care in part to protect her from injuring herself and others because of her violent tendencies. In the words of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339: "The nature of the activity" was the protection of the patient from doing harm to herself or others; "the parties' relationship to the activity" was plaintiff's professional responsibility to provide this protection, and the "particular risk of harm that caused the injury" was the very risk plaintiff and her employer were hired to prevent. (45 C.A.4th 1765.)

(b) Plaintiff argues that C.C. 41, imposing civil liability on mentally incompetent persons for their tortious acts (supra, §§25, 26), precludes assertion of an assumption of risk defense. The short answer to this argument is that C.C. 41 is intended to place the incompetent person in the same posture as the competent person, not in a legally worse position. Where no duty exists in the first place, C.C. 41 does not create one. The doctrine of primary assumption of risk is available to the incompetent as well as the competent. (45 C.A.4th 1766.)

(c) Because of the nature of the activity (caring for the mentally infirm) and the relationship between the parties (patient and caregiver), mentally incompetent patients should not owe a legal duty to protect caregivers from injuries suffered in attending to them. It is the health care provider, not the patient, who is in the best position to protect against the risks to the provider rooted in the very reason for treatment. (45 C.A.4th 1770.) Furthermore, the caregiver is covered for work-related injuries by workers' compensation. (45 C.A.4th 1771.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

135 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

c. Job Performance.

3. Public or Private Safety.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1354

[§ 1354] Public or Private Safety.

In Donohue v. San Francisco Housing Authority (1993) 16 C.A.4th 658, 20 C.R.2d 148, plaintiff firefighter conducted an unannounced fire safety inspection of an apartment building owned by defendant housing authority (SFHA). The building consisted of three floors with a flight of concrete stairs leading from the third floor to a penthouse door, which opened out onto the roof. These steps were wet, a condition that plaintiff noticed, and they did not have skid-resistant treads on them. As part of his inspection, plaintiff climbed the stairway to see if the penthouse door was open, as required by the fire code. While descending the stairway, plaintiff slipped and fell. In this action to recover for injuries plaintiff suffered in the fall, defendant moved for summary judgment based on the theory that plaintiff's recovery was barred by either the firefighter's rule or traditional common law assumption of risk. Without specifying the ground for his ruling, the trial judge granted the motion. Held, reversed; this case falls within the secondary assumption of the risk category specified in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, and defendant breached the duty of care that it owed to plaintiff. (On rejection of the firefighter rule defense, see supra, §855.)

(a) "After Knight, whether a plaintiff's cause of action is barred by assumption of the risk or is a mere variant of contributory negligence no longer turns on the reasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct or his or her subjective awareness of the nature and magnitude of the danger. ... Instead, the central question is whether, in light of the nature of the activity and relationship of the parties, the defendant breached a duty of care toward the plaintiff or had no duty to remedy the danger which the plaintiff confronted. If the former, the defense is subsumed by comparative negligence principles and the claim survives. If the latter, the defense presents an absolute bar to the claim." (16 C.A.4th 664.)

(b) Here, defendant, as a landowner, owed a general duty to tenants and visitors to maintain its premises in reasonably safe condition. Defendant breached this duty. "Evidence was submitted showing that the concrete stairs had been heavily watered down just prior to plaintiff's visit and lacked skid-resistant treading, which might have increased traction and prevented the accident. From this evidence a jury could conclude that SFHA breached its duty of care owed toward plaintiff. Plaintiff's conduct in proceeding to traverse the stairs despite full appreciation of the risk created by such negligence was no more than a species of contributory negligence, to be considered by the jury in apportioning comparative fault." (16 C.A.4th 665, citing Prescott v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (1954) 42 C.2d 158, 265 P.2d 904, supra, §1282.)

(c) Defendant's reliance on Danieley v. Goldmine Ski Associates (1990) 218 C.A.3d 111, 266 C.R. 749, supra, §1126, for the proposition that plaintiff's action is barred by the "obvious hazard" rule, is unavailing. In holding that a ski resort was not liable for injuries suffered when a skier collided with an off-course tree, Danieley made it clear that its holding was based on the sports setting of the case and the fact that collision with an off-course tree is one of the inherent risks that skiers accept when they engage in the sport. Hence, unlike the present case, Danieley is an instance where the absence of duty is traceable to the nature of the activity involved, i.e., it is a primary assumption of risk case. (16 C.A.4th 665.) (See Marquez v. Mainframe (1996) 42 C.A.4th 881, 885, 50 C.R.2d 34 [private security guard injured in slip and fall was not barred by primary assumption of risk, though job duties included looking for safety hazards].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

136 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

c. Job Performance.

4. Other Jobs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1355

[§ 1355] Other Jobs.

In Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 C.A.4th 547, 19 C.R.2d 24, plaintiff was an experienced glazier who was injured on the job while using a drill manufactured by defendant. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was on a ladder, and drilling through angle iron. He was holding the drill with only one hand, although the instructions provided by defendant cautioned users to keep the other hand on the drill's side handle. When the drill hung up and stopped, the body rotated in a counter-clockwise direction, causing plaintiff to fall from the ladder. Plaintiff was familiar with both the instruction concerning use of the side handle and the tendency of drills manufactured by defendant to "bind up" while drilling through iron. Plaintiff's complaint included a products liability cause of action, and defendant moved for summary adjudication establishing that the cause of action was barred by the defense of assumption of risk. The motion was denied. Held, this was correct; under the duty analysis set forth in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, which is applicable to a products liability action, defendant failed to meet the burden of showing that it owed no legal duty to plaintiff.

(a) Although a strict products liability cause of action need not be pleaded in terms of classic negligence elements, i.e., duty, breach, causation, and damages, the cause of action is based on the manufacturer's breach of its duty to provide consumers with defect-free products. In view of this functional similarity between negligence theory and strict products liability insofar as duty and breach are concerned, there is no reason prohibiting application of the Knight duty analysis here, even though Knight and its companion case, Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 C.4th 339, 11 C.R.2d 30, 834 P.2d 724, supra, §1340, discussed assumption of risk as it applied to a complaint sounding in negligence. (15 C.A.4th 559.)

(b) The determination whether the defendant owes a legal duty to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk of harm requires an examination of (1) the nature of the activity in which the defendant is engaged; and (2) the relationship of the defendant and the plaintiff to that activity. (15 C.A.4th 561.)

(c) With respect to the nature of the activity, plaintiff alleged that the activity that injured him was defendant's production of a defective product, and claimed that defendant should be held strictly liable for those injuries. "We find nothing in the nature of the manufacturing activity to indicate that a finding of no duty on the manufacturer's part should be made. To the contrary, we believe there is a sound basis in the development of strict products liability doctrine to support analysis of a products liability case, even one involving an assertion of assumption of the risk, in terms of a duty on the part of the manufacturer to produce defect-free products." (15 C.A.4th 562.)

(d) With respect to the relationship of the parties to the activity, there is nothing to support the theory that defendant was relieved of its duty toward plaintiff because the risk of injury from a defective tool is one that is inherent in a worker's job. "In the relationship of the defendant and the plaintiff to the activity, the use of the tool, it cannot be said that the plaintiff user undertook to act as a product tester or guinea pig. In other words, those defendants in primary assumption of the risk cases who have been found not to owe any duty to an injured plaintiff (for example, a negligent person who started a fire or an owner of a dangerous dog) are in a different position than is a manufacturer of a tool which ultimately causes injury to its user, because the user was not necessarily a professional employed to confront the very danger posed by the injury-causing agent." (15 C.A.4th 563.)

(e) Because defendant failed to meet its burden, as the moving party, to show the absence of a legal duty toward plaintiff, this is a case of secondary assumption of risk and is inappropriate for summary judgment. Plaintiff's assumption of the risk is merged into the comparative fault scheme so that the trier of fact may consider the relative responsibility of the parties in apportioning the loss and damage resulting from the injury. (15 C.A.4th 565.) (See Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1218, 1232, 63 C.R.2d 422 [whether manufacturer of deck gun had duty to user was question of fact; as matter of law, injury allegedly caused by defectively designed tool is not risk that is inherent to worker's job]; Rosenbloom v. Hanour Corp. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1477, 1479, 78 C.R.2d 686 [under primary assumption of risk doctrine, defendant club was not liable for shark bite sustained by employee hired to handle sharks]; Hamilton v. Martinelli & Associates (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1012, 1021, 2 C.R.3d 168 [correctional officer, who was injured while performing training maneuver during required course, was prevented by primary assumption of risk doctrine from recovering from instructor; doctrine applied because officer was hired to confront very risks that caused her injury, i.e., restraining violent juvenile offender].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Patterson v. Sacramento City Unified School Dist. (2007) 155 C.A.4th 821, 837, 66 C.R.3d 337 [primary assumption of risk did not bar action by student in adult truck driver training course against school district for injury suffered while loading bleachers onto flat-bed trailer; loading trailer was not inherently dangerous activity, student was not employee covered by workers' compensation or by other insurance, and district's failure to properly supervise loading was conduct that public policy desired to chill].

137 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

E. Comparative Negligence: Assumption of Risk as Contributory Negligence.

4. Primary Versus Secondary Assumption of Risk.

d. Miscellaneous Activities.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1356

[§ 1356] Miscellaneous Activities.

(1) Dog Bite. In Davis v. Gaschler (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1392, 14 C.R.2d 679, plaintiff, an experienced breeder and handler of dogs, stopped his vehicle to render assistance to two persons who were attempting to lift an injured dog into their car. While rendering this aid, plaintiff was bitten. Because the dog had not been vaccinated against rabies and the initial tests on the animal were equivocal, plaintiff underwent a series of inoculations for rabies. In this action against defendant owners, the trial judge granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's reasonable implied assumption of risk barred recovery. Held, reversed.

(a) Defendants, as the moving parties, had the burden of establishing the absence of any basis for recovery under plaintiff's causes of action for negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Under Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, this means that they had the burden of showing that this is a case of primary assumption of risk, i.e., that, by virtue of the nature of the activity and the parties' relationship to it, defendants owed no legal duty to plaintiff. Defendants failed to meet this burden. (11 C.A.4th 1398.)

(b) Plaintiff's complaint alleged facts sufficient to impose a duty on the part of defendants, i.e., that they owned and negligently controlled the dog that bit plaintiff. This duty is found in C.C. 3342(a) (infra, §§1408, 1409), which imposes on a dog owner liability for damages suffered by a person bitten by the dog while in a public place. This statute was not designed merely to prevent dogs from doing harm while they rove but to prevent dogs from becoming a hazard to the community without regard to whether they are running free or restrained. And plaintiff's voluntary act of helping the injured dog did not remove her from the class of persons to be protected by the statute. (11 C.A.4th 1399.)

(c) A duty of care to plaintiff is also found in former Health & Saf.C. 1920 (now Health & Saf.C. 121690), which requires every owner of a dog over the age of 4 months to have the dog vaccinated against rabies at prescribed intervals. Defendants do not dispute that their dog was over 4 months old when it bit plaintiff and that it had not been vaccinated against rabies. Defendant also failed to show that a violation of the rabies laws would not give rise to a presumption of breach of a duty of care in this case. (11 C.A.4th 1400.)

(d) Defendants' argument that they should prevail because of the veterinarian's rule, which is kindred to the firefighter's rule, is without merit. Under either rule, the absence of duty is based on the fact that the plaintiff is employed and compensated for work that carries with it certain hazards. Here, however, plaintiff was not employed or otherwise compensated for helping injured dogs. Nor was there an employment relationship or any other relationship between plaintiff and defendants. (11 C.A.4th 1401.) (On veterinarian's rule, see supra, §1352.)

(2) Slip and Fall. In Curties v. Hill Top Developers (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1651, 18 C.R.2d 445, plaintiff, a tenant in defendant's apartment complex, was injured when he slipped and fell on a sloping lawn on defendant's property. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was taking the trash to a Dumpster located behind his apartment and was using the route that he normally took. Several witnesses testified that the sloping lawn was heavily used and dangerous, and that this condition had been reported to defendant's manager. In plaintiff's action to recover for his injuries, the jury found that defendant's negligence was the legal cause of plaintiff's injuries but that plaintiff had assumed the risk of those injuries. Accordingly, the trial judge entered judgment for defendant. Held, reversed; the doctrine of implied assumption of risk does not apply under these facts.

(a) The "duty analysis" employed in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, supra, §1339, "is based upon a distinction between (1) the situation where the assumption of risk doctrine embodies a legal conclusion that there is no duty on the part of the defendant to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk, known as 'primary assumption of risk,' and (2) the situation where the defendant owes a duty of care to the plaintiff but the plaintiff knowingly encounters a risk of injury caused by the defendant's breach of that duty, known as 'secondary assumption of risk.' " Primary assumption of risk is not merged into the comparative negligence system; secondary assumption of risk is. (14 C.A.4th 1655.)

(b) This case falls within the secondary assumption of risk category. Defendant, as a property owner or manager, was required to use due care to eliminate dangerous conditions on its property in order to avoid exposing tenants such as plaintiff to unreasonable risks of harm. The evidence supports a conclusion that defendant breached its duty by maintaining the sloping lawn configuration, despite reports that persons had fallen on it. (14 C.A.4th 1656.)

(c) Based on evidence that plaintiff chose to traverse the sloping lawn regularly despite knowing that it was slippery, defendant argued that plaintiff had agreed to relieve defendant of any obligation of reasonable conduct toward him. This argument is without merit. In determining whether the assumption of risk applies under the Knight duty approach, the focus is not on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of plaintiff's conduct. Instead, it is on whether, in light of the nature of the activity in which the parties were involved, defendant's conduct breached a legal duty of care to plaintiff. (14 C.A.4th 1656.) Thus, the case is remanded with instructions to conduct a partial retrial on the issues of the degree of defendant's negligence, plaintiff's comparative fault, if any, and damages, if any. (14 C.A.4th 1657.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) (New) Fitness Training. In Rostai v. Neste Enterprises (2006) 138 C.A.4th 326, 41 C.R.3d 411, plaintiff, a 46-year-old man who was overweight and out of shape, asked defendant S, a personal trainer, to make him look "buff." Defendant S agreed and took plaintiff to defendant gym, which, for a fee, allowed defendant S to use the gym facilities to train his clients. In their first training session, defendant S had plaintiff engage in several rigorous activities, and when plaintiff complained of being tired, defendant urged and taunted him to continue. As a result, plaintiff had a heart attack. He sued both defendants, who moved for summary judgment on the ground of primary assumption of risk. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Contrary to plaintiff's contention that the primary assumption of risk doctrine applies only to sports, the doctrine applies to any physical activity that involves an element of risk or danger as an integral part of the activity. "Fitness training under the guidance of a personal trainer is such an activity. The obvious purpose of working out with a personal trainer is to improve physical fitness and appearance. In order to accomplish that goal, the participant must engage in strenuous physical activity. ... Stress on the cardiovascular system as a result of the physical exertion that is an integral part of fitness training with a personal trainer is a risk inherent in the activity. Eliminating that risk would alter the fundamental nature of the activity." (138 C.A.4th 333.)

(b) It is not enough to determine that physical stress and injury are inherent risks of working out. It is also necessary to consider the role of defendant S in relation to that activity. Although plaintiff phrased his claim against defendant S in terms of failing to adequately assess plaintiff's physical condition, the essence of plaintiff's claim was that defendant S, in his capacity as plaintiff's personal fitness trainer, challenged plaintiff to perform beyond his level of physical ability and fitness. That challenge, however, is the very essence of fitness training, and is precisely the reason that one would pay for the services of a personal trainer. Inherent in that process are the risks that the trainer will not accurately assess the participant's ability and that the participant will suffer injury as a result. (138 C.A.4th 334.)

(c) In order to state a cause of action against a personal fitness trainer, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the trainer acted with intent to cause injury or that the trainer acted recklessly in that the conduct was totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in personal fitness training. In this case, plaintiff did neither. The evidence established that at most defendant S did not accurately assess plaintiff's level of physical fitness and that he might have interpreted plaintiff's physical complaints as the usual signs of physical exertion due to lack of conditioning rather than as symptoms of a heart attack. There was no evidence that defendant S acted recklessly or with intention to harm. (138 C.A.4th 335.)

(d) Defendant gym is not vicariously liable to plaintiff, because defendant S himself did not owe a duty of due care to plaintiff. With respect to direct liability, defendant gym, as the provider of the venue in which the physical activity of fitness training took place, did not have a duty to eliminate the risks inherent in that activity. Defendant gym's duty did not extend beyond ensuring that its equipment was in safe, working order. (138 C.A.4th 336, and footnote 3.)

138 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
1. In General.
a. Adoption of Doctrine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1357

[§ 1357] Adoption of Doctrine.

In American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, plaintiff Glen, a teenage boy, was a participant in a cross-country motorcycle race for novices sponsored by defendants AMA (American Motorcycle Association) and Viking (Viking Motorcycle Club). He suffered serious injuries and sued AMA and Viking, alleging that they negligently failed to give the novice participants reasonable instructions necessary for their safety, failed to segregate the entrants into reasonable classes of equivalently skilled participants, and failed to limit the entry of participants to prevent the racecourse from becoming overcrowded and hazardous. AMA filed an answer denying the allegations of negligence and setting up the affirmative defense of plaintiff's negligence.

Thereafter, AMA sought leave to file a cross-complaint against Glen's parents, alleging that they knew that the sport was dangerous, were fully aware of the training he had received, and directly participated in his decision to enter the race by signing a parental consent form; that in permitting him to participate, they negligently failed to exercise their power of supervision over him; and that AMA's negligence, if any, was "passive" and that of the parents was "active." The cross-complaint sought indemnity from the parents if AMA were found liable to Glen. An additional count of the cross-complaint asked for a declaration of the "allocable negligence" of the parents in order that any damages awarded against AMA might be reduced by the percentage of damages allocable to the parents' negligence. The trial judge denied leave to file the cross-complaint, the Court of Appeal issued mandamus, and the Supreme Court ordered a hearing on its own motion. Held, writ granted to compel leave to file.

(a) Partial indemnity among concurrent tortfeasors.

(1) The allocation of damages among multiple tortfeasors has historically been analyzed in terms of two mutually exclusive doctrines, contribution and indemnification. But the common goal of both doctrines--the equitable distribution of loss among multiple tortfeasors--calls for a reexamination of the twin concepts. (20 C.3d 592.)

(2) The 1957 contribution statute forecloses any evolution of the California common law contribution doctrine beyond its pre-1957 "no contribution" rule. Hence, in the past two decades, common law developments have been channeled through the equitable indemnity doctrine, as an exception to the no contribution rule. (20 C.3d 592, 593.) However, because common law precepts precluded any attempt to ascertain comparative fault, "equitable indemnity, like the contributory negligence doctrine, developed as an all-or-nothing proposition." (20 C.3d 594.)

(3) Throughout the long history of the equitable indemnity doctrine, the courts struggled to find a linguistic formulation to determine relative culpability sufficiently disparate to warrant placing the entire loss on one party. The struggle was largely futile; the formulations (active, primary, or positive, and passive, secondary, or negative) were artificial and lacking in objective criteria. (20 C.3d 594, 595.) And some courts and commentators "have candidly eschewed any pretense of an objectively definable equitable indemnity test," concluding that indemnity may be allowed "where in equity and good conscience" the burden should be shifted. (20 C.3d 595.)

(4) The difficulty with equitable indemnity is not a question of terminology, but rather the all-or-nothing nature of the doctrine itself. Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl (1971) 71 C.A.3d 694, 98 C.R. 702, supra, §116, urging adoption of a rule of contribution or partial indemnification, recognized that the common law was capable of evolving the equitable indemnity doctrine into a rule permitting the equitable sharing of loss between multiple tortfeasors. (20 C.3d 597.) And the New York Court of Appeals, in Dole v. Dow Chemical Co. (1972) and Kelly v. Long Island Lighting Co. (1972) took this step by modifying the traditional indemnity doctrine to permit one tortfeasor to obtain partial indemnification from another on the basis of comparative fault. (20 C.3d 597, 598.) Other courts have done the same. (20 C.3d 599.)

(5) Pursuant to the basic principle laid down in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, "the current equitable indemnity rule should be modified to permit a concurrent tortfeasor to obtain partial indemnity from other concurrent tortfeasors on a comparative fault basis." (20 C.3d 599.)

(b) Contribution statutes do not bar adoption of comparative partial indemnity rule. The contention that C.C.P. 875 et seq., the contribution statutes, preclude this judicial development is unsound:

(1) The New York court in Dole, supra, adopted a similar partial indemnity rule despite the existence of a comparable statutory contribution scheme. (20 C.3d 601.) And the legislative history of the California statute contains no suggestion that the Legislature intended to foreclose future judicial developments that further the principal purpose of ameliorating the harshness of the no contribution rule. (20 C.3d 602.) Moreover, the California statute, unlike that of New York, expressly preserves the right of indemnity, stating that the right of contribution shall be subordinate to it. (20 C.3d 602; see C.C.P. 875(f), supra, §105.)

(2) California's statute, again unlike New York's, states that the right of contribution "shall be administered in accordance with the principles of equity." The Legislature "obviously intended the judiciary to elaborate" on these principles, and thus did not intend to curtail judicial discretion in expanding the common law equitable indemnity doctrine so as to apportion damages among multiple tortfeasors. (20 C.3d 603.)

(3) The alternative argument is that adoption of a comparative indemnity doctrine would undermine the legislative policy encouraging settlement, expressed in C.C.P. 877, discharging from liability a tortfeasor who enters into a good faith settlement. This is not true; the policy should be preserved as an integral part of the partial indemnity doctrine: Although C.C.P. 877 by its terms, releases a settling tortfeasor only from liability for contribution and not partial indemnity, "from a realistic perspective the legislative policy underlying the provision dictates that a tortfeasor who has entered into a 'good faith' settlement ... must also be discharged from any claim for partial or comparative indemnity that may be pressed by a concurrent tortfeasor." (20 C.3d 604.)

(c) Cross-complaint for partial indemnity. AMA is entitled to cross-complain against Glen's parents to obtain partial indemnification, for if they were in fact negligent as alleged, they could be held liable for the resulting damages. (20 C.3d 608.)

(1) Under Roylance v. Doelger (1962) 57 C.2d 255, 19 C.R. 7, 368 P.2d 535, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1082, and its codification in C.C.P. 428.10 and 428.20, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§1097, 1098, a defendant may cross-complain for indemnity against a person not named in the complaint. (20 C.3d 605, 606.)

(2) The objection that this will complicate the litigation and deprive the plaintiff of the asserted "right" to control the size and scope of the proceeding is answered by Roylance and C.C.P. 1048(b): The court in its discretion may order a separate trial of the cause of action asserted by the cross-complaint. (20 C.3d 606; see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §338.)

(3) In exercising its discretion, the court must consider the fact that each third party cross-defendant may litigate the question of the plaintiff's proportionate fault, and that in this event, severance may not be an attractive alternative. But in view of the fact that a plaintiff's recovery should be diminished only by the proportion that his or her negligence bears to that of all tortfeasors, a defendant who may be jointly and severally liable for all the damages should be permitted to bring other concurrent tortfeasors into the suit. (20 C.3d 607.)

(4) There are some exceptions to the general rule laid down here. (a) When an employee is injured in the scope of employment, Lab.C. 3864 would normally preclude a third party tortfeasor from obtaining indemnification from the employer, even if the employer's negligence was a concurrent cause. (20 C.3d 607, footnote 9, citing E.B. Wills Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 C.A.3d 650, 128 C.R. 541, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §102.) (b) A partial indemnification claim cannot properly be brought against a concurrent tortfeasor who has entered into a good faith settlement with the plaintiff. (20 C.3d 607, footnote 9.)

A single justice dissented. (See 30 Hastings L. J. 1464 [Report to Joint Committee of Legislature on Problems of American Motorcycle]; 12 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 179 [Comparative Fault and Intentional Torts]; 14 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 775 [comparative fault and insolvent defendant]; 10 Pacific L. J. 729 [Settlements After Li: But is it "Fair"?]; 14 Pacific L. J. 835 [Extending the Fairness Principle of Li and American Motorcycle: Adoption of the Uniform Comparative Fault Act]; 18 Pacific L. J. 201 [indemnity in California after American Motorcycle]; 6 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1 [allocation of responsibility after American Motorcycle]; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 833; 19 San Diego L. Rev. 773 [effect of comparative fault on California contribution and indemnification rights]; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 779 [Contribution and Indemnity Collide With Comparative Negligence--The New Doctrine of Equitable Indemnity]; 53 A.L.R.3d 184 [contribution or indemnity between joint tortfeasors on basis of relative fault].)

In Ventura v. Camarillo (1978) 80 C.A.3d 1019, 144 C.R. 296, the court referred to recent holdings on limited retroactivity of decisions establishing new rules (80 C.A.3d 1023), and concluded that the law of equitable indemnification should be applied retroactively under the formula of Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542. (80 C.A.3d 1024.) (See Safeway Stores v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 C.3d 322, 333, 146 C.R. 550, 579 P.2d 441, infra, §1360; Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. International Harvester Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 492, 495, 147 C.R. 262, footnote 1.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(10)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Roylance case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1156.

Codification of Roylance case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§1171, 1172.

Separate trial:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §377. Correction: Page 774, line 3 of paragraph (4), the citation for Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl should be 21 C.A.3d 694.

139 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
1. In General.
b. No Apportionment Among Defendants.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1358

[§ 1358] No Apportionment Among Defendants.

In Klemme v. Hoag Memorial Hosp. Presbyterian (1980) 103 C.A.3d 640, 163 C.R. 109, plaintiff sued a hospital and two doctors for malpractice. The hospital settled with her and was dismissed as a party defendant. At the conclusion of the trial, at plaintiff's request and over defendants' objections, special verdict forms were given the jury to determine the proportion of negligence attributable to all persons involved; and the jury percentages were plaintiff 5%, defendant Dr. B 27%, defendant Dr. E 3%, and "other persons" 65%. Held, this was error (although not prejudicial in the present case). The proportionate fault of defendant doctors and the hospital, among themselves, was not in issue, and plaintiff had no legitimate interest in having the jury determine it. As concurrent tortfeasors, defendants were jointly and severally liable for the entire judgment. They may have had claims for partial indemnity among themselves, but they were not required to litigate them in the main action or at all. (103 C.A.3d 644.)

Under the Uniform Comparative Fault Act §2(a)(2) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123), the trial judge must instruct the jury to answer special interrogatories (in the absence of a jury, the findings must be made by the judge) indicating the percentage of fault of each of the parties, including the defendant, as well as any third-party defendants and persons who have been released from liability.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §2(a)(2), 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 135.

140 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
1. In General.
c. Where One Defendant Is Judgment Proof.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1359

[§ 1359] Where One Defendant Is Judgment Proof.

(1) Shortfall. In Paradise Valley Hosp. v. Schlossman (1983) 143 C.A.3d 87, 191 C.R. 531, Mr. and Mrs. M sued P Hospital and Doctors L and S for negligence. The verdict was for $ 1.5 million and liability was apportioned as follows: hospital 10%, Dr. L 40%, Dr. S 50%. The hospital paid two-thirds of the judgment, Dr. L paid the remaining one-third, and Dr. S filed a petition for bankruptcy. The hospital sought contribution against Dr. L for the difference between the amount it paid and the amount due as derived from the ratio of responsibility, i.e., one-fourth. On a review of the case law and law review commentary and Restatement of Restitution §85, Comment h, the court concluded that this approach was correct: "[W]here there is a fault-free plaintiff, any shortfall should be shared by the solvent defendants in proportion to their relative proportionate degree of culpability." (143 C.A.3d 91.) (See Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1172, 221 C.R. 675.)

The same conclusion was reached in Ambriz v. Kress (1983) 148 C.A.3d 963, 196 C.R. 417, involving a plaintiff who was also a cross-defendant; the court held that she, along with other solvent defendants, should share in the shortfall caused by an insolvent defendant. The reasoning of Paradise Valley Hosp. "should apply to all defendants, including any cross-defendant who, fortuitously, happens to be a plaintiff." (148 C.A.3d 969.)

In Lyly & Sons Trucking Co. v. California (1983) 147 C.A.3d 353, 195 C.R. 116, the Paradise Valley Hosp. formula was applied where the shortfall involved the judgment proof status of a settling defendant. The settling defendant was 50% at fault, two solvent defendants were 10% and 40% at fault, and the total net damages were $ 875,000. The 40%-at-fault defendant, who had paid the entire damages, sought indemnity from the 10%-at-fault defendant, and the trial judge determined that this defendant's liability should be limited to 10%, i.e., $ 87,500. Held, this was error. As between the two solvent defendants, they should share liability on a ratio of 1 to 4. Hence, the defendant who was 10% at fault was liable for 20% of the damages, i.e., $ 175,000. (147 C.A.3d 356.)

(2) Overpayment. In Bracket v. California (1986) 180 C.A.3d 1171, 226 C.R. 1, the formula applied in the shortfall cases was applied to an overpayment by a settling defendant. As the result of a motor vehicle accident, G settled with plaintiff for $ 350,000. At trial against B, the jury awarded plaintiff $ 2.5 million, and B satisfied the remainder of the judgment, i.e., $ 2.15 million. In B's indemnity action against the state, the percentages of fault were determined to be: G 5%; B 85%; and the state 10%. The trial judge decided that after subtracting the amount of the settlement, B and the state should share in the judgment in proportion to their fault. Hence, judgment was entered for B for $ 226,315.66, computed by subtracting $ 350,000 from $ 2.5 million and multiplying by 10/95. Held, this was correct.

(a) The $ 2.15 million paid by B was $ 25,000 more than it would have paid solely on the basis of its comparative fault (85% of $ 2.5 million). Hence, the state argued that its liability to B should be limited by this amount. However, this solution would be palpably inequitable. It would allow the state to receive the entire benefit of G's overpayment, while ultimately contributing a much smaller percentage than the 10% attributed to it by the jury, while B would continue to be liable for a full 85% share of the loss. (180 C.A.3d 1175.)

(b) By crediting both parties with the amount of the settlement and then apportioning the remainder of the judgment according to their comparative fault, the trial judge followed the directive of American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, "to achieve wherever possible an equitable sharing of the loss among joint tortfeasors on a comparative fault basis." (180 C.A.3d 1177.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(10)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

141 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES

F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.

2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.

a. Where Indemnitor Is Strictly Liable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1360

[§ 1360] Where Indemnitor Is Strictly Liable.

In Safeway Stores v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 C.3d 322, 146 C.R. 550, 579 P.2d 441, plaintiff E was injured in a Safeway supermarket when her shopping cart broke and fell on her foot. She sued Safeway (owner of the cart) and Nest-Kart (manufacturer of the cart) on theories of strict liability and negligence. The jury returned a verdict for $ 25,000 against both defendants, with special findings that (a) Safeway was liable on both negligence and strict liability; (b) Nest-Kart was liable solely on strict liability; and (c) Safeway's comparative fault was 80% and Nest-Kart's 20%. Safeway satisfied the judgment, and moved for contribution from Nest-Kart, seeking a 50-50 apportionment under the general contribution provisions of C.C.P. 875 and 876 (supra, §105 et seq.). The trial judge expressed the view that "common sense" called for an apportionment based on the percentage of fault, but that he lacked the power to apportion; he granted Safeway's motion, ordering Nest-Kart to pay 50%. Held, reversed; apportionment on comparative fault should be made.

(a) Apportionment between strictly liable and negligent defendants.

(1) The traditional approach made apportionment among multiple tortfeasors solely an issue of contribution. American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, changed the rule and permits apportionment on a comparative fault basis. (21 C.3d 328.)

(2) The comparative indemnity doctrine recognized in American Motorcycle as a basis for apportioning liability among negligent tortfeasors may properly be applied where liability of one or more derives from strict liability. The fundamental failing of the traditional indemnity doctrine was as apparent in cases involving strict products liability as in negligence cases; and in Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl (1971) 71 C.A.3d 694, 98 C.R. 702, supra, §116, a products liability case prominently relied on in American Motorcycle, the court declared that a wise rule of law would allow partial indemnification. "[E]ven in cases in which one or more tortfeasor's liability rests on the principle of strict liability, fairness and other tort policies, such as deterrence of dangerous conduct or encouragement of accident-reducing behavior, frequently call for an apportionment of liability among multiple tortfeasors. Indeed, the instant case itself provides another apt example of such an instance, for here the jury evidently concluded that while the defectiveness of the shopping cart partially caused the accident, the primary fault for the accident lay with Safeway because of its negligent failure properly to maintain the cart in safe working condition." (21 C.3d 330.)

(3) Apportionment in this situation has been attacked on the theory that there is no basis for comparing relative fault of a negligent defendant with that of a defendant whose liability rests on the "no fault" concept of strict product liability. But as Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 741, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542, explains, the difficulties are more theoretical than practical, and experience in other jurisdictions demonstrates that juries are competent to apply comparative fault principles between negligent and strictly liable defendants. (21 C.3d 331.)

(4) A contrary conclusion would place the negligent manufacturer in a better position than one free from negligence: The negligent manufacturer would be permitted to shift the bulk of liability to more negligent tortfeasors. (21 C.3d 332.) Because the jury found Safeway itself negligent, there is no reason to consider whether the comparative indemnity doctrine should be applied where a party's liability is entirely derivative or vicarious. (21 C.3d 332, footnote 5.)

(b) Retroactivity of decision. The case was tried before the decision in American Motorcycle. In Daly, it was held that retroactive application would unfairly undermine many litigants' reasonable reliance on pre-Daly law. The situation here is different. Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329, put multiple defendants on notice that apportionment of their liability might ultimately be grounded on comparative fault principles, and unlike Daly, where Horn v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 359, 366, 131 C.R. 78, 551 P.2d 398, infra, §1449, intervened after Li, no post-Li decision had reaffirmed the vitality of the pre-Li equitable indemnity doctrine prior to American Motorcycle. And because trial courts have used special verdicts as advised in Li, in many cases, special findings will have been made allocating responsibility among multiple defendants. Hence, appellant Nest-Kart should be accorded the benefit of American Motorcycle's equitable indemnity doctrine. (21 C.3d 333, 334.)

Two justices dissented. (See McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 1005, 1022, 147 C.R. 694 [following Safeway Stores]; Gentry Const. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 177, 181, 260 C.R. 421 [applying principles stated in Safeway Stores to situation involving two strictly liable tortfeasors]; Yamaha Motor Corp., U.S.A. v. Paseman (1990) 219 C.A.3d 958, 971, 268 C.R. 514 [in action by victim injured while riding defective moped, manufacturer could file cross-complaint for comparative indemnity against victim's parents based on their negligent failure to maintain and repair]; 6 Pepperdine L. Rev. 571; 19 Santa Clara L. Rev. 497.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 780, third line on page, the citation for Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl should be 21 C.A.3d 694.

142 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
b. Where Indemnitor Is Not Joined in Original Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1361

[§ 1361] Where Indemnitor Is Not Joined in Original Action.

In GEM Developers v. Hallcraft Homes of San Diego (1989) 213 C.A.3d 419, 261 C.R. 626, Hallcraft, the owner of land, had it mass-graded and filled, and hired architects and engineers to draw up plans and construct condominiums. It then sold the graded land and drawings to Clearwater, which transferred to Bicentennial, which transferred to defendant GEM. GEM's engineers tested the soil, their landscape subcontractors fine-graded it, and their construction contractors built condominiums that were sold to the public. Plaintiff Bonita, the condominium owners association, sued GEM and others on the theory of strict liability for damages due to soil subsidence. Hallcraft was not named in the complaint, and GEM cross-complained against Hallcraft and others for equitable indemnity. In plaintiff Bonita's action, the judge awarded damages of over $ 3 million plus costs. It did not resolve the issues of GEM's cross-complaint. GEM's insurer paid about a million dollars in partial satisfaction of the judgment, and assigned indemnity rights against Hallcraft to Bonita. In the trial on the cross-complaint for indemnity, the judge entered judgment on the pleadings in favor of Hallcraft. Held, reversed.

(a) Hallcraft first contended that GEM could not seek comparative equitable indemnity on a strict liability theory because the parties were commercial entities, and under leading cases strict liability is intended only to protect the consumer. (213 C.A.3d 425, citing U.S. Financial v. Sullivan (1974) 37 C.A.3d 5, 112 C.R. 18, Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 737, 127 C.R. 838, Sacramento Regional Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 C.A.3d 289, 204 C.R. 736, and Sumitomo Bank v. Taurus Developers (1986) 185 C.A.3d 211, 229 C.R. 719.) "In sum, these cases hold that when a lawsuit arises in a commercial setting between two businesses and involves only a business loss, the parties should use normal commercial remedies (e.g., the Uniform Commercial Code) rather than a theory developed for the benefit of customers (i.e., strict products liability)." (213 C.A.3d 426.)

(b) The foregoing cases focus on the rationale behind the adoption of strict products liability theory. "In contrast to the doctrine of strict liability which is designed to benefit the consumer-plaintiff, the doctrine of comparative equitable indemnity is designed to do equity among defendants. ... The purpose of equitable indemnification is to avoid the unfairness, under joint and several liability theory, of holding one defendant liable for the plaintiff's entire loss while allowing another responsible defendant to escape 'scot free.'" (213 C.A.3d 426, quoting American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331.) Originally applied in American Motorcycle to defendants whose negligence caused the plaintiff's loss, the doctrine was later expanded to allow apportionment of loss between a negligent plaintiff and a strictly liable defendant (Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542), and between a defendant liable in strict liability and negligence and a defendant strictly liable (Safeway Stores v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 C.3d 322, 146 C.R. 550, 579 P.2d 441, supra, §1360). (213 C.A.3d 427.)

(c) Hallcraft argued that Safeway is factually distinguishable because there the plaintiff sued and recovered against both defendants who were joined in the action and owed a duty to the plaintiff consumer, whereas here Hallcraft owed no duty to plaintiff Bonita. This argument confuses the concept of "duty" with that of equitable allocation of loss among multiple defendants. The manufacturer's duty to provide defect-free products exists independently of any lawsuit filed by a consumer that seeks to enforce that preexisting duty; and the lack of a consumer's lawsuit is not equivalent to a determination that the manufacturer owed no duty or was not responsible for the injuries. Here, the lack of a lawsuit does not bar the complaint for equitable indemnity, which seeks to make those determinations. (213 C.A.3d 428.) As the Supreme Court pointed out in Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 1198, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, plaintiffs no longer have the unilateral right to determine which defendant should be included in an action for comparative equitable indemnity; and Hallcraft's theory "would place a defendant's right to equitable indemnity at the mercy of plaintiff's pleadings and the fortuity of consolidation of cross-complaints for trial with the plaintiff's action." (213 C.A.3d 428.)

(d) Hallcraft further argued that GEM's action was nothing more than a claim by one business against another for a business loss. This reasoning ignores the origin of the loss: Bonita's loss and award of damages. "Whether a defendant is held directly to the consumer/plaintiff for the plaintiff's loss or is held indirectly liable through a complaint for equitable indemnity, it is the same loss that is being apportioned--the loss suffered by the plaintiff/consumer. We conclude any theory which would have been available to the Association in a direct action against Hallcraft and upon which basis loss could have been apportioned in the Association's action is available to GEM here seeking equitable indemnification." (213 C.A.3d 429.)

(e) Hallcraft contended that it was not subject to a claim for equitable indemnity because it was not joined as a joint or concurrent tortfeasor with GEM in Bonita's action. But the term "joint tortfeasor" as used in the comparative equitable indemnity context does not mean that the defendants were "joined" as such by the plaintiff; here, the facts alleged would support a finding that the acts of Hallcraft and GEM combined to cause Bonita's injury, and that is sufficient. (213 C.A.3d 431.)

(f) Hallcraft also contended that the strict liability doctrine was inapplicable because it provided only "raw material," not a "product." This raises a factual question. Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 C.A.2d 607, 77 C.R. 633, infra, §1503, held that a developer who mass-graded land into finished lots for residential housing had produced a "product," and Rest.2d, Torts §402A (now Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability, §5; infra, §1448), points out that the supplier of a defective product may be held strictly liable even though the product may undergo processing or other substantial change. Hallcraft's assertion that it only rough-graded the tract and that GEM did further grading and soils testing "are factors which may reduce Hallcraft's share of the loss suffered by the Association, possibly even to zero, but these contentions do not nullify the factual question." (213 C.A.3d 432.)

(g) Hallcraft's final contention was that it was not liable on a strict products liability theory because it did not sell the lots directly to the public; but the doctrine does not require a direct sale to the consumer--a sale may be made to the consumer by a middleman. (213 C.A.3d 432.) "Logically, there is no reason to allow strict liability in the situation when the grader/manufacturer sells directly to the public but disallow it when the grader/manufacturer sells indirectly to the public through a developer/builder who sells a structure in addition to the grader/manufacturer's lot. In either case, the grader/manufacturer has produced a product for ultimate sale to the public." (213 C.A.3d 433.) (See Time for Living v. Guy Hatfield Homes/All Amer. Dev. Co. (1991) 230 C.A.3d 30, 40, 280 C.R. 904 [under GEM Developers, allegations raised factual issue whether previous owner who graded property and defendants who later developed it were joint tortfeasors for purposes of equitable indemnity].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Willdan v. Sialic Contractors Corp. (2007) 158 C.A.4th 47, 54, 69 C.R.3d 633 [city's negligence action against consulting firm in connection with increased construction costs was based on theory of latent defects that were expressly excepted from settlement agreement, such that firm was not precluded from pursuing indemnity claim against general contractor that was party to settlement but was not joined as defendant; city's alleging negligent design did not preclude firm from seeking to prove that deficiencies were due to latent defects attributable to contractor].

143 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
c. Where Indemnatee Settles.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1362

[§ 1362] Where Indemnatee Settles.

The Uniform Comparative Fault Act §4(b) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123) permits a settling defendant to recover contribution only "(1) if the liability of the person against whom contribution is sought has been extinguished and (2) to the extent that the amount paid in settlement was reasonable."

In Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. International Harvester Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 492, 147 C.R. 262, the court did not impose these limitations in holding that recognition of the indemnity claim of a settling defendant who filed a presettlement cross-complaint for indemnity did not defeat the primary policy of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, to maximize recovery by injured persons, and it both encourages settlements and effectuates equitable apportionment among concurrent tortfeasors. (82 C.A.3d 496.)

In American Bankers Ins. Co. v. Avco-Lycoming Div. (1979) 97 C.A.3d 732, 159 C.R. 70, the settling tortfeasor did not file a cross-complaint and the principal action was dismissed with prejudice as to all defendants. Held, although it may be simpler and more expeditious for the settling tortfeasor to file a presettlement cross-complaint in the principal action, its failure to do so does not result in forfeiture of its right to partial indemnity; the right may be asserted in an independent suit. (97 C.A.3d 736, 738.) "If an insurer concludes it has the good faith obligation to settle a claim, it should not be required as part of its settlement package and in order to apportion its loss among those truly liable, to file a cross-complaint in the principal suit. After the case has been settled and the action dismissed, the insurer who has, through its efforts set a ceiling on damages, may still continue to negotiate among those liable for an equitable apportionment of damages. If a settlement cannot be reached, it should still have the opportunity to pursue its rights in court. Defendants are not prejudiced. No elements of res judicata or collateral estoppel are present, for defendants are entitled to a trial on the merits with the added benefit that in all likelihood the negotiated settlement imposing the lid on damages involves a sum which, in many cases, will be less than the open-ended and uncertain amount if each party were to blame the other at trial. If they did not answer the principal action, they could still assert their claim, if any, against the plaintiff." (97 C.A.3d 736.) (See Teachers Ins. Co. v. Smith (1982) 128 C.A.3d 862, 865, 180 C.R. 701 [insurance company may negotiate settlement with injured boy's parents without notifying them of intention to seek comparative indemnification from them thereafter].)

In Mullin Lumber Co. v. Chandler (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1127, 230 C.R. 122, plaintiff, a carpenter building a house for

C, sued defendant lumber company for injuries sustained when a scaffolding board, allegedly supplied by defendant, broke and caused him to fall. Defendant settled with plaintiff and cross-complained against C for indemnification. C argued that defendant was not entitled to indemnification unless it could prove its own liability to plaintiff, and that it was unable to do this because it could not establish that it had supplied the board that broke (other parties had supplied some of the lumber used). The trial judge accepted this contention and entered judgment of nonsuit. Held, reversed; requiring settling defendants to prove their own liability would undermine the basic policies of maximizing the injured party's recovery, encouraging settlements, and apportioning fault.

(a) "If a defendant concludes, for any of a variety of legitimate reasons, it is in its best interests to settle with the injured party, it should be encouraged to do so. If a settling defendant must nevertheless prove its own fault to a judge or jury in order to obtain indemnity from other tortfeasors it has precious little incentive to settle. From a defendant's point of view, settlement avoids a finding of fault. It also avoids the publicity, costs and inconvenience of a trial. Requiring the defendant to prove its own fault would deny it these benefits." (185 C.A.3d 1132.)

(b) "Another advantage of a good faith settlement is it puts a lid on the amount of damages the settling defendant must pay. ... This inducement would be seriously undermined in a case such as the one at bar where there is a catastrophic injury and pressing need for money but the would-be settlor's fault is doubtful. If the defendant declines settlement and the plaintiff cannot establish fault, the defendant pays nothing. If the plaintiff does prove fault defendant pays damages but is entitled to seek an equitable apportionment with other tortfeasors who contributed to the plaintiff's injury. However, if the defendant settles and then is unable to prove its own fault it must pay the settlement without contribution from others who may have been more at fault. Given these alternatives, the would-be settlor may well elect not to settle and let the plaintiff prove fault if he is able. Or, if the defendant does settle, it settles for much less than it would if the opportunity for eventual equitable apportionment of damages existed." (185 C.A.3d 1132.)

(c) In order to obtain indemnity, the settling defendant must prove the nonsettling defendant's fault and the payment and reasonableness of the settlement amount. These requirements are sufficient to protect nonsettling defendants from collusion. (185 C.A.3d 1134.) (See Tatum v. Armor Elevator Co. (1988) 203 C.A.3d 1315, 1321, 250 C.R. 775 [settling tortfeasor has standing to appeal from judgment denying indemnification, notwithstanding jury finding that it was not negligent]; Gross v. Allen (1994) 22 C.A.4th 354, 361, 27 C.R.2d 429 [citing Mullin Lumber Co.; psychiatrist who settled with patient and sought indemnity from two other psychiatrists needed only to prove that settlement was based on reasonable estimate of liability and did not need to prove that his settlement payment exceeded his "inchoate liability"]; Expressions at Rancho Niguel Assn. v. Ahmanson Dev. (2001) 86 C.A.4th 1135, 1139, 103 C.R.2d 895 [strictly liable defendant who settled with other roofing subcontractors was entitled to indemnity from nonsettling roofing subcontractor on equitable indemnity basis, rather than under joint and several liability principles; nonsettling subcontractor was not liable for all roofing damage minus amounts paid by other roofing subcontractors, but only for its comparative fault].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §4(b), 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 142.

144 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
d. Where Indemnatee's Liability Is Not Based on Tort.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1363

[§ 1363] Where Indemnatee's Liability Is Not Based on Tort.

In San Mateo v. Berney (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1489, 245 C.R. 738, involving a homeowners' inverse condemnation action against a county based on destruction of lateral support for their property, the county cross-complained against the developers of the property, alleging that the developers' fraud in using improper landfill and preparing the tentative subdivision map contributed to the damage. Held, the doctrine of partial or total equitable indemnity applies even though the liability of the party seeking indemnity is not based on tort. "Although we have found no case which expressly so holds, we see no logical reason which would serve to prevent a public entity subjected to liability for inverse condemnation from seeking indemnification from third parties whose negligent or fraudulent acts were causative factors in the damaging or taking of private property. While it is true that a public entity is liable in inverse condemnation for 'any actual physical injury to real property proximately caused by [a public] improvement as deliberately designed and constructed' ... , where, as is here alleged, a third party's fraudulent concealment caused or contributed to the injury, the third party should indemnify the public entity to the extent such conduct has contributed to a damage award against the public entity." (199 C.A.3d 1494.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

145 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
e. Where Cause of Action Against Indemnitor Is Dismissed.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1364

[§ 1364] Where Cause of Action Against Indemnitor Is Dismissed.

In Frank v. California (1988) 205 C.A.3d 488, 252 C.R. 410, involving a two-car accident, Mitchell sued Frank, for negligently operating his vehicle, and the state, for negligently issuing a license to Frank. Frank cross-complained against the state for indemnification, alleging that it created a dangerous condition at an intersection. After dismissing Mitchell's action against the state for failure to state a cause of action, the trial judge dismissed Frank's cross-complaint on res judicata grounds. Held, reversed. Res judicata is inapplicable here. The dismissal of Mitchell's action against the state simply established that the state was not negligent in issuing Frank a license. The dismissal did not determine whether the state maintained a dangerous condition at an intersection, which was the basis of Frank's cross-complaint. (205 C.A.3d 494.) "A contrary result would be inequitable, in that Frank's rights against State would be entirely dependent upon Mitchell's litigation strategy, and be cut off simply because Mitchell chose not to pursue various theories against State." (205 C.A.3d 495.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

146 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
f. Intentional Tortfeasors.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1365

[§ 1365] Intentional Tortfeasors.

In Baird v. Jones (1993) 21 C.A.4th 684, 27 C.R.2d 232, plaintiff, a prospective purchaser of real estate, recovered judgment against the seller and the seller's agent for intentional and negligent misrepresentation. Although both defendants were guilty of intentional misconduct, the trial judge found the agent's conduct to be much more egregious than the seller's, and held that the seller was thus entitled to equitable indemnification in the full amount of any damages he had paid to plaintiff. Held, this was proper; the comparative equitable indemnity doctrine applies to concurrent intentional tortfeasors. Requiring the seller to pay the entire judgment without hope of recovering some portion of it from the agent would be unconscionable. This conclusion would only reward the intentional tortfeasor who successfully hides his assets from a judgment creditor. (21 C.A.4th 693.) "If it is equitable and just to allocate loss between concurrent negligent tortfeasors, a negligent tortfeasor and an intentional tortfeasor, or a negligent tortfeasor and a strictly liable defendant, then there is little logic in prohibiting an intentional tortfeasor from forcing another intentional tortfeasor to bear his or her share of liability." (21 C.A.4th 693.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

147 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
2. Implied Indemnity Upheld.
g. Other Situations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1366

[§ 1366] Other Situations.

(1) Concurrently Negligent Employer. A negligent employer may receive a credit or reimbursement for compensation benefits only to the extent that these payments exceed his or her proportional share of the injured employee's recovery from a negligent third party. (Associated Const. & Engineering Co. v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1978) 22 C.3d 829, 842, 150 C.R. 888, 587 P.2d 684, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §93 [credit]; Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 502, 512, 156 C.R. 41, 595 P.2d 619 [reimbursement]; see Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 670, 151 C.R. 399 [reimbursement]; Kramer v. Cedu Foundation (1979) 93 C.A.3d 1, 155 C.R.552, supra, §1370 [reimbursement].) (On statutory bar to implied indemnity claim against negligent employer, see infra, §1369.)

(2) Indemnity Against Public Entities. Sovereign immunity does not bar a claim for implied indemnity based on grounds for which liability would be imposed. (E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1978) 21 C.3d 497, 511, 146 C.R. 614, 579 P.2d 505, supra, §123; Wagner v. California (1978) 86 C.A.3d 922, 927, 150 C.R. 489.)

(3) Successive Tortfeasors. Although American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, dealt with concurrent tortfeasors, the comparative indemnity doctrine also applies to successive tortfeasors. (Blecker v. Wolbart (1985) 167 C.A.3d 1195, 1203, 213 C.R. 781 [first tortfeasor, whose negligence caused injuries requiring operation, was entitled to indemnity from second tortfeasor, whose negligence during operation caused injured party's death].)

(4) Parents Liable for Child's Acts. A parents' liability for a minor's wrongful act under C.C. 1714.1 may form the basis of a partial indemnity claim by a concurrent tortfeasor, even though neither the minor nor the parents are named defendants. (See Curry v. Superior Court (1993) 20 C.A.4th 180, 188, 189, 24 C.R.2d 495, supra, §1230.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

148 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
3. Implied Indemnity Denied.
a. Homeowners Association.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1367

[§ 1367] Homeowners Association.

(1) Condominium Board of Directors. In Jaffe v. Huxley Architecture (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1188, 246 C.R. 432, a homeowners association in a condominium complex sued the developers for construction defects. A settlement was reached under which the association agreed to dismiss the action without prejudice to the developers' right to seek indemnification against the association's board of directors. In return, the developers agreed to restrict their indemnity claim to the limits of the directors' errors and omissions policy. The developers then filed a cross-complaint against the board, seeking equitable indemnification for that part of the association's damages attributable to the board's negligent management of the complex. Held, judgment on demurrer for the board affirmed.

(a) Because the negligence of the board, as the chosen representative of the association, was, in legal effect, the negligence of the association itself, it could have been asserted by the developers against the association under either the doctrine of comparative negligence or the doctrine of avoidable consequences. Hence, there was no potential for injustice to the developers and no reason to allow them to interfere with the relationship between the association and its board. (200 C.A.3d 1192.)

(b) Allowing the doctrine of equitable indemnification to be utilized in cases such as this would jeopardize the special relationship that exists between a homeowners association and its board of directors (1) by discouraging persons, for fear of being held personally liable, from serving on the boards, and (2) by creating a potential conflict of interest between the directors' duty to the association and their desire to avoid personal liability. (200 C.A.3d 1193.) (See Lauriedale Associates, Ltd. v. Wilson (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1439, 1444, 9 C.R.2d 774 [in association's action against former directors for not collecting adequate fees from unit owners to make repairs, directors were not entitled to indemnity from owners on ground that they had caused damage].)

(2) Excessive Repair Costs. In Woodward-Gizienski & Associates v. Geotechnical Exploration (1989) 208 C.A.3d 64, 255 C.R. 800, a condominium project's homeowners association, on the recommendation of the project's soil engineers, expended $ 1 million to repair damages caused by the settling of various structures, and then sought to recover this amount from the project's developers. Fearing an unsympathetic jury, the developers settled for $ 731,400, even though they claimed that the repairs were excessive due to the engineers' negligence. The developers then sought equitable indemnity from the engineers. Held, judgment on demurrer for the engineers affirmed. Under fundamental principles of damages, the developers were liable only for the reasonable costs of the repairs (see infra, §1728). (208 C.A.3d 68.) Any claim that the costs were excessive could have been raised in the context of challenging their reasonableness. Hence, fairness does not require resorting to the doctrine of equitable indemnity. (208 C.A.3d 69.)

(3) No Indemnity From Contractor Who Cannot Be Joint Tortfeasor for Damages Purposes. In Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. McCarthy Const. (2001) 88 C.A.4th 769, 106 C.R.2d 10, a homeowners association filed an action against a developer for defective construction of a condominium project. In a cross-complaint, the developer sought equitable indemnity from subcontractors on the project, as well as from a contractor who, several years later, was hired to do repair work following an earthquake. Held, summary judgment for the contractor affirmed. The contractor was not a participant in the construction or design of the condominium project and thus could not be held to be a joint tortfeasor for purposes of damages incurred in the faulty construction. (88 C.A.4th 773.) At most, the developer's experts declared that the subsequent repair work was unnecessary and excessive, but similar allegations were held to be subject to demurrer in Woodward-Gizienski. (88 C.A.4th 774.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

149 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
3. Implied Indemnity Denied.
b. Practice of Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1368

[§ 1368] Practice of Law.

(1) Legal Malpractice Claims. Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 C.A.3d 934, 155 C.R. 393, following Held v. Arant (1977) 67 C.A.3d 748, 134 C.R. 422, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §349, holds that a defendant cannot seek partial indemnity against the plaintiff's former attorney for alleged malpractice. (a) A negligent attorney is not a joint tortfeasor, for the client must be damaged by the malpractice and will not suffer damage if he or she recovers from the defendant. (92 C.A.3d 941, 942.) (b) The claim would place the attorney in a position of not being able to conduct his or her defense without violating the continuing ethical obligations to his or her former client. (92 C.A.3d 945.)

The same result was reached in Rowell v. TransPacific Life Ins. Co. (1979) 94 C.A.3d 818, 156 C.R. 679, where defendant attempted to file a cross-complaint against plaintiff's attorneys conducting the action. The fundamental policy of avoiding claims that would conflict with the attorney's duty of undivided loyalty to his or her client must prevail. (94 C.A.3d 821, 822.)

(2) Attorneys' Fees. Davis v. Air Technical Industries (1978) 22 C.3d 1, 6, 148 C.R. 419, 582 P.2d 1010, infra, §1432, held that a manufacturer is not liable for the attorneys' fees of implied indemnitees in a products liability case. The same result was reached after American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, in Harbor City Discount Auto Center v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 C.A.3d 886, 157 C.R. 438. "American Motorcycle is ... a doctrine of substantive law and has no logical impact on the Davis rule that litigants are responsible for legal costs in vindicating substantive rights, in whatever area of law." Moreover, to attempt to allocate fees between efforts in defending the indemnitor's product and separate claims against an indemnitee would impose an intolerable burden on the courts. (95 C.A.3d 893.) Each entity in the chain of liability for a defective product must bear its own fees regardless of its involvement or noninvolvement. (95 C.A.3d 894.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Legal Malpractice Claims.

Held case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §333.

150 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
3. Implied Indemnity Denied.
c. Other Situations Where Indemnity Is Denied.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1369

[§ 1369] Other Situations Where Indemnity Is Denied.

(1) Third Party's Claim Against Concurrently Negligent Employer. Lab.C. 3864 bars claims for implied indemnity by a third-party defendant against an employer whose negligence contributed to the injuries of the employee-plaintiff. (See American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, footnote 9.)

(2) Claim Must Be Made in Trial Court. In Silveira v. Imperial Irr. Dist. (1978) 85 C.A.3d 705, 149 C.R. 653, two defendants were held jointly and severally liable, and on appeal contended that the partial indemnity doctrine should have been applied to them on a comparative fault basis. Held, the benefits of the doctrine were waived when the jury asked if it should apportion negligence and the parties gave a negative answer; i.e., they failed to embrace the opportunity for a special verdict. (85 C.A.3d 708.)

(3) Express Indemnity Claims. The partial indemnity rule does not affect the right of all-or-nothing indemnification by express contract. (Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 676, 151 C.R. 399.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

151 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
F. Comparative Negligence: Comparative Partial Indemnity.
3. Implied Indemnity Denied.
d. Implied Contractual Indemnity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1370

[§ 1370] Implied Contractual Indemnity.

In Kramer v. Cedu Foundation (1979) 93 C.A.3d 1, 155 C.R. 552, the court, reasoning that implied contractual indemnity was a form of equitable indemnity, held that comparative indemnity applied to such claims. (93 C.A.3d 12.)

In Bear Creek Planning Com. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 1227, 211 C.R. 172, the court disagreed: "[T]he theoretical underpinnings of implied contractual indemnity are entirely different than those underlying equitable indemnity, which is concerned with the difference between the primary and secondary liability of joint tortfeasors. ... An action for implied contractual indemnity is not a claim for contribution from a joint tortfeasor; it is not founded upon a tort or upon any duty which the indemnitor owes to the injured party. It is grounded upon the indemnitor's breach of duty owing to the indemnitee to properly perform its contractual duties." (164 C.A.3d 1238.) Also, "[i]mplied contractual indemnity is not based upon equitable considerations, but upon a contractual relationship between the indemnitee and indemnitor from which is implied an obligation on the part of the indemnitor to assume and pay any foreseeable damages assessed against the indemnitee as a result of the indemnitor's breach of contract." (164 C.A.3d 1239.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

152 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
1. Applicability of Doctrine in Particular Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1371

[§ 1371] Applicability of Doctrine in Particular Cases.

(1) Workers' Compensation. Comparative negligence principles are applicable in determining the extent of the recovery of the employer and employee in actions involving third-party tortfeasors. (See 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §92 et seq.)

(2) Actions Against Public Entities. The comparative negligence doctrine applies in negligence actions against public entities. (Levine v. Los Angeles (1977) 68 C.A.3d 481, 488, 137 C.R. 512.)

(3) Strict Products Liability. The Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123.) defines "fault" as including acts or omissions that subject one to strict liability. In Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 741, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542, the court relied on this provision in extending the comparative negligence doctrine to products liability cases.

(4) Cases Not Sounding in Tort. The Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(a) (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123) is limited to actions to recover for physical harm to persons or property. Hence, actions that are fully contractual are excluded. (§1, Comment.)

(5) Wrongful Death. Under comparative negligence principles, the negligence of the decedent or heirs reduces, but does not bar, recovery. (See infra, §§1400, 1401.)

(6) Loss of Consortium. One spouse's recovery for loss of consortium cannot be reduced by the other spouse's contributory negligence. (Lantis v. Condon (1979) 95 C.A.3d 152, 159, 157 C.R. 22, infra, §1682.)

(7) Intentional Tort Cases. Liability for an intentional tort is not diminished by the victim's negligence. It would be contrary to sound policy to reduce a plaintiff's damages under the comparative fault doctrine where the plaintiff is merely negligent in encountering the defendant's deliberately inflicted harm. (Heiner v. Kmart Corp. (2000) 84 C.A.4th 335, 347, 100 C.R.2d 854 [battery case].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Strict Products Liability. See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §1(b), 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 125.

153 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
2. Setoff.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1372

[§ 1372] Setoff.

(1) In General. The Uniform Comparative Fault Act §3 (12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 123) deals with the situation where there is a claim and cross-complaint, and provides that on motion, if the court finds that the obligation of either party is likely to be uncollectible, it may order both parties to make payment into court for distribution. The Comment states that if a setoff is applied categorically to all situations, it may produce unfair results in some of them; hence, consideration should be given to whether each party is able to pay his or her obligation and whether the payment comes from liability insurance.

(2) Where Both Parties Are Insured. In Jess v. Herrmann (1979) 26 C.3d 131, 161 C.R. 87, 604 P.2d 208, plaintiff J and defendant H were both injured in an automobile collision in which each was negligent. Jess filed this action and H cross-complained. The jury allocated 40% of the fault to J and 60% to H, assessed damages at $ 100,000 to Jess and $ 14,000 to H, and accordingly determined that Jess was entitled to recover $ 60,000 and H $ 5,600. The trial judge, over objections of both parties, offset the two awards and entered a single judgment of $ 54,400 in favor of J. Both appealed, contending that a separate judgment should have been entered in favor of each party. Held, reversed; the traditional view of automatic setoff cannot be equitably applied in a comparative fault setting without considering the insurance coverage of the parties, and on remand, the trial court must do so.

(a) Automatic setoff is proper where neither party is insured. If neither party is insured, setoff eliminates an unproductive exchange of money and protects each party from the potential insolvency of the other; it would operate simply as an accounting mechanism and would not affect either party's net recovery. In such cases, the doctrine of comparative negligence does not call for an exception to the traditional setoff rule. (26 C.3d 137.)

(b) Automatic setoff is improper where both parties are insured. Although the record on appeal does not indicate whether the parties were insured, the briefs assert that they were, and this justifies a reexamination of the setoff rule to give consideration to the effect of insurance. (26 C.3d 142, footnote 6.)

(1) The facts of the instant case disclose the inequity of automatic setoff. In the absence of setoff, J would receive $ 60,000 from H's insurer and H would receive $ 5,600 from J's insurer; under the setoff rule, J received only $ 54,400 and H received nothing. Thus, the setoff rule "diminishes both injured parties' actual recovery and accords both insurance companies a corresponding fortuitous windfall at their insureds' expense." (26 C.3d 138.)

(2) This result is directly contrary to the main objective of the Financial Responsibility Law. "The purpose of liability insurance is not only to protect the insured against the adverse impact of liability but to assure that the victim be actually compensated for his tort loss instead of having merely an empty claim against a judgment-proof defendant." (26 C.3d 139, quoting 30 Hastings L. J. 1470.)

(3) Virtually all of the commentators agree that setoff is improper under comparative negligence law when the parties are insured. (26 C.3d 139.) And this view was taken in the 1977 Florida case of Stuyvesant Ins. Co. v. Bournazian, where the court observed that an insured does not authorize the insurer to reduce its own liability by appropriating to its own benefit a separate asset of the insured (the right to recover for his or her own injuries). (26 C.3d 140.)

(4) The setoff statutes (C.C.P. 431.70, 666; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§1091, 1092; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §91) do not establish an automatic rule that would preclude the consideration of the equities or compel setoff over objections of both parties. They "cannot properly be interpreted to require setoff in cases in which such a setoff will defeat the principal purpose of California's financial responsibility law and will provide an inequitable windfall to an insurance carrier at the expense of the carrier's insured." (26 C.3d 143.)

The court left open the question of what rule should apply where one of the parties is uninsured. (26 C.3d 141, footnote 5.) Three justices dissented, characterizing the majority opinion as an intrusion into the legislative domain, which "can only lead to confusion and perplexity." (26 C.3d 143.)

(3) Restatement 3d. Each of two parties who are liable to each other in the same suit is generally entitled to a setoff of any recovery owed by the other party. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §9.) Thus, the verdicts are offset to form one net judgment. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §9, Comment a.)

In cases in which one or both have liability insurance, setoff does not reduce the payment of a liability insurer unless an applicable rule of law, statute, or policy provision so provides. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §9 and Comment a.) Thus, when both parties have liability insurance for all the damages, each party's liability insurer is liable for the judgment based on the verdict running against its insured. When one party is uninsured or partially insured, any insurance funds are paid first to the party who is the net-judgment creditor and then to the party who is the net-judgment debtor. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §9, Comment a.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.549(10)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Uniform Comparative Fault Act §3, 12 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 140.

(2) Where Both Parties Are Insured. Setoff statutes:

Cross-References: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§1165, 1166; 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §91.

154 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
3. Release.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1373

[§ 1373] Release.

(1) No Joinder of Released Tortfeasor. In Stambaugh v. Superior Court (1976) 62 C.A.3d 231, 132 C.R. 843, decedent's heirs claimed damages for wrongful death against S, Pacific Gas and Electric Co., and other tortfeasors. S settled for $ 25,000, the full amount of his insurance coverage, and obtained a release. The heirs then sued the other tortfeasors. Pacific Gas and Electric Co. cross-complained against S, seeking a determination of the extent to which S's negligence contributed to the death. The theory of the cross-complaint was that, under Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, every contributory tortfeasor, whether joined or not, is liable to the plaintiff, but only in the proportion that his or her negligence bears to the total negligence (of all tortfeasors and plaintiff), and that the apportionment of fault and assignment of liability of each tortfeasor can only be accomplished by bringing them before the court; i.e., that by virtue of Li, they have become indispensable parties under C.C.P. 389. The cross-complainant disclaimed any purpose to seek indemnity or contribution; it sought only to have the extent of its liability determined so that it would not be required to pay any more of the judgment than called for by its degree of fault. Held, S was entitled to summary judgment on the cross-complaint.

(a) Under C.C.P. 877, a settlement in good faith, followed by a release, discharges the obligation of the tortfeasor. (See supra, §§71, 73.) The release might place a disproportionate burden on the nonsettling tortfeasors, contrary to the object of the contribution statutes (see supra, §105). But the strong policy favoring settlement, carried out by the express terms of C.C.P. 877, would be frustrated by a holding that the settlement lacks finality, and the Li opinion discloses no purpose to modify the statutory rule. (62 C.A.3d 235, 236.)

(b) Joinder of S to determine whether the release was given in "good faith" (C.C.P. 877; see supra, §77 et seq.) would be unwarranted, for the record contained neither evidence of nor a charge of bad faith, and the good faith of the settlement was not in issue. (62 C.A.3d 239). Moreover, good faith is not determined by the proportion the settlement bears to the damages claimed, and it would be rare that a tortfeasor who settles for the full amount of his insurance coverage could reasonably be charged with bad faith. (62 C.A.3d 238, 239.)

(2) Amount To Be Deducted From Claim. Under C.C.P. 877, a good faith settlement resulting in a release of one or more tortfeasors reduces the claim against other tortfeasors by the amount stipulated in the release. American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, made the following observation concerning this provision: "[T]o preserve the incentive to settle which section 877 provides to injured plaintiffs, we conclude that a plaintiff's recovery from nonsettling tortfeasors should be diminished only by the amount that the plaintiff has actually recovered in a good faith settlement, rather than by an amount measured by the settling tortfeasor's proportionate responsibility for the injury." (20 C.3d 604.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 258.)

In Jaramillo v. California (1978) 81 C.A.3d 968, 146 C.R. 823, an action against the state and two private defendants, plaintiff settled with the latter for $ 350,000. In the trial against the state, the jury found that plaintiff's damages were $ 500,000, and that he was responsible for 33.3% of the damage, while the state and one of the other defendants were responsible for 66.7%. From the resulting award of $ 333,000 against the state, the trial judge set off the $ 350,000 settlement. Plaintiff argued that the award should have been reduced by the proportion of liability attributable to the settling defendants. Held, the setoff was proper. Had there been no settlement, plaintiff's maximum recovery would have been $ 333,000, an amount already exceeded by the settlement. Plaintiff's method would have permitted him to recover damages stemming from his own negligence and would also have violated the prohibition against double recovery. (81 C.A.3d 971.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

155 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
4. Parties.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1374

[§ 1374] Parties.

Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 823, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, did not reach the issue of apportioning fault when not all of the responsible parties are before the court. (13 C.3d 823.) In American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 578, 146 C.R. 182, 578 P.2d 899, supra, §1331, the court observed that plaintiff's negligence could be compared (a) with each individual tortfeasor's negligence, (b) with the cumulative negligence of all joined defendants, or (c) with all the negligent conduct that contributed to the harm. (20 C.3d 589, footnote 2.) In adopting the third possibility, the court said: "[I]t is logically essential that the plaintiff's negligence be weighed against the combined total of all other causative negligence; moreover, inasmuch as a plaintiff's actual damages do not vary by virtue of the particular defendants who happen to be before the court, we do not think that the damages which a plaintiff may recover against defendants who are joint and severally liable should fluctuate in such a manner." (20 C.3d 589, footnote 2.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.1508

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

156 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
5. Special Verdict.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1375

[§ 1375] Special Verdict.

Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, suggested the use of special verdicts in comparative negligence cases, but held that this was a matter within the trial judge's discretion. (13 C.3d 824, footnote 18.) (For special verdict forms, see BAJI, Nos. 16.10, 16.11, 16.12, 16.72, 16.73; CACI, Nos. VF-1200, VF-1204; on defendants' power to prevent apportionment of fault among themselves, see Klemme v. Hoag Memorial Hosp. Presbyterian (1980) 103 C.A.3d 640, 645, 163 C.R. 109, supra, §1358; on sufficiency of verdict where same nine jurors do not agree on liability and apportionment, see Juarez v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 759, 765, 183 C.R. 852, 647 P.2d 128, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §361.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.1750

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Juarez case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §352.

157 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XIV. NEGLIGENCE: DEFENSES
G. Comparative Negligence: Miscellaneous Problems.
6. Judgment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1376

[§ 1376] Judgment.

(1) Determination of Award. The correct procedure is to first reduce the total award by an amount based on the percentage of the plaintiff's contributory fault, and then to reduce the resulting amount by any pretrial settlement received by the plaintiff. (Lemos v. Eichel (1978) 83 C.A.3d 110, 118, 147 C.R. 603; see 71 A.L.R.4th 1108 [calculation of net recovery by applying percentage of plaintiff's fault before or after subtracting amount of settlement by less than all joint tortfeasors].)

(2) New Trial. After verdict, a party may seek a new trial on the grounds that the fact-finder's assignment of one or more percentages of comparative responsibility is excessive or inadequate. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment i.)

(3) Costs. Costs are awarded to the party receiving a net judgment; they are not apportioned according to comparative fault. (Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 325, 348, 145 C.R. 47.)

(4) Appellate Review. The substantial evidence rule (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §359 et seq.) applies to the jury's apportionment of fault. (Metzger v. Barnes (1977) 74 C.A.3d 6, 9, 141 C.R. 257.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Appellate Review.

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §365 et seq.

158 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

1. No Common Law Right of Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1377

[§ 1377] No Common Law Right of Action.

At common law, a right of action for injuries to the person did not survive the death of either the wrongdoer or the person injured, and there was no civil action for the wrongful death of another. Lord Campbell's Act (1846) established the right of action for wrongful death, and statutes in all the states now provide for it. (See Van Beeck v. Sabine Towing Co. (1937) 300 U.S. 342, 57 S.Ct. 452, 453, 81 L.Ed. 685, 686; Sea-Land Services v. Gaudet (1974) 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 810, 39 L.Ed.2d 9, 18, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §145; McLaughlin v. United R. of San Francisco (1915) 169 C. 494, 495, 147 P. 149; Clark v. Goodwin (1915) 170 C. 527, 529, 150 P. 357; Buckley v. Chadwick (1955) 45 C.2d 183, 190, 289 P.2d 242; Norman v. Murphy (1954) 124 C.A.2d 95, 97, 268 P.2d 178, infra, §1382; Georgie Boy Mfg. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 217, 221, 171 C.R. 382; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 825, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1578; Rest.2d, Torts §925; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.1; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §294 et seq.; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §1 et seq.; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 170; 24 Hastings L. J. 1067 [innovative Massachusetts decision recognizing common law right]; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 400; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 344; 61 A.L.R.3d 906 [present status of general rule denying common law right].)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.7

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §24.1.

159 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

2. Statutory Cause of Action.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1378

[§ 1378] In General.

(1) Nature of Cause of Action. In some states, the decedent's right of action for his or her injuries survives, and the recovery goes to the decedent's estate. However, the usual statute creates a new cause of action in favor of the heirs as beneficiaries. The former California statute was of this type (C.C.P. 377), but the current statute (C.C.P. 377.60 et seq.), while generally similar, does not refer to "heirs," but instead lists specific persons entitled to sue for wrongful death (see infra, §§1389, 1394, 1397). The cause of action is based upon the plaintiffs' own independent pecuniary injury suffered by loss of the decedent, and is distinct from any action that the decedent might have maintained had he or she survived. (See C.C.P. 377.60; 377.22; Earley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1917) 176 C. 79, 81, 167 P. 513; Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 572, 573, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, infra, §1382; Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 272, 283, 87 C.R.2d 222, 980 P.2d 927, infra, §1661, citing the text [wrongful death in California creates new cause of action that is not derivative but distinct from any action that deceased might have maintained]; Carr v. Duncan (1949) 90 C.A.2d 282, 284, 202 P.2d 855; Von Batsch v. American Dist. Tel. Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1111, 1119, 222 C.R. 239 [employer of decedent is not entitled to sue]; Rest.2d, Torts §925; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.2; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §§27, 28; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Torts, Wrongful Death, Chap. 23; 4 Proof of Facts 71 [wrongful death]; 51 Proof of Facts 3d 81 [liability for air crash]; 11 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [representing survivors in death action]; 69 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [wrongful death of child in police custody]; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 1043; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §126.) (On survival of cause of action after death of tortfeasor, see supra, §23; on joinder of action under C.C.P. 377.30 (surviving cause of action) and action under C.C.P. 377.60 and consolidation of action under C.C.P. 377.60 with action under C.C.P. 377.31 (pending action), see C.C.P. 377.62, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §521.)

(2) Estate Administration. The cause of action is an asset for purposes of administration. (See Estate of Waits (1944) 23 C.2d 676, 678, 146 P.2d 5; 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §352.) However, the executor or administrator sues only as a statutory trustee; the recovery belongs to the persons entitled to maintain the action, not to the estate. (Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co. (1902) 137 C. 399, 400, 70 P. 276 [using term "heirs"]; Jones v. Leonardt (1909) 10 C.A. 284, 286, 101 P. 811 [same].)

(3) Required Persons. Ordinarily, there can be no action if there are no persons entitled to bring the action, and a complaint by an administrator or any other person that fails to allege the existence of these persons is fatally defective. (See Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co., supra, 137 C. 399; Davis v. Southern Arizona Freight Lines, Ltd. (1938) 30

C.A.2d 48, 49, 85 P.2d 897; Estate of Bright v. Western Air Lines (1951) 104 C.A.2d 827, 831, 232 P.2d 523.)

(4) Workers' Compensation. The workers' compensation exclusive remedy rule (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §24 et seq.) bars nondependents from bringing a wrongful death action against the employer of a decedent who was killed in the course and scope of employment. (Hisel v. Los Angeles (1987) 193 C.A.3d 969, 974, 238 C.R. 678, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §42.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.7, 9, 11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Cause of Action. See Fitch v. Select Products Co. (2005) 36 C.4th 812, 817, 31 C.R.3d 591, 115 P.3d 1233 [because survivors' wrongful death damages are separate from decedent's damages and are not attributable to costs of decedent's medical treatment, statutory scheme authorizing recovery of costs of Medi-Cal-provided treatment from parties who caused injury did not authorize assertion of Medi-Cal lien against wrongful death recovery that did not include compensation for decedent's medical expenses]; 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §24.2; 101 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [wrongful death claim against emergency service workers]; 108 Am.Jur. Trials 637 [wrongful death of pedestrian]. Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §145.

160 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

2. Statutory Cause of Action.

b. Statute of Limitations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1379

[§ 1379] Statute of Limitations.

The wrongful death statute of limitations is 2 years. (C.C.P. 335.1.) It runs from the date of death, not the date of the accident. (Walton v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 8 C.A.2d 290, 304, 48 P.2d 108; see 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §45 et seq.) The former rule that, if the cause of action ran against an adult heir (e.g., a widow), it also barred the right of a minor heir was repudiated in Cross v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1964) 60 C.2d 690, 692, 36 C.R. 321, 388 P.2d 353. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §642.)

Under C.C.P. 340.5 (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §533 et seq.), the statute of limitations on a cause of action for medical malpractice begins to run from the time of "injury." The statute does not change the rule in wrongful death actions. Because the word "injury" is construed as referring to the wrongfully caused death of the plaintiff's decedent, the statute does not begin to run at the time of the acts constituting malpractice but only from the time that they result in the patient's death. (Larcher v. Wanless (1976) 18 C.3d 646, 659, 135 C.R. 75, 557 P.2d 507.)

Although the claims of all persons entitled to sue must be determined in a single wrongful death action (see infra, §§1385, 1386), the statute of limitations runs separately against each person's cause of action. (Andersen v. Barton Memorial Hosp. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 678, 680, 212 C.R. 626, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §543 [intervenor's complaint tendered new claims and issues, and was barred; term "heirs" used].)

An administrator who brings a timely action on behalf of a person without standing to sue should be allowed to amend the complaint to name persons entitled to sue, even though the statute of limitations has run against an action by these persons. The amendment does not change the cause of action but merely adds matters necessary to make it complete, and the relation back doctrine applies (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1151). (Mayo v. White (1986) 178 C.A.3d 1083, 1092, 224 C.R. 373.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.37 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Relation back doctrine: The relation back doctrine does not apply in a wrongful death action to save the claims of an omitted heir after the statute of limitations has expired, because the addition of an omitted heir under these circumstances necessarily inserts a new cause of action that seeks to enforce an independent right. (San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1545, 1549, 53 C.R.3d 722 [distinguishing Mayo v. White (1986) 178 C.A.3d 1083, 224 C.R. 373 text, p. 800, on ground that it involved technical change that did not introduce new cause of action].)

Repudiation of former rule:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §707.

C.C.P. 340.5:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §578 et seq.

Andersen case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §590.

Amendment does not change cause of action:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1219.

161 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

2. Statutory Cause of Action.

c. Lump Sum Verdict.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1380

[§ 1380] Lump Sum Verdict.

There is no statutory provision for apportionment of the damages by the jury among the plaintiffs in accordance with their respective rights, and accordingly, it has been held that the verdict should be in a single lump sum, leaving it to the plaintiffs to adjust their interests informally or in a separate proceeding. (See Robinson v. Western States Gas & Elec. Co. (1920) 184 C. 401, 409, 194 P. 39; Rose v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (1933) 133 C.A. 646, 651, 24 P.2d 838; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 170, 183.) The court's power of apportionment is set forth in C.C.P. 377.61 [court determines "respective rights"].)

Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 C.A.3d 512, 196 C.R. 82, declared that judicial apportionment does not impair the right to a jury trial:

(a) "[T]he competing and conflicting interests of the respective heirs, the difficulty in ascertaining individual shares of lost economic support when dealing with minors, the lack of any reason under most circumstances to apportion the lump-sum award attributable to loss of monetary support where minors are involved, the irrelevance of the heirs' respective interests in that portion of the award pertaining to lost economic support in determining the aggregate award, and the more efficient nature of court proceedings without a jury, cumulatively establish apportionment by the court, rather than the jury, is consistent with the efficient administration of justice." (148 C.A.3d 535.)

(b) However, the trial judge on the plaintiffs' request, should instruct the jury to return special findings as to each plaintiff where the evidence permits these findings. "In other words, in this case special interrogatories as requested should have been submitted to the jury regarding its determination of both the total unapportioned loss of past and future economic loss. Regarding the remaining recoverable damages related to nonmonetary support, where the evidence discloses the expectations for recovery of the various heirs would vary, the jury should be permitted to render special findings on a joint request by all plaintiffs. Although the findings would normally be advisory to the trial court at a later apportionment proceeding, valid stipulations by all parties should make them binding. We see no potential prejudice to either party. Assuming valid stipulations, we anticipate no potential conflict of interest among the plaintiffs and their respective counsel who may ethically argue each client's cause in an attempt to maximize the size of the lump-sum award." (148 C.A.3d 537.) (On special interrogatories and findings, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §356 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.105

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Special interrogatories and findings:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §347 et seq.

162 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

2. Statutory Cause of Action.

d. Scope of Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1381

[§ 1381] Scope of Action.

(1) Negligent or Intentional Tort. A wrongful death action may be maintained "for the death of a person caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another." (C.C.P. 377.60.) Hence, recovery is authorized when death results from either a negligent or an intentional wrongful act. (See Moxon v. Kern (1965) 233 C.A.2d 393, 398, 43 C.R. 481; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.3; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §25 et seq.; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 375; on liability for wrongful death after failure to stop and render aid, see Brooks v. E.J. Willig Truck Trans. Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 669, 678, 255 P.2d 802.)

The action probably does not lie where the death arises out of a mere breach of contract. (See Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 C.A.2d 234, 235, 87 P.2d 917 [question left open]; Moxon v. Kern, supra, 233 C.A.2d 399 [action in tort, not contract]; Kaiser Foundation Hosp. v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 327, 335, 62 C.R. 330; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.3.) However, "a duty of care can arise from a contractual relationship, and a cause of action in tort may sometimes be allowed where there is a failure to perform a contractual duty, or where such duty is negligently performed." (Duff v. Harrah South Shore Corp. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 803, 806, 125 C.R. 259 [wrongful death complaint showed that any contractual relationship ended prior to or concurrently with its alleged breach].) (On breach of legal duty arising out of contract, see 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.3; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §139 et seq.; supra, §2.)

(2) Strict Products Liability Action. "Wrongful act," as used in the wrongful death statute, refers to any tortious act, including the tortious act of placing defective products into the stream of commerce. Thus, strict liability will support a cause of action for wrongful death. (See Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1176, 272 C.R. 304, infra, §1513 [former statute].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Negligent or Intentional Tort. See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §24.3. Breach of legal duty arising from contract:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §144 et seq.

163 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

2. Statutory Cause of Action.

e. No Action for Death of Unborn Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1382

[§ 1382] No Action for Death of Unborn Child.

(1) In General. A child eventually born alive may sue for injuries incurred prior to his or her birth. (See supra, §728.) And if the defendant's wrongful act results in the death of an unborn child, some states recognize a cause of action in the parent for wrongful death. (See Bayer v. Suttle (1972) 23 C.A.3d 361, 363, 100 C.R. 212, footnote 1 [listing cases; fetus was viable at time of accident but was delivered stillborn]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Prenatal Injuries; Wrongful Life, Birth, and Conception §41 et seq.; 19 Proof of Facts 3d 107 [wrongful death of fetus]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 933 [liability for death of unborn child]; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 400; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 150; 27 A.L.R.2d 1256 [prenatal injury as ground of action]; 84 A.L.R.3d 411 [action for death of unborn child].)

(2) Norman Case. In Norman v. Murphy (1954) 124 C.A.2d 95, 268 P.2d 178, California was committed to the opposing view. The court reasoned that (a) the cause of action for wrongful death is wholly statutory; (b) the statute creates a right of action for an adult or "a minor person"; (c) the period of minority commences at the date of birth; (d) an unborn child is deemed "an existing person" only "in the event of its subsequent birth" (see supra, §728); hence, there is no statutory authority for treating an unborn child as "a minor person." (124 C.A.2d 99.) The result has been criticized and both judicial and legislative correction have been urged. (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 150; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 400.)

(3) Justus v. Atchison. The reasoning of Norman, was largely rejected in Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 576, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, but the right to sue was nevertheless denied on an interpretation of the word "person."

(a) Existing out-of-state authority. A cause of action for wrongful death of a fetus is recognized in 25 states, while 12 states reject it. (19 C.3d 569, 570, footnotes 4, 5.) Most commentators oppose it. (19 C.3d 571, footnote 7.)

(b) California statute. The history of former C.C.P. 377 (now C.C.P. 377.60 et seq.) makes it clear that the Legislature intended to occupy this field; hence, the remedy remains wholly statutory. (19 C.3d 572, 573, 574, 575.) And the California statute precludes recovery for the death of a fetus: (1) An action may be brought for death of "a person," and ordinarily, a fetus is not considered a person. (19 C.3d 577.) (2) Recovery for prenatal injuries to a child is permitted by the statute only where the child is born alive. (19 C.3d 578.) (3) In criminal statutes where protection has been given to an unborn child, the Legislature has specially identified the object of its concern. Thus, P.C. 270, on failure to support a minor child, abrogated the holding of People v. Yates (1931) 114 C.A. Supp. 782, 298 P. 961, 2 Cal.

Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §143, by expressly stating that a child conceived but not yet born is to be deemed an existing person under that section; and P.C. 187, on murder, abrogated the holding of Keeler v. Superior Court (1970) 2 C.3d 619, 87 C.R. 481, 470 P.2d 617, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §96, by making murder include the killing of a fetus. (19 C.3d 578, 579.)

(c) No denial of equal protection. The Legislature, in conferring new rights of action upon particular classes of persons, may make reasonable determinations as to how far the new right will extend. (19 C.3d 580.) And the determination not to provide a cause of action for death of a fetus is not arbitrary or irrational. The purpose of the wrongful death statute is to enable heirs and specified dependents to recover compensation for economic loss and deprivation of consortium. A fetus has no dependents and its only possible heirs are its parents; and it is not a wage-earner, hence, its death causes no appreciable economic loss (medical and burial costs are recoverable by the mother in her action for personal injuries). Thus, the parents' loss of consortium is all that is left. "Without in any way denying the reality of that loss, we are compelled to observe that the class of parents who suffer the greater deprivation of this nature are those whose child has been born alive. The parents of a stillborn fetus have never known more than a mysterious presence dimly sensed by random movements in the womb; but the mother and father of a child born alive have seen, touched, and heard their baby, have witnessed his developing personality, and have started the lifelong process of communicating and interacting with him. These are the rich experiences upon which a meaningful parent-child relationship is built, and they do not begin until the moment of birth." (19 C.3d 581.) (See Zavala v. Arce (1997) 58 C.A.4th 915, 932, 68 C.R.2d 571, supra, §1029 [Justus is not relevant to claim asserted by mother of dead fetus for negligent infliction of emotional distress]; Rest.2d, Torts §869(2) ["[i]f the child is not born alive, there is no liability unless the applicable wrongful death statute so provides"]; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 410; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 525; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 589; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1083; 18 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 335; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 325.)

Reyna v. San Francisco (1977) 69 C.A.3d 876, 138 C.R. 504, reached the same result, but adds: "We do not consider the situation where the death of the child occurs during the course of its actual birth." (69 C.A.3d 881.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Prenatal Injuries; Wrongful Life, Birth, or Conception §41 et seq.

164 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

3. Federal Acts.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1383

[§ 1383] In General.

(1) Death at Sea. The right of action for death on the high seas is governed by the Federal Death on the High Seas Act (46 U.S.C., §761 et seq.). (See Gordon v. Reynolds (1960) 187 C.A.2d 472, 477, 10 C.R. 73; Cairl v. Boeing Co. (1974) 39 C.A.3d 137, 138, 113 C.R. 925; Chromy v. Lawrance (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1521, 1526, 285 C.R. 400 [California courts have no jurisdiction to try actions based on Death on the High Seas Act, because wrongful death statute (former C.C.P. 377) does not expressly cover deaths occurring outside the state]; Garofalo v. Princess Cruises (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1060, 1082, 102 C.R.2d 754 [California courts have concurrent jurisdiction over Death on High Seas claims; disagreeing with Chromy on ground that basing concurrent jurisdiction on extraterritorial reach of each state's wrongful death statute would not be uniform and would lead to confusion]; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 389; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 1152; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 409; cf. Rodrigue v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. (1969) 395 U.S. 352, 89 S.Ct. 1835, 1837, 23 L.Ed.2d 360, 364 [death on artificial oil-drilling island on continental shelf off Louisiana; Death on High Seas Act was not exclusive remedy].)

"The Death on the High Seas Act ... announces Congress' considered judgment on such issues as the beneficiaries, the limitations period, contributory negligence, survival, and damages. ... The Act does not address every issue of wrongful death law, ... but when it does speak directly to a question, the courts are not free to 'supplement' Congress' answer so thoroughly that the Act becomes meaningless." (Mobil Oil Corp. v. Higginbotham (1978) 436 U.S. 618, 98 S.Ct. 2010, 2014, 56 L.Ed.2d 581, 587 [holding that Sea-Land Services v. Gaudet (1974) 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 810, 39 L.Ed.2d 9, 18, supra, §1377, allows recovery for nonpecuniary loss of society only in state territorial waters cases].)

(2) F.E.L.A. Cases. In a wrongful death action arising under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C., §51 et seq.), the measure of recovery is "the damages ... that flow from the deprivation of the pecuniary benefits that the beneficiaries might have reasonably received." (See Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Liepelt (1980) 444 U.S. 490, 100 S.Ct. 755, 757, 62 L.Ed.2d 689, 693 [state court erred in excluding evidence, and in refusing jury instruction, on impact of federal income taxation on damage award]; 21 Santa Clara L. Rev. 873 [Norfolk]; BAJI, No. 11.43.1 [award will not be subject to income taxes and these taxes should not be considered]; CACI, No. 2940; 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §118, 119.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.7, 13

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) F.E.L.A. Cases. See 29 A.L.R. Fed 2d 1 [construction and application of FELOA--Supreme Court cases].

165 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

A. In General.

3. Federal Acts.

b. Action Under Federal Civil Rights Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1384

[§ 1384] Action Under Federal Civil Rights Act.

In Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, Rudy Ochoa, a 13-year-old boy in the custody of the county juvenile hall, died as a result of allegedly negligent medical treatment. Mr. and Mrs. Ochoa, his parents, who were present and observed defendant county employees allegedly ignoring the child's medical needs, brought this action, setting forth two main causes of action: (a) negligent infliction of emotional distress (supra, §1008), and (b) violation of civil rights under the Federal Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C., §1983 (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §816 et seq.). In an elaborate opinion, the court held that a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress was stated. (See supra, §1013.) The court also held that a §1983 cause of action was stated by Mrs. Ochoa as special administrator of her deceased son's estate.

(a) The statute is silent on the question whether the action survives the death of the victim of the alleged violations. But 42 U.S.C., §1988 has been interpreted to make the state law on survival applicable (39 C.3d 173); and under former Prob.C. 573 (replaced by C.C.P. 377.20), the tort action for injury to the person survives the death of the victim or wrongdoer. (39 C.3d 174, citing the text; see supra, §23.)

(b) Inadequate medical treatment may constitute a violation of §1983 (39 C.3d 176, 177), and the complaint sufficiently alleged "woefully inadequate" treatment: "Mrs. Ochoa brought her son's symptoms to the attention of the defendants when she visited with him on March 24. When she visited him a second time, Rudy was exhibiting alarming symptoms, including a soaring temperature, dehydration, vomiting, hallucinations, the beginnings of convulsions and severe pain on his left side. He was also observed vomiting blood. These conditions indicated, even to a lay person, that emergency measures were needed. Significantly, it was left to Mrs. Ochoa to make use of the facilities in order to care for her son. Although penicillin was prescribed, it is unclear that any was ever administered. Mrs. Ochoa's requests for treatment for her son were met only with the observation that he had a 'bug.' It is also alleged that no radiological, blood or urine tests were undertaken in order to diagnose Rudy's condition." (39 C.3d 177.) (See 48 Am.Jur. Trials 587 [educator's liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983 for wrongful death of student due to excessive punishment or failure to supervise].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

166 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

1. Single Joint Cause of Action.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1385

[§ 1385] In General.

(1) Statutory Development. Prior to 1949, the wrongful death statute provided for suit by the father alone for wrongful death of a minor child, apart from exceptional circumstances allowing action by the mother, a guardian, or a surviving spouse or child. (See Fuentes v. Tucker (1947) 31 C.2d 1, 10, 187 P.2d 752; Wexler v. Los Angeles (1952) 110 C.A.2d 740, 746, 243 P.2d 868.) However, the 1949 Legislature abolished these rules, and former C.C.P. 377 was enacted, giving a cause of action to all the heirs or the personal representative, whether the child was a minor or an adult. In 1992, former C.C.P. 377 was repealed and restated in C.C.P. 377.60 et seq. Under C.C.P. 377.60, the cause of action is for the death of "a person" and is given to specified individuals (see infra, §1388 et seq.) or to the decedent's personal representative. This statute, which does not mention "heirs," applies to any action arising on or after January 1, 1993. (C.C.P. 377.60(d), (e); see 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 453.)

(2) Joinder of Persons Entitled To Sue. A single joint cause of action is given to all of the persons entitled to sue, and only one action can be brought. Hence, unless the suit is by the personal representative as trustee for these persons, all of them must be joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, in order to recover. (See Salmon v. Rathjens (1907) 152 C. 290, 294, 92 P. 733; Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 C.2d 490, 498, 110 P.2d 384; Rose v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co. (1933) 133 C.A. 646, 651, 24 P.2d 838; Christiana v. Rose (1950) 100 C.A.2d 46, 53, 222 P.2d 891.)

When it is said that a wrongful death action is joint, it is meant that all persons entitled to sue should join or be joined in the action and that a single verdict should be rendered for all recoverable damages. When it is said that the action is single, it is meant that only one action for wrongful death may be brought whether, in fact, it is instituted by all or only one of these persons, or by the personal representative of the decedent. When it is said that the action is indivisible, it is meant that there cannot be a series of suits by the persons entitled to sue against the tortfeasor for their individual damages. (Smith v. Premier Alliance Ins. Co. (1995) 41 C.A.4th 691, 696, 48 C.R.2d 461, infra, §1386.)

(3) Joinder of Defendants. The plaintiffs need not join all causes of action and all potential defendants in one action. Hence, in a statutory action for wrongful death, as in other tort actions, joint tortfeasors may be sued either jointly or severally, although there can be only one satisfaction. (See Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 C.A.3d 434, 437, 438, 439, 104 C.R. 789 [separate actions could be brought against negligent automobile driver (and owner) and against doctor and hospital for malpractice].)

(4) Effect of Arbitration Provision. Where a decedent's health plan included a provision requiring arbitration of any claim arising under the plan asserted by a member or a member's heirs, the arbitration provision was applicable to all the heirs, including (a) the widow and five minor children who were members of the plan, and (b) three adult heirs who were not members of the plan. (Herbert v. Superior Court (1985) 169 C.A.3d 718, 722, 725, 215 C.R. 477, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §297 [binding nonmember heirs effectuates legislative purpose that single cause of action exists for wrongful death of decedent].)

(5) One Heir's Abandonment of Claim. In National Metal & Steel Corp. v. Colby Crane & Mfg. Co. (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1111, 246 C.R. 435, the court pointed out that, despite the requirement of a single action where all the heirs are joined, the cause of action of each heir is personal and separate, and may be abandoned by that heir. (200 C.A.3d 1116.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31, 41, 42

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Effect of Arbitration Provision.

Herbert case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §314.

167 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

1. Single Joint Cause of Action.

b. Effect of Settlement by One Plaintiff.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1386

[§ 1386] Effect of Settlement by One Plaintiff.

In Estate of Kuebler v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 500, 146 C.R. 481, three minor children and their paternal grandparents were killed in the crash of an airplane piloted by the grandparents. Because the father refused to join in a wrongful death action as a plaintiff, the mother filed the action against the estates of the grandparents, joining the father as a nominal defendant under C.C.P. 382 (see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §190). The father then brought his own action against the estates under former Prob.C. 721 (limited to the amount of insurance coverage), and named the mother as a defendant because she refused to join in that action. Before the two actions could be consolidated, the mother settled her claim and dismissed her action with prejudice. The insurance carriers for defendant estates then brought summary judgment on the ground that the dismissal of the mother's action was a bar to the maintenance of the father's action. Held, summary judgment was properly denied.

(a) Defendants relied on Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan (1977) 71 C.A.3d 803, 138 C.R. 319, where a wife was killed; the husband and son filed one action, and the dependent parents filed another; the husband and son settled and dismissed with prejudice, and the court held that the dismissal was a bar to maintenance of the action by the dependent parents. But Mayerhoff did not show that the husband and son had joined the dependent parents in their action. (81 C.A.3d 503.)

(b) Here, the father, though a nominal defendant in the mother's action, was in reality a plaintiff; and the settlement by one party plaintiff ordinarily does not bar the actions of other plaintiffs. (81 C.A.3d 504.) Here, the estates and insurance carrier had actual knowledge of the father's claim and did not regard the settlement as final. (81 C.A.3d 504.)

In Smith v. Premier Alliance Ins. Co. (1995) 41 C.A.4th 691, 48 C.R.2d 461, a decedent's two children brought suit against a wrongful death defendant's insurer that had omitted them from a settlement with the decedent's wife. Plaintiffs had been nominal defendants in the wrongful death action. Held, summary judgment for the insurer affirmed.

(a) A wrongful death defendant can settle the case with either all the heirs or fewer than all. Just as a judgment on behalf of some heirs will not preclude a future action by a known but omitted heir, a wrongful death settlement will not terminate the action if the settlement includes fewer than all the named heirs. By settling with fewer than all the known heirs, a wrongful death defendant waives the right to face only a single wrongful death action, and the nonsettling heirs may continue to pursue the action. This remains true even if the nonsettling heirs are nominally defendants in the case. (41 C.A.4th 698.)

(b) Plaintiffs did not have a right as a matter of law to share in the settlement and would be entitled to share only if they were included in the settlement agreement. Although the insurer apparently told the wife's attorney that its payment of the policy limits was meant to include the claims of plaintiffs and submitted draft releases with signature blocks for them, plaintiffs never signed these releases. Because plaintiffs simply did not settle with the insurer, the settlement agreement encompassed the claim of the wife only, and plaintiffs were entitled to continue to pursue their action against the wrongful death defendant. Moreover, the single-action rule would not have been a bar to the continued prosecution of their wrongful death action. Thus, because the insurer deprived plaintiffs of no rights by settling with the wife alone, that settlement could not give rise to any cause of action by plaintiffs against the insurer. (41 C.A.4th 699.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
C.C.P. 382:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §209.

168 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

1. Single Joint Cause of Action.

c. Action by Omitted Heir.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1387

[§ 1387] Action by Omitted Heir.

(1) General Rule: No Action. An heir wholly omitted from a wrongful death action generally cannot bring a subsequent action. A wrongful death defendant cannot be subjected to a second recovery by another heir of whose existence the defendant had no knowledge at the time of the initial action. (Smith v. Premier Alliance Ins. Co. (1995) 41 C.A.4th 691, 697, 48 C.R.2d 461, citing the text; Hall v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 706, 715, 133 C.R.2d 806, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §326 [attorney representing wife in wrongful death action based on death of daughter had no duty to name estranged husband as nominal defendant; duty belonged to wife, as plaintiff heir, to join omitted heirs as nominal defendants].)

(2) Exception. In Valdez v. Smith (1985) 166 C.A.3d 723, 212 C.R. 638, a widow brought an action for wrongful death of her husband, on behalf of herself and four minor children. Her complaint alleged (incorrectly) that they were the sole surviving heirs, and the case was settled and dismissed with prejudice. Then plaintiff, a surviving child of the decedent by a former marriage, who resided with his mother in Mexico, filed the present action. At the hearing of defendants' motion for summary judgment, the trial judge granted the motion on the ground that the action was barred by the one-action rule. Held, reversed; under the facts, there was an exception to the aforementioned rule.

(a) A number of cases have held that an heir who was not a party to a wrongful death action will be barred by the judgment in that action, despite the fact that the heirs who brought the initial action knew of the existence of another heir. (166 C.A.3d 726, citing Helling v. Lew (1972) 28 C.A.3d 434, 437, 438, 439, 104 C.R. 789, supra, §1385; Mayerhoff v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan (1977) 71 C.A.3d 803, 138 C.R. 319; and Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 C.A.3d 512, 530, 196 C.R. 82, supra, §1380.) These cases note that the omitted heir has the remedy of suit against the other heirs for failing to join him or her in their action. (166 C.A.3d 727, citing Watkins v. Nutting (1941) 17 C.2d 490, 498, 110 P.2d 384, and Helling.)

(b) The facts of the present case bring it within a recognized exception to the one-action rule. There was no indication that plaintiff and his mother, residing in Mexico, knew of the death of the decedent or the pendency of the earlier wrongful death action, and both the widow who had initiated the prior action and defendants were aware of the existence of another heir and made no attempt to join him. Prior cases have upheld the right of the omitted heir to maintain a subsequent independent action under these circumstances. (166 C.A.3d 727, 729, citing Davis v. Robinson (1942) 50 C.A.2d 700, 702, 123 P.2d 894, Estate of Kuebler v. Superior Court (1978) 81 C.A.3d 500, 146 C.R. 481, supra, §1386, and an Idaho case directly in point.) As in Davis v. Robinson, the failure of defendants to make timely objection and have the action abated, or to require joinder of the omitted heir, was a waiver of the objection. (166 C.A.3d 728.)

(c) When, as in the present case, "the defendant in a pending action has actual knowledge of the existence, identity and status of an omitted heir and fails to have said omitted heir made a party to the action, a settlement and dismissal with prejudice of the pending action will not bar a subsequent action by the omitted heir against the defendant." (166 C.A.3d 731.) (See Ruttenberg v. Ruttenberg (1997) 53 C.A.4th 801, 815, 62 C.R.2d 78 [allowing omitted heir to sue is not only consistent with single-action rule, but is mandated by it].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule: No Action.

Hall case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §302.

(2) Exception. See Romero v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2007) 156 C.A.4th 211, 218, 67 C.R.3d 236 [fact that defendant tortfeasor was unaware that known heir joined as nominal defendant in wrongful death action, as required by C.C.P. 382, was not served was no defense to rule that tortfeasor waives protection of one-action rule by settling wrongful death claim with less than all known heirs if such heirs are not party to action; burden is on tortfeasor wishing to avail itself of protections of one-action rule to ascertain whether heirs named as defendants have been properly joined].

169 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

a. Heirs Under Former Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1388

[§ 1388] Heirs Under Former Law.

(1) In General. The "heirs" referred to in former C.C.P. 377 were those entitled to succeed from the decedent at death under the laws of succession. (See Fiske v. Wilkie (1945) 67 C.A.2d 440, 444, 154 P.2d 725 [wrongful death of mother; father died shortly afterwards; daughters were entitled to sue]; Wilson v. San Francisco (1951) 106 C.A.2d 440, 444, 235 P.2d 81 [wrongful death of brother, action by sister]; see 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §78 et seq.; 31 A.L.R.3d 379 [brothers and sisters].) (On action by adopted child, see 94 A.L.R.2d 1237; on action by parent against unemancipated child, see 62 A.L.R.3d 1299; on action by unemancipated minor child against one parent for wrongful death of other parent, see 87 A.L.R.3d 849.)

(2) Relatives Who Are Not Heirs. Relatives who would not be entitled to take a share in the estate under the rules of succession could not sue. In Evans v. Shanklin (1936) 16 C.A.2d 358, 60 P.2d 554, decedent, an adult son, separated from his wife and children, lived with and supported his mother. Held, the mother could not sue, for where the decedent leaves a widow and children, the estate goes to them, to the exclusion of the parents. Thus, the mother was barred, though actually dependent on the decedent, while the wife and children were not. (16 C.A.2d 362.) (See Davis v. Southern Arizona Freight Lines, Ltd. (1938) 30 C.A.2d 48, 85 P.2d 897 [same result]; California State Auto. Assn., Inter-Ins. Bureau v. Jacobson (1972) 24 C.A.3d 850, 853, 101 C.R. 366 [stepfather was not entitled to recover for wrongful death of stepdaughter]; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §78 et seq.; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 177; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 481.) (On abrogation by statute, see infra, §1392.)

(3) Putative Spouse. A putative wife, an heir of the deceased putative husband, could bring the action. (Kunakoff v. Woods (1958) 166 C.A.2d 59, 63, 332 P.2d 773.) (On right of spouse to sue where injury occurred before marriage and resulting death occurred after marriage, see 69 A.L.R.3d 1046.)

(4) Illegitimate Child. It was formerly the rule in California that an illegitimate child neither legitimated nor acknowledged for inheritance was not an heir and therefore was not entitled to recovery. But in Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, denial of the right of an illegitimate child to sue for wrongful death of his mother was held to be an unconstitutional discrimination. (See 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §780.) Thereafter, the reference to "heirs" in the former California statute was given an enlarged meaning in conformity with the Levy holding. (See Arizmendi v. System Leasing Corp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 730, 737, 740, 93 C.R. 411 [illegitimate children entitled to sue for wrongful death of father].) (On elimination of distinction between legitimate and illegitimate children under Uniform Parentage Act, see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §17.)

(5) Stepchild. In Steed v. Imperial Airlines (1974) 12 C.3d 115, 115 C.R. 329, 524 P.2d 801, the court, construing the term "heirs" strictly, held that a stepchild could not recover. The court rejected a constitutional challenge based on the analogy of an illegitimate child, and concluded that the legislative judgment did not infringe any constitutional protection: "The plaintiff, like any number of other persons who, in particular cases, may suffer injury and economic and personal loss by the death of an individual, is without legal recourse absent specific statutory remedy." (12 C.3d 126.) (See 63 Cal. L. Rev. 343; 1 Pepperdine L. Rev. 425; 68 A.L.R.3d 1220 [action for death of stepparent by or for benefit of stepchild]; and see Reynolds v. Los Angeles (1986) 176 C.A.3d 1044, 1049, 222 C.R. 517 [rejecting contention that person who had custody of child with intention of to adopt, but who never did obtain adoption decree, could sue for wrongful death of child].) (For statutory revision, see infra, §1389.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

170 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XV. WRONGFUL DEATH
B. Cause of Action and Parties.
2. Persons Entitled To Sue.
b. Listed Persons Under Current Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1389

[§ 1389] Listed Persons Under Current Law.

The 1975 Legislature revised former C.C.P. 377 to increase the number of persons entitled to bring a wrongful death action. (See 9 Pacific L. J. 672.) This statute was repealed in 1992 and substantially restated in C.C.P. 377.60 et seq. Instead of specifically defining the term "heirs," C.C.P. 377.60 provides that the action may be asserted by the following persons or by the decedent's personal representative on their behalf:

(1) "The decedent's surviving spouse, domestic partner, children, and issue of deceased children, or, if there is no surviving issue of the decedent, the persons, including the surviving spouse or domestic partner, who would be entitled to the property of the decedent by intestate succession." (C.C.P. 377.60(a); on intestate succession, see Prob.C. 6400 et seq.; 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §74 et seq.)

(2) The putative spouse, children of the putative spouse, stepchildren, or parents, if they were dependent on the decedent, regardless of whether they are entitled to succeed. (C.C.P. 377.60(b); see infra, §1390 et seq.)

(3) A minor, whether or not qualified under the first two classes, "if, at the time of the decedent's death, the minor resided for the previous 180 days in the decedent's household and was dependent on the decedent for one-half or more of the minor's support." (C.C.P. 377.60(c).)

C.C.P. 377.60 applies to any action arising on or after January 1, 1993, and does not adversely affect the standing of any party under prior law. (C.C.P. 377.60(d), (e).) (See Desplancke v. Wilson (1993) 14 C.A.4th 631, 635, 17 C.R.2d 586 [C.C.P. 377.60(a) codifies rule of Fiske v. Wilkie (1945) 67 C.A.2d 440, 154 P.2d 725, supra, §1388, that decedent's children are heirs even if decedent's entire estate is community property that passes to surviving spouse]; Fraizer v. Velkura (2001) 91 C.A.4th 942, 944, 110 C.R.2d 918 [neither termination of rights of decedent child's parents at hearing under Welf.C. 366.26, nor placement of decedent for adoption shortly before her death, affected standing of decedent's grandmother to bring wrongful death action]; Nelson v. Los Angeles (2003) 113 C.A.4th 783, 789, 6 C.R.3d 650 [mother's uncontradicted statement constituted substantial evidence that her deceased adult son had no children, and established her standing to bring wrongful death action].)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31(1), 41

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

171 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

c. Putative Spouse.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1390

[§ 1390] Putative Spouse.

C.C.P. 377.60(b) defines "putative spouse" as "the surviving spouse of a void or voidable marriage who is found by the court to have believed in good faith that the marriage to the decedent was valid." (See Wagner v. Imperial (1983) 145 C.A.3d 980, 983, 193 C.R. 820 [good faith belief was sufficient to establish status of putative spouse under former C.C.P. 377(b)(2); no need to show solemnization ceremony]; 7 Pacific L. J. 562.)

In Centinela Hosp. Med. Center v. Superior Court (1989) 215 C.A.3d 971, 263 C.R. 672, plaintiff's action for the wrongful death of Ann, the woman he had lived with for 23 years, was based on the argument that he qualified as a putative spouse under former C.C.P. 377(b)(2) (now C.C.P. 377.60(b)) because of his good faith belief that he and Ann were validly married. Held, as a matter of law, plaintiff could not reasonably have believed in the validity of the marriage.

(a) A good faith belief, which is tested by an objective standard, requires a reasonable belief in the existence of a lawful California marriage. (215 C.A.3d 975.)

(b) Plaintiff asserted that he believed that he and Ann had entered into a valid common law marriage based on the following factors: their exchange of private marital vows; Ann's change of name to plaintiff's; their shared bank account; and the purchases made and debts incurred by them together. However, because California abolished common law marriages in 1895 (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §42), plaintiff's belief was unreasonable as a matter of law. (215 C.A.3d 975.)

(c) Plaintiff admitted that, although he and Ann exchanged private vows, he made no attempt to comply with the procedural requirements of a valid marriage (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §42 et seq.). Without this effort, the factors relied on by plaintiff were not sufficient to support a reasonable good faith belief in a lawful California marriage. (215 C.A.3d 975.)

(4) "We respectfully decline to follow" Wagner v. Imperial, which held that a good faith belief in the validity of a marriage was the only requirement for establishing putative spouse status. (215 C.A.3d 976.) And the holding in Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 C.3d 267, 250 C.R. 254, 758 P.2d 582, supra, §1020, is broad enough to preclude plaintiff's wrongful death action. (215 C.A.3d 976.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31(6), 41

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

172 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

d. Domestic Partner.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1391

[§ 1391] Domestic Partner.

A cause of action for wrongful death may be asserted by the decedent's surviving domestic partner. (C.C.P. 377.60(a).) For this purpose, the term "domestic partner" refers to a person who, at the time of decedent's death, was the domestic partner of the decedent in a registered domestic partnership established under Family C. 297(b) (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §27). (C.C.P. 377.60(f)(1); see C.C.P. 377.60(f)(2) [exception for death occurring before January 1, 2002].)

In Holguin v. Flores (2004) 122 C.A.4th 428, 18 C.R.3d 749, plaintiff instituted a wrongful death action when his partner of the opposite sex was killed in a traffic accident. Although neither party was over age 62, plaintiff contended that he and decedent, although of the opposite sex, were nevertheless "domestic partners" within the meaning of Family C. 297(a) ("domestic partners" defined) and that he therefore, under C.C.P. 377.60, had standing to sue. The trial court disagreed, and entered judgment on demurrer for defendant. Held, affirmed; to be entitled to sue as a domestic partner, an individual must meet the criteria of both Family C. 297(a) and (b).

(a) Family C. 297(b)(5)(B) states that persons of the opposite sex may not constitute a domestic partnership unless one or both are over the age of 62. Moreover, the 2001 amendment allowing a surviving domestic partner to sue for wrongful death was part of a series of statutory amendments enlarging the definition of a domestic partnership and expanding the rights and benefits of its members. The evidence is thus overwhelming that in enacting these amendments, the Legislature only intended to extend the rights and benefits of members of domestic partnerships as defined in Family C. 297, not to create new rights and benefits for unmarried cohabiting couples in general. (122 C.A.4th 435.)

(b) According to the Legislative Counsel, the 2001 amendment to Family C. 299(a) expanded the legal effect of the registration of a domestic partnership to any provision of law specifically referring to domestic partners. The wrongful death statute is such a statute, and thus in order to sue, the plaintiff must be a registered domestic partner of the decedent. However, the plaintiff can only be a registered domestic partner if the partners were of the same sex or one of them was at least 62 years of age and eligible for benefits under the Social Security Act based on age. (122 C.A.4th 436.)

(c) The legislative history of the 2001 amendments clearly states that the amendments would confer various new legal rights on registered domestic partners " 'including rights ... to bring an action and recover damages for wrongful death and emotional distress.' " The history also notes that the amendments would confer on same-sex couples most of the rights pertaining to married couples, but that unmarried cohabitants would remain without any rights. (122 C.A.4th 436.)

(d) Plaintiff contended that C.C.P. 377.60 discriminated on the basis of his gender and age and that, therefore, to justify the discrimination, there must be a compelling state interest, rather than merely a rational basis. This contention is without merit, because the statute does not discriminate against plaintiff on the basis of his gender or age, but on the basis of his marital status, i.e., unmarried, but with the right to wed. Hence, the "rational basis" test governs this case. (122 C.A.4th 438.)

(e) Here, the Legislature rationally could have concluded the survivors of same-sex couples and couples with a member eligible for Social Security benefits based on age are deserving of solicitude, because they are as likely to suffer economic loss from the death of their partners as are spouses, but, because of other statutory schemes, they are legally or practically prevented from marrying. However, couples such as plaintiff and decedent are not entitled to the same solicitude, because the law does not prevent them from marrying. Furthermore, the Legislature could also reasonably have concluded that in the case of married couples and domestic partners, the permanency of the relationship is evidenced by the marriage license and Declaration of Domestic Partnership, respectively. No equivalent public record exists for unmarried cohabiting couples who are of the opposite sex, and thus compensation for loss of monetary support is too speculative to calculate. (122 C.A.4th 442.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Retroactivity: In Bouley v. Long Beach Memorial Med. Center (2005) 127 C.A.4th 601, 25 C.R.3d 813, decedent died in May 2001, i.e., when C.C.P. 377.60(a) did not allow domestic partners to bring a wrongful death action. However, the statute was amended in 2001, effective January 1, 2002, to add domestic partners to the list of those who could maintain a wrongful death action. In May 2002, plaintiff, decedent's domestic partner, filed a wrongful death action. Held, plaintiff had standing. C.C.P. 377.60(d) states that the statute applies to causes of action arising on or after January 1, 1993, thereby clearly indicating that the Legislature intended the 2001 amendment to be retroactive. (127 C.A.4th 606.) (See Armijo v. Miles (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1405, 1409, 26 C.R.3d 623 [2004 amendment, which reflected Legislature's clear intent that 2002 amendment was to have retroactive application, was enacted pending appeal of case and applied retroactively].)

173 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

e. Dependent Parents.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1392

[§ 1392] Dependent Parents.

Evans v. Shanklin (1936) 16 C.A.2d 358, 60 P.2d 554, supra, §1388, denied recovery to the decedent's dependent parent. In 1968, the wrongful death statute was amended to overcome this holding.

Hazelwood v. Hazelwood (1976) 57 C.A.3d 693, 129 C.R. 384, construing the 1968 statute, held that "dependent parents" are those who, at the time of the child's death, are "actually dependent, to some extent, upon the decedent for the necessities of life." (57 C.A.3d 698.) Hence, plaintiff parents, who were gainfully employed and self-supporting, were not entitled to share in the recovery. (See Perry v. Medina (1987) 192 C.A.3d 603, 610, 237 C.R. 532 [applying Hazelwood test; whether groceries and $ 50 a month provided by son to mother made mother a dependent parent was a triable factual issue, in light of mother's "meager" $ 400 monthly income, $ 200 of which paid her rent]; Coats v. K-Mart Corp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 961, 969, 264 C.R. 12 [widow not dependent on decedent for necessities of life cannot sue]; Chavez v. Carpenter (2001) 91 C.A.4th 1433, 1445, 111 C.R.2d 534 [24-year-old decedent paid his parents $ 100 per month, regularly provided groceries and grocery money, and contributed maintenance services; whether parents had standing to bring wrongful death action as "dependent parents" was disputed factual question].)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31(7), 41

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

174 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

f. Child of Presumed Parent.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1393

[§ 1393] Child of Presumed Parent.

In Gabehart v. Simonsen (1986) 176 C.A.3d 672, 222 C.R. 336, decedent lived with D, his nonmarital cohabitant. She gave birth to a son, K, and decedent openly held the child out as his own. D brought this action for wrongful death on behalf of K. However, C, decedent's mother, also sued on the theory that because K's paternity had never been adjudicated, decedent died without issue and she was the sole heir under former Prob.C. 225 (now Prob.C. 6402). In the hearing on defendants' motion for summary judgment, C produced a complaint and verified answer in a paternity action previously filed on behalf of K, in which decedent denied paternity. The trial court granted summary judgment and C appealed. Held, reversed.

(a) C's contention that paternity cannot be established after the alleged father's death is incorrect. Under former Prob.C. 255(a), succession by a child is dependent on the existence of the relationship prior to death, and this would seem to preclude a civil action to establish paternity after the death. But former Prob.C. 255(d) stated that a parent and child relationship "exists" when it is established by action or is "presumed and not rebutted" pursuant to C.C. 7000 et seq. (Uniform Parentage Act, see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §17 et seq.). (176 C.A.3d 677.)

(b) Under former C.C. 7004 (now Family C. 7611), a man is presumed to be the natural father of a child if he receives the child into his home and openly holds him out as his natural child; and that was the case here. Where the relationship is based on the presumption, it "exists" as of the time of the occurrence of the facts giving rise to the presumption; i.e., the relationship exists prior to the death of the decedent even though no use of the presumption is made until after the decedent's death. (176 C.A.3d 677.)

(c) Thus, there was evidence to support the conclusion that K was the son of decedent and thus entitled to bring a wrongful death action, and also evidence to the contrary (decedent's verified answer in the paternity action). Hence, a triable issue of fact was presented, and the summary judgment was improper. (176 C.A.3d 677, 678.)

In Cheyanna M. v. A.C. Nielsen Co. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 855, 78 C.R.2d 335, D and A had a brief affair, and A became pregnant with plaintiff. D never acknowledged to A that he was the father, although testimony by other people tended to establish his paternity. Before plaintiff was born, D was killed. About 6 months after plaintiff's birth, two wrongful death actions were brought: one by plaintiff through a guardian ad litem, and one by D's parents, who successfully moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff lacked standing to bring a wrongful death action. D's parents contended that, to have standing, plaintiff had to be an "heir" within the meaning of the intestate succession law, while plaintiff argued that standing to maintain a wrongful death action should be determined by the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity. Held, reversed; the laws of succession governed, but, nevertheless, there was a triable issue of fact whether plaintiff had standing.

(a) Former C.C.P. 377 authorized a decedent's "heirs" to maintain a wrongful death action, and the word "heirs" was interpreted as applying only to those who would have been eligible to have inherited from the decedent's estate had he or she died intestate. (66 C.A.4th 861, citing Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 C.3d 564, 139 C.R. 97, 565 P.2d 122, supra, §1382.) In 1992, the current statute, C.C.P. 377.60, substituted the word "children" for "heirs." However, the Law Revision Commission stated that this change simply reiterated the former statute without substantive change. Moreover, as Phraner v. Cote Mart (1997) 55 C.A.4th 166, 63 C.R.2d 740, infra, §1397, makes clear, the purpose of the change was to allow a wrongful death claim by those children who were not heirs only because the estate of the decedent consisted entirely of community property. (66 C.A.4th 862.)

(b) Whether plaintiff is an "heir" under the laws of intestate succession is a disputed question of fact: (1) Because D died without a spouse, his entire estate passed to his issue; (2) the "issue" of a person is defined as the lineal descendants of all generations having the relationship of parent and child; (3) a parent and child relationship exists between a person and that person's natural parents regardless of their marital status; (4) a biological father is a "natural parent" if paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence that the father has openly held out the child as his own, or if it is impossible for the father to hold the child out as his own, the biological father is a "natural parent" if paternity is established by clear and convincing evidence. Thus, if D could have held plaintiff out as his child, and there is clear and convincing evidence that he did so, plaintiff would be an heir under the intestacy laws. Or if it was impossible for D to hold plaintiff out as his child, she would be an heir if there was clear and convincing evidence of paternity. (66 C.A.4th 866.)

(c) Whether it was possible for D to have held plaintiff out as his child depends on the definition of "child." D's parents contended that D could have held plaintiff out as his "child," because the word "child" included a fetus, and the fact that he did not do so meant that plaintiff was not an "heir." On the other hand, plaintiff argued that the term "child" referred only to a human being born alive and that it was thus impossible for D to have held plaintiff out as his child. Plaintiff's position is correct. (66 C.A.4th 867.)

(d) Although C.C. 43.1 states that an unborn child is deemed an existing person so far as necessary for the child's interests in the event of its subsequent birth, California law, with a few exceptions, has not treated the fetus as equivalent to the born child. (66 C.A.4th 869.) Moreover, as indicated by the statutory language, C.C. 43.1 applies only to the extent that it benefits a child. And plaintiff's interests would hardly be served by applying this statute to construe the term "child," as used in the intestacy laws, as including a fetus, because such an application would preclude plaintiff from bringing a wrongful death action. (66 C.A.4th 870.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.31(8), 41

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

175 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

2. Persons Entitled To Sue.

g. Other Persons.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1394

[§ 1394] Other Persons.

In Lozano v. Scalier (1996) 51 C.A.4th 843, 59 C.R.2d 346, plaintiff was the natural father of decedent, and had never married defendant, decedent's mother. When decedent was killed in a car accident, plaintiff brought a wrongful death action against defendant, who was driving at the time. There was evidence that plaintiff had contributed to the support of decedent and that, 5 months before decedent's birth, plaintiff had acknowledged that decedent was his child, both orally to numerous persons and in writing by signing a policy for medical care as decedent's father. Plaintiff brought this action under C.C.P. 377.60(a) as one who would be entitled to decedent's property by intestate succession. Held, plaintiff was a proper person to bring the action. Under Prob.C. 6452, the parent of a child born out of wedlock may inherit from the child if he or she both contributed to the child's support and acknowledged the child. Here, it was established that the contribution to support requirement was met, and the acknowledgment was also sufficient. There is no requirement that the acknowledgment be in writing, that it be witnessed, or that it occur after decedent's birth. (51 C.A.4th 845.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

176 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

3. Persons Not Entitled To Sue.

a. Nonmarital Cohabitant.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1395

[§ 1395] Nonmarital Cohabitant.

A nonmarital cohabitant who is not a domestic partner does not have standing to bring a wrongful death action for the death of his or her cohabitant. (Holguin v. Flores (2004) 122 C.A.4th 428, 432, 18 C.R.3d 749, supra, §1391.) Moreover, a nonmarital cohabitant of the opposite sex is not a putative spouse and is not entitled to sue as an heir. (Harrod v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1981) 118 C.A.3d 155, 158, 173 C.R. 68 [exclusion of these persons is reasonable legislative limitation on the statutory right, and not a denial of equal protection]; Garcia v. Douglas Aircraft Co. (1982) 133 C.A.3d 890, 894, 184 C.R. 390 [same]; Nieto v. Los Angeles (1982) 138 C.A.3d 464, 472, 188 C.R. 31 [same]; Rosales v. Battle (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1178, 1182, 7 C.R.3d 13 [woman declared concubine by Mexican court could not bring wrongful death action, because concubinage does not confer all rights and duties of common law marriage, and, although she was heir under Mexican law, she was not, as required, heir under California law].) (See 13 Pacific L. J. 125 [arguing that courts should recognize cause of action]; 20 San Diego L. Rev. 417 [arguing that exclusion of cohabitants is proper].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

177 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XV. WRONGFUL DEATH
B. Cause of Action and Parties.
3. Persons Not Entitled To Sue.
b. Heir When Statutory Heirs Disclaim.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1396

[§ 1396] Heir When Statutory Heirs Disclaim.

In Lewis v. Regional Center of the East Bay (1985) 174 C.A.3d 350, 220 C.R. 89, decedent, a child of 13, was living with plaintiffs, his grandparents, who had become his legal guardians. He died by drowning, and his natural parents and half-brother filed disclaimers waiving any interest in his estate. Plaintiff grandparents, who became heirs to his estate by reason of the disclaimers filed by heirs with statutory priority, brought this wrongful death action. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the disclaimers only permitted plaintiffs to inherit, and had no effect on the right to maintain an action for wrongful death. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs contended that the statutes on intestate succession and disclaimer should be read together, with the result that the disclaimer of interest includes a waiver of all other indices of heirship. This view has no support. "The two sections concern different legal interest and property rights and are contained in separate parts of the Probate Code. The wrongful death statute provides a right to be compensated for a tort which is personal and cannot be assigned. The disclaimer statutes allow an heir in either testate or intestate estates to disclaim his interest in decedent's property. To read together statutory provisions which the Legislature adopted for different purposes would place a judicial gloss on the statutes which the plain meaning and legislative history does not support." (174 C.A.3d 354.)

(b) Considerations of policy do not call for a different result. "The purpose of the wrongful death statute is to permit recovery of compensation by heirs for economic loss and loss of consortium resulting from the death. ... The plaintiffs in such action stand in such a close relation to the decedent as to be presumed to be injured by his death. ... On the other hand, the disclaimer provisions are unrelated to any tort compensation scheme. These provisions concern all beneficiaries, whether heirs or not." (174 C.A.3d 355.)

(c) The wrongful death action is statutory, and the right to maintain the action cannot be created for equitable reasons. (174 C.A.3d 355, citing Steed v. Imperial Airlines (1974) 12 C.3d 115, 115 C.R. 329, 524 P.2d 801, supra, §1388.) Plaintiffs could have achieved their object if they had adopted the minor, but they had not; and the Legislature must decide whether to create a new category of guardians entitled to sue for wrongful death. (174 C.A.3d 355.)

Lewis was followed in Mayo v. White (1986) 178 C.A.3d 1083, 224 C.R. 373. Decedent child died from drowning, his parents renounced heirship, and plaintiff special administrator brought the action on behalf of decedent's siblings.

Held, a demurrer was properly sustained. "As in Lewis, the brother and sisters of the deceased minor in the instant case would not have standing to bring an action for wrongful death, despite the parents' alleged renunciation of heirship (which we will assume is the equivalent of a disclaimer as provided for in the Probate Code). By the same token, plaintiff, as the personal representative of the deceased minor, cannot maintain the action on their behalf. The disclaimer was the functional equivalent of an assignment of the parents' cause of action for wrongful death to persons not qualified to maintain such a suit." (178 C.A.3d 1090.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

178 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

3. Persons Not Entitled To Sue.

c. Other Persons.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1397

[§ 1397] Other Persons.

(1) Killer of Decedent. Marks v. Lyerla (1991) 1 C.A.4th 556, 2 C.R.2d 63, held that the paternal grandmother of a child allegedly murdered by her mother could not bring a wrongful death action, because under former C.C.P. 377, the only heir entitled to bring the action was the decedent's mother. (1 C.A.4th 560.) This rule was changed by the enactment of Prob.C. 258 in 1992: "A person who feloniously and intentionally kills the decedent is not entitled to bring an action for wrongful death of the decedent or to benefit from the action brought by the decedent's personal representative. The persons who may bring an action for wrongful death of the decedent and to benefit from the action are determined as if the killer had predeceased the decedent."

(2) Adopted Children. Under C.C.P. 377.60(a), an adopted child is not one of the "children" of its biological mother, because adoption severs the parent-child relationship. Thus, an adopted child cannot bring a wrongful death action for the biological mother's death. Not allowing adopted children to sue for wrongful death in this instance does not violate equal protection. (Phraner v. Cote Mart (1997) 55 C.A.4th 166, 168, 63 C.R.2d 740.)

(3) Where Issue of Decedent Dies Before Action Is Filed. In Chavez v. Carpenter (2001) 91 C.A.4th 1433, 111 C.R.2d 534, decedent, who was killed in a traffic accident, was survived by both his parents and a daughter. Under C.C.P. 377.60, standing to bring a wrongful death action resided in the daughter, but she was killed 2 months later in a unrelated accident. A wrongful death action was then filed by decedent's parents as heirs. Held, the parents lacked standing. Under the statute, only the daughter had standing, assuming that she "survived" her father's death. As such, all that is required is that she have outlived her father, not that she have lived long enough to file the action. (91 C.A.4th 1440.) "Whatever our perceptions of the equities in this case, we are powerless to recognize standing that does not exist under the statute." (91 C.A.4th 1443.)

(4) Former Spouse. A former spouse, whose marriage with the decedent has been dissolved, is not within the class of persons entitled to sue. (Villacampa v. Russell (1986) 178 C.A.3d 906, 910, 224 C.R. 73 [rejecting constitutional challenge].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) (New) Child of Parent Whose Parental Rights Have Been Terminated. An order terminating parental rights severs

the parent-child relationship and extinguishes all rights and obligations between the child and his or her parents. (Welf.C. 366.26(i).) Thus, a minor whose natural mother's parental rights have been terminated has no standing to bring a wrongful death action arising from the death of the natural mother. (Jackson v. Fitzgibbons (2005) 127 C.A.4th 329, 333, 25 C.R.3d 478.)

179 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

B. Cause of Action and Parties.

4. Right by Compromise and Estoppel.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1398

[§ 1398] Right by Compromise and Estoppel.

In Changaris v. Marvel (1964) 231 C.A.2d 308, 41 C.R. 774, decedent was killed by the negligence of a tortfeasor, and Attorney C instituted a wrongful death action for the widow and four adult children. The suit was compromised for $ 45,000, and, after deducting costs and compensation, C had the sum of $ 29,317.39 to distribute. The four children then challenged the widow's claim on the theory that she had not been legally married to decedent. C brought an interpleader action, was discharged, and judgment was given distributing the bulk to the widow. The children appealed. Held, affirmed, on two grounds.

(a) The compromise of the action determined the widow's status as a surviving wife. The basis of wrongful death recovery is the pecuniary loss to each heir, and, although there is a lump sum award, it consists of the amount of damage suffered by all, added together. If a judge tries the case, he or she knows what items were added together to make the whole and can distribute it simply. If a jury brings in a lump sum, the judge uses the evidence taken to determine the distribution. In neither case does the judge reexamine the right to recovery. (231 C.A.2d 312.) In a compromise, by analogy, each party has contributed to the sum; and none can properly contest the right of another, for this would not increase his or her own right to any part of the award. So, in the interpleader action, the judge took evidence of the damage suffered by each, and made the apportionment. The challenge to the widow's right was properly rejected, because the other heirs' interests would not be affected by the award to her. (231 C.A.2d 313.)

(b) The children were estopped. They had full knowledge of whatever challenge they could make when the suit was begun; they relied on the widow to bring and press the suit because her claim was the only large one. It would be inequitable to permit them to attack, belatedly, the widow's claim, to obtain for themselves money to which they had no claim. (231 C.A.2d 314.) (See Hernandez v. Fujioka (1974) 40 C.A.3d 294, 301, 114 C.R. 844 [allocation of award].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

180 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XV. WRONGFUL DEATH
C. Necessity of Pecuniary Loss.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1399

[§ 1399] Necessity of Pecuniary Loss.

(1) General Rule. There can be no recovery unless an heir has suffered pecuniary loss. Although the judgment must be for a single lump sum, the damages are shared among the heirs in proportion to the loss suffered by each, and an heir who has suffered no pecuniary loss is not entitled to any part of the recovery. (See Burk v. Arcata & Mad River R. Co. (1899) 125 C. 364, 367, 57 P. 1065; Estate of Ricconi (1921) 185 C. 458, 461, 197 P. 97; Ginocchio v. San Francisco (1924) 194 C. 159, 167, 228 P. 428; Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 272, 276, footnote 3, 87 C.R.2d 222, 980 P.2d 927, infra, §1661, citing the text; Bowen v. Kizirian (1930) 105 C.A. 286, 289, 287 P. 570; Zeller v. Reid (1938) 26 C.A.2d 421, 424, 79 P.2d 449 [mother of 18-year-old decedent was not dependent on him and received none of his earnings; held improper to award $ 1,000 damages]; Changaris v. Marvel (1964) 231 C.A.2d 308, 312, 41 C.R. 774, supra, §1398; Estate of D'India (1976) 63 C.A.3d 942, 947, 134 C.R. 165, citing the text [entire award to decedent's husband; mother's claim of loss of support, based on conflicting evidence, rejected and judgment affirmed]; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.14; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §§191, 192.) (On parent's desertion, abandonment, or failure to support child as affecting right or measure of recovery for wrongful death of child, see 53 A.L.R.3d 566; on recovery of punitive damages, see infra, §§1578, 1586; on recovery for loss of consortium, see infra, §1691.) The statute no longer refers to "heirs." (See supra, §1389.)

(2) Reasonable Expectation of Benefits. If one spouse has been deserted the other, the basis of the recovery for the other's death is an enforceable right to support. (Powers v. Sutherland Auto Stage Co. (1923) 190 C. 487, 489, 213 P. 494 [wife deserted by husband]; see 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 409.) However, pecuniary loss is not based solely on a legal right to support, but rather upon the reasonable expectation of the heir to benefits during the lifetime of the decedent, which may originate in a purely moral obligation. So where decedent, plaintiff's 20-year-old son, had enlisted in the Navy, and sent home only small sums, an award of $ 5,000 was nevertheless upheld. The objection that his minority would have ended before his term of enlistment was held immaterial. (Karwoski v. Grant (1938) 30 C.A.2d 171, 179, 85 P.2d 944.) (See Rickards v. Noonan (1940) 40 C.A.2d 266, 268, 104 P.2d 839 [interlocutory decree granted without alimony, but, at time of decedent husband's death, parties were about to become reconciled; plaintiff widow was entitled to damages]; Luis v. Cavin (1948) 88 C.A.2d 107, 118, 198 P.2d 563 [interlocutory decree granted under former statute, incorporating property settlement agreement in which wife waived all right to support; widow was entitled to damages where, after entry of decree, decedent sought reconciliation, parties discussed it, and widow eventually intended to grant it]; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 478.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.18(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See Corder v. Corder (2007) 41 C.4th 644, 651, 660, 61 C.R.3d 660, 161 P.3d 172 [right to apportionment applies to lump sum settlement, as well as to lump sum award, but apportionment giving widow only 10%, based on decedent's alleged intent to divorce widow, was unjustified where substantial evidence failed to support finding that marriage between parties was about to end]; 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.14.

181 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XV. WRONGFUL DEATH
D. Defenses.
1. Negligence of Decedent.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1400

[§ 1400] Negligence of Decedent.

Cases decided under the former doctrine of contributory negligence held that contributory negligence of the decedent was a bar to recovery by the heirs. (See Buckley v. Chadwick (1955) 45 C.2d 183, 199, 288 P.2d 12, 289 P.2d 242; Keena v. United R. of San Francisco (1922) 57 C.A. 124, 127, 207 P. 35; Carroll v. Beavers (1954) 126 C.A.2d 828, 832, 273 P.2d 56; 42 Cal. L. Rev. 310 [raising doubts later resolved by Buckley]; 7 Hastings L. J. 332; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 344 [exhaustive analysis and criticism of result in Buckley]; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §§23.8, 24.4; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §§175, 176.) Also, the contributory negligence of the decedent's employee was imputed to the decedent under the usual rules of imputed negligence. (Buckley v. Chadwick, supra; see supra, §1324.)

Under the doctrine of comparative negligence (see supra, §1329), contributory negligence of the decedent will be given the same effect in a wrongful death action as it would have in a personal injury action: The damages awarded to the heirs must be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the decedent. (See Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 C.3d 530, 552, 138 C.R. 705, 564 P.2d 857 [products liability action, recognizing rule in wrongful death]; Lemos v. Eichel (1978) 83 C.A.3d 110, 118, 147 C.R. 603; BAJI, Nos. 3.53, 3.60 et seq., 14.90, 14.91; CACI, Nos. 407, 3960.)

A concurring opinion in Willis v. Gordon (1978) 20 C.3d 629, 636, 143 C.R. 723, 574 P.2d 794, argues that Buckley should no longer be controlling, and that neither contributory nor comparative negligence of the decedent should be allowed as a defense in a wrongful death action. (See 11 Pacific L. J. 775.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.23

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §§23.8, 24.4.

182 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

D. Defenses.

2. Negligence of Heir.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1401

[§ 1401] Negligence of Heir.

Under the former doctrine of contributory negligence, the contributory negligence of an heir was a bar to his or her claim, but other heirs free from this negligence could recover fully for their loss. (Bowler v. Roos (1931) 213 C. 484, 485, 2 P.2d 817; Bowen v. Kizirian (1930) 105 C.A. 286, 290, 287 P. 570; Kasunich v. Kraft (1962) 201 C.A.2d 177, 185, 19 C.R. 872; see 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §23.8; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §177 et seq.; 2 A.L.R.2d 785 [contributory negligence of beneficiary as affecting action under death or survival statute].)

This principle was invoked in an unusual fact situation in Perkins v. Robertson (1956) 140 C.A.2d 536, 295 P.2d 972. Defendant stepfather, by wilful misconduct in driving, caused the death of decedent mother. He contended that, because there is only one joint action by all the heirs (supra, §§1385, 1386), he, as an heir, was a necessary party plaintiff, and could not sue himself. The court held, however, that, just as an heir contributorily negligent must join, but cannot recover damages, so the wrongdoer may be joined pursuant to the statute but will not be entitled to a share in the award. (See 95 A.L.R.2d 585 [beneficiary who is tortfeasor].)

Under the doctrine of comparative negligence (see supra, §1329), contributory negligence of an heir will merely be a ground for reducing of his or her damages.

A beneficiary remains responsible for his or her own negligence, and negligence of one beneficiary for that reason alone is not imputed to any other beneficiary. Moreover, the negligence of a nominal plaintiff, such as the representative of the estate or guardian of a beneficiary, is not for that reason alone imputed to the real parties in interest. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6, Comment c.) (See 26 A.L.R.4th 396 [effect of negligence of one parent contributing to child's death on action by other parent for death of child].)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.24

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §23.8.

183 of 183 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XV. WRONGFUL DEATH

D. Defenses.

3. Prior Action or Release.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1402

[§ 1402] Prior Action or Release.

(1) By Heir. Because the action is single (see supra, §1385), a prior recovery by one heir will constitute a bar to another action. But an heir from whom the action is fraudulently concealed may sue the other heirs and obtain his or her share of the recovery. (See Daubert v. Western Meat Co. (1903) 139 C. 480, 481, 69 P. 297, 73 P. 244; Brown v. Beck (1923) 63 C.A. 686, 695, 220 P. 14; Roach v. Drew (1925) 72 C.A. 45, 48, 236 P. 568; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §162 et seq.; 21 A.L.R.4th 275 [effect of settlement with and acceptance of release from one wrongful death beneficiary on liability to other beneficiaries or personal representative].) (On effect of settlement by one plaintiff, see supra, §1386; on action by omitted heir, see supra, §1387.)

(2) By Decedent. Because the right of action is a new one and not a survival of the decedent's right to sue for his or her injuries (see supra, §1377), neither the recovery of damages by the decedent, nor a release of claims before his or her death will be a bar to the action for wrongful death. (Sea-Land Services v. Gaudet (1974) 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 814, 39 L.Ed.2d 9, 20, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §145; Earley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1917) 176 C. 79, 81, 167 P. 513; Blackwell v. American Film Co. (1922) 189 C. 689, 693, 209 P. 999; Madison v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 589, 250 C.R. 299, supra, §1294; cf. Interinsurance Exchange of the Auto. Club of Southern Calif. v. Campbell (1986) 187 C.A.3d 242, 243, 232 C.R. 27 [exclusion of liability for bodily injury to named insured or relative barred claim of adult children for wrongful death of their father, the named insured]; and see 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §24.6; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §§156, 157.) (On effect of judgment as collateral estoppel, see Secrest v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1943) 60 C.A.2d 746, 749, 141 P.2d 747, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §361; Evans v. Celotex Corp. (1987) 194 C.A.3d 741, 746, 238 C.R. 259, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §397; Brown v. Rahman (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1458, 1463, 282 C.R. 815 [following Evans]; 20 Pacific L. J. 221 [adverse judgment in personal injury action as barring subsequent wrongful death action].)

In Scroggs v. Coast Community College Dist. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1399, 239 C.R. 916, decedent enrolled in a scuba diving class offered by defendant college, and executed a release providing that the participant waived any claims that the participant or his or her heirs, etc., might have for injury or death resulting from participation in scuba diving. During a dive, decedent was drowned, and plaintiff widow filed a complaint for wrongful death, alleging that the drowning was a result of defendant's negligence. Defendant answered, setting up the release as an affirmative defense, and the trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) In Earley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., supra, it was not clear whether the release sought to bind the heirs, and it was executed after the injury occurred. In Coates v. Newhall Land & Farming (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1, 8, 236 C.R. 181, supra, §1292, the decedent executed a release expressly assuming the risk of injury and waiving liability for injuries or death. The Coates opinion, denying recovery, failed to distinguish between "facts giving rise to a complete defense to a wrongful death action, and facts precluding a wrongful death action." (193 C.A.3d 1402.)

(b) The wrongful death action is a separate and distinct right belonging to the heirs, and it does not arise until the decedent's death; hence, any contract intending to limit or destroy that cause of action should be construed with caution. (193 C.A.3d 1403.) In the release involved here, there was no language indicating that decedent intended to assume all risks of the activity, nor was there a clear and unequivocal waiver of defendant's negligence. (193 C.A.3d 1404.)

(c) "[I]t is of no moment that scuba diving is of little public importance and serves no significant public purpose. Contracts seeking to release in advance the right to bring a wrongful death action are not binding on the decedent's heirs, and there is no compelling reason to create an exception in the case of so-called 'sports risk' cases. A surviving heir of a sports enthusiast is entitled to the same protection as the surviving heir of the victim of an automobile accident. If the decedent has provided the defendant with a partial or total defense, the defendant may assert it in response to the lawsuit. The release in this case fails to provide defendants with such protection." (193 C.A.3d 1404.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.25 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) By Decedent. See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §24.6.

Secrest case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §421.

Evans case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §460.

1 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
1. In General.
a. Necessity of Knowledge.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1403

[§ 1403] Necessity of Knowledge.

One who possesses or harbors a dangerous animal, whether wild or domestic, is absolutely liable for injuries inflicted by it, where he or she knows or should know of its dangerous propensities. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§507, 509; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.11; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §343 et seq.; 11 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 381 [domestic animals]; 4 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Animals §96 et seq.; 1 Proof of Facts 597 [animals]; 17 A.L.R.2d 459 [liability of owner or operator of public resort to patron injured by animal or insect]; 57 A.L.R.2d 242 [wild animals; property damage]; 73 A.L.R.2d 1032 [cats]; 85 A.L.R.2d 1161 [horses]; 21 A.L.R.3d 603 [wild animals; injury or death]; 48 A.L.R.3d 1257 [liability of owner or operator of business premises for injuries caused by insect or small animal]; 86 A.L.R.3d 829 [bees]; 6 A.L.R.4th 358 [bailor's liability for injury to bailee inflicted by horse hired by bailee]; 67 A.L.R.4th 976 [liability of business owner or operator to patron for injury by dog or cat]; 68 A.L.R.4th 823 [injuries from cats]; 68 A.L.R.5th 599 [horse, dog, or other domestic animal exhibited at show]; BAJI, Nos. 6.65, 6.66; CACI, Nos. 461, 462.)

It is commonly said that scienter, or knowledge of dangerous propensities, must be proved in the case of domestic animals but is presumed in the case of wild animals. (Gooding v. Chutes Co. (1909) 155 C. 620, 623, 102 P. 819; Opelt v. Al G. Barnes Co. (1919) 41 C.A. 776, 779, 183 P. 241; Heath v. Fruzia (1942) 50 C.A.2d 598, 600, 123 P.2d 560 [horse that had previously kicked other persons]; Baugh v. Beatty (1949) 91 C.A.2d 786, 791, 205 P.2d 671 [chimpanzee; "presumed to be vicious"]; Hagen v. Laursen (1953) 121 C.A.2d 379, 382, 263 P.2d 489 [playful dogs not vicious]; Mann v. Stanley (1956) 141 C.A.2d 438, 441, 296 P.2d 921 [domestic bull not presumed vicious]; Chandler v. Vaccaro (1959) 167 C.A.2d 786, 789, 334 P.2d 998 [bitch protecting pups not vicious].)

The Torts Restatement reaches the same result by stating that the possessor of a wild animal is liable for harm resulting from dangerous propensities characteristic of wild animals of its class, whether or not he or she believes it to be safe. (Rest.2d, Torts §507(2).) (See 4 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Animals §97.)

In Talizin v. Oak Creek Riding Club (1959) 176 C.A.2d 429, 1 C.R. 514, defendants were conducting a horse jumping exhibition. They allowed a skillful rider to ride one of the horses. The animal bolted, jumped over the gate, and struck plaintiff, a spectator. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. It is not necessary to show the type of malignancy exhibited by a biting dog, i.e., a propensity to attack human beings; any propensity that is likely to cause injury under the circumstances is a dangerous or vicious propensity within the meaning of the law. (176 C.A.2d 435.) The trial judge found that (a) defendants did not know of the propensities, but (b) could have ascertained them in the exercise of reasonable care. This was based on evidence that they knew the horse had jumped out of the ring shortly before, but did nothing to find out whether he had this propensity, despite notice putting them on inquiry. This finding that they could have ascertained was equivalent to a finding that they should have known. (176 C.A.2d 437.)

West's Key Number Digest, Animals k.68, 69

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.11; 4 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Animals §§62 et seq., 67 et seq.

2 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
1. In General.
b. Liability Based on Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1404

[§ 1404] Liability Based on Negligence.

Even though the animals are not of the type that justifies the imposition of absolute liability, recovery may often be had on the theory of ordinary negligence. (See Porter v. Thompson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 474, 477, 169 P.2d 40 [cattle auction held in enclosure with low (four-feet, eight-inches) fence, slightly sagging; nervous cow broke loose, jumped over fence, and injured plaintiff].) (On liability for animals at large, see Roberts v. Griffith Co. (1929) 100 C.A. 456, 457, 280 P. 199 [owner of mules permitted them to be at large on streets of municipality]; Shively v. Dye Creek Cattle Co. (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1620, 35 C.R.2d 238, infra, §1406 [bull allowed to stray onto public highway]; 34 A.L.R.2d 1285 [legislation forbidding domestic animals to run at large on highways]; 21 A.L.R.4th 132 [liability of nonowner of animal for damage to motor vehicle or injury to passenger from collision with domestic animal at large]; 21 A.L.R.4th 159 [liability of owner or operator of vehicle for such damage or injury]; 29 A.L.R.4th 431 [liability of owner of animal for such damage or injury]; and see Food & Ag.C. 16441 et seq. [remedies for violation of provisions governing animals at large].) (On open range law, see infra, §1406.)

West's Key Number Digest, Animals k.74.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
1. In General.
c. Liability to Trespasser.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1405

[§ 1405] Liability to Trespasser.

Under the general rule, there is no legal duty to an unknown trespasser, and hence no absolute liability. (See 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1310.) But liability was imposed, prior to Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, in favor of a trespasser who was known or should have been known. In Radoff v. Hunter (1958) 158 C.A.2d 770, 323 P.2d 202, defendants, pet store owners, kept a large German shepherd as a watchdog, in a packing crate shelter. Plaintiff, a patron of an adjacent service station, while technically trespassing on defendant's land to deposit an old battery cable in a trash can near the dog, was bitten. Held, defendants were liable. Although they had no actual knowledge of plaintiff's presence, defendants' store was located near a shopping and parking area, and defendants should have anticipated the presence of trespassers near the watchdog. Under these circumstances, keeping him concealed from view with no warning of his presence was similar to maintaining a trap. (158 C.A.2d 774.) (See 64 A.L.R.3d 1039 [liability of owner of dog known to be vicious for injuries to trespasser].)

Under the Rowland rule, it would seem that liability could be imposed, in a proper case, in favor of an unknown trespasser.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

4 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.

1. In General.

d. Liability for Trespassing Animal.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1406

[§ 1406] Liability for Trespassing Animal.

The common law rule imposes strict liability on the owner of trespassing animals for all harm to persons and property reasonably to be expected from the intrusion. (See Rest.2d, Torts §504; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.9; 4 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Animals §123 et seq.; 49 A.L.R.4th 710 [liability for injury or death caused by trespassing or intruding livestock].)

The rule is applicable to most domestic animals, such as horses, cattle, pigs, sheep, and poultry, but not to dogs and cats. (See Rest.2d, Torts §504, Comment b; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.9; on statutes imposing strict liability on dog owners, see infra, §1407 et seq.) Nor is it applicable to harm done by animals straying onto abutting land while being driven on a highway or to harm brought about by an unforeseeable intervening cause, i.e., an act of God or action of a third person or another animal. (See Rest.2d, Torts §504; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.9.)

In Williams v. Goodwin (1974) 41 C.A.3d 496, 116 C.R. 200, the court applied the common law rule to personal injuries suffered by a possessor of land. Defendants owned 36 Black Angus bulls, which they pastured in land under a rental agreement. Plaintiff, by permission of his employer, a construction company engaged in developing the land, lived in a house trailer adjacent to the pasture and cultivated a vegetable garden for himself and other employees. The garden area was fenced, but bulls occasionally escaped and got into the garden. One day, while plaintiff was working in the garden, a bull suddenly broke the fence, knocked plaintiff down, and trampled him, causing serious injuries to him and the plants. Held, reversing judgment of nonsuit, defendants were strictly liable for damages for plaintiff's injuries.

(a) History of liability for animals. Two kinds of strict liability developed at common law: (1) liability for damage by trespassing livestock; and (2) liability apart from trespass for damage by animals inherently dangerous or that in the particular case possessed known dangerous propensities. (41 C.A.3d 501.) The historical theory of liability for livestock trespass--identification of the possessor with his wandering livestock so as to make their trespass equivalent to his own--has largely been abandoned; the modern foundation is the defendant's power of control of the animals, with the additional practical consideration that his or her activity for profit should be burdened with the expense incident to their predictable wanderings. (41 C.A.3d 502.)

(b) Common law rule in California. Originally abrogated by the "fencing out" statutes, the common law rule was revived by the Estray Act of 1915 (now Food & Ag.C. 17001 et seq.), which repealed the fencing out laws except in six listed counties devoted chiefly to grazing. (41 C.A.3d 503.) The common law rule was applied in a number of cases involving damage to crops, pasture, or feed. (41 C.A.3d 503.)

(c) Liability for personal injuries. Liability for personal injuries depends on whether they are within the scope of the risk created by the trespass. Clearly, they are where the owner is injured in an attempt to put the animal out; logically, they should be also where the animal makes an unprovoked attack, as in this case, where plaintiff had no opportunity to expel the animal, retreat, or defend himself. "The sequence of events from entry upon the land to attack upon plaintiff, without interposition of any independent operative agency, compels the conclusion that plaintiff's injuries were the direct consequence of the trespass. Moreover, to conclude under these circumstances that an attack such as occurred with resulting injury was not reasonably to be expected would require a departure from logic. The manifest danger that inheres in exposure of the person to the immediate presence of an uncontrolled bull is strongly suggested by human experience and common sense. Thus, it is of no significance that defendant's bull did not pause to forage plaintiff's crop either before the attack, after the attack, or at all, or that plaintiff's injuries were not sustained in the course of an effort to expel the animal or to protect his property." (41 C.A.3d 506.)

The open range law (Food & Ag.C. 17001 et seq.) provides that cattle owners in open range counties are not required to fence in their cattle. It does not exempt the owners from the duty of ordinary care to motorists on highways. In Shively v. Dye Creek Cattle Co. (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1620, 35 C.R.2d 238, plaintiffs sued for injuries sustained in a nighttime collision between their automobile and defendant's large bull, which was lying on a state highway in a county "devoted chiefly to grazing" within the meaning of the open range law. Held, the trial judge erred in granting defendant summary judgment on the ground that defendant owed plaintiffs no duty.

(a) The open range law relates only to the requirement of fencing livestock. It does not purport to define comprehensively the duty of a cattle owner, and it does not repeal or exempt cattle owners from the general duty of C.C. 1714 to exercise reasonable care (see supra, §833). A cattle owner who negligently fails to keep cattle from straying on a highway may be held liable for damages arising from a collision with the livestock even at a point where the highway is unfenced. (29 C.A.4th 1631.)

(b) The result here does not render the open range law meaningless. Only public highways are involved, a small part of "open range" country. The central focus of the open range law--livestock trespassing on another's property--is maintained. The cattle owner is still not required to fence along highways or anywhere else in open range areas. However, the cattle owner, like everyone else, is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his or her want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his or her property. (29 C.A.4th 1632.) (On liability based on negligence, see supra, §1404.)

West's Key Number Digest, Animals k.89.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.9; 4 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Animals §90 et seq.

5 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
2. Dogs.
a. Statutory Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1407

[§ 1407] Statutory Liability.

(1) Injury to Domestic Animals. The "owner, possessor, or harbinger" of a dog or other animal is liable for its killing or wounding of livestock, poultry, etc., except where this occurs accidentally in the course of driving them off the premises. (C.C. 3341.)

(2) Injury to Person: Dog Bite Statute. The general common law rule that liability depends on knowledge or notice of dangerous propensities (supra, §1403) formerly applied to dogs. (See Hensley v. McBride (1931) 112 C.A. 50, 51, 296 P. 316.) But a statute, first enacted in 1931, makes the owner of a dog liable, under certain conditions, to a person bitten by the dog, even though the owner lacked knowledge of any dangerous propensities. (See C.C. 3342, infra, §1408; 1 A.L.R.4th 994 [ordinances relating to unrestrained dogs, cats, or other domesticated animals]; 51 A.L.R.4th 446 [modern status of rule of strict liability for dog bite]; 67 A.L.R.4th 976 [liability of business owner or operator to patron for injury by dog or cat]; 68 A.L.R.5th 599 [liability for injury inflicted by dog or other domestic animal exhibited at show].)

(3) Distinction: Person Frightened by Dog. In Nava v. McMillan (1981) 123 C.A.3d 262, 176 C.R. 473, plaintiff alleged that, while walking on a public sidewalk past defendants' fenced-in property, she became frightened by dogs on the property and went into the street, where she was struck by an automobile. Held, no cause of action was stated. Even if the dogs had been barking or jumping against the fence (not alleged), "those are harmless activities ordinarily associated with, and expected from, dogs." (123 C.A.3d 267.) (See 30 A.L.R.4th 986 [liability of dog owner for injuries sustained by person frightened by dog].)

West's Key Number Digest, Animals k.68, 81

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

6 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.

2. Dogs.

b. Dog-Bite Statute.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1408

[§ 1408] In General.

"The owner of any dog is liable for the damages suffered by any person who is bitten by the dog while in a public place or lawfully in a private place, including the property of the owners of the dog, regardless of the former viciousness of the dog or the owner's knowledge of such viciousness." (C.C. 3342(a); see Hicks v. Sullivan (1932) 122 C.A. 635, 639, 10 P.2d 516; DeLay v. Braun (1944) 63 C.A.2d 8, 10, 146 P.2d 32; Ellsworth v. Elite Dry Cleaners, Dyers & Laundry (1954) 127 C.A.2d 479, 483, 274 P.2d 17 [sufficiency of evidence of ownership of dog]; Davis v. Gaschler (1992) 11 C.A.4th 1392, 1399, 14 C.R.2d 679, supra, §1356 [C.C. 3342 imposes liability on owner regardless of whether dog is running loose or restrained, or is on or off owner's premises]; Drake v. Dean (1993) 15 C.A.4th 915, 19 C.R.2d 325; Johnson v. McMahan (1998) 68 C.A.4th 173, 175, 80 C.R.2d 173 [plaintiff who pleaded that he was injured in falling from ladder after dog had grasped his leg alleged "bite" under C.C. 3342, even though skin was not broken and no wound inflicted]; 64 A.L.R.4th 963 [who "harbors" or "keeps" dog under dog bite statute]; BAJI, No. 6.67; CACI, No. 463; cf. Menches v. Inglewood Humane Soc. (1942) 51 C.A.2d 415, 417, 124 P.2d 870 [no liability where defendant sold dog to plaintiff, and delivery and acceptance took place before bite].)

West's Key Number Digest, Animals k.68, 74(1), 79, 81-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 85 Proof of Facts 3d 95 [proof of death or injury from rabid animal].

7 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.

2. Dogs.

b. Dog-Bite Statute.

2. Private Place.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1409

[§ 1409] Private Place.

The provision in C.C. 3342 (see supra, §1408) that the person must be "lawfully in a private place" is augmented by a special definition: "A person is lawfully upon the private property of such owner within the meaning of this section when he is on such property in the performance of any duty imposed upon him by the laws of this State or by the laws or postal regulations of the United States, or when he is on such property upon the invitation, express or implied, of the owner."

The effect of this provision is to deny liability to a trespasser, and the language was given a strict construction in Fullerton v. Conan (1948) 87 C.A.2d 354, 197 P.2d 59. Plaintiff, a 5-year-old child, was taken by her mother on a social visit to defendant's home, the two women being old friends. The mother parked her car in the driveway, and the child was told to stay in the front yard. Instead, the child opened the gate to the backyard where she was bitten by the dog. In classifying the child as a trespasser to whom defendant was not liable, the court declared that "gates and doors have been the generally accepted means of indicating privacy for centuries; their use for such a purpose is traditional and is still sanctioned by universal custom. A gate is a barrier just as a door to a home. ... It would be presumptuous indeed to assume that a social invitation includes authorization or permission to ignore the customary formalities." (87 C.A.2d 357.) This language would hardly appear to be appropriate in connection with the conduct of a small child who was lawfully on the premises and who arguably had the implied permission to enter the backyard. If the danger had been merely the maintenance of a contrivance amounting to an attractive nuisance, the trespasser rule would have been relaxed in favor of a child who had not even been invited to enter on any portion of the premises. That the child, ignorant of dangers lurking behind a simple gate, so exceeds the scope of its invitation as to be without the protection of a statute imposing absolute liability, seems a dubious conclusion. (See Smythe v. Schacht (1949) 93 C.A.2d 315, 319, 209 P.2d 114 [plaintiff child, who came on land to play with defendant's child, was entitled to recover as implied invitee--lawfully in a private place]; cf. Bauman v. Beaujean (1966) 244 C.A.2d 384, 388, 53 C.R. 55 [plaintiff girl, 31/2 years old, played with defendant's daughter, but without invitation to play alone in backyard where dog was kept; verdict for defendants upheld].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

8 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.

2. Dogs.

b. Dog-Bite Statute.

3. Veterinarian's Assumption of Risk.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1410

[§ 1410] Veterinarian's Assumption of Risk.

In Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 C.A.3d 709, 211 C.R. 668, defendants' 100-pound Labrador-German shepherd, in need of minor surgery, was brought to the veterinary hospital in which plaintiff was employed as a veterinary assistant. The dog had been previously treated there, and a notation of "careful" was written on his treatment card, but neither defendants nor plaintiff had any knowledge of vicious propensities. While the dog was on the treatment table after injection of a sedative, it suddenly turned and bit plaintiff in the face, causing severe injuries. On motion for summary judgment, defendants offered a declaration of Dr. D, plaintiff's employer, in which he stated that any animal may react dangerously while receiving treatment, and that dog bites are an occupational hazard in the veterinary profession. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Assumption of the risk has been a recognized defense to strict liability for injuries caused by a dangerous animal, and the same holding has been made in cases decided under the dog bite statute. (165 C.A.3d 713; see infra, §1413.) Where assumption of risk is not merely a form of contributory negligence, it remains unaffected by the doctrine of comparative negligence. (165 C.A.3d 714; see supra, §1337.)

(b) "This is a case of 'true' or 'primary' assumption of the risk whereby the defendant is impliedly relieved of any duty of care by the plaintiff's acceptance of employment involving a known risk or danger. ... A veterinary assistant cannot be deemed to have unreasonably encountered a risk that is inherent in his or her job." (165 C.A.3d 714.) The owner who turns his dog over to a qualified veterinarian for medical treatment should not be liable unless he or she purposefully or negligently conceals a particular known hazard. (165 C.A.3d 715, and footnote 4.) (See Willenberg v. Superior Court (1986) 185 C.A.3d 185, 187, 229 C.R. 625 [following Nelson, despite fact that dog did not bite plaintiff, but leaped on her, injuring her shoulder]; Cohen v. McIntyre (1993) 16 C.A.4th 650, 655, 20 C.R.2d 143, supra, §1352; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 133 [assumption of risk as defense in dog bite case]; 4 A.L.R.4th 349 [liability of owner of dog for dog's biting veterinarian or veterinarian's employee].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Priebe v. Nelson (2006) 39 C.4th 1112, 1120, 47 C.R.3d 553, 140 P.3d 848 ["veterinarian's rule" barred kennel worker's statutory strict liability claim against dog owner for injuries sustained from dog bites while caring for dog at kennel; citing Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 C.A.3d 709, 211 C.R. 668, text, p. 833].

9 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.

2. Dogs.

b. Dog-Bite Statute.

4. Immunity for Military and Police Dogs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1411

[§ 1411] Immunity for Military and Police Dogs.

C.C. 3342 provides immunity from dog bite liability for governmental agencies using dogs in military or police work, if the bite occurred while the dog was (1) "defending itself from an annoying, harassing, or provoking act," or (2) assisting an agency employee in (a) apprehending or holding a person reasonably suspected to be involved in criminal activity; (b) investigating a crime; (c) executing a warrant; or (d) defending a peace officer or other person. (C.C. 3342(b).)

For the immunity to exist, the agency must have adopted a written policy on the necessary and appropriate use of dogs in police or military work. (C.C. 3342(d).) There is no immunity if the victim was not a party or participant (or suspected party or participant) in the act that prompted the use of the dog. (C.C. 3342(c).) (See 74 A.L.R.4th 1120 [liability to public officer or employee bitten by dog].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

10 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
2. Dogs.
c. Liability Independent of Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1412

[§ 1412] Liability Independent of Statute.

The following situations are outside the scope of the special statutes set forth in the previous sections, and liability depends on proof of knowledge of dangerous propensities or negligence. (For case finding that the knowledge requirement was not satisfied, see Martinez v. Bank of America (2000) 82 C.A.4th 883, 889, 98 C.R.2d 576 [dogs were owned by previous owners of property; bank that had foreclosed was not liable].)

(1) Defendant Is Not Owner of Dog. Where the defendant keeps or harbors a dog but is not its owner, and the dog bites a person, liability cannot be imposed under C.C. 3342 (supra, §1408), but the plaintiff may recover by proof of knowledge of dangerous propensities or ordinary negligence (supra, §§1403, 1404). (See Radoff v. Hunter (1958) 158 C.A.2d 770, 773, 323 P.2d 202 [large German shepherd tied and used as watchdog by pet shop operator who was not his owner; inference of knowledge of vicious propensities was properly drawn].)

(2) Injury Is Inflicted Without Biting. In Brotemarkle v. Snyder (1950) 99 C.A.2d 388, 221 P.2d 992, the complaint alleged that defendant's dog dashed against plaintiff, who was riding a motor scooter, and threw him to the pavement. Held, a cause of action was stated under a local ordinance prohibiting the owner from allowing a dog to run at large off his premises without a leash. The ordinance created the legal duty, and the breach was negligence toward the plaintiff. (99 C.A.2d 390.) (See Frederickson v. Kepner (1947) 82 C.A.2d 905, 908, 187 P.2d 800 [two dogs jumped on plaintiff's back and threw him over bank]; Northon v. Schultz (1955) 130 C.A.2d 488, 490, 279 P.2d 103 [excitable cocker spaniel, in habit of jumping on people, was released and ran against plaintiff's legs, throwing her to floor; nonsuit reversed]; Drake v. Dean (1993) 15 C.A.4th 915, 19 C.R.2d 325; 41 A.L.R.3d 888 [owner's liability for damages from automobile accident resulting from attempt to avoid collision with dog].)

No liability may be imposed, however, where there is neither knowledge of dangerous propensities nor negligence. (See Hillman v. Garcia-Ruby (1955) 44 C.2d 625, 627, 283 P.2d 1033; Hagen v. Laursen (1953) 121 C.A.2d 379, 382, 263 P.2d 489 [two normally playful Irish setters, while playing together, ran against plaintiff, causing her to fall].)

(3) Landlord's Liability Where Dog Is Owned by Tenant. Under the theory of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, a landlord may be held liable for injuries inflicted by a tenant's dog if the landlord has knowledge of the danger and sufficient control as to make it possible to protect against it. (Uccello v.

Laudenslayer (1975) 44 C.A.3d 504, 512, 118 C.R. 741, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §644; Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1128, 1135, 32 C.R.2d 755, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §647 [commercial landlord has duty of reasonable inspection for presence of dangerous dogs; landlord cannot avoid liability by failing to inspect and claiming that he or she had no actual knowledge of dog's dangerous propensities]; Donchin v. Guerrero (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1832, 1841, 41 C.R.2d 192 [landlord may be liable for off-site dog bites caused by tenant's dog, provided that bites result from failure to exercise proper control over tenant's premises; citing Uccello].) However, as pointed out in Uccello, no duty of care may be imposed on a landlord without proof that he or she knew of the tenant's dog and its dangerous propensities. (See Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 C.A.3d 813, 821, 216 C.R. 575; Yuzon v. Collins (2004) 116 C.A.4th 149, 159, 10 C.R.3d 18.)

(4) Carrier Passenger's Dog. Where a carrier permits a passenger to bring a dog into a passenger car, it must exercise reasonable care and supervision to prevent injury to other passengers. (Westwater v. Southern Pac. Co. (1940) 38 C.A.2d 369, 371, 101 P.2d 154.)

(5) Injury to Dog. Where the defendant's dog injures the plaintiff's dog, the usual rule of scienter (supra, §1403) applies. (Roos v. Loeser (1919) 41 C.A. 782, 785, 183 P. 204.)

(6) Local Leash Laws. A local ordinance penalizing an owner whose dog is allowed to roam public streets unleashed is an animal control law enacted to protect public health and safety and imposes strict criminal liability, regardless of the presence or absence of mens rea in the dog owner. Therefore, in a civil action for personal injuries inflicted by an unsecured dog, violation of such a regulatory law constitutes negligence per se. (Delfino v. Sloan (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1429, 1431, 25 C.R.2d 265 [trial judge erred in refusing to instruct on negligence per se on ground that word "allow" in ordinance reached only wilful or intentional conduct].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Defendant Is Not Owner of Dog. See Salinas v. Martin (2008) 166 C.A.4th 404, 413, 82 C.R.3d 735 [homeowner could owe duty of care to invitees even though he was not aware of dangerous propensities of pit bull dog kept on property by workers during remodeling project; workers were not homeowner's tenants, homeowner was not absentee landlord with limited access to property, homeowner did not surrender possessory interest in property, and homeowner gave permission for dog to be kept on property].

(3) Landlord's Liability Where Dog Is Owned by Tenant. See Chee v. Amanda Goldt Property Management (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1360, 1369, 50 C.R.3d 40 [landlord had no duty, giving rise to premises liability or negligence cause of action, to plaintiff injured when tenant's unleashed dog jumped on her, in absence of actual knowledge of dog's dangerous propensities; although landlord knew tenant owned dog, he had not seen dog or received complaints, and dog had not previously jumped on or bitten anyone]. (5) Injury to Dog. See 90 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [actions involving injuries to animals].

11 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
A. Liability for Dangerous Animals.
3. Causation and Contributory Fault.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1413

[§ 1413] Causation and Contributory Fault.

(1) Intervening Acts and Unforeseeable Consequences. Rest.2d, Torts §510 takes the position that intervening acts normally do not supersede, and that the defendant is liable despite the unexpected character of the harm or the intervention of natural forces or negligent acts of third persons.

(2) Contributory Fault. Prior to the adoption of the comparative negligence doctrine (supra, §1329), ordinary contributory negligence did not bar recovery, but contributory fault of a higher degree could be a defense; e.g., intentional or unreasonable exposure to obvious danger, sometimes treated as "assumption of risk." (Rest.2d, Torts §515(2); see Opelt v. Al G. Barnes Co. (1919) 41 C.A. 776, 780, 183 P. 241 [10-year-old boy disregarding warnings, walked up to leopard's cage, within reach of beast's paws]; Rest.2d, Torts §496A, Comment d.) In Smythe v. Schacht (1949) 93 C.A.2d 315, 209 P.2d 114, although no contributory fault was found, the court declared that the defenses of assumption of risk and wilfully inviting injury would be recognized in a proper case. "[G]ood morals and sound reasoning dictate that if a person lawfully upon the portion of another's property where the biting occurred should kick, tease, or otherwise provoke the dog, the law should and would recognize the defense that the injured person by his conduct invited injury and therefore, assumed the risk thereof." (93 C.A.2d 321.) (See 39 Proof of Facts 3d 133 [contributory fault as defense in dog bite case]; 11 A.L.R.5th 127 [contributory or comparative negligence or assumption of risk as defense to action for injury by dog].) (Cf. Greene v. Watts (1962) 210 C.A.2d 103, 105, 26 C.R. 334 [3-year-old child was not barred by contributory negligence or assumption of risk].)

Because the comparative negligence doctrine has been held applicable to strict products liability cases (see Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542), it is likely that both types of contributory negligence, having been subsumed within that doctrine (see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329), will now be considered in determining the amount of recovery. (See Garcia v. Estate of Norton (1986) 183 C.A.3d 413, 421, 228 C.R. 108, infra, §1417 [suggestion that comparative negligence principles should apply to ultrahazardous activity actions].)

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §§1, 7, adopting the comparative responsibility doctrine for tort claims generally, applies the doctrine "even though the conduct of a defendant ... is governed by strict liability." (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §7, Comment b.)

(3) Assumption of Risk. The plaintiff's assumption of the risk of harm from a dog is a valid defense to strict liability. (Rest.2d, Torts §515(3).) And the defense may be established by a good deal less than the reckless conduct described in Smythe. In Gomes v. Byrne (1959) 51 C.2d 418, 333 P.2d 754, a salesman approached the gate to defendant's yard, and despite the continuous barking of her dog, opened it and walked in, whereupon the dog bit him. Judgment for defendant was affirmed, for, in the face of the dog's display of hostility, plaintiff voluntarily exposed himself to the obvious hazard. "[I]f plaintiff recognized the danger that the dog would bite him, his knowledge was sufficient although he did not know whether the dog had a history of viciousness." (51 C.2d 420.) (See dissent of three justices 51 C.2d 421, attacking inference of danger from mere barking of small dog.)

In Prays v. Perryman (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1133, 262 C.R. 180, a dog bite case initiated by plaintiff dog groomer, the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendant owner on the ground that plaintiff had assumed the risk. Held, reversed. The "veterinarian's rule" stated in Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 C.A.3d 709, 211 C.R. 668, supra, §1410, warned that a veterinarian's assumption of risk extended only to the danger that he had knowingly assumed, i.e., the danger the dog would bite while being treated. "This caveat is applicable here. Plaintiff testified that at the time of the bite she was not grooming the dog and had told defendant she had not yet decided whether it was safe for her to do so. A trier of fact could find that the beast remained at all times under the exclusive control of defendant, who had uncaged it and was holding it on a leash. When defendant brought a growling dog into her shop, plaintiff was not required, to avoid assuming the risk of bloodshed, either to summarily eject the customer or to take flight." (213 C.A.3d 1137.) (See 39 Proof of Facts 3d 133 [assumption of risk as defense in dog bite case].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

12 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
1. Theory of Ultrahazardous Activity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1414

[§ 1414] Theory of Ultrahazardous Activity.

In Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) 3 H.L. 330, defendants built a reservoir over an old mine shaft. Water brought into the reservoir escaped into the shaft, and from there flooded plaintiff's adjoining mine. The court held the defendants liable, without proof of negligence, laying down the rule that "the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his lands and collects and keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it at his peril, and if he does not do so, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape." As ultimately developed, the doctrine of this case established an absolute liability for escape of dangerous substances brought on the land in the course of a nonnatural use of the land. (See generally 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.2 et seq.; 33 Cal. L. Rev. 642; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 316; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 515.)

Liability without fault is now imposed without much relation to the "escape" of substances or nonnatural use of land. The modern theory is that certain activities create such a serious risk of danger that it is justifiable to place liability for the loss on the person engaging in them, regardless of lack of culpability. These activities are sometimes called "extrahazardous" or "ultrahazardous," and the liability is termed "absolute" or "strict." (See Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 785, 56 C.R. 128, infra, §1421 [question of law]; Rest.2d, Torts §519 et seq.; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.4; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §346 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Strict Liability, Chap. 2; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 473 [dioxin contamination]; 37 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [injury from environmental condition on neighboring land]; 57 Am.Jur. Trials 395 [toxic tort litigation]; 37 Cal. L. Rev. 269; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 515; 30 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1599 [liability of firearms manufacturers]; 29 San Diego L. Rev. 93 [liability of predecessor in title for accumulation of hazardous waste]; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 263; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 327; 45 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 611 [rule of strict liability only for abnormally dangerous activities as preferable to enterprise liability in absence of contractual relationship between business and injured party]; for classification of activities, see infra, §1418 et seq.)

The following types of liability should be distinguished:

(1) Nuisance. Certain kinds of activities interfering with another's enjoyment of his or her rights may amount to nuisances, and civil and criminal remedies to abate them are available, regardless of negligence. (See Snow v. Marian Realty Co. (1931) 212 C. 622, 625, 299 P. 720; 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §139.) Ultrahazardous activity differs in that it is not unlawful and cannot be abated: the doctrine merely holds the defendant responsible for any injury legally caused by him or her. (See 23 Cal. L. Rev. 427; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 984.)

(2) Lateral Support. An excavator of land is, under certain conditions, absolutely liable for damages to adjoining buildings or other structures where he or she fails to comply with statutory requirements. (C.C. 832; see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §379.)

(3) Eminent Domain. Where property is damaged by a governmental agency or public corporation in pursuance of a public use, an obligation to compensate for the loss is imposed under the law of eminent domain. (See Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist. (1921) 53 C.A. 559, 568, 200 P. 814; Ketcham v. Modesto Irr. Dist. (1933) 135 C.A. 180, 187, 26 P.2d 876; 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1132 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.301, 303-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.2 et seq.

13 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
2. Development of California Law.
a. Earlier Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1415

[§ 1415] Earlier Cases.

At one time, it was difficult to determine to what extent the strict liability doctrine was applicable in California. In Sutliff v. Sweetwater Water Co. (1920) 182 C. 34, 186 P. 766, defendant impounded water by a dam across a river. The reservoir was properly constructed, but an unprecedented flood washed out the dam, and the water flooded plaintiff's land. Held, defendant was not liable on two grounds: First, the proximate cause of the damage was the flood--an agency beyond human control; second, in this state liability for a broken reservoir has always been held dependent upon negligence. (182 C. 37.) (See 8 Cal. L. Rev. 192.)

In Kall v. Carruthers (1922) 59 C.A. 555, 211 P. 43, irrigating waters on the land of a rice grower escaped by percolation, injuring an adjoining orchard. The court, following Parker v. Larsen (1890) 86 C. 236, 24 P. 989, held defendant liable, but the precise ground, whether nuisance or absolute liability, is not clear. (59 C.A. 561.) (See 11 Cal. L. Rev. 197; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 328.)

In Green v. General Petroleum Corp. (1928) 205 C. 328, 270 P. 952, an oil well that defendant was drilling suddenly erupted with unexpected force, breaking the protective valve, and showering the adjoining property with mud and oil. No negligence was proved. The court held defendant liable, referring to the maxim: "One must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another." (C.C. 3514.) Although defendant was making a lawful use of its property, the effect, i.e., the eruption, was a proximate result of sinking the well. The rule was said to be that "where an injury arises out of, or is caused directly and proximately by the contemplated act or thing in question, without the interposition of any exterior or independent agency which was not or could not be foreseen, there is an absolute liability for the consequential damage, regardless of any element of negligence either in the doing of the act or in the construction, use or maintenance of the object or instrumentality that may have caused the injury." (205 C. 334.) This case resulted in the imposition of strict liability for the release of substances naturally on the land. The exact theory of liability was not stated by the court, but it has been suggested that drilling for oil in a populous neighborhood is, like blasting, an ultrahazardous activity, that should give rise to absolute liability. (See 17 Cal. L. Rev. 188; 2 So. Cal. L. Rev. 90; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 263.)

In Nola v. Orlando (1932) 119 C.A. 518, 6 P.2d 984, water escaped from an irrigation flume, causing damage. No negligence was shown, but the court, relying on Green, held defendant liable. Sutliff was distinguished on the ground that there the proximate cause was the unprecedented storm. (119 C.A. 520.) The alternative ground of decision in Sutliff, that impounding waters did not involve absolute liability in this state, is difficult to reconcile with the holding in Nola v. Orlando. (See 20 Cal. L. Rev. 665; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 263, 268.)

In Fredericks v. Fredericks (1951) 108 C.A.2d 242, 238 P.2d 643, plaintiff granted defendant a right of way through his adjoining land for a ditch to irrigate his rice fields. Defendant brought so much water through that the level was higher than plaintiff's land, and seepage injured plaintiff's almond trees and grapevines. Held, an injunction was proper. The court cited Kall and Parker, regarding them as nuisance cases. (108 C.A.2d 244.) The easement was no defense, because the seepage did not come directly from the ditch; water seeped into defendant's land in such quantities as to seep onto plaintiff's land. (See Shields v. Wondries (1957) 154 C.A.2d 249, 254, 316 P.2d 9 [following Fredericks]; Clark v. Di Prima (1966) 241 C.A.2d 823, 827, 51 C.R. 49, infra, §1424.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

14 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.

2. Development of California Law.

b. Adoption of Restatement Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1416

[§ 1416] Adoption of Restatement Rule.

In Luthringer v. Moore (1948) 31 C.2d 489, 190 P.2d 1, infra, §1419, the court, quoting extensively from the Torts Restatement, adopted its analysis and terminology, but treated the question whether the activity is ultrahazardous as one for the trial judge. Regardless of the present effect of the holding in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) 3 H.L. 330, supra, §1414, the principle of liability without fault is established in California by Green v. General Petroleum Corp. (1928) 205 C. 328, 270 P. 952, supra, §1415. "It is not significant that a property damage, as distinguished from a personal injury, was there involved. The important factor is that certain activities under certain conditions may be so hazardous to the public generally, and of such relative infrequent occurrence, that it may well call for strict liability as the best public policy." (31 C.2d 500; see BAJI, No. 6.60.) (See, using the Restatement test but finding no absolute liability, Beck v. Bel Air Properties (1955) 134 C.A.2d 834, 842, 286 P.2d 503, infra, §1426; Clark v. Di Prima (1966) 241 C.A.2d 823, 829, 51 C.R. 49, infra, §1424, citing the text; and see, supporting liability, Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 785, 56 C.R. 128, infra, §1421; Garcia v. Estate of Norton (1986) 183 C.A.3d 413, 419, 228 C.R. 108, infra, §1422; cf. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Redondo Beach (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1432, 1444, 34 C.R.2d 337 [following Restatement Rule, but concluding that whether activity (here, oil drilling) is ultrahazardous cannot be decided on demurrer].)

In Gallin v. Poulou (1956) 140 C.A.2d 638, 295 P.2d 958, defendant landlord engaged a contractor to construct garages in the basement of an apartment house, and the vibration caused a piece of plaster to fall on plaintiff's head. Upholding a nonsuit, the court pointed out that there was neither an intentional wrong nor negligence, and under the Restatement test, "there is no liability for a trespass unless the trespass is intentional, the result of recklessness or negligence, or the result of engaging in an extrahazardous activity." (140 C.A.2d 645.) (See 45 Cal. L. Rev. 390.)

In SKF Farms v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 902, 200 C.R. 497, infra, §1420, the court discussed how ultrahazardousness is determined.

(a) Rest.2d, Torts §520 sets forth the factors to be considered in determining whether an activity is abnormally dangerous or ultrahazardous: "(a) existence of a high degree of risk of some harm to the person, land or chattels of others; (b) likelihood that the harm that results from it will be great; (c) inability to eliminate the risk by the exercise of reasonable care; (d) extent to which the activity is not a matter of common usage; (e) inappropriateness of the activity to the place where it is carried on; and (f) extent to which its value to the community is outweighed by its dangerous attributes." (153 C.A.3d 906.)

(b) The issue is one for the court, which must consider all of the factors and the weight to be given to each on the facts in evidence (Rest.2d, Torts §520, Comment l). "The essential question is whether the risk created is so unusual, either because of its magnitude or because of the circumstances surrounding it, as to justify the imposition of strict liability from the harm that results from it, even though it is carried on with all reasonable care. In other words, are its dangers and inappropriateness for the locality so great that, despite any usefulness it may have for the community, it should be required as a matter of law to pay for any harm it causes without the need of a finding of negligence" (Rest.2d, Torts §520, Comment f). (153 C.A.3d 906.)

The nature and scope of the doctrine were discussed in Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 C.A.3d 86, 221 C.R. 374.

(a) "The tort concept of an abnormally dangerous or ultrahazardous activity presupposes that the activity has some social value and that reasonable care is insufficient to eliminate its risk of harm. The principle that those who engage in such an activity should be held strictly liable for the consequences reflects a social-policy determination that 'the defendant's enterprise, while it will be tolerated by the law, must pay its way.' " (176 C.A.3d 91, quoting Prosser & Keeton.)

(b) "This policy frequently has found expression where the defendant's activity is unusual and abnormal in the community, and the danger which it threatens to others is unduly great--and particularly where the danger will be great even though the enterprise is conducted with every possible precaution. The basis of the liability is the defendant's intentional behavior in exposing those in his vicinity to such a risk. ... It is conduct which does not so far depart from social standards as to fall within the traditional boundaries of negligence--usually because the advantages which it offers to the defendant and to the community outweigh even the abnormal risk; but which is still so far socially unreasonable that the defendant is not allowed to carry it on without making good any actual harm which it does to his neighbors." (176 C.A.3d 91, quoting Prosser & Keeton.)

(c) The rule of strict liability applies only to harm that is within the scope of the abnormal risk that is the basis of the liability, and is limited to the class of persons who are threatened by the abnormal danger. (176 C.A.3d 92, citing Rest.2d, Torts §519, Comment e, and Prosser & Keeton.) "The same practical necessity for the restriction of liability within some reasonable bounds, which arises in connection with problems of 'proximate cause' in negligence cases, demands here that some limit be set. It might be expected that this limit would be a narrower one where no initial departure from a social standard is to be found. In general, this has been true. Just as liability for negligence had tended to be restricted within narrower boundaries than when intentional misconduct is involved, there is a visible tendency to restrict it still further when there is not even negligence." (176 C.A.3d 92, quoting Prosser & Keeton.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.301, 303

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

15 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
3. Causation and Contributory Fault.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1417

[§ 1417] Causation and Contributory Fault.

(1) Intervening Acts and Unforeseeable Consequences. Although Rest.2d, Torts §522, as in the case of liability for animals (see supra, §1413), rejects the view that an intervening act or natural force is a superseding cause, one California case involving an ultrahazardous activity suggests that an unforeseeable intervening agency, such as an act of God, may absolve the defendant. (Sutliff v. Sweetwater Water Co. (1920) 182 C. 34, 39, 186 P. 766, supra, §1415; see Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 779, 780, 56 C.R. 128, infra, §1421 [cause in fact and proximate cause are jury questions unless there is only one reasonable hypothesis]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 1691.)

(2) Contributory Fault. Under the Restatement rule, the plaintiff is not barred by ordinary contributory negligence, but intentional or reckless contributory fault, such as exposure to a known risk, is a defense. (See Rest.2d, Torts §524; Rozewski v. Simpson (1937) 9 C.2d 515, 520, 71 P.2d 72 [defendant was not liable where escape of impounded waters was due to acts of plaintiffs themselves].) In an unusual case involving inductive interference by defendant's power lines with plaintiff's telegraph line, it was held that neither could recover where both the plaintiff and the defendant made an extraordinary, nonnatural use of their property. (Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1927) 202 C. 382, 385, 260 P. 1101; see Rest.2d, Torts §524A; 16 Cal. L. Rev. 331; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 373.)

Garcia v. Estate of Norton (1986) 183 C.A.3d 413, 228 C.R. 108, held that welding with a blowtorch on a waste oil tanker truck was an ultrahazardous activity and that plaintiff, engaged to assist in the operation, could recover for injuries under the strict liability doctrine. (See infra, §1422.) The defense of plaintiff's contributory fault was rejected on the grounds that there was no evidence that plaintiff knew of the potential danger and that he had relied on the welder's assurance that the tanker was "absolutely clean." (183 C.A.3d 422.) Nevertheless, the court suggested that principles of comparative fault, applicable to strict products liability actions (see Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542), should also apply to ultrahazardous activity actions. "There are many obvious parallels between strict products liability and ultrahazardous activity cases, and the rationale for applying comparative negligence or fault to the former would seem equally pertinent to the latter." (183 C.A.3d 421, citing the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.405

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

16 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
a. Using Explosives.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1418

[§ 1418] Using Explosives.

Blasting with explosives in a city or other thickly populated place comes within the doctrine. The liability is imposed regardless of whether the damage results from the impact of debris, or from concussion of air alone. (Colton v. Onderdonk (1886) 69 C. 155, 159, 10 P. 395; McKenna v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1930) 104 C.A. 538, 543, 286 P. 445; McGrath v. Basich Bros. Const. Co. (1935) 7 C.A.2d 573, 576, 46 P.2d 981; Alonso v. Hills (1950) 95 C.A.2d 778, 783, 214 P.2d 50; Wilson v. Rancho Sespe (1962) 207 C.A.2d 10, 20, 24 C.R. 296; Balding v. D.B. Stutsman (1966) 246 C.A.2d 559, 564, 54 C.R. 717 [in vicinity of residential area]; see Rest.2d, Torts §520; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.6; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 94; 3 So. Cal. L. Rev. 447; 31A Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Explosions and Explosives §§18, 21, 23, 24; 24 Proof of Facts 1 [blasting]; 11 Am.Jur. Trials 357 [blasting damage litigation]; 56 A.L.R.3d 1017 [injury or damage not directly caused by debris or concussion from explosion]; 75 A.L.R.3d 770 [recovery for emotional distress resulting from blasting operations]; BAJI, No. 6.60; CACI, No. 460.)

There is no liability, however, for blasting in an isolated place, in the absence of negligence. (Houghton v. Loma Prieta Lumber Co. (1907) 152 C. 500, 506, 93 P. 82.) (See 35 A.L.R.3d 1177 [liability in connection with storage or transportation of explosives].)

West's Key Number Digest, Explosives k.7; Negligence k.306

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.6.

17 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
b. Fumigating.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1419

[§ 1419] Fumigating.

In Luthringer v. Moore (1948) 31 C.2d 489, 190 P.2d 1, defendant, a pest exterminator, released hydrocyanic acid gas in a restaurant at midnight to kill cockroaches, and the gas seeped into an adjacent drug store, injuring plaintiff. Held, the trial court properly instructed the jury on liability without negligence for injuries resulting from "an ultra-hazardous activity," and judgment for plaintiff was affirmed. Torts Restatement test is appropriate: An activity is ultrahazardous where it necessarily involves the risk of serious harm that cannot be eliminated by the exercise of the utmost care, and it is not a matter of common usage. Here, the common use of the gas by the relatively few persons engaged in the specialized work of fumigating did not constitute a common usage or everyday practice by the public. (31 C.2d 500.) (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.16; 17 Proof of Facts 2d 459 [breach of warranty as to effectiveness of insecticide]; 37 Cal. L. Rev. 269; 29 A.L.R.4th 987 [exterminator's liability for injury or death from operations].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.16.

18 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
c. Crop Dusting.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1420

[§ 1420] Crop Dusting.

Crop dusting with toxic chemicals has been held to be an ultrahazardous activity in a few agricultural jurisdictions. (See 19 Hastings L. J. 476; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 69, 81; 37 A.L.R.3d 833 [liability for injury caused by spraying or dusting of crops].)

In SKF Farms v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 902, 200 C.R. 497, plaintiffs grew lettuce and other broad-leaf crops; defendants, owners of a large neighboring farm, grew wheat and other grain crops. Defendants had their wheat crop dusted with a herbicide (2,4-D) which is used to kill weeds in narrow-leafed crops, but is extremely toxic to broad-leafed crops. The dust drifted onto plaintiffs' land, causing severe crop damage. In this action, the trial judge sustained a demurrer, ruling that crop dusting is "a matter which is in common usage in connection with the agricultural aspect of the State of California and therefore does not constitute an ultrahazardous activity." Held, it was error to decide the issue on demurrer: The judge considered only one of the six factors set forth in the Restatement (see supra, §1416), and necessarily went beyond the pleadings. (153 C.A.3d 906.)

Thus, the court did not decide that crop dusting is an ultrahazardous activity: "Our holding simply means the determination of whether real parties' crop dusting activity was ultrahazardous is not appropriate at the pleading stage. Petitioners are entitled to plead both negligence and strict liability. The court must determine, upon hearing the evidence and weighing the various factors listed in section 520, whether the jury should be instructed that crop dusting is an ultrahazardous activity." (153 C.A.3d 906, footnote 2.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

19 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
d. Testing Rocket Motor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1421

[§ 1421] Testing Rocket Motor.

In Smith v. Lockheed Propulsion Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 774, 56 C.R. 128, plaintiffs owned a 160-acre ranch with a high quality water well. Defendant acquired 9,100 adjoining acres to test rocket motors. It held a static test, by firing motors nose down on "thrust collectors" affixed to a concrete base in the ground. The firing lasted 132 seconds, creating a maximum of 350,000 pounds of thrust and strong earth tremors. About 80 minutes later, the well water became muddy, and an examination later showed that it had been sheared at its 95-foot level and was beyond repair. A substitute well proved unsatisfactory. Plaintiff sued on theories of negligence and liability without fault. Held, judgment of nonsuit reversed. There was no negligence; i.e., the evidence showed prudent engineering practices in selecting the site and conducting the test. But, applying the Restatement test, the activity was ultrahazardous: (a) The rocket motor was the largest ever tested; (b) test firing such a device is not a matter of common occurrence; (4) defendant had found it necessary to acquire a huge area and had also indicated a desire to acquire plaintiff's property. (247 C.A.2d 785.) The cases of blasting in an undeveloped area (not a basis for absolute liability) are distinguishable: Here, though the site was in an undeveloped area, plaintiff's property was immediately adjoining. (247 C.A.2d 787.) (See 29 A.L.R.3d 556.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

20 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
e. Using Blowtorch Near Oil.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1422

[§ 1422] Using Blowtorch Near Oil.

In Garcia v. Estate of Norton (1986) 183 C.A.3d 413, 228 C.R. 108, N was in the business of obtaining waste oil, processing it, and selling it to refineries. He engaged independent contractors to drive his tanker trucks, locate oil, purchase it, and then sell it to him. N had a used truck that needed modifications, and told plaintiff, one of his independent contractors, to assist in cutting a hole in the tank with a blowtorch to enable him to climb inside and do necessary welding. N assured plaintiff that the tank was clean, and plaintiff climbed on top of it to open the hatch, but when N lit the blowtorch, waste oil exploded, killing N and injuring plaintiff. The trial judge ruled that the activity of welding with a blowtorch on a waste oil tank was ultrahazardous, and granted plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict as to liability. Held, the ruling was correct.

(a) Plaintiff's expert witness testified that waste oil contains gasoline and solvents and is extremely explosive, and that even taking the precaution to purge the inside of the tank with an inert gas was not an absolute guarantee of safety in cutting through the tank with a blowtorch. This evidence supported the judge's determination under the Restatement test approved in Luthringer v. Moore (1948) 31 C.2d 489, 190 P.2d 1, supra, §1419. The activity was "incredibly dangerous" not only to N but to anyone else within a relatively large area. It was also neither commonplace nor customary. (183 C.A.3d 419.)

(b) Defendant contended that the strict liability doctrine cannot be applied unless the decedent is aware of the abnormally dangerous condition or activity. This is unsound. One who carried on such an activity is liable to a person "whom the actor reasonably should recognize as likely to be harmed, even though 'the utmost care is exercised to prevent the harm.' " (183 C.A.3d 420, quoting Luthringer.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

21 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
4. Activities Classed as Ultrahazardous.
f. Using Electrical Transformers Containing PCBs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1423

[§ 1423] Using Electrical Transformers Containing PCBs.

In Ahrens v. Superior Court (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1134, 243 C.R. 420, an office building was contaminated when an underground electrical transformer containing polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) exploded and burned. The trial judge found, as a matter of law, that the use of such transformers was not an ultrahazardous activity, because it was not uncommon. Held, this was error. Disputed issues of material fact existed concerning the question "whether it is commonplace and within the experience of the great mass of people in the community that electrical transformers containing a hazardous, toxic substance are located in densely populated commercial locations." (197 C.A.3d 1145, 1149.) "The court must consider the totality of the surrounding circumstances, rather than merely accepting the bald assurance of the utility or the industry that this type of transformer is of common usage. While the common nature of some activities may be an appropriate subject of judicial notice, the frequency of use of underground PCB-containing transformers in a central urban setting is not one of them." (197 C.A.3d 1149.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

22 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
5. Activities Not Classed as Ultrahazardous.
a. Impounding Water.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1424

[§ 1424] Impounding Water.

There is no absolute liability in California for the escape of water from land. (See supra, §1415; cf. Shanander v. Western Loan & Bldg. Co. (1951) 103 C.A.2d 507, 511, 229 P.2d 864 [absolute liability rule of Green v. General Petroleum Corp. (1928) 205 C. 328, 270 P. 952, supra, §1415, does not apply to landlord furnishing water to apartment or other building]; see 51 A.L.R.3d 965 [applicability of rule of strict liability to overflow or escape of water caused by dam failure]; on liability on theory of nuisance, see supra, §1415.)

In Clark v. Di Prima (1966) 241 C.A.2d 823, 51 C.R. 49, defendant, a farmer, irrigated his land by flooding from an irrigation district ditch. He failed to clean the ditch, and a large quantity of water escaped and flooded plaintiff's adjoining almond orchard, causing damage to the trees. Soon after, defendant's irrigator offered to help plaintiff get the water off, and a district ditch tender offered to get a pump to remove it, but plaintiff refused, asserting that the trees were already ruined, and that pumping would not be feasible. Plaintiff recovered damages. Held, reversed. Plaintiff's theory of absolute liability under Rylands, 3 H.L. 330, supra, §1414, is unacceptable. Applying the modern doctrine of ultrahazardous activity, irrigation of farmland, by transportation of water through ditches, is an ordinary and customary practice, not within the doctrine. (241 C.A.2d 829.) The court did not attempt to decide the unsettled question whether the Rylands rule would apply to impounding water by damming the flow of a stream or collecting it in a reservoir. (241 C.A.2d 827.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

23 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
5. Activities Not Classed as Ultrahazardous.
b. Aviation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1425

[§ 1425] Aviation.

(1) Early View of Ultrahazardous Activity. The First and Second Torts Restatement adopted the rule of strict liability. Operators of aircraft and owners who have permitted the operation are strictly liable for harm to land or persons or chattels on the ground caused by an aircraft's ascent, descent, or flight, or by an object dropping or falling from it. (Rest.2d, Torts §520A and Comment c; see 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.13.)

(2) Modern View: Not Ultrahazardous Activity. The Restatement view has now been widely rejected. In Boyd v. White (1954) 128 C.A.2d 641, 651, 276 P.2d 92, the court approved the modern rule in the following quotation from A.L.R.: "[P]roperly handled by a competent pilot exercising reasonable care, an airplane is not an inherently dangerous instrument, so that in the absence of statute the ordinary rules of negligence control, and the owner (or operator) of an airship is only liable for injury inflicted upon another when such damage is caused by a defect in the plane or its negligent operation."

In Boyd v. White, supra, defendant L, the operator of a flying school, leased a plane from defendant W and rented it to G, a student flyer. G crashed, causing property damage to plaintiff. Held, a nonsuit was properly granted as to W (lessor-bailor); the legislative refusal to adopt statutory absolute liability leaves applicable the general law of bailments and negligence. The argument of entrustment of a dangerous instrumentality to an incompetent person (supra, §1221) is rejected. A student pilot is not per se incompetent, reckless, or inexperienced. (128 C.A.2d 655.) (See 43 Cal. L. Rev. 309; for arguments in favor of liability, see 5 Hastings L. J. 1, 181; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 598.)

Boyd was followed in Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Coleman (1957) 150 C.A.2d Supp. 829, 310 P.2d 504, where defendants' plane, approaching an airport, was caught in a downdraft and struck plaintiff's electric wires. The lower court found no negligence and judgment for defendants was affirmed.

Under the Warsaw Convention, international air carriers are liable for "accidents," i.e., "unexpected or unusual event or happening that is external to the passenger." (See Air France v. Saks (1985) 470 U.S. 392, 105 S.Ct. 1338, 1345, 84 L.Ed.2d 289, 300; Olympic Airways v. Husain (2004) 540 U.S. 644, 124 S.Ct. 1221, 1222, 157 L.Ed.2d 1146, 1147 [flight attendant's unexpected and unusual conduct in three times refusing to move asthmatic passenger to another seat further away from smoking section constituted "accident" within meaning of Warsaw Convention].)

Commentary on aviation is extensive. (See 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.13; 8 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Aviation §109; 82 Am.Jur. Trials 243 [handling aviation disaster cases]; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 541 [air carrier's high degree of care]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 309; 23 Stanf. L. Rev. 569 [proposed absolute liability for commercial aircraft]; 22 Proof of Facts 2d 329 [wake turbulence]; 51 Proof of Facts 3d 81 [liability for air crash]; 13 Am.Jur. Trials 557 [light aircraft accident litigation]; 4 A.L.R.2d 615 [negligence in operation on take-off]; 74 A.L.R.2d 628 [negligence in landing]; 74 A.L.R.2d 654 [injury from taxiing aircraft]; 74 A.L.R.2d 867 [state liability as affecting liability under Federal Tort Claims Act]; 75 A.L.R.2d 848 [air carrier's liability for injury to passenger from changes in air pressure]; 75 A.L.R.2d 858 [interference with pilot or controls as negligence or contributory negligence]; 75 A.L.R.2d 868 [liability for overloading]; 76 A.L.R.2d 1070 [liability for injury to person servicing airplane]; 5 A.L.R.3d 707 [helicopter accidents]; 73 A.L.R.4th 416 [negligence in ascent, descent, or flight.] (On liability in connection with operation of control tower, see 46 A.L.R. Fed 24 [liability of United States for negligence of air traffic controller]; on airports, see 43 So. Cal. L. Rev. 631; 4 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 229; 34 A.L.R.3d 1449; on aircraft noise, see 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1581; 1 Pacific L. J. 581; 9 Santa Clara Lawyer 189 [supersonic transport]; 21 Stanf. L. Rev. 50 [sonic booms; strict liability]; on governmental liability for vibration, fumes, and noise, see supra, §339.)

West's Key Number Digest, Aviation k.141; Negligence k.307

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Early View of Ultrahazardous Activity. See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.13.

(2) Modern View: Not Ultrahazardous Activity. Commentary: See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.13. Correction: Page 849, second line of last paragraph, volume for Am.Jur.2d reference should be 8A.

24 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
5. Activities Not Classed as Ultrahazardous.
c. Excavation and Earth Moving.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1426

[§ 1426] Excavation and Earth Moving.

An attempt to ground tort liability on general maxims and catch phrases was discouraged in Daniels v. McPhail (1949) 93 C.A.2d 479, 209 P.2d 19. Defendants, owners of a large hillside, excavated and leveled a building lot, leaving a steep, 40-foot-high sloping bank at the rear. Plaintiffs, with full knowledge of all the circumstances and without reliance on representations or warranties, bought the lot and built on it. During the following year, much dirt slid from the bank, damaging plaintiffs' property. Held, defendants were not liable. (a) Clearly, C.C. 832, on lateral and subjacent support, did not apply. (See 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §377.) (b) Under C.C. 3514, "[o]ne must so use his own rights as not to infringe upon the rights of another." Like other maxims, it does not create a right or interest but is merely an aid in determining the just application of common law or statutory principles. (C.C. 3509.) (c) No fraud, warranty, or negligence on the part of defendants was alleged or proved, nor was this a case involving a dangerous activity giving rise to liability without fault. (93 C.A.2d 481.)

The same approach was taken in Beck v. Bel Air Properties (1955) 134 C.A.2d 834, 286 P.2d 503. Earthmoving incident to subdividing and grading hills and slopes "is a matter of common usage." Hence, there was no absolute liability for injuries to property when rainfall poured streams of mud and debris on plaintiffs' land. (134 C.A.2d 842.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

25 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
B. Ultrahazardous Activity: Liability Without Fault.
5. Activities Not Classed as Ultrahazardous.
d. Other Activities.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1427

[§ 1427] Other Activities.

(1) Fire. Liability for the escape of fire is based on negligence. (See Health & Saf.C. 13007 et seq. [fire liability law]; Paiva v. California Door Co. (1925) 75 C.A. 323, 330, 242 P. 887; Ventura v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1948) 85 C.A.2d 529, 532, 193 P.2d 512; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §14.15; 17 A.L.R.5th 547 [property owner's liability for damage resulting from spread of accidental fire originating on premises].) The liability extends to the costs incurred in suppressing the fire and providing emergency medical services, as well as to those relating to investigating and accounting for the fire. (Health & Saf.C. 13009, 13009.1.) (See Department of Forestry & Fire Protection v. LeBrock (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1137, 1139, 117 C.R.2d 790; 19 Pacific L. J. 623; 90 A.L.R.2d 873 [statutes imposing on owner or occupant liability for expense of fighting fire starting on property].)

However, Pub.Res.C. 4435 creates a presumption ("prima facie evidence") of negligence where a fire originates from the operation of "any engine, machine, barbecue, incinerator, railroad rolling stock, chimney, or any other device which may kindle a fire."

(2) Discharge of Firearms. One who handles firearms is bound to use extraordinary care (see supra, §920), but is not subject to liability without fault. (Orser v. George (1967) 252 C.A.2d 660, 672, 60 C.R. 708.)

(3) Fireworks Display. A fireworks display, being a matter of common usage and capable of being made safe through the exercise of utmost care, is not an ultrahazardous activity. (Ramsey v. Marutamaya Ogatsu Fireworks Co. (1977) 72 C.A.3d 516, 527, 140 C.R. 247, footnote 2.)

(4) Weeds. There is no absolute liability for the escape of weed seeds. (Boarts v. Imperial Irr. Dist. (1947) 80 C.A.2d 574, 575, 182 P.2d 246.)

(5) Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol. The act of driving under the influence, although unquestionably dangerous, is not an ultrahazardous activity for purposes of tort liability. (Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 C.A.3d 86, 92, 221 C.R. 374.)

(6) Nuclear Reactors. The issue of liability arising from accidents with industrial nuclear reactors has produced little case law, but has been widely discussed by commentators. (See 46 Cal. L. Rev. 3, 14; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 750; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 644; 13 Stanf. L. Rev. 865 [American and European legislation]; 21 A.L.R.3d 1356 [tort liability incident to nuclear accident or explosion].)

The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C., §2011 et seq.), although preempting the field of safety regulation, does not preclude the use of state tort remedies. (Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp. (1984) 464 U.S. 238, 104 S.Ct. 615, 622, 78 L.Ed.2d 443, 457, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §21 [award of punitive damages was not preempted by federal law].) However, the Price-Anderson Act of 1957 (42 U.S.C., §2210) limits the liability for a single nuclear incident (a) to $ 500,000 plus the amount of required financial protection, or (b) if the required financial protection exceeds $ 60,000, to $ 560,000 or the amount of the required protection, whichever is greater. (42 U.S.C., §2210(e).) This limitation is constitutional. (Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Environmental Study Group (1978) 438 U.S. 59, 98 S.Ct. 2620, 2636, 57 L.Ed.2d 595, 618; see 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 129; 8 Hastings Const. L. Q. 371; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 381; 12 West L.A. L. Rev. 137.)

(7) Delivery of Electricity. High voltage power systems do not constitute an ultrahazardous activity. (Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 68, 85, 212 C.R. 283, infra, §1447; see 82 A.L.R.3d 218 [applicability of rule of strict liability to injury from electrical current escaping from power line].)

(8) Miscellaneous Activities. Other activities, not classified as ultrahazardous, have been discussed by decisions or commentators. (See Edwards v. Post Trans. Co. (1991) 228 C.A.3d 980, 986, 279 C.R. 231 [use of sulphuric acid in waste treatment facility]; 13 Pacific L. Rev. 99 [genetic engineering]; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 986 [hazardous waste]; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 1086 [genetic engineering]; 19 San Diego L. Rev. 891 [hazardous waste]; 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 117 [recombinant DNA technology]; 51 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1355 [same]; 22 U.S.F. L. Rev. 31 [contaminated property]; 16 A.L.R.4th 1300 [X-ray radiation]; 31 A.L.R.4th 658 [carriage of hazardous substances; carrier's "public duty" exception]; 13 A.L.R.5th 600 [liability of prior landowner to subsequent owner for hazardous waste contamination].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Fire. See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §14.15.(6) Nuclear Reactors. See 198 A.L.R. Fed 147 [preemption issues under Atomic Energy Act of 1954].

26 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
1. In General.

a. Background: Negligence and Warranty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1428

[§ 1428] Background: Negligence and Warranty.

(1) Liability Based on Negligence. The celebrated New York case of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. (1916) 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, established a duty of care of a manufacturer of any potentially dangerous product to any person who might foreseeably be expected to be injured by it. (See supra, §1168.) This basis of liability, however, posed difficult problems of proof of negligence, and was subject to the defense of contributory negligence.

(2) Liability Based on Warranty. Liability on implied warranty has long been recognized, irrespective of negligence, where goods are sold. But (a) this liability is contractual, and requires privity between the person damaged by a defective article and the person liable; (b) timely notice of breach of warranty must be given; and (c) warranties may be excluded by disclaimers in the contract of sale. (See 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §§84, 98, 199.)

(3) Warranty Without Privity. The principal obstacle to warranty recovery against a manufacturer was lack of privity between it and the consumer who bought from a retail dealer. But progressive courts devised various theories to overcome the defense, first in food and drugs and cosmetics cases, and later in cases involving potentially dangerous industrial products. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §1, Comment a [historical development of products liability]; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Torts, Products Liability, Chap. 24; 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §§101, 112, 113.) This "warranty" without privity was not contractual warranty at all, but really a strict tort liability. (See Grinnell v. Charles Pfizer & Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 424, 433, 79 C.R. 369, footnote 3; Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment m; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.16; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §351 et seq.; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §529; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 435 [Understanding Products Liability]; 18 Hastings L. J. 16; 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 1077 [policy bases of products liability].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Warranty Without Privity. See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.16.

27 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

1. In General.

b. Liability Irrespective of Fault.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1429

[§ 1429] Liability Irrespective of Fault.

In Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Fresno (1944) 24 C.2d 453, 461, 150 P.2d 436, Justice Traynor suggested that a manufacturer's liability should be imposed irrespective of fault. (See 13 Stanf. L. Rev. 804; 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 388.) In Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, an opinion by Justice Traynor for a unanimous court established this basis of manufacturer's liability in California.

Plaintiff, relying on a manufacturer's brochure, purchased a combination power tool. It was defectively designed and constructed, and, while in use, caused serious personal injuries to plaintiff. Notice of breach of warranty was long delayed, and this was urged as a defense by both the retailer and the manufacturer. The court first held that the express warranty in the brochure made notice of breach unnecessary (see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §202), but then declared that there was no need to rely on warranty. "A manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article he places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being. Recognized first in the case of unwholesome food products, such liability has now been extended to a variety of other products that create as great or greater hazards if defective." (59 C.2d 62.)

"Although in these cases strict liability has usually been based on the theory of an express or implied warranty running from the manufacturer to the plaintiff, the abandonment of the requirement of a contract between them, the recognition that the liability is not assumed by agreement but imposed by law ... , and the refusal to permit the manufacturer to define the scope of its own responsibility for defective products ... make clear that the liability is not one governed by the law of contract warranties but by the law of strict liability in tort. Accordingly, rules defining and governing warranties that were developed to meet the needs of commercial transactions cannot properly be invoked to govern the manufacturer's liability to those injured by its defective products unless those rules also serve the purposes for which such liability is imposed." (59 C.2d 63.)

"We need not recanvass the reasons for imposing strict liability on the manufacturer. ... The purpose of such liability is to insure that the costs of injuries resulting from defective products are borne by the manufacturers that put such products on the market rather than by the injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves. Sale warranties serve this purpose fitfully at best. ... In the present case, for example, plaintiff was able to plead and prove an express warranty only because he read and relied on the representations ... contained in the manufacturer's brochure. Implicit in the machine's presence on the market, however, was a representation that it would safely do the jobs for which it was built. Under these circumstances, it should not be controlling whether plaintiff selected the machine because of the statements in the brochure, or because of the machine's own appearance of excellence that belied the defect lurking beneath the surface, or because he merely assumed that it would safely do the jobs it was built to do. ... To establish the manufacturer's liability it was sufficient that plaintiff proved that he was injured while using the Shopsmith in a way it was intended to be used as a result of a defect in design and manufacture of which plaintiff was not aware that made the Shopsmith unsafe for its intended use." (59 C.2d 63.)

The decision was the subject of extensive comment. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.27; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §530; 53 Cal. L. Rev. 202; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 895 [Harnessing Madison Avenue: Advertising and Products Liability Theory]; 18 Hastings L. J. 17; 4 Santa Clara Lawyer 218; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 30; 21 Stanf. L. Rev. 1777; 39 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 731 [declining plaintiff success rate in products liability cases]; 19 U.S.F. L. Rev. 119; 93 A.L.R.5th 103 [advertisements as affecting liability for injury caused by product other than tobacco]; and see, restating and discussing the Greenman doctrine, Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 129, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153; Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 1056, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, infra, §1486; Silverhart v. Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1022, 1026, 98 C.R. 187, infra, §1520; Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 724, 101 C.R. 314, infra, §1500; 65 A.L.R.4th 346 [product malfunction or occurrence of accident as evidence of defect]; 17 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [drug products liability litigation].) (On pleading in strict liability action, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §587 et seq.; on res ipsa loquitur instruction where plaintiff relies on both negligence and strict liability theories, see Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 C.3d 379, 387, 93 C.R. 769, 482 P.2d 681; for instructions, see BAJI, Nos. 9.00, 9.01; CACI, No. 1200 et seq.; on products liability claims in bankruptcy, see 17 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1247; on punitive damages, see infra, §1593; on comparative fault, see infra, §1542; on strict products liability as part of admiralty law, see East River Steamship Corp v. Transamerica Delaval (1986) 476 U.S. 858, 106 S.Ct. 2295, 90 L.Ed.2d 865.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.27. Pleading in strict liability action:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §627 et seq.

28 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

1. In General.

c. Restatement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1430

[§ 1430] Restatement.

The rule of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, found quick acceptance in a number of jurisdictions outside California (see 18 Hastings L. J. 15) and was embodied in Rest.2d, Torts §402A. The terse language of that section was amplified in extensive Comments, and both the section and the Comments were constantly cited by the courts as authoritative statements of the law. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.27; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §517; 22 Stanf. L. Rev. 713.) On occasion, however, the California Supreme Court found it necessary to go beyond the Restatement (see Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 C.2d 578, 75 C.R. 652, 451 P.2d 84, infra, §1511), and in one significant decision, took a contrary position (see Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 131, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, infra, §1436).

In 1997, the American Law Institute adopted a new element of the Third Restatement of Torts, entitled Products Liability. Acting after more than a quarter of a century, the Institute had to respond to questions not then "part of the legal landscape," e.g.: What should be the governing standard for design and warning defect liability (as opposed to manufacturing defect liability)? Is there a cause of action for defective prescription drug design? What rule should govern when a plaintiff establishes that enhanced harm was suffered as a result of a defect in a defendant's product, beyond that which would have resulted from other causes, but the plaintiff cannot quantify the amount of the enhancement? Thus, it was necessary for the new Products Liability Restatement to largely restate the Second Restatement as it concerns the liability of commercial sellers of products. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability, p. 3.)

The Third Restatement is divided into the following four chapters:

Chapter 1: Liability of Commercial Product Sellers Based on Product Defects at Time of Sale (§1 et seq.). Topic 1 contains the liability rules applicable to products generally. Topic 2 sets forth the liability rules applicable to special products or product markets (component parts, drugs, food products, and used products).

Chapter 2: Liability of Commercial Product Sellers Not Based on Product Defects at Time of Sale (§9 et seq.). Included are rules for determining liability for harm caused by misrepresentation, by postsale failure to warn, and by postsale failure to recall a product.

Chapter 3: Liability of Sellers and Apparent Manufacturers (§12 et seq.). Included are principles governing liability of a successor for harm caused by defective products sold commercially by a predecessor, of a successor for harm caused by the successor's own postsale failure to warn, and for selling or distributing as one's own a product manufactured by another.

Chapter 4: Provisions of General Applicability (§15 et seq.). Topic 1 concerns causation, Topic 2 sets forth affirmative defenses, and Topic 3 contains definitions.

The general rule of strict liability is set forth as follows: "One engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products who sells or distributes a defective product is subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by the defect." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §1; on what constitutes defective product, see infra, §1435.) (See 111 Harv. L. Rev. 2366 [Restatement redesign of products liability]; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 487 [cigarette litigation under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.1, 5; Torts k.14.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.27; 55 Hastings L. J. 1377 [Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j, as implying that manufacturer's warning cancels its duty of safe design].

29 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
1. In General.
d. Negligence Liability Compared.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1431

[§ 1431] Negligence Liability Compared.

"Prior cases of this court have assumed without discussing the point that a plaintiff in a products liability case could seek recovery at the same time on theories of strict liability in tort and in negligence. ... No valid reason appears to require a plaintiff to elect. ... It is apparent that in this products liability case instructions on negligence in addition to those on strict liability might have been of great aid to the plaintiff." (Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 C.3d 379, 387, 93 C.R. 769, 482 P.2d 681; see 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §532; 52 A.L.R.3d 101 [instructing on negligence and breach of warranty, where strict liability instruction is also given]; BAJI, No. 9.19 et seq.; CACI, No. 1220 et seq.)

The similarity of the proof in both kinds of cases is stressed in an early article by Prosser: "In a negligence case the plaintiff has the initial burden of establishing three things. The first is that he has been injured by the product. This is no less true of strict liability. It is not enough to show that the plaintiff ate the defendant's food and became ill, so long as he ate other things, and others who ate the food were not made ill. The second is that the injury occurred because the product was defective; and this also is no less true of strict liability. Proof that an airplane has crashed does not make out a case against the manufacturer, where there is no evidence to show that it was not due to negligent flying. The third is that the defect existed when the product left the hands of the defendant; and this again is no less true of strict liability. When meat has been exposed in the air for a considerable time by a dealer, and might have spoiled in the process, the burden of proof against the original supplier of the meat is not sustained. The elimination of negligence as the basis of recovery does not relieve the plaintiff of the necessity of making out his case as to all of these three elements." (18 Hastings L. J. 50.) (For comparison of two theories of liability, see Balido v. Improved Machinery (1972) 29 C.A.3d 633, 640, 105 C.R. 890, infra, §1526 ["Although separate counts for negligence, warranty, and strict liability have been pleaded, we view them as stating a single cause of action, in that the complaint seeks damages for personal injuries caused by deficiencies in the design of a manufactured product"]; Khan v. Shiley (1990) 217 C.A.3d 848, 855, 266 C.R. 106, infra, §1526, citing the text [element of causation].)

In DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 336, 195 C.R. 867, infra, §1454, the court, quoting Prosser and Balido, pointed out that in product design cases, strict liability and negligence claims merge. As Prosser puts it: "[T]he liability of the manufacturer, even though it may occasionally be called strict, appears to rest primarily upon a departure from proper standards of care, so that the tort is essentially a matter of negligence." (148 C.A.3d 336.)

"With only slight editing we could take our discussion of the strict liability cause of action and convert it into the language of negligence. The same summary judgment rationale applies when the products liability window dressing is removed." (148 C.A.3d 350.)

Although under Jiminez a plaintiff need not elect to proceed under strict liability or negligence, the trial judge's rejection of negligence instructions is not necessarily error in a non-res ipsa loquitur case involving only a manufacturing defect. (Montez v. Ford Motor Co. (1980) 101 C.A.3d 315, 318, 319, 161 C.R. 578.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.5, 6

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

30 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
1. In General.
e. Indemnity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1432

[§ 1432] Indemnity.

The doctrine of indemnity, invoked by a person secondarily liable against a tortfeasor primarily liable, is applied in numerous negligence cases (see supra, §112 et seq.), but has received little attention in strict liability cases. Implied indemnity has, however, been recognized. (See Ford Motor Co. v. Robert J. Poeschl (1971) 21 C.A.3d 694, 697, 98 C.R. 702, supra, §116 ["Wrongs other than negligence may create dual liability to the third party and produce the claim of indemnity. In products liability cases such as this, a manufacturer's or retailer's strict liability in tort may form the springboard for the indemnity claim"].)

Where express indemnity provisions are involved, the construction of the clause, and particularly the requirement of precise and unequivocal language to impose the obligation (see supra, §119 et seq.), is the same as in negligence cases. (Price v. Shell Oil Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 245, 258, 85 C.R. 178, 466 P.2d 722; Dart Trans. Service v. Mack Trucks (1970) 9 C.A.3d 837, 848, 88 C.R. 670; see 22 Hastings L. J. 1202.) In Price the indemnity clause stated that the lessee would indemnify the lessor against "any and all claims and liability for injury or death of persons or damage to property caused by or happening in connection with the equipment or the condition, maintenance, possession, operation or use thereof." In affirming a nonsuit of defendant lessor's cross-complaint for indemnity, the court said: "No language of such essential specificity indicates that the lessee is to be held responsible for the negligent acts of the lessor, much less for the strict liability in tort imposed upon the lessor for placing on the market a defective article. Indeed it would do violence to the doctrine of strict liability and thwart its basic purpose, if we were to interpret so general a clause as transferring the liability for a defective article from the party putting the article in the stream of commerce, to the user or consumer of the article who is within the class the doctrine was designed to protect." (2 C.3d 258.) (See Maryland Cas. Co. v. Bailey & Sons (1995) 35 C.A.4th 856, 869, 41 C.R.2d 519 [strict liability of real estate developer is not same as active negligence, so as to preclude recovery under general indemnity provision; distinguishing Price].)

An automobile dealer who sells a car is not entitled to indemnity from the driver of the car. In Bill Loper Ford v. Hites (1975) 47 C.A.3d 828, 121 C.R. 131, H bought a car from plaintiff dealer and drove it. In a collision the gas tank exploded, injuring two of his passengers. The passengers sued the dealer on strict liability and received a substantial settlement. The dealer then brought this action against the driver for indemnity, on the theory that the driver's negligence was the primary cause of the injury to the passengers and that the dealer's liability for defective design was passive and secondary. Held, judgment for defendant driver on demurrer affirmed. "To allow indemnification because [H] was actively negligent in driving the automobile is the antithesis of strict liability. Plaintiff attempts to shift the liability for selling a defective automobile to the driver simply because he used the automobile in such a way as to expose the design defect. The present status of strict liability prohibits this avoidance of accountability." (47 C.A.3d 836.) (See 79 A.L.R.4th 278 [seller's right to indemnity from manufacturer].)

In an action against a manufacturer and a retailer, in which the retailer cross-complains against the manufacturer for indemnity, the manufacturer is not liable for attorneys' fees incurred by the retailer in defense of his or her own alleged wrongdoing. (Davis v. Air Technical Industries (1978) 22 C.3d 1, 6, 148 C.R. 419, 582 P.2d 1010.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

31 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

1. In General.

f. Recovery for Emotional Distress.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1433

[§ 1433] Recovery for Emotional Distress.

In Shepard v. Superior Court (1977) 76 C.A.3d 16, 142 C.R. 612, members of the Shepard family were passengers in a Ford Pinto driven by the father on a highway. The Pinto was struck by a car negligently driven by G. The Pinto door opened and daughter J was thrown out; then she was run over and killed by G's car. This action was brought by the father, mother, and brother for damages for physical injuries resulting from the emotional shock of observing the accident and J's death. As to the negligent defendant driver, the complaint clearly stated a cause of action under Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008. But the complaint also named Ford Motor Co., the manufacturer, as a defendant, on allegations of defective manufacture or design of the door lock. The trial court sustained Ford's demurrer. Held, this was error.

(a) Although language in Dillon refers to negligence, no issue of strict products liability was raised in that case. And other decisions recognize the plaintiff's right to proceed on both negligence and strict liability theories. (76 C.A.3d 20, citing Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 C.3d 379, 387, 93 C.R. 769, 482 P.2d 681, supra, §1431.)

(b) The injuries suffered as a result of emotional shock are as much a foreseeable consequence of a defect in design and manufacture of an automobile as the negligence of the driver. Hence, to permit recovery against the negligent driver but not the manufacturer would be inconsistent; and to permit recovery against the manufacturer would be in accord with the purpose of the doctrine of strict liability--to relieve the plaintiff of the problems of proof in negligence actions. (76 C.A.3d 21.)

A dissenting justice condemned the result as the creation of a new cause of action. (76 C.A.3d 28.) (See Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 586, 195 C.R. 902, infra, §1509, citing Shepard; 11 West L.A. L. Rev. 109; 90 A.L.R.5th 179 [bystander recovery for emotional distress from witnessing another's injury in products liability context].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.

1. In General.

g. No Avoidance of Liability by Written Agreement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1434

[§ 1434] No Avoidance of Liability by Written Agreement.

In Westlye v. Look Sports (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1715, 22 C.R.2d 781, plaintiff, who had rented skiing equipment from defendant, was injured when the safety binding failed to release the ski from the boot. The rental agreement contained an appendix in which plaintiff (1) accepted the equipment "as is"; (2) agreed to release defendant from all liability resulting from negligence or the election, inspection, or adjustment of the equipment; and (3) expressly assumed the risk of any injury resulting from use of the equipment. The trial judge concluded that this agreement was a bar to plaintiff's cause of action for strict products liability. Held, this was error.

(a) The rule that contractual disclaimers do not defeat strict products liability in tort is well established by California case law. (17 C.A.4th 1744, citing Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, infra, §1480, Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, and Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, infra, §1514.) And the Restatement Second of Torts contains the following comment regarding the strict products liability of product suppliers: "The consumer's cause of action does not depend upon the validity of his contract with the person from whom he acquires the product, and it is not affected by any disclaimer or other agreement, whether it be between the seller and his immediate buyer, or attached to and accompanying the product into the consumer's hands." (17 C.A.4th 1745, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment m; on contractual exculpation under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability, see infra, §1544.)

(b) The fact that the agreement here contains not only a disclaimer by the product supplier but also an express assumption of risk by the consumer does not change the result. "[A]s we have seen, there is a strong policy against allowing product suppliers to disclaim liability for injuries caused by defects in products they place on the market. To allow product suppliers to achieve this prohibited result merely by substituting assumption of risk language for disclaimer language would too easily allow circumvention of these policies. In effect, such an agreement is nothing more than a disclaimer in another form. Were we to enforce such agreements, we would revisit the problems that led to the rule invalidating contractual disclaimers in the first place." (17 C.A.4th 1747.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - a. In General.
 - 1. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1435

[§ 1435] Restatement 3d.

For purposes of Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability, a "product" is defined as "tangible personal property distributed commercially for use or consumption." However, other items, such as real property and electricity, are products "when the context of their distribution and use is sufficiently analogous to the distribution and use of tangible personal property that it is appropriate to apply the rules stated in this Restatement." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §19(a).) Services, even when provided commercially, are not products. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §19(b).) Also, human blood and human tissue, even when provided commercially, are not subject to the Restatement rules. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §19(c).) (See Brooks v. Eugene Burger Management Corp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1611, 1624, 264 C.R. 756 [apartment complex, allegedly defective because it was unfenced, did not constitute "product" within meaning of products liability law]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1147 [false statements in book is not "product"]; 63 A.L.R.4th 127 [live animal as "product"].)

A product is defective when any of the following circumstances exist at the time of sale or distribution:

(1) The product contains a "manufacturing defect," i.e., when the product departs from its intended design even though all possible care was exercised in the preparation and marketing of the product. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(a).)

(2) The product is "defective in design," i.e., when the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the product could have been reduced or avoided by the adoption of a reasonable alternative design by the seller or other distributor, or a predecessor in the commercial chain of distribution, and the omission of the alternative design renders the product not reasonably safe. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(b); see infra, §1450.)

(3) The product is "defective because of inadequate instructions or warnings," i.e., when the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the product could have been reduced or avoided by the provision of reasonable instructions or warnings by the seller or other distributor, or a predecessor in the commercial chain of distribution, and the omission of the instructions or warnings renders the product not reasonably safe. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(c); see infra, §1467.)

Liability for design defects or defects based on inadequate instructions or warnings is predicated on a different concept of responsibility than is liability for manufacturing defects. The rule for manufacturing defects imposes liability whether or not the manufacturer's quality control effects satisfy standards of reasonableness. Design defects and defects based on inadequate instructions or warnings cannot be determined by reference to the manufacturer's own design or marketing standards because those standards are the very ones that the plaintiffs attack as unreasonable. An independent assessment of advantages and disadvantages, to which some attach the label "risk-utility balancing," is necessary. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment a.)

It may be inferred that the harm sustained by the plaintiff was caused by a product defect existing at the time of sale or distribution, without proof of a specific defect, when the incident that harmed the plaintiff (1) was of a kind that ordinarily occurs as a result of product defect, and (2) was not, in the particular case, solely the result of causes other than product defect existing at the time of sale or distribution. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §3.) There is no requirement that the plaintiff prove what aspect of the product was defective. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §3, Comment c.)

With respect to liability for defective design or inadequate instructions or warnings, a product's noncompliance with an applicable product safety statute or administrative regulation renders the product defective with respect to the risks sought to be reduced by the statute or regulation. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §4(a).) With respect to those types of liability, a product's compliance with an applicable product safety statute or administrative regulation is properly considered in determining whether the product is defective with respect to the risks sought to be reduced by the statute or regulation. However, compliance does not preclude as a matter of law a finding of product defect. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §4(b).)

Certain liability rules are applicable to particular products or product markets. (See infra, §1448.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.8-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

34 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

a. In General.

2. Product Need Not Be Unreasonably Dangerous.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1436

[§ 1436] Product Need Not Be Unreasonably Dangerous.

(1) Second Restatement. Under Rest.2d, Torts §402A (see supra, §1430), liability depended on a showing that the product was both defective and unreasonably dangerous. However, in California, Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 133, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, held that the plaintiff did not need to show that the product was unreasonably dangerous, but only that it was defective. Defendant was a sales agent for an assembled bread delivery truck, parts of which were manufactured by others. Plaintiff, a route salesman, was involved in a collision. The impact broke an aluminum safety hasp located behind the driver's seat and designed to hold the bread trays in place. The loaded trays, driven forward by the abrupt stop, struck plaintiff in the back and hurled him through the windshield. Plaintiff's evidence showed that the metal hasp was flawed and lacked the tensile strength of a nonflawed metal. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, claiming error in the judge's failure to instruct in accordance with the Restatement's "unreasonably dangerous" qualification. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) The formulation of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, did not include this element; it "crept into our jurisprudence without fanfare after its inclusion in Section 402A of the Restatement." (8 C.3d 129.) As defined in Comment i, "unreasonably dangerous" means that the article "must be dangerous to an extent beyond that which would be contemplated by the ordinary consumer." Prosser suggests that this qualification was added to foreclose the possibility that the manufacturer of a product with inherent possibilities for harm (e.g., butter, drugs, whiskey, and automobiles) would become liable as an insurer. (8 C.3d 132.)

(b) The requirement is unsound for two reasons. (1) It burdens the plaintiff with proof of an element "which rings of negligence." Thus, if the trier of fact determines that the "ordinary consumer" would have expected the defective condition, the seller is not strictly liable regardless of the expectation of the injured plaintiff. "In fact, it has been observed that the Restatement formulation of strict liability in practice rarely leads to a different conclusion than would have been reached under laws of negligence." (8 C.3d 133.) (2) It imposes a bifurcated standard requiring proof that the product is defective and also that it is unreasonably dangerous. This places upon the plaintiff "a significantly increased burden" and is "a step backward in the area pioneered by this court." (8 C.3d 133.)

(c) "[T]o require an injured plaintiff to prove not only that the product contained a defect but also that such defect

made the product unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer would place a considerably greater burden upon him than that articulated in Greenman. We believe the Greenman formulation is consonant with the rationale and development of products liability law in California because it provides a clear and simple test for determining whether the injured plaintiff is entitled to recovery." (8 C.3d 135.) (See 61 Cal. L. Rev. 656; 8 Golden Gate L. Rev. 263; 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 669; 10 U.S.F. L. Rev. 492, 725.)

(2) Third Restatement. Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability no longer requires that the defect be one that makes the product "unreasonably dangerous." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §§1, 2; see Valentine v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (1999) 68 C.A.4th 1467, 1484, 81 C.R.2d 252, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, Supp., §352 [independent cause of action for failure to test and inspect cannot stand if product is found not to be defective]; 64 A.L.R.4th 125 [admissibility of experimental or test evidence to disprove defect in motor vehicle].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.8

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Third Restatement.

Valentine case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §343.

35 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - a. In General.
 - 3. Jury Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1437

[§ 1437] Jury Instructions.

BAJI, No. 9.00 defines "defective product," and Nos. 9.00.3 and 9.00.5 state the elements of a products liability cause of action based on a manufacturing defect or a design defect, respectively. CAJI, No.1200 states the essential factual elements. Nos. 1201 and 1202 state the elements of an action based on a manufacturing defect. Nos. 1203 and 1204 state the elements of an action based on a design defect. Nos. 1205 and 1206 state the elements of an action based on failure to warn.

In Henderson v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 663, 117 C.R. 1, 527 P.2d 353, infra, §1466, the jury was instructed that "defendant manufacturer of a product is not required under the law so to create and deliver its product as to make it accident proof." Plaintiff contended that this was equivalent to the disapproved "unavoidable accident" instruction (see supra, §902). Held, the two were different, and the instruction given was not objectionable. It conveyed the concept that a product need not be free from all risk of harm, hence that it is not to be found defective simply because an accident has occurred. Thus, it did not state a separate basis for nonliability, but merely attempted "to delineate the outer limits of legal responsibility in a products liability action." (12 C.3d 676.) (See In re Coordinated Latex Glove Litigation (2002) 99 C.A.4th 594, 600, 121 C.R.2d 301 [to establish manufacturing defect, plaintiff must show either that product differed from manufacturer's intended result or that it differed from other ostensibly identical units of same product line]; 65 A.L.R.4th 346 [product malfunction or occurrence of accident as evidence of defect].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In an appropriate case, it is proper to instruct that action or inaction by the Food and Drug Administration, though not dispositive, may be considered to show whether a pharmaceutical product is safe or not safe. (O'Neill v. Novartis Consumer Health (2007) 147 C.A.4th 1388, 1393, 55 C.R.3d 551 [while FDA's standards and decisions do not immunize drug manufacturer from liability, they are nevertheless entitled to serious consideration on issue of drug's safety at time of plaintiff's alleged injuries].)

36 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
b. Particular Products.
1. Asbestos.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1438

[§ 1438] Asbestos.

Persons exposed to asbestos for a long period of time are often parties in strict products liability actions. (See Sparks v. Owens-Illinois (1995) 32 C.A.4th 461, 473, 38 C.R.2d 739, infra, §1456 [asbestos-containing product]; Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1529, 1534, 40 C.R.2d 22 [same]; Armstrong World Industries v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1, 36, 52 C.R.2d 690; Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1224, 1227, 53 C.R.2d 642 [strict liability applies to bulk supplier of asbestos, even though it has not made finished consumer product]; Arena v. Owens Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1178, 1191, 74 C.R.2d 580 [holding in Jenkins is not changed by proposed Rest.3d, Torts]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 739 [asbestos insurance liability]; 34 Hastings L. J. 845 [asbestos-related diseases]; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1 [asbestos litigation]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 181 [cigarette manufacturer's liability for mesothelioma caused by asbestos fibers in cigarette filters]; 60 Am.Jur. Trials 73 [asbestos injury litigation]; 39 A.L.R.4th 399 [inhalation of asbestos].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Jones v. John Crane (2005) 132 C.A.4th 990, 999, 35 C.R.3d 144 [asbestos fibers released from manufacturer's products were substantial factor in cancer suffered by plaintiff exposed to asbestos at work during 27-year naval career, even if level of asbestos from products was comparable to ambient level of asbestos found in atmosphere]; Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2006) 138 C.A.4th 96, 107, 41 C.R.3d 229 [expert's declaration that plaintiff had been exposed to asbestos, which was released from defendant's condensers during ship overhaul, and later "re-entrained" into ship's air almost two decades before plaintiff came on board, lacked sufficient factual basis, and offered virtually no explanation or reasoning, making it impossible to determine how expert reached his conclusions]; Garza v. Asbestos Corp., Ltd. (2008) 161 C.A.4th 651, 659, 74 C.R.3d 359 [raw asbestos is product subject to strict liability]; 34 Pepperdine L. Rev. 883 [asbestos litigation in California]; 45 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1 [asbestos litigation system in San Francisco Bay Area].

37 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 2. Machinery and Equipment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1439

[§ 1439] Machinery and Equipment.

Many products liability cases involve defective machinery and equipment. (See Lewis v. American Hoist & Derrick Co. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 570, 580, 97 C.R. 798 [crane]; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §736 et seq.; 8 Proof of Facts 3d 615 [forklift trucks]; 19 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [escalators]; 66 Proof of Facts 3d 183 [grinding wheels]; 78 Proof of Facts 3d 107 [underground storage tank]; 95 A.L.R.3d 541 [forklift trucks]; 99 A.L.R.3d 693 [manufacturer's or seller's obligation to supply or recommend safety accessories]; 1 A.L.R.4th 748 [heating equipment]; 2 A.L.R.4th 262 [conveyor belts]; 8 A.L.R.4th 20 [industrial presses]; 10 A.L.R.4th 554 [transformers and other electrical equipment]; 13 A.L.R.4th 476 [cranes and other lifting apparatuses]; 22 A.L.R.4th 206 [mechanical or chain saw or components]; 33 A.L.R.4th 1189 [stud or staple guns]; 36 A.L.R.4th 170 [office furnishings]; 37 A.L.R.4th 47 [burglar or fire alarm]; 72 A.L.R.4th 90 [industrial refrigeration equipment]; 74 A.L.R.4th 904 [scaffolds and scaffolding equipment]; 80 A.L.R.4th 972 [lubricating products and systems]; 84 A.L.R.4th 1123 [cutting or heating torches]; 59 A.L.R.5th 461 [computer hardware and software].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 95 Am.Jur. Trials 91 [welding rods]; 3 A.L.R.6th 355 [office furnishings; superseding 36 A.L.R.4th 170, text, p. 865]; 4 A.L.R.6th 401 [mechanical or chain saw or components; superseding 22 A.L.R.4th 206, text, p. 865].

38 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
- 3. Food and Beverages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1440

[§ 1440] Food and Beverages.

Claims of strict products liability often involve food and beverages. (See Mexicali Rose v. Superior Court (1992) 1 C.4th 617, 633, 4 C.R.2d 145, 822 P.2d 1292, 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §108 [food containing bone]; Ford v. Miller Meat Co. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1196, 1202, 33 C.R.2d 899 [bone fragment in ground meat sold by supermarket; following Mexicali Rose]; DiRosa v. Showa Denko K.K. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 799, 805, 52 C.R.2d 128 [dietary supplement]; 16 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 677 [infant formula]; 30 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [foreign objects in food]; 47 Proof of Facts 3d 47 [food poisoning]; 36 A.L.R.4th 419 [explosion or breakage of beverage bottle]; 42 A.L.R.4th 253 [alcoholic beverages]; 87 A.L.R.4th 804 [spoilage or contamination of beverage]; 90 A.L.R.4th 12 [foreign substance in beverage]; 64 A.L.R.5th 205 [excessively hot food or beverage].) (On application of Restatement rules, see infra, §1448.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

39 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

- Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
b. Particular Products.
4. Drugs, Medical Devices, and Personal Care Products.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1441

[§ 1441] Drugs, Medical Devices, and Personal Care Products.

Defects involving drugs, medical devices, and personal care products have been treated in numerous cases and articles. (See Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, infra, §1486 [diethylstilbestrol (DES)]; Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470 [same]; Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 C.4th 1104, 56 C.R.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347, infra, §1477 [sleeping pills]; Grinnell v. Charles Pfizer & Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 424, 435, 79 C.R. 369 [Sabin oral polio vaccine]; West v. Johnson & Johnson Products (1985) 174 C.A.3d 831, 849, 220 C.R. 437 [toxic shock syndrome from use of vaginal tampon]; 7 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [injuries from drugs]; 78 Proof of Facts 3d 233 [latex products]; 80 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [failure of emergency medical equipment]; 55 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [cosmetic silicone breast implants]; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 149; 65 Cal. L. Rev. 754 [Tort Law and Mass Immunization]; 34 Golden Gate L. Rev. 393 [prescription drugs]; 43 Hastings L. J. 301 [Bendectin litigation]; 40 Stanf. L. Rev. 989 [Drug Product Liability and Health Care Delivery Systems]; 7 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 487 [manufacturers of prescription drugs]; 49 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 737 [alternative safer design test for drugs and medical devices]; 54 A.L.R.3d 258 [liability of hospital or medical practitioner for harm caused by drug]; 54 A.L.R.3d 258 [medical instruments or similar devices]; 1 A.L.R.4th 921 [prostheses or surgical implants]; 2 A.L.R.4th 1091 [Sindell]; 29 A.L.R.4th 1045 [animal medicines]; 34 A.L.R.4th 532 [medical machinery]; 46 A.L.R.4th 1197 [perfumes, colognes, or deodorants]; 54 A.L.R.4th 574 [personal soap]; 57 A.L.R.4th 911 [pertussis vaccine]; 59 A.L.R.4th 50 [toxic shock syndrome]; 63 A.L.R.4th 105 [mascara and other eye cosmetics]; 65 A.L.R.4th 346 [product malfunction or occurrence of accident as evidence of defect]; 84 A.L.R.4th 1090 [hair straighteners and relaxants]; 54 A.L.R.5th 1 [contraceptives].) (On application of Restatement rules, see infra, §1448.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 40 U.S.F. L. Rev. 515 [burden on defendant moving for summary judgment based on federal preemption in medical device cases]; 34 Western State L. Rev. 191 [medical instruments, implants, and prosthetic devices]; 87 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [Vioxx]; 87 Proof of Facts 3d 119 [antidepressants]; 95 Am.Jur. Trials 115 [cosmetics]; 98 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [hip replacement implants]; 23 A.L.R.6th 223 [cardiac pacemakers]; 104 Am.Jur. Trials 179 [cardiac assist devices].

40 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 5. Household Furnishings and Appliances.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1442

[§ 1442] Household Furnishings and Appliances.

Numerous articles deal with defective household equipment, furnishings, and supplies. (See 43 Am.Jur. Trials 315 [preparing portable kerosene heater cases]; 45 Am.Jur. Trials 637 [trying portable kerosene heater cases]; 89 A.L.R.3d 210 [television sets]; 93 A.L.R.3d 99 [stoves]; 1 A.L.R.4th 748 [heating equipment]; 6 A.L.R.4th 1262 [clothes dryers]; 22 A.L.R.4th 206 [mechanical or chain saws or components]; 34 A.L.R.4th 95 [appliances relating to cleaning, washing, personal care, and water supply, quality, and disposal]; 36 A.L.R.4th 170 [home furnishings]; 37 A.L.R.4th 47 [burglar or fire alarms]; 61 A.L.R.4th 94 [overhead garage doors and openers]; 122 A.L.R.5th 515 [household equipment relating to storage, etc., of food].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 3 A.L.R.6th 355 [home furnishings; superseding 36 A.L.R.4th 170, text, p. 867].

41 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 6. Motor Vehicle Equipment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1443

[§ 1443] Motor Vehicle Equipment.

Defective motor vehicles are the basis of many strict products liability actions. (See Hinckley v. La Mesa R. V. Center (1984) 158 C.A.3d 630, 642, 205 C.R. 22 [motor home]; Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1559, 1568, 38 C.R.2d 446 [air bag]; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §786 et seq.; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 131 [seat belts]; 6 Proof of Facts 3d 93 [all-terrain vehicles]; 7 Proof of Facts 3d 225 [golf carts]; 20 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [batteries]; 21 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [airbag restraint systems]; 21 Proof of Facts 3d 115 [child safety restraints]; 59 Proof of Facts 3d 73 [automobile design defects]; 77 Proof of Facts 3d 85 [child safety seats]; 36 Am.Jur. Trials 339 [defective automobile door latches]; 37 Am.Jur. Trials 401 [defective seatbelts]; 38 Am.Jur. Trials 231 [all-terrain vehicle litigation]; 39 Am.Jur. Trials 333 [golf cart cases]; 47 Am.Jur. Trials 145 [tractors]; 82 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [automobile airbag malfunction litigation]; 82 Am.Jur. Trials 123 [snowmobile litigation]; 42 A.L.R.3d 583 [defect enhancing injury from accident otherwise caused]; 81 A.L.R.3d 318 [tires]; 96 A.L.R.3d 264 [vehicular gasoline tanks]; 98 A.L.R.3d 317 [motorcycles]; 99 A.L.R.3d 179 [braking systems]; 100 A.L.R.3d 158 [steering systems]; 100 A.L.R.3d 471 [drive train systems]; 100 A.L.R.3d 912 [suspension systems]; 3 A.L.R.4th 489 [windows]; 5 A.L.R.4th 483 [bumpers]; 5 A.L.R.4th 662 [electrical systems]; 16 A.L.R.4th 137 [tire rims and wheels]; 65 A.L.R.4th 346 [product malfunction or occurrence of accident as evidence of defect]; 66 A.L.R.4th 20 [sudden or unexpected acceleration of motor vehicle]; 66 A.L.R.4th 622 [golf cart]; 72 A.L.R.4th 62 [motor vehicle exhaust systems]; 75 A.L.R.4th 312 [tractors]; 83 A.L.R.4th 70 [all-terrain vehicles]; 39 A.L.R.5th 267 [motor vehicle air bag systems]; 48 A.L.R.5th 1 [seat belts, shoulder harnesses, and restraint systems]; 61 A.L.R.5th 473 [mobilehomes or trailers]; on inadmissibility of animal experimentation evidence in products liability action involving motor vehicle, see Ev.C. 1159.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

42 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
- 7. Sports and Recreational Equipment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1444

[§ 1444] Sports and Recreational Equipment.

Numerous strict products liability actions involve defective sports and recreational equipment. (See 71 Am.Jur. Trials 337 [bicycles]; 72 Am.Jur. Trials 331 [actions against shoe manufacturers for sports and other injuries]; 95 A.L.R.3d 391 [toys and games]; 1 A.L.R.4th 411 [boats or parts, supplies, or equipment]; 6 A.L.R.4th 492 [swimming pools and accessories]; 76 A.L.R.4th 117 [bicycles and accessories]; 76 A.L.R.4th 145 [exercise and related equipment]; 76 A.L.R.4th 171 [trampolines and similar devices]; 76 A.L.R.4th 201 [competitive sports equipment]; 76 A.L.R.4th 256 [skiing equipment]; 77 A.L.R.4th 1121 [general recreational equipment]; 77 A.L.R.4th 1152 [mechanical amusement rides and devices]; 60 A.L.R.5th 413 [cement and concrete]; 65 A.L.R.5th 105 [swimming pools and accessories]; 92 A.L.R.5th 473 [skydiving, parachuting, and parasailing equipment].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 101 Proof of Facts 3d 375 [liability for design, manufacture, distribution, or sale of bicycle]; 106 Am.Jur. Trials 375 [playground equipment].

43 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 8. Miscellaneous Products.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1445

[§ 1445] Miscellaneous Products.

Defective chemicals, explosives, and construction equipment and supplies are among the numerous miscellaneous products for which the manufacturer or another party in the stream of commerce has been held strictly liable. (See Cravens, Dargan & Co. v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1972) 29 C.A.3d 594, 601, 105 C.R. 607 [insecticide]; Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 C.A.3d 468, 474, 216 C.R. 68 [navigational charts]; Edwards v. A.L. Lease & Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1029, 1035, 54 C.R.2d 259, infra, §1498 [residential drain pipe]; 87 Cal. L. Rev. 269 [software]; 20 San Diego L. Rev. 439 [computer software]; 29 San Diego L. Rev. 203 [contaminated blood]; 72 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 [trademark licenses]; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 497; 24 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1237 [tobacco]; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 487 [cigarette litigation under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability]; 29 U.S.F. L. Rev. 741 [aircraft]; 23 Western State L. Rev. 549 [antihemophilic factor concentrate (AHF)]; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §§733 et seq., 827 et seq.; 46 Proof of Facts 2d 145 [lead poisoning]; 3 Proof of Facts 3d 225 [formaldehyde fumes emitted by building materials]; 20 Proof of Facts 3d 113 [ladders]; 23 Proof of Facts 3d 159 [electric signs]; 51 Proof of Facts 3d 81 [aircraft]; 65 Proof of Facts 3d 407 [hand tools]; 68 Proof of Facts 3d 333 [software]; 37 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [baby cribs]; 61 Am.Jur. Trials 95 [defending multiple chemical sensitivity claims]; 84 Am.Jur. Trials 109 [litigating against firearm industry]; 85 A.L.R.3d 727 [chemical drain cleaners]; 94 A.L.R.3d 291 [air guns and BB guns]; 97 A.L.R.3d 627 [aircraft or parts]; 1 A.L.R.4th 251 [flammable clothing]; 2 A.L.R.4th 1284 [snowthrowers]; 4 A.L.R.4th 13 [farm machinery]; 7 A.L.R.4th 155 [glue and other adhesive products]; 12 A.L.R.4th 462 [fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides, weedkillers]; 18 A.L.R.4th 206 [blasting materials and supplies]; 19 A.L.R.4th 326 [firefighting equipment]; 27 A.L.R.4th 815 [protective clothing and equipment]; 45 A.L.R.4th 751 [construction materials containing formaldehyde]; 59 A.L.R.4th 129 [polyvinyl chloride (vinyl plastic) giving off toxic fumes when heated]; 61 A.L.R.4th 121 [building and construction lumber]; 3 A.L.R.5th 851 [roofs and roofing materials]; 4 A.L.R.5th 667 [prefabricated buildings]; 14 A.L.R.5th 47 [lighters and lighter fluid]; 36 A.L.R.5th 541 [cigarettes and other tobacco products]; 42 A.L.R.5th 699 [theatrical equipment and props]; 69 A.L.R.5th 137 [paints, stains, and similar products]; 96 A.L.R.5th 239 [firearms, ammunition, and chemical weapons]; 117 A.L.R.5th 267 [elevators].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.35 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 35 Golden Gate L. Rev. 429 [modeling suit against automobile and petroleum industries on tobacco tort litigation]; 32 Pepperdine L. Rev. 983 [silica litigation]; 95 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [airplane seats]; 99 Am.Jur. Trials 141 [use of discovery in product-related burn injury cases].

44 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 9. Electrical Facilities and Power.
 - aa. Electrical Facilities: No Strict Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1446

[§ 1446] Electrical Facilities: No Strict Liability.

In United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1985) 163 C.A.3d 700, 209 C.R. 819, a large kite, flown in a gusting wind, became entangled in defendant's electric conductors, pulling them so close that an arc occurred, causing emission of molten aluminum; this ignited brush and grass, resulting in a disastrous fire destroying 200 homes and injuring a number of people. In consolidated actions, plaintiffs, homeowners and insurance companies subrogated to the rights of the homeowners, sued defendant power company on theories of negligence and strict products liability, offering evidence that an alternative arrangement of the conductors would have prevented arcing. The jury verdict was for defendant on the negligence issue, and the trial judge (on demurrer and nonsuit) ruled that there was no strict liability. Held, affirmed.

(a) General law. The issue whether the strict products liability doctrine should apply to facilities used by a public utility for transmission of electrical energy is one of first impression in California, but a number of other state courts have held the doctrine inapplicable. (163 C.A.3d 706.) The opinions point out that the cable is not "packaging" for the current, and is not sold to the consumer but is owned by and is under the control of the utility. Also, until actually delivered, the electricity has not been placed in the stream of commerce. (163 C.A.3d 707.)

(b) Marketing requirement. The rule of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, does not apply unless an article is placed on the market or put in the stream of commerce. (163 C.A.3d 707.) Thus, in Shook v. Jacuzzi (1976) 59 C.A.3d 978, 981, 129 C.R. 496, an employee sought recovery from his employer for injuries suffered while operating a defective machine manufactured by the employer for use in its own business. The court held that the strict products liability doctrine did not apply, because the employer did not sell the machine or in any way place it in the stream of commerce. (163 C.A.3d 708.) Defendant could have placed its transmission system in the stream of commerce by sale, lease, or license to another, but did not: "Here there was no transfer whatsoever. Edison simply used its own facilities to transmit its own energy for sale down the line." (163 C.A.3d 708.)

(c) Policy considerations. In support of their proposed extension of the products liability doctrine, plaintiffs stressed the basic objective of spreading the risk of loss. Here, however, defendant was the only user of the product claimed to be defective, and it is a public utility, subject to governmental regulation of its rates; hence, imposition of strict liability will not necessarily pass the burden of paying damages from the utility to its customers. (163 C.A.3d 708.) Nor will the imposition of strict liability provide an economic incentive to improve product safety. The Public Utilities Commission regulates the utility's operation, and if its order did not cover maximum sag in lines (the defect claimed by plaintiffs), the order may be modified. "In the case of a regulated public utility there is less need than in the case of an unregulated manufacturer to motivate safety precautions by the economic sanction of strict liability." (163 C.A.3d 709.)

United Pac. Ins. Co. was followed in Thibos v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 337, 232 C.R. 11. As plaintiff pedestrian stepped off a curb, the city street light blew out, and a car traveling in the darkness struck him. Held, defendant public utility could not be sued on strict products liability, for it made use of its own equipment in providing the city with lighting and did not place any product in the stream of commerce. (187 C.A.3d 340.) (See Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 C.A.3d 30, 38, 245 C.R. 436 [rejecting contention that electricity had become a product when delivery lines had crossed plaintiffs' property line; test is whether it was metered].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

45 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - b. Particular Products.
 - 9. Electrical Facilities and Power.
 - bb. Delivery of Electricity: Strict Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1447

[§ 1447] Delivery of Electricity: Strict Liability.

(1) In General. In Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 68, 212 C.R. 283, a lightning storm damaged two of defendant's power transformers on plaintiff's property, causing loss of her electricity. One of the replaced transformers had been previously used and was not tested before connecting it to the power line. When connected, it exploded and caused a fire in a ruptured propane gas tank. Plaintiff, attempting to shut off the gas, received an electric shock causing serious injuries. The evidence showed that the transformer malfunction had energized the house wiring, designed for 120 and 240 volts, with approximately 7,000 volts; that the wiring was poorly insulated; and that a ground wire unlawfully connected the electrical system to the propane gas system. Plaintiff went to trial on the issues of negligence, ultrahazardous activity, and strict products liability. The jury verdict on negligence was for defendant, and the trial judge granted a nonsuit on the issue of products liability. Held, reversed; plaintiff stated a cause of action for strict liability.

(a) Pleading defect and theory of trial. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that her injuries were caused by defective electrical equipment, i.e., the transformer. The transformer, however, was not manufactured by defendant and was never placed on the market by defendant; i.e., defendant was a consumer rather than manufacturer of the product, and cannot be held strictly liable for its defects. (166 C.A.3d 76.) Nevertheless, at the hearing on the motion for nonsuit and on plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict, plaintiff made the argument that electricity itself is a product for strict liability purposes. (166 C.A.3d 78, 79, 80.) Hence, in spite of plaintiff's failure to amend her complaint, the issue was properly considered under the doctrine of theory on which the case is tried. (166 C.A.3d 78, 81.)

(b) No recovery on theory of ultrahazardous activity. Plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict urged this theory, but it is inapplicable: "The doctrine of ultrahazardous activity focuses not on a product and its defects but upon an activity intentionally undertaken by the defendant, which by its nature is very dangerous . . . However, the doctrine scrutinizes not the accident itself but the activity which led up to the accident--in this case, the maintenance of high-voltage powerlines and transformers." (166 C.A.3d 85.) High voltage power systems are now commonplace and their maintenance cannot be considered an ultrahazardous activity. (166 C.A.3d 85.)

(c) Recovery possible on strict products liability: electricity is a product.

(1) Defendant, relying on Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 C.A.3d 606, 109 C.R. 132, infra, §1522, and Fogo v. Cutter Laboratories (1977) 68 C.A.3d 744, 137 C.R. 417, infra, §1522, contended that furnishing electricity is a service, and that electricity is not a product. But Shepard and Fogo are distinguishable: Both involved the supply of blood, and applied a legislative policy determination that this was a service. (166 C.A.3d 82.)

(2) Although no California case has yet considered the question, "the courts of other states have had little trouble in concluding that electricity delivered to homes and businesses is a 'product.'" (166 C.A.3d 82, citing non-California cases.) As a Wisconsin case put it: "The distribution might well be a service, but the electricity itself, in the contemplation of the ordinary user, is a consumable product." (166 C.A.3d 82.) And defendant's other principal product--methane gas--provides an analogy: If the gas line delivered explosive hydrogen gas to a customer's range or dryer, "we would have little trouble concluding that gas is a 'product' for tort liability purposes." (166 C.A.3d 82, footnote 7.)

(3) Policy considerations underlying strict liability also call for this result. (a) Proof of negligence requires presentation of evidence of the inner workings of an electrical power system, the technical operation of which is far beyond the knowledge of the average juror; and the expert witnesses are concentrated within the industry itself. (166 C.A.3d 83.) (b) Where a huge surge of injury-causing electricity is traceable to a defective component in the utility's system, imposition of strict liability creates an incentive for utilities to avoid accidents by obtaining safer products. (166 C.A.3d 83.) (c) "[S]trict liability in tort spreads the costs of personal injuries among millions of consumers of electricity instead of imposing those costs upon blameless victims chosen by chance." (166 C.A.3d 83.)

(d) Limitations and qualifications.

(1) "We emphasize that our holding is limited to cases where the electricity is actually in the 'stream of commerce,' and expected to be at marketable voltage. In most cases this will mean the electricity must be delivered to the customer's premises, to the point where it is metered . . . We concur in the limitations uniformly adopted by other jurisdictions which have excluded the 'antenna cases' [plaintiff, installing TV antenna, accidentally touches antenna to powerline] and the 'plaintiff-touches-downed-power-line cases' from liability-without-fault because in those cases contact with the power line comes at a point where the electricity is not in the stream of commerce or is not in marketable form." (166 C.A.3d 84.)

(2) "Nor do we have occasion in this case to examine whether a commercial supplier of electricity should be strictly liable for property damage or for any specie of damage caused by delivery of electricity at less than marketable voltage, i.e., damage caused by a 'brownout.' Those situations may well involve policy considerations not present in the scenario currently before us." (166 C.A.3d 84.)

(3) "Nothing in our opinion should be construed as limiting" defenses based on plaintiff's failure to exercise due care in maintaining the electrical system (e.g., defective insulation on a power cable, improper grounding of propane gas system, and private well as inadequate ground for electrical system). (166 C.A.3d 84, footnote 11.) (See Stein v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 565, 571, 8 C.R.2d 907 [meter exploded when electrical arc caused by faulty transformer sent high voltage into it; electricity was product even though it had not actually passed through meter]; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 973 [Pierce]; 54 A.L.R.4th 667 [failure of power]; 46 A.L.R.5th 423 [electric company's liability for nonemployee's injury or death from commencement or resumption of service].)

(2) Lightning-Generated Electricity. In Mancuso v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 88, 283 C.R. 300, a severe lightning stroke hit defendant power company's pole or transformer located adjacent to plaintiff's business. The lightning-generated electricity traversed the service conductor to plaintiff's building, where its extraordinarily high level of energy caused one of the meter panels on the premises to explode. The resulting fire destroyed plaintiff's business. Held, plaintiff had a cause of action for negligence in the design of defendant's transmission and distribution facilities, but not one for products liability. "The excessive voltage that reached plaintiff's premises was generated not by Edison, but by a stroke of lightning, a natural event. Thus, no product marketed by Edison was sold or delivered to plaintiff which could form the basis for strict product liability." (232 C.A.3d 105.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

46 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

b. Particular Products.

10. Restatement Rules Applicable to Particular Products.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1448

[§ 1448] Restatement Rules Applicable to Particular Products.

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430) sets forth several liability rules applicable to particular products or product markets:

(1) Products into Which Components Are Integrated. One who is engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing product components and sells or distributes a component is subject to liability for harm caused by a product into which the component is integrated in either of the following circumstances (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §5):

(a) The component is defective in itself, and the defect causes the harm.

(b) The seller or distributor of the component substantially participates in the integration of the component into the design of the product; the integration of the component causes the product to be defective; and the defect in the product causes the harm.

(2) Prescription Drugs and Medical Devices. A manufacturer of a prescription drug or medical device who sells or otherwise distributes the drug or device is subject to liability for harm to persons caused by the defect. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(a).) For this purpose, a prescription drug or medical device is defective when any of the following circumstances exist at the time of sale or other distribution:

(a) The drug or medical device contains a manufacturing defect. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(b)(1); on what constitutes manufacturing defect, see supra, §1435.)

(b) The drug or medical device is not reasonably safe due to defective design. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(b)(2); see infra, §1449 et seq.) A prescription drug or medical device is not reasonably safe due to defective design if the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the drug or medical device are sufficiently great in relation to its foreseeable therapeutic benefits that reasonable health care providers, knowing of these foreseeable risks and therapeutic benefits, would not prescribe the drug or medical device for any class of patients. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(c).)

(c) The drug or medical device is not reasonably safe due to inadequate instructions or warnings. (Rest.3d, Torts:

Products Liability §6(b)(3); see infra, §1467 et seq.) A prescription drug or medical device is not reasonably safe due to inadequate instructions or warnings if reasonable instructions or warnings regarding foreseeable risks of harm are not provided to (1) prescribing and other health care providers who are in a position to reduce the risks of harm in accordance with the instructions or warnings; or (2) the patient when the manufacturer knows or has reason to know that health care providers will not be in a position to reduce the risks of harm in accordance with the instructions or warnings. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(d).)

A retail seller or other distributor of a prescription drug or medical device is subject to liability for harm caused by the drug or device in either of the following circumstances (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(e)):

(a) At the time of sale or other distribution, the drug or medical device contains a manufacturing defect.

(b) At or before the time of sale or other distribution, the retail seller or other distributor fails to exercise reasonable care and that failure causes harm to persons.

A prescription drug or medical device is defined as one that may be legally sold or otherwise distributed only pursuant to a health care provider's prescription. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(a).)

(3) Food Products. Generally, liability for harm caused by defects in commercially distributed food products is determined under the same rules as those generally applicable to nonfood products. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §7 and Comment a; on general rules for determining defectiveness of product, see supra, §1435.)

A harm-causing ingredient of a food product constitutes a manufacturing defect if a reasonable consumer would not expect the food product to contain that ingredient. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §7 and Comment a; on what constitutes a manufacturing defect generally, see supra, §1435.)

(4) Used Products. Commercial sellers of used products are subject to liability without fault only under special circumstances. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §8, Comment b.) One who is engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing used products and who sells or distributes a defective used product is subject to liability for harm caused by the defect in any of the following circumstances (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §8):

(a) The defect arises from the seller's failure to exercise reasonable care.

(b) The defect is a manufacturing defect under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(a) (see supra, §1435) or a defect that may be inferred under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §3 (see supra, §1435), and the seller's marketing of the product would cause a reasonable person in the position of the buyer to expect the used product to present no greater risk of defect than if the product were new.

(c) The defect is a defect under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2 or §3 (see supra, §1435) in a used product remanufactured by the seller or a predecessor in the commercial chain of distribution of the used product.

(d) The defect arises from a used product's noncompliance under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §4 (see supra, §1435) with a product safety statute or regulation applicable to the used product.

A used product is a product that, prior to the time of sale or other distribution, is commercially sold or otherwise distributed to a buyer not in the commercial chain of distribution and used for some period of time. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §8.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

47 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - c. Defects in Design.
 - 1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1449

[§ 1449] In General.

(1) General Rule. A defect in design, such as lack of a safety device, may give rise to strict liability. "[A] product may be equally defective and dangerous if its design subjects protected persons to unreasonable risk as if its manufacture does so." (Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 465, 475, 477, 85 C.R. 629, 467 P.2d 229 ["no rationale has been suggested to justify imposing strict liability with respect to a faultlessly made product ... produced without safety warnings, while refusing to impose strict liability with respect to a product ... produced without safety devices"]); see 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §546; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §360 et seq.; BAJI, No. 9.00.5.)

Many decisions illustrate this basis of strict liability. (See Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 C.3d 379, 384, 93 C.R. 769, 482 P.2d 681; Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 129, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436; Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 141, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163, infra, §1465; Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C.3d 113, 116, 117 C.R. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 [gear box in motor vehicle, using aluminum 380 that allegedly developed metal fatigue and broke during driving; evidence of subsequent change by manufacturer to malleable iron, a stronger material, was admissible despite Ev.C. 1151]; Horn v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 359, 366, 131 C.R. 78, 551 P.2d 398 [horn cap easily knocked off in collision and exposing sharp prongs in hub of steering wheel, capable of causing aggravated injury to driver]; Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 434, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, infra, §1455; Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C.3d 112, 117, 184 C.R. 891, 649 P.2d 224, infra, §1459; Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 C.A.3d 319, 323, 82 C.R. 420 [washing machine not equipped with micro safety switch to shut off power when door opened]; Balido v. Improved Machinery (1972) 29 C.A.3d 633, 641, 105 C.R. 890, infra, §1526 [plastic injection molding press with safety devices inadequate to protect operator]; Culpepper v. Volkswagen of America (1973) 33 C.A.3d 510, 517, 109 C.R. 110 [tendency of car to roll over under certain conditions]; Foglio v. Western Auto Supply (1976) 56 C.A.3d 470, 473, 128 C.R. 545 [rotary power lawnmower with inadequate protective devices to prevent objects from being expelled from it]; Heap v. General Motors Corp. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 824, 831, 136 C.R. 304 [lack of positive connection between accelerator pedal and its linkage]; McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 1005, 1012, 147 C.R. 694 [nosewheel structure of aircraft subject to failure in crash]; Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1218, 1228, 63 C.R.2d 422 [strict products liability extends to products that are "perfectly" manufactured but are unsafe because of absence of safety device]; Lambert v.

General Motors (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1179, 1182, 79 C.R.2d 657 [finding of negligent design (as opposed to negligence in some other respect) is precluded if jury finds no defect in design].) (On degree to which design protects against "second impact" injuries, see McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 C.A.3d 179, 194, 188 C.R. 542; 5 Golden Gate L. Rev. 161; 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1; on defendant's evidence of industry custom or practice, see 38 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 439; 47 A.L.R.4th 621.)

(2) Distinction: Drugs and Medical Devices. Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, infra, §1533, established that drug manufacturers may not be held strictly liable for design defects in prescription drugs; proof of negligence is required. This design defect exception was extended to penile prostheses in Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 C.A.4th 8, 23, 5 C.R.2d 377, infra, §1533, and breast implants in Artiglio v. Superior Court (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1388, 1393, 27 C.R.2d 589.

(3) Commentary. Commentary on defective design has been extensive. (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 282; 69 Cal. L. Rev. 919 [consideration of knowledge of risks and possible remedies gained after distribution date]; 87 Cal. L. Rev. 269 [products liability and deficient software design]; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 1023; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 923; 34 Hastings L. J. 529 [argument that "design defect" theory should be eliminated]; 33 San Diego L. Rev. 385 [strict liability of nondesigning manufacturer for design defect]; 19 Santa Clara L. Rev. 77 [automobile designed with capacity for excessive speed]; 8 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 109 [criticism of uncertainty in law]; 18 Proof of Facts 2d 117 [role of human factors]; 33 Proof of Facts 2d 447 [rotary power mower]; 59 Proof of Facts 3d 73 [automobile design defects]; 41 A.L.R.3d 995, 998 [power lawnmower]; 96 A.L.R.3d 22 [modern cases determining whether product is defectively designed].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.11-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Commentary. See 55 Hastings L. J. 1377 [manufacturer's warning as eliminating duty of safe design].

48 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - c. Defects in Design.
 - 2. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1450

[§ 1450] Restatement 3d.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430), a commercial seller or distributor is liable for harm caused by a product that is "defective in design." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §§1, 2.) A product is defective in design if (1) the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the product could have been reduced or avoided by the adoption of a reasonable alternative design by the seller or other distributor, or a predecessor in the commercial chain of distribution, and (2) the omission of the alternative design renders the product not reasonably safe. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(b).)

These provisions adopt a reasonableness ("risk-utility balancing") test as the standard for judging the defectiveness of product designs. More specifically, the test is whether a reasonable alternative design would, at reasonable cost, reduce the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the product and, if so, whether the omission of the alternative design by the seller or a predecessor in the distributive chain renders the product not reasonably safe. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment d.) Consumer expectations do not constitute an independent standard for judging the defectiveness of product designs. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment g.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

49 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - c. Defects in Design.
- 3. All Components Considered.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1451

[§ 1451] All Components Considered.

In Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542, the jury was instructed that in determining whether a vehicle was defective they should consider "all of the equipment." Plaintiff contended that only the precise malfunctioning component should be considered. Held, the instruction was correct. "Product designs do not evolve in a vacuum, but must reflect the realities of the market place, kitchen, highway, and shop. Similarly, a product's components are not developed in isolation, but as part of an integrated and interrelated whole. Recognizing that finished products must incorporate and balance safety, utility, competitive merit, and practicality under a multitude of intended and foreseeable uses, courts have struggled to evolve realistic tests for defective design which give weight to this necessary balancing. Thus, a number of California cases have recognized the need to 'weigh' competent considerations in an overall product design, in order to determine whether the design was 'defective.' " (20 C.3d 746.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.36

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

50 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - c. Defects in Design.
 - 4. Possibility of Alternative Design.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1452

[§ 1452] Possibility of Alternative Design.

In Baker v. Chrysler Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 710, 127 C.R. 745, the trial judge gave the following instruction: "A defective design is one which proximately causes or increases foreseeable and unnecessary injury to the user or to another in the course of the intended use of the product if the product can reasonably be designed and produced for its intended purpose without causing or increasing injury to the user or to another." Held, the instruction was correct. "Requiring an injured plaintiff who seeks damages against a manufacturer on the basis of strict liability in tort for a defective design to show that alternative designs for the product could reasonably have been developed does not enlarge plaintiff's burden of proof. An injured plaintiff has always had the burden to prove the existence of the defect. The reasonableness of alternative designs, where a design defect is claimed, is part of that burden." (55 C.A.3d 716.) (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(b), supra, §1450 [product is defective in design when foreseeable risks of harm posed by product could be reduced or avoided by reasonable alternative design and its omission renders product not reasonably safe]; 49 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 737 [alternative safer design test for drugs and medical devices]; 78 A.L.R.4th 154 [burden of proving feasibility of alternative safe design]; cf. Bernal v. Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1326, 1332, 272 C.R. 41, infra, §1462 [disagreeing with holding in Baker that plaintiff has burden of proving feasibility of reasonable alternate design].)

The burden was met in Buccery v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 533, 132 C.R. 605. Plaintiff, driving a pickup truck, was struck in the rear. Although the impact was relatively mild, it caused plaintiff's head to strike the window in the back of the cab of his truck. Federal safety standards required head restraints for passenger vehicles only, but the governing statute states that compliance with standards does not exempt a person from liability under common law. Plaintiff sued the manufacturer and seller of the truck on the theory that the absence of a head restraint was a design defect. Held, judgments of nonsuit for defendants reversed. What constitutes a design defect is the subject of some uncertainty, and the cases have not formulated a precise definition. (60 C.A.3d 545, quoting Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 C.A.3d 1, 116 C.R. 575, infra, §1454.) However, they teach that "any product so designed that it causes injury when used or misused in a foreseeable fashion is defective if the design feature which caused the injury created a danger which was readily preventable through the employment of existing technology at a cost consonant with the economical use of the product." (60 C.A.3d 547.) Here, plaintiff's expert testified that the occupant of the kind of truck plaintiff was driving was exposed to the hazard of cranial impact in a low-speed rear-end collision; that head restraints were an acceptable means of eliminating the hazard; and that the cost of their installation was insignificant in relation to the cost of the vehicle. (60 C.A.3d 547.) (Cf. Nissan Motor Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 980, 982, 261 C.R. 80, infra, §1539 [disagreeing with holding in Buccery that permitted common law action despite manufacturer's compliance with federal standards].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

51 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
c. Defects in Design.
5. Product Need Not Be Unreasonably Dangerous.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1453

[§ 1453] Product Need Not Be Unreasonably Dangerous.

The rule of Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 133, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436, that the product need not be unreasonably dangerous, is not restricted to defects in manufacture; it also applies to design defects. (Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 425, 426, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, infra, §1455; Foglio v. Western Auto Supply (1976) 56 C.A.3d 470, 475, 128 C.R. 545; McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 1005, 1015, 147 C.R. 694.)

In Barker, the court said: "[O]ur rejection of the use of the 'unreasonably dangerous' terminology in Cronin rested in part on a concern that a jury might interpret such an instruction, as the Restatement draftsman had indeed intended, as shielding a defendant from liability so long as the product did not fall below the ordinary consumer's expectations as to the product's safety ... [T]he dangers posed by such a misconception by the jury extend to cases involving design defects as well as to actions involving manufacturing defects: indeed, the danger of confusion is perhaps more pronounced in design cases in which the manufacturer could frequently argue that its product satisfied ordinary consumer expectations since it was identical to other items of the same product line with which the consumer may well have been familiar." (20 C.3d 425.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

52 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
- 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - c. Defects in Design.
 - 6. Dangerous Location.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1454

[§ 1454] Dangerous Location.

In Hyman v. Gordon (1973) 35 C.A.3d 769, 111 C.R. 262, defendant home builder was sued for damages resulting from burns sustained when gasoline from an overturned can ignited a gas-fired water heater. The theory of the complaint was that the builder had selected a defective location for the heater--the floor of the garage--where a fire of this kind would be likely to occur. Held, judgment on nonsuit reversed; whether the location constituted a defective design and the foreseeability of harm resulting from it were jury questions. An article or machine may function safely in one location but not in another; hence, the doctrine of strict products liability "may be applied where, as the proximate result of a defect in the design of a residential building, and installation of an article pursuant thereto, injury results to a human being." (35 C.A.3d 773.)

Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 C.A.3d 1, 116 C.R. 575, extends the notion of dangerous location to the placement of a fuel tank in the left rear fender section of an automobile. Held, in considering the conflicting views of experts, the jury could find the design defective.

(a) Defendant manufacturer contended that the intended use of the car was for normal driving, and that the design could not be considered defective merely because the tank ruptured and caused a fire when a collision occurred. However, "a motor vehicle manufacturer must take into account the possibility of high-speed collisions when it selects a location for the fuel tank in the vehicle." (42 C.A.3d 7.) More generally, "the law now requires a manufacturer to foresee some degree of misuse and abuse of his product, either by the user or by third parties, and to take reasonable precautions to minimize the harm that may result from misuse and abuse." (42 C.A.3d 7.)

(b) The "prosecution of a lawsuit is a poor way to design a motor vehicle, for the suit will almost invariably emphasize a single aspect of design to the total exclusion of all others." (42 C.A.3d 7.) However, manufacturers should find ways "to bring home, even in a courtroom, the difficulties and hard choices inherent in designing a complicated product so as to forestall to the fullest extent practicable the multitudinous possibilities of the product's abuse and misuse." (42 C.A.3d 8.)

(c) The abuse or misuse may be such that the defective design will be immaterial to the injuries suffered. Thus, defendant argued that the violence of the collision was so great that the fuel tank would have caught fire even if located underneath the body (the "safe" place urged by plaintiff). On this issue of superseding cause, the conflicting expert opinions raised a question of fact properly submitted to the jury. (42 C.A.3d 9.)

In DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 336, 195 C.R. 867, the court, reversing a summary judgment for defendant, stated the issue as follows: "Is custom-made factory equipment which is safe to use in some locations 'defective' because in a particular location its use may bring the operator in contact with an adjacent rotating line shaft built and maintained by the plant owners?" (148 C.A.3d 340.)

(a) Plaintiff, an employee of a cannery, while cleaning a holding bin in the canning plant, stood on a conveyor belt, and her arm was severed by an overhead line shaft that had nothing to do with the operation of the bin. The bin had been specially manufactured by defendant to meet the requirements of the canning company, and the bin itself was not defective. The court examined the evidence in the light of the case law, and concluded that there were triable issues of fact: (a) whether the bin's design presented an excessive preventable danger in its intended use because of its proximity to the line shaft; (b) whether it was foreseeable that someone would climb onto the belt to get next to the bin for hosing it down. (148 C.A.3d 344.)

(b) "[I]n combination with the bin--the need to clean the bin, steps nearby, a conveyor belt which when stopped would become a temporary higher platform for cleaning the bin--the rotating line shaft became a danger. At that time the entire system became a source of danger to the worker. Irrespective of the significance in some cases of the nature and extent of the 'product'--whether the bin or the bin and its surrounding--the principal issue of fact presented below was that of responsibility for design, including location." (148 C.A.3d 346.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

53 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

7. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1455

[§ 1455] Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: In General.

The nature and tests of a design defect were explored in Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443. Plaintiff, an employee of a contractor engaged in construction, was injured while operating a high-lift loader manufactured by defendant L Co. He brought this action on the theory of defective design, and produced expert testimony about the machine's instability due to its relatively narrow base, the absence of safety devices such as seat belts, the absence of an automatic locking device on the leveling lever, and the improper placement of the leveling lever. Defendant responded with evidence that the machine was neither unstable nor lacking in necessary safety devices; that plaintiff had used it on steep terrain for which it was unsuited, and for which a crane should have been employed; and that the probable cause of the accident was plaintiff's inexperience and improper handling of the machine. The judge instructed the jury in terms of the Second Restatement "unreasonably dangerous" test, and the verdict was for defendant. Held, reversed; the instruction was reversible error (see supra, §1453).

(a) Defining "defective design." The contention of amici curiae for plaintiff, that no definition of "defect" should be given to the jury, is unacceptable. The term "is neither self-defining nor susceptible to a single definition applicable in all contexts." (20 C.3d 427.) And commentators have pointed out that an instruction that requires the plaintiff to prove a product defect without explaining its meaning in a particular context may be misleading. (20 C.3d 428.)

(b) Criteria for Ascertaining Design Defect. California courts have developed two alternative criteria for ascertaining whether there is a design defect:

(1) The product may be found defective if the plaintiff demonstrates that it failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner. This initial standard is somewhat similar to the U.C.C. warranty of fitness and merchantability, and "reflects the warranty heritage upon which California product liability doctrine in part rests." (20 C.3d 429.) Under this standard, the plaintiff may be able to demonstrate defectiveness by circumstantial evidence, even when the accident itself precludes identification of the specific defect. (20 C.3d 430.)

(2) These expectations are not the exclusive yardstick, for in many situations the consumer would not know what to expect, because he would have no idea how safe the product could be made. California decisions have made clear, through varying linguistic formulations, that the product may be found defective in design even if it satisfies ordinary consumer expectations, if the jury through hindsight finds that "the risk of danger inherent in the challenged design outweighs the benefits of such design." (20 C.3d 430.)

(c) Factors jury may consider under second criterion ("risk-benefit"). In evaluating the adequacy of a product's design under this standard, "a jury may consider, among other relevant factors, the gravity of the danger posed by the challenged design, the likelihood that such danger would occur, the mechanical feasibility of a safer alternative design, the financial cost of an improved design, and the adverse consequences to the product and to the consumer that would result from an alternative design." (20 C.3d 431.)

(d) Allocation of burden of proof. The authorities have not devoted much attention to this subject but it is important because one of the principal purposes of the strict liability doctrine is to relieve the plaintiff of many evidentiary burdens inherent in a negligence cause of action. Because most of the evidentiary matters relevant to adequacy of design under the "risk-benefit" standard are similar to issues in a negligent design case and involve technical matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the manufacturer, "once the plaintiff makes a prima facie showing that the injury was proximately caused by the product's design, the burden should appropriately shift to the defendant to prove, in light of the relevant factors, that the product is not defective." This burden is one affecting the burden of proof, not simply that of producing evidence. (20 C.3d 431.)

(e) Test of negligence is distinguished. Amici curiae for plaintiff contended that an instruction directing the jury to weigh a number of factors introduces an element of negligence into the determination of design defect, and that any consideration of "reasonableness" or "balancing" is contrary to Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 133, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436. This is unsound. In many design defect cases, it is impossible to eliminate balancing or weighing of risks; and an instruction that advises the jury that it may evaluate the adequacy of a design by weighing its benefits against the risk of danger inherent in a design is not the equivalent of an instruction requiring a determination whether the manufacturer was negligent in designing the product; the jury's focus in the products liability case is directed at the condition of the product, not the reasonableness of the manufacturer's conduct. (20 C.3d 434.) "Thus, the fact that the manufacturer took reasonable precautions in an attempt to design a safe product or otherwise acted as a reasonably prudent manufacturer would have under the circumstances, while perhaps absolving the manufacturer of liability under a negligence theory, will not preclude the imposition of liability under strict liability principles if, upon hindsight, the trier of fact concludes that the product's design is unsafe to consumers, users, or bystanders." (20 C.3d 434.)

(f) Proper instruction. The judge may instruct the jury "that a product is defective in design (1) if the plaintiff demonstrates that the product failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner, or (2) if the plaintiff proves that the product's design proximately caused his injury and the defendant fails to prove, in light of the relevant factors discussed above, that on balance the benefits of the challenged design outweigh the risk of danger inherent in such design." (20 C.3d 435.) (See 1 Proof of Facts 3d 363 [unfeasibility of alternative design proposed by plaintiff]; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 435, 440, 448 et seq.; 8 Golden Gate L. Rev. 263; 7 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 823 [critical review of consumer expectations test]; 96 A.L.R.3d 22 [modern cases determining whether product is defectively designed]; 29 A.L.R.5th 534 [admissibility of government fact-finding evidence in products liability actions]; BAJI, No. 9.00.5; CACI, Nos. 1203, 1204.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Bullock v. Philip Morris USA (2008) 159 C.A.4th 655, 675, 71 C.R.3d 775 [finding that ordinary consumer was not aware of dangers of cigarette smoking before date of preemption provision in Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act was supported by evidence of cigarette manufacturer's extensive efforts to mislead public about adverse health effects of smoking and create false controversy whether smoking caused lung cancer and other diseases, and by evidence that smokers are particularly vulnerable to such manipulation].

54 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

8. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Qualifications.

aa. Design Merits Are Irrelevant in Consumer Expectations Analysis.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1456

[§ 1456] Design Merits Are Irrelevant in Consumer Expectations Analysis.

In Sparks v. Owens-Illinois (1995) 32 C.A.4th 461, 38 C.R.2d 739, plaintiff ship worker suffered injuries resulting from exposure to asbestos-containing insulation manufactured by defendant. Evidence was developed at trial that ordinary users of defendant's product during the period in issue did not expect to develop lung disease from breathing dust from the product. Held, jury verdict for plaintiff affirmed, applying the consumer expectations test.

(a) The consumer expectations test is reserved for cases in which the everyday experience of the product's users permits a conclusion that the product's design violated minimum safety assumptions, and a product may thus be defective under the test regardless of expert opinion about the merits of its design. If the facts permit that conclusion, and if the violation of minimum safety assumptions resulted from the product's design, a finding of defect is warranted without further proof. The plaintiff need not show that there was a safer alternative design. Also, expert or other evidence of the relative risks and benefits of the design is irrelevant and inadmissible. (32 C.A.4th 473.)

(b) Application of the consumer expectations test is warranted here, because the characteristics and performance of the product were not beyond the understanding or common experience of those who used it. (32 C.A.4th 474, distinguishing Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C.4th 548, 566, 34 C.R. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298, which involved complicated claim, requiring expert testimony, that defective design of automobile wheel assembly and front floorboard enhanced injuries sustained in collision.) (See McCabe v. American Honda Motor Co. (2002) 100 C.A.4th 1111, 1123, 1126, 123 C.R.2d 303 [air bag design defect case; main question under consumer expectations test is whether product, in context of facts and circumstances of its failure, is one about which ordinary consumer has minimum safety expectations; under risks-benefits test, defendant has burden to prove benefits outweigh risks, even if plaintiff did not raise that theory].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1363, 1371, footnote 6, 37 C.R.3d 9, [consumer expectations test applies only where defect can be determined by common knowledge regarding minimum safety expectations, not where expert must balance benefits of design against risk of danger]; Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 C.A.4th 525, 543, 46 C.R.3d 147 [comparative data relating to SUV rollover rates was inadmissible in action alleging that design defect caused rollover accident; evidence that manufacturer met industry standards was irrelevant to issue whether SUV performed as ordinary consumer would expect, and evidence was misleading, because statistics included only fatal accidents, included all vehicle types, did not track cause of rollovers, and did not include most populous states].

55 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

8. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Qualifications.

bb. Warning Is Relevant in Risk-Benefit Analysis.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1457

[§ 1457] Warning Is Relevant in Risk-Benefit Analysis.

In Hansen v. Sunnyside Products (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1497, 65 C.R.2d 266, plaintiff was injured when a household cleaner containing hydrofluoric acid got on her hand. The product contained warnings that complied with the labeling guide of the Consumer Products Safety Commission. Nevertheless, although the jury returned a verdict for defendant supplier, the trial judge entered judgment notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that the warnings could not be considered in determining whether there was a design defect under the risk-benefit standard. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that the existence of a safer formula for the cleaner led to the conclusion that the product was defective in design. This is not the case, because many factors, such as the product's dangerousness, are also relevant when applying the risk-benefit standard. The ultimate question is whether the design embodies "excessive preventable danger," and in answering this query, any warnings are relevant. (55 C.A.4th 1512.)

(b) One of the risk-benefit factors is the likelihood that the danger will occur. Clearly, the answer to the question is directly related to warnings. The situation is analogous to that involved in Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542, which held that defective design is to be determined with respect to the product as a whole. Although Daly involved equipment, its reasoning, by extension, applies to warnings as well. (55 C.A.4th 1513.)

(c) Plaintiff further argued that considering warnings in determining whether a product is defective will require that a product, to be defective, must be "unreasonably dangerous," a requirement rejected in California (see supra, §1436). However, once the plaintiff has shown that a product's design caused the injury, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that, considering the risk-benefit factors, a product is not defective in design. Also, considering warnings does not permit the defendant to escape liability merely because of low consumer expectation. Instead, it potentially permits the defendant to escape liability because of a low likelihood of harm. Thus, the two main dangers in requiring a product to be unreasonably dangerous to be defective are avoided when warnings are considered. (55 C.A.4th 1514.)

(d) The test adopted here does not, as suggested by plaintiff, create a negligence standard that is improper in a strict liability context. Instead, in a strict liability case, the focus remains on the product, while in a negligence action, it is on the conduct of the manufacturer. (55 C.A.4th 1515, citing Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455.)

(e) Contrary to plaintiff's contention, considering warnings when applying the risk-benefit test does not amount to an improper merger of the design defect and the failure-to-warn theories of strict liability. Although there is some overlap, knowledge is a component of the latter theory, but not of the former. For example, strict liability for failure to warn does not subject defendants to liability for flaws in their products that they have not, and could not have, discovered. Moreover, a manufacturer's use of a warning may suffice to avoid liability under a failure to warn theory, but the manufacturer may still be found liable under the design defect risk-benefit analysis after the various factors have been balanced. (55 C.A.4th 1517.)

(f) "Finally, in determining whether product warnings may be considered in a risk-benefit calculation, we are mindful of the practical consequences of our conclusion. We do not think that the risk to the consumer of the design of many household products can be rationally evaluated without considering the product's warnings. Thus, for example, what is the risk of the design of a power saw, or other power tools or equipment, without considering the product's directions and warnings? We dare say that the risk would be astronomically, and irrationally, high. The same could be said about common garden pesticides, or even the household microwave oven. In our view, were we to ask jurors to evaluate the risks of the design of many household products without considering their directions or warnings, the practical result would be the withdrawal from the market of many useful products that are dangerous in the abstract but safe when used as directed." (55 C.A.4th 1519.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

56 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

8. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Qualifications.

cc. Propriety of Instruction on Consumer Expectations Where Product Is Not Readily Available.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1458

[§ 1458] Propriety of Instruction on Consumer Expectations Where Product Is Not Readily Available.

Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 C.A.3d 633, 219 C.R. 513, examines conflicting opinions of Courts of Appeal on the propriety of an instruction on the "consumer expectation" test where the product is "one not readily available on a supermarket shelf." (173 C.A.3d 649.)

(a) In Lunghi v. Clark Equipment Co. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 485, 497, 200 C.R. 387, the court said that "an ordinary consumer would not know what to expect from a piece of heavy machinery like the Bobcat loader"; Bates v. John Deere Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 40, 52, 195 C.R. 637, upheld an instruction on both tests where the product was a truck fuel tank; and Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, upheld an instruction mentioning only the consumer expectation test where the product was an automobile with a badly placed fuel tank. (173 C.A.3d 650.)

(b) The difference of opinion seems to stem from language in Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C.3d 112, 184 C.R. 891, 649 P.2d 224, infra, §1459, which the Lunghi and Bates courts read to say that the consumer expectation test cannot be applied where the product is beyond the ken of the ordinary person on the street. (173 C.A.3d 650.) "[W]e read it to say simply that the plaintiff in that case was entitled to establish, and did establish, a prima facie case of failure to meet 'consumer expectations' without the benefit of expert testimony, because public transportation is a matter of common experience." (173 C.A.3d 650.)

(c) In this case, plaintiff, a loading dock supervisor at a freight terminal, was injured when a dockboard (an adjustable truck-loading platform) flew apart. The consumer expectation test is entirely appropriate. "There are certain kinds of accidents--even where fairly complex machinery is involved--which are so bizarre that the average juror, upon hearing the particulars, might reasonably think: 'Whatever the user may have expected from that contraption, it certainly wasn't that.' " (173 C.A.3d 651.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

57 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

8. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Qualifications.

dd. Establishing Prima Facie Case.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1459

[§ 1459] Establishing Prima Facie Case.

Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C.3d 112, 184 C.R. 891, 649 P.2d 224, answers the question "what quantum of evidence must the plaintiff produce to establish a prima facie case of design defect under Barker v. Lull Engineering Co.?"

(a) Tests and burden. Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, established two alternative tests:

(1) The product failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner. This is a warranty analysis, based on the theory of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, i.e., that the manufacturer who places a product on the market impliedly represents that it is safe for the tasks it was designed to accomplish. (32 C.3d 118.)

(2) This case involves an evaluation of the design itself. Even if it satisfies ordinary consumer expectations, the jury finds that the risk of danger inherent in the design outweighs its benefits. (32 C.3d 118.) Under this second prong, the plaintiff must establish a prima facie case of causation; but then the burden of proof shifts to the defendant to persuade the trier of fact that the product is not defective. (32 C.3d 119)

(b) Situations in which test is applied. The plaintiff may show (1) an alleged malfunction of the product, as in Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 126, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436, and Greenman; (2) the absence of adequate warnings or directions, as in Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales (1979) 95 C.A.3d 338, 349, 350, 157 C.R. 142, infra, §1468, and Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 67, 71, 127 C.R. 217, infra, §1475; or (3) the manufacturer's failure to provide a particular safety device, as in Henderson v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 663, 117 C.R. 1, 527 P.2d 353, infra, §1466, and Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163, infra, §1465. (32 C.3d 120.)

(c) Facts of Campbell. Plaintiff, an elderly woman, was riding in a city bus manufactured by defendant General Motors. The driver made a sharp turn, and plaintiff was propelled from her seat to the floor, suffering severe injuries. The allegation of defective design was that, where plaintiff sat--on the first forward-facing seat on the right side of the bus--there was no horizontal metal "grab bar" (that seat did not face the rear of another forward-facing seat). Held, nonsuit reversed.

(d) Analysis and holding. This type of claim presents a factual issue. (32 C.3d 120.) The plaintiff is required only to show that an inference may reasonably be drawn in his or her favor; the plaintiff need not show that it is the only one, and need not disprove every possible alternative explanation. (32 C.3d 121.) And whether an inference should be drawn may be properly influenced by a policy that makes the action favored or disfavored. (32 C.3d 122.) Here, a jury could reasonably infer from the evidence that a handrail or guardrail within her reach would have prevented the accident. (32 C.3d 122.) Expert testimony was not required: the need for a "grab bar" or pole to steady oneself when a bus turns a sharp corner is within the common experience of lay jurors. (32 C.3d 124, 125.)

(e) Alternative holding: recovery under first prong of Barker. Plaintiff testified about the accident (her use of the product), and also introduced photographic evidence of the design features of the bus; this was sufficient to establish the objective conditions of the product. The other essential aspect of this test involves the jurors' own sense of whether the product meets ordinary expectations of safety; because public transportation is a matter of common experience, no expert testimony was required; i.e., the thrust of this test is that the product must meet the safety expectations of the general public as represented by the ordinary consumer, not the industry or a government agency. (32 C.3d 126, 127.)

(f) Conclusion. "[I]f the product is one within the common experience of ordinary consumers, it is generally sufficient if the plaintiff provides evidence concerning (1) his or her use of the product; (2) the circumstances surrounding the injury; and (3) the objective features of the product which are relevant to an evaluation of its safety." (32 C.3d 127.) (See McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 C.A.3d 179, 187, 188, 188 C.R. 542 [reviewing Campbell and applying its factors]; Moreno v. Fey Mfg. Corp. (1983) 149 C.A.3d 23, 25, 196 C.R. 487; Pietrone v. American Honda Motor Co. (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1057, 1061, 235 C.R. 137, infra, §1461; Bernal v. Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1326, 1061, 272 C.R. 41, infra, §1462; 35 A.L.R.4th 1050 [equipment and devices directly relating to passengers' standing or seating safety in land carriers].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

58 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

9. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Application.

aa. Breast Implants.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1460

[§ 1460] Breast Implants.

Rosburg v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. (1986) 181 C.A.3d 726, 226 C.R. 299, applied both tests in rejecting strict liability. Plaintiff, in 1976, had a plastic surgeon install inflatable breast implants manufactured by defendant, and in 1982, the right implant spontaneously deflated.

(a) Where, as here, the product is not one commonly encountered (sale of implants is restricted to licensed physicians), expert evidence is necessary as to the ordinary expectations of product performance. The expert testimony supported the trial judge's finding that the implants were not expected to last a lifetime and that an ordinary consumer should expect a possibility of eventual deflation. (181 C.A.3d 726.)

(b) The trial judge properly found that the benefits of the implant outweighed the risk of injury due to deflation. The evidence showed that there was no better material available for the purpose. (181 C.A.3d 734.) Plaintiff's contention that the judge erroneously applied the negligence "state of the art" defense is unsound; the judge was merely indicating that no superior design options were available in 1976. "Unlike evidence of industry custom which is improperly offered to negate the existence of a defect, evidence that a product is designed in accordance with the existing state of the art is relevant in a risk-benefit analysis." (181 C.A.3d 735.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

59 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

9. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Application.

bb. Motorcycles.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1461

[§ 1461] Motorcycles.

In Pietrone v. American Honda Motor Co. (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1057, 235 C.R. 137, plaintiff, riding as a passenger on her husband's Honda motorcycle, was injured when he had a collision with another vehicle and her leg came into contact with the exposed spokes of the rotating rear wheel of the Honda. Plaintiff's counsel offered this evidence in support of his theory that she met her burden of proof of a prima facie case of a design defect as a proximate cause of her injury. Defendant's counsel, pointing out that plaintiff had offered no expert testimony of an alternative design that could have prevented the unusual type of injury, contended that no prima facie case had been made, and presented no evidence in its defense. Held, verdict and judgment for plaintiff affirmed.

(a) The evidence conclusively established a design defect as the proximate cause of the injury. Alternative designs were so self-evident as to obviate the need for testimony, expert or otherwise, on this subject. (189 C.A.3d 1061.)

(b) Because defendant, for unknown tactical reasons, made no attempt to show that the risk of danger in the particular design selected for this machine was outweighed by the benefits of the design, it failed to meet its burden of proof. "Of course, had it sought to do so its efforts might well have proven successful for one can readily postulate potential economic, aesthetic and engineering reasons for the design selected." (189 C.A.3d 1062.)

One justice concurred under the compulsion of Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, but denounced the Barker rule as giving no consideration to the voluntary choice by a plaintiff to use a product that by its very nature is dangerous but highly utilitarian. (189 C.A.3d 1063.) Another justice dissented at length, arguing that the Barker rule was misapplied, and that "[t]he pragmatic effect of the manner in which the present case was tried amounts to an inappropriate interjection into a strict liability lawsuit of the concept of res ipsa loquitur." (189 C.A.3d 1069.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

60 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

9. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Application.

cc. Arthroscopic Scissors.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1462

[§ 1462] Arthroscopic Scissors.

In Bernal v. Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1326, 272 C.R. 41, arthroscopic scissors manufactured by defendant broke during plaintiff's knee operation, causing severe injury. Plaintiff's experts testified that the break was due to "stress corrosion cracking" resulting from a combination of design considerations. The experts did not testify about a "defect" as such or to the availability of a reasonable alternative design. With respect to the risk-benefit test of design defect, the trial judge instructed that the burden was on plaintiff to show that a reasonable alternative was available. Held, judgment for defendant reversed; the instruction was prejudicial error.

(a) The risk-benefit test, as stated in Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, was designed to aid injured victims by relieving them of the burden of presenting evidence on technical matters that are peculiarly within the manufacturer's knowledge. Hence, once plaintiff presented a prima facie case that the design of the scissors was a proximate cause of their failure, defendant had the burden of showing that, on balance, the benefits of the design as a whole outweighed the danger inherent in the design considering, among other factors, the feasibility of a safer alternate design. (221 C.A.3d 1332, disagreeing with Baker v. Chrysler Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 710, 127 C.R. 745, supra, §1452, and Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 868, 148 C.R. 843, infra, §1528, both of which placed the burden of proving alternate design on the plaintiff.)

(b) This ruling does not render defendant an insurer of its surgical instruments. "Under the risk-benefit test, the defendant has the burden, and thus the opportunity, to highlight all of the benefits of its product's design before the jury. ... Among other things, the defense may show any alternate design would entail unreasonable costs, be uneconomic or impractical, interfere with the product's performance, or create other or increased risks. The case before us is a prime example. Here, the defense produced strong evidence the surgical instrument was made with the best steel available and was reasonably safe for its intended use, but had inherent dangers no human skill or knowledge has yet been able to eliminate. But for the erroneous burden of proof instruction, we would not hesitate to affirm the jury's verdict on this record." (221 C.A.3d 1334.)

(c) Defendant argued that Baker still requires the plaintiff to always prove a "defect," whether by alternate design or not, and that plaintiff's experts failed to testify to a defect. "The short answer is this: Accepting the premise, for the moment, that plaintiff has the burden to prove a 'defect,' the Supreme Court in Barker solved the riddle of defining 'defect' by articulating its two-pronged test and holding once plaintiff proves the design caused the injury, the defect has been proven." (221 C.A.3d 1334.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

61 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

9. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Application.

dd. Firearms and Ammunition.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1463

[§ 1463] Firearms and Ammunition.

In products liability actions involving firearms and ammunition, former C.C. 1714.4 limited the second prong of Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455.

Former C.C. 1714.4(a) provided that "no firearm or ammunition shall be deemed defective in design on the basis that the benefits of the product do not outweigh the risk of injury posed by its potential to cause serious injury, damage, or death when discharged."

Former C.C. 1714.4(c) provided that the section "shall not affect a products liability cause of action based upon the improper selection of design alternatives." (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 1912; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 1679 [absolute liability for ammunition manufacturers]; 15 Pacific L. J. 694; 27 Santa Clara L. Rev. 607 [argument that C.C. 1714.4 should not apply to "Saturday night specials"]; 88 A.L.R.5th 1 [firearm or ammunition manufacturer's or seller's liability for injuries from use of gun in commission of crime]; on design alternatives, see supra, §1452.)

In Merrill v. Navegar (2001) 26 C.4th 465, 110 C.R.2d 370, 28 P.3d 116, decedent, holding a grudge against a law firm, purchased several semiautomatic assault weapons and went to the firm's high-rise business location. Once there, he killed eight people and wounded six, before taking his own life. Plaintiffs, the survivors and the representative of some of the victims, sued defendant, the manufacturer of two of the three weapons used. Because the complaint was for common law negligence, plaintiffs contended that former C.C. 1714.4, which by its terms applies to products liability actions, was inapplicable. On the ground that California's common law does not impose a duty on gun manufacturers not to manufacture or sell assault weapons, the trial judge granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Rejecting defendant's reliance on former C.C. 1714.4 (because plaintiffs were not asserting a products liability theory), the Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed; former C.C. 1714.4 barred plaintiffs' claim.

(a) A plaintiff may seek recovery in a products liability case either on the theory of strict liability in tort or on the theory of negligence. To recover from a manufacturer, a plaintiff, under either theory, must prove that a defect caused injury. Under a negligence theory, a plaintiff must also prove an additional element, i.e., that the defect was due to the negligence of the defendant. (26 C.4th 478.)

(b) Whether a products liability claim is based on defective design of a product or is based on negligence in the design of a product, the question is whether the benefits of the challenged design outweigh the risks of danger inherent in the design (risk-benefit test). With respect to a negligence theory, even if a manufacturer reasonably warns about the risk inherent in a particular design, it can still be negligent, because a reasonable person might conclude that the foreseeable harm of the product as designed outweighs its utility. (26 C.4th 479.) "Under these principles, we reject plaintiffs' argument that section 1714.4 is inapplicable because this case 'is not a product[s] liability action.' " (26 C.4th 480.)

(c) Plaintiffs claimed that they sought to hold defendant liable for "negligent conduct" and that they made no assertion that defendant's liability should be based on the fact that the weapon's risks outweighed its benefits. However, the record indicates otherwise. In their brief, plaintiffs' asserted that defendant was liable because it designed and widely distributed a weapon uniquely suited for mass killing and lacking legitimate civilian uses. This and other allegations squarely fit within the risk-benefit test that applies in a products liability action under both negligence and strict liability theories. (26 C.4th 480.) "Thus, despite the contrary view of plaintiffs and the dissent ... , this is a products liability action based on negligence, which asserts that the TEC-9/DC9 was defective in design because the risks of making it available to the general public outweighed the benefits of that conduct, and that defendants knew or should have known this fact. Plaintiffs may not avoid this conclusion, or the legislative policy that section 1714.4 reflects, simply by declining to use the word 'defect' or 'defective.' " (26 C.4th 481.)

(d) Former C.C. 1714.4 was enacted as a response to the argument of victims of handguns that, because the dangers posed by handguns outweighed any social benefits, these weapons were inherently defective products. And the Senate analysis of the statute shows that it was enacted to protect manufacturers and sellers of firearms from being held liable in tort for selling firearms used to cause injury or death. Thus, it would obviously frustrate this purpose to permit plaintiffs to proceed with their claim that defendant was liable on the ground that the risks of selling the weapons in question outweighed the benefits. (26 C.4th 482.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 717 [Merrill v. Navegar].)

Former C.C. 1714.4 was repealed in 2002. However, the authors of the repealing legislation stated that, in repealing the section, the Legislature did not intend to create a cause of action against manufacturers of firearms and ammunition based solely on the fact that the firearm or ammunition was capable of causing serious injury or death; but that the Legislature did intend to preserve those causes of action against manufacturers and sellers of firearms and ammunition, including but not limited to negligence actions, product liability actions alleging manufacturing, marketing, or design defects, public and private nuisance actions, and statutorily based actions, which would exist had former C.C. 1714.4 not been enacted. (Letters of legislative intent, reprinted in 2001-2002 Assembly Journal, pp. 8232, 8233, and in West's Annotated California Codes as Historical and Statutory Notes to former C.C. 1714.4; see 34 McGeorge L. Rev. 339 [effect of repeal of C.C. 1714.4].)

C.C. 1714 (supra, §833), as amended in 2002, provides: "The design, distribution, or marketing of firearms or ammunition is not exempt from the duty to use ordinary care and skill."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

62 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

2. What Constitutes Defective Product.

c. Defects in Design.

9. Consumer Expectations and Risk-Benefit Tests: Application.

ee. Other Decisions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1464

[§ 1464] Other Decisions.

The criteria of Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, and its requirements of proof, have been the subject of a number of later decisions. (See Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C.4th 548, 570, 34 C.R.2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 [declining to overrule consumer expectations prong of Barker, but holding that jury should not have been instructed on ordinary consumer expectations because plaintiff's theory was one of technical and mechanical detail]; Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 C.3d 112, 120, 184 C.R. 891, 649 P.2d 224, supra, §1459; McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 1005, 1014, 147 C.R. 694; Titus v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1979) 91 C.A.3d 372, 379, 154 C.R. 122; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 801, 803, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1593 [because Barker standards are alternative, it is proper to instruct solely on consumer expectation standard; also, jury should not be instructed to consider industry custom or practice]; Lunghi v. Clark Equipment Co. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 485, 497, 200 C.R. 387; Bracisco v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1101, 1106, 206 C.R. 431 [instruction imposing more onerous burden of proof on plaintiff than required was prejudicial error]; Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 C.A.3d 633, 645, 219 C.R. 513, supra, §1458; Williams v. Beechnut Nutrition Corp. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 135, 139, 229 C.R. 605, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §588; Neal v. Montgomery Elevator Co. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1194, 1199, 9 C.R.2d 497 [where burden of proof instructions for design defect as set out in Bernal v. Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1326, 272 C.R. 41, supra, §1462, were given, it was not necessary to repeat them in detail in special verdict form]; Benson v. Honda Motor Co., Ltd. (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1337, 1344, 1345, 32 C.R.2d 322 [in action alleging design defect, safety history of product, including presence or absence of prior accidents, is relevant]; Sparks v. Owens-Illinois (1995) 32 C.A.4th 461, 472, 38 C.R.2d 739, supra, §1456]; Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1559, 1569, 38 C.R.2d 446 [consumer expectations test was applicable to automobile air bag even though consumers were unfamiliar with technology; ordinary consumer would nevertheless be capable of forming expectation whether design satisfied minimal safety expectations]; Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1529, 1536, 40 C.R.2d 22 ["state of the art" evidence was properly excluded in asbestos exposure case]; Hansen v. Sunnyside Products (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1497, 1512, 65 C.R.2d 266, supra, §1457; Arena v. Owens Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1178, 1187, 74 C.R.2d 580 [miner's subjective plan of blasting raw asbestos out of ground, pounding and separating fibers, and marketing them for various uses, constitutes design]; Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Farmers Bros. Co. (1998) 65 C.A.4th 574, 578, 76 C.R.2d 587 [in products liability design defect case, jury was free to accept testimony of plaintiff's expert that heating element of coffeemaker reached sufficient number of degrees to ignite plastic handle, while rejecting testimony of defense expert that heat was not sufficiently high]; Pruitt v. General Motors Corp. (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1480, 1483, 86 C.R.2d 4 [because minimum safety standards for airbags were not within common knowledge of jury, it was not error for trial judge to reject instruction on consumer expectations test in case where airbag allegedly deployed after no more than mild collision]; Morson v. Superior Court (2001) 90 C.A.4th 775, 784, 109 C.R.2d 343 [allegations that latex gloves contained toxic materials that, either independently or in combination with other chemicals, caused allergic reactions did not describe defect readily apparent to common reason and experience and thus did not support application of consumer expectations test].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Boeken v. Philip Morris (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1640, 1668, 26 C.R.3d 638 [sufficient evidence that "light" cigarettes were defective product under consumer expectations test; there was expert testimony that cigarettes delivered more nicotine and more tar per cigarette to smokers who compensated for less nicotine by inhaling deeper, which drew more dangerous carcinogens into lungs without them being aware of it]; Jones v. John Crane (2005) 132 C.A.4th 990, 1001, 35 C.R.3d 144 [consumer expectations test applied to design defect case alleging that cancer was caused by occupational exposure to asbestos from manufacturer's products during plaintiff's 27-year naval career; it was undisputed that some asbestos fibers were released during workers' replacement of packing, and there was nothing leading to reasonable inference that exposed workers did not expect to develop cancer from breathing dust]; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP (2007) 154 C.A.4th 780, 786, 64 C.R.3d 908 [by offering no evidence that benefits of design of automobile airbag component outweighed its inherent risks, manufacturer of component failed to negate evidence, offered by passenger whose eye was injured when airbag deployed during accident, that airbag's design was defective under strict liability risk-benefit theory, and thus manufacturer was precluded from summary judgment in its favor]. Beechnut case:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §628.

63 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - d. Obvious Defects.
 - 1. Strict Liability for Obvious Defects.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1465

[§ 1465] Strict Liability for Obvious Defects.

The supposed limitation that the defect was one of which the plaintiff was not aware, and its corollary that there is no strict liability for patent defects was repudiated in Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163. Plaintiff's cousin, with whom he lived, bought a rotary power lawnmower. The machine rotates a blade at high speed and ejects grass through an unguarded hole. Plaintiff, using the mower on wet grass, left it with the motor running to remove an obstacle in its path. He slipped, fell backward, and his hand went into the unguarded hole, where it was severely mangled. In his action against the manufacturer, distributor, and retail seller, his expert testified that the mower was dangerous because of the hole, that the type of injury was foreseeable, and that the injury could have been prevented by a simple inexpensive piece of additional equipment. The judge instructed, at defendant manufacturer's request, that plaintiff had the burden of proving that he was not aware of the defect at the time of the accident. Verdict was for defendants. Held, judgment reversed; the instruction was prejudicial error.

(a) The true Greenman rule. In Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, the court declared that "[a] manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article he places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being." This is the authoritative statement of the rule. "[I]n products liability cases a plaintiff has met his burden if he establishes the ingredients of this formulation." (8 C.3d 141.)

(b) The spurious Greenman rule. At the end of the Greenman opinion is an observation to the effect that it was sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was injured while using the product in a way intended as a result of a defect "of which plaintiff was not aware." (59 C.2d 64; see supra, §1429.) This language was incorporated in the BAJI instruction, and several Court of Appeal decisions referred to it as stating elements of the doctrine. But no Supreme Court opinion did so, and the Greenman opinion does not support that use of the observation. (8 C.3d 143, 144.)

(c) Unawareness element is unsound. Incorporating this element would mean that the manufacturer would be liable only where the product had latent defects. No California case makes this distinction, and Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 465, 475, 85 C.R. 629, 467 P.2d 229, supra, §1449, laid it to rest: That decision, though dealing with negligence, discusses strict liability as well, and refers to the true Greenman rule and the Restatement section, neither of which requires proof of unawareness. (8 C.3d 144.) Moreover, adoption of such a theory would be highly objectionable on policy grounds. "It would indeed be anomalous to allow a plaintiff to prove that a manufacturer was negligent in marketing an obviously defective product, but to preclude him from establishing the manufacturer's strict liability for doing the same thing. The result would be to immunize from strict liability manufacturers who callously ignore obvious dangers in their products while subjecting to such liability those who innocently market products with latent defects." (8 C.3d 145.)

(d) Proper effect of Greenman awareness language. Ordinary contributory negligence does not bar recovery in a strict liability action, but assumption of risk, consisting of "voluntarily and unreasonably proceeding to encounter a known danger," is a defense. (8 C.3d 145, citing the text.) Thus, while unawareness is not an element of the plaintiff's case, the defendant may set up awareness as a defense; but the burden of proof is on the defendant. (8 C.3d 146; see infra, §1541.) (See Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 C.3d 104, 120, 120 C.R. 681, 534 P.2d 377, supra, §778 [following Luque; plaintiffs need not show that user was unaware of defect]; Thompson v. Package Machinery Co. (1971) 22 C.A.3d 188, 192, 99 C.R. 281 [decided before Luque but citing Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. for same conclusion]; 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 671; 10 U.S.F. L. Rev. 725; 95 A.L.R.3d 1066 [duty of manufacturer to equip product with safety device to protect against patent or obvious danger]; 35 A.L.R.4th 861 [modern status of rule that there is no liability for obvious dangers].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.27

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

64 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 2. What Constitutes Defective Product.
 - d. Obvious Defects.
 - 2. Contradictory Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1466

[§ 1466] Contradictory Instructions.

In Henderson v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 663, 117 C.R. 1, 527 P.2d 353, decedent was employed on a construction project to keep an earthmoving crane lubricated and to assist the operator. While in the rear of the machine, he was struck by the counterweight and killed. His widow and children sued, offering expert testimony that the rear view of the operator was completely obstructed, that the blind spot could be eliminated by a mirror, and that a sounding device could have been installed to warn persons against entering the zone of danger. Defendant introduced contrary expert testimony to the effect that a mirror would divert the operator's attention from the movement of the boom, creating a major hazard; and that a sounding device would be ineffective because the danger of entering the area of the arc of the counterweight was obvious. Defendant also, in support of its defense of assumption of risk, offered evidence that decedent was alert, intelligent, and experienced in the operation of the crane, and that he had been warned of the danger shortly before the accident. The trial judge instructed on former BAJI No. 9.01, and the verdict and judgment were for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) The instruction held erroneous in Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163, supra, §1465, coupled with a correct instruction that the burden of proving the defense of assumption of risk was on the defendant, gave the jury contradictory and irreconcilable information on the issue of awareness or unawareness of the defect. "It is impossible to determine whether the jury returned a verdict for defendant because they found that plaintiffs had failed to prove that the deceased was not aware of the claimed defect or because they found that defendant had proved he was aware of it." (12 C.3d 671.)

(b) The bad instruction also could have given defendant the advantage of a less onerous defense to liability. In view of the evidence of decedent's familiarity with the crane and the warning of the dangerous condition, the verdict for defendant could have been based simply on a finding that plaintiffs had not sustained the burden of proving decedent's unawareness. "Had the jury made such a finding, they would have exonerated defendant manufacturer from liability even if they also believed that the crane was defective in design." (12 C.3d 671.) But awareness of risk is only one of several elements of assumption of risk in a products liability action; Luque shows that more is required: the user must become aware of the defect and danger and still proceed unreasonably to make use of the product. "The issue of awareness included neither the element of voluntariness nor the element of reasonableness." (12 C.3d 672.) Hence, it is likely that the jury verdict may have been based on what was, in effect, a partial defense. (12 C.3d 672.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

65 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

a. In General.

1. Duty To Warn.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1467

[§ 1467] Duty To Warn.

(1) In General. Even though a product is flawlessly manufactured and designed, it may be "defective" if a reasonably foreseeable use involves a substantial danger not readily recognizable by the ordinary consumer, and the manufacturer fails to provide an adequate warning. (See Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C.3d 691, 699, 200 C.R. 870, 677 P.2d 1147, infra, §1470; Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 C.4th 1104, 1110, 56 C.R.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347, infra, §1477; Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 67, 71, 127 C.R. 217, infra, §1475; Burke v. Almaden Vineyards (1978) 86 C.A.3d 768, 772, 150 C.R. 419; Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales (1979) 95 C.A.3d 338, 349, 350, 157 C.R. 142, infra, §1468; DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 336, 343, 195 C.R. 867, supra, §1454; Lunghi v. Clark Equipment Co. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 485, 494, 200 C.R. 387; Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 357, 362, 212 C.R. 395, infra, §1469; Gonzales v. Carmenita Ford Truck Sales (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1143, 1147, 238 C.R. 18; Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1218, 1230, 63 C.R.2d 422; Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1149, 1153, 76 C.R.2d 804; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §363 et seq.; 8 Proof of Facts 3d 547 [failure to warn as proximate cause]; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 867 [cigarette manufacturer's liability for failure to warn even though complying with federal warning requirement]; 37 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 461 [presumption that product user would have heeded warning; distinguishing no warning from inadequate warning]; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 422; 41 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1193 [warning as substitute for safe design]; 53 A.L.R.3d 239 [failure to warn as basis for liability under doctrine of strict liability in tort]; 39 A.L.R.4th [duty of manufacturer of part to warn]; 45 A.L.R.4th 777 [effect on liability of manufacturer or seller of subsequent distributor's failure to warn of known defect]; 38 A.L.R.5th 683 [presumption or inference that product user would have heeded adequate warning had one been given]; 64 A.L.R.5th 205 [failure to warn of excessively hot food or beverage]; 92 A.L.R.5th 227 [successor corporation's liability for injury or damage from product produced by predecessor, based on successor's independent duty to warn third party of danger or defect]; BAJI, No. 9.00.7; CACI, Nos. 1205, 1206.)

If the danger is open and obvious, there is no duty to warn. Courts from other jurisdictions are divided over whether diving into shallow water is, as a matter of law, an open and obvious danger to an adult, but it is a factual question when children are involved. (Bunch v. Hoffinger Industries (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1278, 1290, 20 C.R.3d 780 [child of 11 was injured when diving into above ground pool that was four feet deep].)

A manufacturer may satisfy its duty to warn either by instructing the consumer on the proper use of the product or by informing the consumer of any known, or knowable, risks or side effects that might follow from its foreseeable use. (See Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co., supra, 35 C.3d 699, infra, §1470; BAJI, No. 9.00.7.)

In Vermeulen v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1192, 251 C.R. 805, the court said that "manufacturers may not be held strictly liable for failure to warn of risks of which they were unaware and could not have been aware by the reasonable application of scientific knowledge available at the time of distribution. Consequently, 'state of the art' evidence may well be relevant and admissible in a failure to warn case." (204 C.A.3d 1206.) (See Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 C.3d 987, 991, 1000, 281 C.R. 528, 810 P.2d 549, infra, §1477 [approving Vermeulen].)

(2) Restatement Third. Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430), a commercial seller or distributor is liable for harm caused by a product that is "defective because of inadequate instructions or warnings." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §§1, 2.) A product is defective because of inadequate instructions or warnings when the foreseeable risks of harm posed by the product could have been reduced or avoided by the provision of reasonable instructions or warnings by the seller or other distributor, or a predecessor in the commercial chain of distribution, and the omission of the instructions or warnings renders the product not reasonably safe. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(c).)

In most instances, the instructions and warnings originate with the manufacturer, but sellers down the chain of distribution must warn when doing so is feasible and reasonably necessary. In any event, sellers down the chain are liable if the instructions and warnings provided by predecessors in the chain are inadequate. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment i.) Generally, a product seller is not subject to liability for failing to warn or instruct regarding risks and risk-avoidance measures that should be obvious to, or generally known by, foreseeable product users. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment j.) The general rule in cases involving allergic reactions is that a warning is required when the harm causing ingredient is one to which a substantial number of persons are allergic. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment k.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.14-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Jones v. John Crane (2005) 132 C.A.4th 990, 1004, 35 C.R.3d 144 [substantial evidence supported finding that there was scientifically known or knowable medical probability that manufacturer's valve and pump packing products containing asbestos would increase risk of cancer, thereby supporting verdict against manufacturer on failure to warn theory; despite absence of formal studies on risks associated with packing, numerous articles connected packing to potential risk of asbestos-related disease].

66 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

a. In General.

2. Risk-Benefit Analysis.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1468

[§ 1468] Risk-Benefit Analysis.

In Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales (1979) 95 C.A.3d 338, 157 C.R. 142, the court applied the balancing approach set forth in Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, in a failure to warn case. Plaintiff's theory was that defendants, the manufacturer and lessor of a golf cart, failed to warn of its propensity to tip over. The trial judge instructed that an article may be defective if the manufacturer-lessor fails to warn of a dangerous propensity that, in the absence of an adequate warning, renders the article "substantially dangerous" to the user. In his appeal from a judgment for defendants, plaintiff contended that use of the word "substantially" was contrary to Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 133, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) The weighing of degrees of danger is necessarily involved in ascertaining a manufacturer's duty to warn. Otherwise, the mere fact of injury would be enough to establish a product's "dangerousness," and each manufacturer would become an insurer. (95 C.A.3d 348.)

(b) The Barker balancing approach is consistent with the evaluation of degrees of danger and is adaptable to failure to warn cases. (95 C.A.3d 347, 348.) The relevant considerations to be weighed include "the normal expectations of the consumer as to how the product will perform, degrees of simplicity or complication in the operation or use of the product, the nature and magnitude of the danger to which the user is exposed, the likelihood of injury, and the feasibility and beneficial effect of including a warning." (95 C.A.3d 348.) Taken as a whole, the instructions here properly focused the jury's attention on these factors. (95 C.A.3d 350.) (See Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C.3d 691, 699, 200 C.R. 870, 677 P.2d 1147, infra, §1470; Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 1062, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, infra, §1470; Persons v. Salomon North America (1990) 217 C.A.3d 168, 175, 265 C.R. 773, infra, §1476, citing the text; 14 U.S.F. L. Rev. 309 [failure to warn after Barker]; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 743 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

67 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

a. In General.

3. Product of Another Manufacturer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1469

[§ 1469] Product of Another Manufacturer.

In Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 357, 212 C.R. 395, plaintiffs, stripping a tile floor with an electric buffer, used a lacquer thinner supplied by defendant Standard Brands. Their supply ran out and they obtained similar lacquer thinner manufactured by Grow. While using the latter, the buffer exploded, causing serious injuries. Plaintiffs' theory was that defendant Standard Brands failed to warn of the dangerous properties of its lacquer thinner, and that this failure was a proximate cause of the injuries. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) "[N]o reported decision has held a manufacturer liable for its failure to warn of risks of using its product, where it is shown that the immediate efficient cause of injury is a product manufactured by someone else." (166 C.A.3d 362.)

(b) The manufacturer's duty is to warn of the characteristics of the manufacturer's own product; there is no requirement that he or she study the products of other manufacturers and warn users of the risks in using them. "Thus, even where the manufacturer erroneously omits warnings, the most the manufacturer could reasonably foresee is that consumers might be subject to the risks of the manufacturer's own product, since those are the only risks he is required to know." (166 C.A.3d 364.) Hence, if plaintiffs' theory has any validity, "it would be limited to situations where the risks of use of the product immediately causing injury are identical to the risks of use of the product previously used with inadequate warnings." (166 C.A.3d 364.)

(c) "[T]he theory of liability now asserted by plaintiffs would require at a minimum that: (a) the product immediately causing injury (product B) was subject to the same generic description as the product previously used with inadequate warnings (product A), e.g., 'lawnmower,' 'electric drill,' 'aspirin,' etc.; (b) product B was generally used for the same purposes as product A by consumers; (c) product B's warnings were inadequate; and (d) product B had risks of use identical to those of product A. This theory of liability gains credence to the extent a generically identical product (with presumably identical risks of use) is made by a limited number of manufacturers in an industry, and there is an industry-wide practice of omitting warnings on the product. ... In such a situation, each manufacturer has reason to know that the risks of use associated with its product are the same as the risks of the other products and that a consumer will receive no adequate warnings from the other products." (166 C.A.3d 365.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

68 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

b. Drugs.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1470

[§ 1470] In General.

In Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C.3d 691, 200 C.R. 870, 677 P.2d 1147, plaintiff, shortly after birth, developed a skin rash diagnosed as AE, for which the only known treatment was high doses of Diodoquin, an approved drug. After taking the drug for a considerable period, plaintiff suffered optic nerve atrophy and became almost totally blind. In this strict liability action against defendant manufacturer, based on failure to warn of the harmful side effects of the drug, the trial judge modified plaintiff's proposed instruction to read as follows: "The manufacturer of a drug is under a duty to exercise reasonable care to warn the medical profession of potential dangers reasonably foreseeable from use of its drug, even though the percentage of users who may be injured is not large. The duty of the drug manufacturer is to warn the medical profession and there is no duty by the drug manufacturer to insure that the warning reaches the patient for whom the drug is prescribed." The jury verdict was in favor of defendant, and on appeal, plaintiff contended that the instruction as modified improperly injected negligence concepts into the jury's consideration of his strict liability claim. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed; the instruction was not prejudicial error.

(a) Two lines of authority have developed in other states: (1) One imposes strict liability for a failure to warn regardless of the defendant's knowledge or ability to know of the side effect-causing injury. (2) The other focuses first on the manufacturer's actual or constructive knowledge. Here, neither position need be favored, because plaintiff's proposed instruction was based on the second; i.e., plaintiff's theory was that defendant's duty to warn extended only to defects that were or should have been known at the time he took the drug. (35 C.3d 699.)

(b) California cases have developed a distinct form of analysis in the strict liability arena. The jury cannot compare the product with other units or weigh the reasonableness of the design against alternative designs; instead, "they must decide whether a product flawlessly designed and produced may nevertheless possess such risks to the user without a suitable warning that it becomes 'defective' simply by the absence of a warning." (35 C.3d 699, quoting Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales (1979) 95 C.A.3d 338, 349, 157 C.R. 142, supra, §1468.)

(c) The requisite warning may be of two kinds, each of which may have different implications: (1) The manufacturer may be required adequately to instruct the consumer as to how the product should be used. (2) A second form informs a consumer (or, in the case of prescription drugs, the physician) of potential risks or side effects that may follow the foreseeable use of the product. "Within the prescription drug context, the giving of this second form of warning may cause a physician-user to refuse to prescribe the drug. The particular risk described in the warning may well persuade the physician and patient in determining the treatment of choice." (35 C.3d 700.) The two kinds of warnings perform distinct functions. "In some circumstances a warning or directions would have reduced the risk. In other circumstances the warning would simply have afforded the consumer an opportunity to make an informed choice." (35 C.3d 700.)

(d) Some California courts have held that where imposition of liability is contingent on finding of dangers that were or should have been known, "concepts from negligence law have been amalgamated into the doctrine of strict liability." (35 C.3d 700, quoting Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 988, 95 C.R. 381, infra, §1476.) Another court has observed that because violation of a duty of care has always been an element in the definition of negligence, the rules in former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j, although stated as an adjunct to "strict" liability, are merely well settled rules of negligence law. (35 C.3d 700, citing Oakes v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1969) 272 C.A.2d 645, 77 C.R. 709, and Christofferson v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 75, 92 C.R. 825, infra, §1474.)

(e) After the decision in Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, supra, applied the Barker balancing approach to a case involving asserted failure to warn. (35 C.3d 700.) "Arguably, the difference between negligence and strict liability standards in this situation is the focus: in the first, the jury must determine the reasonableness of the manufacturer's conduct; in the second, the determination is whether the product has been rendered defective because, applying an objective standard, and weighing the relevant costs and benefits, a warning was required. In light of the opinion in Barker, a balancing test as enunciated in Cavers may therefore be appropriate." (35 C.3d 700.)

(e) The quality of evidence supporting a causal connection between product and injury may range from extremely vague to highly certain. Knowledge of a potential side effect that is based on a single isolated report of a possible link between a prescription drug and an injury may not require a warning. (35 C.3d 701.) Overuse of warnings invites mass consumer disregard for the warning process; and, if every report of a possible risk imposed a duty to give some warning, a manufacturer would be required to inundate physicians indiscriminately with notice of any hint of danger, thereby diluting the force of any specific warning given. (35 C.3d 701.) "The strength of the causal link thus is relevant both to the issue of whether a warning should be given at all, and, if one is required, what form it should take. The trial court was justified in modifying the instruction to take into account the dangers of overwarning and plaintiff failed to offer an alternative approach." (35 C.3d 701.)

A lengthy dissent, on an elaborate review of the authorities, concludes that strict liability should be applicable to injuries caused by prescription drugs under the two-prong test of Barker, i.e., where the product fails to live up to the ordinary consumer's expectations, or the manufacturer fails to establish that the benefits of the drug outweigh its risks; and that strict liability should also be applicable to drugs rendered defective by the absence of a warning. (35 C.3d 725.) (See Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 C.4th 1104, 1110, 56 C.R.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347, infra, §1477 [manufacturer of prescription sleeping pill was strictly liable for failure to warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowable defects]; 19 Pacific L. J. 207; 71 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1387 [preemptive effect of FDA labeling rules for over-the-counter drugs]; 51 Stanf. L. Rev. 1343 [learned intermediary doctrine and patient package inserts].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

69 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

b. Drugs.

2. Prescription Drugs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1471

[§ 1471] Prescription Drugs.

In Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, plaintiffs sued 170 drug companies that allegedly produced diethylstilbestrol (DES) used by their mothers to prevent miscarriage. The trial judge ruled against plaintiffs on the issue of strict liability based on design defect under the standards of Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455, the Court of Appeal agreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. Neither of the tests of Barker (consumer expectation and risk-benefit analysis weighed against risks) is applicable to a prescription drug such as DES.

(a) The consumer is not the plaintiff but the physician who prescribes the drug, and it is to him or her that the warnings are directed. "The manufacturer cannot be held liable if it has provided appropriate warnings and the doctor fails in his duty to transmit these warnings to the patient or if the patient relies on inaccurate information from others regarding side effects of the drug." (44 C.3d 1062.)

(b) The second Barker test contemplates that a safer alternative design is possible, and defendants contend that there is no way in which a drug like DES can be "redesigned." This position is unsound. Plaintiff may be able to demonstrate that a particular component of DES rendered it unsafe and that removal of that component would not have affected the efficacy of the drug; or plaintiff might be able to prove that other less harmful drugs were available to prevent miscarriage. (44 C.3d 1062.)

(c) There is, however, an important distinction between prescription drugs and such products as construction machinery, lawnmowers, or perfume. These products are used to make work easier or to provide pleasure; prescription drugs may be necessary to alleviate pain and suffering or to sustain life, and harm to some users is unavoidable. "Because of these distinctions, the broader public interest in the availability of drugs at an affordable price must be considered in deciding the appropriate standard of liability for injuries resulting from their use." (44 C.3d 1063.) As Prosser put it: "The argument that industries producing potentially dangerous products should make good the harm, distribute it by liability insurance, and add the cost to the price of the product, encounters reason for pause, when we consider that two of the greatest medical boons to the human race, penicillin and cortisone, both have their dangerous side effects, and that drug companies might well have been deterred from producing and selling them." (44 C.3d 1064.)

And many examples have been cited of products that have greatly increased in price or have been withdrawn or withheld from the market because of the fear of liability for large judgments. (44 C.3d 1064.) Hence, the drug manufacturer's liability should not be measured by the Barker standards. (44 C.3d 1065.)

In Rodriguez v. Superior Court (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1371, 271 C.R. 114, plaintiffs were a mother and her minor son. As a result of the son's developing Reyes Syndrome after ingesting defendant's baby aspirin, plaintiffs alleged that the use of the aspirin was reasonably foreseeable by defendant, its use involved a substantial, foreseeable danger, and adequate warnings were not given. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant reversed. The pleadings were precisely in conformity with the requirements set forth in Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C.3d 691, 200 C.R. 870, 677 P.2d 1147, supra, §1470. And Brown, recognized that aspect of strict liability discussed in Finn--liability for failure to warn--by basing its holding freeing drug manufacturers from strict liability on the conditions that drugs be properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of any dangerous propensities of which the manufacturers had actual or constructive knowledge. Because plaintiffs' allegations sufficiently complied with these conditions, the court erroneously granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. (221 C.A.3d 1375.) (See 103 Harv. L. Rev. 773 [A Question of Competence: The Judicial Role in the Regulation of Pharmaceuticals]; on inapplicability of strict liability to design defect claims involving drugs and medical devices, see supra, §1449.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See McKenney v. Purepac Pharmaceutical Co. (2008) 167 C.A.4th 72, 79, 83 C.R.3d 810 [prescription drug user's claims against generic drug manufacturer based on alleged failure to warn of drug's dangers were not necessarily preempted by FDA regulations requiring generic drug to have same labeling as original listed drug; nothing in complaint alleged that manufacturer should have given warnings that FDA had expressly precluded it from giving].

70 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
3. Failure To Warn.
b. Drugs.
3. Warning in Languages Other Than English.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1472

[§ 1472] Warning in Languages Other Than English.

Ramirez v. Plough (1993) 6 C.4th 539, 25 C.R.2d 97, 863 P.2d 167, held that a manufacturer may not be held liable in tort for failing to label a nonprescription drug with warnings in a language other than English. Plaintiff, a child less than 4 months old, exhibited symptoms of a respiratory infection, and his mother gave him a nonprescription drug (children's aspirin) manufactured by defendant. Plaintiff developed Reye's Syndrome, resulting in severe neurological damage, spastic quadriplegia, and mental retardation. The drug label and package insert contained a warning of Reye's Syndrome and its symptoms, in English. Plaintiff's mother, literate only in Spanish, was unable to read the warnings and did not ask anyone to translate them into Spanish, even though other members of her household could have done so. The Supreme Court, reversing the Court of Appeal, upheld summary judgment for defendant.

(a) Standard of care is question of law for court.

(1) In most cases, courts have fixed no standard of care more precise than that of a reasonably prudent person under like circumstances. But the proper conduct under particular situations may become settled by judicial decision or be prescribed by statute or ordinance. (6 C.4th 547.) As Justice Traynor explained in Clinkscale v. Carver (1943) 22 C.2d 72, 136 P.2d 777, supra, §875: "The decision as to what the civil standard should be still rests with the court, and the standard formulated by a legislative body in a police regulation or criminal statute becomes the standard to determine civil liability only because the court accepts it." (6 C.4th 547.)

(2) Statutory standards of conduct are commonly invoked by plaintiffs in negligence actions to establish a breach of duty by the defendant. Less common is the use of a statutory standard by a defendant to establish that no breach of duty occurred. The standard defined is normally a minimum standard, and does not prevent a finding that a reasonable person would have taken additional precautions where the situation calls for them. (6 C.4th 547, 548, citing Rest.2d, Torts §288C, Comment a, Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 C.3d 540, 208 C.R. 874, 691 P.2d 630, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §20, and Buccery v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 533, 132 C.R. 605, supra, §1452.)

(3) If, however, there are no unusual circumstances, the minimum standard prescribed by the legislation or regulation may be accepted as sufficient; and here defendant manufacturer argues that the necessity or propriety of foreign language label and package warnings has been appropriately fixed by state and federal statutes and regulations. (6 C.4th 548.)

(b) California law is consistent with federal law. The federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C., §352) requires labeling of nonprescription drugs, and the Food and Drug Administration has adopted detailed regulations to implement the statute, specifying both the subject matter of required warnings and the actual words to be used. (6 C.4th 549.) California parallels and reinforces federal law on these points. (6 C.4th 550.)

(c) No legislative mandate that warning be in foreign language. The Legislature has drawn clear lines so that persons and entities, in both the private and public spheres, know what is expected of them; and when it has extended a mandate to languages other than English and Spanish, it has provided a means to determine what languages are included. (6 C.4th 551.) Where a statute expressly requires that package warnings on nonprescription drugs be in English, "we think it is reasonable to infer that the Legislature has deliberately chosen not to require that manufacturers also include warnings in foreign languages." (6 C.4th 552.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1344 [Rodriguez]; 29 U.S.F. L. Rev. 837 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

71 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

b. Drugs.

4. Restatement 3d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1473

[§ 1473] Restatement 3d.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430), the manufacturer of a prescription drug or medical device who sells or otherwise distributes it is subject to liability for harm to persons caused where the drug or medical device is not reasonably safe due to inadequate instructions or warnings. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(a), (b)(3).) A prescription drug or medical device is not reasonably safe, due to inadequate instructions or warnings, if reasonable instructions or warnings regarding foreseeable risks of harm are not provided to either of the following (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6(d)):

(1) Prescribing and other health care providers who are in a position to reduce the risks of harm in accordance with the instructions or warnings.

(2) The patient when the manufacturer knows or has reason to know that health care providers will not be in a position to reduce the risks of harm in accordance with the instructions or warnings.

Thus, while the "learned intermediary" rule is generally retained, the manufacturer has a duty in limited circumstances to warn the patient directly. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6, Comments b and e.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

72 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

c. Lack of Knowledge of Danger.

1. Unforeseeable Danger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1474

[§ 1474] Unforeseeable Danger.

The Second Restatement took the position that the seller was required to warn "if he has knowledge, or by the application of reasonable, developed human skill and foresight should have knowledge, of the presence of the ingredient and the danger." (Former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j; see 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.27.) This limiting rule was applied in two California cases.

In Oakes v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. (1969) 272 C.A.2d 645, 77 C.R. 709, plaintiff sued the manufacturer of weed-killing chemicals, alleging that, because of an allergy to an ingredient, he suffered severe systemic skin conditions. The complaint contained no allegation of defendant's knowledge. Held, judgment on demurrer affirmed: "To exact an obligation to warn the user of unknown and unknowable allergies, sensitivities and idiosyncrasies would be for the courts to recast the manufacturer in the role of an insurer beyond any reasonable application of the rationale expressed above." (272 C.A.2d 651.)

In Christofferson v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 75, 92 C.R. 825, plaintiff, suffering from a severe skin ailment, took the prescription drug Aralen between 1954 and 1960. She developed an irreversible limitation of vision, and sued various defendants, including the manufacturer. On appeal from judgment for defendants, she urged error in refusing to instruct that the manufacturer was strictly liable for failure to warn of side effects of the drug, regardless of foreseeability. The judge had instead instructed that the manufacturer of a prescription drug is liable for failure to warn of effects that should or could have been foreseen. Held, judgment affirmed. "To require him to compose a warning of side effects not suggested by careful laboratory procedures such as preceded distribution of Aralen would seem to require either a semantically impossible sort of warning or one which would effectively bar the very experience which alone could give early hint of side effects of a new product extremely valuable in many cases of specific illnesses." (15 C.A.3d 79.) (See Garman v. Magic Chef (1981) 117 C.A.3d 634, 638, 173 C.R. 20; Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 C.A.3d 372, 377, 203 C.R. 706; Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 C.A.3d 375, 388, 215 C.R. 195; Livingston v. Marie Callenders (1999) 72 C.A.4th 830, 834, 85 C.R.2d 528 [plaintiff was entitled to trial on issue whether any defendant is strictly liable for failure to warn of ingredient (MSG) to which substantial portion of population is allergic]; 53 A.L.R.3d 298 [allergenic reaction to product; Christofferson].) (For departure from this rule, see Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 67, 127 C.R. 217, infra, §1475; for criticism suggestion that warning requirement is limited to unreasonably or unavoidably dangerous products, see Gonzales v. Carmenita Ford Truck Sales (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1143, 1150, 1151, 238 C.R. 18.)

Foreseeability retains its importance under the Third Restatement, which similarly requires that the harm must be reasonably foreseeable to require a warning. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2, Comment m.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.9

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.27.

73 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.
3. Failure To Warn.
c. Lack of Knowledge of Danger.
2. Duty Despite Lack of Knowledge.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1475

[§ 1475] Duty Despite Lack of Knowledge.

In Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 67, 127 C.R. 217, the limiting rule of former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j (supra, §1474) was found unacceptable. Plaintiff, 13 years old, purchased a refracting telescope from defendant retailer. Its components were in a cardboard box with a booklet of instructions on assembly and use. One component was a sun filter, essential to direct viewing of the sun. The instructions warned against solar observation without attaching the filter, but contained no diagrammatic or pictorial illustrations of its proper installation. Plaintiff always used the filter, but assembled it improperly, and sunlight leaked through, eventually causing burns on the retina of his eye with irreparable damage to his vision. The court instructed the jury on failure to warn in the traditional language derived from negligence concepts, imposing a duty to warn only when there is actual or constructive knowledge of the danger. Held, this was prejudicial error.

(a) The instruction followed the view of Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j. (55 C.A.3d 72, citing Oakes v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. (1969) 272 C.A.2d 645, 77 C.R. 709, and Christofferson v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 75, 92 C.R. 825, supra, §1474.)

(b) Subsequently, Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 133, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436, rejected the "unreasonably dangerous" test, and this raises a question as to the extent that the Oakes holding has been eroded. (55 C.A.3d 73.) In any event, Oakes is distinguishable, for the danger of the product in that case was "a function of an idiosyncratic physiological reaction" of a limited number of users. (55 C.A.3d 73.)

(c) "By contrast, the defendant herein marketed a technically complex product intended for use by technically unsophisticated consumers, to be assembled and used by them in accordance with instructions prepared and supplied by the technically knowledgeable supplier. Failure to assemble or use the product in accordance with these directions may well cause physical injury and thus constitutes a potential danger. It begs the obvious to say that the supplier knows or reasonably should know that the directions furnished by him will form the unsophisticated consumer's only guide to assembly and use. Thus a product requiring assembly and use in conformity with the supplier's directions is defective if the supplier fails to warn adequately of conditions and circumstances created by such assembly or use which would render the product dangerous to the user. Therefore, the supplier is strictly liable for injury proximately resulting from composing and furnishing a set of instructions for assembly and use which does not adequately avoid the danger of injury." (55 C.A.3d 74.) (See 33 A.L.R.4th 368 [liability for failure to warn as dependent on defendant's knowledge of danger].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

74 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

d. Adequacy of Warning.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1476

[§ 1476] Adequacy of Warning.

In Harris v. Belton (1968) 258 C.A.2d 595, 65 C.R. 808, plaintiff, a black woman with excessively dark skin, bought a tube of skin cream widely advertised as a skin lightener. She first gave herself a patch test, knowing of her sensitive skin; then, after experiencing no adverse reaction, she used the cream on several occasions. The result was irritation, burning, and ultimately a darker pigmentation. In this suit against the manufacturer and dealer, the jury's verdict was for defendants. Held, affirmed.

(a) There was no liability on warranty. The product was admittedly safe for at least 98% of the users; and the package, the tube, and the pamphlet used in its sale called attention to allergy and sensitivity, and warned against continued use if irritation appeared. (258 C.A.2d 600.)

(b) There was no strict liability. "Here the injury results from a combination of the ingredients of a product, ordinarily safe for use, and the particular susceptibility of the consumer. Under these circumstances where a proper warning is given, it is not unreasonable to put the burden on the consumer to protect himself." (258 C.A.2d 608.) However, "[n]o opinion is expressed in regard to the situation where the known possibility of serious injury is great, and the sensitive or allergic user, despite the warning, can only determine his susceptibility after use and consequent grave injury has occurred." (258 C.A.2d 609.)

In Persons v. Salomon North America (1990) 217 C.A.3d 168, 265 C.R. 773, plaintiff rented skis from defendant Cornice, a rental shop. Defendant Salomon's 444 bindings were incompatible with the rented thermoplastic ski boots, and plaintiff suffered injuries from a fall. Plaintiff settled with Cornice and brought this action against Salomon. Salomon presented evidence that it had warned Cornice about the incompatibility and had given Cornice instructions on how to recognize and treat thermoplastic boots to avoid the problem. Plaintiff contended, however, that the manufacturer had a duty to warn the ultimate user of the product. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed.

"[W]e hold that Salomon discharged its duty to warn by alerting Cornice to the danger posed by pairing Salomon 444 bindings with untreated thermoplastic ski boots. The evidence is sufficient to establish that Salomon had no feasible means of providing a warning directly to one who rents Salomon bindings from a ski shop. Moreover, a warning to the ultimate user would have been ineffectual because the ordinary user of rental skis and bindings lacks the expertise necessary to understand and apply the requisite warning and, instead, relies on the ski shop technician to provide appropriate equipment with proper safety adjustments. Under the circumstances, Salomon reasonably could rely on the rental shop to notify the ultimate user of the danger and to take steps necessary to avoid the potential harm by properly treating the thermoplastic boots or refusing to rent the bindings to a skier who owns such a boot." (217 C.A.3d 171.)

In Kearl v. Lederle Laboratories (1985) 172 C.A.3d 812, 218 C.R. 453, where plaintiff child contracted polio from taking the Sabin vaccine, defendant had directly warned plaintiff about that risk, and had described the alternative Salk vaccine, stating that it carried no such risk but that most experts feel that it is not as effective in controlling polio. Moreover, the reader was invited to inquire further and ask any questions about polio and polio vaccination. Held, the warning was adequate. (172 C.A.3d 834.)

A number of additional decisions deal with the adequacy of a warning. (See Ramirez v. Plough (1993) 6 C.4th 539, 25 C.R.2d 97, 863 P.2d 167, supra, §1472 [no requirement that nonprescription drug carry warning in Spanish in addition to English]; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 95 C.R. 381 [duty to disclose hazards of drug Enovis was discharged by warnings to prescribing doctors; manufacturer need not undertake virtually impossible task of direct disclosure to patients]; Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 C.A.4th 8, 23, 5 C.R.2d 377 [general warning of problems posed by inflatable penile prosthesis was adequate despite no mention of possibility of continual, painful erection if patient's abdomen was well-muscled]; Plenger v. Alza Corp. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 349, 361, 13 C.R.2d 811 [warning that IUD could cause pelvic infection, without mention that death could result, was adequate; risk of death from infection is universally known risk that need not be warned against]; Schwoerer v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 103, 112, 17 C.R.2d 227 [warning on solvent that mentioned injury from inhalation and dermal exposure, but not risk of vital organ damage, was not adequate]; Huynh v. Ingersoll-Rand (1993) 16 C.A.4th 825, 834, 20 C.R.2d 296, infra, §1531; Bunch v. Hoffinger Industries (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1278, 20 C.R.3d 780 [warning stating no diving in shallow water and containing picture of man making vertical dive was inadequate as applied to child of 11, because it did not state that diving could cause serious injury]; 23 Hastings L. J. 1526 [criticism of ineffective warnings of dangers of birth control pills]; 34 Proof of Facts 3d 239 [failure to provide foreign language or symbolic warning]; 26 A.L.R.4th 377 [admissibility of expert or opinion evidence as to adequacy of warning]; 27 A.L.R.5th 608 [failure to provide warning in foreign language]; 38 A.L.R.5th 683 [presumption or inference that product user would have heeded adequate warning had one been given]; 57 A.L.R.5th 1 ["learned intermediary doctrine" that prescription drug manufacturer or supplier has no duty to warn consumer of drug's dangerous propensities where adequate warning provided to prescribing physician].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.14

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

75 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
3. Failure To Warn.
e. Knowledge or Knowability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1477

[§ 1477] Knowledge or Knowability.

Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 C.3d 987, 281 C.R. 528, 810 P.2d 549, involved the issue "whether a defendant in a products liability action based upon an alleged failure to warn of a risk of harm may present evidence of the state of the art, i.e., evidence that the particular risk was neither known nor knowable by the application of scientific knowledge available at the time of manufacture and/or distribution." (53 C.3d 990.)

Plaintiff sued defendant manufacturers of products containing asbestos, alleging that he contracted asbestosis and other lung ailments through exposure to asbestos products while working as an electrician. The complaint contained a cause of action in strict liability, and defendants' pleadings raised the state-of-the-art defense. The jury returned a verdict for defendants, on a special finding that defendants' products had no design defects. Thereafter the judge granted plaintiff's motion for new trial on two grounds: the evidence did not support the jury's special finding, and the judge erred in precluding proof of liability on a failure to warn theory. Plaintiff urged that knowledge or knowability, and thus state-of-the-art evidence, was irrelevant to strict liability for failure to warn. The Court of Appeal upheld the order granting a new trial, and review was granted. Defendants contended that, if knowledge or knowability is irrelevant in a failure to warn case, the manufacturer's potential liability is absolute, rendering it a virtual insurer. Plaintiff argued that to impose the knowledge or knowability requirement improperly infuses a negligence standard into strict liability. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal affirmed, with directions that the matter be remanded to the trial court for proceedings in accord with the Supreme Court's decision.

(a) Strict liability has been invoked for three types of defects--manufacturing defects, design defects, and warning defects (inadequate warnings or failures to warn). (53 C.3d 995.) California cases on the doctrine of strict liability to date have focused principally on the concept of design defect; "[o]ur task in the case before us is to shape the doctrine insofar as it is applicable to a product whose only defect may be that the manufacturer or distributor failed to warn of inherent dangers." (53 C.3d 995.)

(b) Court of Appeal decisions have recognized that strict liability can be based on the absence of a warning that creates an unreasonable risk to the consumer. (53 C.3d 995, citing and discussing numerous cases and the text.) These cases did not discuss the knowledge or knowability component, although, in accord with the majority view, it "clearly was included as an implicit condition." (53 C.3d 997.)

(c) Only when the danger was "unknowable" did the knowledge component come into focus in the Court of Appeal opinions. (53 C.3d 997, discussing Oakes v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1969) 272 C.A.2d 645, 77 C.R. 709, supra, §1474, and Christofferson v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 75, 92 C.R. 825, supra, §1474.) The issue then came before the Supreme Court in Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 C.3d 691 200 C.R. 870, 677 P.2d 1147, but was not decided. (53 C.3d 998.) However, Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, reversed the authorities and concluded that "a manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug so long as it was properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution." (53 C.3d 999.) Thus, California follows the majority view that knowledge, actual or constructive, is a requisite for strict liability for failure to warn. (53 C.3d 1000.)

(d) The issue in the present case is whether the requirement applies to failure to warn in cases other than those involving prescription drugs, and Vermeulen v. Superior Court (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1192, 251 C.R. 805, supra, §1467, correctly holds that it does. (53 C.3d 991, 1000.)

(e) The proponents of the minority rule argue that the knowability requirement and admission of state-of-the-art evidence improperly infuse negligence concepts into strict liability cases by directing the trier of fact's attention to the conduct of the manufacturer or distributor rather than to the condition of the product. "However, the claim that a particular component 'rings of' or 'sounds in' negligence has not precluded its acceptance in the context of strict liability." (53 C.3d 1001, discussing Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163, supra, §1465, and Barker v. Lull Engineering Co. (1978) 20 C.3d 413, 143 C.R. 225, 573 P.2d 443, supra, §1455.)

(f) "As these cases illustrate, the strict liability doctrine has incorporated some well-settled rules from the law of negligence and has survived judicial challenges asserting that such incorporation violates the fundamental principles of the doctrine. It may also be true that the 'warning defect' theory is 'rooted in negligence' to a greater extent than are the manufacturing--or design-defect theories. The 'warning defect' relates to a failure extraneous to the product itself. Thus, while a manufacturing or design defect can be evaluated without reference to the conduct of the manufacturer ... the giving of a warning cannot. The latter necessarily requires the communicating of something to someone. How can one warn of something that is unknowable? If every product that has no warning were defective per se and for that reason subject to strict liability, the mere fact of injury by an unlabelled product would automatically permit recovery. That is not, and has never been, the purpose and goal of the failure to warn theory of strict liability. Further, if a warning automatically precluded liability in every case, a manufacturer or distributor could easily escape liability with overly broad, and thus practically useless, warnings." (53 C.3d 1002.)

(g) "We therefore reject the contention that every reference to a feature shared with theories of negligence can serve to defeat limitations on the doctrine of strict liability. Furthermore, despite its roots in negligence, failure to warn in strict liability differs markedly from failure to warn in the negligence context. Negligence law in a failure to warn case requires a plaintiff to prove that a manufacturer or distributor did not warn of a particular risk for reasons which fell below the acceptable standard of care, i.e., what a reasonably prudent manufacturer would have known and warned about. Strict liability is not concerned with the standard of due care or the reasonableness of a manufacturer's conduct. The rules of strict liability require a plaintiff to prove only that the defendant did not adequately warn of a particular risk that was known or knowable in light of the generally recognized and prevailing best scientific and medical knowledge available at the time of manufacture and distribution. Thus, in strict liability, as opposed to negligence, the reasonableness of the defendant's failure to warn is immaterial." (53 C.3d 1002.)

(h) "Stated another way, a reasonably prudent manufacturer might reasonably decide that the risk of harm was such as not to require a warning as, for example, if the manufacturer's own testing showed a result contrary to that of others in the scientific community. Such a manufacturer might escape liability under negligence principles. In contrast, under strict liability principles the manufacturer has no such leeway; the manufacturer is liable if it failed to give warning of dangers that were known to the scientific community at the time it manufactured or distributed the product. Whatever may be reasonable from the point of view of the manufacturer, the user of the product must be given the option either to refrain from using the product at all or to use it in such a way as to minimize the degree of danger." (53 C.3d 1003.)

One justice dissented. (53 C.3d 1005.)

The Anderson analysis was reaffirmed in Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 C.4th 1104, 56 C.R.2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant drug manufacturer for injuries allegedly sustained from side effects of the sleeping pill Halcion, which was prescribed by her physician for several years. Plaintiff claimed that defendant was strictly liable for failure to warn of these known side effects. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff petitioned for mandamus. The Court of Appeal issued the writ, directing the trial judge to overrule the demurrer. Held, affirmed.

(a) Prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn. In Anderson, an asbestos case, the court held that manufacturers generally are strictly liable for injuries caused by their failure to warn of dangers known to the scientific community at the time they manufacture and distribute products. There is no sound reason to reject the Anderson strict liability standard in prescription drug cases. California courts have expressly and repeatedly applied a strict liability standard to prescription drug manufacturers for failure to warn of "known or reasonably scientifically knowable" risks. The court merely reaffirms these precedents here. (13 C.4th 1110.)

(b) Knowledge or knowability requirement. Strict liability is not absolute liability; it is not intended to make the manufacturer or distributor of a product its insurer. Actual or constructive knowledge of potential risk or danger is required before strict liability for failure to warn may be imposed. (13 C.4th 1110.) This requirement applies to all products, including prescription drugs. (13 C.4th 1111.)

(c) Strict and negligence liabilities compared. Although Anderson, following Brown, incorporated certain negligence concepts into the standard of strict liability for failure to warn, it did not thereby adopt a simple negligence test. Negligence law in a failure to warn case requires a plaintiff to prove that a manufacturer or distributor did not warn of a particular risk for reasons that fell below the acceptable standard of care. Strict liability is not concerned with the standard of due care or the reasonableness of a defendant's conduct. The rules of strict liability require a plaintiff to prove only that the defendant did not adequately warn of a particular risk that was known or knowable in light of the generally recognized and prevailing best scientific and medical knowledge available at the time of manufacture and distribution. (13 C.4th 1112.)

(d) Effect of FDA regulation. The need to comply with Food and Drug Administration regulations and labeling requirements does not preclude application of Anderson to prescription drugs. As numerous courts have concluded, Congress has evinced no intention of preempting state tort liability for injuries from prescription drugs. This does not mean, however, that FDA regulations are irrelevant in a common law action for failure to warn. In appropriate cases, FDA action or inaction, though not dispositive, may be admissible to show whether a risk was known or reasonably scientifically knowable. (13 C.4th 1113.)

(e) Overlabeling concerns. Defendant's assertion that applying strict liability to claims of injury for failure to warn will inevitably result in manufacturers of prescription drugs inundating consumers with warnings of speculative risks is unpersuasive. The application of the failure to warn theory to drugs requires determinations whether available evidence established a causal link between an alleged side effect and the drug, whether any warning should have been given, and, if so, whether the warning was adequate. Thus, the risk must be one that, in light of accepted scientific norms, is more than merely speculative or conjectural. (13 C.4th 1116.) In the case of prescription drugs, the duty to warn runs to the physician, not to the patient. There is no duty by a drug manufacturer to insure that the warning reaches the patient for whom the drug is prescribed. Nor is the manufacturer required to warn of a risk known to the medical community. (13 C.4th 1116.)

(f) Public policy considerations. Likewise unpersuasive is defendant's argument, purportedly derived from the court's reasoning in Brown, that manufacturers of prescription drugs should be exempt from the strict liability duty to warn, because they might otherwise refrain from developing and marketing drugs. Brown, though a prescription drug case, involved strict liability for design defects. Unlike strict liability for design defects, strict liability for failure to warn does not potentially subject drug manufacturers to liability for product flaws that they have not, and could not have, discovered. The manufacturer should bear the costs, in terms of preventable injury or death, of its own failure to provide adequate warnings. (13 C.4th 1117.) (See McKinney v. Revlon (1992) 2 C.A.4th 602, 607, 3 C.R. 72; Valentine v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (1999) 68 C.A.4th 1467, 1484, 81 C.R.2d 252, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, Supp., §352; 23 Pacific L. J. 1992; 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 846.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.9

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Johnson v. American Standard (2008) 43 C.4th 56, 71, 74 C.R.3d 108, 179 P.3d 905, Supp., supra, §1174A

[sophisticated user defense, which exempts manufacturers from duty to provide sophisticated users with warnings about product hazards, is applicable to strict liability causes of action]. Valentine case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §343.

76 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

3. Failure To Warn.

f. Postsale Failure To Warn.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1478

[§ 1478] Postsale Failure To Warn.

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430) provides that one engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products is subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by its failure to provide a warning after the time of sale or distribution "if a reasonable person in the seller's position would provide such a warning." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §10(a).)

A reasonable person in the seller's position would provide a warning after the time of sale if all of the following circumstances exist (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §10(b)):

(1) The seller knows or reasonably should know that the product poses a substantial risk of harm to persons or property.

(2) Those to whom a warning might be provided can be identified and can reasonably be assumed to be unaware of the risk of harm.

(3) A warning can be effectively communicated to and acted on by those to whom a warning might be provided.

(4) The risk of harm is sufficiently great to justify the burden of providing a warning.

This duty to warn exists whether or not the product is defective at the time of the original sale within the meaning of other sections of the Restatement. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §10, Comment a; on what is defective product under the Third Restatement, see supra, §1435.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

77 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
4. Failure To Recall Product.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1479

[§ 1479] Failure To Recall Product.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (supra, §1430), one engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products may be subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by the seller's failure to recall a product after the time of sale or distribution. The duty arises in either of the following circumstances (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §11(a)):

(1) A governmental directive issued pursuant to a statute or administrative regulation specifically requires the seller or distributor to recall the product.

(2) The seller or distributor, in the absence of a recall requirement, undertakes to recall the product.

Liability then accrues if the seller or distributor fails to act as a reasonable person in recalling the product. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §11(b).)

Liability for postsale failure to recall must be distinguished from liability for the sale or other distribution of defective products. When a product is defective at the time of sale and the defect causes harm, the seller is subject to liability whether or not the seller attempts to eliminate the defect by postsale recall. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §11, Comment d.) (On duty to recall defective product and breach of duty as form of negligence, see 42 Stanf. L. Rev. 103.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

78 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

1. Manufacturer: In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1480

[§ 1480] Manufacturer: In General.

The manufacturer's strict liability was established in Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comment f; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.28; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §570; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §375; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 304 [products liability of small capital goods manufacturer]; 33 San Diego L. Rev. 385 [strict liability of nondesigning manufacturer for design defect]; 33 Stanf. L. Rev. 1087 [manufacturer's duty to notify of subsequent safety improvements]; 49 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1099 [imposition of products liability on trademark owners]; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1088 [strict liability in tort]; 51 A.L.R.3d 1344 [identification of defendant as manufacturer or seller of product alleged to have caused injury]; 47 A.L.R.5th 395 [manufacturer's postsale obligation to modify, repair, or recall product].)

The rule has been broadly applied:

(1) A manufacturer is liable even though the defective part was supplied by someone else. "Since liability is strict it encompasses defects regardless of their source, and therefore a manufacturer of a completed product cannot escape liability by tracing the defect to a component part supplied by another." (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 261, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168.)

(2) A manufacturer is liable, despite an attempt to delegate assembling, adjustment, and inspection processes to dealers. (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co., supra, 61 C.2d 261 ["[s]ince Ford, as the manufacturer of the completed product, cannot delegate its duty to have its cars delivered to the ultimate purchaser free from dangerous defects, it cannot escape liability on the ground that the defect in Vandermark's car may have been caused by something one of its authorized dealers did or failed to do".])

(3) A manufacturer may be liable even where the product is made in accordance with the owner's plans. (Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver (1979) 97 C.A.3d 890, 894, 896, 159 C.R. 119.)

(4) A manufacturer may be liable to his or her injured employee, where the product was not only used in the employer's manufacturing, but was also sold to the public. (Douglas v. E. & J. Gallo Winery (1977) 69 C.A.3d 103, 113, 137 C.R. 797, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §48.)

(5) A successor who acquires the assets of the manufacturer may be liable. (See infra, §1481.)

In ordinary cases, the plaintiff must be able to identify the manufacturer of the defective product. In Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 868, 148 C.R. 843, plaintiff, participating in a fencing meet as a member of his college team, received an injury to his eye when his opponent's sabre broke through plaintiff's fencing mask. He sued American as the alleged manufacturer of the sabre and Vince as the manufacturer of the mask. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed.

(a) There was evidence that the sabre blade was improperly thin and sharp, hence, that it was a defective product. But there was no evidence as to which manufacturer--American or Vince--supplied it; hence, a basic element of the cause of action--that the product was manufactured by the defendant, was lacking. (84 C.A.3d 874.)

(b) Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, is distinguishable. In that case, both defendants were negligent, and the burden of proof on causation shifted to them. Here, plaintiff failed to prove that either defendant violated a duty to him, i.e., by producing the defective product. (84 C.A.3d 875, citing federal district court case on point, distinguishing Summers v. Tice.) (For exception where fungible goods are involved, see infra, §1486.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.24

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.28.

79 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

2. Manufacturer: Successor Corporations.

aa. Liability Where Assets Are Acquired.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1481

[§ 1481] Liability Where Assets Are Acquired.

(1) Alad Case. In Schwartz v. McGraw-Edison Co. (1971) 14 C.A.3d 767, 781, 92 C.R. 776, and Ortiz v. South Bend Lathe (1975) 46 C.A.3d 842, 846, 120 C.R. 556, the courts, in products liability actions, followed the general rule that, after a sale of assets in good faith for an adequate consideration, the successor corporation is not liable for the obligations of the former corporation. (See 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §17.) The rule as applied to products liability was criticized (see 27 Hastings L. J. 1305), and was repudiated in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 C.3d 22, 136 C.R. 574, 560 P.2d 3, disapproving contrary language in Schwartz and Ortiz (19 C.3d 34).

Alad I was a corporation that manufactured ladders. The business was acquired by Alad II, a corporation, which continued it in the same way, using the same equipment, designs, and personnel, and soliciting Alad I's customers through the same sales representatives, with no outward indication of any change in the ownership of the business. Plaintiff was injured in a fall from a defective ladder sold by Alad I. The injury occurred, however, after the transfer of the business, and plaintiff brought a strict products liability suit against Alad II. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Rule of no liability of successor corporation. Generally, "the purchaser does not assume the seller's liabilities unless (1) there is an express or implied agreement of assumption, (2) the transaction amounts to a consolidation or merger of the two corporations, (3) the purchasing corporation is a mere continuation of the seller, or (4) the transfer of assets to the purchaser is for the fraudulent purpose of escaping liability for the seller's debts." (19 C.3d 28.) None of these exceptional grounds appeared: The purchase was for adequate consideration, and there was no showing of continuation of officers, directors, or stockholders. (19 C.3d 29.)

(b) Special exception for strict products liability. Just as the policy supporting federal labor law may call for imposing obligations to employees on a successor corporation, the policies underlying strict products liability require an exception in this kind of case. "Justification for imposing strict liability upon a successor to a manufacturer under the circumstances here presented rests upon (1) the virtual destruction of the plaintiff's remedies against the original manufacturer caused by the successor's acquisition of the business, (2) the successor's ability to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role, and (3) the fairness of requiring the successor to assume a responsibility for defective products that was a burden necessarily attached to the original manufacturer's goodwill being enjoyed by the successor in the continued operation of the business." (19 C.3d 31.) Each of these factors applies here:

(1) The injury took place more than 6 months after the dissolution of Alad I, and plaintiff, with a claim against a dissolved and assetless corporation, would face insuperable obstacles in attempting to obtain satisfaction from former stockholders or directors. (19 C.3d 32.) Any products liability insurance is usually limited to occurrences while the policy is in effect. (19 C.3d 32.) The products liability claimant is in an entirely different position from a creditor with a claim capable of being known at the time of dissolution. (19 C.3d 32.) And even if a solvent retail dealer could be sued, he or she would be cut off from an indemnity claim against the manufacturer. (19 C.3d 33.)

(2) Alad II acquired all the resources formerly available to Alad I for meeting its responsibilities to persons injured by defective ladders that it had produced; these resources included the plant, equipment, inventories, and know-how. Alad II also had the opportunity of passing on to purchasers of new products the costs of meeting the risks of defective products. (19 C.3d 33.)

(3) Alad II acquired its predecessor's trade name, goodwill, and customer lists, and held itself out as the same enterprise. This legitimate exploitation of Alad I's reputation gave Alad II a substantial benefit that its predecessor could not have enjoyed without the burden of potential liability for injuries from previously manufactured units. Imposing liability on the successor also precludes a windfall to the predecessor--an enhanced price paid by the successor for the assets because of the absence of any liability for existing defective products. (19 C.3d 34.) (For rule applied to distributor, see infra, §1499.)

(2) Subsequent Decisions. In SCM Corp. v. Berkel (1977) 73 C.A.3d 49, 140 C.R. 559, the predecessor corporation, a manufacturer of food processing equipment, sold part of its line of business to the successor corporation. The contract specified that the successor "agrees to assume all liabilities, obligations, contracts, orders for purchase of material and warranties of First Party." H was injured when operating a meat grinder that was no longer manufactured, and sued both corporations on strict products liability. Cross-complaints raised the issue of which party was obligated to satisfy any judgment that might be rendered in the personal injury action and therefore was required to defend that action at its own expense. Held, the trial judge's interpretation of the contract, as imposing the entire burden on the successor corporation, was supported by the evidence. (73 C.A.3d 59.) (See Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver (1979) 97 C.A.3d 890, 159 C.R. 119 [under Alad, successor corporation may be liable even where product was not mass-produced, and successor did not continue identical product line]; Lundell v. Sidney Machine Tool Co. (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1546, 1551, 1557, 236 C.R. 70; Quemetco v. Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 494, 501, 29 C.R.2d 627 [product-line successor liability rule was inapplicable to transfer insurance policy from predecessor corporation to corporation that had bought its assets and was being sued for hazardous waste pollution]; Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1218, 1223, footnote 1, 63 C.R.2d 422; General Acc. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1444, 1449, 64 C.R.2d 781; Petrini v. Mohasco Corp. (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1091, 1094, 71 C.R.2d 910 [where two corporations merged, surviving corporation was responsible for all liabilities of merged corporation, both known and unknown, even though merged corporation had no assets at time of merger]; Rosales v. Thermex-Thermatron (1998) 67 C.A.4th 187, 193, 78 C.R.2d 861; Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 C.A.4th 962, 969, 81 C.R.2d 871; Westoil Terminals Co. v. Harbor Ins. Co. (1999) 73 C.A.4th 634, 638, 86 C.R.2d 636 [change of form of ownership from corporate to limited partnership, with same operations, same name, same equity interests, and identical control, constituted de facto merger]; Franklin v. USX Corp. (2001) 87 C.A.4th 615, 627, 105 C.R.2d 11 [refusal to extend Alad product-line exception beyond arena of products liability]; Fisher v. Allis-Chalmers Corp. Product Liab. Trust (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1182, 1185, 116 C.R.2d 310 [successor was liable where transfer agreement stated that successor assumed all liabilities arising from predecessor's business, and did not expressly exclude products liability claims]; Henkel Corp. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (2003) 29 C.4th 934, 941, 129 C.R.2d 828, 62 P.3d 69 [plaintiff successor corporation was sued for injuries arising from predecessor's business, which had been acquired from preexisting corporation; plaintiff's liability for injuries caused by preexisting corporation arose from contract and was not imposed by operation of law].)

(3) Restatement 3d. Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (supra, §1430), a successor corporation or other business entity that acquires assets of a predecessor corporation or other business entity is subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by a defective product sold or otherwise distributed commercially by the predecessor in any of the following circumstances (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §12):

- (a) The acquisition is accompanied by an agreement[<] for the successor to assume the liability.[>]
- (b) The acquisition results from a fraudulent conveyance to escape liability for the debts or liabilities of the predecessor.
- (c) The acquisition constitutes a consolidation or merger with the predecessor.
- (d) The acquisition results in the successor becoming a continuation of the predecessor.

Lacking these circumstances, a successor company that buys productive assets from another company is not liable for harm caused by a defective product sold or distributed by the predecessor prior to the successor's acquisition of the assets. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §12, Comment c.)

(4) Commentary and Practice Works. (See 15 Cal. Western L. Rev. 338; 10 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 584; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 556; 13 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1000; 32 A.L.R.4th 196 [effect of form of business on successor's liability]; 46 Proof of Facts 2d 313 [products liability where of business enterprise or product line discontinued by successor corporation]; 47 Proof of Facts 2d 293 [products liability where business successor fails to warn of defect in predecessor's product]; 92 A.L.R.5th 227 [successor corporation's liability for injury or damage from product produced by predecessor, based on successor's independent duty to warn third party of danger or defect]; 109 A.L.R.5th 301 [liability of successor corporation for injury or damage from predecessor's product, based on merger or consolidation of corporations]; 112 A.L.R.5th 113 [liability of successor corporation for injury or damage from predecessor's product, based on agreement to assume liability or where transfer was fraudulent, in bad faith, or without adequate consideration].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Commentary and Practice Works. See 118 Harv. L. Rev. 2357 [successor liability in mass tort cases]; 13 A.L.R.6th 355 [mere continuation or continuity of enterprise exceptions to nonliability of successor corporation for injury or damage caused by product issued by predecessor]; 18 A.L.R.6th 629 [liability of successor corporation for injury or damage caused by product issued by predecessor, based on "product line" successor liability]; 98 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [products liability where business successor fails to warn of defect in predecessor's product; superseding 47 Proof of Facts 2d 293, text, p. 924].

80 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
 C. Strict Products Liability.
 5. Scope of Liability.
 a. Persons Liable.
 2. Manufacturer: Successor Corporations.
 bb. Distinction: Acquisition of Capital Stock.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1482

[§ 1482] Distinction: Acquisition of Capital Stock.

In Potlatch Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 154 C.A.3d 1144, 201 C.R. 750, Speedspace Corp. a division of Summer Bell, manufactured glue-laminated wood beams. Some of these beams were purchased for construction of a roof that collapsed and caused damage to an automobile dealership. Royal Insurance, the dealer's insurer, paid large sums in settlement of claims arising from the collapse, and brought this subrogation action to recoup its losses on the theory of strict products liability. However, after the purchase, Potlatch Corp. acquired 100% of the outstanding stock of Speedspace, which thereupon became a wholly owned subsidiary of Potlatch, but continued to manufacture the beams under the same division name (Summer Bell) at the same plant and with the same personnel. In December 1978, Speedspace was dissolved and the plant and equipment were liquidated; i.e., Potlatch did not take over the business. The collapse of the roof occurred in January 1979, and Royal Insurance filed its action against Potlatch. The trial judge granted summary judgment for plaintiff on the basis of Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 C.3d 22, 136 C.R. 574, 560 P.2d 3, supra, §1481. Held, mandamus granted to compel vacating that order and entering an order granting Potlatch's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff argued that Alad should govern despite the fact that Potlatch did not purchase and incorporate in its own business the physical assets of Speedspace; i.e., that the acquisition of the capital stock was a matter of form only, not substance. This analysis is unsound, and Alad is distinguishable.

(a) When Potlatch acquired only the capital stock of Speedspace, it became only a shareholder, and a shareholder owns no part of the property of the corporation. Moreover, after the acquisition, it was Speedspace that carried on the business until its liquidation 11 years afterwards. (154 C.A.3d 1150, 1151.)

(b) The assets of Speedspace remained exactly the same after Potlatch acquired the stock, and those assets remained available to answer for damages resulting from injuries caused by defective products previously manufactured by it. When Speedspace was dissolved, Potlatch did not acquire the plant and equipment and did not continue the business. (154 C.A.3d 1151.)

(c) When Speedspace was dissolved, Potlatch received the net value of Speedspace's assets, but only as a sole shareholder; and a shareholder is not liable for debts of the corporation. It was immaterial that the shareholder happened to be another corporation, i.e., that the dissolved corporation was a wholly owned subsidiary. (154 C.A.3d 1151.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

81 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

2. Manufacturer: Successor Corporations.

cc. Distinction: Negligence Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1483

[§ 1483] Distinction: Negligence Action.

In Maloney v. American Pharmaceutical Co. (1988) 207 C.A.3d 282, 255 C.R. 1, plaintiff's mother had taken the prescription drug diethylstilbestrol (DES) while pregnant, and this action was brought against defendant (APC II) for resulting injuries to plaintiff and plaintiff's minor son. The drug had been manufactured by APC I, which ran into financial difficulties and went out of business. W, its president, formed a new corporation, defendant APC II, which purchased the leftover bottles, labels, and goods from the liquidating creditor for $ 32,500, and also paid $ 500 for the right to use the name, goodwill, patents, and trademarks of APC I. The property thus acquired by APC II constituted about 10% of APC I's total liquidated assets. However, APC II did not acquire any of APC I's machinery, equipment, buildings, inventory, stock, or accounts receivable; and APC II never used any of the premises formerly occupied by APC I. Moreover, APC II does not make or sell prescription drugs and has never made, sold, or owned any DES. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, supra, §1471, held that a manufacturer of prescription drugs is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a design defect neither known nor knowable when it was distributed. Hence, plaintiffs' theory was that APC II was liable as a successor to APC I for negligent manufacture. (207 C.A.3d 286.)

(b) The characteristics of successor liability are stated in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 C.3d 22, 136 C.R. 574, 560 P.2d 3, supra, §1481, and plaintiffs made a showing of two: APC II held itself out to customers and the public as a continuation of the enterprise conducted by APC I, and W, former president of APC I, became president of APC II. (207 C.A.3d 288.) But essential ingredients are missing: (1) The transfer was not for an inadequate consideration; adequacy of the consideration recited was not challenged. (2) The purchase of 10% of APC's assets was not the acquisition of its principal assets. (3) There was no direct sale of assets from the predecessor corporation to the successor corporation; the transfer was from a creditor that had taken over the predecessor's assets. (4) There was no continuity of employees; only a single officer of APC I became an officer of APC II. (207 C.A.3d 287, 288.)

(c) Apart from the absence of essential ingredients of successor liability under Alad, that decision was expressly limited to cases in which strict products liability was the theory of recovery. (207 C.A.3d 289, citing the text.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
2. Manufacturer: Successor Corporations.
dd. Distinction: Acquisition Through Bankruptcy.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1484

[§ 1484] Distinction: Acquisition Through Bankruptcy.

In Stewart v. Telex Communications (1991) 1 C.A.4th 190, 1 C.R.2d 669, a manufacturer of radio antennas declared bankruptcy, and most of its assets were purchased from the trustee in bankruptcy by defendant. Six years later plaintiff was injured while installing an antenna that had been sold by the manufacturer prior to declaring bankruptcy. Plaintiff then brought a products liability action against defendant on a successor corporation theory. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that the exception to the general rule of successor nonliability established in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 C.3d 22, 136 C.R. 574, 560 P.2d 3, supra, §1481, should be applied here, because this case was identical to Alad, except for the "insignificant" distinction that defendant here purchased the assets through the intermediary of the bankruptcy court rather than directly. Plaintiff is correct in his assertion that Alad should not be construed so narrowly as to be applied only to cases that are its virtual factual clones. (1 C.A.4th 196, citing Rawlings v. D. M. Oliver (1979) 97 C.A.3d 890, 159 C.R. 119, supra, §1481). However, his conclusion that the distinction is insignificant is incorrect. (1 C.A.4th 200.)

(b) One of the justifications noted in Alad for creating the exception is that the successor's acquisition of the assets causes the plaintiff's loss of remedies against the original manufacturer. And later decisions have emphasized the importance of this element of causation. (1 C.A.4th 197, citing Kaminski v. Western MacArthur Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 445, 220 C.R. 895, infra, §1499, Lundell v. Sidney Machine Tool Co. (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1546, 236 C.R. 70, Phillips v. Cooper Laboratories (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1648, 264 C.R. 311, and other-state and federal decisions.)

(c) Under these decisions, a causation element is necessary to ensure that a plaintiff does not actually gain a "windfall defendant" who would not otherwise be available. "Moreover, in the bankruptcy context, the policy in favor of discharge of debt in bankruptcy could be inhibited by a holding that assets of the bankrupt could be infected with the bankrupt's inchoate and unknown tort liability, since a reluctance on the part of purchasers would be certain to exist unless the value of the bankrupt's assets were further discounted." (1 C.A.4th 200.)

(d) Here, the causation element was not satisfied. The cause of plaintiff's loss of remedies was the manufacturer's voluntary bankruptcy, rather than defendant's purchase of the assets. And there was no showing that the bankruptcy was a mere subterfuge to avoid the holding of Alad. (1 C.A.4th 200.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

83 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

2. Manufacturer: Successor Corporations.

ee. Liability for Failure To Warn.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1485

[§ 1485] Liability for Failure To Warn.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (supra, §1430), a successor corporation or other business entity that acquires assets of a predecessor corporation or other business entity is subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by the successor's failure to warn of a risk created by a product sold or distributed by the predecessor if both of the following conditions exist (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §13(a)):

(1) The successor undertakes or agrees to provide services for maintenance or repair of the product or enters into a similar relationship with purchasers of the predecessor's products giving rise to actual or potential economic advantage to the successor.

(2) A reasonable person in the position of the successor would provide a warning.

A reasonable person in the position of the successor would thus provide a warning if all of the following are present (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §13(b)):

(1) The successor knows or reasonably should know that the product poses a substantial risk of harm to persons or property.

(2) Those to whom a warning might be provided can be identified and can reasonably be assumed to be unaware of the risk of harm.

(3) A warning can be effectively communicated to and acted on by those to whom a warning might be provided.

(4) The risk of harm is sufficiently great to justify the burden of providing a warning. (On liability for failure to warn generally, see supra, §1467.)

Liability under §13 is similar to liability under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §10 (supra, §1478), in which a seller is liable for harm caused by breach of a postsale duty to warn even if the product was not defective at the time of original sale. Unlike the product seller there, the successor governed by §13 does not manufacture or sell the defective product. However, by virtue of succeeding to the predecessor's interests, the successor is often in a good position to learn of problems arising from use of the predecessor's product and to prevent harm to persons or property. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §13, Comment a.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.14, 24

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 98 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [products liability where business successor fails to warn of defect in predecessor's product].

84 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
3. Manufacturer: Unidentified Maker of Fungible Goods.
aa. DES Case.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1486

[§ 1486] DES Case.

In Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, plaintiff brought a class action against named drug companies and Does 1 through 100, who were manufacturers of diethylstilbestrol (DES; a synthetic compound of estrogen) between 1941 and 1971 (the date the FDA ordered that marketing cease). The complaint alleged that DES, administered to pregnant women to prevent miscarriage, may cause several kinds of serious cancers in the daughters borne by these women; that during the period of marketing defendants knew or should have known of the dangers, but failed to test the drug for efficacy and safety, and failed to warn of its experimental nature and potential danger; and that plaintiff's mother took the drug, and plaintiff developed cancers requiring surgery and involving future complications. Compensatory damages of $ 1 million and punitive damages of $ 10 million were sought for plaintiff herself; for the class (other women similarly situated) the complaint sought equitable relief: warnings by defendants of the danger and need for testing, and establishment of free clinics in California for those tests.

Plaintiff conceded that she was unable to identify the manufacturer of the drug ingested by her mother, but attempted to overcome the lack of causation defense by alleging that defendants collaborated in marketing, promoting, and testing the drug, relied on each other's tests, and followed an industry-wide safety standard; and that DES was produced from a common and mutually agreed upon formula as a fungible drug interchangeable with other brands of the same product, and defendants knew or should have known that doctors prescribed it by its generic name and pharmacists filled prescriptions from any brand that was stocked.

The court stated the issue as follows: "[M]ay a plaintiff, injured as the result of a drug administered to her mother during pregnancy, who knows the type of drug involved but cannot identify the manufacturer of the precise product, hold liable for her injuries a maker of a drug produced from an identical formula?" (26 C.3d 593.) Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed; the complaint stated a cause of action.

(a) Background of DES litigation. A number of similar actions have been brought in the United States, based on evidence that from 1 to 3 million women took the drug and hundreds or perhaps thousands of daughters suffer from resulting cancers. Cases that have been decided, including McCreery v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 77, 150 C.R.

730, have denied recovery. (26 C.3d 597.)

(b) Established tort principle precluding recovery. Existing law requires that the plaintiff show that the injuries were caused by an act of the defendant or by an instrumentality under his or her control. (26 C.3d 597.) But exceptions have been recognized, and are here examined: Three are rejected and a fourth is accepted.

(1) First rejected exception: Summers v. Tice or "alternative liability." Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, relying in part on Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 C.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, supra, §1194, held that the plaintiff's inability to identify the defendant who caused his or her injury required a shifting of the burden of proof to the defendants to show that they were not responsible for the harm. (26 C.3d 598.) The Summers theory was adopted by Rest.2d, Torts §433B(3). (26 C.3d 599.) But Summers is distinguishable and not controlling here. Although Summers suggested that "ordinarily" defendants are in a better position to offer evidence on causation, this was not stated as a condition to shifting the burden of proof. Here, the circumstances make it impossible for either plaintiff or defendants to identify the manufacturer, for defendants sell to wholesalers who supply the product to doctors and pharmacies, and defendants do not maintain records of persons who take the drugs. (26 C.3d 601, distinguishing Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.2d 756, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465, supra, §1195.) But the fact that defendants do not have greater access to the essential information does not preclude application of the Summers theory. (26 C.3d 602.) In Summers, all the parties who could have been responsible for the harm were joined as defendants, and there was a 50% chance that one of them was responsible. Here, the possibility that one of the five defendants (out of 200 manufacturers) supplied the drug is so remote that it would be unfair to require each defendant to exonerate itself. (26 C.3d 603.)

(2) Second rejected exception: concert of action. The second principle upon which plaintiff relies is the so-called concert of action theory of Rest.2d, Torts §876 (see supra, §44). This principle calls for a common design or substantial participation in accomplishing the tortious result. (26 C.3d 604.) The complaint, however, does not show either a tacit understanding or common design. It alleges that defendants produced DES from an agreed formula, allowing pharmacists to treat it as a fungible commodity; but the formula is a scientific constant, and the complaint merely charges parallel or imitative conduct in which manufacturers relied on each others' testing and promotion methods--a common practice in industry. Application of the concert of action theory to this situation would render virtually any manufacturer liable for the defective products of an industry, even if it could be demonstrated that the defendant did not make the product that caused the injury. (26 C.3d 605.)

(3) Third rejected exception: enterprise liability. This theory was suggested in Hall v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1972) 345 F. Supp. 353: 13 children injured by explosions of blasting caps in 12 separate incidents in 10 different states between 1955 and 1959 sued six blasting cap manufacturers comprising virtually the entire industry and their trade association. Although the holding was unclear, the court stressed the facts of industry-wide standards and a small number of units, and observed that its view might be unreasonable if applied to a decentralized industry composed of many producers. (26 C.3d 607.) A commentator explains that under this theory the industry-wide standard "becomes itself the cause of plaintiff's injury, just as defendants' joint plan is the cause of injury in the traditional concert of action plea." (26 C.3d 609.) This theory is untenable: The Hall opinion cautions against applying the doctrine to a large number of producers, and the standards followed by drug manufacturers are suggested or compelled by the Food and Drug Administration. (26 C.3d 609.) "[S]ince the government plays such a pervasive role in formulating the criteria for the testing and marketing of drugs, it would be unfair to impose upon a manufacturer liability for injuries resulting from the use of a drug which it did not supply simply because it followed the standards of the industry." (26 C.3d 610.)

(c) Acceptable theory: fungible goods extension of Summers doctrine.

(1) Necessity of finding theory of recovery. If plaintiff were required to identify the manufacturer, there would be no chance of recovery, for there is little likelihood that all the manufacturers are still in business or subject to the jurisdiction of California courts. However, "[I]n our contemporary complex industrialized society, advances in science and technology create fungible goods which may harm consumers and which cannot be traced to any specific producer. The response of the courts can be either to adhere rigidly to prior doctrine, denying recovery to those injured by such products, or to fashion remedies to meet these changing needs. Just as Justice Traynor in his landmark concurring opinion in Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Fresno ... recognized that in an era of mass production and complex marketing methods the traditional standard of negligence was insufficient to govern the obligations of manufacturer to consumer, so should we acknowledge that some adaptation of the rules of causation and liability may be appropriate in these recurring circumstances. The Restatement comments that modification of the Summers rule may be necessary in a situation like that before us." (26 C.3d 610.) (On Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Fresno (1944) 24 C.2d 453, 150 P.2d 436, see supra, §1429.)

(2) Reasons for adopting fungible goods theory. "The most persuasive reason" is that advanced in Summers: as between an innocent plaintiff and negligent defendants the latter should bear the cost of the injury. (26 C.3d 610.) "From a broader policy standpoint, defendants are better able to bear the cost of injury resulting from the manufacture of a defective product." (26 C.3d 611.) The manufacturer is in the best position to discover and guard against defects and warn of harmful effects; holding it liable for defects and failure to warn will provide an incentive to product safety. (26 C.3d 611.) These considerations are particularly significant where medication is involved, for the consumer is virtually helpless to protect himself or herself. (26 C.3d 611.)

(d) Rule adopted: modification of Summers.

(1) Market share. An undiluted Summers rationale is inappropriate, because there is a possibility that none of the five defendants produced the offending substance. But "we hold it to be reasonable in the present context to measure the likelihood that any of the defendants supplied the product which allegedly injured plaintiff by the percentage which the DES sold by each ... bears to the entire production of the drug sold by all." If plaintiff is able to establish at trial (as she claims) that the 5 or 6 companies produced 90% of the DES marketed, "there is a corresponding likelihood that this comparative handful of producers manufactured the DES which caused plaintiff's injuries, and only a 10 percent likelihood that the offending producer would escape liability." (26 C.3d 612.) Joining the manufacturers of a substantial share of the defective product significantly diminishes the injustice of shifting the burden of proof. (26 C.3d 612.)

(2) Apportionment of damages. The fact of a substantial share of the market also provides a ready means to apportion damages: "Each defendant will be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market unless it demonstrates that it could not have made the product which caused plaintiff's injuries." (26 C.3d 612.) And the joined defendants may cross-complain against other DES manufacturer "which they can allege might have supplied the injury-causing product." (26 C.3d 612.) Under this approach, each manufacturer's liability would approximate its responsibility for the injuries caused by its own products. Some minor discrepancy in the correlation between market value and liability is inevitable, and it is probably impossible to determine market share exactly. "But just as a jury cannot be expected to determine the precise relationship between fault and liability in applying the doctrine of comparative fault ... or partial indemnity ... , the difficulty of apportioning damages among the defendant producers in exact relation to their market share does not seriously militate against the rule we adopt. As we said in Summers ... , where a correct division of liability cannot be made 'the trier of fact may make it the best it can.' " (26 C.3d 613.) The practical problems involved in defining the market and determining market share are largely matters of proof that cannot be determined at the pleading stage. (26 C.3d 613.)

One justice wrote a lengthy dissent. (26 C.3d 614.) (For cases distinguishing Snidell, see Kennedy v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (1996) 43 C.A.4th 799, 812, 50 C.R.2d 736; Edwards v. A.L. Lease & Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1029, 1033, 54 C.R.2d 259, infra, §1498.)

In Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, the court considered an issue not reached in Sindell: whether manufacturers are jointly liable in a market share action. The court declared that imposition of this liability would be inconsistent with the rationale of Sindell and would frustrate its goals of achieving a balance between the interests of DES plaintiffs and the drug manufacturers. (44 C.3d 1075.)

Comment in the area of unknown manufacturers of a fungible product has been voluminous and continuing. (See 69 Cal. L. Rev. 1179; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 881 [Beyond Sindell: Relaxation of Cause-In-Fact Rules for Indeterminate Plaintiffs]; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 668; 17 Pacific L. J. 1445 [Punitive Damages in DES Market Share Litigation]; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 185 [same]; 33 Stanf. L. Rev. 937; 52 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 151 [Beyond Market Share Liability: A Theory of Proportional Share Liability for Nonfungible Products]; 14 U.S.F. L. Rev. 461 [Extension of Federal Class Action Procedures to Generic Drug Litigation]; 2 A.L.R.4th 1091 [products liability: Diethylstilbestrol (DES)]; 63 A.L.R.5th 195 ["concert of activity," "alternative liability," "enterprise liability," or similar theory as basis for imposing liability on one or more manufacturers of defective uniform product, in absence of identification of manufacturer of precise unit or batch causing injury].) (On statute of limitations in toxic tort suits, see Martinez-Ferrer v. Richardson-Merrell (1980) 105 C.A.3d 316, 164 C.R. 591, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §544; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1683.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Martinez-Ferrer case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §591. Correction: Page 929, line 15 of paragraph (1), citation for Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel should be 3 C.3d 756.

85 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

3. Manufacturer: Unidentified Maker of Fungible Goods.

bb. Drug Marketed for Different Purpose.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1487

[§ 1487] Drug Marketed for Different Purpose.

Miles Laboratories v. Superior Court (1982) 133 C.A.3d 587, 184 C.R. 98, significantly extended the doctrine of Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, to a different factual situation. Plaintiff, a DES child, named defendant Miles Laboratories as one of the drug manufacturers marketing DES. This defendant sought summary judgment on a showing that its tablet was sold under the trade name "Stilphostrol," solely for the treatment of prostatic carcinoma, and was never marketed, promoted, or sold for use by women. Upholding the denial of summary judgment the court said: "Admittedly, the allegations in the complaint before us are new, different and an extension of the allegations made in the Sindell case. ... [I]t is alleged that the defendant reaped a market share of the drug's use as a miscarriage preventative despite its production for another purpose. The allegations are that the defendant knew or should have known that its drug was being used as a miscarriage preventative and did nothing to prevent such use and by acquiescing in such use claimed for itself a share of the market." (133 C.A.3d 595.)

A strong dissent argues that the majority completely ignored the express language and social justification for Sindell, and that Miles Laboratories could not be held liable under any legally recognized theory. (133 C.A.3d 596, 598.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

86 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

3. Manufacturer: Unidentified Maker of Fungible Goods.

cc. Defective Vaccine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1488

[§ 1488] Defective Vaccine.

In Sheffield v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 583, 192 C.R. 870, plaintiff in 1975 sued for damages for permanent disability resulting from injections of defective Salk polio vaccine in 1956 and 1957. The five defendants were all of the pharmaceutical manufacturers of the vaccine at the time of plaintiff's inoculation. Despite extensive discovery, plaintiff was unable to identify the manufacturer, and relied mainly on the market share liability theory of Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed; the cases are not similar.

(a) In both Sindell and the present case, the manufacturers were making a generic pharmaceutical product according to a uniform formula and a process approved by the federal Government. Here, however, the injuries did not result from use of a drug generally defective, but because some manufacturer made and distributed a defective product, which was not a unit of the total generic pharmaceutical product but a deviant defective vaccine. (144 C.A.3d 594.)

(b) The necessity of allowing a market share approach in Sindell because the passage of time made identification impossible is not present in this case; delay in discovering the alleged causation was in no way related to the nature of the product or any other act or omission of the unknown tortfeasor. (144 C.A.3d 594.)

(c) The theory of Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, as expounded in Sindell, has no application to a case of alternative liability, where there is no proof that the conduct of more than one actor has been tortious at all. In such a case, the plaintiff has the burden of proof both as to the tortious conduct and the causal relation. (144 C.A.3d 596, citing Rest.2d, Torts §433(b)(3), Comment g.)

(d) The policy theory of Sindell, that the manufacturer is better able to bear the cost of injury and to guard against defects than the consumer, does not justify a shift of responsibility to innocent manufacturers. "The imposition of such a liability over that portion of the pharmaceutical industry producing the beneficial safe product would inhibit drug research and development, unreasonably raise the cost of health care, and punish drug manufacturers who have done no wrong." (144 C.A.3d 597.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

87 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

3. Manufacturer: Unidentified Maker of Fungible Goods.

dd. Insufficient Share of Market.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1489

[§ 1489] Insufficient Share of Market.

In Murphy v. E.R. Squibb & Sons (1985) 40 C.3d 672, 221 C.R. 447, 710 P.2d 247, plaintiff sued defendant manufacturer, on an allegation and offer of proof that it supplied 10% of the national market of DES pills. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, generated many law review comments, some relating to the appropriate composition of the market for application of the market share doctrine and the meaning of the term "substantial share." The inquiry here is whether, as the trial judge determined, a 10% share of the market is insufficient. (40 C.3d 683.)

(b) Plaintiff contended that the doctrine was designed to accomplish a fair approximation of the damages that each defendant DES manufacturer would be required to pay under the principles of comparative fault, and that its applicability is unrelated to whether plaintiff has joined as defendants the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES market. But Sindell makes it clear that in order to shift the burden of proof of causation in fact, a plaintiff must join the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES that her mother might have taken. And although the defendant manufacturers could file cross-complaints against other DES manufacturers not joined, these pleadings would be filed only after plaintiff met her burden of joining the required defendants. (40 C.3d 683.)

(c) Plaintiff's position was that because Squibb was alleged to be the second largest seller of DES, its 10% market share must be deemed substantial. But this is contrary to the theoretical justification for the market share doctrine. In Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, both parties who could have been responsible were joined, there was a 50% chance that one was responsible, and this justified shifting of the burden of proof. In Sindell, only 5 of the 200 manufacturers were joined, and the court concluded "that the likelihood that one of the defendants supplied the DES should be determined not by the number of manufacturers joined in the action but by the percentage which the DES sold by each to prevent miscarriage bore to the entire production of the drug sold for that purpose." (40 C.3d 684.) And if the plaintiff joined the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES that her mother might have taken, the injustice of shifting the burden of proof to the defendants would be significantly diminished. (40 C.3d 684.)

(d) Because Squibb had only a 10% share of the DES market, there is only a 10% chance that it produced the drug that caused plaintiff's injuries, and a 90% chance that another manufacturer was the producer. "In this circumstance, it must be concluded that she failed to meet the threshold requirement for the application of the market share doctrine." (40 C.3d 684.)

One justice, dissented. (40 C.3d 688.) (See Setliff v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1525, 1534, 38 C.R.2d 763 [allegation that plaintiff joined manufacturers of substantial market share was insufficient in absence of allegation that injury was caused by fungible product].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

88 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
4. Manufacturer: Asbestos Cases.
aa. Where Market Share Theory Is Inapplicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1490

[§ 1490] Where Market Share Theory Is Inapplicable.

In Mullen v. Armstrong World Industries (1988) 200 C.A.3d 250, 246 C.R. 32, plaintiff homeowners brought a class action on behalf of persons who own homes built from 1912 through 1978 containing "friable" asbestos. They alleged that asbestos in that condition (capable of being reduced to powder and circulated into the air) is a known human carcinogen, and that its presence in various insulation, fireproofing, and decorative materials had significantly reduced the value of plaintiffs' homes. Defendants were more than 40 companies engaged in mining, manufacturing, or supplying friable asbestos or products containing it, and plaintiffs sought to proceed under the market share theory of liability set forth in Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, by alleging that the products were functionally interchangeable; that there were no testing procedures available for identification of the manufacturer of a particular asbestos containing the product; and that the harm and threat to health from products of different manufacturers do not vary significantly; i.e., the materials and products are "fungible." The prayer was for compensatory damages to cover the costs of safety measures and alternative living accommodations during asbestos abatement, estimated by plaintiffs to be in excess of $ 1 billion, and by one defendant at almost $ 42 billion. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs' theory was that DES and asbestos are simple equivalents; but this is not the case. DES was produced by hundreds of companies pursuant to one formula, with identical physical properties and chemical compositions, thereby creating the same risk of harm; asbestos is a "generic designation possessing a rainbow-like diversity and a bewildering array of potential users." (200 C.A.3d 250.)

(b) The market share liability was formulated where the injured parties attacked a product that carried with it a singular risk factor; here, plaintiffs seek recovery for damage to their persons and their property. (200 C.A.3d 257.)

(c) Because asbestos is not a product but a family of minerals, plaintiffs "are attacking an entire industry, not seeking recovery for damages caused by a single fungible product." (200 C.A.3d 257.)

(d) The great majority of jurisdictions have declined to extend the market share theory to asbestos-related injuries.

(200 C.A.3d 257.) (On liability of asbestos distributors, see Dumin v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 650, 33 C.R.2d 702, infra, §1498; on trial practice, see 60 Am.Jur. Trials 73 [asbestos injury litigation].)

In Ferris v. Gatke Corp. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1211, 132 C.R.2d 819, decedent, before his death, sought damages against various manufacturers, suppliers, and distributors of asbestos, including manufacturers of friction brake products containing that mineral. On his death, his heirs amended the complaint to plead an additional cause for wrongful death. After the trial date, defendants filed motions in limine to exclude evidence supporting the market share theory of liability, and these motions were granted. Somewhat later, the trial court granted G corporation's motion for nonsuit, and judgment was entered for this defendant. Held, affirmed; on this record, the trial court did not err in barring plaintiffs from pursuing Sindell relief.

(a) Sindell was based on the fungibility of the drug involved in that case, and Mullen refused to extend the Sindell reasoning to asbestos. The Mullen court emphasized that asbestos products were not fungible, because they varied in such respects as the specific type of fiber used, the physical properties of the product itself, and the percentage of asbestos used in the product. However, in Wheeler v. Raybestos-Manhattan (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1152, 11 C.R.2d 109, infra, §1491, the plaintiff's request for relief was confined to friction brake pads, and the court concluded that these pads were sufficiently alike to meet the aforementioned objections, so that the plaintiffs at least should have been allowed to attempt to apply the market share theory. The Wheeler analysis was thrown into doubt by Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, infra, §1492, another case that disapproved the extension of Sindell into the asbestos area and that emphasized the limits on the plaintiff's burden of proof on causation as a fundamental reason for rejecting a burden-shifting approach to asbestos personal injury litigation. "Given this line of development and the current state of the case law, we consider the question whether this court is now in a position to draw any firm conclusions about Wheeler's ongoing vitality. Only a modest one, we will conclude--that the exception approved by this court in Wheeler has no application to the factual record made in this case. We also reach the complementary conclusion that because we are not required to, we do not here decide the contemporary validity of Wheeler in circumstances in which it might properly be applicable." (107 C.A.4th 1215.)

(b) Here, the pleadings indicated that decedent was exposed not only to asbestos dust from friction brake products while working on his and his neighbor's automobiles for nearly 40 years, but also while working in shipyards and while employed as a prison guard and as a furniture upholsterer. However, even assuming that plaintiffs had limited their request for Sindell relief to the manufacturers of friction brake pads and assuming that these pads satisfied the fungibility prong of that decision, there are other flaws in plaintiffs' proof on the Sindell issue, chief of which was the acknowledgement of their expert that he was unable to compute G corporation's share of the national market during the relevant time period. And it is plain from the language of the Sindell opinion and from the logic behind the market share theory itself that proof of an individual manufacturer's national market share is an essential predicate to relief, because each defendant will be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market. (107 C.A.4th 1221.)

(c) In addition, decedent was able to identify two of the manufacturers to whose friction asbestos brake products he was exposed and conceded that he had no evidence substantiating exposure to any asbestos products manufactured by G Corporation. It was, of course, the inability of the plaintiff in Sindell to identify the causal source of her injuries that was held to justify reversing the usual burden of proving causation by allocating to the defendants the burden of negating their role in causing the plaintiff's injury. However, such a significant departure from conventional tort law doctrine, which is based on an Aristotelian conception of causation, should be undertaken only under truly compelling circumstances, a standard not met in the present case. (107 C.A.4th 1223.) (See Chavers v. Gatke Corp. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 606, 615, 132 C.R.2d 198 [defendant in asbestos case could not be found liable on either conspiracy theory or concert of action theory].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

89 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
4. Manufacturer: Asbestos Cases.
bb. Where Market Share Theory Is Applicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1491

[§ 1491] Where Market Share Theory Is Applicable.

In Wheeler v. Raybestos-Manhattan (1992) 8 C.A.4th 1152, 11 C.R.2d 109, plaintiffs alleged personal injuries suffered from exposure to asbestos in brake pads. Each defendant was a manufacturer of brake products. The case was subject to San Francisco Superior Court order 21, which provides that the theory of market share liability is inapplicable to asbestos cases. After plaintiffs' offer of proof, the trial judge entered judgment of nonsuit for defendants. Held, reversed; order 21 is inapplicable here because of the peculiar facts presented by exposure to asbestos from brake pads, and plaintiffs' offer of proof stated facts sufficient to establish each of the prima facie elements of a case for market share liability under Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486.

(a) Fungibility. Plaintiffs offered to prove that the brake pads, although differing in size, were fungible to the extent that a pad of a given size, regardless of who made it, could be used on a variety of different vehicles, and that all the pads were composed solely of chrysotile asbestos fiber and contained between 40 and 60% asbestos by weight. This offer was sufficient. "It is irrelevant, of course, that pads come in various sizes and shapes. ... While brake pads are not absolutely interchangeable each for one another and hence are not fungible from the standpoint of an auto mechanic, they are fungible for the purposes of Sindell by virtue of containing roughly comparable quantities of the single asbestos fiber, chrysotile." (8 C.A.4th 1156.)

(b) Inability to identify maker. Plaintiffs alleged that the vast majority of their exposure to asbestos-containing brake dust came from used brake pads that were unidentifiable at that time because their trade names and trademarks had been worn off. Hence, the fact that plaintiffs may be able to identify some of the manufacturers of the new brake pads with which they worked should not be determinative. (8 C.A.4th 1157.)

(c) Correlation between market share and liability. The Sindell decision stated that at least over a large body of cases a defendant's market share should roughly equate to its liability. In this case that fit is much tighter as to each plaintiff. Because it is likely that no plaintiff was subjected only to pads of a single size and that each plaintiff was apt to have been exposed to the asbestos from brake pads of many, if not all, of the major manufacturers, there is a strong likelihood that each plaintiff was exposed to the products of any given manufacturer with roughly the same frequency that that manufacturer's brake pads occupied the market. Of course, each defendant may still be able to show that it could not have been responsible for a particular plaintiff's injuries, such as by showing that plaintiff had retired before it began manufacturing brake pads. (8 C.A.4th 1158.)

(d) Substantial share of makers of product. Because this case arises on nonsuit, it is only necessary that plaintiffs have offered to prove that the named defendants constitute a substantial share of the makers of asbestos-containing brake pads. This they did. (8 C.A.4th 1158.)

(e) Limited holding. "Plaintiffs have not proven the elements of a market share case; we hold only that they should be allowed to attempt it." (8 C.A.4th 1158.) (See Richie v. Bridgestone/Firestone (1994) 22 C.A.4th 335, 339, 27 C.R.2d 418 [applying retroactively holding of Wheeler that market share theory of liability may be used when plaintiff has been exposed to asbestos fibers in brake pads].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

90 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

4. Manufacturer: Asbestos Cases.

cc. Erroneous Burden-Shifting Instruction.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1492

[§ 1492] Erroneous Burden-Shifting Instruction.

In Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, plaintiff died of lung cancer after exposure to asbestos over many years in the course of his employment. In accordance with a local court rule relating to asbestos cases, the jury was instructed that once plaintiff had proven that the asbestos product was defective, that plaintiff's injuries were caused by asbestos exposure generally, and that he was exposed to asbestos fibers from defendant's product specifically, the burden of proof shifted to defendant to prove that its product was not a legal cause of plaintiff's injuries or death. Thus, the primary issue was whether the alternative liability burden-shifting instruction approved in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, applied to this asbestos case. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff. The Court of Appeal, on alternate theories, reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed, but that court was correct in concluding that the trial judge had erred in giving the burden-shifting instruction.

(a) In Summers v. Tice, two hunters negligently fired their rifles in the direction of plaintiff, and he was injured. Because he was unable to prove which shot had caused his injury, he was allowed to place on each defendant the burden of proving that his shot had not caused the injury. However, the present situation differs from Summers in the following respects: (1) In asbestos cases, unlike in Summers, often many of the tortfeasors are, for various reasons, not before the court. Thus, it is unfair to shift the burden of proof to defendants when they might not even be the guilty party. (16 C.4th 972.) (2) Because of a combination of various factors, asbestos products have widely divergent toxicities. (16 C.4th 972.) (3) Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, the case that established "market share liability" where all potential tortfeasors were not before the court, nevertheless rejected application of a pure Summers alternative liability theory. (16 C.4th 973.)

(b) The main reason why the Summers burden-shifting instruction is unnecessary in asbestos cases is that the plaintiff is not required to prove that a particular defendant's product was an actual cause of the injury. In other words, burden-shifting is unnecessary. In asbestos cases, it is impossible to reach absolute certainty with respect to causation. Even at the most fundamental level, there is scientific uncertainty regarding the biological mechanisms by which inhalation of certain microscopic fibers of asbestos leads to lung cancer. And it is often not clear that the plaintiff was even exposed to dangerous particles from a particular defendant. This is so because the long latency of asbestos-related cancers means that memories are often dim and records incomplete. Finally, it is also often unclear whether exposure to a particular asbestos-containing product was significant enough to have been a legal cause of the plaintiff's injury, especially in the presence of numerous other factors, such as exposure to several cancer-causing agents or the length and intensity of the exposure to asbestos. As a result, it is only necessary that the plaintiff prove that a substantial factor in causing the risk of injury was exposure to a particular defendant's asbestos-containing product, not that it actually caused the disease. (16 C.4th 974.)

(c) The standard instructions on causation are insufficient in asbestos cases in that they do not adequately explain this "risk" factor. "Without such guidance, a juror might well conclude that the plaintiff needed to prove that fibers from the defendant's product were a substantial factor actually contributing to the development of the plaintiff's or decedent's cancer. In many cases, such a burden will be medically impossible to sustain, even with the greatest possible effort by the plaintiff, because of the irreducible uncertainty regarding the cellular formation of an asbestos-related cancer. We therefore hold that, in the trial of an asbestos-related cancer case, although no instruction 'shifting the burden of proof as to causation' to defendant is warranted, the jury should be told that the plaintiff's or decedent's exposure to a particular product was a substantial factor in causing or bringing about the disease if in reasonable medical probability it contributed to the plaintiff or decedent's risk of developing cancer." (16 C.4th 977, citing Lineaweaver v. Plant Insulation Co. (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1409, 37 C.R.2d 902, supra, §1194.) (See McGonnell v. Kaiser Gypsum Co. (2002) 98 C.A.4th 1098, 1104, 120 C.R.2d 23 [defendant manufacturers were entitled to summary judgment on causation issue, where decedent's deposition, given before his death, established that he had no knowledge of any exposure to defendants' products].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

91 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

5. Manufacturer: Multiple Toxin Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1493

[§ 1493] Manufacturer: Multiple Toxin Cases.

The showing of causation required where injury results from long-term exposure to multiple toxins was discussed in Bockrath v. Aldrich Chemical Co. (1999) 21 C.4th 71, 86 C.R.2d 846, 980 P.2d 398, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, Supp., §589A, an action by an individual suffering from cancer against 55 manufacturers of numerous products to which he was allegedly exposed in the workplace over a 21-year period:

(a) The substantial factor standard, as set forth in Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 968, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, supra, §1492, in the context of products liability actions, requires that the plaintiff prove that a defective product supplied by a defendant was a substantial factor in bringing about the injury. In cases like this one, presenting complicated medical causation issues, the standard of proof ordinarily required is a reasonable medical probability based on competent expert testimony that the defendant's conduct contributed to the plaintiff's injury. However, the standard is relatively broad and requires only that the contribution of the individual cause be more than negligible or theoretical. (21 C.4th 79.)

(b) The plaintiff must show (1) that he or she was exposed to each of the toxic materials claimed to have caused a specific illness; (2) the identity of each product that allegedly caused the injury; (3) that as a result of the exposure, the toxins entered his or her body; (4) that plaintiff suffers from a specific illness, and that each toxin that entered his or her body was a substantial factor in bringing about, prolonging, or aggravating that illness; and (5) except in a case governed by market-share liability, as outlined in Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, that each toxin was manufactured or supplied by a named defendant. (21 C.4th 79.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Bockrath case:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §630.

92 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

6. Manufacturer: Apparent Manufacturer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1494

[§ 1494] Manufacturer: Apparent Manufacturer.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (supra, §1430), one engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products "who sells or distributes as its own a product manufactured by another" is subject to the same liability as though the seller or distributor were the product's manufacturer. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §14.)

In this circumstance, the seller is presumed to cause the product to be used or consumed, in part at least, in reliance on the seller. The seller's reputation is an implied assurance of the quality of the product, and the seller should be estopped from denying that it stands behind that assurance. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §14, Comment c.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

93 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

7. Retail Dealer.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1495

[§ 1495] In General.

In Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, the court brought the retail dealer under the rule of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429. Plaintiff V bought a new Ford from a dealer. It developed brake trouble, plaintiff V lost control of it on the highway, and plaintiff V and plaintiff M, his passenger, were injured. The manufacturer, Ford, was held strictly liable under Greenman, but the dealer set up the warranty defenses of no timely notice and disclaimer of liability for personal injuries. Held, the same policy calls for the same basis of liability of manufacturers and retailers:

"Retailers like manufacturers are engaged in the business of distributing goods to the public. They are an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries resulting from defective products. ... In some cases the retailer may be the only member of that enterprise reasonably available to the injured plaintiff. In other cases the retailer himself may play a substantial part in insuring that the product is safe or may be in a position to exert pressure on the manufacturer to that end; the retailer's strict liability thus serves as an added incentive to safety. Strict liability on the manufacturer and retailer alike affords maximum protection to the injured plaintiff and works no injustice to the defendants, for they can adjust the costs of such protection between them in the course of their continuing business relationship. Accordingly, as a retailer engaged in the business of distributing goods to the public, [defendant] is strictly liable in tort for personal injuries caused by defects in cars sold by it." (61 C.2d 262.) (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §572; 2 San Diego L. Rev. 165; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1099 [strict liability in tort]; 99 A.L.R.3d 671 [when person is "engaged in the business"].) (On nonliability of seller of secondhand goods, see infra, §1496.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.25

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

94 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

7. Retail Dealer.

bb. Seller of Secondhand Goods.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1496

[§ 1496] Seller of Secondhand Goods.

In Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 C.A.3d 268, 161 C.R. 789, P, an employee of C, suffered an injury while operating an allegedly defective wood planer. He brought a strict products liability action against T, on the following theory: H, a manufacturer, was going out of business, and T conducted an auction sale of all of H's machinery; C bought the wood planer at this auction sale; hence T was the seller of the defective product, subject to strict liability under Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, supra, §1495, as a commercial marketer participating in the business enterprise. T challenged this theory by showing that its function as auctioneer was merely to sell--not to maintain or repair; that it did not take title to the machinery but sold it as agent for H; that it sold all of the secondhand machinery "as is," with no inspection or testing or representations as to its safety or quality. The trial judge gave summary judgment for P on the severable issue of strict liability. Held, mandamus granted to compel setting aside the order.

(a) Existing law on strict liability of participants in marketing enterprise. The list of participants in a business enterprise, as summarized in Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 101 C.R. 314, infra, §1500, includes lessor, developer, licensee, retailer, and wholesale-retail distributor. (101 C.A.3d 275.) The cases make it clear that the defendant's particular legal relationship is not determinative; e.g., if a manufacturer of "antiques" chose to market them exclusively through an "estate" auctioneer as its agent, the auctioneer would be a participant in the manufacturing-marketing system. But the defendant must also have participated in the enterprise that created consumer demand for and reliance on the particular product, not just a product of the same classification. (101 C.A.3d 276.)

(b) Seller of secondhand goods. Strict liability of the seller of secondhand products who has not modified them is a question of first impression in California. (101 C.A.3d 274, 277.) The very few cases from other jurisdictions are conflicting, but the 1979 Oregon case of Tillman v. Vance Equipment Co. is persuasive and is adopted as the California rule. (101 C.A.3d 278, 279.) The Tillman court pointed out that to hold every dealer in secondhand goods responsible regardless of fault would work a significant change in the nature of used goods markets, and declared that the sale of a used product, without more, does not generate the expectations of safety that give rise to strict liability. (101 C.A.3d 281.) Thus, a car dealer who sells trade-ins "may incur liability in respect of an original design defect in a car which he did not originally sell, both as a participant in the enterprise that created consumer demand and by generating 'the kind of expectations of safety that the courts have held are justifiably created by the introduction of a new product into the stream of commerce.' ... The ordinary used products dealer, however, will not be strictly liable for such defects created by the manufacturer." (101 C.A.3d 282.)

(c) Distinction: where secondhand dealer does something in connection with the goods. In the instant case, the seller (auctioneer), like any ordinary used machinery dealer, had no special relationship to the manufacturer and played only "a random and accidental role" in the distribution of the product. "It is unnecessary to decide whether petitioner may be strictly liable if the defect proven is the result of subsequent modification, dilapidation or misuse." (101 C.A.3d 284.)

The Tauber-Arons holding rejecting strict liability has been followed. (See LaRosa v. Superior Court (1981) 122 C.A.3d 741, 761, 176 C.R. 224; Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 C.A.3d 515, 521, 179 C.R. 5 [fact that defendant, used machinery dealer, had facilities and employees to perform inspection, repair, and reconditioning was not sufficient reason to hold him strictly liable]; Brejcha v. Wilson Machinery (1984) 160 C.A.3d 630, 639, 641, 206 C.R. 688 [discussing Tauber-Arons and reaching same conclusion of nonliability where defendant auctioneer sold machine at public auction "as is, where is"]; 31 Proof of Facts 2d 639 [dealer's liability for defective used car]; 19 Cal. Western L. Rev. 330; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 805 [note written before Tauber-Arons decision]; 83 A.L.R.4th 1188 [nonliability of auctioneer]; 9 A.L.R.5th 1 [strict liability of seller of used product].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

95 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

7. Retail Dealer.

cc. Pharmacist.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1497

[§ 1497] Pharmacist.

In Murphy v. E.R. Squibb & Sons (1985) 40 C.3d 672, 221 C.R. 447, 710 P.2d 247, plaintiff filed an action for personal injuries (cancer) resulting from the drug DES, taken by her mother during pregnancy. The defendants were (1) Squibb, a manufacturer of the drug, and (2) the pharmacist who sold the drug to the mother. Held, no cause of action on strict products liability was stated against the manufacturer (see supra, §1489) or the pharmacist.

(a) Plaintiff's theory was that a pharmacist selling prescription drugs is in the same position as a retailer of any other consumer product, and liable under Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, supra, §1495. Defendant contended that a pharmacist dispensing a prescription drug is primarily furnishing a service rather than selling a product. No prior California case has dealt with this issue, but decisions in Florida, North Carolina, and New York have held that pharmacies are not liable. (40 C.3d 676.)

(b) Persons who sell services are not liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct. Thus, a doctor who prescribes a drug purchased by the patient at a pharmacy is not the seller of the drug; a hospital is not strictly liable for injuries arising out of the use of a surgical needle that breaks during an operation (Silverhart v. Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1022, 1026, 98 C.R. 187, infra, §1520); and a similar holding was made in out-of-state cases dealing with a dentist. (40 C.3d 677.)

(c) "It seems clear to us that the pharmacist is engaged in a hybrid enterprise, combining the performance of services and the sale of prescription drugs. It is pure hyperbole to suggest, as does plaintiff, that the role of the pharmacist is similar to that of a clerk in an ordinary retail store. With a few exceptions, only a licensed pharmacist may dispense prescription drugs, and ... there are stringent educational and professional requirements for obtaining and retaining a license. A pharmacist must not only use skill and care in accurately filling and labeling a prescribed drug, but he must be aware of problems regarding the medication, and on occasion he provides doctors as well as patients with advice regarding such problems. In counseling patients, he imparts the same kind of information as would a medical doctor about the effects of the drugs prescribed. A key factor is that the pharmacist who fills a prescription is in a different position from the ordinary retailer because he cannot offer a prescription for sale except by order of the doctor. In this respect, he is providing a service to the doctor and acting as an extension of the doctor in the same sense as a technician who takes an X-ray or analyzes a blood sample on a doctor's order." (40 C.3d 678.)

(d) Nevertheless, a sale in fact occurs, and this distinguishes the pharmacist from the doctor or dentist or hospital: "The pharmacist is in the business of selling prescription drugs, and his role begins and ends with the sale. His services are rendered only in connection with the sale, and a patient who goes to a pharmacy to have a prescription filled generally is seeking to purchase the drug rather than to obtain the advice of the pharmacist." (40 C.3d 679.)

(e) These factors are not the only controlling ones; former B. & P.C. 4046 has made the practice of pharmacy a profession and refers to it as a service. This declaration is similar to that in Health & Saf.C. 1606, declaring that distribution or use of whole blood or plasma is a service and not a sale, thus making suppliers of blood immune from strict liability. (40 C.3d 679, 680.) "[A] pharmacist's role is more aptly characterized as the performance of a service than that of the manufacturer and seller of blood plasma." (40 C.3d 680.)

(f) If pharmacies were held strictly liable for the drugs they dispense, some of them might refuse to dispense drugs that pose even a potentially remote risk of harm; or the pharmacist might select the more expensive product of an established manufacturer when he or she has a choice of brands. (40 C.3d 680, 681.)

(g) The Legislature might have decided also that because the doctor who ordered the drug cannot be held liable, it would be unfair and burdensome to expose the pharmacy alone to strict liability, because it may provide the drug only on a doctor's prescription. (40 C.3d 681.)

(h) Plaintiff's contention that strict liability is proper because some pharmacies are owned by large chain store operations that are as capable as large drug manufacturers to respond in damages is not persuasive. Most pharmacies are not in this category. (40 C.3d 681.)

Two justices dissented. (See 21 U.S.F. L. Rev. 173; 44 A.L.R.5th 393 [liability of pharmacist who accurately fills prescription for resulting harm].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

96 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

8. Wholesaler or Distributor.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1498

[§ 1498] In General.

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20 includes wholesalers and distributors among those subject to products liability. (See infra, §1508; on "sales" under former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, see Canifax v. Hercules Powder Co. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 44, 52, 46 C.R. 552; Barth v. B. F. Goodrich Tire Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 228, 251, 71 C.R. 306; Kaminski v. Western MacArthur Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 445, 456, 220 C.R. 895, infra, §1499; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §28.31; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §571; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1098 [strict liability in tort].)

In Dumin v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 650, 33 C.R.2d 702, plaintiff, suffering from mesothelioma, an asbestos cancer, brought an action for personal injuries against a distributor of asbestos insulation products. As a boiler tender on several ships, plaintiff had regularly handled asbestos insulation. He could not identify defendant's product as one of the asbestos products that he had been exposed to, but there was evidence that he had been aboard the Pocono in 1953 and 1954, that defendant's product was used at the shipyard where the Pocono was homeported in the early 1950s, and that the ship's repair supplies were probably received from that shipyard. The trial judge entered a partial directed verdict in favor of defendant, ruling that plaintiff had failed to prove exposure to defendant's product. Held, affirmed.

(a) In light of the uncertainty of plaintiff's witness whether defendant's product was used in the shipyard in 1953 and 1954 when plaintiff's ship was home-ported there, any conclusion that plaintiff was exposed to the product requires "a stream of conjecture and surmise." The circumstantial evidence is of insufficient weight to support a reasonable inference of causation. (28 C.A.4th 656.)

(b) Plaintiff contends that he should be relieved of the burden of proving causation under Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, but the principle of that case acts only to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiff to proven wrongdoers. Plaintiff was unable to prove that defendant's product was aboard his ship. "By analogy to the hunting mishap of Summers, there was no proof that OCF ever fired a shot or, indeed, was even in the woods." (28 C.A.4th 657, 658.)

In Bay Summit Community Assn. v. Shell Oil Co. (1996) 51 C.A.4th 762, 59 C.R.2d 322, defendant was a supplier of nondefective resin used in polybutylene plumbing systems that were defective due to another product. However, defendant played an important role in marketing the plumbing systems, and it was on this theory that plaintiff attempted to hold defendant strictly liable. Held, defendant could, as a matter of law, be held strictly liable for defects in the polybutylene plumbing system, but the specific instructions were inadequate.

"[W]e disagree with [defendant] to the extent it is arguing that an entity involved in the marketing process, but outside the vertical distribution chain, may never be strictly liable regardless of the factual circumstances. The imposition of strict liability depends on whether the facts establish a sufficient causative relationship or connection between the defendant and the product so as to establish that the policies underlying the strict liability doctrine are satisfied. Specifically, a defendant involved in the marketing/distribution process has been held strictly liable if three factors are present: (1) the defendant received a direct financial benefit from its activities and from the sale of the product; (2) the defendant's role was integral to the business enterprise such that the defendant's conduct was a necessary factor in bringing the product to the initial consumer market; and (3) the defendant had control over, or a substantial ability to influence, the manufacturing or distribution process." (51 C.A.4th 776, citing Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 101 C.R. 314, supra, §198.) The instructions given were too general in that they failed to incorporate these elements. (51 C.A.4th 777.)

In Edwards v. A.L. Lease & Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1029, 54 C.R.2d 259, defectively manufactured pipe was installed during construction of a group of homes and subsequently failed. Various individual homeowners sued the manufacturers, the wholesalers, and the component suppliers for property damage. Plaintiffs alleged that, although they could identify the other defendants, they were unable to determine which wholesaler distributed the pipe that was installed in their homes. Plaintiff proceeded against the wholesalers, a group comprising "approximately" 100% of the wholesalers of the defective pipe, based on either a market share or alternative liability theory. The wholesalers' demurrers were sustained and the action against them was dismissed. Held, affirmed.

(a) Need to identify defendant. In a products liability action, every supplier in the stream of commerce or chain of distribution, from manufacturer to retailer, including, of course, wholesalers, is potentially liable. As a general rule, however, tort liability is dependent on the plaintiff's ability to demonstrate that his or her damages were caused by the defendant, and this rule applies in strict liability as well as negligence cases. (46 C.A.4th 1033.)

(b) Market share theory of liability is inapplicable. An exception to this causation requirement, the market share theory of liability of Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486, is not applicable.

(1) In Sindell, when plaintiffs were unable to determine which of several pharmaceutical companies manufacturing a defectively designed drug supplied the particular drug that caused their injuries, the court fashioned a market share theory of liability, permitting plaintiffs to join a substantial share of the manufacturers, and shifting the burden to the individual manufacturers to demonstrate that they did not manufacture the drug causing plaintiffs' injuries. (46 C.A.4th 1034.)

(2) The Sindell plaintiffs were unable to identify the manufacturer of the defective drug causing their injuries, and would have been without a remedy for extremely serious injuries absent market share liability. Plaintiffs here know who manufactured the defective pipe, know who supplied the defective components from which it was manufactured, and know the developers and builders of their homes. Consequently, plaintiffs have identifiable defendants, and are not otherwise without a remedy. (46 C.A.4th 1034.)

(3) Plaintiffs here, unlike those in Sindell, were not damaged by a fungible product that was uniformly manufactured from a common formula and that was inherently defective for its intended purpose due to its defective design. When properly manufactured, the pipe in question is fit for its intended purpose. In other words, plaintiffs were damaged by manufacturing defects caused during a discrete time period by a single manufacturer. (46 C.A.4th 1035.)

(c) Alternative liability theory is inapplicable. The alternative liability theory of Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 C.2d 80, 199 P.2d 1, supra, §1194, is also not applicable.

(1) In Summers, plaintiff was injured by one of two persons who negligently fired in plaintiff's direction during a hunting trip. Although plaintiff was unable to determine which of the named defendants fired the specific shot that struck him, the court held that because both defendants were negligent they were liable as joint tortfeasors, and the burden was imposed on them to prove that they did not cause plaintiff's injuries. Summers was based on Rest.2d, Torts §433B(3), which states: "Where the conduct of two or more actors is tortious, and it is proved that harm has been caused to the plaintiff by only one of them, but there is uncertainty as to which one has caused it, the burden is upon each such actor to prove that he has not caused the harm." (46 C.A.4th 1035.)

(2) Much of the rationale for application of the Summers rule is missing in cases, such as the one here, where individual plaintiffs have identifiable defendants. In contrast to the Summers plaintiff, plaintiffs here are not without a remedy due to their inability to identify and join responsible defendants. (46 C.A.4th 1035.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.23.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.31.

97 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

8. Wholesaler or Distributor.

bb. Successor Corporation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1499

[§ 1499] Successor Corporation.

In Kaminski v. Western MacArthur Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 445, 220 C.R. 895, the rule developed in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 C.3d 22, 136 C.R. 574, 560 P.2d 3, supra, §1481, that holds a successor corporation to the manufacturer liable was applied to defendant, a successor to the distributor of a product.

(a) "Given the policies underlying strict liability, the 'stream of commerce' approach to liability should extend to successor entities. When a distributor or retailer acquires a corporation and takes advantage of its goodwill and other corporate assets and facilities to inject the predecessor's product line into the stream of commerce, it continues the overall producing and marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries resulting from defective products. ... To hold Ray inapplicable to successor distributors and retailers would be contrary to the policy of compensating injured plaintiffs from the resources of those better capable of estimating and spreading the risk of the marketing of defective products." (175 C.A.3d 456.)

(b) The argument that a distributor does not have the manufacturer's power to raise prices to spread the cost of compensation is inconsistent with the general rule of liability of distributors. "The solution to the distributor's fixed-cost dilemma is to seek indemnity against the responsible manufacturer, not to avoid successor liability vis-a-vis the injured plaintiff. [Defendant] also has the superior ability to estimate the risk of marketing defective products and provide for appropriate insurance." (175 C.A.3d 456.)

(c) The argument that the Ray rule is inapplicable because defendant did not purchase the "principal assets" of its predecessor is not persuasive: The record shows that it acquired "considerable" assets, including customer records, goodwill, and equipment, office furniture, and a large inventory. (175 C.A.3d 457.)

(d) The contention that defendant is not liable because it did not cause the dissolution of its predecessor is also untenable. All that is required is a causal connection between the successor's acquisition and the unavailability of the predecessor as a potential defendant. (175 C.A.3d 458.) "We may readily conclude that the transaction was an acquisition of principal assets which caused or at least substantially contributed to the absence of [defendant] from the recovery pool of product liability plaintiffs." (175 C.A.3d 458.)

(e) The further contention, that the successor corporation should not be liable where the plaintiff has a remedy against the original stockholders of the predecessor, is likewise unpersuasive. In Ray, the court pointed to the "formidable and possibly insuperable obstacles" to recovery against stockholders, and concluded that this technical right was virtually meaningless to injured plaintiffs. (175 C.A.3d 459.)

(f) The final argument, that the Ray rule is only appropriate where the injured plaintiff has no other remedy against any other defendant, has no support in authority. "The presence of another legitimate target defendant in the case does not defeat successor liability against another legitimate defendant." (175 C.A.3d 459.) The phrase "complete denial of redress"--as used in Ray--means "the complete denial of redress against a major defendant in the chain of commerce, be it manufacturer or distributor." As in any products liability case, the original manufacturer may be unavailable or amenable to settlement only for substantially less than the amount of the eventual judgment. (175 C.A.3d 459.) (See Phillips v. Cooper Laboratories (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1648, 1657, 264 C.R. 311 ["[s]uccessor liability has generally been denied for a lack of causation in situations showing no contributory cause in the predecessor's demise, such as when the predecessor sells product line assets but dissolves at a later date and for an independent reason," quoting Kaminski].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

98 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

9. Licensors or Franchisors.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1500

[§ 1500] Licensors or Franchisors.

(1) Licensors. In Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 C.A.3d 319, 82 C.R. 420, infra, §1512, the court declared that a licensor, like a manufacturer, retailer, or lessor is part of the marketing enterprise; i.e., even though not engaged in distribution of the product, the licensor provides it for use by the public. Hence, imposition of strict liability on the operator of a launderette, in favor of a customer using a washing machine, was upheld. Defendant was a licensor, and plaintiff customer was a licensee using the machine with permission. (3 C.A.3d 326.)

(2) Franchisors. A much more difficult situation was presented in Kasel v. Remington Arms Co. (1972) 24 C.A.3d 711, 101 C.R. 314, supra, §198. Remington Arms Co. gave a franchise to a Mexican manufacturer, which produced a defective shotgun shell, and Remington was held strictly liable for the resulting injury to plaintiff. The opinion reasons as follows:

(a) The general principle is that tort liability should be imposed "upon the overall producing and marketing enterprise" responsible for placing defective products in the stream of commerce. (24 C.A.3d 724.)

(b) Prior cases have applied this doctrine downward through various links in the marketing chain, from the manufacturer to the distributor to the retailer, etc. (24 C.A.3d 724.) No case so far has applied the doctrine upward from a manufacturer or distributor to a franchisor or a trademark licensor. But commentators have suggested that this would be a proper step. (24 C.A.3d 725, and footnote 17.)

(c) The decisions adopting the stream of commerce approach indicate that no precise legal relationship is required. "It is the defendant's participatory connection, for his personal profit or other benefit, with the injury-producing product and with the enterprise that created consumer demand for and reliance upon the product (and not the defendant's legal relationship (such as agency) with the manufacturer or other entities involved in the manufacturing-marketing system) which calls for imposition of strict liability." (24 C.A.3d 725.)

(d) Application of the doctrine here was appropriate. Remington organized the Mexican manufacturer, participated in its financing, supplied it with machinery and specifications for manufacture, reserved control over quality of the product, supervised the plant, and advertised the products under its trademarks. Thus, "Remington had more involvement in the enterprise which produced the defective shell than the typical retailer, distributor or wholesaler upon whom the courts have had no trouble imposing strict liability." (24 C.A.3d 727.) (See 72 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 [strict liability for trademark licensors]; 90 A.L.R.4th 981 [trademark licensor's liability for injury or death allegedly due to defect in licensed product].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

99 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

10. Mass-Produced Homes.

aa. Seller.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1501

[§ 1501] Seller.

The ordinary builder of a dwelling or other structure on land has not been held strictly liable. But in Kriegler v. Eichler Homes (1969) 269 C.A.2d 224, 74 C.R. 749, the court brought the builder-seller of mass-produced tract houses under the rule of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429. Defendant E, a large-scale builder of homes, built one in 1951. Because of a copper shortage during the Korean War, the radiant heating contractor used steel tubing in 4,000 E homes. In 1952, E sold to plaintiff's predecessor, and plaintiff bought the home in 1957. In 1959, the heating system failed due to corrosion of the pipe, and an entirely new system was put in. Plaintiff recovered damages of $ 5,073.18. Held, affirmed. Plaintiff relied on the skill of defendant E in producing a home with a heating system reasonably fit for its intended purpose. "[T]here are no meaningful distinctions between Eichler's mass production and sale of homes and the mass production and sale of automobiles and that the pertinent overriding policy considerations are the same." (269 C.A.2d 227.) (See Fleck v. Bollinger Home Corp. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 926, 934, 63 C.R.2d 407 [developer who devised plans for 11 homes built between 1984 and 1989 qualified as "mass" producer of homes; instruction that used term "substantial numbers," in place of "mass," was sufficient]; 30 McGeorge L. Rev. 299 [strict liability for construction defects]; 25 A.L.R.3d 383, 407 [liability of builder-vendor of new dwelling for loss, injury, or damage occasioned by defective condition]; 10 A.L.R.4th 385 [liability of builder of residence for latent defects, to subsequent purchasers from original vendee]; 25 A.L.R.4th 351 [liability for injury or damage caused by defects in building or land].)

Oliver v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 86, 259 C.R. 160, held that neither existing case law nor the policies underlying Kriegler v. Eichler Homes provided a basis for extending the doctrine of strict liability to a contractor/seller who built two homes, at two different times, in two different locations. "A home purchase through an occasional construction and sale does not involve the buyer reliance attending sales based upon an advertised model. Nor does it present a situation where the builder may protect himself from substantial financial loss by effectively spreading both the risk and actual costs of defective construction among a number of residences in a development. Since the rationale underlying the application of strict liability does not apply to the occasional or isolated construction and sale of a residence, we are not inclined to expand the concept beyond its current, limited application to mass-produced homes."

(211 C.A.3d 89.) (On recovery for construction defects in residential housing, see C.C. 895 et seq., supra, §1162 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

100 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
10. Mass-Produced Homes.
bb. Manufacturer or Supplier of Component Part.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1502

[§ 1502] Manufacturer or Supplier of Component Part.

In Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 C.4th 473, 127 C.R.2d 614, 58 P.3d 450, plaintiffs were the owners of a home in a housing development, and defendants were the manufacturers and suppliers of windows that had been installed in the house. On behalf of all the homeowners in the development, plaintiffs instituted a strict products liability action alleging that defendants had manufactured and installed defective windows and that the defects caused property damage to other parts of the houses, i.e., the framing, floor coverings, insulation, drywall, etc. Defendant manufacturers moved for summary adjudication, arguing that the manufacturer of a product installed in a mass-produced home, unless the manufacturer has ownership and control over the housing development, cannot be strictly liable for a defective or dangerous condition in the home. In response, plaintiffs contended that the manufacturer of a component part of mass-produced houses is strictly liable for damage caused by the defective part. The trial judge granted defendants' motion, plaintiffs petitioned for mandamus, and the Court of Appeal directed the trial judge to vacate the order granting summary adjudication. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

(a) Strict products liability of component manufacturers.

(1) Kriegler v. Eichler Homes (1969) 269 C.A.2d 224, 74 C.R. 749, supra, §1501, applied strict products liability to mass-produced homes, but La Jolla Village Homeowners' Assn. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1131, 261 C.R. 146, infra, §1505, and Casey v. Overhead Door Corp. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 112, 87 C.R.2d 603, infra, §1505, held that a subcontractor hired by a developer cannot be strictly liable for defects in mass-produced homes unless it also controls the housing development, regardless of whether the subcontractor provides services or a product. Citing La Jolla Village, defendants contended that extending strict liability to manufacturers of component parts, as opposed to the completed homes, would not serve the purposes of strict products liability. This argument is without merit. "Like manufacturers, suppliers, and retailers of complete products, component manufacturers and suppliers are 'an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise,' may in a particular case 'be the only member of that enterprise reasonably available to the injured plaintiff,' and may be in the best position to ensure product safety. ... And component manufacturers and suppliers, like manufacturers, suppliers, and retailers of complete products, can adjust the costs of liability in the course of their continuing business relationship with other participants in the overall manufacture and marketing enterprise." (29 C.4th 479.) La Jolla and Casey are disapproved to the extent that they hold or suggest that a manufacturer of components installed in a mass-produced home can never be strictly liable in tort for physical injuries caused by defects in those components. (29 C.4th 484.)

(2) Defendants argued that subjecting them to strict liability would be improper, because they had no physical control over the windows at the time of the alleged harm. However, it has never been held or implied that strict products liability applies only to those injuries that defective products cause while still under the manufacturer's ownership or control. Rarely, if ever, are defective products still in the control of a manufacturer, distributor, or retailer at the time of injury to the consumer. What matters is whether the windows were defective when they left the factory, and whether these defects caused the alleged injuries. (29 C.4th 480.)

(3) Defendants also contended that assembling the windows constituted a "substantial change," within the meaning of Rest.2d, Torts §402A(1)(b), which would preclude liability. This contention is incorrect. The mere assembly of a product that is sold in parts is not a "substantial change." The issue is not whether the product was sold fully assembled or in parts, but whether the defect that resulted in the alleged damage existed when the windows left the manufacturers' control. (29 C.4th 480.)

(4) Finally, defendants predicted that manufacturers and distributors of component products used in the mass production of homes would regularly bring actions and cross actions against each other for indemnity and other claims, thus causing a massive increase in litigation. However, "the policy reasons favoring strict products liability for component manufacturers are the same as for other participants in the general enterprise of manufacturing and marketing consumer goods, and these interests, including the incentives for improved product safety, outweigh the burden imposed by increased litigation." (29 C.4th 481.)

(b) Recovery is not barred under economic loss rule.

(1) The economic loss rule, which originated with Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.3d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, infra, §1514, allows a plaintiff to recover in strict products liability in tort when a product defect causes damage to "other property," that is, property other than the product itself. (The law of contractual warranty governs damage to the product itself.) Defendants argued that the "product" here was the entire house in which their windows were installed, and that the damage caused to "other parts" of the house by the allegedly defective windows was damage to the "product itself" within the economic loss rule, thus precluding application of strict liability. This argument is without merit. California decisional law has long recognized that the economic loss rule does not necessarily bar recovery in tort for damage that a defective product (e.g., a window) causes to other portions of a larger product (e.g., a house) into which the former has been incorporated. (29 C.4th 483, citing Casey, Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 C.A.4th 611, 92 C.R.2d 761, and Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 C.4th 627, 101 C.R.2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125, supra, §1162.) Thus, defendants' argument that the house is the relevant product for purposes of applying the economic loss rule is inconsistent with these and other decisions recognizing that the duty of a product manufacturer to prevent property damage does not necessarily end when the product is incorporated into a larger product. (29 C.4th 483.)

(2) "Applying this principle to the facts before us here, we conclude that the manufacturer of a defective window installed in a mass-produced home may be held strictly liable in tort for damage that the window's defect causes to other parts of the home in which it is installed. We have no occasion here to consider whether defective raw materials should be treated in the same manner as component parts or whether there may be situations in which the economic loss rule would bar recovery for damages that a defective component part causes to other portions of the finished product of which it is a part." (29 C.4th 484.)

Legislation governing recovery for construction defects in residential housing was adopted in 2002. (See C.C. 895 et seq., supra, §1162 et seq.) These provisions are generally applicable in actions against "material suppliers" and "individual product manufacturers," but not to strict liability claims against them. (C.C. 936, supra, §1167.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 955, second line of paragraph (1), citation for Seely v. White Motor Co. should be 63 C.2d 9.

101 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

11. Vendor of Tract Lots.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1503

[§ 1503] Vendor of Tract Lots.

(1) In General. In Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 C.A.2d 607, 77 C.R. 633, defendant L developed a tract of residential lots. Plaintiffs' predecessor bought a lot and built a house on it in 1960, and plaintiffs purchased the house and lot that year. In 1962, part of the rear slope failed. Defendant W, employed by plaintiff to investigate and repair, informed them that the failure was due to excessive rainfall and watering. In 1965, another failure of the rear slope occurred in a different place, and the lot settled. Plaintiffs sued in July 1966, naming as defendants L, the developer and vendor, H, the developer's original soil engineer, and W, plaintiffs' soil engineer. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants reversed.

(a) Applicability of Kriegler case. Defendants argued that Kriegler v. Eichler Homes (1969) 269 C.A.2d 224, 74 C.R. 749, supra, §1501, was inapplicable because the land developer does not alter the basic characteristics of soil and must contend with natural and latent conditions. But it is common knowledge that in modern grading earth is moved considerable distances for fill, that imported soil may have different characteristics from that to which it is added, and that soil engineers are able to determine the stability of soil from tests. (272 C.A.2d 611.)

(b) Other cases distinguished. Halliday v. Greene (1966) 244 C.A.2d 482, 485, 53 C.R. 267, and Conolley v. Bull (1968) 258 C.A.2d 183, 195, 65 C.R. 689, refused to recognize strict liability of the builder of a structure on land. But in Conolley, recovery was affirmed on negligence and the discussion of strict liability was dictum. (272 C.A.2d 613.)

(c) Strict liability of manufacturer of lot. The complaint stated a cause of action under Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429. It was alleged that defendants "manufactured the lot" by cutting, grading, filling, and compacting for the purpose of sale to the public and construction of a house; that the manufacturing process was defective in its insufficient provision for drainage and its inadequate compacting; that the defects were not apparent to a purchaser; and that they could have been ascertained by subsurface soil tests and inspections. (272 C.A.2d 614.) (See Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 802, 811, 110 C.R. 543 [following Avner; developer strictly liable for plaintiff's loss of home by fire, when defective water distribution system installed by developer failed to produce sufficient water]; 25 A.L.R.4th 351 [liability for injury or damage caused by defects in building or land].)

In Price v. Shell Oil Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 245, 254, 85 C.R. 178, 466 P.2d 722, supra, §1506, the Halliday and Conolley cases were distinguished on another ground: that each was an isolated transaction (sale of single parcel of real estate) and not an activity in a continuous course of business.

(2) Statute of Limitations. The 10-year limitations period of C.C.P. 337.15 applies to a cause of action against a developer for damages resulting from improper repair, based on products liability. (Stoneson Dev. Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 197 C.A.3d 178, 181, 242 C.R. 721, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §558.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statute of Limitations.

Stoneson case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §608.

102 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
a. Persons Liable.
12. Developer of Planned Development Project.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1504

[§ 1504] Developer of Planned Development Project.

In Del Mar Beach Club Owners Assn. v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 C.A.3d 898, 176 C.R. 886, defendants constructed a planned development consisting of residential units located on a scenic bluff. This action was brought after erosions and other defects caused substantial damages. Held, the reasoning of Kriegler v. Eichler Homes (1969) 269 C.A.2d 224, 74 C.R. 749, supra, §1501, and Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 802, 811, 110 C.R. 543, supra, §1503, applied. The case involved a multiple-unit, residential, planned development complex with 192 units in 27 residential buildings, and parking structures and recreational facilities. "Each purchaser of a dwelling unit equally relied upon the developer's skill and implied representation the project was erected in a workmanlike manner and reasonably fit for continued habitation. The members did not have an opportunity to participate in the design or construction of the project. The individual units appear to fit the classic mold of buyers of mass-produced housing." (123 C.A.3d 911.) (See 25 A.L.R.4th 351 [Del Mar]; on recovery for construction defects in residential housing, see C.C. 895 et seq., supra, §1162 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

103 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

13. Subcontractor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1505

[§ 1505] Subcontractor.

In La Jolla Village Homeowners' Assn. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1131, 261 C.R. 146, a complaint filed by plaintiff homeowners' association included a strict liability cause of action against defendant general contractor and numerous subcontractors based on alleged construction defects in a condominium project. The trial judge ordered that the strict liability cause of action be limited to the general contractor, on the theory that strict liability does not extend to subcontractors providing services, rather than component products, and then granted defendant subcontractors' motion for judgment on the pleadings. Plaintiff sought mandamus. Held, denied.

(a) Reasons for not extending strict liability to subcontractors.

(1) Subcontractors need not be held strictly liable in order to spread the cost of a plaintiff's damages. "While the principle of risk distribution has been described as the fundamental policy underlying the doctrine of strict liability, ... a plaintiff is already protected because the developer is strictly liable for the negligence of its subcontractors." (212 C.A.3d 1144, citing Price v. Shell Oil Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 245, 85 C.R. 178, 466 P.2d 722, infra, §1507.)

(2) Precluding strict liability actions against subcontractors does not protect the culpable, because developers may proceed against subcontractors based on the conventional theories of breach of contract, warranty, or negligence. (212 C.A.3d 1145.)

(3) Because the developer has overall control of a project, it is usually the best capitalized and most heavily insured, while the subcontractor is typically a smaller entity, with less capital and insurance. And because the developer is normally in privity with the homeowner, it is the most readily available source of compensation. (212 C.A.3d 1145.)

(4) Decisions in the related area of strict liability for injuries caused by defective conditions on land placed major importance on possession and control as a basis of liability (see Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 C.3d 358, 178 C.R. 783, 636 P.2d 1121, supra, §1089; Preston v. Goldman (1986) 42 C.3d 108, 227 C.R. 817, 720 P.2d 476, supra, §1159). "Similarly, a subcontractor who does not have any ownership or control over the project or over its portion of the project being built should not be held strictly liable for defective or dangerous conditions of the mass-produced homes." (212 C.A.3d 1145.)

(5) "[T]he realities of the real estate construction/development business weigh heavily in deciding against an extension of strict liability to subcontractors. To extend the doctrine to the subcontractors would seriously impact that industry and the home buying public. The additional costs to the subcontractor for insurance premiums for the newly created exposure would be passed on to developers who in turn would pass the cost on to the consumer, resulting in higher housing costs." (212 C.A.3d 1145.)

(b) Necessity of pleading special relationship. Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 275 P.2d 15, supra, §820, Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 802, 110 C.R. 543, infra, §1520, and Swett v. Gribaldo, Jones & Associates (1974) 40 C.A.3d 573, 115 C.R. 99, infra, §1520, decisions dealing with "subcontractors" and strict liability, indicate that responsibilities of subcontractors may vary depending on the type of contract and status between the parties. If a special status or relationship exists, such as where a subcontractor is also the developer of a project, the subcontractor could conceivably be treated as part of the manufacturing link, and hence strictly liable, regardless of the fact that it also provided services to the project. However, the special status or relationship must be specifically pleaded before a strict liability cause of action can be stated against a subcontractor. (212 C.A.3d 1147.) This requirement was not met here where a typical general contractor-subcontractor relationship was alleged. (212 C.A.3d 1149.)

In Monte Vista Dev. Corp. v. Superior Court (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1681, 277 C.R. 608, defendant subcontractor's bid to install tile in the homes of a housing development was accepted. The work included installation of soap dishes and other tile fixtures that defendant purchased in bulk from the manufacturer. The developer paid defendant based on invoices showing an amount due for each residence, but not setting out separate charges for the materials or fixtures. Plaintiff homeowner was injured when one of the soap dishes broke. Held, defendant could not be held strictly liable for the defective product. Defendant was not a "seller" within the meaning of former Rest.2d, Torts §402A (supra, §1430), because its business was doing tile work, not selling soap dishes or any other fixtures. Although defendant purchased the soap dish that injured plaintiff, as well as other fixtures, it did so to complete its subcontract with the developer rather than to resell them. (226 C.A.3d 1687.) (See Casey v. Overhead Door Corp. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 112, 118, 87 C.R.2d 603 [La Jolla principles are applicable whether subcontractor is described as manufacturer or supplier]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, infra, §1508 [persons subject to products liability]; 30 McGeorge L. Rev. 299 [strict liability for construction defects].)

In Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 C.4th 473, 127 C.R.2d 614, 58 P.3d 450, supra, §1502, La Jolla and Casey were disapproved "insofar as they hold or suggest that a manufacturer of components installed in a mass-produced home can never be strictly liable in tort for physical injuries caused by defects in those components." (29 C.4th 484.)

Legislation governing recovery for construction defects in residential housing was adopted in 2002. (See C.C. 895 et seq., supra, §1162 et seq.) These provisions are generally applicable in actions against subcontractors, but not to strict liability claims against them. (C.C. 936, supra, §1167.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

104 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

14. Lessor of Personal Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1506

[§ 1506] Lessor of Personal Property.

In Price v. Shell Oil Co. (1970) 2 C.3d 245, 85 C.R. 178, 466 P.2d 722, a business lessor of personal property was brought within the class of persons subject to strict products liability. Flying Tiger airline used a gasoline tank truck with a movable ladder mounted on the tank to refuel certain types of aircraft. The truck was leased from defendant Shell, the lease providing that the lessee was to maintain it and make specified repairs, and that all other repairs were to be made by Shell on request. The lease also contained a provision that the lessee would indemnify Shell against personal or property damage liability arising from possession or use of the truck. At the lessee's request, Shell replaced the original ladder with one built by an undisclosed manufacturer, and both lessor and lessee inspected it. Two years later, plaintiff aircraft mechanic climbed the ladder, its legs split, and he fell. His action was brought against Shell alone. Shell cross-complained against the lessee for indemnity. The jury verdict and judgment were for plaintiff against Shell, and the trial judge gave judgment of nonsuit against Shell on its cross-complaint. Held, both judgments affirmed.

(a) General principle applicable to lessors or bailors. "[W]e can perceive no substantial difference between sellers of personal property and non-sellers, such as bailors and lessors. In each instance, the seller or non-seller 'places [an article] on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects.' ... In the light of the policy to be subserved, it should make no difference that the party distributing the article has retained title to it. Nor can we see how the risk of harm associated with the use of the chattel can vary with the legal form under which it is held. Having in mind the market realities and the widespread use of the lease of personalty in today's business world, we think it makes good sense to impose on the lessors of chattels the same liability for physical harm which has been imposed on the manufacturers and retailers. The former, like the latter, are able to bear the cost of compensating for injuries resulting from defects by spreading the loss through an adjustment of the rental." (2 C.3d 251.)

(b) C.C. 1955 not an obstacle. C.C. 1955 has been construed as merely creating an implied warranty that the lessor or bailor has exercised reasonable care (see, e.g., McNeal v. Greenberg (1953) 40 C.2d 740, 742, 255 P.2d 810; 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §190). It is not in conflict with the present holding, for the statute does not purport to create an exclusive remedy. "Through that enactment the Legislature simply imposed certain duties upon lessors of personal property but in doing so manifested no intention to limit liability for their breach. There is no inconsistency between liability under this section, where it applies, and the rule of strict liability. Accordingly, the cases construing this section cannot be dispositive of the issue of whether strict liability in tort applies to a lessor of personalty." (2 C.3d 252.)

(c) Rule limited to business lessors. The rule governing sellers, declared in Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, and Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, supra, §1495, and incorporated into the Second Restatement, does not apply to the occasional seller not engaged in that activity as a part of his or her business, or to isolated transactions. (See former Rest.2d, Torts §420A, Comment f.) Application of the rule to lessors should be subject to the same condition. "[F]or the doctrine of strict liability in tort to apply to a lessor of personalty, the lessor should be found to be in the business of leasing, in the same general sense as the seller of personalty is found to be in the business of manufacturing or retailing." (2 C.3d 254.)

(d) Conditions were met here. There was substantial evidence from which it could reasonably be inferred that Shell Co. was a commercial lessor: (1) It was engaged in an organized and continuing operation, leasing trucks to a number of lessees. (2) The lease itself was on a printed form, indicating that "Shell had a wide variety of refueler trucks which were leased under the provisions of its standard-form automotive equipment leases." (2 C.3d 255.) (See Westlye v. Look Sports (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1715, 1741, 22 C.R.2d 781; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28:19; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 282; 18 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 188; 52 A.L.R.3d 121 [application of strict liability in tort doctrine to lessor of personal property]; 28 A.L.R.4th 326 [inapplicability of doctrine to agency merely financing sale or lease-purchase].)

Fakhoury v. Magner (1972) 25 C.A.3d 58, 101 C.R. 473, is a considerable extension of the Price rule. Defendant rented a furnished apartment to plaintiff, containing a couch supplied by a manufacturer. The couch collapsed and plaintiff was injured. In this action against defendant lessor, the court, upholding recovery, declared that the lessor of a furnished apartment occupies a dual role, and that as lessor of the furniture the lessor is subject to the same strict liability as any commercial lessor of personal property. "There does not seem to be good reason for holding, as we surely would under existing case law, that the lessor of furniture who supplies it for an empty apartment should be held to strict liability, under appropriate circumstances, but holding the landlord exempt just because he is also the owner and lessor of real property." (25 C.A.3d 63.) The doctrine applies only to the business of commercial leasing, and not to a casual or isolated transaction. Here there was a commercial activity: "In the case at hand, the landlord furnished two apartments in San Francisco and three in Sacramento at the same time with the same kind of couch purchased from the same seller." (25 C.A.3d 64.) (See 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 547.)

The holding in Fakhoury was itself extended in Golden v. Conway (1976) 55 C.A.3d 948, 128 C.R. 69. The lessor had a defective heater installed in the premises, and a fire damaged property of the tenant. The tenant sought an instruction on strict liability, and the judge refused it. Held, reversed. Fakhoury distinguished between defective furniture (strict liability) and defective fixtures (no strict liability), but the distinction is unsound. A lessor of real property engaged in the business of leasing apartments and commercial premises who equips the premises with an appliance without knowing whether it is defective because of the manner in which it was manufactured or installed, is strictly liable in tort if it proves to have defects that cause injury to persons or property when used in a normal manner. (55 C.A.3d 961.)

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, adopted in 1997 and applicable to both sellers and nonsellers, specifically includes lessors among those subject to products liability. (See infra, §1508.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.19.

105 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

15. Lessor of Residential Premises.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1507

[§ 1507] Lessor of Residential Premises.

Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C.3d 454, 213 C.R. 213, 698 P.2d 116, involved injuries suffered by a tenant as the result of a defective shower door. The court held that a landlord engaged in the business of leasing dwellings is part of the "stream of commerce," and hence is "strictly liable in tort for injuries resulting from a latent defect in the premises when the defect existed at the time the premises were let to the tenant." (38 C.3d 464.) (For full discussion of Becker, see 13 Summary (10th), Real Property, §673.)

Becker was overruled in Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 C.4th 1185, 43 C.R.2d 836, 899 P.2d 905, an action against a hotel owner by a guest injured when she slipped in the bathtub. A hotel proprietor or a residential landlord is not strictly liable for injuries caused by an alleged defect in the premises that the proprietor or landlord did not create or market. (10 C.4th 1188.) However, the landlord or proprietor may be liable for negligence for breaching the applicable standard of care, and the injured tenant or guest may pursue a strict liability cause of action against the manufacturer, distributor, or retailer of the product. (10 C.4th 1210.) (For full discussion of Peterson, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §654.) (See 28 Pacific L. J. 373 [Peterson].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

106 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

15a. (New) Finance Lessor.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1507A

[§ 1507A] (New) Finance Lessor.

In Arriaga v. CitiCapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 C.A.4th 1527, 85 C.R.3d 143, Corporations A and J executed a finance lease as defined in U.C.C. 10103(a)(7) (see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §199) governing a glue spreading and coating machine. The finance lease provided that J, the lessor, was not a dealer or manufacturer of the machine and that the machine met the standards specified by A, the lessee. Two days after the lease was executed, J bought the specified machine from K, who had obtained it from the manufacturer. J took title to the machine, paid for it, and leased it to A under a lease providing that A was to maintain the machine, could not modify it without J's permission, and had the option to purchase the machine at the end of the lease term. A used the machine for approximately 5 years, during which it modified it by removing part of a safety guard, and then, near the end of the lease term, sold it to O corporation, plaintiff's employer. O paid the purchase price directly to defendant C corporation, J's successor in interest, at which time O owned the machine free and clear of any liens or obligations. Due to the modification to the machine that had been made by A, plaintiff suffered injury and sued for personal injury under the strict liability doctrine. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Liability as finance lessor.

(1) Under the strict products liability doctrine, a manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article it places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a person. In addition to manufacturers, anyone identifiable as an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise is subject to strict liability. Accordingly, retailers engaged in the business of distributing goods to the public are strictly liable in tort for personal injuries caused by defects in those goods. Others subject to strict products liability include lessors of personal property, wholesale and retail distributors, and licensors. To establish the required causative connection between the defendant and the product, the plaintiff must demonstrate that (a) the defendant received a direct financial benefit from its activities and from the sale of the product; (b) the defendant's role was integral to the business enterprise such that the defendant's conduct was a necessary factor in bringing the product to the initial consumer market; and (c) the defendant had control over, or a substantial ability to influence, the manufacturing or distribution process. (167 C.A.4th 1523; see Bay Summit Community Assn. v. Shell Oil Co. (1996) 51 C.A.4th 762, 59 C.R.2d 322, text, §1498.)

(2) Under a finance lease, the lessor usually performs a limited function, and thus the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants, and warranties. Moreover, although the finance lease is written in lease form, the finance lessor does not expect to retake the equipment at the end of the lease period. With a commercial lease on the other hand, the lessor supplies the particular equipment, i.e., selects the product and places it into the stream of commerce, and allows the lessee to use the equipment for some fraction of its useful life, but fully expects to retake the equipment at the end of the lease term and either resell or re-lease it. (167 C.A.4th 1536.)

(3) Strict liability is not imposed, even if the defendant is technically a link in the chain in getting the product to the consumer market, if the judicially perceived policy considerations, i.e., enhancing product safety, maximizing protection to the injured plaintiff, and apportioning costs among the defendants, are not satisfied. Because a finance lessor, such as defendant, does not select the specific machine or manufacturer of the machine, it does not maintain an ongoing relationship with a particular manufacturer, and thus is not in a position to either directly or indirectly exert pressure on the manufacturer to enhance the safety of the product. Therefore, even if the finance lessor's tangential function of providing money to make the purchase possible is characterized as a "link" in the vertical chain of distribution, imposing strict liability on the finance lessor will not further a critical policy consideration. (167 C.A.4th 1537.)

(4) A finance lessor also does not play an integral role in the producing and marketing enterprise of a product and thus is not strictly liable under a marketing/distribution theory. Although it is arguable that the finance lessor's conduct in financing the purchase of the product is necessary to bring the product to the initial consumer market, any direct financial benefit received by the finance lessor is derived from having placed its money, not the product, into the stream of commerce. In other words, it is the lessee who selects, and the third-party supplier who supplies, the article to be placed in the stream of commerce, not the finance lessor. (167 C.A.4th 1538.)

(b) Liability as seller of used goods.

(1) Plaintiff asserted that because defendant, not A, held title to the machine when it was sold to O, defendant was the seller of a defective machine. However, a seller of used machinery is not strictly liable in tort, unless the seller rebuilds or reconditions the product and thus assumes a role analogous to that of a manufacturer (see Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 C.4th 1185, 43 C.R.2d 836, 899 P.2d 905, text, §1507). Although the retailer of a product may play a substantial part in ensuring that the product is safe or may be in a position to exert pressure on the manufacturer to that end, this risk reduction rationale is not applicable to a used goods dealer, who is normally entirely outside the original chain of distribution of the product. Thus, to impose strict liability in this situation would, as a practical matter, require all dealers in used goods routinely to dismantle, inspect for latent defects, and repair or recondition their products, thus effecting a radical change in the nature of the used product market. (167 C.A.4th 1540.)

(2) A used goods dealer's exemption from strict liability applies to subsequent defects as well. To impose such liability would, in effect, render used goods dealers as insurers against defects that came into existence after the original chain of distribution and while the product was under the control of previous consumers. (167 C.A.4th 1540.)

(3) Plaintiff argued that the used goods dealer's exemption did not apply here, because defendant was not a seller of used equipment, but rather was responsible for the initial distribution of the machine. However, defendant, being outside the original chain of distribution, was not strictly liable as an entity that was instrumental in placing the product in the stream of commerce. (167 C.A.4th 1541.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

107 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

a. Persons Liable.

16. Scope of Liability Under Third Restatement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1508

[§ 1508] Scope of Liability Under Third Restatement.

Rest.2d, Torts §402A, approved in 1964, limited strict products liability to "one who sells a product in a defective condition." After the promulgation of §402A, courts began to extend strict liability for harm caused by product defects to various nonsale commercial transactions involving the distribution of products. Rather than stretching to call these transactions "sales," courts simply declared that the same policy objectives that supported strict liability in the sales context supported strict liability in these contexts as well. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comment a.)

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability, adopted in 1997 (supra, §1430), broadly states the scope of liability. For purposes of the Restatement, "one who sells or otherwise distributes" a product, so as to subject itself to products liability, is defined in Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, as follows:

(1) One sells a product "when, in a commercial context, one transfers ownership either for use or consumption or for resale leading to ultimate use or consumption." Commercial product sellers include, but are not limited to, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers.

(2) One otherwise distributes a product "when, in a commercial transaction other than a sale, one provides the product to another either for use or consumption or as a preliminary step leading to ultimate use or consumption." Commercial nonsale product distributors include, but are not limited to, lessors, bailors, and those who provide products to others as a means of promoting either the use or consumption of these products or some other commercial activity.

(3) One also sells or otherwise distributes a product when, in a commercial transaction, one "provides a combination of products and services" and either the transaction taken as a whole, or the product component, satisfies the above criteria for either a sale or a distribution.

However, persons assisting or providing services to product distributors, while indirectly facilitating the commercial distribution of products, are not subject to liability under the Restatement rules. Thus, commercial firms engaged in advertising products are outside these rules, as are firms engaged exclusively in the financing of product sale or lease transactions. Sales personnel and commercial auctioneers are also outside the Restatement rules. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comment g.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

108 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

b. Persons Entitled To Recover.

1. Foreseeable User or Consumer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1509

[§ 1509] Foreseeable User or Consumer.

Strict liability extends to any foreseeable user or consumer of the product. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §15 requiring causal connection between product defect and person harmed]; 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.16; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §§566, 567; 18 Hastings L. J. 30; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1092 [strict liability in tort]; 38 A.L.R.3d 1247 [right of member of armed forces to recover from manufacturer or seller of defective military material].) The wide range of the concepts of "user" and "consumer" was emphasized by former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment l:

(1) He or she need not have acquired the product directly from the defendant seller, but may have gotten it through a dealer.

(2) He or she need not have purchased it at all, but may be a member of the buyer's family, or the buyer's employee, or the buyer's guest at table, or his or her donee.

(3) The user or consumer need not have actually consumed it; he may be a husband who opened a bottle of beverage for his wife to consume, or she may be a wife who prepared food for her husband to consume.

(4) Consumption includes all ultimate uses for which the product is intended, e.g., a permanent wave solution applied in a beauty shop.

(5) Users include those passively enjoying the benefit of a product, e.g., passengers in automobiles or airplanes.

In Kately v. Wilkinson (1983) 148 C.A.3d 576, 195 C.R. 902, plaintiff's daughter was killed in a waterskiing accident allegedly caused by a defect in the steering mechanism of the boat. R, a friend of the daughter who witnessed the accident, was denied recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress. (See supra, §§1018, 1021.) But the court held that she could amend her complaint to state a cause of action for products liability, as a user of the product. Harb. & Nav.C. 658 requires the presence of a person at least 12 years of age in a boat to observe the progress of the person being towed; and it was reasonably foreseeable that she would be such a person, would witness any injury to the waterskier, and would suffer emotional injury. "The user of a defective product is not a mere bystander but a primary and direct victim of the product defect; this is true whether the defective product directly and immediately injures the user or severely harms another while being operated by the user; it is equally true whether the user suffers physical or emotional injuries." (148 C.A.3d 588.)

In U. S. Financial v. Sullivan (1974) 37 C.A.3d 5, 112 C.R. 18, the court held that the beneficiary under a deed of trust could sue a developer for negligence in construction of a house that resulted in an impairment of the plaintiff's security. (See 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §86.) The court, however, rejected the theory of strict liability, on two grounds:

(a) Assuming the doubtful proposition that a developer could be held strictly liable to the purchaser of a defective home or residential lot, under Kriegler v. Eichler Homes (1969) 269 C.A.2d 224, 74 C.R. 749, supra, §1501, and Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 C.A.2d 607, 77 C.R. 633, supra, §1503, a lender of money is not in the same vulnerable position as a home buyer. The latter is a consumer, ordinarily without the means to protect himself from defective products; a lender may require a showing by the developer. Thus, the historical reason for imposing strict liability is absent. (37 C.A.3d 18.)

(b) Strict liability is imposed so as to require the manufacturer to absorb the cost of injuries from a defect, and thus, by insurance, distribute the risk among the public as a cost of doing business. "Unlike the consumer, user, or bystander, the lender is itself a link in the marketing chain of mass-produced homes and residential lots and is itself in a position to spread the risks of harm resulting from a defective lot or home." (37 C.A.3d 19.) (See Sumitomo Bank v. Taurus Developers (1986) 185 C.A.3d 211, 226, 229 C.R. 719 [following U. S. Financial].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.19.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.16.

109 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

b. Persons Entitled To Recover.

2. Commercial Customer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1510

[§ 1510] Commercial Customer.

In International Knights of Wine v. Ball Corp. (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1001, 168 C.R. 301, plaintiff corporation purchased bottled wine from defendant winery to be marketed under plaintiff's label and trade name. The bottles had defective metal caps, and the wine was damaged and rendered unmarketable. Defendant contended that Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 737, 127 C.R. 838, infra, §1524, precluded recovery on a strict liability theory, and the trial judge granted a motion for judgment on the pleadings as to that count. Held, this was error.

(a) Although the traditional statement of the doctrine emphasizes the protection of ordinary consumers (110 C.A.3d 1005), it should operate in favor of "any person or entity, corporate or otherwise, having no significant bargaining power respecting the manufacturing process and which is thereby best calculated to be its victim." (110 C.A.3d 1006.) Thus, it would be anomalous to allow recovery on strict liability to an individual consumer when the item explodes in his house and to deny it to a commercial customer when its plant is similarly damaged, "where neither user had any ability to deal with such a risk." (110 C.A.3d 1006.)

(b) The crucial factors set forth in Kaiser Steel (parties in positions of relatively equal economic strength and able to negotiate concerning risk of loss from defects in the product) were not shown here by the pleadings. If they could be established at the trial, a nonsuit could be granted. (110 C.A.3d 1007.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

110 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

b. Persons Entitled To Recover.

3. Bystander.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1511

[§ 1511] Bystander.

Should strict liability extend to nonusers of a product? Prosser observed that the answer must ultimately depend on which of two theories underlies strict liability: (1) The implied representation of safety made by placing the product on the market, relied on by the buyer; or (2) the social policy justifying placing the risk of harm on the manufacturer or seller of the product, who can insure against it and add the cost of insurance to the price. Under the first theory, the bystander could not recover (no representation or reliance); under the second, he or she could. (See Canifax v. Hercules Powder Co. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 44, 54, 46 C.R. 552 [mentioning point without deciding it]; 18 Hastings L. J. 31; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1096 [strict liability in tort].)

The Second Restatement took no position on this issue, noting that the social pressure for the protection of bystanders was less than that for the protection of consumers, but the California Supreme Court disagreed. (See supra, §1430.)

Liability to the bystander was established in Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 C.2d 578, 75 C.R. 652, 451 P.2d 84. Plaintiff E and her husband bought a car manufactured by defendant American and sold by defendant M, a dealer. After 1,500 miles of driving, the car started to shimmy. On the day of the accident, after 2,751 miles of driving, a part fell out and dragged along the highway, causing a collision with another car. Plaintiff E was injured and sued for her injuries. The other driver was killed and plaintiff W sued for wrongful death. The cases were consolidated and nonsuits were granted. Held, reversed.

(a) With respect to the suit by plaintiff E, the conditions of strict liability were established for purposes of the motion for nonsuit; i.e., inferences from circumstantial evidence showed both the defect and causation. An expert testified that the drive shaft was probably disconnected because of a defect that existed at the time of sale, i.e., loose fastenings or metal failure--not normal driving; and there was no evidence that anyone handled the drive shaft after sale of the car. (70 C.2d 581, 584.)

(b) W was neither the buyer nor the user of the car that caused the wrongful death of her husband; hence, she came within the rough classification of "bystander." However, though the Second Restatement left the question open and the meager case law is in conflict, the principles laid down in Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, and Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, supra, §1495, support liability. Vandermark pointed out that, because the theory is tort, a purported contractual restriction of liability is ineffective. (70 C.2d 585.) If strict liability is imposed even where the manufacturer has contracted against it, it cannot be avoided on the theory that no representation of safety has been made. (70 C.2d 586.) And injury to a bystander is often a foreseeable risk of the maker's enterprise. (70 C.2d 586.)

(c) "If anything, bystanders should be entitled to greater protection than the consumer or user where injury to bystanders from the defect is reasonably foreseeable. Consumers and users, at least, have the opportunity to inspect for defects and to limit their purchases to articles manufactured by reputable manufacturers and sold by reputable dealers, whereas the bystander ordinarily has no such opportunities. In short, the bystander is in greater need of protection from defective products which are dangerous, and if any distinction should be made between bystanders and users, it should be made, contrary to the position of defendants, to extend greater liability in favor of the bystanders." (70 C.2d 586.)

(d) "An automobile with a defectively connected drive shaft constitutes a substantial hazard on the highway not only to the driver and passenger of the car but also to pedestrians and other drivers. The public policy which protects the driver and passenger of the car should also protect the bystander, and where a driver or passenger of another car is injured due to defects in the manufacture of an automobile and without any fault of their own, they may recover from the manufacturer of the defective automobile." (70 C.2d 586.) (See Johnson v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1969) 274 C.A.2d 331, 79 C.R. 194 [following Elmore; defective aluminum ladder sold by defendant to electrical contractor; while his employee was using ladder it slipped and struck stepladder on which decedent was doing plumbing]; Preissman v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 1 C.A.3d 841, 850, 82 C.R. 108 [parked automobile rolled down slope and injured plaintiff parking attendant]; and see 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.16; 58 Cal. L. Rev. 335; 33 A.L.R.3d 415 [extension of strict liability in tort to permit recovery by bystander]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §15, infra, §1526 [requiring causal connection between product defect and person harmed]; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §568; 24 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1237 [injuries from "secondhand" tobacco smoke].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 C.A.4th 689, 695, 50 C.R.3d 684 [even though no sale occurred and owner of water company was not ultimate user or consumer of gasoline, owner could maintain strict products liability cause of action against gasoline refiner for alleged leakage of additive from gas stations into owner's water system; storage and transfer of gasoline are foreseeable uses for which injured bystanders may recover under strict liability]; 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.16.

111 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

b. Persons Entitled To Recover.

4. Licensee.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1512

[§ 1512] Licensee.

In Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 C.A.3d 319, 82 C.R. 420, plaintiff, an 11-year-old boy, had been sent by his mother to defendant's laundrette to wash clothes. He had been instructed in the operation of the machines and had been doing this work for some time. On the day of the accident, a machine stopped, he opened it and inserted his hand to remove clothes, and the machine started, injuring his arm. Held, judgment for defendant on verdict reversed for refusal to instruct on strict liability. Defendant's contention that there was a bailment, with plaintiff as bailee assuming responsibility for safe operation, was untenable; plaintiff was a licensee who could have been prevented from using the machines, and who used them with permission. (3 C.A.3d 324.) A licensee is as much entitled to protection as the bystander in Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 C.2d 578, 75 C.R. 652, 451 P.2d 84, supra, §1511. In the instant case, plaintiff had less opportunity to avoid harm than a buyer, for the buyer can select his or her product, while plaintiff had to take at random a machine offered to the public. (3 C.A.3d 325.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

112 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.

1. Physical Injury or Wrongful Death.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1513

[§ 1513] Physical Injury or Wrongful Death.

Strict liability, like negligence and warranty liability, is imposed for physical injury to the person or wrongful death. (See Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, and Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 C.2d 256, 37 C.R. 896, 391 P.2d 168, supra, §1495; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §561; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1089 [products liability: strict liability in tort].)

In Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1176, 272 C.R. 304, decedent was transporting an earth mover loaded on a trailer, owned by defendant construction company. While he was attempting to drive the mover off the trailer, the mover rolled off and over, crushing and killing him. In this wrongful death action against the construction company and the manufacturer, by his widow and minor child, plaintiffs relied mainly on the theory of strict products liability. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that strict liability will not support a cause of action for wrongful death. Held, mandamus granted to compel denial of the motion.

(a) Defendants contended that the term "wrongful act" as used in former C.C.P. 377 (now C.C.P. 377.60) means an intentional or "fault-based" act. Although no published opinion has expressly considered this point, most commentators and some courts have assumed that "wrongful act" means a "tortious act," and that the act of placing a defective product on the market is a tortious act, and is therefore a basis of recovery on strict products liability. (222 C.A.3d 1183, citing the text.)

(b) There are three distinct public policy considerations involved in the legislative creation of a cause of action for wrongful death: (1) compensation for survivors, (2) deterrence of conduct, and (3) limitation, or lack of limitation, on the damages recoverable. (222 C.A.3d 1185.)

(c) "Given the three public policy considerations ... , our interpretation of the term 'wrongful act,' as it is used in that section, should be an interpretation that emphasizes the deterrent aspect of the section, rather than an interpretation which limits the measure of recovery, and an interpretation that recognizes that only conduct which is subject to conscious control or improvement can be deterred by the risk of potential liability for damages. The question then becomes whether interpreting the term 'wrongful act' to encompass the act of putting a defective product into the stream of commerce, so as to allow a decedent's heirs to recover damages under a theory of strict liability (1) emphasizes the deterrent effect of the wrongful death act and (2) takes into account whether the placing of defective products into the stream of commerce is conduct which can be deterred. To answer that question, we must consider (1) the purpose behind the creation of strict products liability as a predicate for liability, (2) the effect of extending the use of strict products liability as a theory of recovery to persons other than the purchasers or users of the defective product, i.e., to the heirs of such persons, and (3) the nature of the conduct which forms the basis for liability for damages under such theory." (222 C.A.3d 1185.)

(d) The primary purpose of imposing strict products liability is to insure that the cost of injuries resulting from defective products are borne by the manufacturers. (222 C.A.3d 1186; see supra, §1429.) Other purposes or public policies are "(1) to provide a 'short cut' to liability where negligence may be present but difficult to prove, (2) to provide an economic incentive for improved product safety, (3) to induce the reallocation of resources toward safer products, and (4) to spread the risk of loss among all who use the product." (222 C.A.3d 1186.)

(e) These four public policies have been furthered by extending the right to recover to persons other than purchasers, e.g., to bystanders. (222 C.A.3d 1186, 1187.) Extending the strict liability theory to bystanders places strict liability on the same footing as negligence, by providing a cause of action as to all foreseeable injuries. Extending the right to a decedent's heirs does the same thing, and fulfills policies behind both former C.C.P. 377 and the doctrine of tort liability. Failure to extend the use of a strict products liability theory to a decedent's heirs would have the anomalous effect of 'rewarding' the manufacturer of a defective product" that kills, rather than maims, its user. (222 C.A.3d 1187.)

(f) Although there is language in opinions to the effect that strict products liability is imposed regardless of "fault," this is true only if the concept of "fault" is equated with negligence. If "fault" can be equated with the responsibility for placing a defective product into the stream of commerce, then strict tort liability requires a showing of this fault. (222 C.A.3d 1189.)

(g) Other indicators of the fault aspect of strict products liability are:

(1) The award of punitive damages where a manufacturer knowingly places a defective product into the stream of commerce with conscious disregard of the safety of others. (222 C.A.3d 1189, citing Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1578.)

(2) Application of the principles of comparative fault, which presupposes fault on the part of both parties. (222 C.A.3d 1189, citing Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542.)

(3) Strict liability may not be imposed unless the injury results from a use that is reasonably foreseeable. (222 C.A.3d 1190, citing Daly.)

(h) Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 C.3d 113, 117 C.R. 812, 528 P.2d 1148, supra, §1449, is inapplicable here. That case dealt with Ev.C. 1151, which excludes evidence of subsequent repairs or precautionary measures to prove negligence or culpable conduct. The Ault court held that the statute did not exclude this evidence in a strict liability case. The court interpreted Ev.C. 1151 in a way that comported with both the public policy behind Ev.C. 1151 and the public policy behind strict products liability. However, the Evidence Code policy (to encourage subsequent repairs by freeing negligent defendants from the fear that such repairs may be used as evidence of their earlier negligence) is not the same as the public policy behind strict products liability (to assure that survivors are compensated for their loss and to deter negligent or wrongful acts). (222 C.A.3d 1195.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.17.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

113 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.
 - 2. Economic Loss.
 - aa. No Recovery Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1514

[§ 1514] No Recovery Rule.

(1) In General. "Economic loss" is the lessened value of a defective product that does not meet the user's or consumer's need as well as a product properly made. An ordinary buyer may get restitution--the difference between the purchase price and the lower market value, and a commercial buyer may recover for profits lost because the product was not fit for its intended use. Both kinds of recovery were traditionally sought on the theory of breach of warranty, and the common defenses (no privity, lack of timely notice, disclaimer) were available to the defendant.

In a New Jersey case in 1965, the court applied the strict tort liability doctrine to an ordinary user who suffered economic loss: He purchased a defective rug, and successfully sued the manufacturer for the difference between the price and the market value. (See 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1687; 18 Hastings L. J. 34.) But the California Supreme Court, in Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, refused to make this extension, holding that the manufacturer cannot be charged with this responsibility, i.e., the manufacturer cannot be held for the level of performance of its products in the consumer's business unless it agrees that the product was designed to meet the consumer's demands. (63 C.2d 18; see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §204; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1091 [products liability: strict liability in torts].) Thus, recovery for economic loss is an aspect of the law of sales, governed by the warranty provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code. (See 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §565; 13 Cal. Western L. Rev. 297 [arguing that recovery should be permitted]; 17 Hastings L. J. 165; 3 San Diego L. Rev. 112; 12 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 4 [Defective Products or Realty Causing Economic Loss: Toward a Unified Theory of Recovery]; 16 A.L.R.3d 683 [privity of contract as essential in action against remote manufacturer or distributor for defects in goods not causing injury to person or to other property]; 15 A.L.R.4th 791 [preemption of strict liability in tort by provisions of U.C.C., Article 2]; 72 A.L.R.4th 12 [recovery for damage to product alone]; 89 A.L.R.4th 11 [loss of profits].)

There is no "life-safety" exception to the economic loss rule that would apply in the most compelling circumstances. (KB Home v. Superior Court (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1076, 1087, 5 C.R.3d 587 [no such exception where defective emission control devices resulted in damaged furnaces that were fire hazards].)

(2) Distinction: Physical Injury to Property. Damages for physical injury, including the defective product itself, are not within the rule of no recovery for economic loss. (See Seely v. White Motor Co., supra, 63 C.2d 18, distinguishing economic loss [dictum; injury to defective vehicle causing personal injury]; Ghera v. Ford Motor Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 639, 649, 55 C.R. 94; Golden v. Conway (1976) 55 C.A.3d 948, 961, 128 C.R. 69; Pisano v. American Leasing (1983) 146 C.A.3d 194, 197, 194 C.R. 77; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §§563, 564; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1090 [products liability: strict liability in tort]; 89 A.L.R.4th 11 [consequential loss of profits from injury to property].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.17.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

114 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.

2. Economic Loss.

bb. As Applied to Strict Liability Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1515

[§ 1515] As Applied to Strict Liability Action.

The no recovery rule (supra, §1514) was reviewed and the rule was reaffirmed in Sacramento Regional Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 C.A.3d 289, 204 C.R. 736. Plaintiff district operated a fleet of buses in Sacramento for public transportation. It purchased 103 new buses in 1975 from defendant manufacturer, and in 1980, discovered that they had cracked or cracking component parts. With the assistance of defendant's employees, 26 disabled buses were repaired, and corrective repairs were made to the others, so that all were restored to service. In 1980, long after the standard contractual warranty had expired, plaintiff brought this action for damages on theories of strict products liability and negligence. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Seely rule. The rule of Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, "reflects the line of demarcation between tort theory and contract theory." "Economic" loss or harm has been defined as "damages for inadequate value, costs of repair and replacement of the defective product or consequent loss of profits--without any claim of personal injury or damages to other property." (158 C.A.3d 294, quoting Illinois case.) By contrast, strict liability is imposed where there is a defect, and further damage to the plaintiff's property caused by the defect. "When the defect and the damage are one and the same, the defect may not be considered to have caused physical injury." (158 C.A.3d 294.)

(b) Uniform Commercial Code is controlling. The facts alleged by plaintiff demonstrate that, as a transit district, it had knowledge and skill peculiar to the goods (the buses) involved in the transaction, and was therefore a "merchant" as defined by U.C.C. 2104(1) (4 Summary (10th), Sales, §28). Thus, the various aspects of plaintiff's purchase of buses from defendant, including liability for defects based on express and implied warranties, were governed by the law of sales as set forth in the Code. (158 C.A.3d 295, quoting Seely, and Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 737, 127 C.R. 838, infra, §1524.)

(c) Policy supporting limitation. Plaintiff contends that it is anomalous to allow a consumer to sue on strict liability when physical injury to a person has occurred, but not when a defect is discovered that will ultimately cause the physical injury; but this argument assumes that the purchaser has discovered the defect, and the policy question is whether tort liability is reasonably necessary to prevent use of the known defective product with its potential for causing injury. With respect to plaintiff merchant, the answer is no: "As a merchant having peculiar knowledge of the goods ... , plaintiff would (and did) perceive the full potential for injury to persons that could occur if the defective product was put to its ordinary use. We will not assume a merchant who discovers a defect with the potential for causing injury will place the defective product in use unless the product's manufacturer bears the cost of repairs. Nothing in reason or experience supports such an assumption. Rather, the more reasonable view is that the merchant will repair the product as plaintiff did here. Since the question is not whether a defective product will be put in use, but rather who should bear the economic cost of repairs, we see no reason to disturb the allocation of those costs agreed to by knowledgeable merchants." (158 C.A.3d 298.)

In Fieldstone Co. v. Briggs Plumbing Products (1997) 54 C.A.4th 357, 62 C.R.2d 701, plaintiff developer sued various sink manufacturers for the cost of replacing the sinks in homes that had been developed by plaintiff. The defects, i.e., spot welding and insufficient coating, caused rusting and chipping to other, nondefective portions of the sinks. Held, this did not consist of damage to other property, within the meaning of the Seely rule, so as to render defendants liable in strict liability where economic loss is accompanied by injury to other property. Here, the spot welding and insufficient coating defects made the sinks prone to rusting and chipping and were the type of purely economic injury that is not compensable. (54 C.A.4th 363.)

The Seely rule was further refined in Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 C.A.4th 611, 92 C.R.2d 761, which drew the following distinctions between "economic loss," for which there is no recovery in strict liability, and "physical damage to property," for which recovery is permitted:

(a) "Economic damages" generally refers to pecuniary damage that occurs through loss of value or use of the goods sold or the cost of repair, together with consequential lost profits. (78 C.A.4th 620, citing San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. W.R. Grace & Co. (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1318, 44 C.R.2d 305.) "Property damage" is not considered to be "economic loss." (78 C.A.4th 617, citing Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 C.A.3d 404, 203 C.R. 800.)

(b) Strict liability applies to physical harm to person "or property." (78 C.A.4th 618, citing Ghera v. Ford Motor Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 639, 55 C.R. 94, supra, §1513.)

(c) To be recoverable in strict liability, the defective product must cause physical damage to property, but the damaged property may consist of the product itself. (78 C.A.4th 619, citing Sacramento Regional Transit Dist., supra.)

(d) A person may not sue in products liability for physical injury to his or her property where that injury consists of nothing more than the product defect upon which liability is founded. (78 C.A.4th 620, citing Sacramento Regional Transit Dist., supra.)

Applying these principles, the Stearman court allowed plaintiffs to recover for extensive cracks throughout their home caused by defective construction of the foundation. (78 C.A.4th 617.)

In distinguishing between "other property" and the defective product itself in a case involving component-to-component damage requires a determination whether the defective part is a sufficiently discrete element of the larger product that it is not reasonable to expect its failure invariably to damage other portions of the finished product. Resolution of this issue is for the trier of fact. (KB Home v. Superior Court (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1076, 1087, 5 C.R.3d 587 [whether furnaces damaged by defective emission control devices were "other property" was question of fact].)

Rest.3d, Torts: Product Liability §21(c) excludes lessened value of the product itself from products liability recovery. (See infra, §1517.) (See Anthony v. Kelsey-Hayes Co. (1972) 25 C.A.3d 442, 447, 102 C.R. 113 [loss of use of trucks and depreciation in their value; Seely followed]; Transwestern Pipeline Co. v. Monsanto Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 502, 523, 53 C.R.2d 887 [damage to gas company's pipelines caused by transportation of gas containing PCBs was property damage rather than economic loss, and therefore compensable in damages in strict liability action, where cost of remediation would have been unnecessary had pipelines not been contaminated]; Casey v. Overhead Door Corp. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 112, 123, 87 C.R.2d 603 [Seely rule applies to cause of action for either strict liability or negligence]; Carrau v. Marvin Lumber & Cedar Co. (2001) 93 C.A.4th 281, 292, 112 C.R.2d 869, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §500 [Seeley analysis precludes recovery of damages under strict products liability theory for cost of replacing or repairing defective product].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.17.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Carrau case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §539.

115 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.
5. Scope of Liability.
c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.
2. Economic Loss.
cc. As Applied to Negligence Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1516

[§ 1516] As Applied to Negligence Action.

(1) In General. Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, supra, §1514, added a dictum that the rule allowing no recovery for economic loss would apply to actions based on negligence (63 C.2d 18). The dictum was applied in a number of Court of Appeal decisions, including Sacramento Regional Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 C.A.3d 289, 204 C.R. 736, where the court said: "This rule is necessary so that the Uniform Commercial Code ... is not completely subsumed by the law of tort." As a federal court put it: "[J]udicial expansion of negligence law to cover purely economic losses would only add more confusion in an area already plagued with overlapping and conflicting theories of recovery." (158 C.A.3d 299.) (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.18A et seq.)

In Ales-Peratis Foods Int. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 277, 209 C.R. 917, the court listed the Court of Appeal cases applying the dictum (164 C.A.3d 285, footnote 2), but pointed out that the Supreme Court, although drafting the dictum, had, to that point, never applied it to a negligence cause of action. Hence, "this court arguably is free to conclude that in negligence cases--as opposed to strict liability cases--consumers as a general rule are entitled to recover from manufacturers for foreseeable economic losses even if they did not sustain any property damage or physical injury." (164 C.A.3d 285.) However, the issue was not reached, for the court held that a cause of action was stated for negligent interference with prospective advantage. (164 C.A.3d 290; see supra, §§752, 753.) (See Pisano v. American Leasing (1983) 146 C.A.3d 194, 196, 194 C.R. 77 [expressing approval of recovery for economic losses]; Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 C.A.3d 404, 420, 423, 203 C.R. 800 [same].)

The issue was resolved in Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 C.4th 627, 101 C.R.2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125, supra, §1162, a Supreme Court decision applying the Seely dictum to a negligence cause of action. "[T]he statement can be seen either as dictum or as part of the court's rationale for permitting the Seely plaintiff to recover his economic losses in warranty rather than in tort. Which label we attach to the statement is of no consequence. This is because the principle articulated in Seely has by critical examination and application in subsequent cases been confirmed as law. Courts routinely apply Seely in strict liability and negligence cases alike to distinguish recoverable damages for physical injury from unrecoverable damages representing the benefit of a contractual bargain." (24 C.4th 635.) (See Zamora v. Shell Oil Co. (1997) 55 C.A.4th 204, 208, 63 C.R.2d 762 [homeowners who suffered only economic damage (defective pipes that might leak in the future) could not recover in negligence]; Fieldstone Co. v. Briggs Plumbing Products (1997) 54 C.A.4th 357, 367, 62 C.R.2d 701 [manufacturer was not liable in negligence for developer's economic loss in absence of special relationship; no showing that goods had been made specifically for developer as opposed to consumers generally].)

(2) Seely Rule Limited to Cases Involving Furnishing of Goods. The "economic loss" rule does not apply when the commercial relationship of the parties does not involve the sale of goods or products, nor the rules developed under the law merchant and the Uniform Commercial Code. In these cases, the policy concerns underlying the limitations on recovery of economic losses articulated by the court in Seely v. White Motor Co. are not present. Thus, the economic loss rule does not apply when the contract alleged to be negligently performed relates to the performance of services. (North Amer. Chemical Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 764, 780, 69 C.R.2d 466 [negligence in performing packaging and shipping contract].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.18A et seq.

116 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.
 - 2. Economic Loss.
 - dd. Restatement Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1517

[§ 1517] Restatement Rule.

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability (see supra, §1430), "harm to persons or property," subject to tort recovery, may include "economic loss," but only when caused by one of the following (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §21):

- (1) Harm to the plaintiff's person.
- (2) Harm to the person of another when harm to the other interferes with an interest of the plaintiff protected by tort law.
- (3) Harm to the plaintiff's property other than the defective product itself.

The Comment explains the rationale as follows: "Two major constraints on tort recovery give content to this Section. First, products liability law lies at the boundary between tort and contract. Some categories of loss, including those often referred to as 'pure economic loss,' are more appropriately assigned to contract law and the remedies set forth in Articles 2 and 2A of the Uniform Commercial Code. When the Code governs a claim, its provisions regarding such issues as statutes of limitation, privity, notice of claim, and disclaimer ordinarily govern the litigation. Second, some forms of economic loss have traditionally been excluded from the realm of tort law even when the plaintiff has no contractual remedy for a claim." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §21, Comment a.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

117 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - c. Kinds of Injury or Damage.
 - 2. Economic Loss.
- ee. (New) Distinction: Intentional Tort.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1517A

[§ 1517A] (New) Distinction: Intentional Tort.

Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp. (2004) 34 C.4th 979, 22 C.R.3d 352, 102 P.3d 268, addressed the following question: "[W]hether the economic loss rule, which in some circumstances bars a tort action in the absence of personal injury or physical damage to other property, applies to claims for intentional misrepresentation or fraud in the performance of a contract." (34 C.4th 984.) Plaintiff, a helicopter manufacturer, made two models that used the sprag clutch, a safety device manufactured by defendant. Plaintiff was required to obtain a "type certificate" from the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), and every aircraft made pursuant to the certificate had to be manufactured exactly in accordance with that certificate. Under the certificate, the required level of hardness for the clutches was 50/55, and accordingly this degree of hardness was a requirement of the contract between plaintiff and defendant. For nearly 12 years, defendant complied with this requirement, but for 2 years, and without informing plaintiff or the FAA, defendant switched to a hardness level of 61/63. During the 2-year period, defendant, by issuing certificates of compliance, misled plaintiff into believing that the clutches were being manufactured as required by the FAA and the contract. Shortly thereafter, the 61/63 clutches experienced a failure rate substantially higher than the 50/55 clutches. Although the faulty clutches did not cause personal or property damage or damage to other parts of the helicopters, plaintiff was required by the FAA to recall and replace them. Because defendant disputed liability, this had to be done at plaintiff's expense. Plaintiff then successfully sued for intentional misrepresentation, and received a large punitive damages award based on a finding that defendant knowingly concealed material facts with intent to defraud. However, the Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that, under the economic loss rule, plaintiff was entitled to recover only economic damages. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C.4th 543, 87 C.R.2d 886, 981 P.2d 978, text, §1037, held that conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only when it also violates a duty independent of the contract and arising from the principles of tort law. Here, the breach involved nonconforming clutches. However, defendant also issued false certificates stating that the clutches were in conformance with the contract; but for these false certificates, plaintiff would not have accepted delivery and used the nonconforming clutches, nor would it have incurred the cost of investigating the cause of the faulty clutches. Moreover, defendant's deceitful conduct exposed plaintiff to liability for personal damages if a helicopter had crashed and to disciplinary action by the FAA. Accordingly, the economic loss rule does not bar plaintiff's fraud and intentional misrepresentation claims, because those claims were independent of defendant's breach of contract. (34 C.4th 989.)

(b) Public policy favors punishing intentional misrepresentations and deterring misrepresentations in the future, as well as preserving a business climate free of fraud and deceptive practices. Allowing plaintiff's claim for defendant's affirmative misrepresentation discourages such practices in the future while encouraging a business climate free of fraud and deceptive practices. (34 C.4th 991.)

(c) Defendant argued that the economic loss rule should apply to plaintiff's fraud and intentional misrepresentation claims in light of the public policy of promoting predictability in contracts in commercial transactions. This argument is without merit. When two parties make a contract, they agree upon the rules and regulations that will govern their relationship; i.e., the risks inherent in the agreement and the likelihood of its breach. Under this scenario, it is appropriate to enforce only those obligations that the parties voluntarily assumed, and to give them only the benefits that they expected to receive. This is the function of contract law. However, contracting parties cannot, and should not, be expected to anticipate fraud and dishonesty. Defendant's argument therefore proposes to increase the certainty in contractual relationships by encouraging fraudulent conduct at the expense of an innocent party. "No public policy supports such an outcome." (34 C.4th 993.)

(d) This holding will not open the floodgates to future litigation, because it is limited to a defendant's affirmative misrepresentations on which a plaintiff relies and that expose a plaintiff to liability for personal damages independent of his or her economic loss. In addition, in California, fraud must be pled specifically, and this particularity requirement necessitates pleading facts that show how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were tendered. "We trust the trial courts of this state to enforce this pleading requirement." (34 C.4th 993.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

118 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

5. Scope of Liability.

d. Enhancement of Harm.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1518

[§ 1518] Enhancement of Harm.

When a product defect at the time of commercial sale or other distribution "is a substantial factor in increasing the plaintiff's harm beyond that which would have resulted from other causes," the product seller is subject to liability for the increased harm. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §16(a).)

If proof supports a determination of the harm that would have resulted from other causes in the absence of the product defect, the product seller's liability is limited to the increased harm attributable solely to the product defect. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §16(b).) If proof does not support this determination, the product seller is liable for all of the plaintiff's harm attributable to the defect and other causes. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §16(c).)

A seller of a defective product who is thus held liable for part or all of the harm suffered by the plaintiff is jointly and severally liable or severally liable with other parties who bear legal responsibility for causing the harm, determined by applicable rules of joint and several liability. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §16(d).)

Liability for increased harm arises most frequently in automobile crashworthiness cases, but may also arise in connection with other products. Typically, the plaintiff is involved in an automobile accident caused by conduct or circumstances other than a product defect and contends that the injuries were aggravated by the vehicle's failure reasonably to protect occupants in the event of an accident. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §16, Comment a.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

119 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 1. Sales Not in Course of Business.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1519

[§ 1519] Sales Not in Course of Business.

The Third Restatement requires that one be engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §1.) Hence, strict liability does not apply to a casual transaction by a person not in business, such as a housewife selling a jar of jam or an automobile owner who trades it in to a dealer, or to a sale not in the usual course of business, such as an execution, bankruptcy, or bulk sale. (Former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment f; see Shook v. Jacuzzi (1976) 59 C.A.3d 978, 981, 129 C.R. 496, citing the text [machine designed solely for use in manufacturer's own plant and not sold to public]; 99 A.L.R.3d 671 [when is person "engaged in business"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

120 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 2. Performance of Services.
 - aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1520

[§ 1520] In General.

The basis of strict liability is furnishing defective goods. "A significant common element running through the cases is that each of the defendants against whom the standard of strict liability has been applied played an integral and vital part in the overall production or marketing enterprise. At the very least the defendant in each case was a link in the chain of getting goods from the manufacturer to the ultimate user or consumer." (Silverhart v. Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1022, 1026, 98 C.R. 187.) Thus, strict liability is not imposed for providing services. (See 5 Harper, James & Gray 2d §28.19; 5 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 297; 32 Stanf. L. Rev. 391 [Strict Liability in Hybrid Cases]; 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 401; 29 A.L.R.3d 1425 [application of strict liability to person rendering services].)

When the same person provides both products and services in a commercial transaction, whether a product has been sold may be difficult to determine. When the product and service components are kept separate by the parties to the transaction, as when a lawn-care firm bills separately for fertilizer applied to a customer's lawn, the firm will be held to be the seller of the product. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comment d.) When the parties do not clearly separate the product and service components, the situation is more complicated. Thus, if the product component is consumed in the course of providing the service, as when a hair dye is used in treating a customer's hair in a salon, the transaction ordinarily is treated as a sale of the material that is consumed in providing the service, even when the service provider does not charge the customer separately for the dye. However, when the product component in the sale-service transaction is not consumed or permanently transferred to the customer--as when defective scissors are used in the hair salon--the transaction ordinarily is treated as one not involving a sale of the product to the customer. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comment d.) (For criticisms of the sale-service distinction, and argument that strict liability should apply to supply or use of defective products in the course of professional services, see 24 Hastings L. J. 111.)

A number of decisions illustrate the distinction between the sale of goods and the sale of services. (See Slayton v. Wright (1969) 271 C.A.2d 219, 237, 76 C.R. 494 [plumber who installed equipment was not liable]; Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 C.A.3d 802, 811, 110 C.R. 543 [engineers who designed and constructed water system were not liable]; Swett v. Gribaldo, Jones & Associates (1974) 40 C.A.3d 573, 576, 115 C.R. 99 [upholding liability based on negligence; action against soil engineer for damages resulting from cracks in tract home; instruction on strict products liability was error]; Pena v. Sita World Travel (1978) 88 C.A.3d 642, 644, 152 C.R. 17 [travel agency selecting transportation was not liable for injury suffered by plaintiff on travel bus]; Ferrari v. Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 C.A.4th 248, 257, 38 C.R.2d 65 [strict liability was not applicable to river raft operator, who provided service of conducting rafting trips; raft itself was incidental to this service].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 5 Harper, James & Gray 3d §28.19.

121 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 2. Performance of Services.
 - bb. Medical Operation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1521

[§ 1521] Medical Operation.

(1) Injury to Patient. In Silverhart v. Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1022, 1026, 98 C.R. 187, plaintiff had a satisfactory hysterectomy performed in defendant's hospital, followed by a normal convalescence. However, during the operation, a surgical needle broke and part of it became imbedded in dense tissue of the lower pelvic area. The doctors concluded that it could do no harm and did not remove it, and subsequent X-rays showed that it remained in its fixed position. In this action for damages, plaintiff sought an instruction on strict products liability. The trial judge refused, instructed on negligence, and the verdict was for defendant. Held, affirmed. A physician offering professional services is not in the business of selling or supplying a product. (20 C.A.3d 1027, citing Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 978, 979, 95 C.R. 381.) The same is true of a hospital exercising its primary function: "The essence of the relationship between a hospital and its patients does not relate essentially to any product or piece of equipment it uses but to the professional services it provides." (20 C.A.3d 1027.) So here, the process of manufacturing and distribution ended with the person or firm that sold, leased, or otherwise supplied the defective needle; it left the stream of commerce when it came into defendant's possession, and became part of the surgical equipment used by the hospital in performing its medical services. (20 C.A.3d 1027.) (See criticism, 24 Hastings L. J. 127; 5 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 297.)

In Hector v. Cedars-Sinai Med. Center (1986) 180 C.A.3d 493, 500, 225 C.R. 595, the court said: "The essence of the relationship between hospital and patient is the provision of professional medical services necessary to effect the implantation of the pacemaker--the patient does not enter the hospital merely to purchase a pacemaker but to obtain a course of treatment which includes implantation of a pacemaker." (180 C.A.3d 504.) "In the instant case, the hospital does not select the pacemaker for the patient, but the selection is made by the treating physician. Thus, the hospital is in a poor position to protect itself by inquiring about or testing the devices, pressuring the manufacturer to promote product safety or selling a different pacemaker which is not defective. The imposition of strict liability would force the hospital to become involved in the selection process. This might provide added protection to the patient; it might also increase the cost of hospital services. But once the hospital began using its medical knowledge to aid in the selection of a pacemaker, it would be in the position of providing professional medical services, for which it could not be held strictly liable. Thus, there would be no ultimate advantage to putting the hospital in the position of having to take part in the selection process." (180 C.A.3d 507.)

(2) Injury to Physician. In San Diego Hosp. Assn. v. Superior Court (1994) 30 C.A.4th 8, 35 C.R.2d 489, a physician sued a hospital and the manufacturer of a laser to recover damages for injuries sustained while performing surgery at the hospital. Held, the trial judge erred in overruling the hospital's demurrer to the physician's strict liability causes of action against it. Strict tort liability does not apply to a hospital supplying its medical staff with equipment to use in the care of their patients.

(a) The purpose of imposing strict liability is to insure that the costs of injuries resulting from defective products are placed on the manufacturer and others who place the product on the market instead of on injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves. (30 C.A.4th 15.) For a defendant to be strictly liable, it must play an integral and vital part in the overall production and marketing enterprise that has placed the product on the market or, at the very least, provide a link in the chain of getting the product to the ultimate user or consumer. The strictly liable defendant must be in "the business of" supplying the defective product to the user. (30 C.A.4th 16; citing Silverhart.)

(b) The hospital is not in the business of selling, leasing, bailing, or licensing equipment to the physician. It is in the business of providing medical services to its patients and providing the environment in which physicians may provide their own medical treatment to the patients. Instead of being a supplier or an entity that places a product in the stream of commerce, the hospital, like the physician, is an ultimate consumer of hospital equipment that is used in the treatment of patients. The fact that the hospital provides equipment for the physician's use is incidental to the overriding purpose of providing medical services. (30 C.A.4th 16.)

(c) Policy considerations underlying the imposition of strict liability are not served by imposing strict liability on a hospital that is itself an ultimate user of the product. Nor is it consistent with these policy considerations to extend recovery to a physician, who is in a far better position to inspect equipment for defects than a patient, who is denied recovery. To impose strict liability on a hospital would also ill serve the public good by discouraging hospitals that feared expanded liability from providing equipment utilizing recent technological advances. Although public policy requires that the hospital be responsible for faulty maintenance of the laser, strict liability is unnecessary (because the hospital remains liable for any intentional or negligent acts). (30 C.A.4th 17.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

122 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 2. Performance of Services.
 - cc. Other Medical Procedure.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1522

[§ 1522] Other Medical Procedure.

In Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 C.A.3d 606, 109 C.R. 132, plaintiff alleged that he contracted serum hepatitis by reason of a blood transfusion administered to him while he was a patient in defendant hospital. Held, there was no liability on warranty and no strict liability in tort. The warranty theory was simply disposed of on the statutory provision that furnishing of blood is a service rather than a sale (see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §106). But the court examined the products liability point in depth.

(a) The tests of Greenman v. Yuba Power Products (1963) 59 C.2d 57, 27 C.R. 697, 377 P.2d 897, supra, §1429, and the Restatement (see supra, §1430) are not coextensive, but "there is a common denominator in both rules, namely, the requirement of a defective product which, when placed in the stream of commerce, causes injury." (33 C.A.3d 609.)

(b) Under Health & Saf.C. 1606, the distribution or use of blood is the rendition of a service, and may not be construed as a sale "for any purpose or purposes whatsoever." The statute codifies the holding of the New York Perlmutter case, and precludes the imposition of strict tort liability, because the blood transfusion is not the sale of a product. (33 C.A.3d 610.)

(c) The policy argument for extension of the strict liability doctrine to services is unconvincing. In the cases expanding its scope, a significant element has been that the defendant "played an integral and vital part in the overall production or marketing enterprise." This is not true of a hospital, which is not engaged in either the production or marketing of blood. (33 C.A.3d 612.) Its primary function is the care and healing of the sick; providing medicine or blood is subordinate to that function. (33 C.A.3d 611.) (See 24 Hastings L. J. 121; 7 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 196 [criticizing Shepard]; 20 A.L.R.4th 136 [liability of hospital or medical practitioner for injury or death from blood transfusion].)

Shepard was reaffirmed in McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Foundation Blood Bank (1976) 62 C.A.3d 866, 133 C.R. 444, another serum hepatitis case.

(a) Forty-two other states have followed California's lead in adopting the Perlmutter rule by statute. (62 C.A.3d 869.) It has been argued that, although the statute classifies furnishing of blood as a service and not a sale, it is still possible to impose strict liability on the service. (62 C.A.3d 870.) This argument is not persuasive; the general principle has been judicially established that strict liability should not be applied to true services. (62 C.A.3d 871.)

(b) The statute is not an unconstitutional denial of equal protection in classifying blood differently from other products. Blood injections are vital to the medical profession's struggle against illness, injury, and disease; the purpose of Health & Saf.C. 1606 is to encourage and promote the constant availability of an adequate blood supply; and the Legislature, weighing the relatively minor risk of hepatitis, has reasonably determined that in the absence of negligence this risk must be accepted by the blood recipient. (62 C.A.3d 872, 873.) "The fact that the majority of the policy objectives behind strict liability do not apply to transfusion hepatitis cases is a further rational basis for the legislative distinction." (62 C.A.3d 874.)

In Klaus v. Alameda-Contra Costa Med. Assn. Blood Bank (1976) 62 C.A.3d 417, 133 C.R. 92, the court held that the policy considerations underlying the Shepard decision involving a hospital were equally applicable to a blood bank, despite the fact that the latter does put the blood on the market. In addition, the legislative intent was clearly to preclude suits against blood banks as well as hospitals. (62 C.A.3d 419.) (See Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 978, 979, 95 C.R. 381 [physician who prescribed drug is not liable]; Fogo v. Cutter Laboratories (1977) 68 C.A.3d 744, 750, 752, 137 C.R. 417 [coagulant derived from blood plasma caused serum hepatitis; Shepard reasoning followed]; Hyland Therapeutics v. Superior Court (1985) 175 C.A.3d 509, 514, 220 C.R. 590 [rejecting constitutional challenges to statute]; 37 Hastings L. J. 1101 [hepatitis, AIDS, and Health & Saf.C. 1606 exemption from strict liability]; 24 A.L.R.4th 508 [liability of blood supplier or donor]; 64 A.L.R.5th 333 [liability for donee's contraction of AIDS from blood transfusion]; 65 A.L.R.5th 357 [strict liability of hospital or medical practitioner for harm caused by drug, medical instrument, or similar device used in treating patient].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

123 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 2. Performance of Services.
 - dd. Latent Defect in Hospital Premises.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1523

[§ 1523] Latent Defect in Hospital Premises.

In Pierson v. Sharp Memorial Hosp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 340, 264 C.R. 673, plaintiff's complaint alleged that, while visiting her husband's room at defendant's hospital, she suffered injuries from a fall caused by a defective carpet. To overcome the holdings in a number of cases that hospitals are providers of professional medical services and not producers or marketers of products (see Hector v. Cedars-Sinai Med. Center (1986) 180 C.A.3d 493, 500, 225 C.R. 595, supra, §1521; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 95 C.R. 381; Silverhart v. Mount Zion Hosp. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1022, 98 C.R. 187, supra, §1520), she argued that the theory of strict liability of a landlord for latent defect in premises, announced in Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C.3d 454, 213 C.R. 213, 698 P.2d 116, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §653, should be applied to a hospital furnishing a room. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed.

(a) Becker declared that landlords "are an integral part of the enterprise of producing and marketing rental housing" and plaintiff contended that hospitals are similarly "part of the enterprise of producing and marketing hospital rooms." (216 C.A.3d 343.) But the Becker opinion indicated that its extension of strict liability for injuries to a residential tenant was based on the implied warranty of habitability in a residential lease (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §624 et seq.). In Muro v. Superior Court (1986) 184 C.A.3d 1089, 229 C.R. 383, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §653, the court observed that "Becker was intended to be restricted to landlords of residential property." (216 C.A.3d 343.) Hence, there is no reason to apply the Becker theory to a hospital providing a room as an integral part of its delivery of professional medical services. (216 C.A.3d 344.)

(b) Many cases emphasize the distinction between producing and marketing enterprises and furnishing of services. (216 C.A.3d 344, 345, 346, listing cases.) "We discern from these cases a fundamental and reasonable basis for imposing strict tort liability on persons providing products but not upon those rendering services. A product is a physical article which results from a manufacturing process and is ultimately delivered to a consumer. A defect in the article even if initially latent is ultimately objectively measurable. On the other hand, a service is no more than direct human action or human performance. Whether that performance is defective is judged by what is reasonable under the circumstances and depends upon the actor's skill, judgment, training, knowledge and experience. ... In light of the infinite subtle nuances of human performance, the law reasonably imposes only a standard of negligence rather than strict liability in the provision of human services." (216 C.A.3d 345.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

124 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 3. Commercial Transaction.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1524

[§ 1524] Commercial Transaction.

(1) In General. For there to be strict liability, the Third Restatement requires that the sale or distribution of the defective product be in a commercial context or transaction. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §§1, 20.) However, not all commercial transactions are subject to strict liability principles. Thus, a finance lessor is not subject to strict liability in the absence of active participation in the underlying commercial product distribution. With respect to product bailments, when products are made available as a convenience to customers who are on the defendant's premises primarily for different, although related purposes, and no separate charge is made, strict liability is not imposed, examples being bowling alleys that supply bowling balls for customer use and markets that supply shopping carts. And entities assisting or providing services to product distributors, i.e., advertising firms or those engaged exclusively in financing sales or leases, while indirectly facilitating the commercial distribution of products, are not subject to strict liability. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §20, Comments e, f, g.)

(2) Parties With Relatively Equal Economic Strength. In Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 737, 127 C.R. 838, plaintiff alleged that it purchased an electric motor for use in its steel mill, with a warranty; that the motor was defective; and that its use caused heavy losses including a shut-down of the plant. The court, affirming a judgment of nonsuit, followed the reasoning of Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 C.2d 9, 45 C.R. 17, 403 P.2d 145, supra, §1514, that the rule of strict products liability should not apply to situations properly within the scope of the warranty provision of the Uniform Commercial Code.

(a) "The plaintiff-buyer and defendant-seller are commercial enterprises contracting from positions of relatively equal bargaining power for a product designed to negotiable specifications and not furnished off the shelf. Privy is no artificial barrier to recovery. Since the specifications of the product are negotiable, the tort doctrine of products liability as between the buyer and seller is no inducement to design and produce a safe product. Since the manufacturer and buyer have bargained in a commercial setting not only for the product but also for the measure and mode of reimbursement for defects in the product, any societal interest in loss shifting is absent. Whether the loss is thrust initially upon the manufacturer or customer, it is ultimately passed along as a cost of doing business included in the price of the products of one or the other and thus spread over a broad commercial stream." (55 C.A.3d 747.)

(b) The court reduced its reasoning to a definitive rule: "[T]he doctrine of products liability does not apply as between parties who: (1) deal in a commercial setting; (2) from positions of relatively equal economic strength; (3) bargain the specifications of the product; and (4) negotiate concerning the risk of loss from defects in it." (55 C.A.3d 748.) (See Gentry Const. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 177, 181, 260 C.R. 421; 15 A.L.R.4th 791 [preemption of strict liability in tort by provisions of U.C.C., Article 2].)

Where the special factors of equal economic strength and ability to negotiate are not present, a commercial customer may recover on strict products liability. (International Knights of Wine v. Ball Corp. (1980) 110 C.A.3d 1001, 1007, 168 C.R. 301, supra, §1510.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

125 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 5. Scope of Liability.
 - e. Where Liability Is Not Imposed.
 - 4. Commercial Establishment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1525

[§ 1525] Commercial Establishment.

In Ernest W. Hahn v. Superior Court (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1448, 3 C.R.2d 502, plaintiffs were injured when a tree fell on them while they were eating lunch in the courtyard of defendants' commercial establishment. To their action for negligence, plaintiffs added a cause of action for strict liability to which defendants demurred. The trial judge overruled the demurrer, and defendants sought mandamus. Held, writ granted. Plaintiffs argued that Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 C.3d 454, 213 C.R. 213, 698 P.2d 116, supra, §1507, which had extended strict liability principles to lessors of residential property, was applicable, but the court disagreed:

"The facts that were so crucial to the Becker analysis are not present here. In Becker, the extension of strict liability to owners of residential housing was founded upon the theory of an implied warranty of habitability and the need to provide safe, urban housing to the public. ... [Defendant] is not in the business of leasing residential property to the general public. Nor is it a producer or distributor of goods, placing its product in the stream of commerce. Instead, it is a commercial landlord holding its premises open to the public. In essence, [plaintiffs] urge the application of strict liability in tort for all invitees to the common areas of every commercial establishment, be it a supermarket, a restaurant, a theater or a department store, and the abolishment of the traditional requirement of some measure of fault for the imposing of liability. Becker does not require or portend such a comprehensive change in the law." (1 C.A.4th 1452.) (See 29 San Diego L. Rev. 525 [Hahn].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

126 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1526

[§ 1526] In General.

Causation is as necessary an element of strict liability as it is of negligence liability; hence, the general rules of proximate cause apply (supra, §1181 et seq.). (See Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 968, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, supra, §1492 ["substantial factor" standard applies; plaintiff must prove that defective product supplied by defendant was substantial factor in bringing about injury]; Bockrath v. Aldrich Chemical Co. (1999) 21 C.4th 71, 79, 86 C.R.2d 846, 980 P.2d 398, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, Supp., §589A [same]; Greening v. General Air-Conditioning Corp. (1965) 233 C.A.2d 545, 549, 43 C.R. 662 [no sufficient evidence that defective heat pump was cause of fire that damaged building]; Casetta v. United States Rubber Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 792, 807, 67 C.R. 645; Thompson v. Package Machinery Co. (1971) 22 C.A.3d 188, 193, 99 C.R. 281 [error to refuse instruction on concurrent causes]; Paverud v. Niagara Machine & Tool Works (1987) 189 C.A.3d 858, 862, 234 C.R. 585 [superseding cause]; Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 694, 11 C.R.3d 807 [no substantial evidence that negligent design of cigarettes, as opposed to cigarette smoking generally, was in reasonable medical probability substantial factor contributing to plaintiff's risk of developing lung cancer]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §15; 63 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §558 et seq.; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 293 [proving that defect was not cause of injury]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 851 [causation in mass exposure cases]; 14 Pacific L. J. 1173 [manufacturer's liability for criminally tampered-with products]; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 52; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1058 [products liability; strict liability in tort]; 54 A.L.R.3d 1079 [proof that defect was present when product left hands of defendant]; 9 A.L.R.4th 494 [sufficiency of proof of injuries resulting from "second collision"]; BAJI, Nos. 9.00.3, 900.5; CACI, No. 1201 et seq.; for exception to requirement of proof of causation in cases involving mass-produced fungible goods, see supra, §1486.)

In Khan v. Shiley (1990) 217 C.A.3d 848, 266 C.R. 106, plaintiff in 1983 had one of defendant's mechanical heart valves implanted to replace a diseased mitral valve. She had been advised of the risks normally present, but was not told that there was a risk that the valve might fracture. In 1985, her surgeon informed her that defendant was recalling a group of valves due to a propensity to fracture. In 1986, she and her husband filed this action, alleging that the possibility of fracture of the valve and death as a result had caused her severe emotional distress. Held, no cause of action was stated under theories of strict products liability or negligent infliction of emotional distress:

(a) "No matter which theory is utilized ... , where a plaintiff alleges a product is defective, proof that the product has malfunctioned is essential to establish liability for an injury caused by the defect. ... [Plaintiff's] alleged injury was not caused by any defect in the valve. Rather, it was caused, if at all, by the knowledge the valve may, at some future time, fracture." (217 C.A.3d 855.)

(b) The complaint did, however, state a cause of action for fraud, by allegations that defendant misrepresented the characteristics and safety of the valve and concealed material adverse information, with knowledge of the substantial risk of death; and that plaintiffs relied on these representations in making their selection. (217 C.A.3d 858.)

In Balido v. Improved Machinery (1972) 29 C.A.3d 633, 105 C.R. 890, defendant Improved Machinery designed and manufactured a plastic injection molding press in 1950, and sold it to Paper Mate in 1953. The machine had a lift safety gate covering the operating area that was inadequate and did not meet the standard of a 1949 California Industrial Safety Order. In 1954 Improved, after learning of the Safety Order and of injuries to operators of presses, put adequate safety devices in its new presses, and offered the devices to owners of earlier models for $ 500. Paper Mate did not install the devices, and in 1958 sold the press to Olympic. Sales and service representatives of Improved notified Olympic of the defect and the Safety Order and offered the new devices at the $ 500 price, but Olympic did not install them. In 1965 plaintiff, operating the press, injured her hand, and sued the three parties. Nonsuits were granted and plaintiff appealed. Held: Olympic, her employer, was liable for workers' compensation but not in tort; Paper Mate was only an occasional seller, and thus not strictly liable (see supra, §1519); but Improved could be strictly liable, and granting of the nonsuit was error.

(a) The first defense urged by Improved was the long passage of time between the manufacture and the injury (15 years). This could be a critical factor on the issue of causation, because of the possibility of bad maintenance, misuse, or wearing out of the product. But, in the absence of special statutes of limitation (as in malpractice and a few other situations), the effect of lapse of time on causation is a question of fact. (29 C.A.3d 642.) In extreme cases involving mass consumer products, a long period may create a high probability of superseding causes. But in the instant case, the product was a machine sold to a limited number of customers; Improved had notice of the defect from the beginning; and it kept track of the machine through repair and maintenance records. Hence, it could not be held as a matter of law that passage of time broke the chain of causation. (29 C.A.3d 644.)

(b) The second defense was that multiple warnings were given to the owners of the press (see infra, §1537), and the trial judge concluded that Olympic's use after receiving notice of the defect was a superseding cause. Superseding cause, however, depends on foreseeability (see supra, §1197); and the extent to which designers and manufacturers of dangerous machinery are required to anticipate third-party safety neglect is a question of fact. (29 C.A.3d 645.) In two New Jersey cases, the court held that, even though the custom in the trade at the time of sale was for the buyer, not the manufacturer, to install appropriate safety devices for the particular intended use, it was still a question of fact whether the manufacturer was immunized from liability or could have reasonably foreseen that the buyer would fail to install the devices. (29 C.A.3d 646.) And a federal case came to a similar conclusion where the machine itself contained a sign warning the operator against its use without a safety guard. "Obviously, if a warning affixed to the machine itself and given directly to its operator does not insulate the manufacturer from liability for deficient design, a warning given to the owner of the machine, a warning that may never reach the actual operator, is equally ineffective in creating such insulation." (29 C.A.3d 647.)

(c) While a manufacturer who has taken all reasonable steps to correct its error may sometimes avoid future liability, the question of reasonableness of the measures taken remains one of fact: Improved gave several warnings, but offered to correct the defect only at a cost of $ 500, and it was for the trier of fact to determine whether Improved should have anticipated that the buyer would refuse to spend the money for additional safety equipment. (29 C.A.3d 649.)

Bunch v. Hoffinger Industries (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1278, 20 C.R.3d 780, held that an inadequate warning (supra, §1476) was a substantial factor in causing injury when plaintiff, a child of 11, dived into an above ground pool that was only four feet deep. Defendant, the manufacturer of the pool liner, argued that plaintiff's own actions were the proximate cause of her injuries, because she had ignored both her mother's admonition not to dive and the inadequate warning that was attached to the liner. This contention is without merit. Although the inadequate warning was not the only cause of plaintiff's injuries, her evidence indicated that had she been warned that diving could result in serious injury, she would not have dived. (123 C.A.4th 1302.)

Causation may be established by circumstantial evidence. (See Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 C.2d 578, 583, 75 C.R. 652, 451 P.2d 84, supra, §1511; Gherna v. Ford Motor Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 639, 650, 55 C.R. 94; Dimond v. Caterpillar Tractor Co. (1976) 65 C.A.3d 173, 177, 181, 183, 184, 134 C.R. 895.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.15

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Brockrath case:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §630. Correction: Page 987, first line on page, "BAJI, No. 900.5" should be "BAJI, No. 9.00.5".

127 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

2. Vehicle Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1527

[§ 1527] Vehicle Cases.

In Douplik v. General Motors Corp. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 849, 275 C.R. 715, plaintiff drank heavily at a reception and drove his car into a road marker; the car left the roadway, plunged down an embankment, and overturned. The driver's side of the roof collapsed from the forces imposed on defective welds in the roof pillar, and plaintiff suffered injuries that made him a paraplegic. In this action, the jury found that defendant was liable for the injury, that plaintiff suffered damages in the sum of $ 6,666,212, and that 80% of the fault was his. In the appeal, defendant did not challenge the jury verdict that the roof pillar welds were defectively manufactured, but raised several issues relating to the jury instructions on causation. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) "With respect to products liability the issue is one of comparative fault. ... With respect to causation the issue is one of concurrent cause. ... Given that the jury was directed that [plaintiff's] wrongful conduct was a legal cause of his injury the remaining question is whether the defective welds were also a legal cause of the injury." (225 C.A.3d 857.)

(b) A " 'manufacturer must evaluate the crashworthiness of his product and take such steps as may be reasonable and practicable to forestall particular crash injuries and mitigate the seriousness of others.' ... To this extent an automobile manufacturer has a legal duty to design and manufacture its vehicles to provide for the safety of the occupants in a vehicular accident." (225 C.A.3d 859.) In this case, the proper manufacture of the car roof supports bears directly on the protection of its occupant from injury that might occur from the collapse of the roof. (225 C.A.3d 859.)

(c) "The substantial factor test directs the attention of the trier of fact to the contribution which culpable conduct, among other causal factors, makes to the injury for which recompense is sought. If the conduct which is claimed to have caused the injury had nothing at all to do with the injuries, it could not be said that the conduct was a factor, let alone a substantial factor, in the production of the injuries. That is, it could not be said that 'but for' the wrongful conduct the injuries would not have occurred." (225 C.A.3d 861, citing Rest.2d, Torts §432(1), and Endicott v. Nissan Motor Corp. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 917, 926, 141 C.R. 95.)

(d) One of the groups of concurrent cause is where both wrongful acts are necessary conditions of the harm. This case is in that group, adjusting the doctrine of contributory negligence to that of comparative fault. "At issue was whether [plaintiff's] negligence in driving off the road released forces sufficient to cause only a defectively welded roof pillar to collapse, forcing his head over the top of the seat, crushing his vertebrae and thereby causing quadriplegia." (225 C.A.3d 866.)

(e) "To the extent that General Motors' argument rests on the premise that a latent defect cannot operate as a legal cause of injury in cases of complex causation it is incorrect. The concurrent cause instruction does not distinguish between active and passive legal causes. A legal cause may be a latent condition. That is frequently the case in products liability cases, including crashworthiness cases. When the concurrent cause instruction is read together with the substantial factor instruction, it is made clear that the forces released in the automobile accident must be sufficient only to cause the collapse of a defective roof pillar." (225 C.A.3d 867.)

(f) The jurors viewed the photographs and the car, and were able to integrate the evidence by "visualizing their own necks in the various attitudes pertinent to the actual deformation of the roof and the range of lesser deformation that would likely have occurred if the welds were flawless." (225 C.A.3d 870.) "We are unable to say that the shortcomings perceived by General Motors would preclude a reasonable trier of fact from concluding that, but for the defective welds, more likely than not the snapping point of [plaintiff's] neck would not have been reached." (225 C.A.3d 870.)

A number of other vehicle cases deal with causation. (See Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 C.4th 548, 572, 581, 34 C.R.2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 [in light of other instructions actually given, failure to give defendant's proposed instruction, that any design defect was not substantial or contributing cause of plaintiff's injuries if same injuries would have occurred even with nondefective design, was harmless error]; Romig v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (1969) 271 C.A.2d 420, 422, 76 C.R. 479, citing the text; Endicott v. Nissan Motor Corp., supra, 73 C.A.3d 926 [plaintiff lost control of car and crashed; no causal connection between allegedly defective seat belt and plaintiff's injuries]; Visueta v. General Motors Corp. (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1609, 1616, 286 C.R. 402 [alleged installation of parking brake in inaccessible location was not causally connected with collision]; Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1541, 1558, 71 C.R.2d 190 [truck owner's negligent failure to replace fan in response to recall was not superseding cause that exonerated manufacturers of fan and truck from liability when fan blade broke off, injuring mechanic; third-party negligence is intervening cause only where so highly extraordinary as to be unforeseeable].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1363, 1373, 37 C.R.3d 9 [in products liability action brought by vehicle owner against tire manufacturer, nonsuit was proper where complexity of causation issue regarding alleged failure of tire was beyond common experience, and testimony offered by owner's expert witness was excluded for failure to establish substantial similarity between tire failures relied on by expert witness and owner's own tire failure].

128 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

3. Article To Be Processed.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1528

[§ 1528] In General.

Walker v. Stauffer Chemical Corp. (1971) 19 C.A.3d 669, 96 C.R. 803, dealt with the liability of a seller where the product is not intended to reach the consumer unchanged, but is to be processed in some manner. The court rejected liability. Defendant S manufactured sulphuric acid that defendant J purchased and used in a drain cleaning product. Plaintiff was injured when the product exploded. Held, summary judgment for defendant S affirmed. "We do not believe it realistically feasible or necessary to the protection of the public to require the manufacturer and supplier of a standard chemical ingredient such as bulk sulphuric acid, not having control over the subsequent compounding, packaging or marketing of an item eventually causing injury to the ultimate consumer, to bear the responsibility for that injury. The manufacturer (seller) of the product causing the injury is so situated as to afford the necessary protection." (19 C.A.3d 674.) (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §5; 3 Proof of Facts 3d 623 [alteration of product]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 923; 18 Hastings L. J. 22; for different result where safety devices are involved, see supra, §§1526, 1527.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

129 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

3. Article To Be Processed.

bb. Raw Material and Sophisticated Buyer Defenses.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1529

[§ 1529] Raw Material and Sophisticated Buyer Defenses.

In Artiglio v. General Elec. Co. (1998) 61 C.A.4th 830, 71 C.R.2d 817, plaintiffs were women who had received breast implants manufactured by M, using silicone supplied by defendant. M and other implant manufacturers would provide defendant with particular specifications for the physical properties of the silicone that they were purchasing, and defendant would then produce and supply silicone that met these specifications. The shipping documents stated that defendant disclaimed any responsibility for determining whether the silicone was suitable for medical applications. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; under the circumstances, defendant's duty to warn did not extend to the ultimate consumers.

(a) In some situations, the manufacturer or supplier of raw material incorporated into a finished product may be liable. For example, if raw coffee beans are sold to a buyer who roasts and packages them for sale to the ultimate consumer, the seller of the beans will not be relieved of liability when the raw beans are contaminated with arsenic. The manufacturer or supplier has a general duty to provide a warning of the dangerous condition of its product to those who are likely to use it or be endangered by its probable use. (61 C.A.4th 835.)

(b) However, the duty of a component manufacturer or supplier to warn is not unlimited. For example, the manufacturer of pig iron, which is capable of a variety of uses, is not likely to be held to strict liability when the pig iron turns out to be unsuitable for the child's tricycle into which it is finally made by a remote purchaser. Federal cases involving Teflon have amplified what are referred to as the raw material and sophisticated buyer defenses. These cases have made it clear that knowledge of how a raw material will be used does not, by itself, create a duty to investigate the risks posed by the final product. (61 C.A.4th 837.)

(c) These defenses are addressed in Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §5. Component and raw material suppliers are not liable to ultimate consumers when the following conditions are met: the goods or materials are not inherently dangerous; the suppliers sell in bulk to a sophisticated buyer; the material is substantially changed during the manufacturing process; and the supplier has a limited role in developing and designing the end product. When these factors exist, the social cost of imposing a duty to the ultimate consumers far exceeds any additional protection provided. (61 C.A.4th 839.)

(d) Applying these factors here, first, the silicone supplied by defendant was not inherently dangerous. Second, the manufacturers were highly sophisticated buyers under a legal duty to investigate the potential hazards of implants, and each one was in a position to test the risks of its products and each of their components. Defendant fully alerted the manufacturers to this duty by the disclaimer. Although defendant might have been privy to some risks posed by exposure to airborne silicon particles, there is nothing in the record to suggest that these risks would have altered the manner in which implant manufacturers used the silicone supplied by defendant. Third, the materials supplied by defendant were subject to substantial processing by the implant manufacturers over which defendant had no control. Finally, while defendant developed silicone to meet the manufacturers' specifications and consulted on a regular basis about those specifications and problems that the manufacturers were having, it did not exercise any control over the design, testing, or labeling of the implants. (61 C.A.4th 839, distinguishing Putensen v. Clay Adams (1970) 12 C.A.3d 1062, 91 C.R. 319, supra, §1174.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzer Co. (2004) 129 C.A.4th 577, 580, 28 C.R.3d 744 [component parts defense was not available to excuse defendant's failure to warn, where complaint alleged that defendant manufactured grinders specifically designed for use with abrasive wheels, that wheels were harmless without power supplied by defendant's tools, and that, when tools were used for intended purpose, harmful dust was released, a nonobvious risk].

130 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

4. Abnormal Use.

aa. Unforeseeable Use.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1530

[§ 1530] Unforeseeable Use.

(1) In General. The seller is entitled to assume that the product will be put to its intended use, and he or she is not liable--either on negligence or strict liability theories--for an unintended, unexpected, and abnormal use. Expressed in terms of causation, the alleged defect is not the proximate cause of the injury where the plaintiff has altered or otherwise misused the article. (See Romito v. Red Plastic Co. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 59, 69, 44 C.R.2d 834 [manufacturer of plastic skylight was not liable, under either negligence or strict liability theory, to electrician accidentally falling to death through skylight]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §15 [causal connection between product defect and harm]; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 379 [misuse of product]; 18 Hastings L. J. 36; 6 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 661 [abnormal use and burden of proof]; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 541 [Criminal Product Tampering: A Manufacturer Is Only as Judgment-Proof as His Product Is Tamper-Proof]; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1086 [products liability: strict liability in tort]; 54 A.L.R.3d 1079 [proof that defect was present when product left hands of defendant]; 41 A.L.R.4th 47 [alteration or modification of product after leaving hands of manufacturer or seller]; 65 A.L.R.4th 263 [product misuse defense]; 67 A.L.R.4th 964 [injury resulting from product that was tampered with]; 50 A.L.R.5th 275 [intentional inhalation of product's fumes or vapors to produce intoxicating effect].)

This limitation has been applied in a number of cases. (See Erickson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1966) 240 C.A.2d 793, 799, 50 C.R. 143 [six-foot wooden stepladder sold with directions not to use on soft surfaces; plaintiff nailed wooden cleats on bottom legs, placed it on dirt and grass surface, and leg broke]; Preston v. Up-Right (1966) 243 C.A.2d 636, 639, 52 C.R. 679 [114-pound aluminum alloy scaffold with legs mounted on locking caster wheels; plaintiff placed 4-foot aluminum ladder on scaffold platform, mounted it, and scaffold moved, throwing him]; Martinez v. Nichols Conveyor & Engineering Co. (1966) 243 C.A.2d 795, 799, 52 C.R. 842 [800-pound platen of paper baler, altered to permit use of machine for additional purpose; unsanctioned change could have caused fracturing of bolt and resulting injury]; Putensen v. Clay Adams (1970) 12 C.A.3d 1062, 1073, 91 C.R. 319, supra, §1174 [tubing stretched, soaked, and drawn through another tube; could have impaired product]; Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 C.A.3d 74, 78, 119 C.R. 135.)

In Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 868, 148 C.R. 843, plaintiff received an eye injury when his opponent's sabre broke through plaintiff's fencing mask. (See supra, §1480.) In denying recovery, the court pointed out that there was no proof of a defect in manufacture or an improper design. The mask was intended to be used with a sabre having a rounded tip, and the penetration occurred with a sharp-edged sabre. (84 C.A.3d 878.) Moreover, plaintiff failed to show that a mask exists or could be designed to prevent penetration by a sharp-edged sabre. (84 C.A.3d 879.) (See Bernal v. Richard Wolf Med. Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1326, 1332, 272 C.R. 41, supra, §1462 [disagreeing with holding in Garcia that plaintiff has burden of proving feasibility of reasonable alternate design].)

A number of annotations deal with the misuse of particular products. (See 50 A.L.R.4th 1226 [misuse of athletic, exercise, or recreational equipment]; 52 A.L.R.4th 276 [misuse of wearing apparel]; 55 A.L.R.4th 1010 [misuse of electrical generation equipment]; 55 A.L.R.4th 1062 [misuse of lawnmower]; 58 A.L.R.4th 7 [misuse of food and drugs]; 58 A.L.R.4th 40 [misuse of cosmetics]; 58 A.L.R.4th 76 [misuse of paint, cleaners, or other chemicals]; 58 A.L.R.4th 131 [misuse of gas and electric appliances]; 58 A.L.R.4th 160 [misuse of bottles, cans, or other containers]; 59 A.L.R.4th 73 [misuse of ladders and scaffolds]; 59 A.L.R.4th 102 [misuse of weapons and ammunition]; 60 A.L.R.4th 678 [misuse of agricultural equipment]; 61 A.L.R.4th 156 [misuse of building components and materials]; 63 A.L.R.4th 18 [misuse of automobiles, boats, aircraft, and other vehicles]; 64 A.L.R.4th 10 [misuse of commercial or industrial equipment and machinery].)

(2) Retailer's Ignorance of Intended Use. In Lewis v. American Hoist & Derrick Co. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 570, 97 C.R. 798, defendant American manufactured a crane, which defendant Brown, its exclusive local distributor, sold to a contractor. American's regional sales manager directly participated in the sale negotiations, and was familiar with the contractor's needs and intended use. The original design of the crane was proper, but American had modified it to permit use of a smaller wire for its pendants. In operation the wire broke, the boom and suspension system fell, and plaintiffs, employees of the contractor, were injured. Held, as to defendant Brown, the strict liability instructions were erroneous and required reversal of the judgment. There was evidence that the crane was used in a manner not intended by Brown or reasonably anticipated by him, and he was entitled to a jury determination of that issue. (20 C.A.3d 586, 588.) A dissenting justice argued that the test is the expectation of the user, not the knowledge or intent of the seller, and that Brown should have anticipated that the crane would be used for a purpose that was the intention of the manufacturer and the expectation of the user. (20 C.A.3d 589.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

131 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

a. Defect Is Not Proximate Cause of Injury.

4. Abnormal Use.

bb. Foreseeable Use.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1531

[§ 1531] Foreseeable Use.

If the particular alteration or misuse by the customer was reasonably foreseeable, the manufacturer is not absolved. (See Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 C.3d 121, 126, 104 C.R. 433, 501 P.2d 1153, supra, §1436 [although collision may not be normal or intended use, "vehicle manufacturers must take accidents into consideration as reasonably foreseeable occurrences involving their products"]; Thompson v. Package Machinery Co. (1971) 22 C.A.3d 188, 196, 99 C.R. 281; Schwoerer v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 103, 113, 17 C.R.2d 227 [plaintiff's "misuse" of solvent, which caused liver damage, did not bar recovery where only dangers warned against were those from inhalation and dermal contact].)

In Thomas v. General Motors Corp. (1970) 13 C.A.3d 81, 91 C.R. 301, plaintiff child was injured when she leaned against the top of a washing machine in a laundromat, and the glass top gave way. The glass was held in place by a gasket with a slot containing a rubber "bead." With the bead in place, the glass could withstand a heavy external pressure; without it, a slight force could cause the glass to fall in. The evidence showed that the bead was missing at the time of the accident. The trial judge instructed that, if the jury found that the bead had been removed, the machine was not being used for its intended purpose and its condition would not constitute a defective design. The verdict was in favor of defendant manufacturer. Held, reversed; the instruction was error. The jury could have found that the bead was missing because it was not properly installed, or that a safe design would have placed the ring on the outside of the door for easy discovery of its removal. (13 C.A.3d 90.)

In Huynh v. Ingersoll-Rand (1993) 16 C.A.4th 825, 20 C.R.2d 296, plaintiff applied for a position as a welder at Southwest Marine and was given a welding test, during which he was required to use a grinder. The grinder, which was handed to him by a Southwest employee, was manufactured by defendant and had a disk already attached. Shortly after he started using this tool, the disc "exploded" and severely injured plaintiff's eye. In this products liability action, defendant moved for summary judgment based on the "misuse" affirmative defense. The alleged misuse consisted of using a disc rated at only 24,000 revolutions per minute (r.p.m.s), while the grinder was rated at 30,000 r.p.m.s. There was a warning on the grinder's trigger (in tiny print) to the effect that it should be used with equipment rated "at Tool R.P.M.," followed by the words "Model DG220 Rated 30000." Plaintiff contended that the "misuse" was foreseeable and that the warning against this misuse was inadequate. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed; triable issues of fact remained concerning the cause of plaintiff's injury and the adequacy of the warning.

(a) Whether misuse was actual cause of injury. Defendant, as the moving party, had the burden of proving that the alleged misuse, instead of some other defect, was the cause of plaintiff's injury. Defendant could have discharged this obligation by producing expert testimony that it was more probable than not that the disc exploded because the grinder was operating at a speed in excess of the maximum that this type of disc could sustain. However, defendant introduced no such testimony. Nor was any other evidence introduced to show that what defendant presumed to be the cause of plaintiff's injury was in fact the cause. Defendant's argument that no evidence was required on the causation issue because "it speaks for itself" is without merit. Here, where the disc was spinning so fast that the human eye could not determine exactly what happened, the purported cause and effect relationship simply did not "speak for itself." (16 C.A.4th 832.)

(b) Whether warning was adequate.

(1) Plaintiff argued that even if the alleged misuse was the cause of his injury, it was a foreseeable misuse that required defendant to provide an adequate warning to escape liability. This position accurately reflects the current state of the law. As Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 C.A.3d 1, 116 C.R. 575, supra, §1454, and Balido v. Improved Machinery (1972) 29 C.A.3d 633, 105 C.R. 890, supra, §1526, make clear, the risks that must be warned against obviously include foreseeable dangerous "misuses" of the product, such as attaching an inappropriate grinding disc to a grinder. (16 C.A.4th 833.)

(2) Defendant argued that, even assuming that the warning was inadequate, that inadequacy could not have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries because some of Southwest's employees had, in fact, read and understood the warning. This argument is without merit. Although there was testimony that at least a couple of Southwest's employees had read and understood the warning, there was no evidence that it was one of these employees that had given the grinder to plaintiff. It may well be that Southwest was negligent in not having its knowledgeable employees explain this warning to its less knowledgeable employees, but this sort of negligence is entirely foreseeable. And a manufacturer cannot satisfy its duty to warn by supplying a warning so vague and ambiguous that only some users are likely to read and comprehend the danger. (16 C.A.4th 834.)

(3) For these reasons, a triable issue remains whether plaintiff would have been supplied this combination of grinder and disc, and consequently been injured, had the grinder itself contained an "adequate" warning. A clearer warning may have alerted the employee who assembled these two elements that they formed a dangerous combination, and may have caused that employee to give plaintiff another tool for his welding test. Whether the language on the trigger of the grinder constituted an adequate warning of the danger of using discs rated below 30,000 r.p.m.s is a very close factual issue that cannot be resolved on summary judgment. (16 C.A.4th 834.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

132 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

b. Unavoidably Unsafe Products.

1. In General.

aa. Drugs and Vaccines.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1532

[§ 1532] Drugs and Vaccines.

(1) Background. Many products are experimental or involve elements of danger that cannot be wholly eliminated. But their social value outweighs the risks, so the seller who prepares them carefully and markets them with appropriate restrictions or warnings is not strictly liable for injurious consequences. (Former Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment k; see 22 Pacific L. J. 43 [Comment k: A Prescription For The Over-The-Counter Drug Industry]; 66 A.L.R.4th 83 [liability of manufacturer of oral polio vaccine for injury or death from its administration].)

(2) Unavoidably Dangerous Condition Rejected. In Kearl v. Lederle Laboratories (1985) 172 C.A.3d 812, 218 C.R. 453, the court conditioned application of the Comment k exemption on a finding that the drug was "unavoidably dangerous," and devised an elaborate test to determine the issue. (172 C.A.3d 829, 830.) Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, supra, §1471, rejected the condition. "[I]f some method could be devised to confine the benefit of that standard to drugs that have proved useful while denying the privilege to those that are clearly harmful, the Kearl approach would deserve serious consideration. "But we know of no means by which this can be accomplished without substantially impairing the public interest in the development and marketing of new drugs, because the harm to this interest arises in the very process of attempting to make the distinction." (44 C.3d 1067.)

(a) Under the "mini-trial" directed by Kearl, a drug manufacturer has no assurance that his or her product will be measured by the standard of Comment k, because a trial judge could decide that the benefit of the drug was not "exceptionally important" so as to make its availability "highly desirable," or that the interest in its availability did not outweigh the public's interest in subjecting the producer to strict liability. And a manufacturer's incentive to develop what it might consider a superior product would be diminished if a trial judge could decide later that another available product would have accomplished the same. (44 C.3d 1068.)

(b) Different trial judges might reach different conclusions on the evidence in particular cases, and there may be inconsistency between the findings of the judge and jury in the same case. (44 C.3d 1068.) Thus, the eligibility of each drug for favorable treatment must be tested at a trial, with its attendant litigation costs, and the drug must survive two risk/benefit challenges--first by the judge and then by the jury. "In order to vindicate the public's interest in the availability and affordability of prescription drugs, a manufacturer must have a greater assurance that his products will not be measured by a strict liability standard than is provided by the test stated in Kearl." (44 C.3d 1068.)

(c) "In conclusion, and in accord with almost all our sister states that have considered the issue, we hold that a manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug so long as the drug was properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution." (44 C.3d 1069.) (See 20 Pacific L. J. 1 [Brown].)

Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6 sets forth rules governing liability of commercial sellers or distributors for harm caused by defective prescription drugs and medical devices. (See supra, §1448.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.8, 26

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Background. See 85 Proof of Facts 3d 95 [proof of death or injury from rabies vaccine].

133 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

b. Unavoidably Unsafe Products.

1. In General.

bb. Other Products.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1533

[§ 1533] Other Products.

The "unavoidably unsafe product" defense has generally been raised only in cases involving drugs or vaccines. (See Kearl v. Lederle Laboratories (1985) 172 C.A.3d 812, 825, 218 C.R. 453, supra, §1532; 70 A.L.R.4th 16 [what is "unavoidably unsafe" product].)

In Wilkinson v. Bay Shore Lumber Co. (1986) 182 C.A.3d 594, 227 C.R. 327, an attempt to extend the defense beyond the medical field was rejected. Plaintiff carpenter, working on a gabled roof, stood on an outrigger (two-by-four plank). The plank was furnished by defendant as "construction/standard grade," which is free of dry rot; but the piece did have dry rot, not visible on its surface, and it gave way, causing plaintiff to fall. In this products liability action, the trial judge, at defendant's request, gave the Restatement Comment k instruction (supra, §1532). Held, this was reversible error. "Because we are unaware of a case wherein the comment k defense was applied to lumber, and because the reported decisions overwhelmingly concern products such as prescription drugs, vaccines and medical devices, it is evident that the trial court was breaking new ground in applying the defense here. ... [W]e are unable to detect any hint of evidence to support defendant's theory, for which defendant bore the burden of proof, that dry rot is an unavoidably unsafe defect in wood." (182 C.A.3d 602.)

In Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 C.A.4th 8, 5 C.R.2d 377, involving a malfunctioning inflatable penile prosthesis, the court extended the reasoning of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1049, 245 C.R. 412, 751 P.2d 470, supra, §1532, to implanted devices. "[A] manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by an implanted prescription medical product which has been (a) properly made and (b) distributed with information regarding risks and dangers of which the manufacturer knew or should have known at the time." (4 C.A.4th 20.) (See Plenger v. Alza Corp. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 349, 360, 13 C.R.2d 811 [reasoning of Hufft v. Horowitz is equally applicable to intrauterine device (IUD)]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §6 (supra, §1448) [rules governing liability of commercial sellers or distributors for harm caused by defective prescription drugs and medical devices].)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.26, 27

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

134 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
b. Unavoidably Unsafe Products.
2. Statutory Immunity for Inherently Unsafe Product.
aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1534

[§ 1534] In General.

In a products liability action, a manufacturer or seller is not liable if both of the following conditions apply:

(1) "The product is inherently unsafe and the product is known to be unsafe by the ordinary consumer who consumes the product with the ordinary knowledge common to the community." (C.C. 1714.45(a)(1).)

(2) "The product is a common consumer product intended for personal consumption, such as sugar, castor oil, alcohol, and butter, as identified in comment i to Section 402A of the Restatement (Second) of Torts." (C.C. 1714.45(a)(2).) (Rest.2d, Torts §402A has been superseded by Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability; see supra, §1435.)

For this purpose, a "products liability action" is "any action for injury or death caused by a product." The term "does not include an action based on a manufacturing defect or breach of an express warranty." (C.C. 1714.45(c); see BAJI, No. 9.00.6.)

As originally enacted, the statute applied to tobacco products, but amendments in 1997 revoked the immunity for tobacco manufacturers. The tobacco immunity continues for other persons, including retailers and distributors. (See infra, §§1535, 1536.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

135 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

b. Unavoidably Unsafe Products.

2. Statutory Immunity for Inherently Unsafe Product.

bb. Revocation of Immunity for Tobacco Manufacturers.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1535

[§ 1535] Revocation of Immunity for Tobacco Manufacturers.

(1) Background. American Tobacco Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 480, 255 C.R. 280, construed C.C. 1714.45 (supra, §1534) so as to immunize tobacco manufacturers from products liability. (See Richards v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 14 C.4th 985, 993, 60 C.R.2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181 [distinguishing DaFonte v. Up-Right (1992) 2 C.4th 593, 7 C.R.2d 238, 828 P.2d 140, supra, §57, and holding that C.C. 1714.45 is legislative determination that qualifying manufacturers, such as tobacco companies, are not just immune from fault, but that they are not at "fault" in first place]; Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 16 C.4th 953, 985, 67 C.R.2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203, supra, §1492 [same]; 25 Cal. Western L. Rev. 239, 245, 252 [analyzing statute and out-of-state cases and agreeing with American Tobacco interpretation]; 62 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1449 [analyzing statute and disagreeing with American Tobacco reasoning on several issues].)

(2) Revocation of Immunity. As amended in 1997, C.C. 1714.45 "does not exempt the manufacture or sale of tobacco products by tobacco manufacturers and their successors in interest from product liability actions." However, the statute "does exempt the sale or distribution of tobacco products by any other person, including, but not limited to, retailers or distributors." (C.C. 1714.45(b).)

The Legislative intent in enacting the 1997 amendments is "to declare that there exists no statutory bar to tobacco-related personal injury, wrongful death, or other tort claims against tobacco manufacturers and their successors in interest by California smokers or others who have suffered or incurred injuries, damages, or costs arising from the promotion, marketing, sale, or consumption of tobacco products" and "to clarify that those claims that were or are brought shall be determined on their merits, without the imposition of any claim of statutory bar or categorical defense." (C.C. 1714.45(f).)

The statute "does not apply to, and never applied to," an action brought by a public entity to recover the value of benefits provided to individuals injured by a tobacco-related illness caused by the tortious conduct of a tobacco company or its successor in interest, including, but not limited to, an action brought pursuant to Welf.C. 14124.71 (recovery of Medi-Cal benefits; see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §137). In the public entity's action, the fact that the injured individual's claim against the defendant may be barred by a prior version of the statute is not a defense. This provision does not constitute a change in, but is declaratory of, existing law relating to tobacco products. (C.C. 1714.45(e).)

The statute may not be construed to grant immunity to a tobacco industry research organization. (C.C. 1714.45(g).) (See Barker v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. (2001) 88 C.A.4th 42, 45, 105 C.R.2d 531, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §434 [1997 amendments to C.C. 1714.45, which eliminated tobacco companies' total immunity, did not revive claims previously barred by statute of limitations]; 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 761 [removal of legal barriers preventing recovery for tobacco-related illness]; 38 San Diego L. Rev. 1051 [tobacco tort litigation and C.C. 1714.45]; 33 U.S.F. L. Rev. 459 [significance of Richards v. Owens-Illinois after 1997 amendments to C.C. 1714.45].)

(c) Commentary. Discussion of products liability with respect to tobacco related injuries has been extensive. (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 525 [market share liability for smoking-related Medicaid expenditures]; 23 San Diego L. Rev. 1137 [smoking-related injuries]; 53 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1423 [cigarette dependency and civil liability]; 27 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 487 [cigarette litigation under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability]; 44 Stanf. L. Rev. 853 [A Sociolegal History of the Tobacco Tort Litigation]; on preemption by federal cigarette labeling and advertising statutes, see Cipollone v. Liggett Group (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 112 S.Ct. 2608, 2625, 120 L.Ed.2d 407, 431; Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 666, 11 C.R.3d 807.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Background. During the 10 years that the tobacco immunity statute was in effect, immunity attached only if the tobacco product was pure and unadulterated. (Boeken v. Philip Morris (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1640, 1672, 26 C.R.3d 638 [immunity instruction that omitted word "unadulterated" was erroneous].) Recovery of Medi-Cal benefits:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §155.

Barker case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §461.

(c) Commentary. See 25 A.L.R.6th 435 [validity, construction, application, and effect of master settlement agreement between tobacco companies and various states, and state statutes implementing agreement; use and distribution of agreement proceeds].

136 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
b. Unavoidably Unsafe Products.
2. Statutory Immunity for Inherently Unsafe Product.
cc. Retroactivity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1536

[§ 1536] Retroactivity.

Myers v. Philip Morris Cos. (2002) 28 C.4th 828, 123 C.R.2d 40, 50 P.3d 751, addressed the retroactivity of C.C. 1714.45 (supra, §1534). There are two versions of C.C. 1714.45. The former version (the immunity statute) granted tobacco companies complete immunity in certain products liability actions as of January 1, 1988. The present version (the repeal statute) rescinds that immunity as of January 1, 1998. How to treat tobacco company conduct during the 10 years of immunity (January 1, 1988, to December 31, 1997) was the issue in this case. Plaintiff smoked heavily from 1956 to 1997. Throughout this period, and until August 1998, she was also constantly around secondhand smoke. In April 1998, plaintiff was diagnosed with lung cancer allegedly caused by her exposure to tobacco, and the following year she filed a complaint against defendant tobacco manufacturers for products liability and other causes of action. After removing the case to federal district court, defendants moved to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim. The district court granted the motion, with leave to amend, on the ground that C.C. 1714.45 barred actions for injuries occurring prior to January 1998. Plaintiff amended her complaint to allege that she was exposed to secondhand smoke from January to August 1998, but the court granted a second motion to dismiss, this time without leave to amend and on the ground that plaintiff had conceded that her lung cancer was not caused by her exposure to secondhand smoke after January 1, 1998. The case was appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, which certified to the California Supreme Court the following question: Whether the repeal statute governs a claim that accrued after January 1, 1998, but was based on conduct that occurred prior to that date. Held, the immunity statute applies to statutorily described conduct of tobacco companies that occurred during the 10-year immunity period, regardless of when the injuries resulting from that conduct were sustained or discovered.

(a) Whether applying repeal statute during immunity period would be prospective or retroactive. Plaintiff argued that applying the repeal statute in her case would be prospective, rather than retroactive, because she was diagnosed with cancer 3 months after that statute became effective. This contention is without merit. A statute that operates to increase a party's liability for past conduct is retroactive. To have the repeal statute apply to products liability actions against tobacco companies for supplying tobacco products to smokers during the immunity period would indeed be a retroactive application of that statute, because it would subject those companies to liability for past conduct for which they were previously immune. (28 C.4th 839, citing Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §634.)

(b) Whether Legislature expressed intent that repeal statute govern during immunity period. There is a presumption, grounded on various constitutional principles, that a statute operates prospectively, rather than retroactively. This presumption was not overcome in the present case for the following reasons:

(1) There is no express language in the repeal statute making it retroactive. Defendant tobacco manufacturers point to language in C.C. 1714.45(e) indicating that actions by individuals against tobacco companies continue to be precluded by a prior version of this statute as proof that the repeal statute was intended to operate prospectively. On the other hand, plaintiff claims that the following language in C.C. 1714.45(f) amounted to an express declaration in favor of retroactivity: (a) the 1997 amendments were intended to declare that there exists no statutory bar to tobacco-related claims against tobacco manufacturers; (b) the 1997 amendments apply to smokers who have suffered or incurred injuries; and (c) it is the intention of the Legislature to clarify that claims that were or are brought are to be determined on their merits, without the imposition of any claim of statutory bar. However, the italicized language states nothing more than that the repeal statute rescinded any former statutory immunity for tobacco companies. Moreover, even if plaintiff's interpretation were accepted, the repeal statute is at best ambiguous, because of the language indicating that individual suits continue to be precluded by a prior version of this statute, and a statute that is ambiguous with respect to retroactive application is construed to be "unambiguously prospective" under Immigration & Naturalization Service v. St. Cyr (2001) 533 U.S. 289, 121 S.Ct. 2271, 150 L.Ed.2d 347. (28 C.4th 842.)

(2) The legislative history of the repeal statute provides no clear intention that it was to be applied retroactively. Plaintiff pointed out that the amendments to C.C. 1714.45(f) allegedly favoring retroactive application were made in direct response to a concern that the repeal statute would operate prospectively only, thereby comprising a clear indication that the repeal statute was to be applied retroactively. However, the legislative history merely cites the general rule in favor of prospective operation, and the amendments to C.C. 1714.45(f) do not supply an unavoidable implication that the Legislature intended to subject tobacco companies to potential tort liability for conduct during the 10-year period when the immunity statute declared that conduct to be lawful. Plaintiff also pointed to comments by the repeal statute's author supposedly reflecting the Legislature's intention to remedy past frauds by tobacco companies. However, these comments were simply reasons given in support of repeal and did not address the question of retroactivity. Also, comments by a bill's author are often ignored, because they reflect only the views of a single legislator, not that of the Legislature as a whole. (28 C.4th 844.)

(3) Construing the repeal statute to apply retroactively would raise serious constitutional questions about whether it was an unconstitutional taking in violation of the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause or an unlawful ex post facto law. The rule of construction favoring the avoidance of constitutional infirmities reinforces treating the repeal statute as prospective. (28 C.4th 845.)

(c) Whether immunity statute precludes recovery for conduct before immunity period. Regarding that portion of plaintiff's claim attributable to her use of cigarettes that defendants manufactured or distributed before the 10-year immunity period, defendants contend that the immunity statute, although repealed, continues to shield them from liability. Defendants reason that (1) the immunity statute was expressively retroactive (it applied to all product liability actions pending on, or commenced after, January 1, 1988); (2) it was held in this case that the repeal statute was not retroactive; (3) therefore, the repeal statute could not remove any of the protection afforded by the immunity statute. This contention is without merit. Although the repeal statute has no retroactive effect, it nonetheless removed the protection that the immunity statute gave to tobacco companies for their conduct occurring before the immunity statute's effective date. This is so because a retroactive effect is one that impairs rights that a party possessed when he or she acted, and the repeal statute did not impair any rights that tobacco companies possessed before the immunity period. On the contrary, by abrogating the immunity statute, the repeal statute restored the law governing product liability for the manufacture or sale of tobacco products to what it had been before January 1, 1988, the effective date of the immunity statute, i.e., general tort principles governed a cigarette company's liability for manufacturing or distributing tobacco products for sale to voluntary consumers. (28 C.4th 847, citing Landgraf v. USI Film Products (1994) 511 U.S. 244, 114 S.Ct. 1483, 1490, 128 L.Ed.2d 229.)

One justice dissented.

Naegle v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2002) 28 C.4th 856, 123 C.R.2d 61, 50 P.3d 769, a companion case to Myers v. Philip Morris Cos., dealt with the following question: "[W]hat forms of conduct by tobacco companies during the 10-year immunity period come within the protection conferred by the Immunity Statute." The Court of Appeal held that the immunity statute covers all conduct by tobacco companies acting as manufacturers or sellers of tobacco products (except that excluded by the statute itself). In reversing, the Supreme Court made the following points:

(a) As shown by the specific language of the immunity statute (former C.C. 1714.45(b)), the immunity conferred by that statute does not cover liability for either manufacturing defects in tobacco products or a tobacco company's breach of an express warranty. (28 C.4th 862.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that the immunity statute bars only product liability claims and not claims based on fraud. This is incorrect. The immunity statute defines "product liability" as "any action for injury or death caused by a product." This language is so broad that it compels the conclusion that whether based on allegations or theories of fraud, negligence, or manufacture of an inherently unsafe product, an action in which a plaintiff seeks damages for "personal injury or death" caused by a tobacco product clearly is a "product liability" action within the meaning of the statute. (28 C.4th 861, 863.)

(c) As applied to tobacco companies, the immunity statute is intended to protect tobacco companies for their conduct in making or selling tobacco products that are pure and unadulterated, when the dangers and risks are commonly known to be inherent in tobacco products. Accordingly, the immunity statute does not shield a tobacco company from product liability for injuries or deaths caused by something not inherent in the product itself, i.e., if some adulteration of the product makes it unreasonably dangerous. (28 C.4th 862, 863, 864, citing Richards v. Owens-Illinois (1997) 14 C.4th 985, 60 C.R.2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181, supra, §1535, and Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment i.)

(d) Plaintiff alleged that defendants manipulated the addictive properties of cigarettes via additives and that defendants controlled nicotine delivery to the smoker through adding ammonia. "The essence of these allegations is that defendant tobacco companies adulterated the cigarettes plaintiff smoked with additives that exposed him to dangers not inherent in cigarette smoking. Because ... the statutory immunity does not shield a tobacco company from liability for injuries or deaths caused by something not inherent in the product itself, the Immunity Statute does not bar these claims." Hence, the trial judge erred in sustaining defendants' demurrer. (28 C.4th 865.)

(e) However, the trial judge was correct in sustaining defendants' demurrer to two other causes of action. The first alleged that defendants controlled nicotine content by developing high-nicotine tobacco and blended tobacco. "Because nicotine is naturally present in tobacco, the risks associated with nicotine are inherent in tobacco products. Therefore, an allegation that defendants increased the nicotine content of their cigarettes through blended or high-nicotine tobacco does not avoid the bar of the Immunity Statute because it does not allege that defendants exposed plaintiff to a risk other than those inherent in tobacco products." (28 C.4th 865, citing American Tobacco Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 480, 255 C.R. 280, supra, §1535.) The other cause of action alleged that defendants lied about the addictive effects of tobacco in a campaign designed to deceive the public. These allegations do not suggest that the cigarettes that plaintiff smoked exposed him to risks other than those inherent in cigarette smoking. Hence, defendants' conduct falls squarely within the reach of the immunity statute. (28 C.4th 866, citing American Tobacco Co. v. Superior Court.)

One justice concurred and dissented, and two others concurred. (See Souders v. Philip Morris (2002) 104 C.A.4th 15, 21, 127 C.R.2d 748 [applying Myers and Naegle].)

Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 654, 11 C.R.3d 807, held that "the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that it could not hold defendants liable for fraud or negligence based upon their conduct during the 10-year period covered by the Immunity Statute, with one narrow exception for any injury caused by the adulteration of the product with additives." This error was prejudicial for the following reasons:

(a) Plaintiff's expert testimony showed that the risk of her developing lung cancer would have been much reduced had she successfully quit smoking during the immunity period. (117 C.A.4th 658.)

(b) Other evidence from the immunity period revealed that defendant tobacco companies not only failed to design a safer cigarette, but also manipulated the nicotine content to make cigarette smoking more addictive. (117 C.A.4th 658.)

(c) Defendants targeted youth during this time. (117 C.A.4th 660.)

(d) No other instruction lessened the prejudice of the erroneous instruction. (117 C.A.4th 660.)

(e) Plaintiff's closing argument focused on a continuous course of misconduct by defendants. (117 C.A.4th 664.)

(f) Defendants were prevented from telling the jury that their conduct was protected by law for 10 years. (117 C.A.4th 664.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

137 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
c. Adequate Warning.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1537

[§ 1537] Adequate Warning.

The seller, to avoid liability, may be required to give directions or warning about the use of the product (see supra, §1467), and may reasonably assume that the warning will be heeded. (See Temple v. Velcro USA (1983) 148 C.A.3d 1090, 1094, 196 C.R. 531 [warning was not on device, but was widely publicized and should have been read]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §2(c) (supra, §1467) [liability for inadequate warnings or instructions]; 34 Cal. Western L. Rev. 509 [minimizing product liability exposure].) This rule is probably inapplicable to the failure to install safety devices on a dangerous machine (see supra, §1526), but it has been applied to drugs and cosmetics in a number of cases. (See Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 709, 60 C.R. 398; Harris v. Belton (1968) 258 C.A.2d 595, 608, 65 C.R. 808, supra, §1476; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 988, 95 C.R. 381, supra, §1476.)

Where the product is sold in bulk by the manufacturer, with an adequate warning, and is subsequently packed, labeled, and marketed by a distributor, the duty to warn the ultimate consumer rests with the distributor.

In Groll v. Shell Oil Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 444, 449, 196 C.R. 52, stove and lantern fuel were sold by defendant manufacturer to the distributor, who packaged it and sold it to the public. Held, defendant's responsibility was absolved at the time it provided adequate warnings to the distributor.

(a) "To hold otherwise would impose an onerous burden on the bulk sales manufacturer to inspect the subsequent labeling of the packaged product. In addition the manufacturer would have severe enforcement problems if the bulk product purchaser failed to adhere to the recommended warnings." (148 C.A.3d 449.)

(b) "Cases which have imposed a duty on the manufacturer to warn the ultimate consumer have typically involved tangible items that could be labeled, or sent into the chain of commerce with the manufacturer's instruction, concerning: the proper assembly of a telescope ... , the danger in turning a golf cart ... , or the danger of unguarded machine gears on a kelp dryer Other cases have imposed such a duty when the manufacturer controlled the means to communicate the warning to the consumer, i.e., by packaging or labeling the ultimate product." (148 C.A.3d 449.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.14

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

138 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
d. Government Contractor Defense.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1538

[§ 1538] Government Contractor Defense.

In Boyle v. United Technologies Corp. (1988) 487 U.S. 500, 108 S.Ct. 2510, 101 L.Ed.2d 442, an action against a government contractor for the wrongful death of a Marine Corps pilot who was killed in a helicopter crash, the Court determined the conditions under which a contractor providing military equipment to the federal Government is immune from liability under state tort law for injury caused by a design defect.

(a) The procurement of equipment by the United States is an area of uniquely federal interest justifying the displacement of state law by the so-called "federal common law." (108 S.Ct. 2514, 101 L.Ed.2d 452.) Imposing state tort law liability on government contractors will affect that interest, because it will cause contractors either to refuse to manufacture the design specified by the government or to raise prices. (108 S.Ct. 2515, 101 L.Ed.2d 454.)

(b) To justify displacing state law, it is not enough that there be an area of uniquely federal interest; there must also be a significant conflict between that interest and the applicable state law. (108 S.Ct. 2515, 101 L.Ed.2d 455.) This conflict is present here: The state-imposed duty of care that is the asserted basis for the contractor's liability, i.e., the duty to equip helicopters with a specific type of escape-hatch mechanism, is precisely contrary to the duty imposed by the government contract, i.e., the duty to manufacture helicopters with the type of escape-hatch required by the contract specifications. (108 S.Ct. 2516, 101 L.Ed.2d 456.)

(c) However, even in this type of situation it is unreasonable to say that there is always a significant conflict between the state law and a federal policy or interest. For example, if the government orders, by model number, a quantity of stock helicopters that happen to be equipped with a certain type of escape-hatch, it cannot be said that the government has a "significant" interest in that particular feature. (108 S.Ct. 2516, 101 L.Ed.2d 456.)

(d) The outline of what constitutes a significant conflict is suggested by 28 U.S.C., §1346(b), which immunizes the government from liability based on the performance of, or failure to perform, a discretionary function. The selection of the appropriate design for military equipment is clearly a discretionary function, and it makes little sense to immunize the government from liability when it produces the equipment itself, but not when it contracts for the production. (108 S.Ct. 2517, 101 L.Ed.2d 457.) Hence, "state law which holds Government contractors liable for design defects in military equipment does in some circumstances present a 'significant conflict' with federal policy and must be displaced." (108 S.Ct. 2518, 101 L.Ed.2d 458.)

(e) The scope of displacement is as follows: "Liability for design defects in military equipment cannot be imposed, pursuant to state law, when (1) the United States approved reasonably precise specifications; (2) the equipment conformed to those specifications; and (3) the supplier warned the United States about the dangers in the use of the equipment that were known to the supplier but not to the United States. The first two of these conditions assure that the suit is within the area where the policy of the 'discretionary function' would be frustrated--i.e., they assure that the design feature in question was considered by a Government officer, and not merely by the contractor itself. The third condition is necessary because, in its absence, the displacement of state tort law would create some incentive for the manufacturer to withhold knowledge of risks, since conveying that knowledge might disrupt the contract but withholding it would procure no liability. We adopt this provision lest our effort to protect discretionary functions perversely impede them by cutting off information highly relevant to the discretionary decision." (108 S.Ct. 2518, 101 L.Ed.2d 458.)

Four justices dissented. (See Jackson v. Deft (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1305, 1317, 273 C.R. 214 [in view of evidence that military specifications set forth only minimum standards for paint label warnings, there was triable issue of fact as to existence of significant conflict between federal and state law required by Boyle]; 19 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1067 [Boyle]; 53 A.L.R.5th 535 [government-contractor defense].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

139 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
e. Compliance With Federal Standards.
1. Automobile Safety Equipment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1539

[§ 1539] Automobile Safety Equipment.

In Nissan Motor Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 980, 261 C.R. 80, plaintiffs alleged that a vehicle was defective because it did not have an automatic air bag. Held, a state common law requirement for air bags is contrary to Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 208, which requires a three-point safety belt system (which the vehicle had) or an air bag, hence, the state common law requirement is preempted. "To hold otherwise would be to allow a potential flood of actions against manufacturers that have been following the custom of the industry and acting in compliance with federal regulations. The result would not only work a hardship to manufacturers, but also might so encourage litigation as to hamper the administration of justice." (The court disagreed with the contrary view of Buccery v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 533, 132 C.R. 605, supra, §1452.)

The opposite result was reached in Ketchum v. Hyundai Motor Co. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1672, 57 C.R.2d 595, involving the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act (former 15 U.S.C., §1381 et seq.; now 49 U.S.C., §30102 et seq.). Respecting the seat belt system, defendant complied with the federal Act, but not with a state common law standard. Applicable to preemption, the Act provides: "Whenever a Federal motor vehicle safety standard established under this subchapter is in effect, no state or political subdivision of a state shall have any authority either to establish, or to continue in effect, with respect to any motor vehicle or item of motor vehicle equipment any safety standard applicable to the same aspect of performance of such vehicle or item of equipment which is not identical to the Federal standard." (For the present preemption provision, see 49 U.S.C., §30130(b).) However, as to preemption of state common law standards, the Act further states: "Compliance with any Federal motor vehicle safety standard issue under this subchapter does not exempt any person from any liability under common law." (A similar provision is now in 49 U.S.C., §30130(e).) Based on these provisions, judgment was entered for plaintiff. Held, affirmed. "Congress clearly distinguished between motor vehicle safety standards, which are preempted, and common law standards for liability, which are not. This language unambiguously expresses the intent of Congress to preserve common law liability actions." (49 C.A.4th 1680.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Notwithstanding the clause in the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act providing that compliance with a federal safety standard does not exempt any person from common law liability, Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 120 S.Ct. 1913, 146 L.Ed.2d 914, held that a common law tort action alleging that defendant automobile manufacturer was negligent in failing to equip plaintiff's automobile with a driver's side airbag was preempted by a conflicting Department of Transportation standard promulgated under the federal Act. The savings clause was designed to leave adequate room for state tort law to operate, as where federal law creates only a minimum safety standard; it was not designed to foreclose or limit operation of ordinary preemption principles insofar as those principles require preemption of state laws that actually conflict with federal standards. (120 S.Ct. 1918, 146 L.Ed.2d 922.) (See Williamson v. Mazda Motor of America (2008) 167 C.A.4th 905, 914, 84 C.R.3d 545 [seatbelt case stating that Geier rejected approach for determining preemptive effect of federal safety standard set forth in Ketchum v. Hyundai Motor Co. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1672, 57 C.R.2d 595, text, p. 1009].)

140 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

e. Compliance With Federal Standards.

2. Medical Devices.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1540

[§ 1540] Medical Devices.

In Evraets v. Intermedics Intraocular (1994) 29 C.A.4th 779, 34 C.R.2d 852, plaintiff was injured by an intraocular lens that had been surgically implanted in his eye, and sued the manufacturer and distributor for damages. Plaintiff alleged various tort causes of action, including strict liability, to all of which demurrers were sustained. Held, the strict liability and negligence claims were preempted by federal law. The Medical Device Amendments of 1976 to the federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act prohibit states from imposing "any requirement ... which is different from, or in addition to," federal requirements relating to the safety or effectiveness of medical devices intended for human use (21 U.S.C., §360k(a)). Under federal law, the intraocular lenses fall into a special category intended to encourage innovation by exempting promising experimental devices from the usual safety and efficacy requirements. State claims for strict liability would undermine the congressional purpose of allowing lens manufacturers leeway in developing and perfecting their product. Thus, suit should not be permitted under state law theories of either strict liability or negligence. (29 C.A.4th 787; on preemption by federal law, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §8 et seq.) (See Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 307, 314, 44 C.R.2d 902 [Medical Device Amendments preempted state products liability claims against contact lens cleaning product manufacturer; following Evraets].)

The United States Supreme Court addressed the preemptive effect of the Medical Device Amendments in Medtronic v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S.Ct. 2240, 135 L.Ed.2d 700, holding that common law tort claims alleged in that action were not barred. Defendant manufactured pacemaker leads. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) advised defendant, on its premarket notification to the FDA, that its pacemaker lead was "substantially equivalent" to devices introduced into interstate commerce prior to 1976, and thus exempt from the general requirement that premarket approval first be obtained. A heart patient was implanted with a pacemaker equipped with one of defendant's leads, the pacemaker failed as the alleged result of a defect in the lead, and the patient required emergency surgery. The patient filed an action in a state court, asserting claims based on negligent design, negligent manufacture, and negligent failure to warn or properly instruct the patient or her physicians of the tendency of the pacemaker to fail. Defendant removed the case to federal district court, which granted defendant summary judgment on the ground that plaintiffs' claims were preempted by 21 U.S.C., §360k(a). On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, reversing in part and affirming in part, ruled that the claims based on negligent design were not preempted but that the claims based on negligent manufacture and failure to warn were preempted. Held, reversed insofar as the Court of Appeals judgment held that any of the claims were preempted and affirmed insofar as the judgment rejected defendant's preemption defense. The lead opinion was joined by five justices.

(a) General preemptive effect. 21 U.S.C., §360k(a) expressly preempts state law, but the extent of the preemption must be determined. A state's police powers cannot be superseded by a federal act unless that is Congress' clear and manifest purpose. The language and legislative history of the Medical Device Amendments indicate that they are intended to preempt specific, conflicting state statutes and regulations, rather than general duties imposed by common law actions. (116 S.Ct. 2250, 135 L.Ed.2d 716.)

(b) Negligent design claim. The claims alleging negligent design are not preempted. The FDA's "substantially equivalent" determination did not amount to a specific, federally enforceable "requirement" that would be preemptive under 21 U.S.C., §360k(a). The process undertaken by defendant here focuses on the device's equivalence to another device already on the market, not on its safety. The device has never been formally reviewed under the Medical Device Amendments for safety or effectiveness. The process accordingly provides little protection to the public, and is designed merely to maintain the status quo with respect to existing medical devices and their substantial equivalents. (116 S.Ct. 2254, 135 L.Ed.2d 720.)

(c) Negligent manufacturing and labeling claims.

(1) The remaining claims, those alleging negligent manufacture and failure to warn, are clearly not preempted to the extent that the claims rest on allegations that defendant negligently failed to comply with duties equal to, or substantially identical to, requirements imposed by the Medical Device Amendments. That the state requirements may be narrower than the federal rules does not make them "different" under 21 U.S.C., §360k(a). Moreover, nothing in the statute denies the state the right to provide a traditional damages remedy for violations of common law duties when those duties parallel federal requirements. The presence of a damages remedy does not amount to the additional or different "requirement" preempted under the statute; instead, it merely provides another reason for manufacturers to comply with identical existing requirements under federal law. (116 S.Ct. 2255, 135 L.Ed.2d 721.)

(2) The preemption defense against the manufacturing and labeling claims should have been rejected in full. State requirements are preempted only where the FDA has established "other specific requirements applicable to a particular device." (116 S.Ct. 2257, 135 L.Ed.2d 723.) The FDA has promulgated only general labeling and manufacturing regulations for medical devices. Accordingly, claims that allege noncompliance with other duties under state common law are not preempted. Preemption occurs only when a specific state requirement threatens to interfere with a specific federal requirement. Here, the federal requirements applicable to the device are entirely generic, and the state common law duties that plaintiffs seek to enforce are not specific to the particular device. (116 S.Ct. 2257, 135 L.Ed.2d 724.)

One justice, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, expressed the view that ordinarily 21 U.S.C., §360k(a) preempted a requirement similar to a federal requirement even though it took the form of a standard of care imposed by a state law tort action, but that the statute did not preempt the tort claims here. Four other justices, concurring in part and dissenting in part, took the position that the negligent manufacture and failure to warn claims were preempted. (See Buckman Co. v. Plaintiffs' Legal Committee (2001) 531 U.S. 341, 121 S.Ct. 1012, 1017, 148 L.Ed.2d 854, 861 [state law fraud-on-FDA claims are impliedly preempted by federal law; federal statutory scheme amply empowers FDA to punish and deter fraud against FDA, and this authority is used by FDA to achieve delicate balance of statutory objectives, a balance that can be skewed by allowing fraud-on-FDA claims under state tort law]; Armstrong v. Optical Radiation Corp. (1996) 50 C.A.4th 580, 586, 57 C.R.2d 763 [preemption under Medical Device Amendments requires both device specific federal regulations and similar, conflicting state regulations that impose specific requirements; following Medtronic]; Steele v. Collagen Corp. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1474, 1478, 63 C.R.2d 879 [state standards of care are preempted if they are different from or in addition to federal requirements arising from full premarket approval process (rather than merely approval under market equivalence test); however, manufacturer must show both premarket approval and compliance with federal standards]; 98 A.L.R. Fed 124 [federal preemption of state common law products liability claims pertaining to drugs, medical devices, and other health-related items].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Riegel v. Medtronic (2008) 552 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 999, 1007, 169 L.Ed.2d 892, 902 [patient's common law claims of negligence, strict liability, and implied warranty against manufacturer of balloon catheter were preempted by Medical Device Amendments to federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act; Food and Drug Administration premarket approval process for catheter established federal safety and effectiveness requirements for catheter, and safety and effectiveness were subjects of patient's claims]; Blanco v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1039, 1056, 70 C.R.3d 566 [Medical Device Amendments preempted strict products liability claim against manufacturer of bileaflet mitral heart valve that fractured and failed, because claim would impose state manufacturing requirement concerning elimination of microporosity from valve different from Food and Drug Administration requirements imposed in premarket approval order, which did not impose specific requirements concerning microporosity]; Jessen v. Mentor Corp. (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1480, 1492, 71 C.R.3d 714 [Medical Device Amendments preempted patient's state law claim based on failure of manufacturer of testicular prosthesis to include in outer packaging warning that prosthesis subject to the Amendments had to be filled with saline solution prior to implantation; prosthesis complied with Food and Drug Administration labeling requirements imposed through premarket approval process, and manufacturer was not required to satisfy labeling requirement imposed more than 8 months after patient's surgery].

141 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.

6. Defenses.

f. Doctrine of Comparative Fault.

1. Former Law: Assumption of Risk.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1541

[§ 1541] Former Law: Assumption of Risk.

Ordinary contributory negligence, such as negligent failure to discover a danger or defect, or to take precautions against the possibility of its existence, has not been treated as a defense in actions based on ultrahazardous activity. (See supra, §1417.) It has also been rejected as a defense in strict products liability actions. (See Barth v. B. F. Goodrich Tire Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 228, 243, 71 C.R. 306; Ruiz v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 462, 470, 93 C.R. 270; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §17, Comment a; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.7; 63A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §1350 et seq.; 18 Hastings L. J. 48; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 53; 13 A.L.R.3d 1057, 1100 [products liability: strict liability in Torts]; 46 A.L.R.3d 240 [contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defense under doctrine of strict liability]; 75 A.L.R.4th 538 [contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defense in case involving failure to provide safety device].)

A different rule was applied where the plaintiff voluntarily and unreasonably subjected himself or herself to a known danger, e.g., by continuing to operate or use a product after discovery of its defective condition. This kind of contributory fault, sometimes called assumption of risk (see supra, §1336), was a defense even to strict liability. (See Luque v. McLean (1972) 8 C.3d 136, 145, 104 C.R. 443, 501 P.2d 1163, supra, §1465; Romig v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (1969) 271 C.A.2d 420, 422, 76 C.R. 479, citing the text; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 C.A.3d 958, 991, 95 C.R. 381; Baker v. Chrysler Corp. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 710, 718, 127 C.R. 745 [pedestrian attempted to cross street directly in front of approaching automobile]; Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §17, Comment a; 63A Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Products Liability §1350 et seq.; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 872 [Assumption of Risk and Strict Products Liability]; 18 Hastings L. J. 49.)

It was necessary to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the particular risk. In Smith v. DHY-Dynamic Co. (1973) 31 C.A.3d 852, 107 C.R. 907, plaintiff laborer, working on a ditch-digging project, was injured when an earth-moving machine operated by another employee fell into the ditch. In this action against the manufacturer of the machine, the trial judge gave a brief instruction on assumption of risk. Held, reversible error, for the evidence did not show that plaintiff had knowledge of the particular risk, appreciated the magnitude of it, and voluntarily assumed it (see supra, §§1237, 1238). The evidence showed that the machine had an inadequate braking system on the rear axle only, and plaintiff, though working in the ditch within the proximity of the machine, did not assume the risk of this mechanical defect unknown to him.

Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, supra, §1329, adopting the doctrine of comparative negligence, abolished the defenses of contributory negligence and the kind of assumption of risk that is actually a variant of contributory negligence. The Li case, however, dealt with negligence, and in a strict liability case, there is no negligence to compare. Although the dissenters in Horn v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 359, 131 C.R. 78, 551 P.2d 398, urged an extension of the Li holding to include "comparative fault" in strict liability cases, the majority expressed no opinion on the point. But in Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, infra, §1542, the doctrine of comparative fault was adopted.

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.27

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §22.7.

142 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

C. Strict Products Liability.
 6. Defenses.
 f. Doctrine of Comparative Fault.
 2. Adoption of Doctrine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1542

[§ 1542] Adoption of Doctrine.

In Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, decedent, driving an Opel on a freeway at high speed, struck a divider fence. The impact caused the car to spin, the driver's door was thrown open, and decedent was forcibly ejected, sustaining fatal injuries. It was undisputed that had he remained in the car his injuries would probably have been minor. In this wrongful death action against the manufacturer and others in the distribution chain, the sole theory of the complaint was strict liability for damages allegedly caused by an improperly designed door latch activated by the impact. "Thus, the case involves a so-called 'second collision' in which the 'defect' did not contribute to the original impact, but only to the 'enhancement' of the injury." (20 C.3d 730.) The expert witnesses were conflicting on whether the impact would have caused the door to open even if the car had been equipped with latches of the alternative designs suggested by plaintiffs.

Over objections, defendants introduced evidence that the car had a safety belt and door lock, that the owner's manual warned that belts should be worn and doors locked when the car was in motion, and that decedent did not use the belt or the lock; also that decedent was intoxicated at the time of the collision (this for the limited purpose of determining whether he had used the safety equipment). Thus, defendants contended that the decedent's own conduct contributed to his death, and this raised the principal issue, whether comparative negligence principles applied. The verdict was for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. Held, reversed.

(a) Development of law of strict liability. Tort law evolved from a legal obligation initially imposed without "fault" to recovery that generally was based on blameworthiness. Liability without fault continued in a restricted area (e.g., keepers of wild animals, those who handled dangerous substances, or those who engaged in ultrahazardous activities). Simultaneously, persons injured in the use of personal property were allowed to recover on a contract theory if they were buyers or in privity. Subsequently, liability was imposed in negligence on the manufacturer, and protection of the consumer was extended beyond negligence to express or implied warranty. But warranty liability was limited by the requirement of notice of breach and the defense of adequate disclaimer. And general dissatisfaction with the conceptual limitations of traditional tort and contract doctrines led to strict liability in tort. (20 C.3d 732.) This was never absolute liability; the manufacturer does not become an insurer of the safety of the product's user. The plaintiff's injury must have been caused by a "defect" in the product; and the plaintiff's negligence is a defense when it is either assumption of risk or an unforeseeable product use. (20 C.3d 733.)

(b) First argument against applying comparative negligence principles: conceptual and semantic difficulties. Some authorities take the position that the two concepts cannot be merged because contributory negligence was only a defense to negligence, and strict liability is not founded on negligence or fault. This argument is unconvincing. (1) It is based on a precise definitional treatment of legal concepts that have developed much overlapping; e.g., contributory negligence and assumption of risk. (20 C.3d 735.) As Prosser points out, the term "contributory negligence" may be a misnomer, for negligence requires a duty to another, and the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence is not violating a duty; "contributory fault" would be more descriptive. (20 C.3d 735.) Hence, the problem calls for avoidance of linguistic labels incapable of exact definition, and adoption of a flexible judicial posture; thus, in the present situation, "equitable apportionment or allocation of loss" may be more descriptive than "comparative fault." (20 C.3d 736.) "If a more just result follows from the expansion of comparative principles, we have no hesitancy in seeking it, mindful always that the fundamental and underlying purpose of Li was to promote the equitable allocation of loss among all parties legally responsible in proportion to their fault." (20 C.3d 737; on Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, see supra, §1329.)

(c) Second argument: that manufacturer's incentive to produce safe products will be reduced. There is little substance in this argument. (1) The liability is only lessened, not avoided, by the plaintiff's contributing conduct. (2) The manufacturer cannot assume that the user will be blameworthy. (3) The currently recognized defense of assumption of risk is a complete defense, inverting the incentives; i.e., a manufacturer might argue that his or her product was so defective that the user had to be aware of its patent defects. (20 C.3d 737, 738.) One important result of applying comparative principles to strict products liability is the elimination of the bizarre anomaly: In negligence actions, contributory negligence only diminishes recovery; in strict liability actions assumption of risk or product misuse completely bars recovery. Application of comparative principles to strict liability actions treats these defenses in the same manner as in negligence actions; i.e., the defense, if established, will reduce but not bar the plaintiff's claim. (20 C.3d 738.)

(d) Third argument: that jurors cannot compare plaintiff's negligence with defendant's strict liability. Experience of federal courts with the maritime doctrine of "unseaworthiness"--a form of strict liability--refutes this argument; no serious practical difficulties in jury trials have appeared. (20 C.3d 738, 739.)

(e) Fourth argument: that merger of the two principles will adversely affect liability of such intermediate entities as retailers and bailors. This is untenable. "Regardless of the identity of a particular defendant or of his position in the commercial chain the basis for his liability remains that he has marketed or distributed a defective product." And jurors capable of assessing the legal responsibility of a manufacturer can do likewise with subsequent distributors. (20 C.3d 739.)

(f) Authorities supporting extension of comparative principles to strict products liability. The majority of the states that have comparative negligence statutes, and the two states that, like California, adopted the doctrine judicially, apply the doctrine to strict liability actions. (20 C.3d 739, 740.) The majority of commentators urge its adoption. (20 C.3d 740, citing a long list.) The proposed Uniform Comparative Fault Act does likewise. It is revealing in its clear application of comparative principles to strict tort liability, and in its use of the broad generic term "fault" as including both negligence and strict liability. (20 C.3d 741, 742.)

(g) Conclusion: the rule adopted. "[W]e conclude that a system of comparative fault should be and it is hereby extended to actions founded on strict products liability. In such cases the separate defense of 'assumption of risk,' to the extent that it is a form of contributory negligence, is abolished. While, as we have suggested, on the particular facts before us, the term 'equitable apportionment of loss' is more accurately descriptive of the process, nonetheless, the term 'comparative fault' has gained such wide acceptance by courts and in the literature that we adopt its use." (20 C.3d 742.)

(h) Policy reasons for adoption of rule. The same considerations of policy that led to the Li decision call for extension of similar principles to the strict products liability area. "We reiterate that our reason for extending a full system of comparative fault to strict products liability is because it is fair to do so. The law consistently seeks to elevate justice and equity above the exact contours of a mathematical equation. We are convinced that in merging the two principles what may be lost in symmetry is more than gained in fundamental fairness." (20 C.3d 742.)

(i) Suggested implementation of rule. As in Li, practice problems are to be resolved at the trial level by exercise of broad discretion of the trial judge. But F.R. Civ. P., Rule 49(a), giving a form of special verdict for maritime cases involving the doctrine of unseaworthiness, is illustrative of one technique that may be used: (1) The jury is first required to answer "yes" or "no" to questions on possible bases for a finding of unseaworthiness as a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. (2) If the jury so finds, it moves to a second group of similar questions on whether and in what particulars the plaintiff's own negligence was a contributing factor. (3) If the answers so find, the jury states the percentage of contribution. (4) The jury then finds the amount of the plaintiff's damages without reference to his or her own negligence. (5) The judge then reduces the damage award by the percentage figure. (20 C.3d 743.)

(j) Limited retroactivity of decision. (1) Although it is arguable that retroactivity should extend to the finality of Li, this would be manifestly unfair, particularly because Horn v. General Motors Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 359, 131 C.R. 78, 551 P.2d 398, supra, §1541, decided after Li, retained the separate system of defenses applicable to strict products liability. (20 C.3d 744.) (2) The new rule applies to all cases in which trial was not begun before the date of finality of this opinion, and to all cases in which the judgment is reversed on appeal for other reasons and retrial is commenced before the date of finality. (20 C.3d 743, 744.) (3) The new rule cannot be applied retroactively to the instant appeal to justify admission of the intoxication and "nonuse" evidence, for the issue was not raised in the trial court and no jury instructions on the issue were given. But, in the event of retrial, the principles will of course apply. (20 C.3d 744.)

(k) Reversible error in admission of evidence of intoxication and nonuse of safety devices. (1) The trial judge admitted the evidence on the theory that it was relevant to the defense of product misuse. But Horn points out that to accept a "nonuse" of safety equipment as a complete defense (as assumption of risk or product misuse) to a products liability action would subvert the rule that contributory negligence does not prevent recovery. (20 C.3d 745.) (2) The issues of intoxication and nonuse were emphasized in the trial, and the jury could well have concluded that decedent's failure, induced by intoxication, to use the belts and locks, was negligent conduct that completely barred recovery. (20 C.3d 745.) Thus, under the probability test of reversible error, reversal is required. (20 C.3d 746.)

Three justices dissented. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §22.7; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 936; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 809 [plaintiff's conduct as defense in cigarette products liability action]; 9 Pacific L. J. 775; 6 Pepperdine L. Rev. 485; 19 Santa Clara L. Rev. 355; 9 A.L.R.4th 633 [applicability of comparative negligence doctrine to actions based on strict liability]; 69 A.L.R.5th 625 [driver's comparative negligence as defense to enhanced injury, crashworthiness, or second collision claim]; BAJI, No. 9.03 [comparative fault in combined negligence and products liability case]; BAJI, No. 9.04 [reduction of damages because of comparative fault]; No. 16.10 [special verdict form; comparative fault]; BAJI, No. 16.11 [special verdict form; comparative fault in combined products liability and negligence case]; BAJI, No. 16.12 [special verdict form; comparative fault and comparative implied indemnity between defendants]; CACI, Nos. 1207, VF-1200.)

West's Key Number Digest, Products Liability k.27

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §22.7.

143 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY

- C. Strict Products Liability.
 - 6. Defenses.
 - f. Doctrine of Comparative Fault.
 - 3. Restatement Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1543

[§ 1543] Restatement Rule.

Recovery of damages for harm caused by a product defect "may be reduced if the conduct of the plaintiff combines with the product defect to cause the harm and the plaintiff's conduct fails to conform to generally applicable rules establishing appropriate standards of care." The manner and extent of the reduction and the apportionment of plaintiff's recovery among multiple defendants are "governed by generally applicable rules apportioning responsibility." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §17.)

Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 C.3d 725, 144 C.R. 380, 575 P.2d 1162, supra, §1542, is among the authorities cited for the proposition that a majority of courts utilize comparative fault to reduce the recoveries of products liability plaintiffs. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §17, Reporter's Note.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

144 of 144 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVI. ABSOLUTE AND STRICT LIABILITY
C. Strict Products Liability.
6. Defenses.
g. Contractual Exculpation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1544

[§ 1544] Contractual Exculpation.

Disclaimers and limitations of remedies by product sellers or other distributors, waivers by product purchasers, and other similar contractual exculpations, whether oral or written, do not bar or reduce otherwise valid products liability claims against sellers or other distributors of new products for harm to persons. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §18.)

This rule applies to cases in which commercial product sellers attempt unfairly to disclaim or otherwise limit their liability "to the majority of users and consumers who are presumed to lack information and bargaining power adequate to protect their interests." It "does not address whether consumers, especially when represented by informed and economically powerful consumer groups or intermediaries, with full information and sufficient bargaining power, may contract with product sellers to accept curtailment of liability in exchange for concomitant benefits, or whether such consumers might be allowed to agree to substitute alternative dispute resolution mechanisms in place of traditional adjudication." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §18, Comment d.) The rule is limited to new products; the effectiveness of disclaimers in connection with the commercial sale of used products "has considerable judicial support." (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §18, Reporter's Note [citing, among other authorities, LaRosa v. Superior Court (1981) 122 C.A.3d 741, 746, 176 C.R. 224, supra, §1496, and Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 C.A.3d 515, 519, 179 C.R. 5, supra, §1496].)

Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2 (see supra, §1293) authorizes contractual limitations on liability in tort actions, but only when permitted by "substantive law governing the claim." Such substantive law rules include the invalidation of disclaimers for personal injury in products liability cases under Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §18. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §2, Comment h; see 37 San Diego L. Rev. 293 [products liability waivers].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
A. Nominal Damages.
1. Right to Nominal Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1545

[§ 1545] Right to Nominal Damages.

Although the principal object of damages is compensation for injury suffered (see infra, §1548), in some situations nominal damages, a trivial sum, may be recovered where a cause of action is proved but no substantial damage is shown. (See C.C. 3360; Scofield v. Critical Air Medicine (1996) 45 C.A.4th 990, 1007, 52 C.R.2d 915, supra, §428; Rest.2d, Torts §907; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §8 et seq.; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.1; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 118.) The advantages of a nominal damages award, other than psychological, are two: (a) The plaintiff is entitled to costs (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §89); (b) the plaintiff may be entitled to punitive damages (see infra, §1610).

It is a fundamental principle that a negligent act does not give rise to liability without damage; hence, where no actual injury has occurred, nominal damages are not recoverable. (Fields v. Napa Milling Co. (1958) 164 C.A.2d 442, 448, 330 P.2d 459.) Moreover, the failure to award nominal damages is not a ground for new trial or reversal unless the judgment for the plaintiff would have been of some benefit to him or her, as where it would protect a property right, or vindicate the plaintiff's reputation. (See Gray v. Southern Pac. Co. (1937) 21 C.A.2d 240, 247, 68 P.2d 1011 [assuming that plaintiff had right to recover certain bodily organs of deceased after lawful autopsy, this would not benefit her, and failure to award nominal damages was not reversible error]; Staples v. Hoefke (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1397, 1406, 235 C.R. 165.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.8, 9

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.1. Entitlement to costs:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §88.

2 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
A. Nominal Damages.
2. Where Award Is Proper.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1546

[§ 1546] Where Award Is Proper.

Nominal damages are usually awarded where there is an invasion of a legally protected interest that does not result in actual damage. The invasion is "injury without damage," and an award of damages is not the object of the action, which is brought to vindicate the right or interest. The interest is recognized and protected by the award of nominal damages, together with costs. (C.C. 3360; Siminoff v. James H. Goodman & Co. Bank (1912) 18 C.A. 5, 15, 121 P. 939; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §18 et seq.) (See Carey v. Phipus (1978) 435 U.S. 247, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 1053, 55 L.Ed.2d 252, 267 [suspension of students without procedural due process]; Davidson v. Devine (1886) 70 C. 519, 520, 11 P. 664 [nominal damages award will not be set aside for uncertainty]; Maher v. Wilson (1903) 139 C. 514, 520, 73 P. 418 [false imprisonment; plaintiff wrongfully detained, but compensated for time worked and loss of employment]; Salo v. Smith (1914) 25 C.A. 295, 302, 143 P. 322 [false imprisonment; keeping arrestee in jail without filing formal charge]; Lady v. Palen (1936) 12 C.A.2d 1, 54 P.2d 1133 [libel]; Costerisan v. Melendy (1967) 255 C.A.2d 57, 60, 62 C.R. 800 [trespass]; Capell Associates v. Central Valley Sec. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 773, 780, 67 C.R. 463 [escrow holder failed to carry out directions for subordination agreement, but no showing of causal connection between omission and injury]; Allen v. McMillion (1978) 82 C.A.3d 211, 219, 147 C.R. 77 [possessor's action for trespass to land by forcible entry]; Rest.2d, Torts §§163, 907, Comment b, 620 [defamation]; 69 A.L.R.2d 628 [wrongful death action].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
A. Nominal Damages.
3. Amount Must Be Trivial.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1547

[§ 1547] Amount Must Be Trivial.

Nominal damages must be distinguished from compensatory damages in small amounts. A plaintiff who suffers actual loss amounting to $ 10 or $ 100 recovers these amounts as compensatory damages. But where only nominal damages are awarded, the amount must be trivial, e.g., 1 cent or $ 1; it is error to give such a sum as $ 100 for nominal damages. (Maher v. Wilson (1903) 139 C. 514, 520, 73 P. 418; Broads v. Mead & Cook (1911) 159 C. 765, 769, 116 P. 46; Price v. McComish (1937) 22 C.A.2d 92, 100, 70 P.2d 978; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §10 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 119.)

This distinction is occasionally blurred: "The term 'nominal damages' describes two types of award--a trifling or token allowance for mere technical invasion of a right, without actual damage; and the very different allowance made when actual damages are substantial, but their extent and amount are difficult of precise proof." (Kluge v. O'Gara (1964) 227 C.A.2d 207, 209, 38 C.R. 607, infra, §1607.)

Nevertheless, a substantial award cannot be made where no substantial damages are suffered. In Avina v. Spurlock (1972) 28 C.A.3d 1086, 105 C.R. 198, the trial judge found that defendant landlords had been guilty of wrongful eviction of plaintiff tenants and unlawful detention of their personal property; but he further found that no evidence of monetary damages had been offered, and that "nominal damages should be awarded ... in the sum of $ 501.00." Held, judgment modified to substitute an award of $ 1. An unbroken line of cases limits such an award to a few cents or a dollar. An award of damages must rest upon substantial legal evidence. "[T]o permit the award of significant damages in the absence of such evidence would authorize capricious damage awards and the proliferation of litigation for small, technical legal wrongs where no actual damages are suffered." (28 C.A.3d 1089.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.14-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

4 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
1. In General.
a. Theory and Distinctions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1548

[§ 1548] Theory and Distinctions.

In tort actions, damages are normally awarded for the purpose of compensating the plaintiff for injury suffered, i.e., restoring the plaintiff as nearly as possible to his or her former position, or giving some pecuniary equivalent. (See C.C. 3333, infra, §1553; Rest.2d, Torts §§901, 902, 903, 905, 906, 911; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §377 et seq.; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§24, 25, 29, 119 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, Demands for Relief, §8:7 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Compensatory Damages, Chap. 5; 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1559; 19 Hastings L. J. 1071; 40 San Diego L. Rev. 1091 [symposium on theory of compensatory damages]; BAJI, Nos. 14.00, 14.01, 14.02; CACI, Nos. 3900, 3901.)

This differs from the rule applicable to actions for breach of contract, under which the plaintiff is usually entitled to be compensated for the benefits he or she would have received from full performance. (Rest.2d, Contracts §347, Comment a; see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §§869, 879.) It also differs from the rule governing quasi-contractual recovery, under which the benefit to the defendant rather than the detriment to the plaintiff is the governing consideration. (Rest., Restitution §150 et seq.; see Abramowitz v. Bank of America (1955) 131 C.A.2d Supp. 892, 896, 281 P.2d 380; 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §§1013, 1018.)

In Dandoy v. Oswald Bros. Paving Co. (1931) 113 C.A. 570, 298 P. 1030, defendant wrongfully dumped excavated earth on plaintiff's farm land during the latter's absence, and the trial judge found on sufficient evidence that the value of the land had not been impaired. The court held that this was more than mere technical trespass justifying only nominal damages, and that compensatory damages, in the amount of the cost of removal of the material, should be allowed. To hold otherwise "would be to decide that by the wrongful act of another, an owner of land may be compelled to accept a change in the physical condition of his property, or else perform the work of restoration at his own expense." (113 C.A. 572.)

On the other hand, the plaintiff is not entitled to be placed in a better position than he or she would have been in had the wrong not been done. In Valdez v. Taylor Auto. Co. (1954) 129 C.A.2d 810, 278 P.2d 91, defendant's agent represented that plaintiff would have full insurance coverage for the car he bought (the then minimum $ 5,000 and $ 10,000 personal injury and $ 5,000 property damage). The judgment by a person injured in the collision was $ 18,465, and the jury awarded this to plaintiff against defendant. Held, the actual detriment suffered was merely what the policy

(loss or damage coverage only) would have been worth if as represented--merely the stated minimums. The judgment was accordingly reduced to $ 8,465. (129 C.A.2d 822.)

Damages cannot be awarded for a loss occurring as a result of violation of the law. (Page v. Bakersfield Uniform & Towel Supply Co. (1966) 239 C.A.2d 762, 773, 49 C.R. 46.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.15

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 38 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1435 [Civil Rights in Ordinary Tort Cases: Race, Gender, and the Calculation of Economic Loss].

5 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
1. In General.
b. General and Special Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1549

[§ 1549] General and Special Damages.

The distinction between general and special damages forms the basis of an important principle of pleading, i.e., the defendant is entitled to notice of what damages are to be claimed at the trial, and should be given this notice in the complaint. General damages are those that necessarily or usually result from particular wrongful acts, and the mere statement of the cause of action for the injury sufficiently implies that these damages resulted. Special damages are those that are not considered to be so necessary or usual a result, and specific notice is required when they are claimed. Hence, the rule is that general damages need not be alleged in the complaint, but special damages must be alleged in order to be proved. (See Rest.2d, Torts §904; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §887 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.5

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Special damages must be alleged:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §933 et seq.

6 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
1. In General.
c. No Double Recovery.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1550

[§ 1550] No Double Recovery.

The general theory of compensatory damages bars double recovery for the same wrong. The principal situation is where joint or concurrent tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable for the same wrong. Only one complete satisfaction is permissible, and if partial satisfaction is received from one, the liability of others will be correspondingly reduced. (See Ash v. Mortensen (1944) 24 C.2d 654, 658, 660, 150 P.2d 876; Laurenzi v. Vranizan (1945) 25 C.2d 806, 813, 155 P.2d 633; Spaulding v. Cameron (1952) 38 C.2d 265, 269, 239 P.2d 625, infra, §1737; Dodds v. Bucknum (1963) 214 C.A.2d 206, 212, 29 C.R. 393, infra, §1629; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 673, 192 C.R. 793; Piedra v. Dugan (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1483, 1492, 21 C.R.3d 36; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 1456; BAJI, No. 14.64; CACI, No. 3926.)

In an action for damages for negligent injury to property, (1) if the cost of restoration of the property to its original condition amounts to less than the diminution in value, the cost is the proper measure; (2) if the cost of restoration exceeds the diminution in value, diminution is the proper measure; and (3) it is reversible error to allow both. (Mozzetti v. Brisbane (1977) 67 C.A.3d 565, 576, 136 C.R. 751; see infra, §1727.)

However, an award of both compensatory and punitive damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress is not subject to challenge as double recovery. In Merlo v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 5, 130 C.R. 416, supra, §459, the court pointed out that C.C. 3294 (infra, §1559) controls: "Compensatory damages and punitive damages are two different things with two different purposes. Compensatory damages are awarded to compensate an injured party for his injury; punitive damages are awarded to punish a wrongdoer and make an example of him. When both compensatory and punitive damages are awarded, there is no double punishment. There may be double recovery, but, unless and until the Legislature sees fit to alter Civil Code section 3294, it is a permissible double recovery." (59 C.A.3d 20.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

7 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
1. In General.
d. Certainty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1551

[§ 1551] Certainty.

The requirement that damages be "certain" and not "speculative" or "conjectural" is more important in contract than in tort actions, but it does apply to the latter as well. (See Engle v. Oroville (1965) 238 C.A.2d 266, 273, 47 C.R. 630 [no recovery for speculative lost profits based on "the fond dreams of the adventurer"]; Kuffel v. Seaside Oil Co. (1970) 11 C.A.3d 354, 366, 90 C.R. 209 [same]; Piscitelli v. Friedenberg (2001) 87 C.A.4th 953, 988, 105 C.R.2d 88, infra, §1555 [claim for lost future commissions on money management accounts was both speculative and nonspeculative as matter of law, depending on which assumption was relied on]; Scognamillo v. Herrick (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1139, 1150, 131 C.R.2d 393 [damages for second back surgery were too speculative, where evidence indicated that this surgery might never occur]; Rest.2d, Torts §912; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §328 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 121; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 110; BAJI, No. 14.60; CACI, No. 3900.)

However, though the fact of damage must be clearly established, the amount need not be proved with the same degree of certainty, but may be left to reasonable approximation or inference. Any other rule would mean that sometimes a plaintiff who had suffered substantial damage would be wholly denied recovery because the particular items could not, for some reason, be precisely determined. (See Fishbaugh v. Fishbaugh (1940) 15 C.2d 445, 453, 101 P.2d 1084; Hanlon Drydock & Shipbuilding Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. (1928) 92 C.A. 230, 235, 268 P. 385; Katenkamp v. Union Realty Co. (1940) 36 C.A.2d 602, 618, 98 P.2d 239; Elsbach v. Mulligan (1943) 58 C.A.2d 354, 366, 136 P.2d 651; Hutcherson v. Alexander (1968) 264 C.A.2d 126, 135, 70 C.R. 366; Rest.2d, Torts §912, Comment a; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §332 et seq.; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 350.)

In Clemente v. California (1985) 40 C.3d 202, 219 C.R. 445, 707 P.2d 818, an action against the state and a highway patrol officer for negligently investigating an accident in which plaintiff was struck by a motorcycle (see supra, §290), defendants sought an instruction that plaintiff must show that, but for the negligence of the officer, the lawsuit would have resulted in a collectible judgment in plaintiff's favor. Held, the requested instruction was properly denied.

(a) Rest.2d, Torts §912 states that the injured party must establish the extent of the harm and the amount representing adequate compensation "with as much certainty as the nature of the tort and the circumstances permit." And Comment a adds: "There is no general requirement that the injured person should prove with like definiteness the extent of the harm that he has suffered as a result of the tortfeasor's conduct. It is desirable that responsibility for harm should not be imposed until it has been proved with reasonable certainty that the harm resulted from the wrongful conduct of the person charged. It is desirable, also, that there be definiteness of proof of the amount of damage as far as is reasonably possible. It is even more desirable, however, that an injured person not be deprived of substantial compensation merely because he cannot prove with complete certainty the extent of harm he has suffered." (40 C.3d 219.)

(b) Campbell v. Magana (1960) 184 C.A.2d 751, 8 C.R. 32, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §334, relied on by defendants, is distinguishable. In that legal malpractice action, the court did say that plaintiff must prove that careful management of the lawsuit would have resulted in a favorable judgment and its collection. But in the malpractice action, identity of the tortfeasors is known and their financial resources are ascertainable; hence, there is no unfairness in limiting plaintiff's recovery to what he would have obtained in the absence of the attorney's negligence. Here, the situation is different: Nothing is known about the motorcyclist who struck plaintiff, e.g., whether he was employed by a business with a great deal of insurance, whether he was penniless, or whether he had average insurance and many assets. "Obviously, plaintiff's inability to prove whether a judgment against the motorcyclist would be collectible is due to defendant's negligence." (40 C.3d 220.)

In Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, supra, §720, an action against the parents of teenage boys who employed computer technology to crack plaintiff phone company's system and make long-distance phone calls without paying, the trial court erred in awarding damages based on plaintiff's unauthorized-use tariff, instead of requiring plaintiff to prove actual damages. Although the Public Utilities Commission is constitutionally authorized under Cal. Const., Art. XII, §§4, 6, to establish the rates that utilities may charge for their services, it is debatable whether the Commission may liquidate a utility's tort damages against third parties. Indeed, in an amicus brief, the Commission indicated that there was no intention that the tariff apply to tort claims against third parties. Whether plaintiff's tariff is a valid liquidated damages provision for a breach of contract claim is not before the court. Moreover, the trial court ruled against plaintiff in its quasi-contract cause of action, and plaintiff did not pursue a protective appeal. (46 C.A.4th 1569.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Service Employees Int. Union, Local 250 v. Colcord (2008) 160 C.A.4th 362, 372, 72 C.R.3d 763 [determination that employer labor union could have avoided costs of decertification election instigated by former employees were it not for employees' tortious conduct was speculative; decertification could have been successful regardless of whether employees had properly resigned prior to decertification efforts]. Campbell case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §313.

8 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

B. Compensatory Damages.

1. In General.

e. Prospective Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1552

[§ 1552] Prospective Damages.

The plaintiff can establish liability only on a cause of action that accrued before the filing of the complaint. But once that liability is established, recovery may be had not only for loss already suffered, but also for (1) loss suffered after commencement of the action and before trial, and (2) loss reasonably certain to occur in the future. This is known as prospective damage. (See C.C. 3283; Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co. of Calif. (1907) 151 C. 113, 117, 91 P. 522; Zerbo v. Electrical Products Corp. (1931) 212 C. 733, 736, 300 P. 825 [instruction referring to damages plaintiff "will suffer" was sufficient; statutory language "certain to result" was not required]; Ryan v. Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co. (1913) 21 C.A. 14, 23, 130 P. 693 [instructions referring to pain "to be necessarily suffered" was proper]; Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 C.A.3d 451, 462, 130 C.R. 786, citing the text; Sommer v. Gabor (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1455, 1472, 48 C.R.2d 235 [instructions that essentially limited recovery to damages that necessarily result from publication of defamatory matter was sufficient to comply with C.C. 3283 despite failure to give BAJI, No. 14.60]; Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1689, 1698, 52 C.R.2d 450 [trial judge is not required to strike damages that, at time of motion to strike, are too speculative for recovery but may become recoverable if tax liability matures before trial]; Transwestern Pipeline Co. v. Monsanto Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 502, 532, 53 C.R.2d 887 [gas company's future costs in remediating contamination caused by PCBs, although not fixed, were, based on past experience, certain enough to be recoverable damages]; Rest.2d, Torts §910; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §481 et seq.; BAJI, No. 14.60; CACI, No. 3900; cf. Richman v. San Francisco, Napa & Calistoga Ry. (1919) 180 C. 454, 458, 181 P. 769 [use of words "reasonably probable" was error]; S. C. Anderson v. Bank of America (1994) 24 C.A.4th 529, 536, 537, 30 C.R.2d 286 [motion for nonsuit was properly granted as to contractor's claim for lost prospective profits caused by reduction in bonding capacity; even if plaintiff had been awarded project, it offered no evidence enabling jury to conclude that it was reasonably probable that profit would have been earned]; Westside Center Associates v. Safeway Stores 23 (1996) 42 C.A.4th 507, 529, 49 C.R.2d 793 [evidence was insufficient to establish either fact or amount of damages]; Kids' Universe v. In2Labs (2002) 95 C.A.4th 870, 882, 116 C.R.2d 158 [profits allegedly lost as result of defendant's negligence in preventing plaintiffs from opening on-line toy business were not recoverable; plaintiffs failed to raise factual question whether business would have realized net profits].)

The most frequent illustrations of prospective damage are future disability or suffering in personal injury actions (see Oliveira v. Warren (1938) 24 C.A.2d 712, 76 P.2d 113; infra, §1667) and future damage resulting from a continuing trespass or nuisance (see infra, §1737).

The requirement of certainty (supra, §1551) cannot be strictly applied where prospective damages are sought, because probabilities are really the basis for the award. (See Bauman v. San Francisco (1940) 42 C.A.2d 144, 163, 108 P.2d 989; Ostertag v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. (1944) 65 C.A.2d 795, 806, 151 P.2d 647.) But where the uncertainty is too great, recovery will be denied. (See Bellman v. San Francisco High School Dist. (1938) 11 C.2d 576, 588, 81 P.2d 894; Silvester v. Scanlan (1933) 136 C.A. 107, 111, 28 P.2d 97.)

An award for future pecuniary loss must be for the present cash value of the loss, i.e., the amount that, if invested at the highest reasonably secure rate of return, will cover the award. (See Wilson v. Gilbert (1972) 25 C.A.3d 607, 613, 102 C.R. 31 [present cash value instruction was improper where there was neither evidence concerning such factors as compounding and discounting nor judicial notice of present cash value tables]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§792, 793; 8 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [appropriate discount rate for determining present value].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.25 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Electronic Funds Solutions, LLC v. Murphy (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1161, 1179, 36 C.R.3d 663 [lost profits, rather than value of defendants' new business, was correct measure of compensatory damages in action by limited liability company against its former vice presidents based on allegations that defendants, while claiming to start new business, actually converted company assets and misled customers into thinking that new business was company under another name]; Parlour Enterprises v. Kirin Group (2007) 152 C.A.4th 281, 287, 61 C.R.3d 243 [subfranchisor's projections outlined in offering circular given to potential investors could not be used to calculate lost profits of subfranchisor, subfranchisee, and investor from loss of business opportunities after franchisor cancelled area development agreement for ice cream parlors; projections were based on subfranchisor's assumptions, not actual operations, and were not based on facts substantially similar to lost business opportunity]; Garcia v. Duro Dyne Corp. (2007) 156 C.A.4th 92, 97, 67 C.R.3d 100 [evidence that worker's mesothelioma was reasonably certain to recur supported verdict awarding future economic damages in products liability action involving asbestos to which worker was exposed, despite fact that worker was in remission at time of trial; although no expert could state precise future date of recurrence or precise amount of future damages, evidence was sufficient for approximation of future recurrence and future expenses]; Green Wood Industrial Co. v. Forceman Int. Dev. Group (2007) 156 C.A.4th 766, 776, 67 C.R.3d 601, quoting the text [buyer fraudulently induced to pay for scrap metal that never existed failed to prove to reasonable certainty that it would pay claim against it by foreign resale buyer for failure to deliver goods, and thus buyer could not recover amount of claim as damages; although there was evidence that buyer had agreed to pay third-party claim, it presented no evidence that such agreement would be enforceable in foreign country or that claim would otherwise be paid].

9 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

B. Compensatory Damages.

2. Causation.

a. Nature of Requirement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1553

[§ 1553] Nature of Requirement.

The necessary causal connection between the tortious conduct and the injury must be shown, and in general the rules of legal or proximate cause that determine liability also determine whether the defendant shall be liable for particular items of injury or loss. (See Hawthorne v. Siegel (1891) 88 C. 159, 163, 25 P. 1114; Burkett v. Griffith (1891) 90 C. 532, 542, 27 P. 527; Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co. (1950) 35 C.2d 409, 433, 218 P.2d 17; Kenyon v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1927) 86 C.A. 269, 273, 260 P. 952; Brewer v. Teano (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1024, 1036, 47 C.R. 2d 348, supra, §1218, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §917; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §300; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 383; 25 A.L.R.3d 1386 [injury or disability resulting from medical treatment for accident as proximately caused by original accident within coverage of accident or disability insurance]; BAJI, No. 14.00; CACI, No. 3900.)

C.C. 3333 states the rule as follows: "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not." This differs from the rule governing breach of contract, under which the damages are limited to those reasonably contemplated by the parties. (See Hunt Bros. Co. v. San Lorenzo Water Co. (1906) 150 C. 51, 56, 87 P. 1093; Abramowitz v. Bank of America (1955) 131 C.A.2d Supp. 892, 896, 281 P.2d 380; Rest.2d, Torts §917, Comment d; 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §871.)

In Gill v. Epstein (1965) 62 C.2d 611, 44 C.R. 45, 401 P.2d 397, plaintiff school janitor was arrested on suspicion of theft of the school's cash box. He was given several lie-detector tests and interrogations, and was charged, arraigned, and jailed for about 8 days. At his preliminary hearing, the case was dismissed on motion of the district attorney. In this action for false arrest and false imprisonment and unreasonable delay in taking him before a magistrate, the judge found no probable cause, but instructed the jury that damages for emotional distress and physical suffering during imprisonment following the arraignment and commitment were not legally compensable because they were not proximately caused by the wrongful arrest. Held, this was error. The arrest was a cause in fact, and the imprisonment, both before and after the arraignment, was a foreseeable consequence. (62 C.2d 618.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.17 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Bailey v. Outdoor Media Group (2007) 155 C.A.4th 778, 789, 66 C.R.3d 322 [proceeds that trespassing billboard advertising company received from sale of billboards were not causally related to company's wrongful occupation of leasehold property so as to permit lessee to recover proceeds as "benefits obtained," even though billboards were located on leasehold; company obtained sale proceeds as result of misrepresentation that it had valid sublease, not by reason of wrongful occupation]; Sumpter v. Matteson (2008) 158 C.A.4th 928, 933, 70 C.R.3d 495 [substantial evidence supported jury award of $ 13,317 rather than claimed medical bills of $ 131,282 in economic damages to driver injured in collision; plaintiff had suffered previous and subsequent injuries to her back, knee, and shoulder, and medical testimony did not link her injuries to this collision].

10 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

B. Compensatory Damages.

2. Causation.

b. Burden of Proof Where Causation Is Uncertain.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1554

[§ 1554] Burden of Proof Where Causation Is Uncertain.

In Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §491, plaintiff recovered damages for malicious prosecution of a civil action. The prior action was one brought by plaintiff for breach of contract, and the theory of the present action was that defendant's cross-complaint in the prior action was maliciously filed without probable cause. (See supra, §506 et seq.) Defendant contended that the allegations in the cross-complaint of lack of consideration and undue influence were the same as the affirmative defenses in the answer; and that, because the answer was absolutely privileged (see supra, §561 et seq.), no recovery could be proper, because it was impossible to separate the damages caused by the actionable cross-complaint from those suffered by reason of the nonactionable answer. Held, the argument was untenable.

(a) Analogy of negligence cases involving several tortfeasors. It has been held that the burden of absolving himself or herself from liability or showing that damages should be apportioned may be placed on the particular tortfeasor defendant who raises the issue. (See supra, §67.) "Similarly in the instant case the defendants must shoulder the burden of apportioning proven damages if, in fact, some of such damages is the result of an aggressive defense which could be asserted with immunity and some is the result of a cross-action maliciously prosecuted." (13 C.3d 60.)

(b) Defense of action is not inhibited. "Defendants contend that to so hold inhibits the ability of a party involuntarily haled into court as a defendant to present a vigorous defense. On the contrary, our holding does not strip a defendant of his right to his day in court. It is simply a recognition that as between two conflicting interests--a defendant's election to risk injury to a plaintiff by an aggressive defense and a plaintiff's right to be free from groundless and maliciously prosecuted cross-actions--plaintiff's interest is paramount. By electing to prosecute a malicious cross-action in conjunction with an aggressive defense which may itself cause injury to a plaintiff, the defendant must bear the burden of establishing the apportionment of the overall damages proved by the plaintiff. Here, defendants did not attempt to differentiate between those damages caused plaintiff by the filing and assertion of their answer and the filing and prosecution of the cross-complaint. [Plaintiff] established that damages had flowed from the filings and proceedings thereon and thus no apportionment need be made." (13 C.3d 60, footnote 8.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

11 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

B. Compensatory Damages.

3. Compensatory Damages in Particular Circumstances.

a. Anticipated Punitive Damages in Malpractice Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1555

[§ 1555] Anticipated Punitive Damages in Malpractice Action.

In Merenda v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1, 4 C.R.2d 87, plaintiff sued defendant attorneys for legal malpractice. In a motion by defendants for summary adjudication, the following issue was presented: whether compensatory damages could be awarded in the amount of the punitive damages that plaintiff would have obtained but for the attorneys' negligence causing the discharge in bankruptcy of her claim against Brown, her former employer. The trial judge, ruling against plaintiff, granted defendants' motion. Held, mandamus issued, directing the trial judge to deny the motion.

(a) In legal malpractice actions, the measure of damages is the difference between the amount of the actual judgment obtained and the judgment that should have been recovered. (3 C.A.4th 12.) Applying this rule, plaintiff should be entitled to recover from defendants as compensatory damages the amount of punitive damages she proves she would have obtained in the underlying action. (3 C.A.4th 12.) Although this is a case of first impression in California, commentators and out-of-state cases support this view. (3 C.A.4th 13.)

(b) "The recovery as compensatory damages in the malpractice action of the amount of unrecovered punitive damages is no more speculative than would be the direct recovery of punitive damages in the underlying action against Brown. In the malpractice action plaintiff must still prove her 'case within the case,' i.e., her entitlement to punitive damages against Brown. That is, to recover punitive damages as compensatory damages from defendants herein, plaintiff must prove Brown's conduct was oppressive, fraudulent or malicious." (3 C.A.4th 12.)

*Piscitelli v. Friedenber*g (2001) 87 C.A.4th 953, 105 C.R.2d 88, disagreed with Merenda, and made the following points:

(a) In a legal malpractice action in which the attorney's alleged negligence lies in the attorney's failure to press a meritorious claim, the measure of compensatory damages is the value of the claim lost. Punitive damages, on the other hand, are not compensation for loss. In short, in the underlying action, an award of punitive damages has nothing to do with the "detriment" suffered by a legal malpractice plaintiff, as that word is used in C.C. 3282 (loss or harm of person or property). (87 C.A.4th 980.)

(b) As a matter of public policy, imposing an award intended to punish a wrongful actor upon a defendant who did not act oppressively, maliciously, or fraudulently cannot be justified simply by relabelling the award as "compensatory." This result would punish an innocent person for another's wrongdoing and thus would be inconsistent with the goal of punishment. (87 C.A.4th 981.)

(c) Plaintiff argued that recharacterizing an award intended to punish as one intended to compensate can be justified under the theory that the legal malpractice defendant "proximately caused" the loss of plaintiff's punitive damages claim in the underlying action. This contention is without merit. It confuses the concepts of proximate causation and cause in fact. Here, although defendant's conduct might have been the cause in fact of plaintiff's lost claim, rules of legal cause, i.e., proximate causation, operate to relieve the defendant whose conduct is a cause in fact of the injury where it would be unjust to hold him or her legally responsible. (87 C.A.4th 982.)

The conflict was resolved in Ferguson v. Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein (2003) 30 C.4th 1037, 1044, 135 C.R.2d 46, 69 P.3d 965, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §338, in which the court held that, for public policy reasons, legal malpractice plaintiffs may not recover lost punitive damages as compensatory damages. Accordingly, the court approved Piscitelli and disapproved Merenda.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Expansion Pointe Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Procopio, Cory, Hargreaves & Savitch, LLP (2007) 152 C.A.4th 42, 53, 61 C.R.3d 166 [for first time on appeal, client could not raise claim that rule of Ferguson v. Lieff Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein (2003) 30 C.4th 1037, 135 C.R.2d 46, 69 P.3d 965, text, p. 1031, did not apply retroactively to client, which had entered into retainer agreement before announcement in Ferguson of new rule of law]. Ferguson case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §320.

12 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
3. Compensatory Damages in Particular Circumstances.
b. Postresignation Damages in Employment Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1556

[§ 1556] Postresignation Damages in Employment Action.

In proper circumstances, an employee who resigned because of being discriminatorily denied promotion is entitled to the pay differential both from the date of discrimination to the date of resignation and from the latter date to the date of judgment. The general rationale for denying postresignation damages, i.e., encouraging an employee to stay on the job and resolve the discrimination problem, is inapplicable where resolution of the discrimination problem within the working environment is not a viable option. Thus, postresignation damages are recoverable where there can be no successful placement into the position wrongfully denied. (Cloud v. Casey (1999) 76 C.A.4th 895, 905, 90 C.R.2d 757.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.15

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

13 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

B. Compensatory Damages.

4. Tax Treatment of Tort Recovery.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1557

[§ 1557] In General.

(1) Compensatory Damages. Compensatory tort damages are ordinarily included in gross income. (See C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §7.1 et seq.; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 451.) However, gross income does not include "the amount of any damages received (whether by suit or agreement and whether as lump sums or as periodic payments) on account of personal injuries or sickness." (26 U.S.C., §104(a)(2); Rev.C. 17131 [exclusions from gross income are determined in accordance with Internal Revenue Code unless otherwise provided in Rev.C. 17131 et seq.].) (See Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 12, footnote 18, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, infra, §1632 [discussing exclusion of personal injury damages]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§129, 745; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 1237 [tax treatment of post-termination personal injury settlements]; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 448; 30 U.S.F. L. Rev. 313 [interpretation of 26 U.S.C., §104(a)(2)].)

The exclusion encompasses (a) compensatory damages for pain and suffering, loss of earning capacity, loss of consortium, and medical expenses, and (b) compensatory damages arising from injury to a taxpayer's personal rights, e.g., libel and slander and invasion of privacy. (See C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §7.13.)

(2) Jury Instruction Is Improper. The jury should not be instructed on the taxability of tort damages. (Henninger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 872, 878, 59 C.R. 76; see Rest.2d, Torts §914A [award of tort damages is neither augmented nor diminished because award is or is not taxable income]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §86; 16 A.L.R.4th 589 [propriety of taking income tax into consideration in fixing damages in personal injury or death action].)

In Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 151 C.R. 399, defendants contended that they were entitled to inform the jury that plaintiff's net future earnings after income taxes constituted his actual loss. Held, the trial judge properly ruled that the issue could not be injected into the trial.

(a) Contexts in which issue might be raised. (1) The fact that the jury award is not subject to income taxation has been viewed by most courts as irrelevant to the obligation of the defendant to pay damages; the fact of nontaxability is a matter involving only the plaintiff and the government. (2) Other courts have taken the "modern," "reasonable," and "realistic" view that, in view of income taxes, the loss of future earnings should be measured by the net earnings after taxes, not the gross. (3) Defendants in the instant case also sought to show that plaintiff, by investment in tax-free bonds, could obtain a larger ultimate award. (87 C.A.3d 666, 667.)

(b) Reasons for rejection of evidence. (1) Allowing the evidence in personal injury and wrongful death actions would open the door to intense speculation by the jury, which is highly undesirable. (2) To permit the jury to determine the plaintiff's net loss would require that they be informed of the customary obligation of the plaintiff to pay attorneys' fees from the award. (87 C.A.3d 667, 668.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

14 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
B. Compensatory Damages.
4. Tax Treatment of Tort Recovery.
b. Punitive Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1558

[§ 1558] Punitive Damages.

Punitive damages are normally included in gross income. (Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Glenshaw Glass Co. (1955) 348 U.S. 426, 75 S.Ct. 473, 99 L.Ed. 483.) Whether punitive damages awarded in an action for personal injuries are excluded from gross income under 26 U.S.C., §104(a)(2) (supra, §1557) was once uncertain. (See C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §7.26; 31 Hastings L. J. 909; 25 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 461 [tax status of punitive damages awarded in personal injury actions].) The issue has now been decided: Punitive damages awarded in this type of action are not excluded. (O'Gilvie v. United States (1996) 519 U.S. 79, 117 S.Ct. 452, 136 L.Ed.2d 454.)

In O'Gilvie v. United States, K sued the maker of a product the use of which had resulted in his wife's death from toxic shock syndrome. He and his two children recovered $ 1,535,000 in compensatory damages and $ 10 million in punitive damages. K paid income tax on the punitive damages portion of the judgment, as did his two children. In the present action, plaintiff sought a refund, and, because the government had earlier given the children a refund, it sought to recover these refunds as erroneously made. The two cases were consolidated for trial. The district court ruled in favor of plaintiffs, but the Court of Appeals reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeals affirmed; the punitive damages were taxable even though awarded in a personal injury action.

(a) 26 U.S.C., §104(a)(2) excludes from gross income any damages received on account of personal injuries or sickness. The issue here is whether the damages were received "on account of" injury or sickness. Plaintiffs contend that this phrase requires no more than a "but for" connection between the punitive damages and a suit for personal injuries. The government argues that the provision is applicable only to those personal injury damages awarded because of the personal injuries. In other words, the government would make the section inapplicable to punitive damages that are not compensation for injury, but instead are private fines levied to punish and deter reprehensible conduct. The government's interpretation is correct. (117 S.Ct. 454, 136 L.Ed.2d 459, citing International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers v. Foust (1979) 442 U.S. 42, 99 S.Ct. 2121, 60 L.Ed.2d 698, 2 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §543.)

(b) The government's position is more consistent with Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Schleier (1995) 515 U.S. 323, 115 S.Ct. 2159, 132 L.Ed.2d 294, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §873, in which this Court, although not directly dealing with the issue, held that punitive damages awarded under the Age Discrimination in Employment

Act were taxable as having been awarded to punish, rather than to compensate. (117 S.Ct. 455, 136 L.Ed.2d 460.)

(c) The government's reading of the statute is also more faithful to the statute's history. Several decisions had held that the restoration of capital (for the purpose of replacing nontaxable, lost human ability with capital) was not taxable as ordinary income. In accordance with this principle, it was decided that money, such as the proceeds of an accident policy or the amount received "on account of" a personal injury suit, was likewise nontaxable. It was from this background that the statute emerged. (117 S.Ct. 455, 136 L.Ed.2d 461.)

(d) The statute not only excludes from taxation the nontaxable damages received as a replacement for the victim's physical or personal well-being, but also excludes the damages that substitute for lost wages that the victim would have earned and that would have been taxable had the injury taken place. "The statute's failure to separate those compensatory elements of damages (or accident insurance proceeds) one from the other does not change its original focus upon damages that restore a loss, that seek to make a victim whole, with a tax-equality objective providing an important part of, even if not the entirety of, the statute's rationale. All this is to say that the Government's interpretation of the current provision (the wording of which has not changed significantly from the original) is more consistent than is petitioners' with the statute's original focus." (117 S.Ct. 456, 136 L.Ed.2d 462.)

(e) There is no reason why Congress would have wanted to exempt punitive damages from ordinary income. The fact that the statute applies to both noncompensatory damages and compensatory damages does not support plaintiffs' position, because the coverage of some compensatory features of damages has support in both the language and history of the statute. Moreover, the exclusion of those damages meant to replace taxable lost wages is already somewhat of an anomaly, and that circumstance does not justify the extension of the anomaly or the creation of another. (117 S.Ct. 456, 136 L.Ed.2d 462.)

(f) Plaintiffs emphasize that the statute refers to "any" damages and omits any requirement that the damages be received "as compensation," thereby indicating that Congress intended to exclude from taxation all punitive damages regardless of the purpose for which they were received. Finally, they refer to a Treasury Regulation stating that "damages received" means an amount obtained through a suit based on tort or tort type rights, as evidence that the words "on account of personal injuries" refers to the type of lawsuit, rather than the type of damages. However, all of these arguments only show that one can reasonably interpret the statute several ways. They do not change the interpretation in Schleier, nor do they change the statute's history. (117 S.Ct. 457, 136 L.Ed.2d 463.)

(g) Plaintiffs also argued that the reasoning that led Congress to exclude lost wages from ordinary income would also have led it to exclude punitive damages received in personal injury cases, because such an exclusion was both generous to victims and would avoid administrative problems such as separating the punitive from the compensatory portions of a global settlement. This contention is without merit. Tax generosity presumably has its limits, and the administrative problem of distinguishing the punitive from the compensatory elements is likely to be less serious than that of distinguishing among the compensatory elements of a settlement. And the problem of identifying the elements of an ostensibly punitive award does not exist where the relevant state law provides that the damages at issue are entirely punitive. (117 S.Ct. 457, 136 L.Ed.2d 463.)

(h) Finally, plaintiffs rely on an amendment stating that the personal injury exclusion from gross income does not apply to any punitive damages received in connection with a case not involving personal injury. Plaintiffs contend that this amendment would not have been enacted unless Congress believed that, in the amendment's absence, punitive damages fell within the provision's coverage. However, Congress might have been merely attempting to clarify the situation with respect to punitive damages received for nonphysical injuries, while leaving the law untouched with respect to physical injuries. Also, the amendment grew out of the Senate's refusal to accept a House bill making all damages received for nonphysical injuries taxable. Thus, this amendment reveals the Senate's willingness to tax only the punitive damages received in these actions. In any event, the view of a later Congress cannot control the interpretation of an earlier enacted statute. (117 S.Ct. 457, 136 L.Ed.2d 464.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

15 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
a. Nature and Purpose of Award.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1559

[§ 1559] Nature and Purpose of Award.

(1) Punishment and Deterrence. Although the basic principle of damages is compensation, additional damages may be given in tort actions where the defendant's conduct has been outrageous, for the purpose of punishing and deterring him or her and others from outrageous conduct in the future. (See generally Acadia, Calif., Ltd. v. Herbert (1960) 54 C.2d 328, 337, 5 C.R. 686, 353 P.2d 294, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §140; Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 351, 87 C.R. 226, infra, §1589; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459; Tate v. Saratoga Savings & Loan Assn. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 843, 854, 265 C.R. 440 [authority of arbitrator to award punitive damages]; Rest.2d, Torts §908; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.5A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §381 et seq.; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §539 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §14.1 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Procedure, Demands for Relief, §8:11 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Punitive Damages, Chap. 7.)

(2) Statutory Authorization. C.C. 3294(a) states the general rule as follows: "In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages, may recover damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant."

The following terms are defined:

(a) " 'Malice' means conduct which is intended by the defendant to cause injury to the plaintiff or despicable conduct which is carried on by the defendant with a willful and conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others." (C.C. 3294(c)(1).)

(b) " 'Oppression' means despicable conduct that subjects a person to cruel and unjust hardship in conscious disregard of that person's rights." (C.C. 3294(c)(2).)

(c) " 'Fraud' means an intentional misrepresentation, deceit, or concealment of a material fact known to the defendant with the intention on the part of the defendant of thereby depriving a person of property or legal rights or otherwise causing injury." (C.C. 3294(c)(3).)

BAJI, Nos. 14.71 and 14.72.1 incorporate the definitions and also define "despicable conduct," i.e., "conduct which is so vile, base, contemptible, miserable, wretched, or loathsome that it would be looked down upon and despised by ordinary decent people." (See CACI, Nos. 3940 et seq. and 3945 et seq.; SKF Farms v. Superior Court (1984) 153 C.A.3d 902, 907, 200 C.R. 497; Weisman v. Blue Shield of Calif. (1984) 163 C.A.3d 61, 65, 209 C.R. 169; Mock v. Michigan Millers Mut. Ins. Co. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 306, 330, 5 C.R.2d 594 [instruction on malice that omitted requirement, imposed by C.C. 3294, that defendant's conduct be "despicable," was prejudicial error]; Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1217, 1227, 44 C.R.2d 197 [allegations that 48-year-old physician had sexual relations with his minor patient, and with fellow employee, knowing of patient's dysfunctional background that made her particularly susceptible to emotional distress, were sufficient to allege despicable conduct with wilful and conscious disregard of rights of others].)

(3) Amount Claimed Cannot Be Stated. "No claim for exemplary damages shall state an amount or amounts." (C.C. 3295(e); see 19 Pacific L. J. 689.) Where the defendant does not answer and a default is taken, the complaint does not give the defendant notice of any amount of punitive damages claimed, and a claim for punitive damages is void unless notice of the claim is given to the defendant in some other manner. (See C.C.P. 425.115 [form of notice]; Wiley v. Rhodes (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1470, 1473, 1474, footnote 4, 273 C.R. 279, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §134.)

(4) Litigation Tactics. A party's litigation conduct cannot be the basis for punitive damages. Other sanctions and disciplinary procedures have been adopted to address this conduct. (De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Assn. v. De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 C.A.4th 890, 917, 114 C.R.2d 708 [involving appeal and motions and requests for stays in alleged bad faith].)

(5) Commentary. Commentary on punitive damages is extensive. (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1 et seq. [symposium]; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 191 [under federal statutes]; 78 Cal. L. Rev. 1 [An Ordinary Economic Rationale for Extraordinary Legal Sanctions]; 17 California Lawyer 64 (January 1997) [A Primer on Punitive Damages]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 119; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 938; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 517; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 418; 110 Harv. L. Rev. 1513 [jury determination of punitive damages]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 869 [deterrence theory of punitive damages]; 19 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 94 [use as bargaining tool]; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 455 [recovery in international arbitration]; 36 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 869 [Civilizing Punitive Damages: Lessons From Restitution]; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 85 [allocation of punitive damages to someone other than plaintiff]; 26 San Diego L. Rev. 357 [deductibility of punitive damages as business expense]; 29 San Diego L. Rev. 335 [recovery of punitive damages from international air carrier under Warsaw Convention]; 40 San Diego L. Rev. 1649 [judicial redistribution of punitive damages awards]; 16 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 232 [recovery under no-fault compensation legislation]; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 427; 17 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1280 [under federal securities laws]; 48 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1017 [nontortfeasor liability for exemplary damages]; 20 A.L.R.3d 666 [apportionment among joint tortfeasors].)

(6) Related Coverage. Various aspects of punitive damages are given particular treatment in other sections of this chapter and other works.

(a) Pleading. (See 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§871, 872.)

(b) Survivability of punitive damages claim. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §68.)

(c) Recovery under arbitration agreement for medical malpractice. (See supra, §952.)

(d) Recovery in contractual arbitration proceeding. (See 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §36.)

(e) Taxability and deductibility. (See supra, §1557.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.87(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Punishment and Deterrence. See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.5A.

Acadia case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §145.(2) Statutory Authorization. See Lackner v. North (2006) 135 C.A.4th 1188, 1210, 37 C.R.3d 863 [conduct of snowboarder in striking skier while she was standing in flat rest area was not "despicable" so as to support punitive damages claim; even if snowboarder was reckless in traveling at high speed in rest area, he did not hit skier intentionally, and he was not out of control until he saw skier and attempted to avoid her].

(New) Statutory allowance of punitive damages is not ex post facto law: Punitive damages in tort claims are not sufficiently penal to trigger the protection of the Ex Post Facto Clause. (See 21st Century Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1351, 1357, 26 C.R.3d 476 [under statute reviving time-barred claims following Northridge earthquake, insureds' action against insurer that sought punitive damages incident to bad faith cause of action did not violate Ex Post Facto Clause]; Roman Catholic Bishop of Oakland v. Superior Court (2005) 128 C.A.4th 1155, 1161, 28 C.R.3d 355 [in action against priest and bishop filed under statute reviving statute of limitations for certain lapsed child sex abuse actions, plaintiff's punitive damages claim did not violate Ex Post Facto Clause].)

(3) Amount Claimed Cannot Be Stated. Wiley case:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §158.

(3a) (New) Jury's Prerogative. Even after establishing a case where punitive damages are permissible, a plaintiff is never entitled to them as a matter of right. Granting or withholding an award of punitive damages is wholly within the control of the jury. (See Sumpter v. Matteson (2008) 158 C.A.4th 928, 936, 70 C.R.3d 495 [jury could find that driver acted without malice, and consequently that injured plaintiff was not entitled to punitive damages, notwithstanding abundant evidence that driver acted with conscious disregard for safety of others when he drove under influence of methamphetamines and intentionally failed to hit brakes when approaching red light; plaintiff's contention that evidence mandated that punitive damages be assessed as matter of law was without merit].)

(5) Commentary. See 41 San Diego L. Rev. 1429 [punitive damages as compensating society]; 8 A.L.R.6th 439 [construction of state statutory caps on punitive damages in cases not involving medical malpractice].

(6) Related Coverage.

(a) Pleading:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§917, 918.

(b) Survivability of punitive damages claim:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §16.

16 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
b. Restatement 2d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1560

[§ 1560] Restatement 2d.

Rest.2d, Torts §908 reads as follows:

"(1) Punitive damages are damages, other than compensatory or nominal damages, awarded against a person to punish him for his outrageous conduct and to deter him and others like him from similar conduct in the future."

"(2) Punitive damages may be awarded for conduct that is outrageous, because of the defendant's evil motive or his reckless indifference to the rights of others. In assessing punitive damages, the trier of fact can properly consider the character of the defendant's act, the nature and extent of the harm to the plaintiff that the defendant caused or intended to cause and the wealth of the defendant."

Comment a points out that although the purposes are the same, the effect of a civil judgment for punitive damages is not the same as that of a fine imposed after conviction of a crime, because the successful plaintiff and not the state is entitled to the money. And an award of punitive damages is not prevented by a prior criminal conviction for the same act; nor does the granting of punitive damages prevent a subsequent criminal conviction.

Comment c states that punitive damages may be awarded even though there is no substantial pecuniary or physical harm; i.e., a tort cause of action must be shown, but an award of nominal damages is enough to support a further award of punitive damages where the tort is committed for an outrageous purpose.

Comment e states that in determining the amount of damages, the trier of fact may consider not merely the act itself but all the circumstances, including the motive of the wrongdoer, the relations between the parties, and the provocation or want of provocation for the act; also the fact that the plaintiff has been put to trouble and expense in protecting his or her interests, and the wealth of the defendant. "Another factor that may affect the amount of punitive damages is the existence of multiple claims by numerous persons affected by the wrongdoer's conduct. It seems appropriate to take into consideration both the punitive damages that have been awarded in prior suits and those that may be granted in the future, with greater weight being given to the prior awards. In a class action involving all claims, full assessment of the punitive damages can be made." (See infra, §1563.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

17 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
c. Model Punitive Damages Act.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1561

[§ 1561] Model Punitive Damages Act.

(1) Adoption. The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws approved the Model Punitive Damages Act in 1996. The Act applies only if punitive damages are awardable in the state by common law or other authority; it does not define the types of cases in which an award may be made. Nor does the Act place limits on punitive damages that do not already exist in the enacting state. The Act is designed instead to improve the "procedure, burden of proof, judicial review, and similar matters so that arbitrary monetary limitations may not be necessary." The Act was adopted as a model act, rather than a uniform law, because it is intended as "more of an experimental effort to assist States in developing effective new approaches," than a measure that state lawmakers are expected to enact unchanged. (See Prefatory Note to Uniform Law Commissioner's Model Punitive Damages Act, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(2) Requirements. The Model Act spells out three prerequisites to liability for punitive damages (as well as the plaintiff's concomitant burden of proof):

(a) The defendant must have been "found liable for a legally recognized injury which supports an award of punitive damages" under the law of the state. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §5(a)(1), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(b) The plaintiff must have "established by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant maliciously intended to cause the injury or consciously and flagrantly disregarded the rights or interests of others in causing the injury." (Model Punitive Damages Act, §5(a)(2), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(c) An award must be "necessary to punish the defendant for the conduct or to deter the defendant from similar conduct in like circumstances." (Model Punitive Damages Act, §5(a)(3), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(3) Factors in Determining Amount. The amount awarded is limited to a "fair and reasonable amount." (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.) The court must instruct the jury to consider, in calculating the amount, any evidence that has been admitted regarding the following factors:

(a) The nature of defendant's wrongful conduct and its effect on the claimant and others. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(1), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(b) The amount of compensatory damages. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(2), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(c) Any fines, penalties, damages, or restitution paid or to be paid by defendant arising from the wrongful conduct. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(3), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(d) Defendant's present and future financial condition and the effect of an award on each condition. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(4), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(e) Any profit or gain obtained by defendant through the wrongful conduct in excess of that likely to be divested by actions against defendant for compensatory damages or restitution. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(5), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(f) Any adverse effect of the award on innocent persons. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(6), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(g) Remedial measures taken or not taken by defendant since the wrongful conduct. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(7), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(h) Compliance or noncompliance with applicable agency or other standard. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §7(a)(8), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(4) Vicarious Liability. For an employer or principal to be vicariously liable for punitive damages, the following conditions must be met:

(a) The employee or agent must be found liable for punitive damages. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §6, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(b) The trier of fact must find by clear and convincing evidence that the employee's wrongful conduct occurred within the scope of the employment or agency and that the employer or principal, "with knowledge of its wrongful nature, directed, authorized, participated in, consented to, acquiesced in, or ratified the conduct." (Model Punitive Damages Act, §6, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(c) The trier of fact must find that the award "is necessary to punish the employer or principal for the employer's or principal's conduct or to deter the employer or principal from similar conduct in like circumstances." (Model Punitive Damages Act, §6, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

(5) Review. The Act provides for review of liability for, and the amount of, punitive damages, both in the trial court and on appeal. (See Model Punitive Damages Act, §§8, 9, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.) A party may not seek appellate review of the award without having earlier filed a motion for review by the trial court. (Model Punitive Damages Act, §9(a), 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), Supplement.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

18 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
d. Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1562

[§ 1562] Instructions.

BAJI provides the following instructions governing punitive damages awards:

No. 14.71 [Punitive Damages--Recovery and Measure; Trial Not Bifurcated]; see supra, §1540.

No. 14.72.1 [Punitive Damages--Recovery Of--(Bifurcated Trial--First Phase)].

No. 14.72.2 [Punitive Damages--Measure Of--(Bifurcated Trial--Second Phase)].

No. 14.73 [Punitive Damages Against Principal for Acts of Agent--When Permitted (Non-Bifurcated Trial)]; see infra, §§1582, 1583.

No. 14.73.1 [Punitive Damages Against Principal For Acts Of Agent--When Permitted (Bifurcated Trial--First Phase)].

No. 14.74 [Managing Agent--Defined]; see infra, §1583.

No. 14.75 [Driving When Intoxicated--Actual Malice--Punitive Damages].

CACI provides the following punitive damages instructions:

No. 3940 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant Trial Not Bifurcated].

No. 3941 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant Trial Bifurcated Trial (First Phase)].

No. 3942 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant Trial Bifurcated Trial (Second Phase)].

No. 3943 [Punitive Damages Against Employer or Principal for Conduct of a Specific Agent or Employee--Trial Not Bifurcated].

No. 3944 [Punitive Damages Against Employer or Principal for Conduct of a Specific Agent or Employee--Bifurcated Trial (First Phase)].

No. 3945 [Punitive Damages--Entity Defendant--Trial Not Bifurcated].

No. 3946 [Punitive Damages--Entity Defendant--Bifurcated Trial (First Phase)].

No. 3947 [Punitive Damages--Individual and Entity Defendants--Trial Not Bifurcated].

No. 3948 [Punitive Damages--Individual and Corporate Defendants (Corporate Liability Based on Acts of Named Individual)--Bifurcated Trial (First Phase)].

No. 3949 [Punitive Damages--Individual and Corporate Defendants (Corporate Liability Based on Acts of Named Individual)--Bifurcated Trial (Second Phase)].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

CACI instructions: The titles of the following CACI instructions have been changed:

No. 3940 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant--Trial Not Bifurcated].

No. 3941 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant--Bifurcated Trial (First Phase)].

No. 3942 [Punitive Damages--Individual Defendant--Bifurcated Trial (Second Phase)].

No. 3949 [Punitive Damages--Individual and Corporate Defendants (Corporate Liability Based on Acts of Named Individual)--Bifurcated Trial]. Correction: Page 1041, fourth line of section, the cross-reference to §1540 should be to §1559.

19 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
e. Awards in Multiple Litigation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1563

[§ 1563] Awards in Multiple Litigation.

Despite the criticisms of commentators (see 30 Hastings L. J. 1797), the objection of "double jeopardy" has been uniformly rejected; i.e., granting punitive damages to one plaintiff will not bar the later granting of punitive damages to another plaintiff for the same act of the defendant. (Lemer v. Boise Cascade (1980) 107 C.A.3d 1, 7, 165 C.R. 555; see 16 U.S.F. L. Rev. 1 [arguing that where classwide claims for punitive damages have been settled or adjudicated, opt-out plaintiffs cannot assert such claims]; 11 A.L.R.4th 1261 [propriety of awarding punitive damages to separate plaintiffs bringing successive actions arising out of common incident or circumstances against common defendant or defendants].)

However, the fact of multiple litigation may be considered in determining the amount of the award. (See Delos v. Farmers Group (1979) 93 C.A.3d 642, 667, 155 C.R. 843 [trial judge's reduction of award was proper where, because other similar actions were pending, there was likelihood of several awards against same defendant]; Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1645, 1660, 57 C.R.2d 525 [although jury can rely on punitive damages imposed in previous case in fixing punitive damages in current case, evidence of previous award must have been presented to jury; it is not sufficient for trial judge to take judicial notice of previous award]; Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment e, supra, §1560.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

20 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
f. No Insurance Against Award.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1564

[§ 1564] No Insurance Against Award.

Other jurisdictions have reached conflicting conclusions on whether an insurance policy may validly cover liability for punitive damages. The analysis has centered either on construction of the particular provision involved or public policy considerations. (See 44 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Insurance §1529; 28 Hastings L. J. 431; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 743; 416 A.L.R.4th 11 [liability insurance as extending to liability for punitive damages].) In California, however, the question is settled by statute. "An insurer is not liable for a loss caused by the wilful act of the insured." (Ins.C. 533.) (See 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §100 et seq.)

In City Products Corp. v. Globe Indem. Co. (1979) 88 C.A.3d 31, 151 C.R. 494, the court relied on this statute, as well as public policy, in holding that an insurer was not liable for its insured's punitive damages. City Products, doing business as Barker Bros. in Los Angeles, sued H on a claim and lost. H then sued City Products for malicious prosecution of a civil action, and received a judgment for $ 2,725 as compensatory damages and $ 10,000 as punitive damages. City Products paid the amount of the compensatory damage award, but challenged the punitive damage award on appeal, contending that no malice had been proved. The appellate court affirmed the judgment, pointing out that the determination to sue H had been made by the regional collection manager of City Products, an executive officer with authority to bind the corporation by a wrongful act without probable cause and with inferred malice. City Products then demanded payment from Globe Indemnity, under its policy covering damages sustained by malicious prosecution. Globe paid the compensatory damage award but refused to pay the award of punitive damages. In this action by City Products against Globe, the trial court gave judgment on demurrer for defendant insurer. Held, affirmed.

(a) The prior decision on appeal determined that the wrongdoing employee had power to bind the corporation and that his malice was properly imputed to it. (88 C.A.3d 36; see infra, §1583.)

(b) A promise to insure against a wilful and malicious act is prohibited by Ins.C. 533, and is also contrary to public policy. The objective of the award of punitive damages is to impose them "in an amount which will appropriately punish the defendant in view of 'the actual damages sustained,' 'the magnitude and flagrancy of the offense, the importance of the policy violated, and the wealth of the defendant.' Consideration of the wealth of the defendant would of course be pointless if such damages could be covered by insurance. The onus of the award would depend entirely upon the amount of insurance coverage and not upon the legally relevant factors." (88 C.A.3d 36.) (See Ford Motor Co.

v. Home Ins. Co. (1981) 116 C.A.3d 374, 172 C.R. 59 [no indemnity for punitive damages awarded in products liability case]; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1593; on liability of insurer breaching duty to settle for punitive damages assessed against insured, see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §113.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

21 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
1. In General.
g. Is Award Disfavored?

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1565

[§ 1565] Is Award Disfavored?

Early cases sometimes referred to punitive damages as "disfavored," and the same disparaging comment may be found in a few later cases. (See Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 C.A.2d 517, 526, 322 P.2d 933, infra, §1574; Henderson v. Security Nat. Bank (1977) 72 C.A.3d 764, 771, 140 C.R. 388 ["Such damages are never awarded as a matter of right ... ; they are not favored by the law and they should be granted with the greatest of caution ... ; they will be allowed only in the clearest of cases"]; Rosener v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1980) 110 C.A.3d 740, 750, 168 C.R. 237, infra, §1621 ["Such damages constitute a windfall, which, though supported by law in proper cases ... , creates the anomaly of excessive compensation which makes the remedy an unappealing one"].)

Other cases take a different view of the award. (See Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 809, 820, 169 C.R. 691, 620 P.2d 141 ["we cannot usurp the Legislature's determination that such damages should be recoverable in cases in which the statutory prerequisites are fulfilled"]; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 807, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1593 ["The concept of punitive damages is rooted in the English common law and is a settled principle of the common law of this country"].)

The court in Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. added the following: "In the traditional noncommercial intentional tort, compensatory damages alone may serve as an effective deterrent against future wrongful conduct but in commerce related torts, the manufacturer may find it more profitable to treat compensatory damages as a part of the cost of doing business rather than to remedy the defect. ... Governmental safety standards and the criminal law have failed to provide adequate consumer protection against the manufacture and distribution of defective products. ... Punitive damages thus remain as the most effective remedy for consumer protection against defectively designed mass produced articles. They provide a motive for private individuals to enforce rules of law and enable them to recoup the expenses of doing so which can be considerable and not otherwise recoverable." (119 C.A.3d 810.)

Nevertheless, courts and writers have produced a considerable volume of adverse comment on the expanded scope and increasing amounts of punitive damage awards. (See Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3012, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, 811, supra, §613; Woolstrum v. Mailloux (1983) 141 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 10, 13, 190 C.R. 729 [listing principal objections to punitive damages, and urging that trial and appellate courts carefully review jury awards]; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 682, 192 C.R. 793 [concurring and dissenting opinion]; Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment f; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1900 [An Economic Analysis of the Plaintiff's Windfall From Punitive Damage Litigation]; 106 Harv. L. Rev. 1691 [validity of statute allowing state to claim portion of any punitive damages awarded]; 30 Hastings L. J. 1797 [Mass Liability and Punitive Damages Overkill]; 31 Hastings L. J. 639 [Punitive Damages: Toward a Principled Approach]; 66 So. Cal. L. Rev. 841 [argument that punitive damages should be paid to state, instead of plaintiff]; 20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 103 [The Need for Federal Legislative Reform of Punitive Damages]; 40 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 752 [Toward Uniform Application of Punishment: Using the Federal Sentencing Guidelines as a Model for Punitive Damage Reform]; 16 A.L.R.5th 129 [validity of statute allowing state to claim portion of any punitive damages awarded].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

22 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
2. Constitutionality of Awards.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1566

[§ 1566] In General.

Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont v. Kelco Disposal (1989) 492 U.S. 257, 109 S.Ct. 2909, 106 L.Ed.2d 219, addressed an Eighth Amendment challenge to an award of punitive damages.

(a) "We face here the questions whether the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment applies to a civil-jury award of punitive or exemplary damages, and, if so, whether an award of $ 6 million was excessive in this particular case. This Court has never held, or even intimated, that the Eighth Amendment serves as a check on the power of a jury to award damages in a civil case. Rather, our concerns in applying the Eighth Amendment have been with criminal process, and with direct actions initiated by government to inflict punishment. Awards of punitive damages do not implicate these concerns. We therefore hold, on the basis of the history and purpose of the Eighth Amendment, that its Excessive Fines Clause does not apply to awards of punitive damages in cases between private parties." (109 S.Ct. 2912, 106 L.Ed.2d 228.)

(b) "Petitioners also ask us to review the punitive damages award to determine whether it is excessive under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The parties agree that due process imposes some limits on jury awards of punitive damages, and it is not disputed that a jury award may not be upheld if it was the product of bias or passion, or if it was reached in proceedings lacking the basic elements of fundamental fairness. But petitioners make no claim that the proceedings themselves were unfair or that the jury was biased or blinded by emotion or prejudice. Instead, they seek further due process protections, addressed directly to the size of the damages award. There is some authority in our opinions for the view that the Due Process Clause places outer limits on the size of a civil damages award made pursuant to a statutory scheme ... but we have never addressed the precise question presented here: whether due process acts as a check on undue jury discretion to award punitive damages in the absence of any express statutory limit. ... That inquiry must await another day." (109 S.Ct. 2921, 106 L.Ed.2d 239.)

Two justices concurred in the opinion "on the understanding that it leaves the door open for a holding that the Due Process Clause constrains the imposition of punitive damages in civil cases brought by private parties." (109 S.Ct. 2923, 106 L.Ed.2d 241.) Two other justices dissented in part, arguing that the "skyrocketing" awards have a detrimental effect on the research and development of new products. (109 S.Ct. 2924, 106 L.Ed.2d 242.)

Neither the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment nor the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment precludes, as a second punishment for a single course of conduct, an award of punitive damages in a civil action, even though the defendant was convicted and sentenced to prison as a result of the same conduct on which the civil action was based. (Shore v. Gurnett (2004) 122 C.A.4th 166, 171, 172, 18 C.R.3d 583 [plaintiff in wrongful death action was entitled to recover punitive damages even though defendant was jailed for same conduct that caused decedent's death].) (See Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip (1991) 499 U.S. 1, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 113 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §1567; TXO Production Corp. v. Alliance Resources Corp. (1993) 509 U.S. 443, 113 S.Ct. 2711, 125 L.Ed.2d 366, infra, §1567; BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, infra, §1568; Cooper Industries v. Leatherman Tool Group (2001) 532 U.S. 424, 121 S.Ct. 1678, 1685, 149 L.Ed.2d 674 [Courts of Appeals should apply de novo standard of review, not abuse of discretion standard, when passing on district courts' determinations of constitutionality of punitive damages awards]; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459 [statutory words "oppression" and "fraud" are not fatally uncertain]; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 270, 95 C.R. 678, infra, §1620 [award is not a "fine"]; Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp. (1990) 224 C.A.3d 793, 802, 804, 274 C.R. 139 [discussing and rejecting due process challenge]; 75 Cal. L. Rev. 1433 [Punitive Damages and the Eighth Amendment]; 115 Harv. L. Rev. 356 [Cooper Industries]; 17 Hastings Const. L. Q. 439 ["Experimenting" with State Constitutional Limits on Punitive Damages in California: Application of the California Excessive Fines Clause]; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 477 [validity of one state's award of punitive damages for nationwide conduct]; 36 U.S.F. L. Rev. 411 [Cooper Industries].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 94 Cal. L. Rev. 793 [constitutionality of punitive damages awards]; 38 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1297 [constitutional limitations on punitive damages]; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 1409 [same]; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 1443 [comparison to criminal sanctions in constitutional review of punitive damages]; 79 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1085 [Due Process and Punitive Damages: The Error of Federal Excessiveness Jurisprudence]; 81 So. Cal. L. Rev. 263 [punitive damages, retribution, and due process]; 1 A.L.R. Fed 2d 529 [constitutional issues concerning punitive damages--Supreme Court cases].

23 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
2. Constitutionality of Awards.
b. No Due Process Violation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1567

[§ 1567] No Due Process Violation.

The issue left open in Browning-Ferris Industries of Vermont v. Kelco Disposal (1989) 492 U.S. 257, 109 S.Ct. 2909, 106 L.Ed.2d 219, supra, §1566, was reached in Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip (1991) 499 U.S. 1, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 113 L.Ed.2d 1. Plaintiff H purchased a health insurance policy with defendant Pacific Mutual through its agent R. R misappropriated premium payments, and the insurer sent notice of cancellation to plaintiff in care of R, but plaintiff never received it and did not know that the policy had been cancelled. Plaintiff later incurred heavy hospital and physician's charges; and on nonpayment, her physician placed her account with a collection agency, which obtained a judgment that adversely affected her credit. She filed this action against R and the insurer for damages for fraud of its agent on the theory of respondeat superior. The trial judge instructed the jury on its discretion to award punitive damages if it determined that there was liability for fraud. The jury brought in a general verdict of $ 1,040,000, of which amount the punitive damages component was not less than $ 840,000. Pacific Mutual petitioned for certiorari, challenging the award as violative of due process. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Traditional Common Law Rule. Under the common law rule, the amount of the punitive award is initially determined by a jury under proper instructions; and "every state and federal court that has considered the question has ruled that the common-law method for assessing punitive damages does not in itself violate due process." (111 S.Ct. 1043, 113 L.Ed.2d 19.) But neither the antiquity of a practice nor the fact of steadfast legislative and judicial adherence to it through centuries insulates it from constitutional attack. (111 S.Ct. 1043, 113 L.Ed.2d 20.) Unlimited jury or judicial discretion in fixing of punitive damages "may invite extreme results that jar one's constitutional sensibilities." (111 S.Ct. 1043, 113 L.Ed.2d 20.) "We need not, and indeed we cannot, draw a mathematical bright line between the constitutionally acceptable and the constitutionally unacceptable that would fit every case. We can say, however, that general concerns of reasonableness and adequate guidance from the court when the case is tried to a jury properly enter into the constitutional calculus." (111 S.Ct. 1043, 113 L.Ed.2d 20.)

(b) Award Does Not Violate Due Process. The jury was properly instructed, and the post-trial review procedures were adequate to ensure that awards "are not grossly out of proportion to the severity of the offense and have some understandable relationship to compensatory damages." (111 S.Ct. 1045, 113 L.Ed.2d 22.) "We are aware that the punitive damages award in this case is more than 4 times the amount of compensatory damages, is more than 200 times the out-of-pocket expenses of respondent ... , and, of course, is much in excess of the fine that could be imposed for insurance fraud. ... Imprisonment, however, could also be required of an individual in the criminal context. While the monetary comparisons are wide and, indeed, may be close to the line, the award here did not lack objective criteria. We conclude, after careful consideration, that in this case it does not cross the line into the area of constitutional impropriety." (111 S.Ct. 1046, 113 L.Ed.2d 23.)

In TXO Production Corp. v. Alliance Resources Corp. (1993) 509 U.S. 443, 113 S.Ct. 2711, 125 L.Ed.2d 366, the Supreme Court granted certiorari to review a decision of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, affirming a judgment for $ 19,000 in compensatory damages and $ 10 million in punitive damages. The Supreme Court held that the award was not so "grossly excessive" as to violate due process, and that the procedure followed by the trial court did not violate due process. TXO commenced the litigation by filing a complaint for a declaratory judgment on its interest in oil and gas development rights. Alliance filed a counterclaim for slander of title. In addition to evidence that TXO knew that Alliance had good title and that TXO advanced a claim on a worthless quitclaim deed in an effort to renegotiate its royalty arrangement, Alliance introduced evidence showing that TXO, a large company, had engaged in similar nefarious activities in its business dealings in other parts of the country. Held, judgment for Alliance affirmed.

(a) Argument that punitive damages award 526 times greater than actual damages award is so excessive as to be deemed an arbitrary deprivation of property without due process of law.

(1) Alliance contends that the standard of review should be the same standard of rational basis scrutiny that is appropriate for reviewing state economic legislation. TXO argues that the awards should be scrutinized more strictly than legislative penalties because they are typically assessed without any legislative guidance. (113 S.Ct. 2719, 125 L.Ed.2d 377.) Neither formulation is satisfactory. "Under respondents' rational basis standard, apparently any award that would serve the legitimate state interest in deterring or punishing wrongful conduct, would be acceptable. On the other hand, we reject the premise underlying TXO's invocation of heightened scrutiny. The review of a jury's award for arbitrariness and the review of legislation surely are significantly different." (113 S.Ct. 2719, 125 L.Ed.2d 378.)

(2) The comparative approach urged by petitioner is also an unsatisfactory test. It is a relatively straightforward task to draw intrajurisdictional and interjurisdictional comparisons on such matters as the definition of first-degree murder or the penalty imposed on nonviolent repeat offenders; but jury awards of punitive damages are the product of numerous and sometimes intangible factors, and no two cases are truly identical. "Thus, while we do not rule out the possibility that the fact that an award is significantly larger than those in apparently similar circumstances might, in a given case, be one of many relevant considerations, we are not prepared to enshrine petitioner's comparative approach in a 'test' for assessing the constitutionality of punitive damages awards." (113 S.Ct. 2720, 125 L.Ed.2d 379.)

(3) TXO places its primary emphasis on the fact that the award is 526 times as large as the actual damages award; and state courts have long held that punitive damages should bear some proportion to the real damage sustained. (113 S.Ct. 2721, 125 L.Ed.2d 380.) But both state Supreme Courts and this Court "have eschewed an approach that concentrates entirely on the relationship between actual and punitive damages." (113 S.Ct. 2721, 125 L.Ed.2d 381.) "It is appropriate to consider the magnitude of the potential harm that the defendant's conduct would have caused to its intended victim if the wrongful plan had succeeded, as well as the possible harm to other victims if similar future behavior were not deterred." (113 S.Ct. 2722, 125 L.Ed.2d 381.)

(4) "In sum, we do not consider the dramatic disparity between the actual damages and the punitive award controlling in a case of this character. On this record, the jury may reasonably have determined that petitioner set out on a malicious and fraudulent course to win back, either in whole or in part, the lucrative stream of royalties that it had ceded to Alliance. The punitive damages award in this case is certainly large, but in light of the amount of money potentially at stake, the bad faith of petitioner, the fact that the scheme employed in this case was part of a larger pattern of fraud, trickery and deceit, and petitioner's wealth, we are not persuaded that the award was so 'grossly excessive' as to be beyond the power of the State to allow." (113 S.Ct. 2722, 125 L.Ed.2d 382.)

(b) Argument that the punitive damages award was a result of a fundamentally unfair procedure.

(1) The trial judge, in his review of the award, did not articulate his reasons for upholding it; but he did give counsel an adequate hearing on TXO's postverdict motions. "While it is always helpful for trial judges to explain the basis for their rulings as thoroughly as is consistent with the efficient dispatch of their duties, we certainly are not prepared to characterize the trial judge's failure to articulate the basis for his denial of the motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for remittitur as a constitutional violation." (113 S.Ct. 2724, 125 L.Ed.2d 383.)

(2) The argument that the procedure was "unconstitutionally vague" because petitioner had no notice of the possibility that the award of punitive damages might be divorced from an award of compensatory damages is likewise without merit. "[T]he notice component of the Due Process Clause is satisfied if prior law fairly indicated that a punitive damages award might be imposed in response to egregiously tortious conduct." (113 S.Ct. 2724, 125 L.Ed.2d 384.)

Three additional opinions were filed, all stressing the fact that the lead opinion was a plurality opinion in which only three justices joined: (a) Opinion of one justice, concurring in part of the plurality opinion and concurring in the judgment. (113 S.Ct. 2724, 125 L.Ed.2d 384.) (b) Opinion of two justices, concurring in the judgment. (113 S.Ct. 2726, 125 L.Ed.2d 387.) (c) An elaborate opinion of two justices with a third justice joining in parts, dissenting. (113 S.Ct. 2728, 125 L.Ed.2d 389.) (See Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1645, 1655, 57 C.R.2d 525 [due process does not require that trial judge state reasons for upholding punitive damages award; citing TKO Production Corp.]; Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1115, 1151, 122 C.R.2d 139 [upholding award of $ 290 million against large vehicle manufacturer]; Shore v. Gurnett (2004) 122 C.A.4th 166, 175, 18 C.R.3d 583 [Due Process Clause did not preclude award of punitive damages in wrongful death action, even though defendant was convicted for same conduct that killed plaintiff's husband; statute expressly allowed recovery of civil punitive damages by survivors of homicide victims, and contrary rule would preclude subsequent prosecution of wrongdoer who had been subjected to civil punitive damages]; 30 Cal. Western L. Rev. 313 [TXO Production Corp.]; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 185 [same]; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 909 [same]; 68 So. Cal. L. Rev. 203 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Boeken v. Philip Morris (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1640, 1701, 26 C.R.3d 638 [punitive damages award against tobacco company of $ 50 million, using multiplier of 9 times compensatory damages, did not violate due process in view of defendant's wealth and extreme reprehensibility of its conduct, i.e., defendant increased addictiveness by manipulating additives, gained smokers by fraud, and, knowing death could result, marketed cigarette that was more dangerous than ordinary consumers would expect]; Century Surety Co. v. Polisso (2006) 139 C.A.4th 922, 966, 43 C.R.3d 468 [ratio of 31/2 to 1 did not violate due process; punitive damages were not improperly duplicative of compensatory damages]; Walker v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (2007) 153 C.A.4th 965, 972, 63 C.R.3d 507 [ratio of 1 to 1 was proper for condominium insurer's bad faith in denial of defense in underlying personal injury action, where insureds recovered all economic damages and attorneys' fees, punitive element was present in compensatory damages award, trial judge's reduction in original punitive damages award did not eliminate its punitive function, insurer's conduct caused no physical harm, and insurer's conduct was result of isolated mistake]; Wysinger v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 413, 428, 69 C.R.3d 1 [punitive damages award of $ 1 million in employee's discrimination action under Fair Employment and Housing Act was not excessive; punitive damages award was less than four times compensatory damages, and single-digit multipliers are more likely to comport with due process].

24 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
2. Constitutionality of Awards.
c. Due Process Violation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1568

[§ 1568] Due Process Violation.

In Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg (1994) 512 U.S. 415, 114 S.Ct. 2331, 129 L.Ed.2d 336, Oregon's lack of true post-trial review rendered an award invalid on constitutional grounds. In a personal injury action against the manufacturer of a three-wheeled all-terrain vehicle, plaintiff recovered $ 735,512.31 in compensatory damages and $ 5 million in punitive damages. Although the Oregon Constitution prohibits judicial review of the amount of punitive damages unless the court can affirmatively say there is no evidence to support the verdict, the Oregon appellate courts upheld the award against defendant's due process challenge, finding no violation of the requirement of Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip (1991) 499 U.S. 1, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 113 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §1567, that there be meaningful judicial scrutiny of punitive damages awards. Held, reversed.

(a) Oregon's procedure is unique. "An Oregon trial judge, or an Oregon Appellate Court, may order a new trial if the jury was not properly instructed, if error occurred during the trial, or if there is no evidence to support any punitive damages at all. But if the defendant's only basis for relief is the amount of punitive damages the jury awarded, Oregon provides no procedure for reducing or setting aside that award." (114 S.Ct. 2338, 129 L.Ed.2d 346.)

(b) Oregon case law interpreting the state Constitution has held that Oregon courts lack the power to examine an award to determine whether the jury was influenced by passion and prejudice, and for more than 50 years no Oregon court has inferred passion and prejudice from the size of an award. The review actually provided only ensures that there is evidence to support some punitive damages; it does not ensure that the evidence supports the amount actually awarded. (114 S.Ct. 2339, 129 L.Ed.2d 347, 348.)

(c) Oregon's abrogation of the traditional common law protections raises a presumption of unconstitutionality under the Due Process Clause, and the state has not provided any adequate substitute procedure or shown that the danger of arbitrary awards has subsided over time. None of the protections the state continues to provide (limitation of the amount of punitive damages to that specified in the complaint, the clear and convincing standard of proof, preverdict determination of maximum allowable punitive damages, and detailed jury instructions) justifies a lack of judicial review. (114 S.Ct. 2341, 2342, 129 L.Ed.2d 348, 350.)

Two dissenting justices argued that the state's procedures were sufficient to guide the jury in determining the plaintiff's qualifications for, and the amount of, punitive damages, and that the amount actually awarded did not appear so grossly excessive as to violate due process protections. (114 S.Ct. 2350, 129 L.Ed.2d 361.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 211 [Honda].)

In State Farm Mut.Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585, plaintiffs, passing many cars on a two-lane highway, caused O to collide with S. In the ensuing action, defendant, plaintiffs' insurer, refused a settlement offer for the policy limits, even though investigators and witnesses concluded that plaintiff driver was the cause of the accident. The jury returned a verdict far in excess of the policy limits, and plaintiffs, who had obtained independent counsel, appealed. During the pendency of the appeal, O and S agreed not to seek satisfaction of their claims against plaintiffs in return for 90% of any recovery by plaintiffs against defendant. After plaintiffs lost on appeal, defendant paid the entire judgment, including the amount in excess of the policy limits. Nevertheless, plaintiffs, under their agreement with O and S, instituted the present bad faith action against defendant. On remand, after summary judgment for defendant was reversed, the case was bifurcated. In the first phase, the jury determined that defendant's decision not to settle was unreasonable. In the second phase, defendant moved unsuccessfully to exclude evidence of dissimilar out-of-state conduct. Based primarily on this type of evidence, the jury awarded plaintiffs $ 2.6 million compensatory damages and $ 145 million punitive damages. After the trial court reduced the damages to $ 1 million and $ 25 million respectively, both parties appealed, and the Supreme Court of Utah, relying on BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 1604, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 832, reinstated the $ 145 million punitive damages award. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) Constitutional limitations. While states possess discretion over the imposition of punitive damages, the Due Process Clause prohibits the imposition of grossly excessive or arbitrary punishments on a tortfeasor. To the extent that an award is grossly excessive, it constitutes a deprivation of property and furthers no legitimate state purpose. Concern over the imprecision involved in punitive damage awards is heightened by the fact that civil defendants are not accorded the protections applicable in criminal proceedings. (123 S.Ct. 1519, 1520, 155 L.Ed.2d 600, 601, citing Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip (1991) 499 U.S. 1, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 113 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §1567, and Cooper Industries v. Leatherman Tool Group (2001) 532 U.S. 424, 121 S.Ct. 1678, 149 L.Ed.2d 674, supra, §1566.) To satisfy the Constitution, Gore requires courts reviewing punitive damages to consider the following three factors: (1) the degree of reprehensibility of the defendant's misconduct; (2) the disparity between the actual or potential harm suffered by the plaintiff and the punitive damages awarded; and (3) the difference between the punitive damages awarded and the civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases. (123 S.Ct. 1520, 155 L.Ed.2d 601.)

(b) Reprehensibility of defendant's misconduct.

(1) Defendant's handling of the claims against plaintiffs merits no praise, because defendant (a) altered its records to make plaintiff driver appear less culpable; (b) disregarded the overwhelming likelihood of liability and the near-certain probability that, by taking the case to trial, a judgment in excess of the policy limits would be awarded; and (c) amplified the harm by first assuring plaintiffs that their assets would be safe from any verdict and by later telling them, postjudgment, to put a "for sale" sign on their house. "While we do not suggest there was error in awarding punitive damages based upon State Farm's conduct toward the Campbells, a more modest punishment for this reprehensible conduct could have satisfied the State's legitimate objectives, and the Utah courts should have gone no further." (123 S.Ct. 1521, 155 L.Ed.2d 602.)

(2) Instead, this case was used as a platform to expose and punish the perceived deficiencies of defendant's operation throughout the nation, allegedly a scheme to meet corporate fiscal goals by capping payouts on claims. Plaintiffs contended that defendant had only itself to blame for the reliance on dissimilar and out-of-state conduct evidence, but the record shows that plaintiffs, from the onset, framed this case as a chance to rebuke defendant for its nationwide activities. (123 S.Ct. 1521, 1522, 155 L.Ed.2d 602, 603.)

(3) "A State cannot punish a defendant for conduct that may have been lawful where it occurred. ... Nor, as a general rule, does a State have a legitimate concern in imposing punitive damages to punish a defendant for unlawful acts committed outside of the State's jurisdiction." (123 S.Ct. 1522, 155 L.Ed.2d 603.) Plaintiffs, conceding that much of the out-of-state conduct was lawful where it occurred, contended that this evidence was nevertheless relevant because it demonstrated defendant's motive against its insured. This argument is without merit. "Lawful out-of-state conduct may be probative when it demonstrates the deliberateness and culpability of the defendant's action in the State where it is tortious, but that conduct must have a nexus to the specific harm suffered by the plaintiff. A jury must be instructed, furthermore, that it may not use evidence of out-of-state conduct to punish a defendant for action that was lawful in the jurisdiction where it occurred." (123 S.Ct. 1522, 1523, 155 L.Ed.2d 603, 604.)

(4) The more fundamental error committed by the Utah courts was that they awarded punitive damages to punish conduct that bore no relation to plaintiff's harm. "Due process does not permit courts, in the calculation of punitive damages, to adjudicate the merits of other parties' hypothetical claims against a defendant under the guise of the reprehensibility analysis, but we have no doubt the Utah Supreme Court did that here." Awarding punitive damages on this basis creates the possibility of multiple awards, because nonparties are not generally bound by the judgment that some other plaintiff obtains. (123 S.Ct. 1523, 155 L.Ed.2d 604.)

(5) Because plaintiffs have identified scant evidence of repeated misconduct of the sort that injured them (and there was no indication that defendant was punished only for its actions against plaintiffs), the Utah decision cannot be justified on the ground that defendant was a recidivist. Although "other acts" evidence need not be identical to have relevance in calculating punitive damages, the Utah court erred because evidence pertaining to claims that had nothing to do with a third-party lawsuit was introduced at length. Because plaintiffs "have shown no conduct by State Farm similar to that which harmed them, the conduct that harmed them is the only conduct relevant to the reprehensibility analysis." (123 S.Ct. 1523, 1524, 155 L.Ed.2d 605.)

(c) Ratio between harm to plaintiff and punitive damages award.

(1) "[W]e have been reluctant to identify concrete constitutional limits on the ratio between harm, or potential harm, to the plaintiff and the punitive damages award. ... We decline again to impose a bright-line ratio which a punitive damages award cannot exceed." (123 S.Ct. 1524, 155 L.Ed.2d 605.) However, in practice, few awards exceeding a single-digit ratio between punitive and compensatory damages will satisfy due process. Nevertheless, a higher ratio might comport with due process where a particularly egregious harm has resulted in only a small amount of economic damages. And when the compensatory damages are substantial, a lesser ratio, perhaps equal to the amount of the compensatory damages, might be all that due process will allow. (123 S.Ct. 1524, 155 L.Ed.2d 605, 606.)

(2) Here, there is a presumption against an award that has a 145-to-1 ratio. The compensatory award was substantial. (The plaintiffs were awarded $ 1 million for a year and a half of emotional distress, and this was complete compensation.) The harm arose from a transaction in the economic realm, not from some physical assault or trauma. (Plaintiffs suffered no physical injuries.) Defendant paid the excess verdict before the bad faith complaint was filed, so plaintiffs suffered only minor economic injuries for the 18-month period in which defendant refused to resolve the claim against them. Moreover, the compensatory damages for the injury suffered here likely were based on a component that was duplicated in the punitive damages award. (In many cases, compensatory damages include an amount for emotional distress.) (123 S.Ct. 1524, 1525, 155 L.Ed.2d 606.)

(3) The Utah Supreme Court sought to justify the massive punitive damages award by pointing out that, as a matter of statistical probability, defendant will be punished in only one out of 50,000 cases, and that defendant has great wealth. However, both facts have little to do with actual harm suffered by plaintiffs. Furthermore, the wealth of a defendant cannot justify an otherwise unconstitutional punitive damages award. (123 S.Ct. 1525, 155 L.Ed.2d 607.)

(d) Disparity between punitive damages and civil penalties. Great care must be taken to avoid use of the civil process to assess criminal penalties that can be imposed only after the heightened protections of criminal trial. The most relevant civil sanction under Utah state law for the wrong done to plaintiffs appears to be a $ 10,000 fine for an act of fraud, an amount dwarfed by the $ 145 million punitive damages award. The Supreme Court of Utah relied on a broad fraudulent scheme drawn from evidence of out-of-state and dissimilar conduct, but, as the foregoing demonstrates, this analysis is insufficient to justify the award. (123 S.Ct. 1526, 155 L.Ed.2d 608.)

Three justices dissented, two on the ground that the Constitution provides no protections against excessive punitive damages awards, and the third arguing that the issue of excessiveness of these awards should be left to the states. (123 S.Ct. 1526, 1527, 155 L.Ed.2d 608, 609.)

In Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2003) 113 C.A.4th 738, 6 C.R.3d 793, three members of a family were killed and three were injured when the vehicle in which they were riding rolled over as the driver was trying to avoid a vehicle that had swerved in front of him. In a products liability action against defendant car manufacturer brought by the survivors individually and on behalf of the decedents, the jury awarded compensatory damages of nearly $5 million and punitive damages of $290 million. The award was affirmed on appeal, and after the California Supreme Court denied a petition for review, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment, and remanded for further consideration in view of State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell. Held, punitive damages reduced to $23,723,387. (If plaintiffs decline the remittitur, the judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial on the amount of punitive damages.) The court made the following comments concerning the application of Campbell generally and as applied to this case.

(a) The idea of awarding punitive damages based purely on a conception of torts as private, as opposed to public, wrongs lost favor in the era of products liability litigation. (113 C.A.4th 745, citing Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1593.) In cases of mass-produced consumer goods or company-wide practices of large insurers, outrageous or malicious wrongdoing was no longer simply an affront to the dignity of a single victim. Instead, the affront was to all affected by the goods or services or, given the reach of the misconduct, the affront was viewed as one to society as a whole. In this view, because the "wrong" was directed beyond the immediate plaintiff, punitive damages awards needed to be based on the overall scope of the wrong in order to punish and deter the mass torts. This broad view of punitive damages fully supports the $290 million punitive damages award in the present case. (113 C.A.4th 745.)

(b) Campbell impliedly disapproved this broad view. Under its reasoning, the legitimate state goal that punitive damages may seek to achieve is the condemnation of such conduct as has resulted in outrage and humiliation to the plaintiff before the court; it is not a permissible goal to punish a defendant for everything else that it may have done wrong. (113 C.A.4th 749.) In other words, deterrence, under Campbell, arises as a natural result of imposing damages over and above traditional compensatory damages, not from the imposition of sanctions that are actually disabling to the defendant. (113 C.A.4th 750.)

(c) In the present case, the jury was instructed on the amount of punitive damages that would have a deterrent effect on defendant in view of its financial condition. Under the principles enunciated in Campbell, this was error. It was also error to instruct that the jury must find malice, without also restricting the amount of the award. (113 C.A.4th 753.)

(d) Applying the three factors first enunciated in Gore, supra, i.e., (1) reprehensibility, (2) the relationship between compensatory and punitive damages, and (3) comparable civil and criminal punishments, the first factor clearly justifies a substantial punitive damages award, while the third factor requires neither a higher or lower ratio between compensatory and punitive damages. With respect to the second factor, this was, in part, a wrongful death action, but there was no award reflecting the "outrage" done to the deceased family members. Thus, in death cases, the proportionality inquiry must focus on the relationship of punitive damages to the harm to the deceased victim, not merely to the compensatory damages awarded. "We do not perceive that due process considerations of proportionality between compensatory and punitive damages require a state to establish a system that inadequately punishes and deters malicious conduct that, with reasonable foreseeability, may cause death; we hold that death actions present an example of the type of extraordinary case contemplated by State Farm ... in which a single-digit multiplier does not necessarily form an appropriate limitation upon a punitive damages award." (113 C.A.4th 761.)

(e) Here, a punitive damages award of triple the compensatory damages is proper. In addition, an award of $ 10 million is awarded to the administrator of the estates to ensure that killing is not made more profitable than injuring. The total award of $ 23,723,287 is not more than a properly instructed jury would have awarded and is not unconstitutionally unreasonable. Although a single-digit multiplier is not required in this case, the punitive damages award is, nevertheless, approximately five times the compensatory damages. (113 C.A.4th 673.) (See BMW of North America v. Gore, supra [$ 2 million punitive damages award against automobile manufacturer for failing to tell new car purchaser that parts of his vehicle had been repainted after predelivery damage violated due process]; Diamond Woodworks v. Argonaut Ins. Co. (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1020, 1051, 135 C.R.2d 736 [to comport with Campbell, ratio of punitive to compensatory damages cannot be greater than four to one]; Lockyer v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2004) 116 C.A.4th 1253, 1289, 11 C.R.3d 317 [sanctions of $ 20 million for tobacco company's improper advertising in California could not properly be based on company's nationwide financial figures without violating its due process rights]; Bardis v. Oates (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1, 21, 24, 14 C.R.3d 89 [in case involving breach of fiduciary, ratio of 42 to 1 was denial of due process; under facts presented, ratio of 9 to 1 was justifiable]; Textron Financial Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1061, 1081, 13 C.R.3d 586 [punitive damages award of $ 1.7 million was excessive and therefore violated due process in loss payee's action against insurer for bad faith and fraud]; 23 California Lawyer 37 (August 2003) [punitive damages after Campbell]; 117 Harv. L. Rev. 317 [Campbell]; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 477 [same]; 31 Western State L. Rev. 27 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co. (2005) 35 C.4th 1159, 1179, 29 C.R.3d 379, 113 P.3d 63, Supp., infra, §1623A [total damage award of $ 5,000 compensatory and $ 1.7 million punitive; under three guideposts for determining constitutionality, punitive damages award reduced to $ 50,000]; Johnson v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 135 C.A.4th 137, 144, 37 C.R.3d 283 [compensatory damages of $ 17,800 and punitive damages of $ 10 million violated due process; defendant's conduct, i.e., concealing automobile's history of transmission repairs and replacements when reselling, justified only single multiplier]; Gober v. Ralphs Grocery Co. (2006) 137 C.A.4th 204, 222, 40 C.R.3d 92 [ratio between punitive and compensatory damages of at least 25 to 1 could not be justified in sexual harassment lawsuit against employer, because employer did not act with extreme reprehensibility and damages were not unusually small, hard to detect, or hard to measure; under facts, maximum allowable ratio was 6 to 1]; Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 C.A.4th 525, 566, 46 C.R.3d 147 [in case involving SUV rollover, reduced compensatory damages of approximately $ 27.6 million did not justify punitive damages of $ 245 million; punitive damages reduced to $ 55 million]; Grassilli v. Barr (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1260, 1287, 48 C.R.3d 715 [in civil rights action based on plaintiff motorist's harassment for complaining about officer's conduct, punitive damages violated due process; although conduct was reprehensible, motorist was not assaulted or imprisoned, ratio of 8 to 1 between punitive and compensatory damages was excessive in light of motorist being fully compensated, and statutes allowed three times damages as civil penalties for civil rights violations]; Holdgrafer v. Unocal Corp. (2008) 160 C.A.4th 907, 927, 73 C.R.3d 216 [oil company's conduct of concealing oil spills and leaks from public and government, denying responsibility, and misrepresenting magnitude of damage to environment was not similar to its conduct toward landowners whose property was contaminated with oil spilled from pipeline, and thus punitive damages award to landowners based on evidence of company's concealment of other incidents violated due process; following State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585, text, p. 1051]; 57 Hastings L. J. 827 [continuing to punish and deter despite State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell]; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 1465 [continued viability of multiple punitive damages after Campbell]; 32 Western State L. Rev. 1 [law of punitive damages after Campbell]; 33 Western State L. Rev. 90 [questions that Campbell did not answer].

Where substantial compensatory damages have been awarded, and the defendant's conduct involves only economic damage to a single plaintiff who is not particularly vulnerable, a punitive damages award that exceeds the compensatory damages awarded is not consistent with due process. (Jet Source Charter v. Doherty (2007) 148 C.A.4th 1, 5, 8, 55 C.R.3d 176 [charterer of private aircraft sued aircraft dealers for fraud in negotiating purchase of aircraft and received compensatory damages of $ 6.5 million; punitive damages could not exceed that amount].) Correction: Page 1057, line 10, "Textron Financial Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh" should be "Textron Financial Corp. v.

National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh".

25 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
2. Constitutionality of Awards.
d. (New) Disgorgement of Profits.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1568A

[§ 1568A] (New) Disgorgement of Profits.

In Johnson v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 35 C.4th 1191, 29 C.3d 401, 113 P.3d 82, plaintiffs purchased a used car from defendant dealership, which was acting as an agent for defendant car manufacturer. Plaintiffs were told that the automobile had a clean repair record when, in fact, the previous owners had experienced transmission problems so significant that they had requested that defendant repurchase the car as a "lemon," as required by the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (the Lemon Law; C.C. 1750 et seq.; see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §314 et seq.). However, defendant construed that law so narrowly that the automobile did not qualify as a lemon. Instead, defendant approved issuance of an "owner appreciation certificate (OAC)," worth up to $ 5,000 on any trade-in. The previous owners accepted an OAC and traded the car in, which is how it became available to be purchased by plaintiffs. Only after plaintiffs experienced similar transmission problems did they learn of the vehicle's previous repair record. Plaintiffs then sued for intentional and negligent misrepresentation and violation of the Lemon Law. At trial, it was shown that defendant's policy throughout California was to issue OACs for vehicles that were arguably lemons, a procedure that cost defendant significantly less than repurchase under the Lemon Law and that avoided the title branding and additional notice requirements involved in reselling a lemon (see C.C. 1793.23(c)). Defendant's managers also testified that defendant regarded OACs as assistance to the customer, not the dealership, thereby avoiding the requirement of California law to notify future buyers of defects that led to a vehicle's reacquisition by the manufacturer in response to a request by the buyer that the vehicle be either replaced or accepted for restitution for not conforming to express warranties, a requirement that applies even if the vehicle is not reacquired as a lemon (C.C. 1793.23(d)). Plaintiffs' counsel estimated defendant's savings in California from the practice of issuing OACs for vehicles that should have been reacquired as lemons and of failing to provide warranty buyback notices on all vehicles traded in with OACs, thus concealing the vehicles' defects from subsequent buyers, to be $ 6 million to $ 10 million per year, and urged that the punitive damages be high enough, in effect, to take those wrongful profits from defendant. Accepting this argument, the trial court awarded plaintiffs $ 17,811.60 in compensatory damages and $ 10 million in punitive damages. The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision to award punitive damages, but, holding that defendant could constitutionally be punished only for its fraud on plaintiffs and not for its overall course of conduct, reduced the punitive damages award to $ 53,435, approximately three times the compensatory damages. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) While both BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, text, p.

1052, and State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, supra, were cases in which the evidence of conduct toward others was impermissibly broad, the United States Supreme Court's analysis in each case makes clear that due process does not prohibit state courts, in awarding or reviewing punitive damages, from considering the defendant's illegal or wrongful conduct toward others that was similar to the tortious conduct that injured the plaintiff. "We therefore join the numerous courts holding that a civil defendant's recidivism remains pertinent to an assessment of culpability." (35 C.4th 1204.)

(b) A state may use punitive damages as a tool to protect the consuming public, not merely to punish a private wrong. In effecting that goal, the scale and profitability of a course of wrongful conduct by the defendant cannot justify an award that is grossly excessive in relation to the harm done or threatened, but scale and profitability remain relevant to reprehensibility and the size of award warranted, under the BMW and Campbell guideposts, to meet the state's interest in deterrence. "Nothing the high court has said about due process review requires that California juries and courts ignore evidence of corporate policies and practices and evaluate the defendant's harm to the plaintiff in isolation. California law has long endorsed the use of punitive damages to deter continuation or imitation of a corporation's course of wrongful conduct, and hence allowed consideration of that conduct's scale and profitability in determining the size of award that will vindicate the state's legitimate interests." (35 C.4th 1207.)

(c) To recognize that recidivism remains relevant is not to approve plaintiffs' aggregate disgorgement theory of punitive damages. The aggregate disgorgement theory should be distinguished from the simple return of ill-gotten gains earned from an individual plaintiff. Removal of any profits the defendant has earned by a wrongful act is a logical step toward deterring its repetition or imitation. But calculating punitive damages in an individual tort case by the profits made through similar torts against hundreds or thousands of other individuals creates possibilities for unfairness (to the defendant and other possible claimants), which may be of constitutional dimension. (35 C.4th 1208.)

(d) An award punishing the defendant for dissimilar hypothetical claims of others creates the possibility of multiple punitive damages awards for the same conduct because in the usual case nonparties are not bound by the judgment some other plaintiff obtains. Plaintiffs argued that overpunishment may be avoided by permitting a defendant to present evidence of past punitive damages awards for the same conduct. However, the exact basis for a prior punitive damages award will not always be clear, and even where it is proven that the defendant has already been punished severely for a course of conduct that included harm to the current plaintiff, there is no guarantee the jury or court will agree to deny the plaintiff before them recovery of punitive damages simply because another plaintiff, in another court, has already recovered. (35 C.4th 1209.)

(e) An aggregate disgorgement theory does not fit easily within the BMW/Campbell guideposts. Although the scale and profitability of a corporate practice is related to its reprehensibility, gains made over some period of time and the harm or potential harm to an individual plaintiff are not necessarily related. An award of disgorgement of all profits from a group of transactions similar to that which harmed the plaintiff (but not defined through the procedural limits of a class action) is therefore likely to be disproportionate to the individual plaintiff's compensatory award. (35 C.4th 1210.)

(f) Here, plaintiffs claimed to have justified the punitive damages award by proving that in 2000 and 2001, defendant issued about 1,300 OACs per year in California, that each OAC transaction represented a potentially dangerous vehicle that is resold to an unsuspecting consumer without disclosure of material facts, and that by issuing OACs instead of replacing or repurchasing these vehicles, defendant saved $ 6,000 to $ 10,000 per vehicle. Plaintiffs' proof, however, suffers from several major deficiencies.

(1) Plaintiffs nowhere explain the pertinence of the 2-year period they used to estimate profits. In 1997, defendant issued an OAC to the former owners for the vehicle, and plaintiffs bought that vehicle in 1998. Plaintiffs apparently assumed, without referring to any evidence, that defendant's OAC and reacquired vehicle policies and practices were uniform in nature and number from 1997 to 2001. Nor do plaintiffs explain why defendant's profits should be estimated over a 2-year period. (35 C.4th 1211.)

(2) Plaintiffs offered no proof that all OAC transactions--in any period--involved defective vehicles subject to the Lemon Law, much less that all such vehicles were dangerous or unrepaired. To the contrary, defendant introduced evidence that OACs were used to address a variety of customer dissatisfactions other than those involving defects. Even a vehicle with a defect is not necessarily a lemon. A nonconformity requiring a refund or replacement must substantially impair the use, value, or safety of the vehicle, but not every customer complaint rises to that level. Moreover, customers and manufacturers frequently disagree about whether a defect has been repaired or a reasonable number of attempts have been made. (35 C.4th 1211.)

(3) A vehicle that is not a lemon but that is reacquired in response to customer warranty complaints must carry a warranty buyback notice, but its reacquisition under the Lemon Law is not required. Thus, plaintiffs' $ 6,000 to $ 10,000 savings estimate, which is derived from comparison of lemon buyback costs with OAC face values, is inapplicable to such a vehicle. Plaintiffs introduced no evidence about how many unrepaired, defective OAC trade-ins fell into this category. (35 C.4th 1212.)

(4) It cannot be assumed that, in every other case in which a vehicle traded in with an OAC was resold, the new buyer was kept entirely in the dark regarding previous repairs and repair attempts. In plaintiffs' case, defendant failed to provide the required historical notices and also concealed, and affirmatively misrepresented, the vehicle's repair history. However, plaintiffs did not show that defendant's California dealers always, or generally, conceal and lie about the repair history of used cars they resell. (35 C.4th 1212.)

(g) "We agree with the Court of Appeal that the $ 10 million punitive damages award may not ... constitutionally be justified on the basis of disgorgement of profits earned by [defendant] through its entire course of wrongful conduct toward other consumers. In reducing the punitives to a small multiple of the relatively modest compensatory damages award, however, the Court of Appeal apparently failed to adequately consider that [defendant's] fraud was more reprehensible because it was part of a repeated corporate practice rather than an isolated incident." Thus, the Court of Appeal's judgment is remanded for that court to conduct again the independent due process review required by BMW and Campbell. (35 C.4th 1196.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

26 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
2. Constitutionality of Awards.
e. (New) Harm to Nonparties.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1568B

[§ 1568B] (New) Harm to Nonparties.

In Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 549 U.S. 346, 127 S.Ct. 1057, 166 L.Ed.2d 940, plaintiff widow, as the representative of her husband's estate, sued defendant tobacco company, alleging that smoking had caused her husband's death. Finding that defendant had engaged in deceit, the jury awarded plaintiff compensatory damages of $ 821,000 and punitive damages of $ 79.5 million. The trial court ruled that the punitive damages award was constitutionally excessive and reduced it to $ 32 million, but the Oregon Court of Appeals reinstated the original award. In affirming the award, the Supreme Court of Oregon held that it was unnecessary to instruct that defendant could not be punished for harm suffered by persons not before the court. Held, on certiorari review, vacated and remanded for further proceedings.

(a) Punishing a defendant for harm caused to nonparties presents several problems that raise constitutional issues. (1) The Due Process Clause prohibits a state from punishing an individual without first providing the individual with an opportunity to present every available defense, in a case such as this, that the nonparty victim was not entitled to damages because he or she knew that smoking was dangerous or did not rely upon the defendant's statements to the contrary (see Lindsey v. Normet (1972) 405 U.S. 56, 92 S.Ct. 862, 31 L.Ed.2d 36). (2) To permit punishment for injuring nonparty victims would add a dimension without standards to the punitive damages equation, because the jury would be left to speculate on such questions as the number of nonparty victims, the seriousness of their injuries, and the exact circumstances of their injuries. (3) Fundamental due process concerns, i.e., risks of arbitrariness, uncertainty, and lack of notice, will be magnified. (127 S.Ct. 1063, 166 L.Ed.2d 948.) "[S]uch an award would amount to a taking of 'property' from the defendant without due process." (127 S.Ct. 1060, 166 L.Ed.2d 946.)

(b) There is no authority supporting the use of punitive damages awards for the purpose of punishing a defendant for harming nonparties. Although State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585, text, §1568, said that it may be appropriate to consider the reasonableness of a punitive damages award in light of the potential harm that the defendant's conduct could have caused, the same decision made it clear that the potential harm at issue was potential harm to the plaintiff. (127 S.Ct. 1063, 166 L.Ed.2d 949.)

(c) Plaintiff argued that she was free to show harm to other victims, because that harm is relevant to a different part of the punitive damages constitutional equation, namely, reprehensibility. Defendant does not contest this proposition. Evidence of actual harm to nonparties can help to show that the conduct that harmed the plaintiff also posed a substantial risk of harm to the general public, and so was particularly reprehensible. However, a jury may not go further by using a punitive damages verdict to punish a defendant directly for harms that it is alleged to have visited on nonparties. "Given the risks of unfairness ... , it is constitutionally important for a court to provide assurance that the jury will ask the right question, not the wrong one. And given the risks of arbitrariness, the concern for adequate notice, and the risk that punitive damages awards can, in practice, impose one State's (or one jury's) policies (e.g., banning cigarettes) upon other States ... , it is particularly important that States avoid procedure that unnecessarily deprives juries of proper legal guidance. ... [T]he Due Process Clause requires States to provide assurance that juries are not asking the wrong question, i.e., seeking, not simply to determine reprehensibility, but also to punish for harm caused strangers." (127 S.Ct. 1064, 166 L.Ed.2d 950.)

(d) The Oregon Supreme Court made three statements indicating a failure to clarify that it was using nonparty harm only with respect to reprehensibility. (127 S.Ct. 1064, 166 L.Ed.2d 950.) (1) State Farm held only that a jury could not base its punitive damages award on dissimilar acts of a defendant. This statement is correct. "We did not previously hold explicitly that a jury may not punish for the harm caused others. But we do so hold now." (127 S.Ct. 1065, 166 L.Ed.2d 951.) (2) If a jury cannot punish a defendant for the harm that it caused to nonparties, it is difficult to see why the jury can consider this harm at all. This statement is incorrect, because it fails to recognize the distinction between using nonparty harm directly to punish a defendant and using it to show increased reprehensibility. (3) It is unclear how a jury could consider harm to others, yet withhold that consideration from the punishment calculus. This statement raises a practical problem, i.e., how to determine whether a jury, in taking account of harm caused to others under the rubric of reprehensibility, is not also seeking to punish the defendant for having caused injury to others. "[S]tate courts cannot authorize procedures that create an unreasonable and unnecessary risk of any such confusion occurring. ... [W]here the risk of that misunderstanding is a significant one--because, for instance, of the sort of evidence that was introduced at trial or the kinds of argument the plaintiff made to the jury--a court, upon request, must protect against that risk. Although the States have some flexibility to determine what kind of procedures they will implement, federal constitutional law obligates them to provide some form of protection in appropriate cases." (127 S.Ct. 1065, 166 L.Ed.2d 951.)

A dissenting justice failed to see the distinction between taking third-party harm into account in order to assess reprehensibility (permitted) from doing so in order to punish the defendant directly (forbidden). "This nuance eludes me. When a jury increases a punitive damages award because injuries to third parties enhanced the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct, the jury is by definition punishing the defendant--directly--for third-party harm." (127 S.Ct. 1067, 166 L.Ed.2d 953.) Another dissenting justice, with whom two justices concurred, argued that the Oregon courts correctly applied the distinction. (127 S.Ct. 1068, 166 L.Ed.2d 954.)

In Bullock v. Philip Morris USA (2008) 159 C.A.4th 655, 71 C.R.3d 775, plaintiff smoker, who was diagnosed with lung cancer, filed an action against defendant cigarette manufacturer, seeking damages based on products liability, fraud, and other theories. With respect to punitive damages, the trial court refused to give the following instruction that had been requested by defendant: "You are not to impose punishment for harms suffered by persons other than the plaintiff before you." Held, the refusal was error.

(a) The proposed instruction expressed the rule of law, confirmed in Philip Morris USA v. Williams, that the jury could not award punitive damages for the purpose of punishing defendant for harming nonparties to the litigation. However, Williams added the qualification that evidence of harm caused to others could be considered to determine the reprehensibility of the conduct that harmed plaintiff. (159 C.A.4th 693.)

(b) The fact that the proposed instruction did not include this qualification did not render it incomplete or misleading. Defendant had no duty to qualify its proposed instruction in order to encompass a rule of law favorable to plaintiff. Each party in a civil case has a duty only to propose instructions that accurately state the law supporting its own theory of the case. Accordingly, the proposed instruction was not improper, and the trial court erred by refusing to give it. (159 C.A.4th 693.)

(c) Evidence was presented at trial of defendant's nationwide publicity campaign designed to mislead the public about the adverse health effects of smoking. Moreover, in closing argument, plaintiff's counsel argued that, for each lawsuit against defendant for smoking-related illnesses, 28,000 Californians had died from smoking in the past 40 years. In view of this record, the error in refusing to give the proposed instruction was prejudicial. (159 C.A.4th 694.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

27 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
3. Statutory Penalties Distinguished.
a. Nature and Validity of Penalties.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1569

[§ 1569] Nature and Validity of Penalties.

Sometimes a statute imposes a penalty in an arbitrary sum irrespective of actual damage suffered. (See, e.g., B. & P.C. 17206 [unfair competition]; B. & P.C. 17536 [false and misleading advertising; "not to exceed" $ 2,500 for each violation]; C.C. 789.3 [$ 100 per day for violation of statute prohibiting landlord's interferences with tenant's possession]; C.C. 1794(c) [wilful breach of consumer warranty; "two times the amount of actual damages"]; P.C. 490.5(c) [shoplifting from merchant or library, liable for rental value of merchandise or fair market value of library materials, and also not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 500]; P.C. 825 [$ 500 penalty recoverable by arrested person from officer who wilfully refuses or neglects to allow attorney to visit person on his or her request]; see People v. Superior Court (Jayhill Corp.) (1973) 9 C.3d 283, 107 C.R. 192, 507 P.2d 1400; Kinney v. Vaccari (1980) 27 C.3d 348, 165 C.R. 787, 612 P.2d 877, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §614; Beltram v. Appellate Dept. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 711, 716, 136 C.R. 211; Rich v. Schwab (1998) 63 C.A.4th 803, 814, 75 C.R.2d 170 [when Legislature has set range of penalty for each violation, consideration of defendant's financial condition is not proper; defendant may present evidence of financial condition to establish that court should award less than statutory maximum]; and see 51 Harv. L. Rev. 1092; 71 A.L.R.2d 986 [cumulative statutory penalties].)

In a case under the unfair competition law, civil penalties differ from punitive damages in the following ways: (1) they do not require evidence of defendant's wealth; (2) they are mandatory; (3) they only require proof by a preponderance of the evidence; (4) their amount is capped; and (5) they do not require a jury trial and are thus not subject to juror passion. (People v. First Fed. Credit Corp. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 721, 731, 128 C.R.2d 542.)

In Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 C.3d 355, 212 C.R. 143, 696 P.2d 637, supra, §14, defendant eavesdropped on a telephone conversation between plaintiff and his former wife. In an arbitration hearing held in connection with the former wife's action to set aside a final judgment of dissolution, defendant testified about what she had overheard. Plaintiff then brought this action under P.C. 637.2, providing for a recovery of the greater of $ 3,000 (now $ 5,000) or three times the actual damages for violations of the Invasion of Privacy Act (P.C. 631 et seq.). Defendant argued that the action was barred by the judicial privilege of C.C. 47 (supra, §562 et seq.). Held, the privilege was inapplicable to plaintiff's cause of action.

(a) P.C. 637.2 authorizes recovery without proof of actual damages, and this right accrues at the moment of the violation. (38 C.3d 365.)

(b) The alleged violation took place during a conversation prior to, and not in the context of, any judicial proceeding. P.C. 637.2 thus permits plaintiff to pursue the statutory remedy of a civil action "even though the judicial privilege bars his recovery for the only actual damage he claims to have suffered." (38 C.3d 365.)

Statutory penalties must be consistent with due process. In Hale v. Morgan (1978) 22 C.3d 388, 149 C.R. 375, 584 P.2d 512, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §614, C.C. 789.3, which at the time imposed a $ 100-per-day fine on landlords who interfered with their tenants' occupancy, was held unconstitutional, because the penalty was mandatory in amount and unlimited in duration. (22 C.3d 397.) (Cf. Marshall v. Brown (1983) 141 C.A.3d 408, 417, 190 C.R. 392 [upholding Lab.C. 1054, imposing treble damages for violation of Lab.C. 1050 et seq., 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §354; although statute directs mandatory, mechanical award, it is not "potentially limitless" and capable of serious abuse condemned in Hale]; People v. Fremont Life Ins. Co. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 508, 520, 128 C.R.2d 463 [on violation of unfair competition law by insurer with notice, civil penalty of $ 2 million was not abuse of discretion; guidelines of BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, supra, §1565, are not applicable to civil penalties].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

28 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
3. Statutory Penalties Distinguished.
b. Treble Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1570

[§ 1570] Treble Damages.

Another type of statute allows treble damages, i.e., on proof of actual damage, an award of three times the amount may be given. Examples include the following:

B. & P.C. 17537.4 [use of improper incentives in advertising].

C.C. 52 [discrimination against person on account of sex, color, race, religion, ancestry, or national origin].

C.C. 1710.1 [removal or alteration of serial number].

C.C. 1719 [writing check without sufficient funds].

C.C. 1721 [intentional and malicious destruction of real or personal property at site where substantial improvements are under construction].

C.C. 1882 et seq. [unauthorized taking or diversion of electricity, gas, or water].

C.C. 3333.7 [recovery from commercial vehicle driver's employer where driver was under influence of alcohol or controlled substance at time of injury and employer wilfully failed to comply with specified alcohol and controlled substance requirements].

C.C. 3346, C.C.P. 732 [waste].

C.C.P. 733 [removing timber].

C.C.P. 1029.8 [injury or damage by specified unlicensed person].

C.C.P. 735, 1174 [forcible entry and detainer].

Corp.C. 14400 [wilful and malicious injury to property of cable television corporation].

Govt.C. 12651 [submitting false claim to state or local entity].

P.C. 637.2 [violation of Invasion of Privacy Act].

P.C. 496 [receiving stolen property].

Food & Ag.C. 21855 [taking or killing cattle; four times value of cattle, plus exemplary damages in "proper case"].

C.C.P. 733 authorizes treble damages for harming or removing trees or timber. A provision that treble damages "may be assessed," has been construed to mean that they should not be allowed except in cases where the defendant's acts are wilful and malicious, thus establishing the same test as for punitive damages (infra, §1572). (See Swall v. Anderson (1943) 60 C.A.2d 825, 141 P.2d 912; Fick v. Nilson (1950) 98 C.A.2d 683, 685, 220 P.2d 752; Crofoot Lumber v. Ford (1961) 191 C.A.2d 238, 245, 12 C.R. 639.)

C.C.P. 1029.8 imposes treble damages for injury or damage by various unlicensed persons. The statute applies to licenses required by B. & P.C. 500 et seq. (healing arts), B. & P.C. 50000 et seq. (professions and vocations generally), B. & P.C. 18600 (boxing and wrestling), and B. & P.C. 19000 et seq. (Home Furnishings Act). (C.C.P. 1029.8(a).)

It does not apply to an action under B. & P.C. 17000 (Unfair Practices Act) brought by a person licensed to engage in the activities performed by the unlicensed person or closely related activities. (C.C.P. 1029.8(e).) And the term "unlicensed person" does not cover a person or entity (a) who has provided goods or services within the proper scope of the license under the good faith belief that he or she is properly licensed; (b) whose license has expired for nonpayment of a renewal fee, but who is eligible to renew without qualifying for an original license; and (c) who is licensed under B. & P.C. 2700 et seq. (Nursing Practice Act) or B. & P.C. 2840 (Vocational Nursing Practice Act), if the action arises from a claim that the licensee exceeded the scope of the practice authorized by the license. (C.C.P. 1029.8(d).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 1060, first line on page, "B. & P.C. 50000 et seq." should be "B. & P.C. 5000 et seq."

29 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
3. Statutory Penalties Distinguished.
c. Recovery of Both Penalty and Punitive Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1571

[§ 1571] Recovery of Both Penalty and Punitive Damages.

(1) Dual Remedies Permitted. The fact that a statutory penalty or even criminal liability is imposed for a particular wrongful act does not preclude recovery of punitive damages in a tort action where the necessary malice or oppression is shown, and it is possible that the defendant may be punished criminally and forced to respond in punitive damages for the same act. (See Greenberg v. Western Turf Assn. (1903) 140 C. 357, 363, 73 P. 1050; Perrine v. Paulos (1950) 100 C.A.2d 655, 224 P.2d 41 [eviction by innkeeper]; Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 C.A.2d 517, 528, 322 P.2d 933, infra, §1574 [dictum]; see Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment a; 2 A.L.R.5th 449 [right to punitive or multiple damages when cause of action renders both available].)

(2) Election and Waiver. If the purpose of the penalty is the same as that of punitive damages, the plaintiff cannot obtain double recovery. Hence, a plaintiff who seeks both in a single action must elect to have judgment entered in an amount that reflects either the statutory trebling or the compensatory and punitive damages. (Marshall v. Brown (1983) 141 C.A.3d 408, 419, 190 C.R. 392; Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Trans. (1990) 219 C.A.3d 811, 826, 268 C.R. 856, citing the text; Clauson v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1253, 1256, 79 C.R.2d 747, citing the text [at pleading stage, plaintiff may seek to recover both punitive damages under C.C. 3294 for common law invasion of privacy and statutory penalties under P.C. 637.2(a) for wiretapping and eavesdropping; should plaintiff prevail, election must be made between punitive damages and statutory penalties]; De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates Homeowners Assn. v. De Anza Santa Cruz Mobile Estates (2001) 94 C.A.4th 890, 905, 114 C.R.2d 708 [because punitive damages are based on tort liability, plaintiff may not recover punitive damages based solely on statutory violation, where statute specifically provides for penalty that is punitive in nature; violation of C.C. 798.41].)

In Troensegaard v. Silvercrest Industries (1985) 175 C.A.3d 218, 220 C.R. 712, defendant manufactured and sold to plaintiff a mobilehome that exuded formaldehyde fumes in excess of a safe level, causing physical and emotional injuries and other expense. Plaintiff's complaint was based on breach of warranty under C.C. 1797 et seq. (4 Summary (10th), Sales, §65) and products liability. The jury verdict against defendant was for $ 90,000 compensatory damages, $ 55,000 punitive damages, and $ 90,000 as a "civil penalty" under C.C. 1794(c), which limits the penalty to no more than two times the amount of actual damages. Held, the award of punitive damages was improper.

C.C. 3294 permits punitive damages and C.C. 1794 permits a civil penalty. Had the Legislature "intended a double recovery of punitive and penal damages for the same willful, oppressive, malicious, and oppressive acts, it would in some appropriate manner have said so." Hence, in seeking the civil penalty together with attorneys' fees and expenses allowed by C.C. 1794, plaintiff waived punitive damages under C.C. 3294. (175 C.A.3d 228.) (See dissenting opinion, arguing that penalty was based on breach of warranty in failing to repair or replace defective mobilehome, while punitive damage award was based on distinct act of fraudulent concealment of unfavorable report on test ordered by defendant.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Election and Waiver. See Fassberg Const. Co. v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (2007) 152 C.A.4th 720, 60 C.R.3d 375 [city housing authority was precluded from recovering punitive damages against general contractor in action arising from housing authority's construction project, where aggregate punitive portion of treble damages award and civil penalty under state False Claims Act was sufficiently large that any additional award of punitive damages would be duplicative].

30 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
4. Malice.

a. Requirement of Actual Malice.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1572

[§ 1572] Requirement of Actual Malice.

Although the language of C.C. 3294 (supra, §1559) might seem to be satisfied with "fictional" or "implied" malice, the general rule, which is followed in California, requires a showing of malice in fact or actual malice, either by direct evidence of bad motive, or evidence furnished by the nature of the act done. (Davis v. Hearst (1911) 160 C. 143, 162, 116 P. 530; Livesey v. Stock (1929) 208 C. 315, 321, 281 P. 70 [malice shown; defendant twice deliberately fired shotgun at plaintiff]; Ross v. Sweeters (1932) 119 C.A. 716, 724, 7 P.2d 334; Bergevin v. Morger (1955) 130 C.A.2d 590, 593, 279 P.2d 136 [malice shown; defendant wantonly and without provocation kicked plaintiffs, causing serious injuries]; Sturges v. Charles L. Harney (1958) 165 C.A.2d 306, 321, 331 P.2d 1072 [malice shown from declarations of defendant]; Leavy v. Cooney (1963) 214 C.A.2d 496, 503, 29 C.R. 580; Walton v. Anderson (1970) 6 C.A.3d 1003, 1009, 86 C.R. 345, citing the text; Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 C.A.3d 891, 895, 99 C.R. 706 [no basis for award against surgeon who negligently operated on wrong person, even though act may have been technical battery]; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Leshner (1986) 187 C.A.3d 169, 200, 231 C.R. 791; Stewart v. Truck Ins. Exchange (1993) 17 C.A.4th 468, 483, 21 C.R.2d 338 [no malice shown; despite evidence of insurer's bad faith, there was no evidence of either intent to harm or despicable conduct]; American Airlines v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1017, 1045, 117 C.R.2d 685 [while representing one plaintiff, attorney was deponent in second case against same defendant and also gave advice to second-case plaintiff in responding to documents request; while this conduct had potential for conflict of interest, malice necessary for imposition of punitive damages was lacking]; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §556 et seq.; 61 A.L.R.3d 984 [wrongful attachment or garnishment]; 93 A.L.R.3d 1109 [false arrest or imprisonment]; BAJI, No. 14.75 [driving while intoxicated--actual malice--punitive damages.].) (For statutory definition, see supra, §1559; on malice in products liability cases, see infra, §1593.)

The requirement is sometimes applied quite strictly. In Wolfsen v. Hathaway (1948) 32 C.2d 632, 198 P.2d 1, the court first quoted from Davis v. Hearst, supra, as follows: "Whatever may be the mode of proving the existence of malice in fact, it is only upon some showing regarded by the law as adequate to establish the presence of malice in fact, that is the motive and willingness to vex, harass, annoy, or injure, that punitive damages have ever been awarded." (32 C.2d 647.) The Court then held that the record showed only tortious acts under a mistaken claim of right after advice of counsel, which could not support that part of the verdict awarding exemplary damages. (32 C.2d 648.) It would seem, however, that the defendant's wrongful motive could have been inferred as a fact from the circumstances. (See infra, §1573.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.91(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

31 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
4. Malice.

b. Inference From Circumstances.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1573

[§ 1573] Inference From Circumstances.

Malice in fact may be proved by circumstantial evidence. (See Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 66, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §1554; Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 923, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620; Coyne v. Nelson (1951) 107 C.A.2d 469, 475, 237 P.2d 45 [false imprisonment by police officer, evidence of acceptance of money from codefendant, delayed and partly untrue police report]; Roth v. Shell Oil Co. (1960) 185 C.A.2d 676, 683, 8 C.R. 514; Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 713, 719, 60 C.R. 398, supra, §1177 [acts done in reckless disregard of injurious consequences]; Black v. Shearson, Hammill & Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 362, 369, 72 C.R. 157, supra, §795 [same]; Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 C.A.3d 485, 494, 183 C.R. 299 [unlawful detention of plaintiff's car by defendant repair shop, in violation of Automotive Repair Act requirement of authorization for repairs]; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 679, 192 C.R. 793; Burnett v. National Enquirer (1983) 144 C.A.3d 991, 1008, 193 C.R. 206 [preponderance of evidence was sufficient]; The Nippon Credit Bank, Ltd., Los Angeles Agency v. 1333 North Calif. Boulevard (2001) 86 C.A.4th 486, 501, 103 C.R.2d 421 [inference that trustor deliberately withheld paying tax on property securing loan in order to punish lender for failing to make interest rate concessions supported finding of malice]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §556 et seq.; BAJI, No. 14.71; CACI, Nos. 3940, 3945, 3947.)

In Parrott v. Bank of America (1950) 97 C.A.2d 14, 217 P.2d 89, plaintiff, a teller in defendant bank, was accused by a customer and bank officials of appropriating a customer's deposit. She was interrogated at length, warned that she had better sign a confession or the matter would be turned over to the F.B.I. and prosecution would result, but that if she signed the confession and made restitution the matter would probably be dropped. After agreeing to sign, she consulted her fiancée and refused. She was threatened again, discharged, her account was debited, and the F.B.I. was informed of her probable defalcation. Then the customer came in and admitted having misplaced the deposit. But plaintiff was not restored to her position, the F.B.I. was not sufficiently informed of the facts, and an unfavorable answer was given to a prospective employer's inquiry. She suffered great ill health and a mental and physical breakdown and was awarded $ 30,000; for loss of health and loss of employment, plaintiff was entitled to compensatory damages; the remainder of the $ 30,000 was punitive damages. Held, the punitive damages award was supported by the following evidence from which the jury could infer malice: (1) The bank refused to reinstate plaintiff when her innocence was demonstrated; (2) the bank's report to federal authorities was not fair and truthful; (3) the bank's later letter to federal authorities was not an unequivocal retraction; (4) the letter to a prospective employer did not give the real (groundless) reason for her discharge. (97 C.A.2d 24.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

4. Malice.

c. Conscious Disregard of Rights or Safety.

1. Nature of Problem and Earlier Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1574

[§ 1574] Nature of Problem and Earlier Cases.

"Malice implies an act conceived in a spirit of mischief or with criminal indifference towards the obligations owed to others. There must be an intent to vex, annoy, or injure. Mere spite or ill will is not sufficient. Mere negligence, even gross negligence, is not sufficient to justify such an award." (Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 C.A.2d 517, 527, 322 P.2d 933.) In Gombos, plaintiff alleged injuries resulting from defendant's wilful and reckless driving while intoxicated. Held, punitive damages could not be recovered. "If, by allegations similar to those here involved, a plaintiff can put into issue his right to punitive damages, it means that contributory negligence cannot be urged as a defense to the punitive damage charge, and, because punitive damages are based on the defendant's ability to pay, it also means that the plaintiffs can offer evidence of the financial status of the defendant. This would convert personal injury cases where intoxication or wilful misconduct are involved from the trial of a negligence case into a field day in which the financial standing of the defendant would become a major issue." (158 C.A.2d 528.) (See 33 A.L.R.5th 303 [automobile driver's intoxication as basis for punitive damages]; on disapproval of Gombos, see infra, §1575.)

In G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 C.A.3d 22, 122 C.R. 218, plaintiff brought an action against defendant, a pharmaceutical manufacturer, alleging that she used its oral contraceptives and suffered physical and emotional trauma. Defendant demurred, the lower court overruled the demurrer, and the Court of Appeal issued mandamus to compel sustaining the demurer with leave to amend. The court held that the complaint did not sufficiently plead malice as a ground for an award of punitive damages, but it also explored at length the confusing accumulation of case law on this subject.

(a) Davis v. Hearst (1911) 160 C. 143, 162, 116 P. 530, supra, §1572, the basic case on which most of the California decisions rest, makes evil motive the central element; and this causes no trouble where the plaintiff charges a deliberate tort. (49 C.A.3d 30.)

(b) Where the charge is of a nondeliberate injury, wanton and reckless misconduct has been described as synonymous with malice. "[S]imilar pronouncements utilize recklessness as a descriptive term, but only in combination with other pejorative descriptions, such as wantonness, willfulness, intent and conscious disregard of danger." (49 C.A.3d 30.)

(c) A third group of cases "utilize[s] reckless misconduct and reckless disregard as terms with the independent capacity to sustain exemplary damage awards." (49 C.A.3d 30.)

(d) A fourth group "distinctly reject[s] recklessness as an independent basis for a finding of malice." (49 C.A.3d 31.)

(e) C.C. 3294 (supra, §1559) "views evil motive as the central, essential factor in the malice which justifies an exemplary award." And this calls upon the jury to assess the defendant's actual state of mind; "it is not satisfied by characterizing his conduct as unreasonable, negligent, grossly negligent or reckless." (49 C.A.3d 31.)

(f) The shifting decisional definitions may indicate "judicial restlessness with the Davis v. Hearst formula" as applied to products liability suits against manufacturers of dangerous products. "In a personal injury action the notion of conscious disregard of the safety of others logically may be substituted for that of disregard of the rights of others. We suggest conscious disregard of safety as an appropriate description of the animus malus which may justify an exemplary damage award when nondeliberate injury is alleged." (49 C.A.3d 32.)

In Seimon v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 600, 607, 136 C.R. 787, the court followed the Searle analysis and applied its test of "conscious disregard of safety" to defendant's conduct in knowingly allowing a dangerous crossing to remain without taking corrective action. "[T]he jury could have gleaned from this evidence that defendant had displayed a conscious and callous indifference to, or disregard of, probable harm to motorists." Hence, the trial judge erred in granting a nonsuit on the cause of action for wilful misconduct, and the judgment was reversed for a retrial on the issue of punitive damages. (67 C.A.3d 609.) (See Schreefel v. Okuly (1983) 143 C.A.3d 818, 828, 192 C.R. 402 [distinguishing Seimon; evidence was insufficient to justify punitive damages instruction].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

4. Malice.

c. Conscious Disregard of Rights or Safety.

2. Rule That Conscious Disregard of Safety Is Sufficient.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1575

[§ 1575] Rule That Conscious Disregard of Safety Is Sufficient.

In Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 890, 157 C.R. 693, 598 P.2d 854, plaintiff sued to recover compensatory and punitive damages for injuries sustained in an automobile collision with a car driven by S. The complaint alleged that (a) S was a longtime alcoholic, aware of his practice of driving while intoxicated and of the dangers of this conduct; (b) he had a long record of arrests and convictions for drunken driving, and was currently on probation and also facing an additional drunk driving charge; (c) he nevertheless continued in employment requiring that he call on commercial establishments where liquor was sold, to deliver or transport liquor in his car; and (d) at the time of the accident, he was transporting liquor and simultaneously consuming an alcoholic beverage and was "under the influence of intoxicants." On the basis of these factual allegations, plaintiff stated that S "acted with a conscious disregard of Plaintiff's safety." Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Malice does not require actual intent to harm; conscious disregard of safety is enough to support a demand for punitive damages. Prosser states that there must be a fraudulent or evil motive on the defendant's part, "or such a conscious and deliberate disregard of the interests of others that his conduct may be called wilful or wanton." (24 C.3d 894.)

(b) California cases have expressed the same view; e.g., Seimon v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 600, 607, 136 C.R. 787, supra, §1574, and G.D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 C.A.3d 22, 122 C.R. 218, supra, §1574. In Searle, the court made this distinction: Mere reckless disregard or misconduct is insufficient, but "conscious disregard of safety" is an appropriate description of malice when nondeliberate injury is alleged. "We concur with the Searle observation. ... In order to justify an award of punitive damages on this basis, the plaintiff must establish that the defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his conduct, and that he wilfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences." (24 C.3d 895.)

(c) Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 C.A.2d 517, 527, 322 P.2d 933, supra, §1574, involved a complaint that alleged driving while drunk despite knowledge of the safety hazards. The present complaint's additional allegations of alcoholism and prior arrests and convictions merely confirm defendant's awareness of his inability to drive safely while drunk; the essence of the two complaints is the same. Gombos, holding the complaint insufficient, was decided at a time when it was unclear whether conscious disregard of the safety of others could be the basis of an award of punitive damages. Today, this is the generally accepted view (24 C.3d 896), and, to the extent inconsistent, Gombos is disapproved (24 C.3d 900).

(d) The punitive damage award in cases involving conscious disregard of safety also carries out the policy of deterrence, under the view of a substantial majority of the courts that have considered the matter; and "it also represents the better reasoned view." (24 C.3d 897.)

(e) The legislative response to Coulter v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 144, 145 C.R. 534, 577 P.2d 669, supra, §1069, does not call for a different result; punitive damages are awarded against the intoxicated driver, not the supplier of the liquor. "We discern no valid reason whatever for immunizing the driver himself from the exposure to punitive damages given the demonstrable and almost inevitable risk visited upon the innocent public by his voluntary conduct." (24 C.3d 897.)

(f) Finally, defendant contended that many instances of simple negligent conduct could be alleged to involve a conscious disregard of the safety of others; e.g., wilful disobedience of traffic signals or speed limit laws. "That case is not before us and we express no opinion on it, holding only that one who voluntarily commences, and thereafter continues, to consume alcoholic beverages to the point of intoxication, knowing from the outset that he must thereafter operate a motor vehicle demonstrates, in the words of Dean Prosser, 'such a conscious and deliberate disregard of the interests of others that his conduct may be called wilful or wanton.' ... Although the circumstances in a particular case may disclose similar wilful or wanton behavior in other forms, ordinarily, routine negligent or even reckless disobedience of traffic laws would not justify an award of punitive damages." (24 C.3d 899.)

Two justices, concurring and dissenting, make these points: (a) Gombos correctly holds that driving while drunk is reckless but not malicious; (b) persons who drive while drunk are not always conscious of the high risk of harm to others; (c) the present complaint contains allegations of repeated drunk driving and complete awareness of the possible consequences, so that a jury may conclude that defendant acted with a conscious disregard of the safety of others. But to go any further would open a Pandora's Box: The majority opinion allows the claim of punitive damages to be based on the mere allegation that "the driver had taken enough wine at dinner to be classified as legally under the influence of alcohol and knew that he would have to drive home." (24 C.3d 900.) Another justice dissented at length, claiming in part that Gombos v. Ashe was correctly decided. (24 C.3d 901.)

Nolin v. National Convenience Stores (1979) 95 C.A.3d 279, 157 C.R. 32, decided before Taylor, reached the same conclusion in a different factual setting. Plaintiff sued for damages sustained from a slip-and-fall accident in the self-service gasoline pump area of defendant's market. The jury awarded compensatory damages of $ 68,101 (reduced by 10% for comparative fault), and punitive damages of $ 50,000. Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff made a sufficient showing of malice by the following evidence: (1) Defendant's store manager was aware of a defective pump nozzle that spilled gasoline, and of prior incidents of slip-and-fall, and reported these matters to defendant's district representative, but no attempt was made to repair the equipment. (2) The store also sold motor oil by the can, without providing methods of opening cans or pouring the oil into the engine; and customers, borrowing ordinary can openers and fashioning makeshift funnels, frequently spilled oil. (3) Defendant had no adequate cleanup procedure and no warning signs advising patrons of the hazards. (95 C.A.3d 288.)

(b) "Defendant's established inattention to the danger showed a complete lack of concern regarding the harmful potential--the probability and likelihood of injury. The entire nature of defendant's operation, as it was presented to the jury, reflected defendant's overriding concern for a minimum-expense operation, regardless of the peril involved. This concern was evidenced by the method of deployment of clerks, the absence of maintenance personnel, and the absence of necessary equipment for handling oil sold to customers. The evidence also established that the employees who observed the danger daily communicated it upward to supervisory personnel, but to no avail." (95 C.A.3d 288.) (See Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1034, 1043, 260 C.R. 886 [under either subjective or objective test, hospital did not consciously disregard safety of others in failing to conduct complete review of competence of longtime staff physician].)

The impact of Taylor was the subject of considerable comment. (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 911; 31 Hastings L. J. 307; 36 Hastings L. J. 793; 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 117; 8 San Fernando Valley L. Rev. 219; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1013.) (On conscious disregard of safety in products liability cases, see infra, §1593; for statutory definition incorporating conscious disregard of safety, see supra, §1559.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

34 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

4. Malice.

c. Conscious Disregard of Rights or Safety.

3. Rule Is Retroactive.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1576

[§ 1576] Rule Is Retroactive.

Mau v. Superior Court (1980) 101 C.A.3d 875, 161 C.R. 895, held that Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 890, 157 C.R. 693, 598 P.2d 854, supra, §1575, should not be applied retroactively because (a) there can be no retroactive deterrence of intoxicated drivers, and (b) insurance companies relied on the earlier law in figuring rates. Busboom v. Superior Court (1980) 113 C.A.3d 550, 169 C.R. 886, disagreed: "It is unlikely drunk drivers are deterred by the threat of punitives over and above already existing risks of drunk driving (e.g., loss of license, jail sentence, death or injury, cancellation of insurance, loss of status in some communities). As for insurance companies, they fix their rates with reference to many factors and their policies do not cover punitive damages." (113 C.A.3d 553.) The Busboom court saw no great burden in retroactive application in view of the short statute of limitations (1 year). (113 C.A.3d 554.)

In Dawes v. Superior Court (1980) 111 C.A.3d 82, 168 C.R. 319, decided after Mau but before Busboom, the court found a way to apply the conscious disregard of safety doctrine to an accident case arising before Taylor without reliance on Taylor. The trial judge struck out the allegations supporting the claim for punitive damages on the grounds that at the time of the accident, Gombos v. Ashe (1958) 158 C.A.2d 517, 527, 322 P.2d 933, supra, §1574, was controlling, and that under Mau, Taylor should be given only prospective effect. Held, mandamus granted to compel restoration of the pleading.

(a) Since 1974, the term "malice" in C.C. 3294 has been interpreted as including a conscious disregard of safety. Taylor did not change the law in this regard; it merely held that contrary to Gombos v. Ashe, driving a vehicle while intoxicated may in appropriate circumstances evidence a conscious disregard of safety. (111 C.A.3d 88.)

(b) The pleading in the instant case set forth much more than drunken driving: It was alleged that defendant ran a stop sign, zigzagged in and out of traffic at excessive speed when many pedestrians and bicyclists were in the immediate vicinity, and that he and his passenger falsely reported to the police that the passenger was driving. (111 C.A.3d 88.)

(c) The fact that no California decision before Taylor had approved recovery of punitive damages in an action arising out of a vehicle accident caused by a drunken driver is not a bar to that recovery. "There is not and there never was one rule of law for intoxicated driving cases and another rule of law for other types of cases." (111 C.A.3d 90.)

Accordingly, the court did not reach the question whether Mau correctly held that Taylor should be given only prospective effect. (111 C.A.3d 87.) The issue was resolved in Peterson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 147, 150, 164, 181 C.R. 784, 642 P.2d 1305, disapproving Mau and holding that the Taylor rule should be applied retroactively.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

35 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
4. Malice.
d. Ignorance of Injured Party's Identity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1577

[§ 1577] Ignorance of Injured Party's Identity.

The contention that a punitive damages award is improper where the tortfeasor is ignorant of the identity of the injured party at the time the tort is committed was rejected in Ramona Manor Convalescent Hosp. v. Care Enterprises (1986) 177 C.A.3d 1120, 1141, 225 C.R. 120, a case involving intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (see supra, §853 et seq.). "There are many California decisions imposing punitive damages irrespective of the defendant's knowledge of the victim's specific identity. Taylor v. Superior Court ... and its progeny approve punitive recoveries against drunk drivers. ... Obviously a drunk driver does not know the specific identity of his victim. Products liability cases imposing punitive damages on manufacturers of pharmaceuticals and medical supplies are also inconsistent with [defendant's] contention; these cases require a conscious disregard of the probable dangerous consequences in marketing the manufacturer's product, not that the manufacturer know the identity of the specific persons who will suffer injury. ... Judicial approval of punitive damage claims in class action disputes is also irreconcilable with [defendant's] 'knowledge of identity' argument." (177 C.A.3d 1142.) (On Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 890, 157 C.R. 693, 598 P.2d 854, see supra, §1574.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

36 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
5. Proper and Improper Plaintiffs.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1578

[§ 1578] In General.

(1) Basic Rule. In the absence of statute, only the person immediately injured is entitled to punitive damages. (People v. Superior Court (Jayhill Corp.) (1973) 9 C.3d 283, 287, 107 C.R. 192, 507 P.2d 1400.) Hence, an assignee of the cause of action may not recover punitive damages. (French v. Orange County Inv. Corp. (1932) 125 C.A. 587, 591, 13 P.2d 1046.)

(2) Heirs in Wrongful Death Action. There can be no award of punitive damages to heirs in wrongful death actions; they can recover only for pecuniary loss to themselves. (Lange v. Schoettler (1896) 115 C. 388, 390, 47 P. 139; Doak v. Superior Court (1968) 257 C.A.2d 825, 838, 65 C.R. 193; Pease v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 C.A.3d 450, 461, 113 C.R. 416; Stencel Aero Engineering Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 56 C.A.3d 978, 985, 128 C.R. 691; Georgie Boy Mfg. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 C.A.3d 217, 222, 171 C.R. 382 [rejecting equal protection challenge]; Ford Motor Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 C.A.3d 748, 751, 175 C.R. 39 [same].) (For arguments in favor of allowing punitive damages, see 15 Santa Clara Lawyer 507; 8 U.S.F. L. Rev. 585; for statutory exception where death results from homicide for which defendant has been convicted of felony, see C.C. 3294(d), infra, §1586.)

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348, offered this explanation: "Given that the primary purposes of punitive damages are punishment and deterrence of like conduct by the wrongdoer and others, a rational justification exists for the legislative denial of the right to seek punitive damages to the class of persons who are heirs of a decedent whose claim for such damages survived and was enforceable by the personal representative. Where such claim survives and is recoverable in an action by the personal representative of the decedent ... , to grant the heirs an additional, separate and independent right to recover punitive damages in a wrongful death action would permit double punishment for the same tortious conduct and could also lead to double recovery of punitive damages by the heirs. The purpose of punishment and deterrence will have been served by the enforcement of the punitive damage claim that survived the decedent. There is a likelihood that the heirs would share in the personal representative's recovery of such damages." (119 C.A.3d 835.)

In Vander Lind v. Superior Court (1983) 146 C.A.3d 358, 194 C.R. 209, plaintiffs' minor daughter was killed by defendant Amtrak's speeding train, and plaintiffs sued for wrongful death, seeking punitive damages under Pub.Util.C. 2106 (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §§1089, 1090). This section authorizes an action against a public utility based on an unlawful act or omission, and permits an award of punitive damages if the court finds that the act or omission was wilful. Held, no punitive damages were recoverable.

(a) Except under the statute allowing punitive damages where death results from a homicide (see infra, §1586), the damages recoverable in wrongful death cases are strictly limited. (146 C.A.3d 364.) And in the absence of statute, punitive damages are allowed only to those directly injured by intentional tortious acts or omissions. (146 C.A.3d 365.)

(b) Neither the language nor legislative history of Pub.Util.C. 2106 supports the theory that this section was intended to change that rule. (146 C.A.3d 367.) Although Pub.Util.C. 2106 loosely authorizes exemplary damages to persons "affected," the Legislature intended those damages to be recovered (if at all) only by persons (or their personal representatives) who are themselves the direct victims of a utility's wilful act or omission. A contrary conclusion and a literal application of the statute would expand the class of plaintiffs newly enfranchised to recover exemplary damages (upon proof of actual damages) beyond precedent and reason. Employers, parents of stillborn children and others remotely "affected" might obtain compensatory and exemplary awards against utilities on facts that have previously precluded recovery. (146 C.A.3d 367.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.92

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

37 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
5. Proper and Improper Plaintiffs.
b. Recovery by Public Entities.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1579

[§ 1579] Recovery by Public Entities.

Sanger v. Superior Court (1992) 8 C.A.4th 444, 10 C.R. 436, holds that a municipality may recover punitive damages in an action against private parties. The city of Sanger sued defendant chemical companies on causes of action for negligence, nuisance, trespass, and product defect, asserting that the city's water system was contaminated by DBCP manufactured, distributed, sold, used, or transported by defendants. The complaint alleged that defendants' acts caused damages in excess of $ 500,000. Punitive damages were sought on the ground that defendants acted with knowledge of, or in callous, conscious, or reckless disregard of, the toxic and dangerous character of DBCP to humans, and that the chemical would contaminate or destroy the city's property. The trial court, relying on Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1009, 1025, 244 C.R. 507, granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings. Held, mandamus issued, directing the court to vacate its order and to issue a new order denying the motion.

(a) The Los Angeles case stated two reasons for its conclusion: First, a municipality has police power, and by ordinance may impose fines or other penal remedies; hence, it is proper to refuse to permit recovery of punitive damages in the absence of express statutory authority. Second, Govt.C. 818 bars an award of punitive damages against a public entity; consequently, to permit a public entity to seek punitive damages would raise "serious questions of equal protection." (8 C.A.4th 448.) "We do not agree with the City of Los Angeles in either its statutory interpretation or its constitutional concerns." (8 C.A.4th 448.)

(b) The language of C.C. 3294 is clear and unambiguous; it allows all plaintiffs, both public and private, to recover punitive damages. (8 C.A.4th 448, 449.) And the purposes of punitive damages are advanced by this construction even if the party against whom the punishment is imposed could have been, or actually already had been, punished through the exercise of municipal police power. (8 C.A.4th 449.)

(c) The equal protection concerns of Los Angeles are not well founded; there is a rational basis for holding that public entities may recover punitive damages but are not liable for those damages. "Requiring the public entity to pay punitive damages would punish the very group imposition of punitive damages was intended to benefit." (8 C.A.4th 450, citing McAllister v. South Coast Air Quality Dist. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 653, 228 C.R. 351, supra, §230.) The fact that public entities may punish and deter wrongdoers through their police power "could, of course, persuade the Legislature to amend its statutory scheme to prohibit public entities from recovering punitive damages." (8 C.A.4th 450.) But it does not render unconstitutional the statutory scheme actually devised by the Legislature. (8 C.A.4th 450.) (See Glendale v. Superior Court (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1266, 1269, 116 C.R.2d 16 [following Sanger].)

However, because only those immediately injured are entitled to punitive damages (supra, §1578), the Attorney General is not entitled to punitive damages in an action to recover civil penalties for false advertising or unfair competition. (People v. Superior Court (Jayhill Corp.) (1973) 9 C.3d 283, 287, 107 C.R. 192, 507 P.2d 1400.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 1071, first line of section, citation for Sanger v. Superior Court should be 10 C.R.2d 436.

38 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
6. Proper and Improper Defendants.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1580

[§ 1580] In General.

Punitive damages can be given only against a wrongdoer. The following rules apply:

(1) Wrongdoer's Estate. An award cannot be given after the wrongdoer's death, against his or her estate. (C.C.P. 377.42; Evans v. Gibson (1934) 220 C. 476, 489, 31 P.2d 389; see Leavitt v. Gibson (1935) 3 C.2d 90, 108, 43 P.2d 1091 [award permitted by nunc pro tunc judgment; criticized in 24 Cal. L. Rev. 479]; Roddenberry v. Roddenberry (1996) 44 C.A.4th 634, 666, 51 C.R.2d 907 [former Prob.C. 573 (now C.C.P. 377.42) was not applicable to fraud by decedent's loan-out corporation, which was continuing entity]; Whelan v. Rallo (1997) 52 C.A.4th 989, 991, 60 C.R.2d 876, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §520 [punitive damages awarded in judgment are recoverable even though defendant dies while appeal is pending]; Rest.2d, Torts §926; 30 A.L.R.4th 707 [punitive damages claim as surviving death of tortfeasor or person wronged].)

(2) Minors and Incompetents. A minor or person of unsound mind is not liable for punitive damages unless at the time of the act he or she was capable of knowing that it was wrongful. (C.C. 41; Family C. 6600.)

(3) Surety. No award can be made against a surety on an attachment bond. (Carter v. Agricultural Ins. Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 805, 806, 72 C.R. 462; see 2 A.L.R.4th 1254 [liability of surety on private bond for punitive damages].)

(4) Vicarious Liability Under Vehicle Code. There can be no award against a parent or other person with custody, based on the signing of a minor's driving license (Veh.C. 17709(b), supra, §1258), or against an owner of an automobile driven with permission (Veh.C. 17151(b), supra, §1261). (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§588, 596, 599.)

(5) Public Entity. A public entity is not liable for punitive damages. (Govt.C. 818; see supra, §230; 1 A.L.R.4th 448 [municipal corporation]; on right of municipality to recover punitive damages, see supra, §1579.) However, a public entity other than the state is authorized to pay that part of a judgment that is for punitive damages upon finding: (a) the judgment was based on an act or omission of an employee or former employee acting within the course and scope of his or her employment; (b) the act or omission was done in good faith, without actual malice and in the apparent best interests of the public entity; (c) payment of the claim or judgment would be in the entity's best interests. An entity of the state government is also authorized to pay punitive damages, provided the payment is approved by the Legislature and recommended by the appointing authority of the employee or former employee whose act or omission was the basis for the judgment. The Legislature and the appointing authority must find that the aforementioned three conditions exist. (Govt.C. 825(b); see 17 Pacific L. J. 794.)

Govt.C. 825 neither affects the prohibition against punitive damages specified in Govt.C. 818 nor constitutes a waiver of an entity's immunity from these damages under 42 U.S.C., §§1981, 1983, or 1985. (Govt.C. 825(e); see Newport v. Fact Concerts (1981) 453 U.S. 247, 101 S.Ct. 2748, 2758, 69 L.Ed.2d 616, 630, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §840 [no punitive damages may be awarded against city in civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983].)

The immunity established by Govt.C. 818 does not apply to public employees. (Runyon v. Superior Court (1986) 187 C.A.3d 878, 882, 232 C.R. 101, supra, §347.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.92

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

39 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
6. Proper and Improper Defendants.
 b. Employer.
 1. General Rule of Nonliability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1581

[§ 1581] General Rule of Nonliability.

An employer may be held liable for an employee's tort under the doctrine of respondeat superior, but ordinarily the employer cannot be made to pay punitive damages where he or she neither authorized nor ratified the act. (C.C. 3294(b), infra, §1585; Warner v. Southern Pac. Co. (1896) 113 C. 105, 111, 45 P. 187; Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane (1911) 161 C. 689, 705, 120 P. 771; McInerney v. United R. of San Francisco (1920) 50 C.A. 538, 549, 195 P. 958; O'Donnell v. Excelsior Amusement Co. (1930) 110 C.A. 685, 690, 294 P. 737; Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 C.A.2d 735, 740, 218 P.2d 802; Sullivan v. Matt (1955) 130 C.A.2d 134, 144, 278 P.2d 499; Ebaugh v. Rabkin (1972) 22 C.A.3d 891, 895, 99 C.R. 706, citing the text; Henderson v. Security Nat. Bank (1977) 72 C.A.3d 764, 773, 140 C.R. 388; Tri-Delta Engineering v. Insurance Co. of North America (1978) 80 C.A.3d 752, 759, 146 C.R. 14, citing the text; Mathieu v. Norrell Corp. (2004) 115 C.A.4th 1174, 1190, 10 C.R.3d 52; Rest.2d, Torts §909; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 526; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §590 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Flores v. AutoZone West (2008) 161 C.A.4th 373, 386, 74 C.R.3d 178 [customer who was assaulted by employee could not recover punitive damages from employer, as evidence did not support finding that employer had advance notice that employee was unfit, that employer employed him with conscious disregard of rights or safety of others, or that employer ratified or condoned employee's violent treatment of customers].

40 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
6. Proper and Improper Defendants.
 b. Employer.
 2. Act Authorized or Ratified.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1582

[§ 1582] Act Authorized or Ratified.

An award may be made against an individual employer who directed or ratified the act, or a corporation whose superior officials directed or ratified the acts of other employees. (See C.C. 3294(b), infra, §1585; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 C.A.2d 249, 256, 171 P.2d 85 [employer failed to discharge employee guilty of wanton battery]; Farvour v. Geltis (1949) 91 C.A.2d 603, 605, 205 P.2d 424 [landlord, whose actual or purported agent removed windows from tenant's apartment, ignored subsequent Health Department notice to replace them]; Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 250, 219 P.2d 928 [employees who attacked plaintiff were neither reprimanded nor discharged]; Schanafelt v. Seaboard Finance Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 420, 423, 239 P.2d 42 [oppressive collection methods; testimony of agent that this was authorized and usual practice of corporation and that it was informed of facts]; Coats v. Construction & General Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 C.A.3d 908, 915, 93 C.R. 639 [defendant union, with knowledge of outrageous conduct of its business agents, retained them in employment]; Davis v. Local Union No. 11 Int. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO (1971) 16 C.A.3d 686, 697, 94 C.R. 562 [union business agent given unrestricted authority to act and retained in employment]; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1974) 42 C.A.3d 681, 691, 117 C.R. 146; Allard v. Church of Scientology (1976) 58 C.A.3d 439, 452, 129 C.R. 797; Merlo v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 5, 18, 130 C.R. 416 [disapproving instruction that punitive damages could be awarded against employer under the doctrine of respondeat superior; see supra, §1581]; Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 240, 249, 250, 137 C.R. 244 [circumstantial evidence of ratification was sufficient]; Spahn v. Guild Industries Corp. (1979) 94 C.A.3d 143, 156, 156 C.R. 375; Kiseskey v. Carpenters' Trust for Southern Calif. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 222, 234, 235, 192 C.R. 492 [allegation that defendant agents of defendant labor union were "acting within the course and scope of such agency and the permission and consent of their co-defendants" was sufficient pleading to support award against principal]; Siva v. General Tire & Rubber Co. (1983) 146 C.A.3d 152, 159, 194 C.R. 51; Greenfield v. Spectrum Inv. Corp. (1985) 174 C.A.3d 111, 118, 219 C.R. 805; Pusateri v. E.F. Hutton & Co. (1986) 180 C.A.3d 247, 253, 225 C.R. 526; Herrick v. Quality Hotels, Inns & Resorts (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1608, 1618, 24 C.R.2d 203 [action by hotel guard who was threatened with gun by hotel director of security; hotel manager knew director possessed guns in violation of employer's policy, he was present on prior occasion when director was arrested for assault, and he later promoted director]; Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1115, 1140, 122 C.R.2d 139 [corporate liability did not require that ratifying act be performed by person occupying managerial position]; 19 Proof of Facts 3d 437 [punitive damages against employer for complicity in employee's driving misconduct]; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 425 [unfair labor practices]; 19 U.S.F. L. Rev. 311 [nonprofit corporation]; 93 A.L.R.3d 826 [principal's liability for punitive damages because of false arrest or imprisonment, or malicious prosecution, by agent or employee]; BAJI, Nos. 14.73, 14.73.1; CACI, Nos. 3943, 3944.)

The implication from some of the cases, that retention of an employee with knowledge of the facts necessarily leads to an inference of ratification, was challenged in Sullivan v. Matt (1955) 130 C.A.2d 134, 278 P.2d 499. Defendant Matt was the superintendent of defendant railroad's terminal and defendant Miller was the terminal yardmaster. Held, failure to discharge them did not justify an award of exemplary damages against the railroad. "It would be unfair to both the employer and employee to hold that the mere retention of an employee in service, whose special skill and experience were necessary, is a ratification of his malicious acts committed within the course of his employment." (130 C.A.2d 144.)

In Weeks v. Baker & McKenzie (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1128, 74 C.R.2d 510, plaintiff sued a partner in her former law firm and the firm itself, under Govt.C. 12940(h)(1) of the Fair Employment and Housing Act. Plaintiff was awarded punitive damages of $ 225,000 against the partner and $ 3.5 million against the firm, based on evidence of numerous instances of sexual harassment. In affirming the punitive damages award against the firm, the court rejected the following arguments:

(a) That no award can be assessed against the employer without a showing that it itself was guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. All that is necessary to justify a punitive damages award against the employer is to show that it engaged in the conduct defined by C.C. 3294(b) (supra, §1585). (63 C.A.4th 1153.)

(b) That because the employer's liability is merely vicarious, the punitive damages assessed against it can be no greater than those assessed against the individual employee. C.C. 3294(b) authorizes an award against the employer based on the employer's own wrongful conduct, not on the basis of its vicarious liability, and there is nothing in the statute limiting the amount of punitive damages against the employer to the amount awarded against the individual employee. Liability under C.C. 3294(b) is only vicarious to the extent that the employer is liable for the actions of its officer, director, or managing agent in hiring or controlling the offending employee. (63 C.A.4th 1154.)

(c) That C.C. 3294(b) requires that an employer have failed to terminate the offending employee before punitive damages can be awarded against it. The statute does not impose a duty on an employer to terminate a harassing employee but, instead, imposes a duty to take reasonable measures to prevent a known harasser from committing future acts of harassment. (63 C.A.4th 1156.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

41 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
6. Proper and Improper Defendants.
 b. Employer.
3. Liability in Other Situations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1583

[§ 1583] Liability in Other Situations.

The Restatement follows the view of some courts that hold the employer liable in two other situations:

(1) Where the employer knowingly or recklessly employs an unfit employee, e.g., one of vicious character.
(Rest.2d, Torts §909(b).)

(2) Where the employer (usually a corporation) employs an agent in a managerial capacity. This rule is based on the theory that the corporate employer will thereby be deterred from engaging unfit persons for important managerial positions. (Rest.2d, Torts §909(c); see Lowe v. Yolo County Consol. Water Co. (1910) 157 C. 503, 511, 108 P.297; California Grape Control Bd. v. Boothe Fruit Co. (1934) 220 C. 279, 282, 29 P.2d 857; Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 809, 822, 169 C.R. 691, 620 P.2d 141, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §242; Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 C.3d 932, 947, 160 C.R. 141, 603 P.2d 58; Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 712, 60 C.R. 398; Allard v. Church of Scientology (1976) 58 C.A.3d 439, 452, 129 C.R. 797, citing the text; Spahn v. Guild Industries Corp. (1979) 94 C.A.3d 143, 156, 157, 156 C.R. 375; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 813, 174 C.R. 348, infra, §1593; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 140; 30 Western State L. Rev. 31 [employer's liability for punitive damages]; BAJI, No. 14.73 [nonbifurcated trial], BAJI, No. 14.73.1 [bifurcated trial], BAJI, No. 14.74 [agent employed in managerial capacity]; CACI, No. 3943 [nonbifurcated trial], CACI, No. 3944 [bifurcated trial].)

In Kuchta v. Allied Builders Corp. (1971) 21 C.A.3d 541, 98 C.R. 588, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §24, the rule was extended to apply to the relationship of franchisor and franchisee. The franchise agreement provided for extensive control by A over W, particularly the right to terminate the franchise by reason of W's insolvency, failure to maintain sufficient gross sales, and failure to comply with the contractual obligations or with building codes; and the franchise royalty was based entirely on gross receipts. Thus, A received a financial benefit from fraudulently induced contracts, and the agency relationship was equivalent to that of a managerial official. (21 C.A.3d 550.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The title of CACI, No. 3943 has been changed to [Punitive Damages Against Employer or Principal for Conduct of a Specific Agent or Employee--Trial Not Bifurcated].

42 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

6. Proper and Improper Defendants.

b. Employer.

4. Award Only Against Employer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1584

[§ 1584] Award Only Against Employer.

In Browand v. Scott Lumber Co. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 68, 269 P.2d 891, the verdict for assault awarded damages as follows: $ 2,000 compensatory against M, the employee; $ 2,000 compensatory and $ 11,000 punitive against S Co., the employer, and B, its general manager. Held, affirmed. The verdict did not exonerate the employee so as to negate malice; it was merely silent on punitive damages as to him, and a juror's question indicated that the jury took into consideration M's criminal conviction for the assault. "[S]ince evidence of a defendant's wealth is admissible to enable the jury to determine what amount of punishment should be imposed by compelling him to pay a fine, ... it would appear equally proper to consider, as obviously the jury here did, what other punishment the defendant [M] had received for the same act, and in the exercise of its discretion to conclude that his conviction and fine in the justice's court was sufficient punishment for him. In other words, the jury might well have determined that [M] had been punished but that [B] and the lumber company had not, and by its verdict sought to make the 'example as well as the punishment fit the offense.' " (125 C.A.2d 74.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

43 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
6. Proper and Improper Defendants.
 b. Employer.
5. Codification of Rules.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1585

[§ 1585] Codification of Rules.

(1) In General. C.C. 3294(b), added in 1980, codifies the rule of nonliability (see supra, §1581) and its exceptions (see supra, §1582 et seq.). The employer is not liable unless one of the following conditions applies:

(a) The employer "had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others."

(b) The employer "authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages are awarded."

(c) The employer "was personally guilty of oppression, fraud or malice."

With respect to a corporate employer, "the advance knowledge and conscious disregard, authorization, ratification or act of oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation." (See C.C. 3294(b).)

Evidence of the employer's ratification and any other finding under C.C. 3294(b) must be by clear and convincing evidence, just as is specifically required by C.C. 3294(a) (supra, §1559). (Barton v. Alexander Hamilton Life Ins. Co. of America (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1640, 1642, 3 C.R.3d 258 [whether insurance company ratified agent's fraud].)

(2) Definition of Managing Agent. In White v. Ultramar (1999) 21 C.4th 563, 88 C.R.2d 19, 981 P.2d 944, plaintiff was dismissed by defendant corporation, which operated a chain of convenience stores, after testifying for another employee at an unemployment compensation hearing. The supervisor who fired plaintiff was a zone manager for defendant, responsible for managing 8 stores with at least 65 employees. The individual store managers reported to the zone manager. The zone manager, in turn, reported to department heads in defendant's retail management department, but they delegated most of the responsibility for running the stores to her. Plaintiff sued defendant for wrongful termination and received a substantial award of punitive damages, in addition to compensatory relief. The Court of Appeal affirmed, upholding the punitive damages award on the ground that the zone manager was a "managing agent" under C.C. 3294(b) because she was the supervisor who fired plaintiff. The Supreme Court granted review to resolve a conflict in the Courts of Appeal over how to define the statutory term "managing agent." Some courts (see, e.g., Stephens v. Coldwell Banker Commercial Group (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1394, 1404, 245 C.R. 606), including the Court of Appeal in this case, broadly defined the term to include supervisory employees who, although their decisionmaking authority may be limited, possess the ability to hire and fire company employees. Others (see, e.g., Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 C.A.4th 397, 421, 27 C.R.2d 457) restricted the term's application to those employees who exercise substantial discretion in their decisionmaking so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy. Held, judgment awarding punitive damages affirmed, but adopting the restricted definition of "managing agent."

(a) Before its 1980 amendment, the punitive damages statute, C.C. 3294, simply provided for the recovery of punitive damages, in an action for breach of an obligation not arising from contract, against a defendant who was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant. C.C. 3294(b) was added in 1980 and amended in 1982. The drafters' goals were to avoid imposing punitive damages on employers who were merely negligent or reckless and to distinguish ordinary respondeat superior liability from corporate liability for punitive damages. Thus, for corporate punitive damages liability, the wrongful act giving rise to the exemplary damages must be committed by an "officer, director, or managing agent." (21 C.4th 571.)

(b) Under the principle of ejusdem generis, general statutory terms following a listing of specific classes of persons or things must be construed as applying to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those listed. Applying the doctrine to interpret "managing agent," it must be noted that the Legislature placed that term next to the terms "officer" and "director," intending that a managing agent be more than a mere supervisory employee. The managing agent must be someone who exercises substantial discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy. (21 C.4th 573.)

(c) The Court of Appeal's overly broad interpretation of the term "managing agent" in this case effectively abrogates the statute's "officer, director, or managing agent" requirement. A rule defining managing agent as any supervisor who can hire or fire employees, regardless of whether he or she possesses substantial authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy, effectively allows punitive damages liability without proof of anything more than simple tort liability. Equating mere supervisory status with managing agent status would create a rule where corporate employers are liable for punitive damages in most employment cases. This rule would defeat the Legislature's intent to discourage corporate acts of oppression, fraud, or malice under C.C. 3294(b), and compromise the limited role and deterrent purpose of punitive damages awards to punish wrongdoers and thereby deter the commission of wrongful acts. It might also discourage employers from making good faith efforts to enforce policies that forbid discrimination or retaliation. (21 C.4th 575.)

(d) The Legislature, in amending C.C. 3294(b), intended that principal liability for punitive damages not depend on employees' managerial levels, but on the extent to which they exercise substantial discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy. Thus, supervisors who have broad discretionary powers and exercise substantial discretionary authority in the corporation are managing agents. Conversely, supervisors who have no discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy are not managing agents, even though they have the ability to hire or fire other employees. In order to demonstrate that an employee is a true managing agent under the statute, a plaintiff seeking punitive damages must show that the employee exercised substantial discretionary authority over significant aspects of a corporation's business. (21 C.4th 576.)

(e) The scope of a corporate employee's discretion and authority is a question of fact for decision on a case-by-case basis. Under the definition established here, and viewing all facts in favor of the trial court's judgment, the zone manager was a managing agent. The supervision of 8 retail stores and 65 employees is a significant aspect of defendant's business. The zone manager exercised substantial discretionary authority over vital aspects of defendant's business that included managing numerous stores on a daily basis and making significant decisions affecting both store and company policy. In firing plaintiff for testifying at an unemployment compensation hearing, she exercised substantial discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determined corporate policy in a most crucial aspect of defendant's business. (21 C.4th 577.) (See Textron Financial Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1061, 1079, 13 C.R.3d 586 [insurance solicitor as insurer's managing agent; relying on White v. Ultramar]; 30 Western State L. Rev. 31 [White v. Ultramar].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Corporate employer: C.C. 3294(b) does not state that punitive damages cannot be awarded against a corporation for the conduct of an employee, unless the employee is a corporate officer, director, or managing agent. To the contrary, the statute says that punitive damages cannot be awarded against a corporation for conduct of an employee, unless a corporate officer, director, or managing agent has the requisite knowledge, authorized or ratified the employee's wrongful conduct, or personally committed the act of oppression. (Myers v. Trendwest Resorts (2007) 148 C.A.4th 1403, 1435, 56 C.R.3d 501 [although supervisor who allegedly harassed employee was not corporate officer, director, or managing agent, critical inquiry was degree of discretion supervisor possessed in making decisions that would determine corporate policy, and triable issue of fact remained whether upper management had sufficient knowledge of supervisor's unfitness to provide basis for punitive damages].)

(2) Definition of Managing Agent. See Gelfo v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 34, 63, 43 C.R.3d 874 [terminated employee claiming disability discrimination based on failure to rehire him after layoff did not establish that vice president was employer's "managing agent" for purposes of punitive damages award against employer; employee presented no evidence that vice president exercised substantial discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determined corporate policy]; Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 C.A.4th 688, 715, 44 C.R.3d 702 [attorney violated duty as escrow holder in stock sales transaction and was liable to prospective seller, along with firm, for value of converted stock; absent firm's advance knowledge or ratification of attorney's actions and absent evidence that attorney exercised substantial discretionary authority over significant aspects of firm's business, imposition of punitive damages against firm was barred as matter of law]; Wysinger v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 413, 428, 69 C.R.3d 1 [employee's supervisor was managing agent, and thus his retaliatory conduct towards employee warranted punitive damages award in action against employer under Fair Employment and Housing Act; supervisor was vice president of district office operations, regional managers and regional vice president reported directly to him, he was responsible for day-to-day operations and strategy, and he had authority to move district managers to different offices].

44 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
a. Tort Actions.
1. Personal Torts.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1586

[§ 1586] Personal Torts.

Any tort that involves sufficiently reprehensible conduct presents a proper case for punitive damages. The typical examples are intentional torts to the person, such as the following:

(1) Assault and Battery. (See Livesey v. Stock (1929) 208 C. 315, 321, 281 P. 70 [assault with deadly weapon]; Ingram v. Higgins (1951) 103 C.A.2d 287, 290, 229 P.2d 385 [assault by motorist on police officer, striking him with bottle and running car against him]; Sheward v. Magit (1951) 106 C.A.2d 163, 167, 234 P.2d 708 [wilful battery with fists, $ 3,525 compensatory, $ 1,000 exemplary]; Sullivan v. Matt (1955) 130 C.A.2d 134, 143, 278 P.2d 499 [vicious attack with fists and pick handle]; Bergevin v. Morger (1955) 130 C.A.2d 590, 593, 279 P.2d 136 [unprovoked attack, kicking plaintiffs]; 6 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Assault and Battery §151 et seq.; 98 A.L.R.3d 870 [criminal liability as barring or mitigating recovery of punitive damages]; BAJI, No. 14.62; CACI, No. 3925.)

(2) False Imprisonment. (See Coyne v. Nelson (1951) 107 C.A.2d 469, 475, 237 P.2d 45; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §149 et seq.)

(3) Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. (See Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 404, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459 [rejecting contention that compensatory and punitive damages for emotional distress constitute improper double recovery].)

(4) Nuisance Intentionally Maintained. (See Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 C.A.3d 903, 920, 162 C.R. 194, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §146 [breach of warranty of habitability].)

(5) Wrongful Death Resulting From Homicide. C.C. 3294(d) creates a right of action under C.C.P. 377.10 et seq. (see supra, §23) based on death resulting "from a homicide for which the defendant has been convicted of a felony, whether or not the decedent died instantly or survived the fatal injury for some period of time." The C.C.P. 377.62 procedures for joinder and consolidation apply to prevent multiple recoveries of punitive damages based on the same wrongful act. (C.C. 3294(d).) (See 15 Pacific L. J. 693.)

(6) Stalking. (See supra, §662.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Assault and Battery. See 6 Am.Jur.2d (2008 ed.), Assault and Battery §142 et seq.

(2) False Imprisonment. See 32 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), False Imprisonment §146 et seq.

(4) Nuisance Intentionally Maintained.

Stoiber case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §150.

45 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

2. Fraud.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1587

[§ 1587] Fraud.

Fraud cases in which punitive damage awards were sustained are numerous. (See BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 1595, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 822, supra, §1568 [reversing grossly excessive punitive damages award for automobile sales fraud as denial of due process]; Eatwell v. Beck (1953) 41 C.2d 128, 134, 257 P.2d 643; Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C.2d 736, 743, 336 P.2d 534, infra, §1713; Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 922, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662; Wyatt v. Union Mortg. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 773, 790, 157 C.R. 392, 598 P.2d 45; Nevada Nat. Leasing Co. v. Hereford (1984) 36 C.3d 146, 153, 203 C.R. 118, 680 P.2d 1077 [fraudulent bid at auction, pursuant to conspiracy to raise prices by secret fictitious bids]; Taylor v. Wright (1945) 69 C.A.2d 371, 384, 159 P.2d 980; Lawson v. Town & Country Shops (1958) 159 C.A.2d 196, 204, 323 P.2d 843; Wright v. Rogers (1959) 172 C.A.2d 349, 368, 342 P.2d 447; Southern Calif. Disinfecting Co. v. Lomkin (1960) 183 C.A.2d 431, 451, 7 C.R. 43 [fraudulent appropriation of employer's customer lists]; Sharp v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (1964) 225 C.A.2d 648, 653, 37 C.R. 585; Spencer v. Harmon Enterprises (1965) 234 C.A.2d 614, 626, 44 C.R. 683; Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 713, 719, 60 C.R. 398, supra, §1177; Barth v. B. F. Goodrich Tire Co. (1968) 265 C.A.2d 228, 240, 71 C.R. 306 [dictum: no punitive damages awarded]; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1968) 265 C.A.2d 921, 927, 71 C.R. 764; Black v. Shearson, Hammill & Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 362, 369, 72 C.R. 157, supra, §795; Oakes v. McCarthy Co. (1968) 267 C.A.2d 231, 262, 73 C.R. 127; Mahon v. Berg (1968) 267 C.A.2d 588, 592, 73 C.R. 356; Esparza v. Specht (1976) 55 C.A.3d 1, 8, 127 C.R. 493, infra, §1607; Glendale Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 101, 135, 135 C.R. 802 [false promise inducing plaintiff to make contract for improvement loan]; O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 798, 806, 142 C.R. 487, supra, §817 [defendant landlord intentionally misled plaintiff tenant about serious potential danger]; Walker v. Signal Cos. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 982, 996, 149 C.R. 119, supra, §787 [punitive damages were awarded where complaint in separate counts alleged both breach of contract and fraud]; Rosener v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1980) 110 C.A.3d 740, 748, 168 C.R. 237; Notrica v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1999) 70 C.A.4th 911, 945, 83 C.R.2d 89 [evidence of State Compensation Insurance Fund's concealment of change in method of estimating reasonable claim reserve level, resulting in higher premiums and lower dividends, supported punitive damages award]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §414; 19 A.L.R.4th 801 [actions by purchasers of real property].)

In Walton v. Anderson (1970) 6 C.A.3d 1003, 86 C.R. 345, defendants agreed to sell 270 shares of stock in a corporation almost wholly owned by defendant A, for $ 40,500, which sum was received and used by the corporation. No permit had been sought or could have been issued. In this action, plaintiff was awarded compensatory damages of $ 40,500, with $ 5,000 punitive damages against defendant A and $ 1,000 punitive damages against defendant W. Held, affirmed. Punitive damages were particularly appropriate in this case; compensatory damages--restitution--would have little deterrent effect, for the wrongdoer would run no risk beyond returning what was wrongfully obtained. (6 C.A.3d 1010.) Punitive damages may not be awarded for negligent misrepresentation. (See Reid v. Moskovitz (1989) 208 C.A.3d 29, 32, 255 C.R. 910.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

46 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

3. Trespass or Injury to Real Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1588

[§ 1588] Trespass or Injury to Real Property.

Wilful trespass or intentional injury to real property are occasionally grounds for an award of punitive damages. (See Brenner v. Haley (1960) 185 C.A.2d 183, 188, 8 C.R. 224 [plaintiff had lease on fence on which he painted advertisements; defendant wrongfully painted out signs; compensatory $ 1,500, exemplary $ 2,000]; Roth v. Shell Oil Co. (1960) 185 C.A.2d 676, 681, 8 C.R. 514 [defendant company, without terminating its dealer sales contract, removed its poles and painted out its signs, etc., on plaintiff's property; compensatory $ 540, exemplary $ 2,000]; Donnell v. Bisso Bros. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 38, 44, 88 C.R. 645, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §400 [roadbed was bulldozed after action was filed; self-help was improper, because defendant had no title to property destroyed; $ 5,000 punitive]; Zimmer v. Dykstra (1974) 39 C.A.3d 422, 437, 114 C.R. 380 [servient owner's malicious interference with prescriptive easement of access to garage; "somewhat analogous to the 'spite' fence or nuisance cases"]; Goshgarian v. George (1984) 161 C.A.3d 1214, 1224, 208 C.R. 321.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

47 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

4. Wrongful Taking of Personal Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1589

[§ 1589] Wrongful Taking of Personal Property.

Conversion is a tort that often justifies an award of punitive damages. (See Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 C.2d 674, 681, 117 P.2d 331 [money]; Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 922, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662; Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 C.A.3d 481, 136 C.R. 132, infra, §1622; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 678, 192 C.R. 793; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §125; 54 A.L.R.2d 1361 [punitive damages for conversion of personalty by one other than chattel mortgagee or conditional seller]; 35 A.L.R.3d 1016 [wrongful seizure of chattel by one claiming security interest].)

In Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 87 C.R. 226, B bought a used Cadillac from defendant S, a used car dealer. The car was financed by defendant Pacific, but by a mistake of S's employee, a negotiable certificate of full ownership was given to B. B sold the car to plaintiff, a bona fide purchaser, who, under the law, received full title. When B defaulted in payments, defendants discovered plaintiff's possession, and Pacific, without inquiry about plaintiff's ownership, had the car repossessed at 3 a.m. In response to an inquiry from plaintiff's attorney, Pacific made several statements denying its actions and its interest in the car; and S subsequently obtained a new certificate of ownership by falsely representing to the Department of Motor Vehicles that the original had been lost. Later, S sold the car to a third party. In this action for damages for conversion, plaintiff received a verdict and judgment for $ 2,812 compensatory damages, and punitive damages of $ 25,000 against Pacific and $ 8,000 against S. Held, affirmed.

The responsible officers of Pacific--operations manager, district manager, and house counsel--participated in the acts recited, "a high-handed, tortious, and perhaps felonious, taking" of plaintiff's property. (8 C.A.3d 348.) This "whole sorry spectacle of corporate arrogance" had its genesis in a corporate policy: "Whenever in the course of its business some person, rightfully (as here) or otherwise, adversely claimed ownership or a right to possession of a vehicle, the policy required that the car be seized by stealth or by force after which the company would 'ask questions.' It becomes obvious to any reasonable mind that such a policy must be very profitable. With its alert staff of counsel, repossessioners, and other policy enforcers, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of adverse claims which must be made annually are, right or wrong, speedily resolved in Pacific's favor. It is just as obvious that many victims of the policy must be financially unable, or for other reasons reluctant, to cope with Pacific's economic resources and are obliged to relinquish just claims. Such a policy is malicious and oppressive; it is in the public interest that it be curbed." (8 C.A.3d 353.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

48 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

5. Breach of Covenant of Good Faith.

aa. Former Law: Bad Faith Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1590

[§ 1590] Former Law: Bad Faith Rule.

In Seaman's Direct Buying Service v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 752, 769, 206 C.R. 354, 686 P.2d 1158, the court held that the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is breached, and a tort action for compensatory or punitive damages lies, where a party attempts to avoid liability by denying, in bad faith and without probable cause, that the contract exists. (For full discussion of case, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §165.)

(a) "While the proposition that the law implies a covenant of good faith and fair dealing in all contracts is well established, the proposition advanced by Seaman's--that breach of the covenant always gives rise to an action in tort--is not so clear. In holding that a tort action is available for breach of the covenant in an insurance contract, we have emphasized the 'special relationship' between insurer and insured, characterized by elements of public interest, adhesion, and fiduciary responsibility. ... No doubt there are other relationships with similar characteristics and deserving of similar legal treatment." (36 C.3d 768.)

(b) "When we move from such special relationships to consideration of the tort remedy in the context of the ordinary commercial contract, we move into largely uncharted and potentially dangerous waters. Here, parties of roughly equal bargaining power are free to shape the contours of their agreement and to include provisions for attorney fees and liquidated damages in the event of breach. They may not be permitted to disclaim the covenant of good faith but they are free, within reasonable limits at least, to agree upon the standards by which application of the covenant is to be measured. In such contracts, it may be difficult to distinguish between breach of the covenant and breach of contract, and there is the risk that interjecting tort remedies will intrude upon the expectations of the parties. This is not to say that tort remedies have no place in such a commercial context, but that it is wise to proceed with caution in determining their scope and application." (36 C.3d 769.)

In accordance with this caution, later cases generally refused to extend the Seaman's tort to wrongful termination of employment and to breaches of various types of commercial contracts. (See Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 C.3d 654, 254 C.R. 211, 765 P.2d 373, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §271 [repudiating rule of Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 C.3d 167, 164 C.R. 839, 610 P.2d 1330, that employee can sue in tort for wrongful discharge]; Wallis v. Superior Court (1984) 160 C.A.3d 1109, 1119, 207 C.R. 123, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §271; Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 C.A.3d 241, 253, 208 C.R. 524; Quigley v. Pet (1984) 162 C.A.3d 877, 890, 891, 208 C.R. 394 [following instruction was reversible error: "If a contracting party fails to deal fairly and in good faith it is subject to liability for all damages proximately resulting from such conduct"]; Koehrer v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 1155, 1167, 226 C.R. 820; Multiplex Ins. Agency v. California Life Ins. Co. (1987) 189 C.A.3d 925, 930, 235 C.R. 12 [analysis of Seaman's and subsequent cases and suggesting that Seaman's rule might apply not only where defendant denied existence of contract, but also where defendant admitted existence of contract but denied liability under it]; Rogoff v. Grabowski (1988) 200 C.A.3d 624, 630, 246 C.R. 185 [no allegation that lessor of limousine who left plaintiffs stranded at party denied contract's existence]; Kruse v. Bank of America (1988) 202 C.A.3d 38, 58, 248 C.R. 217 [no proof of existence of underlying contract]; Mitsui Mfrs. Bank v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 726, 731, 260 C.R. 793; Kittredge Sports Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1045, 1047, 1048, 261 C.R. 857; Lynch & Freytag v. Cooper (1990) 218 C.A.3d 603, 611, 267 C.R. 189, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §734 [no Seaman's tort committed by answer to complaint]; Trustees of the Capital Wholesale Elec. Co. Profit Sharing & Trust Fund v. Shearson Lehman Bros. (1990) 221 C.A.3d 617, 623, 270 C.R. 566 [insufficient allegations of special relationship between investors and brokerage house to justify tort damages for latter's breach of covenant of good faith]; Careau & Co. v. Security Pac. Business Credit (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1371, 1396, 272 C.R. 387 [whether tort damages might be allowed for breach of implied covenant in noninsurance cases appears to be increasingly "problematic"]; DuBarry Int. v. Southwest Forest Industries (1991) 231 C.A.3d 552, 571, 282 C.R. 181 [tort recognized by Seaman's "is limited to the bad faith denial of the existence of the contract and cannot be extended to the assertion of other defenses to liability"]; Peterson Dev. Co. v. Torrey Pines Bank (1991) 233 C.A.3d 103, 119, 284 C.R. 367 [mere fact that lender presented borrower with "escrow statement" did not create special relationship removing transaction from ordinary commercial context]; Harris v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 70, 74, 17 C.R.2d 649; Stoll v. Shuff (1994) 22 C.A.4th 22, 28, 27 C.R.2d 249 [no requirement that denial of existence of contract be expressly stated or be made directly to plaintiff]; Bionghi v. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1358, 1370, 83 C.R.2d 388 [plaintiff had no cause of action for breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing where plaintiff relied on same acts and sought same damages as in plaintiff's breach of contract claim and no special relationship was alleged].)

The Seaman's decision generated extensive commentary. (See, e.g., 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 509 [discussion of majority and dissenting opinions in Seaman's case]; 39 Stanf. L. Rev. 161 [economic analysis of damages for bad faith breach]; 21 U.S.F. L. Rev. 419, 445, 452, 470 [Seaman's and its progeny]; 44 A.L.R.4th 1131 [damages recoverable for wrongful discharge of at-will employee].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Full discussion of Seaman's case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §169.

49 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

5. Breach of Covenant of Good Faith.

bb. Bad Faith Rule Limited to Insurance Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1591

[§ 1591] Bad Faith Rule Limited to Insurance Cases.

The reasoning in Seaman's Direct Buying Service v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 752, 769, 206 C.R. 354, 686 P.2d 1158, supra, §1590, was abrogated and the opinion was overruled as "wrongfully decided" in Freeman & Mills v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C.4th 85, 44 C.R.2d 420, 900 P.2d 669, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §166, involving defendant's promise to pay a law firm for its expenses expended on defendant's behalf. "[T]he Seaman's decision has generated uniform confusion and uncertainty regarding its scope and application, and widespread doubt about the necessity or desirability of its holding. These doubts and criticisms, express or implied, in decisions from this state and from other state and federal courts, echoed by the generally adverse scholarly comment ... , convince us that Seaman's should be overruled in favor of a general rule precluding tort recovery for noninsurance contract breach, at least in the absence of violation of 'an independent duty arising from principles of tort law' ... other than the bad faith denial of the existence of, or liability under, the breached contract." (See Norager v. Nakamura (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1817, 1820, 50 C.R.2d 481 [Freeman & Mills applied retroactive to appeals pending on date it was decided]; Brown v. California Pension Administrators & Consultants (1996) 45 C.A.4th 333, 346, 52 C.R.2d 788 [following Freeman & Mills].) (On insurance cases involving breach of covenant of good faith, see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §240 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Freeman & Mills case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §170.

50 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

5. Breach of Covenant of Good Faith.

cc. Breach by Surety.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1592

[§ 1592] Breach by Surety.

In Cates Const. v. Talbot Partners (1999) 21 C.4th 28, 86 C.R.2d 855, 980 P.2d 407, a commercial surety issued a bond in favor of a real estate developer and the bank that provided financing for a construction project as coobligees guaranteeing the contract performance of the general contractor on the project. In a subsequent action by the contractor and the surety against the developer and the bank, the developer and the bank cross-complained against the surety for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the performance bond. The trial court determined that the surety had breached the covenant and awarded tort damages, including punitive damages. Held, reversed.

(a) The coobligees cannot, as a matter of law, recover in tort for the surety's alleged breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in the performance bond. Because the covenant of good faith and fair dealing essentially is a contract term that aims to effectuate the contractual intentions of the parties, compensation for its breach is limited to contract rather than tort remedies, other than in the insurance context. (21 C.4th 43.)

(b) The insurance policy cases represent a major departure from traditional principles of contract law that should not be extended to other contract settings. (21 C.4th 46, citing Freeman & Mills v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C.4th 85, 94, 44 C.R.2d 420, 900 P.2d 669, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §166.) A construction performance bond is neither an insurance policy nor a contract otherwise marked by elements of adhesion, public interest, or fiduciary responsibility, such that an extracontractual remedy is necessitated in the interests of social policy. Obligees have ample power to protect their interests through negotiation, and sureties, for the most part, are deterred from acting unreasonably by the threat of strong statutory and administrative sanctions and penalties, including license suspension and revocation. Contract remedies provide adequate compensation for breach of a construction bond. (21 C.4th 47.)

(c) Because the coobligees cannot, as a matter of law, recover in tort for the surety's alleged breach of the covenant, they also cannot recover punitive damages. Under C.C. 3294(a), punitive damages, which are designed to punish and deter statutorily defined types of wrongful conduct, are available only in actions for breach of an obligation not arising from contract. In the absence of an independent tort, punitive damages may not be awarded for breach of contract even when the defendant's conduct in breaching the contract is wilful, fraudulent, or malicious. (21 C.4th 61.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Freeman & Mills case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §170.

51 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

6. Products Liability Action.

aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1593

[§ 1593] In General.

The issue whether punitive damages may properly be awarded in a products liability case was elaborately considered in Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 757, 174 C.R. 348. G was fatally injured and her passenger son was permanently injured when their 1972 Ford Pinto, stalled on a freeway, was struck from the rear by another car and burst into flames. The action was brought for wrongful death and personal injuries against Ford Motor Co. on the theory of strict liability for design defects in the car's gas tank. The evidence showed that the 1972 Pinto was conceived as a low-priced subcompact automobile; that the gas tank was placed behind the rear axle leaving insufficient crush space, and also lacked reinforcing members; that crash tests by the company's engineers disclosed the inability of the car to withstand rear-end crashes; that essential changes in the design could have been made at a moderate cost, but the highest level of management nevertheless decided to market the car with its known defects. The jury verdicts were: for the injured son, $ 2,516,000 compensatory damages and $ 125,000,000 punitive damages; for the heirs, $ 559,680 compensatory damages. On defendant's motion for a new trial, the son was required to remit all but $ 3,500,000 in punitive damages. Held, judgment on the verdict affirmed.

(a) Conscious disregard of safety by manufacturer. Defendant contended that the "malice" requirement of C.C. 3294 (see supra, §1572) is incompatible with the unintentional tort of marketing a defectively designed product. The decisional law is to the contrary. Many cases have interpreted the term to cover "a conscious disregard of the probability that the actor's conduct will result in injury to others." (119 C.A.3d 808, citing Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 890, 157 C.R. 693, 598 P.2d 854, supra, §1575, and Dawes v. Superior Court (1980) 111 C.A.3d 82, 168 C.R. 319, supra, §1576.) This interpretation "to encompass conduct evincing callous and conscious disregard of public safety by those who manufacture and market mass produced articles is consonant with and furthers the objectives of punitive damages." (119 C.A.3d 810; see supra, §1559.) And there is no constitutional infirmity in applying C.C. 3294 to an unintentional tort. (119 C.A.3d 811.)

(b) Sufficiency of evidence of conscious disregard of safety. "Through the results of the crash tests Ford knew that the Pinto's fuel tank and rear structure would expose consumers to serious injury or death in a 20 to 30 mile-per-hour collision. There was evidence that Ford could have corrected the hazardous design defects at minimal cost but decided to defer correction of the shortcoming by engaging in a cost-benefit analysis balancing human lives and limbs against corporate profits. Ford's institutional mentality was shown to be one of callous indifference to public safety. There was substantial evidence that Ford's conduct constituted 'conscious disregard' of the probability of injury to members of the consuming public." (119 C.A.3d 813.)

(c) Corporate responsibility for act of managerial agent. The evidence brought the case within the tests of Rest.2d, Torts §909(c)(d) (see supra, §1583): The results of the crash tests were forwarded up the chain of command, making management aware of the design defects. (119 C.A.3d 813, 814.)

(d) Amount of punitive damage award. Defendant contended that the amount, even as reduced by the trial judge, was excessive in that it was many times over the highest previously upheld in California, and exceeded maximum civil penalties that could be imposed under federal or state statutes. This contention is not persuasive:

(1) The amount awarded in other cases is not a valid consideration, and the fact that an award may set a precedent does not render it suspect. (119 C.A.3d 819.)

(2) Applying the criteria of Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620: (a) The conduct of Ford's management "was reprehensible in the extreme," and "endangered the lives of thousands of Pinto purchasers." (b) Taking into account defendant's wealth, the punitive award was .005% of Ford's net worth and .03% of its 1976 net income; considering the amount of compensatory damages, the ratio of punitive to compensatory was 1.4 to 1. (c) As to deterrent effect, "[a]n award which affects the company's pricing of its product and thereby affects its competitive advantage would serve as a deterrent." (119 C.A.3d 819, 820.)

(3) The disparity between the maximum fines and monetary penalties and the punitive damage award is not a valid objection. "It is precisely because monetary penalties under government regulations prescribing business standards or the criminal law are so inadequate and ineffective as deterrents against a manufacturer and distributor of mass produced defective products that punitive damages must be of sufficient amount to discourage such practices. Instead of showing that the punitive damage award was excessive, the comparison between the award and the maximum penalties under state and federal statutes and regulations governing automotive safety demonstrates the propriety of the amount of punitive damages awarded." (119 C.A.3d 820.)

In Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 952, 192 C.R. 219, proof was offered that defendant manufacturer discovered an engineering error in developing a properly designed prosthetic device, but concealed the error from the medical profession, its own sales personnel, and the orthopedic surgeon who had designed the device. Plaintiff was injured as a result of implanting the defective device in her knee joint. The jury awarded compensatory damages of $ 25,000 and punitive damages of $ 500,000. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Relation of punitive to compensatory damages. The award represented a ratio of 20:1, and defendant contended that in California no ratio in a products liability case had exceeded 2:1 (or 7:1 in any jurisdiction). Products liability design cases are distinguishable in that to characterize a cost-benefit decision as conscious disregard of safety of others may sometimes operate unfairly and may tend to discourage product development. But the present case does not involve a design decision; defendant deliberately chose to market a defective product for business reasons. (143 C.A.3d 968.) Its conduct "was marginally less monstrously inhumane than the conduct of defendant in Grimshaw, since concealment of Richards' manufacturing error for the sole purpose of protecting its profits merely threatened excruciating pain and crippling immobility to thousands of arthritic patients and anguish to their physicians and their families, not the fiery death that the auto manufacturer visited upon its customers. However, insofar as reprehensibility of conduct was concerned, the jury's award of punitive damages was fully justified." (143 C.A.3d 966.)

(b) Possibility of multiple awards. The contention that a high ratio is improper in products liability cases, because of the risk of punishing a manufacturer several times for the same conduct, is answered in Grimshaw and Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment e. In any subsequent case, the court may take into consideration punitive damages that have been awarded in prior suits and that may be awarded in the future. (143 C.A.3d 969.)

Other decisions and commentators have addressed punitive damages in products liability cases. (See Siva v. General Tire & Rubber Co. (1983) 146 C.A.3d 152, 158, 194 C.R. 51; Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 374, 395, 397, 196 C.R. 117 [intrauterine birth control device]; West v. Johnson & Johnson Products (1985) 174 C.A.3d 831, 867, 220 C.R. 437 [vaginal tampon]; Gawara v. United States Brass Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1341, 1360, 74 C.R.2d 663 [in strict liability case, award of punitive damages requires something more than mere commission of tort]; Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1115, 1144, 122 C.R.2d 139 [to get vehicle to market quickly, policymakers decided to forgo testing that had previously established that better design and crush resistance was needed; this evidence showed wilful and conscious disregard of safety of others]; 30 Proof of Facts 3d 351 [proving punitive damages in products liability actions]; 54 Am.Jur. Trials 443 [Punitive Damages in Products Liability Litigation]; 4 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 405 [Punitive Damages in Mass-Marketed Product Litigation]; 6 Pepperdine L. Rev. 139; 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 895; 52 Stanf. L. Rev. 1809 [punitive damages as deterrent to economic efficiency]; 52 Stanf. L. Rev. 1821 [corporate benefit-cost analysis respecting risk of punitive damages liability]; 13 A.L.R.4th 52 [allowance of punitive damages in products liability case]; 108 A.L.R.5th 343 [liability of cigarette manufacturers for punitive damages].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1202, 1230, 45 C.R.3d 265 [award of punitive damages was proper where passenger was provided only with lap belt, rather than three-point harness]; 24 A.L.R.6th 497 [recovery of punitive damages for exposure to asbestos].

52 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

6. Products Liability Action.

bb. Market Share Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1594

[§ 1594] Market Share Cases.

In Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 C.A.3d 878, 213 C.R. 547, the court held that in an action based on the market share theory of liability for injuries sustained by ingestion of DES (Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 C.3d 588, 163 C.R. 132, 607 P.2d 924, supra, §1486), punitive damages cannot be awarded.

(a) The Sindell opinion deals solely with compensatory damages, and furnishes no authority for a punitive damages award. (167 C.A.3d 884.) A 1983 federal district court decision (Morris), applying what it thought to be the California law, held that a punitive damages award may be made. (167 C.A.3d 881, 885.) The Morris opinion relied in part on the analogy of punitive damage awards against an employer, but "we view the employer-employee-victim connection" to be substantially different from "the manufacturer-unidentifiable drug-victim connection." (167 C.A.3d 886.)

(b) Public policy considerations call for rejection of punitive damage awards in market share liability cases:

(1) There is a potential for "overkill," when early claimants obtain large awards that may exhaust the economic resources of the alleged wrongdoers and preclude satisfaction of awards of compensatory damages to future claimants. (167 C.A.3d 886.)

(2) The Sindell formula provides a logical and reasonable basis for awarding and apportioning compensatory damages, but it is inappropriate for an award of punitive damages. (a) The award is an individualized punishment and deterrent imposed on a particular and identified wrongdoer for acting with malice or oppression. (b) The measure of that malice or oppression requires the determination of the state of mind of the particular defendant. (167 C.A.3d 887, 888.)

(3) One factor in the imposition of punitive damages is the wealth of the defendant; and in each case, there would probably be a lessening of a defendant's net worth that would affect the amount of punitive damages that could be assessed in subsequent cases. (167 C.A.3d 886.)

(4) In a market share case, some suppliers not named as defendants will fortuitously escape liability, while others, whose conduct was no more culpable and who may not have caused the plaintiff any harm will, by reason of their joinder as defendants, remain subject to the burden of punitive damages. (167 C.A.3d 889.)

(c) "We conclude that the foregoing public policy considerations, i.e., preservation of the rights of future claimants to compensatory damages, the potential for overkill, the punitive effect of numerous and substantial compensatory awards to present and future claimants, the attenuated deterrent effect of long belated awards, and the inherent unfairness of punitive damages in the market share scheme, preclude such damages in market share liability cases." (167 C.A.3d 889.) (See Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1645, 1669, 57 C.R.2d 525 [refusing to extend reasoning of Magallanes v. Superior Court to asbestos litigation, where each plaintiff must prove individual injury and causation]; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 185.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

53 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

7. Civil Rights Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1595

[§ 1595] Civil Rights Action.

Smith v. Wade (1983) 461 U.S. 30, 103 S.Ct. 1625, 75 L.Ed.2d 632, upholding an award of punitive damages in an action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §816 et seq.), made a positive pronouncement on their availability, noting that the precise issue had never before been squarely presented (103 S.Ct. 1629, 75 L.Ed.2d 638, 639.) The action was brought by Wade, a youthful offender in a Missouri Reformatory, against Smith, a guard, alleging that Smith, with knowledge that an assault against him was likely, placed him in a cell with other inmates who beat and sexually assaulted him.

(a) Standard for award: actual intent is not essential. In the early common law, a majority of jurisdictions followed the rule that punitive damages could be awarded without a showing of actual ill will or intent to injure. In other words, they permitted punitive damage awards on variously stated standards of negligence, recklessness, or other culpable conduct. (103 S.Ct. 1632, 1634, 75 L.Ed.2d 642, 644.) The same rule applies today, under state cases and Rest.2d, Torts §908(2) and Comment b: "Punitive damages may be awarded for conduct that is outrageous, because of the defendant's evil motive or his reckless indifference to the rights of others." (103 S.Ct. 1635, 75 L.Ed.2d 646.)

(b) Standard under §1983 is the same. There is no reason why a person whose federally guaranteed rights have been violated should be granted a more restrictive remedy than a person asserting an ordinary tort cause of action; "reckless or callous disregard for the plaintiff's rights, as well as intentional violations of federal law, should be sufficient to trigger a jury's consideration of the appropriateness of punitive damages." (103 S.Ct. 1637, 75 L.Ed.2d 648.)

(c) Same threshold for compensatory and punitive damages. The contention that the deterrent purposes of punitive damages are served only if the threshold is higher than the underlying standard for liability is unsound. There has never been any such common law rule; and both the First and Second Torts Restatements have pointed out that "in torts like malicious prosecution that require a particular antisocial state of mind, the improper motive of the tortfeasor is both a necessary element in the cause of action and a reason for awarding punitive damages." Thus, many courts have held that "punitive damages are available on the same showing of fault as is required by the underlying tort in, for example, intentional infliction of emotional distress, defamation of a public official or public figure, and defamation covered by a common-law qualified immunity." (103 S.Ct. 1638, 1639, 75 L.Ed.2d 649, 650.)

Four justices dissented, arguing in the main that a wrongful intent is essential to a punitive damage award in actions under 42 U.S.C., §1983.

West's Key Number Digest, Civil Rights k.275, 404

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

54 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.

7. Types of Cases.

a. Tort Actions.

8. Job Discrimination Action.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1596

[§ 1596] Job Discrimination Action.

(1) In General. The California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA; Govt.C. 12900 et seq.) declares job discrimination to be against public policy and an unlawful employment practice. If a complaint is not resolved by conference or conciliation, an accusation may issue to be heard by the Fair Employment and Housing Commission; if no accusation issues within a specified period after the filing of the complaint and the matter is not otherwise resolved, the Department of Fair Employment and Housing must give the complainant a right-to-sue letter, after which he or she may sue in the superior court. (See 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §948 et seq.)

In Commodore Home Systems v. Superior Court (1982) 32 C.3d 211, 185 C.R. 270, 649 P.2d 912, two black employees of defendant Commodore alleged that each was discharged under defendant's policy of denying supervisory and management positions to blacks. The prayer sought compensatory and punitive damages. Defendant moved to strike the punitive damages part of the prayer, and, on denial of the motion, sought mandamus. Held, writ denied; punitive damages may be recovered in this type of action.

(a) The provision giving the right to sue (Govt.C. 12970(a)) does not mention punitive damages, but the statute's silence is not a bar. When a statute recognizes a cause of action for violation of a right, all forms of relief granted to civil litigants generally, including punitive damages under C.C. 3294(a), are available unless a contrary legislative intent appears. (32 C.3d 215.)

(b) No legislative intent to preclude punitive damages appears from an analysis of the statutory provisions and the legislative history; and decisions denying punitive damages under federal statutes deal with distinguishable statutory provisions. (32 C.3d 216, 217, 218, 219.)

(c) "Even if the Legislature did limit the remedies available in the administrative setting (a question we need not decide), it has not spoken similarly about the judicial forum. Distinctions between the two kinds of proceedings suggest that restrictions on the agency do not by implication extend to a court." (32 C.3d 220.)

Two justices dissented, arguing that the legislative history does not show an intent to permit recovery of punitive damages. (32 C.3d 222.)

The Commission, while empowered to award actual damages and to assess administrative fines and civil penalties, lacks authority to grant punitive damages. (Govt.C. 12970(d)), codifying holding of Dyna-Med v. Fair Emp. & Housing Com. (1987) 43 C.3d 1379, 241 C.R. 67, 743 P.2d 1323.)

(2) Sexual Discrimination and Harassment. Commodore Home Systems was followed in Monge v. Superior Court (1986) 176 C.A.3d 503, 509, 222 C.R. 64, involving a charge of sexual job discrimination and harassment under Govt.C. 12940.

(3) Age Discrimination. Commodore Home Systems was followed in Stephens v. Coldwell Banker Commercial Group (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1394, 1404, 245 C.R. 606, upholding an award of punitive damages against a corporation based on age discrimination under Govt.C. 12940.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

55 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
a. Tort Actions.
9. Other Torts.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1597

[§ 1597] Other Torts.

Punitive damages have been awarded in other tort actions in which the necessary elements have been shown. The following are examples:

(1) Defamation. (See Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 926, 937, 119 C.R. 82; Bindrim v. Mitchell (1979) 92 C.A.3d 61, 74, 155 C.R. 29; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§569, 570; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 847; 16 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 99 [defamation in fiction]; BAJI, Nos. 7.12, 7.12.1, 7.12.2; CACI, No. 1700 et seq.; supra, §529 et seq.)

(2) Malicious prosecution. (See MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 293, 79 C.R. 707, supra, §488 [malicious institution of will contest]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §570; 94 A.L.R.3d 791 [defendant's state of mind necessary or sufficient to warrant award of punitive damages in malicious prosecution action]; supra, §469 et seq.)

(3) Abuse of process. (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §570; 61 A.L.R.3d 984 [wrongful attachment]; supra, §517 et seq.)

(4) Slander of title or disparagement of property. (See Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 866, 237 C.R. 282; 7 A.L.R.4th 1219 [slander of title or disparagement of property]; supra, §640 et seq.)

(5) Interference with contract or prospective economic advantage. (See Ramona Manor Convalescent Hosp. v. Care Enterprises (1986) 177 C.A.3d 1120, 1142, 225 C.R. 120; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §570; 44 A.L.R.4th 1078 [interference with contract or business relationship]; supra, §759 et seq.)

(6) Wrongful eviction. (See Tooke v. Allen (1948) 85 C.A.2d 230, 239, 192 P.2d 804 [court took notice of other decisions dealing with oppression of tenants by same defendant].)

(7) Unlawful detainer. (See Sasson v. Katash (1983) 146 C.A.3d 119, 121, 126, 194 C.R. 46 [commercial lessee, with knowledge that he had no legal claim and that lessor had made new lease, occupied premises for 5 months and 9 days after lease's expiration]; Roth v. Morton's Chefs Services (1985) 173 C.A.3d 380, 388, 218 C.R. 684 [commercial lessee fraudulently breached provision against subletting without lessor's consent and retained possession after 3-day notice to quit].)

(8) Trustee's breach of fiduciary duty. (See Werschull v. United Calif. Bank (1978) 85 C.A.3d 981, 1001, 149 C.R. 829, infra, §1610; Vale v. Union Bank (1979) 88 C.A.3d 330, 339, 151 C.R. 784; cf. Flyer's Body Shop Profit Sharing Plan v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1149, 1154, 230 C.R. 276 [breach of fiduciary duty is insufficient basis by itself for punitive damages].)

(9) Admiralty suit under Jones Act. (See Baptiste v. Superior Court (1980) 106 C.A.3d 87, 94, 164 C.R. 789, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §131.)

(10) Employee's action against employer. (See McDonald v. Superior Court (1986) 180 C.A.3d 297, 302, 225 C.R. 394, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §44 [injury aggravated by employer's fraudulent concealment of existence of injury and its connection with employment (Lab.C. 3602(b)(2)]).)

(11) Claim and delivery (replevin). (See Knox v. Wolfe (1946) 73 C.A.2d 494, 504, 167 P.2d 3 [defendants acquired rented property and, upon refusal of their demand for half interest in business, terminated lease and forcibly prevented removal of lessee's fixtures and personal property; $ 500 award upheld].)

(12) Medical malpractice. (See Baker v. Sadick (1984) 162 C.A.3d 618, 626, 208 C.R. 676 [action based on fraud and wilful neglect, rather than on simple negligence]; 27 A.L.R.3d 1274 [medical malpractice].)

(13) Vehicle accident litigation. (See 17 Proof of Facts 3d 311 [punitive damages in motor vehicle accident litigation]; 18 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [intoxicated driver].)

(14) Actions involving transport, handling, and storage of toxic or hazardous substances. (See 39 A.L.R.5th 763 [toxic and hazardous substances].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

56 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
b. Equity Actions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1598

[§ 1598] Equity Actions.

In Rivero v. Thomas (1948) 86 C.A.2d 225, 239, 194 P.2d 533, an action to establish a constructive trust in real property wrongfully acquired by a fiduciary, the trial judge awarded a money judgment of $ 5,468.40 plus $ 500 punitive damages, and imposed a lien on the property to secure payment. Held: (a) Although ordinarily punitive damages are not awarded in equity actions, they may be awarded where there is evidence of fraud; but (b) because the purpose of punitive damages is distinct from that for which the trust was imposed, the lien can only be made to cover the award of compensatory damages, and the punitive damages must be collected in the ordinary manner. (See 58 A.L.R.4th 844 [power of equity court to award].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

57 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
c. Alternative Contract or Tort Actions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1599

[§ 1599] Alternative Contract or Tort Actions.

The general rule excludes punitive damages in actions based on contract. (See C.C. 3294; Rest.2d, Contracts §355; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 531; 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §876.) However, if the plaintiff has an election of either a contract action or tort action, and sues on the tort theory, punitive damages may be awarded. (See Jones v. Kelly (1929) 208 C. 251, 254, 280 P. 942; Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 C.2d 674, 680, 117 P.2d 331; Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 922, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662 [one contract count, two tort counts]; Foster v. Keating (1953) 120 C.A.2d 435, 454, 261 P.2d 529; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1968) 265 C.A.2d 921, 927, 71 C.R. 764; Horn v. Guaranty Chevrolet Motors (1969) 270 C.A.2d 477, 484, 75 C.R. 871 [rescission for fraud]; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 400, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459; Kuchta v. Allied Builders Corp. (1971) 21 C.A.3d 541, 549, 98 C.R. 588 [count for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to enter into contract]; Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment b; 74 Cal. L. Rev. 2033 [standards for awards in borderland of contract and tort]; 7 Cal. Western L. Rev. 496 [Fletcher]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 531; 47 A.L.R.3d 314 [Fletcher]; supra, §1590.) (For discussion of alternative contract and tort actions, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §139 et seq.; on quasi-contract actions, see infra, §1713.)

Where the action is a hybrid, i.e., based on both contract and tort theories, and election of the contract theory is essential to maintenance of the action, punitive damages are not recoverable. In Frazier v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1985) 169 C.A.3d 90, 214 C.R. 883, an action against an insurer for bad faith failure to pay a claim, the election to sue in contract was necessary to avoid the tort statute of limitations. Plaintiff nevertheless sought punitive damages on the tort theory. The court, relying on the strict language of C.C. 3294 (supra, §1559), declared that punitive damages can be allowed only for breach of an obligation "not arising from contract." Hence: "When the action proceeds under alternate tort theories in addition to a contract action, then punitive damages may be awarded under the alternative tort theory. ... But if the tort cause of action is time-barred ... , plaintiff must proceed solely on her contract theory; and she may not also proceed on the time-barred tort theory to obtain punitive damages." (169 C.A.3d 107.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Full discussion of alternative actions:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §144 et seq.

58 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
d. Action Against Health Care Provider.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1600

[§ 1600] In General.

In an action for damages arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider, no claim for punitive damages may be included in a complaint or other pleading unless the court enters an order allowing an amended pleading that includes a claim for punitive damages. The court may allow the amended pleading (1) on a motion by the party seeking the pleading and (2) on the basis of the supporting and opposing affidavits presented that the plaintiff has established that there is a substantial probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim pursuant to C.C. 3294. The court must deny the motion if it is not filed within 2 years after the complaint or initial pleading is filed or not less than 9 months before the date the matter is first set for trial, whichever is earlier. (C.C.P. 425.13(a); see Johnson v. Superior Court (2002) 101 C.A.4th 869, 879, 883, 124 C.R.2d 650 [sperm bank was "health care provider" within meaning of C.C.P. 425.13; physicians who screened donors were also "health care providers" because negligence occurred in rendering services for which physicians were licensed]; Palmer v. Superior Court (2002) 103 C.A.4th 953, 962, 127 C.R.2d 252 [medical group composed of licensed physicians who provided direct medical service to patients was "health care provider," even though it was not itself licensed]; Cryolife v. Superior Court (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1145, 1157, 2 C.R.3d 396 [tissue bank (health dispensary that dispenses human tissue for transplantation and provides tissue-related services that are identified with human health) is health care provider; following Johnson, supra, and Coe v. Superior Court (1990) 220 C.A.3d 48, 269 C.R. 368, supra, §942]; 35 A.L.R.5th 145 [Allowance of Punitive Damages in Medical Malpractice Action]; 109 A.L.R.5th 397 [punitive damages for pharmacist's wrongful conduct in preparing or dispensing prescription--other than under Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C., §2072)]; on definition of "health care provider," see C.C.P. 425.13(b).)

The test of whether an act arose out of professional negligence is whether the act occurred in rendering services for which the health care provider was licensed, not whether the act involved a high or low degree of skill. (Williams v. Superior Court (1994) 30 C.A.4th 318, 322, 36 C.R.2d 112 [health care provider was professionally negligent when it failed to warn nurse, who was invited to administer shot and was wounded while it was being given, that patient was known to have violent propensities, especially towards female nurses].)

C.C.P. 425.13 is not jurisdictional, and its protection can be waived, because the statute is procedural in that affects only a remedy, rather than a substantive right. (Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1525, 1535, 51 C.R.2d 311 [by answering plaintiff's complaint and litigating case for nearly a year before raising issue, defendants waived rights that they might have had under statute].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Vazquez de Mercado v. Superior Court (2007) 148 C.A.4th 711, 714, 55 C.R.3d 889 [C.C.P. 425.13 did not apply to plaintiffs who sued veterinarian for allegedly failing to advise them of horse's physical problems before they purchased it; other statutes define "professional negligence" as limited to personal injury, and plaintiffs' economic injuries were not "personal" to them]; 34 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 67 [limiting punitive damages in health care field].

59 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
d. Action Against Health Care Provider.
2. Arising Out of Professional Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1601

[§ 1601] Arising Out of Professional Negligence.

In Covenant Care v. Superior Court (2004) 32 C.4th 771, 11 C.R.3d 222, 86 P.3d 290, plaintiffs alleged that (a) decedent elder, who was suffering from Parkinson's Disease, spent time in defendants' skilled nursing facility; (b) defendants, knowing of decedent's condition, failed to provide him with proper care, nutrition, hydration, and medication; (c) decedent was left in his own excrement for long periods, developed infected body sores exposing muscle and bone, and became severely dehydrated; (d) when transferred, decedent was not sent to an acute care facility, as his condition required, but to a 24-hour care facility, where he soon died; and (e) defendants acted with malice and oppression, deliberately failed to report decedent's condition to public authorities, and misrepresented decedent's condition both to himself and to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs filed a motion for leave to amend to claim punitive damages, and defendants opposed on the ground that the motion violated the requirement of C.C.P. 425.13(a) that the motions be filed within 2 years after the complaint. The trial court granted the motion to amend, and the Court of Appeal denied writ relief. The question is whether plaintiff's elder abuse claim is one arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider, when the provider is acting as a custodian for the elderly.

(a) Welf.C. 15657, which deals with recoveries under the Elder Abuse Act (Welf.C. 15600 et seq.), provides that a plaintiff who proves by clear and convincing evidence that a defendant is liable for physical abuse, neglect, or financial abuse, and that the defendant is guilty of recklessness, oppression, etc., is entitled to heightened remedies, in addition to those otherwise provided, such as recovery of attorney fees and costs. Under C.C.P. 425.13(a), in an action for damages "arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider," no claim for punitive damages may be included unless the plaintiff files a timely motion demonstrating a substantial probability that he or she will prevail on the claim. (32 C.4th 779.)

(b) Plaintiffs relied on Delaney v. Baker (1999) 20 C.4th 23, 26, 82 C.R.2d 610, 971 P.2d 986, infra, §1687, which held that a cause of action seeking the heightened remedies of the Elder Abuse Act for reckless or oppressive elder abuse is not one based on professional negligence within the meaning of Welf.C. 15657.2, a section of the Elder Abuse Act that excludes causes of action based on professional negligence. Plaintiffs contended that the same result should apply with respect to the use of "professional negligence" in C.C.P. 425.13(a). Although it is clear that "professional negligence," i.e., failure to exercise ordinary knowledge, care, and skill, is not the same as the egregious elder abuse alleged by plaintiffs, this fact is not dispositive in view of Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.4th 181, 10 C.R.2d 208, 832 P.2d 924, infra, §1604, which held that the phrase "arising out of professional negligence" in C.C.P. 425.13(a) applied to proposed additional intentional tort causes of action, as well as to the ordinary negligence causes of action already in the complaint. Defendants contended that Delaney and Central Pathology, taken together, do not preclude health care providers from being subject to liability under the Elder Abuse Act and also from being protected by the restrictions on pleading punitive damages contained in C.C.P. 425.13. Based more on legislative intent, rather than on a reconciliation of these two cases, this position is rejected. The limitations of C.C.P. 425.13 on actions for damages arising out of professional negligence "were not meant to burden those who pursue the cause of abused elderly persons ... under the Elder Abuse Act." (32 C.4th 781, 783.)

(c) Nothing in the text of C.C.P. 425.13(a) or the Elder Abuse Act suggests that the Legislature meant to link the two statutes. Although statutory elder abuse includes neglect, which in turn includes negligent failure of an elder custodian to provide medical care, "neglect," as used in the Elder Abuse Act, covers an area of conduct distinct from professional negligence, i.e., it refers to failure to provide for an elderly person's basic needs, rather than the substandard performance of medical services. "Thus, the statutory definition of neglect speaks not to the undertaking of medical services, but of the failure to provide medical care." (32 C.4th 783.)

(d) The legislative history of Welf.C. 15657, allowing heightened remedies for egregious elder abuse, reveals that it was intended to shift the Act's focus from reporting abuse and using law enforcement to combat it to making private, civil enforcement profitable. On the other hand, C.C.P. 425.13(a) was enacted to prevent frivolous claims of punitive damages whenever a health care provider was sued for professional negligence. The legislative history of that statute shows that the intent was to protect health care providers only in their capacity as providers and that there was no intent to protect them when acting in any other capacity, such as elder custodians. "Provider" and "custodian" are quite different. The former refers to a person or facility certified pursuant to certain licensing provisions, while an elder custodian is charged with attending to the basic needs of the elderly. (32 C.4th 784.)

(e) The legislative history of the Elder Abuse Act reveals that the term "professional negligence," as used in Welf.C. 15657.2, was mutually exclusive of the abuse and neglect made actionable by the Act. The Legislature apparently concluded that the requirement of Welf.C. 15657 that there be clear and convincing evidence of liability and recklessness, oppression, etc., was sufficient to protect health care providers from liability under the statute for acts of simple or even gross negligence. (32 C.4th 785.)

(f) The Elder Abuse Act was enacted to protect a particularly vulnerable segment of society, and the Legislature added heightened civil remedies for egregious misconduct to enable interested persons to engage attorneys to take up the cause of elderly abused persons. To burden such causes with the procedural requirements of C.C.P. 425.13(a) when claims are made for punitive damages would undermine this legislative intent. (32 C.4th 787.)

(g) C.C.P. 425.13(a) was enacted amid concern over routine inclusion of sham punitive damages claims in medical malpractice actions, and it sought to address this problem by requiring clear and convincing evidence of recklessness, oppression, etc., and by establishing a pretrial mechanism to allow the court to determine whether a claim for punitive damages can proceed. Applying C.C.P. 425.13(a) to an elder abuse cause of action would not substantially reduce sham punitive damages claims in such cases, because a plaintiff claiming heightened remedies under the Elder Abuse Act is already required to prove recklessness, oppression, etc. Nor would that application afford health care providers significant additional protection against unsubstantiated claims for punitive damages. (32 C.4th 788.)

(h) C.C.P. 425.13(a) requires that the motion to be allowed to include a claim for punitive damages be filed within 2 years of the complaint. The purpose of this requirement is to provide a health care provider with notice of a punitive damage claim, as well as to prevent "last minute" insertion of these claims. However, in any elder abuse action, issues of egregious misconduct are, by definition, always present, so that a defendant has the necessary notice from the outset. (32 C.4th 789.)

(i) Defendants failed to acknowledge the factual aspects of Central Pathology that qualify its holding, i.e., that the case addressed common law causes of action for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress that arose in the medical malpractice context. While Central Pathology thus speaks to situations in which claims for punitive damages are, as a factual matter, predicated on mere negligence or a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others in which intentional torts are nevertheless alleged, its rationale does not extend to situations, as here, in which a claim for punitive damages accompanies allegations of a statutory violation, proof of which will require clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has been guilty of recklessness, oppression, etc., in the commission of physical, neglectful, or financial elder abuse. (32 C.4th 790.)

(j) C.C.P. 425.13(a) does not apply. Nothing in the text, legislative history, or purposes of either C.C.P. 425.13(a) or the Elder Abuse Act suggests that the Legislature intended "to afford health care providers that act as elder custodians, and that egregiously abuse the elders in their custody, the special protections against exemplary damages they enjoy when accused of negligence in providing health care." (32 C.4th 776.) (See Country Villa Claremont Healthcare Center v. Superior Court (2004) 120 C.A.4th 426, 434, 15 C.R.3d 315 [elder abuse; following Covenant Care].)

In Palmer v. Superior Court (2002) 103 C.A.4th 953, 127 C.R.2d 252, supra, §1601, Dr. R, a member of the medical group that was plaintiff's primary care provider, received a request from plaintiff's prosthetist recommending newly-available prostheses. According to a contract between defendant medical group and plaintiff's HMO requiring defendant to make decisions about whether requested equipment was "medically necessary" (utilization review), defendant's medical director determined that the requested prostheses were not a medical necessity. When plaintiff instituted his HMO's appeal process, Dr. R informed him that a letter could be sent to plaintiff's disability insurer questioning whether he was actually disabled (because the level of activity required to justify plaintiff's need for the new prostheses could mean that he was not disabled). Plaintiff sued defendant for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, based on the determination that the equipment was not medically necessary and the threat by Dr. R, and included allegations for punitive damages. In response to defendant's motion, the trial court ordered that the punitive damages allegations be stricken for failure to comply with C.C.P. 425.13, and plaintiff petitioned for mandamus to overturn this order. Held, denied; the services provided by defendant on behalf of plaintiff's HMO were ones "arising out of professional negligence" within the meaning of C.C.P. 425.13.

(a) The allegedly injurious utilization review, conducted by defendant's medical director, amounted to a medical clinical judgment such as would arguably arise out of professional negligence. Plaintiff's contention that this was a purely administrative or economic role played by defendant is rejected. Rather, the statutes require that utilization review be conducted by medical professionals, and they must carry out these functions by exercising medical judgment and applying clinical standards. (103 C.A.4th 972.)

(b) With respect to the warning, defendant, as Dr. R's principal, could not be held vicariously liable, because an innocent principal cannot be liable if the agent is not liable (see 2 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §167), and Dr. R. had earlier been dismissed from the action. However, to the extent that Dr. R allegedly acted against plaintiff's interests, by going outside his normal health care provider role, there is still an underlying assumption that he had loyalty or patient advocacy responsibilities toward plaintiff that he was neglecting or misusing, due to his status as a primary health care provider. Accordingly, these intentional infliction of emotional distress allegations against defendant, dealing with pressure and warnings, still fall within the context of professional medical negligence and they therefore qualify as allegations that trigger the procedural protections of C.C.P. 425.13. (103 C.A.4th 972.) (See Scripps Clinic v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 917, 942, 134 C.R.2d 101 [decision to withdraw from treatment of patient is medical decision, within context of medical negligence, not administrative decision, because it is decision that occurs during medical treatment; citing Palmer].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 39 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 699 [Covenant Care].

60 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
d. Action Against Health Care Provider.
3. Substantial Probability That Plaintiff Will Prevail.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1602

[§ 1602] Substantial Probability That Plaintiff Will Prevail.

In order to avoid the conclusion that C.C.P. 425.13 unconstitutionally invades the right to a jury trial, the requirement that a "substantial probability" of success be established imposes only a burden to demonstrate the existence of a prima facie case. However, under C.C. 3294(a) the plaintiff's ultimate burden at trial will be to satisfy the jury by "clear and convincing evidence" that the defendant was guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. Thus, any prima facie case under C.C.P. 425.13 must necessarily meet that standard. (Looney v. Superior Court (1993) 16 C.A.4th 521, 537, 539, 20 C.R.2d 182; see Aquino v. Superior Court (1993) 21 C.A.4th 847, 854, 860, 26 C.R.2d 477 [in action against three doctors for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, plaintiffs failed to establish prima facie case of entitlement to punitive damages, as they were unlikely to be able to show malice, oppression, or fraud by clear and convincing evidence; citing Looney].)

The test required by the statute was formulated somewhat differently in College Hosp. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 C.4th 704, 34 C.R.2d 898, 882 P.2d 894, although the court acknowledged that there is little substantive difference between the "sufficient prima facie showing" approach, stated in Looney, and its own "triable issue" approach: "[T]he gravamen of section 425.13(a) is that the plaintiff may not amend the complaint to include a punitive damages claim unless he both states and substantiates a legally sufficient claim. In other words, the court must deny the section 425.13(a) motion where the facts asserted in the proposed amended complaint are legally insufficient to support a punitive damages claim. ... The court also must deny the motion where the evidence provided in the 'supporting and opposing affidavits' either negates or fails to reveal the actual existence of a triable claim. ... The section 425.13(a) motion may be granted only where the plaintiff demonstrates that both requirements are met." (8 C.4th 719.) Here, the trial judge erred in allowing plaintiff's complaint to be amended to add a punitive damages claim against the hospital, because the conduct at issue was engaged in by a hospital employee acting in his personal capacity and plaintiff would therefore be unable to prove that the hospital authorized or ratified his acts. (8 C.4th 723, 724.) Neither should the judge have allowed an amendment to add a punitive damages claim against the hospital administrator, because plaintiff could not show that the administrator had acted maliciously against plaintiff. (8 C.4th 725.) (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 711 [College Hosp.].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

61 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
d. Action Against Health Care Provider.
4. Time Limits.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1603

[§ 1603] Time Limits.

In Brown v. Superior Court (1990) 224 C.A.3d 989, 274 C.R. 442, the motion was made only 4 months before trial (rather than the required 9 months; see supra, §1600) and nearly 2 months after learning the date of trial. Plaintiff contended that the time limit cannot apply to "fast-track" cases under Govt.C. 68600 et seq. (2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §438) because of impossibility. Held, the trial court erred in allowing plaintiff's untimely amendment. While it may be possible to begin trial less than 9 months after filing of the complaint, thus rendering compliance with C.C.P. 452.13 impossible, "the court has the flexibility at trial setting to accommodate a party in such a predicament." (224 C.A.3d 994.)

In Looney v. Superior Court (1993) 16 C.A.4th 521, 537, 539, 20 C.R.2d 182, plaintiffs filed an action in December 1991 against a medical center and two doctors for negligence and various intentional torts, and sought punitive damages. Because plaintiffs had failed to comply with C.C.P. 425.13, defendants moved to strike the punitive damages allegations. The trial judge, relying on the holding in Bommarreddy v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1017, 272 C.R. 246, that the statute was inapplicable to intentional torts, denied the motion. Plaintiffs then moved for trial preference under C.C.P. 36 and obtained a trial date of August 10, 1992. Relying on Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.4th 181, 10 C.R.2d 208, 832 P.2d 924, infra, §1604, which was decided on July 31, 1992, and which overruled Bommarreddy, defendants successfully sought mandamus requiring the trial judge to strike the punitive damages allegations. On December 23, 1992, plaintiffs filed a C.C.P. 425.13 motion, but it was denied because it was not filed more than 9 months prior to the date initially set for trial. Held, this was error.

(a) With less than 2 weeks until the first assigned trial date, the rules were changed by the Central Pathology decision and plaintiffs were required to comply with C.C.P. 425.13. However, to require them to also comply with the 9-month time limit, when it was clearly impossible to do so, would result in an application of C.C.P. 36 and 425.13 that would produce an absurd and clearly anomalous result. This must be avoided. (16 C.A.4th 535.)

(b) "We therefore imply an exception to section 425.13 which permits the granting of a motion brought less than nine months prior to the first assigned trial date where it is necessary to protect a plaintiff's right to a preferential trial date and the defendant receives or has had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery regarding the punitive damage claim. In the peculiar circumstances of a case such as this one, we can accommodate the fundamental and salutary purposes of these two statutes in no other way." (16 C.A.4th 536.)

(c) Here, in order to receive the trial preference to which the trial judge found them entitled, plaintiffs would be required to abandon a major part of their claim if C.C.P. 425.13 were applied literally. This result could not be an intended consequence of C.C.P. 36, and would defeat its very purpose. On the other hand, because defendants had substantial notice of the punitive damage claim and an ample opportunity to conduct discovery with respect to it, the purpose behind C.C.P. 425.13 has, in fact, been served. Hence, it is appropriate in these circumstances to imply an exception to this otherwise mandatory statute. (16 C.A.4th 537.)

In Goodstein v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1635, 50 C.R.2d 459, plaintiff contended that (a) due to local rules, she did not receive a full 9-month notice of the trial date, because the trial judge, on August 25, set a trial date of May 10 of the following year, 15 days less than the 9-month period of C.C.P. 425.13; and (b) because of delays in taking defendant's deposition, she lacked sufficient evidence to support the allegation of punitive damages until February, approximately 3 months before the trial date. The trial judge, under C.C.P. 425.13, granted plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint to allege claims for punitive damages against defendant health care provider. Held, mandamus issued directing the trial judge to vacate the order and to conduct further proceedings.

(a) Looney v. Superior Court, supra, established that the trial judge has discretion to grant an exception to the 9-month requirement of C.C.P. 425.13, where (1) it is necessary to protect a plaintiff's right to a preferential trial date, and (2) the defendant receives, or has had reasonable opportunity to conduct, discovery regarding the claim for punitive damages. (42 C.A.4th 1643.)

(b) Here, plaintiff, to be entitled to relief from the 9-month requirement, must be able to show that "(1) she was unaware of the facts or evidence necessary to make a proper motion under section 425.13 more than nine months prior to the first assigned trial date, (2) she made diligent, reasonable and good faith efforts to discover the necessary facts or evidence to support such a motion more than nine months prior to the first assigned trial date, (3) after assignment of the trial date she made reasonable, diligent and good faith efforts to complete the necessary discovery, (4) she filed her motion under section 425.13 as soon as reasonably practicable after completing such discovery (but in no event more than two years after the filing of her initial complaint) and (5) [defendant] will suffer no surprise or prejudice by reason of any shortened time period and will be given every reasonable opportunity to complete all necessary discovery in order to prepare to meet [plaintiff's] punitive damage allegations." (42 C.A.4th 1645.)

(c) "Relief from the time limits specified in section 425.13 should be granted only in those situations where a plaintiff has moved with reasonable dispatch and diligence and, through no fault of his or her own, has been placed in a position where compliance with the nine-month time mandate is impossible or reasonably impracticable. Upon remand, the trial court will have to examine the court file in this case and the declarations and other evidence submitted by the parties and make specific findings on each of the five criteria specified above." Only in the event that plaintiff can satisfy all of them by a preponderance of the evidence will it be proper for the court to grant her motion to amend. (42 C.A.4th 1646.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Freedman v. Superior Court (2008) 166 C.A.4th 198, 206, 82 C.R.3d 563 [in action against surgeon for leaving surgical towel in plaintiff's abdomen, 9-month deadline of C.C.P. 425.13(a) was applicable, even if depositions conducted after deadline indicated that surgeon made omissions from operative report and used surgical towel that could not be seen on x-ray in violation of hospital policy, where plaintiff knew most of facts offered in support of motion to add punitive damages claim before he filed complaint].

Fast-Track cases:

Cross-Reference: 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Courts, §257. Correction: Page 1105, ninth line in first paragraph of section,

"C.C.P. 452.13" should be "C.C.P. 425.13".

62 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
d. Action Against Health Care Provider.
5. Action Based on Intentional Tort or Crime.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1604

[§ 1604] Action Based on Intentional Tort or Crime.

In Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.4th 181, 10 C.R.2d 208, 832 P.2d 924, plaintiffs C and M filed a complaint for damages against defendant medical providers, asserting causes of action for medical negligence and loss of consortium based on defendants' failure to care for and treat C. Two months before the scheduled date of trial, plaintiffs moved for leave to file an amended complaint adding causes of action for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and seeking punitive damages. The new causes alleged that defendants performed a pap smear that showed abnormal cells, but failed to notify C that she was developing cancer, and intentionally failed to notify her that she should be retested. The cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress alleged that defendants acted in an outrageous manner with the intent to cause severe emotional distress. The trial court, relying on Bommarreddy v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1017, 272 C.R. 246, which held that C.C.P. 425.13 did not apply to intentional torts, granted the motion to amend, and the Court of Appeal summarily denied defendants' petition for mandamus. Held, matter remanded to Court of Appeal with directions to issue mandamus directing the trial court to vacate its order allowing plaintiffs to amend.

(a) The issue involved requires construction of the words "professional negligence," and "arising out of," as used in C.C.P. 425.13(a). (3 C.4th 187.) Although intentional tort causes of action can "arise out of" contractual relationships, "whether intentional tort causes of action can 'arise out of' professional negligence has not been addressed. ... [I]t is unclear whether the intentional tort causes of action may be said to originate, grow, or flow from 'professional negligence.'" (3 C.4th 188.)

(b) The legislative history undermines the Bommarreddy conclusion that the statute is limited to causes of action alleging professional negligence. (3 C.4th 188 et seq.) "Based on the language of the statute and its legislative history, we conclude that an action for damages arises out of the professional negligence of a health care provider if the injury for which damages are sought is directly related to the professional services provided by the health care provider." (3 C.4th 191.)

(c) There are few situations in which claims for punitive damages are predicated on mere negligence or a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others and in which no intentional torts are alleged; hence, the Bommarreddy

interpretation "would render the statute virtually meaningless." (3 C.4th 191.) Under that interpretation, injured patients could readily assert that their providers committed an intentional tort and that punitive damages are sought only in connection with the intentional tort. By including such a cause of action in a negligence action, plaintiffs would annul the procedural requirements the Legislature sought to impose on them. (3 C.4th 191.)

(d) Bommarreddy is disapproved. (3 C.4th 191.) "We hold that when an injured party seeks punitive damages for an injury that is directly related to the professional services provided by a health care provider acting in its capacity as such, then the action is one 'arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider,' and the party must comply" with C.C.P. 425.13(a). (3 C.4th 191.)

(e) "The allegations that identify the nature and cause of a plaintiff's injury must be examined to determine whether each is directly related to the manner in which professional services were provided. ... The clear intent of the Legislature is that any claim for punitive damages in an action against a health care provider be subject to the statute if the injury that is the basis for the claim was caused by conduct that was directly related to the rendition of professional services." (3 C.4th 192.)

(f) "Plaintiffs' cause of action for fraud in this case is directly related to the manner in which defendants provided professional services. The claim emanates from the manner in which defendants performed and communicated the results of medical tests, a matter that is an ordinary and usual part of medical professional services. It is therefore governed by section 425.13(a). Plaintiffs' cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress is predicated on the same alleged acts as the fraud claim. Therefore, it too is directly related to defendants' performance of professional services and is governed by section 425.13(a)." (3 C.4th 192.)

One justice, concurring in the result, strongly disagreed with the conclusion that the statute applies to an action for battery predicated on treatment exceeding or different from that to which a plaintiff consented. A common law battery gives rise to an action for compensatory and possible punitive damages, and the plaintiff should not be required to seek a court's permission merely because the battery arises out of medical services neither sought nor desired. (3 C.4th 193.)

In Davis v. Superior Court (1994) 27 C.A.4th 623, 33 C.R.2d 6, the rationale of Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic was applied in a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff sought punitive damages based on defendant's alleged involvement in a fraudulent scheme to deprive him of his workers' compensation benefits. Although defendant's conduct was allegedly criminal, the fact remained that plaintiff was seeking damages for an injury that was directly related to the professional services rendered by defendant acting in his capacity as a health care provider. The statute was therefore applicable, and the trial judge should have granted defendant's motion to strike based on plaintiff's lack of compliance. Creating an exception applicable to plaintiffs who are workers' compensation claimants is a matter for the Legislature, not the courts. (27 C.A.4th 629, 630.)

A dictum in Central Pathology, to the effect that sexual battery "usually" does not "arise out" of the health care provider's professional negligence and that it is thus not covered by C.C.P. 425.13, is inapplicable where the sexual battery occurs during an examination by a doctor rendering gynecological services, i.e., where the opportunity to perform the battery is directly related to the manner in which services are rendered. (Cooper v. Superior Court (1997) 56 C.A.4th 744, 750, 65 C.R.2d 674.) (See United Western Med. Centers v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 500, 502, 49 C.R.2d 682 [C.C.P. 425.13(a) applied to action alleging that two hospital employees committed sexual assault on plaintiff; citing Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic]; 30 Cal. Western L. Rev. 221 [Central Pathology Service Med. Clinic]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 872 [same]; 20 San Diego L. Rev. 621 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

63 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
e. Action Against Religious Corporation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1605

[§ 1605] Action Against Religious Corporation.

C.C.P. 425.14 sets forth requirements for obtaining punitive damages in actions against religious corporations that are similar to those imposed by C.C.P. 425.13 for health care providers (see supra, §1600 et seq.).

(a) "No claim for punitive or exemplary damages against a religious corporation or religious corporation sole shall be included in a complaint or other pleading unless the court enters an order allowing an amended pleading that includes a claim for punitive or exemplary damages to be filed."

(b) The plaintiff must make a motion supported by affidavits, and the court may allow the filing if, on the basis of supporting and opposing affidavits, it finds that "the plaintiff has established evidence which substantiates that plaintiff will meet the clear and convincing standard of proof" of C.C. 3294 (see supra, §1559).

(c) Nothing in the statute is intended to affect a plaintiff's right to discover evidence on the issue of punitive damages.

Unlike C.C.P. 425.13, C.C.P. 425.14 does not specify a time period for filing the motion.

Rowe v. Superior Court (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1711, 19 C.R.2d 625, rejected the contention that C.C.P. 425.14 requires that, before a claim for punitive damages may be pleaded, the trial judge must first determine, from a review and weighing of supporting and opposing affidavits, that the plaintiff will win on the issue of punitive damages. This construction would invade plaintiffs' right to a jury trial. "We therefore must read the statute to require only that a plaintiff demonstrate the existence of sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case for punitive damages, having in mind the higher clear and convincing standard of proof. ... In making this judgment, the trial court's consideration of the defendant's opposing affidavits does not permit a weighing of them against the plaintiff's supporting evidence, but only a determination that they do not, as a matter of law, defeat that evidence." (15 C.A.4th 1723.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Little Co. of Mary Hosp. v. Superior Court (2008) 162 C.A.4th 261, 75 C.R.3d 519, the issue was whether the analysis of Covenant Care v. Superior Court (2004) 32 C.4th 771, 11 C.R.3d 222, 86 P.3d 290, text, §1601, applies in the related context of C.C.P. 425.14. Although a plaintiff seeking punitive damages against a health care corporation for elder abuse is not subject to C.C.P. 425.13, must the plaintiff nonetheless satisfy the nearly identical requirement in C.C.P. 425.14 of proving a substantial probability of prevailing on the punitive damages claim when the defendant health care provider qualifies as a religious corporation?

Plaintiff filed an action for elder abuse and wrongful death after his mother died while in the care and custody of defendant religious corporation. The complaint sought punitive damages in connection with the claim for elder abuse, and defendant moved to strike that claim. Ruling that the rationale articulated in Covenant Care to exclude elder abuse punitive damages claims from the requirements of C.C.P. 425.13 applied equally to exclude claims against religious organizations from the requirements of C.C.P. 425.14, the trial court denied the motion to strike. Defendant then petitioned for mandamus to compel the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion to strike. Held, mandamus issued.

(a) C.C.P. 425.13 expressly applies only to actions "arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider." It is limited both by the identity of the defendant and the nature of the plaintiff's claim. In contrast, nothing in the language of C.C.P. 425.14 makes its applicability dependent on the conduct of the religious organization. In other words, the requirements of C.C.P. 425.14 must be satisfied whenever the defendant is a religious organization, regardless of the nature of the conduct giving rise to the plaintiff's claim. (162 C.A.4th 269.)

(b) The bill adding C.C.P. 425.14 was approved by the Legislature on the same day that the Legislature adopted the amendment limiting the scope of C.C.P. 425.13 to conduct arising from a health care provider's professional negligence. These simultaneous actions strongly suggest that the omission of limiting language in C.C.P. 425.14 was intentional. (162 C.A.4th 269.)

(c) In Covenant Care, the Supreme Court held that C.C.P. 425.13 did not encompass elder abuse claims, which were rooted in conduct far more egregious than the professional negligence covered by that statute. That conclusion, while based in part on the salutary policy of the Elder Abuse Act, focused particularly on the limiting language in C.C.P. 425.13 and on the legislative history of the amendment that added this restrictive text to the statute. "The Covenant Care Court's analysis is simply inapplicable to an interpretation of the broader statutory language contained in" C.C.P. 425.14. (162 C.A.4th 270.)

(d) Plaintiff argued that subjecting elder abuse plaintiffs to the procedural requirements of C.C.P. 425.14 would undermine the legislative intent to foster these actions by providing litigants and attorneys with incentives to bring them. Furthermore, plaintiff contended that doing so is unnecessary, because the Elder Abuse Act imposes its own protections against meritless punitive damage claims. However, contrary to plaintiff's arguments, the statute's threshold pleading requirement neither restricts the heightened penalties authorized by the Elder Abuse Act nor increases the plaintiff's burden of proof. It simply mandates a prima facie showing of merit-supporting allegations of recklessness, oppression, or fraud earlier in the proceedings rather than later. Nothing in the application of C.C.P. 425.14 to religious health care providers in elder abuse actions dilutes the purpose of providing heightened civil penalties to litigants and their attorneys prosecuting legitimate elder abuse claims. (162 C.A.4th 271.)

(e) "We recognize our holding necessarily means a religious health care provider has greater protection from unsubstantiated punitive damage claims than afforded secular health care providers. Whatever the merits of that differentiation between religious not-for-profit entities and their secular counterparts, that is precisely what the Legislature intended." (162 C.A.4th 271.)

64 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
7. Types of Cases.
f. Felon's Action Against Victim.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1606

[§ 1606] Felon's Action Against Victim.

C.C.P. 128.5(d) permits the trial judge to assess punitive damages against a plaintiff who is found guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice in maintaining an action against the victim of a felony for which the plaintiff was convicted (or against the victim's heirs, relatives, estate, or personal representative). The victim may recover punitive damages for injuries arising from the acts for which the plaintiff was convicted.

The enacting legislation requires trial judges to screen these cases carefully to ensure that the suit was not filed for a vexatious, fraudulent, malicious, or oppressive purpose. (Stats. 1990, Chap. 887, §2.) The applicability of C.C.P. 128.5 was limited by 1994 legislation adding C.C.P. 128.6 and 128.7. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§239, 250.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Applicability of C.C.P. 128.5:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §§226, 237.

65 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
8. Necessity of Actual Damages.
a. Nature of Requirement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1607

[§ 1607] Nature of Requirement.

Although there is a considerable body of authority to the contrary, including the Restatement (Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment c; supra, §1560), it is settled in California that punitive damages cannot be awarded unless actual damages were suffered, the theory being that they are in addition to compensatory damages. (Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers v. Fox (1937) 10 C.2d 203, 205, 73 P.2d 1185 [rule applied even where plaintiff received consent decree of injunction against defendant's unauthorized use of trade name]; Haydel v. Morton (1935) 8 C.A.2d 730, 736, 48 P.2d 709; Warfield v. Krueger (1929) 96 C.A. 671, 673, 274 P. 764; Oppenheimer v. Deutchman (1951) 104 C.A.2d 165, 166, 230 P.2d 873; Sasser v. Miles & Sons Trucking Service (1953) 119 C.A.2d 239, 241, 259 P.2d 488; Foster v. Keating (1953) 120 C.A.2d 435, 454, 261 P.2d 529; Continental Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 69, 85, 43 C.R.2d 374 [punitive damages were not available in insurance bad faith action without showing of economic loss].) (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.5A; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §551 et seq.; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 528; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 341; 97 A.L.R.2d 1145 [appellate court's power to remit portion of actual damages while sustaining award of punitive damages]; 40 A.L.R.4th 11 [sufficiency of showing of actual damages].)

In Kluge v. O'Gara (1964) 227 C.A.2d 207, 38 C.R. 607, plaintiffs successively employed eight attorneys to sue on claims, and lost by dismissal for lack of prosecution. They sued their last attorney for malpractice, and received judgment for the full amount of the prayer for actual damages, $ 20,000; this was satisfied. In the present action, they sued all eight for conspiracy to defeat the malpractice action, seeking $ 50,000 actual and $ 100,000 punitive damages. Held, affirming judgment on demurrer, plaintiffs' recovery of the full amount sought in that action necessarily showed that any wrongful acts of defendants caused them no actual damage, and punitive damages could not be recovered. (227 C.A.2d 210.)

Esparza v. Specht (1976) 55 C.A.3d 1, 127 C.R. 493, presented this issue on unusual facts. Plaintiff sued defendant on a promissory note in the principal amount of $ 445.50, admittedly due with interest of $ 27.84. Defendant cross-complained, alleging fraud and seeking compensatory damages of $ 307.40 and punitive damages. At the trial, plaintiff waived his claim for all amounts due except those in excess of $ 307.40. The trial judge allowed defendant an offset for the compensatory damage claim of $ 307.40, and then denied punitive damages on the ground that there were no actual damages. Held, reversed; whether defendant's recovery was in the form of an award of damages or an offset was not controlling.

(a) To establish his demand against plaintiff, defendant was required to plead and prove every element of the fraud including damages. After defendant presented considerable evidence, plaintiff waived his claim for all amounts due except those in excess of $ 307.40. "This may have been done to expedite the trial time for the case but we can only view it as conceding [defendant] had a proper claim for that amount. ... There is no justice in allowing the perpetrator of a fraud to avoid the related consequences of punitive charges attendant with his fraudulent acts simply by paying the actual damages claimed by the defrauded after a bitter lawsuit and before the jury returns what appears to be a certain verdict." (55 C.A.3d 9.)

(b) "[F]or purposes of finding actual damages to justify recovery of punitive damages it is sufficient that the defrauded party show a damage, and not that he must show bottomline damages, i.e., damages over and above all the cross-claims of the perpetrator of the fraud." (55 C.A.3d 9.)

In Cheung v. Daley (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1673, 42 C.R.2d 164, the court reexamined the rule in Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers v. Fox, supra, and found that it was still valid. The case was the latest episode in a bitter dispute concerning a rundown parcel of residential property. Plaintiffs claimed that defendant had violated the Fraudulent Transfer Act (C.C. 3439 et seq.) by conveying the parcel and another property to his mother in order to evade a nuisance judgment about to be obtained by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs tried to recover compensatory damages of $ 40,000, consisting of costs and unbilled attorneys' fees, but the jury returned a special verdict that found the total damages to be "0.00." The jury also found that, in making the transfers, defendant was guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice, and awarded plaintiffs $ 92,000, which was reduced to $ 62,000. Judgment for this amount was entered for plaintiffs. Held, reversed.

(a) As the court said in Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers: "Evil thoughts or acts, barren of result, are not the subject of exemplary damages." (35 C.A.4th 1677.) This position was approved by the California Supreme Court. (35 C.A.4th 1676, citing Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, supra, §1036.) It finds support in C.C. 3294(a), which authorizes punitive damages "in addition to the actual damages " where the defendant acted with oppression, fraud, or malice. And C.C. 3281 defines damages as compensation in money. (35 C.A.4th 1676.) Thus, the Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers rule is still valid, and Court of Appeal opinions to the contrary will not be followed. (35 C.A.4th 1676, 1677, disapproving James v. Public Finance Corp. (1975) 47 C.A.3d 995, 121 C.R. 670.)

(b) Plaintiff asserts that punitive damages may be awarded, because the award includes an element of compensation. This construction may be feasible in some cases, but not where, as here, the jury has specifically found that there were no such damages. (35 C.A.4th 1677.)

In Jackson v. Johnson (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1350, 1351, 7 C.R.2d 482, the complaint alleged simple negligence, but the jury, under erroneous instructions by the trial judge, brought in a verdict awarding $ 20,000 as punitive damages. Held, judgment on the verdict reversed.

(a) Simple negligence cannot support an award of punitive damages (5 C.A.4th 1354); and actual loss or damage is an essential element of the tort of legal malpractice (5 C.A.4th 1355).

(b) Clark v. McClurg (1932) 215 C. 279, 9 P.2d 505, infra, §1609, is distinguishable. "Unlike Clark, the instant jury did not leave blank the actual damages assessment. Nor, as in Clark which concerned libel per se, may actual damages be presumed." (5 C.A.4th 1358.) These two distinctions were held dispositive in Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers. (5 C.A.4th 1358.)

(c) James v. Public Finance Corp. upheld an award by "liberal construction." But the James opinion simply nullified the jury's finding; it failed to consider Mother Cobb's Chicken Turnovers, and was wrongly decided. (5 C.A.4th 1358, 1359.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.5A.

66 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
8. Necessity of Actual Damages.
b. No Need for Prayer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1608

[§ 1608] No Need for Prayer.

Although actual damages cannot be awarded in the absence of a prayer for compensatory damages (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §887), punitive damages[<] may be awarded on allegation and proof of actual damages, despite the absence of a prayer for compensatory damages. (>Weiss v. Blumencranc (1976) 61 C.A.3d 536, 542, 544, 131 C.R. 298 [failure to expressly mention punitive damages in prayer of complaint does not preclude award where body of complaint sets forth facts on which award of punitive damages may be predicated].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Absence of prayer for compensatory damages:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §933.

67 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
8. Necessity of Actual Damages.
c. Separate Award Is Not Essential.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1609

[§ 1609] Separate Award Is Not Essential.

If actual damages are alleged and proved, a separate award of compensatory damages is not a necessary foundation for an award of punitive damages. In Clark v. McClurg (1932) 215 C. 279, 9 P.2d 505, the jury brought in a verdict against defendant for publication of matter libelous per se, but assessed the damages as "$... dollars" actual damages, and $ 5,000 punitive damages. Held, the proof of a libel per se entitled the plaintiff to actual or compensatory damages, and the jury's inadvertence in assessing the entire amount as punitive damages was a mere error of form. (215 C. 285.) (See Contento v. Mitchell (1972) 28 C.A.3d 356, 358, 104 C.R. 591 [following Clark; slander per se, judge awarded $ 3,000, with conclusion of law characterizing entire amount as punitive damages]; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §372.)

Similarly, a general verdict in a single sum for compensatory and punitive damages will be sustained in the absence of a request for segregation of the amounts. (McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 C.A.2d 249, 262, 171 P.2d 85; Rogers v. Kabakoff (1947) 81 C.A.2d 487, 491, 184 P.2d 312.) (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §375 et seq.)

In Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620, the court disapproved of the undifferentiated verdict form (single space for damages and no means of segregation). Such a verdict makes review of the issue of excessive damages "next to impossible" for the trial judge on motion for new trial and for the appellate court on appeal. (21 C.3d 927.) However, under the facts, review was not difficult: Plaintiff husband was precluded by statute from recovering damages for emotional distress suffered by decedent wife, and the economic damages were no more than $ 10,000; hence, the amount of punitive damages awarded by the reduced verdict was about $ 740,000. (21 C.3d 927.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Separate award as foundation:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §363. General verdict in single sum:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §366 et seq.

68 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
8. Necessity of Actual Damages.
d. Award of Nominal Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1610

[§ 1610] Award of Nominal Damages.

May an award of only nominal damages support an additional award of punitive damages? In Sterling Drug v. Benatar (1950) 99 C.A.2d 393, 221 P.2d 965, the court, carefully distinguishing between the two bases for nominal damages (supra, §1547), gave an affirmative answer as follows: Where actual damage has been suffered, but nominal damages only are awarded because the plaintiff is unable to establish the amount with certainty, the nominal damage award is a sufficient foundation for the award of punitive damages. In this case, defendant was enjoined from selling plaintiff's products at below fair trade prices (before the Fair Trade Act was repealed). As a reason for equitable relief, the complaint properly alleged irreparable damage and the difficulty of ascertaining the amount, and the evidence established a considerable volume of cut-rate sales. Thus, actual damage was clear, and the lower court's award of $ 1 nominal and $ 200 punitive damages was "an expedient and just way of overcoming the difficulty of finding the exact extent of the actual damage in a case where exemplary damages are recoverable." (99 C.A.2d 402.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §848A, Comment c; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §554; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 529; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 341; and see Civic Western Corp. v. Zila Industries (1977) 66 C.A.3d 1, 19, 135 C.R. 915.)

Moreover, under the holdings in Clark v. McClurg (1932) 215 C. 279, 285, 9 P.2d 505, and Contento v. Mitchell (1972) 28 C.A.3d 356, 358, 104 C.R. 591, supra, §1609, the absence of an express award of nominal damages is a technical error of form, and not a ground for reversal. "[T]he only function of nominal damages is to indicate that the finder of fact has determined that the plaintiff has suffered an invasion of a legal right. If plaintiff's legal right has been invaded, an award of nominal damages is an idle formalism." (Contento v. Mitchell, supra, 28 C.A.3d 359.)

In Werschull v. United Calif. Bank (1978) 85 C.A.3d 981, 149 C.R. 829, the evidence showed that defendant Bank, as trustee of a pension fund, had unlawfully diverted funds, but there was no way of knowing just how or to what extent plaintiff beneficiaries were injured; i.e., the amount of actual damage could be fixed only by speculation. The judge awarded actual damages of $ 1, and punitive damages of $ 550,000. Held, affirmed. (a) In breach of fiduciary duty cases, the requirement of proof of actual damage "is greatly deemphasized." (85 C.A.3d 1004.) (b) Punitive damages have been awarded in cases in which the actual damage award was nominal--$ 1; and here the evidence supported the jury's finding that plaintiffs suffered actual damages in some unspecified amount. (85 C.A.3d 1004.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

69 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
a. Discretion of Jury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1611

[§ 1611] Discretion of Jury.

There is no fixed standard by which punitive damages can be determined, and both the award and the amount are left to the discretion of the jury, on a consideration of all of the circumstances, subject to the usual rule that the award will be rejected if it is without support in the evidence. (See Lewis v. Hayes (1913) 165 C. 527, 533, 132 P. 1022; Scott v. Times-Mirror Co. (1919) 181 C. 345, 367, 184 P. 672; Thomson v. Catalina (1928) 205 C. 402, 404, 271 P. 198; Pickwick Stages, Northern Div. v. The Board of Trustees (1921) 54 C.A. 730, 731, 215 P. 558; Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 351, 87 C.R. 226, supra, §1589; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 408, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 271, 95 C.R. 678, infra, §1620; Rest.2d, Torts §908, Comment e, supra, §1560 [elements that may be considered]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 530; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 147 [Punitive Damages in California: The Integrity of Jury Verdicts]; 36 U.S.F. L. Rev. 411 [constitutional role of jury in assessing punitive damages]; 35 A.L.R.4th 441 [personal injury or death cases]; 35 A.L.R.4th 538 [nonpersonal injury or death cases]; 14 A.L.R.5th 242 [excessiveness or inadequacy of punitive damages in nonpersonal injury or death cases]; 27 A.L.R.4th 318 [effect of plaintiff's comparative negligence]; BAJI, Nos. 14.71, 14.72.2; CACI, No. 3940 et seq.; on federal constitutional requirement of judicial review as limit on jury's discretion to award punitive damages, see Honda Motor Co., Ltd. v. Oberg (1994) 512 U.S. 415, 114 S.Ct. 2331, 129 L.Ed.2d 336, supra, §1568.)

The almost complete freedom of the jury both in the award and the amount is emphasized in Brewer v. Second Baptist Church of Los Angeles (1948) 32 C.2d 791, 197 P.2d 713. An award of compensatory damages for libel was held proper. However, an instruction that if the jury should find that the publication was done wantonly, etc., "then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover exemplary ... damages," was held reversible error. The plaintiff is never "entitled" to punitive damages as a matter of right; the granting "is wholly within the control of the jury, and may not legally be influenced by any direction of the court." (32 C.2d 801.) The judgment was reversed for a retrial on the issue of exemplary damages alone; the court observed that the new jury could maintain a reasonable relation between the prior award of compensatory damages and the new award of punitive damages, notwithstanding the fact that it would not determine the compensatory damages. (32 C.2d 802.) (See Farvour v. Geltis (1949) 91 C.A.2d 603, 606, 205 P.2d 424 [landlord wantonly removed windows from tenant's apartment, causing physical and mental suffering; $ 500 actual and $ 2,000 punitive damages upheld]; Haines v. Parra (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1553, 1560, 239 C.R. 178 [quoting Brewer and citing the text; error for trial judge to make award on plaintiff's motion for summary judgment[.]

It is proper to instruct the jury that acts of provocation by the plaintiff may be considered in mitigation of punitive damages. (See Fibreboard Paper Products Corp. v. East Bay Union of Machinists, Local 1304, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (1964) 227 C.A.2d 675, 721, 39 C.R. 64; Rest.2d, Torts §921.) But they should not be instructed to consider attorneys' fees or other litigation expenses as elements in measuring the recovery. (Howell v. Scoggins (1874) 48 C. 355, 357; see 30 A.L.R.3d 1443 [attorney's fees or other expenses of litigation as element in measuring punitive damages].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.94

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

70 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
b. Relation to Actual Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1612

[§ 1612] Relation to Actual Damages.

(1) In General. A general limitation has been imposed by the rule that ordinarily the punitive damages must be in some reasonable proportion to the actual damages suffered. In practice, this means that the trial judge may grant a new trial for excessive damages or the appellate court may reverse the judgment unless the punitive damages are scaled down. (See Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 922, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662, supra, §808 [punitive damages less than one-half actual damages were not excessive]; Plotnik v. Rosenberg (1921) 55 C.A. 408, 410, 203 P. 438 [trespass; actual damage $ 15, award of $ 1,500 punitive damages reduced to $ 300]; Wilkinson v. Singh (1928) 93 C.A. 337, 344, 269 P. 705 [eviction; $ 70 actual, $ 1500 punitive, reduced to $ 300]; Dreyer v. Cyriacks (1931) 112 C.A. 279, 284, 297 P. 35 [excessive award for death of dog used in motion pictures]; Booth v. The Peoples Finance & Thrift Co. of Modesto (1932) 124 C.A. 131, 144, 12 P.2d 50 [conversion]; Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 351, 87 C.R. 226, supra, §1589; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 271, 95 C.R. 678, infra, §1620; Forte v. Nolfi (1972) 25 C.A.3d 656, 688, 102 C.R. 455; Allard v. Church of Scientology (1976) 58 C.A.3d 439, 453, 129 C.R. 797 [malicious prosecution, $ 50,000 compensatory, $ 250,000 punitive; punitive reduced to $ 50,000]; Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 C.A.3d 481, 496, 136 C.R. 132, infra, §1622; Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 952, 968, 192 C.R. 219, infra, §1619 [products liability]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§610, 611; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 530; 9 Pacific L. J. 823; 13 U.S.F. L. Rev. 613; 12 A.L.R.5th 195 [punitive damages in personal injury cases].)

In BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 1601, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 829, supra, §1568, the United States Supreme Court held that there is no mathematical "bright line" formula comparing punitive and compensatory damages in determining what is constitutionally acceptable.

In Livesey v. Stock (1929) 208 C. 315, 281 P. 70, defendant deliberately fired a shotgun at plaintiff, many small shot taking effect; the jury awarded $ 5,000 actual and $ 50,000 punitive damages. Held, although the record disclosed no prejudicial error, the very size of the verdict suggested passion and prejudice, and it was reduced to $ 750 and $ 10,000. (208 C. 322.)

This rule does not, however, preclude a large award of punitive damages based upon substantial actual damages, even though, because of the difficulty of ascertaining the extent of the actual damage, the basic award is only a nominal sum. (See Sterling Drug v. Benatar (1950) 99 C.A.2d 393, 402, 221 P.2d 965, supra, §1610; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 345; cf. Finney v. Lockhart (1950) 35 C.2d 161, 163, 217 P.2d 19; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 530.)

In Wyatt v. Union Mortg. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 773, 157 C.R. 392, 598 P.2d 45, a case involving gross fraud by eight corporate and individual defendants, the jury awarded $ 25,000 compensatory damages (reduced by the trial judge to $ 1,000), and $ 200,000 punitive damages. Held, affirmed: the $ 200,000 award was much less than the income directly generated by false charges to borrowers. (24 C.3d 790.)

(2) Instructions. In Gagnon v. Continental Cas. Co. (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1598, 260 C.R. 305, an action against a disability insurer that resulted in a punitive damages award of $ 2.5 million, the trial judge refused to instruct that the punitive damages must bear a "reasonable relation to the actual damages," as then stated in BAJI, No. 14.71. The judge was apparently concerned that, because plaintiff, as the executor of the insured's estate, was not entitled to compensatory damages, the "reasonable relation" language might compel the jury to keep punitive damages low. To allay this concern, defendant suggested modifying the BAJI language to state that the reasonable relation must be to the "actual harm or injury," rather than to the "actual damages." Held, it was prejudicial error to reject this modification.

(a) "[T]o meaningfully apply the 'reasonable relation' rule, the trier of fact (and reviewing court) should not focus on some bottom-line amount of an award of compensatory damages but on the nature and degree of the actual harm suffered by the plaintiff (and perhaps others). ... This focus most directly promotes the purpose of the rule, which the Supreme Court explained as follows: '[E]ven an act of considerable reprehensibility will not be seen to justify a proportionally high amount of punitive damages if the actual harm suffered thereby is small.' ... With the focus on the plaintiff's injury rather than the amount of compensatory damages, the rule can be applied even in cases where only equitable relief is obtained or where nominal damages are awarded or, as here, where compensatory damages are unavailable." (211 C.A.3d 1604, quoting Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620.)

(b) Hence, "even where, as here, punitive but not compensatory damages are available to the plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to an instruction that punitive damages must bear a reasonable relation to the injury, harm, or damages actually suffered by the plaintiff and proved at trial." (211 C.A.3d 1605.) (See McLaughlin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1132, 1165, 29 C.R.2d 559 [questioning how plaintiff in Gagnon, in her representative capacity, could prove actual harm, as she was not entitled to compensatory damages for disability benefits or emotional distress].)

BAJI, No. 14.71 was revised in 1989 to require a reasonable relation to the "injury, harm, or damages actually suffered by the plaintiff." (See BAJI, Nos. 14.71, 14.72.2; CACI, Nos. 3940 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Walker v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (2007) 153 C.A.4th 965, 973, 63 C.R.3d 507 [most important indication of reasonableness of punitive damages award is degree of reprehensibility of defendant's conduct; $ 1.5 million compensatory, $ 8.3 million punitive; punitive reduced to $ 1.5 million]; McGee v. Tucoemas Federal Credit Union (2007) 153 C.A.4th 1351, 1361, 63 C.R.3d 808 [trial court did not abuse discretion in remitting $ 2 million compensatory damages award by $ 750,000 but refusing to remit $ 1.2 million punitive damages award].

71 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
 C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
 9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
 1. Evidence Admissible.
 aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1613

[§ 1613] In General.

"[T]he wealthier the wrongdoing defendant, the larger the award of exemplary damages need be in order to accomplish the statutory objective." (Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 65, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §§491, 1554.) The defendant's wealth is a factor in determining the amount of the award, and evidence of it is admissible. (See Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 928, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620; Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 C.3d 105, 284 C.R. 318, 813 P.2d 1348, infra, §1619; Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 250, 219 P.2d 928; MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 293, 79 C.R. 707, supra, §488; Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 349, 87 C.R. 226, supra, §1589; Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 270, 95 C.R. 678, infra, §1620; Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 926, 937, 119 C.R. 82; Walker v. Signal Cos. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 982, 997, 149 C.R. 119; Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1243, 1 C.R.2d 301; Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1291, 1298, 13 C.R.2d 585; Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1115, 1152, 122 C.R.2d 139 [although wealth of defendant can be considered, ability to pay punitive damages award cannot justify otherwise excessive award]; StreetScenes v. ITC Entertainment Group (2002) 103 C.A.4th 233, 126 C.R.2d 754 [when properly ordered to produce evidence of its wealth, defendant stated that it would produce most recent consolidated report at proper time; this was all authentication needed, and report was admissible against defendant, even though it was unaudited]; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 528; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 367; 13 U.S.F. L. Rev. 613; 9 A.L.R.3d 692 [wealth of one or more of several joint defendants]; 87 A.L.R.4th 141 [relationship to defendant's wealth as factor in determining propriety of award].) (On discovery of wealth, see infra, §1618; on bifurcation of trial on issue of defendant's wealth, see infra, §1615 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
 See 37 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1739 [wealth-calibrated punitive damages].

In Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co. (2005) 35 C.4th 1159, 29 C.R.3d 379, 113 P.3d 63, Supp., infra, §1623A, the California Supreme Court observed: "Because a court reviewing the jury's award for due process compliance may consider what level of punishment is necessary to vindicate the state's legitimate interests in deterring conduct harmful to state residents, the defendant's financial condition remains a legitimate consideration in setting punitive damages" after the decisions evaluating the constitutionality of a punitive damages award (see text, §1566 et seq.). (35 C.4th 1185.) In some cases, the defendant's financial condition may combine with high reprehensibility and a low compensatory award to justify an extraordinary ratio between compensatory and punitive damages. In other cases, especially those involving substantial compensatory awards, the level of deterrence may be limited to that provided as a natural result of imposing damages over and above traditional compensatory damages. (35 C.4th 1186.)

72 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
c. Wealth of Defendant.
1. Evidence Admissible.
bb. Net Worth.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1614

[§ 1614] Net Worth.

In Kenly v. Ukegawa (1993) 16 C.A.4th 49, 19 C.R.2d 771, infra, §1716, the trial judge awarded plaintiff $ 200,000 in punitive damages based on evidence that, because of fraudulent conduct that saved certain property from foreclosure, defendant stood to gain over $ 2 million from a later resale of the property. Held, the failure to consider defendant's net worth was error.

(a) Although net worth has been the traditional criterion against which an award of punitive damages was measured to decide whether the award was excessive, Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1291, 1298, 13 C.R.2d 585, held that a punitive damage award could be based solely on the amount of profit that the defendant received from the fraud without regard to his or her net worth. (16 C.A.4th 56.) And Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 C.3d 105, 284 C.R. 318, 813 P.2d 1348, infra, §1619, although laced with language suggesting that net worth is the touchstone for punitive damage awards, declined to prescribe any rigid standard for measuring a defendant's ability to pay. (16 C.A.4th 57, footnote 6.)

(b) "We are convinced that in most cases there must be evidence of the defendant's net worth in order to support the punitive damage award. An award based solely on the alleged 'profit' gained by the defendant, in the absence of evidence of net worth, raises the potential of its crippling or destroying the defendant, focusing as it does solely on the assets side of the balance sheet without examining the liabilities side of the balance sheet. Without evidence of the entire financial picture, an award based on 'profit' could leave a defendant devoid of assets with which to pay his other liabilities. It is here that we believe the Cummings court strayed when it concluded that an award based on the profit reaped from the fraud is proper and can never be excessive." (16 C.A.4th 57.)

(c) "We do not hold that an award of punitive damages can never be justified solely on the profits of the fraudulent transaction (without evidence of net worth), because there may well be cases where the evidence compels the conclusion the defendant will not be crippled by the award. For example, a $ 10,000 punitive damage award (based on profits) against a Fortune 500 company might well be proper without a lengthy presentation of the company's net worth. However, the facts presented here cannot assure us that the award will not have a crippling effect, and therefore evidence is required on that issue." (16 C.A.4th 57, footnote 7.) (See Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 952, 967, 968, 192 C.R. 219 [although net income is best yardstick, figures on gross sales, gross income, or gross wealth are relevant]; Lara v. Cadag (1993) 13 C.A.4th 1061, 1064, 16 C.R.2d 811 [evidence of defendant's earnings is not, by itself, meaningful evidence of financial condition]; Robert L. Cloud & Associates v. Mikesell (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1141, 1151, 82 C.R.2d 143 [under Lara and Kenly, neither annual income nor illegal profits is adequate evidence of the defendant's net worth; what is required is evidence of the defendant's ability to pay].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Century Surety Co. v. Polisso (2006) 139 C.A.4th 922, 960, 43 C.R.3d 468 [rules for determining whether punitive damage award violated due process (see text, §1566 et seq.) did not render consideration of net worth improper].

73 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
 2. Bifurcation of Trial.
 aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1615

[§ 1615] In General.

C.C. 3295 authorizes a bifurcated trial on the issue of defendant's wealth.

(1) "The court shall, on application of any defendant, preclude the admission of evidence of that defendant's profits or financial condition until after the trier of fact returns a verdict for plaintiff awarding actual damages and finds that a defendant is guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud" under C.C. 3294. (C.C. 3295(d).)

(2) This evidence is admissible only as to the defendant or defendants found to be liable to the plaintiff and to be guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. (C.C. 3295(d).)

(3) The evidence must be presented to "the same trier of fact that found for the plaintiff and found one or more defendants guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud." (C.C. 3295(d).) (See Westrec Marina Management v. Jardine Ins. Brokers Orange County (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1042, 1049, 102 C.R.2d 673 [before punitive damages may be awarded, plaintiff must prove oppression, malice, or fraud by clear and convincing evidence, and this proof must be made in first phase of bifurcated trial; if this is not done, court is later justified in refusing trial on punitive damages issue]; BAJI, Nos. 14.72.1, 14.72.2, 14.73.1; CACI, Nos. 3941, 3942, 3944, 3946, 3948, 3949.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

74 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
c. Wealth of Defendant.
2. Bifurcation of Trial.
bb. Same Trier of Fact.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1616

[§ 1616] Same Trier of Fact.

In Medo v. Superior Court (1988) 205 C.A.3d 64, 251 C.R. 924, a wrongful death action, the trial judge announced that the issue of punitive damages would be bifurcated and tried to a separate jury. Defendant's counsel made no objection. The jury returned a $ 163,000 verdict for plaintiffs and was discharged. Defendant then moved to dismiss on the ground that, the jury having been discharged, it was impossible to comply with the "one jury" requirement of C.C. 3295(d) (supra, §1615). The trial judge denied the motion, but ordered that at the second phase of the trial, plaintiffs' liability must be retried before evidence on punitive damages could be presented. Held, this was error; although C.C. 3295(d) required a single jury, it was waived by the failure of defendant's counsel to object.

(a) Plaintiffs argued that C.C. 3295(d) requires only that the jury hearing evidence of a defendant's malice must hear evidence of that defendant's financial condition. However, had the Legislature intended to allow different juries to make the liability and punitive damage decisions, it could have done so. The phrase "found for the plaintiff and" shows that profit and financial condition evidence must be presented to the same trier of fact that has already made the findings of liability and malice, oppression, or fraud. (205 C.A.3d 68.)

(b) This interpretation is reasonable, because punitive damages must be tied to oppression, fraud, or malice in the conduct giving rise to liability in the case. Hence, to evaluate oppression, etc., the jury must be allowed to consider the conduct giving rise to the liability. (205 C.A.3d 68.)

(c) However, the trial judge specifically stated that he would make the order for bifurcation unless there was strong objection from counsel. The testimony of counsel for defendant that she recalled making objection to bifurcation, but could not say whether it was made on or off the record, is insufficient to support a finding that an objection was made within a reasonable time after the bifurcation order. Hence, the requirement that compensatory and punitive damages be determined by the same jury was waived. (205 C.A.3d 69.) Had counsel objected, and especially had he informed the trial judge of the recent enactment of C.C. 3295(d), it is quite possible that separate juries would not have been ordered. (205 C.A.3d 70.)

(d) Although plaintiffs should not be deprived of the first jury's finding of liability, evidence of the conduct upon which liability rested could be heard by the second jury in determining the amount of punitive damages. (205 C.A.3d 70.)

In El Monte v. Superior Court (1994) 29 C.A.4th 272, 276, 34 C.R.2d 490, plaintiffs sued two police officers and the city of El Monte for compensatory and punitive damages. Prior to trial, the trial judge granted defendants' application, under C.C. 3295(d), to preclude the admission of evidence. The jury returned a verdict for one plaintiff against one police officer and the city, awarded compensatory damages, and found that the officer had acted with malice, oppression, or fraud, so that punitive damages could be awarded. After the verdict, the trial judge asked if there was anything else and, receiving no response from either counsel concerning punitive damages, discharged the jury. Realizing his mistake as the jury was leaving, plaintiffs' counsel told defendants' counsel, in the hallway, that the jury should not have been discharged before it heard evidence of defendants' wealth. Defense counsel said nothing. Plaintiffs' counsel then filed a motion for a directed verdict for specified punitive damages, but because no evidence had been presented on the subject, the trial judge decided to reconvene a new jury to hear evidence on the matter. Defendants objected to this procedure by way of mandamus. Held, granted.

(a) C.C. 3295(d) explicitly provides that the same jury that found for the plaintiff must hear the evidence of the defendant's wealth. The statute leaves no room for the exercise of discretion, unless the defendant expressly or tacitly agrees otherwise. Therefore, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to reconvene a new jury, even though he did so to correct an obvious mistake. (29 C.A.4th 276.)

(b) Medo is distinguishable. In that case, the court announced at the onset of trial that the issue of punitive damages would be tried to a separate jury unless counsel objected. Neither counsel said anything until a verdict had been rendered and the jury discharged, at which time defense counsel objected, claiming that there was no way to comply with C.C. 3295. The court held that defendant had waived his right to have the same jury determine his wealth, because he had been informed that a different jury would hear that issue, but had said nothing. In the present case, there was no evidence that the trial judge planned to employ two juries. And defense counsel had no obligation to point out evidence that had been omitted. (29 C.A.4th 277.)

(c) People v. Saunders (1993) 5 C.4th 580, 20 C.R.2d 638, 853 P.2d 1093, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §122, dealing with the right under P.C. 1025, 1164 to have the same jury hear evidence of prior convictions, is instructive. In that case, the trial judge discharged the jury after it had reached a verdict on the substantive charges, and defendant had waived his right to a jury trial on the priors. After a court trial on the priors, defendant changed his mind, withdrew his waiver, and raised the issue of once in jeopardy on the priors. The trial judge and appellate court held that a defendant may not "sandbag" the court by failing to object and then later asserting his right to have the same jury hear the evidence of priors. Defense counsel had a duty to inform the court of his rights, including the right of having the same jury hear evidence of priors. By failing to object, he waived this right. Applying this aspect of Saunders to the present action, it follows that had the trial judge announced his intention to discharge the jury, continued the case to the next day, and then impaneled a second jury, defendant would have waived his C.C. 3295 right to have the same jury hear the evidence on the issue of punitive damages, by saying nothing. (29 C.A.4th 277.)

(d) "Medo served as a warning to defendants, that the right to have the liability and punitive damages phases of the trial tried by one jury may be waived where the defendant knows up front that two juries will be employed, and fails to object when the first is discharged after the liability phase. This case should serve as a warning to plaintiffs that in the absence of a clear understanding that two juries will be employed, plaintiffs must put on their entire case, including evidence relevant to the amount of punitive damages, before the jury is discharged. Failure to do so results in a forfeiture of the right to punitive damages." (29 C.A.4th 280.)

In Rivera v. Sassoon (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1045, 46 C.R.2d 144, plaintiffs brought an action against their former landlord for breach of the warranty of habitability. The jury awarded damages to plaintiffs, and found that defendant had acted with malice. However, prior to the second phase of the trial on punitive damages, two of the jurors who had decided the liability issue, claiming financial hardship, were replaced by alternate jurors. Held, this procedure did not violate C.C. 3295(d).

(a) Under El Monte v. Superior Court, a new jury cannot hear the evidence of punitive damages. (39 C.A.4th 1048.) However, alternate jurors, while not personally deciding the question of liability, are members of the jury that did hear, while under oath, all of the evidence presented. They are thus in as good a position to evaluate the evidence of malice giving rise to liability as are the jurors that they replaced. (39 C.A.4th 1049.)

(b) Accepting defendant's interpretation of the statute "would mean that in every case involving punitive damages if a juror had to be excused due to illness, family emergency, or other good cause after the liability phase of the trial the court would have to grant the defendant's motion for a mistrial. As a matter of public policy and sound judicial administration, replacing the excused juror with an alternate is preferable to giving the defendant a second bite of the apple at plaintiff's expense due to circumstances beyond plaintiff's control." (39 C.A.4th 1049.)

In Torres v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (1997) 15 C.4th 771, 63 C.R.2d 859, 937 P.2d 290, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, Supp., §779, the Court of Appeal set aside as excessive a $ 1.7 million punitive damages award rendered against defendant insurer for bad faith refusal to pay a $ 38,000 automobile accident claim, but remanded the entire cause for a complete retrial. The court concluded that a retrial was mandated by the requirement of C.C. 3295(d) that evidence of profit and financial condition must be presented to the same trier of fact that found for the plaintiff and found one or more defendants guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud. Held, reversed and remanded for a new trial on punitive damages only. The legislative history of this provision indicates that the "same trier of fact" language was meant to apply only to bifurcation, and that it was not designed to change the long-standing rule that, on remand, a retrial can be limited to the issue of punitive damages only. (15 C.4th 776.) (See Barmas v. Superior Court (2001) 92 C.A.4th 372, 375, 112 C.R.2d 71 ["same trier of fact" provision of C.C. 3295(d) applies to bifurcated trials only and thus does not preclude partial retrial before different jury of issues of malice and, if necessary, punitive damages in nonbifurcated case].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Torres case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §891.

75 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
 2. Bifurcation of Trial.
 cc. Time of Application.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1617

[§ 1617] Time of Application.

Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1 C.R.2d 301, involved a contract under which defendant shopping center sellers had promised to guarantee certain leases. Defendants filed a declaratory relief action, and plaintiff buyers filed a cross-complaint based on breach of contract and fraud in connection with the execution of the guaranties. During opening argument, counsel for plaintiffs told the jury that defendant H was a billion-dollar company, and later cross-examined a witness on the subject of H's wealth. In response to defendants' unwillingness to voluntarily produce their records, plaintiffs had an out-of-town H executive standing by to testify as its initial witness (defendants had presented their case first). At this point, which came after months of pretrial proceedings and 5 days of testimony, defendants filed a motion under C.C. 3295(d) for a protective order excluding evidence of their wealth. The trial judge denied the motion. Held, this was not an abuse of discretion.

(a) Defendants argued that the only deadline imposed by C.C. 3295(d) is that the motion be made before the trier of fact delivers a verdict finding the defendant liable for acts meriting the assessment of punitive damages. This is incorrect. A request under C.C. 3295(d) is essentially a motion in limine that should ordinarily be made before trial. (235 C.A.3d 1241.) Making the motion may be delayed until a later date, but in this event the trial judge, despite the mandatory language of the statute, has the discretion to deny it if the delay is unexcused and would cause harm to the plaintiff. (235 C.A.3d 1242.)

(b) Here, defendants had early warning that plaintiffs intended to introduce evidence concerning H's wealth; hence, they had no excuse for their delay in filing a motion to exclude the evidence. Moreover, granting the motion in the midst of trial would have been prejudicial to plaintiffs because, at the time the motion was made, they had an out-of-town witness waiting to discuss defendants' finances. (235 C.A.3d 1242.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

76 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
3. Discovery of Financial Condition.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1618

[§ 1618] Discovery of Financial Condition.

(1) Revocation of Protective Order as Sanction. In Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 265, 150 C.R. 77, plaintiffs sued five members of a law firm for malicious prosecution, intentional interference with business relations, and intentional infliction of emotional harm. Plaintiffs served interrogatories seeking financial information and stating that in lieu of detailed answers a current financial statement would be sufficient. The trial judge issued a protective order stating that the answers would be kept sealed, not to be opened except by the judge conducting the mandatory settlement conference. Four defendants filed statements; the fifth did not, and the trial judge made an order that the protective order would be dissolved if he did not comply. In the settlement conference, the judge found that the financial statement of the fifth defendant was inadequate and dissolved the protective order as to all defendants. Held, this was an abuse of discretion, and mandamus granted to compel issuance of a new protective order. "In effect, the trial court held four of the petitioners hostage to force compliance by the fifth, and then imposed its sanction order when the fifth did not perform in a manner deemed adequate by the judge." (86 C.A.3d 270.) This was an abuse of discretion as to the fifth; the court could not revoke its protective order even if the response was inadequate.

(a) The rule that a plaintiff alleging a cause of action that supports a claim for punitive damages may by discovery obtain information concerning his or her adversary's financial status was established by Coy v. Superior Court (1959) 51 C.2d 471, 473, 334 P.2d 569, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §318, in the "flush of optimism" that the "game element" would be removed from the litigation process. (86 C.A.3d 270, quoting Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 C.2d 355, 376, 15 C.R. 90, 364 P.2d 266, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §1.)

(b) Experience has shown that civil discovery "has in far too many instances become its own means of substituting a battle of attrition for a search for truth. It has become a method by which the volume or nature of information sought and not the probability of success of a claim or defense pressures settlement." (86 C.A.3d 270, 271.)

(c) Discovery seeking financial information in punitive damages cases "is one classic instance of the manner in which civil discovery is used to achieve a litigation advantage never contemplated when the methodology was introduced into pretrial procedure. Causes of action for punitive damages have become very easy to allege. ... Response to discovery seeking financial information places a severe burden on the responder. At a minimum, there is the time and expense necessary to the compilation of a complex mass of information unrelated to the substantive claim involved in the lawsuit and relevant only to the subject matter of a measure of damages which may never be awarded. In addition, there is usually the potential that untoward disclosure of the information obtained may in some way or other react adversely against the disclosing party for reasons totally unrelated to the lawsuit. The possibilities run all the way from greater exposure to the not so gentle solicitations of some charitable organizations to the possibility of damage to the discloser in the competitive business arena." (86 C.A.3d 271.)

(d) "Given the presently broad test of discoverable matter, the burden incident to the compilation of information that may never be of value to anyone seems built into the process. The potential of untoward disclosure of the financial information obtained in the discovery process is not. It seems a rare instance indeed that the potential of disclosure for purposes unrelated to the lawsuit or to persons other than counsel and their representatives serves any purpose except to give a tactical edge to the party who has obtained discovery of the information by allowing that party the benefit of pressure in settlement negotiations by threat or implication of disclosure." (86 C.A.3d 272.)

(e) "[W]here a party is compelled in civil discovery to reveal financial information because the information is relevant to the subject matter of a claim for punitive damages, that party is, upon his motion, presumptively entitled to a protective order that the information need be revealed only to counsel for the discovering party or to counsel's representative, and that once so revealed, the information may be used only for the purposes of the lawsuit. The burden is upon the opposing party to establish a substantial reason why the order should be denied. That reason must be related to the lawsuit." (86 C.A.3d 272.)

(2) Statutory Authorization of Protective Orders. Protective orders are now authorized by statute. "The court may, for good cause, grant any defendant a protective order requiring the plaintiff to produce evidence of a prima facie case of liability for damages" pursuant to C.C. 3294, prior to the introduction of evidence of the defendant's profits or financial condition. (C.C. 3295(a); see 11 Pacific L. J. 352.) No pretrial discovery of financial condition may be had unless the court, on noticed motion, finds that "there is a substantial probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim." (C.C. 3295(c); see Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 C.A.3d 543, 550, 551, 160 C.R. 561, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §17; Jabro v. Superior Court (2002) 95 C.A.4th 754, 756, 115 C.R.2d 843 [in granting C.C. 3295(c) motion for disclosure of defendants' assets, trial judge improperly failed to weigh evidence presented by both sides; rather, he held that all plaintiff had to do was make prima facie showing sufficient to avoid summary judgment on his punitive damages claim]; 54 A.L.R.4th 998 [discovery of defendant's sales, earnings, or profits on issue of punitive damages].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statutory Authorization of Protective Orders. See Hilton K. v. Greenbaum (2006) 144 C.A.4th 1406, 1412, 51 C.R.3d 295 [in consolidated actions, judge's financial condition discovery rulings, which implicitly found that there was "substantial probability" that other plaintiffs would prevail in their molestation-based claims against school, did not raise issue of material fact that precluded summary judgment for school in another molestation action by other parents].

77 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
4. Introduction of Evidence Is Essential.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1619

[§ 1619] Introduction of Evidence Is Essential.

At one time, evidence of wealth, though discoverable and admissible (see supra, §1613 et seq.), was held not essential to an award. (Hanley v. Lund (1963) 218 C.A.2d 633, 645, 32 C.R. 733; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 404, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459; Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 C.A.3d 952, 964, 192 C.R. 219; Fenlon v. Brock (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1174, 1182, 265 C.R. 324.)

Dumas v. Stocker (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1262, 262 C.R. 311, and Storage Services v. Oosterbaan (1989) 214 C.A.3d 498, 516, 262 C.R. 689, rejected this line of cases. The California Supreme Court resolved the conflict in Adams v. Murakami (1991) 54 C.3d 105, 284 C.R. 318, 813 P.2d 1348, by holding that evidence of the defendant's financial condition is a prerequisite to an award of punitive damages, and that the burden of introducing this evidence is on the plaintiff.

Plaintiff, a chronic schizophrenic of low intelligence, brought an action for medical malpractice, battery, and intentional infliction of emotional distress, against defendant Dr. M and defendant hospital. The complaint alleged that as a result of their wrongful acts and omissions plaintiff became pregnant by another patient and gave birth to a son who was mentally retarded and autistic. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff that, after adjustments by the trial court, amounted to $ 1,024,266, including $ 750,000 in punitive damages. The hospital settled, but Dr. M appealed, contending that the punitive damages award was improper because plaintiff had not introduced evidence of Dr. M's financial condition. Held, judgment reversed.

(a) Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, infra, §1620, set forth three criteria for determining whether an award of punitive damages is excessive (i.e., exceeds the level necessary to properly punish and deter). One of these is the defendant's financial condition, and a reviewing court cannot make a fully informed determination unless the record contains evidence of that condition. (54 C.3d 110, 111.) In Burnett v. National Enquirer (1983) 144 C.A.3d 991, 193 C.R. 206, infra, §1621, the court, reiterating the Neal factors, concluded that, although the defendant's misconduct was "reprehensible," the award had to be reduced solely because it constituted too great a portion of defendant's net worth and income. (54 C.3d 111.)

(b) Although the determination whether an award is excessive is an unscientific process (54 C.3d 112, quoting Devlin v. Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault (1984) 155 C.A.3d 381, 202 C.R. 204, infra, §1620), when provided with evidence of the defendant's financial condition the reviewing court can at least reach a reasonably informed decision. "Without such evidence, a reviewing court can only speculate as to whether the award is appropriate or excessive. Plaintiff offers no justification for imposing such a burden on reviewing courts or for encouraging ill-informed decision." (54 C.3d 112.)

(c) The better reasoned line of Court of Appeal decisions requires evidence of the defendant's financial condition. Dumas, on a full consideration of the Neal decision, points out that compensatory damages cannot be based on speculation, and that there is no reason for a different standard for punitive damages. (54 C.3d 114.) Dumas states the correct rule. (54 C.3d 114, 115.) The opposing rule, set forth in Vossler is not persuasive. It was based on Hanley v. Lund, supra, a poorly reasoned case decided before Neal. (54 C.3d 115.) "We affirm the rule stated in Dumas, ... and disapprove of Hanley ... and its progeny." (54 C.3d 115.)

(d) The issue has recently acquired a federal constitutional dimension, in Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip (1991) 499 U.S. 1, 111 S.Ct. 1032, 113 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §1567. (54 C.3d 116, 117.) "We need not decide, and do not decide, whether evidence of a defendant's financial condition is a constitutional prerequisite under Haslip. ... At a minimum, however, the high court has made clear a constitutional mandate for meaningful judicial scrutiny of punitive damages awards. This requirement weighs heavily in favor of evidence of a defendant's financial condition. Absent such evidence, a reviewing court cannot make an informed decision whether the amount of punitive damages is excessive as a matter of law. That commonsense concern is itself sufficient to require such evidence as a matter of state law. Moreover, in light of Haslip, the absence of such evidence raises doubt as to the constitutionality of a punitive damages award." (54 C.3d 118.)

(e) The final problem is how to allocate the burden of producing the evidence.

(1) Under Ev.C. 500 (1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §6), fundamental fairness is the lodestar; and the bedrock concerns of policy and fairness support placing the burden on the plaintiff. "It is not too much to ask of a plaintiff seeking such a windfall to require that he or she introduce evidence that will allow a jury and a reviewing court to determine whether the amount of the award is appropriate, and in particular, whether it is excessive in light of the central goal of deterrence." (54 C.3d 120.)

(2) The potential unfairness of imposing the burden on the defendant becomes even more clear when considered in the light of trial practice reality. "It is inherently prejudicial to require a defendant to introduce evidence of personal finances. Doing so places a defendant in the position of bidding against himself. A defendant in that position is forced to tell the jury in effect that: 'My conduct doesn't warrant punitive damages. But, by the way, if you disagree, please be gentle, I'm worth only the following amount.' ... Requiring a defendant to prove his or her own financial condition may improperly taint the jury's decision whether to impose punitive damages in the first instance. The defendant's only alternative is to remain silent as to personal finances and run the risk of being annihilated financially." (54 C.3d 120.)

(3) Consideration of the question from the plaintiff's perspective leads to the same conclusion. As one practice guide explains: "Plaintiff's counsel has everything to gain and nothing to lose by utilizing the rule that permits (and if the verdict is high) compels introduction of the defendant's wealth." (54 C.3d 122.) "Perhaps a plaintiff might want to keep from a jury the evidence of a defendant's financial resources if they were meager and thus might lead to a small punitive damages award. In this circumstance, however, the plaintiff would be deliberately seeking an award disproportionate (or at least unrelated) to the defendant's ability to pay. That result, of course, is contrary to the public purpose of punitive damages." (54 C.3d 122.)

Two justices dissented. (See Washington v. Farlice (1991) 1 C.A.4th 766, 777, 2 C.R.2d 607 [inadequate evidence of defendant's financial condition to determine if award of $ 50,000 was justified]; Tomaselli v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1269, 1282, 1285, 31 C.R.2d 433, citing the text [punitive damages award was defective; only evidence of defendant's financial condition was annual report of defendant's corporate parent, and there was no showing that it would be unjust to plaintiffs to limit award to percentage of defendant's value rather than that of parent]; Chavez v. Keat (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1406, 1410, 41 C.R.2d 72 [rule that plaintiff bears burden of proving defendant's wealth is not constitutionally required; it is California rule of substantive law, not applicable to federal cause of action in California court]; 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1441 [Adams]; 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 842 [same]; on full retroactivity of Adams, see Douglas v. Ostermeier (1991) 1 C.A.4th 729, 740, 2 C.R.2d 594, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §980; on inapplicability of Adams rule where substantive law being applied is federal, see Barber v. Rancho Mortg. & Inv. Corp. (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1819, 1842, footnote 26, 32 C.R.2d 906.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Caira v. Offner (2005) 126 C.A.4th 12, 37, 24 C.R.3d 233 [to comply with rule that there must be evidence of defendant's financial condition, court may order defendant to produce financial statement, and if defendant fails to obey order, it cannot claim on appeal that evidence of financial worth was lacking]; Kelly v. Haag (2006) 145 C.A.4th 910, 916, 52 C.R.3d 126 [evidence was insufficient to support $ 75,000 punitive damages award against contractor causing water damage to condominium, where there was no evidence that, at time of trial, contractor still owned certain properties, and even if he did own those properties, there was no evidence of any encumbrances on properties at time of trial, or of other liabilities contractor may have had]; Baxter v. Peterson (2007) 150 C.A.4th 673, 679, 58 C.R.3d 686 [in fraud case, plaintiff lessee failed to introduce sufficient evidence of defendant lessor's financial condition to support $ 75,000 punitive damages award, where, although record showed that lessor owned several rental houses, there was no evidence regarding their value, amount of income they generated, extent to which they were encumbered, or whether properties' operation was profitable]. Douglas case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §544.

78 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
c. Wealth of Defendant.
5. Awards Upheld.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1620

[§ 1620] Awards Upheld.

In Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 95 C.R. 678, defendant insurer was found to have committed a fraud on plaintiff beneficiary of a health policy, who was awarded stipulated compensatory damages of $ 1,050 and punitive damages as prayed, $ 500,000. On appeal, the judgment was reversed for a retrial of the issue of punitive damages. (265 C.A.2d 921.) On the retrial, the jury awarded $ 200,000 and the judge denied a new trial. Held, affirmed. The object of punitive damages "is to make the example as well as the punishment fit the offense." Defendant's report to stockholders showed $ 300 million in gross assets, $ 60 million in net assets, and a monthly net income after taxes of $ 1 million. The $ 200,000 was less than a week's after-tax income. "Thus, the jury could reasonably conclude that an award equal to one week's earnings was required to effect the necessary punishment of defendant and to serve as an example for other insurers." (18 C.A.3d 271.)

In Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, the court declared that, in determining whether the recovery is so grossly disproportionate as to raise a presumption of passion or prejudice (see supra, §1612 et seq.), it is guided by the following principles:

(a) The particular nature of the defendant's acts: "[T]he more reprehensible the act, the greater the appropriate punishment." (21 C.3d 928.)

(b) The amount of compensatory damages awarded: "[E]ven an act of considerable reprehensibility will not be seen to justify a proportionally high amount of punitive damages if the actual harm suffered thereby is small." (21 C.3d 928.)

(c) The wealth of the defendant: "[O]bviously, the function of deterrence ... , will not be served if the wealth of the defendant allows him to absorb the award with little or no discomfort." (21 C.3d 928, citing the text.) "By the same token, of course, the function of punitive damages is not served by an award which, in light of the defendant's wealth and the gravity of the particular act, exceeds the level necessary to properly punish and deter." (21 C.3d 928.)

Applying these principles to the instant case:

(1) The jury and judge could properly have concluded that the conduct of defendant was "highly reprehensible," involving "a calculated attempt" to take advantage of the tragedies afflicting Mrs. N and her family "in order to effect a settlement at a bargain price." (21 C.3d 929.)

(2) If Mrs. N had not died, it is likely that a substantial additional amount of compensatory damages would have been awarded for emotional distress; under these circumstances "the apparent disproportion" cannot nullify the award. (21 C.3d 929.)

(3) The reduced verdict represents less than 1/10 of 1% of defendant's gross assets and less than 1 week's net income; hence, as in Wetherbee, supra, the award "was required to effect the necessary punishment of defendant and to serve as an example for other insurers." (21 C.3d 929.)

In Zaxis Wireless Communications v. Motor Sound Corp. (2001) 89 C.A.4th 577, 107 C.R.2d 308, a punitive damages award of $ 300,000 was held not to be excessive as a matter of law despite the fact that defendant company had a negative net worth. Although many items may be "losses" for accounting purposes, they do not affect a defendant's ability to pay a damages award. This was especially true in this case where the evidence showed that defendant had a net profit of $ 7.5 million, a credit line of $ 50 million, and cash on hand and a checking balance of over $ 19 million. Net worth is too easily manipulated to be the sole standard of measuring a defendant's ability to pay. (89 C.A.4th 581.)

Many additional decisions are illustrative. (See MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 293, 79 C.R. 707, supra, §488; Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 353, 87 C.R. 226, supra, §1589 [award against corporate defendant much larger than against individual defendant; award upheld]; Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 926, 937, 119 C.R. 82; Walker v. Signal Cos. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 982, 149 C.R. 119; Pistorius v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1981) 123 C.A.3d 541, 554, 176 C.R. 660 [award of $ 1 million was .00002% of defendant's gross assets and 1/20 of 1% of its net worth; upheld]; Betts v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1984) 154 C.A.3d 688, 711, 201 C.R. 528; Downey Savings & Loan Assn. v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1072, 1097, 234 C.R. 835 [compensatory damages of $ 152,983.43, punitive damages of $ 5 million--ratio of 32.7 to 1--upheld]; Douglas v. Ostermeier (1991) 1 C.A.4th 729, 750, 2 C.R.2d 594, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §980 [award of $ 187,000 was justified by evidence of defendant's wealth and nature of his possibly criminal acts in selling used car to plaintiff]; Stevens v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1645, 1659, 57 C.R.2d 525 [fact that punitive damages exceeded profits made on item that caused harm did not automatically make them excessive]; Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 C.A.4th 573, 616, 103 C.R.2d 492 [in upholding punitive damage award of $ 25 million against famous ex-football player, court properly considered evidence of defendant's ability to earn future income, taking into account damaging effects of present trial; fact that punitive damages exceeded defendant's net worth did not prove excessiveness in light of exempt nature of much of defendant's income].)

In Devlin v. Kearny Mesa AMC/Jeep/Renault (1984) 155 C.A.3d 381, 202 C.R. 204, the court examined the opinions dealing with the claim of excessive punitive damages awards, analyzed the relevant factors considered on review, and, in an Appendix, listed the cases awarding damages, noting amounts and relationship to wealth. (For a full discussion of Devlin, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §369; and see Goshgarian v. George (1984) 161 C.A.3d 1214, 1227, 1228, 208 C.R. 321 [commenting on Devlin opinion and Appendix].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See San Bernardino v. Walsh (2007) 158 C.A.4th 533, 541, 69 C.R.3d 848 [evidence did not support claim by defendants that punitive damages awards of $ 1 million and $ 500,000 respectively would financially ruin them; both defendants manipulated and concealed wrongfully obtained profits and evidence of net worth, one defendant manipulated net worth of $ 3.7 million to ensure he would obtain comfortable lifestyle despite award, and other defendant owned more than $ 2 million in assets, as well as equity in real property]. Douglas case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §544. Full discussion of Devlin case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §375.

79 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
 6. Awards Held Excessive.
 aa. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1621

[§ 1621] In General.

In Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 451, 136 C.R. 653, supra, §214, the verdict against an insurer for wrongful termination of disability payments was $ 172,325 compensatory damages and $ 2.5 million punitive damages. Held, the compensatory damage award, while "somewhat generous," was not excessive. (67 C.A.3d 466.) The punitive damage award was, in the light of the evidence, excessive. It amounted to more than 15% of defendant's entire net worth, and bore no reasonable relationship to the compensatory damages. (67 C.A.3d 469, citing the text.) Hence, the judgment was affirmed as modified to permit plaintiff to agree to a reduction to $ 250,000; otherwise the issue of the amount of punitive damages was to be retried. (67 C.A.3d 470.)

In Rosener v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1980) 110 C.A.3d 740, 168 C.R. 237, plaintiff homeowners entered into home improvement contracts with a contractor licensed by defendant. The work was badly done, the contractor defaulted, and defendant violated its promises to assure satisfactory performance. Plaintiffs suffered physical and emotional distress, invasions of privacy, property damage, and financial loss. The verdict was for $ 158,000 compensatory damages and $ 10 million punitive damages. Held, reversed for a new trial on punitive damages unless plaintiffs consent to a reduction of the punitive damage award to $ 2.5 million. The punitive damage award was not reasonably related to either the compensatory damages or the nature of defendant's conduct, and was clearly excessive.

(a) Relation to compensatory damages. If defendant's wealth were the only guiding factor (see supra, §1613), the award, representing less than 1/4 of 1% of defendant's net assets and only 31/2 days of net income, might be justified. (110 C.A.3d 750.) But the reasonable relation test (see supra, §1612) must also be applied, and the award did not meet the test; the ratio here was 63 to 1. (110 C.A.3d 752, 753, citing Little v. Stuyvesant Life Ins. Co., supra, and Allard v. Church of Scientology (1976) 58 C.A.3d 439, 453, 129 C.R. 797, supra, §1612.)

(b) Nature of defendant's act. As pointed out in Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, supra, §1620, the reprehensibility of the defendant's act is an important factor. Some of the problems of defendant's contractor and the recalcitrance of his bonding company could not easily have been anticipated; some of defendant's actions were based on advice of counsel; and defendant made some attempts to rectify the situation. (110

C.A.3d 753, 754.)

In Burnett v. National Enquirer (1983) 144 C.A.3d 991, 193 C.R. 206, supra, §637, compensatory damages were properly awarded, in the amount of $ 50,000, on a showing of false statements injuring plaintiff's professional standing, in a publication read by 16 million persons. (144 C.A.3d 1016.) But the punitive damage award was excessive. The jury verdict was for $ 1.3 million, which the trial judge reduced to $ 750,000. The reduced amount, however, was 35% of the defendant's net worth and nearly half of its net income for the period under consideration. Accordingly, the appellate court ordered that it be further reduced to $ 150,000 or that defendant be granted a new trial on the issue. (144 C.A.3d 1012.)

A number of additional decisions are illustrative. (See BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 1601, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 829, supra, §1568 [punitive damages award 500 times actual damages was denial of due process]; Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 809, 824, 157 C.R. 482, 598 P.2d 452, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §242 [award 40 times larger than substantial compensatory damage award, representing 21/2 months of defendant's entire net income for 1973 and more than 7 months of this income in 1974 was excessive as matter of law]; Goshgarian v. George (1984) 161 C.A.3d 1214, 1227, 1228, 1229, 208 C.R. 321 [reducing award from $ 15,000 to $ 7,500]; Sprague v. Equifax (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1012, 1052, 1054, 213 C.R. 69 [trial judge properly applied factors set forth in Neal and Little]; Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 866, 237 C.R. 282; Storage Services v. Oosterbaan (1989) 214 C.A.3d 498, 515, 262 C.R. 689 [award representing 44% of defendant's net worth, and exceeding his gross income in year of trial]; Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1255, 1 C.R.2d 301 [$ 10 million award reduced to $ 2 million]; Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1566, 1592, 36 C.R.2d 343 [$ 1.25 million award; defendant's net worth valued at $ 4.4 million]; George F. Hillenbrand v. Insurance Co. of North America (2002) 104 C.A.4th 784, 820, 128 C.R.2d 586 [$ 14 million award in malicious prosecution action reduced to $ 3 million; reduction was justified where underlying action was prosecuted at lawyer's behest, and there was no evidence of personal ill will towards plaintiff]; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 147 [criticizing California appellate decisions reducing awards]; 12 A.L.R.5th 195 [excessiveness or inadequacy of punitive damages awarded in personal injury or death case]; 103 A.L.R.5th 379 [validity of state statutory cap on punitive damages].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

80 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
 c. Wealth of Defendant.
 6. Awards Held Excessive.
 bb. Defendant Not Wealthy.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1622

[§ 1622] Defendant Not Wealthy.

In Merlo v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 5, 18, 130 C.R. 416, the court, after quoting the general rule of Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 65, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §1554, that the wealthier the defendant the larger the award of punitive damages needs to be, said: "It also follows that the poorer the wrongdoing defendant the smaller the award of punitive damages need be in order to accomplish the statutory objective." Plaintiff's home was lost through foreclosure after defendant insurer unjustifiably refused to continue payments on a mortgage insurance policy (see supra, §459), and the jury awarded plaintiff compensatory damages of $ 267,294.52 and punitive damages of $ 500,000. The compensatory damage award, almost all of which was for emotional distress, was held excessive in light of the suffering shown (see infra, §1746), and the punitive damage award was held excessive in light of the net worth of defendant--$ 1,607,721.01. (59 C.A.3d 18.) (See 79 A.L.R.3d 1138 [admissibility of evidence of defendant's lack of financial resources as matter in mitigation of punitive damages].)

This issue, and the ratio of actual to punitive damages, were explored in Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 C.A.3d 481, 136 C.R. 132. Plaintiff's car broke down, and she called defendant's service manager, asking him to pick it up and find out what was wrong with it. B. & P.C. 9884.9 provides that the repairer must give a written estimate, that no work may be done before authorization to proceed, and that no charge may be made in excess of the estimate without the consent of the customer. (See 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §332.) Defendant performed work without an estimate, and presented her with a bill for $ 1,952.52 for repairs, for a car valued at about $ 1,500. Plaintiff refused to pay, and managed to obtain possession of the car; but defendant later repossessed it, and plaintiff was forced to rent a car for business use. In this action for damages for conversion, plaintiff offered evidence that some of the work charged for had not been done, and that other work was poorly done, requiring an expenditure of $ 87 for corrective work. The jury verdict was for $ 5,342 compensatory and $ 175,000 punitive damages. The trial judge made a conditional new trial order for reduction of the punitive damages to $ 50,000, but this was defective for failure to state reasons (C.C.P. 657). Held, the punitive damage award was excessive, and judgment was reversed for a new trial on all issues (see infra, §1739).

(a) Matters involved in determination of issue. (1) The award must bear a reasonable relation to actual damages. (2)

The poorer the wrongdoer the smaller the award need be. (3) The public policy embodied in the statute violated, and the magnitude of defendant's violation by the defendant, are also to be considered. (66 C.A.3d 496.)

(b) Policy embodied in statute. Defendant was guilty of a flagrant violation of a statute enacted for the protection of consumers, and this supported imposition of punitive damages "in a very substantial amount." Hence, if the judge had made an adequate statement of reasons for his conditional new trial order, the reduced amount of $ 50,000 might well have been justified. (66 C.A.3d 497.)

(c) Relation to actual damages. The amount awarded by the jury was about 40 times the compensatory damages. Some older cases have held such a ratio too high; more recent cases have approved higher amounts, and, as pointed out in Wetherbee v. United Ins. Co. of America (1971) 18 C.A.3d 266, 95 C.R. 678, supra, §1620, there is no fixed ratio. (66 C.A.3d 498.) In other words, excessiveness must be tested by "the importance of the policy violated by defendant's conduct, the degree and extent, both qualitatively and quantitatively, of the violation, and the financial circumstances of the defendant." (66 C.A.3d 499.)

(d) Defendant's net worth. Unlike the wealthy defendant in Wetherbee, defendant had only $ 532,000 in net assets, and the award, more than one-third of that amount, "could only be justified on the assumption that it is necessary to put defendant out of business in order to deter future conduct of a like nature." This would require "clear evidence of a continuing course of conduct involving large-scale flagrant violations," which was not shown here. (66 C.A.3d 500.)

In the retrial in Zhadan, supra, the punitive damage award of $ 90,000 was upheld, on a showing that defendant's net worth had increased to $ 1,314,000; i.e., the former award was 33% of the net worth and the present less than 7% of the net worth. (Zhadan v. Downtown Los Angeles Motors Distributors (1979) 100 C.A.3d 821, 834, 161 C.R. 225.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

81 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
d. Prejudicial Matter in Trial.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1623

[§ 1623] Prejudicial Matter in Trial.

In Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 C.3d 910, 148 C.R. 389, 582 P.2d 980, supra, §1620, plaintiff's counsel used the "third party argument," i.e., by questions and argument urged the jury to judge defendant's conduct not in the context of its policy limits but in the context of the total "value" of the injuries suffered by N in the accident, about $ 500,000. This was improper: (a) In the actual third-party situation, where the insurer refuses to settle an injured person's claim against its insured, the insurer can be held liable for the full amount of any judgment regardless of policy limits. (21 C.3d 925, citing Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Connecticut (1967) 66 C.2d 425, 58 C.R. 13, 426 P.2d 173, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §264.) (b) This principle has no application to the present first-party situation, for plaintiff's injuries (in the accident) were sustained prior to defendant's breach, and could not be a proximate result of the breach. (21 C.3d 925.) Thus, counsel's conduct should be condemned; but, because the extent and severity of N's injuries were relevant to the punitive damages, and because the judge instructed the jury that the "value" of those injuries was not to be considered as an element of compensatory damages, it cannot be said that the jury was misled, and the error was therefore not prejudicial. (21 C.3d 925.)

Counsel also, from opening statement to closing argument, placed before the jury the details of N's condition following the accident, her subsequent death from cancer, and her son's death from the same disease. "Counsel's zeal in this respect in some instances led him into excesses," and he was reproved by the judge. However, the facts behind this tactic were relevant: "[T]he jury was clearly entitled to consider evidence of the situation of the insured at the time of the proffered settlement insofar as that situation was known to the insurer and might be considered to have motivated its actions." Hence, it cannot be said that the verdict as reduced resulted from passion and prejudice. (21 C.3d 926.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
C. Punitive or Exemplary Damages.
9. Determination of Award and Amount.
e. (New) Uncompensated or Potential Harm as Affecting Amount.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1623A

[§ 1623A] (New) Uncompensated or Potential Harm as Affecting Amount.

In Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co. (2005) 35 C.4th 1159, 29 C.R.3d 379, 113 P.3d 63, plaintiff attempted to purchase a building from defendant. The parties entered into a tentative agreement in which plaintiff, in exchange for defendant's acceptance of a $ 1.1 million sales price, agreed to deposit $ 50,000 to open escrow and to complete all inspections by a specified date, at which time the deposit would become nonrefundable. At the same time, plaintiff secured an attorney, paying a nonrefundable $ 5,000 retainer. When defendant sought to have the inspections completed by an earlier date, the parties could not agree, and the negotiations terminated. Plaintiff then sued for breach of contract and promissory fraud. Finding that there was no contract, but that defendant had made a false promise about a material matter upon which plaintiff had relied to his detriment, the jury awarded him compensatory damages equal to the $ 5,000 retainer. Finding further that defendant had acted with malice and oppression, the jury fixed punitive damages at $ 1.7 million. In attempting to justify the award, plaintiff argued that the $ 1.7 million punitive award should not be measured against the $ 5,000 compensatory award, but against the alleged actual harm that he had sustained, i.e., the $ 400,000 difference between the sales price and what plaintiff's expert testified the building was worth. Held, $ 5,000 was the extent of plaintiff's damage.

(a) Appropriate basis for comparison. United States Supreme Court precedents appear to contemplate that, in some circumstances, the use of measures of harm beyond the compensatory damages is appropriate. These include TXO Production Corp. v. Alliance Resources Corp. (1993) 509 U.S. 443, 113 S.Ct. 2711, 125 L.Ed.2d 366, text, §1567; State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585, text, §1568; and BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 832, text, §1568. However, "the $ 400,000 in profit that plaintiff might have gained by purchasing the building is not a proper consideration." (35 C.4th 1174.)

(b) Uncompensated harm.

(1) The jury did not specify the false promise made by defendant. Thus, the finding could have referred to defendant's express promise to proceed to escrow and attempt to complete a transaction on the agreed terms, to its express promise to exclusively negotiate, to its implied promise to seek approval from the New York office for a sale on the agreed terms, or to any combination of these promises. However, had defendant made none of these promises, plaintiff would still not have obtained the property, because, as the jury found, he had no contractual right to buy the property. Consequently, defendant's promissory fraud did not deprive plaintiff of property that he would have obtained but for the fraud; it merely led him to spend $ 5,000 to retain an attorney in anticipation of opening escrow. (35 C.4th 1175.)

(2) Plaintiff contended that he was precluded from recovering the $ 400,000 in lost profits only by operation of C.C. 3343(a)(1), which sets damages for a defrauded attempted purchaser of property at the "[a]mounts actually and reasonably expended in reliance upon the fraud." This contention is without merit. Fraudulent promises to negotiate exclusively and proceed to escrow may cause the attempted buyer to expend money in reliance, but they do not themselves cause the losses occasioned by the attempted buyer's failure to actually obtain the property. That injury is instead caused by the seller's breach of an enforceable contractual obligation to sell the property, where one exists. Hence, if plaintiff had prevailed on his breach of contract cause of action, he would have been entitled to recover the benefit of his bargain, here allegedly $ 400,000, because defendant's refusal to sell to him would have caused that injury. But defendant in fact had no contractual obligation to sell plaintiff the property. It had an obligation imposed by law not to fraudulently promise to sell plaintiff the property, but had defendant complied with that obligation, plaintiff still would not have obtained the property. (35 C.4th 1175.)

(c) Potential harm.

(1) Plaintiff also contended that defendant's fraud was intended to cause him, or risked causing him, potential losses, including the $ 50,000 deposit that was to become nonrefundable upon completion of the inspections. Plaintiff further contended that his potential losses included an unquantified financial impact; i.e., had he given up his leased business premises after signing the letter of intent, he would then have "found himself on the street" when defendant pulled out of the sale. However, "these asserted potential injuries, like the uncompensated harm ... , may not be considered in assessing the ratio of punitive damages to harm." (35 C.4th 1177.)

(2) The potential harm that is properly included in this analysis is harm that is foreseeable from the defendant's conduct. However, the $ 400,000 in profit plaintiff claimed that he would have earned by acquiring the property cannot be considered potential harm resulting from defendant's promissory fraud, because, in the absence of any contractual obligation to sell plaintiff the property, defendant's tortious conduct could not have had the foreseeable effect of depriving plaintiff of an entitlement to purchase it. Similarly, plaintiff's potential loss of his $ 50,000 deposit was simply not shown to be a likely result of defendant's fraud. To obtain the $ 50,000, defendant would first have had to open escrow, which required entering into a binding contract of sale, something defendant did not do. The same may be said of plaintiff's possible cancellation of his then current leasing arrangement, i.e., that he might do so without first entering into a binding purchase contract was not foreseeable, and had he done so after executing such a contract, he would not have been "out on the street," because he could have enforced the contract. (35 C.4th 1177.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

83 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

1. Avoidable Consequences.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1624

[§ 1624] In General.

Where damage to person or property is threatened or inflicted by either breach of contract or tort, the injured party has the active duty to use reasonable care and diligence to protect himself or herself and minimize the loss. And if, by the injured party's own neglect, the damages are unnecessarily enhanced, the injured party cannot recover the excess. (See Pretzer v. California Transit Co. (1930) 211 C. 202, 208, 294 P. 382; Withrow v. Becker (1935) 6 C.A.2d 723, 729, 45 P.2d 235; Shaffer v. Debbas (1993) 17 C.A.4th 33, 41, 21 C.R.2d 110 [award of $ 130,000 based on cost of repair of house had to be reduced to $ 97,500, where jury found that 25% of property damage to house could have been avoided]; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Mitigation of Damages, Chap. 6; 6 Am.Jur. Trials 501 [Minimizing Personal Injury Damages]; BAJI, Nos. 14.67, 14.68; CACI, Nos. 3930, 3931.)

Though frequently expressed in terms of a duty of the injured party, it is perhaps more accurate to say that the wrongdoer is not required to compensate for damages avoidable by reasonable effort. Hence, the rule is sometimes referred to as the "doctrine of avoidable consequences." (See Rest.2d, Torts §918; 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.4; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §340 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 131; 55 A.L.R.2d 936 [duty of one suing for damage to vehicle to minimize damages]; 66 A.L.R.2d 1131 [duty to minimize damages for wrongful injunction].) The doctrine applies to wilful as well as negligent torts. (Green v. Smith (1968) 261 C.A.2d 392, 67 C.R. 796, infra, §1626.)

In Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, supra, §720, plaintiff, a telephone long-distance carrier, sued defendants, the parents of teenage boys who used the family computer to crack plaintiff's system and make long-distance phone calls without paying. In November, defendants' sons first used the family home computer and modem to enter plaintiff's system. Plaintiff became aware of the computer hacking through its internal security system almost immediately and had identified its source by late November, but made no attempt to contact defendants. Three months later, in February, the sons again tried to find an authorization code, this time using computer software to perform rapid-fire random number searches, generating over 1,300 calls and overburdening plaintiff's system. Plaintiff again did not contact defendants, but subsequently filed this action, seeking damages for conversion, fraud, and the reasonable value of services. Plaintiff offered no explanation for its failure to complain to defendants after the November hacking episode, and did not rebut defendant father's testimony that he would have stopped the hacking immediately had he been informed. The trial court found for plaintiff, and awarded $ 33,720 in damages and nearly $ 14,000 in attorneys' fees and costs. Held, judgment reversed as to damages. (On liability aspects of case, see supra, §§720, 773, 821, 822, 1229, 1230.) Plaintiff had a duty to mitigate its damages and may not recover for losses that it could have avoided. Under the uncontradicted evidence, had plaintiff informed defendants of their sons' activities, defendants would have prevented them from engaging in the second, more serious computer hacking episode in February. Accordingly, plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the February event. Because the judgment presumably included damages attributable to the February incident, the judgment must be reversed and the matter remanded for a new trial on damages. (46 C.A.4th 1568.)

Personal injury cases furnish a familiar illustration. A plaintiff who fails or refuses to submit to necessary treatment by a doctor cannot recover for additional harm resulting from failing to do so. (See 4 Harper, James & Gray 2d §25.4; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §366 et seq.; 62 A.L.R.3d 70 [duty of injured person to submit to nonsurgical medical treatment to minimize damages]; BAJI, No. 6.28; CACI, No. 517; infra, §1626.) And if the plaintiff does act with reasonable care in seeking medical aid, the right to recover damages will not be diminished by reason of the fact that the plaintiff might have obtained better treatment. (Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. (1920) 182 C. 93, 102, 187 P. 2; Garrison v. Booth (1935) 10 C.A.2d 738, 742, 52 P.2d 535 [plaintiff treated slight abrasion himself for 4 days, then went to doctor as soon as fever developed]; Christiansen v. Hollings (1941) 44 C.A.2d 332, 345, 112 P.2d 723; see McKinney v. Red Top Cab Co. (1931) 113 C.A. 637, 641, 299 P. 113 [plaintiff imprudently took train trip after accident, without getting prompt medical care; but no showing that injuries were aggravated by doing so].)

The fact that reasonable measures other than the one taken would have avoided damage is not, in and of itself, proof of the fact that the one taken, though unsuccessful, was unreasonable. (Royal Thrift & Loan Co. v. County Escrow (2004) 123 C.A.4th 24, 41, 20 C.R.3d 37 [lender's conduct of foreclosure sale was reasonable, although better procedure was available].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.62(1) et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Doctrine of avoidable consequences: See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.4. Failure to seek medical care: See 4 Harper, James & Gray 3d §25.4.

84 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

1. Avoidable Consequences.

b. Recovery of Cost of Efforts.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1625

[§ 1625] Recovery of Cost of Efforts.

A party who fulfills his or her duty to mitigate damages may recover the reasonable cost of doing so, provided that it does not exceed the damages prevented or reasonably anticipated. (Kleinclaus v. Marin Realty Co. (1949) 94 C.A.2d 733, 739, 211 P.2d 582; Hartong v. Partake (1968) 266 C.A.2d 942, 968, 72 C.R. 722; Rest.2d, Torts §919; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 133; 33 A.L.R.3d 1262 [recovery of cost of insured's efforts from property insurer].)

In Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Granite Const. Co. (1964) 225 C.A.2d 765, 37 C.R. 727, plaintiff installed an underground communications cable to the site of Winter Olympic Games tryouts. Defendant, contractor for an access road, damaged it by trespass and negligence. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover not only the cost of repair, but the cost of relocating 780 feet of cable to avoid future injuries. (225 C.A.2d 769.)

In Zander v. Texaco (1968) 259 C.A.2d 793, 66 C.R. 561, plaintiff settled with insured tortfeasors and gave them a covenant not to execute. Then plaintiff sued their insurer on his statutory cause of action under Ins.C. 11580(b)(2) (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §301 et seq.). Held, the covenant did not bar this action; i.e., plaintiff should not be penalized for this attempt to minimize his damages. Hence, he could recover from the insurer the amount of his judgment against the tortfeasors, less the amount of the settlement. (259 C.A.2d 803.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

85 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

1. Avoidable Consequences.

c. Exceptions to Requirement.

1. Unreasonable Efforts.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1626

[§ 1626] Unreasonable Efforts.

The doctrine of avoidable consequences does not apply where the measures necessary to avoid or lessen the damage would involve an unreasonably great effort, risk, or expense, or would be impractical. (Joerger v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1929) 207 C. 8, 28, 276 P. 1017; Valencia v. Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 C.2d 840, 846, 147 P.2d 558, infra, §1627; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§344, 347 et seq.)

In Green v. Smith (1968) 261 C.A.2d 392, 67 C.R. 796, plaintiff had a large crop of nursery stock on leased land. Defendant bought the land, and, in clearing it for future subdivision, demolished the pipeline supplying water. Plaintiff attempted to convey the water by constructing a ditch, but was only partially successful. Damage to trees was found to be $ 17,000, but the trial judge awarded only $ 600, the cost of a substitute means of conveying water--by portable irrigation equipment using other water. Held, reversed. The injured party need not make unreasonable efforts; and reasonableness is determined by the situation confronting the plaintiff when loss is threatened, not by judgment of hindsight. (261 C.A.2d 396, citing the text.) Here, the probative findings were that plaintiff did attempt to irrigate by constructing one ditch, then a bigger one, and that he was able to salvage part of the crop. These findings were inconsistent with the conclusion that he failed to take reasonable measures. "The fact that in retrospect a reasonable alternative course of action is shown to have been feasible is not proof of the fact that the course actually pursued by plaintiff was unreasonable." (261 C.A.2d 398.)

In Seaboard Music Co. v. Germano (1972) 24 C.A.3d 618, 101 C.R. 255, plaintiff leased coin-operated amusement equipment to a bar owner for 3 years. The agreement contained a provision that any sale of the business should require the purchaser to assume the equipment contract. Defendant business opportunity brokers induced the lessee to sell without this provision, and plaintiff sued for inducement of breach of contract. Damages were awarded on the basis of lost profits of $ 51 per week for the remaining weeks of the lease. Defendants contended that plaintiff should have attempted to minimize damages by re-leasing the equipment to another. Held, judgment affirmed. The duty to minimize would apply if a single house or single piece of equipment were involved. Here, plaintiff was in the business of leasing the equipment; it had a warehouse full of similar machines; to apply the minimizing doctrine would deprive it of the profit realized on another contract, which it would have made irrespective of the breach. (24 C.A.3d 623.)

In personal injury cases, the plaintiff need accept only the level of medical treatment that appears reasonably necessary, and may properly refuse to consent to a serious operation with the attendant risk of failure. (Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. (1920) 182 C. 93, 101, 187 P. 2; Karberg v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 10 C.A.2d 234, 251, 52 P.2d 285; Dodds v. Stellar (1946) 77 C.A.2d 411, 423, 175 P.2d 607; see 61 Harv. L. Rev. 132; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§367, 368.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

86 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

1. Avoidable Consequences.

c. Exceptions to Requirement.

2. Reliance on Defendant's Promise.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1627

[§ 1627] Reliance on Defendant's Promise.

Another exception to the doctrine has been recognized where the plaintiff remains inactive in reliance upon a promise of the defendant to pay for the repair of damaged property. In Valencia v. Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 C.2d 840, 147 P.2d 558, defendant's employee negligently damaged plaintiff's truck, and defendant ordered repairs made, but its insurance carrier refused to pay the bill ($ 222) unless plaintiff would sign a release of all claims. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover not only for the cost of repairs, but $ 4,416 for loss of use of the truck for 17 months. Although plaintiff would ordinarily have been bound to minimize damages by paying for repairs, this duty was first excused by defendant's undertaking until the insurance company's repudiation, and subsequently excused where it appeared that plaintiff was unable to meet the expense. (23 C.2d 846.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

87 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

1. Avoidable Consequences.

c. Exceptions to Requirement.

3. Lender's Failure To Insure Collateral.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1628

[§ 1628] Lender's Failure To Insure Collateral.

In Valle de Oro Bank v. Gamboa (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1686, 32 C.R.2d 329, a bank brought an action for the balance due on a promissory note secured by a motor home. The motor home had been destroyed by fire, and the unpaid balance exceeded the insurance coverage obtained by defendant. The trial judge allowed the jury to consider and ultimately apply the doctrine of mitigation of damages by virtue of the fact that the bank, which had a contractual option to procure comprehensive insurance on the motor home, had declined to do so. Held, this was improper. When a lender agrees to maintain insurance for a financed vehicle, an action for breach of the agreement can be maintained for fire damage if in fact no insurance coverage was provided. (26 C.A.4th 1693.) In the present case, however, plaintiff had no such obligation. It fully performed under the contract when it disbursed the loan proceeds to defendant, and the obligation to procure insurance was defendant's. "When [defendant] allowed his insurance coverage to lapse and when he thereafter arranged for renewal of coverage for less than the amount of the loan balance, no damage producing event had yet occurred. The vehicle which collateralized the loan still existed and [defendant] continued to make scheduled loan payments. Simply put, there was no damage for the Bank to mitigate, and it was still the Bank's contractual option, not obligation, to secure its own insurance coverage." (26 C.A.4th 1694.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

88 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
D. Mitigation of Damages.
2. Benefits Conferred by Defendant.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1629

[§ 1629] Benefits Conferred by Defendant.

If the defendant's tort causes injury to the plaintiff, but also confers a special benefit on the plaintiff, the value of the benefit may sometimes be considered and the plaintiff's recovery limited to the net loss. (Maben v. Rankin (1961) 55 C.2d 139, 144, 10 C.R. 353, 358 P.2d 681 ["In determining the damages suffered as a result of a tortious act, consideration may be given, where equitable, to the value of any special benefit conferred by that act to the interest which was harmed"]; Rest.2d, Torts §920; see Dakota Gardens Apartment Investors "B" v. Pudwill (1977) 75 C.A.3d 346, 352, 354, 142 C.R. 126, citing the text [defendant cannot diminish amount of damages by paying debt of plaintiff without plaintiff's consent; mitigation will be denied where it is inequitable]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §383 et seq.; 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §121 [accession]; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §462 [innocent improver of realty].)

The same is true where the defendant pays the plaintiff's medical expense. In Dodds v. Bucknum (1963) 214 C.A.2d 206, 29 C.R. 393, a personal injury action, plaintiff's medical and hospital expenses of $ 955.05 were paid by defendant's insurance carrier under the provisions of defendant's automobile policy. Held, plaintiff was not entitled to inclusion of this amount in the judgment. Starting with the fundamental policy against double recovery, the court stated the distinction between benefits conferred by third persons and by the defendant.

(a) If the plaintiff carries insurance that covers his or her medical expenses, the fact of payment from this collateral source cannot be claimed as a windfall deduction by the defendant wrongdoer, who in no way contributed to the compensation. (214 C.A.2d 213.) (See infra, §1631.)

(b) But if the defendant personally pays the plaintiff's medical bill, the plaintiff cannot recover again for the amount (Rest.2d, Torts §923, Illus. 3); "It can make no difference either in principle or in justice that defendant did not pay these bills out of his own pocket but that the source of such payments was insurance purchased by defendant with his own funds for such an eventuality." (214 C.A.2d 213.)

In Heckert v. MacDonald (1989) 208 C.A.3d 832, 256 C.R. 369, the Heckerts purchased a 31-unit apartment building from MacDonald and others in 1978, for $ 900,000. MacDonald, a real estate broker, represented both the sellers and the purchasers. He had acted as managing agent of the property for the previous owners and continued to act for the Heckerts. In 1983, the Heckerts sold the building to M & S for $ 1,720,000, in a transaction negotiated by MacDonald and Frankel, broker for M & S. Shortly thereafter, M & S found extensive structural deficiencies and dry rot resulting from failure to repair leaks. They brought this action against the Heckerts and MacDonald, for fraud and negligent nondisclosure, and the Heckerts cross-complained against MacDonald for indemnity. The jury brought in a verdict of $ 200,000 to M & S, and the judge entered judgment for the Heckerts for complete indemnity on their cross-complaint against MacDonald. The Heckerts then moved for attorneys' fees of $ 46,172.50 from MacDonald, incurred in defending the action that had been brought against them solely because of his tortious conduct as broker. The trial judge denied the motion. Held, affirmed.

(a) The Heckerts were entitled to attorneys' fees under the "tort of another" or "third party tort" exception to the general rule that each party bears the cost of his or her attorneys' fees. (208 C.A.3d 836, citing Prentice v. North Amer. Title Guaranty Corp., Alameda Div. (1963) 59 C.2d 618, 30 C.R. 821, 381 P.2d 645, infra, §1656.)

(b) However, the theory of the "third party tort" exception is that the attorneys' fees are recoverable not as such but as damages. (208 C.A.3d 838.) Here, the Heckerts came within the "special benefit" doctrine. (208 C.A.3d 839, citing the text.) The profit on the sale of their property resulting from the broker's tortious conduct was far in excess of the attorneys' fees; i.e., in view of the jury's award of $ 200,000 to M & S, the Heckerts received $ 200,000 more from M & S than they would have received had M & S known the true value and structural condition at the time of sale. (208 C.A.3d 839.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.60, 63

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

89 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
D. Mitigation of Damages.
3. Other Mitigating Factors.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1630

[§ 1630] Other Mitigating Factors.

(1) Return of Property Wrongfully Taken. In an action for conversion, the damages are mitigated by the defendant's return of the property, or by its recovery by the plaintiff. (See George v. Pierce (1898) 123 C. 172, 176, 55 P. 775, 56 P. 53; Blewett v. Miller (1900) 131 C. 149, 151, 63 P. 157; Ross v. Sweeters (1932) 119 C.A. 716, 721, 7 P.2d 334; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 673, 192 C.R. 793, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §922; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §137; 75 A.L.R.2d 473 [pleading matter in mitigation in tort action other than defamation].)

(2) Defamation Cases. Evidence in mitigation of damages is frequently offered in actions for libel or slander. (See C.C.P. 461; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 1228; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 225, 251.) Thus, the area of circulation or dissemination of the defamatory statement may be considered, as in Bonner v. Los Angeles Examiner (1936) 17 C.A.2d 458, 462, 62 P.2d 427, where derogatory charges concerning plaintiff were made in a Los Angeles newspaper, but plaintiff resided elsewhere, and there was no showing that the newspaper circulated in the place of his residence.

Due care of the defendant in investigating the matter, or in taking the information from reliable sources, is likewise a basis for mitigating damages. But reliance upon mere rumors, without investigation, will not support a plea in mitigation. (Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Publishing Soc. (1893) 99 C. 431, 438, 34 P. 128.) (On retraction or correction, see supra, §629.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

90 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

a. Nature of Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1631

[§ 1631] Nature of Rule.

The "collateral source rule" has been stated as follows: "Where a person suffers personal injury or property damage by reason of the wrongful act of another, an action against the wrongdoer for the damages suffered is not precluded nor is the amount of the damages reduced by the receipt by him of payment for his loss from a source wholly independent of the wrongdoer." (Anheuser-Busch v. Starley (1946) 28 C.2d 347, 349, 170 P.2d 448; see De Cruz v. Reid (1968) 69 C.2d 217, 226, 70 C.R. 550, 444 P.2d 342, citing the text; Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 6, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, infra, §1632; Hrnjak v. Graymar (1971) 4 C.3d 725, 729, 94 C.R. 623, 484 P.2d 599; Lee v. State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. (1976) 57 C.A.3d 458, 464, 129 C.R. 271; Krusi v. Bear, Stearns & Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 664, 674, 192 C.R. 793; Philip Chang & Sons Associates v. La Casa Novato (1986) 177 C.A.3d 159, 166, 167, 169, 222 C.R. 800, infra, §1635; Rest.2d, Torts §920A; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§392, 395; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 258; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 366; 52 A.L.R.2d 1451 [receipt of compensation from assumption of accumulated employment leave, vacation time, sick leave allowance, or the like, as affecting recovery against tortfeasor]; 47 A.L.R.3d 234 [Hrnjak]; 49 A.L.R.5th 685 [valuing damages for gratuitously rendered nursing and medical care]; 104 A.L.R. Fed 492 [applicability of collateral source rule to actions under Federal Tort Claims Act].)

The doctrine has been severely criticized by commentators. (See 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1478; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 258; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 741.) But it is firmly established as the California rule. (See infra, §1632.)

The Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act abrogates the rule in actions for professional negligence against health care providers. The defendant may introduce evidence of Social Security payments, state or federal disability or compensation payments, health or income disability payments, and benefits received under group health plans. (C.C. 3333.1(a); see supra, §956.) A public entity, in a post-trial hearing, may obtain a reduction of the judgment where the plaintiff has already received partial pretrial compensation. (Govt.C. 985, infra, §1637 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.59

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

91 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

b. Supporting Theories and Policies.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1632

[§ 1632] Supporting Theories and Policies.

In Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, the court undertook an elaborate review of the nature, purpose, and scope of the rule, and answered the principal criticisms leveled at it by commentators (see supra, §1631).

(a) Policy considerations support the rule. An insured invests money in insurance premiums to assure his or her medical care, and the insured, not the tortfeasor, should receive the benefits of that thrift. "The collateral source rule expresses a policy judgment in favor of encouraging citizens to purchase and maintain insurance for personal injuries and for other eventualities. Courts consider insurance a form of investment, the benefits of which become payable without respect to any other possible source of funds. If we were to permit a tortfeasor to mitigate damages with payments from plaintiff's insurance, plaintiff would be in a position inferior to that of having bought no insurance, because his payment of premiums would have earned no benefit. Defendant should not be able to avoid payment of full compensation for the injury inflicted merely because the victim has had the foresight to provide himself with insurance." (2 C.3d 10.)

(b) The rule does not give the plaintiff an unjustifiable double recovery.

(1) Insurance policies increasingly provide for either subrogation or refund of benefits after a tort recovery by the insured. In these cases, "the collateral source rule simply serves as a means of by-passing the antiquated doctrine of nonassignment of tortious actions and permits a proper transfer of risk from the plaintiff's insurer to the tortfeasor by way of the victim's tort recovery. The double shift from the tortfeasor to the victim and then from the victim to his insurance carrier can normally occur with little cost in that the insurance carrier is often intimately involved in the initial litigation and quite automatically receives its part of the tort settlement or verdict." (2 C.3d 11.)

(2) Even where the law precludes subrogation or refund of benefits, or where the collateral source waives subrogation or refund, "the rule performs entirely necessary functions in the computation of damages." (2 C.3d 11.) One function is to prevent confusing the jury in its assessment of general damages. To permit the defendant to disclose compensation by a collateral source for plaintiff's medical costs "might irretrievably upset the complex, delicate, and somewhat indefinable calculations which result in the normal jury verdict." (2 C.3d 11.) The other function is to overcome the disadvantage to the plaintiff resulting from the usual attorney's contingent fee contract. The jury is not informed of the fact that a large portion of the recovery goes to the attorney, and that the plaintiff therefore rarely receives the compensation for his or her injuries as computed by the jury. Thus: "The collateral source rule partially serves to compensate for the attorney's share. ... Indeed, many jurisdictions that have abolished or limited the collateral source rule have also established a means for assessing the plaintiff's costs for counsel directly against the defendant rather than imposing the contingent fee system." (2 C.3d 12.)

(c) Repudiation of the rule without other fundamental changes would be undesirable. "If we consider the collateral source rule as applied here in the context of the entire American approach to the law of torts and damages, we find that the rule presently performs a number of legitimate and even indispensable functions. Without a thorough revolution in the American approach to torts and the consequent damages, the rule at least with respect to medical insurance benefits has become so integrated within our present system that its precipitous judicial nullification would work hardship. In this case the collateral source rule lies between two systems for the compensation of accident victims: the traditional tort recovery based on fault and the increasingly prevalent coverage based on non-fault insurance. Neither system possesses such universality of coverage or completeness of compensation that we can easily dispense with the collateral source rule's approach to meshing the two systems. ... The reforms which many academicians propose cannot easily be achieved through piecemeal common law development; the proposed changes, if desirable, would be more effectively accomplished through legislative reform. In any case, we cannot believe that the judicial repeal of the collateral source rule, as applied in the present case, would be the place to begin the needed changes." (2 C.3d 13.) (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 258; 77 A.L.R.3d 415 [Helfend].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

92 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

c. Scope and Application of Rule.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1633

[§ 1633] In General.

(1) Source Must Be Independent. The collateral source rule was restated and reaffirmed in Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 13, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, supra, §1632, as applicable "in tort cases in which the plaintiff has been compensated by an independent collateral source--such as insurance, pension, continued wages, or disability payments--for which he has actually or constructively ... paid or in cases in which the collateral source would be recompensed from the tort recovery through subrogation, refund of benefits, or some other arrangement." As indicated, the collateral source from which the injured person receives compensation must be a source wholly independent of the tortfeasor. Thus, collateral recovery is not allowed where a joint tortfeasor is involved, because the source of recovery is not "wholly independent." (Kardly v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1989) 207 C.A.3d 479, 485, 255 C.R. 40 [plaintiff's insurer could be sued as independent source for bad faith denial of claim; insurer's fraud was so distinct from defendant driver's negligence that it could not be considered joint tortfeasor]; see infra, §1640.)

(2) Rule Applies in Legal Malpractice Action. In Norton v. Superior Court (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1750, 30 C.R.2d 217, an attorney being sued by his clients for his handling of their property damage claim sought discovery of the terms and conditions of plaintiffs' recovery from their insurer for the property damage. The trial judge denied defendant's motion to compel production of documents. Held, writ of mandamus issued, even though the collateral source rule applies to legal malpractice actions. "[D]ue to the unique nature of a legal malpractice action, being the trial of a 'suit within a suit,' the defendant attorney stands in the shoes of the underlying tortfeasor insofar as the collateral source rule is concerned. Thus, the collateral source rule applies indirectly in a way which makes evidence of payments from a collateral source irrelevant on the question of damages." (24 C.A.4th 1758.) Nevertheless, the documents sought could be admissible for a purpose other than mitigating damages; they could, for example, be used to show plaintiffs' motive in bringing the malpractice action. Therefore, on remand the trial judge should inspect the documents in camera in order to determine whether they should be produced, and if so, what conditions or restrictions should apply. (24 C.A.4th 1761, 1762.)

(3) Triple Recovery. In Rotolo Chevrolet v. Superior Court (2003) 105 C.A.4th 242, 129 C.R.2d 283, plaintiff was injured in a vehicle accident, forced to retire, and received a disability pension, evidence of which he was able to exclude under the collateral source rule. Held, this was error. If plaintiff planned to claim only lost earnings damages, the collateral source rule would preclude evidence of his disability pension, but he also intended to seek to recover the amount of regular retirement benefits that he lost due to his forced early retirement. Although plaintiff's employer is a "source wholly independent of the tortfeasor," the fact that the employer provides two potential types of pension benefits does not make one type "collateral" to the other, which is already "collateral" to plaintiff's lost earnings. Otherwise, plaintiff would receive triple compensation: lost earnings damages, damages based on his lost regular retirements benefits, and his actual disability retirement benefits. (105 C.A.4th 245.)

(4) Instructions. The question whether to tell the jury about collateral compensation is analytically distinct from the collateral source rule, but because the two issues are so closely related courts often draw no distinction between the two. Usually, the jury instruction issue arises when the plaintiff can recover collateral benefits, but the issue may also arise when the plaintiff cannot recover a collateral benefit. In either situation, the jury should not be given that information. (Lund v. San Joaquin Valley R. (2003) 31 C.4th 1, 8, 1 C.R.3d 412, 71 P.3d 770.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) (New) Applicability in Breach of Contract Cases. The collateral source rule has not been generally applied in cases founded upon breach of contract. It does apply, however, where the plaintiff sues for breach of contract and the underlying conduct involves a tort. And it also applies in a construction defect case based on combined tort and contract claims. (El Escorial Owners' Assn. v. DLC Plastering (2007) 154 C.A.4th 1337, 1359, 65 C.R.3d 524 [collateral source rule applied to builder's express indemnity causes of action against subcontractors, which builder had assigned to condominium owners association in connection with construction defects action, because underlying claims against subcontractors were based on their negligence and causation, which association had to prove to prevail].)

93 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

c. Scope and Application of Rule.

2. Gratuitous Payment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1634

[§ 1634] Gratuitous Payment.

In Arambula v. Wells (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1006, 85 C.R.2d 584, plaintiff was injured in a car collision. His claim for damages included loss of earnings. Plaintiff worked for a family-owned company in which his brother was the major shareholder, and the brother continued to pay plaintiff's weekly salary during his absence from work due to his injuries. Although there was evidence that the brother "wished" to be reimbursed, plaintiff presented no documentation establishing that the continued payment of his salary was required or that his brother had the right to be reimbursed. The trial judge thus instructed the jury not to award damages for lost earnings. Held, cause remanded for a limited new trial on the issue of lost wages.

(a) The collateral source rule clearly allows the plaintiff to recover damages despite having received compensation from some additional source, where the plaintiff has paid for the additional compensation or where the collateral source would be compensated. Relying on footnote 5 of Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, supra, §1632, defendant argued that the collateral source rule did not apply to gratuitous payments. This argument is without merit. The Helfend case had nothing to do with the issue at hand. (72 C.A.4th 1009.)

(b) There are numerous other reasons for holding that Helfend is not authority for the proposition that the collateral source rule does not apply to gratuitous payments. The law existing at the time of the Helfend decision made no special distinction for purely gratuitous benefits. (72 C.A.4th 1011, citing Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 C.2d 632, 7 C.R. 377, 354 P.2d 1073, supra, §751, and Tremeroli v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co. (1951) 102 C.A.2d 464, 227 P.2d 923, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §447.) No subsequent appellate opinion has construed Helfend in the manner suggested by defendant. (72 C.A.4th 1011, citing Rodriquez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 151 C.R. 399, and Hanif v. Housing Authority (1988) 200 C.A.3d 635, 246 C.R. 192, infra, §1670.)

(c) Public policy concerns weigh heavily in favor of applying the collateral source rule to gratuitous payments: (1) Applying the rule in this manner favors private charitable assistance; (2) to the extent that private generosity operates, the impact on the state is lightened; (3) applying the rule to gratuitous payments precludes tortfeasors from gaining a windfall; (4) the plaintiff may be motivated to repay the donor, thus avoiding even the semblance of a double recovery; and (5) the injured victim may not have been made whole by the damages recovered, because generally his or her attorney will receive a large portion of this amount. (72 C.A.4th 1012.)

(d) Where a tortfeasor's friends or family pay the victim's bills, not primarily to benefit him or her, but because of a sense of moral obligation or atonement, the tortfeasor may well be entitled to an offset to effectuate the donor's intent and to avoid a double recovery. (72 C.A.4th 1015.)

(e) The rule of evidence aspect of the collateral source rule precludes the introduction of the plaintiff's having been additionally compensated for the purpose of reducing damages. However, this evidence may be introduced for other purposes, such as to impeach the plaintiff's claimed inability to work. Whether these purposes exist here must be resolved by the trial judge on remand. (72 C.A.4th 1015.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Smock v. California (2006) 138 C.A.4th 883, 886, 41 C.R.3d 857 [collateral source rule was properly applied in traffic accident victim's personal injury action in order to exclude from jury's consideration certain gratuitous payments that victim received from his employer during his convalescence]. Tremeroli case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §437. Correction: Page 1149, line 9 of paragraph (b), "Rodriquez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp." should be "Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp."

94 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

c. Scope and Application of Rule.

3. Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1635

[§ 1635] Illustrations.

In Philip Chang & Sons Associates v. La Casa Novato (1986) 177 C.A.3d 159, 222 C.R. 800, plaintiff bought an apartment complex from defendant, on representations that the roof was sound. Leaks developed, plaintiff incurred significant repair bills, and he was forced to credit tenants' rentals for damage caused by the leakage. He brought this action for damages for fraud, seeking recovery for "out-of-pocket" losses under C.C. 3343. Defendant, pointing out that the apartment was financed by the FHA and was subject to an FHA mortgage, attempted to introduce evidence that FHA regulations authorized an increase in rentals to recoup the expenses incurred, and that plaintiff's application for this increase had been approved by the FHA. The trial judge excluded the evidence. Held, the order was proper.

(a) The evidence was relevant. Evidence of a defrauded purchaser's receipt of reimbursement through a regulatory agency's authorization to increase rentals is probative on the issue of whether the defrauded purchaser actually sustained any damages. (177 C.A.3d 165.)

(b) The evidence was nevertheless excludable under the collateral source rule. The restrictive and regulative FHA insured mortgage was equivalent to a constructive payment or investment by the plaintiff mortgagor in a program with potential collateral benefits (favorable interest rate and compensation for increased operating costs). (177 C.A.3d 169.) Most jurisdictions, including California, have balanced two conflicting principles--compensating the plaintiff only for losses actually sustained, and avoiding a windfall to the defendant--in favor of excluding evidence of benefits received from a source wholly independent of the tortfeasor. (177 C.A.3d 170.)

(c) Defendant contended that the absence of a right of subrogation or refund in the third party providing benefits precluded application of the collateral source rule. (177 C.A.3d 165, 167, 170.) "However, the real issue is not whether a windfall is to be conferred upon either party, but rather which party shall receive the benefit of a windfall which presumably already exists. As between the insured plaintiff and the tortfeasor, it would seem that justice compels the conclusion the former's claim is the better. ... In any event, it is clear the possibility of a double recovery in favor of respondent will not impose a double burden on appellant; appellant, as tortfeasor, bears responsibility only for the single burden of his wrong." (177 C.A.3d 170.)

The cases and annotations furnish many illustrations. (See De Cruz v. Reid (1968) 69 C.2d 217, 226, 70 C.R. 550, 444 P.2d 342, citing the text; Loggie v. Interstate Transit Co. (1930) 108 C.A. 165, 169, 291 P. 618 [collision insurance paid for damage to automobile]; Inglewood Park Mausoleum Co. v. Ferguson (1935) 9 C.A.2d 217, 218, 49 P.2d 305 [notary was liable for acknowledging forged deed, though title company paid plaintiff full amount of policy]; Gersick v. Shilling (1950) 97 C.A.2d 641, 650, 218 P.2d 583 [payment of hospital bills by Blue Cross, and disability payments by U.S. Employment Service]; Hume v. Lacey (1952) 112 C.A.2d 147, 152, 245 P.2d 672 [pension payments were not deducted from recovery for loss of earning capacity]; Patent Scaffolding Co. v. William Simpson Const. Co. (1967) 256 C.A.2d 506, 510, 64 C.R. 187, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §189; McQuillan v. Southern Pac. Co. (1974) 40 C.A.3d 802, 807, 115 C.R. 418 [amount received from Public Employees' Retirement System, analogous to pension and insurance payments]; Maggio v. United Farm Workers (1991) 227 C.A.3d 847, 877, 278 C.R. 250 [money received from fund created to reimburse lettuce growers for losses suffered during strike was not deducted]; Shaffer v. Debbas (1993) 17 C.A.4th 33, 40, 21 C.R.2d 110 [rejecting contention that rule should be limited to personal injury cases]; Miller v. Ellis (2002) 103 C.A.4th 373, 382, 126 C.R.2d 667 [in malpractice suit against two attorneys, collateral source rule was unavailable to permit first attorney to recover from second attorney, despite payment by first attorney's insurer of his liability to injured party; first attorney was not in any way an "injured party"]; 75 A.L.R.2d 885 [receipt of public or private pension]; 4 A.L.R.3d 535 [receipt of disability unemployment benefits]; 7 A.L.R.3d 516 [compensation paid by employer, notwithstanding disability]; 11 A.L.R.3d 1115 [insurer's payment of medical or funeral expenses under liability policy]; 77 A.L.R.3d 366 [public relief or gratuity]; 77 A.L.R.3d 415 [hospitalization or medical insurance]; 41 A.L.R.5th 771 [admissibility on damages issue of evidence of availability of free public special education].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

95 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

d. Action Against Public Entity.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1636

[§ 1636] In General.

In Salinas v. Souza & McCue Const. Co. (1967) 66 C.2d 217, 227, 57 C.R. 337, 424 P.2d 921, the court characterized the rule as punitive in nature, and therefore inapplicable in actions against public entities, which cannot be held liable for punitive damages (see supra, §1580). (See 9 Santa Clara Lawyer 227.)

The Souza case was overruled on this point in Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 14, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, supra, §1632. Plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision with a bus negligently driven by defendant M for defendant District, a public entity. Plaintiff claimed about $ 2,700 in special damages, including bills for doctor, hospital, and medicines. Defendant sought to show that 80% of the hospital bill was paid by plaintiff's Blue Cross insurance carrier, and that some of his other medical expenses may have been paid by other insurance. The evidence was excluded, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff on a jury verdict for $ 16,400. Held, affirmed. The collateral source rule "applies to governmental entities as well as to all other tortfeasors."

(a) The Souza characterization of the rule as punitive is unsound. If it were punitive, it could only apply in cases of oppression, fraud, or malice, and would be inapplicable to most tort cases and almost all negligence cases. (2 C.3d 13.)

(b) To preclude application of the doctrine in actions against public entities would give rise to a dilemma. If the entity were immune but the employee liable, he or she would have to pay the extra damages equivalent to the collateral source increment, but would be entitled to indemnity from the entity. The result would be that the entity's immunity would be bypassed when the plaintiff sued both, or an unjustifiable result would occur if the employee sued only the entity. (2 C.3d 15.) (See Acosta v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 19, 25, 84 C.R. 184, 465 P.2d 72 [applying Helfend rule in action only against public entity, not joining employee]; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 258.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

96 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

d. Action Against Public Entity.

2. Statutory Offset Procedure.

aa. Nature of Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1637

[§ 1637] Nature of Statute.

Govt.C. 985 establishes a special procedure by post-trial motion for the reduction of a judgment against a state or local public entity in an action for personal injuries or wrongful death. (For procedure, see infra, §§1638, 1639.)

Govt.C. 985(b) restates the general collateral source rule: "Any collateral source payment paid or owed to or on behalf of a plaintiff shall be inadmissible in any action for personal injuries or wrongful death where a public entity is a defendant."

In all actions affected by Govt.C. 985, the court must instruct the jury with the following language: "You shall award damages in an amount that fully compensates plaintiff for damages in accordance with instructions from the court. You shall not speculate or consider any other possible sources of benefit the plaintiff may have received. After you have returned your verdict the court will make whatever adjustments are necessary in this regard." (Govt.C. 985(j).) (See BAJI, No. 14.60.5; CACI, No. 3923.)

If the defendant public entity or defendant public employee is also a health care provider as defined in C.C. 3333.1 (supra, §956), that section controls as to that defendant. (Govt.C. 985(l).)

The statute does not apply to lien or subrogation rights provided in Lab.C. 3850 et seq. (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §72 et seq.). (Govt.C. 985(m).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

97 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

d. Action Against Public Entity.

2. Statutory Offset Procedure.

bb. Motion, Discovery, and Settlement Conference.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1638

[§ 1638] Motion, Discovery, and Settlement Conference.

(1) Basis of Motion. The motion may be made after a verdict has been returned that includes damages "for which payment from a collateral source" has already been paid or is obligated to be paid for services or benefits provided prior to the commencement of trial, and the total of collateral source payments is over $ 5,000 (the amount to be increased 5% compounded on January 1, 1989, and each January 1 thereafter; thus, as of January 1, 2005, the amount was $ 10,914). (Govt.C. 985(b).)

(2) Motion. The defendant public entity may, by noticed motion within the time set in C.C.P. 659 (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §49), "request a posttrial hearing for a reduction of the judgment" for the collateral source payments. (Govt.C. 985(b).) The hearing may be noticed with any motions pursuant to Govt.C. 962 and 984 (see supra, §§234, 235) or C.C.P. 659; but "the hearing shall not occur until after the determination of any motions for a new trial, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, for remittitur, for additur, and after any mandatory settlement conference" under Govt.C. 962. (Govt.C. 985(b).)

(3) Discovery of Names of Providers and Amounts. Govt.C. 985 allows discovery as follows:

(a) A defendant public entity may, by interrogatory or in writing at the trial-setting conference, "request from the plaintiff a list of the names and addresses of any provider of a collateral source payment affected by this section that has provided collateral source payments directly to or on behalf of the plaintiff and the amount provided to the plaintiff from each collateral source." (Govt.C. 985(c).)

(b) The plaintiff must produce the requested list within 30 days of the request, and has a continuing duty to disclose any additional names and addresses of providers who pay or owe collateral source payments between the time of the response and the commencement of trial. (Govt.C. 985(c).)

(c) If the plaintiff fails or refuses to supply the required information, the defendant public entity, upon discovery of the identity of the provider of a collateral source payment, within 5 years of the date of entry of judgment, may request a reduction of the judgment for those payments. (Govt.C. 985(d).) The failure also "shall subject plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney to sanctions." (Govt.C. 985(d).)

(4) Settlement Conference. The following procedural provisions govern settlement conferences:

(a) The public entity must give written notice to each listed or identified provider of the date set for any pretrial settlement conference. (Govt.C. 985(c).)

(b) The provider is not required to attend a pretrial conference unless requested to do so by the court; but the court may request it to attend or give written information, to be available by telephone, or to otherwise participate in the conference; and it waives its rights to reimbursement unless it attends or otherwise complies with the request. (Govt.C. 985(c).)

(c) The public entity must also give 20 days' notice to the provider of any post-trial settlement conference. (Govt.C. 985(e).)

(d) Proof of service of any notice must be filed with the court and a copy served on all parties to the action. (Govt.C. 985(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Motion.

C.C.P. 659:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §48.

98 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

d. Action Against Public Entity.

2. Statutory Offset Procedure.

cc. Hearing and Determination.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1639

[§ 1639] Hearing and Determination.

(1) Authority and Discretion of Court. At the hearing, the trial court "shall, in its discretion and on terms as may be just," make the following determinations:

(a) Final determination as to any pending lien and subrogation rights. (Govt.C. 985(f).)

(b) Determination of what portion of collateral source payments should be reimbursed from the judgment to the provider, deducted from the verdict, or accrue to the benefit of the plaintiff. (Govt.C. 985(f).)

"No provider of collateral source payments pursuant to this section shall recover any amount against the plaintiff nor shall it be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against a public entity defendant other than in the amount so determined by the court." (Govt.C. 985(f).)

(2) Reimbursements and Adjustments. The following rules govern reimbursements and adjustments:

(a) If the court has determined that the verdict included money damages for which the plaintiff has already received payment or had expenses paid by Medi-Cal, county health care, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Victims of Crime, "or other nonfederal publicly funded source of benefit with statutory lien rights," the court "shall order reimbursement" from the judgment of those amounts to the provider "on terms as may be just." (Govt.C. 985(f)(1).) (See Joyce v. Simi Valley Unified School Dist. (2003) 110 C.A.4th 292, 307, 1 C.R.3d 712 [judgment against school district was not reduced by amount attributable to medical services provided to injured student under insurance policy that her mother had as employee of district; district purchased insurance as employer and did not contribute to student's care as public entity tortfeasor].)

(b) If the court has determined that the verdict includes money damages for which the plaintiff has already received payment or had expenses paid by private medical programs, health maintenance organizations, state disability, unemployment insurance, private disability insurance, "or other sources of compensation similar to those listed," the court "after considering the totality of all circumstances and on terms as may be just," may determine what portion of the collateral source benefits will be (1) reimbursed from the judgment to the provider, (2) used to reduce the verdict, or (3) accrue to the benefit of the plaintiff. "However, nothing in this section shall create subrogation or lien rights that do not already exist." (Govt.C. 985(f)(2); see Garcia v. Sacramento (2002) 103 C.A.4th 67, 77, 126 C.R.2d 465 [under Govt.C. 985(f)(1) and (f)(2), court had discretion to deny reimbursement of Medi-Cal lien; plaintiff quadriplegic recovered judgment against county for far less than his future medical costs]; Joyce v. Simi Valley Unified School Dist., supra [school district's request for discretionary deduction under Govt.C. 985(f)(2) for medical services that had been paid by insurance that district provided to injured student's mother was properly denied, where district failed to identify all collateral providers and medical liens].)

(c) In determining the amount to be reimbursed, or the amount by which the judgment will be reduced, the court must make the following adjustments:

(1) "Where plaintiff has been found partially at fault, the reimbursement or reduction shall be decreased by the same percentage as the entire judgment is reduced to take into account the plaintiff's comparative fault." (Govt.C. 985(f)(3)(A).)

(2) "The court shall deduct from the reimbursement or reduction the amount of premiums the court determines were paid by or on behalf of the plaintiff to the provider of a collateral source payment." (Govt.C. 985(f)(3)(B).)

(3) After making the adjustments described in Govt.C. 985(f)(3)(A) and (f)(3)(B), "the court shall reduce that amount by a percentage equal to the percentage of the entire judgment that the plaintiff paid or owes for his or her attorney fees and costs and reasonable expenses incurred." (Govt.C. 985(f)(3).)

(3) Limitations on Amount Deducted or Reimbursed. "In no event shall the total dollar amount deducted from the verdict, paid to lienholders or reimbursed to all collateral source providers, exceed one-half of the plaintiff's net recovery for all damages after deducting for attorneys' fees, medical services paid by the plaintiff, and litigation costs; however, the court may order no reimbursement or verdict reduction if the reimbursement or reduction would result in undue financial hardship upon the person who suffered the injury." (Govt.C. 985(g).)

(4) Time and Manner of Payment. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, 50% of any amount reimbursed "shall be due immediately." The court may order the remaining 50% to be paid in installments over a period of time to be determined by the court pursuant to Govt.C. 984 (see supra, §235) not to exceed 10 years. (Govt.C. 985(h).)

(5) Cases Involving Multiple Defendants. In a case involving multiple defendants, the reduction must be proportional to the percentage of the judgment actually paid by the public entity and must satisfy the judgment as to the portion of the judgment reduced so that no other judgment debtor will be jointly liable for the portion of the judgment reduced. After a hearing and determination, if the public entity judgment debtor is required to satisfy a portion of a joint and several judgment beyond that public entity judgment debtor's several portion due to the uncollectability of a joint tortfeasor's portion, the public entity may move to reduce the additional portion in a proportional amount. (Govt.C. 985(i).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

99 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

e. Distinctions.

1. Payment by Tortfeasor's Insurer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1640

[§ 1640] Payment by Tortfeasor's Insurer.

The collateral source rule applies where the plaintiff gets compensation from his or her own insurer or some other source wholly independent of the defendant tortfeasor. (See supra, §1636.) However, if the tortfeasor's insurer pays the plaintiff (e.g., under an insured tortfeasor's automobile policy no-fault medical payment clause), a credit must be given. (See Dodds v. Bucknum (1963) 214 C.A.2d 206, 213, 29 C.R. 393, supra, §1629.)

In Jones v. California Cas. Indem. Exchange (1970) 13 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 91 C.R. 726, Y's dog bit J. J sued Y and recovered judgment for $ 3,750, which sum included an award for her medical expenses of $ 1,257.21. Y's insurance company, C, defended the suit and satisfied the judgment. Then J sued C for medical expenses. Y's homeowner's policy had two distinct provisions: (a) the liability clause, requiring the insurer to defend a lawsuit and satisfy a judgment--a fault provision; and (b) the no-fault medical payment clause, requiring payment of medical expenses of a person injured by the insured regardless of fault. Held, C was entitled to the credit. The fact that it did not pay J until after judgment (the first time a demand was made on it) was immaterial. There is no reason for a different result when judgment is obtained and the claim is made thereafter. (13 C.A.3d Supp. 5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

100 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

e. Distinctions.

2. Uninsured Motorist Proceeds.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1641

[§ 1641] Uninsured Motorist Proceeds.

In Waite v. Godfrey (1980) 106 C.A.3d 760, 163 C.R. 881, plaintiff sustained personal injuries and damage to her automobile in a collision involving defendant's car and the car of an unidentified hit-and-run driver who fled from the scene. Plaintiff received $ 12,000 from her insurer under her uninsured motorist coverage, and obtained a verdict for $ 20,000 against defendant. The trial judge, treating the uninsured motorist proceeds as coming from a collateral source, refused to allow defendant a setoff. Held, the setoff should have been allowed, and judgment should be reduced to $ 8,000. The following considerations make the collateral source rule inapplicable:

(a) The duty to pay the uninsured motorist claim depends on establishing the culpability of the uninsured driver; it does not allow the defendant to "garner the benefits" of the plaintiff's providence. (106 C.A.3d 771, 772, citing Helfend v. Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. (1970) 2 C.3d 1, 13, 84 C.R. 173, 465 P.2d 61, supra, §1632.) In the absence of a setoff, plaintiff would receive $ 32,000 for a $ 20,000 loss, and defendant would be denied the equitable treatment required by C.C.P. 877 (supra, §§71, 73). (106 C.A.3d 772, 773.)

(b) In the cases in which the collateral source rule has been applied, the payments, if recovered in a tort action, would have been characterized as special damages. "[W]e have not been able to find a single case in which the collateral source rule has been applied where the proceeds so defined had been received as compensation for pain and suffering, i.e., as and for general damages, damages which uninsured motorist proceeds clearly contemplate." (106 C.A.3d 774.)

(c) Because the insurer paying an uninsured motorist claim is subrogated to the rights of the insured against the person causing the injury, there is a possibility that, if setoff were denied, plaintiff would receive two payments of $ 12,000 from defendant: one directly in satisfaction of the judgment, and the other indirectly through the uninsured motorist carrier. (106 C.A.3d 774, 775.) (See 37 Hastings L. J. 667; 3 A.L.R.5th 746 [insured's recovery of uninsured motorist claim against insurer as affecting subsequent recovery against tortfeasors causing injury]; 40 A.L.R.5th 603 [provision for reduction of uninsured or underinsured motorist coverage by amount recovered from tortfeasor].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

101 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

D. Mitigation of Damages.

4. Collateral Source Rule.

e. Distinctions.

3. Use of Rule To Reduce Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1642

[§ 1642] Use of Rule To Reduce Damages.

In McKinney v. California Portland Cement Co. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1214, 117 C.R.2d 849, decedent worked as a plasterer and was exposed to asbestos-containing products during his 35-year career. For reasons unrelated to the asbestos exposure, decedent retired in 1989. In 1994, at age 62, he elected to begin receiving Social Security benefits. Two years later, he died of lung cancer, and plaintiff widow, believing that his death was partly caused by asbestos exposure (as well as cigarette smoking), commenced a wrongful death action against defendant, the maker of a cement that contained asbestos. The damages sought included a claim of past and future loss of decedent's union and Social Security benefits. Arguing that because plaintiff, after decedent's death, began receiving both pension and Social Security survivor's benefits calculated on the basis of decedent's income, she suffered no actual loss of income, defendant moved for an order that the collateral source rule be used to preclude plaintiff from introducing evidence regarding any financial loss based on decedent's Social Security and pension payments. Seeking to apply the collateral source rule affirmatively, defendant argued that if the rule prevented it from obtaining an offset of damages in the amount of the pension, the rule should also apply to preclude plaintiff from referring to decedent's pension in her affirmative showing of lost financial contributions to the household. The trial court rejected defendant's motion. Held, affirmed; defendant's attempted use of the collateral source rule in reverse as a weapon to diminish damages conflicts with the underlying, long-standing principle of the rule.

(a) Claiming that the collateral source rule only applies to benefits when they are paid to replace something that was lost because of death, defendant argued that plaintiff's pension benefits and Social Security survivor's benefits were not paid in connection with decedent's death and that, therefore, they could be offset against plaintiff's damages. This argument is unpersuasive. Plaintiff's benefits were paid as a direct result of decedent's death. The loss sustained was the loss of decedent's contributions to the household from his income had he lived. The benefits paid to plaintiff were a replacement for the lost contributions from a source unrelated to defendant. (96 C.A.4th 1222.)

(b) The fact that plaintiff received postdeath benefits from the same source as decedent's earnings makes no difference in the application of the collateral source rule. It is an integral part of the rule that a plaintiff will be compensated for his or her loss in some fashion from an outside source. And whether the compensation comes from a pension benefit rather than an insurance policy makes no difference. (96 C.A.4th 1224, citing Hume v. Lacey (1952) 112

C.A.2d 147, 245 P.2d 672, supra, §1635.)

(c) The nature of the sources of income at issue supports the conclusion that they were properly considered as damages for the wrongful death of decedent. The Social Security benefits paid to decedent during his life were based on his earnings and paid to him. He apparently applied a portion of those benefits to support his household. The only evidence available in the record on appeal indicates that plaintiff did not directly receive her husband's Social Security payments while he was alive. As a result of his death, she became entitled to Social Security death benefits in her own name, based on her husband's earnings. In fact, Social Security publications instruct survivors like plaintiff to apply promptly for widow's benefits, which indicates that the benefits paid to the deceased spouse do not automatically continue in an unchanged form. This benefit did not exist before decedent's death, but is a new benefit flowing to plaintiff as a direct result of the death. Thus, it is a classic collateral source, and defendant has produced no reason to ignore the rule. (96 C.A.4th 1226.)

(d) The issue regarding the pension is not quite as clear, but defendant did not place any evidence in the record to indicate that the union pension was a joint payment to plaintiff and decedent that merely continued unchanged after his death. Because defendant was the proponent of the motion, if this were a joint continuing payment, it was defendant's burden to produce supporting evidence. (96 C.A.4th 1226.)

(e) Plaintiff's offer of proof was that, like many pensions, the plasterers union pension offered reduced lifetime benefits in exchange for death benefits to a surviving spouse. This feature of a pension, which is, in essence, a constructive payment for the survivor benefit, makes it look much like an insurance policy. The contributions to the pension plan resulted in a collateral source benefit wholly independent from the tortfeasor. (96 C.A.4th 1227.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

102 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

E. Interest.

1. Actions Other Than for Personal Injury.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1643

[§ 1643] In General.

Interest awarded as damages differs from interest provided for by agreement (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §888). It is allowed to compensate for the delay in recovery of the damages to which the plaintiff is entitled. (See Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1978) 21 C.3d 801, 815, 148 C.R. 22, 582 P.2d 109; Harsany v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 1139, 1143, 196 C.R. 374; Rest.2d, Torts §913; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§462, 473 et seq.; 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 107 [pecuniary loss under Death on the High Seas Act]; 96 A.L.R.2d 1104 [wrongful death actions].)

(1) Money or Property Capable of Ascertainment. Where the tort consists in wrongfully obtaining money or property that has a value capable of ascertainment, e.g., conversion, interest will be given. (C.C. 3336; see New York Cloak & Suit House of Los Angeles v. Coston (1928) 94 C.A. 94, 96, 270 P. 695; Moreno v. Greenwood Auto Center (2001) 91 C.A.4th 201, 209, 110 C.R.2d 177 [in case involving lease of new truck and trade-in of old truck, plaintiff recovered conversion damages for loss of use of old truck, but not for value of that truck at time of conversion; nevertheless, plaintiff was entitled to prejudgment interest]; Rest.2d, Torts §913; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §477 et seq.; 36 A.L.R.2d 337 [interest on damages for period before judgment for injury to, or detention, loss, or destruction of, property].)

Where the tort is one involving property damages that are readily ascertainable, interest is recoverable. (C.C. 3287(a); Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 762, 795, 142 C.R. 1 [fire in defendant's warehouse destroyed contents and portion of adjacent building]; Marine Terminals Corp. v. Paceco (1983) 145 C.A.3d 991, 995, 193 C.R. 687 [faulty repair of machine].)

(2) Oppression, Fraud, or Malice. "[I]n every case of oppression, fraud, or malice, interest may be given in the discretion of the jury." (C.C. 3288; see Isaacs v. Frank Meline Co. (1934) 2 C.A.2d 341, 346, 37 P.2d 1045; McNulty v. Copp (1954) 125 C.A.2d 697, 712, 271 P.2d 90; Nathanson v. Murphy (1957) 147 C.A.2d 462, 467, 305 P.2d 710; Vogelsang v. Wolpert (1964) 227 C.A.2d 102, 125, 38 C.R. 440; Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1566, 1585, 36 C.R.2d 343 [in fraud cause of action, 7% was proper rate of interest; jury, as well as trial judge, may assess interest from time plaintiff parted with money or property]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 136; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 262.)

(3) Actions Other Than Contract. In an action for breach of an obligation not arising from contract, interest may be given in the discretion of the jury. (C.C. 3288; see infra, §1644.)

In Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank, supra, the court discussed the relationship between the two provisions of C.C. 3288 and the necessity for liquidated damages under C.C. 3287: Under C.C. 3288, the trier of fact may award prejudgment interest for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, and in cases of oppression, fraud, or malice. "It is clear from this language that a party does not have to prove both a breach of a noncontractual obligation and oppression, fraud, or malice. ... Even if plaintiff's damages are not liquidated, prejudgment interest may be awarded." (21 C.3d 814.) (See Harsany v. Cessna Aircraft Co., supra, 148 C.A.3d 1143 [where evidence concerning value of plaintiff's destroyed airplane was conflicting, trial judge correctly applied C.C. 3288, rather than C.C. 3287(a)].)

(4) Effect of Comparative Negligence. In Wisper Corp. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 C.A.4th 948, 57 C.R.2d 141, an embezzlement case, 75% of the negligence was attributed to plaintiff corporation, W, and 25% to defendant bank, CCB. Holding that the damages were not "certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation" within the meaning of C.C. 3287(a), the court said: "[I]t is clear the amount of damages owed by CCB to Wisper was not subject to calculation until after the completion of a trial. Although the universe of Wisper's damage was calculable--that is, the number of checks, totaling in excess of $ 1.4 million--the question of whether and to what extent CCB had any liability for Wisper's loss was hotly debated. At the end of the battle, Wisper emerged with a mere 25 percent of its claimed damages. Thus, there is a significant disparity between that which was sought and that which was ultimately found appropriate. Only one element of the claim was certain until the jury made its findings." (49 C.A.4th 957.)

(5) Damages in Personal Injury Action. Prejudgment interest on damages awarded in a personal injury action is permissible under specified statutory conditions. (C.C. 3291; see infra, §1646.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Money or Property Capable of Ascertainment. See Irving Nelkin & Co. v. South Beverly Hills Wilshire Jewelry & Loan (2005) 129 C.A.4th 692, 702, 28 C.R.3d 815 [consignor of jewelry, who prevailed in conversion action against lender to whom consignee had wrongfully pledged consigned goods, was entitled to prejudgment interest until date competing claims to ownership were resolved, even though consignor had earlier obtained goods pursuant to bonded writs of possession; under writs, consignor was effectively deprived of goods until his right to them was actually determined].

103 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

1. Actions Other Than for Personal Injury.
- b. Obligation Not Arising From Contract.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1644

[§ 1644] Obligation Not Arising From Contract.

"In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract," interest may be given in the jury's discretion. (C.C. 3288; see Redke v. Silvertrust (1971) 6 C.3d 94, 106, 98 C.R. 293, 490 P.2d 805 [breach of agreement to make will, by violation of confidential relationship, constituting constructive fraud and unjust enrichment]; Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat. Bank (1978) 21 C.3d 801, 814, 148 C.R. 22, 582 P.2d 109, supra, §1643, citing the text [bank breached duty of due care by allowing one coexecutor to withdraw funds from estate's account without other coexecutor's signature].)

Newby v. Vroman (1992) 11 C.A.4th 283, 14 C.R.2d 44, raised the following issue of first impression: "How should prejudgment interest under section 3288 be calculated and imposed when, prior to judgment against a nonsettling tortfeasor, a joint tortfeasor settles with plaintiff in good faith, thereby mandatorily reducing pro tanto the amount of that judgment?" Plaintiffs sued NCI and V for property damage, and settled with NCI for $ 30,000. Subsequently, the trial judge entered judgment for plaintiffs for $ 43,440, and, pursuant to plaintiffs' motion, awarded prejudgment interest under C.C. 3288 in the amount of $ 28,507.50.

In calculating the prejudgment interest, the trial judge (a) calculated the total prejudgment interest based upon the entire judgment of $ 43,440; (b) allowed plaintiffs all such interest from the date of their loss to the date NCI paid $ 30,000 in settlement; and (c) computed plaintiffs' prejudgment interest after that date based on $ 13,440, i.e., the total judgment of $ 43,440 reduced by the $ 30,000 paid in settlement. V argued that the prejudgment interest should have been calculated only on the amount of judgment after NCI's settlement was deducted, i.e., on the sum of $ 13,440. Held, the method used by the trial judge was correct.

(a) The method used is consistent with the policy of maximizing a plaintiff's recovery to the extent that the negligence or fault of others has contributed to it. In other words, to compensate plaintiffs fully for their loss, prejudgment interest, which is awarded as damages, must first be calculated on the entire judgment from the date of the tortious act proximately causing their damages. If the method favored by V were adopted, plaintiffs simply would not be fully compensated for their loss. (11 C.A.4th 289.)

(b) The method used is also consistent with the policy favoring settlements. "If prejudgment interest against a nonsettling joint tortfeasor is calculated only on the balance of the judgment after settlements paid by others are deducted, plaintiffs would be discouraged from settling with one of multiple defendants because they would be unable to be fully compensated for their loss." (11 C.A.4th 290.)

(c) "While ... a plaintiff is entitled to receive prejudgment interest on the full amount of the judgment, that interest must be awarded against the nonsettling defendants on the full amount of judgment only up to the date when the settling tortfeasor makes payment to plaintiff, who then has that money to use or invest. Thereafter, the plaintiff is entitled to further prejudgment interest from the nonsettling defendants only on the remaining principal balance of the judgment after its reduction by such settlement amount. Were the rule otherwise, plaintiffs would clearly be doubly compensated by first receiving the use and benefit of a partial settlement sum, and thereafter obtaining the additional compensation of continuing prejudgment interest thereon from a nonsettling defendant." (11 C.A.4th 290.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.66.1, 67, 69

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

104 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - a. General Rule Against Interest.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1645

[§ 1645] General Rule Against Interest.

Although C.C. 3288 has been construed as permitting discretionary prejudgment interest for unliquidated tort claims (see supra, §1643), this interest is not allowed on damages awarded for bodily harm, pain, and suffering in personal injury actions. (See Greater Westchester Homeowners Assn. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 C.3d 86, 102, 160 C.R. 733, 603 P.2d 1329; Rest.2d, Torts §913(2); 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§475, 476.)

This rule was explained in Greater Westchester, as follows: "[D]amages for the intangible, noneconomic aspects of mental and emotional injury are of a different nature. They are inherently nonpecuniary, unliquidated and not readily subject to precise calculation. The amount of such damages is necessarily left to the subjective discretion of the trier of fact. Retroactive interest on such damages adds uncertain conjecture to speculation." (26 C.3d 103.) "Furthermore, a fact finder in assessing a claim of general damages for physical, mental and emotional suffering, possesses full authority to consider the duration of the alleged suffering. Accordingly, the disallowance of any interest on such a claim does not deprive the claimant of compensation for an element of actual damage. To the contrary, its allowance, in fact, may in a given case create a double recovery." (26 C.3d 103.)

However, in special circumstances, personal injury damages may be sufficiently certain to merit prejudgment interest. (See E.L. White v. Huntington Beach (1982) 138 C.A.3d 366, 377, 187 C.R. 879 [defendants who satisfied personal injury judgment and sought indemnification were entitled to prejudgment interest from date of satisfaction].)

In a wrongful death action, prejudgment interest cannot be awarded on the inherently nonpecuniary damages for mental and emotional injury, or on damages for loss of future earnings after the date of verdict; but to the extent that the award is for earnings lost in the period from the date of the accident to the date of the verdict, an award is proper. (Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 C.A.3d 512, 526, 527, 196 C.R. 82.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

105 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - b. Statutory Authorization.
 1. Nature and Scope of Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1646

[§ 1646] Nature and Scope of Statute.

(1) Rule of General Applicability. C.C. 3291 begins with a general rule allowing prejudgment interest in personal injury actions: "In any action brought to recover damages for personal injury sustained by any person resulting from or occasioned by the tort of any other person, corporation, association, or partnership, whether by negligence or by wilful intent of the other person, corporation, association, or partnership, and whether the injury was fatal or otherwise, it is lawful for the plaintiff in the complaint to claim interest on the damages alleged as provided in this section."

(2) Rejection of Offer To Compromise. C.C. 3291 then states a special rule regarding offers to compromise: "If the plaintiff makes an offer pursuant to Section 998 of the Code of Civil Procedure which the defendant does not accept prior to trial or within 30 days, whichever occurs first, and the plaintiff obtains a more favorable judgment, the judgment shall bear interest at the legal rate of 10 percent per annum calculated from the date of the plaintiff's first offer pursuant to Section 998 of the Code of Civil Procedure which is exceeded by the judgment, and interest shall accrue until the satisfaction of judgment." (See Gutierrez v. State Ranch Services (1983) 150 C.A.3d 83, 85, 198 C.R. 16; Wilson v. Wal-Mart Stores (1999) 72 C.A.4th 382, 387, 85 C.R.2d 4 [where judgment was lower than second rejected compromise offer, but was higher than first rejected offer, no prejudgment interest was recoverable]; Deocampo v. Ahn (2002) 101 C.A.4th 758, 775, 125 C.R.2d 79, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §81 [in calculating prejudgment interest in C.C.P. 998 case, entire judgment is used, except that future damages are reduced to present value]; 14 Pacific L. J. 465; 16 U.S.F. L. Rev. 325 [proposing enactment of statute]; 40 A.L.R.4th 147 [validity and construction of statute or rule allowing or changing rate of prejudgment interest in tort actions].)

The right to prejudgment interest after obtaining a judgment more favorable than a pretrial offer is not extinguished by an earlier adverse judgment followed by a new trial. The new trial nullifies the adverse judgment, so that only the more favorable judgment remains. (Saakyan v. Modern Auto (2002) 103 C.A.4th 383, 389, 126 C.R.2d 674, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §91.)

(3) Rule Is Inapplicable to Public Entities and Employees. C.C. 3291 concludes with the following limitation: "This section shall not apply to a public entity, or to a public employee for an act or omission within the scope of employment, and neither the public entity nor the public employee shall be liable, directly or indirectly, to any person for any interest imposed by this section." (C.C. 3291.)

(4) Statute Is Mandatory. In Morin v. ABA Recovery Service (1987) 195 C.A.3d 200, 240 C.R. 509, infra, §1648, the court, construing the statutory language in the light of its purpose, held that where the statutory conditions are met, C.C. 3291 "mandates an award of prejudgment interest." (195 C.A.3d 207.) But the court called attention to a problem that arises where, after the defendant rejects the plaintiff's offer, the defendant makes an offer that the plaintiff rejects: "We acknowledge concern the mandatory interest award required by Civil Code section 3291 may work unfairly where the plaintiff has rejected the defendant's written offer to settle for a sum ultimately exceeding the jury verdict. Treating the statute as requiring an interest award in any case where the judgment exceeds the plaintiff's rejected offer will result in inequity to a defendant making a timely good faith offer to settle for an amount in fact exceeding the later jury award. We nonetheless believe the Legislature rejected this concern. The Legislature intended different treatment of personal injury actions because of the manifest greater prejudice of delay in recovering personal injury damages as compared to contractual or business-tort losses given the probability personal injury plaintiffs are likely to be physically as well as monetarily impaired. We leave to the Legislature any change in the statute." (195 C.A.3d 206, footnote 1.)

(5) Federal Preemption. C.C. 3291 is preempted by a federal decision not to allow prejudgment interest in Federal Employers' Liability Act actions. (Lund v. San Joaquin Valley R. (2003) 31 C.4th 1, 13, 1 C.R.3d 412, 71 P.3d 770.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Rejection of Offer To Compromise. See Ray v. Goodman (2006) 142 C.A.4th 83, 87, 47 C.R.3d 659 [plaintiff who made two rejected statutory settlement offers and who obtained judgment exceeding both offers was entitled to prejudgment interest from date of first offer rather than date of second offer, even though it superseded first offer].

Deocampo case:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §89. Saakyan case:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §111.

106 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.

b. Statutory Authorization.

2. Interest on Award of Punitive Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1647

[§ 1647] Interest on Award of Punitive Damages.

In Greenfield v. Spectrum Inv. Corp. (1985) 174 C.A.3d 111, 219 C.R. 805, a judgment for compensatory and punitive damages was entered pursuant to C.C. 3291, but the trial court denied prejudgment interest as to the punitive damages, which had been awarded against defendant employer on the ground of ratification of the employee's conduct. (174 C.A.3d 118, 125.) Held, plaintiff was entitled to interest on both compensatory and punitive damages. The statute states that "the judgment" shall bear interest, and there is only one judgment, which covers both kinds of damages. The statute refers to a "tort" by "wilful intent" which in this case was the intentional assault on plaintiff by the employee, for which defendant employer was responsible. (174 C.A.3d 125.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

107 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - b. Statutory Authorization.
3. Verdict for Personal Injury and Other Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1648

[§ 1648] Verdict for Personal Injury and Other Damages.

(1) In General. In Morin v. ABA Recovery Service (1987) 195 C.A.3d 200, 240 C.R. 509, plaintiff's complaint sought personal injury damages for emotional distress, and damages for wrongful repossession and detention of personal property (including loss of use and enjoyment, expenses for alternative living quarters, replacement items of personal property and lost wages). The jury brought in a general verdict for $ 27,500 general damages and $ 40,000 punitive damages. Opposing plaintiff's request for prejudgment interest, defendant argued that none could be allowed because the verdict did not indicate how much was awarded for personal injury. The trial judge, mistakenly assuming that the award was discretionary rather than mandatory (see supra, §1646), entered an order denying prejudgment interest without reaching the issue of apportionment. Held, order reversed with directions to the trial court "to determine the portion, if any, of the verdict attributable to personal injury claims and award prejudgment interest accordingly," or, if unable to make this determination, to deny the award. (195 C.A.3d 212.)

(a) The jury may have based its verdict on claims other than personal injury damages, and on the record, it is impossible to determine whether any portion reflects personal injury damages. (195 C.A.3d 208.) Under similar circumstances, where a cause of action based on a contract providing for attorneys' fees is joined with other causes of action, the prevailing party may recover attorneys' fees under C.C. 1717 only as they relate to the contract cause, and cannot recover at all if it is impossible to determine what part of the jury award relates to contract. (195 C.A.3d 208, discussing McKenzie v. Kaiser-Aetna (1976) 55 C.A.3d 84, 88, 127 C.R. 275.)

(b) The burden of proof of entitlement to prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291 follows the requirement of pleading, and is on the plaintiff. (195 C.A.3d 209, 210.) The rule of appellate review--that a general verdict imports findings in the winning party's favor on all averments of his or her pleading that are material to the recovery--is distinguishable, and the rule governing attorneys' fees declared in McKenzie is persuasive. (195 C.A.3d 210.)

(c) Like the plaintiff in McKenzie, plaintiff here did not request special jury findings about the theories of recovery underlying the award; but the failure to do so does not bar his claim. "While special jury findings would have been the most direct and effective means of establishing the fact and amount of personal injury recovery, such findings are not necessarily the sole means to determine whether the jury awarded plaintiff damages for personal injuries and, if such damages were awarded, their amount. Facts and circumstances peculiar to this case, possibly including such considerations as the parties' theories of the case, uncontroverted evidence or jury instructions, may permit determination of the fact and amount of personal injury recovery." (195 C.A.3d 211.)

(2) Distinction: Verdict Based on Single Cause of Action. In Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems (1993) 13 C.A.4th 976, 16 C.R.2d 787, plaintiff, a victim of sexual harassment, was awarded compensatory damages of $ 1.5 million and $ 500,000 in punitive damages. The compensatory damages included $ 686,000 for loss of future earnings and $ 662,000 for emotional distress. Relying on Morin, defendant contended that prejudgment interest was applicable only to the damages for emotional distress because those were the only damages related to plaintiff's personal injury. Held, plaintiff was entitled to interest on the entire award. In Morin, it was possible that some or even all of the damages awarded were attributable to the cause of action for possession of personal property. Here, however, the claims for lost wages and punitive damages were based on a single cause of action under the Fair Employment and Housing Act for sexual harassment, which is an action involving a personal injury (see infra, §1646). (13 C.A.4th 1006.)

(3) Burden of Proof. Consistent with the general rule of Ev.C. 500 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §6), the plaintiff has the burden of proving what portion of the award represents damages for personal injury eligible for prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291. (See Lakin v. Watkins Associated Industries (1993) 6 C.4th 644, 659, 25 C.R.2d 109, 863 P.2d 179 [following Morin].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

108 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - b. Statutory Authorization.
4. Service Must Be on Party.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1649

[§ 1649] Service Must Be on Party.

In Moffett v. Barclay (1995) 32 C.A.4th 980, 38 C.R.2d 546, plaintiff served an offer of compromise on defendant's insurer before the complaint had been served on defendant. The offer of compromise was addressed "to defendants and their attorneys of record." The trial judge awarded prejudgment interest to plaintiff following defendant's failure to accept the compromise offer and the entry of judgment in plaintiff's favor. Held, reversed. C.C.P. 998 requires that compromise offers be served on a "party." Here, defendant had not been served with the complaint at the time of the offer, and thus, was not a party, and the insurer had not been designated as defendant's agent for any purpose. (32 C.A.4th 983, citing Ward v. Superior Court (1973) 35 C.A.3d 67, 110 C.R. 501, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §83.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Ward case:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §92.

109 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.

b. Statutory Authorization.

5. Prejudgment Interest Is Not Element of Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1650

[§ 1650] Prejudgment Interest Is Not Element of Damages.

Prejudgment interest awarded under C.C. 3291 is not an element of damages. In Steinfeld v. Foote-Goldman Proctologic Med. Group (1997) 60 C.A.4th 13, 70 C.R.2d 41, a medical malpractice action, the issue was whether the prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291 for the period between plaintiff's offer under C.C.P. 998 and entry of the judgment was an element of damages included in the judgment, so as to entitle plaintiff to postjudgment interest on the sum of the verdict and prejudgment interest, under C.C.P. 685.010(a) (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §§272, 273). Held, prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291 is not an element of damages. Eligibility for interest under C.C. 3291 is predicated on a simple comparison between the judgment, including all the damages, and the offer to compromise under C.C.P. 998. Hence, prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291 is not itself an element of damages. The legislative history of C.C. 3291 corroborates this conclusion. C.C. 3291 was enacted to encourage settlements, not to compensate plaintiffs for the loss of use of calculable settlement funds. (60 C.A.4th 17.) (See Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C.4th 516, 530, 117 C.R.2d 220, 41 P.3d 46 [prejudgment interest accrued under C.C. 3291 is not part of judgment, and plaintiff may not obtain interest on this prejudgment interest, i.e., no compound interest]; on characterization of prejudgment interest as damages in calculating postjudgment interest generally, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §278.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
C.C.P. 685.010(a):

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §§326, 327.

Characterization of prejudgment interest:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §332.

110 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - b. Statutory Authorization.
 6. Scope of Personal Injury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1651

[§ 1651] Scope of Personal Injury.

(1) Defamation. O'Hara v. Storer Communications (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1101, 282 C.R. 712, infra, §1702, held that defamation was a personal injury within the meaning of C.C. 3291, even though plaintiff, by her failure to request a retraction under C.C. 48a (supra, §633), was restricted to recovering special damages. (231 C.A.3d 1119.)

(2) Sexual Harassment. Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems (1993) 13 C.A.4th 976, 16 C.R.2d 787, held that sexual harassment in the workplace is a personal injury within the meaning of C.C. 3291, regardless of whether the harassment is "quid pro quo" or "environmental."

(3) Wrongful Death. In McKinney v. California Portland Cement Co. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1214, 117 C.R.2d 849, supra, §1642, decedent's wife and children brought a wrongful death action against manufacturers of asbestos products. Held, the trial court properly granted the wife's request for prejudgment interest under C.C. 3291, even though the statute expressly refers to personal injury and not to wrongful death. "The background of the statute indicates a concern with differentiating broadly between property damage and personal injury. The most useful approach ... is not to rely on the formal label placed on the complaint, such as negligence, defamation or wrongful death. The appropriate query is whether the damages may be characterized as compensation for a personal injury. ... [I]t is clear that damages awarded to a spouse and children as a result of the wrongful death of a husband and father are personal injury damages." (96 C.A.4th 1231.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

111 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL

E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.

b. Statutory Authorization.

7. Actions Excluded.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1652

[§ 1652] Actions Excluded.

(1) First-Party Insurance Bad Faith. In Gourley v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C.3d 121, 3 C.R.2d 666, 822 P.2d 374, the court held that C.C. 3291 does not apply to a first-party bad faith action by an insured against the insurer. Plaintiff was a passenger in an automobile that was struck by an uninsured drunk driver. Plaintiff was not wearing a seat belt, and suffered a fractured shoulder. She made a claim under the uninsured motorist coverage of her policy with defendant, retained counsel, and demanded arbitration. Acting on expert advice that plaintiff would have suffered only minor injuries if she had been wearing a seat belt, defendant offered to settle for $ 20,000. Plaintiff demanded the policy limit of $ 100,000. In the arbitration proceedings, plaintiff reduced her demand to $ 60,000, and defendant responded with a counteroffer of $ 25,000. The arbitrator concluded that plaintiff was not negligent in failing to wear a seat belt, and awarded her $ 88,000, which defendant promptly paid.

Plaintiff then sued defendant for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and violation of Ins.C. 790.03, asserting that as a consequence of defendant's failure to provide adequate benefits under the policy, she suffered emotional distress. Plaintiff also filed a C.C.P. 998 offer to compromise in the amount of $ 249,099, which defendant rejected. At trial, the jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for $ 15,765 in actual damages, and $ 1,576,500 in punitive damages. The trial judge refused to reduce the punitive damages, and also awarded $ 300,000 in prejudgment interest on the total amount of the verdict. The Court of Appeal affirmed, reasoning that because the primary focus of the bad faith action was to vindicate personal interest, it became a "personal injury" action within the meaning of C.C. 3291. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that because breach of the implied covenant gives rise to a tort action under Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Connecticut (1967) 66 C.2d 425, 58 C.R. 13, 426 P.2d 173, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §258, and Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C.3d 566, 108 C.R. 480, 510 P.2d 1032, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §247, the nature of the harm suffered is personal injury. But both Crisci and Gruenberg emphasize that an insurance bad faith action seeks recovery of a property right. (53 C.3d 127, 128.) And Richardson v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1981) 117 C.A.3d 8, 172 C.R. 423, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §575, dealing with the statute of limitations, holds that an action for breach of the implied covenant is based on infringement of property rights. (53 C.3d 128.) The Richardson court reasoned that this is so because breach of that covenant causes financial loss to the insured, and it is the financial loss or risk of financial loss that defines the cause of action; mental distress is compensable as an aggravation of financial damages, not as a separate cause of action. (53 C.3d 129.)

(b) The same principles apply here: "Breach of the implied covenant is actionable in the insurance context because such conduct causes financial loss to the insured, and it is that loss which defines the cause of action. Had the Legislature intended to apply section 3291 to such an action for interference with property rights, including a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, it could have expressly so provided. Indeed, the language of the statute reveals that the Legislature was seeking to restrict prejudgment interest in a particular type of award, ostensibly to encourage early settlement and to compensate injured plaintiffs for the unfair withholding of insurance proceeds. We cannot agree with either the present Court of Appeal or plaintiff that all actions for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing involving a claim for emotional distress damages, no matter how incidental to the cause of action or how small the amount, are entitled to the special prejudgment interest award accorded by the statute. The absence of any language indicating section 3291 was intended to be applicable to incidental damages flowing from such a breach, including emotional distress damages, convinces us the Legislature did not intend to include such damages within the ambit of the statute." (53 C.3d 129.)

Two justices dissented. (53 C.3d 137.) (See Lakin v. Watkins Associated Industries (1993) 6 C.4th 644, 657, 25 C.R.2d 109, 863 P.2d 179 [distinguishing Gourley on ground that in Lakin plaintiff's claims of emotional distress were at heart of her case, rather than merely incidental to invasion of property interests].)

(2) Wrongful Termination. Holmes v. General Dynamics Corp. (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1418, 22 C.R.2d 172, held that plaintiff's action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy was not within the scope of C.C. 3291, even though the termination caused plaintiff to suffer extensive personal damages. As Gourley v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., supra, makes clear, the applicability of C.C. 3291 depends on the nature of the tort, instead of on the type or extent of the damages. And the tort of wrongful termination primarily involves infringement of property rights, not personal injury. Moreover, the essence of a wrongful termination action is vindication of the public interest, not vindication of the plaintiff's personal interest. (17 C.A.4th 1436.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) First-Party Insurance Bad Faith. Richardson case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §649.(3) (New) Breach of Insurance Contract. An action against an insurance company to recover policy benefits is not an action to recover "damages for personal injury," but rather an action to recover damages for breach of contract, even if that contract is to provide compensation for personal injury. (Pilimai v. Farmers Ins. Exchange Co. (2006) 39 C.4th 133, 146, 45 C.R.3d 760, 137 P.3d 939 [action involving uninsured motorist provision of injured party's insurance coverage; relying on Gourley].)

112 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
b. Statutory Authorization.

8. Insurer's Settlement Offer as Abrogating Obligation To Pay Prejudgment Interest.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1653

[§ 1653] Insurer's Settlement Offer as Abrogating Obligation To Pay Prejudgment Interest.

In State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Crane (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1127, 266 C.R. 422, plaintiff was rendered paraplegic in an accident while riding as a passenger in a vehicle owned by W. W had an insurance policy with State Farm, limiting liability to $ 25,000 for each person injured. Before suit was filed, State Farm offered to pay plaintiff the policy limit of $ 25,000 "in full settlement" of the claim. The offer was rejected. Suit was filed, and plaintiff made his offer to settle for $ 499,999.99, which was rejected by defendant insureds. State Farm then filed this action for declaratory relief, seeking a ruling that it would not owe prejudgment interest on any judgment against its insureds, and offered to deposit its policy limits with the court pursuant to C.C.P. 572. The trial court granted summary judgment for State Farm. Held, affirmed.

(a) The policy provided that the insurer would pay, in addition to the limits, "any costs." C.C. 3291, providing for prejudgment interest, is part of an Article titled "Interest as Damages," and the courts have construed the term "interest" in other sections in that Article as an item of damages, not a cost apart from damages. (217 C.A.3d 1133.) However, this legal interpretation is not controlling if a person reading the policy would come to a different conclusion. (217 C.A.3d 1133.)

(b) The policy defined "costs" as including "[i]nterest on all damages owed by an insured as the result of a judgment until we pay, offer or deposit in court the amount due under this coverage." Reading the policy as a whole, it is likely that a layperson would expect C.C. 3291 interest to be covered by this provision. "After all, section 3291 interest meets the literal criteria of this policy language. The interest is calculated 'on damages owed by an insured as the result of a judgment.' ... This language is the policy's only explicit reference to the payment of interest. ... We therefore conclude section 3291 interest is a 'cost' within the meaning of the policy language obligating respondent for payment in addition to its policy limits for bodily injury." (217 C.A.3d 1133.)

(c) The remaining question is whether State Farm's offer was valid, i.e., reasonable and in good faith, so as to stop C.C. 3291 interest from running. The appellant asserted that, considering all the circumstances, there had to be a reasonable possibility that the settlement offer would be accepted, and that the offer must be shown to be reasonable and made in good faith. "We cannot agree that State Farm had to evaluate the likelihood of success of its settlement offer."

(217 C.A.3d 1135.) An offer conditioned on full settlement is the only kind of offer the insurer can make. An unconditional payment would have the effect of bankrolling the plaintiff's case. "We therefore conclude State Farm did not have to show its policy limits settlement offer stood a reasonable possibility of acceptance. Rather, the offer cut off State Farm's obligation to pay prejudgment interest." (217 C.A.3d 1138.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

113 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
 E. Interest.

2. Prejudgment Interest in Personal Injury Actions.
 - b. Statutory Authorization.
 9. Arbitration Proceedings.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1654

[§ 1654] Arbitration Proceedings.

In Wagy v. Brown (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1, 29 C.R.2d 48, plaintiffs brought a personal injury action against defendants arising from an automobile accident. Plaintiffs made an offer to settle for $ 50,000, under C.C.P. 998. However, the offer was not timely accepted, and the case proceeded to arbitration. The arbitrator awarded plaintiffs $ 50,000, and ordered each party to bear costs. Following entry of judgment, plaintiffs moved to tax costs, including prejudgment interest under C.C.P. 998 and C.C. 3291. The memorandum of costs was ordered stricken, and plaintiffs appealed. Held, prejudgment interest could not be awarded.

(a) Prejudgment interest is an item of costs under C.C.P. 1033.5(a)(13). Plaintiffs argue that, under C.C.P. 998, the right to claim costs did not vest until judgment was entered, and the court's determination was the only appealable ruling on the issue. Defendants contend that C.C.P. 998 and C.C. 3291 do not apply to arbitration proceedings. Plaintiffs are correct. While Woodard v. Southern Calif. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 171 C.A.3d 656, 217 C.R. 514, held that those statutes are not applicable to arbitration proceedings, that case concerned contractual arbitration. Joyce v. Black (1990) 217 C.A.3d 318, 266 C.R. 8, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §77, correctly recognized that judicial arbitration is part of the judicial process, to which C.C.P. 998 and C.C. 3291 are applicable. (24 C.A.4th 8.)

(b) Entitlement to prejudgment interest is dependent on the judgment being greater than the settlement offer, not the same. Thus, even if the arbitrator's award exceeded the settlement offer, the statutes would not apply, because the award is not final in any sense. This also means that the arbitrator's award, which denied costs, could not have included prejudgment interest, which does not come into play until there is a judgment. (24 C.A.4th 10.)

C.C.P. 998 applies to settlement offers made in disputes to be resolved by arbitration under C.C.P. 1281 (contractual arbitration) and C.C.P. 1295 (arbitration respecting medical malpractice). (C.C.P. 998(b).) Specified labor arbitrations are excepted from the statute. (C.C.P. 998(i).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Joyce case:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §83.

114 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
F. Attorneys' Fees and Other Litigation Expense.
1. General Rule: Fees Are Not Recoverable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1655

[§ 1655] General Rule: Fees Are Not Recoverable.

The successful plaintiff in a tort action is entitled to costs, but not to attorneys' fees unless express statutory provision is made for them. (C.C.P. 1021; see Viner v. Untrecht (1945) 26 C.2d 261, 272, 158 P.2d 3; Pederson v. Kennedy (1982) 128 C.A.3d 976, 979, 180 C.R. 740 [although C.C. 3333, on damages for breach of obligation other than contract (see supra, §§1548, 1553), could arguably support award of attorneys' fees to make wronged party whole, C.C.P. 1021 precludes that award]; Rest.2d, Torts §914(1); 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §145 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.70.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Costs: See El Escorial Owners' Assn. v. DLC Plastering (2007) 154 C.A.4th 1361, 1359, 65 C.R.3d 524 [condominium owners association that prevailed in construction defect action was entitled to expert witness fees as damages, even if experts were hired only to assist in litigation and not to assist in planning or making repairs].

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §149 et seq.

115 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
F. Attorneys' Fees and Other Litigation Expense.
2. Expense of Previous Litigation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1656

[§ 1656] Expense of Previous Litigation.

The expense of previous litigation, including attorneys' fees, may be recovered. (See Lareau v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 783, 798, footnote 15, 118 C.R. 837, supra, §78; Brousseau v. Jarrett (1977) 73 C.A.3d 864, 871, 141 C.R. 200, citing the text; Howard v. Schaniel (1980) 113 C.A.3d 256, 266, 267, 169 C.R. 678 [this exception to general rule denying attorneys' fees is applied on case-by-case basis where "exceptional circumstances" are present]; Saunders v. Cariss (1990) 224 C.A.3d 905, 910, 274 C.R. 186; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 94; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 135; 45 A.L.R.2d 1183 [attorneys' fees incurred in earlier litigation with third person because of involvement therein through tortious act of present adversary]; 65 A.L.R.2d 1426 [attorneys' fees for wrongful attachment].)

Thus, a plaintiff wrongfully subjected to false imprisonment or malicious prosecution may sue the guilty party and in this latter action may recover attorneys' fees spent in defending the prior proceeding. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§671, 681, 914; infra, §§1698, 1699.) And one who is required through another's tort to protect his or her own interest by bringing or defending an action against a third person may recover attorneys' fees incurred. (See Moe v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1971) 21 C.A.3d 289, 303, 98 C.R. 547 [award against title company for omission of pending bankruptcy proceeding in title examination].)

The "previous" litigation may be actually concurrent. In Prentice v. North Amer. Title Guaranty Corp., Alameda Div. (1963) 59 C.2d 618, 30 C.R. 821, 381 P.2d 645, defendant escrow holder, through negligence in closing a transaction, made it necessary for plaintiff vendor to bring a quiet title action against the purchaser and holder of the first deed of trust. He joined the escrow holder in the action. Held, in addition to the judgment quieting title against the purchaser and lienholder, he was entitled to damages against the escrow holder in the amount of the attorney's fee paid. (59 C.2d 621.) (See Ruth v. Lytton Savings & Loan Assn. of Northern Calif. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 831, 844, 72 C.R. 521 [following Prentice].)

In Sooy v. Peter (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1305, 270 C.R. 151, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §326, the court made this observation: "[T]he so-called 'third party tort exception' to the rule that parties bear their own attorney fees is not really an 'exception' at all but an application of the usual measure of tort damages. The theory of recovery is that the attorney fees are recoverable as damages resulting from a tort in the same way that medical fees would be part of the damages in a personal injury action. In these cases there is no recovery of attorney fees qua attorney fees. ... [N]early all of the cases which have applied the doctrine involve a clear violation of a traditional tort duty between the tortfeasor who is required to pay the attorney fees and the person seeking compensation for those fees." (220 C.A.3d 1310.)

In Vacco Industries v. Van Den Berg (1992) 5 C.A.4th 34, 6 C.R.2d 602, the trial court awarded plaintiffs attorneys' fees against defendant Van Den Berg alone under the third-party tortfeasor doctrine of Prentice. On appeal, this part of the judgment was held procedurally and substantively erroneous.

(a) Procedurally, the award under this doctrine necessarily involved a damage issue that should have been submitted to the jury; instead the trial judge treated the award of Prentice fees as though they were costs. (5 C.A.4th 56.)

(b) Substantively also, the award was incorrect, for it was made to a successful party in what was essentially a "two party" lawsuit: "Van Den Berg and Eastlack, working together with their newly acquired corporate vehicle, jointly committed the tortious acts of which Vacco complained. There is nothing about their relations or their conduct that justifies singling out Van Den Berg as the one whose conduct caused Vacco to have to prosecute a legal action against the other two. Yet, this is the justification which Vacco offers for the imposition of Prentice fees against Van Den Berg. The rule of Prentice was not intended to apply to one of several joint tortfeasors in order to justify additional attorney fee damages. If that were the rule there is no reason why it could not be applied in every multiple tortfeasor case with the plaintiff simply choosing the one with the deepest pocket as the 'Prentice target.' Such a result would be a total emasculation of Code of Civil Procedure section 1021 in tort cases." (5 C.A.4th 57.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Sooy case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §302.

116 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1657

[§ 1657] In General.

(1) Nature of Statute. On November 6, 1996, the electorate adopted Proposition 213, an initiative measure entitled "The Personal Responsibility Act of 1996." (Prop. 213, §1; see Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 C.A.4th 972, 981, 68 C.R.2d 553 [Prop. 213 is constitutional]; Quackenbush v. Superior Court (1997) 60 C.A.4th 454, 463, 70 C.R.2d 271 [same].) The purpose of the measure is "to restore balance to our justice system by limiting the right to sue of criminals, drunk drivers, and uninsured motorists." (Prop. 213, §2(c).) Its provisions apply to all actions in which the initial trial did not commence prior to January 1, 1997. (Prop. 213, §4; see Yoshioka v. Superior Court, supra, 58 C.A.4th 979 [Prop. 213 applies retroactively]; Savnik v. Hall (1999) 74 C.A.4th 733, 738, 88 C.R.2d 417 [same].)

(2) Felons. A plaintiff may not recover any damages in a negligence action if the plaintiff's injuries were in any way proximately caused by his or her commission of a felony, or immediate flight from the felony, and plaintiff is convicted of the felony. (C.C. 3333.3.)

In Jenkins v. Los Angeles (1999) 74 C.A.4th 524, 88 C.R.2d 149, plaintiff stole an automobile. About 4 hours later, a security guard became suspicious and alerted the police, who found plaintiff parked in the lot of a nearby mall. Plaintiff then put his car in reverse, and one of the officers, thinking that another officer was in danger of being struck by plaintiff's vehicle, fired four shots, one of which hit and wounded plaintiff. After being convicted of taking a vehicle without the owner's consent, plaintiff sued the county, its sheriff's department, and two individual officers for negligence and various intentional torts based on the use of excessive force. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by C.C. 3333.3. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) Although C.C. 3333.3 plainly states that, under the specified circumstances, the plaintiff cannot recover any damages in a "negligence" action, defendants argued that because the claimed intentional torts were grounded on the use of excessive force, they were, in effect, claims "based on negligence" (because, by their nature, the threshold issue in each case was whether the force used was reasonable). This argument is without merit. C.C. 3333.3 is part of Proposition 213, and the ballot pamphlet for that proposition stated that while it prevented felons from recovering for accidental injuries, they were still able to recover for some injuries, such as those resulting from the excessive use of force. Moreover, the language of C.C. 3333.3 is clearly contrary to defendants' position. (74 C.A.4th 530.)

(b) C.C. 847 is similar in that it renders landowners immune for injuries sustained by felons in the commission of specified felonies. This statute has been held to apply to justifiable, but not unjustifiable, use of force. C.C. 847 is not specifically limited to actions based on negligence. A landowner remains liable for wilful, wanton, or criminal conduct. Hence, if the Legislature, in enacting C.C. 3333.3 had wanted to include some intentional conduct, it could have employed a similar approach, rather than specifying that it applied to "actions based on negligence." (74 C.A.4th 532, citing Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 C.4th 714, 80 C.R.2d 506, 968 P.2d 65.)

(c) Although C.C. 3333.3 applies to negligence actions, summary judgment was erroneous, because plaintiff raised a triable issue of material fact whether his injuries were sustained during "immediate flight" from the felony for which he was convicted. Here, plaintiff took the car at midnight, but the confrontation in the parking lot, the incident that caused his injury, did not occur until 4 hours later. Moreover, there was nothing in the record that established that, as a matter of law, plaintiff's injury occurred in the commission of or immediate flight from the crime for which he was convicted. (74 C.A.4th 534.)

(3) Drivers Under the Influence of Alcohol or Drugs. In an action to recover damages arising out of the operation or use of a motor vehicle, a person may not recover noneconomic damages to compensate for pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, disfigurement, and other nonpecuniary damages if at the time of the accident he or she was operating the vehicle in violation of Veh.C. 23152 or 23153 and was convicted of that offense. (C.C. 3333.4(a)(1).) Also, a liability or uninsured motorist insurer is not liable, directly or indirectly, to indemnify for these noneconomic losses. (C.C. 3333.4(b).)

(4) Uninsured Motorists. (See infra, §1658 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

117 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1658

[§ 1658] In General.

Generally, in an action to recover damages arising out of the operation or use of a motor vehicle, an injured person may not recover noneconomic damages if he or she was the owner of a vehicle involved in the accident and the vehicle was not insured, or was the operator of an involved vehicle and cannot establish his or her financial responsibility, as required by the financial responsibility laws. (C.C. 3333.4(a)(2), (a)(3).) Also, a liability or uninsured motorist insurer is not obligated to indemnify for these noneconomic losses. (C.C. 3333.4(b).) An uninsured owner may nevertheless recover for these losses where the owner was injured by a motorist operating his or her vehicle under the influence of alcohol or drugs and subsequently convicted of that offense. (C.C. 3333.4(c).) (See Cabral v. Los Angeles County Metropolitan Trans. Authority (1998) 66 C.A.4th 907, 911, 78 C.R.2d 385 [uninsured vehicle owner injured when opening door of parked vehicle could not recover noneconomic damages; "operation" is broader than "driving," and "use" is broader still]; Honsickle v. Superior Court (1999) 69 C.A.4th 756, 765, 82 C.R.2d 36 [there is no exception in C.C. 3333.4 for driver or owner who unsuccessfully attempts to purchase insurance]; Montes v. Gibbens (1999) 71 C.A.4th 982, 985, 84 C.R.2d 324 [C.C. 3333.4(a)(3) does not apply to uninsured employee driving employer's vehicle in scope of employment]; Savnik v. Hall (1999) 74 C.A.4th 733, 739, 88 C.R.2d 417 [person listed on car registration as "registered owner" did not possess all incidents of ownership, and thus was not "owner" for purposes of C.C. 3333.4].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Garcia v. Superior Court (2006) 137 C.A.4th 342, 348, 39 C.R.3d 902 [owner of self-propelled piece of machinery who was injured when machinery fell off truck while being loaded to be transported as freight was not precluded by C.C. 3333.4 from recovering noneconomic damages against truck owner; although truck was parked on street and uninsured owner was driving machinery onto truck, statute did not apply to machinery once it was removed from road and placed as freight for transportation]; Jeremia v. Hilmar Unified School Dist. (2008) 166 C.A.4th 324, 329, 332, 82 C.R.3d 658 [wife of vehicle owner was not also "owner" under C.C. 3333.4(a)(2), even though vehicle was purchased with community property funds, where wife was unaware that husband had bought vehicle rather than merely borrowed it from employer; her community property interest did not make her owner, where she had no other connection with vehicle].

118 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
b. Products Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1659

[§ 1659] Products Liability.

The C.C. 3333.4 limitation on recovery of noneconomic damages by uninsured motorists is not applicable in products liability actions. In Hodges v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 109, 86 C.R.2d 884, 980 P.2d 433, an uninsured motorist sued an automobile manufacturer, alleging a design defect and seeking both compensatory and punitive damages for injuries suffered when his car's gas tank ruptured when struck from the rear, causing an explosion. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary adjudication with regard to plaintiff's claim for punitive damages, citing C.C. 3333.4. Held, reversed.

(a) The scope of C.C. 3333.4, precluding recovery of noneconomic damages by uninsured motorists "in any action arising out of the operation or use of a motor vehicle," is unclear. (21 C.4th 113.) It is therefore necessary to look beyond the statutory language to the electorate's purpose in enacting Proposition 213, of which C.C. 3333.4 is a part. (21 C.4th 114.)

(b) The primary purpose behind Proposition 213 was to limit automobile insurance claims by uninsured motorists. The electorate wanted to insure that uninsured motorists, who contribute nothing to the insurance pool, would be restricted in what they receive from it. The initiative was designed to provide fairness for those who obey the financial responsibility laws, not to provide a windfall to manufacturers whose design and manufacturing processes are not subject to those laws. (21 C.4th 115.) Nothing in the legislative history of the initiative suggests that the voters intended to limit recovery of damages against manufacturers of dangerous vehicles. Indeed, such a windfall is inconsistent with the long-standing public policy of requiring manufacturers to bear the costs of injury from defective products. (21 C.4th 117.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

119 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
c. Punitive Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1660

[§ 1660] Punitive Damages.

The C.C. 3333.4 limitation does not apply to punitive damages. In Nakamura v. Superior Court (2000) 83 C.A.4th 825, 100 C.R.2d 97, plaintiffs, the owner and the operator of a vehicle, neither of whom had the requisite insurance or proof of financial responsibility, brought a personal injury action against the driver of a vehicle that collided with plaintiffs' vehicle, as well as against the driver's employer. Earlier, the driver had been charged with various offenses, including two counts relating to drug or alcohol use under Veh.C. 23152 and one count for reckless driving under Veh.C. 23103. In return for pleading nolo contendere to reckless driving, the other charges were dismissed. In the present action, plaintiffs amended their complaint to ask for punitive damages. Held, C.C. 3333.4 does not bar plaintiffs from pursuing their claim for punitive damages.

(a) As an exception to the limitation prohibiting the recovery of noneconomic damages, C.C. 3333.4(c) allows an uninsured operator to recover those damages if the injury was caused by a defendant who operated a vehicle in violation of Veh.C. 23152 and was convicted of that offense. Here, this exception does not apply, because the driver was charged, but not convicted, i.e., the Veh.C. 23152 counts were dismissed. (83 C.A.4th 832.)

(b) C.C. 3333.4(a) prohibits the uninsured from recovering "non-economic losses to compensate for pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, disfigurement, and other nonpecuniary damages." However, punitive damages, whose sole purposes are to punish and deter, do not compensate for loss, and thus do not fit neatly within any of the specific noneconomic losses enumerated in the statute. Furthermore, under the principle of ejusdem generis, the phrase "other nonpecuniary damages" is confined to the kind of damages specified, i.e., pain, suffering, physical impairment, and disfigurement. Each of the enumerated items reflects a consequence of the plaintiff's personal and physical injury and a subjective loss for which money could compensate the victim. However, imposition of punitive damages is triggered by the conduct and state of mind of the wrongdoer, not by the nature of the loss suffered by the plaintiff. Although punitive damages, like the enumerated items, are not "objectively verifiable monetary losses," they differ in kind from these items in that they serve to punish and deter, rather than to compensate. (83 C.A.4th 833.)

(c) A related statute, C.C. 3333.2 (supra, §958 et seq.), sets a limit on the amount of noneconomic damages recoverable, and it has been held that this cap does not apply to punitive damages. (83 C.A.4th 836, citing Baker v. Sadick (1984) 162 C.A.3d 618, 208 C.R. 676, supra, §952.) Similarly, with respect to C.C. 3333.3 (supra, §1657), a companion statute to C.C. 3333.4, Jenkins v. Los Angeles (1999) 74 C.A.4th 524, 535, 88 C.R.2d 149, supra, §1657, concluded that the statute did not limit recovery for damages caused by intentional torts, because the applicable ballot pamphlet made no mention of these torts, but instead indicated that the measure was designed to bar tort recovery of damages by fleeing felons based on negligence. So also the ballot pamphlet for C.C. 3333.4 made no mention of whether punitive damages should or should not be covered by the statute. Distilled to its essence, the pamphlet reflected a primary aim to limit automobile insurance claims by uninsured motorists, who contribute nothing to the insurance pool, and thereby to reduce insurance rates. Thus, Hodges v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 109, 86 C.R.2d 884, 980 P.2d 433, supra, §1659, did not limit an uninsured motorist's claim against a car manufacturer in strict liability, because recovery of these damages against car manufacturers, like an uninsured motorist's recovery of punitive damages, was unlikely to have a noticeable effect on the insurance pool. (83 C.A.4th 836.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

120 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
d. Wrongful Death.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1661

[§ 1661] Wrongful Death.

The limitation of C.C. 3333.4 does not apply to wrongful death plaintiffs, even though their decedent was an uninsured owner or operator of the vehicle involved in the accident. This is so because the plaintiffs themselves do not fall within the provisions of the statute. In Horwich v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 272, 87 C.R.2d 222, 980 P.2d 927, the parents of an uninsured driver who died in an automobile accident brought a wrongful death action against the other driver. Defendant alleged as an affirmative defense that, because the decedent was uninsured at the time of the accident, C.C. 3333.4 barred plaintiffs from recovery of damages for the nonpecuniary value of her care, comfort, and society. The trial judge disagreed, granting plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings. Held, affirmed.

(a) The grammatical structure and logic of the statutory language taken as a whole indicate that plaintiffs in an action are barred from recovery only when they are themselves uninsured. This interpretation is in accord with the electorate's intent in adopting Proposition 213. The statute is aimed at those individuals who have failed to take personal responsibility for their actions, including drivers without obligatory liability insurance. A wrongful death plaintiff who is not the uninsured owner or operator of a vehicle involved in the accident cannot be one who has failed to take personal responsibility, because the law imposes no obligation on that person. (21 C.4th 275.)

(b) No absolute rule allows a wrongful death defendant to assert any defense that would have been available against the decedent. Unlike some jurisdictions in which wrongful death actions are derivative, C.C.P. 377.60 (supra, §1378) creates a new cause of action in favor of the heirs as beneficiaries, based on their own independent pecuniary injury suffered by loss of a relative, and distinct from any the deceased might have maintained had he or she survived. In the case of a statutory defense, the court must consider the language and intent of the enactment as well as the original and distinct nature of a wrongful death action. The more reasonable interpretation of C.C. 3333.4, in light of the electorate's objective, precludes its application under the circumstances of this case. Thus, defendant had no basis to invoke C.C. 3333.4 as a defense, even if he could have asserted it against the decedent. (21 C.4th 283.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

121 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
e. Action Against Public Entity.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1662

[§ 1662] Action Against Public Entity.

The C.C. 3333.4 limitation extends to actions against public entities based on the condition of public property, such as actions for nuisance or dangerous condition of property. In Day v. Fontana (2001) 25 C.4th 268, 105 C.R.2d 457, 19 P.3d 1196, an uninsured motorcycle driver was injured when struck by an automobile in an intersection. The motorcyclist sued not only the other driver but also the county and city, alleging causes of action for dangerous condition of public property and nuisance, based on overgrown vegetation that surrounded the intersection. The trial court granted the public entities' motion to preclude noneconomic damages pursuant to C.C. 3333.4. Plaintiff was subsequently awarded economic damages only, which were allocated among all three defendants. Held, affirmed.

(a) This action falls squarely within the terms of C.C. 3333.4, because plaintiff was the owner of an uninsured motorcycle and there was a necessary and causal relationship between his operation of the motorcycle and the accident for which he claims the public entities were responsible. Because C.C. 3333.4 contains no exception for suits against public entities, plaintiff is statutorily barred from recovering noneconomic damages from defendants. (25 C.4th 273.)

(b) The legislative history of Proposition 213, of which C.C. 3333.4 is a part, reinforces this conclusion. Public entities are among those directly affected by motorists who violate the financial responsibility laws, and Proposition 213 seeks to ensure that those who fail to comply with those laws will not be rewarded. When an uninsured driver causes damage to roadways or to other public property on or adjacent to the roadways, including traffic signs, directional signs, traffic signals, street lights, median strips, and landscaping, the public entity suffers a direct harm and public safety may sometimes be placed at risk until repairs are made. In these situations, the public entity generally is left to bear the entire cost of the repairs necessitated by the uninsured tortfeasor's acts and financial irresponsibility. (25 C.4th 274.) Violators of the financial responsibility law also detrimentally affect the interests of public entities in a more indirect way. When the negligence of an uninsured driver and the dangerous condition of public property combine to jointly cause injury to an insured driver, both tortfeasors are jointly and severally liable for all economic damages awarded to the insured driver. Typically, however, the public entity's right of contribution from the uninsured tortfeasor is meaningless because the tortfeasor is judgment proof. In these circumstances, the public entity ends up paying all of the insured driver's economic damages while the uninsured driver pays nothing. Hence, construing C.C. 3333.4 to apply to actions against public entities promotes the general purpose of the statute. Public entities, while remaining legally responsible to pay for an uninsured driver's economic losses, are at least relieved of liability for noneconomic losses. (25 C.4th 275.)

(c) Hodges v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 109, 86 C.R.2d 884, 980 P.2d 433, supra, §1659, is distinguishable. The right to recover fully for an injury caused by an automobile design defect, even by an uninsured motorist, has no bearing on any principle of fairness having to do with the financial responsibility laws. (25 C.4th 279.) (See Allen v. Sully-Miller Contracting Co. (2002) 28 C.4th 222, 226, 120 C.R.2d 795, 47 P.3d 639 [Proposition 213 applied in negligence and premises liability action by uninsured motorcyclist against construction company that maintained road; Day v. Fontana extended to private entities].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

122 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.

2. Uninsured Motorists.

f. Causal Connection.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1663

[§ 1663] Causal Connection.

The C.C. 3333.4 limitation does not apply when there is no causal relation between the operation of the vehicle and the accident giving rise to the injury. In Anaya v. Superior Court (2002) 96 C.A.4th 136, 116 C.R.2d 660, a girl was injured when a car owned by her parents, who were uninsured, collided with a city sanitation truck. In the course of transporting her to a hospital, a city helicopter crashed and the girl died. In her parents' action against the city for wrongful death, the trial court granted the city's motion for summary adjudication. Held, reversed. The city, in its capacity as owner and operator of the helicopter, was not entitled to the benefit of C.C. 3333.4. The statute is intended to prevent unfairness when an accident occurs between an insured and an uninsured motorist, not to operate as a windfall to a person or entity that is not part of the automobile insurance system. (96 C.A.4th 141.) The statute has been applied where an uninsured motorist seeks recovery against a government entity on theories of nuisance and dangerous condition of public property, but only where there is a necessary and causal relationship between the motorist's vehicle operation and the accident. (96 C.A.4th 143; citing and distinguishing Day v. Fontana (2001) 25 C.4th 268, 105 C.R.2d 457, 19 P.3d 1196, supra, §1662.) Here, there was no such connection. (96 C.A.4th 144.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

123 of 123 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVII. DAMAGES: IN GENERAL
G. Proposition 213: Limitation on Recovery of Damages.
2. Uninsured Motorists.
g. Insured Vehicle.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1664

[§ 1664] Insured Vehicle.

In Goodson v. Perfect Fit Enterprises (1998) 67 C.A.4th 508, 79 C.R.2d 102, a van owned by plaintiff, who was uninsured, collided with defendant's truck, resulting in injuries. At the time of the accident, the van was being driven by a third party, who was insured under a qualifying automobile policy. Plaintiff sought to recover both economic and noneconomic damages, but at the commencement of trial, defendant successfully moved, under C.C. 3333.4(a)(1), to preclude the noneconomic damages. Judgment was then entered consisting only of plaintiff's economic damages, and plaintiff appealed insofar as the judgment excluded noneconomic damages. Held, reversed as to the denial of noneconomic damages, but otherwise affirmed.

(a) C.C. 3333.4(a)(2) precludes the recovery of noneconomic damages in vehicle accident cases if "[t]he injured person was the owner of a vehicle involved in the accident and the vehicle was not insured as required by the financial responsibility laws of this state." Because plaintiff was indisputably owner of a vehicle involved in the accident, the primary issue is whether the vehicle was insured as required by the financial responsibility laws. It was. (67 C.A.4th 512.)

(b) Veh.C. 16000.7 defines "uninsured vehicle" as one for which the financial responsibility of Veh.C. 16021 was not in effect at the time of the accident, and Veh.C. 16021 provides that financial responsibility of the driver or owner of a vehicle involved in the accident is established if either is an insured under a policy complying with the financial responsibility requirements and covering the driver for the vehicle involved in the accident. "The plain meaning of these provisions ... is that financial responsibility for the vehicle is established, and the vehicle is insured as required by the financial responsibility laws, if the owner or the driver has insurance that covers the driver for his or her operation of the vehicle involved in an accident. Although the vehicle owner generally will satisfy these requirements by personally maintaining insurance for the vehicle, section 16021 provides that financial responsibility is established so long as the driver is covered, under either the owner's automobile policy or the driver's own." This conclusion is confirmed by Veh.C. 16054, which permits either the owner or driver to submit evidence of financial responsibility. (67 C.A.4th 513.)

(c) Defendant argued that plaintiff failed to comply with Veh.C. 16020, which requires both the driver and owner to carry evidence of financial responsibility. This contention is without merit. Veh.C. 16020 imposes two separate requirements: establishing financial responsibility, and carrying proof of it. The bar in C.C. 3333.4 against recovering noneconomic damages applies only to the first requirement. Thus, even assuming that plaintiff did not satisfy the proof requirement, he did meet the only requirement that was relevant to this case, the requirement of financial responsibility. (67 C.A.4th 514.)

(d) Veh.C. 17150 and 17151 provide for liability of vehicle owners for injury or property damage occasioned by use of the vehicle with the owners' permission, and defendant argued that public policy requires that the owners have sufficient funds to cover this liability. However, this argument is irrelevant to the present case, because those statutes are not part of the Financial Responsibility Law, and thus the fact that the owners might have insurance sufficient to cope with the liability established thereunder is not specifically required to render a vehicle insured under C.C. 3333.4(a)(2). (67 C.A.4th 514.) Also irrelevant is the fact that the legislation enacting the Financial Responsibility Law stated that financial capability is to be deemed "a concurrent responsibility of such motor vehicle ownership or operation." Rather than referring to a concurrent responsibility of the owner and driver to carry insurance, the quoted language means that financial responsibility is a responsibility concurrent with vehicle ownership or operation. (67 C.A.4th 515.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1665

[§ 1665] In General.

Full compensation to an injured person for "all the detriment proximately caused" by the injury (C.C. 3333, supra, §1558) may include various types of recovery. (See generally 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §122 et seq.; Rest.2d, Torts §924; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §1.1 et seq.; 34 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [personality change from closed head trauma]; 59 Proof of Facts 3d 203 [failed back syndrome]; 53 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [evaluation and settlement of personal injury cases]; 59 Am.Jur. Trials 395 [proving damages in personal injury cases]; BAJI, No. 14.69 [life expectancy]; CACI, No. 3932 [same].)

The following are the principal types:

- (1) Impairment of earning capacity. (See infra, §1666 et seq.)
- (2) Medical care and other expenses. (See infra, §1670.)
- (3) Physical pain and mental suffering. (See infra, §1671 et seq.)
- (4) Aggravation of a prior condition. (See infra, §1676.)
- (5) Susceptibility to subsequent disease or injury. (See infra, §1677.)
- (6) Loss of consortium. (See infra, §1679 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

As long as the record supports the total amount of economic damages, regardless of whether the evidence relates to medical expenses or lost wages, that part of the award must be affirmed. (See Stone v. Center Trust Retail Properties (2008) 163 C.A.4th 608, 615, 77 C.R.3d 556 [award of economic damages based on lost wages or medical expenses could stand, even if plaintiff presented no evidence of medical expenses].)

2 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
2. Loss of Past Earnings or Value of Time.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1666

[§ 1666] Loss of Past Earnings or Value of Time.

If the plaintiff was disabled, whether temporarily or permanently, partially or totally, one of the elements of damages is the value of the time already lost up to the date of trial. (See Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 656, 151 C.R. 399; Rest.2d, Torts §924(b).) This may be proved in several ways:

(1) Earnings. The plaintiff may show actual earnings from wages or commissions prior to the injury. (See Bonneau v. North Shore R. Co. (1907) 152 C. 406, 413, 93 P. 106; Perry v. McLaughlin (1931) 212 C. 1, 12, 297 P. 554; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§149, 152 et seq.; 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 163; 81 A.L.R.2d 733 [admissibility, as against objection of remoteness, of evidence of past earnings, on issue of amount of damages in action for personal injury or death]; 82 A.L.R.2d 679 [admissibility of evidence of plaintiff's or decedent's drawings from partnership or business as evidence of earning capacity, in action for personal injury or death]; BAJI, No. 14.11; CACI, No. 3903C.)

(2) Earning Power. Because the recovery is for loss of time or earning power, and loss of earnings is only a means of determining its value, the plaintiff may recover even where he or she was not working and earned nothing. (Storrs v. Los Angeles Traction Co. (1901) 134 C. 91, 93, 66 P. 72; Kline v. Santa Barbara Consol. Ry. Co. (1907) 150 C. 741, 748, 90 P. 125; Holmes v. California Crushed Fruit Co. (1924) 69 C.A. 779, 780, 232 P. 178; Gotsch v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1928) 89 C.A. 477, 483, 265 P. 268; Wilcox v. Sway (1945) 69 C.A.2d 560, 572, 160 P.2d 154; Tornell v. Munson (1947) 80 C.A.2d 123, 125, 181 P.2d 112; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §136 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 165; BAJI, No. 14.11.)

(3) Self Employment. Where the plaintiff was not employed by another, but conducted his or her own business, the value of loss of time can be proved by evidence of past profits, provided that the plaintiff's personal efforts were the predominating factor in making them. (Maus v. Scavenger Protective Assn. (1934) 2 C.A.2d 624, 631, 39 P.2d 209; Rest.2d, Torts §924, Comment c; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§156, 739; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 97; 45 A.L.R.3d 345 [profits of business as factor in determining loss of earnings or earning capacity in action for personal injury or death].) But the loss of profits cannot be shown where others were employed in the plaintiff's business; in this case, the reasonable value of the plaintiff's services to the business must be proved. (Lombardi v. California Street Ry. Co. (1899) 124 C. 311, 319, 57 P. 66; Pretzer v. California Transit Co. (1930) 211 C. 202, 207, 294 P. 382; see 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 107; 12 A.L.R.2d 288 [loss of profits of business in which plaintiff is interested as factor in determining damages in personal injury action]; 37 A.L.R.2d 364 [cost of hiring substitute].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
3. Impairment of Future Earning Capacity.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1667

[§ 1667] In General.

The plaintiff may recover damages for the impairment of his or her earning capacity, based upon the present value of the earnings for the probable period of disability, which may be the plaintiff's life expectancy if the disability is permanent. (See Bonneau v. North Shore R. Co. (1907) 152 C. 406, 413, 93 P. 106; Shaw v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1910) 157 C. 240, 242, 107 P. 108; Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co. (1911) 160 C. 237, 254, 116 P. 513; Kircher v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 176, 186, 195 P.2d 427 [air cadet, age 23, left hand nearly severed; jury could consider youth, university education, training as physical instructor, military future]; Connolly v. Pre-Mixed Concrete Co. (1957) 49 C.2d 483, 488, 319 P.2d 343 [20-year-old champion tennis player, $ 95,000 for injured leg, on evidence of probable earnings from tours]; Ostertag v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. (1944) 65 C.A.2d 795, 807, 151 P.2d 647; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 C.A.2d 249, 262, 171 P.2d 85 [assault and battery]; Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 656, 151 C.R. 399; Heiner v. Kmart Corp. (2000) 84 C.A.4th 335, 344, 100 C.R.2d 854 [evidence was admissible regarding plaintiff dentist's lost profits as result of injury, despite his noncompliance with certain licensing requirements, where plaintiff's expert testified that plaintiff could easily have brought his practice into compliance had he been able to continue as dentist]; Rest.2d, Torts §924, Comment d; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§144, 146, 148, 712; 29 Proof of Facts 3d 259 [lost earning capacity]; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §1.41 et seq.; 12 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 797 [criticism of inadequate awards to children]; 15 A.L.R.2d 418 [earning capacity of student or trainee, or its loss]; 18 A.L.R.3d 88 [impairment of earning capacity and instructions]; 23 A.L.R.3d 1189 [intent to change occupation]; BAJI, No. 14.12.)

"Loss of earning power is an element of general damages that may be inferred from the nature of the injury, with or without proof of actual earnings or income either before or after the injury." The test is not what the plaintiff would have earned in the future but what he or she could have earned; and the plaintiff may recover even where he or she was not working and earned nothing. (Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 374, 412, 196 C.R. 117; see Gargir v. B'Nei Akiva (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1269, 1280, 78 C.R.2d 557 [proper to give BAJI, No. 14.12 on loss of earning power, where nature of injury justified conclusion that plaintiff's earning ability had been impaired; plaintiff could present expert testimony about amount she would have earned but she was not required to do so]; CACI, No. 3903D.)

In determining the life expectancy, it is the customary practice to offer in evidence the standard mortality tables, compiled by life insurance companies from their experience, showing the probable life expectancy of a normally healthy person (a life insurance risk) of a particular age. (See Murphy v. National Ice Cream Co. (1931) 114 C.A. 482, 486, 300 P. 91; 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages]; 50 A.L.R.2d 419 [mortality tables as dependent upon showing of permanency of injury]; 79 A.L.R.2d 275 [testimony of actuary or mathematician]; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §294.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 7 A.L.R.6th 1 [admissibility and sufficiency of evidence of future earning capacity in position or field for which person has not fulfilled education, training, or like eligibility requirement; superseding 15 A.L.R.2d 418, text, p. 1186].

4 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
3. Impairment of Future Earning Capacity.
b. Plaintiff's Lost Years.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1668

[§ 1668] Plaintiff's Lost Years.

In Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 C.3d 137, 211 C.R. 368, 695 P.2d 665, plaintiff recovered judgment against defendants for failure to make a timely diagnosis of an impending heart attack. Defendant contended that the trial judge erred in instructing the jury that damages could be awarded for loss of earnings attributable to plaintiff's "lost years"--the period of time by which his life expectancy was diminished as a result of defendant's negligence. Held, recovery of these damages is consistent with the general rule permitting an award based on loss of future earnings "because of inability to work for as long a period of time in the future as he could have done had he not sustained the accident." (38 C.3d 153, quoting Robison v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1962) 211 C.A.2d 280, 288, 27 C.R. 260, and citing Sea-Land Services v. Gaudet (1974) 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 39 L.Ed.2d 9, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §145.) (See Overly v. Ingalls Shipbuilding (1999) 74 C.A.4th 164, 171, 87 C.R.2d 626 [Fein reasoning applied where lost years' damages were in form of pension, Social Security, and "household services" benefits; these damages are not reduced to account for plaintiff's personal consumption during lost years]; Rest.2d, Torts §924, Comments d, e; 50 Cal. L. Rev. 598.)

Recovery for lost years will not subject the defendant to double payment in the event the plaintiff's heirs sue for wrongful death; in a wrongful death action, the jury will be instructed that it should consider the amount the decedent had obtained from the defendant in an earlier judgment as compensation for impairment of his or her future earning capacity. (Fein v. Permanente Med. Group, supra, 38 C.3d 153, 154, citing Blackwell v. American Film Co. (1922) 189 C. 689, 700, 209 P. 999.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

5 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
3. Impairment of Future Earning Capacity.
c. Illegal Alien Subject to Deportation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1669

[§ 1669] Illegal Alien Subject to Deportation.

In Rodriguez v. Kline (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1145, 232 C.R. 157, the court, in a case of first impression, laid down guidelines for determining the applicable law on the future earning capacity of an illegal alien who could be subject to deportation. Plaintiff, a citizen of Mexico, claimed to have worked in this country for nearly 20 years, and therefore that he might have been successful in suspending deportation or obtaining amnesty. The trial judge allowed evidence to be introduced as to his projected earnings in this country as well as in Mexico, and merely instructed the jury that defendant had the burden of proof on the issue of plaintiff's illegal status and the possibility and probability of his deportation. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed.

To avoid the prejudicial effect of evidence on alien status and liability to deportation, the issue should be treated as one of law to be decided by the trial judge in a hearing outside the presence of the jury. (186 C.A.3d 1148.) At the hearing: (a) The defendant will have the initial burden of proving that the plaintiff is an alien subject to deportation. (b) If the defendant is successful, the burden will shift to the plaintiff to show that he or she has taken steps that will correct the deportable condition. (c) If the judge's decision is in the plaintiff's favor, evidence relating to alienage should be excluded, and the plaintiff's projected earning capacity may be computed on the basis of past and future income in the United States. (d) On the other hand, if the judge decides in favor of the defendant, the evidence must be limited to earnings that could be anticipated in the country of lawful citizenship; but because the plaintiff's status would ordinarily not be relevant to a determination of liability, he or she would be entitled to a limiting instruction to that effect. (186 C.A.3d 1149.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

6 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
4. Medical Care and Related Expense.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1670

[§ 1670] Medical Care and Related Expense.

The plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable cost of necessary medical and hospital services, including prospective expense of this kind. (See Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 409, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, infra, §1679 [injured husband is entitled to recover reasonable value of nursing services; hence, wife, suing for damages for loss of consortium, cannot recover for this item]; Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 1009, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 [enumerating factors relevant to determination that monitoring is reasonable and necessary]; Reichle v. Hazie (1937) 22 C.A.2d 543, 547, 71 P.2d 849 [plaintiff may recover even though treated at county hospital; if plaintiff is able to pay charges, county officials must collect from him or her]; Gastine v. Ewing (1944) 65 C.A.2d 131, 143, 150 P.2d 266 [money paid for necessary services was recoverable, even though doctor was unlicensed]; Wilcox v. Sway (1945) 69 C.A.2d 560, 570, 160 P.2d 154 [future expense]; Miranda v. Shell Oil Co. (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1651, 1655, 26 C.R.2d 655 [plaintiffs were exposed to pesticide through contaminated ground water; costs of future medical monitoring were recoverable]; Gutierrez v. Cassiar Mining Corp. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 148, 156, 75 C.R.2d 132 [even if defendant asbestos supplier exposed plaintiff with preexisting lung condition to toxins significantly increasing risk of cancer, defendant was not liable for medical monitoring costs unless monitoring called for tests in addition to that which plaintiff required apart from toxic exposure]; Rest.2d, Torts §924(c); 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§165, 173, 175 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §1.20 et seq.; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 366; 12 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 797 [criticism of inadequate awards to children]; BAJI, Nos. 14.10, 14.10.1; CACI, Nos. 3903A, 3903B.)

Practice works dealing with problems of proof are numerous. (See 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages]; 4 Proof of Facts 3d 645 [future medical needs of injured child]; 9 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [rehabilitation and life care needs after traumatic brain injury]; 23 Proof of Facts 3d 243 [establishing foundation for proof of medical expenses]; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 313 [medical monitoring damages resulting from exposure to toxic substances]; 43 Hastings L. J. 661 [payment of future medical surveillance expenses in toxic exposure litigation]; 69 A.L.R.2d 1261 [proof required for recovery for future medical expenses]; 90 A.L.R.2d 1323 [value of care and nursing gratuitously rendered]; 12 A.L.R.3d 1347 [evidence of reasonableness of amount]; 89 A.L.R.3d 87 [evidence to prove future medical expenses as a result of injury to head or brain]; 46 A.L.R.4th 1151 [cost of diagnostic examinations absent proof of actual bodily injury]; 17 A.L.R.5th 327 [expense of medical monitoring to detect or prevent future disease or condition]; 26 A.L.R.5th 401 [proof of future medical expenses resulting from injury to back, neck, or spine]; 49 A.L.R.5th 685 [valuing damages for gratuitously rendered nursing and medical care].)

In Laughner v. Bryne (1993) 18 C.A.4th 904, 22 C.R.2d 671, plaintiff filed a complaint for personal injuries on behalf of her minor child, who had been struck by defendants' car. The first cause of action sought an award of damages on the child's behalf for medical expenses, future medical expenses, loss of earnings, and general damages. The second cause of action sought damages on plaintiff's own behalf for future medical expenses for the care of the child and damages for the cost of supporting the child beyond the age of majority due to his permanent disability. After plaintiff settled the first cause of action on behalf of the child, the trial judge sustained defendants' demurrer to the second cause of action. Held, affirmed. Both causes of actions sought to recover damages for the same future medical expenses and future cost of support. Hence, by settling the cause of action on behalf of the child, plaintiff waived her right to seek the same damages for herself. (18 C.A.4th 911.)

In Hanif v. Housing Authority (1988) 200 C.A.3d 635, 246 C.R. 192, an action by a child who was hit by a car, the damages award included (a) the reasonable value of medical care and services, even though the amount exceeded the Medi-Cal payments made on plaintiff's behalf as payment in full, and (b) the reasonable value of the 24-hour attendant care provided by plaintiff's parents. Held, the former amount was error; the latter was correct.

(a) "[W]hen the evidence shows a sum certain to have been paid or incurred for past medical care and services, whether by the plaintiff or by an independent source, that sum certain is the most the plaintiff may recover for that care despite the fact it may have been less than the prevailing market rate." (200 C.A.3d 641.)

(b) When attendant care is rendered by the plaintiff's family, the defendant is liable in the amount for which reasonably competent care by others could have been obtained, even though the plaintiff may have a legal right to care from his family. (200 C.A.3d 644.) Hence, the fact that plaintiff's parents were relatively unskilled in professional home nursing is irrelevant. (200 C.A.3d 645.)

Johnston v. Long (1947) 30 C.2d 54, 181 P.2d 645, held that plastic surgery may be a proper item of medical expense, repudiating a contrary view declared in the early case of Karr v. Parks (1872) 44 C. 46. "Any expressions in the Karr case to the effect that an injured party is not entitled to damages in the form of expenses incurred for restorative surgery made necessary by the negligence of defendant must be disapproved. (See Rest., Torts, §924(c).) Present day standards no longer regard plastic surgery as a strange or foreign art. Indeed, there may be occasions when an injured person would be required to undergo plastic surgery to mitigate damages." (30 C.2d 77.) (See 88 A.L.R.3d 117 [cost of future cosmetic plastic surgery as element of damages].)

Where the obligation is incurred but not yet paid, the plaintiff may recover, but he or she must offer some other evidence of the reasonable value of the services. (See Fisk v. Poplin (1920) 46 C.A. 587, 591, 189 P. 722 [pleading was insufficient]; Latky v. Wolfe (1927) 85 C.A. 332, 346, 259 P. 470; Caulfield v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 220, 221, 66 P.2d 752.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Greer v. Buzgheia (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1150, 1157, 46 C.R.3d 780 [trial court did not abuse discretion in allowing evidence of reasonable cost of plaintiff's medical care, while reserving until after verdict propriety of reduction of recovery for that care, under Hanif v. Housing Authority (1988) 200 C.A.3d 635, 246 C.R. 192, text, p. 1190, to amount paid or incurred; evidence of reasonable cost of care gives jury more complete picture of extent of plaintiff's injuries]; Katiuzhinsky v. Perry (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1288, 1296, 62 C.R.3d 309 [personal injury plaintiffs' recovery of medical expenses incurred was not limited to discounted amounts collection company paid to plaintiffs' health care providers to purchase their bills, where, unlike situation in Hanif, plaintiffs were still fully liable for amount of providers' charges, even though tortfeasor was answerable only to discounted amount paid by purchaser of liens].

In Olsen v. Reid (2008) 164 C.A.4th 200, 79 C.R.3d 255, plaintiff filed a lawsuit against defendant for negligence, and defendant stipulated to liability. Before trial, plaintiff moved to admit evidence of the full amount that her medical providers billed her for treatment. The trial court granted this motion. Defendant, on the other hand, moved to admit evidence of the amount plaintiff actually paid for her treatment after deducting the amount that plaintiff's insurers had paid. The trial court denied this motion, stating that any reduction in the amount of medical expenses would be handled after trial. The jury's verdict included the amount that plaintiff was actually billed for her medical treatment. Under Nishihama v. San Francisco (2001) 93 C.A.4th 298, 112 C.R.2d 861, and Hanif v. Housing Authority, supra, defendant claimed that she was entitled to a reduction in the verdict, because plaintiff's providers had "written off" a portion of her bills, and defendant filed a posttrial motion to reduce the jury's verdict by that amount. The trial court granted the motion as a partial judgment notwithstanding the verdict and reduced the judgment by the requested amount. Both parties appealed. Plaintiff argued that the trial court improperly reduced the judgment. On cross-appeal, defendant argued that the trial court should have granted her motion in limine, thereby precluding the jury from hearing evidence of the actual amounts billed by plaintiff's medical providers. Held, reversed; the trial court was instructed to reinstate the full amount of the jury's verdict.

(a) Plaintiff's appeal. Hanif and Nishihama held that, when a plaintiff has medical insurance, damages are limited to the amount actually paid or incurred, not any greater amount billed, even if that amount is reasonable. Plaintiff and amici curiae asked that the holdings in these cases be reconsidered, but "[w]e need not go that far ... in order to decide this case." (164 C.A.4th 203.) In support of her motion to reduce the amount of the verdict, defendant submitted a 22-page bill from a medical center, page 20 of which included the following line item: "ADJ--MHIPA CAP ADJ" and, in the amount column, "46,270.05-." The next line item read: "ADJ--MHIPA CAP W/O" and "8,024.15-." The "Total payments & adjustments" was listed as "55,094.20-." From this evidence, "we find it far from clear as to what was paid, what, if anything, was 'written off,' and to what extent [plaintiff] remained liable for any further charges. The cryptic notations the court relied upon may reflect payments, or writedowns or writeoffs; we cannot know, and if any evidence revealed the actual facts, they are not present in the record." Therefore, the trial court erred in reducing the amount of the jury verdict. (164 C.A.4th 202, 203.)

(b) Defendant's cross-appeal. Defendant argued that it was error for the trial court to permit the jury to hear evidence of the full measure of plaintiff's medical damages. "We squarely reject this argument." Even the cases holding that a plaintiff is entitled to the lesser amount of damages, those incurred rather than billed, have approved of the jury hearing evidence of the full amount of plaintiff's damages. There is no reason to assume that the usual rates charged provide a less accurate indicator of the extent of the plaintiff's injuries than did the specially negotiated rates obtained by his or her insurer. Indeed, the opposite is more likely to be true. Therefore, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's denial of the motion. (164 C.A.4th 204.)

7 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

5. Physical Pain and Mental Suffering.

a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1671

[§ 1671] In General.

(1) Right To Recover. The plaintiff is entitled to damages for physical pain and for mental suffering that result from or accompany the physical injury. (Sloane v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1896) 111 C. 668, 678, 44 P. 320; Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1910) 158 C. 499, 507, 111 P. 534; Easton v. United Trade School Contracting Co. (1916) 173 C. 199, 202, 159 P. 597; Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 C.2d 109, 120, 130 P.2d 389; Capelouto v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1972) 7 C.3d 889, 893, 103 C.R. 856, 500 P.2d 880 [mental suffering "frequently constitutes the principal element of tort damages," and awards that fail to compensate for it have been held inadequate as a matter of law]; Sullivan v. Delta Air Lines (1997) 15 C.4th 288, 297, 63 C.R.2d 74, 935 P.2d 781, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §519 [pain and suffering award survives plaintiff's death pending appeal]; Graham v. Yellow Cab Co. of Los Angeles (1932) 125 C.A. 141, 146, 13 P.2d 773; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 C.A.2d 249, 262, 171 P.2d 85 [assault and battery]; Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 C.A.3d 374, 413, 196 C.R. 117 [absence of medical bills or medical testimony will not foreclose recovery; jury may infer pain from common experience]; Macy's Calif. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 C.A.4th 744, 752, 48 C.R.2d 496 [routine needle stick is not physical injury and does not justify parasitic damages for fear of contracting HIV/AIDS, in absence of proof of detrimental change to body]; Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 757, 764, 70 C.R.2d 571, infra, §1673 [recovery for pain and suffering must be based on evidence specific to plaintiff, as opposed to statistical data concerning public at large]; Rest.2d, Torts §§905, 924(a); 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §200 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Emotional Distress, Chap. 11; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §1.70 et seq.; 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages]; 5 Proof of Facts 3d 323 [intangible damages for injury to elderly person]; 9 Proof of Facts 3d 207 [phantom pain and stump pain after amputation]; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 187 [traumatic incident resulting in loss or alteration of physical functioning that has psychological basis]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 138; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 1787 [pain and suffering damages]; 18 A.L.R.3d 170 [permanence of injuries]; 3 A.L.R.4th 940 [per diem or similar mathematical basis for fixing damages for pain and suffering]; 52 A.L.R.4th 1 [damages for injuries causing mental or psychological harm]; 55 A.L.R.4th 186 [validity of verdict awarding medical expenses but failing to award damages for pain and suffering]; 61 A.L.R.4th 413 [parents' recovery of damages for noneconomic loss caused by injury or death of child]; BAJI, No. 14.13.) (On exception where injured party dies before judgment, see C.C.P. 377.20(b), 377.34, supra, §23.)

(2) Unitary Concept. "In general, courts have not attempted to draw distinctions between the elements of 'pain' on the one hand, and 'suffering' on the other; rather, the unitary concept of 'pain and suffering' has served as a convenient label under which a plaintiff may recover not only for physical pain but for fright, nervousness, grief, anxiety, worry, mortification, shock, humiliation, indignity, embarrassment, apprehension, terror or ordeal ... Admittedly these terms refer to subjective states, representing a detriment which can be translated into monetary loss only with great difficulty. ... But the detriment, nevertheless, is a genuine one that requires compensation." (Capelouto v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp., supra, 7 C.3d 892.)

(3) Future Pain. Pain "reasonably certain" to occur in the future is also a proper element. (Mella v. Hooper (1927) 200 C. 628, 631, 254 P. 256; Ryan v. Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co. (1913) 21 C.A. 14, 23, 130 P. 693; Oliveira v. Warren (1938) 24 C.A.2d 712, 714, 76 P.2d 113; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §201 et seq.; 17 Hastings L. J. 263; 18 A.L.R.3d 10 [sufficiency of evidence to prove future pain and suffering and to warrant instructions]; 50 A.L.R.4th 13 [anxiety as to future disease or condition as element of damages]; 20 A.L.R.5th 1 [necessity of expert testimony on permanence of injury and future pain and suffering].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

8 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

5. Physical Pain and Mental Suffering.

b. Nature of Mental Suffering.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1672

[§ 1672] Nature of Mental Suffering.

Mental suffering may consist of any of the following:

(1) Fright or shock at time of injury. (See Easton v. United Trade School Contracting Co. (1916) 173 C. 199, 202, 159 P. 597; Herrick v. Quality Hotels, Inns & Resorts (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1608, 1618, 24 C.R.2d 203 [$ 40,000 awarded to hotel guard who was threatened by hotel director of security with gun; guard "thought he was going to be killed"]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§49, 211.)

(2) Subsequent nervousness or hysteria. (See Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co. (1909) 156 C. 273, 278, 104 P. 312; Johnson v. Pearson (1929) 100 C.A. 503, 506, 280 P. 394; 28 Proof of Facts 1 [sleep loss as element of damages]; 24 Proof of Facts 3d 273 [emotional distress caused by fear of future disease]; 26 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [major depressive disorder]; 27 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [generalized anxiety disorders].)

(3) Anxiety over inability to make a living. (See May v. Farrell (1928) 94 C.A. 703, 714, 271 P. 789; Rest.2d, Torts §905, Comment e.)

(4) Humiliation and embarrassment resulting from scars, disfigurement, or disability. (See Huggans v. Southern Pac. Co. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 599, 616, 207 P.2d 864 [injuries to 12-year-old boy; "we suggest only one element of shame and humiliation: the boy now goes swimming but he crawls between the dressing room and the pool"]; Rest.2d, Torts §905, Comment d; 9 Proof of Facts 3d 307 [psychological effects of physical disfigurement]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 165; cf. Kalleg v. Fassio (1932) 125 C.A. 96, 99, 13 P.2d 763 [husband cannot recover for grief, etc., at disfigurement of wife and children, because this is part of their distinct causes of action].)

In Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 219 P.2d 928, plaintiff, a singer and orchestra leader, was wrongfully beaten by dance hall guards and wrongfully prosecuted (see supra, §§469, 475, 476). Held, on the battery count, a $ 25,000 compensatory damages award (plus punitive damages) was proper. The evidence showed multiple bruises and lacerations, teeth broken, a permanent scar on his face, months of pain, nervousness, and emotional upset disabling him from singing. "[W]hen a person of a sensitive nature is brutally beaten the wrong is a shock to the moral sensibilities and tends to vex, disgrace and humiliate the injured party and he experiences extreme fear and emotional disturbance." (98 C.A.2d 255.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

9 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
5. Physical Pain and Mental Suffering.
c. Loss of Enjoyment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1673

[§ 1673] Loss of Enjoyment.

(1) In General. There has been much discussion of the possible element of "loss of enjoyment," i.e., impairment of the plaintiff's capacity to engage in recreational or other pleasurable activities of a normal person. The principal objections have been uncertainty of the damage suffered, and the danger of double recovery where the jury considers this element indirectly in awarding damages for physical pain and mental suffering. (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§231, 233; 49 Proof of Facts 3d 339 [damages for loss of enjoyment of life]; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 350; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 143; 103 Harv. L. Rev. 811 [denial of loss-of-enjoyment damages to comatose plaintiffs]; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 152; 34 A.L.R.4th 293 [loss of enjoyment as distinct element in awarding damages for bodily injury].)

This concept was explored in Huff v. Tracy (1976) 57 C.A.3d 939, 129 C.R. 551, where plaintiff's injury was a laceration of the tongue that permanently impaired his sense of taste. On his request, the trial judge instructed both on pain and suffering (BAJI, No. 14.13) and injury to "enjoyment of life." Held, this was error, though harmless in view of the moderate award of damages. (a) A majority of American jurisdictions recognize the compensability of loss of enjoyment of life, some as a component of the pain and suffering award, others as a distinct item. (57 C.A.3d 943.) (b) The standard BAJI pain-and-suffering instruction describes a unitary concept of recovery (see supra, §1671) that includes the component of physical impairment limiting the capacity to share in the amenities of life. A separate enjoyment-of-life instruction repeats the other and opens up the possibility of double recovery. (57 C.A.3d 943, citing the text.) (See 12 Pacific L. J. 965.)

(2) Loss of Enjoyment Is Not Subject of Expert Evidence. In Loth v. Truck-A-Way Corp. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 757, 70 C.R.2d 571, a vehicular accident case, plaintiff's resulting disabilities decreased her ability to pursue her former social and recreational activities. Plaintiff introduced an expert economist's testimony, over defense objection, on "hedonic" damages (damages for loss of enjoyment of life). The expert testified that he had computed the basic economic value of life (apart from earnings from employment) from (a) the amount society is willing to pay per capita on protective devices such as seat belts, smoke detectors, etc., (b) the risk premiums employers pay to induce workers to perform hazardous jobs, and (c) the cost/benefit analyses of federally mandated safety projects and programs. Based on these studies, he had calculated the value of an average person's remaining 44-year life expectancy at $ 2.3 million, which he described as a baseline figure. The expert adjusted the baseline figure to account for plaintiff's longer-than-average remaining life expectancy of 53 years, and then multiplied the adjusted baseline figure by various percentages reflecting plaintiff's possible degrees of disability to calculate various possible hedonic damage awards. The jury awarded plaintiff substantial general damages. Held, admission of the testimony was prejudicial error.

(a) Pain and suffering damages must be based on evidence specific to plaintiff. The jury must impartially determine pain and suffering damages based on evidence specific to the plaintiff, as opposed to statistical data concerning the public at large. Here, plaintiff asked the jury to accept $ 2.3 million as the baseline value of life and to give her a percentage of that figure (adjusted for her age) as hedonic damages. The baseline figure, however, is not based on an analysis of any particular individual's life, but rather on benchmark figures such as the amount society spends per capita on selected safety devices, or the amount employers pay to induce workers to perform high risk jobs. No meaningful relationship can be perceived between those arbitrarily selected benchmark spending figures and the value of the plaintiff's life. In Beagle v. Vasold (1966) 65 C.2d 166, 172, 53 C.R. 129, 417 P.2d 673, infra, §1675, the Supreme Court rejected the notion that pain and suffering damages may be computed by some mathematical formula. The expert's hedonic damages formula, however, purports to do just that. (60 C.A.4th 764.)

(b) Loss of enjoyment is compensable only as component of pain and suffering damages. The expert testimony improperly encouraged the jury to calculate plaintiff's hedonic damages separately from her remaining damages for pain and suffering, creating a risk of double recovery. While a general pain and suffering award may include compensation for the plaintiff's loss of enjoyment of life, loss of enjoyment is only one component of pain and suffering and is not calculated as a separate award. Separate instructions on pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life are prohibited because they may mislead a jury to award double damages for the same injury. For the same reason, the testimony offered here is inadmissible as a matter of law. (60 C.A.4th 765.)

(c) Expert testimony is inadmissible to show loss of enjoyment. Under Ev.C. 801(a) (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §29), a plaintiff's loss of enjoyment of life is not "a subject that is sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact." (60 C.A.4th 767.) No amount of expert testimony on the value of life could possibly help a jury decide this difficult question. California's present system of requiring the jury to determine, without the benefit of a mathematical formula, the amount of a general damages award is not without its faults. But unless and until the Legislature devises a method for computing pain and suffering damages, a plaintiff may not supply, through expert testimony or otherwise, her own formula for computing these damages. Just as no judge may give the jury a standard for determining pain and suffering, no expert may supply a formula for computing the value of life and, by extrapolation, the value of the loss of enjoyment of life. (60 C.A.4th 767.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

10 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

5. Physical Pain and Mental Suffering.

d. Injury to Baby.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1674

[§ 1674] Injury to Baby.

In Babb v. Murray (1938) 26 C.A.2d 153, 79 P.2d 159, plaintiff suffered fractures of both femurs at the age of 31/2 months, with the possibility of shortened legs, and during a long healing process was strapped in a crib. Held, damages of $ 7,500 were excessive, and should be reduced to $ 4,000. The items of physical suffering, pain, and mental anguish were incapable of proof because of the age of the child. "There was neither medical nor scientific testimony offered to show whether the child suffered any pain at all, or over any appreciable period. Manifestly, she did not know what happened to her and, not knowing, was without fear or mental anguish." (26 C.A.2d 155.)

Babb was disapproved in Capelouto v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1972) 7 C.3d 889, 103 C.R. 856, 500 P.2d 880. Plaintiff child, born in defendant's hospital, contracted salmonella in the nursery shortly after her birth. During the first year of her life, she suffered from severe vomiting, diarrhea, dehydration, cramps, and shock; she was hospitalized six times, and at times was fed intravenously. Ultimately she recovered with no permanent disability. In this action for malpractice, the judge gave an instruction under the Babb holding, precluding any award for physical pain and mental suffering. The jury gave plaintiff $ 1,510.24, the precise amount of medical expenses. Held, judgment reversed for new trial on issue of damages.

(a) The Babb court confused capacity to suffer with ability to discover the cause of the pain. (7 C.3d 894.) "Once we recognize this fallacy, little remains to support the Babb rule; human experience tells us that infants can feel pain and discomfort even if they do not know the source of it." (7 C.3d 894.)

(b) Expert medical testimony is not needed; suffering, of an adult or a child, can be proved by lay witnesses relating observations of involuntary declarations and expressions of pain. (7 C.3d 895.) And even in the absence of explicit testimony of this kind, "the jury may infer such pain, if the injury is such that the jury in its common experience knows it is normally accompanied by pain." (7 C.3d 896.) (See 1 Pepperdine L. Rev. 102.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

11 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

5. Physical Pain and Mental Suffering.

e. Permissible Argument.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1675

[§ 1675] Permissible Argument.

Several typical methods of influencing the jury to return large verdicts for pain and suffering have been the subject of much debate, with California taking the following positions:

(1) Reading the prayer. The plaintiff's counsel may inform the jury of the total amount of the demand. (See Beagle v. Vasold (1966) 65 C.2d 166, 172, 53 C.R. 129, 417 P.2d 673; 14 A.L.R.3d 541 [reference by plaintiff's counsel to amount of damages claimed or expected by his or her client].)

(2) The Golden Rule argument. May the jurors be asked to place themselves in the plaintiff's shoes and award such damages as they would "charge" to undergo equivalent pain and suffering? Although this has not been judicially condemned in California, the court in Beagle v. Vasold observed that "we do not imply that we also approve the so-called 'golden rule' argument." (65 C.2d 182.) (See Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 C.A.3d 451, 483, 130 C.R. 786 [disapproving "golden rule" argument, but finding no prejudicial error].)

(3) The "per diem" argument. This is a strategic device, conceived by plaintiffs' lawyers, which suggests to the jury that a stated sum be awarded for each day or other chosen period of suffering undergone by the plaintiff. Its object is to overcome the inherent uncertainty in this element of damages by giving the jury something that appears more certain--a mathematical formula. (See Beagle v. Vasold, supra, 65 C.2d 172; 13 Hastings L. J. 502; 18 Hastings L. J. 684; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 214; 3 A.L.R.4th 940 [per diem or similar mathematical basis for fixing damages for pain and suffering].)

The use of this argument has been criticized by some courts and writers, mainly on the following grounds: The statement of counsel is not based on any evidence in the case; the mathematical formula produces a misleading illusion of certainty; shrewd manipulation of the unit of time may grossly magnify the total award; and fixing damages for pain and suffering calls not for calculation but for human judgment. As the dissenting justice puts it in Beagle v. Vasold: "It is therefore unrealistic to seek an appropriate award for pain and suffering by the use of any so-called per diem formula. Only after counsel has determined how much damages for pain and suffering he is going to ask for can he select a per diem ratio to support his request. He could arrive at any amount he wished by adjusting either the period of time to be taken as a measure or the amount surmised for the pain and suffering for that period." (65 C.2d 184.) "It is no answer that the question-begging in his reasoning may be exposed by counterargument or challenged by an equally fictive formula leading to a different result. Truth is not served by sophistic arguments or clashes between them." (65 C.2d 184.)

These attacks were rejected and the argument was approved in Beagle v. Vasold. Plaintiff, with serious injuries, received a small award after the trial judge prevented counsel from using the argument. Held, reversed. The opinion elaborately examines the authorities, finds that a majority of courts and law writers favor it (65 C.2d 173), and answers the critics as follows:

(a) If the total demand may be revealed to the jury there is no reason to prohibit its presentation in segmented form. One involves no more speculation than the other, and the jury could do the reverse calculation from the demand, the life expectancy of the plaintiff, and the evidence of future detriment. (65 C.2d 177.)

(b) There are safeguards to prevent the jury from being misled: Counsel may tax their credulity to the point of discrediting his or her entire argument (the risk of "overpersuasion"), and the judge may instruct that the amount claimed is not evidence and that they are not bound by any particular method of calculation. (65 C.2d 177, 181.) Moreover, the verdict must meet the test of reasonableness or it will be reduced by the trial judge or appellate court. (65 C.2d 179.)

(c) Although the argument is not evidence, it can have a foundation in evidence. "Indeed it is necessarily inferred from observation of the plaintiff in the courtroom and from expert testimony regarding the nature of his injuries and their consequences. If the jury must infer from what it sees and hears at the trial that a certain amount of money is warranted as compensation for the plaintiff's pain and suffering, there is no justification for prohibiting counsel from making a similar deduction in argument. ... It would be paradoxical to hold that damages in totality are inferable from the evidence but that when this sum is divided into segments representing days, months or years, the inference vanishes." (65 C.2d 176.)

(d) An award by the jury of the full amount of the per diem calculation is not necessarily excessive. "The circumstances may indicate the prescience of the attorney or his accurate evaluation of the case." (65 C.2d 179.)

(e) Defense counsel may also effectively use the argument. By dividing a large total demand into segments, counsel may expose the plaintiff's claims as grossly exaggerated. (65 C.2d 181.)

(f) The argument actually helps the jury to perform the difficult task of placing a money value on this element. They are not aided by advice to be guided by their observation, experience, and sense of fairness. "These homilies provide little assistance to the jury. Under some circumstances, the concept of pain and suffering may become more meaningful when it is measured in short periods of time than over a span of many years, perhaps into infinity. The 'worth' of pain over a period of decades is often more difficult to grasp as a concept of reality than is the same experience limited to a day, a week or a month." (65 C.2d 181.)

(g) The view that the argument should be allowed or denied in the judge's discretion is rejected, as likely to produce confusion and abuse (e.g., peremptory challenges of judges, appeals seeking review of exercise of discretion). Hence, prohibiting the argument is error, and it may be freely used by either counsel, subject to instructions on the jury's function in determining damages. (65 C.2d 182.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

12 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
6. Aggravation of Plaintiff's Prior Condition.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1676

[§ 1676] Aggravation of Plaintiff's Prior Condition.

If the plaintiff suffers unusual injury by reason of the defendant's act and other contributing causes, the general tendency is to hold the defendant liable for the entire injury. Thus, the plaintiff, by reason of prior injury or disease, may have been unusually susceptible, and have suffered a more serious injury than was foreseeable. (Deibler v. Wright (1931) 119 C.A. 277, 284, 6 P.2d 344; Smith v. Schumacker (1938) 30 C.A.2d 251, 263, 85 P.2d 967; see Taylor v. Pole (1940) 16 C.2d 668, 672, 107 P.2d 614; Maxwell v. Powers (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1596, 1606, 28 C.R.2d 62 [in action alleging successive medical malpractice, plaintiff was entitled to instruction regarding original tortfeasor's liability for aggravation of injury due to subsequent negligent medical care]; Rest.2d, Torts §461; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §242 et seq.; 2 Proof of Facts 3d 323 [preexisting mental disorder]; 15 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 409 ["thin skull" plaintiff concept]; 31 A.L.R.3d 1000 [liability of tortfeasor for injured person's subsequent injury or reinjury]; BAJI, Nos. 14.65, 14.66; CACI, No. 3927 et seq.)

In Hagy v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp. (1953) 122 C.A.2d 361, 265 P.2d 86, plaintiffs drove through a smog bank created around defendant's plant by sulphur fumes. Plaintiff wife had a coughing spell and, during treatment, a preexisting throat cancer was discovered and her larynx was removed. Judgments for the wife for aggravation of the cancer ($ 25,000) and for the husband for aggravation of a heart condition ($ 5,000) were affirmed.

The medical treatment after the injury may increase the injury and, even if this is due to the doctor's negligence, the defendant is liable, provided the plaintiff selected the doctor with due care. (Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Rys. (1920) 182 C. 93, 99, 187 P. 2; Blackwell v. American Film Co. (1922) 189 C. 689, 694, 209 P. 999; Dewhirst v. Leopold (1924) 194 C. 424, 433, 229 P. 30; Rest.2d, Torts §457; see Ash v. Mortensen (1944) 24 C.2d 654, 657, 150 P.2d 876; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §246; 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 165; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 490; 100 A.L.R.2d 808 [liability of tortfeasor for consequences of negligence, mistake, or lack of skill of physician or surgeon].)

This liability is not restricted to negligently caused additional harm. The defendant tortfeasor is liable for harm resulting from the normal efforts of third persons rendering aid in a proper manner; e.g., death resulting from a risk inherent in the medical treatment reasonably required to treat the injuries caused by the accident. (Hastie v. Handeland (1969) 274 C.A.2d 599, 605, 79 C.R. 268; see Rest.2d, Torts §457.)

When the evidence justifies an instruction on aggravation of a preexisting condition or disease, the plaintiff is entitled to such an instruction; a general instruction on proximate cause is wholly insufficient. (Ng v. Hudson (1977) 75 C.A.3d 250, 255, 142 C.R. 69.) (See BAJI, No. 14.65.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Henry v. Superior Court (2008) 160 C.A.4th 440, 455, 72 C.R.3d 808 [homeowners alleged to be original tortfeasors in premises liability case were permitted, pursuant to statutory rule eliminating joint liability for noneconomic damages in personal injury actions, to present evidence showing that medical malpractice by doctors aggravated plaintiff's injuries, so as to limit their liability for noneconomic damages to their proportionate share of fault, where homeowners' fault could be evaluated, measured, and compared to doctors' fault].

13 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
7. Susceptibility to Subsequent Disease or Injury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1677

[§ 1677] Susceptibility to Subsequent Disease or Injury.

The plaintiff may recover from the original defendant tortfeasor where, as a result of a weakened condition after the injury, he or she becomes more susceptible to and suffers a subsequent disease or injury. (Ensign v. Southern Pac. Co. (1924) 193 C. 311, 318, 223 P. 953; Brown v. Beck (1923) 63 C.A. 686, 690, 220 P. 14; Rest.2d, Torts §§458, 460; 35 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 965 [recovery for fear of disease]; 50 A.L.R.4th 13 [future disease or condition, or anxiety relating to it, as element of recovery]; BAJI, No. 14.66; CACI, No. 3929.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

14 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

8. Loss of Consortium.

a. Former Rule Denying Recovery.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1678

[§ 1678] Former Rule Denying Recovery.

For some time, the California courts followed the common law rule allowing a husband to recover for loss of his wife's society, companionship, and services. (See Edminster v. Thorp (1951) 101 C.A.2d 756, 757, 226 P.2d 373; Gist v. French (1955) 136 C.A.2d 247, 255, 288 P.2d 1003; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 145; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 163.) The common law gave the wife no comparable right. This discriminatory rule was repudiated by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in the Hitaffer case in 1950, and the challenge was received with enthusiasm by many writers and some courts. (See 40 Cal. L. Rev. 464; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 672; 7 Hastings L. J. 326; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 144; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 223; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 402; 36 A.L.R.3d 900 [wife's right of action for loss of consortium].) But California's response was to deny recovery to both husband and wife.

(1) Action by wife. In Deshotel v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1958) 50 C.2d 664, 328 P.2d 449, the husband, severely injured in a collision, recovered judgment for $ 290,000 in a prior action. During its pendency, plaintiff wife brought the present action against the same defendants for loss of consortium. Held, on demurrer, a wife has no action for loss of consortium. Any recognition of such a right should come from the Legislature, with appropriate definition of the extent of liability, procedural rules, and safeguards against double recovery. (50 C.2d 667.) (See 10 Hastings L. J. 214, 237; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 161.)

(2) Action by husband. The rule allowing the husband recovery for loss of consortium was abrogated in West v. San Diego (1960) 54 C.2d 469, 6 C.R. 289, 353 P.2d 929. Plaintiff's wife was injured in an accident. Plaintiff, suing for himself and as her guardian ad litem, received verdicts of $ 57,828.89 for his wife and $ 5,000 for his loss of services and consortium, based on evidence that her brain injury had reduced her mentality to that of a 4- or 5-year-old child. Held, the award to the husband could have included, under the instructions, damages for loss of consortium, and these cannot be recovered; hence, the judgment was reversed as to the husband's verdict for retrial of that issue. The husband's right was recognized at common law, but the Deshotel case holding that the wife had no similar right, removed any basis in principle or policy for the rule. (54 C.2d 475.)

A single dissenting justice wrote a powerful argument for retention of the rule: (a) A large part of California family law protects spouses against intentional interference with rights of sexual intercourse, fatherhood, and society of the wife. (b) The overwhelming weight of authority in this country supports the husband's cause of action, as do legal writers and the British House of Lords. (c) The failure of the Legislature to provide for this right is immaterial; the common law should be followed under C.C. 22.2. (d) If symmetry is desired, it should be secured by giving the wife the right as well. (6) The wrongful death statute allows compensation for loss of society. "Thus, if one spouse is deprived of his consortium rights by reason of the tortious act of defendant that results in the death of the other spouse, recovery may be had for the loss of such consortium. But, according to the majority, if one spouse is not killed but is injured in such a way that the other is permanently deprived of such rights, then he cannot recover for this loss! Such a distinction is artificial, absurd and unsound." (54 C.2d 487.) (See 48 Cal. L. Rev. 882 [criticizing decision]; 8 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 985 [supporting decision]; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 334.)

Recovery is now allowed in an action by a spouse. (See infra, §1679 et seq.) This is also the Restatement rule. (See Rest.2d, Torts §693.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

15 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- A. Injuries to Person.
 - 8. Loss of Consortium.
 - b. Recovery by Spouse.
 - 1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1679

[§ 1679] In General.

In Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, the Supreme Court overruled Deshotel v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1958) 50 C.2d 664, 328 P.2d 449, supra, §1678, and West v. San Diego (1960) 54 C.2d 469, 6 C.R. 289, 353 P.2d 929, supra, §1678, and declared the right of either spouse to recover for loss of consortium. (12 C.3d 408.) Richard, 22 years old, was injured in an accident that left him almost totally paralyzed. Plaintiff, his wife, 20 years old at the time, sued for damages including loss of consortium (defined by the court as "loss of conjugal fellowship and sexual relations"). Her declaration, filed in support of the pleading, stated that the parties had been deeply in love, and wanted a family; and that, by reason of the accident, her husband's life "has been ruined" and "[a]s his partner, my life has been ruined too." The trial judge, agreeing with the plaintiff's theory, nevertheless sustained a demurrer on the authority of Deshotel. The Court of Appeal, likewise disagreeing with Deshotel, left it to the Supreme Court to consider whether its later cases "can be read as undermining the rationale of those holdings." Held: "This is a perceptive and accurate reading of our decisions" (12 C.3d 388); "the reasons for this rule have ceased" and the cause of action should be recognized (12 C.3d 385).

(a) First argument of Deshotel: Weight of authority against recovery. At the time of Deshotel (1958), only five states supported the wife's right; in the ensuing 16 years, 31 states allowed recovery; and the change in trend has been recognized by the tentative draft of the Second Torts Restatement, changing the earlier rule. Thus, "the precedential foundation" has been destroyed, and "a new common law rule has arisen." (12 C.3d 392.)

(b) Second argument of Deshotel: Legislative problem. The contention that a departure from a settled rule should be left to the Legislature has been rejected in many recent decisions of this state and other states, which emphasize the judicial responsibility for upkeep of the common law, and its inherent capacity for growth and change. (12 C.3d 393, 394; see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §966 et seq.)

(c) Third argument of Deshotel: A rule allowing recovery would have undesirable consequences. Four reasons for rejecting the rule on the merits, set forth in Deshotel, are unconvincing:

- (1) That the injury is "too indirect." This contention is refuted by fundamental principles of negligence and by the opinion in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, stating the test of foreseeability: Under this approach, "one who negligently causes a severely disabling injury to an adult may reasonably expect that the injured person is married and that his or her spouse will be adversely affected by that injury." (12 C.3d 400.)

(2) That the measurement of damages would involve conjecture. Though valuation of the loss is difficult, this is no reason for denying recovery altogether. Loss of consortium is mainly a form of mental suffering, for which the jury may properly award compensation. "Money is a poor substitute for the loss of an only child or the pain resulting from serious injuries. Likewise, it cannot truly compensate a wife for the destruction of her marriage, but it is the only known means to compensate for the loss suffered and to symbolize society's recognition that a culpable wrong--even if unintentional--has been done." (12 C.3d 402.)

(3) That if the wife's cause of action is recognized, others with close relationship to the injured person would assert similar claims, and the courts would be faced with the perplexing task of drawing the line. This objection was also answered in Dillon v. Legg, and in other cases allowing recovery for emotional distress: The courts can fix proper guidelines; "That the law might be urged to move too far ... , is an unacceptable excuse for not moving at all." (12 C.3d 404.)

(4) That, because the husband's judgment might include compensation for his inability to participate in normal married life, separate redress to the wife for loss of consortium would involve the danger of double recovery. The argument is based on a misconception: The wife cannot recover for loss of the husband's financial support because he recovers for loss of earnings and earning power--the source of her right to such support; but consortium includes other elements: "love, companionship, affection, society, sexual relations, solace and more." (12 C.3d 405.) When the husband's physical injury precludes copulation and procreation, the wife's loss is just as real as it is distinct from his. (12 C.3d 405.) Avoidance of double recovery presents only a procedural problem. (a) Each element of damages must be kept separate, by careful identification at the trial, by appropriate rulings and jury instructions, and by reduction of the wife's verdict if any damages for which the husband is compensated are included. (12 C.3d 406.) (b) The wife should normally join her cause of action with that of the husband; if she files a separate action the defendant would ordinarily be entitled to consolidation. (12 C.3d 407.)

(d) Retroactivity. The new rule will (1) operate in the usual retroactive manner where no settlement has been made and the statute of limitations has not run; but (2) where a settlement or judgment has been obtained by one spouse before the effective date of this decision (August 21, 1974), the other spouse will not be permitted to recover for loss of consortium; i.e., as to these cases, the decision is prospective. (12 C.3d 408.) (See Pesce v. Summa Corp. (1975) 54 C.A.3d 86, 88, 126 C.R. 451, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §138 [right of wife of harbor worker to recover under federal maritime law]; Meighan v. Shore (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1025, 1034, 40 C.R.2d 744; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §2.2; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Loss of Consortium, Chap. 10; 10 Proof of Facts 3d 97 [wife's recovery for loss of consortium]; 63 Cal. L. Rev. 323; 15 Santa Clara Lawyer 495; 2 Western State L. Rev. 193; 7 West L.A. L. Rev. 240; 4 A.L.R.3d 805 [measure and elements of damages in wife's action]; 29 A.L.R.4th 1200 [injured party's release as barring spouse's action]; 60 A.L.R.4th 1174 [whether loss of consortium claim must be joined with underlying claim].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Departure from settled rule:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §530 et seq.

16 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- A. Injuries to Person.
 - 8. Loss of Consortium.
 - b. Recovery by Spouse.
- 2. Effect of Insurance Policy "One Person" Limit.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1680

[§ 1680] Effect of Insurance Policy "One Person" Limit.

The nature of the cause of action for loss of consortium was examined in United Services Auto. Assn. v. Warner (1976) 64 C.A.3d 957, 135 C.R. 34. Insurance policies commonly provide a limit for bodily injuries sustained by "one person," and a higher limit for bodily injury sustained by "two or more persons as the result of any one occurrence." The court declared that the cause of action does not arise out of a bodily injury to the plaintiff spouse, but out of the bodily injury to the injured spouse; hence, where only one person is injured or killed in the accident, the "one person" limit applies, no matter how many persons suffer loss of services or loss of consortium as a result. (64 C.A.3d 962, 963, 964.)

The opposite result was reached in Abellon v. Hartford Ins. Co. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 21, 212 C.R. 852. C, severely injured in an automobile accident, sued for damages for his injuries, and his wife J sued for loss of consortium. A stipulated judgment for $ 750,000 to C and $ 250,000 to J was entered against the insured. Defendant insurer paid $ 250,000, the policy limit on C's claim, but refused to pay anything on J's claim on the ground that the policy limit applied to "bodily injury to any one person caused by any one accident." Plaintiffs contended that the claim for the wife's loss of consortium was distinct from the husband's claim for physical injury, and came within the "each occurrence" policy limit of $ 500,000. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) Under Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, and Lantis v. Condon (1979) 95 C.A.3d 152, 157 C.R. 22, the wife's cause of action is not "derivative" but is personal to her; and the injury to her emotional state should be treated in the same way as a bodily injury. (167 C.A.3d 25, 26, 27.) Hence, J was a second person injured by the accident, and recovery was subject only to the "each occurrence" limit. (167 C.A.3d 26.)

(b) United Services Auto Assn. is distinguishable in that the policy limit there was for "all damages, including damages for and loss of services." Defendant's "per person" limitation did not contain this qualifying phrase. (167 C.A.3d 31.) Hence, construing the policy against the insurer, J's independent injury was covered by the "per occurrence" limitation, but the injury she sustained is separate from that of her husband. Therefore, the language of the "per person" limitation cannot be strained so as to merge her injury with her husband's. If defendant wants to limit liability in accidents where loss of consortium damages are sought, "it should expressly provide that such damages are subject to the 'per person' limitation." (167 C.A.3d 33.) (See Mid-Century Ins. Co. v. Bash (1989) 211 C.A.3d 431, 436, 437, 259

C.R. 382 [following United Services Auto Assn. in interpreting similar policy language].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

17 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- A. Injuries to Person.
 - 8. Loss of Consortium.
 - b. Recovery by Spouse.
- 3. No Recovery for Premarital Injury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1681

[§ 1681] No Recovery for Premarital Injury.

In Zwicker v. Altamont Emergency Room Physicians Med. Group (2002) 98 C.A.4th 26, 118 C.R.2d 912, prior to his marriage, plaintiff husband had emergency surgery to remove his left testicle, after being told the day before that there was no evidence of testicular torsion and that he should follow up with his own physician. Over the next 11 months, three semen tests indicated that he was infertile, although it was not then known if the infertility was permanent. Shortly thereafter, plaintiffs were married, and 2 weeks later, they instituted a malpractice action, alleging that defendant physicians' negligent diagnosis had resulted in plaintiff husband's infertility. Plaintiff wife filed a claim for loss of consortium, claiming that as a result of defendants' negligence, plaintiff husband was incapable of impregnating her. Specifically, she argued that a cause of action for loss of consortium did not accrue until she knew or should have known that her husband's infertility was permanent, a fact that did not occur until after the marriage. Defendants, on the other hand, contended that plaintiff wife had no cause of action for consortium, because she knew about her future husband's fertility problems before their marriage, even though she did not then know that those problems were permanent. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed; the timing and extent of plaintiff wife's knowledge of the infertility are irrelevant.

(a) In California, the right to recover for loss of consortium is founded on the relationship of marriage, and absent this relationship the right does not exist. (98 C.A.4th 30, citing Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 C.3d 267, 250 C.R. 254, 758 P.2d 582, supra, §1020.) "A premarital injury does not give rise to a cause of action for loss of consortium at the time it occurs, and the postmarital discovery of the premarital injury cannot create a cause of action for loss of consortium where one did not exist in the first place." (98 C.A.4th 30.)

(b) Although most courts in the United States have denied recovery for loss of consortium based on injuries that predated the marriage, some courts, under the "delayed discovery rule," have recognized an exception to this bar when the injuries were unknown until after the marriage, and in California, there is authority to support the proposition that the delayed discovery rule applies to loss of consortium claims. (98 C.A.4th 34, citing Uram v. Abex Corp. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1425, 266 C.R. 695, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §527.) However, this is of no help to plaintiff wife. "We are unaware of any other area in tort law in which the existence of a cause of action depends on the date the injury is discovered. The delayed discovery rule 'originated as a means of preserving negligence claims' from the strict application of the statute of limitations, which might otherwise be deemed to have run even before the plaintiff knew he or she had a claim. ... To our knowledge, the delayed discovery rule has never been invoked in California to justify the very existence of a cause of action. There is no basis for making an exception for loss of consortium." (98 C.A.4th 35, citing Israelsky v. Title Ins. Co. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 611, 261 C.R. 72, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §488.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Uram case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §570. Israelsky case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §523.

18 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- A. Injuries to Person.
- 8. Loss of Consortium.
- b. Recovery by Spouse.
- 4. Scope of Recovery.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1682

[§ 1682] Scope of Recovery.

(1) No Reduction for Husband's Negligence. To reduce the wife's recovery because of her husband's contributory negligence would in effect apply the abolished rule of imputed negligence (see supra, §725); hence, it is improper to do so. (Lantis v. Condon (1979) 95 C.A.3d 152, 156, 157 C.R. 22.) (See 25 A.L.R.4th 118 [negligence of spouse or child as barring or reducing recovery for loss of consortium by other spouse or parent].)

Under Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6(a) (supra, §1006), an injured party's negligence is imputed to a plaintiff asserting a consortium claim. (Rest.3d, Torts: Apportionment of Liability §6, Comment b.)

(2) Recovery Where No Physical Injury Is Suffered. In Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1980) 27 C.3d 916, 167 C.R. 831, 616 P.2d 813, supra, §1022, the court noted that in Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, supra, §1679, the husband suffered extensive disabling physical injuries, but held that this fact was not vital to the decision: "[A] marital relationship can be grievously injured when one spouse suffers a traumatically induced neurosis, psychosis, chronic depression, or phobia." (27 C.3d 933.) Where the injury is emotional rather than physical, the plaintiff may have a more difficult task in proving negligence, causation, and the requisite degree of harm, but these are jury questions. (27 C.3d 933.) (See Anderson v. Northrop Corp. (1988) 203 C.A.3d 772, 780, 250 C.R. 189, supra, §1034 [allegation that plaintiff's spouse was "mentally upset, distressed, and aggravated" was insufficient to support action for loss of consortium]; 69 Cal. L. Rev. 1142; 16 A.L.R.4th 537 [Molien].)

(3) No "Partial" Loss of Consortium. A complaint alleging that the wife suffered emotional distress and "a partial loss of consortium" by reason of the husband's "disfiguring scars" is insufficient. "We think that loss of consortium ... means a complete loss of consortium for a definite period of time or a nondeterminable length of time and is not to be confused with the inevitable physical, mental, and emotional damage normally or usually suffered by one spouse when the other has been wrongfully injured." (Park v. Standard Chem Way Co. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 47, 50, 131 C.R. 338.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Recovery Where Spouse's Appeal Is Dismissed. In Hahn v. Mirda (2007) 147 C.A.4th 740, 54 C.R.3d 527, plaintiffs' complaint alleged two causes of action: (a) that defendant doctors performed a radical mastectomy on plaintiff wife and did not tell her that the surgery was unnecessary when a postoperative report showed that she had originally been improperly diagnosed; (b) that plaintiff husband suffered loss of consortium as a result. A demurrer without leave to amend was sustained, and both parties appealed. Held, the complaint sufficiently pleaded an independent cause of action for loss of consortium; although defendants owed no duty of care and disclosure to plaintiff husband, plaintiff wife adequately pleaded tortious injury from which plaintiff husband's claim was derived. (147 C.A.4th 745.)

19 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- A. Injuries to Person.
- 8. Loss of Consortium.
- c. No Recovery by Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1683

[§ 1683] No Recovery by Child.

In Suter v. Leonard (1975) 45 C.A.3d 744, 120 C.R. 110, the court refused to extend Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, supra, §1679, to a child's action, with a strong hint that the question was still open. S, divorced and with custody of plaintiff daughter, a minor, was injured in an automobile accident. The mother and daughter both sued, the mother seeking $ 2 million and the child $ 150,000 for loss of her mother's consortium. The child's cause of action alleged that the accident had left her mother disabled and unable to care for her. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer to the child's cause of action affirmed.

(a) Under Rodriguez, the case has "both logical and sympathetic appeal." "Certain aspects of the spousal relationship are similar to those of the parent-child relationship, and there can be little question of the reality of the loss suffered by a child deprived of the society and care of its parent." (45 C.A.3d 746.)

(b) However, other considerations must be taken into account. "Ideally, each loss should be paid in full in undepreciated currency. Practically, not every loss can be made compensable in money damages, and legal causation must terminate somewhere. In delineating the extent of a tortfeasor's responsibility for damages under the general rule of tort liability (Civ. Code, §1714), the courts must locate the line between liability and non-liability at some point, a decision which is essentially political." (45 C.A.3d 746.)

(c) Other jurisdictions uniformly deny recovery. "The interest of the child in proper parental care ... has run into a stone wall where there is merely negligent injury to the parent." (45 C.A.3d 747.)

(d) The Rodriguez opinion, in distinguishing spousal and parent-child relationships, "gave implied support to these concerns" (absence of enforceable claim to parent's services, indirect nature of injury, uncertainty of damages, possibility of double recovery, multiplication of tort litigation, splitting cause of action, abrogation of the statute of limitations, increase in insurance costs). "In the absence of a specific ruling to the contrary from our Supreme Court, we follow the unanimous rulings of other jurisdictions and classify plaintiff's loss as non-actionable." (45 C.A.3d 747.)

(e) This holding does not deny equal protection. The Legislature could rationally conclude that the parent will recover for any loss of ability to properly care for his or her children, and that only on the parent's death should intangible losses to the child become actionable. (45 C.A.3d 748.) (See Garza v. Kantor (1976) 54 C.A.3d 1025, 1027, 127 C.R. 164 [following Suter and authorities in other jurisdictions denying recovery].)

In Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, the court noted that Court of Appeal opinions had reached different conclusions on the right of a parent or a child to sue (see Hair v. Monterey (1975) 45 C.A.3d 538, 119 C.R. 639, infra, §1684), and resolved the conflict by holding that no cause of action exists for loss of consortium in a parent-child relationship. B was injured when a lighting fixture fell on her at defendant's airline terminal. The complaint was filed by nine children, who alleged that she had been rendered unable to carry on her usual duties as a mother. Each sought damages of $ 100,000. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Question is one of policy. The Rodriguez opinion rejected the argument that the decision would logically require recognition of an analogous cause of action in other relationships. (19 C.3d 445.) That case, therefore, "does not compel the conclusion that foreseeable injury to a legally recognized relationship necessarily postulates a cause of action; instead it clearly warns that social policy must at some point intervene to delimit liability." (19 C.3d 446.) B foreseeably has not only a husband with a cause of action, but children, parents, brothers and sisters, cousins, in-laws, friends, colleagues, "and other acquaintances who will be deprived of her companionship." (19 C.3d 446.) The line must be drawn somewhere, and the question is one of policy. (19 C.3d 446, quoting Suter v. Leonard.)

(b) Policy reasons against extension of liability to parent-child relationship. Strong policy reasons compel rejection of plaintiffs' claim:

(1) The loss is intangible and nonpecuniary. "[M]onetary compensation will not enable plaintiffs to regain the companionship and guidance of a mother; it will simply establish a fund so that upon reaching adulthood, when plaintiffs will be less in need of maternal guidance, they will be unusually wealthy men and women. To say that plaintiffs have been 'compensated' for their loss is superficial; in reality they have suffered a loss for which they can never be compensated; they have obtained, instead, a future benefit essentially unrelated to that loss." (19 C.3d 447.) The social burden of an award cannot be ignored merely because the payment is made initially by the "negligent" defendant or his insurer. "Realistically the burden of payment of awards for loss of consortium must be borne by the public generally in increased insurance premiums or, otherwise, in the enhanced danger that accrues from the greater number of people who may choose to go without any insurance." (19 C.3d 447.) And the cost of administration--the expense of settling or litigating claims--would be sizable. (19 C.3d 447.)

(2) Because of its intangible character, the damages for loss of parental consortium would be difficult to measure. And the risk of double recovery would be great. "[T]o ask the jury, even under carefully drafted instructions, to distinguish the loss to the mother from her inability to care for her children from the loss to the children from the mother's inability to care for them may be asking too much." (19 C.3d 448.)

(c) Spousal action distinguished. Rodriguez, in upholding the wife's action, rejected similar policy arguments directed against the action by a spouse; but this does not call for a similar rejection of the arguments against the action for loss of parental consortium. (1) The major element of impairment of sexual life is not involved in the child's action. (19 C.3d 448.) (2) Actions by children create serious problems of multiplication of actions and damages, as the instant case illustrates (nine independent causes of action). (19 C.3d 449.) (3) Over 30 states now permit a spousal suit, but no state permits a child's action, and 18 have expressly rejected the claim. (19 C.3d 449, footnote 2.)

(d) Foreseeability decisions distinguished. The opinions in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §1086, and Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, supra, §1050, stressing the consideration of foreseeability in imposing tort liability, did not involve the creation of a new cause of action for solely intangible damages, attended with problems of multiplication of claims and liability. (19 C.3d 450.) Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, supra, §1008, emphasizing the factor of close relationship of the plaintiff and victim, limited its holding to cases of physical injury to the plaintiff. And Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022, supra, §1012, refused to extend the Dillon rule to a situation in which the plaintiff did not suffer a physical injury. (19 C.3d 450.)

(e) Wrongful death actions distinguished. Under former C.C.P. 377 (now C.C.P. 377.60 et seq.), a child may sue for wrongful death of a parent and recover the value of the decedent's affection and society; and plaintiffs contended that the statute, in permitting this recovery by children of a deceased parent while refusing it to children of a seriously disabled parent, denies equal protection of the law. But the distinction rests on a rational basis:

(1) The statutory wrongful death action was created to plug a loophole in the common law, and the recovery for loss of affection and society fulfills a social belief that a tortfeasor who negligently kills should not escape liability, "no matter how unproductive his victim." (19 C.3d 452.) The case of a disabled parent is wholly different: because the immediate victim of the tort has a cause of action, the tortfeasor cannot escape liability. (19 C.3d 452.)

(2) The wrongful death action is the only means by which the family unit can recover compensation for the loss of parental care and services; but while the parent lives, the tangible aspects of the child's loss can be compensated in the parent's own cause of action. (19 C.3d 452.)

A lengthy dissenting opinion by the author of the Rodriguez decision took issue with the majority on every point, and concluded that the letter and spirit of Rodriguez called for recognition of the child's cause of action. (19 C.3d 453.) (See C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §2.5; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 430; 18 Pacific L. J. 233 [criticism of decision]; 5 San Fernando L. Rev. 449; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 263.)

Borer was followed in Nix v. Preformed Line Products Co. (1985) 170 C.A.3d 975, 216 C.R. 581. But the Court of Appeal, bound by the Supreme Court decision, called for a reexamination of the rule in the light of later decisions in other jurisdictions and strong criticism of the Borer result. (170 C.A.3d 986.) The opinion reviews recent cases from Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Washington upholding the child's right to recover for loss of parental consortium. (170 C.A.3d 981 et seq.) (See 11 A.L.R.4th 529 [child's right of action for loss of support, training, parental attention, or the like, against a third person negligently injuring parent].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 12 A.L.R.6th 241 [adult child's right of action for loss of parental consortium].

20 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

8. Loss of Consortium.

d. No Recovery by Parent.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1684

[§ 1684] No Recovery by Parent.

(1) Dictum Supporting Recovery. In Hair v. Monterey (1975) 45 C.A.3d 538, 119 C.R. 639, a case tried before Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, supra, §1679, the court denied recovery for loss of consortium of a child, but in a strong dictum declared that this recovery would be allowed if the Rodriguez rule were applicable. Plaintiffs' 9-year-old son sustained serious permanent injuries as a result of oral surgery performed by defendant physician in defendant county's hospital. He was blind, a quadriplegic, suffered brain damage, and had seizures. In a prior action, he recovered damages for the reasonable value of medical, nursing, and related care. In the present action by his parents, recovery was sought by them for the extraordinary care and affection required for a child so injured, for emotional distress suffered by witnessing his injuries, and for loss of consortium. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Rodriguez expressly reserved the question of applicability of its holding to the parent-child relationship (see supra, §1679), and traditionally recovery for loss of consortium has been disallowed; i.e., the parent's recovery is strictly for pecuniary loss (see supra, §726). (45 C.3d 544.)

(b) Rodriguez, however, furnishes support for a new rule; there is no meaningful distinction between a spouse's loss of comfort and society and a parent's loss. "Our analysis of that case leads us to the conclusion that, logically, there is no objection to an extension of the rule laid down therein so as to permit recovery by parents for lost pleasure, society, comfort and companionship sustained by reason of injuries inflicted upon their child. However, the law is as much a creature of public policy as of logic. Logic serves the function of directing analysis while public policy prescribes the boundaries of decision making. Whereas this court may constitute a proper forum for dealing with the former, we feel that, in most situations, the latter is more properly left to determination by the Legislature or by a higher echelon of the judiciary. In this instance, however, we observe that no reasonable distinction can be drawn between the right of parents, in appropriate circumstances, to seek recovery for lost comfort, society and companionship of an injured and totally helpless child and the right of a spouse, in similar circumstances, to seek recovery for loss of consortium as authorized by Rodriguez." (45 C.A.3d 545.)

(2) Holding Denying Recovery. Baxter v. Superior Court (1977) 19 C.3d 461, 138 C.R. 315, 563 P.2d 871, follows Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, supra, §1683. The child, aged 16, suffered mental impairment, blindness, and partial paralysis as a result of alleged medical malpractice. In addition to his cause of action, his mother and father set forth claims for loss of his society, etc. Held, the same considerations that led to denial of the child's action in Borer compelled a similar result here.

(a) The risk of multiple claims and disproportionate awards is less, because an injured child has only two parents; but this difference between the cases is not significant. (19 C.3d 464.)

(b) The jurisdictions are divided on the parent's right of action. Some, citing the common law right of a parent to recover for loss of a child's services, treat affection and companionship as "services." But in California, the cases on the parents' statutory right to a child's earnings and services (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §296) permit recovery only for loss of earnings or services of economic value. (19 C.3d 465.) To expand the recovery to include damages for loss of affection and society would be contrary to the reasoning of Borer. (19 C.3d 466.)

(c) Contrary language in Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 573, 127 C.R. 720 §1019, and Hair v. Monterey is disapproved. (19 C.3d 466, footnote 4.) (See Zavala v. Arce (1997) 58 C.A.4th 915, 936, 68 C.R.2d 571, supra, §1029 [recovery for loss of filial consortium denied in action by mother of dead child for negligent infliction of emotional distress; following Baxter]; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §2.4; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 430; 54 A.L.R.4th 112 [parent's right to recover for loss of consortium for injury to child].)

The court in both Borer and Baxter took pains to point out that the cause of action of a parent for intentional interference with the parent-child relationship is still recognized (see Rosefield v. Rosefield (1963) 221 C.A.2d 431, 34 C.R. 479, supra, §729); the tort presents no danger of multiplication of claims or damages, and may serve to deter child stealing and similar antisocial conduct. (Borer, supra, 19 C.3d 451, footnote 3; Baxter, supra, 19 C.3d 466, footnote 3.)

In re Marriage of Segel (1986) 179 C.A.3d 602, 224 C.R. 591, relied on the policy bases of Borer and Baxter in denying recovery on unusual facts. Plaintiff, after dissolution of her marriage and an award of child custody to the husband, brought an action against him, alleging that he maliciously prohibited her from seeing the child and sought to alienate the child against her. In affirming judgment for defendant on demurrer, the court declared that the primary right involved was that of visitation; that "judicial recognition of a cause of action for loss of filial consortium would undermine the purposes of the Family Law Act"; and that disputes over visitation should be speedily decided by the family law court and not "used as a vehicle for claiming monetary damages." (179 C.A.3d 608, 609.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

21 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
8. Loss of Consortium.
e. No Recovery by Nonmarital Cohabitant.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1685

[§ 1685] No Recovery by Nonmarital Cohabitant.

In Butcher v. Superior Court (1983) 139 C.A.3d 58, 71, 188 C.R. 503, the Court of Appeal held that "an unmarried cohabitant may state a cause of action for loss of consortium by showing that the nonmarital relationship is both stable and significant." (139 C.A.3d 71.) After listing factors showing stability and significance, the court said: "While the particular items of evidence will vary from case to case, and some of these suggested criteria may be absent, and other different ones present, the plaintiff will bear the burden of demonstrating both that the relationship is stable and that it has those characteristics of significance which one may expect to find in what is essentially a de facto marriage." (139 C.A.3d 70.)

However, emphasizing the lack of supporting authority, the state's interest in promoting marriage, and the difficulty in determining whether the relationship of nonmarital cohabitants is equivalent to a marriage, the California Supreme Court disapproved Butcher in Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 C.3d 267, 250 C.R. 254, 758 P.2d 582, supra, §1020. (See 58 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1467, 1478, 1486; 40 A.L.R.4th 553 [action for loss of consortium based on nonmarital cohabitation].)

In Tong v. Jocson (1977) 76 C.A.3d 603, 142 C.R. 726, the court reiterated the caution in Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, supra, §1683, that a line must be drawn at some point in determining the relationships that give rise to liability for loss of consortium. Plaintiff was engaged to G and the two began living together in 1973. In February 1974, both were injured in an automobile accident. In March 1974, plaintiff and G were married, and some months afterwards, he filed an action seeking damages for his personal injuries and for loss of consortium arising from G's injuries. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; the parties were not married at the time of the accident. (See 14 U.S.F. L. Rev. 133; 5 A.L.R.4th 300 [loss of consortium for injury occurring prior to marriage].)

In Lieding v. Commercial Diving Center (1983) 143 C.A.3d 72, 191 C.R. 559, the parties were engaged March 9 and selected May 31 as a wedding date, but the husband was injured on April 14. The court followed Tong and out-of-state authority in holding that no cause of action for loss of consortium could be maintained where the spouse's injuries were sustained before the marriage. (143 C.A.3d 76.)

In Grant v. Avis Rent-a-Car System (1984) 158 C.A.3d 813, 204 C.R. 869, J, married to H, began living with S in August 1982, at which time H commenced dissolution proceedings (and eventually obtained judgment in July 1983). In September 1982, 1 month and 2 days after she had been living with J, S was injured in an automobile accident. In this action by S and J, J sought damages for loss of consortium, alleging that at the time of the accident, plaintiffs were "unmarried cohabitants possessing every characteristic of the spousal relationship except formalization." Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The fact that J was married to another woman during the entire period he lived with S before the accident prevented their relationship from being either stable or significant. (158 C.A.3d 818.)

In Ledger v. Tippitt (1985) 164 C.A.3d 625, 210 C.R. 814, supra, §1020, the court pointed out that the right of an unmarried cohabitant (who is not a putative spouse) has been denied in the United States with only two exceptions; and that cases denying recovery include those in which the accident occurred after announcement of a wedding date or on the day parties were to be married, and those in which the parties had children. (164 C.A.3d 634, 635.) Under the reasoning of these cases (164 C.A.3d 636, 637), the holdings in cases allowing recovery are wrong:

(a) There is no strong policy favoring maintenance of nonmarital relationships. Also, it is difficult to accept the idea that a friend of an injured party can "marry into a cause of action" despite his or her promise to take the spouse for better or for worse. (164 C.A.3d 637.)

(b) The test of exclusivity of sexual relationship would invade the claimant's right of privacy by requiring disclosure of intimate aspects of personal life, and no public policy would be served by requiring a nonmarital partner to relinquish the right of privacy as a condition of recovering damages for loss of consortium. (164 C.A.3d 637.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 39 U.S.F. L. Rev. 201 [recovery for loss of consortium by unmarried cohabitant].

22 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
9. Abuse of Elderly or Dependent Adult.
a. Statutory Remedies.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1686

[§ 1686] Statutory Remedies.

(1) In General. The 1991 Legislature enacted Welf.C. 15657 et seq., entitled "Civil Actions for Abuse of Elderly or Dependent Adults," which govern the damages, fees, and costs recoverable in actions involving the abuse of elderly or dependent adults. (Welf.C. 15657.) This legislation has been referred to as the Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act or, more concisely, the Elder Abuse Act. (See Delaney v. Baker (1999) 20 C.4th 23, 26, 33, 82 C.R.2d 610, 971 P.2d 986.) (On reports of abuse of elderly or dependent adults, see supra, §147 et seq.)

(2) Cause of Action. After the death of the elder or dependent adult, the right to maintain an action is transferred to the personal representative of the decedent, or if none, to the person or persons entitled to succeed to the decedent's estate. (Welf.C. 15657.3(d); see Estate of Lowrie (2004) 118 C.A.4th 220, 224, 12 C.R.3d 828 [under Welf.C. 15657.3(d), granddaughter had standing to bring elder abuse action where she would inherit if defendant uncle were disqualified].)

(3) Recklessness, Oppression, Fraud, or Malice. Where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant was guilty of recklessness, oppression, fraud, or malice in the commission of physical abuse, neglect, or financial abuse against an elderly or dependent adult, the following rules apply:

(a) The court must award to the plaintiff reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, including reasonable fees for the services of a conservator, if any, devoted to the litigation of the action. (Welf.C. 15657(a).) (See ARA Living Centers - Pac. v. Superior Court (1993) 18 C.A.4th 1556, 1562, 23 C.R.2d 224 [Welf.C. 15657(a) applies retroactively, i.e., to abuse occurring before January 1, 1992]; Intrieri v. Superior Court (2004) 117 C.A.4th 72, 76, 12 C.R.3d 97 [factual question whether nursing home's conduct constituted requisite "reckless neglect"].)

(b) The award of attorneys' fees must be based on all factors relevant to the value of the services rendered; the value of the abuse-related litigation in terms of the quality of life of the elder or dependent adult, and the results obtained; and whether the defendant took reasonable and timely steps to determine the likelihood and extent of liability. (Welf.C. 15657.1.) (See Conservatorship of Levitt (2001) 93 C.A.4th 544, 548, 113 C.R.2d 294 [even though attorney representing conservator in efforts to protect modest estates of two elders was recognized leader in field of elder abuse, it was not abuse of discretion for trial court to reduce his request for attorneys' fees by 15% based on size of estates].)

(c) The limitations imposed by C.C.P. 377.34 (supra, §23), i.e., no recovery for pain, suffering, or disfigurement where the person with the cause of action dies before judgment, are not applicable. However, the damages recovered are subject to the limitation imposed by C.C. 3333.2(b) (supra, §958), i.e., $ 250,000 for noneconomic losses. (Welf.C. 15657(b).) (See ARA Living Centers - Pac. v. Superior Court, supra, 18 C.A.4th 1563 [Welf.C. 15657(b) does not apply retroactively, i.e., to abuse occurring before January 1, 1992]; 39 San Diego L. Rev. 599 [need to reexamine damage caps in Elder Abuse Act].)

(d) The standards set forth in C.C. 3294(b) regarding the imposition of punitive damages on an employer for the acts of an employee, i.e., advance knowledge of the employee's unfitness and a conscious disregard of the rights of others or authorization or ratification of the wrongful conduct, must be satisfied before damages or attorneys' fees may be imposed against an employer. (Welf.C. 15657(c).) (See Marron v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 1049, 1067, 134 C.R.2d 358, supra, §230 [complaint was sufficient under Welf.C. 15657(c) to withstand motion for summary adjudication].) (For similar statute on financial abuse as defined in Welf.C. 15610.30, see Welf.C. 15657.5.)

(4) Abduction. Where it is proven by clear and convincing evidence that an individual is liable for abduction of an elderly or dependent adult, the defendant is liable for (a) costs of representing the abductee and his or her family in any state in any action related to the abduction and returning of the abductee to this state, and (b) travel expenses for the abductee's return. (Welf.C. 15657.05.) (See Welf.C. 15610.06 ["abduction" defined].)

(5) Punitive Damages. Punitive damages claims in elder abuse cases are not subject to the procedural limitations of C.C.P. 425.13(a) (supra, §1600) for filing similar claims in medical malpractice cases. (Covenant Care v. Superior Court (2004) 32 C.4th 771, 11 C.R.3d 222, 86 P.3d 290, supra, §1601.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Quiroz v. Seventh Avenue Center (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1256, 1282, 45 C.R.3d 222 [heir of resident who died at skilled nursing facility was not entitled to heightened remedies afforded by Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act in her wrongful death action against facility; Act is intended to protect elders and dependent adults who are victims of abuse, not their heirs].

When a conservator has been appointed, the probate court has jurisdiction over claims made under the Elder Abuse and Dependent Adult Civil Protection Act, but if the probate court decides that the case should be determined in a civil action, it must transfer the case to the general civil calendar of the superior court. (Conservatorship of Kayle (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1, 6, 35 C.R.3d 671 [matter should have been transferred, not dismissed].)

(2) Cause of Action. Welf.C. 15657.3(d) was subdivided in 2007. After the death of the elder or dependent adult, the decedent's personal representative has the right to commence and maintain an action. If there is no personal representative, the right to commence or maintain an action passes to an intestate heir whose interest is affected by the action, the decedent's successor in interest, or an interested party. (Welf.C. 15657.3(d)(1).) These persons may also commence or maintain an action if the personal representative refuses to do so or if the personal representative's family or an affiliate is alleged to have committed abuse of the elder or dependent adult. (Welf.C. 15657.3(d)(2).) If two or more of these persons or a personal representative has standing to commence or maintain an action, the court may "make any order concerning the parties that is appropriate to ensure the proper administration of justice in the case." (Welf.C. 15657.3(e).)

(3) Recklessness, Oppression, Fraud, or Malice. See Sababin v. Superior Court (2006) 144 C.A.4th 81, 89, 50 C.R.3d 266 [triable issues precluded summary adjudication whether rehabilitation center's employees were guilty of reckless, oppressive, or malicious neglect, rather than ordinary negligence, where it was reasonably deducible that center's employees neglected to follow patient's care plan by failing to check patient's skin condition on daily basis and failing to notify physician of need for treatment order]. Attorneys' fees: See Perlin v. Fountain View Management (2008) 163 C.A.4th 657, 77 C.R.3d 743 [violation of Elder Abuse Act is independent cause of action, and failure of plaintiffs to obtain verdict establishing causation by clear and convincing evidence precluded award of attorneys' fees; jury found causation under preponderance of evidence standard and found recklessness by clear and convincing evidence, but failed to find "oppression, fraud, or malice" by clear and convincing evidence]; Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 C.A.4th 156, 164, 83 C.R.3d 877 [finding that attorney acted knowingly in assisting one client in taking proceeds of loan to another, elderly client, an act of financial elder abuse, was supported by substantial evidence, including evidence that attorney knew that loan proceeds were to be used to invest in nightclub, and justified award of attorneys' fees].

Services of conservator: An award under Welf.C. 15657.5(a) for the services of a conservator does not include the services of a trustee. (Sanders v. Lawson (2008) 164 C.A.4th 434, 438, 78 C.R.3d 851.)

(New) Financial abuse: An elder or dependent adult is entitled to the remedies granted by Welf.C. 15657.5 against any person or entity who "takes, secretes, appropriates, obtains, or retains" the real or personal property of the elder or dependent adult when the elder or dependent adult lacks capacity or is of unsound mind, if that person or entity, on demand, fails to return the property. (Welf.C. 15657.6, added in 2008)

23 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

A. Injuries to Person.

9. Abuse of Elderly or Dependent Adult.

b. Exception for Professional Negligence by Health Care Provider.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1687

[§ 1687] Exception for Professional Negligence by Health Care Provider.

An action against a health care provider, as defined in C.C.P. 340.5, based on the provider's alleged professional negligence, is governed by the laws specifically applicable to professional negligence causes of action. (Welf.C. 15657.2.)

Delaney v. Baker (1999) 20 C.4th 23, 26, 33, 82 C.R.2d 610, 971 P.2d 986, holding a health care provider subject to the enhanced remedies of the Elder Abuse Act (see supra, §1686), discussed the purpose and effect of Welf.C. 15657.2. Plaintiff's 88-year-old mother was sent to defendant nursing facility to recuperate from a fractured ankle. Less than 4 months later, she died while still a resident of that facility. At the time of death, plaintiff's mother had stage IV bedsores (tissue eaten away down to the bone), and there was evidence that she had frequently been left lying in her own urine and feces for extended periods of time. The neglect occurred despite plaintiff's frequent complaints and even though defendant nursing home had been cited for patient neglect by the Department of Health Services. In an action against the nursing home and two administrators, the jury awarded damages for pain and suffering, attorneys' fees, and costs. Held, affirmed.

(a) Ordinarily, damages recoverable by a decedent's personal representative may not include pain and suffering. However, Welf.C. 15657 provides that where the defendant is liable for neglect of the elderly and has been guilty of recklessness in committing that neglect, damages may be awarded for pain and suffering. Further, the court, in addition to all other remedies otherwise provided by law, must award attorneys' fees and costs. (20 C.4th 28.)

(b) Welf.C. 15657.2 provides that, notwithstanding the rest of the Elder Abuse Act, a cause of action against a health care provider that is based on the provider's professional negligence is governed by the laws that specifically apply to those professional negligence causes of action. Defendants argued that the phrase "based on professional negligence" in Welf.C. 15657.2 includes "reckless neglect" within the meaning of Welf.C. 15657, and that, therefore, the available remedies do not include the additional remedies allowed by Welf.C. 15657. To the contrary, the legislative history shows that those who enacted the Act believed that "professional negligence" and the neglect specified in Welf.C. 15657 are mutually exclusive. (20 C.4th 29.)

(c) Simple negligence is the failure to exercise the due care that an ordinary person would exercise under the circumstances, and the professional negligence referred to in Welf.C. 15657.2 is similar, except that due care is measured by the standards of a professional. Under Welf.C. 15657, a plaintiff must demonstrate, by clear and convincing evidence, something extra, i.e., reckless, oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious conduct. The present case deals with "recklessness," which involves more than mere inadvertence or incompetence, but rises to the level of conscious choice of a course of action known to pose a serious danger to others. Welf.C. 15657.2 makes it clear that the conduct proscribed by Welf.C. 15657 does not include acts of simple negligence, but instead refers to forms of abuse or neglect performed with some degree of culpability greater than mere negligence. This interpretation does not render Welf.C. 15657.2 mere surplusage. The Legislature could have reasonably decided that an express statement excluding professional negligence from Welf.C. 15657 was needed. (20 C.4th 31.)

(d) The legislative history of Welf.C. 15657 shows that it only pertains to acts of egregious abuse, and that it thus protects health care providers from heightened liability for acts of simple negligence. If the Legislature had meant to go even further and completely exempt health care providers from Welf.C. 15657, it would not have used a phrase like "professional negligence," which is generally regarded as distinct from reckless or oppressive behavior. (20 C.4th 33.)

(e) The fact that some health care institutions both perform custodial functions and provide medical care means that a specific act, such as allowing the patient to suffer malnutrition, can be both "professional negligence" and "reckless conduct." If the conduct is accompanied by recklessness, oppression, fraud, or maliciousness, it is subject to the heightened remedies allowed by Welf.C. 15657; otherwise, it is governed by the laws applicable to simple negligence. (20 C.4th 34.)

(f) In the present case, there was substantial evidence that plaintiff's mother was subject to neglect. Defendants failed, over an extended period of time, to attend to her advanced bedsores, and otherwise neglected her in such a way as to contribute to her pain and suffering and eventual death. There was also substantial evidence that the conduct was reckless, given defendants' knowledge of the deteriorating condition of plaintiff's mother and plaintiff's repeated efforts to intervene in her behalf. That evidence supports the award of attorneys' fees and costs and damages for pain and suffering, as Welf.C. 15657 permits. (20 C.4th 41.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

24 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
9. Abuse of Elderly or Dependent Adult.
c. Forms and Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1688

[§ 1688] Forms and Instructions.

(1) Judicial Council Forms. The Judicial Council has adopted the following forms in connection with the Elder Abuse Act:

Form No. EA-100 [Petition for Protective Orders (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)].

Form No. EA-110 [Response to Petition for Protective Orders (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)].

Form No. EA-120 [Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)].

Form No. EA-130 [Restraining Order After Hearing (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)].

Form No. EA-140 [Proof of Service (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)] (personal service).

Form No. EA-141 [Proof of Service (Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse) (CLETS)] (service by mail).

Form No. EA-150 [Instructions on Petition for a Protective Order to Prevent Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse].

(2) Instructions. The following BAJI instructions relate to remedies under the Elder Abuse Act:

BAJI, No. 7.46 [additional remedies where recklessness, oppression, fraud, or malice].

BAJI, No. 7.47 [additional remedies--definitions].

BAJI, No. 7.48 [additional remedies against principal for acts of agent].

The following CACI instructions relate to remedies under the Act:

CACI, No. 3101 [financial abuse--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--individual or individual and employer defendants (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.30)].

CACI, No. 3102 [financial abuse--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--employer defendant (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.30)].

CACI, No. 3104 [neglect--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--individual or individual and employer defendants (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.57)].

CACI, No. 3105 [neglect--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--employer defendant (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.57)].

CACI, No. 3107 [physical abuse--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--individual or individual and employer defendants (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.63)].

CACI, No. 3108 [physical abuse--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--employer defendant (Welf.C. 15657, 15610.63)].

CACI, No. 3110 [abduction--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--individual or individual and employer defendants (Welf.C. 15657.05, 15610.06)].

CACI, No. 3111 [abduction--essential factual elements--enhanced remedies sought--employer defendant (Welf.C. 15657.05, 15610.06)].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Judicial Council Forms. The current Elder Abuse Act forms adopted by the Judicial Council are as follows:

Form No. EA-100 [Request for Orders to Stop Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse].

Form No. EA-102 [Confidential CLETS Information].

Form No. EA-110 [Response to Request for Orders to Stop Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse].

Form No. EA-120 [Notice of Hearing and Temporary Restraining Order (CLETS-TEA or TEF)].

Form No. EA-125 [Request and Order for Reissuance of Temporary Restraining Order (CLETS-TEA or TEF)].

Form No. EA-130 [Order After Hearing Restraining Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse (CLETS-EAR or EAF)].

Form No. EA-140 [Proof of Personal Service--CLETS].

Form No. EA-141 [Proof of Service by Mail--CLETS].

Form No. EA-142-INFO [What is "Proof of Service"?].

Form No. EA-145 [Proof of Firearms Turned in or Sold].

Form No. EA-150-INFO [Can a Restraining Order to Prevent Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse Help Me?] (formerly EA-150).

Form No. EA-151-INFO [How Can I Respond to a Request for Orders to Stop Elder or Dependent Adult Abuse?].

(2) Instructions. The following CACI instructions relate to remedies under the Elder Abuse Act:

CACI, No. 3101 [Financial Abuse--Decedent's Pain and Suffering (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 15657.5)].

CACI, No. 3102A [Employer Liability for Enhanced Remedies--Both Individual and Employer Defendants (Welf.

& Inst. Code, §§ 15657, 15657.5, 15657.05; Civ. Code, § 3294(b))] (derived from former CACI, No. 3102).

CACI, No. 3102B [Employer Liability for Enhanced Remedies--Employer Defendant Only (Welf. & Inst. Code, §§ 15657, 15657.5, 15657.05; Civ. Code, § 3294(b))] (derived from former CACI, No. 3102).

CACI, No. 3104 [Neglect--Enhanced Remedies Sought (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 15657)].

CACI, No. 3107 [Physical Abuse--Enhanced Remedies Sought (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 15657)].

CACI, No. 3110 [Abduction--Enhanced Remedies Sought (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 15657.05)].

CACI, Nos. 3105, 3108, and 3111 were revoked in 2008.

25 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
A. Injuries to Person.
10. Marketing of Illegal Drugs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1689

[§ 1689] Marketing of Illegal Drugs.

Plaintiffs in actions under the Drug Dealer Liability Act (supra, §464 et seq.) may ordinarily recover all of the following damages:

(1) Economic damages, including, but not limited to, the cost of treatment and rehabilitation, medical expenses, loss of economic or educational potential, loss of productivity, absenteeism, support expenses, accidents or injury, and any other pecuniary loss proximately caused by the use of an illegal controlled substance. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(d)(1).)

(2) Noneconomic damages, including, but not limited to, physical and emotional pain, suffering, physical impairment, emotional distress, medical anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment, loss of companionship, services and consortium, and other nonpecuniary losses proximately caused by an individual's use of an illegal controlled substance. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(d)(2).)

(3) Exemplary damages. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(d)(3).)

(4) Reasonable attorneys' fees. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(d)(4).)

(5) Costs of suit, including, but not limited to, reasonable expenses for expert testimony. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(d)(5).)

An individual user plaintiff (see supra, §465) may recover only economic damages, attorneys' fees, and costs, and not noneconomic or exemplary damages. (Health & Saf.C. 11706(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

26 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

1. In General.

a. Recovery of Loss.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1690

[§ 1690] Recovery of Loss.

(1) Loss of Benefits. The theory of California's wrongful death statutes (C.C.P. 377.60 et seq.; supra, §1378) is that the heirs of the decedent may recover for the pecuniary loss of present and probable future benefits of any kind. These include (a) the present value of future contributions; (b) the value of any personal service, advice, or training that would probably have been given; (c) the value of the decedent's society and companionship. (See Bond v. United R. of San Francisco (1911) 159 C. 270, 274, 113 P. 366; Ure v. Maggio Bros. Co. (1938) 24 C.A.2d 490, 491, 75 P.2d 534; Vecchione v. Carlin (1980) 111 C.A.3d 351, 357, 168 C.R. 571, citing the text; Overly v. Ingalls Shipbuilding (1999) 74 C.A.4th 164, 176, 87 C.R.2d 626 [loss of decedent's financial support is what decedent probably would have earned during remainder of his or her life minus personal maintenance expenses and the amount that would have been spent on other things]; Rest.2d, Torts §925; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §186 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §3.21 et seq.; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 251 [damages in wrongful death or survival action]; 53 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [evaluation and settlement of wrongful death cases]; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 170, 174; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 166; 77 A.L.R.3d 1175 [proof of value of housewife's services in wrongful death action]; 42 A.L.R.5th 465 [wrongful death damages for loss of expectancy of inheritance]; BAJI, No. 14.51; CACI, No. 3921; infra, §1691 et seq.) (On pension, retirement income, or Social Security payments, etc., as affecting recovery, see 81 A.L.R.2d 949; 84 A.L.R.2d 764; on use of mortality tables to determine life expectancy, and annuity tables to arrive at present value of prospective pecuniary loss, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Hearsay, §294.)

The jury has a broad discretion, subject to the usual control where the award is plainly excessive or inadequate, to give an amount "that, under all the circumstances of the case, may be just." (C.C.P. 377.61; see Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co. (1910) 158 C. 412, 419, 111 P. 95; Amore v. Di Resta (1932) 125 C.A. 410, 414, 13 P.2d 986.)

(2) Funeral Expenses. Funeral expenses are recoverable by the survivor legally obligated to pay for them. (Adams v. Southern Pac. Co. (1935) 4 C.2d 731, 743, 53 P.2d 121; Wilson v. San Francisco (1951) 106 C.A.2d 440, 445, 235 P.2d 81.)

(3) Value of Household Services. The survivor can recover for the lost household services that would have been provided by the decedent. (McKinney v. California Portland Cement Co. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1214, 1227, 117 C.R.2d 849 [no need for surviving spouse to actually pay money to replace lost services].)

(4) No Recovery for Medical Expenses. Medical expenses for treatment of the decedent's injuries prior to death are not recoverable. (Gallup v. Sparks-Mundo Engineering Co. (1954) 43 C.2d 1, 10, 271 P.2d 34.)

(5) No Recovery for Suffering or Grief. There is no recovery for suffering or grief of the plaintiffs or of the decedent. (Clough v. Steen (1934) 3 C.A.2d 392, 394, 39 P.2d 889; Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 C.A.3d 512, 519, 196 C.R. 82, supra, §1380); Nelson v. Los Angeles (2003) 113 C.A.4th 783, 793, 6 C.R.3d 650; see Rest.2d, Torts §925, Comment e; 24 San Diego L. Rev. 1003 [Canavin].) (On recovery in some jurisdictions for grief or mental anguish resulting from death of child, see 45 A.L.R.4th 234; on effect of death of beneficiary, see 73 A.L.R.4th 441.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.84 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

27 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
B. Wrongful Death.
1. In General.

b. Value of Society and Companionship.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1691

[§ 1691] Value of Society and Companionship.

Recovery for the loss of society and companionship of the deceased is generally permitted to the extent that it has some pecuniary value. (Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co. (1910) 158 C. 412, 418, 111 P. 95; Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 C.3d 59, 68, 137 C.R. 863, 562 P.2d 1022; Griffey v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1922) 58 C.A. 509, 519, 209 P. 45; Williams v. McDowell (1939) 32 C.A.2d 49, 53, 89 P.2d 155; Duclos v. Tashjian (1939) 32 C.A.2d 444, 453, 90 P.2d 140 [married daughters, supported by husbands, were each properly awarded damages for loss of society, etc., of father, at $ 150 per year of his life expectancy]; Benwell v. Dean (1967) 249 C.A.2d 345, 349, 57 C.R. 394 [evidence of nature of personal relationship existing between decedent and heirs is admissible]; Fagerquist v. Western Sun Aviation (1987) 191 C.A.3d 709, 726, 236 C.R. 633, infra, §1694; Rufo v. Simpson (2001) 86 C.A.4th 573, 613, 103 C.R.2d 492 [as matter of law, it could not be said that $ 8.5 million award was excessive, where deceased was close to his father, although not to his mother, and award was made in aggregate; fact that $ 8.5 million was much larger than award ever given for loss and comfort from adult son living apart and independently does not prove passion or prejudice]; Knowles v. Superior Court (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1290, 1301, 13 C.R.3d 700 [mentally disabled son's belief that his father was still alive did not necessarily prevent him from establishing damages for loss of his father's companionship; citing Krouse and Fagerquist]; see Rest.2d, Torts §925, Comment b; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §3.29 et seq.; 61 A.L.R.4th 309 [adequacy of damages awarded for noneconomic loss resulting from injury or death of spouse]; cf. Carr v. Pacific Tel. Co. (1972) 26 C.A.3d 537, 545, 103 C.R. 120 [evidence of early moral indiscretions was too remote].)

Evidence of grief and sorrow is not relevant. However, evidence of loss of love, companionship, comfort, affection, society, solace, and moral support is relevant. (Hiser v. Bell Helicopter Textron (2003) 111 C.A.4th 640, 658, 4 C.R.3d 249.)

In Krouse v. Graham, supra, the court recognized that loss of society and companionship is essentially a nonpecuniary loss, but nevertheless permitted recovery. In an automobile collision resulting from defendant's admitted negligence, Mrs. K was killed and Mr. K was injured. Plaintiffs, Mr. K and five K children, brought this action for wrongful death and personal injuries. On the wrongful death cause of action Mr. K and the children received $ 300,000, to be divided by the trial judge. At the trial, plaintiffs introduced evidence showing that Mrs. K was a devoted mother and an active homemaker; also that, due to Mr. K's physical condition, she had the primary responsibility for maintaining the home and taking care of a dependent minor son. The jury was instructed that Mr. K could recover reasonable compensation for loss of his wife's "love, companionship, comfort, affection, society, solace or moral support, any loss of enjoyment of sexual relations, or any loss of her physical assistance in the operation or maintenance of the home." On appeal, defendant contended that this instruction improperly allowed recovery for "nonpecuniary" losses. Held, the instruction was proper.

(a) Development of California case law on "pecuniary" loss. The statute (now C.C.P. 377.61), as amended in 1872, removed the words "pecuniary or exemplary," and referred only to damages that may be "just" under all of the circumstances. But the cases developed the theory that damages were recoverable only for the "pecuniary" losses suffered. (19 C.3d 67.)

(b) Broad scope of "pecuniary" loss. The cases have not restricted recovery to the elements having ascertainable economic value, such as loss of household services or earning capacity. They have held admissible evidence of the closeness of the family unit (Griott v. Gamblin (1961) 194 C.A.2d 577, 578, 15 C.R. 228), the warmth of feeling between family members (Benwell v. Dean, supra), and the character of the deceased as "kind and attentive" or "kind and loving" (Cook v. Clay Street Hill R. Co. (1882) 60 C. 604, 609). Adult children have received substantial awards for the wrongful death of retired, elderly parents (Griott v. Gamblin, supra), and parents have received damages for the death of young children (Parsons v. Easton (1921) 184 C. 764, 773, 195 P. 419; Daggett v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1957) 48 C.2d 655, 666, 313 P.2d 557). (19 C.3d 68.)

(c) Improper elements and appropriate instruction. The cases indicate that the "pecuniary value" limitation is intended to exclude compensation for grief and sorrow attendant on the death of a loved one. But it is both unnecessary and unwise to require a pecuniary loss instruction solely to eliminate these improper elements. "To direct the jury, on the one hand, to limit plaintiff's recovery to pecuniary losses alone while also compensating the plaintiff for loss of such nonpecuniary factors as the society, comfort, care and protection of a decedent is calculated to mislead and invite confusion. Instead, a simple instruction excluding considerations of grief and sorrow in wrongful death actions will normally suffice." (19 C.3d 69.)

(d) Sea-Land Services case. The United States Supreme Court decision in Sea-Land Services v. Gaudet (1974) 414 U.S. 573, 94 S.Ct. 806, 39 L.Ed.2d 9, 2 Summary (10th) Workers' Compensation, §145, followed the weight of state court authority in recognizing the right to recover for loss of society in an admiralty case; and "[i]t is greatly persuasive with us that in doing so the Supreme Court interpreted the term 'society' as including 'a broad range of mutual benefits each family member receives from the others' continued existence, including love, affection, care, attention, companionship, comfort, and protection." (19 C.3d 70.)

(e) Analogy of personal injury case. The elements of recovery sought by plaintiff would be available as "consortium" damages in a personal injury action for a wife's injuries (see Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 C.3d 382, 115 C.R. 765, 525 P.2d 669, supra, §1679). (19 C.3d 70.) (See 24 San Diego L. Rev. 1003, 1007 [Krouse]; BAJI, No. 14.50; CACI, No. 3921.)

West's Key Number Digest, Death k.88

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

28 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

2. Death of Spouse and Parent.

a. Earnings of Husband and Father.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1692

[§ 1692] Earnings of Husband and Father.

(1) Present Value of Future Earnings. Where the decedent was a husband and father, the chief element is the present value of the earnings he would have contributed to the family during the period of his life expectancy. (Gilmore v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1930) 211 C. 192, 197, 295 P. 41; Shebley v. Peters (1921) 53 C.A. 288, 291, 293, 200 P. 364; Emery v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1946) 72 C.A.2d 821, 165 P.2d 695; Brown v. Boehm (1947) 78 C.A.2d 595, 602, 178 P.2d 49 [husband leaving widow and five adult children]; Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 303, 320, 239 P.2d 48; 48 A.L.R.4th 229 [retired persons]; see BAJI, No. 14.50; CACI, No. 3921.)

In Syah v. Johnson (1966) 247 C.A.2d 534, 55 C.R. 741, decedent, a paroled convict and compulsive gambler, had abandoned his wife and children, and his wife worked almost all their married life. Nevertheless, a $ 30,000 verdict was upheld on the following reasoning: He had been a good father and husband when not gambling; he had become reconciled with his wife on a promise to quit it; he had made substantial earnings during extended terms of employment before his imprisonment, and after his release he worked and gave the family substantial support; and his life expectancy was more than 30 years. (247 C.A.2d 547.)

In Canavin v. Pacific Southwest Airlines (1983) 148 C.A.3d 512, 196 C.R. 82, supra, §1380, plaintiff, 33, died in an airplane crash. In the wrongful death suit brought by his widow and three young children, the trial judge admitted evidence of decedent's after-tax earnings as a basis for assessment of damages for loss of future financial support. Held, this was error. (148 C.A.3d 539, citing Henniger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 872, 59 C.R. 76, and Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 151 C.R. 399, supra, §1679.)

(2) Widow's Remarriage Irrelevant. Where a widow sues for the death of her husband, the pecuniary loss, as in other death cases, is to be determined on the basis of conditions existing at the time of the decedent's death. The probability or even the fact of the widow's remarriage is not a basis for mitigation of her damages, for it is wholly a matter of speculation whether this would better her condition. Accordingly, evidence on the issue is irrelevant and should be excluded. (Wood v. Alves Service Trans. (1961) 191 C.A.2d 723, 728, 13 C.R. 114; Benwell v. Dean (1967) 249 C.A.2d 345, 356, 57 C.R. 394 [adding additional reason that defendant should not be allowed to profit by remarriage, just as he or she cannot profit by money coming to plaintiff from collateral source]; Cherrigan v. San Francisco (1968) 262 C.A.2d 643, 652, 69 C.R. 42 [holding also that trial judge properly denied motion to compel plaintiff widow to use her new husband's surname, which would have brought remarriage to jury's attention]; see 87 A.L.R.2d 252 [remarriage of surviving spouse, or possibility thereof, as affecting action for wrongful death of deceased spouse]; 88 A.L.R.3d 926 [admissibility of evidence of, or propriety of comment as to, plaintiff spouse's remarriage or possibility thereof].)

In Cavallaro v. Michelin Tire Corp. (1979) 96 C.A.3d 95, 157 C.R. 602, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §162, the court rejected the contention that Ev.C. 351, abolishing limitations on the admissibility of relevant evidence, called for a change in the exclusionary rule. The court declared that the true basis of the rule was public policy, and that its principal justification is similar to that of the collateral source rule (see supra, §1632). "Other reasons for the rule are that the mitigating effect of remarriage upon a spouse's loss from the death of his or her spouse is speculative and might necessitate trial of innumerable differences and similarities between the deceased spouse and the new spouse." (96 C.A.3d 108.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 1224, line 6 of second full paragraph, "Henniger v. Southern Pac. Co." should be "Henninger v. Southern Pac. Co."

29 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

2. Death of Spouse and Parent.

b. Services of Wife and Mother.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1693

[§ 1693] Services of Wife and Mother.

Where the deceased was a wife and mother, the important element is the value of her services in the home. (See Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1908) 154 C. 285, 297, 97 P. 520; Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co. (1910) 158 C. 412, 418, 111 P. 95; Lasater v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1945) 71 C.A.2d 217, 220, 162 P.2d 486 [wife, leaving husband and seven adult children]; Martin v. Mansfeldt (1950) 100 C.A.2d 327, 331, 223 P.2d 501 [wife leaving husband]; Burke v. San Francisco (1952) 111 C.A.2d 314, 322, 244 P.2d 708 [wife leaving husband, adult son, and daughter]; 47 A.L.R.4th 100 [death of homemaker]; 61 A.L.R.4th 309 [adequacy of damages awarded for noneconomic loss resulting from injury or death of spouse].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

30 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

2. Death of Spouse and Parent.

c. Child's Loss of Advice and Training.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1694

[§ 1694] Child's Loss of Advice and Training.

The death of a mother or father also causes a special loss to the children, who may recover the value of advice and services in their training and education. (Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street Ry. Co. (1895) 110 C. 277, 288, 42 P. 822, 1063 [mother]; Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1908) 154 C. 285, 297, 97 P. 520 [mother]; Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co. (1910) 158 C. 412, 418, 111 P. 95 [mother]; Tolley v. Engert (1925) 71 C.A. 442, 444, 235 P. 652 [father]; Sumrall v. Butler (1951) 102 C.A.2d 515, 521, 524, 227 P.2d 881 [death of father and mother; action by minor children]; 61 A.L.R.4th 251 [adequacy of damages awarded for noneconomic loss resulting from injury or death of parent].)

However, an adult child cannot recover in the absence of evidence showing either dependency or reasonable grounds for expecting some pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the decedent's life. (Parga v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1951) 103 C.A.2d 840, 845, 230 P.2d 364 [action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for death of father]; cf. Duclos v. Tashjian (1939) 32 C.A.2d 444, 453, 90 P.2d 140 [married daughters, supported by husbands, were each properly awarded damages for loss of society, etc., of father, at $ 150 per year of his life expectancy].)

In Fagerquist v. Western Sun Aviation (1987) 191 C.A.3d 709, 236 C.R. 633, plaintiff, a 10-year-old child born with severe brain damage, had a life expectancy of 69.7 years, the mental development of a 3-year-old child, and the communication skills of a 9-month-old child. The jury awarded her $ 1.5 million for the death of her father in a plane crash, even though, as a divorced parent, his financial support to plaintiff would not have exceeded $ 70,000 ($ 150 per month child support over plaintiff's life expectancy). Held, affirmed.

(a) There was substantial evidence showing that plaintiff and decedent had a special relationship: Decedent was the best at understanding and using the sign language by which plaintiff communicated; and, despite her handicaps, plaintiff enjoyed decedent's love and attention, responded meaningfully to his affection, was extremely happy when they were together, and was unable to obtain the same positive opportunities and experiences from her mother. (191 C.A.3d 727.) It was within the jury's discretion to place a pecuniary value on plaintiff's loss of support, comfort, love, and guidance as a result of decedent's death, and its evaluation was not so excessive as to raise a presumption that it resulted from passion or prejudice. (191 C.A.3d 728.)

(b) Defendant airline argued that plaintiff's mental retardation prevented her from appreciating decedent's love and companionship as fully as if she were normal, and hence necessitated the assignment of a lower value for her loss of society and companionship. However, it would not be unreasonable for the jury, which knew that plaintiff would remain "childlike" throughout her life, to have concluded that she would be more seriously damaged by the loss of her father than would a child who might compensate for such a loss by normal maturation. (191 C.A.3d 729.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

31 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

3. Death of Child.

a. Minor Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1695

[§ 1695] Minor Child.

Where the deceased was a minor child, recovery is based on the present value of reasonably probable future services and contributions, deducting the probable cost of rearing the child. (See Bond v. United R. of San Francisco (1911) 159 C. 270, 276, 113 P. 366; Fuentes v. Tucker (1947) 31 C.2d 1, 9, 187 P.2d 752; Peluso v. City Taxi Co. (1919) 41 C.A. 297, 300, 182 P. 808; Criss v. Angelus Hosp. Assn. of Los Angeles (1936) 13 C.A.2d 412, 420, 56 P.2d 1274; Hunton v. California Portland Cement Co. (1944) 64 C.A.2d 876, 882, 149 P.2d 471; Foerster v. Direito (1946) 75 C.A.2d 323, 332, 170 P.2d 986; Tyson v. Romey (1948) 88 C.A.2d 752, 756, 199 P.2d 721; Fields v. Riley (1969) 1 C.A.3d 308, 315, 81 C.R. 671, citing the text [prospective cost of child's support and education offset any pecuniary loss suffered by divorced father who rarely saw child]; cf. Zeller v. Reid (1940) 38 C.A.2d 622, 624, 101 P.2d 730 [verdict was excessive where there was no showing of substantial contributions by child]; 22A Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Death §241 et seq.; 49 Proof of Facts 2d 191 [damages for wrongful death of child]; 20 Am.Jur. Trials 513 [litigating damages for death or injury to child]; 25 Cal. L. Rev. 103; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 194; 14 A.L.R.2d 485 [damages for personal injury resulting in death of infant]; 49 A.L.R.3d 934 [death of minor]; 77 A.L.R.4th 411 [recovery for loss of consortium resulting from death of child]; 84 A.L.R.5th 687 [who, other than parent, may recover for loss of consortium on death of minor child]; BAJI, No. 14.52; CACI, No. 3922.)

In some jurisdictions, only the services during minority are considered, and this generally means that after deducting the expense of bringing up the child the recovery will be extremely small. Other jurisdictions, including California, include the probable contributions by the child after majority. (Bond v. United R. of San Francisco, supra.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

B. Wrongful Death.

3. Death of Child.

b. Adult Child.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1696

[§ 1696] Adult Child.

Where the deceased was an adult child, the award is for the present value of future services and contributions reasonably expected, considering the needs of the parents, the past conduct of the child, and the life expectancies of the parents. (See Parsons v. Easton (1921) 184 C. 764, 770, 195 P. 419; Griffey v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1922) 58 C.A. 509, 517, 209 P. 45; Ure v. Maggio Bros. Co. (1938) 24 C.A.2d 490, 492, 75 P.2d 534.)

In Riley v. California Erectors (1973) 36 C.A.3d 29, 32, 111 C.R. 459, decedent son had been living with his mother, a divorcee. At the time of his death, she was contemplating marriage with D, and married him 3 months later. Defendant sought to introduce evidence of the marriage in mitigation of damages. Held, the evidence was inadmissible. Although the precise question (marriage of a mother) was one of first impression, the principle followed in the analogous case of marriage of a spouse (see supra, §1692) was controlling. Damages are measured by the situation existing at the time of the act causing death, and are unaffected by events occurring thereafter. Hence, the defendant should no more profit by a subsequent marriage of the surviving spouse or mother than he or she should by money coming to the plaintiff from a collateral source (see supra, §1631). (36 C.A.3d 32.) (See 7 A.L.R.2d 1380 [effect of deceased child's marriage or its probability]; 69 A.L.R.3d 1038 [remarriage of surviving parent as affecting action for wrongful death of child]; 77 A.L.R.4th 411 [recovery for loss of consortium resulting from death of child].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
B. Wrongful Death.
4. Death of Other Relative.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1697

[§ 1697] Death of Other Relative.

Where the plaintiffs are merely collateral heirs, such as sisters or brothers, they are not, by reason of that fact alone, injured by the death of the decedent. Despite the fact that the statute gives them a right of action, they must prove an actual pecuniary loss of some kind or will be entitled to no more than nominal damages. (Burk v. Arcata & Mad River R. Co. (1899) 125 C. 364, 366, 57 P. 1065; see 42 A.L.R.5th 465 [wrongful death damages for loss of expectancy of inheritance from decedent].)

In Wilson v. San Francisco (1951) 106 C.A.2d 440, 235 P.2d 81, an action for death of a Catholic priest, his sister was awarded a $ 2,000 verdict (deducting funeral expenses, only $ 1,100 for pecuniary loss). In reversing the judgment for inadequacy, the court pointed out that the decedent had a 20-year and she an 18-year life expectancy; that she, as his sole beneficiary, would have received over $ 20,000 if his normal savings continued through that period; and that she, as his housekeeper and hostess, enjoyed a social relationship now absent in her job as a domestic servant. (106 C.A.2d 444.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

34 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
1. False Imprisonment.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1698

[§ 1698] False Imprisonment.

The plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment may recover as general damages the value of loss of time and any mental suffering or humiliation. (See Washington v. Farlice (1991) 1 C.A.4th 766, 774, 2 C.R.2d 607; Scofield v. Critical Air Medicine (1996) 45 C.A.4th 990, 1008, 52 C.R.2d 915, supra, §428; Rest.2d, Torts §924; 32 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), False Imprisonment §140 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §12.1 et seq.; 13 Proof of Facts 3d 111 [compensatory damages]; 48 A.L.R.4th 165 [damages for false imprisonment or arrest; excessiveness or inadequacy].)

As special damages, the plaintiff may recover for such matters as discomfort, injury to health, injury to reputation, or loss of job or opportunity for employment. (See Kenyon v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1927) 86 C.A. 269, 274, 260 P. 952 [publication of newspaper account of arrest was admissible to show damage]; cf. Salo v. Smith (1914) 25 C.A. 295, 299, 143 P. 322 [nominal damages only, where there was no showing of substantial damage].)

Another element of special damages is the reasonable expense (including counsel fees) of obtaining release from imprisonment. (Nelson v. Kellogg (1912) 162 C. 621, 623, 123 P. 1115; Neves v. Costa (1907) 5 C.A. 111, 121, 89 P. 860; see 21 A.L.R.3d 1068 [attorneys' fees as element of damages in action for false imprisonment or arrest, or for malicious prosecution].)

West's Key Number Digest, False Imprisonment k.32.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 32 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), False Imprisonment §135 et seq.

35 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
2. Malicious Prosecution.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1699

[§ 1699] Malicious Prosecution.

(1) Criminal Prosecution. A criminal prosecution implies a defamatory accusation of crime, and therefore the usual elements of damages in a defamation action may be shown: harm to reputation, emotional distress, expense incurred in defense, and pecuniary loss legally caused by the proceeding. (Rest.2d, Torts §§670, 671; see Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 254, 219 P.2d 928, supra, §476; Allard v. Church of Scientology (1976) 58 C.A.3d 439, 450, 129 C.R. 797 [damage to reputation can be presumed from a charge of theft resulting in arrest, followed by dismissal in interest of justice]; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §114 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §10.27 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 171; 50 A.L.R.4th 843 [excessiveness or inadequacy of damages for malicious prosecution]; on defamation, see infra, §§1701, 1702.)

(2) Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding. Where the tort is malicious institution of a civil proceeding, the harm resulting from interference with use of property, injury to reputation, emotional distress, and the expense of defense against the proceeding are elements of damages. (See Stevens v. Chisholm (1919) 179 C. 557, 563, 178 P. 128; Edwards v. Container Kraft Carton & Paper Supply Co. (1958) 161 C.A.2d 752, 758, 327 P.2d 622 [lost profits shown by sales records]; MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 293, 79 C.R. 707, supra, §488 [malicious institution of will contest, with false charges against plaintiff executor; damages properly included $ 123,052.91 that would have been received as probate and trustee fees, $ 10,000 general damages for injury to reputation and mental anguish, and $ 50,000 punitive damages]; Rest.2d, Torts §681; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §10.27 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 172; 21 A.L.R.3d 1068 [attorneys' fees].)

In Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §§491, 1554, the court upheld a large award of damages for malicious prosecution of a cross-complaint. The record showed that plaintiff paid substantial legal fees in defending against the cross-complaint; that the cross-action damaged his reputation in the business and entertainment industry; that he suffered trauma from the demand for recovery of past payments to him--which could have made him insolvent; that he was unemployed; and that his stock options and insurance benefits had been revoked. The jury could reasonably have inferred that the prosecution of the fabricated charges in the cross-complaint brought about substantial emotional distress. (13 C.3d 61, 62.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.65.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

36 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
3. Abuse of Process.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1700

[§ 1700] Abuse of Process.

The theory of damages for abuse of process is similar to that in malicious institution of a civil proceeding (supra, §1699), but the cases on this subject add little to the general principle of C.C. 3333 ("detriment proximately caused thereby"). (See Breznikar v. T.J. Topper Co. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 435, 438, 116 P.2d 176 [recovery of value of business, including good will, where business was destroyed]; Owens v. McManus (1952) 108 C.A.2d 557, 558, 239 P.2d 72 [malicious attachment; recovery of value of cancelled lease and punitive damages]; 1 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Abuse of Process §28; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §11.9 et seq.; 45 A.L.R.2d 1221 [value of use of property wrongfully attached]; 55 A.L.R.3d 911 [elements of damage resulting from wrongful execution against business property]; 83 A.L.R.3d 598 [mental anguish, distress, suffering, or the like, in action for wrongful attachment, garnishment, sequestration, or execution].)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.171

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 1 Am.Jur.2d. (2005 ed.), Abuse of Process §§27, 28.

37 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
4. Defamation.
a. General Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1701

[§ 1701] General Damages.

Where a libel or slander is actionable per se (see supra, §542 et seq.), general damages are recoverable for the injury to the reputation of the plaintiff. It is not necessary to prove affirmatively that the reputation was good, for this is presumed; and it is not necessary to trace any particular effect on that reputation, for the presumption is that it was substantially harmed, and the jury may award compensatory damages. (See C.C. 48a(4)(a); Scott v. Times-Mirror Co. (1919) 181 C. 345, 365, 184 P. 672; Behrendt v. Times-Mirror Co. (1938) 30 C.A.2d 77, 90, 85 P.2d 949; Rosenberg v. J.C. Penney Co. (1939) 30 C.A.2d 609, 619, 86 P.2d 696 [business reputation of merchant]; Weller v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 991, 1014, 283 C.R. 644 [jury can award damages for both proved and presumed injury to reputation]; Rest.2d, Torts §620 et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §374 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §8.8; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 169; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 934; 26 Pacific L. J. 933 [evaluating damages from harm to reputation]; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 225; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 364; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 504 [criticizing general damage award and proposing retraction-reply statute]; BAJI, Nos. 7.10, 7.10.1; CACI, No. 1700 et seq.)

Recovery is also allowed for humiliation and emotional distress. (C.C. 48a(4)(a); see Behrendt v. Times-Mirror Co., supra; Clay v. Lagiss (1956) 143 C.A.2d 441, 449, 299 P.2d 1025; Rest.2d, Torts §623; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 937; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 365.)

Where the retraction statute applies, general damages are not recoverable unless the plaintiff makes a proper demand in compliance with the statute. (C.C. 48a, supra, §630.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.5; Libel and Slander 116 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §357 et seq.

38 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
4. Defamation.
b. Special Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1702

[§ 1702] Special Damages.

"*'Special damages'*³⁵⁰ are all damages which plaintiff alleges and proves that he has suffered in respect to his property, business, trade, profession or occupation, including such amounts of money as the plaintiff alleges and proves he has expended as a result of the alleged libel, and no other." (C.C. 48a(4)(b).) The most important items are loss of a job or business opportunities. (See Adams v. Cameron (1915) 27 C.A. 625, 636, 150 P. 1005, 151 P. 286; Rest.2d, Torts §§575, 622, 622A; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §375; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §8.9; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 170; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 937, 939; BAJI, No. 7.11; CACI, No. 1700 et seq.; cf. Peabody v. Barham (1942) 52 C.A.2d 581, 585, 126 P.2d 668 [no recovery where items were not specifically pleaded].)

In O'Hara v. Storer Communications (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1101, 282 C.R. 712, the question was whether special damages under C.C. 48a could be established by evidence that plaintiff was rendered incapable of working by defendant broadcaster's slanderous statement that she was an alleged prostitute. One witness testified that his observation of some of the effects of the defamation on plaintiff, i.e., the shaking of her hands and lack of confidence, was one reason why he did not hire her for a sales position. Held, special damages were established.

(a) Under the specific language of C.C. 48a, a person's loss of employment due to obvious emotional instability is loss to "property, business, trade, profession or occupation." Here, this loss was established by evidence that at least one potential employer had decided not to hire plaintiff as a direct result of the effects of the defamation, and this evidence was corroborated by the testimony of four other witnesses who described plaintiff's distressed mental condition following the defamation. (231 C.A.3d 1114.)

(b) Defendant contended that the corroborating testimony was inadmissible because it merely presented evidence of general damages by describing the effects of the defamation on plaintiff's emotional stability. However, any such defect was cured by an instruction that evidence of plaintiff's hurt feelings, depression, and emotional distress was admitted solely for the purpose of showing that plaintiff was limited in her ability to work or was rendered incapable of working. (231 C.A.3d 1114.)

(c) The definition of special damages in C.C. 48a also includes money expended by plaintiff as a result of the alleged libel. Hence, bills incurred for plaintiff's treatment by a psychiatrist for posttraumatic stress syndrome were recoverable as special damages, even though they had not yet been paid. (231 C.A.3d 1116, footnote 6.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.5; Libel and Slander 118

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §358.

39 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
5. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1703

[§ 1703] Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

The distinction between defamation and disparagement of property (supra, §640) is that in actions for disparagement the liability is only for pecuniary loss, and the action cannot be used to vindicate reputation. (See Burkett v. Griffith (1891) 90 C. 532, 537, 27 P. 527; Rest.2d, Torts §633; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §548 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §8.44 et seq.; 4 A.L.R.4th 532 [what constitutes special damages in action for slander of title].) Hence, the elements of damage are:

(1) The loss or impairment of ability to sell, the measure being the difference between the normal price and the salable value or depressed sale price afterwards; or, where goods of the plaintiff have been generally disparaged, the amount of loss of business. (Gudger v. Manton (1943) 21 C.2d 537, 554, 134 P.2d 217 [real property]; Davis v. Wood (1943) 61 C.A.2d 788, 799, 143 P.2d 740; Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 864, 237 C.R. 282; Rest.2d, Torts §633(a).) It is not necessary to show that a particular pending deal was hampered or prevented; recovery may be had for the depreciation in market value of the property. (Davis v. Wood, supra; Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 412, 424, 89 C.R. 514.)

(2) The expense of litigation to protect a title from the disparaging charge; e.g., a quiet title suit to remove a cloud. In other words, although attorneys' fees in the main action are not a proper item of damages, those previously incurred in clearing the slandered title are recoverable as special damages (just as the cost of defending against a criminal prosecution is recoverable in a tort action for malicious prosecution). (See Wright v. Rogers (1959) 172 C.A.2d 349, 366, 342 P.2d 447 [expense of legal proceedings and damages for inconvenience and loss of time]; Contra Costa County Title Co. v. Waloff (1960) 184 C.A.2d 59, 67, 7 C.R. 358; Forte v. Nolfi (1972) 25 C.A.3d 656, 686, 102 C.R. 455; Rest.2d, Torts §633(b).)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.139

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §536 et seq.

40 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
6. Invasion of Privacy.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1704

[§ 1704] Invasion of Privacy.

The tort of invasion of privacy protects an interest similar to that protected by the law of defamation (see supra, §651). The elements are the harm to the interest in privacy, the mental distress suffered, and special damage caused by the invasion. (Rest.2d, Torts §652H.)

The principal element is general damages for injury to peace of mind and feelings. "That injury may be inferred by the trier of fact from the testimony with relation to the social status of the person libeled. This inference may be supplemented by the direct statement of the plaintiff to the effect that his feelings were injured." (Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equipment Co. (1955) 138 C.A.2d 82, 90, 291 P.2d 194; Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 1484, 1485, 1486, 232 C.R. 668, supra, §659; see 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §255 et seq.; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §9.17 et seq.; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 409; 14 A.L.R.2d 750, 773 [right of privacy]; BAJI, No. 7.26 et seq.; CACI, No. 1820 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Injury to peace of mind and feelings: See 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §256.

41 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
7. Causing Emotional Distress.
a. Instruction.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1705

[§ 1705] Instruction.

An approved instruction on pain and suffering and emotional distress informs the jury that the amount of the award must include reasonable compensation for pain, discomfort, fears, anxiety, and other emotional distress suffered by the plaintiff (and for similar suffering reasonably certain to be experienced in the future from the same cause). (See Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 397, 398, 89 C.R. 78, supra, §459; Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 C.3d 932, 953, 160 C.R. 141, 603 P.2d 58, supra, §461; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §6.40 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.88; CACI, No. 2350.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.48, 226

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

42 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
7. Causing Emotional Distress.
b. Underlying Tort.
1. Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1706

[§ 1706] Negligence.

In Gonzales v. Personal Storage (1997) 56 C.A.4th 464, 65 C.R.2d 473, plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant for the storage of valuable personal property. Plaintiff fell behind in her rent and, instead of sending her a preliminary lien notice and notice of lien sale, as required by law, defendant placed an advertisement for an auction in a local paper. Soon thereafter, an impostor, having been informed by the advertisement of plaintiff's name, her unit number, and a description of the stored property, appeared claiming to be plaintiff. The impostor paid the overdue rent and absconded with the property. Shortly thereafter, plaintiff brought her account up to date and, when inquiring about her payment, learned of the lost property. Plaintiff then sued on several causes of action and received judgment for negligence and conversion (see infra, §1707). The judgment included an award for pain and suffering, supported by evidence that loss of so many items of a personal nature caused plaintiff to suffer much emotional distress. Held, this part of the judgment was affirmed but not with respect to the negligence cause of action.

(a) In negligence cases of this type, one way that plaintiff, who did not suffer any personal injury and did not observe the injury of a loved one, could recover for pain and suffering was to show that defendant had assumed a duty to her in which her emotional condition was an object. However, defendant correctly pointed out that its landlord-tenant relationship with plaintiff did not give rise to any duty to protect plaintiff's emotional tranquility. Indeed, there was nothing in the conversations between the parties or in the lease itself indicating that defendant had assumed a duty to protect defendant from emotional distress. Moreover, this duty did not arise from defendant's duty to protect plaintiff's personal property. (56 C.A.4th 474.)

(b) Unless the defendant has assumed a duty to the plaintiff in which the emotional condition of the plaintiff is an object, recovery is available only if the emotional distress arises out of the defendant's breach of some other legal duty and the emotional distress is proximately caused by that breach of duty. However, with rare exceptions, the breach must threaten physical harm, not simply damage to property or financial interests, as here. Thus, were plaintiff's claims solely for negligence, she could not recover damages for pain and suffering. (56 C.A.4th 474.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

43 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
7. Causing Emotional Distress.
b. Underlying Tort.
2. Conversion.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1707

[§ 1707] Conversion.

Emotional distress damages are permitted as part of a conversion claim, even though the harm suffered is only economic. (Gonzales v. Personal Storage (1997) 56 C.A.4th 464, 475, 65 C.R.2d 473, supra, §1706.) This is so because the converter has direct knowledge of the likely consequences of the interference with the plaintiff's dominion over the property. In other words, although the converter can contend that he or she acted without knowledge of rightful ownership, he or she cannot claim ignorance of the potential emotional harm that the interference would cause. In contrast, the negligent destroyer of personal property has considerably less knowledge of the emotional consequences of his or her actions. (Gonzales v. Personal Storage, supra, 56 C.A.4th 477.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

44 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
C. Other Torts to Person, Reputation, and Similar Interests.
7. Causing Emotional Distress.
b. Underlying Tort.
3. Insurance Bad Faith.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1708

[§ 1708] Insurance Bad Faith.

(1) Financial Loss Is Required. To recover emotional distress damages in an insurance bad faith case, the insured must show financial loss. In Waters v. United Services Auto. Assn. (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1063, 1071, 1081, 48 C.R.2d 910, plaintiffs' house was damaged by fire. Defendant insurer, as required by its policy, paid the amount needed for restoration, but not until a long delay had occurred while the parties negotiated over the amount. Based on this delay, plaintiffs then sued defendant for bad faith. The parties agreed that in third-party bad faith cases, damages for emotional distress are recoverable only when the insured has suffered some financial loss. However, plaintiffs contended that, in first-party bad faith cases, such as this, evidence of delay in paying benefits was sufficient to sustain damages for emotional distress, and no evidence of actual financial loss was necessary. The trial judge agreed, awarding plaintiffs $ 1.375 million for emotional distress. Held, reversed; evidence of financial loss is necessary in both first- and third-party cases.

(a) A statement in Sprague v. Equifax (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1012, 213 C.R. 69, relied on by plaintiffs, lends some support to the position that actual damages are not necessary. However, in that case, financial loss was present, and the statement is taken out of context. (41 C.A.4th 1071.)

(b) Rest.2d, Torts §46, which allows emotional distress damages for extreme and outrageous conduct that intentionally or recklessly causes this distress, deals only with the separate tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress (see supra, §449 et seq.). It is not applicable to cases such as this, where emotional distress is an element of damages resulting from the invasion of some other interest. (41 C.A.4th 1073.)

(c) Gourley v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C.3d 121, 3 C.R.2d 666, 822 P.2d 374, supra, §1652, contains a statement to the effect that the "risk" of financial loss is sufficient to justify emotional distress damages. In other words, just the possibility that defendant had not paid the full amount claimed for the dwelling restoration would be sufficient. However, this statement is based on authority that does not support it. It is therefore mere surplusage that is not to be followed. (41 C.A.4th 1077.)

(d) Plaintiffs claim that attorneys' fees were incurred and that one of the plaintiffs was hospitalized, both as a result of the delay. However, the record contains no evidence to support either of these charges. Without this evidence, it is impossible to infer that they, in fact, existed. (41 C.A.4th 1081.)

(e) "We are not suggesting the Waters (or anyone else) must end up in the poorhouse before claiming emotional distress damages. Consistent with the existing cases, we are simply holding that some financial loss must be shown to reduce the risk of fictitious claims and those based simply on bad manners, and to avoid litigation over trivialities. Indeed, the ability to validate emotional distress damages is critical where, as here, the carrier's bad faith consists of delay in the form of continuing negotiations. While it is true that an insured bargains for prompt payment, not a right of action against the insurer, the insurer is not required to pay every claim presented to it. Besides the duty to deal fairly with the insured, the insurer also has a duty to its other policyholders and to the stockholders (if it is such a company) not to dissipate its reserves through the payment of meritless claims. Such a practice inevitably would prejudice the insurance-seeking public because of the necessity to increase rates, and would finally drive the insurer out of business. Indeed, analysis of the leading first party cases demonstrates that a rule has never been applied which holds under any circumstances that an insurer which refuses to pay benefits claimed to be due under the policy did so at its own risk. Clearly, both logic and good policy dictate that no such rule ever be applied in first party cases.' " (41 C.A.4th 1080.) (See BAJI, Nos. 12.92, 12.95 [recovery may be had in cases involving an insurer's bad faith failure to pay or to settle "all damages resulting from such conduct"].) (See Maxwell v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1446, 1449, 70 C.R.2d 866 [mere loss of use of money caused by delay in payment of judgment in underlying personal injury action did not constitute per se economic loss sufficient to allow recovery of emotional distress damages in third-party bad faith action].)

(2) Scope of Recovery. Once financial loss is shown, the insured may recover for all emotional distress proximately caused by the insurer's bad faith, regardless of whether the distress results from the financial loss. In Clayton v. United Services Auto. Assn. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1158, 63 C.R.2d 419, the appeal arose out of a bad faith action brought by plaintiff against his insurer based on defendant's conduct in attempting to settle, for a fraction of the policy limits, plaintiff's underinsurance claim for the death of his child in an automobile accident. Plaintiff recovered judgment for nearly $ 30,000 in compensatory damages, plus $ 400,000 for emotional distress. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendant contended that the trial judge erred in failing to instruct the jury that it could award emotional distress damages only if plaintiff's distress flowed from damages caused by defendant's conduct. Obviously, because plaintiff had recovered nearly $ 30,000 in compensatory damages, he had no financial loss caused by defendant. However, there is nothing in Waters v. United Services Auto. Assn., supra, requiring that actual damages be caused in this manner. Instead, the plaintiff in a bad faith case must prove some economic loss as a means of validating the seriousness of his or her emotional distress. Then, once economic loss is shown, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for all the emotional distress proximately caused by the insurer's bad faith without proving any causal link between the emotional distress and the financial loss. (54 C.A.4th 1160.)

(b) Here, even though plaintiff did not suffer financial hardship from nonpayment of his claim, his compensatory damages of nearly $ 30,000 served to validate the seriousness of his claim, and he was then entitled to recover for the emotional distress resulting from defendant's conduct. (54 C.A.4th 1162.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

45 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
D. Interference With Contract or Economic Advantage.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1709

[§ 1709] Interference With Contract or Economic Advantage.

The elements of damage for interference with a contract or prospective contractual relation are "(a) the pecuniary loss of the benefits of the contract or the prospective relation; (b) consequential losses for which the interference is a legal cause; and (c) emotional distress or actual harm to reputation, if they are reasonably to be expected to result from the interference." (Rest.2d, Torts §774A(1).) (See Ojala v. Bohlin (1960) 178 C.A.2d 292, 302, 2 C.R. 919 [unfair competition--injury to reputation]; Di Loreto v. Shumake (1995) 38 C.A.4th 35, 38, 45 C.R.2d 22 [claim that another attorney interfered with plaintiff attorney's prospective economic advantage with client was insufficient basis for award of damages for emotional distress; to justify those damages, conduct must be extreme and outrageous]; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §58 et seq.; 19 Hastings L. J. 1119 [inducement of breach of contract]; 8 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 302 [civil conspiracy and interference with contract]; 7 Santa Clara Lawyer 140 [interference with contractual relations]; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 283 [monetary awards for unfair competition]; BAJI, No. 7.89.)

If a wrongful act causes the loss of a business, its value may be determined by capitalizing the past profits. Thus, in Elsbach v. Mulligan (1943) 58 C.A.2d 354, 136 P.2d 651, defendant, by misrepresentations and threats, procured the cancellation of plaintiff's sales agencies and obtained them for himself. The court awarded damages consisting of plaintiff's average yearly profits ($ 6,000), capitalized on the basis of a 5-year purchase, or a total of $ 30,000. (58 C.A.2d 365.) (See Foster v. Keating (1953) 120 C.A.2d 435, 453, 261 P.2d 529 [following Elsbach]; 26 Proof of Facts 3d 119 [lost profits resulting from tortious injury to business].)

Where the plaintiff is unable to establish lost profits with certainty, recovery may be based on proof of the actual profits received by the defendant tortfeasor. (See Ramona Manor Convalescent Hosp. v. Care Enterprises (1986) 177 C.A.3d 1120, 1140, 225 C.R. 120; 5 A.L.R.4th 1276 [recovery based on tortfeasor's profits in action for procuring breach of contract].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

46 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.

1. Development of Out-of-Pocket Loss Rule.
a. Nature of Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1710

[§ 1710] Nature of Rule.

(1) Original Benefit of Bargain Rule. Many jurisdictions give the defrauded party the "benefit of his bargain" by making the recovery the difference between the actual value of the property and the value it would have had if it had been as represented. This was formerly the California rule. (See Hines v. Brode (1914) 168 C. 507, 510, 143 P. 729; George Cople Co. v. Hindes (1917) 34 C.A. 576, 580, 170 P. 155; Mitchell v. Tuttle (1929) 102 C.A. 16, 20, 282 P. 534; Roome v. Real Estate Inv. Co. (1933) 131 C.A. 496, 497, 21 P.2d 599; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §416 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Real Property Remedies and Damages 2d, §3.43 et seq.; 2 Cal. L. Rev. 333; 3 Cal. L. Rev. 152; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 173; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 168.)

(2) Out-of-Pocket Loss Rule. The other rule, followed by the Torts Restatement, allows the defrauded party only the difference between the value of what was given up and the value of that received; i.e., it makes up the plaintiff's "out-of-pocket loss," but does not award him or her the amount of anticipated profits from the bargain. (See Rest.2d, Torts §549.) This rule, with an additional provision for consequential damages, was established in California in 1935 by the enactment of C.C. 3343, which then read as follows: "One defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received, together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction." (See Feckenscher v. Gamble (1938) 12 C.2d 482, 499, 85 P.2d 885; Bagdasarian v. Gagnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 762, 192 P.2d 935; Eatwell v. Beck (1953) 41 C.2d 128, 131, 134, 257 P.2d 643; Jacobs v. Levin (1943) 58 C.A.2d Supp. 913, 916, 137 P.2d 500; Oldenburg v. Brody (1956) 139 C.A.2d 543, 556, 293 P.2d 844; Clar v. Board of Trade of San Francisco (1958) 164 C.A.2d 636, 645, 331 P.2d 89; Peskin v. Phinney (1960) 182 C.A.2d 632, 635, 6 C.R. 389; McCauley v. Dennis (1963) 220 C.A.2d 627, 631, 34 C.R. 90; McCue v. Bruce Enterprises (1964) 228 C.A.2d 21, 30, 39 C.R. 125; Michelson v. Camp (1999) 72 C.A.4th 955, 971, 85 C.R.2d 539; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §420 et seq.; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 356; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 173; 13 A.L.R.3d 875 [out of pocket or benefit of bargain as proper rule of damages for fraudulent representations inducing contract for transfer of property]; for revised statute, see infra, §1714.) (On damages for negligent misrepresentation, see Rest.2d, Torts §552B; on damages for innocent misrepresentation, see Rest.2d, Torts §552C.)

(3) Effect of Subsequent Developments. In Garrett v. Perry (1959) 53 C.2d 178, 346 P.2d 758, defendant vendor sold land to plaintiff on false representations of its fitness as a cattle ranch. The price was $ 700,000--$ 100,000 in cash and $ 600,000 in notes secured by deeds of trust. Plaintiff defaulted, the notes were foreclosed, and defendant vendor regained title. In this damage suit, the judge found that the market value at the time of sale was $ 530,000, and gave judgment for $ 170,000 ($ 700,000 less $ 530,000) plus consequential damages. Held, affirmed as modified to deduct $ 11,000.

Applying C.C. 3343 in the normal manner, damages were assessed by the judge on the basis of circumstances at the time the contract was made. At that time, plaintiff was liable for the entire purchase price of $ 700,000, and it appeared that he was defrauded to the extent of $ 170,000. But when the foreclosure took place without a deficiency judgment, plaintiff had actually parted only with the $ 100,000 downpayment and $ 59,000 on the notes. He was therefore only defrauded in the amount of $ 159,000, and the additional $ 11,000 was a windfall to which he was not entitled. If he had only paid $ 100,000, he would under the trial judge's theory receive a windfall of $ 70,000; i.e., the earlier the default the bigger the windfall. Hence, values are to be considered as of the time of the fraudulent transaction, but subsequent circumstances other than value may be effective to increase or reduce the damages recoverable. (53 C.2d 186.) (See Hahn v. Food Service Equipment Co. (1963) 220 C.A.2d 412, 416, 33 C.R. 851; Burkhous v. Phillips (1971) 18 C.A.3d 661, 665, 96 C.R. 197; Ford v. Cournale (1973) 36 C.A.3d 172, 184, 111 C.R. 334; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 325.)

(4) No Offset for Rental Value. In Sixta v. Ochsner (1960) 187 C.A.2d 485, 9 C.R. 617, plaintiff purchaser sued defendant vendor to rescind, and defendant cross-complained for damages for fraud against P, her vendor. Plaintiff was successful in rescinding, so defendant was left with the land; but defendant was also successful on her cross-complaint, being awarded the purchase price and consequential damages (infra, §1712). The difficult issue presented, however, was whether P, the original vendor, was entitled to an offset for the rental value of the property up to the time of suit. The court, reviewing the meager authority, concluded that if the cross-complainant had proceeded on the theory of rescission a court of equity could give the offset to avoid unjust enrichment; but that, in an action for damages, the legalistic view prevails that the defrauded purchaser is occupying the land as a matter of right and not as a tenant. (187 C.A.2d 491.)

(5) Exception for Sales of Goods. "Remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud include all remedies available under this division for nonfraudulent breach." (U.C.C. 2721.) The purpose of this provision is to give the defrauded buyer of goods the same remedies as those specified for breach of warranty, and therefore in a proper case to give him or her the benefit of the bargain. (See Official Comment; 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §§178, 203; Continental Airlines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 388, 431, 264 C.R. 779, quoting the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.59 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

47 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.
1. Development of Out-of-Pocket Loss Rule.
b. Value of Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1711

[§ 1711] Value of Property.

The principal factor in applying the measure of damages is the value of the property. (See Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp. (1944) 24 C.2d 290, 297, 149 P.2d 177 [value of stock]; Rest.2d, Torts §549.) The "actual value" referred to in C.C. 3343 is given its ordinary meaning of market value. (Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 753, 192 P.2d 935.) But where goods are bought for resale, the actual value is the net amount received on the resale (sales price minus the expenses of the sale), and not the gross sales price. (Clar v. Board of Trade of San Francisco (1958) 164 C.A.2d 636, 650, 331 P.2d 89.)

In the case of a false promise inducing a contract, damages are not limited to the difference between market price and purchase price at the time of purchase; recovery may be measured by market value as of the date the promise was breached, because that is the date when the damage occurred. (Glendale Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 101, 146, 135 C.R. 802.)

The out-of-pocket loss rule (see supra, §1710) may not be circumvented by extending the principle of consequential damages. Thus, in Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 275 P.2d 15, supra, §820, plaintiffs bought land for a building in reliance on negligent misrepresentations of defendant about soil conditions, and were compelled to pay over $ 3,000 more than anticipated for foundations. The court held, however, that if the lots were worth what they paid for them, they were not damaged even though they would not have bought if they had known the truth. The additional cost incurred was not caused by defendant's misinformation, but by the condition of the soil; they would have incurred the same costs if defendant had correctly reported the fill condition. And they did not prove that the extent of the fill made the lots unsuitable for the intended use or made the reasonable cost of the building exceed its value. (43 C.2d 491, 492.) (See Overgaard v. Johnson (1977) 68 C.A.3d 821, 827, 137 C.R. 412 [following Gagne]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 356 [critical note].)

Under the out-of-pocket loss rule, it is possible for the plaintiff to establish the elements of fraud and yet recover nothing. In other words, the limited damage rule often nullifies the effect of the modern liberal rule as to the plaintiff's right to rely on the defendant's representations (see supra, §813). The plaintiff, e.g., may, after considerable effort, conclude an apparently profitable real estate investment. However, if it turns out that the plaintiff has simply exchanged money for property equivalent in value (as determined by the jury or found by the trial court), the plaintiff cannot get damages; the only remedy is to rescind and get back the money. In Oliver v. Benton (1949) 92 C.A.2d 853, 208 P.2d

375, plaintiff bought real property in reliance on representations that rentals of $ 125 per month were being received; actually the rent was $ 77.50 per month. The trial court found that the purchase price paid ($ 19,500) did not exceed the actual value, and gave judgment for defendants. Held, this was proper. The difference in rent was not an element of damage to plaintiff. "The fact that he may anticipate more and be falsely led to expect it, or that he would have made a profit if the representation had been true, does not entitle him to recover for his disappointment in not receiving that which he was led to expect." (92 C.A.2d 856.)

In Jacobs v. Levin (1943) 58 C.A.2d Supp. 913, 137 P.2d 500, plaintiffs bought a home from defendants who fraudulently concealed a defective fireplace, which would cost $ 470 to fix. In a suit based on affirmance of the contract, the trial court found that the fair market value of the home was $ 550 more than plaintiffs paid. Held, they were not damaged and could recover nothing.

The rule also protects a builder who, either deliberately or without sufficient information, undervalues the cost of building a house on a cost plus basis. In McCauley v. Dennis (1963) 220 C.A.2d 627, 34 C.R. 90, plaintiff contractor agreed to build a home for defendant on a cost plus 10% fee basis, representing without sufficient information that the cost would be about $ 30,000. The house actually cost about $ 57,000, and its value was found to be about that amount. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover his fee, but limited to 10% of the amount he had represented that the house would cost, plus agreed extra work. Defendant was denied damages for the fraud, because he failed to show that he had paid more than the house was worth. (220 C.A.2d 634, 636.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

48 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.
1. Development of Out-of-Pocket Loss Rule.
c. Consequential Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1712

[§ 1712] Consequential Damages.

The original statute allowed the plaintiff to recover "any additional damage," i.e., consequential damages proximately resulting from reliance on the defendant's fraud. The phrase "any additional damage" was broadly interpreted to mean any loss arising from the transaction. Hence, the defrauded party could recover for any reasonable expenditures rendered fruitless because of the deceit. (See The Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co. (1912) 163 C. 561, 577, 126 P. 351; Campbell v. Birch (1942) 19 C.2d 778, 793, 122 P.2d 902; Hartong v. Partake (1968) 266 C.A.2d 942, 969, 72 C.R. 722; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §413; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 358; for specification in revised statute of kinds of consequential damages recoverable, see infra, §1714.)

In Williams v. Graham (1948) 83 C.A.2d 649, 189 P.2d 324, defendant, who had agreed to sell land to plaintiff, falsely representing that he had title, failed to convey. Plaintiff was allowed to recover his deposit and the amount of rent paid for other premises necessary in his business for a 6-month period. (83 C.A.2d 653.)

In Garrett v. Perry (1959) 53 C.2d 178, 346 P.2d 758, plaintiff operated a cattle ranch at a loss and incurred expenses for operation, care, and improvement; the total amount, $ 30,400, was properly awarded. (53 C.2d 186.)

In Sixta v. Ochsner (1960) 187 C.A.2d 485, 9 C.R. 617, where the location of land sold for $ 4,000 was misrepresented, the purchaser was awarded over $ 6,000 expended in improvements on the property. (187 C.A.2d 490.)

In Buist v. C. Dudley DeVelbiss Corp. (1960) 182 C.A.2d 325, 6 C.R. 259, plaintiff bought a house for $ 14,000 and spent $ 3,452.68 on improvements. The condition of the soil had been misrepresented, and the house was so damaged by subsequent settling that it had no value. Hence, plaintiff was allowed to recover the purchase price plus the cost of the improvements. (182 C.A.2d 334.) A concurring opinion suggests that this was in effect restitution, and that the court should have ordered a return of the property to defendant. (182 C.A.2d 335.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Green Wood Industrial Co. v. Forceman Int. Dev. Group (2007) 156 C.A.4th 766, 774, 67 C.R.3d 601 [$ 159,000 award of lost profits to buyer; middleman fraudulently induced by seller and others to pay for shipments of scrap metal that never existed; lost profits constituted consequential damages].

49 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.

1. Development of Out-of-Pocket Loss Rule.
 - d. Quasi-Contractual Recovery.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1713

[§ 1713] Quasi-Contractual Recovery.

The courts developed an exception to the statutory out-of-pocket loss rule (supra, §1710) by treating the action as one in quasi-contract rather than tort. In Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 C.2d 548, 203 P.2d 9, defendant, acting as the agent for plaintiff in the purchase of stock, bought shares privately at $ 17, and delivered them to plaintiff for $ 20, representing that he had procured them on the stock exchange at the higher price. In this action, defendant contended that plaintiff could recover nothing, because no showing was made as to the market value of the stock. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference between $ 17 and $ 20 on the shares purchased. Although defendant was guilty of fraud, the action was not for damages for deceit; it was a principal's action to recover secret profits made by an agent. The right of recovery is based upon duties incident to the agency relationship; a quasi-contractual obligation to pay the money to the principal exists, and the measure of damages set forth in C.C. 3343 for fraud with respect to property transactions is not a limitation. (33 C.2d 551.)

This theory was greatly extended in Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C.2d 736, 336 P.2d 534. Defendant T, a real estate broker, falsely represented to plaintiffs' agent that he was the exclusive agent for the sale of S's land, and that S would not sell for less than $ 5,000 per acre. Plaintiffs offered this sum, whereupon defendant purchased it from S for $ 4,000 per acre, using plaintiff's money to pay S, and concealing his secret profit by using an associate as the escrow holder. Held, judgment for recovery of the profit and exemplary damages affirmed.

(a) No damages could be recovered in tort under the out-of-pocket loss rule, for the evidence showed that the property was worth $ 5,000 an acre--what plaintiff paid for it. But C.C. 3343 expressly recognizes "any legal or equitable remedies" to which the defrauded person may be entitled, and general principles of equity and quasi-contract call for a remedy to prevent defendant's unjust enrichment at the expense of plaintiffs. Hence, defendant was held a constructive trustee for plaintiffs of the secret profit. (51 C.2d 741.)

(b) As to exemplary damages, defendant contended that, on the abandonment of the tort theory to avoid the restrictive measure of damages for fraud, the case was not a proper one for these damages. But the simple tort-contract line of demarcation is rejected as a test for the interpretation of "an obligation not arising from contract" (C.C. 3294). "Contract" in the statute means agreement, not a quasi-contractual obligation; and the fraud is not really "waived" in this kind of quasi-contract suit, but is rather the foundation of the fictitious implied-in-law promise. Hence, defendant's obligation "does not arise from contract but is imposed by law," and exemplary damages are not precluded by C.C. 3294. Moreover, these "damages are appropriate in cases like the present one, where restitution would have little or no deterrent effect, for wrongdoers would run no risk of liability to their victims beyond that of returning what they wrongfully obtained." (51 C.2d 743.) (For critical discussions of the holding and implications, see 48 Cal. L. Rev. 342; 11 Hastings L. J. 183; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 270; 7 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 147; 11 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 879; and see Walsh v. Hooker & Fay (1963) 212 C.A.2d 450, 458, 28 C.R. 16 [C.C. 3343 was not applicable where fraudulent agent of defendant stockbrokers misrepresented value of stock in selling it to plaintiff; fiduciary relationship exception]; Boyd v. Bevilacqua (1966) 247 C.A.2d 272, 294, 55 C.R. 610 [joint venturers conspired to deprive one of interest in real property development; fiduciary relationship exception applied, and fair market value of interest in joint venture was recovered]; Brockway v. Heilman (1967) 250 C.A.2d 807, 812, 58 C.R. 772 [false promise to transfer liquor license in sale of cafe]; on fiduciary exception, see infra, §1717.)

In Coleman v. Ladd Ford Co. (1963) 215 C.A.2d 90, 29 C.R. 832, defendant car dealer's salesman, to induce the sale of a new car, falsely represented to plaintiff that he had a buyer for her used car who would take over the obligation to pay the balance due. Plaintiff, relying on the representation, bought the new car. Thereafter, the finance company repossessed her old one and obtained a judgment against her for the unpaid balance. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the judgment, together with attorneys' fees and court costs incurred in defense of the finance company's action. Ward v. Taggart relaxed the rule of Bagdasarian v. Gagnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 753, 192 P.2d 935, supra, §1711, to the extent of recognizing reasonable exceptions to the exclusive measure of damages set forth in C.C. 3343, and that recovery in the instant case is proper under the Ward theory. (215 C.A.2d 93.) (See 11 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 876.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See San Bernardino v. Walsh (2007) 158 C.A.4th 533, 541, 69 C.R.3d 848 [in county's action to recover damages resulting from bribery scheme, disgorgement of profits from scheme was appropriate remedy under theory of unjust enrichment, even though public funds were not used to pay bribes; following Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C.2d 736, 336 P.2d 534, text, p. 1243].

50 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.
2. Statutory Expansion.
a. Elements of Damage.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1714

[§ 1714] Elements of Damage.

The 1971 Legislature revised C.C. 3343 to extend the recoverable damages.

(1) Difference in Value. C.C. 3343(a) carries over the original out-of-pocket loss provision (supra, §1710): "One defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received." (See Housley v. Poway (1993) 20 C.A.4th 801, 812, 813, 24 C.R.2d 554 [plaintiff was fraudulently induced to part with right-of-way and slope easement but received payment only for right-of-way; recoverable damages were out-of-pocket loss (value of land taken for slope), but not "all damages legally caused by misrepresentation," as instructed by trial judge]; Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1538, 1542, 50 C.R.2d 395 [use of term "actual damages" in C.C. 1102.13 (failure to disclose) means compensatory damages as measured by C.C. 3343(a); it was not attempt to reinstate benefit-of-the-bargain rule].)

(2) Additional Damage. The 1971 amendment adds to the general authorization of "any additional damage" a specific nonexclusive recital of certain kinds of consequential damages. (C.C. 3343(a).) (On background, purpose, and effect of amendment, see Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C.3d 718, 725, 150 C.R. 637, 586 P.2d 1228, infra, §1716; Channell v. Anthony (1976) 58 C.A.3d 290, 309, 312, 129 C.R. 704; Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 240, 244, 247, 137 C.R. 244; Cory v. Villa Properties (1986) 180 C.A.3d 592, 598, 225 C.R. 628, infra, §1716; 30 Hastings L. J. 475; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 347; for instructions, see Pepper v. Underwood (1975) 48 C.A.3d 698, 706, 122 C.R. 343; BAJI, No. 12.56; CACI, No. 1920 et seq.; for exception allowing recovery under "benefit of the bargain" rule where the fraudulent defendant stands in a fiduciary relationship, see infra, §1717.)

The defrauded person may recover any additional damage arising from the transaction, including the following:

(a) "Amounts actually and reasonably expended in reliance upon the fraud." (C.C. 3343(a)(1).)

(b) "An amount which would compensate the defrauded party for loss of use and enjoyment of the property to the extent that any such loss was proximately caused by the fraud." (C.C. 3343(a)(2).) (See Channell v. Anthony (1976) 58 C.A.3d 290, 316, 319, 129 C.R. 704.)

(c) "Where the defrauded party has been induced by reason of the fraud to sell or otherwise part with the property in question, an amount which will compensate him for profits or other gains which might reasonably have been earned by use of the property had he retained it." (C.C. 3343(a)(3).) (See Channell v. Anthony, supra, 58 C.A.3d 309.)

(d) Fraud on the purchaser. (C.C. 3343(a)(4), infra, §§1715, 1716.)

(3) Scope of Revision. The revised statute makes it clear that the extension is only in the area of consequential damages, and that the benefit of the bargain rule (see supra, §1710) is not revived. Nothing in the statute permits "the defrauded person to recover any amount measured by the difference between the value of the property as represented and the actual value thereof." (C.C. 3343(b)(1).) However, nothing in the statute denies "to any person having a cause of action for fraud and deceit any legal or equitable remedies to which such person may be entitled." (C.C. 3343(b)(2).) Thus, quasi-contractual recovery under the theory of Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C.2d 736, 336 P.2d 534, supra, §1713, is unaffected, and the benefit of the bargain may be recovered in actions by the defrauded buyer of goods under the Commercial Code rule (supra, §1710). (See Sprague v. Frank J. Sanders Lincoln Mercury (1981) 120 C.A.3d 412, 417, 174 C.R. 608 [car dealer repeatedly falsely represented that defects had been repaired; governing statutes were C.C. 1709 and 3333, which allow damages for mental distress and suffering, rather than C.C. 3343]; Croeni v. Goldstein (1994) 21 C.A.4th 754, 759, 760, 26 C.R.2d 412 [plaintiffs, who sought to enforce sale of business and obtain sale price from buyers, could not recover lost profits from them, but could seek them from buyer's officer under fraud theory; under C.C. 3343(b)(2) he remained liable under "any other legal or equitable remedies"].)

However, the provisions referring to "additional damages" and to "any legal and equitable remedies" do not permit recovery beyond the ordinary consequential damages; hence, an award for pain and suffering is improper. (O'Neil v. Spillane (1975) 45 C.A.3d 147, 159, 119 C.R. 245, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §317.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

51 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

- E. Fraud and Deceit.
 - 2. Statutory Expansion.
 - b. Fraud on Purchaser.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1715

[§ 1715] Fraud on Purchaser.

A defrauded purchaser who has been induced by reason of fraud to purchase or otherwise acquire property is entitled to the following: "[A]n amount which will compensate him for any loss of profits or other gains which were reasonably anticipated and would have been earned by him from the use or sale of the property had it possessed the characteristics fraudulently attributed to it by the party committing the fraud." (C.C. 3343(a)(4); see Storage Services v. Oosterbaan (1989) 214 C.A.3d 498, 510, 262 C.R. 689 ["otherwise acquire," as used in C.C. 3343(a)(4), included acquisition of title that entitled purchaser to property's fair market value, but not to its possession].)

Loss of these profits, however, is recoverable only if (1) the defrauded party acquired the property for the purpose of use or resale at a profit; (2) he or she reasonably relied on the fraud in entering into the transaction; and (3) in anticipating profits from the subsequent use or sale, and the loss of profits was proximately caused by the fraud and reliance on it. (C.C. 3343(a)(4); see Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 240, 247, 137 C.R. 244 ["Clearly and specifically, lost profits proximately caused are recoverable"]; Las Palmas Associates v. Las Palmas Center Associates (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1220, 1254, 1 C.R.2d 301 [in action based on sale of shopping center, buyers were entitled to recover lost profits resulting from defendant sellers' fraudulent promise to guarantee payment of certain leases].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

52 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

E. Fraud and Deceit.

2. Statutory Expansion.

c. Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1716

[§ 1716] Illustrations.

In Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C.3d 718, 150 C.R. 637, 586 P.2d 1228, defendant and his partners were sued for damages for fraud in the sale of a mobilehome park to plaintiff. The other partners settled, and after trial judgment was entered against defendant on a verdict for plaintiff for $ 92,200 damages, less $ 30,000 received in the settlements. Defendant contended on appeal that the trial judge committed prejudicial error in his instruction, adapted from C.C. 3343, by omitting the parts that precluded use of the "benefit-of-the-bargain" measure of damages. Held, there was no error, and substantial evidence of loss of profits and other consequential damages supported the verdict.

(a) Law prior to 1971 amendment of C.C. 3343. From the initial enactment of C.C. 3343 in 1935, California followed the minority out-of-pocket loss rule of compensation for loss sustained, rather than the benefit-of-the-bargain rule of satisfaction of contractual expectations. (22 C.3d 725.) But the courts fashioned relief appropriate to particular circumstances in which application of the strict rule would lead to injustice; e.g., in cases involving fiduciaries, additional damages consisting of expenditures of time and money, proof of anticipated profit in determining value of property received, and quasi-contract recovery for unjust enrichment. (22 C.3d 725; see supra, §§1712, 1713.)

(b) Amendment in 1971. The Legislature was aware of logical inconsistencies in the judicial application of C.C. 3343 and other statutes dealing with damages for fraud; e.g., recovery of lost profits under the general tort statute (C.C. 3333) in cases not involving purchase of property and under the general contract statute (C.C. 3300) in breach of contract cases involving purchase of property; and U.C.C. 2721, permitting benefit-of-the-bargain recovery in cases subject to the Commercial Code. (22 C.3d 726.) The amendment was an expansion of the former section's treatment of consequential ("additional") damages: (1) Existing case law was stated to cover damage arising from lost time and money reasonably expended in reliance. (2) Recovery of lost profits was authorized as a component of "additional" damage. The amendment emphasized that this expansion was not an adoption of the "benefit-of-the-bargain" standards (which would be applicable regardless of whether the property was profit-producing). (22 C.3d 727.)

(c) Application of amended statute. The instruction was correct under Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 240, 137 C.R. 244, supra, §1715, i.e., it is proper to instruct only on the part of C.C. 3343 dealing with consequential damages, when, as here, the plaintiff does not seek recovery of an out-of-pocket loss. "The statute awards damage for traditional 'out-of-pocket' loss together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction. ... If a plaintiff shows no traditional 'out-of-pocket' loss, that component of the award is zero. If, however, he goes on to show consequential or 'additional' damage of the type prescribed by the statute, the amount which he so demonstrates is recoverable." (22 C.3d 729.) (See Cory v. Villa Properties (1986) 180 C.A.3d 592, 601, 225 C.R. 628 [following Stout]; Continental Airlines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 388, 430, 431, 264 C.R. 779 [discussing Stout and U.C.C. 2721].)

In Kenly v. Ukegawa (1993) 16 C.A.4th 49, 19 C.R.2d 771, defendant owned property encumbered by a note that was in default. To preclude a foreclosure that would harm his credit rating, defendant agreed to sell the property to plaintiff for the amount of the note. With borrowed funds, plaintiff purchased the note, but later learned that defendant was attempting to sell the property to another person. Plaintiff then instituted this action for fraud. Although defendant eventually paid plaintiff the full amount due on the note, the trial judge found that fraud had been committed, and awarded plaintiff damages of $ 800,000, i.e., the lost profits that he would have obtained had defendant honored the agreement to sell the property to him. Held, this was error.

(a) Plaintiff cites no California authority holding that lost profits may be awarded to a defrauded party who never acquired the property to be resold. And the cases involving fraud where property was not acquired have limited damages to out-of-pocket losses. (16 C.A.4th 54, citing Gray v. Don Miller & Associates (1984) 35 C.3d 498, 198 C.R. 551, 674 P.2d 253, and Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 C.A.3d 780, 231 C.R. 72, supra, §820.) These cases are consistent with the rule that a plaintiff in a tort action is not to be placed in a better position than he would have been had the wrong not been done. (16 C.A.4th 55.)

(b) C.C. 3343(a)(4) limits the recovery of lost profits to persons who have been fraudulently induced to "purchase or otherwise acquire the property in question." This language clearly contemplates that the person actually acquire the property from which profits were to be realized. Here, that property was the farm, which was never acquired by plaintiff. (16 C.A.4th 55, distinguishing Hartman v. Shell Oil Co., supra, on the ground that the franchise in question was actually acquired by the defrauded party.)

(c) Plaintiff's argument that it was proper to award lost profits because the purchase of the note was the first step toward acquiring the farm is without merit. This theory requires that the multiple references to "property" in C.C. 3343(a)(4) be interpreted as referring to different properties. For example, in this case the property "acquired" would be the note, while the "profitable" property would be the farm. This does not accord with the limits specified in C.C. 3343(a)(4). (16 C.A.4th 55.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

53 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
E. Fraud and Deceit.
3. Breach of Fiduciary Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1717

[§ 1717] Breach of Fiduciary Duty.

Another exception to the statutory out-of-pocket loss rule (see supra, §1710) is recognized where the fraud is not by the vendor or purchaser but by a fiduciary; in this situation the general tort measure of C.C. 3333 (supra, §1548 et seq.) applies, and the defrauded party is entitled to compensation for the full amount of the loss caused by the breach of fiduciary duty.

In Pepitone v. Russo (1976) 64 C.A.3d 685, 688, 134 C.R. 709, plaintiff exchanged her real property for a motel owned by G. Defendant real estate broker drafted the exchange agreement and handled the transaction, without disclosing the fact that a second trust deed encumbering the motel had an acceleration clause. As a result, plaintiff lost the motel at a foreclosure sale, and sued defendant for damages for breach of fiduciary duty. The trial judge applied the out-of-pocket loss rule. Held, this was error.

(a) In cases of breach of fiduciary duty, the tort measure of damages under C.C. 3333 is similar to the contract measure under C.C. 3300 (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §871); i.e., the injured party should be given the benefit of his or her bargain. (64 C.A.3d 689.)

(b) Applying this rule, plaintiff sustained a loss equal to the fair market value of the motel, plus the expenditures incurred in efforts to prevent the foreclosure. (64 C.A.3d 689.) (See Overgaard v. Johnson (1977) 68 C.A.3d 821, 824, 137 C.R. 412; Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 C.A.3d 1, 25, 147 C.R. 655; BAJI, No. 12.57; CACI, No. 1924.)

In Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 555, 29 C.R.2d 463, plaintiffs informed their agent that they wished to buy property that could be subdivided. Their agent found a parcel that he assured them was more than an acre in size and could therefore be subdivided. In fact, the lot was less than an acre and almost certainly could not be subdivided. Plaintiffs brought the present action for negligent misrepresentation against the agent's employer. The trial judge found that the agent had breached his fiduciary duty to plaintiffs and committed constructive fraud. The judge determined damages under C.C. 3333 by comparing the value of the property plaintiffs received and the value of the property they would have received if the agent's representations had been accurate. Held, this was proper.

(a) In actions involving fiduciary fraud, some commentators have recognized a split of authority as to the proper measure of damages. One explanation for the split is that "benefit of the bargain" damages are awarded where the principal sues the agent for fraud, and "out of pocket" damages are awarded where the theory is negligent misrepresentation. The result should not depend on mere pleading differences such as these, and the broader measure of damages is the fairer one. "This division has consistently applied the broader measure of damages for fiduciary fraud, refusing to limit damages to the 'out of pocket' measure." (24 C.A.4th 566, 567, citing Ford v. Cournale (1973) 36 C.A.3d 172, 111 C.R. 334, supra, §1710, Pepitone v. Russo, supra, and Walsh v. Hooker & Fay (1963) 212 C.A.2d 450, 458, 28 C.R. 16 supra, §1713.)

(b) The trial judge properly followed this approach, awarding plaintiffs the difference between the fair market value of comparable property that could be subdivided and the value of the subject property with only the remote possibility that a variance could be obtained in the future to allow subdivision. This compensated plaintiffs for any and all detriment proximately caused by the breach of fiduciary duty. (24 C.A.4th 561, 568.)

(c) The trial judge was also correct to use the date of discovery of the fraud to calculate "benefit of the bargain" damages. "Applying the difference as of the date of the transaction would defeat the goal of compensation for the entire loss where, as here, discovery of the fiduciary's constructive fraud did not occur until years after purchase of the property." (24 C.A.4th 568.) (For case holding that damages resulting from a fiduciary's negligent misrepresentation are measured by the out-of-pocket loss rule, see Hensley v. McSweeney (2001) 90 C.A.4th 1081, 1084, 109 C.R.2d 489 [following Overgaard, and disagreeing with Salahutdin, supra].)

Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 C.A.4th 229, 1 C.R.3d 616, disagreed with Hensley and agreed with Salahutdin. Plaintiff buyers sued defendant seller and defendant broker for negligent and intentional misrepresentation in connection with the sale of a house, alleging that, contrary to what they had been told, serious defects existed with respect to additions to the house. At trial, the evidence showed that, while plaintiffs knew that the additions were constructed without permits, they were misled into believing that any defects were not serious. Defendant broker then moved for nonsuit on the ground that plaintiffs had not proved diminution of property caused by the defects, as required by the out-of-pocket-loss rule of C.C. 3343. The trial judge agreed, but nevertheless denied the motion and allowed the case to go to the jury on the cost of repairs. After the jury returned special verdicts against both defendants, finding them liable for negligent and intentional misrepresentation, the trial judge granted defendant broker's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and entered judgment for defendants. Held, affirmed except with respect to the claim against defendant broker for intentional misrepresentation.

(a) In fraud cases involving the purchase of property, the out-of-pocket measure of damages stated in C.C. 3343 generally applies. However, in the case of fraud by a fiduciary, the broader measure provided by C.C. 3333 applies, i.e., all the detriment proximately caused by the tort. (110 C.A.4th 235, citing Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C.4th 1226, 44 C.R.2d 352, 900 P.2d 601, 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §176.) Here, defendant broker, as agent for both plaintiffs and defendant seller, was a fiduciary. However, because no fiduciary relationship existed between plaintiffs and defendant seller, plaintiffs' damages against this defendant were measured by C.C. 3343, and because plaintiffs produced no evidence of the actual value of the property they received, they failed to establish an essential element of their cause of action. (110 C.A.4th 235.)

(b) Under C.C. 3333, a plaintiff is only entitled to its actual or out-of-pocket losses suffered because of a fiduciary's negligent misrepresentation, and thus plaintiffs' claim against defendant broker for this tort suffered from the same defect as the claim against defendant seller. However, the California Supreme Court has not yet decided whether the measure of damages under C.C. 3333 might be greater for a fiduciary's intentional misrepresentation. Under the principles enunciated in C.C. 3333 (all the detriment proximately caused) and in C.C. 1709 (wilful deceiver is liable for any damage caused), the measure of damages in a case of intentional misrepresentation by a fiduciary is not limited to out-of-pocket losses. (110 C.A.4th 236.) Thus, the trial judge was not required to penalize plaintiffs for failing to establish the difference between the amount that they paid for the house and what it was worth in its non-code compliant condition. (110 C.A.4th 236.)

(c) Here, the jury's award of $ 19,000 against defendant broker was presumably based on evidence about cost of repair, and this award effectively enabled plaintiffs to place the property in the condition that they believed existed at the time of purchase. As such, it compensated plaintiffs for the detriment proximately caused, as permitted by C.C. 3333. Moreover, any significant difference between plaintiffs' out-of-pocket loss and the cost of repairs is unlikely in this case. Accordingly, the trial judge erred in entering judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the claim against defendant broker for intentional misrepresentation. (110 C.A.4th 239.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Strebel v. Brenlar Inv. (2006) 135 C.A.4th 740, 745, 37 C.R.3d 699 [in prospective buyer's action against fiduciary for fraudulent concealment of information that prevented prospective purchase from being completed, out-of-pocket loss rule was inapplicable; instead, plaintiff was entitled to damages based on amount of appreciation of his existing house, which he sold prematurely].

54 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
1. Injury.
a. Alternative Measures.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1718

[§ 1718] Alternative Measures.

(1) Depreciation and Loss of Use. Where personal property is injured but not wholly destroyed, one rule is that the plaintiff may recover the depreciation in value (the measure being the difference between the value immediately before and after the injury), and compensation for the loss of use. (See Crain v. Sumida (1922) 59 C.A. 590, 597, 211 P. 479 [value of loss of use may be established by evidence of rental value of property]; Hand Electronics v. Snowline Joint Unified School Dist. (1994) 21 C.A.4th 862, 870, 26 C.R.2d 446, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §103, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §928; C.E.B., Tort Damages 2d, §13.1 et seq.; C.E.B., California Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §5.33; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 160; BAJI, Nos. 14.20, 14.22; CACI, Nos. 3903J, 3903M.) (On injury to livestock, see 79 A.L.R.2d 677; on injury to dog, see 61 A.L.R.5th 635; on injury to cat, see 8 A.L.R.4th 1287; on damage to motor vehicle, see 18 Proof of Facts 3d 239; on property damages generally, see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§279, 282 et seq.; 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages].)

(2) Cost of Repairs and Loss of Use. The plaintiff may also elect to repair the property, and recover the reasonable cost of repairs and the value of the loss of use while repairs are being made with due diligence. (See Valencia v. Shell Oil Co. (1944) 23 C.2d 840, 844, 147 P.2d 558; Pfingsten v. Westenhaver (1952) 39 C.2d 12, 23, 244 P.2d 395; Rhodes v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1921) 51 C.A. 569, 573, 197 P. 392; Konda v. Frumpkin (1928) 90 C.A. 384, 386, 265 P. 955; Tremeroli v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co. (1951) 102 C.A.2d 464, 480, 227 P.2d 923; Johnson v. Central Aviation Corp. (1951) 103 C.A.2d 102, 108, 229 P.2d 114; Rest.2d, Torts §928; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 160; cf. 64 Harv. L. Rev. 336 [no recovery for loss of use caused by plaintiff's inability to pay repair bill].)

Ordinarily, a plaintiff who elects to repair cannot recover both the cost of repairs and the depreciation in value; this is on the supposition that the repairs have restored the original value. But if this is not so, the requirement of election does not apply. Thus, in Merchant Shippers Assn. v. Kellogg Express & Draying Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 594, 170 P.2d 923, new precision machinery was damaged. The evidence showed that though repairs would put it in working order, it would be considered "secondhand" and would be difficult to sell in a limited market. Held, it was proper to award not only the cost of repairs, but the difference between its value before the injury and after the repairs were made. (28 C.2d 600.)

Although normally the period of loss of use is that reasonably required for making the repairs, a longer time is sometimes allowed; e.g., where there was delay pending the arrival of new parts (Lyle v. Seller (1924) 70 C.A. 300, 302, 233 P. 345), and where the plaintiff was financially unable to make repairs (Valencia v. Shell Oil Co., supra, 23 C.2d 846).

(3) Special Damages. Special damages may also be shown. (See Lyle v. Seller (1924) 70 C.A. 300, 302, 233 P. 345 [wages paid chauffeur, without benefit, while automobile was awaiting repairs].)

In Johnson v. Central Aviation Corp. (1951) 103 C.A.2d 102, 229 P.2d 114, plaintiffs' airplane was damaged by a student pilot. In addition to seeking the usual loss of use, they alleged that, prior to the collision, they had agreed to sell the plane, which cost them $ 20,000, for $ 27,500, and that they were damaged in the sum of $ 7,500 lost profits. Held, it was error to strike out this allegation. "There is nothing necessarily inconsistent with a claim for damages for loss of use of the plane and a claim for loss of profits upon sale, since both elements of damage might, in a proper case, if the proof warranted, be allowable. Thus, the time for delivery of the plane under the sale might be far enough in the future to enable the owner to use the plane for his own purposes for a period of time before being obligated to deliver it to the buyer in accordance with his selling agreement." (103 C.A.2d 106.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.5, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Depreciation and Loss of Use.

Hand Electronics case:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §94.

55 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
1. Injury.
b. Where One Measure Is Larger.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1719

[§ 1719] Where One Measure Is Larger.

A problem arises where one of the above mentioned alternative methods (supra, §1718) would result in a larger recovery than if the other rule were applied. It is apparently the California rule that, if the cost of repairs would amount to more than the depreciation in value, the plaintiff cannot obtain a greater sum than the amount of this depreciation. The burden is on the defendant, however, to show that the plaintiff's measure would result in the excess recovery. (See Rhodes v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1921) 51 C.A. 569, 574, 197 P. 392; Konda v. Frumpkin (1928) 90 C.A. 384, 385, 265 P. 955; cf. contrary statement in Rest.2d, Torts §928, Comment a.)

Similarly, it has been held that where the depreciation would be greater than the cost of repairs, the damages are limited to the reasonable cost of the repairs. (Menefee v. Raisch Imp. Co. (1926) 78 C.A. 785, 788, 248 P. 1031; Olds & Stoller v. Seifert (1927) 81 C.A. 423, 427, 254 P. 289; see Byrne v. Western Pipe & Steel Co. of Calif. (1927) 81 C.A. 270, 273, 253 P. 776.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

56 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
2. Destruction.
a. Market Value.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1720

[§ 1720] Market Value.

(1) In General. If the property is wholly destroyed, the usual measure of damages is its market value. (See Murray v. Southern Pac. Co. (1931) 112 C.A. 150, 155, 296 P. 667; Tatone v. Bing (1936) 12 C.A.2d 543, 544, 55 P.2d 933 [vegetables and fruit, testimony about cost admitted]; Lane v. Spurgeon (1950) 100 C.A.2d 460, 463, 223 P.2d 889; Parks v. Atwood Crop Dusters (1953) 118 C.A.2d 368, 373, 257 P.2d 653 [cotton crop]; Hand Electronics v. Snowline Joint Unified School Dist. (1994) 21 C.A.4th 862, 870, 26 C.R.2d 446, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §103, quoting the text [market value was proper measure of damages where pantographs (used for making printed circuit boards) were rendered unrepairable in traffic accident; C.C. 1431.2 (supra, §§53, 61, 62) applies only to allocation of damages, and thus did not affect measure of damages]; Rest.2d, Torts §927; see 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §282; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 125, 159; 32 A.L.R.2d 910 [perishable goods]; 9 A.L.R.4th 1245 [loss, destruction, or conversion of personal papers, photographs, or paintings]; BAJI, No. 14.21; CACI, No. 3903K; on destruction of livestock, see 79 A.L.R.2d 677; on killing of dog, see 1 A.L.R.3d 997.)

In Pelletier v. Eisenberg (1986) 177 C.A.3d 558, 223 C.R. 84, citing the text, plaintiff artist sued defendant art gallery owners for losses suffered by destruction of consigned paintings, and received a verdict for their fair market value. Defendants contended that the 40% commission payable under the consignment contract on sale of paintings should have been deducted. Held, plaintiff was entitled to the entire amount. The parties agreed to a commission if the paintings were sold, not if they were destroyed; and plaintiff would not be compensated for his loss if he had to pay for something he never acquired (benefits from the sale of his paintings), and which defendants never earned (a commission for sale of the paintings). (177 C.A.3d 567.)

(2) Value to Owner. Where the market value is relatively small as compared with its special value to the owner, the value to the owner may sometimes be recovered, and resort may be had to this evidence as the value of time spent in producing it. This exception is applied, e.g., to books and manuscripts. (See Willard v. Valley Gas & Fuel Co. (1915) 171 C. 9, 14, 151 P. 286; Rest.2d, Torts §911, Comment e; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§287, 291 et seq., 721; 3 Proof of Facts 3d 171 [damages]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 126.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.105, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Hand Electronics case:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §94.

57 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
2. Destruction.
b. Loss of Use.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1721

[§ 1721] Loss of Use.

Where property is injured, recovery is allowed for loss of use during the time required for repairs (see supra, §1718). Where it is totally destroyed, there is authority denying recovery for loss of use, chiefly on the common law theory that destruction changes the plaintiff's right from one of ownership to a claim for the value. (See 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 451.) However, in Reynolds v. Bank of America (1959) 53 C.2d 49, 345 P.2d 926, the court disapproved prior dicta and followed the Restatement in rejecting this limitation. Defendant's testator had negligently destroyed plaintiff's airplane. Recovery of its value, $ 30,000, was allowed by the trial judge, but value of its use for the 4-month period required to find a replacement, and loss of business profits for this period, was denied. Held, reversed.

"There appears to be no logical or practical reason why a distinction should be drawn between cases in which the property is totally destroyed and those in which it has been injured but is repairable, and we have concluded that when the owner of a negligently destroyed commercial vehicle has suffered injury by being deprived of the use of the vehicle during the period required for replacement, he is entitled, upon proper pleading and proof, to recover for loss of use in order to 'compensate for all the detriment proximately caused' by the wrongful destruction." (53 C.2d 50.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §927(2)(d); 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§296, 297; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 451 [pointing out that speculative recovery can be avoided by strict insistence on minimizing damages]; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 311 [admiralty collision cases]; 73 A.L.R.2d 719 [measure of damages for destruction or injury to airplane]; 18 A.L.R.3d 497 [recovery for loss of use of motor vehicle damaged or destroyed].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.105, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Metz v. Soares (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1250, 1255, 48 C.R.3d 743 [classic car owner, whose car was rendered total loss when exposed to elements while at repair shop, was not entitled to loss of use damages in absence of proof that he used classic car; owner had not used car for 5 years before leaving car at shop, and he did not establish that he intended to use it during 4 years that it was at shop]; 32 Western State L. Rev. 141 [damages for loss of companion animal].

58 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
3. Conversion.
a. Alternative Measures.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1722

[§ 1722] Alternative Measures.

Where the property is taken, and the action is brought for conversion, the basic recovery is for the value of the property with interest. But the difficult question in conversion is the time as of which the value is to be determined. The plaintiff may recover either (1) the value of the property at the time of conversion, with interest from that time, or (2) "an amount sufficient to indemnify the party injured for the loss which is the natural, reasonable and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of and which a proper degree of prudence on his part would not have averted." In addition to either of these, the plaintiff may also receive a fair compensation for the time and money properly expended in pursuit of the property. (C.C. 3336; see Friedman v. Renz (1939) 31 C.A.2d 71, 73, 87 P.2d 386 [shares of stock]; Chatterton v. Boone (1947) 81 C.A.2d 943, 947, 185 P.2d 610; Stroman v. Lynch (1949) 91 C.A.2d 406, 408, 205 P.2d 409; Wong v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis (1962) 208 C.A.2d 17, 20, 24 C.R. 821; Krueger v. Bank of America (1983) 145 C.A.3d 204, 215, 193 C.R. 322, quoting the text [proper measure is value where plaintiff fails to establish existence of special circumstances to invoke alternative]; Lueter v. California (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1285, 1301, 115 C.R.2d 68 [award of $ 1.50 for conversion was approved where there was only remote possibility that destroyed evidence would have been usable in litigation; C.C. 3333 (supra, §1548) and C.C. 3336 were not applicable under these facts]; Rest.2d, Torts §927; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §116 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 127, 158.) (On conversion of secured note, see infra, §1723; on conversion of livestock, see 79 A.L.R.2d 677; on conversion of corporate stock, see 31 A.L.R.3d 1286; on conversion of wearing apparel or household goods, see 34 A.L.R.3d 816; on right of nonowner with special interest to recover full value of property converted, see supra, §706.)

Expenses incurred in preparation for litigation rather than in pursuit of property are not recoverable. (See Haines v. Parra (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1553, 1559, 239 C.R. 178.) However, C.C. 3336 extends to efforts related to, but having a purpose independent of, litigation, such as preparation of lists of property, inspection of inventories, and contacts with police. (Gladstone v. Hillel (1988) 203 C.A.3d 977, 992, 250 C.R. 372.)

Although the first and specific statutory alternative--the value with interest--is the typical measure, the other general alternative is sometimes applied. In Wade v. Markwell & Co. (1953) 118 C.A.2d 410, 258 P.2d 497, an action for conversion of a fur coat, the court considered the cost, extent of use, and depreciation formula (estimated life 8 years) in determining the award. (118 C.A.2d 432.) In Ruiz v. Bank of America (1955) 135 C.A.2d Supp. 860, 287 P.2d 409, plaintiff, the conditional buyer of a car, was induced by defendant seller to have repairs made, after which the seller refused to return it. Because plaintiff was not the complete owner but had an interest in the car, its value could be repaid to him by applying the general alternative measure. (135 C.A.2d Supp. 864.) In Myers v. Stephens (1965) 233 C.A.2d 104, 43 C.R. 420, plaintiff was engaged in the business of buying houses to move, relocate, and resell. Defendant sold him an old house for a nominal sum ($ 250) in order to get rid of it; then defendant resold to another. The first measure (value of the property) would have been wholly inadequate, for plaintiff had investigated locations and had agreed to buy a lot, and would have made an ascertainable profit had the deal gone through. Hence, he was entitled, under the alternative measure, to loss of profits--$ 3,040. (233 C.A.2d 116.)

Where timber is taken, "damage should be determined on the basis of market value, less the reasonable and necessary cost of marketing, the same as with annual crops, i.e., the expense of harvesting, cutting, hauling and delivering the logs to the mill where they were sold." (Crofoot Lumber v. Ford (1961) 191 C.A.2d 238, 249, 12 C.R. 639.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.106, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Value of property at time of conversion: See Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 C.A.4th 688, 708, 44 C.R.3d 702 [substantial evidence supported award of compensatory damages to prospective seller of stock converted by attorney who was acting as escrow holder, where amount of award reflected testimony of investor, who had purchased same stock from seller, as to stock's value at time of conversion].

59 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
3. Conversion.
b. Conversion of Secured Note.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1723

[§ 1723] Conversion of Secured Note.

Knudsen v. Hill (1964) 227 C.A.2d 639, 38 C.R. 859, examines the question of value of a note secured by a purchase money mortgage or deed of trust. C gave plaintiff such a note for $ 26,500. Plaintiff borrowed $ 18,000 from defendants and pledged the C note as security. With a balance of $ 11,800 owing, defendants wrongfully converted the note by selling it to an agent of C for $ 16,052.26. Plaintiff was admittedly entitled to the statutory damages for conversion (value of property or compensation for loss), but what was the value of the note? The trial judge took the sale price as the value, thus awarding damages of $ 16,052.26, less the balance owed. Held, reversed; plaintiff was entitled to the face value at the time of conversion, $ 24,674.20, less the balance owed.

(a) The general American rule is that, where a note imposes personal liability on the maker, its face value is prima facie its true value, subject to contrary proof. But if, as here, it can be collected only from the security (purchase money mortgage, no deficiency judgment), the measure of damages is the value of the security at the time of conversion. (227 C.A.2d 642.)

(b) This latter rule may be applied here under the general language of C.C. 3356: "For the purpose of estimating damages, the value of an instrument in writing is presumed to be equal to that of the property to which it entitles its owner." (227 C.A.2d 643.)

(c) The trial judge's measure--the sale price--was improper. (1) This was not an open sale but a secret and unfair transaction in which C bought a note for $ 16,052.26 which was admittedly worth $ 24,674.20 (because it wiped out a fully secured obligation in that amount). (2) Defendant sellers had no reason to bargain for a higher price because they had to turn over everything above $ 11,800 to plaintiff. (227 C.A.2d 644.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

60 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
4. Detention: Replevin.
a. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1724

[§ 1724] In General.

(1) Where Property Is Recovered. If the action is not brought for conversion, but instead the plaintiff either repossesses the property or sues for and obtains its specific recovery (replevin), he or she is entitled to damages for its detention. One measure is interest on the value of the property from the time of taking, which may be sought, e.g., where the property has no substantial use value. But if the property consists of machinery, automobiles, or something else with a readily provable use or rental value, the plaintiff may recover the value of the use from the time of taking to the time he or she regains possession. (Dunlop v. Farmer (1923) 64 C.A. 691, 693, 222 P. 640; Ferris v. Cooper (1932) 125 C.A. 234, 237, 13 P.2d 536; see Rest.2d, Torts §931; 66 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Replevin §93 et seq.) A plaintiff who rents a substitute may recover the reasonable cost. (Rest.2d, Torts §931.)

If the property has diminished in value from the time of taking, the depreciation is, of course, a necessary element to restore the plaintiff to his or her original position. (See Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield (1918) 177 C. 206, 210, 170 P. 415; Anglo-Calif. Trust Co. v. Collins (1923) 192 C. 315, 317, 219 P. 982; Spencer Kennelly, Ltd. v. Bank of America (1942) 19 C.2d 586, 589, 122 P.2d 552.) And special damages may be recoverable in a proper case. (See Ruzanoff v. Retailers Credit Assn. of Sacramento (1929) 97 C.A. 682, 686, 276 P. 156; Rest.2d, Torts §931.)

(2) Where Property Is Not Recovered. If the plaintiff sues for specific recovery, but the property is lost or destroyed, the action does not automatically become one for conversion, which would ordinarily limit damages to the value of the property and interest. Under C.C.P. 667, the plaintiff is entitled to the value and damages for the detention. The value is given as a substitute for the return of the property itself, and in addition, the plaintiff may recover as usual for the loss of use. (Nahhas v. Browning (1919) 181 C. 55, 57, 183 P. 442; Drinkhouse v. Van Ness (1927) 202 C. 359, 374, 379, 260 P. 869; Guerin v. Kirst (1949) 33 C.2d 402, 414, 202 P.2d 10; Smith v. Pilgrim (1931) 117 C.A. 244, 246, 3 P.2d 573.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.106, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

61 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
F. Trespass and Injury to Personal Property.
4. Detention: Replevin.
b. Use Value in Excess of Value of Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1725

[§ 1725] Use Value in Excess of Value of Property.

The use value is ordinarily the net rental value; and, under some circumstances, as where the period of deprivation is long, the sum recovered may be greater than the value of the property itself. It has been said that this is not necessarily improper; but the disparity may be so great, e.g., double the value, that the court may consider the damages excessive. (See Tucker v. Hagerty (1918) 37 C.A. 789, 791, 174 P. 908; Booth v. The Peoples Finance & Thrift Co. of Modesto (1932) 124 C.A. 131, 137, 12 P.2d 50.)

In Mutch v. Long Beach Imp. Co. (1920) 47 C.A. 267, 190 P. 638, plaintiffs' car, worth $ 400, was detained for 20 months. Damages were awarded for the loss of use in about 3 times that amount. Held, the award was excessive; it is improper to grant an amount for the value of use out of all proportion to the value of the thing itself, because this would in effect be punitive damages, and would violate the rule of C.C. 3359 that damages must be reasonable. (47 C.A. 269.) (See Bonestell v. Western Automotive Finance Corp. (1924) 69 C.A. 719, 726, 232 P. 734.)

In Fran-Well Heater Co. v. Robinson (1960) 182 C.A.2d 125, 5 C.R. 900, two oil well heaters were wrongfully withheld. The trial court awarded reasonable monthly rental of $ 200 from detention to trial, about 21/2 years, or a total of over $ 5,000, although the property was worth only $ 1,679.26. Held, grossly disproportionate, and judgment reversed. (182 C.A.2d 133.)

In Harris v. Dixon Cadillac Co. (1982) 132 C.A.3d 485, 183 C.R. 299, the court criticized the Mutch decision and quoted Smith v. Pilgrim (1931) 117 C.A. 244, 246, 3 P.2d 573, and Reynolds v. Bank of America (1959) 53 C.2d 49, 345 P.2d 926, supra, §1721, as indicative of the better view. In Harris, plaintiff's car was wrongfully detained for more than a year; she could not afford the $ 10 to $ 15 per day leasing cost for a rental automobile, and had to quit her job and move to her parents' home. The value of the car was $ 2,500; the damage award was $ 7,500, or less than $ 5 per day for the period of detention. Held, the award was supported by the evidence and was not unreasonable. (132 C.A.3d 490, 491, 492.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

62 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
1. Wrongful Occupancy.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1726

[§ 1726] Wrongful Occupancy.

A mere trespass, without injury or occupancy, will justify only nominal damages (see supra, §1546); but if the trespass is followed by occupancy, the plaintiff can recover for the value of the use during the period. (C.C. 3334(a) [period not exceeding 5 years before action]; see Rest.2d, Torts §931.) This is normally the fair rental value on the market when offered for rent under ordinary circumstances. (Bourdieu v. Seaboard Oil Corp. (1944) 63 C.A.2d 201, 207, 146 P.2d 256.) However, the statutory definition of "value of the use of the property" is broader: the phrase means the greater of reasonable rental value or the benefits obtained by the wrongful occupier, with the qualification that reasonable rental value must be used if the wrongful occupation was the result of the wrongful occupier's mistake of fact. (C.C. 3334(b); see 11382 Beach Partnership v. Libaw (1999) 70 C.A.4th 212, 218, 82 C.R.2d 533 [where there was evidence of rental value of commercial premises destroyed by fire, it was error to deny damages for lessee's delay in surrendering premises]; C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, Chap. 5.)

The plaintiff may also obtain the reasonable cost of repair or restoration of the property to its original condition (see infra, §1728), and the costs, if any, of recovering the possession. (C.C. 3334(a).) (On compensation to innocent improver, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §462.)

The owner is entitled to recover damages under C.C. 3334 even though he or she does not presently intend to use the land; otherwise, the wrongful occupier could gain expense-free use of the property. In Don v. Trojan Const. Co. (1960) 178 C.A.2d 135, 2 C.R. 626, plaintiffs bought a commercially zoned lot, intending to build a supermarket, but delayed construction for financial reasons. Defendant contractor, building a subdivision nearby and needing a place to store dirt, used plaintiffs' lot on the alleged permission from its former owner and in the asserted belief that it was still owned by that owner. The trial judge found that the average rental value of the land during the time of use was $ 550, or $ 5,500 for the period. But, because plaintiffs would not have used or rented it, he concluded that they suffered no damages except the technical invasion of their possessory rights, for which he awarded $ 200 as nominal damages. Held, reversed, with directions to enter judgment for $ 5,500. (178 C.A.2d 139.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.106, 113

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Benefit obtained: See Watson Land Co. v. Shell Oil Co. (2005) 130 C.A.4th 69, 76, 29 C.R.3d 343 [oil company's avoidance of remediation costs of leaking gasoline pipeline under landowner's property was not "benefit" to oil company that entitled landowner to recover benefit damages under C.C. 3334(b)(1), where oil company derived no financial advantage from leakage and resulting contamination]; Bailey v. Outdoor Media Group (2007) 155 C.A.4th 778, 787, 66 C.R.3d 322 [in calculating "benefits obtained" from wrongful occupation of land for operation of business, trial court may offset expenses incurred by trespassing defendant against gross income only when defendant presents credible evidence of expenses incurred, but, when defendant fails to do so, trial court may award damages based on gross revenue].

63 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
2. Injury to Land or Improvements by Completed Wrong.
a. Diminution in Value.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1727

[§ 1727] Diminution in Value.

(1) In General. The different kinds of real property and varying types of injury make it unwise to establish a fixed rule governing damages, and consequently a number of alternative theories are applied. (See Hancock v. George R. Curtis Paving Co. (1931) 114 C.A. 624, 628, 300 P. 65; Givens v. Markall (1942) 51 C.A.2d 374, 379, 124 P.2d 839; Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 C.A.3d 126, 136, 95 C.R. 728, citing the text; Mozzetti v. Brisbane (1977) 67 C.A.3d 565, 576, 136 C.R. 751; Heninger v. Dunn (1980) 101 C.A.3d 858, 862, 162 C.R. 104, citing the text; Armitage v. Decker (1990) 218 C.A.3d 887, 904, 267 C.R. 399; Cassinis v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1770, 1788, 18 C.R.2d 574; Rest.2d, Torts §929; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §265 et seq.; 42 Proof of Facts 2d 247 [damages for injury to real property]; 33 Proof of Facts 3d 163 [proof of diminished property value due to environmental contamination]; 56 Am.Jur. Trials 369 [recovery of damages for property devaluation from off-site environmental hazards]; 25 Cal. Western L. Rev. 367 [Stigma Damages: The Case for Recovery in Condominium Construction Defect Litigation]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 161; 82 A.L.R.2d 1106 [waste by tenant]; 1 A.L.R.3d 801 [wrongful removal of earth, sand, or gravel]; 31 A.L.R.4th 171 [measure and elements of damages for injury to bridge]; infra, §1728 et seq.; on statutory penalty for intentional or malicious destruction of property at building site, see supra, §1570.)

However, the basic and normal rule uses diminution in value as the measure; i.e., the difference between the market value of the land before and after the injury. (Herzog v. Grosso (1953) 41 C.2d 219, 226, 259 P.2d 429 [increase in grade of road to plaintiff's property]; Hancock v. George R. Curtis Paving Co., supra; Revis v. I.S. Chapman & Co. (1933) 130 C.A. 109, 115, 19 P.2d 511; Willoughby v. Southern Pac. Co. (1948) 83 C.A.2d 414, 415, 188 P.2d 816 [residence damaged by surface waters]; Basin Oil Co. v. Baash-Ross Tool Co. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 578, 606, 271 P.2d 122; Ferraro v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1980) 102 C.A.3d 33, 50, 51, 162 C.R. 238; Rest.2d, Torts §§929(1)(a), 911.)

Where the injury is only temporary, the usual measure is the impairment of rental value during the period. (Guttinger v. Calaveras Cement Co. (1951) 105 C.A.2d 382, 387, 233 P.2d 914, infra, §1729; Spaulding v. Cameron (1954) 127 C.A.2d 698, 706, 274 P.2d 177.)

(2) Loss of Value While Repairs Are Being Made. In Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. J & D Painting (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1199, 21 C.R.2d 903, defendant's employees negligently caused a fire at plaintiff's home, and plaintiff's insurer paid him $ 247,118 for repairs and $ 19,500 for loss of use. During the 6 months that the repairs were being made, the value of the home declined by $ 300,000, owing to a general decline in market value for similar homes in that area. Plaintiff then instituted the present action to recover from defendant the loss in value during the repair period, as well as the extra mortgage interest he was required to pay during that period due to his inability to sell the house at its previous value. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff is not seeking double damages, i.e., if his repaired house is worth $ 300,000 less than it was prior to the fire, then a recovery of that amount above the cost of repair would be no more than restorative. And plaintiff might be able to show that, but for defendant's negligence, he would have been able to sell his house earlier for more than he can now obtain. However, C.C. 3333 (supra, §1553) mandates recovery not simply for all detriment caused by the defendant's negligence, but for all detriment proximately caused. (17 C.A.4th 1204.)

(b) A superseding cause that is utterly unrelated to the defendant's negligence breaks the chain of proximate cause and bars recovery. Here, the decline in market value was such a superseding cause, i.e., it bore no relation whatsoever to defendant's negligence, which was merely the condition or occasion for the market decline to affect plaintiff's house. Nor was the decline in market value foreseeable by defendant. Based on recent history, a delay in the sale of property in California would more likely increase the owner's return. (17 C.A.4th 1204.)

(c) This case differs from slander of title or wrongful attachment cases, in which plaintiffs have been awarded the difference in market value between the time a lien is imposed and the time it is lifted (see, e.g., Gudger v. Manton (1943) 21 C.2d 537, 134 P.2d 217, supra, §1703). In those cases, the defendant acted intentionally to adversely affect the marketability of property, thereby making the decline in market value a proximate cause of the tort. (17 C.A.4th 1205.)

(d) "Under a proximate cause analysis, there is a clear distinction between awarding cost of repair even when it exceeds the diminution in value (which is permissible) and awarding diminution in value even when it exceeds the cost of repair (which is impermissible). Destruction which the court allows to be repaired for personal reasons, at a cost exceeding the diminution in value, is clearly proximately caused by the defendant's negligence. There is no such causal connection here." (17 C.A.4th 1205.)

(e) Finally, there is no compelling public policy reason to allow plaintiff to recover when the time needed to repair negligently inflicted property damage coincides with a general decline in the market for these properties. That recovery would not deter negligence in any meaningful way. The opportunity to sell in a high market may present itself again. And those unlucky enough to sell in low markets are often able to buy in low markets. Defendant's negligence appears only to have deprived plaintiff of the fortuitous opportunity to sell in an inflated market. To the extent that plaintiff's desire to sell in that market may have been motivated by an astute analysis of the market, the less excusable was it for him to wait to sell until the repairs were finished. (17 C.A.4th 1205.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.108 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

64 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
 G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
 2. Injury to Land or Improvements by Completed Wrong.
 b. Cost of Repairs.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1728

[§ 1728] Cost of Repairs.

(1) In General. Another permissible measure is the reasonable cost of repair or restoration of the property to its original condition, together with the value of the lost use during the period of injury. (Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Elec. Co. (1909) 156 C. 58, 62, 103 P. 320; Higgins v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. (1911) 159 C. 651, 662, 115 P. 313; Erllich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C.4th 543, 555, 87 C.R.2d 886, 981 P.2d 978, supra, §1037, citing the text; Cox v. Odell (1905) 1 C.A. 682, 685, 82 P. 1086; Dandoy v. Oswald Bros. Paving Co. (1931) 113 C.A. 570, 572, 298 P. 1030 [cost of removing materials dumped on land]; Kell v. Jansen (1942) 53 C.A.2d 498, 503, 127 P.2d 1033; Plonley v. Reser (1960) 178 C.A.2d Supp. 935, 937, 940, 3 C.R. 551; Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Granite Const. Co. (1964) 225 C.A.2d 765, 770, 37 C.R. 727, supra, §1625; Raven's Cove Townhomes v. Knuppe Dev. Co. (1981) 114 C.A.3d 783, 802, 171 C.R. 334, quoting the text; Armitage v. Decker (1990) 218 C.A.3d 887, 905, 267 C.R. 399; Rest.2d, Torts §929; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§263, 265; 42 Proof of Facts 2d 247 [damages for injury to real property].) Thus, where a lessor of an oil lease wrongfully caused the destruction of a prospect hole, the measure of damages was held to be the cost of redrilling to the place where the destruction occurred. (Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v. Lisle (1946) 74 C.A.2d 638, 651, 169 P.2d 462.)

(2) Personal Use Exception. Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment b considers the cost of repair an allowable measure of damages where the owner has a good personal reason for restoring the property, even though the cost would be greater than the diminution in value of the land. In California, however, the older cases have that the expense of repairs is not allowable where it would exceed the depreciation in value. (See Salstrom v. Orleans Bar Gold Mining Co. (1908) 153 C. 551, 558, 96 P. 292; Kell v. Jansen, supra; Basin Oil Co. v. Baash-Ross Tool Co. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 578, 606, 271 P.2d 122; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 249; cf. Herzog v. Grosso (1953) 41 C.2d 219, 226, 259 P.2d 429 [defendant, contending that cost of repairs was less than depreciation, failed to prove it].)

In Heninger v. Dunn (1980) 101 C.A.3d 858, 162 C.R. 104, citing the text, the court held that the personal reason exception may be invoked where shade or ornamental trees have been destroyed, and replacement can be made at a cost that is not unreasonable in relation to the damage inflicted and the value of the land. (101 C.A.3d 864, 865, 866.)

In Orndorff v. Christiana Community Builders (1990) 217 C.A.3d 683, 266 C.R. 193, the court adopted the exception with a limitation. Plaintiffs' home was built by defendants on defectively compacted soil, and settlement occurred. In this action, the trial judge found on evidence presented by plaintiffs that it would cost $ 243,539.95 to repair the defects and relocate the plaintiffs while the repairs were being completed. Their appraiser testified that after repair the home would be worth $ 238,500. The judge awarded plaintiffs the repair and relocation expenses, but defendants contended that the award should have been only in the amount by which the defendants had diminished the value of the home. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) Heninger v. Dunn, supra, approved the personal reason exception, and this supports the award. That exception does not require that the home be unique; it is enough that it is required for some personal use by the owners and that they have a bona fide desire to repair or restore. (217 C.A.3d 688, quoting Heninger and Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment b.)

(b) Contrary to defendants' contention, the personal reason exception is not incompatible with the imposition of strict liability for defects in mass-produced residential housing. "Neither a consumer's reliance upon a builder's expertise nor the builder's ability to spread his risks over a large number of his products suggests that a home, once purchased, can be readily replaced. Indeed the record in this case suggests quite the contrary. The Orndorffs purchased a home which abuts an open-space easement and thus is free of neighbors on one side; they have also made substantial improvements to their home in the 11 years they have occupied it. Accordingly, we find no inconsistency in the Orndorffs' reliance on the doctrine of strict liability and their desire to repair their home rather than abandon it." (217 C.A.3d 689.)

(c) "By requiring that repair costs bear a reasonable relationship to value before harm and to the level of harm actually suffered, the Heninger case prevents the unusual or bizarre results the defendants in this case contend would occur should we stray in any manner from a diminution in value measure of damages. Contrary to the defendants' argument, application of the personal reason exception does not permit a plaintiff to insist on reconstruction of a unique product where the cost of repair will far exceed either the value of the product or the damage the defendant has caused. As we interpret Heninger, the owner of a unique home or automobile cannot insist on its reconstruction where the cost to do so far exceeds the value of the home or automobile. Nor are repair costs appropriate where only slight damage has occurred and the cost of repair is far in excess of the loss in value." (217 C.A.3d 690.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.109, 111

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

65 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
2. Injury to Land or Improvements by Completed Wrong.
c. Lost Profits.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1729

[§ 1729] Lost Profits.

In Natural Soda Products Co. v. Los Angeles (1943) 23 C.2d 193, 143 P.2d 12, plaintiff's business was the removal and processing of soda deposits from a dry lake bed. Defendant flooded the lake, damaging the minerals and making the plant inaccessible. Held, plaintiff could recover for lost profits, based on evidence of past earnings. (23 C.2d 199.) (See Razzano v. Kent (1947) 78 C.A.2d 254, 261, 177 P.2d 612, infra, §1737; Lucky Auto Supply v. Turner (1966) 244 C.A.2d 872, 881, 53 C.R. 628, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §430 [wrongful interference with license to use parking lot for business customers].)

On the other hand, in Guttinger v. Calaveras Cement Co. (1951) 105 C.A.2d 382, 233 P.2d 914, defendant's cement plant emitted dust and gases that were deposited over part of plaintiffs' cattle grazing lands. The injury was clearly temporary, the grazing acreage was greatly in excess of the area affected, and the tort therefore did not necessarily cause a loss of profits, for the production of cattle may have been the same. Hence, plaintiffs failed to show a basis for the loss of profits measure, and the rental value measure was properly applied. (105 C.A.2d 389.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

66 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
2. Injury to Land or Improvements by Completed Wrong.
d. Emotional Distress.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1730

[§ 1730] Emotional Distress.

The occupant, regardless of physical injury, may recover damages for "the discomfort and annoyance of himself and the members of his family and for mental suffering occasioned by fear for the safety of himself and his family when such discomfort or suffering has been proximately caused by a trespass or a nuisance." (Acadia, Calif., Ltd. v. Herbert (1960) 54 C.2d 328, 337, 5 C.R. 686, 353 P.2d 294 [approving additional recovery for loss of wife's services in home]; see Alonso v. Hills (1950) 95 C.A.2d 778, 787, 214 P.2d 50; Smith v. Los Angeles (1989) 214 C.A.3d 266, 288, 262 C.R. 754, citing Acadia, Calif., Ltd. and Alonso; Armitage v. Decker (1990) 218 C.A.3d 887, 905, 267 C.R. 399, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §929(1)(c).)

In Herzog v. Grosso (1953) 41 C.2d 219, 259 P.2d 429, plaintiffs, husband and wife, were given damages for defendant's obstruction of the access road to their home. Held, it was proper to include an award of $ 1,500 to each for "nervousness, worry, and mental distress for the safety of themselves and their daughter and others" who had to use the dangerous road. (41 C.2d 225.)

In Kornoff v. Kingsburg Cotton Oil Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 265, 288 P.2d 507, defendant company, operating a cotton ginning and cottonseed processing plant, produced for about 6 months each year fumes, dust, lint, etc., covering the furniture, garden, and persons of plaintiffs. Held, verdict and judgment for $ 9,541 affirmed. Even though the trespass was not of a type that would ordinarily cause fright or shock, the annoyance and discomfort was a natural consequence. (45 C.2d 272.)

In the Acadia case, supra, defendant cut off plaintiff's water supply. "Defendant's disruption of the water supply is closely analogous to a trespass or a nuisance in that it interfered with the use and enjoyment of the land by Burke and his wife, and such conduct warrants imposition of liability for mental distress of the occupants, at least where, as here, the tortious acts are wilful." And it "is immaterial whether defendant knew of Mrs. Burke's unstable mental condition," for "a tortfeasor must take his victim as he finds him." (54 C.2d 338.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

67 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
3. Independent Unit or Fixture.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1731

[§ 1731] Independent Unit or Fixture.

Where a portion of the land, such as a building, has been injured or destroyed, and can be treated as a separate unit for purposes of damages, the plaintiff may recover for its diminution in value if injured, or its value if destroyed. (Williams v. Faria (1931) 112 C.A. 455, 461, 297 P. 78; Hancock v. George R. Curtis Paving Co. (1931) 114 C.A. 624, 628, 300 P. 65; Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment f; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§269 et seq., 756, 757.)

Another election is allowed where the property is a fixture, which is taken from the land or destroyed. The proper measure is usually its value in place as part of the realty, and not the much smaller price it would sell for if removed. Hence, if it has no substantial value apart from the land, the plaintiff may use the ordinary measure of diminution in value of the land. (See Wilmerton v. Morton (1946) 74 C.A.2d 891, 897, 169 P.2d 992 [tenant's wrongful removal of central refrigeration plant from apartment house]; Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 C.A.3d 126, 135, 95 C.R. 728; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §275; 42 Proof of Facts 2d 247 [damages for injury to real property].)

But if the fixture does have a substantial independent value, the plaintiff may recover that. (See Givens v. Markall (1942) 51 C.A.2d 374, 378, 124 P.2d 839; Menzies v. Geophysical Service (1953) 116 C.A.2d 419, 423, 254 P.2d 51 [water well; "recovery may be the value of the thing thus destroyed or the cost of its repair"]; Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment g.) Givens illustrates a still further election. Mining machinery was taken and later returned; plaintiff was awarded the sum of $ 1,000, the cost of repairing the damage and reinstalling it in the mine.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

68 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
4. Timber or Fruit Trees.
a. Ordinary Injury or Taking: Actual Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1732

[§ 1732] Ordinary Injury or Taking: Actual Damages.

For wrongful injury to or removal of timber, the ordinary measure is the value of the trees. (Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment f.) Where fruit trees are injured or destroyed, the measure is the difference in the value of the orchard land before and after their loss. (Hill v. Morrison (1928) 88 C.A. 405, 408, 263 P. 573; Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment f.) (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§276, 277; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 162; 69 A.L.R.2d 1335 [destruction of or injury to trees and shrubbery]; 90 A.L.R.3d 800 [fruit, nut, or other productive trees]; 95 A.L.R.3d 508 [injury to or destruction of shade or ornamental tree or shrub].)

The rule on recovery of actual damages only is restated in C.C. 3346 (infra, §§1733, 1734) for two situations:

(1) Trespass under authority; the provision for actual damages applies to wood taken by authority of highway officers for adjoining highways or bridges. (See Drewry v. Welch (1965) 236 C.A.2d 159, 181, 46 C.R. 65; 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1843.)

(2) Trespass in reliance on a mistaken boundary line fixed by a licensed surveyor, where the survey was procured by the defendant or his or her principal, lessor, or immediate predecessor in title. (See Helm v. Bollman (1959) 176 C.A.2d 838, 841, 1 C.R. 723; Ghera v. Sugar Pine Lumber Co. (1964) 224 C.A.2d 88, 90, 36 C.R. 305, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §431.)

A third situation arises under other statutes, where the damage to timber is caused by a fire negligently allowed to extend beyond the defendant's land. Earlier statutes allowed treble damages; now only actual damages are recoverable, but recovery is also allowed for the expenses of fighting the fire and of providing emergency medical services, and for the costs relating to investigating and accounting for the fire. (See Health & Saf.C. 13007, 13008, 13009, 13009.1; Gould v. Madonna (1970) 5 C.A.3d 404, 407, 85 C.R. 457; Department of Forestry & Fire Protection v. LeBrock (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1137, 117 C.R.2d 790.)

In McKay v. California (1992) 8 C.A.4th 937, 10 C.R.2d 771, plaintiffs' retail produce outlet business was destroyed when a controlled-burn fire set by defendant state on adjacent land spread to plaintiffs' property and destroyed six acres of fruit trees, plants, trellises, irrigation pipe, and other improvements. In addition to damages for loss of value of the burned acreage, the trial judge awarded damages for the loss of profits from the business. Held, this was proper; Health & Saf.C. 13007 permits recovery for "any damages to the property." "In view of the broad language of section 13007 and its history of liberal construction, we conclude the statute places no restrictions on the type of property damage that is compensable. Loss of profits from a business connected to property that is negligently damaged by a set fire is a form of property damage. Such damage is compensable under the general rule allowing recovery of lost profits for property damage caused by negligence." (8 C.A.4th 940, citing J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, supra, §751.) (See Santa Barbara Pistachio Ranch v. Chowchilla Water Dist. (2001) 88 C.A.4th 439, 446, 105 C.R.2d 856 [in computing damage to pistachio trees from contaminated irrigation, cost of replacing trees may be used, and in figuring cost, age of trees and lost profits may be considered, because age determines productivity].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.112

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Ghera case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §458.

69 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
4. Timber or Fruit Trees.
b. Trespass Under Mistake: Double Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1733

[§ 1733] Trespass Under Mistake: Double Damages.

C.C. 3346 provides for double damages in two situations: (1) Where the trespass by the defendant is under probable cause to believe that the land is defendant's own or her principal's; and (2) where the trespass is casual and involuntary.

In Drewry v. Welch (1965) 236 C.A.2d 159, 46 C.R. 65, defendant purchasers of unsevered timber, acting under the mistaken belief that their expired contract was still in force, continued to cut and remove trees. Held, double damages were mandatory and properly awarded. The court explained the theory behind this unusual award against a person acting without intent to commit any wrong: Just as in conversion, an award of compensatory damages merely restores the wrongdoer to his original position and may even leave him with a profit. (236 C.A.2d 176.) C.C. 3346, "providing in effect treble damages against the rogue and double damages against the blunderer is so framed to meet a special situation existing in the timber lands." (236 C.A.2d 177.) (See Heninger v. Dunn (1980) 101 C.A.3d 858, 868, 162 C.R. 104 [rejecting contention that double damages provisions of C.C. 3346 apply only to trees with value as timber]; Baker v. Ramirez (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1123, 1138, 235 C.R. 857; Ostling v. Loring (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1731, 1750, 33 C.R.2d 391 [after defendant defaulted in action for wrongful cutting down of trees, plaintiff could recover double, but not triple, damages; in absence of evidence of culpability, least culpable treatment under statute was warranted].)

Damages should not be doubled under C.C. 3346 if punitive damages are awarded. However, statutory damages and punitive damages arising out of the same cause of action are not mutually exclusive. (Hassoldt v. Patrick Media Group (2000) 84 C.A.4th 153, 169, 100 C.R.2d 662.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

70 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
4. Timber or Fruit Trees.
c. Wilful and Malicious Trespass: Treble Damages.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1734

[§ 1734] Wilful and Malicious Trespass: Treble Damages.

If the taking is wilful and malicious, the statutes allow the court to award treble damages; i.e., three times the amount of actual detriment. (C.C. 3346; C.C.P. 733; see Swall v. Anderson (1943) 60 C.A.2d 825, 827, 141 P.2d 912; Caldwell v. Walker (1963) 211 C.A.2d 758, 762, 27 C.R. 675.)

In Roche v. Casissa (1957) 154 C.A.2d 785, 316 P.2d 776, defendants C employed defendant E to top trees, and he cut down plaintiffs' trees. Judgment was given (1) in favor of E, the innocent agent, for costs against C, his guilty principal, and (2) for plaintiff against C for $ 2,400 ($ 800 actual damages trebled). Here defendant "knew that the trees were not on his land, yet he disregarded the rights of the adjoining owner and cut the trees for the sole purpose of improving the view from his own house. This evidence supports the finding that his acts were wanton and wilful." (154 C.A.2d 789.)

The three kinds of statutory damages were summarized in Drewry v. Welch (1965) 236 C.A.2d 159, 46 C.R. 65, as follows: The effect of C.C. 3346 and C.C. 733 "is that the Legislature intended, insofar as wilful and malicious trespass is concerned under either section, to leave the imposition of treble damages discretionary with the court, but to place a floor upon that discretion at double damages which must be applied whether the trespass be wilful and malicious or casual and involuntary, etc. There are now three measures of damages applicable to the pertinent types of trespass: (1) for wilful and malicious trespass the court may impose treble damages but must impose double damages; (2) for casual and involuntary trespass, etc., the court must impose double damages; and (3) for trespass under authority actual damages." (236 C.A.2d 181.)

Damages should not be tripled under C.C. 3346 if punitive damages are awarded. However, statutory damages and punitive damages arising out of the same cause of action are not mutually exclusive. (Hassoldt v. Patrick Media Group (2000) 84 C.A.4th 153, 169, 100 C.R.2d 662.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

71 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
5. Injury to Growing Crops.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1735

[§ 1735] Injury to Growing Crops.

(1) Market Value. The ordinary rule governing injury to, or destruction of, a growing crop is its value at the time of destruction. Because the unmaturing crop has no market value, this is determined by taking the market value of the estimated product, but deducting the cost of producing and marketing it. (Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. (1907) 151 C. 209, 212, 90 P. 942; Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 755, 192 P.2d 935; Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co. (1907) 6 C.A. 58, 66, 91 P. 425; Dutra v. Cabral (1947) 80 C.A.2d 114, 119, 181 P.2d 26 [action for breach of contract, but discussing measure of damages in tort cases]; Rest.2d, Torts §929, Comment f; 21A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Crops §§92 et seq., 74 et seq.; 3 Proof of Facts 491 [damages]; 20 Proof of Facts 2d 115 [damages: value of growing crop]; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 162.)

(2) Crop Without Market Value. If the crop has no market value as such, other theories must be invoked. Thus, for destruction of grass on grazing land, the measure is its rental value as pasture, and, where necessary, the cost of reseeded the field. (Miller & Lux v. Pinelli (1927) 84 C.A. 42, 51, 257 P. 573; Murphy v. Nielsen (1955) 132 C.A.2d 396, 399, 282 P.2d 126.) And where a crop is wholly experimental, other elements, such as expense and character of contemplated use, may be considered by the jury. (See Zvolanek v. Bodger Seeds, Ltd. (1935) 5 C.A.2d 106, 109, 42 P.2d 92.)

(3) Perennial Crop. A distinction has been drawn between destruction of an annual crop (e.g., vegetables, grain) and a perennial crop (e.g., alfalfa). In the latter case, it is said that the better measure may be the difference in rental value of the property with and without the crop, but it is nevertheless possible in a proper case to apply the ordinary measure of market value less the cost of production and marketing. (Staub v. Muller (1936) 7 C.2d 221, 228, 60 P.2d 283; see 21A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Crops §96.)

(4) Field Crop Products Subject to Testing or Product Development Program. A person who wilfully and knowingly damages or destroys a field crop known to be the subject of testing or product development conduct by prescribed public entities is liable for "twice the value of the crop damaged or destroyed." (Food & Ag.C. 52100(a).) However, recovery is limited to "twice actual damages involving research, testing, and crop development costs directly related to the crop that has been damaged or destroyed." (Food & Ag.C. 52100(b).)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.112

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Market Value. See 21A Am.Jur.2d (2008 ed.), Crops §68 et seq.(3) Perennial Crop. See 21A Am.Jur.2d (2008 ed.), Crops §73.

72 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
6. Taking Minerals or Other Products.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1736

[§ 1736] Taking Minerals or Other Products.

(1) Innocent Taking. Where the act consists not merely of injury to or destruction of a portion of the land, but the severance and appropriation of such things as minerals, a distinction is drawn between wilful and innocent taking.

If the taking is by inadvertence or honest mistake, the measure of damages is the value of the mineral less the cost of mining and milling. (See Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Mutual Oil Co. (1937) 19 C.A.2d 409, 415, 65 P.2d 896 [plaintiffs recovered value of oil removed, defendants failed to raise question of credit for expense of removal]; 53A Am.Jur.2d (1996 ed.), Mines and Minerals §419 et seq.; 21 A.L.R.2d 380 [right of trespasser to credit for expenditures in producing, as against his or her liability for value of, oil or minerals]; 1 A.L.R.3d 801 [taking earth, sand, or gravel].)

The measure is the value "in situ," or, (1) if that cannot be proved, value at the mouth of the pit, less the expense of mining and transporting them to that point, or (2) value of the mineral extracted from the ore, less the cost of mining and milling. (See Daly v. Smith (1963) 220 C.A.2d 592, 598, 33 C.R. 920; Whittaker v. Otto (1967) 248 C.A.2d 666, 675, 56 C.R. 836.)

The element of good faith, essential to an inadvertent or mistaken taking, may be shown by reliance on the legal opinion of a competent attorney. (Daly v. Smith, supra, 220 C.A.2d 600 [rejecting contention that attorney was not sufficiently disinterested to give reliable advice]; Whittaker v. Otto, supra, 248 C.A.2d 666.)

(2) Intentional Taking. If the trespass is intentional, and the taking is with knowledge of the owner's rights, the plaintiff recovers for the value of the product after reduction, without deduction for the expense of milling and mining. This is in effect a recovery of punitive damages in a fixed amount. (Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane (1911) 161 C. 689, 704, 120 P. 771; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Reconstruction Oil Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 170, 185, 66 P.2d 1215 [oil and gas]; Dolch v. Ramsey (1943) 57 C.A.2d 99, 106, 134 P.2d 19 [gold ore]; see 54 Am.Jur.2d (1996 ed.), Mines and Minerals §422.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Innocent Taking. See 53A Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Mines and Minerals §396 et seq.

73 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
G. Trespass and Injury to Real Property.
7. Continuing Injuries or Nuisance.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1737

[§ 1737] Continuing Injuries or Nuisance.

If the defendant creates and maintains a nuisance, or commits a series of tortious acts that injure the plaintiff's property and seem likely to continue, the question arises whether the plaintiff may sue for future as well as past damage. Normally the plaintiff can sue at any time for past injuries, and bring successive actions from time to time to recover for the additional injuries. However, where the nuisance is "permanent," i.e., the injury appears likely to continue indefinitely, the plaintiff is often allowed to recover past and future damages in one action.

Rest.2d, Torts §930 recognizes this election in the plaintiff, and states the measure of damages as the depreciation in the value of the land; i.e., the diminution in value resulting from the prospect of the continuance of the injuries. The California cases likewise allow the election. (See Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1907) 150 C. 624, 626, 89 P. 599; Kafka v. Bozio (1923) 191 C. 746, 752, 218 P. 753; Spaulding v. Cameron (1952) 38 C.2d 265, 267, 239 P.2d 625; Coats v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1905) 1 C.A. 441, 444, 82 P. 640; 58 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Nuisances §269 et seq.; 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 338; 10 A.L.R.2d 669 [damages for diminution of value of use of property as recoverable for permanent nuisance affecting real property]; 76 A.L.R.4th 629 [pollution of well or spring]; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §552; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §47 et seq.)

In Razzano v. Kent (1947) 78 C.A.2d 254, 177 P.2d 612, plaintiff leased land and dredged for gold. Defendant caused the flooding and deposit of mud on the land, as a result of which plaintiff was forced to abandon operations on May 1. He sued, on June 25, for damages measured by the profits he would have made from gold dredging from May 1 to the time of suit and also from the time of suit until October 23, the expiration date of the lease. Held, it was proper to award both past and future damages in the one action, because it clearly appeared that the interference was permanent and would continue to prevent his operations throughout the period of the lease. The court quoted from McCormick on Damages as follows: "This practice of remitting the plaintiff to a later suit for the continuance of harmful conduct after the commencement of the action and before the trial, while a logical application of the theory of successive rights of action for successive wrongs, has the obviously inconvenient result of increasing litigation over what may broadly be regarded as a single controversy. In equity, when suits for injunction were brought to restrain the continuance of a nuisance or like continuing injury, this consideration of convenience prevailed. These courts, in order to terminate the entire controversy in one suit, will, in the injunction suit, give as an incident thereto compensation for the loss or injury already suffered, and, carrying out the same policy, will allow recovery for the harm or damage sustained through the continuance of the wrong down to the time of the final disposition of the case. The directness and practicality of this result has led in several jurisdictions to the acceptance of this chancery rule allowing damages for a continuing wrong down to the time of trial, as a general rule for all actions, whether legal or equitable." (78 C.A.2d 263.)

In Baker v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (1985) 39 C.3d 862, 218 C.R. 293, 705 P.2d 866, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1144, the California Supreme Court stated that the recovery in nuisance actions is limited to actual injury suffered "prior to commencement of each action." (39 C.3d 868.) This statement was rejected as nonbinding dicta in Renz v. 33rd Dist. Agricultural Assn. (1995) 39 C.A.4th 61, 64, 46 C.R.2d 67, holding that, in continuing nuisance cases, one may recover damages incurred from commencement of the action until judgment is rendered.

If the nuisance is not permanent but can be abated, the plaintiff must choose between elimination of the injury and depreciation in value; i.e., to have the cause of depreciation removed and at the same time receive damages for the depreciation would amount to double recovery. (See Spaulding v. Cameron, supra, 38 C.2d 269; Rhodes v. San Mateo Inv. Co. (1955) 130 C.A.2d 116, 118, 278 P.2d 447; Alexander v. McKnight (1992) 7 C.A.4th 973, 979, 9 C.R.2d 453 [recovery for future loss in resale value of plaintiffs' homes due to disclosure of "difficult" neighbors was improper where neighbors were ordered to cease offensive activities]; Santa Fe Partnership v. ARCO Products Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 967, 973, 54 C.R.2d 214 [where contamination of adjoining property was abatable by remediation, and where remediation process did no physical damage to the property, no damages could be recovered for stigma resulting from contamination; plaintiffs had good argument for these damages, but California Supreme Court decisions are to contrary]; see 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 338.)

Another common element of damages is the annoyance, discomfort, and inconvenience caused by the nuisance. (See Ingram v. Gridley (1950) 100 C.A.2d 815, 821, 224 P.2d 798; Sturges v. Charles L. Harney (1958) 165 C.A.2d 306, 323, 331 P.2d 1072; cf. Kornoff v. Kingsburg Cotton Oil Co. (1955) 45 C.2d 265, 273, 288 P.2d 507, supra, §1730 [same rule in recurrent trespass as in continuing trespass or nuisance]; 58 Am.Jur.2d (2002 ed.), Nuisances §284.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.110

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 C.A.4th 583, 598, 63 C.R.3d 165 [energy company's ponding of wastewater created from its oil production activities, which caused wastewater to contaminate adjacent cotton growers' subsurface aquifers, was continuing trespass of unknown duration for purposes of measuring damages, and thus damages to cotton growers were not limited to permanent measure of damages, but rather could include costs of cleaning up contamination if these costs were reasonable and restoration was possible].

Rest.2d:

Cross-References: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §601; 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §57 et seq.

74 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.

1. In General.

a. Remedies in Trial Court.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1738

[§ 1738] Remedies in Trial Court.

An award of damages by a jury's verdict or trial court's finding, which is either excessive (infra, §1741 et seq.) or inadequate (infra, §1750) is erroneous, and may be set aside or revised in several ways.

(1) Excessive Damages. The attack on excessive damages is by a motion for new trial. Formerly, the statutory ground was that the award was given under the influence of "passion or prejudice." A 1967 amendment eliminated the "passion or prejudice" terminology and substituted the simple ground of excessive damages. (C.C.P. 657(5); see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §36.) (On remittitur, i.e., remission by plaintiff of portion of the award that trial judge determines to be excessive, as condition to denial of defendant's motion for new trial, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §125 et seq.)

(2) Inadequate Damages. A motion for new trial because of inadequate damages was formerly based on the statutory ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision. The 1967 amendment made inadequate damages a specific ground for the motion, by including it in C.C.P. 657(5): "Excessive or inadequate damages." (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §36.) (On additur, i.e., addition to award to plaintiff, with defendant's consent, as condition to denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §129 et seq.; on order granting new trial on issue of damages alone, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §114.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.127

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Excessive Damages.

Amendment in 1967:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack of Judgment in Trial Court, §35.

Remittitur:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §116 et seq.(2) Inadequate Damages.

Amendment in 1967:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §35.

Additur:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §120 et seq.

Order granting new trial on damages:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §105.

75 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
1. In General.
b. Remedies in Reviewing Court.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1739

[§ 1739] Remedies in Reviewing Court.

(1) Reversal. The reviewing court, on appeal, may reverse the judgment, as unsupported by the evidence, either for excessive or inadequate damages. (See Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co. (1929) 207 C. 154, 166, 277 P. 481; Taylor v. Pole (1940) 16 C.2d 668, 673, 107 P.2d 614 [inadequate]; Van DerHoof v. Chambon (1932) 121 C.A. 118, 136, 8 P.2d 925.)

In Zhadan v. Downtown L.A. Motors (1976) 66 C.A.3d 481, 502, 136 C.R. 132, supra, §1622, the trial judge made a defective conditional new trial order reducing punitive damages. The appellate court agreed with his conclusion that the punitive damages were excessive, but reversed the judgment for a new trial on all of the issues. (a) Reversal for a new trial on the issue of damages alone would be improper, for nearly all of the evidence on liability was also relevant to the issue of punitive damages. (b) It was impracticable for the appellate court to exercise the function of the trial judge in reducing the award, for it did not have the benefit of his observation of the witnesses, and could not weigh the evidence. (See Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 868, 237 C.R. 282 [following Zhadan].)

(2) Modification. The reviewing court may also modify the judgment by reducing the amount of an excessive award. (See Livesey v. Stock (1929) 208 C. 315, 322, 281 P. 70; Maede v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda (1931) 212 C. 419, 298 P. 987; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 115; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §754.)

(3) Conditional Judgment. The more common method is rendition of a conditional judgment, ordering a reversal unless the respondent (plaintiff) remits the excess, or an affirmance as modified if the excess is remitted. (See Bellman v. San Francisco High School Dist. (1938) 11 C.2d 576, 588, 81 P.2d 894; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §754.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.127

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Modification.

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §865.

(3) Conditional Judgment.

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §865.

76 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
1. In General.
c. Discretion of Jury and Trial Court.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1740

[§ 1740] Discretion of Jury and Trial Court.

It was formerly said that the trial court on motion for a new trial could interfere only where the verdict was so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable compensation as to raise a strong presumption that it was based on passion or prejudice. (See Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co. (1911) 160 C. 237, 255, 116 P. 513; Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Const. Co. (1925) 75 C.A. 516, 535, 243 P. 43.) Under the statutory ground of "excessive or inadequate damages" the test is that of sufficiency of the evidence; i.e., a new trial should not be granted "unless after weighing the evidence the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the court or jury clearly should have reached a different verdict or decision." (C.C.P. 657; see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §36.)

The primary duty to scrutinize the jury's verdict rests on the trial court, which is necessarily more familiar with the evidence than the appellate court. Hence, the grant or denial of a new trial for excessive or inadequate damages is usually upheld. (See Koyer v. McComber (1938) 12 C.2d 175, 182, 82 P.2d 941; Seffert v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1961) 56 C.2d 498, 507, 15 C.R. 161, 364 P.2d 337; Torres v. Los Angeles (1962) 58 C.2d 35, 53, 22 C.R. 866, 372 P.2d 906; Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 64, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, citing the text; Bonner v. Los Angeles Examiner (1936) 17 C.A.2d 458, 461, 62 P.2d 427; Sassano v. Roullard (1938) 27 C.A.2d 372, 376, 81 P.2d 213; Formosa v. Yellow Cab Co. (1939) 31 C.A.2d 77, 88, 87 P.2d 716; Cooksey v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1947) 78 C.A.2d 504, 508, 178 P.2d 69; Brown v. Boehm (1947) 78 C.A.2d 595, 596, 178 P.2d 49; Buswell v. San Francisco (1948) 89 C.A.2d 123, 130, 200 P.2d 115; Butler v. Peluso (1957) 154 C.A.2d 624, 629, 317 P.2d 57; Rudolph v. Gorman (1959) 169 C.A.2d 666, 669, 338 P.2d 218; Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 654, 151 C.R. 399; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §140.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
C.C.P. 657:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §35.

Duty of trial court:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §130.

77 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
a. Matters Considered on Issue.
1. Evidence of Injury.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1741

[§ 1741] Evidence of Injury.

The normal method of testing the verdict is to compare it with the evidence of injury. If, on this comparison, the trial judge or reviewing court decides that the evidence is insufficient (or, as the older cases put it, suggestive of passion or prejudice), it will be set aside on a motion for new trial or on appeal; otherwise it will be allowed to stand. (See Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co. (1911) 160 C. 237, 254, 116 P. 513; Bellman v. San Francisco High School Dist. (1938) 11 C.2d 576, 586, 81 P.2d 894; Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 C.3d 301, 308, 81 C.R. 855, 461 P.2d 39; Bonner v. Los Angeles Examiner (1936) 17 C.A.2d 458, 461, 62 P.2d 427; Gladstone v. Fortier (1937) 22 C.A.2d 1, 17, 70 P.2d 255; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §811 et seq.; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 1; 46 A.L.R.4th 220 [death of agricultural workers]; 47 A.L.R.4th 100 [death of homemaker]; 47 A.L.R.4th 134 [death of blue-collar workers]; 48 A.L.R.4th 229 [death of retired persons].)

The appellant should therefore set forth all of the material evidence on this point in order to overcome the presumption in favor of the judgment. (See Leming v. Oilfields Trucking Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 343, 356, 282 P.2d 23; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §§349, 359.)

Annotations dealing with excessiveness or adequacy of damages for various types of injury are extensive. (See 11 A.L.R.3d 370 [injuries to head or neck]; 12 A.L.R.3d 117 [injuries to trunk or torso]; 12 A.L.R.4th 96 [injuries to arms and hands]; 13 A.L.R.4th 212 [injuries to legs and feet]; 14 A.L.R.4th 539 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, circulatory, digestive, and glandular systems]; 15 A.L.R.4th 294 [injuries to back, neck, or spine]; 15 A.L.R.4th 519 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, respiratory system]; 16 A.L.R.4th 238 [injuries to trunk or torso, or internal injuries]; 16 A.L.R.4th 736 [injuries causing particular diseases or conditions]; 16 A.L.R.4th 1127 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, sensory or speech organs and systems]; 48 A.L.R.5th 129 [injuries to trunk or torso, or internal injuries]; 50 A.L.R.5th 1 [injuries to head or brain]; 51 A.L.R.5th 467 [injuries to nerves or nervous system].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.127, 128

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Overcoming presumption:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §§355, 365.

78 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
a. Matters Considered on Issue.
2. Inflation.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1742

[§ 1742] Inflation.

The Supreme Court long ago declared that, in view of the rise in the cost of living, a comparison of verdicts held excessive in past years is no longer persuasive. It is necessary to bear in mind changes in the purchasing power of the dollar, in the cost of living and in living standards. (O'Meara v. Haiden (1928) 204 C. 354, 367, 268 P. 334 [court takes judicial notice of "a pronounced decrease in the purchasing power or value of the dollar"]; see Behrendt v. Times-Mirror Co. (1938) 30 C.A.2d 77, 91, 85 P.2d 949; House v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1939) 35 C.A.2d 336, 341, 95 P.2d 465; Kircher v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 176, 187, 195 P.2d 427 [judicial notice taken of 50% decrease in purchasing power of dollar]; Burke v. San Francisco (1952) 111 C.A.2d 314, 320, 244 P.2d 708; Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 662, 151 C.R. 399 ["California law has long approved consideration of the factor of inflation as a matter of economic reality"]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §813; 12 A.L.R.2d 611; 21 A.L.R.4th 21 [effect of anticipated inflation on damages for future losses--modern cases].)

In Fox v. Oakland Consol. Street Ry. (1897) 118 C. 55, 67, 50 P. 25, a $ 6,000 judgment for wrongful death of a boy of 41/2 years was reversed. In Criss v. Angelus Hosp. Assn. of Los Angeles (1936) 13 C.A.2d 412, 420, 56 P.2d 1274, a verdict in the same amount for death of a 12-day-old baby was upheld.

In Foster v. Pestana (1947) 77 C.A.2d 885, 177 P.2d 54, plaintiff, a truck driver, 27 years old and with a life expectancy of about 40 years, received a permanent injury to his left hand, involving considerable hospital and operative treatment, much pain, and substantially weakened grip that made it impossible to continue his heavy labor. Held, a verdict of $ 16,769.58 was not excessive. The opinion, after referring to a Supreme Court decision where, for a similar injury, a $ 15,000 verdict was reduced by the trial judge to $ 8,500, states: "That was in 1941, before our entry into World War II, and we feel that a court passing on the same question now, would have thought twice before making such a reduction." (77 C.A.2d 893.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

79 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
a. Matters Considered on Issue.
3. Comparison of Judgments.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1743

[§ 1743] Comparison of Judgments.

(1) Older View. For a time, reviewing courts followed the practice of comparing judgments in other cases. In Maede v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda (1931) 212 C. 419, 425, 298 P. 987, the court declared that the "average amount for particular injuries, as fixed by the verdicts rendered by juries and approved by courts," offers a standard, though not an invariable one, and that where the compensation for loss of a limb or eye, e.g., greatly exceeds the average award, it may be held excessive. (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §820.)

In Hallinan v. Prindle (1936) 17 C.A.2d 656, 62 P.2d 1075, a verdict based primarily upon pain at the time of injury and in subsequent treatment, and involving no loss of earning capacity, was reduced from $ 12,500 to $ 5,000. The court reached its conclusion by comparison of a number of decided cases involving injuries of like character. (17 C.A.2d 673.) (See Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1938) 11 C.2d 724, 735, 81 P.2d 950 [award upheld on basis of comparison].) And prior judgments in the same case have also been considered. (See Hoffman v. Southern Pac. Co. (1932) 215 C. 454, 460, 11 P.2d 387 [first trial, $ 16,000; second, $ 21,000; third, $ 50,000, reduced to $ 25,000]; Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 654, 151 C.R. 399 ["The fact that an award may set a precedent by its size does not in and of itself render it suspect"]; Bigboy v. San Diego (1984) 154 C.A.3d 397, 406, 201 C.R. 226.)

(2) Modern Approach. Modern courts reject this mechanical treatment of the issue and place no limits on an award other than those that appear from the evidence of injury, suffering, disability, and other elements of damages. As a result, very large sums have been upheld. (See Leming v. Oilfields Trucking Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 343, 356, 282 P.2d 23; Torres v. Los Angeles (1962) 58 C.2d 35, 53, 22 C.R. 866, 372 P.2d 906; Gluckstein v. Lipsett (1949) 93 C.A.2d 391, 398, 209 P.2d 98; McNulty v. Southern Pac. Co. (1950) 96 C.A.2d 841, 848, 216 P.2d 534; Butler v. Peluso (1957) 154 C.A.2d 624, 630, 317 P.2d 57; Henninger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 872, 882, 59 C.R. 76; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 1.)

As the court said in Sullivan v. San Francisco (1950) 95 C.A.2d 745, 214 P.2d 82, "While $ 125,000 is a large sum of money, and while it perhaps represents the largest verdict that has heretofore come before an appellate court in this state, those facts are not conclusive. The jury has fixed this amount as the damages suffered by plaintiff. The trial judge has impliedly approved the award by denying the motion for a new trial. We may interfere only if it appears, as a matter of law, that the award was the result of passion or prejudice." (95 C.A.2d 758.)

The same view was expressed in Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 65, footnote 12, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608: "For a reviewing court to upset a jury's factual determination on the basis of what other juries awarded to other plaintiffs for other injuries in other cases based upon different evidence would constitute a serious invasion into the realm of fact-finding. ... Thus, we adhere to the previously announced and historically honored standard of reversing as excessive only those judgments which the entire record, when viewed most favorably to the judgment, indicates were rendered as the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jurors."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

80 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
b. Damages Held Excessive.
1. Personal Injuries: In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1744

[§ 1744] Personal Injuries: In General.

Bearing in mind that inflation has radically changed the thinking of the courts on excessive verdicts (see supra, §1715), the following cases are illustrative only of the method of review; the figures involved are often of little significance.

One group of cases includes those in which the injuries were minor or temporary, and a large award could not be justified for this reason. (See O'Donnell v. Excelsior Amusement Co. (1930) 110 C.A. 685, 690, 294 P. 737; Van DerHoof v. Chambon (1932) 121 C.A. 118, 132, 8 P.2d 925; Hoover v. King (1933) 134 C.A. 16, 24 P.2d 871; Hallinan v. Prindle (1936) 17 C.A.2d 656, 673, 62 P.2d 1075; Thompson v. John Strona & Sons (1970) 5 C.A.3d 705, 712, 85 C.R. 350.)

More difficult are the cases in which the injuries were serious, and a large recovery was clearly warranted, but the court concluded that it was too large, usually by comparison with the judgments upheld in other cases. (See Maede v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda (1931) 212 C. 419, 425, 298 P. 987 [$ 35,000 held excessive for loss of eye, reduced to $ 16,000]; Loeb v. Kimmerle (1932) 215 C. 143, 163, 9 P.2d 199; Lindemann v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1936) 5 C.2d 480, 509, 55 P.2d 870; Mondine v. Sarlin (1938) 11 C.2d 593, 599, 81 P.2d 903 [extensive and severe burns, requiring numerous skin grafts, and resulting in impaired functioning of right arm and hand; $ 20,000 held excessive, reduced to $ 10,000]; 50 A.L.R.4th 787 [excessiveness of damages for death of white-collar workers]; 52 A.L.R.4th 1 [excessiveness of damages for injuries causing mental or psychological harm].) (For abandonment of the comparison approach, see supra, §1743.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.130 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Serious injury with large recovery: See Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 C.A.4th 525, 548, 46 C.R.3d 147 [in vehicle accident case, jury's award of $ 118 million in noneconomic damages, even reduced to $ 70 million, was excessive; although motorist was vibrant 46-year-old wife and mother who was rendered paraplegic and lost control of bladder and bowel, award was about 13 times amount counsel requested, and jury may well have viewed as callous] question of manufacturer's counsel to husband indicating that family should find "silver lining" in situation].

81 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY

H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.

2. Excessive Damages.

b. Damages Held Excessive.

2. Injuries to or Death of Children.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1745

[§ 1745] Injuries to or Death of Children.

Where children were injured or killed, the courts originally showed some reluctance to uphold large awards. (See Babb v. Murray (1938) 26 C.A.2d 153, 156, 79 P.2d 159 [serious injuries to child of 31/2 months, $ 7,500 award reduced to $ 4,000; overruled in Capelouto v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1972) 7 C.3d 889, 103 C.R. 856, 500 P.2d 880, supra, §1674]; Hunton v. California Portland Cement Co. (1944) 64 C.A.2d 876, 882, 149 P.2d 471 [wrongful death, 17-year-old boy; verdict of $ 40,000, reduced by trial court to $ 18,000 and by appellate court to $ 10,000]; Gillett v. Gillett (1959) 168 C.A.2d 102, 108, 335 P.2d 736 [brutal beating of 8-year-old child by stepmother, resulting in removal of spleen and one kidney; $ 50,000 judgment reduced to $ 30,000]; cf. Criss v. Angelus Hosp. Assn. of Los Angeles (1936) 13 C.A.2d 412, 420, 56 P.2d 1274 [wrongful death of 12-day-old baby, $ 6,000 upheld]; Junge v. Midland Counties Public Service Corp. (1940) 38 C.A.2d 154, 160, 100 P.2d 1073 [13-year-old boy, severe burns, $ 35,000 upheld]; see 25 Cal. L. Rev. 103; 49 A.L.R.4th 1076 [excessiveness of damages for death of minor].)

A more liberal view on the loss suffered by the death of a young child was expressed in Tyson v. Romey (1948) 88 C.A.2d 752, 199 P.2d 721. The child was 5 years old, the jury awarded $ 25,000, the trial judge reduced this to $ 18,500, and the latter amount was upheld. The court said that "$ 18,500 might have indicated an excessive figure some years ago, but in view of subsequent verdicts the amount is not disproportionate, though this may be the highest award assessed in this state for the death of a 5-year-old child." (88 C.A.2d 757.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
b. Damages Held Excessive.
3. Intentional Torts.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1746

[§ 1746] Intentional Torts.

Although large awards of punitive damages are regularly upheld (see supra, §1611 et seq.), awards of compensatory damages for intentional torts are subject to the same test as those applied in negligence cases, and are occasionally found excessive. (See BMW of North America v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589, 1595, 134 L.Ed.2d 809, 822, supra, §1590 [$ 2 million damages award for fraudulent failure to disclose that car sold as new had suffered predelivery damage was unconstitutionally excessive]; Gill v. Epstein (1965) 62 C.2d 611, 616, 44 C.R. 45, 401 P.2d 397 [false arrest of plaintiff and unreasonable delay in taking him before magistrate; $ 16,390 general and special damages for few days of detention justified granting of new trial]; Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 C.3d 301, 308, 81 C.R. 855, 461 P.2d 39 [slander; actual damages demanded were $ 300, verdict was for $ 25,000]; Notrica v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1999) 70 C.A.4th 911, 951, 83 C.R.2d 89 [because defendant State Compensation Insurance Fund was required to return excessive reserves to its insureds, awarding one insured $ 20 million was excessive; award reduced to $ 5 million].) (On excessive awards of punitive damages, see supra, §§1612, 1621, 1622.)

In Merlo v. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 5, 130 C.R. 416, plaintiff received an award of $ 267,294.52 against defendant insurer, which unjustifiably failed to make payments under a home mortgage insurance policy (see supra, §459). The only substantial economic loss suffered by plaintiff was loss of the equity in his home ($ 7,470); the rest of the damages, over $ 250,000, were obviously given for emotional distress. The court declared that the evidence of plaintiff's suffering (see supra, §1622) could not support so large an award. (59 C.A.3d 16.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Horsford v. Board of Trustees of Calif. State University (2005) 132 C.A.4th 359, 386, 33 C.R.3d 644 [employment discrimination case in which substantial evidence supported trial court's reduction of both economic and noneconomic damages]; Grassilli v. Barr (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1260, 1291, 48 C.R.3d 715 [in motorist's civil rights action against CHP officers predicated on repeated stops after motorist made complaint about officers, punitive damages awards of $ 3 million against officer with net worth of $ 50,000 to $ 55,000 and annual salary of $ 60,000, and $ 1 million against other officer with net worth of $ 415,000 and retirement income of $ 60,000 per year, were financially ruinous and thus unreasonable].

83 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
c. Damages Held Not Excessive.
1. Negligent Personal Injuries.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1747

[§ 1747] Negligent Personal Injuries.

"A reviewing court does not ordinarily substitute its judgment for that of the jury and trial court, which have evaluated in terms of damages the pain, humiliation, disfigurement, and loss of earning capacity suffered by a plaintiff." (Johnston v. Long (1947) 30 C.2d 54, 76, 181 P.2d 645 [plaintiff's nose cut off, requiring painful plastic surgery for over 4 years; future operations faced and permanent disfigurement likely; $ 87,575 verdict was not excessive].) (See 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §811 et seq.; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 14; 12 A.L.R.4th 96 [injuries to arms and hands]; 13 A.L.R.4th 212 [injuries to legs and feet]; 48 A.L.R.5th 129 [injuries to trunk or torso, or internal injuries]; 50 A.L.R.4th 787 [death of white-collar workers]; 52 A.L.R.4th 1 [injuries causing mental or psychological harm].)

The following decisions are illustrative:

Kircher v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 176, 186, 195 P.2d 427 [air cadet, 23, good education and future, left hand nearly severed; $ 60,000].

Leming v. Oilfields Trucking Co. (1955) 44 C.2d 343, 356, 282 P.2d 23 [plaintiff, 47, life expectancy 23.08 years, monthly earnings after taxes $ 410.41; right leg amputated, left shortened, long hospitalization and serious pain, future permanent medical care and movement in wheelchair or on crutches; $ 213,460.22].

Cooksey v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1947) 78 C.A.2d 504, 508, 178 P.2d 69 [freight car conductor, 54, salary $ 500 per month, life expectancy 17.40 years, permanent back injuries with probable deformity, continual pain, and greatly weakened physical condition; $ 42,000].

Huggans v. Southern Pac. Co. (1949) 92 C.A.2d 599, 615, 207 P.2d 864 [12-year-old boy, loss of left leg and part of right foot; $ 91,000].

Gluckstein v. Lipsett (1949) 93 C.A.2d 391, 398, 209 P.2d 98 [plastic surgeon engaged by 50-year-old woman to raise her pendulous breasts and remove scar and excessive skin from abdomen; faulty technique left her body seriously disfigured and uncomfortable, with some possibility of malignant growths on her breasts; $ 115,000].

Sullivan v. San Francisco (1950) 95 C.A.2d 745, 758, 214 P.2d 82 [plaintiff, 21, life expectancy 44 years, earning $ 260 per month, married; serious injuries causing great pain, many operations, impotency, inability to do hard work; $ 125,000].

McNulty v. Southern Pac. Co. (1950) 96 C.A.2d 841, 848, 216 P.2d 534 [assistant bank cashier, 42 years old with 26 years' life expectancy, previous good health; both legs amputated, curtailed activity and business advancement lessened; $ 100,000].

Flynn v. Grand Cen. Public Market (1959) 176 C.A.2d 243, 249, 1 C.R. 237 [woman, injury to pelvis muscles, tissues, and nerves, with permanent serious effects, medical expense of $ 2,000; $ 20,000].

Henninger v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 872, 882, 59 C.R. 76 [29-year-old railroad conductor-brakeman who lost both legs high above the knee and will be confined to wheelchair for life; $ 650,000].

Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 C.A.3d 626, 636, 655, 151 C.R. 399 [catastrophic injuries to young man; $ 4,113,122.25 upheld].

Westphal v. Wal-Mart Stores (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1071, 1078, 81 C.R.2d 46 [where slip and fall resulted in permanent and persistent pain, there was no requirement of objective medical evidence to substantiate plaintiff's pain and suffering; $ 150,000].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

84 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
c. Damages Held Not Excessive.
2. Other Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1748

[§ 1748] Other Cases.

Decisions dealing with various torts have affirmed substantial awards of compensatory and punitive damages.

(1) Battery. (See Estrada v. Orwitz (1946) 75 C.A.2d 54, 60, 170 P.2d 43 [verdict of $ 4,000 against dentist for extraction of five teeth without consent, on testimony of plaintiff, age 31, that they were all good teeth]; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 C.A.2d 249, 263, 171 P.2d 85 [verdict of $ 10,000 for compensatory and exemplary damages, on evidence that plaintiff was severely beaten and ejected from theatre, suffering permanent injuries]; Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 254, 219 P.2d 928, supra, §476 [plaintiff beaten and kicked; $ 25,000 compensatory, and punitive damages against 3 defendants--$ 4,500, $ 1,000, $ 2,500]; Helms v. Thomas (1953) 120 C.A.2d 265, 269, 260 P.2d 1016 [verdict of $ 30,000 to 29-year-old plaintiff permanently deprived of hearing in right ear and lost sense of equilibrium in middle ear].)

(2) False Imprisonment. (See Gibson v. J.C. Penney Co. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 640, 647, 331 P.2d 1057 [detention of woman for 40 minutes, with search of parcels by detective and of partially disrobed person by sales girl, resulting in headaches, emotional distress; $ 5,000]; Washington v. Farlice (1991) 1 C.A.4th 766, 774, 2 C.R.2d 607 [plaintiff arrested at gunpoint, thrown to ground, accused of stealing car, and detained for 4 hours; $ 10,000].)

(3) Malicious Prosecution. (See Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises, supra, 98 C.A.2d 256 [$ 10,350 compensatory, $ 2,500 punitive]; Sierra Club Foundation v. Graham (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1135, 1158, 85 C.R.2d 726 [compensatory--$ 672,638, punitive--$ 2,017,914 (slightly in excess of 2% of defendant's net worth); defendant's reprehensibility shown by his disbelief in underlying charges and his strategy of extracting settlement on his terms while bringing negative attention to plaintiff during its centennial fund-raising campaign]; 50 A.L.R.4th 843 [excessiveness and inadequacy of damages for malicious prosecution].)

(4) Defamation. (See Stoneking v. Briggs (1967) 254 C.A.2d 563, 580, 62 C.R. 249, supra, §553 [plaintiff had been union officer and served in various public offices; after slander he was subject of unfriendly comment and was unable to obtain employment in his trade; $ 22,000]; 49 A.L.R.4th 1158 [inadequacy and excessiveness of damages for defamation].)

(5) Wrongful Death. (See Brown v. Boehm (1947) 78 C.A.2d 595, 602, 178 P.2d 49 [painter, 61, doing odd jobs and earning $ 2,000-$ 3,000 per year, life expectancy 13.47 years, left widow, 54, and five adult children; $ 25,000]; Martin v. Mansfeldt (1950) 100 C.A.2d 327, 328, 223 P.2d 501 [wife, 38, expectancy of 28 years, earning $ 75 to $ 80 per week, affectionate and devoted, good housekeeper; $ 36,566.17 to husband with expectancy of 27 years]; Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 303, 320, 239 P.2d 48 [army sergeant with $ 330 total monthly pay, life expectancy 34 years; $ 100,000 to widow (35) and daughter (71/2 years)]; Burke v. San Francisco (1952) 111 C.A.2d 314, 324, 244 P.2d 708 [wife, expectancy of 23 years, small income from outside work, devoted to family; $ 50,000 to husband, adult son, and adult daughter]; DiRosario v. Havens (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1224, 1241, 242 C.R. 423 [minor daughter as part of close-knit family unit; $ 2 million to parents]; Wright v. Los Angeles (1990) 219 C.A.3d 318, 356, 268 C.R. 309 [20-year-old son; $ 2 million to parents and brother and sister]; 46 A.L.R.4th 220 [farmer]; 47 A.L.R.4th 100 [housewife]; 47 A.L.R.4th 134 [blue-collar worker]; 48 A.L.R.4th 229 [retired person]; 49 A.L.R.4th 1076 [minor]; 50 A.L.R.4th 787 [white-collar worker]; 61 A.L.R.4th 309 [adequacy of damages awarded for noneconomic loss resulting from injury or death of spouse].)

(6) Violation of Statutory Duty. (See Pintor v. Ong (1989) 211 C.A.3d 837, 846, 259 C.R. 577, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §141 [award of $ 15,000 for plaintiff's emotional distress resulting from defendants' refusal to execute certificate of discharge or deed of reconveyance pursuant to C.C. 2941].)

(7) Sexual Harassment. (See Bihun v. AT&T Information Systems (1993) 13 C.A.4th 976, 995, 16 C.R.2d 787 [award of $ 686,000 for loss of future earnings and $ 662,000 for emotional distress].)

(8) Child Molestation. (See Ortega v. Pajaro Valley Unified School Dist. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1023, 1059, 75 C.R.2d 777, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §293 [victim awarded $ 50,000 in economic damages and $ 1.5 million in noneconomic damages; her father's award in these categories was $ 12,500 and $ 100,000, respectively].)

(9) Emotional Distress. (See Saret-Cook v. Gilbert, Kelly, Crowley & Jennett (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1211, 1230, 88 C.R.2d 732 [relentless harassment of other party to failed law office romance, resulting in substantial psychological distress, physical effects, and loss of partnership and family home; compensatory damages of $ 450,000 were not excessive].)

(10) Retaliation for Filing Claim Under FEHA. (See Iwekaogwu v. Los Angeles (1999) 75 C.A.4th 803, 820, 89 C.R.2d 505 [damage award of $ 500,000, only about $ 10,000 of which could have been for economic damages, was proper where jury could have found that plaintiff needed psychiatric help and was suffering from such emotional distress that his capacity to enjoy life and engage in ordinary activities was significantly altered].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(6) Violation of Statutory Duty.

Pintor case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §146.(7) Sexual Harassment. See Hope v. California Youth Authority (2005) 134 C.A.4th 577, 594, 36 C.R.3d 154 [gay employee brought action for sexual orientation harassment; award of $ 917,104 in economic damages and $ 1 million in noneconomic damages upheld].

(8) Child Molestation.

Ortega case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §310.

85 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
2. Excessive Damages.
d. Judgment by Default.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1749

[§ 1749] Judgment by Default.

In Uva v. Evans (1978) 83 C.A.3d 356, 147 C.R. 795, plaintiffs, a minor child and her father, sued for damages suffered when the child was bitten by defendant's dog. Her medical expenses were $ 182, and an estimated $ 2,100 would cover brief hospitalization and plastic surgery to remove a scar. The trial judge gave judgment for $ 30,000, an amount obviously excessive in the light of the evidence, and the judgment was reversed for a new trial on the issue of damages. (83 C.A.3d 365.) The difficulty with the case was its procedural aspect, and the court decided one significant point and left another undecided. Defendant, served with a summons and complaint praying for $ 30,000 damages, ignored the process; he likewise ignored the service of a request to enter a default and a request to enter a default judgment. At the ex parte hearing on the default, plaintiffs testified to the facts, and judgment was entered in the amount of the demand. Defendant's subsequent motion to set aside the default judgment under C.C.P. 473 was denied for lack of an adequate showing of excusable neglect, and this appeal followed.

(a) Effect of improper prayer for amount of damages. C.C.P. 425.10 prohibits a specific statement of the amount of damages demanded in personal injury or wrongful death actions, and C.C.P. 425.11 allows the defendant to request a statement as to the nature and amount of damages being sought and then requires notice by the plaintiff of that amount before a default may be taken. (See 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §472.) Defendant could have moved to strike the improper prayer (83 C.A.3d 360, footnote 2), but failed to do so. Instead he contended on appeal that (1) because C.C.P. 425.10 precludes a demand for a specific sum, and (2) C.C.P. 580 limits damages recoverable on a default to the amount demanded (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §124), a default judgment in a personal injury or wrongful death case can only be a determination of liability and not of damages. (83 C.A.3d 360.) In refusing to decide this issue the court said: "Right or wrong, the complaint filed and served herein did contain a recitation of the damages sought and the judgment did not exceed the amount requested. In this case, section 580 was fully complied with. Moreover, the amount of damages sought was contained in every piece of paper which plaintiff served on defendant; thus defendant suffered no conceivable prejudice from the procedure followed here." (83 C.A.3d 360.)

(b) Appellate court's power to review issue of excessive damages awarded in default judgment. Sufficiency of the evidence is not reviewable on an appeal from a default judgment (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §355), and plaintiff argued that excessiveness of damages--in essence a question of sufficiency of evidence (see supra, §1741)--cannot be considered by the appellate court on such an appeal. Although the court found no explicit authority in point, it found a persuasive analogy in Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 C.A.2d 461, 467, 250 P.2d 270, a case involving a treble damage award. (83 C.A.3d 363.) And two strong reasons of policy were declared in support of the power of review:

(1) The review of a trier of fact's determination of damages "is severely circumscribed"; i.e., only where it is so out of proportion to the evidence that "it shocks the conscience" of the court will it be overturned. "A rule precluding review of damages on appeal from a default judgment would consequently protect the award precisely in those cases in which review is most necessary--that is, where the damages awarded are totally unconscionable and without evidentiary justification." (83 C.A.3d 363, 364.)

(2) The right to appellate review of the issue flows logically from the fact that damages must be proved in the trial court before the default judgment may be entered (C.C.P. 585(b); see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §146). "The requirement of proof of damages is meaningless if it can be fulfilled by any evidence, even evidence which results in a judgment prompted by 'passion, prejudice or corruption.' ... While the role of the appellate court in reviewing damages is much more limited than that of the trial court reviewing a jury verdict, the policies which sanction such review are not dissimilar: just as the trial court need not sit idly by and watch injustice be done through an improper award by the jury, we know of no statutory or constitutional barrier which requires an appellate court to ignore gross injustice in the award of damages simply because the judgment was procured by way of default." (83 C.A.3d 364.) (See Cummings Med. Corp. v. Occupational Med. Corp. (1992) 10 C.A.4th 1291, 1297, 13 C.R.2d 585 [following Uva v. Evans]; Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(24) [form for statement of damages in personal injury and wrongful death cases].)

C.C.P. 425.10 also prohibits a statement of the punitive damages sought. (See 11 Pacific L. J. 352.) However, the plaintiff may preserve the right to seek punitive damages on a default judgment by serving on the defendant a statement as to the amount of these damages. Thus, where the motion for default judgment includes a request for punitive damages, the plaintiff must serve the statement on the defendant before a default may be taken. This statement may be served as part of the statement required by C.C.P. 425.11. (C.C.P. 425.115; see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §135.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Statement of damages:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §511.

Limit on recoverable damages:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §149.

Sufficiency of evidence is not reviewable:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §361.

Damages must be proved in trial court:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §169. Judicial Council Form No. 982(a)(24) [form for statement of damages in personal injury and death cases] was redesignated Judicial Council Form No. CIV-050 in 2006.

Statement of damages:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §159.

86 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
3. Inadequate Damages.
a. Damages Held Inadequate.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1750

[§ 1750] Damages Held Inadequate.

Occasionally, a judgment will be reversed because the award disregards specific items of pecuniary loss established by the evidence. (See Price v. McComish (1937) 22 C.A.2d 92, 99, 70 P.2d 978 [$ 200 given for personal injuries, but medical expenses were over three times this amount, and other elements of damage were shown].)

The majority of the cases, however, are those in which the award is found to be inadequate on a fair consideration of the evidence. In Bencich v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 518, 67 P.2d 398, a fireman received bruises, a fracture, and a crushed foot, spent 6 months in the hospital and suffered amputation of part of the foot, which required the use of a special brace, and spent $ 2,423.37 for medical services. An award of $ 5,000 was held grossly inadequate, and the judgment was reversed despite the trial court's refusal to grant a new trial. (20 C.A.2d 529.) (See Frantz v. McLaughlin (1966) 64 C.2d 622, 624, 51 C.R. 282, 414 P.2d 410 [serious and permanent injury to foot, only $ 1,900 for general damages]; Peri v. Culley (1931) 119 C.A. 117, 120, 6 P.2d 86 [extensive injuries, long hospitalization, $ 2,500]; Amore v. Di Resta (1932) 125 C.A. 410, 413, 13 P.2d 986 [wrongful death of 30-year-old man in perfect health, leaving wife and two young children, $ 1,000]; Bauman v. San Francisco (1940) 42 C.A.2d 144, 159, 108 P.2d 989 [child, fractured skull and serious subsequent disabilities, $ 1,500]; Weiskopf v. Smith (1941) 44 C.A.2d 438, 440, 112 P.2d 665 [18-year-old girl, cheek wound, and disfigurement, $ 100]; Wilson v. San Francisco (1951) 106 C.A.2d 440, 443, 235 P.2d 81, supra, §1697; Reznick v. Hillman-Sidney Auto Sales (1963) 216 C.A.2d 569, 574, 30 C.R. 889 [plaintiff sustained back injury, liability conceded; verdict of $ 200 was inadequate where special damages aggregated $ 2,674.50]; Doyle v. Hamren (1966) 246 C.A.2d 733, 735, 739, 55 C.R. 84 [wrongful death, verdict for $ 51,427.75; decedent with substantial earning power and life expectancy of 44 years; order granting new trial on damages alone affirmed]; Gallentine v. Richardson (1967) 248 C.A.2d 152, 154, 155, 56 C.R. 237, quoting the text [verdict for exact amount of special damages, where substantial general damages suffered]; Haskins v. Holmes (1967) 252 C.A.2d 580, 587, 60 C.R. 659 [assault and battery, severe injuries and pain; medical expense $ 911.37, verdict for $ 1,000; i.e., only $ 88.63 general damages]; Smith v. Moffat (1977) 73 C.A.3d 86, 94, 140 C.R. 566 [wrongful death of mother of 11/2-year-old child; $ 4,030.66 general damages awarded despite uncontradicted testimony that present value of economic loss until age 18 was $ 168,000]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §§824, 825.)

A number of annotations deal with the adequacy of damages. (See 11 A.L.R.3d 370 [injuries to head or neck]; 12 A.L.R.3d 475 [injuries to organic systems and processes]; 12 A.L.R.4th 96 [injuries to arms and hands]; 13 A.L.R.4th 212 [injuries to legs and feet]; 14 A.L.R.4th 539 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, circulatory, digestive, and glandular systems]; 15 A.L.R.4th 294 [injuries to back, neck, or spine]; 15 A.L.R.4th 519 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, respiratory system]; 16 A.L.R.4th 1127 [injuries to, or conditions induced in, sensory or speech organs and systems]; 52 A.L.R.4th 1 [injuries causing mental or psychological harm]; 48 A.L.R.5th 129 [injuries to trunk or torso, or internal injuries]; 50 A.L.R.5th 1 [injuries to head or brain]; 51 A.L.R.5th 467 [injuries to nerves or nervous system]; and see A.L.R. Notes, supra, §§1741, 1747.)

If the liability is undisputed or clear, the reversal may be for a limited new trial on the issue of damages. But where the evidence of liability is so doubtful or sharply conflicting as to indicate a compromise verdict, the reversal will be general. (See Clifford v. Ruocco (1952) 39 C.2d 327, 329, 246 P.2d 651 [$ 1,500 award where special damages alone were over $ 2,000]; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §779.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.127, 128

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Dodson v. J. Pacific (2007) 154 C.A.4th 931, 935, 64 C.R.3d 920 [plaintiff was injured in fall caused by defendant's negligence; damages award that included nothing for pain and suffering was inadequate where plaintiff had surgery in which herniated disc was removed and metallic plate inserted]. Annotations: See 14 A.L.R.6th 263 [inadequacy or excessiveness of damage awards against drunk drivers].

Limited or general reversal:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §§890, 891.

87 of 87 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
XVIII. DAMAGES: KINDS OF INJURY
H. Excessive and Inadequate Damages.
3. Inadequate Damages.
b. Small Awards Upheld.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 1751

[§ 1751] Small Awards Upheld.

Most of the decisions in which awards that seem inadequate are upheld involve insufficient or conflicting evidence on the elements of damage. Following the usual practice, the appellate court accepts the determination of the jury or trial judge. (See, e.g., Knight v. Fitch (1937) 22 C.A.2d 252, 255, 70 P.2d 976 [15-year-old girl received cuts on eye and lip, lost six teeth, suffered fractured jaw, and incurred medical expense of $ 150; trial court's judgment of $ 950 affirmed]; Sassano v. Roullard (1938) 27 C.A.2d 372, 376, 81 P.2d 213 [7-year-old boy cut on forehead and nose by flying glass, permanent scar; verdict of $ 250 upheld after judge denied new trial]; Gersick v. Shilling (1950) 97 C.A.2d 641, 645, 218 P.2d 583 [conflicting evidence about severity and permanency of injuries]; Lemere v. Safeway Stores (1951) 102 C.A.2d 712, 715, 228 P.2d 296 [$ 7,500 to woman who suffered leg, hand, and head injuries, with long hospitalization and wheel chair; jury could believe she grossly exaggerated both injuries and present condition]; Frampton v. Stoloff (1956) 142 C.A.2d 175, 176, 298 P.2d 10 [suit for $ 35,000, verdict for $ 250; no evidence of plaintiff's past or possible future earnings, and medical testimony of old mental trouble as cause of most of hospitalization]; Abbott v. Taz Express (1998) 67 C.A.4th 853, 856, 79 C.R.2d 360 [award of $ 17,000 economic damages was adequate even though expert testified that cost to retrain plaintiff was $ 115,000; jury, asked to award single amount for economic damages, may have decided to award no retraining costs]; 22 Am.Jur.2d (2003 ed.), Damages §811.)

In Miller v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1963) 212 C.A.2d 555, 28 C.R. 126, an action for personal injuries resulting from electric shock, the verdict was in the exact amount of the claimed medical expenses, $ 1,133.18. Held, it was not inadequate as a matter of law, for there was substantial conflict whether the medical treatment was necessary as well as whether plaintiff received any substantial injury or suffered any substantial pain. (212 C.A.2d 558.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.127, 128

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]