In Herndon v. Marin (1972) 25 C.A.3d 933, 102 C.R. 221, plaintiff had been cited for two misdemeanor traffic violations. After trial, he was acquitted of one charge but found guilty of the other and assessed a fine, which he paid. Subsequently, through the negligence of a clerk or the district attorney, a warrant was issued on the basis of the same traffic violations, and plaintiff was arrested. In this action for damages against the county, the sheriff, and a deputy sheriff, judgment for defendants on demurrer was affirmed. Plaintiff's theory was that the deputy sheriff who made the arrest had knowledge of the fact that the warrant had been improperly issued. But this alleged knowledge of extrinsic facts would not support a cause of action for false arrest, for C.C. 43.5(a) (now C.C. 45.55) exempts the officer from liability where the warrant is regular on its face. "It is not his duty to investigate the procedure which led to the issuance of the warrant, nor is there any obligation on his part to pass judgment upon the judicial act of issuing the warrant or to reflect upon the legal effect of the adjudication. On the contrary, it is his duty to make the arrest." (25 C.A.3d 936.) A peace officer "is not to be held responsible for complying with his precept." (25 C.A.3d 938, citing the text.) This is so even though the arresting officer refuses to make a requested inquiry about a mistaken issuance of the warrant. (25 C.A.3d 939.)

West's Key Number Digest, False Imprisonment k.7(3), 11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C. 43.55 was subdivided in 2005. The material discussed in the text is now in C.C. 43.55(a).

62 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

4. Arrest With Warrant.

bb. Warrant Defective on Face.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 442

[§ 442] Warrant Defective on Face.

An arrest under a warrant that is defective on its face is actionable. The requisites of "regularity" on the fact of a warrant were discussed in Allison v. Ventura (1977) 68 C.A.3d 689, 137 C.R. 542. Plaintiff alleged that a bench warrant had been issued as a result of her failure to appear in a domestic relations case; that the warrant was outstanding for over 3 years when she was arrested and imprisoned for many hours; and that she suffered emotional distress. The case file revealed that the warrant had been issued for the purpose of setting bail, that she eventually appeared, and that the warrant was recalled. Held, a cause of action for false imprisonment was stated against defendant county. Under Sullivan v. Los Angeles (1974) 12 C.3d 710, 117 C.R. 241, 527 P.2d 865, supra, §§246, 369, the general immunity of Govt.C. 821.6 (institution or prosecution of judicial proceeding within scope of employment; supra, §368) does not bar actions for false arrest, and imprisonment, and C.C. 43.5(a) (now C.C. 43.55) was not a defense under the facts alleged.

(a) The contention of plaintiff that the warrant was irregular on its face because served after more than 3 years cannot be accepted; and the "reasonableness" standard of the statute is stated only in connection with the officer's belief that he is arresting the right person. (68 C.A.3d 699.) But timeliness of service may be relevant. "It appears to us that the employment by an officer of a long-outstanding warrant of arrest to effect an arrest may, by taking into account all of the circumstances, including the lack of timeliness, establish 'malice.'" (68 C.A.3d 700.) Hence, plaintiff should be permitted to amend her complaint to allege malice. (68 C.A.3d 700.)

(b) The California Constitution and statutes place severe limitations on the authority of police officers to arrest on a warrant issued in a civil action. (68 C.A.3d 701.) A bench warrant, calling for a body attachment, may issue to compel answer to a charge of contempt, or for failure of a witness to obey a subpoena; but it must specify the nature of the contempt or the reason for the attachment. (68 C.A.3d 702.)

(c) The warrant in the instant case did not set bail or specify the basis for the arrest, and permitted arrest during day or night, with potentially long hours of incarceration before bail could be set. (68 C.A.3d 703.) It did not, therefore, meet legally imposed requirements, and was not regular on its face. (68 C.A.3d 703.)

(d) "The case law supporting the immunity of peace officers ... has interpreted 'regularity' on the face of the warrant as encompassing everything but the most blatant of errors, presumably on the ground that it takes a legally trained mind to ascertain the legal adequacy of a particular warrant. Peace officers are not required to investigate the supportive legal proceedings from which a warrant issues. However, they are required to exercise the judgment of an 'ordinarily intelligent and informed layman's to observe the blatant and patent inadequacy of a warrant emanating from a civil action which directs arrest and neither sets bail nor informs the arrestee of the offense charged for which arrest is ordered." (68 C.A.3d 703.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Definition of warrant regular on face: C.C. 43.55(b), added in 2005, defines a "warrant of arrest regular upon its face" to include either (1) a paper arrest warrant issued pursuant to a judicial order or (2) a judicial order entered into an automated warrant system by law enforcement or court personnel authorized to make those entries at or near the time the judicial order is made.

63 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

b. Arrest.

4. Arrest With Warrant.

cc. Arrest of Wrong Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 443

[§ 443] Arrest of Wrong Person.

(1) Former Law. Formerly, the officer was ordinarily required to exercise care to ascertain the identity of the party named in the warrant, and if the officer negligently arrested the wrong person, he or she was liable. In Walton v. Will (1944) 66 C.A.2d 509, 152 P.2d 639, plaintiff, who bore the same name as the person charged with the crime, but did not entirely fit the description furnished, was arrested by defendant, who disregarded plaintiff's offer to prove his nonidentity by driving a short distance to the home of his former wife. Held, the arrest was not privileged, because the simple investigation urged would have shown plaintiff's innocence. (66 C.A.2d 513.) (See 18 So. Cal. L. Rev. 162.)

(2) Statutory Rule. The rule of the foregoing decision, however, was changed in 1945, by the enactment of C.C. 43.5(a) (now C.C. 43.55). The statute renders the peace officer immune from liability for an arrest pursuant to a warrant regular on its face if the officer "acts without malice and in the reasonable belief that the person arrested is the one referred to in the warrant." This is substantially the language of the Torts Restatement (Rest.2d, Torts §125(a)), and doubtless makes applicable the liberal Restatement theory (Rest.2d, Torts §125(a), Comment f) that the officer under a duty to serve the warrant is entitled to rely on the name given in the warrant, unless convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that a mistake has been made. (See 39 A.L.R.4th 705 [liability for false arrest under warrant as affected by mistake as to identity].)

(3) Absence of Malice. "Where the arrest is made with malice ... no immunity attaches, whether or not the arrest was made pursuant to warrant or legal process." (Harden v. San Francisco Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 7, 15, 263 C.R. 549 [officer provided false information forming basis for warrant under which plaintiff was arrested].)

(4) Reasonableness of Belief in Identity. Reasonableness of the arresting officer's belief in the arrested person's identity is a question of fact. (Robinson v. San Francisco (1974) 41 C.A.3d 334, 337, 116 C.R. 125 [summary judgment for defendants reversed]; Milliken v. South Pasadena (1979) 96 C.A.3d 834, 840, 158 C.R. 409; Laible v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 44, 52, 203 C.R. 513; see Bell v. California (1998) 63 C.A.4th 919, 927, 74 C.R.2d 541 [denial of defense motions for nonsuit and directed verdict was proper; evidence that plaintiff's description did not match photo in arresting officers' possession and that he was over 10 years older than person named in warrant was sufficient to show unreasonableness].)

In Lopez v. Oxnard (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1, 254 C.R. 556, a person arrested for drunk driving gave plaintiff's name, address, and date of birth as his own, and when the person failed to appear in court, a warrant was issued for his arrest. After plaintiff was arrested on this warrant, the court provided him with a "disposition sheet" to carry with him, stating that he was not the person described in the warrant. Nevertheless, plaintiff was arrested two more times by officers who refused to investigate the validity of the disposition sheet, and he sued for false imprisonment. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Because the warrant accurately described plaintiff, defendants had a reasonable belief that the arrest was lawful. (207 C.A.3d 8.) There is no factual question whether the officers had a reasonable belief that plaintiff was the person named in the warrant; hence, the judgment on demurrer was proper. (207 C.A.3d 9.)

(b) Although the personnel at the jail are not in the same situation as officers on the street, they were also justified in ignoring the disposition sheet. Jail personnel are entitled to rely on process and orders apparently valid on their face. (207 C.A.3d 9.) Here they simply refused to look behind a valid warrant to investigate the validity of a piece of paper handed to them by plaintiff. (207 C.A.3d 11.)

West's Key Number Digest, False Imprisonment k.11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

64 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY
B. False Imprisonment.
2. Privilege.
b. Arrest.
5. Mechanics of Arrest.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 444

[§ 444] Mechanics of Arrest.

(1) Informing Arrested Person. Ordinarily, "[t]he person making the arrest must inform the person to be arrested of the intention to arrest him, of the cause of the arrest, and the authority to make it." Exceptions are recognized when "the person making the arrest has reasonable cause to believe that the person to be arrested is actually engaged in the commission of or an attempt to commit an offense" and when "the person to be arrested is pursued immediately after its commission, or after an escape." (P.C. 841; see Rest.2d, Torts §128 [manifestation of intention to arrest].) (On use of force to overcome resistance to arrest, see P.C. 835a; Rest.2d, Torts §131 et seq.; and supra, §424.)

(2) Showing Warrant. "An arrest by a peace officer acting under a warrant is lawful even though the officer does not have the warrant in his possession at the time of the arrest, but if the person arrested so requests it, the warrant shall be shown to him as soon as practicable." (P.C. 842.) (Cf. Rest.2d, Torts §126 [officer must show warrant on demand].)

(3) Search of Arrested Person. The authority of a police officer to make a reasonable search of the arrested person and the area where the person is found, as an incident to the arrest, has long been established, but the concept of reasonableness has caused much controversy. The issue generally arises in connection with the admissibility in evidence of material taken during the search. (For full discussion of search incident to arrest, see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §143 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

65 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

c. Conduct After Arrest.

1. Delayed Taking Before Magistrate.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 445

[§ 445] Delayed Taking Before Magistrate.

It is a general rule, recognized in several statutes, that a police officer or private person making an arrest, with or without a warrant, must without unnecessary delay take the arrested person before a committing magistrate, to be charged with the offense and have bail set. (See P.C. 145 [wilful delay is misdemeanor]; P.C. 821 et seq. [arrest with warrant]; P.C. 847, 849 [arrest without warrant]; on requirement of timely taking before magistrate generally, see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §§47, 65 et seq.) Any unnecessary delay, even for a few hours, may amount to false imprisonment. (Vernon v. Plumas Lumber Co. (1925) 71 C.A. 112, 117, 234 P. 869; Williams v. Zelzah Warehouse Co. (1932) 126 C.A. 28, 30, 14 P.2d 177; Kaufman v. Brown (1949) 93 C.A.2d 508, 511, 209 P.2d 156; see Dragna v. White (1955) 45 C.2d 469, 472, 289 P.2d 428 [2-day limit of P.C. 825 for taking before magistrate "in any event" is not an authorization; lesser delay may be unreasonable]; 21 Cal. L. Rev. 175; 39 Cal. L. Rev. 113; 26 Proof of Facts 2d 617 [false imprisonment where delayed taking before magistrate]; cf. Ogulin v. Jeffries (1953) 121 C.A.2d 211, 217, 263 P.2d 75 [detention overnight and morning, where magistrate was 25 miles from jail and plaintiff did not protest, was reasonable].)

The right may be waived. In Gorlack v. Ferrari (1960) 184 C.A.2d 702, 7 C.R. 699, plaintiff, a woman charged with stealing a ring, was held in jail for more than 36 hours. However, it appeared that the detective in charge told her she could call an attorney and be released on bail, but also offered to speed up the investigation, which might effect her release without a formal charge and save her the cost of bail bond and attorney's fee. She assented. Held, the trial court could find that she acquiesced in the delay and was not entitled to complain. (184 C.A.2d 710.)

West's Key Number Digest, False Imprisonment k.5, 11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

66 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

c. Conduct After Arrest.

2. Trespass Ab Initio Doctrine Repudiated.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 446

[§ 446] Trespass Ab Initio Doctrine Repudiated.

If unreasonable detention or any other unprivileged conduct, such as physical violence, occurs after a lawful arrest, the arresting person is of course liable. Under the ancient doctrine of trespass ab initio, the subsequent misconduct relates back so as to make the original act wrongful as well, and to impose liability and additional damages for false imprisonment, despite the fact that the arrest itself was privileged. This doctrine was applied in Peckham v. Warner Bros. Pictures (1939) 36 C.A.2d 214, 218, 97 P.2d 472, and its statement was quoted without disapproval in Kaufman v. Brown (1949) 93 C.A.2d 508, 513, 209 P.2d 156. (See 28 Cal. L. Rev. 647; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 266.)

The modern view, set forth in the Torts Restatement (see Rest.2d, Torts §136) is contra. The defendant is liable only for the harm caused by the excessive confinement or other subsequent misconduct. And this position was taken by the Supreme Court, citing the Restatement and disapproving the treatment of this issue in the Peckham and Kaufman cases: "We are satisfied that the better rule is that where the arrest is lawful, subsequent unreasonable delay in taking the person before a magistrate will not affect the legality of the arrest, although it will subject the offending person to liability for so much of the imprisonment as occurs after the period of necessary or reasonable delay." (Dragna v. White (1955) 45 C.2d 469, 473, 289 P.2d 428.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

67 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

- B. False Imprisonment.
 - 2. Privilege.
 - c. Conduct After Arrest.
- 3. Release of Arrested Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 447

[§ 447] Release of Arrested Person.

When, despite reasonable cause, the arrest turns out to be mistaken or criminal proceedings are undesirable, the arresting officer is provided a statutory means of escaping liability for failure to take the arrested person before a magistrate. "Any peace officer may release from custody, instead of taking such person before a magistrate, any person arrested without a warrant whenever: (1) He or she is satisfied that there are insufficient grounds for making a criminal complaint against the person arrested. (2) The person arrested was arrested for intoxication only, and no further proceedings are desirable. (3) The person was arrested only for being under the influence of a controlled substance or drug and such person is delivered to a facility or hospital for treatment and no further proceedings are desirable." (P.C. 849(b).) After the person's release, the arrest "shall not be deemed an arrest, but a detention only." (P.C. 849(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

68 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

B. False Imprisonment.

2. Privilege.

d. Furnishing Information Leading to Arrest.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 448

[§ 448] Furnishing Information Leading to Arrest.

One who maliciously instigates or participates in an unlawful arrest or imprisonment may be liable. (Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 C.A.2d 713, 176 P.2d 372; see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 595; 98 A.L.R.3d 542 [liability of private citizen calling on police for false arrest by officer]; 99 A.L.R.3d 1113 [liability for negligently causing arrest or prosecution of another]; on negligent infliction of emotional distress from report causing arrest, see infra, §1033.)

However, any person has a right or privilege to make a complaint or furnish information to police officers (for arrest without a warrant) or to a magistrate (for issuance of a warrant), and is not liable for false arrest or imprisonment if an arrest is made on a mistaken identification or insufficient grounds. (Gogue v. MacDonald (1950) 35 C.2d 482, 484, 218 P.2d 542; Hughes v. Oreb (1951) 36 C.2d 854, 859, 228 P.2d 550; Turner v. Mellon (1953) 41 C.2d 45, 48, 257 P.2d 15; Peterson v. Robison (1954) 43 C.2d 690, 695, 277 P.2d 19, supra, §439; Wilson v. Los Angeles (1971) 21 C.A.3d 308, 316, 98 C.R. 525; see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 595; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 483; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 396; 39 A.L.R.4th 705 [liability for false arrest under warrant as affected by mistake as to identity].) Such a communication is absolutely privileged. (Hagberg v. California Federal Bank FSB (2004) 32 C.4th 350, 355, 360, 7 C.R.3d 803, 81 P.3d 244, infra, §582; Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 C.4th 384, 387, 7 C.R.3d 828, 81 P.3d 264.) On the other hand, a citizen's arrest is conduct, not communication, and thus not protected by the privilege. (Wang v. Hartunian (2003) 111 C.A.4th 744, 747, 3 C.R.3d 909; Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1128, 1137, 15 C.R.3d 118.)

West's Key Number Digest, False Imprisonment k.7(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Citizen's arrest is not privileged: See Buchanan v. Maxfield Enterprises (2005) 130 C.A.4th 418, 423, 29 C.R.3d 909 [citizen's arrest performed by store employee to remove customer from premises was conduct, not communication, and thus not privileged; following Wang v. Hartunian (2003) 111 C.A.4th 744, 3 C.R.3d 909, text, p. 667].

69 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

1. Independent Tort.

a. Classification and Development.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 449

[§ 449] Classification and Development.

(1) Classification of Situations Where Emotional Distress Compensable. The subject of emotional distress falls under these headings:

(a) An element of damages suffered from a conventional tort with or without physical injury. (See infra, §1671 et seq.)

(b) A basis for the tort of negligence. (See infra, §1004 et seq.)

(c) A basis for an independent intentional tort. (See infra, §450 et seq.)

(2) Early Law. The courts were long reluctant to allow damages for "fright and shock" or other emotional upset without accompanying physical injury, unless the defendant's act constituted an established tort such as assault, battery, false imprisonment, trespass, defamation, or invasion of privacy. (See Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 C.2d 109, 120, 130 P.2d 389; State Rubbish Collectors Assn. v. Siliznoff (1952) 38 C.2d 330, 336, 240 P.2d 282, infra, §461; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §303; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §9.1; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 242; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 41; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 530; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 440.) However, liability for humiliation resulting from improper conduct amounting to extreme outrage was imposed on carriers and innkeepers, as a result of their special obligations assumed toward members of the public. (See Sloane v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1896) 111 C. 668, 683, 44 P. 320 [wrongful ejection from train]; Rest.2d, Torts §48; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 59; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 443.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.48 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Early Law. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.1.

70 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY
C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

1. Independent Tort.
- b. Protected Interest in Peace of Mind.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 450

[§ 450] Protected Interest in Peace of Mind.

Peace of mind is now recognized as a legally protected interest, the intentional invasion of which is an independent wrong, giving rise to liability without the necessity of showing the elements of any of the traditional torts. The Torts Restatement, which formerly contained the older rule (supra, §449), was amended in 1947 to state the liability of one who, without a privilege, intentionally or recklessly causes "severe emotional distress" to another by "extreme and outrageous conduct." (Rest.2d, Torts §46; see C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §11.61; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §303 et seq.; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §9.1; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress, Chap. 14; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 40; 49 Harv. L. Rev. 1033; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 440; 13 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1; 15 A.L.R.2d 108 [civil liability for insulting or abusive language not amounting to defamation]; 38 A.L.R.4th 998 [intentional infliction of emotional distress as independent tort]; 38 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Fright, Shock, and Mental Disturbance §1; 43 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [intentional infliction of emotional distress]; BAJI, No. 12.70 et seq.; CACI, No. 1600 et seq.)

California has fully accepted the modern doctrine. (See State Rubbish Collectors Assn. v. Siliznoff (1952) 38 C.2d 330, 336, 240 P.2d 282, infra, §461 ["cause of action is established when it is shown that one, in the absence of any privilege, intentionally subjects another to the mental suffering incident to serious threats to his physical well-being, whether or not the threats are made under such circumstances as to constitute a technical assault"]; Alcorn v. Anbro Engineering (1970) 2 C.3d 493, 497, 86 C.R. 88, 468 P.2d 216, infra, §461; Bowden v. Spiegel (1950) 96 C.A.2d 793, 795, 216 P.2d 571 ["The important elements are that the act is intentional, that it is unreasonable, and that the actor should recognize it as likely to result in illness"]; Richardson v. Pridmore (1950) 97 C.A.2d 124, 129, 217 P.2d 113; Guillory v. Godfrey (1955) 134 C.A.2d 628, 633, 286 P.2d 474 ["It is now well settled in this state that damages may be awarded for mental suffering caused by intentional and outrageous conduct"]; Tate v. Canonica (1960) 180 C.A.2d 898, 904, 5 C.R. 28, infra, §461; Taylor v. Vallelunga (1959) 171 C.A.2d 107, 108, 339 P.2d 910, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §726 [however, pleading insufficient]; Vargas v. Ruggiero (1961) 197 C.A.2d 709, 718, 17 C.R. 568; Leavy v. Cooney (1963) 214 C.A.2d 496, 502, 29 C.R. 580; Spackman v. Good (1966) 245 C.A.2d 518, 528, 54 C.R. 78, infra, §453; Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 394, 89 C.R. 78, infra, §459; Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 C.A.3d 295, 302, 97 C.R. 577, infra, §461; KOVR-TV v. Superior Court (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1023, 1030, 37 C.R.2d 431; Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1217, 1226, 44 C.R.2d 197; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 40 [boundaries of liability for "insult and outrage"]; BAJI, No. 12.70 et seq. [intentional infliction of emotional distress].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.49.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.1.

Taylor case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §770.

"[T]o state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress a plaintiff must show: (1) outrageous conduct by the defendant; (2) the defendant's intention of causing or reckless disregard of the probability of causing emotional distress; (3) the plaintiff's suffering severe or extreme emotional distress; and (4) actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by the defendant's outrageous conduct." (Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1259, 29 C.R.3d 521, quoting Trerice v. Blue Cross of Calif. (1989) 209 C.A.3d 878, 883, 257 C.R. 338.)

(New) Plaintiff must be individual: A business entity lacks standing to pursue a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, supra, 129 C.A.4th 1259.)

71 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. 2. Elements. a. Outrageous Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 451

[§ 451] Outrageous Conduct.

The conduct must be outrageous, i.e., beyond all bounds of decency; ordinary rude or insulting behavior is not enough to justify an award of damages. (Cervantez v. J.C. Penney Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 579, 593, 156 C.R. 198, 595 P.2d 975; Bogard v. Employers Cas. Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 602, 616, 617, 210 C.R. 578; Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comment d ["[t]here is no occasion for the law to intervene in every case where some one's feelings are hurt"]; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 43, 48, 52; 43 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [intentional infliction of emotional distress]; 20 A.L.R.4th 733 [civil liability for insulting and abusive language--modern status]; 16 Proof of Facts 2d 493 [liability for abusive language]; BAJI, No. 12.72 ["emotional distress" defined]; BAJI, No. 12.73 ["severe" defined]; BAJI, No. 12.74 ["extreme and outrageous conduct" defined]; BAJI, No. 12.75 [effect of relationship of parties]; BAJI, No. 12.76 [susceptibility of plaintiff].)

The following illustrate circumstances in which a defendant's conduct has been found outrageous:

Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 1487, 232 C.R. 668, infra, §659 [entering private home with little or no thought to its consequences].

KOVR-TV v. Superior Court (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1023, 1030, 37 C.R.2d 431 [television reporter's interviewing three young children on camera, with no adult present, concerning murder of two playmates who lived next door, about which children were then unaware].

Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1217, 1226, 44 C.R.2d 197 [allegations of 8-month sexual relationship initiated by physician with minor, including mutual oral copulation and use of alcohol and controlled substances, showed sufficiently outrageous conduct to send case to jury; minor was not required to allege facts showing special relationship with physician or his knowledge of her special susceptibility to emotional distress].

Numerous other cases have found the defendant's conduct not outrageous. The following are illustrative:

Trerice v. Blue Cross of Calif. (1989) 209 C.A.3d 878, 883, 257 C.R. 338 [replacing plaintiff's termination package with one less favorable and requiring her to perform menial tasks].

Yurick v. Superior Court (1989) 209 C.A.3d 1116, 1129, 257 C.R. 665 [supervisor's telling plaintiff in presence of others that anyone over 40 was senile and that plaintiff was senile and a liar].

Masters v. San Bernardino County Employees Retirement Assn. (1995) 32 C.A.4th 30, 49, 37 C.R.2d 860 [on receipt of additional evidence, failure of administrative agency to summarily reverse itself, without hearing, with respect to claim for disability retirement benefits].

Janken v. GM Hughes Electronics (1996) 46 C.A.4th 55, 80, 53 C.R.2d 741 [personnel management activity, even if wrongful motivation is alleged].

Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 179, 194, 65 C.R.2d 297 [requirement that employee provide urine sample for drug test, even if employee was not suspected of drug use].

Cochran v. Cochran (1998) 65 C.A.4th 488, 493, 76 C.R.2d 540 [father's threatening to deliver airline ticket to daughter for airline that had recently suffered well publicized fatal crash, even though father and plaintiff mother had had long and bitter relationship, and mother had recently sued him for breach of palimony agreement].

Davidson v. Westminster (1982) 32 C.3d 197, 209, 210, 185 C.R. 252, 649 P.2d 894, supra, §291 [conduct of defendant police officers that was, at most, poor police procedure].

In Fuentes v. Perez (1977) 66 C.A.3d 163, 136 C.R. 275, defendant contractor undertook construction work on plaintiffs' home that necessitated removal of a portion of the roof. Despite weather reports indicating rain, and phone calls after the rain started, he failed to take protective measures and the building, furniture, and personal effects were damaged. Plaintiffs received a verdict for this damage to property and also for emotional distress. Held, judgment modified to eliminate the emotional distress award. The testimony of plaintiffs that they were "upset" and "disturbed" and "furious" did not meet the test of "extreme and outrageous" intentional or reckless infliction of emotional distress. (66 C.A.3d 170, 172, citing the text.) (See Cortez v. Macias (1980) 110 C.A.3d 640, 652, 167 C.R. 905 [following Fuentes].)

In Melovich Builders v. Superior Court (1984) 160 C.A.3d 931, 207 C.R. 47, defendant contractor was involved in a dispute with plaintiff owner, and defendant, on advice of counsel, filed an unbonded stop notice with the financing agency. Held, defendant's conduct could not be considered extreme or outrageous even though the attorney's advice proved to be legally unsound. "[I]t is a complete defense to a claim of extreme and outrageous conduct when the evidence shows (1) the defendant acted on the opinion and advice of counsel; (2) counsel's advice was based on full disclosure of all the facts by defendant or the advice was initiated by counsel based on counsel's familiarity with the case; (3) the defendant's reliance on the advice of counsel was in good faith." (160 C.A.3d 936.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.54

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1259, 29 C.R.3d 521 [cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress requires showing of conduct by defendant "so extreme as to exceed all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized society"]; Berkley v. Dowds (2007) 152 C.A.4th 518, 534, 61 C.R.3d 304 [whether defendant's conduct can reasonably be found to be outrageous is question of law that must initially be determined by court; if reasonable persons may differ, it is for jury to determine whether conduct was, in fact, outrageous].

Conduct found outrageous:

Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, supra, 129 C.A.4th 1260 [defendant's website entries targeting employee of animal testing lab for illegal activity and threatening her safety could support cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress].

Conduct found not outrageous:

Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 452, 480, 27 C.R.3d 239 [telling employee to keep quiet about employer's fraud was type of personnel activity by employer insufficient to support intentional infliction of emotional distress claim; citing Janken v. GM Hughes Electronics (1996) 46 C.A.4th 55, 53 C.R.2d 741, text, p. 670].

Berkley v. Dowds, supra, 152 C.A.4th 533 [widow's complaint against husband's attending physician failed to allege facts constituting outrageous conduct; there was no allegation that physician's alleged cost-saving motive in recommending termination of life support was communicated to widow or that his prognosis that husband would never recover was incorrect; medical diagnosis and treatment advice ordinarily will not be considered outrageous unless false and given in bad faith].

Unterberger v. Red Bull North America (2008) 162 C.A.4th 414, 423, 75 C.R.3d 368, citing the text [energy drink manufacturer's termination of business relationship with beverage distributor was not outrageous conduct].

72 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

2. Elements.

b. Severe Emotional Distress.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 452

[§ 452] Severe Emotional Distress.

The conduct must result in severe emotional distress. (Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 C.3d 932, 946, 160 C.R. 141, 603 P.2d 58; Angie M. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1217, 1227, 44 C.R.2d 197; see C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §11.65; BAJI, Nos. 12.72, 12.73, 12.74, 12.75, 12.76; CACI, Nos. 1600, 1602, 1604.) Severe means "substantial or enduring as distinguished from trivial or transitory." (Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 397, 89 C.R. 78, infra, §459.) In the words of the Restatement, the distress must be so severe that "no reasonable man could be expected to endure it." (Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comment j.) However, the "recent trend has been to require less severe distress in pleadings and proof than is required in the Restatement." (Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 C.A.3d 288, 298, 131 C.R. 547, infra, §457; see Fuentes v. Perez (1977) 66 C.A.3d 163, 169, 170, 136 C.R. 275, supra, §451, citing the text and reviewing cases; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §306.)

Severe emotional distress was found to exist in Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co., supra. Plaintiff's testimony showed that he suffered no shock, horror, or similar physical effects, and that most of his distress resulted from his unfortunate economic situation. The court said, paraphrasing the Restatement Comment: "Severe emotional distress means ... emotional distress of such substantial quantity or enduring quality that no reasonable man in a civilized society should be expected to endure it." (10 C.A.3d 397.) However, it "may consist of any highly unpleasant mental reaction such as fright, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment or worry." (10 C.A.3d 397.) Hence, plaintiff's worry about losing his home, about his family lacking food and clothing, about his wife having to go to work, all continuing for many months, supported the jury's determination. (10 C.A.3d 397, 398.)

"[I]n many cases the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant's conduct is in itself important evidence that the distress has existed." (Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comment j.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.50

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1259, 29 C.R.3d 521 [cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress requires showing that plaintiff suffered "severe or extreme" emotional distress].

73 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

2. Elements.

c. Intentional or Reckless Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 453

[§ 453] Intentional or Reckless Conduct.

(1) In General. The tort calls for intentional, or at least reckless, conduct. (See Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 1487, 232 C.R. 668, infra, §659 [entering private home, unauthorized broadcast of private matters]; Coon v. Joseph (1987) 192 C.A.3d 1269, 1273, 237 C.R. 873, infra, §1020 [intentional infliction of emotional distress requires conduct that "is especially calculated to cause" severe emotional distress]; Rest.2d, Torts §46; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §303; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §9.1; C.E.B., 2 Business Litigation, §§11.63, 11.64; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 43, 54, 55; BAJI, No. 12.77 [intentional and reckless--defined]; CACI, No. 1603 [same].)

In Spackman v. Good (1966) 245 C.A.2d 518, 54 C.R. 78, Suzanne and Paul, children of a disturbed household, lived with defendant after their parents' divorce. This action for damages, brought on their behalf, alleged misconduct of defendant when the children were 15 and 13 years old, respectively, consisting of furnishing them with liquor and allowing intimacies between Suzanne and boys. Held, judgment for Suzanne reversed; the showing was insufficient to establish either intentional or negligent causing of emotional distress. This was not a case of threats, abusive words, or acts or conduct that the actor should realize would result in emotional distress. The allegations were largely of omissions--permitting things to happen--without activity on defendant's part intended to inflict injury or with the realization that injury would result. (245 C.A.2d 530.)

(2) Conduct Must Be Primarily Directed at Plaintiff. The defendant's conduct must be directed primarily at the plaintiff. The only exception is where the defendant is aware of, but acts in reckless disregard of, the plaintiff and the probability that the conduct will cause severe emotional distress to the plaintiff. (Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 C.3d 868, 903, 2 C.R.2d 79, 820 P.2d 181, infra, §460; Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 1001, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, infra, §1036.)

In Smith v. Pust (1993) 19 C.A.4th 263, 23 C.R.2d 364, defendant therapist had a sexual relationship with plaintiff's wife while she was his patient, and plaintiff sued for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. "Intentional" means more than nonaccidental conduct. The wrongful act must also be directed at the plaintiff or be in the plaintiff's presence. Here, the declarations established that the sexual encounter in question was an "accident," and was in no way "directed" at plaintiff. (19 C.A.4th 274, citing Christensen, supra.) Furthermore, with respect to plaintiff's claim that defendant bragged about it, the declarations showed that it was plaintiff who approached defendant and pressed him for details as to exactly what happened. (19 C.A.4th 274.) (See Shin v. Kong (2000) 80 C.A.4th 498, 512, 95 C.R.2d 304 [no cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress against defendant doctor could be based on allegations that defendant artificially inseminated plaintiff's wife without his consent and was natural father of resulting child; there was no allegation that defendant's action was directed against plaintiff in any way]; Ess v. Eskaton Properties (2002) 97 C.A.4th 120, 129, 118 C.R.2d 240 [plaintiff whose sister was raped by unknown intruder while in defendant nursing home could not recover for reckless infliction of emotional distress; defendant's nonfeasance was not directed at plaintiff, who was not present at time of event, and was not calculated to cause plaintiff emotional distress].)

(3) Malice Is Not Essential. A malicious or evil purpose is not essential to liability. It is sufficient that the defendant devoted little or no thought to the probable consequences of defendant's conduct. (KOVR-TV v. Superior Court (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1023, 1031, 37 C.R.2d 431.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.50.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1259, 29 C.R.3d 521 [cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress requires showing that defendant intended to cause, or recklessly disregarded probability of causing, emotional distress]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.1.

74 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY
C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

2. Elements.
d. Causation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 454

[§ 454] Causation.

The emotional distress must be actually and proximately caused by the defendant's outrageous conduct. (Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 1001, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, infra, §1036.)

In Spackman v. Good (1966) 245 C.A.2d 518, 54 C.R. 78, supra, §453, a basis for reversal was that no causal connection between the alleged acts and the harmful results was established by the evidence. Testimony of a psychiatrist and a psychologist to the effect that the children were psychopaths, as a result of "sex trauma" from the "environment" created by defendant's misconduct rather than the bad home life with their own parents, was unsupported by any substantial evidence. (245 C.A.2d 533.) (See Vargas v. Ruggiero (1961) 197 C.A.2d 709, 719, 17 C.R. 568 [noting conflict of medical and legal opinion on whether emotional shock can cause miscarriage].)

In Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 89 C.R. 78, infra, §459, defendant insurer contended that the emotional distress suffered by plaintiff insured was not caused by the tortious false charges in its letters to plaintiff, but only by the discontinuance of disability payments, which was at most a breach of contract. The court pointed out, however, that an insurer's bad faith refusal to settle a claim is also a tort (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §143; 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §257 et seq.), and applied that rule by analogy to the facts of the instant case: "We hold, therefore, that defendants' threatened and actual bad faith refusals to make payments under the policy, maliciously employed by defendants in concert with false and threatening communications directed to plaintiff for the purpose of causing him to surrender his policy or disadvantageously settle a nonexistent dispute is essentially tortious in nature and is conduct that may legally be the basis for an action for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress." (10 C.A.3d 401.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.49.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1259, 29 C.R.3d 521 [cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress requires showing of actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by defendant's outrageous conduct]. Insurer's refusal to settle claim:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §148.

75 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. 3. Defenses. a. Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 455

[§ 455] Privilege.

(1) Privilege To Assert Own Economic Interests. A person is privileged, in pursuing his or her own economic interests, to assert in a permissible way the person's claimed legal rights and communicate his or her position in good faith, even though emotional distress may result. (Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 395, 89 C.R. 78, infra, §459; see Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comment g, Illustration 4; BAJI, No. 12.78 [privilege to insist on legal rights]; CACI, No. 1605 [same].) However, exercise of this privilege must be done with a good faith belief in the existence of the rights asserted and in a permissible way. The court in Fletcher noted that, even though rights are asserted in good faith, if the defendant acts in an outrageous manner, he or she will be liable. (10 C.A.3d 395.) Here there was both bad faith and outrageous conduct by defendant insurer. The evidence indicated "that there was no good faith dispute concerning liability under the policy and that defendants invented the alleged dispute as a part of their scheme to deprive plaintiff of the benefits of his policy." (10 C.A.3d 396.)

(2) Communications Privileged by Statute. The statutory privileges provided by C.C. 47 to certain communications (see infra, §561 et seq.) have been applied in intentional infliction of emotional distress cases as well as defamation cases. (Silberg v. California Life Ins. Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 452, 113 C.R. 711, 521 P.2d 1103, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §64 [litigation privilege].)

In Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Calif. (1974) 40 C.A.3d 841, 115 C.R. 582, infra, §594, an employer's executives told employees the reasons why plaintiff employee had been forced to retire, reciting instances of her misconduct. Held, the statements were within the "interest" privilege of C.C. 47(c), both for defamation (infra, §594) and intentional infliction of emotional distress. "Clearly, an employer is privileged in pursuing his own economic interests and that of its employees to ascertain whether an employee has breached his responsibilities of employment and if so, to communicate, in good faith, that fact to others within its employ so that (a) appropriate action may be taken against the employee; (b) the danger of such breaches occurring in the future may be minimized; and (c) present employees may not develop misconceptions that affect their employment with respect to certain conduct that was undertaken in the past. Where an employer seeks to protect his own self-interest and that of his employees in good faith and without abusing the privilege afforded him, the privilege obtains even though it is substantially certain that emotional distress may result from uttered statements." (40 C.A.3d 849.)

In Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 C.A.4th 877, 54 C.R.2d 158, plaintiff filed suit against his former wife for intentional infliction of emotional distress in (a) filing a false police report accusing plaintiff of molesting the couple's young daughter and (b) repeating the charge in the couple's dissolution action. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer. Held, reversed; taken as a whole, defendant's remarks were not privileged.

(a) C.C. 47(b) confers an unqualified privilege on a publication made in any legislative, judicial, or other official proceeding authorized by law (see infra, §561 et seq.). Although the statute is most commonly asserted in defamation actions, it applies to virtually all other causes of action, except malicious prosecution, based on publication of assertedly offensive material. Insofar as plaintiff alleges that defendant made false accusations within the dissolution action, defendant's statements are clearly privileged and cannot give rise to a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. (46 C.A.4th 881.)

(b) The complaint also alleges that defendant filed a false police report. The privilege for statements made in a judicial proceeding does not apply to statements made outside the courtroom to persons unconnected to the proceedings. There is nothing on the face of the complaint to suggest that the police or the police report were connected to the pending dissolution litigation. Accordingly, the "judicial proceeding" privilege does not bar plaintiff's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress insofar as it is based on filing a false police report. (46 C.A.4th 882.)

(c) The question whether defendant's report to the police was nonetheless privileged as a statement made in "any other official proceeding authorized by law" remains. Assuming that filing a false police report is privileged, the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (P.C. 11164 et seq.; see supra, §140 et seq.) creates a limited exception. P.C. 11172(a), while granting absolute immunity to certain classes of workers statutorily required to make child abuse reports, provides only qualified immunity to other persons making abuse reports, who are subject to liability for knowingly false reports. The Act demonstrates a legislative effort to balance the public interest in ferreting out cases of child abuse so that child victims can be protected from harm and the policy of protecting the reputations of those who might be falsely accused. The Legislature has struck that balance by withholding immunity from those who knowingly make false reports of child abuse. To hold that the same conduct is privileged under C.C. 47(b) would essentially nullify the Legislature's determination that liability should attach. Thus, the "official proceeding" privilege cannot be held to immunize a party who would otherwise be liable under P.C. 11172(a). (46 C.A.4th 882.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Communications Privileged by Statute. See Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 1577, 31 C.R.3d 368 [P.C. 11172(a), imposing liability on voluntary reporters for knowingly filing false child abuse reports, overrides litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b); citing Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 C.A.4th 877, 54 C.R.2d 158, text, p. 675]; Foothill Fed. Credit Union v. Superior Court (2007) 155 C.A.4th 632, 635, 66 C.R.3d 249 [litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) barred action for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on credit union's disclosure of personal financial records beyond those sought in probate proceeding; privilege applied even though credit union failed to comply with notice requirements of C.C.P. 1985.3 (governing discovery of personal records of consumers; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §228 et seq.)]. (New) Immunity under Communications Decency Act: The immunity from tort liability provided by the federal Communications Decency Act to interactive computer service providers or users for communications of others (see 47 U.S.C., §230(c)(1)) may apply in actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress and related torts. Thus, an employer was immune from liability for an employee's use of its computer system to send threatening Internet messages to plaintiffs. The three statutory prerequisites to immunity were met: (a) the defendant was a provider or user of an interactive computer service, (b) the cause of action treated the defendant as a publisher or speaker of information, and (c) the information at issue was provided by another information content provider. (Delfino v. Agilent Technologies (2006) 145 C.A.4th 790, 804, 52 C.R.3d 376.) (See 30 A.L.R.6th 241 [liability for infliction of emotional distress derived from use of Internet and electronic communications].)

76 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY
C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.
3. Defenses.
b. Constitutionally Protected Speech or Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 456

[§ 456] Constitutionally Protected Speech or Conduct.

An intentional infliction of emotional distress claim may not be based on constitutionally protected speech or conduct. (Reader' Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 244, 265, 208 C.R. 137, 690 P.2d 610; see Lam v. Ngo (2001) 91 C.A.4th 832, 848, 111 C.R.2d 582 [public figure picketed for failing to support demonstrations against store displaying North Vietnamese insignia could not recover for intentional infliction of emotional distress; picketing, rather than containing false statement of fact, only expressed opinion that figure was Communist sympathizer, and was constitutionally protected peaceful political activity].)

Thus, liability cannot be imposed, either in an action for defamation or in one based on intentional infliction of emotional distress or any other theory, for what has been determined to be a constitutionally protected publication. (Reader' Digest Assn. v. Superior Court, supra; on constitutional limitations in defamation actions, see infra, §601 et seq.) In Hustler Magazine v. Falwell (1988) 485 U.S. 46, 108 S.Ct. 876, 99 L.Ed.2d 41, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §432, plaintiff, a nationally known commentator on public affairs, was the subject of a parody advertisement in defendant's magazine, which described acts of an outrageous nature. Held, plaintiff's claim based on intentional infliction of emotional distress was barred by the First Amendment protection of free speech. "We conclude that public figures and public officials may not recover for the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress by reason of publications such as the one here at issue without showing in addition that the publication contains a false statement of fact which was made with 'actual malice,' i.e., with knowledge that the statement was false or with reckless disregard as to whether or not it was true. This is not merely a 'blind application' of the New York Times standard ... it reflects our considered judgment that such a standard is necessary to give adequate 'breathing space' to the freedoms protected by the First Amendment." (108 S.Ct. 882, 99 L.Ed.2d 52.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 676, line 2 of section, "Reader' Digest Assn. v. Superior Court" should be "Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court".

77 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. 4. Particular Conduct. a. Acts of Landlords.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 457

[§ 457] Acts of Landlords.

In Emden v. Vitz (1948) 88 C.A.2d 313, 198 P.2d 696, plaintiff, a tenant in defendants' apartment house, was wrongfully excluded. When she attempted to complain, defendants "yelled and screamed" at her, and she suffered a serious glandular imbalance. An award of damages for personal injuries was affirmed. "[O]nce the wrongful quality is established, it matters not whether that conduct consisted of acts alone, or of acts accompanied by words, or of mere spoken words alone." (88 C.A.2d 318.) (See Aweeka v. Bonds (1971) 20 C.A.3d 278, 281, 97 C.R. 650, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §707 [emotional distress damages recoverable for retaliatory eviction of tenant]; Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 C.A.3d 903, 162 C.R. 194, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §627 [tenant could sue landlord in tort for mental distress from failure to maintain premises and was not limited to relief for breach of implied warranty of habitability]; 17 A.L.R.2d 936 [recovery by tenant of damages for physical injury or mental anguish occasioned by wrongful eviction]; 6 A.L.R.4th 528 [tenant's recovery of damages for emotional distress under Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act].)

The Emden case was followed in Richardson v. Pridmore (1950) 97 C.A.2d 124, 217 P.2d 113. While plaintiff tenants were absent, defendant landlord removed their belongings and rented to another. Plaintiff wife suffered emotional upset and had a miscarriage. Although no threats or abusive language were employed, the court characterized the eviction as deliberate and the conduct as "outrageous." (97 C.A.2d 130.) The opinion adds: "We do not have to decide in this case whether recovery could be had solely for mental anguish caused by words alone, because here the plaintiff also suffered physical injury. The better and more modern rule is that, even where there is no physical injury, recovery may be had for mental anguish caused by intentional and outrageous conduct." (97 C.A.2d 130.)

In Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 C.A.3d 288, 131 C.R. 547, plaintiff, a tenant in an apartment complex, organized a meeting of tenants to discuss rent increases announced by the owners, and delivered a tenants' petition to the manager. Defendant owners and manager came to plaintiff's apartment, called her names, directed her to vacate the premises, and later delivered an eviction notice. No court proceeding to vacate was brought, and plaintiff stayed on, but she brought this action for declaratory relief, injunction, and damages. The trial judge granted a nonsuit on the jury causes of action and judgment under C.C.P. 631.8 on the others. Held, reversed. No cause of action for retaliatory eviction or interference with constitutional rights was stated (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §706 et seq.), and no showing of arbitrary discrimination was made to justify an award of statutory damages under the Unruh

Civil Rights Act (see 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §914); but the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury on the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

(a) Defendants' behavior met the test of outrageous behavior laid down in Alcorn v. Anbro Engineering (1970) 2 C.3d 493, 86 C.R. 88, 458 P.2d 216, and Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 C.A.3d 295, 97 C.R. 577, infra, §461. Defendant G shouted at plaintiff, ordered her out of the apartment in 3 days, and said he would throw her out personally if she did not leave. Defendant R said, "We are going to handle this the way we do down South," and when she said she would not leave he answered, "Do you want to bet your life." This was not "mere insult or annoyance," but intimidation intended to cause fear and worry. (60 C.A.3d 298.)

(b) The modern liberal test of "severe emotional distress" was also met. Plaintiff presented evidence that she was afraid that she and her belongings would be removed and that she would be locked out, and that she was unable to sleep after the threat referring to "down South." (60 C.A.3d 298.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

78 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

4. Particular Conduct.

b. Collectors' Tactics.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 458

[§ 458] Collectors' Tactics.

(1) Emotional Distress to Debtor. High-pressure collection tactics gave rise to one of the first California cases to recognize liability in this field. In Bowden v. Spiegel (1950) 96 C.A.2d 793, 216 P.2d 571, plaintiff, a woman, had no telephone. Defendant collection agent phoned her neighbor at 11 p.m. and asked that plaintiff be found for an "emergency call." When plaintiff arrived, the neighbor family listened while defendant told her to prepare for a shock, demanded payment, and threatened to take her to court. Held, on demurrer, a cause of action was stated. (96 C.A.2d 794.) (See Vargas v. Ruggiero (1961) 197 C.A.2d 709, 718, 17 C.R. 568 [collector of money due screamed at pregnant woman, allegedly causing miscarriage]; 17 Hastings L. J. 369; 87 A.L.R.3d 201 [emotional distress on debtor resulting from collection methods]; 16 Am.Jur. Trials 619 [actions for harassment of debtor]; 18 Proof of Facts 59 [actionable debt collection practices]; 41 Proof of Facts 3d 159 [intentional infliction of emotional distress in debt collection]; cf. 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 343 [letter to alleged debtor' employer; libel or invasion of privacy].)

In Bundren v. Superior Court (1983) 145 C.A.3d 784, 193 C.R. 671, plaintiff, admitted to defendant hospital for surgery, was recuperating from the operation. Defendant's agent telephoned her, and in a "rude and offensive" manner, persisted for a 20- to 30-minute period in demanding payment, despite plaintiff's request that the caller contact her attorney to arrange payment. The court, reversing summary judgment for defendant, cited Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comment f, for the point that the extreme and outrageous character of the conduct may arise from the defendant's knowledge that the plaintiff is peculiarly susceptible to emotional distress by reason of some physical or mental condition. (145 C.A.3d 790, and footnote 6.) The opinion adds: "[L]iability has been found in instances in which the collector has been aware of a debtor's bad heart ... ; physical hypertension ... ; advanced pregnancy ... ; heart condition ... ; blindness ... ; epilepsy ... ; or nervous disorder." (145 C.A.3d 790.)

In Kinnamon v. Staitman & Snyder (1977) 66 C.A.3d 893, 136 C.R. 321, plaintiff gave a check to O, which was dishonored for insufficient funds. O engaged defendant attorneys to collect the money, and they wrote plaintiff a letter advising her of their representation of O for this purpose. The letter included the following statement: "As you may be aware to issue a check with insufficient funds to cover said check is a misdemeanor. In addition to any civil remedies my client may have, we also plan to exercise our rights to file a criminal complaint against you for your action herein." Plaintiff brought this action, seeking compensatory and punitive damages. She alleged that defendants failed to inform her in the letter that fraudulent intent was an element of the crime, that the threats were illegal and unethical, and were intended to and did cause emotional distress. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed. The complaint stated a cause of action. Rule 7-104 (now 5-100) of the Rules of Professional Conduct (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §603) proscribes threats of criminal, administrative, or disciplinary charges to obtain an advantage in a civil action; hence the conduct charged is "outrageous." (66 C.A.3d 896.) The letter was not absolutely privileged, under C.C. 47(b) (infra, §561 et seq.), as a communication made in the course of a judicial proceeding: Its threat was a cause for discipline of the attorney, could not lawfully serve the purpose of litigation, and could not therefore be privileged. (66 C.A.3d 897.) (However, the Kinnamon case was disapproved in Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, infra, §570, to the extent that it required publications to be made in the "interest of justice" in order to be privileged under C.C. 47(b); and in Ross v. Creel Printing & Publishing Co. (2002) 100 C.A.4th 736, 744, 122 C.R.2d 787, to the extent that it held that a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, by itself, is sufficient to constitute the outrageous conduct needed for intentional infliction of emotional distress.)

(2) Emotional Distress to Creditor. In Cross v. Bonded Adjustment Bureau (1996) 48 C.A.4th 266, 282, 55 C.R.2d 801, defendant collection agency misrepresented to plaintiff judgment creditors that renewal of the judgment application had been recorded, failed to inform plaintiffs that the judgment debtor had transferred certain property to his wife, and settled the $ 250,000 judgment in exchange for $ 40,000. In view of the fiduciary relationship between the collection agency and the judgment creditor, this constituted outrageous conduct. (See 46 A.L.R.3d 722 [mental distress inflicted on person other than debtor].)

(3) Related Legislation. The Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the collection of consumer debts, and provides for recovery of actual damages for violations and penalties for wilful violations. (C.C. 1788 et seq.; see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §4 et seq.) And Health & Saf.C. 1285 creates a statutory cause of action for general and punitive damages where a patient in a health facility has been detained solely for nonpayment of a bill. (See supra, §433.) (See 87 A.L.R.3d 786 [validity, construction, and application of state statutes prohibiting abusive or coercive debt collection practices].)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.50.20

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Emotional Distress to Debtor. Rules of Professional Conduct:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §541.(3) Related Legislation.

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Enforcement of Judgment, §5 et seq.

79 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY

C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

4. Particular Conduct.

c. Insurers' Tactics.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 459

[§ 459] Insurers' Tactics.

Claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress may arise in an insurance context. (See Magpali v. Farmers Group (1996) 48 C.A.4th 471, 485, 55 C.R.2d 225 [insurer's instructions to write more insurance policies for nonminorities and to avoid writing policies for members of ethnic group of which plaintiff insurance agent was member could constitute extreme and outrageous conduct]; 6 A.L.R.5th 297 [liability of insurer, insurance agent, or insurance adjuster for infliction of emotional distress]; on recovery for bad faith conduct of insurers generally, see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §239 et seq.)

In Fletcher v. Western Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 C.A.3d 376, 89 C.R. 78, plaintiff, father of eight minor children, was employed at heavy manual labor for long hours. He purchased a disability insurance policy from defendant company, and paid premiums regularly. He was injured and became disabled. His policy called for payments of a specified amount per week up to 30 years for injury, or the same amount up to 2 years for sickness. He made his proof to defendant, and defendant received numerous medical reports fully establishing his right to disability payments for injury. But defendant A, defendant company's claims supervisor, commenced a program of minimizing plaintiff's claim by asserting that he had a congenital back injury that he had concealed from the company. In addition to accusing him of misrepresentation, the company advised him that it was paying only under the 2-year limit sickness provision, and later it discontinued payments, denying liability and demanding return of payments made less premiums, but suggesting a compromise and full release for the payments received, to avoid litigation. All of the acts of A were done with the knowledge and approval of defendant company's executive officers, and continued after plaintiff consulted an attorney and until defendants were served in the present suit. Plaintiff testified in detail as to his mental disturbance and discouragement (10 C.A.3d 393, 394), and defendants stipulated for entry of a declaratory judgment on the first cause of action, that plaintiff was entitled to the specified monthly payment for the 30-year maximum. The case was tried before a jury on the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and a verdict was returned for substantial compensatory and punitive damages. Held, affirmed. "[D]efendants, without probable cause for believing that plaintiff had made an intentional material misrepresentation or that his disability was due to anything other than his injury ... , embarked upon a concerted course of conduct to induce plaintiff to surrender his insurance policy or enter into a disadvantageous 'settlement' of a nonexistent dispute by means of false and threatening letters and the employment of economic pressure based upon his disabled and, therefore impecunious, condition, (the very thing insured against) exacerbated by [defendant company's] malicious and bad faith refusal to pay plaintiff's legitimate claim." (10 C.A.3d 392.)

West's Key Number Digest, Damages k.56.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Coleman v. Republic Indem. Ins. Co. of Calif. (2005) 132 C.A.4th 403, 417, 33 C.R.3d 744 [failure to accept offer of settlement or violation of statutory duties concerning unfair or deceptive practices does not in itself constitute types of outrageous conduct that will support action for intentional infliction of emotional distress]; Hailey v. California Physicians' Service (2007) 158 C.A.4th 452, 473, 476, 69 C.R.3d 789 [claim that health care plan delayed asserting right to rescind contract until after subscriber sustained serious injury sufficiently alleged extreme and outrageous conduct; claim that subscriber's emotional distress resulted in specified physical symptoms for significant time sufficiently alleged severe emotional distress].

80 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. 4. Particular Conduct. d. Interference With Dead Body.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 460

[§ 460] Interference With Dead Body.

(1) In General. Unwarranted interference with a dead body, as by an unlawful autopsy, is a frequent basis of liability for emotional distress. (See Huntly v. Zurich General Acc. & Liab. Ins. Co. (1929) 100 C.A. 201, 209, 280 P. 163; 44 Cal. L. Rev. 51; 15 Hastings L. J. 464, 473; 26 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 909; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 878; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 68; 18 A.L.R.4th 858 [liability for wrongful autopsy]; 15 Proof of Facts 3d 53 [funeral director's liability]; 28 Proof of Facts 3d 319 [proof of cemetery's liability in interring body].)

Sinai Temple v. Kaplan (1976) 54 C.A.3d 1103, 127 C.R. 80, recognizes a cause of action against anyone who interferes with the right to dispose of a decedent's remains. On decedent's death, he was survived by his 6-year-old child and his father. The father made funeral arrangements with the cemetery without consulting the child or her guardian, who was decedent's divorced wife and administrator of the estate. In the cemetery's action against the estate and decedent's father for funeral expenses, decedent's former wife filed a cross-complaint against the father for interference with the disposition of the remains. Held, although the pleading was defective, such an action could be brought.

(a) There is no property right in a dead body, but there is a quasi-property right to its possession for the limited purpose of determining who shall have its custody for burial; and this legal right in the next of kin will, in the absence of testamentary disposition, be protected by the courts. (54 C.A.3d 1110; see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §5.)

(b) California has recognized a tort action against undertakers who wrongfully interfere with this right of the next of kin. (54 C.A.3d 1111, footnote 14, citing Cohen v. Groman Mortuary (1964) 231 C.A.2d 1, 41 C.R. 481.) Rest.2d, Torts §868 extends the rule to permit actions against others, to permit recovery for negligent and reckless as well as intentional conduct, and to add liability for prevention of proper interment or cremation. (54 C.A.3d 1111, footnotes 13, 14.)

(c) Rest.2d, Torts §868, Comment a analyzes the tort as follows: "The technical basis of the cause of action is the interference with the exclusive right of control of the body, which frequently has been called by the courts a 'property' or a 'quasi-property' right. This does not, however, fit very well into the category of property, since the body ordinarily cannot be sold or transferred, has no utility, and can be used only for the one purpose of interment or cremation. In practice the technical right has served as a mere peg upon which to hang damages for the mental distress inflicted upon the survivor, and in reality the cause of action has been exclusively one for such mental distress." (54 C.A.3d 1111, footnote 13.)

(d) Thus, the former wife's action was proper. However, the complaint failed to allege facts showing that the funeral procedure was contrary to the beliefs of decedent and his child, and also failed to allege either mental or physical injuries resulting from the alleged tort. (54 C.A.3d 1113.)

(2) Standing. Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 C.3d 868, 2 C.R.2d 79, 820 P.2d 181, was a class action brought by relatives and representatives of decedents against mortuaries and crematoria for mistreatment of the decedents' remains. The issue was stated by the court as follows: "We are asked to decide whether persons other than those who contract for the services of mortuaries and crematoria or have the statutory right to direct the disposition of the body of a decedent may recover damages for emotional distress engendered by knowledge of the negligent or intentional mishandling of the decedent's remains when they did not observe the misconduct or its consequences. The Court of Appeal held that close family members may recover damages for the emotional distress they suffer if remains are negligently or intentionally mishandled, and that if the mishandling is intentional all family members and close friends of the deceased may do so." (54 C.3d 876.) The Supreme Court modified the judgment of the Court of Appeal as follows:

(a) Limited standing to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress. "[T]he class of persons who may recover for emotional distress negligently caused by the defendants is not limited to those who have the statutory right to control disposition of the remains and those who contract for disposition. The class is not, however, as expansive as that identified by the Court of Appeal. As in all recovery for negligence, the potential plaintiff must be a person to whom the defendant owes a duty recognized by the law. In this context, the duty is owed only to close family members who were aware that funeral and/or crematory services were being performed, and on whose behalf or for whose benefit the services were rendered." (54 C.3d 876.)

(b) No standing to recover for intentional infliction of emotional distress. To recover on this theory it is not enough that the conduct be intentional and outrageous; it must be conduct directed at the plaintiff, or occur in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant is aware. (54 C.3d 903.) Here the complaint does not allege that any plaintiff was present when the misconduct occurred, or that defendants or any of them acted with the intent of causing emotional distress to the plaintiffs or knowledge that the conduct was substantially certain to cause distress to any particular plaintiff. (54 C.3d 903.) "The requirement that the defendant's conduct be directed primarily at the plaintiff is a factor which distinguishes intentional infliction of emotional distress from the negligent infliction of such injury." (54 C.3d 904.) "The only exception to this rule is that recognized when the defendant is aware of, but acts with reckless disregard of the plaintiff and the probability that his conduct will cause severe emotional distress to that plaintiff." (54 C.3d 905.) (See Saari v. Jongordon Corp. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 797, 805, 7 C.R.2d 82 [under Christensen, although decedent's friend made the arrangements and was to receive the ashes, his mother and sister were "close family members" entitled to recover for emotional distress]; Aguirre-Alvarez v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1058, 1066, 79 C.R.2d 580 [hospital had no special relationship with any of decedent's family members; hospital owed duty only to decedent and to police, who had constructive custody while decedent remained in the hospital]; BAJI, No. 12.80, Comment [noting Christiansen case]; on negligent infliction of emotional distress generally, see infra, §1004 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Standing. See Melican v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2007) 151 C.A.4th 168, 179, 59 C.R.3d 672 [university conducting willed body research program did not owe decedent's family members duties of mortuary or crematory and was not liable for emotional distress from alleged negligent mishandling of remains; distinguishing Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 C.3d 868, 2 C.R.2d 79, 820 P.2d 181, text, p. 683].

81 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY C. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress. 4. Particular Conduct. e. Other Situations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 461

[§ 461] Other Situations.

Causes of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress may arise in other circumstances as well. The following situations are illustrative:

(1) Fear of illness. See Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C.4th 965, 1000, 25 C.R.2d 550, 863 P.2d 795, infra, §1036 [dumping of hazardous wastes, causing fear of cancer]; Kerins v. Hartley (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1062, 1075, 33 C.R.2d 172 [fear of AIDS; surgeon operated without disclosing he was infected with human immunodeficiency virus]; 41 Santa Clara L. Rev. 661 [emotional distress issues raised by release of toxic and other hazardous materials]; 25 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 205 [Kerins]; 6 A.L.R.5th 162 [emotional distress by toxic exposure]; BAJI, No. 12.71 [intentional infliction of emotional distress--fear of cancer/AIDS]; CACI, No. 1601 [intentional infliction of emotional distress--fear of cancer, HIV, or AIDS].

(2) Conduct toward employee. See Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 C.A.3d 241, 255, 208 C.R. 524 [statements and conduct tending to humiliate employee]; 52 A.L.R.4th 853 [liability of employer, supervisor, or manager for intentionally or recklessly causing employee emotional distress].

(3) Sexual harassment or discrimination. In McDaniel v. Gile (1991) 230 C.A.3d 363, 281 C.R. 242, plaintiff attorney represented defendant in her marital dissolution, and filed a complaint for payment of legal fees and costs. Defendant filed a cross-complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress and legal malpractice, based on allegations of sexual harassment. In her answers to plaintiff's interrogatories in support of his motion for summary adjudication, defendant described various suggestive sexual remarks, sexual assaults, and requests for sexual relations; and she asserted that on her refusal he ceased to give her effective representation. As a result she suffered emotionally and continued to receive psychological counseling. Held, judgment for plaintiff attorney reversed. Defendant was in a special fiduciary relationship with plaintiff, and peculiarly susceptible to emotional distress because of her pending marital dissolution. "The withholding by a retained attorney of legal services when sexual favors are not granted by a client and engaging in sexual harassment of the client are outrageous conduct under these circumstances." (230 C.A.3d 373.) On the issue of legal malpractice, the record shows that plaintiff not only delayed rendering legal services, but also withheld them and gave substandard services when defendant did not grant him sexual favors: "This conduct necessarily falls below the standard of care and skill of members of the legal profession." (230 C.A.3d 375; on attorney malpractice generally, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §311 et seq.) (See 10 Golden Gate L. Rev. 879, 929 [job-related sexual harassment]; 61 A.L.R.3d 944 [emotional distress resulting from discrimination because of sex or marital status].)

(4) Racial bias. In Guillory v. Godfrey (1955) 134 C.A.2d 628, 286 P.2d 474, defendants, objecting to plaintiffs' hiring of a black cook for their restaurant, engaged in insults and intimidation of customers, ruining the business and causing mental perturbation aggravating an existing gall bladder problem and finally resulting in a nervous breakdown of one plaintiff. An award of compensatory and punitive damages was affirmed. (134 C.A.2d 633.)

In Alcorn v. Anbro Engineering (1970) 2 C.3d 493, 86 C.R. 88, 458 P.2d 216, plaintiff, a black truck driver for defendant corporation, was also a union shop steward. In the latter capacity he advised another employee who was not a teamster to refrain from driving a truck. Defendant P, the job superintendent, shouted: "You goddam 'niggers' are not going to tell me about the rules. I don't want any 'niggers' working for me ... you're fired." The discharge was ratified by defendant A, the corporation's secretary. Plaintiff was later reinstated with back pay, but sued for damages for alleged shock, nausea, and insomnia. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed.

(a) The relationship between the parties was significant; plaintiff's status as an employee entitled him to a greater degree of protection from insult than if he were a stranger. (2 C.3d 498, footnote 2.)

(b) Plaintiff's susceptibility to emotional distress from an insult to his race and the ignoring of his union position was likewise significant. (2 C.3d 498, footnote 3; see 2 C.3d 499, footnote 6 [listing similar out-of-state cases].) (See Agarwal v. Johnson (1979) 25 C.3d 932, 946, 947, 160 C.R. 141, 603 P.2d 58 [racial insult directed at employee]; Robinson v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 1108, 1128, 228 C.R. 591 [following Alcorn and Agarwal]; Rest.2d, Torts §46, Comments e and f; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §304; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §9.1 et seq.; 17 Hastings L. J. 189, 201; 15 A.L.R.2d 108 [civil liability for insulting or abusive language not amounting to defamation]; 40 A.L.R.3d 1290 [recovery of damages for emotional distress resulting from racial, ethnic, or religious abuse or discrimination].)

(5) Business or collection practices. In State Rubbish Collectors Assn. v. Siliznoff (1952) 38 C.2d 330, 240 P.2d 282, defendant S obtained a rubbish collection account without a payoff to A, the member of plaintiff association who previously had the account and whose work was unsatisfactory. S later signed promissory notes to A under threats of physical violence from association members. In this action on the notes, defendant was awarded general, special, and exemplary damages for fright and resulting illness. Plaintiff intentionally caused defendant's emotional distress in order to compel him to give up the account or pay for it, and such methods of competing for business are not privileged. (38 C.2d 336.) (See 44 Cal. L. Rev. 47; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 530; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 440.)

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 C.A.3d 295, 97 C.R. 577, plaintiffs, husband and wife, alleged that defendants filed a civil action against them; that, with intent to inflict extreme mental suffering, they caused a process server to call at their home at 12 midnight when the lights were out; that he did not use the doorbell, but pounded on the front door in a loud and boisterous manner, awakening plaintiffs, their family, and the neighborhood; and that plaintiffs were frightened and upset. Substantial compensatory and punitive damages were sought. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed. Defendants' contention that the conduct alleged was only an indignity or annoyance, and not the extreme or outrageous conduct required for the tort, was rejected: "[T]here may be reasonable men who consider it outrageous to serve civil process by pounding on the door of a darkened home at midnight in a loud and boisterous manner which awakens the occupants and the neighborhood, all with the express intent of inflicting extreme mental suffering and duress upon the occupants, and without any attempt to serve, or any reason to believe that process could not be served, on the plaintiff husband at a reasonable time in a reasonable manner." (20 C.A.3d 310.)

(6) Conduct resulting in suicide. In Tate v. Canonica (1960) 180 C.A.2d 898, 5 C.R. 28, plaintiffs, widow and children of T, alleged in Count 1 that defendants intentionally made threats and accusations against T for the purpose of harassing, embarrassing, and humiliating him in the presence of others, and that "due thereto" he became "physically and mentally disturbed" and as a direct result committed suicide. Count 2 charged the negligent making of the same statements. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed. The court rejected, as inapplicable to intentional torts, the defenses of superseding cause (see supra, §18) and contributory negligence (see infra, §1302). The conditions of liability were set forth as follows: "[I]n a case where the defendant intended, by his conduct, to cause serious mental distress or serious physical suffering, and does so, and such mental distress is shown by the evidence to be 'a substantial factor in bringing about' ... the suicide, a cause of action for wrongful death results, whether the suicide was committed in a state of insanity, or in response to an irresistible impulse, or not. This rule would not apply where the act of the defendant was intentionally done, but there was no intent to cause injury. It is applicable only where the actor intended to cause injury, and the injury is a substantial factor in bringing about the suicide, i.e., is really a cause, in fact, of the suicide. This does not mean that, in every case where the actor intentionally causes serious mental distress or physical suffering, and this is followed by suicide, the actor is necessarily liable for the suicide. The mental distress or physical suffering may not be, in the particular case, as a matter of fact, a substantial factor in bringing about the suicide. But all recorded history testifies that there are cases in which serious mental or physical suffering is in fact a cause of suicide." (180 C.A.2d 909.) (See 12 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 967 [liability for causing or failing to prevent suicide].)

(7) Miscellaneous. See Delia S. v. Torres (1982) 134 C.A.3d 471, 484, 184 C.R. 787 [husband's action based on rape of wife by family friend]; KOVR-TV v. Superior Court (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1023, 1030, 37 C.R.2d 431 [interview by television reporter of three young children on camera with no adult present concerning murder of two playmates who lived next door, about which children were then unaware]; 33 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 449 [emotional distress claims based on domestic deceit that interferes with parent-child relationship]; 34 A.L.R.4th 688 [statement of medical practitioner or official as outrageous conduct]; 91 A.L.R.5th 545 [recovery for emotional distress due to treatment of pets and animals]; 99 A.L.R. 5th 445 [action against paramour for intentional infliction of emotional distress]; 101 A.L.R.5th 515 [recovery for emotional distress resulting from actions of law enforcement officers]; 110 A.L.R.5th 371 [intentional infliction of emotional distress in marital context]; 18 Proof of Facts 3d 103 [recovery for emotional distress resulting from actions by school teacher or administrator]; 68 Proof of Facts 3d 179 [liability for psychological harm from story or picture in media].

In Kiseskey v. Carpenters' Trust for Southern Calif. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 222, 192 C.R. 492, plaintiff employer alleged that defendant agents of defendant labor union telephoned and threatened him and his family if he did not sign another agreement with the union. Examples set forth in the complaint included the following: "You are a no good son of a bitch and if you don't resign the agreement and get in set with the union, you'll be put in the hospital." "Rejoin the union or you might not live to regret it." "Since you do not seem to be concerned about your safety and well-being, maybe you will be concerned about the well-being of your wife and children." Held, a cause of action was stated. (144 C.A.3d 230.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Conduct toward employee. See 125 A.L.R.5th 457 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by failure to provide pension or disability benefits]; 7 A.L.R.6th 563 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by discharge or forced resignation]; 10 A.L.R.6th 375 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by disability discrimination]; 11 A.L.R.6th 447 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by age discrimination]; 19 A.L.R.6th 1 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by ethnic, racial, or religious harassment or discrimination]; 20 A.L.R.6th 1 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by sexual harassment, sexual discrimination, or accusations concerning sexual conduct or orientation]; 21 A.L.R.6th 671 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by accusation or implication of dishonesty]; 38 A.L.R.6th 541 [employer's, supervisor's, or manager's intentional infliction of emotional distress on employee by defamation, invasion of privacy, or misuse of company procedures].

(3) Sexual harassment or discrimination. Attorney malpractice:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §285 et seq.

(4) Racial bias. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.1 et seq.(7) Miscellaneous. See 8 A.L.R.6th 399 [vicarious or imputed liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress on nonemployee]; 30 A.L.R.6th 241 [liability for infliction of emotional distress derived from use of Internet and electronic communications].

82 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY D. Interference With Access. 1. Commercial Blockade.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 462

[§ 462] Commercial Blockade.

(1) In General. C.C. 3427 et seq., entitled "Interference With Access to Health Care," sets forth the tort of "commercial blockade." These provisions are not to be construed to impair any constitutionally protected activity or any activities protected by the labor laws of California or the United States. (C.C. 3427.4.)

(2) Nature of Tort. "It is unlawful, and constitutes the tort of commercial blockade for a person, alone or in concert with others, to intentionally prevent an individual from entering or exiting a health care facility by physically obstructing the individual's passage or by disrupting the normal functioning of a health care facility." (C.C. 3427.1.)

"Disrupting the normal functioning of a health care facility" refers to intentionally rendering or attempting to render the facility temporarily or permanently unavailable or unusable by licensed health practitioners, the facility's staff, or its patients. It does not include acts of the owner of the facility, the owner's agent, or governmental officers or employees designed to protect public health or safety. (C.C. 3427(c).)

A "health care facility" is defined as a facility providing health care services directly to patients, and includes hospitals, clinics, licensed health practitioners' offices, health maintenance organizations, diagnostic or treatment centers, neuropsychiatric or mental health facilities, hospices, and nursing homes. (C.C. 3427(d).)

(3) Civil Action. Persons or health care facilities aggrieved by the tort of commercial blockade may seek civil damages from those who committed the tort and those acting in concert with them. (C.C. 3427.2.) Persons and facilities "aggrieved" means (a) persons present at a health care facility when a commercial blockade occurs and whose access is obstructed or impeded or whose health care is disrupted; (b) the health care facility where a commercial blockade occurs and its employees, contractors, or volunteers; and (c) the owner either of a health care facility where a commercial blockade occurs or of the building or property on which the facility is located. (C.C. 3427(a).)

(4) Protection of Privacy and Prevention of Harassment. The court having jurisdiction over a commercial blockade action must take all steps reasonably necessary, including granting protective orders, to safeguard the individual privacy and prevent harassment of health care patients, licensed health practitioners, and employees, clients, and customers of health care facilities who are parties or witnesses in the proceeding. These persons may use pseudonyms to protect their privacy. (C.C. 3427.3.)

West's Key Number Digest, Hospitals k.8; Torts k.6

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

83 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY D. Interference With Access. 2. Interference With Access to Clinic or Church.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 463

[§ 463] Interference With Access to Clinic or Church.

(1) Nature of Legislation. The California Freedom of Access to Clinic and Church Entrances Act (P.C. 423 et seq.) provides civil remedies for the commission of specified activities that interfere with a person's access to reproductive health services facilities or participation in religious services or that damage or destroy property of a reproductive health facility or a place of worship. (P.C. 423.2, 423.4; see P.C. 423 [Act may also be cited as California FACE Act]; P.C. 423.1 [definitions of terms]; for federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, see 18 U.S.C., §248.) Violations are also subject to criminal punishment. (P.C. 423.2, 423.3; on crimes under Act, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), and Crimes Against Property, Supp., §2612 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, Supp., §409.)

(2) Violations of Act. The Act is violated when a person, other than a parent or guardian acting towards a minor child or ward, does any of the following:

(a) By force, threat of force, or physical obstruction that is a crime of violence, intentionally injures, intimidates, interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with, a person or entity (1) because that person or entity is a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant, or (2) in order to intimidate a person or entity, or a class of persons or entities, from becoming or remaining a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant. (P.C. 423.2(a).)

(b) By force, threat of force, or physical obstruction that is a crime of violence, intentionally injures, intimidates, interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with a person lawfully exercising or seeking to exercise the First Amendment right of religious freedom at a place of religious worship. (P.C. 423.2(b).)

(c) By nonviolent physical obstruction, intentionally injures, intimidates, or interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with, a person or entity (1) because that person or entity is a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant, or (2) in order to intimidate a person or entity, or a class of persons or entities, from becoming or remaining a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant. (P.C. 423.2(c).)

(d) By nonviolent physical obstruction, intentionally injures, intimidates, or interferes with, or attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with, a person lawfully exercising or seeking to exercise the First Amendment right of religious freedom at a place of religious worship. (P.C. 423.2(d).)

(e) Intentionally damages or destroys the property of a person, entity, or facility, or attempts to do so, because the person, entity, or facility is a reproductive health services client, provider, assistant, or facility. (P.C. 423.2(e).)

(f) Intentionally damages or destroys the property of a place of religious worship. (P.C. 423.2(f).)

(3) Civil Remedies. Generally, any person aggrieved by a violation of the Act may bring a civil action to enjoin the violation, for compensatory and punitive damages, and for the costs of suit and reasonable fees for attorneys and expert witnesses. However, only a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant may bring an action under P.C. 423.2(a), (c), or (e), and only a person lawfully exercising or seeking to exercise the First Amendment right of religious freedom in a place of religious worship, or the entity that owns or operates a place of religious worship, may bring an action under P.C. 423.2(b), (d), or (f). With respect to compensatory damages, the plaintiff may elect, at any time prior to final judgment, to recover, in lieu of actual damages, an award of statutory damages of $ 1,000 per exclusively nonviolent violation, and $ 5,000 per any other violation, for each violation committed. (P.C. 423.4(a).)

The Attorney General, a district attorney, or a city attorney may bring a civil action to enjoin a violation, for compensatory damages to persons aggrieved by a violation, and for the assessment of a civil penalty against each respondent. The civil penalty may not exceed $ 2,000 for an exclusively nonviolent first violation, and $ 15,000 for any other first violation, and may not exceed $ 5,000 for an exclusively nonviolent subsequent violation, and $ 25,000 for any other subsequent violation. In imposing civil penalties, the court must consider a prior violation of the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act or a prior violation of a statute of another jurisdiction that would constitute a violation of either this Act or the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act to be a prior violation of this Act. (P.C. 423.4(b).)

No person may be found liable for conduct in violation of this Act done on a particular occasion where the identical conduct on that occasion was the basis for a finding of liability by that person under the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act. (P.C. 423.4(c).)

(4) Protective Measures in Court. The court in which a proceeding is filed for a violation of P.C. 423.2(a), (c), or (e) must take all action reasonably required, including granting restraining orders, to safeguard the health, safety, or privacy of either a reproductive health services client, provider, or assistant who is a party or witness in the proceeding or a person who is a victim of, or at risk of becoming a victim of, the prohibited conduct. (P.C. 423.5(a)(1).) Similarly, the court in which a proceeding is filed for a violation of P.C. 423.2(b), (d), or (f) must take all action reasonably required, including granting restraining orders, to safeguard the health, safety, or privacy of either a person lawfully exercising or seeking to exercise the First Amendment right of religious freedom at a place of religious worship or an entity that owns or operates a place of religious worship. (P.C. 423.5(a)(2).) Restraining orders may include provisions prohibiting or restricting the photographing of these persons when reasonably required to safeguard their health, safety, or privacy. (P.C. 423.5(b).) The court may, in its discretion, permit these persons to use pseudonyms when reasonably required to safeguard their health, safety, or privacy. (P.C. 423.5(c) [excepting criminal proceedings].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

84 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY E. Marketing of Illegal Drugs. 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 464

[§ 464] In General.

(1) Enactment and Purpose of Statute. The Drug Dealer Liability Act (Health & Saf.C. 11700 et seq.) establishes a cause of action in persons injured as a result of the marketing of illegal controlled substances. The Legislature found that the civil justice system should be joined with the criminal justice system in an effort to deter these activities. (Health & Saf.C. 11702(a).) (See 28 Pacific L. J. 681 [Drug Dealer Liability Act].)

(2) Cause of Action. A person may recover damages for injury resulting from an individual's use of an illegal controlled substance. Recovery may be had from persons who knowingly participate in the marketing of illegal controlled substances within California. (Health & Saf.C. 11704(a).) (On statute of limitations, see Health & Saf.C. 11714.)

(3) Definitions. "Participate in the marketing of illegal controlled substances" means to transport, import into the state, sell, possess with intent to sell, furnish, administer, or give away, or offer to transport, import into the state, sell, furnish, administer, or give away a specified illegal controlled substance. (Health & Saf.C. 11703(g).) "Marketing of illegal controlled substances" means the possession for sale, sale, or distribution of a specified illegal controlled substance. (Health & Saf.C. 11703(a); see Health & Saf.C. 11703(l) [designating substances included in term "specified illegal controlled substance"].)

(4) Proof. Proof of liability must be shown by clear and convincing evidence. Other elements of the cause may be shown by a preponderance of the evidence. (Health & Saf.C. 11712(a); see Health & Saf.C. 11712(b) [evidentiary effect of criminal conviction].)

(5) Damages. Damages recoverable are prescribed by the Act. (See infra, §1689.)

West's Key Number Digest, Drugs and Narcotics k.42, 50; Torts k.7

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Definitions.

"Participate in the marketing of illegal controlled substances": Health & Saf.C. 11703(g), as amended in 2005, includes in the definition "the manufacturing of an illegal controlled substance." (See Stats. 2005, Chap. 88, §3 [amendment serves only to clarify that manufacturing of illegal controlled substance is included in definition and does not constitute change in existing law].)"Marketing of illegal controlled substances": Health & Saf.C. 11703(a), as amended in 2005, includes in the definition "all aspects of making such a controlled substance available, including, but not limited to, its manufacture." (See Stats. 2005, Chap. 88, §3 [amendment serves only to clarify that manufacturing of illegal controlled substance is included in definition and does not constitute change in existing law].)

85 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY E. Marketing of Illegal Drugs. 2. Who May Recover.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 465

[§ 465] Who May Recover.

Any one or more of the following may sue for relief under the Drug Dealer Liability Act:

- (1) A parent, legal guardian, child, spouse, or sibling of the individual controlled substance user. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(a)(1).)
- (2) An individual who was exposed to an illegal controlled substance in utero. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(a)(2).)
- (3) An employer of the individual user. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(a)(3).)
- (4) A medical facility, insurer, employer, or other nongovernmental entity, or a public agency medical facility, that funds a drug treatment program or employee assistance program for the individual user or that otherwise expended money on his or her behalf. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(a)(4).)
- (5) A person injured as a result of the wilful, reckless, or negligent actions of an individual user. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(a)(5).) (On joinder of plaintiffs, see Health & Saf.C. 11709(a), (c).)

The individual user also has a cause of action, but only in prescribed conditions (including disclosure of sources of the controlled substance and avoidance of use of the substance for 30 days before the action as well as during its pendency) and subject to limitations on who may be sued (infra, §466) and on the damages recoverable (infra, §1689). (Health & Saf.C. 11706.) Moreover, an action by an individual user is governed by the principles of comparative responsibility, with the award diminished proportionally according to the measure of responsibility attributable to the user. (Health & Saf.C. 11710(a); see Health & Saf.C. 11710(b) [burden on defendant of proving plaintiff's comparative responsibility by clear and convincing evidence].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

86 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY
E. Marketing of Illegal Drugs.
3. Who Is Liable.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 466

[§ 466] Who Is Liable.

Damages are recoverable under the Drug Dealer Liability Act from one or more of the following:

(1) A person who sold, administered, or furnished an illegal controlled substance to the individual user of the substance. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(b)(1).)

(2) A person who knowingly participated in the marketing of illegal controlled substances, if (a) the place of illegal activity by the individual user is within the city, city and county, or unincorporated area of the county in which the defendant's place of participation is situated, (b) the defendant's participation in the marketing was connected with the same type of specified illegal controlled substance used by the individual user, and the defendant has been convicted of an offense for that type of controlled substance, (c) the defendant participated in the marketing at any time during the period the individual user illegally used the controlled substance, and (d) the underlying offense for the conviction of the specified illegal controlled substance occurred in the same county as the individual user's place of use. (Health & Saf.C. 11705(b)(2); on definition of "knowingly participated in the marketing of illegal controlled substances," see Health & Saf.C. 11705(c).)

An individual user plaintiff (supra, §465) may seek damages only from a person who transported, imported into this state, sold, possessed with intent to sell, furnished, administered, or gave away the specified illegal controlled substance actually used by the individual user. (Health & Saf.C. 11706(b).)

Two or more persons may be joined as defendants if they are liable to at least one plaintiff. (Health & Saf.C. 11709(b); on presumed proportion of responsibility of persons participating in marketing of illegal controlled substances, see Health & Saf.C. 11708.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Individual user suits: Health & Saf.C. 11706(b), as amended in 2005, also authorizes an individual user's recovery of damages from a person who "manufactured" the illegal controlled substance. (See Stats. 2005, Chap. 88, §3 [amendment does not constitute change in existing law].)

87 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY F. Domestic Violence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 467

[§ 467] Domestic Violence.

(1) In General. C.C. 1708.6 creates the tort of domestic violence. The Legislature in adopting the statute finds and declares that acts of violence occurring in a domestic context are increasingly widespread; that these acts merit special consideration as torts, because the elements of trust, physical proximity, and emotional intimacy necessary to domestic relationships in a healthy society make participants in those relationships particularly vulnerable to physical attack by their partners; and that "it is the purpose of this act to enhance the civil remedies available to victims of domestic violence in order to underscore society's condemnation of these acts, to ensure complete recovery to victims, and to impose significant financial consequences upon perpetrators." (Stats. 2002, Chap. 193, §1.) The rights and remedies provided are in addition to any other rights and remedies provided by law. (C.C. 1708.6(d).) (See BAJI, No. 7.96 [tort of domestic violence].)

(2) Elements. A person is liable for the tort if the plaintiff proves both of the following elements:

(a) Infliction of injury on the plaintiff resulting from abuse, as defined in P.C. 13700(a), i.e., "intentionally or recklessly causing or attempting to cause bodily injury, or placing another person in reasonable apprehension of imminent serious bodily injury to himself or herself, or another." (C.C. 1708.6(a)(1).)

(b) Commission of the abuse by the defendant, a person having a relationship with the plaintiff as defined in P.C. 13700(b), i.e., "abuse committed against an adult or a fully emancipated minor who is a spouse, former spouse, cohabitant, former cohabitant, or person with whom" the defendant "has had a child or is having or has had a dating or engagement relationship." (C.C. 1708.6(a)(2).)

(3) Remedies. A person who commits an act of domestic violence is liable for damages, including general damages, special damages, and punitive damages. (C.C. 1708.6(b).) The plaintiff may also be granted injunctive and other equitable relief, costs, attorneys' fees, and any other relief that the court deems proper. (C.C. 1708.6(c).)

In a pending dissolution or separation proceeding, the court may enforce a domestic violence damages judgment against the abusive spouse's share of community property. (Family C. 2603.5.)

(4) Time of Suit. The time for commencement of the action is governed by the 3-year statute provided in C.C.P. 340.15 (see 3 Cal. Procedure (4th), Actions, §450). (C.C. 1708.6(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Remedies. See Pugliese v. Superior Court (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1444, 1451, 53 C.R.3d 681 [domestic violence under C.C. 1708.6 is continuing tort for purposes of statute of limitations; victim may recover damages for all acts of domestic abuse occurring during domestic relationship, so long as victim proves continuing course of abusive conduct and files action within 3 years of last act]; 36 McGeorge L. Rev. 922 [background and effect of Family C. 2603.5].

88 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY G. Gender-Related Violence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 468

[§ 468] Gender-Related Violence.

(1) In General. C.C. 52.4 permits a person injured by a crime of violence motivated by gender to bring a civil action for relief against the responsible party. In enacting the statute, the Legislature finds and declares that existing state and federal laws do not adequately prevent and remedy gender-related violence, such as domestic violence; that this violence disproportionately occurs against women; that sexual abuse harms many women, children, and families, and is often not reported to the authorities or prosecuted; that acts of domestic violence and sexual abuse on the basis of gender constitute a form of sexual discrimination; and that all persons within the state have the right to be free from crimes of violence motivated by gender. (Stats. 2002, Chap. 842, §1.)

(2) Definition of Offense. "Gender violence" is a form of sex discrimination and means either of the following:

(a) One or more acts that would constitute a criminal offense under state law that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, committed at least in part based on the gender of the victim, whether or not those acts have resulted in criminal complaints, charges, prosecution, or conviction. (C.C. 52.4(c)(1).)

(b) A physical intrusion or physical invasion of a sexual nature under coercive conditions, whether or not those acts have resulted in criminal complaints, charges, prosecution, or conviction. (C.C. 52.4(c)(2).)

(3) Cause of Action. Any person who has been subjected to gender violence may bring a civil action for damages against the responsible party or parties. (C.C. 52.4(a).) However, notwithstanding any other laws that may establish the liability of an employer for the acts of an employee, this statute does not establish any civil liability of a person because of his or her status as an employer, unless the employer personally committed an act of gender violence. (C.C. 52.4(d).)

(4) Remedies. The plaintiff may seek actual damages, compensatory damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief, any combination of those, or any other appropriate relief. A prevailing plaintiff may also be awarded attorneys' fees and costs. (C.C. 52.4(a).)

(5) Time of Suit. The action must be commenced within 3 years of the act, or if the victim was a minor when the act occurred, within 8 years after the date the plaintiff attains the age of majority or within 3 years after the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered a psychological injury or illness occurring after the age of majority that was caused by the act, whichever date occurs later. (C.C. 52.4(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

89 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY H. (New) Human Trafficking.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 468A

[§ 468A] (New) Human Trafficking.

(1) Cause of Action. C.C. 52.5, added in 2005, authorizes a civil action by a victim of human trafficking, as defined in P.C. 236.1. (C.C. 52.5(a).) A person who deprives another of personal liberty or violates that person's liberty with the intent to effect or maintain a felony violation of specified statutes, or to obtain forced labor or services, is guilty of human trafficking. The applicable felonies are seduction for prostitution (P.C. 266), pimping (P.C. 266h), pandering (P.C. 266i), abduction for prostitution (P.C. 267), employment or use of a minor to perform obscene acts (P.C. 311.4), and extortion (P.C. 518). (P.C. 236.1(a).) (See 119 Harv. L. Rev. 2574 [remedying human trafficking through tort law].) (On crime of human trafficking, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, Supp., §78A.)

(2) Remedies. Remedies include "actual damages, compensatory damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief, any combination of those, or any other appropriate relief." (C.C. 52.5(a).) In addition to these remedies, the plaintiff may be awarded up to three times his or her actual damages or $ 10,000, whichever is greater. Punitive damages may be awarded on proof of the defendant's malice, oppression, fraud, or duress. (C.C. 52.5(b).)

The plaintiff may also be awarded reasonable attorneys' fees and litigation costs, including, but not limited to, expert witness fees and expenses. (C.C. 52.5(a), (f).)

Any restitution paid by the defendant must be credited against a judgment, award, or settlement obtained by the victim. The recovery is also subject to reimbursement of overpayments of restitution. (C.C. 52.5(g).)

(3) Time of Suit. The action must be commenced within 5 years of the date on which the trafficking victim was freed from the trafficking situation, or, if the victim was a minor when the act of human trafficking against the victim occurred, within 8 years after the date the plaintiff attains the age of majority. (C.C. 52.5(c).)

If a person entitled to sue is under a disability at the time the cause of action accrues, so that it is impossible or impracticable to bring an action, the disability will toll the running of the statute of limitations. (C.C. 52.5(d).) Disability includes minority, insanity, imprisonment, or other incapacity or incompetence. (C.C. 52.5(d)(1).) The statute will not run against an incompetent or minor plaintiff simply because a guardian ad litem has been appointed; the guardian ad litem's failure to bring the action within the applicable limitation period does not prejudice the plaintiff's right to do so after his or her disability ceases. (C.C. 52.5(d)(2).)

A defendant is estopped to assert the limitations defense when the expiration of the statute is due to conduct by the defendant inducing the plaintiff to delay filing the action, or due to threats made by the defendant causing duress on the plaintiff. (C.C. 52.5(d)(3).)

Suspension of the statute due to disability, lack of knowledge, or estoppel applies to all other related claims arising out of the trafficking situation. (C.C. 52.5(d)(4).)

The running of the statute is postponed during the pendency of any criminal proceedings against the victim. (C.C. 52.5(d)(5).)

The running of the statute may be suspended where a person entitled to sue could not have reasonably discovered the cause of action due to circumstances resulting from the trafficking situation, such as psychological trauma, cultural and linguistic isolation, and inability to access services. (C.C. 52.5(e).)

(4) Stay of Action. A civil action filed under these provisions must be stayed during the pendency of a criminal action arising out of the same occurrence. For these purposes, a "criminal action" includes investigation and prosecution, and is pending until a final adjudication in the trial court, or dismissal. (C.C. 52.5(h).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

90 of 90 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law III. INTENTIONAL INVASIONS OF INTERESTS IN PERSONALITY I. (New) Implantation of Identification Device.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 468B

[§ 468B] (New) Implantation of Identification Device.

(1) Cause of Action. C.C. 52.7, added in 2007, generally prohibits a person from requiring, coercing, or compelling an individual to undergo the subcutaneous implanting of an identification device. (C.C. 52.7(a).) "Person" includes an individual, business association, partnership, limited partnership, corporation, limited liability company, trust, estate, cooperative association, or other entity. (C.C. 52.7(h)(2).) "Identification device" means any item, application, or product that is passively or actively capable of transmitting personal information, including, but not limited to, devices using radio frequency technology. (C.C. 52.7(h)(1).) "Personal information" includes any of specified data elements to the extent they are used alone or in conjunction with any other information to identify an individual. These include, among other items, name, date of birth, photographs, fingerprints, personal and financial identification numbers, and e-mail addresses and other electronic identifiers. (C.C. 52.7(h)(3).)

(2) Remedies.

(a) Civil penalty. A person who violates the statute may be assessed an initial civil penalty of no more than $ 10,000, and no more than $ 1,000 for each day the violation continues until the deficiency is corrected. The civil penalty may be assessed and recovered in a civil action brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. (C.C. 52.7(b)(1).)

(b) Damages. The person implanted with the device may bring a civil action for "actual damages, compensatory damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief, any combination of those, or any other appropriate relief." (C.C. 52.7(b)(2).) Punitive damages may be awarded upon proof of the defendant's "malice, oppression, fraud, or duress in requiring, coercing, or compelling the plaintiff to undergo" the implantation. (C.C. 52.7(b)(3).)

(c) Fees and costs. The court may grant a prevailing plaintiff reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, including, but not limited to, expert witness fees and expenses. (C.C. 52.7(b)(1).)

(d) Effect of restitution by defendant. Any restitution paid by the defendant to the victim must be credited against a judgment, award, or settlement obtained pursuant to the statute. The judgment, award, or settlement is subject to Govt.C. 13963 (crime victim's claims with California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board; see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §99). (C.C. 52.7(d).)

(3) Statute of Limitations. Generally, an action brought under the statute must be commenced within 3 years of the date on which the identification device was implanted. (C.C. 52.7(c)(1).) If the victim was a dependent adult or minor when the implantation occurred, the action must be commenced within 3 years after the date the plaintiff, or his or her guardian or parent, discovered or reasonably should have discovered the implant, or 8 years after the plaintiff attains the age of majority, whichever date occurs later. (C.C. 52.7(c)(2).)

The statute of limitations does not run against a dependent adult or minor plaintiff simply because a guardian ad litem has been appointed. A guardian ad litem's failure to bring a plaintiff's action within the applicable limitations period will not prejudice the plaintiff's right to do so. (C.C. 52.7(c)(3).)

A defendant is estopped to assert the statute of limitations when the expiration of the statute is due to conduct by the defendant inducing the plaintiff to delay the filing of the action, or due to threats made by the defendant causing duress on the plaintiff. (C.C. 52.7(c)(4).)

(4) Scope and Construction of Statute. Actions brought pursuant to this statute are independent of any other actions, remedies, or procedures that may be available to an aggrieved party pursuant to any other law. (C.C. 52.7(f).)

The statute does not modify existing statutory or case law regarding the rights of parents or guardians, the rights of children or minors, or the rights of dependent adults. (C.C. 52.7(g).)

The statute "shall be liberally construed so as to protect privacy and bodily integrity." (C.C. 52.7(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS A. Malicious Prosecution. 1. In General. a. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 469

[§ 469] Nature of Tort.

(1) Definition and Scope. Malicious prosecution consists of the initiation and maintenance of legal proceedings against another with malice and without probable cause. (Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 C.2d 577, 580, 311 P.2d 577, infra, §513; Andrus v. Estrada (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1030, 1039, 46 C.R.2d 300.) The proceedings on which the tort is based may be criminal (see infra, §475 et seq.), civil (see infra, §486 et seq.), or administrative (see infra, §513 et seq.) in nature. (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 871, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510; see Rest.2d, Torts §§653 et seq., 674 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §429 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §4.1 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process, Chap. 19; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §706 et seq.; 20 California Lawyer 69 (August 2000) [nature and elements of malicious prosecution claim]; 152 A.L.R. Fed 605 [Federal Tort Claims Act exemption of malicious prosecution claims]; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §1 et seq.; 16 Am.Jur. Trials 205 [malicious prosecution]; 7 Proof of Facts 2d 181 [malicious prosecution].) (On insurance covering malicious prosecution, see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §104.)

(2) Elements. The elements of the tort, which must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, are (a) the institution of an action at the direction of the defendant in the malicious prosecution suit (b) without probable cause and (c) with malice, (d) termination of the initial action favorably to the plaintiff in the malicious prosecution suit, and (e) resulting damage. (Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 C.3d 527, 531, 183 C.R. 86, 645 P.2d 137, infra, §487; Jacques Interiors v. Petrak (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1363, 1369, 234 C.R. 44; Nicholson v. Fazeli (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1091, 1098, 6 C.R.3d 881; Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co. (2004) 115 C.A.4th 306, 318, 8 C.R.3d 915; see BAJI, No. 7.30 [stating these elements]; CACI, No. 1500 et seq. [same]; on damages recoverable, see infra, §1699.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Definition and Scope.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §750 et seq.

(3) (New) SLAPPback Actions. C.C.P. 425.18, added in 2005, exempts a "SLAPPback" from specified provisions of the anti-SLAPP statute (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.) and establishes separate procedures for these actions. A SLAPPback is a cause of action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process (text, §517 et seq.) arising from the filing or maintenance of a prior cause of action that has been dismissed pursuant to a special motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute. (C.C.P. 425.18(b)(1).) The Legislature "finds and declares that a SLAPPback ... action should be treated differently ... from an ordinary malicious prosecution action because a SLAPPback is consistent with the Legislature's intent to protect the valid exercise of the constitutional rights of free speech and petition by its deterrent effect on SLAPP (strategic lawsuit against public participation) litigation and by its restoration of public confidence in participatory democracy." (C.C.P. 425.18(a).)

The provisions of the anti-SLAPP statute relating to recovery of attorneys' fees and costs (see C.C.P. 425.16(c)), time of filing and hearing (see C.C.P. 425.16(f)), stay of discovery (see C.C.P. 425.16(g)), and appeal (see C.C.P. 425.16(i), 904.1(a)(13)) are expressly inapplicable to a special motion to strike a SLAPPback. (C.C.P. 425.18(c).)

A special motion to strike a SLAPPback may be filed within 120 days after the service of the complaint or, at the court's discretion, within 6 months after the service of the complaint or at a later time in extraordinary cases. (C.C.P. 425.18(d).) A party opposing a special motion to strike a SLAPPback may file an ex parte application for a continuance to obtain necessary discovery. (C.C.P. 425.18(e).) The court must award costs and reasonable attorneys' fees to a plaintiff prevailing on a special motion to strike a SLAPPback if the court finds that the motion is frivolous or solely intended to cause unnecessary delay. (C.C.P. 425.18(f).)

C.C.P. 425.18 does not apply to a SLAPPback filed by a public entity. (C.C.P. 425.18(i).)

2 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

1. In General.

b. Other Torts Distinguished.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 470

[§ 470] Other Torts Distinguished.

(1) False Imprisonment. Malicious prosecution differs from false imprisonment as follows:

(a) False imprisonment is unlawful confinement (see supra, §426); malicious prosecution is based on lawful prosecution. (Bulkley v. Klein (1962) 206 C.A.2d 742, 746, 23 C.R. 855.)

(b) Malice and lack of probable cause are essential elements of malicious prosecution, while provocation, motive, or good faith of the defendant are ordinarily immaterial in an action for false imprisonment, save where punitive damages are sought, and then are only relevant on the measure of damages. (Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 C.A.2d 713, 716, 176 P.2d 372; Miller v. Glass (1955) 44 C.2d 359, 362, 282 P.2d 501; Collins v. San Francisco (1975) 50 C.A.3d 671, 676, 123 C.R. 525.)

(c) The unlawful confinement, as by illegal arrest, immediately gives the right of action for false imprisonment, regardless of the subsequent outcome of a trial, but malicious prosecution requires favorable termination of the proceeding. (Neves v. Costa (1907) 5 C.A. 111, 117, 89 P. 860; Singleton v. Perry (1955) 45 C.2d 489, 494, 289 P.2d 794.)

(d) Although the weight of authority is contra, California has held that, where the charge on which a person is arrested does not constitute a crime, the court has no jurisdiction and the plaintiff cannot recover for malicious prosecution; false imprisonment is that person's only remedy. (Krause v. Spiegel (1892) 94 C. 370, 373, 29 P. 707; see criticism, 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 130.)

(2) Defamation. A statement made in judicial proceeding is generally privileged from liability for defamation. (See C.C. 47(b); infra, §567 et seq.) However, such a statement may be used, in a proper case, as a basis for liability in a malicious prosecution action. (See infra, §473.)

(3) Abuse of Process. The gist of malicious prosecution is commencing an action without justification, while that of abuse of process (see infra, §517) is misusing or misapplying process justified in itself for an end other than that which it was designed to accomplish. (Tellefsen v. Key System Transit Lines (1961) 198 C.A.2d 611, 615, 17 C.R. 919; Bidna

v. Rosen (1993) 19 C.A.4th 27, 40, 23 C.R. 215, infra, §496.) Thus, it is unnecessary in an abuse of process action for the plaintiff to prove that the proceeding has terminated in his or her favor, or that the process was obtained without probable cause or in the course of a proceeding begun without probable cause. (Tellefsen v. Key System Transit Lines, supra.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS A. Malicious Prosecution. 1. In General. c. Action as Disfavored.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 471

[§ 471] Action as Disfavored.

It has often been said that actions for malicious prosecution are "not favored." (See Ball v. Rawles (1892) 93 C. 222, 228, 28 P. 937; Haydel v. Morton (1935) 8 C.A.2d 730, 732, 48 P.2d 709; Sebastian v. Crowley (1940) 38 C.A.2d 194, 202, 101 P.2d 120; 29 West L.A. L. Rev. 179 [eliminating tort of malicious prosecution]; 20 California Lawyer 69 (August 2000) [malicious prosecution as disfavored action].)

The basis for this traditional view is the potentially chilling effect of these actions on the public's willingness to resort to the courts for the settlement of disputes. (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Olier (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 872, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510.) The court in the Sheldon Appel case observes: "After reviewing the competing policy considerations, we agree with those decisions and commentaries which have concluded that the most promising remedy for excessive litigation does not lie in an expansion of malicious prosecution liability. ... While the filing of frivolous lawsuits is certainly improper and cannot in any way be condoned, in our view the better means of addressing the problem of unjustified litigation is through the adoption of measures facilitating the speedy resolution of the initial lawsuit and authorizing the imposition of sanctions for frivolous or delaying conduct within that first action itself, rather than through an expansion of the opportunities for initiating one or more additional rounds of malicious prosecution litigation after the first action has been concluded." (47 C.3d 873, citing, e.g., C.C.P. 437c, 1038, 128.5.) "Because these avenues appear to provide the most promising remedies of frivolous litigation, we do not believe it is advisable to abandon or relax the traditional limitations on malicious prosecution recovery." (47 C.3d 873.)

The "disfavored action" theory was invoked in Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 C.3d 841, 92 C.R. 179, 479 P.2d 379, in support of its holding that a cause of action for malicious prosecution of a civil action could not be set up by cross-complaint in that main action. "Since malicious prosecution is a cause of action not favored by the law ... , it would be anomalous to sanction a procedural change which not only would encourage more frequent resort to malicious prosecution actions, but would facilitate their use as dilatory and harassing devices." (3 C.3d 847.)

However, this convenient phrase should not be employed to defeat a legitimate cause of action. (Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 53, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, infra, §491; Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 C.4th 666, 680, 34 C.R.2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083; Schubkegel v. Gordino (1943) 56 C.A.2d 667, 672, 133 P.2d 475; Pulvermacher v. Los Angeles Co-ordinating Committee for Aid to Jewish Refugees (1943) 61 C.A.2d 704, 709, 143

P.2d 974; Grove v. Purity Stores, Ltd. (1957) 153 C.A.2d 234, 242, 314 P.2d 543; Sierra Club Foundation v. Graham (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1135, 1148, 85 C.R.2d 726.) As applied to a malicious criminal prosecution, the statement means only that public policy favors the apprehension and punishment of criminals, and to that end imposes a heavy burden of proof on the plaintiff. The policy "should not be pressed further to the extreme of practical nullification of the tort and consequent defeat of the other important policy which underlies it of protecting the individual from the damage caused by unjustifiable criminal prosecution." (Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 C.2d 146, 159, 114 P.2d 335, infra, §479.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

View that action is disfavored does not defeat legitimate claim: See Siebel v. Mittlesteadt (2007) 41 C.4th 735, 740, 62 C.R.3d 155, 161 P.3d 527, Supp., infra, §498 [although malicious prosecution actions are disfavored, when underlying litigation is groundless and motivated by malice, balance tips in favor of redressing harm inflicted by that litigation].

4 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

1. In General.

d. Defense of Plaintiff's Guilt or Liability.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 472

[§ 472] Defense of Plaintiff's Guilt or Liability.

The success of the plaintiff in a prior criminal trial may mean only that the evidence against plaintiff did not measure up to the requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. (See infra, §484.) Hence, in the subsequent civil action for malicious prosecution, the defendant is entitled to judgment on proof by a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff was really guilty of the crime. (See Verdier v. Verdier (1957) 152 C.A.2d 348, 352, 313 P.2d 123; Rest.2d, Torts §657; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §99.) Clary v. Hale (1959) 175 C.A.2d 880, 1 C.R. 91, quotes Prosser's explanation as follows: "A further limitation upon the action of malicious prosecution is that it is always open to the defendant to show that the plaintiff was in fact guilty of the offense with which he was charged. This defense, which is closely analogous to that of truth in actions for defamation, is supported by a similar policy in favor of encouraging exposure of the guilty. As in defamation, the burden of proof of the issue is upon the defendant, and the guilt proved must be substantially equivalent to the charge made. The defense is available notwithstanding an acquittal in the criminal proceeding, and the question of guilt may be retried in the malicious prosecution action. The reason for this is that a verdict of not guilty does not necessarily establish innocence, but merely a failure of the prosecution to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; and in the subsequent civil action, where all that is required is a preponderance of the evidence on the issue, a further inquiry may be made before a new jury as to whether the lesser burden of proof can be sustained. Thus, while an unreversed conviction is conclusive as to guilt and bars malicious prosecution, an acquittal is not conclusive as to the plaintiff's innocence." (175 C.A.2d 889.)

Similarly where the original suit was a civil action, the fact that legal grounds existed on which to base it is a complete defense to a malicious prosecution action. (Paskle v. Williams (1931) 214 C. 482, 484, 6 P.2d 505.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.19-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

5 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

1. In General.

e. No Defense of Absolute Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 473

[§ 473] No Defense of Absolute Privilege.

Generally, a statement made in a judicial proceeding is absolutely privileged from liability for defamation. (See C.C. 47(b); infra, §567 et seq.) Although this privilege applies in a number of tort actions (see infra, §563), an exception is consistently made for malicious prosecution suits. (Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 216, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, infra, §570; Kimmel v. Goland (1990) 51 C.3d 202, 209, 271 C.R. 191, 793 P.2d 524, infra, §661; Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 392, 406, 6 C.R. 781, infra, §568; Fremont Comp. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 44 C.A.4th 867, 877, 52 C.R.2d 211.) "The policy of encouraging free access to the courts ... is outweighed by the policy of affording redress for individual wrongs when the requirements of favorable termination, lack of probable cause, and malice are satisfied." (Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 382, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §511.)

In Rutherford v. Johnson (1967) 250 C.A.2d 316, 58 C.R. 546, J sued for divorce, and filed an affidavit alleging unfitness of his wife for child custody because of a meretricious relationship with R. R then sued for damages, alleging falsity and malice. Held, judgment on demurrer sustained. (a) A cause of action for defamation could have been stated, because the affidavit, directed against a person from whom no relief was sought, was not within the judicial proceeding privilege (see infra, §569). This cause, however, was barred by the 1-year limitation period, which ran from the time of publication of the statement. (250 C.A.2d 318.) (b) No cause of action for malicious prosecution was stated. Plaintiff, not a party to the child custody proceedings, could not allege the necessary element of termination in his favor. (250 C.A.2d 320.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

6 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

1. In General.

f. Preemption by Federal Remedies.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 474

[§ 474] Preemption by Federal Remedies.

(1) Civil Rights Actions. In Del Rio v. Jetton (1997) 55 C.A.4th 30, 63 C.R.2d 712, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, Supp., §206, plaintiffs, as the prevailing defendants in a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983, had been awarded attorneys' fees under 42 U.S.C., §1988. They then brought this malicious prosecution action, but defendants argued that plaintiffs were preempted from doing so by 42 U.S.C., §1988. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed; there was no indication that Congress intended to limit those unjustly charged with civil rights violations to the remedy of attorneys' fees.

(a) Federal decisions have held that, in a 42 U.S.C., §1983 action, the prevailing defendant may recover attorneys' fees by establishing that the suit had been brought without foundation. However, a successful malicious prosecution action under California law requires that the suit not only be without foundation, but that it have been brought in bad faith. Accordingly, nothing in the legislative history of 42 U.S.C., §1988 indicates an intent to prevent a more seriously damaged defendant from obtaining a greater remedy under state law. (55 C.A.4th 33.)

(b) Similar reasoning applies with respect to recovery for pain and suffering, which is permitted in a malicious prosecution action, but not as part of the attorneys' fees recoverable under 42 U.S.C., §1988. (55 C.A.4th 36.)

(c) Also, a malicious prosecution action is not preempted by F.R. Civ. P., Rule 11, which allows a sanction against a person who signs a paper without a reasonable belief that its contents are well grounded. The main objective of the rule, rather than to reward parties who are victimized by litigation, is to deter baseless filings. Thus, there is no conflict between this rule and a malicious prosecution action. (55 C.A.4th 37, not following a federal district court case to the contrary.)

(2) Bankruptcy Proceedings. No authorized bankruptcy proceeding can support a state law claim for malicious prosecution. (Idell v. Goodman (1990) 224 C.A.3d 262, 269, 273 C.R. 605; Saks v. Parilla, Hubbard & Militzok (1998) 67 C.A.4th 565, 573, 79 C.R.2d 120.) In the Saks case, plaintiff was sued unsuccessfully in a bankruptcy court adversary proceeding by defendants undergoing involuntary bankruptcy. He then instituted this malicious prosecution action in state court. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, dismissing the malicious prosecution action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Held, affirmed. The gist of plaintiff's complaint was that defendants misused the bankruptcy process when they filed an action against him. Although plaintiff had remedies available in the bankruptcy court, he did not use them, choosing instead to file a state court action for malicious prosecution. "Parties may not avail themselves of state court tort remedies to circumvent federal remedies for their opponents' alleged misuse of the bankruptcy process." (67 C.A.4th 573.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Civil Rights Actions.

Del Rio case:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §242.

7 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.
2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 475

[§ 475] In General.

In a criminal context, the tort of malicious prosecution consists of initiating or procuring the arrest and prosecution of another under lawful process, but from malicious motives and without probable cause, where the prosecution is terminated in favor of the accused. (Centers v. Dollar Markets (1950) 99 C.A.2d 534, 540, 222 P.2d 136.) The Restatement uses the term "malicious prosecution" restrictively to refer to that of criminal proceedings (see Rest.2d, Torts §653 et seq.), rather than civil (see Rest.2d, Torts §674 et seq.; infra, §486).

Where the prosecution was on two charges, one justified and another not, the plaintiff is not required to show that his or her damages are specifically attributable to the malicious charge and prosecution. (Singleton v. Perry (1955) 45 C.2d 489, 498, 289 P.2d 794.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.1 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

8 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
- b. Institution of Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 476

[§ 476] Institution of Proceeding.

One who procures a third person to institute a malicious criminal prosecution is liable, to the same extent as if he or she instituted it. The test is whether the defendant was actively instrumental in causing the prosecution. (Blancett v. Burr (1929) 100 C.A. 61, 62, 279 P. 668; Centers v. Dollar Markets (1950) 99 C.A.2d 534, 544, 222 P.2d 136; Bernstein v. Maimes (1954) 126 C.A.2d 468, 475, 272 P.2d 529; Rupp v. Summerfield (1958) 161 C.A.2d 657, 663, 326 P.2d 912; Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co. (1983) 147 C.A.3d 893, 898, 195 C.R. 448; cf. Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 414, 418, 253 C.R. 561, citing the text [defendants who did not initiate arson investigation, but merely testified at preliminary examination, were not instrumental in causing subsequent prosecution].)

In Sandoval v. Southern Calif. Enterprises (1950) 98 C.A.2d 240, 219 P.2d 928, plaintiff, ejected from defendant dance hall, returned to demand a refund of the price of his ticket. Defendant's special officers beat him, and defendant M, assistant manager, called the police and had him arrested. A verdict against M for compensatory and exemplary damages was upheld. In answer to M's defense, that a criminal complaint was issued by the city attorney (based on the presumption that an official duty is regularly done), the court held that the evidence supported the jury's implied finding that M instigated the prosecution to discourage plaintiff from bringing a civil action for battery. M called the police after his employees had attacked plaintiff; he told them that plaintiff was drunk and had created a disturbance; and he was friendly with the police officers, asking for them by name when he phoned. (98 C.A.2d 248.) (See 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §25; 40 A.L.R.3d 1005 [liability of perpetrator of crime to person wrongly accused and prosecuted].)

Similarly, a person who had no part in the commencement of a prior civil action, but who participated in it at a later time, may be held liable for malicious prosecution. (Lujan v. Gordon (1977) 70 C.A.3d 260, 263, 138 C.R. 654.) Also, one who did not file a complaint may nevertheless be liable if he or she instigated or was actively instrumental in "putting the law in motion." (Jacques Interiors v. Petrak (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1363, 1371, 234 C.R. 44.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §674, Comment c ["one who continues a civil proceeding that has properly been begun or one who takes an active part in its continuation for an improper purpose after he has learned that there is no probable cause for the proceeding becomes liable as if he had then initiated the proceeding"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

9 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - c. Favorable Termination.
 - 1. Nature of Requirement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 477

[§ 477] Nature of Requirement.

A plaintiff suing for malicious prosecution of a criminal proceeding must allege and prove that it has terminated in plaintiff's favor, either by plaintiff's acquittal in the trial, or dismissal of the case, for lack of evidence, by the committing magistrate at the preliminary hearing. (See Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 C.2d 146, 150, 114 P.2d 335, infra, §479; De La Riva v. Owl Drug Co. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 593, 595, 61 C.R. 291, infra, §478; Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 636, 638, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21; Rest.2d, Torts §658 et seq.; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §28 et seq.; 30 A.L.R.2d 1128 [discharge in habeas corpus proceedings as constituting favorable termination of criminal proceedings requisite to maintenance of malicious prosecution action]; 59 A.L.R.2d 1413 [acquittal, discharge, or discontinuance of criminal charge as evidence of want of probable cause in malicious prosecution action]; BAJI, No. 7.30 [requirement of favorable termination], BAJI, No. 7.32 [what constitutes favorable termination]; CACI, No. 1504 [favorable termination].)

The reason for the requirement is thus expressed in Jaffe v. Stone, supra. "[I]t tends to indicate the innocence of the accused. ... If the accused were actually convicted, the presumption of his guilt or of probable cause for the charge would be so strong as to render wholly improper any action against the instigator of the charge." (18 C.2d 150.)

A dismissal because of a grant of immunity from prosecution is a favorable termination, despite the fact that immunity is usually granted to a person who is guilty. "An innocent person may be aware of facts which, while they might tend to be incriminatory, are nevertheless insufficient to establish guilt. Such a person might well seek immunity in exchange for information in the hope of avoiding arrest and possible prosecution. But even if the person be guilty, it must not be forgotten that the grant of immunity was given in exchange for the surrender of his or her constitutional privilege against self-incrimination." (Scannell v. Riverside (1984) 152 C.A.3d 596, 611, 199 C.R. 644.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.34, 37

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

10 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - c. Favorable Termination.
- 2. Termination Consistent With Guilt.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 478

[§ 478] Termination Consistent With Guilt.

A termination consistent with guilt is not sufficient; e.g., where the proceeding is dismissed on technical, procedural grounds, or as an act of grace, or because of impossibility of bringing the accused to trial. (Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 C.2d 146, 150, 114 P.2d 335, infra, §479; Eustace v. Dechter (1942) 53 C.A.2d 726, 732, 128 P.2d 367; Oppenheimer v. Tamblyn (1958) 162 C.A.2d 293, 296, 327 P.2d 574; cf. Cote v. Henderson (1990) 218 C.A.3d 796, 803, 267 C.R. 274 [in prosecution for sexual crimes, plea of nolo contendere to one count in return for dismissal of remaining eight counts was termination consistent with guilt].) (See Rest.2d, Torts §§660, 661; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 622 [effect of dismissal after money payment in settlement]; 26 A.L.R.4th 245 [accused's release of liability, or stipulation that there was probable cause for criminal charge, in consideration of termination of prosecution]; 26 A.L.R.4th 565 [termination as result of compromise or settlement of accused' civil liability].)

In De La Riva v. Owl Drug Co. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 593, 61 C.R. 291, D was charged with conspiracy to steal merchandise. A preliminary hearing was had and he was held to answer. The following year, in the superior court, the prosecution requested that he stipulate to probable cause, but he refused. The district attorney then moved to dismiss "in the interests of justice," and the dismissal was ordered. D brought this action for malicious prosecution. The affirmative defense was that, after being held to answer, D moved unsuccessfully to quash the information under P.C. 995, but on denial did not seek prohibition, and that the final order of denial was a collateral estoppel on the issue of probable cause. On a trial of this special defense, the judge agreed and gave judgment for defendants. Held, reversed.

(a) The magistrate's order was only prima facie evidence of probable cause, for the preliminary hearing is not a trial on the merits, and the quantum of evidence necessary to sustain a conviction is not required. (253 C.A.2d 595; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §147.) Similarly, the denial of the motion under P.C. 995, and the failure to seek prohibition, were not conclusive, for the scope of review on the motion and on prohibition are limited: An information or indictment will not be set aside merely because the evidence is insufficient to support a conviction. (253 C.A.2d 596; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §243.)

(b) The important question was whether the dismissal was a favorable termination. As pointed out in Jaffe v. Stone, supra, a termination caused by acts of the accused or by impracticability to bring him to trial is final, but not favorable.

(253 C.A.2d 598.) The reasons for the dismissal in the instant case did not clearly appear in the record, and evidence should be taken to determine whether it tended to show innocence of the accused. (253 C.A.2d 599.) Accordingly, the reversal was for further proceedings on this issue.

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.35, 37

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

11 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.

c. Favorable Termination.

3. Final Termination Unnecessary.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 479

[§ 479] Final Termination Unnecessary.

A number of early California decisions, mistakenly interpreting the requirement of favorable termination as one of final termination, refused to allow recovery after a dismissal by the magistrate, on the ground that the prosecution was not completely barred and incapable of revival. (See, e.g., Wilson v. Troy (1937) 19 C.A.2d 156, 157, 64 P.2d 1141.) These decisions were disapproved in Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 C.2d 146, 114 P.2d 335. The court held that the action for malicious prosecution may be brought when the particular proceeding is thus terminated, regardless of whether the dismissal is a bar to further prosecution for the same offense, except where a new prosecution has already commenced at the time the action is brought. (18 C.2d 158.) (See De La Riva v. Owl Drug Co. (1967) 253 C.A.2d 593, 598, 61 C.R. 291, supra, §478 [following Jaffe]; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 279; but see 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 560 [discharge in extradition hearing no basis for malicious prosecution suit].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.36

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

12 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - d. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 1. Nature of Requirement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 480

[§ 480] Nature of Requirement.

The defendant in a malicious prosecution action must be shown to have acted without probable cause in instituting the criminal prosecution. There can be no recovery if the defendant honestly and reasonably believed in the truth of the charge. (See Pulvermacher v. Los Angeles Co-ordinating Committee for Aid to Jewish Refugees (1943) 61 C.A.2d 704, 707, 143 P.2d 974 [method of pleading]; Ecker v. Raging Waters Group (2001) 87 C.A.4th 1320, 1329, 105 C.R.2d 320 [where amusement park security personnel received complaints from several boys that plaintiff was videotaping them in surreptitious manner and that he had done so on previous visits, there was probable cause for plaintiff's arrest, and park could not be successfully sued for malicious prosecution after plaintiff was acquitted]; Rest.2d, Torts §662; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §§52 et seq., 71 et seq.; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §711; 66 A.L.R.3d 10 [prosecution instigated against person mistakenly identified]; 66 A.L.R.3d 95 [effect of confession by person prosecuted]; BAJI, No. 7.33 [probable cause for prosecution]; CACI, No. 1503 [same].)

Reasonable belief alone is no defense if it is not in good faith; i.e., even though the defendant had knowledge of facts sufficient to cause a reasonable person to believe the plaintiff guilty, the defendant is not protected if he or she did not actually hold that belief. (See Franzen v. Shenk (1923) 192 C. 572, 578, 221 P. 932; Green v. Stewart (1930) 106 C.A. 518, 527, 289 P. 940; Gooding v. McAlister (1931) 114 C.A. 284, 292, 299 P. 774; Rest.2d, Torts §662, Comment c; on element of malice, see infra, §485; cf. Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Olier (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 881, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510 [in action against attorneys for malicious prosecution of civil action, probable cause issue was properly determined under objective standard, without requirement that attorneys subjectively believed that prior claim was legally tenable].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.15

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §755.

13 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - d. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 2. Proof and Determination of Issue.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 481

[§ 481] Proof and Determination of Issue.

Lack of probable cause must be independently proved; it cannot be inferred from proof of malice (see infra, §485) for, despite malice, one may have knowledge of facts that give rise to a reasonable and honest belief of guilt. (Randleman v. Boeres (1928) 93 C.A. 745, 752, 270 P. 374; Jensen v. Leonard (1947) 82 C.A.2d 340, 351, 186 P.2d 206; see Rest.2d, Torts §673.)

Whether probable cause existed for a criminal prosecution is a question of law. If the facts are not in dispute, the question is decided by the court alone. If the evidence is conflicting, the jury decides the issue on the basis of instructions as to what facts, if established, constitute probable cause. Only the question of the existence of the facts should be submitted. (Ball v. Rawles (1892) 93 C. 222, 226, 28 P. 937; Franzen v. Shenk (1923) 192 C. 572, 578, 221 P. 932; Vernon v. Plumas Lumber Co. (1925) 71 C.A. 112, 118, 234 P. 869; Haydel v. Morton (1935) 8 C.A.2d 730, 733, 48 P.2d 709; Sebastian v. Crowley (1940) 38 C.A.2d 194, 202, 101 P.2d 120; Centers v. Dollar Markets (1950) 99 C.A.2d 534, 540, 543, 222 P.2d 136; Bernstein v. Maimes (1954) 126 C.A.2d 468, 477, 272 P.2d 529; Grove v. Purity Stores, Ltd. (1957) 153 C.A.2d 234, 240, 314 P.2d 543; Klotz v. Alexander (1962) 203 C.A.2d 238, 242, 21 C.R. 305; Cummings v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1407, 1419, 249 C.R. 568, citing the text; 87 A.L.R.2d 183 [probable cause in malicious prosecution action as question of law for court or fact for jury].)

In Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 C.A.2d 829, 50 C.R. 86, plaintiff rancher stored fruit with defendant. After a quarrel over alleged mishandling of the goods, plaintiff stopped payment on his check for the balance of storage fees. Defendant signed a felony complaint for issuing a check without funds, which was dismissed at the preliminary hearing. Plaintiff then sued for malicious prosecution. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed; the manager knew that payment was stopped, not for insufficient funds, but, because of the controversy over fruit damage. (240 C.A.2d 836.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.49, 59, 64(2), 71(2), 72(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

14 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - d. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 3. Advice of Counsel.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 482

[§ 482] Advice of Counsel.

Reliance on the advice of counsel may be a good defense, provided there was a full disclosure of the facts to the attorney, and a resulting honest belief in the guilt of the injured party. (Gustason v. Speak (1931) 113 C.A. 247, 251, 298 P. 40; Sebastian v. Crowley (1940) 38 C.A.2d 194, 203, 101 P.2d 120; see Rest.2d, Torts §666; 12 Cal. L. Rev. 310; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §100 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.36 [probable cause for prosecution--advice of counsel].)

The defendant must have disclosed all pertinent and material facts within his or her knowledge. (Schubkegel v. Gordino (1943) 56 C.A.2d 667, 672, 133 P.2d 475; Walker v. Jensen (1949) 95 C.A.2d 269, 274, 212 P.2d 569; see Perry v. Washington Nat. Ins. Co. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 609, 618, 58 P.2d 701 [full disclosure to prosecuting attorney]; Clary v. Hale (1959) 175 C.A.2d 880, 886, 1 C.R. 91 [full disclosure to own attorney and to deputy district attorney]; Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 C.A.2d 829, 837, 50 C.R. 86 [failure to disclose essential facts]; Rest.2d, Torts §666, Comment f; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 218; 10 A.L.R.2d 1215 [reliance on advice of prosecuting attorney as defense to malicious prosecution action].)

In some jurisdictions, the defense of reliance on advice of counsel extends to the advice of a justice of the peace, magistrate, or lay person, and several California cases support this view. (See Ball v. Rawles (1892) 93 C. 222, 235, 28 P. 937; Williams v. Casebeer (1899) 126 C. 77, 88, 58 P. 380; Portman v. Keegan (1939) 31 C.A.2d 30, 36, 87 P.2d 400; 48 A.L.R.4th 250 [defense in malicious prosecution suit of acting on advice of justice of the peace, magistrate, or lay person].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.21

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

15 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.
 - d. Lack of Probable Cause.
- 4. Action by Magistrate, Grand Jury, or Court.
 - aa. Action Unfavorable to Accused.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 483

[§ 483] Action Unfavorable to Accused.

(1) Commitment or Indictment. If the plaintiff was held to answer by the committing magistrate, this is prima facie evidence of probable cause. (Randleman v. Boeres (1928) 93 C.A. 745, 752, 270 P. 374; see Rest.2d, Torts §663(2); 68 A.L.R.2d 1168 [commitment by examining magistrate as evidence of probable cause in malicious prosecution action].) The same rule would apply where a grand jury indicts. (See Rest.2d, Torts §664(2); 28 A.L.R.3d 748 [effect of grand jury indictment on issue of probable cause in malicious prosecution action].)

(2) Conviction. If the plaintiff was convicted in a criminal trial, and the judgment of conviction was affirmed, or became final by lapse of the time for appeal, this is conclusive as to the existence of probable cause. (Roos v. Harris (1928) 203 C. 201, 202, 263 P. 225; Plum v. Becket (1932) 120 C.A. 507, 509, 7 P.2d 1111; Norton v. John M.C. Marble Co. (1939) 30 C.A.2d 451, 454, 86 P.2d 892; see Rest.2d, Torts §667(1).) The same effect has also been given to a prior civil judgment involving the same issues. In Bullock v. Morrison (1931) 118 C.A. 112, 4 P.2d 812, the defendant previously recovered a civil judgment against plaintiff for damages to property, and then charged him with malicious mischief, but failed to obtain a criminal conviction against him. Held, the civil judgment conclusively established probable cause for the criminal charge. (118 C.A. 114.)

Where the plaintiff was convicted, probable cause is conclusively established even though the conviction was ultimately reversed, for, if a jury or trial judge were satisfied of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, it can hardly be denied that the accuser had reasonable grounds for making the charges. (Bealmear v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1943) 22 C.2d 337, 340, 139 P.2d 20; see Rest.2d, Torts §667(1); 86 A.L.R.2d 1090 [conclusiveness, as evidence of probable cause in malicious prosecution action, of conviction as affected by fact that it was reversed or set aside].) The only exception is where it is shown that the conviction was obtained by fraud, either extrinsic or intrinsic, or other corrupt practice; in that case the presumption of probable cause is rebutted. (Carpenter v. Sibley (1908) 153 C. 215, 217, 94 P. 879; see Rest.2d, Torts §666(1).)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.24

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

16 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding.

d. Lack of Probable Cause.

4. Action by Magistrate, Grand Jury, or Court.

bb. Action Favorable to Accused.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 484

[§ 484] Action Favorable to Accused.

(1) Discharge by Magistrate or Refusal by Grand Jury To Indict. The Torts Restatement takes the position that the refusal of the grand jury to indict, or the discharge of the accused by the magistrate, unless explained by some sufficient counter showing, is conclusive of lack of probable cause. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§663(1), 664(1).) However, the rule on discharge by a magistrate is subject to exceptions, and one is where the magistrate refuses to rule on the merits and the charge is dismissed on motion of the prosecutor. (Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 C.A.3d 745, 755, 181 C.R. 423, infra, §582.)

In Cummings v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1407, 1419, 249 C.R. 568, plaintiff was arrested for filing a false insurance claim. The charges were later dismissed on unclear grounds, and plaintiff filed a malicious prosecution action against defendant insurer on the theory that the dismissal was conclusive of lack of probable cause. In affirming a summary judgment for the insurer, the court pointed out that the record demonstrated that plaintiff knowingly filed a false claim, and that defendant had a reasonable basis for believing that plaintiff had violated the law. (202 C.A.3d 1412, 1417, 1421.)

(2) Acquittal. Mere acquittal at the trial is not even prima facie evidence of lack of probable cause, for the accuser might have an honest and reasonable belief in the accused's guilt, though, for one or more reasons, the jury might not have been satisfied by the proof produced at the trial. (Randleman v. Boeres (1928) 93 C.A. 745, 753, 270 P. 374; Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1910) 157 C. 333, 338, 107 P. 611; see Rest.2d, Torts §667(2); on special defense of guilt, see supra, §472.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.24

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

17 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution. 2. Malicious Prosecution of Criminal Proceeding. e. Malice.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 485

[§ 485] Malice.

(1) Nature of Requirement. It is usually said that "malice" is an essential element of the cause of action. (Richter v. Neilson (1936) 11 C.A.2d 503, 507, 54 P.2d 54.) However, this merely means that the motive of the defendant must have been something other than that of bringing a guilty person to justice. Hence, malice may consist either of actual ill will or some improper motive. (See Centers v. Dollar Markets (1950) 99 C.A.2d 534, 541, 222 P.2d 136; see Rest.2d, Torts §668; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §45 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.34 ["malice" and "malicious" defined]; on pleading, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §870.)

(2) Proof. Malice is usually proved by circumstantial evidence, e.g., acts or declarations of the defendant indicating prejudice, or ill will, or attempt to gain private advantage. (See Burke v. Watts (1922) 188 C. 118, 126, 204 P. 578 [defendant told plaintiff he would "fix him" and told officers he would send him to penitentiary]; Williams v. California Milk Producers Assn. (1934) 136 C.A. 172, 176, 28 P.2d 59 [arrest and prosecution instigated by business competitor]; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §123.)

Malice is also a permissible inference by the jury or court (not a presumption) from lack of probable cause. In other words, if the defendant had no substantial grounds for believing in the plaintiff's guilt, but, nevertheless, instigated proceedings against the plaintiff, it is logical to infer that the defendant's motive was improper. (Burke v. Watts, supra; Redgate v. Southern Pac. Co. (1914) 24 C.A. 573, 584, 141 P. 1191; Centers v. Dollar Markets, supra, 99 C.A.2d 542, 543; Grove v. Purity Stores (1957) 153 C.A.2d 234, 241, 314 P.2d 543; Klotz v. Alexander (1962) 203 C.A.2d 238, 245, 21 C.R. 305; see Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 C.A.2d 829, 836, 50 C.R. 86 [malice inferred from lack of probable cause and from defendant's failure to disclose facts to his attorney or to district attorney]; Rest.2d, Torts §669.) "[T]he want of probable cause does not raise a legal presumption of malice. ... The jury may, however, if they find that there was no probable cause for the prosecution infer malice therefrom, although malice is not a necessary inference to be deduced therefrom. But in whatever way ... it must be proven as a fact." (Runo v. Williams (1912) 162 C. 444, 450, 122 P. 1082.)

(3) Rebuttal. In rebutting the charge of malice, the defendant may testify directly as to his or her own motive. (Runo v. Williams, supra; Schubkegel v. Gordino (1943) 56 C.A.2d 667, 674, 133 P.2d 475; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §8.) The defendant may also show reliance on the advice of reputable persons in whom he or she confided.

Though this does not in itself establish probable cause, as in the case of advice of counsel (see supra, §482), it tends to disprove malice. (Richter v. Neilson, supra, 11 C.A.2d 514.) (See 48 A.L.R.4th 280 [defense in malicious prosecution action of acting on advice of justice of the peace, magistrate, or lay person].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.26 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Requirement. Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §916.

18 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

a. In General.

1. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 486

[§ 486] Nature of Tort.

(1) In General. The malicious institution of a civil proceeding, like that of a criminal proceeding (supra, §469), is a tort. (Eastin v. Bank of Stockton (1884) 66 C. 123, 126, 4 P. 1106; Stevens v. Chisholm (1919) 179 C. 557, 563, 178 P. 128; Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 382, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §511; White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 C.2d 336, 350, 66 C.R. 697, 438 P.2d 345, infra, §523; Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Olier (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 871, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510; Black v. Knight (1919) 44 C.A. 756, 766, 187 P. 89; Metzenbaum v. Metzenbaum (1953) 121 C.A.2d 64, 68, 262 P.2d 596; Albertson v. Raboff (1960) 185 C.A.2d 372, 8 C.R. 398; Kennedy v. Byrum (1962) 201 C.A.2d 474, 480, 20 C.R. 98; Norton v. Hines (1975) 49 C.A.3d 917, 922, 123 C.R. 237; Sierra Club Foundation v. Graham (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1135, 1148, 85 C.R.2d 726; see Rest.2d, Torts §674 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §436; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §4.8; 28 Santa Clara L. Rev. 105 [intimidation suits filed against public interest litigants as retaliation]; 20 So. Cal. L. Rev. 115; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §§2, 9; 7 Proof of Facts 2d 181 [malicious prosecution].)

In Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, infra, §491, citing the text, the court said: "The malicious commencement of a civil proceeding is actionable because it harms the individual against whom the claim is made, and also because it threatens the efficient administration of justice. The individual is harmed because he is compelled to defend against a fabricated claim which not only subjects him to the panoply of psychological pressures most civil defendants suffer, but also to the additional stress of attempting to resist a suit commenced out of spite or ill will, often magnified by slanderous allegations in the pleadings. In recognition of the wrong done the victim of such a tort, settled law permits him to recover the cost of defending the prior action including reasonable attorney's fees ... , compensation for injury to his reputation or impairment of his social and business standing in the community ... , and for mental or emotional distress." (13 C.3d 50.) And "[t]he judicial process is adversely affected by a maliciously prosecuted cause not only by the clogging of already crowded dockets, but by the unscrupulous use of the courts by individuals ' ... as instruments with which to maliciously injure their fellow men.' " (13 C.3d 51.) (See Eastin v. Bank of Stockton, supra [chief basis for remedy is that costs awarded to successful party in prior proceeding do not include attorneys' fees].)

Although the tort is usually called "malicious prosecution," the word "prosecution" is not a particularly apt

description of the underlying civil action. The Restatement uses the term "wrongful use of civil proceedings" to refer to the tort. (See Rest.2d, Torts §674.)

(2) Elements. There are some differences in the rules governing actions based on prior criminal and civil proceedings but the basic elements are the same. (Hudson v. Zumwalt (1944) 64 C.A.2d 866, 872, 149 P.2d 457; Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 C.A.3d 626, 636, 224 C.R. 865; Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co. (2004) 115 C.A.4th 306, 318, 8 C.R.3d 915.) Thus, (1) initiation of a prior proceeding (see infra, §497), (2) favorable termination of that proceeding (see infra, §498 et seq.), (3) lack of probable cause (see infra, §506 et seq.), and (4) malice (see infra, §511) must be shown. (On burden of proof, see Rest.2d, Torts §681A; on functions of court and jury, see Rest.2d, Torts §681B.)

(3) Waiver. The right of action is waived where the defendant, in a Tort Claims Act proceeding or an indemnity or contribution action, requests recovery of defense costs on motion for summary judgment or nonsuit on the ground that the proceeding was not brought in good faith and with reasonable cause. (C.C.P. 1038; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §203; see 12 Pacific L. J. 306.)

(4) Unclean Hands. The unclean hands of the plaintiff may preclude relief. (See Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 C.A.3d 280, 289, 198 C.R. 517; DeRosa v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1390, 1395, 262 C.R. 370; Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 C.A.4th 970, 977, 90 C.R.2d 743 [unclean hands defense is not limited to plaintiff's misconduct that relates to defendant's decision to file prior action].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.9 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Waiver.

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §235 et seq.

19 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

a. In General.

2. Public Entity Cannot Sue.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 487

[§ 487] Public Entity Cannot Sue.

Public entities may not maintain actions for malicious prosecution. In Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 C.3d 527, 183 C.R. 86, 645 P.2d 137, defendant filed an action against a city and two of its police officers for false imprisonment, false arrest, negligent hiring, assault, and battery. The jury trial resulted in a verdict for the city and the officers. They then filed the present action against defendant for malicious prosecution, alleging that the previous suit was brought without probable cause and with knowledge that the allegations of the complaint were false. The city sought only reimbursement for expenses. The trial judge sustained a general demurrer as to the city. Held, judgment on demurrer affirmed; bringing of suits against the government is absolutely privileged.

(a) No general rule limiting recovery to individuals. Although the opinion in Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, infra, §491, refers to harm suffered by an "individual," there are valid policies that would be furthered by allowing nonindividuals to sue for malicious prosecution; e.g., recovery of compensation for expenses of defending a suit and the public interest in promoting the efficient administration of justice by discouraging baseless suits. "We thus decline to formulate a general rule allowing malicious prosecution actions only for individual plaintiffs." (31 C.3d 531.)

(b) Suits against public entities are protected under constitutional right to petition for grievances. The right to petition the government for redress of grievances is set forth in both U.S. Const., First Amendment, and Cal. Const., Art. I, §3. Federal cases interpreting antitrust laws have held that the right protects the freedom to seek redress from all three branches of government, and thus includes attempts to obtain redress through the institution of administrative and judicial proceedings. (31 C.3d 532, 533.) Other courts, by analogy to these cases, have created privileges from civil liability for actions constituting the exercise of the right of petition. And a different group of cases has invoked the rights of petition and assembly to ensure that members of private organizations may take collective action to obtain legal representation and thus access to the courts. (31 C.3d 533.) "These authorities make it clear that the right of petition protects attempts to obtain redress through the institution of judicial proceedings as well as through importuning executive officials and the Legislature. It is equally apparent that the right encompasses the act of filing a lawsuit solely to obtain monetary compensation for individualized wrongs, as well as filing suit to draw attention to issues of broader public interest or political significance. ... Hence, the act of filing suit against a governmental entity represents an exercise of the right of petition and thus invokes constitutional protection." (31 C.3d 534.)

(c) Free speech analogy. Many cases have held that the right of free speech prevents the government from suing for defamation: "The policy supporting an absolute privilege for criticism of the government is to allow the free communication of ideas, a concept at the core of First Amendment liberties. If the courts were to condone the imposition of civil sanctions, even if only for statements purportedly made with actual malice, a severe chilling effect would result on the legitimate exercise of the right to express beliefs freely when those beliefs appear to be derogatory of the governing authorities." (31 C.3d 535.)

(d) Legislative remedies of public entities. The Legislature has authorized trial courts to award attorneys' fees for the purpose of discouraging frivolous litigation. (See C.C.P. 128.5(a), 1021.7; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §240; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §201.) These measures undercut the city's argument that a malicious prosecution suit should be permitted in order to compensate cities for expenses incurred in defending against baseless suits and in order to deter the proliferation of such suits: "From a constitutional standpoint, an award of expenses upon a finding that monetary sanctions are appropriate under the standards set out in the above statutes is a clearly preferable remedy to an independent action for malicious prosecution with its cost in terms of additional attorney fees and imposition upon judicial resources. It is not uncommon for a party suing for torts arising out of official misconduct to be represented by an attorney retained under a contingency fee arrangement. Such a party will not be required to retain new counsel to oppose in that same proceeding a motion for statutory sanctions. In contrast, an unsuccessful plaintiff who is subsequently sued for malicious prosecution would in all probability be required to hire new counsel to defend the second suit, potentially incurring considerable expense before obtaining a resolution of the issue whether the initial action was brought with malicious intent." (31 C.3d 538.)

(e) Conclusion. Hence, to avoid the chilling effect on the constitutional right of petition, the best course is to defer to the statutory remedy. This, in combination with the criminal sanctions for filing of false claims with the government (see P.C. 72; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §177), and the possibility of malicious prosecution actions by individual city employees, "provide an adequate deterrent to unwarranted lawsuits without unduly infringing upon the right of petition." (31 C.3d 538.) (See Long Beach v. Bozek (1983) 33 C.3d 727, 728, 190 C.R. 918, 661 P.2d 1072 [certifying, on remand from the United States Supreme Court, that judgment in action was based on both federal and California Constitutions, and therefore California provision furnished independent ground of decision].)

In Curtis v. Los Angeles (1985) 172 C.A.3d 1243, 218 C.R. 772, the court said: "[W]e are asked to honor the promise impliedly offered by our Supreme Court" in Bozek, that public entities denied the right to sue for malicious prosecution may, nevertheless, recover expenses incurred in defending the lawsuit. (172 C.A.3d 1247.) The legislative remedy is in C.C.P. 1038 (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §203) (172 C.A.3d 1247), which provides a means of redress for acts similar to those for which damages are sought in a malicious prosecution action. (172 C.A.3d 1251.) And the reference in the statute to a proceeding "not brought in good faith and with reasonable cause" covers both the filing and continued maintenance of the action. (172 C.A.3d 1252.) Hence, on remand, the trial court was directed to determine whether the plaintiff continued to maintain the action in "good faith and with reasonable cause," and if not, the amount of defense costs "reasonably and necessarily incurred" by the county. (172 C.A.3d 1252.)

In Padres L.P. v. Henderson (2003) 114 C.A.4th 495, 8 C.R.3d 584, the owner of professional baseball team sued an attorney for malicious prosecution arising out of a series of lawsuits the attorney had filed to challenge actions taken by the city in which the team was located, together with the owner, to develop a new baseball park. Held, the attorney was not absolutely privileged to file the lawsuits. Bozek does not stand for the proposition that private parties sued in an action that is also brought against a governmental agency are constitutionally precluded from bringing a malicious prosecution action. In fact, the Bozek court recognized that the possibility of malicious prosecution actions by named parties other than the agency (in that case, the individual police officers) may have a properly deterrent effect on unwarranted lawsuits that also name a governmental agency. (114 C.A.4th 509.) The availability of the anti-SLAPP procedure (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962 et seq.) provides adequate protection to persons who legitimately pursue reverse validation claims, such as these, against nonmeritorious malicious prosecution claims. This balances the policies of discouraging frivolous litigation and protecting the rights of citizens to challenge governmental actions. (114 C.A.4th 512.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Ramona Unified School Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 C.A.4th 510, 522, 37 C.R.3d 381 [school district could not maintain malicious prosecution action; following Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 C.3d 527, 183 C.R. 86, 645 P.2d 137, text, p. 712]. Attorneys' fees to discourage frivolous litigation:

Cross-References: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §227; 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §222 et seq.

C.C.P. 1038:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Judgment, §235 et seq. Anti-SLAPP procedure:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.

20 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

b. Proceedings That May Give Rise to Liability.

1. Action or Special Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 488

[§ 488] Action or Special Proceeding.

(1) In General. The tort action lies not only for institution of an ordinary civil action, but also for institution of a special proceeding. (See Brock v. Southern Pac. Co. (1948) 86 C.A.2d 182, 185, 195 P.2d 66 [quoting Restatement, but denying recovery]; Sutherland v. Palme (1949) 93 C.A.2d 307, 312, 208 P.2d 1035 [insanity proceeding]; Rest.2d, Torts §678; 14 U.S.F. L. Rev. 203 [physician countersuits]; 30 A.L.R.3d 455 [insanity proceedings]; 40 A.L.R.3d 296 [involuntary bankruptcy, insolvency, or receivership proceedings]; 87 A.L.R.3d 580 [action for breach of contract]; 87 A.L.R.3d 554 [confessed judgment proceedings]; 61 A.L.R.5th 307 [medical-malpractice countersuits]; on order to show cause, see infra, §490; on action for declaratory relief, see infra, §492.)

(2) Will Contest. In MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 79 C.R. 707, defendant, himself a lawyer though not in active practice, had a large income from trusts set up by his father. His father died leaving a large estate mainly in trust for grandchildren. Defendant filed a will contest, using three successive sets of lawyers, and finally dismissed it without prejudice. Plaintiff, the testator's attorney for many years and the named executor in the will, filed this action for malicious prosecution. After defendant wilfully refused to comply with discovery orders, default judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Held, affirmed. Ordinarily, the person who brings a malicious prosecution suit was the defendant in a prior proceeding which injured him. The prior proceeding here was not directly against plaintiff; it was a contest of a will in which plaintiff had been named executor. But under Prob.C. 371 (now Prob.C. 8252), the petitioner for probate is the defendant, and his action was properly filed for injuries sustained by defendant's malicious contest. (275 C.A.2d 287.) (See 35 A.L.R.3d 651 [liability for malicious prosecution based on contest or caveat to will].)

(3) Offering Forged Will for Probate. In Steiner v. Eikerling (1986) 181 C.A.3d 639, 226 C.R. 694, plaintiffs, the heirs of decedent S, brought an action for civil conspiracy and malicious institution of a civil proceeding against defendants, German relatives of S. The complaint set forth the following facts: S died while on vacation in Germany; defendants kept his death secret, came to his California home and took possession of his personal property and handwriting exemplars, forged a handwritten will naming themselves as beneficiaries, and offered it for probate; and plaintiffs filed a will contest, and the court found that the will was a forgery and denied probate. The trial judge sustained a general demurrer on the grounds that the submission of the will was a privileged publication under C.C. 47(2) (now C.C. 47(b); see infra, §567 et seq.), and that the submission of a will for probate is not a "malicious

prosecution" of anyone. Held, reversed. The proponents of a will who offer it for probate have initiated civil proceedings, under the Restatement test. "The person who initiates civil proceedings is the person who sets the machinery of the law in motion." (181 C.A.3d 644, quoting Comment a to Rest.2d, Torts §674.) Hence, "those persons who successfully contest a forged will submitted to probate may maintain an action for malicious institution of civil proceedings against those who offered the forged document with knowledge of its falsity." (181 C.A.3d 645.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

21 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - b. Proceedings That May Give Rise to Liability.
 - 2. Ancillary Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 489

[§ 489] Ancillary Proceeding.

The Restatement classifies the wrongful institution of an "ancillary proceeding" as the malicious institution of a civil proceeding. (See Rest.2d, Torts §674, Comment f; §676, Comment d.) Thus, the action may be based on a suit wrongfully interfering with property by recordation of a notice of lis pendens, even though the notice itself would be absolutely privileged in a libel suit. "The policy of encouraging free access to the courts that underlies the absolute privilege applicable in defamation actions is outweighed by the policy of affording redress for individual wrongs when the requirements of favorable termination, lack of probable cause, and malice are satisfied." (Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 382, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §511.)

Other ancillary proceedings on which a malicious prosecution action has been based include attachment (Vesper v. Crane Co. (1913) 165 C. 36, 41, 130 P. 876), injunction (Asevado v. Orr (1893) 100 C. 293, 296, 34 P. 777), and receivership (Jones v. Richardson (1935) 9 C.A.2d 657, 659, 50 P.2d 810) proceedings.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

22 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - b. Proceedings That May Give Rise to Liability.
 - 3. Order To Show Cause.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 490

[§ 490] Order To Show Cause.

In Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 C.A.3d 967, 227 C.R. 718, the court suggested that a proceeding on an order to show cause may be sufficiently independent to serve as the basis of a malicious prosecution action. Here, a year after the marriage of Jeffrey and Judith was dissolved, Judith applied for an order to show cause re contempt, and an order to show cause for modification of child and spousal support awards. All claims involving contempt were settled, and the trial judge, after a hearing, denied Judith's request for increased child support. The statement of decision found that Jeffrey was the prevailing party, and ordered Judith to pay attorneys' fees. Thereafter, Jeffrey filed this action for malicious prosecution against Judith and her attorney. Judgment for defendants was affirmed on the grounds of no favorable termination (see infra, §498) and insufficient showing of malice (see infra, §511). However, before reaching these issues, the court determined that the orders to show cause were "actions" on which a later suit for malicious prosecution could be based.

(a) The order to show cause re contempt exposed plaintiff Jeffrey to criminal sanctions, and required him to retain counsel, appear in court, and respond to lengthy interrogatories. "While the order may or may not have had an 'independent existence,' it nonetheless bore the indisputable earmarks of an adversarial proceeding. Most significantly, it incurred expenses, provoked psychological trauma, and required expenditures of time and effort to defend." (182 C.A.3d 975.)

(b) The order to show cause re modification did not threaten plaintiff with criminal penalties. But it did require him to appear in court to give any legal reason for denial of the relief sought by Judith; and that relief involved modification of his parental rights and affected the support he would be required to pay. (182 C.A.3d 976.)

However, the court in Lossing v. Superior Court (1989) 207 C.A.3d 635, 255 C.R. 18, also involving an order to show cause re contempt, disagreed with Chauncey v. Niems and reached a different result. L, attorney for the defendants in a personal injury action, obtained an order for plaintiffs in that action to appear for a deposition, and later filed an order to show cause re contempt alleging wilful failure to comply with the discovery order. The lower court, after a hearing, discharged the order to show cause, and plaintiffs then brought an action against L for malicious institution of a civil proceeding, alleging that he did not in good faith believe that plaintiffs were guilty of contempt, and acted maliciously to coerce them to settle the underlying case. L demurred, the trial judge overruled his demurrer, and he petitioned for mandamus to compel sustaining of his demurrer without leave to amend. Held, writ issued; a malicious prosecution action against an attorney will not lie for failing to prevail on an order to show cause re contempt brought to enforce a discovery order in ongoing litigation.

(a) "Viewing a contempt proceeding in the context of the discovery statutes, we disagree with the dicta in Chauncey ... for several reasons. Contempt is one of five sanctions which may be imposed for misuse of the discovery process. ... Although all five sanctions are ancillary to the ongoing action, only contempt bears the indicia of 'independence' which real parties contend render it a sufficiently separate proceeding. To permit a malicious prosecution action when a party has chosen contempt over one of the other sanctions would inject into the choice of sanctions an element unrelated to the appropriateness of the sanction. Furthermore, the statutory discovery scheme itself provides a sanction if contempt is chosen without justification. Monetary and contempt sanctions against an attorney are authorized if the attorney engages in conduct that is a misuse of the discovery process. ... Monetary sanctions may also be awarded against 'one unsuccessfully asserting that another has engaged in the misuse of the discovery process, or on any attorney who advised that assertion, or on both.' ... If the contempt proceeding was a bad faith action brought without merit or for harassment, sanctions are also available under Code of Civil Procedure section 128.5. ... Thus the Legislature has provided a specific sanction for the precise misuse of discovery or bad faith alleged here." (207 C.A.3d 638.)

(b) "Perhaps even more significant is the effect a malicious prosecution action would have on the ongoing underlying action. It would create a possible conflict of interest between attorney and client probably necessitating a substitution of counsel in the underlying action. It might require the attorney in the underlying action to disclose the contents of his or her file as a result of discovery in the malicious prosecution action. ... Given that a statutory remedy is available and malicious prosecution is a disfavored cause of action, we conclude contempt proceedings to sanction discovery abuse are ancillary proceedings without sufficient independence to support a cause of action for malicious prosecution." (207 C.A.3d 639.)

(c) "Attorneys face an impossible dilemma if they are subject to claims of malicious prosecution by opponents in litigation because they vigorously represent their client, yet they are also subject to claim of legal malpractice by their client if they fail to provide the vigorous representation to which the client is entitled. Public policy favors the principle of zealous representation and freedom of access to the courts. ... Vigorous representation is to be distinguished from inappropriate conduct, i.e., bad faith, harassment, etc., and we are fully satisfied that trial judges of this state can make that distinction in responding to requests for sanctions." (207 C.A.3d 640.)

In Green v. Uccelli (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1112, 1121, 255 C.R. 315, the court held that it would "extend our decision in Lossing to hold that bringing orders to show cause re contempt which are taken off calendar before hearing cannot constitute the basis for a malicious prosecution action against the attorney for the moving party."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

23 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- b. Proceedings That May Give Rise to Liability.
4. Cross-Complaint.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 491

[§ 491] Cross-Complaint.

In Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, the court held that a cause of action for malicious prosecution could be based on a cross-complaint asserted in a prior action. Plaintiff, president of defendant corporation and an executive of its predecessor, became involved in a dispute with defendant K, a major shareholder. As a result, plaintiff resigned his office, but remained as a director and consultant under an employment contract. Later, K sought to induce him to terminate the contract and surrender stock options, and on plaintiff's refusal K informed him that the agreement was invalid, and then terminated his salary and other benefits. Plaintiff sued for declaratory relief and for damages for unpaid salary. Defendants filed an answer and cross-complaint (seeking recovery of amounts previously paid under the contract), alleging that the contract had been obtained without consideration and through duress and undue influence. Plaintiff prevailed in the suit and his judgment was affirmed on appeal. He then brought the present action for damages for malicious prosecution of the cross-complaint. Judgment was rendered in his favor, following a jury verdict, for compensatory and punitive damages. Held, affirmed except as to the amount of attorneys' fees awarded.

(a) On the basic issue, whether a maliciously prosecuted cross-complaint could give rise to tort liability, the court said: "The harm to society and to the individual cross-defendant caused by the filing of a cross-pleading without probable cause and with malice is substantially similar to that occasioned by the filing of a complaint or other initial pleading known to be false or meritless. The malicious cross-plaintiff, like the malicious plaintiff, uses the judicial process as a vehicle for harassing or vexing his adversary or as a means of coercing the settlement of a collateral matter. The cross-defendant, like the defendant in an original cause maliciously prosecuted, is compelled to expend attorney's fees in defending against the false charge and may suffer the same mental or emotional distress and possible loss of reputation and standing in the community." (13 C.3d 51.)

(b) The court then examined and rejected a number of arguments made by defendants:

First, that a cross-complaint is not the initiation of a judicial proceeding. Under prior decisions, and the 1971 legislation abolishing counterclaims, a cross-complaint creates an independent action, distinct and separate from the action instituted by the complaint. (13 C.3d 51, and 52, footnote 2; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1095.)

Second, that defendants pleaded a "transaction" cross-claim, which had to be set up or be waived (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1103). This is not an excuse. "A litigant is never compelled to file a malicious and fabricated action. It is not the assertion of a claim that is actionable but rather the malicious character of the assertion." (13 C.3d 52.)

Third, that the cross-pleading was merely defensive, and that no penalty should be imposed for "aggressively defending against the charges asserted in a complaint. ... By seeking affirmative relief, however, defendants in the instant case did more than attempt to repel [plaintiff's] attack; they took the offensive in attempting to prosecute a cause of action of their own. When such action is prompted by malice and is not based on probable cause, it is actionable as in the case of other affirmative, malicious prosecutions." (13 C.3d 52.)

Fourth, that the tort of malicious prosecution is disfavored and should not be extended. "This convenient phrase should not be employed to defeat a legitimate cause of action." (13 C.3d 53.) The disfavored action concept stems from the public policy on enforcement of criminal laws; and this policy does not limit the right to seek redress for malicious abuse of the judicial process. (13 C.3d 53.) (See Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 C.A.3d 823, 826, 145 C.R. 829 [following Bertero]; 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 739; 65 A.L.R.3d 901 [malicious prosecution of civil suit based on defense or counterclaim].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Cross-complaint as independent action:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1169.

Failure to plead as waiver:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1177.

24 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - b. Proceedings That May Give Rise to Liability.
 - 5. Declaratory Judgment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 492

[§ 492] Declaratory Judgment.

In Camarena v. Sequoia Ins. Co. (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1089, 235 C.R. 820, the court held that a prior action for declaratory relief may support a malicious prosecution action. C sought damages for injuries suffered in an automobile accident involving J. Prior to trial, S, J's insurer, claimed that J refused to cooperate and brought a declaratory relief action against J and C, seeking a judgment relieving it of any further duty to defend or indemnify J on that ground. The trial court found no failure to cooperate, and rendered judgment requiring S to defend and indemnify J. After affirmance of this judgment on appeal, C brought the present action for malicious prosecution against S. The trial judge granted S's motion for summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) Institution of prior separate proceeding. There was a separate adversary proceeding requiring a response. S filed a complaint, served C with a summons, took him to trial, appealed to the Court of Appeal, and sought review in the Supreme Court. In the meantime C's personal injury lawsuit was tried, the judgment was reversed on appeal, and it is again pending in the superior court. Although related to the personal injury lawsuit, S's declaratory relief action "assumed a procedural life of its own." (190 C.A.3d 1094.) S argued that the policies supporting freedom to contest contractual liability and determination of contractual obligations before breach called for a holding that declaratory relief proceedings do not give rise to a cause of action for malicious prosecution. But the freedom to contest liability is subservient to the interest in preventing wilful and unwarranted conduct (190 C.A.3d 1089); and it is more appropriate to protect access to judicial proceedings by focusing on the requirement that plaintiffs plead and prove malice (190 C.A.3d 1097). (On requirement of institution of prior proceeding generally, see infra, §497.)

(b) Malice. C was not a party to the insurance contract and neither his conduct nor his obligations were the subject of dispute in the declaratory relief action; hence, evidence that might support a finding of malice toward J (allegations of his noncooperation were without probable cause and malice could be inferred) was of no help to C, who must show malice toward himself. (190 C.A.3d 1098.) But it was improper to render summary judgment, for a trier of fact might infer malice from the conduct of the attorney: "Counsel was retained by [S] to defeat [C's] personal injury claim. From the scope of his retention it may be argued that his conduct was aimed toward reducing [C's] recovery instead of or in addition to depriving [J] of the benefits of the [S] policy." (190 C.A.3d 1098; on requirement of malice generally, see infra, §§511, 512.)

(c) Favorable termination. S contended that because it prayed for a determination of its duties and in fact received a determination, the action was terminated in its favor. "A similar attempt to place the form of termination over its substance" was rejected in Sierra Club v. Superior Court (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1138, 1144, 214 C.R. 740, infra, §505. Here, the suit sought a declaration that S was relieved of its obligations under the policy, C's answer sought the opposite, and the court ruled in C's favor. (190 C.A.3d 1100; on requirement of favorable termination generally, see infra, §498 et seq.) (See George F. Hillenbrand v. Insurance Co. of North America (2002) 104 C.A.4th 784, 801, 128 C.R.2d 586 [insurer defended insured in third-party action under reservation of rights and, while this action was pending filed declaratory relief action to determine its duty to defend; declaratory relief judgment for insurer supported malicious prosecution action; following Camarena].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

25 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.

1. Subsidiary or Defensive Procedures Within Action.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 493

[§ 493] Subsidiary or Defensive Procedures Within Action.

(1) In General. A malicious prosecution action must be based on an independent action or proceeding seeking affirmative relief. It cannot be grounded on subsidiary procedural or purely defensive actions within a pending lawsuit. (Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1986) 41 C.3d 782, 794, 226 C.R. 90, 718 P.2d 77, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §848; Idell v. Goodman (1990) 224 C.A.3d 262, 273, 273 C.R. 605.) Thus, a request for admissions will not support the tort action. (Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 C.A.3d 916, 922, 134 C.R. 145.)

(2) Motion for Reconsideration. The same is true with respect to a motion for reconsideration. In Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 521, 3 C.R.2d 49, plaintiff was the defendant in a civil action in Monterey County initiated by the Ws. Defendants were the Ws' attorneys in that action. Simultaneously, plaintiff was involved in criminal actions in San Mateo and Santa Clara counties in which he succeeded in having prior felony convictions either reduced or expunged. Thereafter, defendants filed motions for reconsideration in both criminal actions, allegedly to preserve the felony convictions for impeachment of plaintiff in the Monterey County civil action. When the motions for reconsideration were denied, plaintiff instituted the present action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. With respect to the malicious prosecution action, the trial judge overruled defendants' demurrer, and they sought mandamus to compel him to sustain it. Held, writ granted. (For discussion of the abuse of process action, see infra, §528.)

(a) The tort of malicious prosecution requires the initiation of a full-blown action; subsidiary procedural actions within a lawsuit, such as an application for a restraining order or for a lien, will not support a claim of malicious prosecution. Grounding malicious prosecution actions on such subsidiary procedural steps would disrupt the ongoing lawsuit by injecting tort claims against the parties' lawyers. Also, the appropriate remedy for actions taken within a lawsuit is to invoke the court's broad powers to control judicial proceedings. (2 C.A.4th 528.)

(b) Although defendants' motions for reconsideration were not made in the ongoing lawsuit between plaintiff and the Ws, thereby lessening the direct interference in the attorney-client relationships in that lawsuit, the motions were clearly made in pursuit of the Ws' interests in the Monterey lawsuit. Hence, to ground a malicious prosecution action upon those motions would disrupt, if not destroy, defendants' ability to represent their clients. Furthermore, in view of the inherent power of the San Mateo and Santa Clara courts over the proceedings before them, plaintiff had a remedy for any filings made by defendants, as illustrated by the fact that the Santa Clara court based its denial of the motion for reconsideration on defendants' lack of standing. (2 C.A.4th 528.) (See 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 20 [Adams]; on malicious initiation of criminal procedures generally, see supra, §469 et seq.)

(3) Motion To Disqualify Attorney. Silver v. Gold (1989) 211 C.A.3d 17, 259 C.R. 185, held that an unsuccessful motion to disqualify an attorney from further representation of a party to a civil suit may not be the basis for a malicious prosecution action. "[T]he filing of a motion to disqualify counsel is merely one of numerous procedures that may be invoked during the course of litigation; it does not constitute a separate action or proceeding upon which a suit for malicious prosecution can be premised." (211 C.A.3d 23; on whether unsuccessful attempt to disqualify attorney supports an abuse of process action, see infra, §518.)

(4) Enforcement of Judgment. In Merlet v. Rizzo (1998) 64 C.A.4th 53, 75 C.R.2d 833, defendants in a malicious prosecution action had earlier represented A in a suit against C, and had obtained judgment. However, when the sale of C's one-half interest in her home proved insufficient to satisfy the judgment, defendants moved for issuance of a writ of sale against plaintiff, C's husband, for sale of his one-half interest in property owned with C. This motion was denied. Plaintiff then sued defendants for malicious prosecution, and they successfully demurred without leave to amend. Held, affirmed.

(a) Subsidiary procedural or purely defensive actions cannot be the basis for malicious prosecution actions. Examples are a request for admissions; filing an appeal; a motion to disqualify an attorney; filing an action in bankruptcy to prevent the discharge of a debt; and an application to the Federal Communications Commission. On the other hand, the following actions have been held to be ancillary or independent, and proper bases for a malicious prosecution action: institution of a special insanity proceeding; an adversarial administrative proceeding; wrongful attachment of property; cross-complaints; and judicial arbitration. (64 C.A.4th 59.)

(b) Malicious prosecution actions based on a prior proceeding that is a continuation of an existing proceeding are untenable. The crucial point, as seen in the will contest cases (see supra, §488), is not whether the prior proceeding had injected new factual and legal issues or whether it placed on the proponent the burden of mounting a defense to those issues, but whether two distinct proceedings were involved and the prior proceeding created the contentious litigation. Here, unlike will contests, a motion for a writ of sale occurs after liability and damages have been determined, and does not result in a separate and distinct proceeding. It is simply a remedial measure that would not exist without the judgment. (64 C.A.4th 61.)

(c) Writs of attachment have been held to support a malicious prosecution action. However, in that situation, the defendant's interest in the property is harmed, while here no lis pendens was filed, but instead the least oppressive procedure was used. Also, a writ of attachment occurs when the complaint is filed, while a court may not issue a writ of sale until liability has been determined and a judgment entered, making it the continuation, or the enforcement, of the existing action, and not a separate proceeding. (64 C.A.4th 62.)

(d) Plaintiffs incorrectly emphasized the extent to which the new remedy has increased the adversarial nature of the proceeding and the resources expended by the malicious prosecution plaintiff in dealing with the remedy. "Since all improper proceedings create unjustifiable litigation and tax one's emotional well-being, the question is the degree to which they burden the 'innocent' party. A motion to execute a sale provides a relatively inexpensive and expeditious means to enforce a judgment. Defending against an improper application entails some hardship, especially when the motion is followed by a motion for reconsideration and an appeal, but the hardship does not approach that suffered by litigants in a will contest or a full-blown lawsuit. Moving for sanctions is the best and most efficient method for thwarting and punishing improper requests for postjudgment remedies." (64 C.A.4th 63.)

(5) Appeal. In Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group, supra, plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against defendant city, based on the drowning of the decedent. They received judgment on a jury award, the city appealed, and its insurance carrier made an offer of settlement for less than half the judgment, which plaintiffs rejected. Subsequently, the insurer tendered a greater amount, plaintiffs accepted, and the appeal was dismissed. Six months later, plaintiffs filed this action against the insurer, alleging that it had filed the appeal with no reasonable belief in a reversal but simply to postpone payment of the judgment; that the insurer, not required to post an appeal bond because of the city's status as a public entity, could invest the amount of the unpaid judgment at a higher return than the statutory interest; and that the insurer acted with "malicious" and "oppressive" intent. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. A defendant's appeal cannot be considered a separate action "seeking affirmative relief," but rather is merely the continuation of an attempt "to repel" plaintiff's attack. (41 C.3d 794; see footnote 9, pointing out that courts have long refused to recognize a tort of malicious defense.) (On similar rejection of cause of action for abuse of process in filing appeal, see infra, §520.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Coleman case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §1001.

26 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.
 - 2. Small Claims Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 494

[§ 494] Small Claims Proceeding.

No action for malicious prosecution can be grounded on institution of a small claims proceeding. To permit the action "would frustrate the intent of the Legislature in adopting an expeditious and informal means of resolving small disputes, would inject into a simple and accessible proceeding elements of time, expense, and complexity which the small claims process was established to avoid, and would require a prudent claimant to consult with an attorney before making use of this supposedly attorney-free method for settling disputes over small amounts." (Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 C.A.3d 476, 479, 161 C.R. 662; see Cooper v. Pirelli Cable Corp. (1984) 160 C.A.3d 294, 298, 206 C.R. 581 [following Pace]; 23 Western State L. Rev. 457 [Malicious Prosecution in Small Claims Court: Why Is This Tort Different From All Other Torts?].)

In 1981, former C.C.P. 117.18 (now C.C.P. 116.260, 116.940) was amended to require each county to provide a small claims advisory service for small claims litigants and potential litigants. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §277.) In Black v. Hepner (1984) 156 C.A.3d 656, 202 C.R. 799, plaintiff contended that the amendment undermined the reasoning of Pace and justified a malicious prosecution action based on a small claims court proceeding. The court disagreed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that the mandatory availability of an advisory service satisfied the Pace court's concern over the need to consult with an attorney. But these statutory provisions do not require a litigant to avail himself or herself of the advisory service; and to sanction a subsequent malicious prosecution action would have the effect of requiring a potential litigant to seek assistance, thus making the provisions inconsistent with the small claims court objective of inexpensive and expeditious means to settle disputes informally. (156 C.A.3d 659.)

(b) Plaintiff further contended that a small claims litigant may suffer as much as a litigant in a formal proceeding. But the small claims process considerably diminishes the extent of harm to a litigant from its malicious commencement, and any deviation from the summary nature of the court's process because some defendants may be recipients of this abuse would countervail the reason for its existence. (156 C.A.3d 659, 660.)

(c) A litigant seeking damages within the small jurisdictional limit of the small claims court could elect to file in the municipal (now superior) court, and in that event, a subsequent malicious prosecution action would lie. But this does not mean that a defendant in an action filed in the latter court would receive more favorable treatment than a defendant in the small claims proceeding; the small claims court defendant benefits from the expeditious and summary nature of that proceeding. "Neither the services of a lawyer nor substantial time to defend are required. The same action brought in [the latter] court could subject a defendant to protracted litigation resulting in substantially more abuse over a longer period of time. Attorney fees and costs of defense may also be incurred." (156 C.A.3d 660.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Small claims advisory service:

Cross-Reference: 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Courts, §271.

27 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.
 - 3. Contractual Arbitration.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 495

[§ 495] Contractual Arbitration.

A malicious prosecution action may be based on a proceeding terminated by judicial arbitration. (Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 C.A.3d 460, 466, 181 C.R. 878, infra, §504.) However, the contrary has been held with respect to contractual arbitration.

In Sagonowsky v. More (1998) 64 C.A.4th 122, 75 C.R.2d 118, S commenced the underlying action against plaintiffs, his fellow tenants in common. The matter was submitted to private, contractual arbitration, and the arbitrator denied all claims. Plaintiffs then instituted the malicious prosecution action against defendant, who was the attorney for S in the underlying action. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed; contractual arbitration cannot be the basis for a malicious prosecution action.

(a) Although Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 C.4th 634, 29 C.R.2d 152, 871 P.2d 204, infra, §573, held that the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) (infra, §567 et seq.) applies to contractual arbitration, it is incorrect to conclude, on the basis of Moore, that contractual arbitration is a judicial proceeding which, on favorable termination, can be the basis for malicious prosecution. (64 C.A.4th 130.)

(b) The rule that permits judicial arbitration to be the basis for a malicious prosecution claim does not require the same result in a contractual arbitration. Although judicial arbitration is mandated by the Legislature in prescribed cases, contractual arbitration arises from the parties' agreement to arbitrate. (64 C.A.4th 131.)

(c) While contractual arbitration involves considerable fees and costs, these fees and costs were implicitly recognized by the parties when they entered into the agreement requiring arbitration. (64 C.A.4th 133.)

(d) The parties could have agreed to subject themselves to liability in the courts for malicious prosecution of an arbitration, or they were free to provide for a sanctions award by the arbitrator for a baseless claim. They did not choose to do so here, and that choice was not the product of unequal bargaining power. Plaintiffs argued that the agreement should be rewritten to require arbitration only when there is a colorable claim. However, the agreement cannot be rewritten in this manner. Having chosen not to foreclose the risk that they might have to bear the costs of an arbitration that terminated in their favor and that involved a baseless claim, plaintiffs cannot now expect the court to rewrite their agreement. (64 C.A.4th 134.) (See Rogers v. Peinado (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1, 6, 101 C.R.2d 817 [following Sagonowsky v. Moore insofar as it held that plaintiff could not sue party for malicious prosecution of action previously terminated by contractual arbitration]; on contractual arbitration, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §484 et seq.; on judicial arbitration, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §524 et seq.)

Sagonowski was approved in Brennan v. Tremco (2001) 25 C.4th 310, 105 C.R.2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086, a malicious prosecution action based on a prior unfair competition action that had been terminated by contractual arbitration. The court quoted extensively from the earlier decision and made the following points:

(a) Two legal trends support the conclusion that a person may not sue for malicious prosecution of an action that the parties resolved through contractual arbitration: (1) the trend against creating or expanding derivative tort remedies, including malicious prosecution; and (2) the trend in favor of allowing the parties voluntarily to choose binding, private arbitration to end the entire dispute. (25 C.4th 314.)

(b) Whether the underlying action started in court, as here, or in arbitration, as in Sagonowsky, if it ends in contractual arbitration, that determination will not support a malicious prosecution action. (25 C.4th 314.)

(c) Because an arbitration award is not generally reviewable and because the arbitrator usually need not explain the basis of the award, private arbitration does not always allow for a ready determination of whether the prior action actually terminated in the malicious prosecution plaintiff's favor. (25 C.4th 317.)

(d) Rogers v. Peinado, supra, is disapproved to the extent it held that the termination of the previous action by contractual arbitration did not preclude the successful defendant from bringing a malicious prosecution action against the plaintiff's attorney. It is the nature of the termination that matters, not exactly how it comes about or who agrees to it. (25 C.4th 317.)

(e) The Court of Appeal erred in concluding that the intent of the parties determines whether they agreed that contractual arbitration would preclude a successful defendant from pursuing a claim of malicious prosecution. This procedure is impracticable, because in most cases the parties will claim opposite intents. (25 C.4th 318.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Contractual arbitration:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §499 et seq.

Judicial arbitration:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §579 et seq.

28 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.
- 4. Family Law Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 496

[§ 496] Family Law Proceedings.

Family law proceedings have been held to be an improper basis for malicious prosecution claims. In Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 C.A.4th 27, 23 C.R.2d 251, the marriage between plaintiff and defendant was dissolved and physical custody of their daughter was awarded to plaintiff husband. Defendant's mother told plaintiff that she would use her superior financial resources to keep reopening custody issues until plaintiff finally agreed to give up custody of the child. Over a period of less than a year, defendant (allegedly funded by her mother) brought a series of six meritless ex parte applications and orders to show cause to change custody. These proceedings cost plaintiff extensive attorneys' fees. Plaintiff then instituted the present malicious prosecution action. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendant affirmed.

(a) Direction of the law. "The trajectory of the case law now governing malicious prosecution claims arising out of family law proceedings arcs toward one destination: a bright line barring any such claims, no matter how egregious the defendant's conduct in the family law action. The present case (at least as pled) is egregious indeed, and forces us to ponder whether the arc should be completed." (19 C.A.4th 29, citing numerous Court of Appeal cases.)

(b) Arguments for bright-line rule. There are numerous substantial arguments in favor of a bright-line rule barring all malicious prosecution actions based on family law proceedings.

First, family law cases have a unique propensity for bitterness. This bitterness and emotional distress often form a kind of background noise that makes it extremely difficult to distinguish truly malicious motions and orders to show cause from ordinary ones. (19 C.A.4th 35.)

Second, family law courts have the unique ability to swiftly discourage litigious nonsense at its source by means of attorneys' fees awards intended as a sanction against a party's conduct. These fee awards are common considerations in family law orders to show cause. (19 C.A.4th 35.)

Third, because family law remedies require a special sensitivity and flexibility, allowing separate malicious prosecution actions in the wake of unsuccessful attempts to obtain certain remedies may have a chilling effect on the ability to obtain those remedies by increasing the risk of asking for them. This chill may be particularly bitter in child custody cases where one party believes (even if without probable cause) that he or she is acting in a child's best interest. (19 C.A.4th 35.)

Fourth, allowing separate malicious prosecution actions (as distinct from imposing sanctions in the underlying case) arising out of family law proceedings may have an impact on lawyers' malpractice insurance premiums. This, in turn, will make the practice of law and the access of clients to lawyers more expensive. (19 C.A.4th 35.)

(c) Arguments against bright-line rule. The argument in favor of allowing malicious prosecution actions arising out of family law proceedings is the inadequacy of internal family law remedies. These remedies consist of sanctions under C.C.P. 128.5 or Family C. 271. Both are limited in scope:

(1) C.C.P. 128.5 sanctions are limited to parties and their attorneys and to "expenses" incurred by another party. Hence, damages for emotional distress are not allowed. And punitive damages are allowed only in certain situations involving felonies. (19 C.A.4th 36.)

(2) Family C. 271 is also limited in its reach. Sanctions imposed are limited to property or income of the party against whom the sanction is imposed. Thus, in a case such as this one, the statute has no force against a nonparty to the family law action who is the behind-the-scenes mastermind and financier of the malicious proceedings. Moreover, Family C. 271 is limited by its requirement that no sanction may impose an unreasonable financial burden against a party. (19 C.A.4th 36.)

(d) Resolution. Despite the inadequacy of family law remedies, "we hold that no malicious prosecution action may arise out of unsuccessful family law motions or OSC's."; The tie breaker is Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510, which, in concluding that the better remedy for unjustified litigation is the imposition of sanctions, stated that the traditional limitations on malicious prosecution should not be relaxed. Given the fact that no California decision has as yet extended the tort of malicious prosecution to family law actions, to do so now would be contrary to the directive expressed in Sheldon Appel. (19 C.A.4th 37.)

(e) Recommendation. It is recommended that single-judge calendaring be extended to family law courts as soon as resources permit so that sanctions may be awarded immediately after each meritless proceeding. (19 C.A.4th 38.) (See Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 C.A.4th 877, 885, 54 C.R.2d 158, supra, §455 [citing Bidna; malicious prosecution claim did not extend to false accusations of child abuse in custody proceedings]; cf. Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 C.A.3d 967, 979, 227 C.R. 718, supra, §490 [stricter showing of malice is required in cases arising from family law proceedings than those arising from other proceedings].)

Bidna was distinguished in Nicholson v. Fazeli (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1091, 6 C.R.3d 881, where plaintiff's action was based on the cross-complaint of a trust joined in a dissolution proceeding that did not involve family law issues but was simply a civil action for possession of property alleged to be trust property and damages for its loss. The court declined to extend the suggested absolute bar against malicious prosecution actions originating in family law proceedings "to otherwise ordinary civil proceedings alleging ordinary civil causes of action that, for whatever reason, 'originate in family law proceedings.'" (113 C.A.4th 1098.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

29 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.

5. (New) Petition To Enjoin Harassment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 496A

[§ 496A] (New) Petition To Enjoin Harassment.

In Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 31 C.R.3d 368, plaintiff sued defendant on numerous causes of action, including a malicious prosecution claim based on defendant's unsuccessful filing of a C.C.P. 527.6 petition to enjoin harassment (see 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §316 et seq.). Held, a C.C.P. 527.6 proceeding is not a proper basis for a malicious prosecution action.

(a) The reasoning of Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 C.A.4th 27, 23 C.R.2d 251, text, §496, with respect to family law proceedings, and of Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 C.A.3d 476, 161 C.R. 662, text, §494, with respect to small claims proceedings, is applicable here. C.C.P. 527.6 is used where the victim has been stalked, threatened, or otherwise seriously harassed, and there are many cases that exemplify the bitter and even irrational disputes that arise under the statute. In these highly charged circumstances, a successful defendant may be inclined to counter with a civil action against the unsuccessful plaintiff. As in family law disputes, however, the background of bitterness would make it difficult to distinguish between a malicious petition and one that is not malicious. Also, just as in family law matters, C.C.P. 527.6 provides for attorneys' fees as sanctions for a frivolous petition. (130 C.A.4th 1572.)

(b) Declining to extend the malicious prosecution tort to unsuccessful C.C.P. 527.6 petitions deprives an aggrieved defendant of a remedy for some of the harm suffered as a result of a malicious petition. However, the harm should be fairly minimal. C.C.P. 527.6 was passed to provide quick relief to harassment victims threatened with great or irreparable injury. Like a small claims action, the petition is designed to be processed simply and expeditiously, and a defendant is not usually likely to incur substantial legal fees. There is no risk of incarceration or financial ruin; at worst, the defendant will simply be ordered to stop doing something. Also, to the extent the defendant has grievances of his or her own, C.C.P. 527.6 expressly permits a cross-complaint. (130 C.A.4th 1573.)

(c) A C.C.P. 527.6 petition is not an ordinary civil action. The statute provides for the proceeding to be completed in a matter of weeks and incorporates an expectation that victims may often seek relief without the benefit of a lawyer. Permitting a malicious prosecution claim to follow an unsuccessful C.C.P. 527.6 petition would frustrate this streamlined procedure. A prudent plaintiff would seek legal advice before filing a petition, and the risk of subsequent litigation might dissuade victims of serious harassment from seeking the remedy at all. (130 C.A.4th 1573.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

30 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

c. Proceedings That Do Not Give Rise to Liability.

6. (New) Petition To Enjoin Workplace Violence or Threats.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 496B

[§ 496B] (New) Petition To Enjoin Workplace Violence or Threats.

In Robinzine v. Vicory (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1416, 50 C.R.3d 65, plaintiff and her husband sued her former employer for malicious prosecution based on the unsuccessful filing of a C.C.P. 527.8 petition to enjoin workplace violence or threats of violence (see 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §326 et seq.). Held, a malicious prosecution action may not be grounded on a C.C.P. 527.8 proceeding. Given the substantial similarity between petitions under C.C.P. 527.6 and C.C.P. 527.8, the reasoning of Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 31 C.R.3d 368, Supp., supra, §496A, applies here. C.C.P. 527.8 was enacted to allow employers to seek protections comparable to those offered under C.C.P. 527.6. Both statutory schemes describe a streamlined process for obtaining a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction. Both envision self-representation by parties without the benefit of counsel, and exempt the process from filing fees. They contain similar provisions concerning notification, enforcement, and the consequences of an order obtained in the proceedings. To the extent that a defendant may have grievances of his or her own, both statutes permit a cross-complaint. Moreover, a prevailing defendant in an action filed under C.C.P. 527.8 has available sanctions that can be obtained within the proceeding to redress baseless or harassing allegations. (143 C.A.4th 1423.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

31 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- d. Institution or Continuation of Prior Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 497

[§ 497] Institution or Continuation of Prior Proceeding.

The tort requires the institution by the malicious prosecution defendant of a prior separate proceeding. (Camarena v. Sequoia Ins. Co. (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1089, 1094, 235 C.R. 820, supra, §492; HMS Capital v. Lawyers Title Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 204, 213, 12 C.R.3d 786.)

One who did not file a complaint may nevertheless be liable for malicious prosecution if he or she instigated or was actively instrumental in "putting the law in motion." (Jacques Interiors v. Petrak (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1363, 1371, 234 C.R. 44.)

Also, a person who had no part in the commencement of an action, but who participated in it at a later time, may be held liable. (Lujan v. Gordon (1977) 70 C.A.3d 260, 263, 138 C.R. 654.) The same is true of a person who commenced an action for a proper purpose but continued to prosecute it after discovering that it lacked probable cause. (See infra, §506.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- e. Favorable Termination.
- 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 498

[§ 498] In General.

The prior civil action or proceeding must have terminated in favor of the present plaintiff. (Hurgren v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1904) 141 C. 585, 587, 75 P. 168; Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 C.3d 841, 845, 92 C.R. 179, 479 P.2d 379; Merron v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. (1938) 27 C.A.2d 119, 121, 80 P.2d 740; Munson v. Linnick (1967) 255 C.A.2d 589, 594, 63 C.R. 340; Rich v. Siegel (1970) 7 C.A.3d 465, 469, 86 C.R. 665; Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 638, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21; Sierra Club v. Superior Court (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1138, 1144, 214 C.R. 740, infra, §505; Berman v. RCA Auto Corp. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 321, 323, 222 C.R. 877, infra, §501; Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 C.A.3d 967, 976, 227 C.R. 718, supra, §490; Camarena v. Sequoia Ins. Co. (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1089, 1110, 235 C.R. 820, supra, §492; Mattel v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1179, 1190, 121 C.R.2d 794; Padres L.P. v. Henderson (2003) 114 C.A.4th 495, 514, 8 C.R.3d 584, supra, §487; see Sutherland v. Palme (1949) 93 C.A.2d 307, 313, 208 P.2d 1035 [showing that insanity proceeding was dismissed is sufficient]; Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 C.A.2d 851, 853, 57 C.R. 11 [complaint was fatally uncertain in this element]; Sagonowsky v. More (1998) 64 C.A.4th 122, 128, 75 C.R.2d 118, supra, §495 [in underlying arbitration proceeding, plaintiff was denied all relief, although arbitrator found that defendants in that action had failed to make a complete accounting; held, favorable termination]; Rest.2d, Torts §674, Comment k [noting exception where prior proceeding was ex parte]; 15 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 65; on similar requirement in action for malicious prosecution of criminal proceeding, see supra, §477 et seq.)

The favorable termination in the underlying action must "reflect on the merits" of the action. Whether a proceeding terminated in a defendant's favor is not based on whether defendant won, but whether termination tended to indicate his or her innocence of or lack of responsibility for the alleged misconduct. (Lackner v. LaCroix (1979) 25 C.3d 747, 750, 159 C.R. 693, 602 P.2d 393, infra, §502; Pender v. Radin (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1807, 1814, 29 C.R.2d 36.) Thus, a technical or procedural termination, as distinguished from a substantive one, is not favorable for purposes of a malicious prosecution claim. (Lackner v. LaCroix, supra, 25 C.3d 751.) Examples include dismissals (1) on statute of limitations grounds (Warren v. Wasserman, Comden & Casselman (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1297, 1303, 271 C.R. 579), (2) pursuant to a settlement (see Dalany v. American Pac. Holding Corp. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 822, 826, 50 C.R.2d 13), and (3) on grounds of laches (Asia Investment Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 C.A.3d 832, 838, 184 C.R. 317). However, a termination based on the parole evidence rule, which in effect is a rule of substantive law rather than of evidence, satisfies the favorable termination requirement. (Casa Herrera v. Beydoun (2004) 32 C.4th 336, 342, 9 C.R.3d 97, 83 P.3d 497, citing the text.)

In Ferreira v. Gray, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich (2001) 87 C.A.4th 409, 412, 104 C.R.2d 683, there was no favorable termination, even though a verdict was rendered for the malicious prosecution plaintiff, where judgment was entered pursuant to a negotiated settlement. Although plaintiff at one point received a favorable verdict, the proceeding terminated as a result of a settlement in which both parties gave up something to resolve the matter. In Sierra Club Foundation v. Graham (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1135, 1150, 85 C.R.2d 726, on the other hand, the underlying action was favorably terminated even though a related, but independent, action against the plaintiff was settled. Also, HMS Capital v. Lawyers Title Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 204, 215, 12 C.R.3d 786, found a favorable termination even though the parties, after a trial on the merits in which nothing was awarded on the complaint and damages were awarded on the cross-complaint, entered into a compromise and stipulation dealing only with the ancillary issue of the amount of costs.

In Ray v. First Fed. Bank (1998) 61 C.A.4th 315, 71 C.R.2d 436, the trial court awarded summary judgment on statute of limitations grounds for the malicious prosecution of plaintiff in the underlying legal malpractice action. On appeal from that judgment, the appellate court affirmed, but on the merits, instead of on the basis of the statute of limitations. Thus, in the subsequent malicious prosecution action, the primary issue was whether the favorable termination was made on the basis of the trial court's decision (not sufficient) or the appellate court opinion (sufficient). Held, the determination is made on the basis of the appellate disposition. (61 C.A.4th 318.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.34 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Settlement positions before final termination are irrelevant: The favorable termination element requires that the complained-of action be pursued to termination in the present plaintiff's favor. No exception is recognized for a final termination that, though not in the present plaintiff's favor, is more favorable than an earlier settlement proposal by the present plaintiff. (StaffPro v. Elite Show Services (2006) 136 C.A.4th 1392, 1400, 39 C.R.3d 682.)

(New) No blanket rule that postjudgment settlement bars subsequent malicious prosecution action: In Siebel v. Mittlesteadt (2007) 41 C.4th 735, 62 C.R.3d 155, 161 P.3d 527, a discharged sales director sued her former employer and its chief executive officer (CEO) in the underlying litigation, alleging that they discriminated against her because of gender, falsely promised to compensate her with lucrative commissions and stock options, and fired her to avoid paying this compensation. The jury specifically found that the employer had fired the employee because it honestly believed that her job performance was deficient, but that it had failed to pay her agreed commissions. All parties appealed, but later agreed to settle. Under the settlement, the employer agreed to pay most of the damages and costs awarded to the employee, but the agreement specifically provided that it did not modify the final termination of the action entered in favor of the CEO. The settlement released the employee from further liability in the case, but excepted her attorneys. The CEO subsequently brought the present malicious prosecution action against the attorneys. The trial court granted summary judgment to the attorneys. Held, this was error; "a postjudgment settlement constitutes a favorable termination when the malicious prosecution plaintiff received a favorable judgment in the underlying action, and settled without giving up any portion of the judgment in his favor." (41 C.4th 737.)

(a) The present defendants contend that what they term the "settlement rule" set forth in Ferreira v. Gray, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich (2001) 87 C.A.4th 409, 104 C.R.2d 683, text, p. 732, broadly bars bringing a malicious prosecution action after a postjudgment settlement. Their reliance on Ferreira is misplaced. The parties in that case agreed to a new disposition and an amended judgment. Ultimately, that amended judgment, not the jury verdict, ended the litigation. In contrast, the parties in the underlying action here, while accepting different rights and obligations between themselves, did not stipulate to a new judgment. The agreement to abandon their appeals allowed the existing judgment to become final. Although the settlement agreement compromised certain awarded amounts, the judgment itself, favoring the CEO (the present plaintiff), remained intact. (41 C.4th 741.)

(b) Ferreira should not be extended to the circumstances of this case. Adopting the present defendants' position would foreclose a malicious prosecution action whenever a case is resolved by agreement. This would run counter to the policy favoring negotiated dispositions. A blanket rule could also bar legitimate malicious prosecution actions, allowing unscrupulous parties and/or their attorneys to hide behind its shield. (41 C.4th 741.) Here, after a jury trial, the present plaintiff received a favorable judgment on the merits of the claims against him. If the parties had not appealed, he would have secured a favorable termination because the judgment reflected the merits of the action and his innocence of the misconduct alleged in the lawsuit. During the pendency of their appeals, the parties reached a settlement that did not amend the judgment on the merits as it related to the present plaintiff. Although the dollar amount the employee received from her employer was compromised, this amount related to the merits of the action between her and the employer. The underlying judgment for the present plaintiff on the merits was not affected. Because he received a favorable judgment in the underlying proceeding and settled without giving up any portion of the judgment in his favor, the parties' settlement constitutes a favorable termination. (41 C.4th 742.)

33 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - e. Favorable Termination.
- 2. Requirement That Proceeding Have Terminated.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 499

[§ 499] Requirement That Proceeding Have Terminated.

(1) In General. The civil proceeding underlying the malicious prosecution action must in fact have terminated. (Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 C.3d 841, 850, 92 C.R. 179, 479 P.2d 379, citing the text; see Rich v. Siegel (1970) 7 C.A.3d 465, 469, 86 C.R. 665 [order for partial summary judgment and severance of remaining issues for trial; action still pending and no favorable termination]; 30 A.L.R.4th 572 [nature of termination of civil action required to satisfy element of favorable termination to support action for malicious prosecution]; on pleading of factual termination, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §713.)

(2) No Malicious Prosecution Cross-Complaint in Underlying Action. A defendant cannot set up an anticipated cause of action for malicious prosecution by way of cross-complaint in the main action. (Babb v. Superior Court, supra, 3 C.3d 841, 846.)

In Jenkins v. Pope (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1292, 266 C.R. 557, the cross-complainant sought to avoid the application of the Babb ruling by claiming that filing of a first amended complaint that deleted one of the causes of action alleged in the original complaint was equivalent to voluntary dismissal of an action, which would support an action for malicious prosecution (see infra, §501). The court held, however, that when the action as a whole is still pending, it is of no consequence whether a single cause of action has been determined in favor of the cross-complainant. (217 C.A.3d 1298, 1299.) "To allow a malicious prosecution suit to be based on a cause of action dropped from an amended complaint would discourage amendment of pleadings to delete theories which come to appear untenable." (217 C.A.3d 1301; on effect of partially favorable termination generally, see infra, §500.)

A cross-complaint may be proper, however, where a favorable termination has already occurred. In Loomis v. Murphy (1990) 217 C.A.3d 589, 266 C.R. 82, the court discussed the reasoning and conclusion of Babb (217 C.A.3d 593), and held that none of the objections to a cross-complaint for malicious prosecution were involved because the entire complaint had already been dismissed. "While we recognize the general disfavor in the law for claims of malicious prosecution, the public policy concerns underlying the Babb rule are not raised by the amended cross-complaint here as favorable termination of the prior action has already occurred. Where, as here, the elements of malicious prosecution are capable of sufficient statement by cross-complaint, we find no reason for permitting the separate filing of such an action and yet prohibiting it as a cross-complaint. The concern for an increased number of malicious prosecution actions is unfounded in the instant scenario. Second, as the underlying complaint has already been resolved, the possibility of prejudice to the plaintiff or a compromise verdict does not exist. Neither is a conflict of interest situation presented here." (217 C.A.3d 594.)

(3) Effect of Appeal. A malicious prosecution action will not lie while an appeal from the judgment in the underlying action is pending. (Friedman v. Stadum (1985) 171 C.A.3d 775, 778, 217 C.R. 585; Gibbs v. Haight, Dickson, Brown & Bonesteel (1986) 183 C.A.3d 716, 721, 228 C.R. 398; see Rest.2d, Torts §674, Comment j; 41 A.L.R.2d 863 [pending appeal in civil action as precluding malicious prosecution action based on successful termination in trial court]; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §30.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §757.

34 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - e. Favorable Termination.
 - 3. Partially Favorable Result.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 500

[§ 500] Partially Favorable Result.

Whether a termination partially in favor of the plaintiff is sufficient depends on whether the causes of action in the underlying action were separate or severable. (Jenkins v. Pope (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1292, 1301, 266 C.R. 557, supra, §499; see Tabaz v. Cal Fed Finance (1994) 27 C.A.4th 789, 792, 33 C.R.2d 134 [defendant in underlying action who prevailed on all causes of action relating to sale of note could institute malicious prosecution action, even though he lost on claim relating to conversion of note payment; conversion claim was separate and severable from others].)

In Freidberg v. Cox (1987) 197 C.A.3d 381, 242 C.R. 851, plaintiff F and defendant I, both attorneys, were involved in a previous action in which I sued F to recover a share of attorneys' fees based on the following theories: (a) joint venture; (b) tortious interference with contract; (c) reasonable value of services rendered. The trial judge dismissed the claims on the first two theories, but the jury rendered a verdict for I on the third. F then brought the present action, alleging that the joint venture and tortious interference claims theories were prosecuted maliciously. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. In the underlying suit, there was but one injury, i.e., the loss of a share of attorneys' fees, and hence but one cause of action, regardless of the different theories of recovery. Because that cause of action did not terminate in favor of plaintiff, the action for malicious prosecution cannot be maintained. (197 C.A.3d 388.)

Freidberg was distinguished in Paramount General Hosp. Co. v. Jay (1989) 213 C.A.3d 360, 261 C.R. 723, in which J's underlying action against P involved multiple causes of action, most of which (but not all) resulted in termination favorable to P. Based on this favorable partial termination, P instituted the present malicious prosecution action, but the trial judge sustained J's demurrer, reasoning that there had been no favorable termination because P had not prevailed on all of the causes of action in the underlying action. Held, reversed.

(a) The underlying action alleged multiple causes of action which were severable and could have been the subject of separate proceedings. Thus, the fact that J joined severable causes of action in one trial and that P was not successful in defending the entire underlying action does not preclude P from properly pleading a favorable termination as to the causes of action on which it prevailed. (213 C.A.3d 363.)

(b) Freidberg is distinguishable. In that case, the various claims that were alleged in the underlying action were not severable, thereby precluding the partially successful defendant in the underlying action from maintaining an action for malicious prosecution. (213 C.A.3d 369.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(New) Severability analysis is not appropriate in determining favorable termination: In StaffPro v. Elite Show Services (2006) 136 C.A.4th 1392, 39 C.R.3d 682, the malicious prosecution defendant was successful on only one of several claims alleged in the underlying action. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed. Severability analysis is improper in determining whether a malicious prosecution plaintiff has demonstrated favorable termination of the underlying action.

(a) The Supreme Court in Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 C.4th 666, 34 C.R.2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083, text, §508, has stated that, for purposes of determining probable cause, each theory asserted in the underlying action must be separately considered, but separate consideration of prior claims is not appropriate with respect to the element of favorable termination. For purposes of determining favorable termination, the court should not make a separate investigation and retry each separate allegation without reference to the result of the previous suit. Instead, consideration should be given to the judgment as a whole; the judgment itself is the criterion by which to determine who was the successful party in the underlying action. (136 C.A.4th 1403.) Supreme Court dictum, like the favorable termination analysis in Crowley, carries persuasive weight, even though not controlling. (136 C.A.4th 1403, footnote 9.)

(b) Thus, a malicious prosecution plaintiff must establish a favorable termination of the entire underlying action. Other elements of the tort, such as probable cause, will only be reached after judgment has been rendered in that plaintiff's favor in the prior action as a whole. (136 C.A.4th 1406.) The judgment in the underlying action here was partly in the malicious prosecution defendant's favor, precluding the requisite favorable termination of the entire action. (136 C.A.4th 1407.)

35 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - e. Favorable Termination.
- 4. Dismissal Reflecting on Merits.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 501

[§ 501] Dismissal Reflecting on Merits.

A dismissal of the underlying action constitutes a favorable termination when it reflects on the merits of the action.

(1) Failure To Bring Action to Trial. A dismissal for failure to bring an action to trial within the statutory period for discretionary dismissal (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §438) "does reflect on the merits of the action, and that reflection is favorable to the defendant in the action. The reflection arises from the natural assumption that one does not simply abandon a meritorious action once instituted." (Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 C.A.3d 823, 827, 145 C.R. 829.)

(2) Voluntary Dismissal. A voluntary dismissal, even one without prejudice, reflects on the merits. Although not res judicata, it is generally a favorable termination. (MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 C.A.2d 282, 289, 79 C.R. 707, supra, §488; Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 C.A.3d 166, 185, 156 C.R. 745, infra, §511; cf. Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 C.A.2d 851, 854, 57 C.R. 11 [plaintiff must plead and prove circumstances indicating that circumstances of voluntary dismissal showed favorable termination]; Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 C.A.3d 967, 968, 227 C.R. 718, supra, §490 [same].)

(3) Absolute Privilege. A dismissal based on the assertion of absolute privilege is on the merits. In Berman v. RCA Auto Corp. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 321, 222 C.R. 877, plaintiff B had been made a defendant in a prior federal court action by R on allegations that he had made false representations to the court which were damaging to R. B moved to dismiss the action on the ground that the statements were absolutely privileged under C.C. 47(2) (now C.C. 47(b); see infra, §567 et seq.), and the motion was granted. B then filed the present action for malicious prosecution against R. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) The defense of absolute privilege is unlike ordinary procedural defenses such as statute of limitations and laches; it is a substantive defense that creates immunity from liability. (177 C.A.3d 324, 325.) A termination of the proceeding for this reason "reflects the opinion of the Legislature that the action lacks merit because the protection of the right of an individual's access to the courts outweighs an individual's right to a civil remedy for harm resulting from misrepresentations made at a judicial proceeding." (177 C.A.3d 325.)

(b) Public policy also supports this conclusion. "Those who speak at judicial proceedings could be harassed by having to defend against suits based on their privileged publications, at least to the extent that they would have to hire an attorney to raise the privilege by answer or demurrer until the case was dismissed, with no way of being compensated and no means of dissuading plaintiffs from bringing unmeritorious suits." (177 C.A.3d 325.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Failure To Bring Action to Trial.

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §451.

(2) Voluntary Dismissal. See Sycamore Ridge Apartments LLC v. Naumann (2007) 157 C.A.4th 1385, 1399, 69 C.R.3d 561 [in hearing on malicious prosecution defendant's SLAPP motion (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.) evidence that defendant agreed to dismiss underlying action with prejudice for waiver of costs after she earlier dismissed without prejudice indicated probability that plaintiff would prevail on issue of favorable termination].(4) (New) Dismissal as Discovery Sanction. Dismissal for failure to comply with discovery orders reflects on the merits of the action where the circumstances indicate that noncompliance is a concession that the claim lacks merit. Thus, dismissal of an action for the plaintiff's refusal to be deposed constituted a favorable termination, on the natural assumption that one does not simply abandon a meritorious action once instituted. (Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 C.A.4th 188, 198, 197, 51 C.R.3d 484; citing Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 C.A.3d 823, 145 C.R. 829, text, p. 735.)

36 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- e. Favorable Termination.
- 5. Dismissal Not Reflecting on Merits.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 502

[§ 502] Dismissal Not Reflecting on Merits.

(1) In General. A dismissal that does not relate to the merits is not a favorable termination. (See Robbins v. Blecher (1997) 52 C.A.4th 886, 891, 60 C.R.2d 815 [dismissal of alter ego action against plaintiff on grounds of mootness did not constitute favorable termination where dismissal, rather than going to plaintiff's innocence, was due to reversal of antitrust judgment, rendering alter ego action superfluous]; Eells v. Rosenblum (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1848, 1854, 43 C.R.2d 323 [dismissal because of technical defect, pending appeal of related lawsuit].)

(2) Dismissal Based on Statute of Limitations. A dismissal based on the statute of limitations is not a favorable termination. In Lackner v. LaCroix (1979) 25 C.3d 747, 159 C.R. 693, 602 P.2d 393, B brought a medical malpractice action against Dr. L; the jury found that the complaint had not been filed within the applicable limitation period, and the judge dismissed the action. Dr. L then filed the present action for malicious prosecution against B and his attorneys. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. Under the applicable rule, the termination "must reflect on the merits of the underlying action." (25 C.3d 750.) Termination by a statute of limitations defense is technical or procedural, and in no way reflects on the merits. (25 C.3d 751.) Moreover, it has repeatedly been declared that the statute of limitations is a "shield," not a "sword" (25 C.3d 752); and in basing his suit for malicious prosecution on the malpractice action barred by the statute, plaintiff was attempting to use the statute as a "sword." (25 C.3d 752.) (See Drasin v. Jacoby & Meyers (1984) 150 C.A.3d 481, 483, 197 C.R. 768 [following Lackner].)

Warren v. Wasserman, Comden & Casselman (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1297, 271 C.R. 579, raised an issue not addressed in Lackner: the effect of the malicious prosecution defendant's knowledge that the underlying action was barred by the statute of limitations. The plaintiff argued that an underlying action clearly barred by a limitations defense is not a legally tenable claim and thus that the underlying action was favorably terminated. Held, this contention confuses the elements of probable cause (infra, §506 et seq.) and favorable termination.

(a) "Whether a prior action was legally tenable goes to the issue of probable cause, that is, did the defendant have an honest and reasonable belief in the truth of the allegations. ... Whether a prior action was terminated favorably tends to show the innocence of the defendant in the prior action ... , and is not affected by the objective tenability of the claim. In short, these two elements of the malicious prosecution tort serve different purposes, and the legal tenability of the underlying action is not the standard by which to judge whether the action was terminated in [plaintiff's] favor. The standard, as Lackner teaches, is simply whether the termination bears on the merits of the underlying action." (220 C.A.3d 1303.)

(b) "While filing a lawsuit knowing the limitations period has run is a petty act which wastes judicial resources, if a litigant wants to pursue a malicious prosecution action under those circumstances, he must eschew the procedural defense, forgo the easy termination, and obtain a favorable judgment on the merits. Otherwise, the policy reasons behind requiring a favorable termination would be thwarted if a litigant could meet the favorable termination requirement simply by alleging defendants knew the action was barred by the statute of limitations." (220 C.A.3d 1303.)

(3) Dismissal Based on Laches. A dismissal based on laches is not a favorable termination. (See Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 C.A.3d 832, 838, 184 C.R. 317 [following Lackner].)

(4) Dismissal Based on Settlement. Dismissal based on settlement of the underlying action generally does not reflect on the merits. (See Villa v. Cole (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1327, 1336, 6 C.R.2d 644 [in action based on police misconduct, settlement requiring dismissal of all defendants in exchange for their waiver of costs and fees was not termination in favor of officer who rejected the settlement but accepted its benefits]; Pender v. Radin (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1807, 1814, 29 C.R.2d 36 [parties to settlement agreement in underlying action could not successfully claim that the action terminated in their favor merely because a third defendant paid entire settlement amount]; Ludwig v. Superior Court (1995) 37 C.A.4th 8, 24, 43 C.R.2d 350 [city that settled two underlying lawsuits challenging proposed city project could not claim that settlements were in its favor because it agreed to them only under duress]; Hurvitz v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (2003) 109 C.A.4th 918, 926, 135 C.R.2d 703 [insurer's settlement of suit by third party against insureds despite insureds' opposition deprived them of favorable termination needed to pursue later malicious prosecution action against third party; relying on Villa].)

In Haight v. Handweiler (1988) 199 C.A.3d 85, 244 C.R. 488, a patient filed a medical malpractice action against a physician, which resulted in a verdict for the physician. The physician then filed a malicious prosecution action against the patient, the patient's attorney in the malpractice action, and the patient's expert witness in the malpractice action. The expert settled for $ 37,500. Subsequently, the attorney agreed to settle the physician's claim against him for $ 37,500 in exchange for the dismissal of the claims against both the attorney and the patient. The patient did not participate in either settlement. The physician voluntarily dismissed all three defendants in his malicious prosecution action. The patient then instituted his own malicious prosecution action against the physician. Held, judgment for the physician affirmed; the patient failed to establish that the underlying action had terminated in his favor.

(a) A dismissal based on a settlement generally does not constitute a favorable termination, because it reflects ambiguously on the merits of the action. (199 C.A.3d 88.) To avoid this rule, the patient contended that, because he did not agree to the settlement, the termination was a voluntary dismissal that should allow him to sue the physician for bringing an allegedly groundless action against him. However, the focus is not on the patient's opinion of his own innocence; it is on that of physician, the dismissing party. (199 C.A.3d 89.)

(b) The evidence established that because the physician considered the total sum offered to him by the patient's codefendants ($ 75,000) to be fair compensation, he had no reason to pursue the action against the patient, and that the patient's dismissal was a condition of the settlement with the attorney (to protect the attorney from future cross-complaints). Because such a termination does not necessarily reflect the physician's opinion that his action against the patient lacked merit, it does not qualify as a favorable termination in the context of a malicious prosecution suit. (199 C.A.3d 89.)

(5) Dismissal To Avoid Litigation Expenses. In Oprian v. Goldrich, Kest & Associates (1990) 220 C.A.3d 337, 269 C.R. 429, the underlying action in the malicious prosecution suit involved an option contract between plaintiff landowner, and defendants developer and its attorneys. The defendants sued plaintiff for breach of contract, and the plaintiff cross-complained for fraud. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff on both the complaint and cross-complaint, but the Court of Appeal reversed the judgment on the cross-complaint, directed the trial judge to enter judgment for defendants, and then dismissed the complaint on the basis of a representation by defendants' counsel at oral argument that if the judgment for plaintiff on the cross-complaint were reversed, defendants probably would be willing to forgo further prosecution of their complaint to avoid incurring additional attorneys' fees and the inconvenience of a second trial. Held, the requirement of a favorable termination was not met. "It would be a sad day indeed if a litigant and his or her attorney could not dismiss an action to avoid further fees and costs, simply because they were fearful such a dismissal would result in a malicious prosecution action. It is common knowledge that costs of litigation, such as attorney's fees, costs of expert witnesses, and other expenses, have become staggering. The law favors the resolution of disputes. 'This policy would be ill-served by a rule which would virtually compel the plaintiff to continue his litigation in order to place himself in the best posture for defense of a malicious prosecution action.' " (220 C.A.3d 344, quoting Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 547, 264 C.R. 883.)

(6) Dismissal of Interpleader Action. In Cantu v. Resolution Trust Corp. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 857, 6 C.R.2d 151, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §237, an action was filed against the malicious prosecution defendant, a savings and loan association, for allegedly mishandling funds deposited with it. Defendant filed an interpleader action (see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §216 et seq.), naming plaintiff as one of the potential claimants to the fund. The trial judge issued a preliminary injunction staying the action against defendant, and released the disputed funds from its jurisdiction as a result of a settlement among all the claimants in the interpleader action, except for plaintiff. Defendant then dismissed the interpleader action with prejudice against all claimants, and plaintiff instituted the present action against defendant for malicious prosecution of the interpleader action. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed; the interpleader action did not terminate in plaintiff's favor.

(a) An interpleader action is not adversarial, i.e., the interpleader plaintiff attempts to offer money to the claimants, not take it away. Hence, because plaintiff could not have been either a winner or loser with respect to defendant, the mere fact that defendant dismissed plaintiff from the interpleader action did not constitute a termination of that action in plaintiff's favor. (4 C.A.4th 881.)

(b) The trial court lost subject matter jurisdiction after it had disbursed the disputed funds in accordance with the settlement between defendant and the other named claimants. At that point defendant had to dismiss the interpleader action, or the trial court could have done so itself. Because a dismissal for lack of jurisdiction does not involve the merits, it cannot constitute a favorable termination. (4 C.A.4th 882.)

(c) Defendant's dismissal of plaintiff was a consequence of a settlement between itself and all of the other claimants. And a settlement does not constitute favorable termination of an action, even as to a party, such as plaintiff, who refused to participate in the settlement. (4 C.A.4th 882.) Hence, because plaintiff cannot dispute the fact that defendant dismissed him as a result of the settlement, he cannot allege that the dismissal resulted in a favorable termination. (4 C.A.4th 883.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.35(1), 37

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) Dismissal To Avoid Litigation Expenses. See Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1043, 1052, 61 C.R.3d 434 [voluntary dismissal in underlying action by malicious prosecution defendants did not constitute termination in malicious prosecution plaintiff's favor where record showed that dismissing defendants could not afford to pursue matter, not that they lost faith in merits of claims; citing Oprian v. Goldrich, Kest & Associates (1990) 220 C.A.3d 337, 269 C.R. 429, text, p. 738]. (6) Dismissal of Interpleader Action.

Cantu case:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §258.

Interpleader action:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §237 et seq.(7) (New) Dismissal for Lack of Standing. In Hudis v. Crawford (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1586, 24 C.R.3d 50, an action brought by nieces and a nephew for the elder abuse of their deceased aunt was dismissed for lack of standing because they were not her successors in interest. The defendants in the underlying action then sued for malicious prosecution, and that action was also dismissed. Held, affirmed; termination of the underlying action was not a favorable termination on the merits for malicious prosecution purposes.

(a) It is not essential to maintenance of an action for malicious prosecution that the prior proceeding was favorably terminated following trial on the merits. However, it is essential that the termination reflect the merits of the action and the plaintiff's innocence of the misconduct alleged in the lawsuit. A favorable termination does not occur merely because the party complained against has prevailed in the underlying action. Thus, a technical or procedural termination, as distinguished from a substantive termination, is not favorable for purposes of a malicious prosecution claim. (125 C.A.4th 1590.)

(b) A lack of standing is a jurisdictional defect. A dismissal for lack of jurisdiction does not involve the merits and cannot constitute a favorable termination. Here, the judgment in the underlying action was based solely on the fact that plaintiffs had not been appointed as the personal representatives of their aunt and had not established that they were her successors in interest. The merits of their elder abuse allegations were never considered by the court and were unrelated to the basis for the dismissal of the action. (125 C.A.4th 1592.)

37 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - e. Favorable Termination.
- 6. Failure To Make Discovery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 503

[§ 503] Failure To Make Discovery.

The courts have arrived at different results on whether noncompliance with discovery orders or requests in the underlying action constitutes a favorable termination.

In Lumpkin v. Friedman (1982) 131 C.A.3d 450, 182 C.R. 378, L engaged attorney F to bring a dental malpractice action, which was unsuccessful. F then sued L for money he had advanced as costs in the action. F failed to comply with the "Witness and Evidence Statement" required by the economical litigation project (as a substitute for pretrial discovery), and the judge gave judgment for L. L then brought the present malicious prosecution suit against F. Held, judgment on demurrer for F reversed. Even if the sanction imposed by the judge barred essential testimony that F sought to produce, it was a termination that reflected on the merits, in the same manner as a dismissal for refusal of a party to depose or respond to interrogatories. (131 C.A.3d 455.) In other words, failure to comply with discovery procedures, like failure to appear or press a case or to prosecute an action within the requisite time period, permits an inference that evidence not produced would be unfavorable. (131 C.A.3d 456, citing Ev.C. 412, 413; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §102.)

Zeavin v. Lee (1982) 136 C.A.3d 766, 186 C.R. 545, disagreed with any blanket rule that might be suggested in Lumpkin that noncompliance with discovery equates with a favorable termination, and reached a different result. Here, attorney L filed a medical malpractice action against Dr. Z and Dr. K on behalf of Mrs. C. Then Mrs. C directed that the suit be dropped, refused to cooperate with her attorney, and refused to answer interrogatories. The judge dismissed the action with prejudice. Dr. Z and Dr. K then filed this malicious prosecution action against attorney L. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. At most, the dismissal of Mrs. C's malpractice action as a result of her conduct could be treated as a concession on her part that her action lacked merit; but her attorney made no such concession, the client was not his agent, and he was not the insurer of her conduct. (136 C.A.3d 771, 772, 773.) "It would be beyond law or reason to conclude that an attorney who in good faith files and diligently prosecutes an action could later be held liable for malicious prosecution solely because that attorney's client later unilaterally, and for reasons known only to herself, refuses to make discovery." (136 C.A.3d 772.) (See De La Pena v. Wolfe (1986) 177 C.A.3d 481, 484, 223 C.R. 325 [following Zeavin v. Lee; any concession by client from failure to make discovery was not binding on attorney].)

Pattiz v. Minye (1998) 61 C.A.4th 822, 826, 71 C.R.2d 802, distinguishing Lumpkin, held that dismissal of a cross-complaint as a discovery sanction did not reflect on the merits where the factual showing made by the cross-complainant of attempts at compliance negated any inference of her concession that the cross-complaint lacked merit.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

38 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- e. Favorable Termination.
- 7. Judicial Arbitration Award.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 504

[§ 504] Judicial Arbitration Award.

In Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 C.A.3d 460, 181 C.R. 878, attorney S filed suit for certain clients that ended with an award against them in a judicial arbitration proceeding, without costs to either party. The defendant in that suit then filed a malicious prosecution action against the former plaintiffs and S. After an unsuccessful motion for summary judgment, S sought mandamus to compel granting of the motion. Held, writ denied; the main action had been finally and favorably terminated.

(a) Award as final and favorable termination. The former plaintiffs had requested judicial arbitration, and did not exercise their statutory power to reject the award and seek a trial de novo. The decision of the arbitrator became final with the same effect as a judgment (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §563). Hence, it reflects the opinion of the arbitrator that the former plaintiffs' claim was without merit, and the lack of a request for a trial de novo, like a voluntary dismissal (see supra, §501), reflects the opinion of the former plaintiffs that further prosecution was not wise or useful. (130 C.A.3d 465.)

(b) No policy exception for judicial arbitration award. S urged that the policy factors discussed in Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 C.A.3d 476, 161 C.R. 662, holding that a small claims court proceeding will not support an action for malicious prosecution (see supra, §494), should be controlling here. But Pace was concerned with the type of former proceeding that would justify a malicious prosecution suit; here the proceeding was a normal civil action with attorneys and extensive discovery, and the usual damages caused by a malicious and baseless legal action were assertedly suffered. "To deny the injured party a chance to recover because the arbitration award in his favor was accepted by the other side (which acceptance had no effect in eliminating the damages that had already occurred) on the basis of an analogy to Pace where the filing of the small claims action caused none of these damages, is against logic, common sense and justice." (130 C.A.3d 468.)

(c) Analogy of malicious prosecution of administrative proceeding. The reasoning of Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 C.2d 577, 311 P.2d 494, infra, §513, is persuasive. If the damages for which malicious prosecution actions are intended to provide recompense are suffered, the right to redress should not depend on whether the injured party prevailed by a judgment after an administrative or arbitration award or a judgment after trial. (130 C.A.3d 469.)

(d) No adverse effect on judicial arbitration. The contention that this decision will interfere with the functioning of judicial arbitration is unsupportable:

(1) If the plaintiff has brought a meritless case, he or she is already exposed to a malicious prosecution suit after trial or voluntary dismissal. Hence, the plaintiff loses nothing by requesting judicial arbitration: The plaintiff might win, or, in the event of a loss, can reject the award and ask for a trial. (130 C.A.3d 470.)

(2) The argument that no losing party will accept an award because of fear of a malicious prosecution suit is unsound. The same argument would logically apply to actions after trials; i.e., the losing party might not accept the judgment and appeal in order to avoid or delay a malicious prosecution suit. "The courts have not considered it good policy to bar the injured party's right to institute a malicious prosecution action in order to encourage the losing party to accept the unfavorable judgment without appeal." (130 C.A.3d 470.)

(3) Judicial arbitration procedure "is in effect a continuation of the settlement negotiation process"; i.e., unfavorable arbitration awards are usually rejected, but before the requested trial de novo most cases are settled. (130 C.A.3d 471.)

(4) If judgment on an award did not constitute favorable termination, the attorney for the winning party would have to advise his or her client to reject the award in order to preserve the right to sue for malicious prosecution. (130 C.A.3d 472.)

(e) Arbitrator's denial of costs is no bar to malicious prosecution action. The arbitrator has power to award costs "if appropriate" (see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §560); hence, the arbitrator has some discretion. (130 C.A.3d 472.) "The only conclusions that could be drawn from the arbitrator's award denying costs are either that [the defendant in the underlying action] waived costs, or the arbitrator erred, or the arbitrator decided not to award costs because he wished to encourage the losing plaintiff to accept the award (or settle the case along similar lines), not that the failure to award costs indicated a belief by the arbitrator that he erred in his decision on the merits." (130 C.A.3d 474.) (On contractual arbitration as basis for malicious prosecution suit, see supra, §495.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Effect of final award:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §610. Power to award costs:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §607.

39 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - e. Favorable Termination.
 - 8. Determination After Remand.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 505

[§ 505] Determination After Remand.

In Sierra Club v. Superior Court (1985) 168 C.A.3d 1138, 214 C.R. 740, plaintiff, an environmental organization, sought administrative mandamus (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §257 et seq.) to challenge the California Coastal Commission's approval of the Rs' property development permit. The superior court determined that the Commission had applied an incorrect legal standard and remanded the matter to the Commission for reconsideration. The Commission, applying the standard required by the court, nevertheless concluded that the permit should be approved, and the court denied plaintiff's new petition for administrative mandamus. The Rs then filed an action for malicious prosecution. Held, summary judgment for plaintiff should be granted.

(a) The Rs' argument, that the proceeding had terminated in their favor, was based on the fact that they ultimately prevailed in the proceeding challenging approval of their permit. But plaintiff, by successfully attacking the Commission's act and obtaining a remand for reconsideration, prevailed in the administrative mandamus proceeding. "The petitioner ... may be considered successful if the agency is compelled to reconsider its action, even if the agency eventually reaches the same result." (168 C.A.3d 1146.)

(b) This conclusion is consistent with policy: "To allow an action for malicious prosecution in light of the Club's successful attempt to make the Commission follow the law would be a wholly unwarranted departure from the accepted policies underlying malicious prosecution actions, and would seriously chill the rights of anyone seeking to enforce procedural purity in administrative proceedings." (168 C.A.3d 1147.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Administrative mandamus:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Extraordinary Writs, §258 et seq.

40 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - f. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 506

[§ 506] In General.

(1) Reasonable Belief in Success of Action. The defendant in a malicious prosecution suit is protected if he or she acted with probable cause in bringing the prior proceeding, i.e., with a reasonable belief in the possibility of the suit being successful. (MacGruer v. Deniville (1931) 113 C.A. 49, 52, 297 P. 633; Moore v. Durrer (1932) 127 C.A. 759, 763, 16 P.2d 676; Gause v. McClelland (1951) 102 C.A.2d 762, 764, 228 P.2d 91; Sutherland v. Palme (1949) 93 C.A.2d 307, 313, 208 P.2d 1035; Walsh v. Bronson (1988) 200 C.A.3d 259, 270, 245 C.R. 888; Copenbarger v. International Ins. Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 961, 964, 54 C.R.2d 1, infra, §510; HMS Capital v. Lawyers Title Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 204, 216, 12 C.R.3d 786; see Sangster v. Paetkau (1998) 68 C.A.4th 151, 166, 80 C.R.2d 66 [malicious prosecution could not be based on cross-complaint for fraud where, from undisputed evidence, attorney could reasonably have concluded that plaintiff intended to and did defraud defendants]; Rest.2d, Torts §675; cf. Masterson v. Pig'n Whistle Corp. (1958) 161 C.A.2d 323, 336, 326 P.2d 918 [lack of probable cause shown by undisputed evidence]; Puryear v. Golden Bear Ins. Co. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1188, 78 C.R.2d 507 [lack of probable cause]; Arcaro v. Silva & Silva Enterprises Corp. (1999) 77 C.A.4th 152, 156, 91 C.R.2d 433 [no probable cause to sue where validity of underlying action depended on authentic signature and ample evidence, known to suing party, suggested that forgery defense had merit].)

(2) Objective Test. The existence of probable cause is determined by an objective test: "a suspicion founded upon circumstances warranting a reasonable man's belief" that grounds exist for initiating proceedings. (Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 55, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §491; on reliance on advice of counsel, see infra, §509.) The question is whether, as an objective matter, "any reasonable attorney would have thought the claim tenable." (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 882, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510.) "If the court determines that there was probable cause to institute the prior action, the malicious prosecution action fails, whether or not there is evidence that the prior suit was maliciously motivated." (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker, supra, 47 C.3d 875; on element of malice, see infra, §§511, 512.)

(3) Role of Court and Jury. The issue of probable cause is a question of law for the court. If the facts are not in dispute, the issue is decided by the court without any submission to the jury. If the evidence is conflicting, the jury decides the preliminary factual questions on which the determination is made. (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker, supra, 47 C.3d 874; Swat-Fame v. Goldstein (2002) 101 C.A.4th 613, 624, 124 C.R.2d 556.) "[C]ourts and not juries set the legal standard for malicious prosecution by determining whether the conduct at issue measures up to probable cause." (Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 C.A.3d 626, 636, 637, 224 C.R. 865; see Klein v. Oakland Raiders, Ltd. (1989) 211 C.A.3d 67, 75, 82, 259 C.R. 149 [probable cause issue that was not based on any reasonable factual issue, but rather rested on interpretation of substantive antitrust and tort law, was determinable by court as matter of law under objective standard].)

(4) Availability of Anti-SLAPP Motion. A malicious prosecution action may be subject to an anti-SLAPP motion. (Jarrow Formulas v. LaMarche (2003) 31 C.4th 728, 734, 3 C.R.3d 636, 74 P.3d 737; Chavez v. Mendoza (2001) 94 C.A.4th 1083, 1087, 114 C.R.2d 825; on denial of anti-SLAPP motion in prior proceeding as showing probable cause, see infra, §507; on anti-SLAPP motions generally, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962 et seq.)

(5) Continuation of Action Without Probable Cause. A person who continues a civil proceeding that was properly begun, or takes an active part in continuing it, for an improper purpose after learning that there is no probable cause for the proceeding becomes liable for malicious prosecution as if he or she had initiated the proceeding. (Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 C.4th 958, 973, 12 C.R.3d 54, 87 P.3d 802, infra, §510; HMS Capital v. Lawyers Title Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 204, 216, 12 C.R.3d 786; Rest.2d, Torts § 674, Comment c.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.15

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Availability of Anti-SLAPP Motion. See Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 C.A.4th 188, 197, 51 C.R.3d 484 ["It is settled" that malicious prosecution claim is subject to anti-SLAPP motion]; on malicious prosecution actions arising from prior action dismissed pursuant to anti-SLAPP motion (SLAPPback actions), see Supp., supra, §469.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.

(5) Continuation of Action Without Probable Cause. See Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 C.A.4th 11, 23, 28 C.R.3d 112, Supp., infra, §507 [rule of liability for continuation of action without probable cause, declared in Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 C.4th 958, 973, 12 C.R.3d 54, 87 P.3d 802, text, §510, applies retroactively].

41 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - f. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 2. Judgment or Ruling in Prior Proceeding.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 507

[§ 507] Judgment or Ruling in Prior Proceeding.

(1) Judgment. A judgment in the prior proceeding against the present plaintiff, although reversed on appeal, is, in the absence of other proof, conclusive of probable cause. (Gause v. McClelland (1951) 102 C.A.2d 762, 764, 228 P.2d 91; see Mattel v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1179, 1190, 121 C.R.2d 794 [finding in underlying federal copyright suit that defendant law firm filed meritless claim constituted evidence in malicious prosecution action that underlying suit was filed without probable cause]; White v. Lieberman (2002) 103 C.A.4th 210, 218, 126 C.R.2d 608 [judgment in underlying action that malicious prosecution plaintiff had slandered homeowners' title established probable cause despite irregularities affecting damages portion of judgment and despite judgment's reversal]; 58 A.L.R.2d 1422 [judgment in prior civil proceedings adverse to instant plaintiff in malicious prosecution as evidence of probable cause].)

The same is true where the judgment was subsequently set aside in the trial court. In Cowles v. Carter (1981) 115 C.A.3d 350, 171 C.R. 269, the trial in the prior civil action for damages by Carter against Cowles resulted in denial of a nonsuit and a jury verdict and judgment against Cowles; Cowles then successfully moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the judgment against him was vacated. In the present malicious prosecution suit by Cowles against Carter, plaintiff Cowles contended that the original verdict and judgment against him did not conclusively establish probable cause because it was set aside. Held, judgment on demurrer affirmed. If a trier of fact after a fair adversary hearing reached a determination on the merits against the defendant in the prior action, probable cause is conclusively established, even though the determination is reversed on appeal or set aside by the trial judge. (115 C.A.3d 358.) "We see no substantial reason for distinguishing between the action of the trial judge and the action of an appellate court in upsetting a jury verdict." (115 C.A.3d 359.)

(2) Interim Ruling. A different situation arises where the initial victory against the present plaintiff was merely an interim ruling, e.g., on a motion for summary judgment or nonsuit. Lucchesi v. Giannini & Uniack (1984) 158 C.A.3d 777, 786, 205 C.R. 62, held such a ruling not conclusive of probable cause:

(a) The judgment cases are distinguishable in that the initial victory of the plaintiff in the underlying action followed a full adversary hearing and a determination reached on the merits of that action. (158 C.A.3d 786.)

(b) In criminal proceedings, not even a holding order and denial of a motion under P.C. 995 amount to such a determination as to bar the acquitted defendant from pursuing a civil remedy for malicious prosecution. (158 C.A.3d 787; see supra, §478.) Even less significance attaches to the denial of a motion for summary judgment or for nonsuit in a civil proceeding. A motion for summary judgment may be denied for reasons not determinative of the merits (158 C.A.3d 787), and the denial of a motion for nonsuit is clearly not such a determination, for the motion will be denied on the minimal showing that there is some substantial evidence to prove the plaintiff's case (158 C.A.3d 787). (Cf. Roberts v. Sentry Life Ins. (1999) 76 C.A.4th 375, 383, 90 C.R.2d 408 [declining to follow Lucchesi].)

However, Lucchesi was disapproved in Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 C.4th 811, 123 C.R.2d 19, 50 P.3d 733. Here, the underlying action involved a suit for harassment and defamation brought by the teachers and administrators of a school against organizers of, and participants in, a protest at the school. Some of the protesters moved to strike the suit under C.C.P. 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute (motion to strike lawsuit against public participation; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962 et seq.) The trial judge denied the motion, partly on the ground that the teachers and administrators had shown a probability that they could prevail on the merits, i.e., they established a sufficient prima facie showing of facts necessary to sustain a favorable judgment. However, as to two of the protestors, the Court of Appeal vacated the order denying the motion to strike, and on remand the trial judge granted the motion as to them. The successful protesters then filed the present malicious prosecution action against the teachers and administrators and their attorneys. The trial judge sustained the demurrers of some of defendants and dismissed the action as to them. The Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, affirmed.

(a) A trial judge's denial of a motion to strike brought under C.C.P. 425.16, on the ground that plaintiff has established the requisite probability of success, establishes probable cause to bring the underlying action, and precludes the maintenance of a subsequent malicious prosecution action, unless the ruling in the underlying action is shown to have been obtained by fraud or perjury. The right to bring nonfrivolous civil actions, even if the chances of winning are extremely low, would be unduly burdened if the parties were exposed to tort liability for malicious prosecution for underlying actions that had been found potentially meritorious under C.C.P. 425.16. (28 C.4th 820.)

(b) In order to show a probability of prevailing in the underlying action, a plaintiff responding to an anti-SLAPP motion must state and substantiate a legally sufficient claim. In other words, the responding plaintiff must demonstrate that the complaint is both legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited. (28 C.4th 821.)

(c) That the trial court does not weigh the evidence or decide disputed questions of fact does not undermine the conclusion that an underlying claim found to have a probability of success under C.C.P. 425.16 was brought with probable cause. A party who has competent evidence to substantiate a legally cognizable claim for relief does not act tortiously by bringing the claim, even if also aware of evidence that will weigh against the claim. In other words, parties have the right to bring a claim that they think unlikely to succeed, so long as it is arguably meritorious. (28 C.4th 822.)

(d) The Court of Appeal in the underlying action held that the evidence of liability of two of the protestors was insufficient to proceed, but it did not hold or imply that a reasonable attorney could not have believed that the case had potential merit. Hence, the Court of Appeal's partial vacation of the trial court's order denying the anti-SLAPP motion did not vitiate the order's effect. (28 C.4th 822.)

(e) In the malicious prosecution action, plaintiff protestors contended that the determination of probable cause from a ruling in the underlying case is actually an aspect of collateral estoppel, so that no such determination may be made in circumstances where no collateral estoppel would arise, as where the prior decision was neither final nor on the merits. This contention is without merit. Probable cause, for purposes of a malicious prosecution action, is a legal issue; collateral estoppel, on the other hand, operates to preclude relitigation of an issue of fact. In other words, the determination of probable cause arises not because the same issue was litigated in the prior case, but because the result in the prior case establishes the existence of probable cause as a matter of law. (28 C.4th 825.)

(f) Plaintiffs contended that a rule equating denial of a C.C.P. 425.16 motion to strike with probable cause will deter SLAPP defendants from taking advantage of that statute for fear that denial will bar any malicious prosecution action, thus defeating the legislative intent that the anti-SLAPP procedures be employed to quickly end abusive litigation against public participation. However, given the low standard of probable cause under Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 871, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, infra, §510, defendants in the underlying suit are already aware that they have little chance of successfully maintaining a malicious prosecution action, regardless whether they bring an anti-SLAPP motion to strike or if they forgo the motion and defeat a SLAPP suit at trial. On the other hand, successfully employing the motion to strike remains a way of obtaining a speedy and low-cost termination of abusive litigation. These considerations should provide adequate incentive for an underlying action defendant who is confident that the litigation is truly meritless to employ the statutory procedures, even at some risk of losing the opportunity for a subsequent malicious prosecution suit. (28 C.4th 826.)

(h) The holding in Lucchesi, that denial of a summary judgment or nonsuit motion does not establish probable cause (because it is not a decision on the merits, but means only there is substantial evidence tending to prove all of the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case) has been undermined by Sheldon Appel. In other words, probable cause to bring an action does not depend on it being meritorious, as such, but only on it being arguably tenable. A claimant in possession of evidence that, if believed, would justify a favorable verdict has the right to bring the claim, even where it is very doubtful that the claim will ultimately prevail. (28 C.4th 822.) (See Jarrow Formulas v. LaMarche (2003) 31 C.4th 728, 742, 3 C.R.3d 636, 74 P.3d 737 [fact that plaintiff obtained summary judgment on cross-complaint in underlying action does not establish lack of probable cause as matter of law; litigants have right to present issues that are arguably correct, even if it is extremely unlikely that they will win]; Vanzant v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1283, 1288, 1291, 118 C.R.2d 48 [in underlying action by trademark owner, probable cause was established by interim orders granting plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, issuing a permanent injunction against defendant, and denying defendant's motion for summary judgment, even though orders were reversed; probable cause also existed for continuation of case after reversal]; Fleishman v. Superior Court (2002) 102 C.A.4th 350, 354, 125 C.R.2d 383 [issuance of preliminary injunction in underlying action relating to present plaintiff's use of trade secrets conclusively established probable cause, where trial judge in underlying action, although making procedural errors, credited verified complaint and declaration that substantiated legally cognizable claim]; Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co. (2004) 115 C.A.4th 306, 318, 8 C.R.3d 915 [ultimate grant of summary judgment in favor of present plaintiff in underlying action was sufficient to offset original denial of motion for summary judgment and to support inference of lack of probable cause].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Judgment. See Plumley v. Mockett (2008) 164 C.A.4th 1031, 1048, 1053, 79 C.R.3d 822 [fraud exception to interim adverse judgment rule may not be based on claim of fraud or perjury rejected by trier of fact; in malicious prosecution action arising out of defendants' action before federal Board of Patents after state court had ruled in plaintiff's favor in patent dispute, board's finding in favor of defendants on merits and its rejection of claims of fraudulent testimony established probable cause to bring patent action, even though board's decision was reversed by district court]. (2) Interim Ruling. See Hutton v. Hafif (2007) 150 C.A.4th 527, 550, 59 C.R.3d 109 [rule is "well-established" that denial of defense motion for summary judgment in underlying action establishes probable cause to file that action; citing Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 C.4th 811, 123 C.R.2d 19, 50 P.3d 733, text, p. 746.]. SLAPP suits:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq. (3) (New) Entry of Default Judgment. Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 C.A.4th 11, 28 C.R.3d 112, involved entry of a default judgment against the defendant in the underlying action. Held, entry of the default was not conclusive of probable cause.

(a) A plaintiff's victory at trial in the underlying action (unless obtained by means of fraud or perjury) is conclusive proof that there was probable cause for the suit, and precludes an action by the defendant for malicious prosecution. This is so even if the victory is reversed by a trial court (such as by entry of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict) or an appellate court. The rationale is that approval by the trier of fact, after a full adversary hearing, sufficiently demonstrates that the underlying action was legally tenable. This conclusive presumption is not limited to a judgment in the plaintiff's favor following a trial in that action. Under Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 C.4th 811, 123 C.R.2d 19, 50 P.3d 733, text, p. 746, an interim determination in the underlying action also has the effect of establishing probable cause, provided that the interim ruling demonstrates that a suit is not totally and completely without merit. (129 C.A.4th 21.)

(b) This principle is not applicable here, however. In deciding whether to grant a default judgment to the plaintiff in the underlying action, the trial court did not have the benefit of a presentation by both sides on the merits. It lacked the full adversary hearing present in the cases finding a ruling to be conclusive of probable cause. It is the very fact that the trial court reviews the presentations of both sides in a particular interim ruling that justifies the recognition of a conclusive effect on the issue of probable cause. (129 C.A.4th 22.)

42 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

f. Lack of Probable Cause.

3. Some, But Not All, Claims or Amounts Supported by Probable Cause.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 508

[§ 508] Some, But Not All, Claims or Amounts Supported by Probable Cause.

(1) One or More of Claims Not Supported by Probable Cause. Where several claims are advanced in the underlying action, each must be based on probable cause. "We see no reason for permitting plaintiffs and cross-complainants to pursue shotgun tactics by proceeding on counts and theories which they know or should know to be groundless." (Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 57, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §491.)

This rule was reaffirmed in Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 C.4th 666, 34 C.R.2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083. Decedent's wife contested his will, which left the bulk of the estate to his own attorney. The will contest asserted six separate grounds to set aside the will, but the action terminated in favor of decedent's attorney, and the will was admitted to probate. Decedent's attorney then brought a malicious prosecution action against the wife and her attorneys, alleging that defendants had acted without probable cause in asserting five of the six grounds in the will contest. Defendants demurred generally to the complaint, asserting that probable cause existed for the sixth ground for contesting the will, thus barring the malicious prosecution action. The trial judge sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. Acting under compulsion of the Bertero rule, which it strongly criticized, the Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

(a) Applicability of Bertero rule. Bertero approved an instruction allowing the jury to find for the plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action even if only one of the three theories of liability pleaded in the underlying action lacked probable cause. The court reasoned that while a person may safely sue on alternative theories when he or she has a reasonable belief in the validity of each of those theories, that person should not be permitted to proceed on any theory that he or she knows or should know to be groundless. (8 C.4th 678.) The Court of Appeal was correct in holding that Bertero is controlling here. (8 C.4th 679.)

(b) Bertero should not be overruled. Unable to distinguish Bertero, defendants present several reasons why it should be overruled. None is sufficient.

(1) Defendant's main objection to the Bertero rule is that it is incompatible with the fundamental interest that the tort of malicious prosecution is designed to protect, i.e., the interest in freedom from unjustifiable and unreasonable litigation. Defendants argue that when there is probable cause for at least one of the theories of liability asserted in the prior action, the defendant therein has to defend against that theory, and thus the "litigation" is not unjustifiable and unreasonable. This argument is unsound. "By defining the 'litigation' in issue as the prior action per se rather than each theory of liability litigated, defendants assume the point to be proved. It is true that such a defendant must in any event defend against the one valid theory of liability; but the defendant's obligation also to defend against the invalid theories of liability may well be so burdensome--as the complaint alleges in the case at bar--that it amounts to an impairment of the defendant's interest in freedom from unjustifiable and unreasonable litigation. Whether this is so is a question to be answered, again, not by the primary right theory but by the substantive law of malicious prosecution." (8 C.4th 687.)

(2) Defendants argue that the Bertero rule is no longer necessary because of the subsequent enactment of C.C.P. 128.5 (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §240 et seq.) empowering the court to impose sanctions for frivolous conduct. This argument fails because the legislative history and subsequent amendments of the statute show that (a) the reason for enacting the statute was to increase the power of trial courts to manage their calendar and expeditiously process civil actions by authorizing monetary sanctions, i.e., attorneys' fees, not previously authorized; and (b) the statute was not intended as a substitute for substantive causes of action arising out of the underlying facts, such as an action for malicious prosecution. In addition, the remedies are not coextensive. C.C.P. 128.5 allows compensation only for out-of-pocket litigation costs, while in a malicious prosecution action, recovery can include consequential damages. (8 C.4th 688.)

(3) Defendants argue that under the Bertero rule the apportionment of damages between the theories of liability that are and are not supported by probable cause is difficult and highly speculative. However, defendants made no showing that properly instructed juries cannot perform this task fairly and consistently. Moreover, any difficulty in this regard is chargeable to the defendant. In other words, the defendant, by uniting groundless accusations with those for which probable cause might exist, cannot escape liability because of the plaintiff's inability to divide his damages between the two. (8 C.4th 690.)

(4) The Bertero rule is not, as argued by defendants, inconsistent with the modern practice of pleading inconsistent counts when the pleader is in doubt as to which theory most accurately reflects the events and can be established by the evidence. "The concern is unfounded. Bertero was not meant to discourage that practice, and we are not aware that it has had any such effect during the past 20 years. Certainly defendants make no such showing. As noted above, the Bertero rule requires only that the plaintiff refrain from asserting or pursuing such theories if they lack probable cause and are motivated by malice. The plaintiff remains free to allege any and all 'inconsistent counts' that a reasonable attorney would find legally tenable on the basis of the facts known to the plaintiff at the time." (8 C.4th 691.)

(c) Policy considerations favor retention of Bertero rule.

(1) A person maliciously sued has two remedies: the sanctions remedy under C.C. 128.5 and the tort remedy of malicious prosecution. The policies furthered by the sanctions remedy are (a) encouraging free access to the courts for the settlement of disputes, and (b) avoiding the burdening of the judicial system by additional litigation. The tort remedy also furthers two policies: (a) affording a remedy to the individual who is harmed by being forced to defend against a fabricated claim, and (b) preventing the judicial process from being adversely affected by unjust litigation. Both of these remedies seek to avoid burdening the judicial system by additional litigation, and the issue is whether one burden outweighs the other. (8 C.4th 693.) It is therefore necessary to compare the first pair of policies stated above to determine which policy, in the present context, is entitled to greater weight: the policy of encouraging free access to the courts, served by the sanctions remedy, or the policy of redressing the harm suffered by individuals compelled to defend against unjustifiable litigation, served by the tort remedy. (8 C.4th 694.)

(2) The policy of encouraging untrammelled access to the courts promotes social peace, but it also burdens already overcrowded dockets; and all litigation exacts both public and private costs. Society is willing to incur those burdens and costs when the litigation is well founded or, if unsuccessful, at least initiated with probable cause and without malice. However, the policy of encouraging judicial access becomes counterproductive when it operates to promote litigation that is groundless and motivated by malice; such litigation has no place in our judicial system. "After careful consideration, we see no reason to reach a different result when the litigation in question is the assertion of baseless and malicious grounds of liability in a single lawsuit: in both instances the balance tips in favor of the policy of making whole the individuals harmed by such abuse of our courts." (8 C.4th 694.)

(3) A persuasive analogy can be drawn from the cases involving the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) (infra, §567 et seq.), which serves the policy of judicial access by protecting any publication made in the course of a judicial proceeding. Although the policy of encouraging judicial access served by this privilege is strong, the cases nevertheless uniformly hold that it does not apply to the tort of malicious prosecution because when litigation is groundless and motivated by malice, the balance tips in favor of the policy of redressing the individual harm inflicted by that litigation. And because the policy of judicial access in the present case is essentially identical to the policy underlying the litigation privilege, the cases interpreting that privilege are persuasive here. (8 C.4th 695.) (See Mabie v. Hyatt (1998) 61 C.A.4th 581, 589, 71 C.R.2d 657 [malicious prosecution action could be based on the one count not supported by probable cause, even though additional count was supported by probable cause]; Videotape Plus v. Lyons (2001) 89 C.A.4th 156, 161, 107 C.R.2d 1 [reversal of summary judgment on conversion count in underlying action only established triable issue of fact on that cause of action; it did not establish probable cause on negligence or fraud counts as required by Crowley]; Hindin v. Rust (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1247, 1259, 13 C.R.3d 668 [malicious prosecution defendant cannot escape liability by showing "partial probable cause" for underlying action; following Crowley]; 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1073 [Crowley].)

(2) Most of Amount Sought Is Not Supported by Probable Cause. Just as a malicious prosecution suit may be maintained where only one of several claims in the underlying action lacked probable cause, so too may a malicious prosecution action be maintained where most but not all of the amount sought in the underlying action was claimed without probable cause. The mere fact that some small amount of money may have been owed by the defendant in the underlying action does not lessen the adverse effect of that action on defendant or on the judicial process. (Citi-Wide Preferred Couriers v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 906, 913, 8 C.R.3d 199.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) One or More of Claims Not Supported by Probable Cause. Sanctions for frivolous conduct:

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §227 et seq.

43 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
 - 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
 - f. Lack of Probable Cause.
 - 4. Advice of Attorney.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 509

[§ 509] Advice of Attorney.

(1) Good Faith and Full Disclosure of Facts. As in malicious prosecution of a criminal case (see supra, §482), proof of reliance on the advice of counsel in good faith after full disclosure of the facts establishes probable cause. (Citizens State Bank v. Hoffman (1941) 44 C.A.2d 854, 857, 113 P.2d 221; Murdock v. Gerth (1944) 65 C.A.2d 170, 178, 150 P.2d 489; Brinkley v. Appleby (1969) 276 C.A.2d 244, 247, 80 C.R. 734, quoting the text; Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 C.A.3d 280, 288, 198 C.R. 517; DeRosa v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1390, 1397, 262 C.R. 370; Sosinsky v. Grant (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1548, 1558, 8 C.R.2d 552; Hufstedler, Kaus & Ettinger v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 55, 68, 49 C.R.2d 551; see Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1367, 1383, 1 C.R.3d 116 [burden of showing good faith reliance on attorney's advice rests on defendant]; Rest.2d, Torts §675(b); 26 Proof of Facts 2d 275 [reliance on advice of counsel in bringing suit].)

(2) Bad Faith or Withholding of Facts. This defense is unavailable where there is bad faith or withholding of facts from counsel. (Baker v. Gawthorne (1947) 82 C.A.2d 496, 500, 186 P.2d 981; Albertson v. Raboff (1960) 185 C.A.2d 372, 386, 8 C.R. 398, Swat-Fame v. Goldstein (2002) 101 C.A.4th 613, 629, 124 C.R.2d 556; Palmer v. Zaklama, supra; see Hudson v. Zumwalt (1944) 64 C.A.2d 866, 875, 149 P.2d 457 [defense rejected where defendant was himself a practicing attorney, and did not disclose all facts to his lawyer].)

In Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §491: (a) Bad faith was shown by ample evidence, including a letter from the attorney to his client during the pendency of the appeal in the prior action, admitting that he argued a weak point in his brief "not because of any high hopes of now winning it, but because I wanted to show the Appellate Court what a bastard Bertero was." (b) Insufficient disclosure was shown by the testimony of the client and attorney that all books and records of the client had been made available to the attorney. This "failed to meet the burden that counsel must be provided with specific facts and not merely unleashed on a hunting expedition." (13 C.3d 55.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.25(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Bad Faith or Withholding of Facts. See Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 C.A.4th 188, 202, 51 C.R.3d 484 [defendant's claimed reliance on advice of two attorneys in instituting prior action did not, as matter of law, defeat plaintiff's prima facie showing of lack of probable cause; defendant had personal relationship with one attorney that demonstrated bias and had business relationship with other attorney, and trier of fact could reasonably conclude that defendant did not seek opinion of either in good faith].

44 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- A. Malicious Prosecution.
- 3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.
- f. Lack of Probable Cause.
- 5. Action Against Attorney.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 510

[§ 510] Action Against Attorney.

(1) In General. In an action against an attorney alleging malicious prosecution of a prior civil proceeding, the standard for determining probable cause is objective, i.e., whether a reasonable attorney would have thought the claim legally tenable. This was the holding in Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Olier (1989) 47 C.3d 863, 254 C.R. 336, 765 P.2d 498, analyzing and disapproving a number of prior Court of Appeal decisions. The trial court submitted the probable cause issue to the jury with instructions that the evidence must establish that the members of defendant law firm, after a reasonable investigation and industrious search of legal authority, had an honest belief that the claims of their clients in the underlying action were tenable, and that the firm prosecuted claims that a reasonable lawyer would regard as tenable, or did not unreasonably neglect to investigate the facts and law in making the determination to proceed with the prior action. As so instructed, the jury found in favor of plaintiffs, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) Role of court and jury.

(1) The "malice" element of malicious prosecution (see infra, §511, 512) relates to the subjective intent or purpose with which the defendant acted in initiating the prior action, and this motivation is a question of fact for the jury. In contrast, the existence or absence of "probable cause" has traditionally been viewed as a question of law for the court. (47 C.3d 874, 875; see supra, §506.) An important policy consideration underlies the common law rule. "The question whether, on a given set of facts, there was probable cause to institute an action requires a sensitive evaluation of legal principles and precedents, a task generally beyond the ken of lay jurors, and courts have recognized that there is a significant danger that jurors may not sufficiently appreciate the distinction between a merely unsuccessful and a legally untenable claim. To avoid improperly deterring individuals from resorting to the courts for the resolution of disputes, the common law affords litigants the assurance that tort liability will not be imposed for filing a lawsuit unless a court subsequently determines that the institution of the action was without probable cause." (47 C.3d 875.)

(2) Here, though there were no disputed questions of fact, the judge submitted the issue to the jury under an elaborate instruction, including a determination whether the firm had "prosecuted claims which a reasonable lawyer would regard as tenable"; this instruction "clearly operated to delegate the probable cause determination to the jury and deprived defendant of the protection afforded by the independent resolution of this element by the court." (47 C.3d 876.) This error was committed in reliance on a number of Court of Appeal decisions which are now to be reassessed. (47 C.3d 877.)

(b) Objective or subjective test.

(1) A broad dictum in Tool Research & Engineering Corp. v. Henigson (1975) 46 C.A.3d 675, 120 C.R. 291, stated a twofold test in these cases: "The attorney must entertain a subjective belief in that the claim merits litigation and that belief must satisfy an objective standard." (47 C.3d 877, 878.) This subjective belief language, repeated and applied uncritically in numerous Court of Appeal decisions, alters the probable cause element in a fundamental respect. "[E]ven if a trial court finds, on the basis of the facts known to the defendant attorney, the prior lawsuit was objectively reasonable--and thus that the malicious prosecution plaintiff was not subjected to an unjustified lawsuit--the court cannot properly terminate the action in favor of the defendant so long as the plaintiff presented any evidence raising a question as to whether the defendant attorney subjectively believed in the tenability of the claim. And because the issue of the attorney's subjective belief or nonbelief in legal tenability would rarely be susceptible of clear proof and, when controverted, would always pose a factual question, the dictum would in many cases effectively leave the ultimate resolution of the probable cause element to the jury, rather than to the court." (47 C.3d 878.)

(2) Although Supreme Court decisions are not as clear as they might be on this issue (see Franzen v. Shenk (1923) 192 C. 572, 221 P. 932, Bertero v. National General Corp. (1974) 13 C.3d 43, 118 C.R. 184, 529 P.2d 608, supra, §491, and Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §511), when properly understood they do not support the Tool Research dictum. Although they indicate that in some cases the defendant's subjective belief may be relevant, "in all cases the 'belief' in question related to the defendant's belief in, or knowledge of, a given state of facts, and not to the defendant's belief in, or evaluation of, the legal merits of the claim." (47 C.3d 879.)

(3) "Accordingly, when, as in this case, the facts known by the attorney are not in dispute, the probable cause issue is properly determined by the trial court under an objective standard; it does not include a determination whether the attorney subjectively believed that the prior claim was legally tenable." (47 C.3d 881.)

(4) "Lest there be any confusion, however, we strongly emphasize that our conclusion in this regard does not by any means suggest that an attorney who institutes an action which he does not believe is legally tenable is free from the risk of liability for malicious prosecution. If the trial court concludes that the prior action was not objectively tenable, evidence that the defendant's attorney did not subjectively believe that the action was tenable would clearly be relevant to the question of malice." Thus, "the malicious prosecution tort will continue to deter attorneys from filing actions which they do not believe are legally tenable." (47 C.3d 881.)

(c) Irrelevance of attorney research. The additional suggestion in Tool Research, that a plaintiff might prove lack of probable cause by showing that the attorney failed to conduct "a reasonable investigation and industrious search of legal authority," was relied on in subsequent Court of Appeal cases, but this dictum is also unsound in shifting the focus of the probable cause inquiry from the objective tenability of the prior claim to the adequacy of the defendant's performance as an attorney. (47 C.3d 883.) "Furthermore, this component ... is also at odds with a consistent line of California decisions which have made clear that an attorney's duty of care runs primarily to his own client rather than to the client's adversary. ... Allowing inadequate research to serve as an independent basis for proving the absence of probable cause on the part of an attorney would tend to create a conflict of interest between the attorney and client, tempting a cautious attorney to create a record of diligence by performing extensive legal research, not for the benefit of his client, but simply to protect himself from his client's adversaries in the event the initial suit fails." (47 C.3d 883.)

(d) Expert testimony inadmissible. It was error to permit an attorney to be called as an expert witness to give his opinion whether a reasonable attorney would conclude that the claims advanced in the prior action were tenable. This was a matter within the province of the court to decide. (47 C.3d 884.)

(e) Proper standard of probable cause. In re Marriage of Flaherty (1982) 31 C.3d 637, 183 C.R. 508, 646 P.2d

179, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §837, concluded that an appeal could be found frivolous for purposes of imposing sanctions only if "any reasonable attorney would agree that the appeal is totally and completely without merit." (47 C.3d 885.) Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 C.A.3d 626, 224 C.R. 865, suggested a more stringent standard ("the prudent attorney test"), in malicious prosecution actions against attorneys, but there is no reason to afford litigants and their attorneys less protection from subsequent tort liability than they receive from court-imposed sanctions within the initial action. (47 C.3d 885.) Thus, the Flaherty standard modified to fit the context, i.e., "whether any reasonable attorney would have thought the claim tenable"--may make it clearer that, in evaluating the issue of probable cause, "a court must properly take into account the evolutionary potential of legal principles." (47 C.3d 886.) (See Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 547, 564, 264 C.R. 883 [discussing probable cause in the light of Sheldon Appel]; Hufstедler, Kaus & Ettinger v. Superior Court (1996) 42 C.A.4th 55, 63, 49 C.R.2d 551 [under objective test of Sheldon Appel, defendant attorney had probable cause to prosecute libel action, despite subjective knowledge suggesting contrary]; Bixler v. Goulding (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1179, 1189, 53 C.R.2d 246 [listing Court of Appeal decisions applying Sheldon Appel probable cause standard]; Puryear v. Golden Bear Ins. Co. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1188, 1194, 78 C.R.2d 507 [applying standard]; Swat-Fame v. Goldstein (2002) 101 C.A.4th 613, 624, 124 C.R.2d 556 [malicious prosecution action against lawyer for instituting fraud action could not be maintained where complaint simply reflected what his client relayed to him; that lawyer did not know that allegations would not support fraud action was established by order overruling demurrer; letter to lawyer stating that "[you] are substantially misinformed" did not put him on notice]; Morrison v. Rudolph (2002) 103 C.A.4th 506, 512, 126 C.R.2d 747 [malicious prosecution action could not be maintained against lawyer who, based on his client's account of events, instituted underlying action tenable as routine claim of misrepresentation in real estate case]; 30 Proof of Facts 2d 197 [attorney's malicious prosecution of client's action].)

In Copenbarger v. International Ins. Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 961, 54 C.R.2d 1, plaintiff attorneys represented a client in a divorce proceeding. Defendants, other attorneys, later represented her in a malpractice action against plaintiffs. Defendants then filed, and later dismissed, an indemnity claim against plaintiffs, alleging that they contributed to the client's losses. Based on the indemnity action, plaintiffs filed the present malicious prosecution action. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed. Prior to the dismissal of the indemnity action, the law was confused regarding whether an attorney could seek indemnity against successor attorneys. Judging the matter objectively, it could not be said that a reasonable attorney would not have thought the indemnity claim was tenable. Defendants thus had probable cause. (46 C.A.4th 964.)

(2) Continuation of Action Without Probable Cause. In Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 C.4th 958, 12 C.R.3d 54, 87 P.3d 802, plaintiff attorneys had represented B in an action related to the foreclosure of her house. That action was settled. Nearly 2 years later, B, represented by S, sued plaintiffs for fraud, alleging that plaintiffs, to induce B to settle the foreclosure action, made but did not keep the following promises: (a) they would continue to represent her to judgment against the nonsettling defendants; (b) they would represent B in her malpractice lawsuit against her former attorneys; and (c) they would have her house returned to her. Shortly after the fraud complaint was served, plaintiffs sent S the reporter's transcripts of three hearings in the foreclosure action that allegedly proved that the foregoing promises were never made. Based on these transcripts, plaintiffs filed a summary judgment motion, but the motion was denied in view of B's declaration that the promises had indeed been made. The fraud action then proceeded to trial, and the trial judge granted plaintiffs' motion for nonsuit, finding that no reasonable jury could have ruled in B's favor. Alleging that the fraud action had been filed to extort an unwarranted settlement, plaintiffs then filed the present malicious prosecution action against S. S responded with an anti-SLAPP motion under C.C.P. 425.16, arguing that, because his decision to file the fraud action was based on B's statements regarding the alleged promises, plaintiffs could not show a reasonable probability of success in the malicious prosecution action. The trial court dismissed the action. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

(a) One of the elements of malicious prosecution is commencing, bringing, or initiating an action without probable cause. S contends that continuing to prosecute a lawsuit discovered to lack probable cause does not constitute the tort of malicious prosecution. In making this argument S relies heavily on the idea that the tort of malicious prosecution is a disfavored cause of action. It is true that the tort is disfavored, both because of its potential to impose an undue chilling effect on the ordinary citizen's willingness to report criminal conduct or to bring a civil dispute to court and because, as a means of deterring excessive and frivolous lawsuits, it has the disadvantage of constituting a new round of litigation itself. (32 C.4th 965, citing Sheldon Appel, supra, and Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 C.4th 811, 123 C.R.2d 19, 50 P.3d 733, supra, §507.) On the other hand, the characterization of malicious prosecution as a disfavored cause of action should not be employed to defeat a legitimate cause of action, or to invent new limitations on the substantive right, without support in authority or principle. Here, confining the tort to the initiation of an action without probable cause would not be supported by authority or principle. (32 C.4th 966.)

(b) Although this is a question of first impression for this court, over 25 years ago, the Second Restatement of Torts stated that one who continues a civil proceeding that was properly begun, or one who takes an active part in continuing it, for an improper purpose after learning that there is no probable cause for the proceeding becomes liable as if he or she had initiated the proceeding. The Restatement's position has been adopted in numerous states and research has not revealed a single state that has declined to adopt the Restatement's view in this regard. (32 C.4th 966.)

(c) Defendant relies on Vanzant v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 1283, 118 C.R.2d 48, supra, §507, and Swat-Fame, supra. Both decisions relied on Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1986) 41 C.3d 782, 226 C.R. 90, 718 P.2d 77, supra, §493, and Coleman is distinguishable. In Coleman, the defendant in a malicious prosecution action had merely continued its defense of the underlying wrongful death action by filing an appeal. Here, defendant in the malicious prosecution action continued the prosecution of the underlying fraud action after learning that it was baseless. (32 C.4th 968.)

(d) The limitation that defendant urges is also without support in principle. Malicious prosecution is actionable because it harms the individual against whom the claim is made, and because it threatens the efficient administration of justice. Continuing an action one discovers to be baseless harms the defendant and burdens the court system just as much as initiating an action known to be baseless from the outset. (32 C.4th 969, citing Bertero, supra.) Furthermore, holding an attorney liable for damages that result from prosecuting a civil claim after he or she learns that the claim has no merit encourages voluntary dismissals of meritless claims at the earliest stage possible, assists the efficient administration of justice, and reduces harm to individuals targeted by meritless claims. Moreover, by advising a client to dismiss a meritless case, the attorney will help the client avoid the cost of fruitless litigation and limit the client's exposure to liability for malicious prosecution. (32 C.4th 969.)

(e) Defendant contended that holding that malicious prosecution includes continuing to prosecute a lawsuit discovered to lack probable cause would, contrary to public policy, divert an attorney's attention away from the zealous representation of his or her client by causing the attorney (1) to second-guess the merits of the litigation, and (2) to fear retaliation for malicious prosecution if the attorney argued for an extension of the law. This contention is without merit. Only those actions that any reasonable attorney would agree are totally and completely without merit may form the basis for a malicious prosecution action, and the same standard will apply to the continuation of the action. Applying the standard may be difficult, but applying it to the decision to continue to prosecute the action should be no more or less difficult than applying it to the decision to initiate the action. (32 C.4th 970.)

(f) "Malicious prosecution ... includes continuing to prosecute a lawsuit discovered to lack probable cause." (32 C.4th 973, disapproving Swat-Fame, Vanzant, and Morrison v. Rudolph, supra, to the extent inconsistent with the views expressed in the opinion.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.10, 42

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Marriage of Flaherty case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §989.(2) Continuation of Action Without Probable Cause. See Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 C.A.4th 11, 23, 28 C.R.3d 112, Supp., supra, §507 [holding of Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 C.4th 958, 973, 12 C.R.3d 54, 87 P.3d 802, text, p. 757, that attorney who continues to prosecute action discovered to be meritless may be liable for malicious prosecution, applies retroactively]; Sycamore Ridge Apartments LLC v. Naumann (2007) 157 C.A.4th 1385, 1402, 69 C.R.3d 561 [on defendant attorneys' SLAPP motion (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.), malicious prosecution plaintiff showed probability of prevailing on issue that defendants, including those who associated into underlying case shortly before dismissal, lacked probable cause to continue action; defendants had alleged 18 causes of action, most of which did not relate to client's concerns, and pursued action for months after client denied most types of damages].

45 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

g. Malice.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 511

[§ 511] In General.

(1) Requirement of Ill Will or Improper Motive. Recovery for malicious prosecution of a civil action, like that of a criminal proceeding (see supra, §485), requires that the underlying action have been instituted with malice. It is not improper to bring a civil suit for personal ends, and consequently it is necessary to plead and prove either actual ill will or some ulterior purpose distinct from that of enforcement of the alleged cause of action. (Rest.2d, Torts §676; see Downey Venture v. LMI Ins. Co. (1998) 66 C.A.4th 478, 494, 78 C.R.2d 142, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §272 [malice imports wilfulness; citing the text].)

In Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 295 P.2d 405, the court observed that the malice required "is not limited to actual hostility or ill will toward plaintiff but exists when the proceedings are instituted primarily for an improper purpose." (46 C.2d 383; see Jacques Interiors v. Petrak (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1363, 1371, 234 C.R. 44 [quoting Albertson].) Suits brought with improper purposes include the following: "[T]hose in which (1) the person initiating them does not believe that his claim may be held valid; (2) the proceedings are begun primarily because of hostility or ill will; (3) the proceedings are initiated solely for the purpose of depriving the person against whom they are initiated of a beneficial use of his property; (4) the proceedings are initiated for the purpose of forcing a settlement which has no relation to the merits of the claim." (46 C.2d 383; see Rest.2d, Torts §676, Comment c.)

Thus, in Hudson v. Zumwalt (1944) 64 C.A.2d 866, 149 P.2d 457, defendant, successor to a lessor, seeking to terminate plaintiff lessee's tenancy, told plaintiff that he did not care what the agreement with the former lessor was or what the law provided, and that he would keep him in court until he would be "glad to sell." "It is sufficient if it appears that the former suit was commenced in bad faith to vex, annoy or wrong the adverse party." (64 C.A.2d 872.)

In Baker v. Gawthorne (1947) 82 C.A.2d 496, 186 P.2d 981, an apartment house owner sued a tenant for unlawful detainer, alleging use of the apartment for immoral purposes. He was nonsuited. In this malicious prosecution action by the plaintiff tenant, it appeared that the defendant owner's agents had investigated the tenant's actions, but that the owner had made no attempt to ascertain the facts. Held, this indifference justified the inference of malice. (82 C.A.2d 500.) (See Peebler v. Danziger (1951) 104 C.A.2d 614, 619, 232 P.2d 301 [malice shown by circumstantial evidence]; on circumstantial evidence of malice, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §123.)

In Albertson v. Raboff, supra, where defendant brought a prior suit for money against plaintiff and wrongfully filed a lis pendens on her property, the court upheld the sufficiency of the pleading in A's present action on the theory that "a person who attempts to establish a claim to property knowing of its falsity can only be motivated by an improper purpose." But the court found it unnecessary to decide whether the purpose of making a lis pendens serve as the equivalent of an attachment to secure his money claim was improper. (46 C.2d 383.)

Because parties rarely admit an improper motive, malice is usually proven by circumstantial evidence and inferences drawn from the evidence. (HMS Capital v. Lawyers Title Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 204, 218, 12 C.R.3d 786.)

(2) Inference of Malice From Lack of Probable Cause. Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 C.A.3d 166, 156 C.R. 745, noted that malice is often inferred from the factual predicate underlying a finding of lack of probable cause (see supra, §506 et seq.). "However, this result is not automatic. To complete proof of malicious prosecution, the presence of malice must be found as a matter of fact. ... Thus, in a given case, unreasonable behavior which could lead to a determination that there was a lack of probable cause to file, might not provide a sufficient basis to infer malice." (95 C.A.3d 192.) (See Jarrow Formulas v. LaMarche (2003) 31 C.4th 728, 743, 3 C.R.3d 636, 74 P.3d 737 [even though, after discovery, no competent evidence was adduced to support cross-complaint in underlying action, summary judgment did not establish malice; lack of probable cause does not prove that action was brought with malicious state of mind]; Grindle v. Lorbeer (1987) 196 C.A.3d 1461, 1466, 242 C.R. 562 [to infer malice from evidence supporting lack of probable cause, parties' pre-filing behavior must have been clearly unreasonable; citing Weaver].)

(3) Effect of Prior Sanctions Finding. In Wright v. Ripley (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1189, 77 C.R.2d 334, plaintiff lawyer prevailed in a suit against him for malpractice, but his request for sanctions was summarily denied on the ground that "bad faith" had not been established. He then instituted the present malicious prosecution action, in which defendant successfully moved for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the refusal to award sanctions in the underlying action for absence of bad faith collaterally estopped plaintiff from proving the malice element of the current action. Held, reversed; the issues resolved on a routine sanction motion are not entitled to preclusive effect in a later malicious prosecution action. The majority of sanction motions can be resolved summarily, and, to promote judicial economy, the party seeking sanctions should be encouraged to pursue that option rather than pushed into seeking a full evidentiary hearing. Because a routine sanction proceeding is of a summary nature, it is not particularly burdensome, and the party denied sanctions, where permitted to sue for malicious prosecution, will still be entitled to only one opportunity to fully litigate the claim. (65 C.A.4th 1193.) Also, allowing the malicious prosecution action will not lead to inconsistent results, because sanction liability is in addition to other liability imposed by law and is influenced by factors extrinsic to a malicious prosecution case. (65 C.A.4th 1195.)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.26 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Inference of Malice From Lack of Probable Cause. See Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 C.A.4th 188, 204, 51 C.R.3d 484 [trier of fact could reasonably infer that former client's action against attorney for breach of contract and malpractice was filed with malice where evidence suggested that client knew that claims lacked factual and legal support and that he filed action in retaliation for attorney's attempt to recover unpaid fees]; Sycamore Ridge Apartments LLC v. Naumann (2007) 157 C.A.4th 1385, 1407, 69 C.R.3d 561 [on defendant attorneys' SLAPP motion (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.), malicious prosecution plaintiff showed probability of prevailing on issue that defendants, including those who associated into underlying case shortly before dismissal, harbored malice in pursuing underlying action; defendants had alleged 18 causes of action, most of which did not relate to client's concerns, and pursued action for months after client denied most types of damages].

46 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

3. Malicious Institution of Civil Proceeding.

g. Malice.

2. Family Law Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 512

[§ 512] Family Law Proceedings.

A stricter showing of malice has been required in cases arising from family law proceedings. In Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 C.A.3d 967, 227 C.R. 718, the court held that the complaint failed to show favorable termination (see supra, §490), and also that the pleading of malice was insufficient.

(a) The theory that malicious prosecution is a disfavored action (see supra, §471) is particularly appropriate in proceedings following a decree of marital dissolution. "[A] strong policy favors access to the court in family law matters; the courts must remain open to claims seeking to modify or enforce spousal support or similar awards. On the other hand, the courts must scrutinize carefully a malicious prosecution action based on such a claim. If they did not, some parties with legitimate claims would be discouraged from coming into court." (182 C.A.3d 979.)

(b) "To hear malicious prosecution claims in any but the most egregious cases would unduly encourage litigation of this sort. Unlimited access to a forum in which to litigate malicious prosecution claims based on marital dissolutions would clog the courts, and exacerbate and prolong what is ordinarily an acutely unhappy state of affairs. In the family law and marital dissolution context, malice requires a more convincing and more precise showing than a mere inference. In short, in our view, the element of malice should be assessed according to a high, strict standard." (182 C.A.3d 979.) Here, plaintiff merely relied on the rule that malice may be inferred, in proper circumstances, from the facts underlying a finding of lack of probable cause (see supra, §511). (182 C.A.3d 979.)

(c) "We perceive a vital distinction between the ill will, agitation, and indignation that may occur during or after dissolution, and the malice essential to a malicious prosecution action. In the marital dissolution context, the showing of malice in a malicious prosecution action must be convincing as to its egregiousness, and the scrutiny devoted to it by the courts minute." (182 C.A.3d 980.)

A later decision in another Court of Appeal has held, in fact, that malicious prosecution actions cannot be based on family law proceedings. (See Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 C.A.4th 27, 37, 23 C.R. 215, supra, §496.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

47 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

4. Malicious Institution of Administrative Proceeding.

a. General Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 513

[§ 513] General Rule.

California cases formerly held that an action lies only for malicious prosecution of a criminal or civil judicial proceeding before a judicial officer or tribunal. Accordingly, recovery was consistently denied where the cause of action was for malicious institution of an administrative proceeding. (See Cosulich v. Stempel (1927) 81 C.A. 278, 280, 253 P. 344 [false charges of dishonesty lodged with Real Estate Commissioner against applicant for broker's license]; Lorber v. Storrow (1937) 22 C.A.2d 25, 27, 70 P.2d 513 [proceeding before Real Estate Commissioner]; Hayashida v. Kakimoto (1933) 132 C.A. 743, 746, 23 P.2d 311 [false statements to immigration authorities, resulting in plaintiff's detention for investigation]; Vargas v. Giacosa (1953) 121 C.A.2d 521, 527, 263 P.2d 840 [petitions to evict tenant filed with Housing Expediter]; 15 Cal. L. Rev. 518.)

The Torts Restatement took the contrary position that an action will lie for initiation of proceedings against another before an administrative board that has the power to take action adversely affecting legally protected interests of the other. (See Rest.2d, Torts §680.) The Restatement rule was adopted as the California rule in Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 C.2d 577, 311 P.2d 494, disapproving conflicting statements in the four cases cited above. Plaintiff alleged that, as a result of defendant individual's false charges of immorality and unprofessional conduct made before defendant officials of a state college and the state Department of Education, he was dismissed from his professorship, and later cleared by the state Personnel Board and restored to his position. Held, a cause of action was stated against V, a private individual (the officials being immune, supra, §176). Quoting from a leading federal decision, the court said: "The administrative process is also a legal process, and its abuse in the same way with the same injury should receive the same penalty. ... When private as well as public rights more and more are coming to be determined by administrative proceedings, it would be anomalous to have one rule for them and another for the courts in respect to redress for abuse of their powers and processes." (48 C.2d 581.)

The opinion states a rule of sweeping scope which seemingly is not open to exceptions or qualifications, based on the type of administrative agency: "[N]o distinction should be made between proceedings commenced before agencies having adjudicatory powers and those commenced before agencies whose findings of fact are subject to trial de novo in a judicial proceeding. Such a distinction is unsound in principle and if adopted would result in unnecessary complexity and confusion." (48 C.2d 581.) (See 75 Harv. L. Rev. 629; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 105; 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 151 [privilege defense where pleadings in administrative proceeding are defamatory]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §436; 1 Harper, James

& Gray 3d §4.10; 52 A.L.R.2d 1217 [malicious prosecution action predicated on disciplinary proceeding against member of medical or allied profession]; 66 A.L.R.2d 749 [civil liability of school officials for malicious prosecution]; 39 A.L.R.3d 473 [malicious prosecution action predicated on disciplinary proceeding against member of medical or allied profession]; 52 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Malicious Prosecution §15.)

The elements to be pleaded and proved are the same as in other malicious prosecution actions. (Hardy v. Vial, supra, 48 C.2d 580; see Nicholson v. Lucas (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1657, 1666, footnote 4, 26 C.R.2d 778 [applying rules developed in cases involving maliciously instituted civil and criminal cases to determine whether administrative proceeding had been instituted with probable cause]; Axline v. St. John's Hosp. & Health Center (1998) 63 C.A.4th 907, 917, 74 C.R.2d 385 [in action against hospital after it denied plaintiff's application to become member of staff, allegation that hospital knew that information on which it acted was inaccurate was sufficient allegation of malice].)

West's Key Number Digest, Malicious Prosecution k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

48 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

4. Malicious Institution of Administrative Proceeding.

b. Distinctions.

1. Proceeding Not Instituted Against Another.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 514

[§ 514] Proceeding Not Instituted Against Another.

In Stolz v. Wong Communications Ltd. Partnership (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1811, 31 C.R.2d 229, plaintiff radio station owner filed an application for renewal of its license with the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Defendants filed a competing application with the FCC for the same frequency. Plaintiff prevailed, and then instituted the present action for malicious prosecution. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. The Restatement rule (Rest.2d, Torts §680; see supra, §455) requires that in order for an administrative proceeding to be the basis of a malicious prosecution action, it must have been brought "against another." Here, defendants' filing of an application for an FCC license was not an action against plaintiff. "[A]n application for an FCC license--though it may have the effect of defeating a competitor's application--is not comparable to an accusatory or adversarial action against another. Even where the application leads to a comparative hearing, the hearing is not an action by one party against another but rather a weighing of the relative merits of two competitors." (25 C.A.4th 1820.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

49 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

4. Malicious Institution of Administrative Proceeding.

b. Distinctions.

2. Investigation Without Hearing.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 515

[§ 515] Investigation Without Hearing.

Malicious prosecution liability generally cannot be based on investigative proceedings designed to determine whether further, formal administrative proceedings should be instituted. In Imig v. Ferrar (1977) 70 C.A.3d 48, 138 C.R. 540, plaintiff police officer alleged that defendant filed charges against him with the Police Department, causing an investigation that terminated by a finding that the accusations were groundless. Held, no cause of action was stated, for it was not alleged that any formal proceedings (e.g., complaint, hearing, and decision) were instituted as a result of the investigation. (70 C.A.3d 58.) The court added, however, that sometimes a plaintiff's legally protected interest is invaded without a formal hearing, e.g., by a suspension from duty, and the plaintiff himself or herself initiates the formal proceedings seeking reinstatement. Accordingly, a judgment of dismissal on demurrer sustained was reversed to permit plaintiff to allege that this occurred, if it did occur. (70 C.A.3d 60.) (See Brody v. Montalbano (1978) 87 C.A.3d 725, 736, 151 C.R. 206 [investigation by city board of education without formal proceedings; following Imig].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

50 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

A. Malicious Prosecution.

4. Malicious Institution of Administrative Proceeding.
 - b. Distinctions.
3. Proceeding Initiated After Independent Investigation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 516

[§ 516] Proceeding Initiated After Independent Investigation.

(1) In General. A malicious prosecution action does not lie where the underlying proceeding was initiated only after an independent investigation of the defendant's charges by the agency. The proceeding is then deemed not to have been instituted by the defendant. (Werner v. Hearst Publications (1944) 65 C.A.2d 667, 673, 151 P.2d 308.)

(2) State Bar Disciplinary Proceedings. In Stanwyck v. Horne (1983) 146 C.A.3d 450, 194 C.R. 228, the court held that when the State Bar initiates an investigation following a complaint against an attorney, and conducts a formal hearing, no action for malicious prosecution will lie, even if the proceedings are terminated in favor of the attorney.

(a) Initiation of proceeding is by State Bar. In Werner v. Hearst Publications, supra, the court pointed out that under the State Bar Rules on disciplinary matters, the preliminary investigation is made by the officers of the State Bar, and the order to show cause is issued by these officers. Hence, the court concluded that no action could be maintained against the defendants who had made the original complaint to the State Bar. (146 C.A.3d 457.) The Werner decision is correct and controlling. "Absent an allegation in appellant's complaint that an investigation did not in fact occur, we must presume as did Werner, that one did occur. As a consequence, we hold that the State Bar, not respondents, initiated, procured or continued the disciplinary proceedings of Stanwyck. Therefore, Stanwyck failed to allege the elements required for a malicious prosecution of an administrative proceeding against respondents." (146 C.A.3d 459.)

(b) Public policy considerations. The Werner holding was reaffirmed in Chronicle Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1960) 54 C.2d 548, 7 C.R. 109, 354 P.2d 637, and it is in accord with the view of a number of other jurisdictions establishing an absolute privilege for attorney disciplinary proceedings. (146 C.A.3d 461.) "We realize that some members of the bar may be occasionally subject to fraudulent and false complaints; however, these may be best handled by referral of such matters to the appropriate prosecuting agencies with a recommendation that perjury charges be filed." (146 C.A.3d 462.) "[I]f a person who is considering the filing of a complaint with the State Bar against an attorney knows that he or she may be subject to a subsequent malicious prosecution action by the accused attorney, it is reasonable to infer that such knowledge would have an effect on the desire to lodge a complaint in the first instance, regardless of how legitimate the complaint may be. This result clearly would not be in the public interest or in the interest of the bar." (146 C.A.3d 462.)

(3) Other Disciplinary Proceedings. In Stanwyck v. Horne, supra, the court said: "We specifically decline to decide whether the proceedings applicable to other licensees such as medical practitioners, accountants, and real estate brokers are 'independent' investigations and thus governed by the rationale of this decision." (146 C.A.3d 462, footnote 12.) The rationale has, in fact, been applied to proceedings before other licensing boards. (See Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 C.A.4th 513, 520, 104 C.R.2d 439 [no liability where allegedly false report was filed with Contractors' State License Board]; 39 A.L.R.3d 473 [malicious prosecution predicated upon prosecution, institution, or instigation of disciplinary proceeding against member of medical or allied profession].)

In Hogen v. Valley Hosp. (1983) 147 C.A.3d 119, 195 C.R. 5, the court applied the Stanwyck reasoning to a proceeding before the Board of Medical Quality Assurance (BMQA). Defendant hospitals and a doctor filed a report with the BMQA that resulted in charges against plaintiff doctor, and the Board found that no cause existed for suspension or revocation of plaintiff's medical license. Plaintiff then sued the hospitals and doctor for malicious prosecution. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. "The BMQA is similar to the State Bar Association. Each is empowered and directed to conduct an independent investigation of all complaints from the public prior to the filing of an accusation. ... As a consequence, we are persuaded by the reasoning of Stanwyck and Werner that inasmuch as the BMQA conducted an independent investigation and determination prior to proceeding on the complaint, it was the BMQA, not respondents, who initiated or procured the disciplinary proceedings against appellant." (147 C.A.3d 125.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

51 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
 B. Abuse of Process.
 1. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 517

[§ 517] Nature of Tort.

The tort of abuse of process is committed by the misuse of process, such as attachment or injunction; i.e., its use for a purpose other than that for which the process is designed. (See Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 C.2d 210, 230, 317 P.2d 613; White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 C.2d 336, 347, 66 C.R. 697, 438 P.2d 345, infra, §523; Tranchina v. Arcinas (1947) 78 C.A.2d 522, 524, 178 P.2d 65; Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 C.A.2d 884, 886, 226 P.2d 739; Tellefsen v. Key System Transit Lines (1961) 198 C.A.2d 611, 615, 17 C.R. 919 [quoting Prosser]; Kyne v. Eustice (1963) 215 C.A.2d 627, 632, 30 C.R. 391 [no cause of action]; Meadows v. Bakersfield Savings & Loan Assn. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 749, 753, 59 C.R. 34 [no cause of action]; Czap v. Credit Bureau of Santa Clara Valley (1970) 7 C.A.3d 1, 5, 86 C.R. 417; Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 C.A.3d 295, 300, 97 C.R. 577 [quoting Restatement; evil motive did not render midnight service of summons and complaint actionable as abuse of process]; Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 C.3d 94, 103, 101 C.R. 745, 496 P.2d 817, infra, §525; Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 296, 113 C.R. 113, infra, §§526, 528; Christensen v. Younger (1975) 47 C.A.3d 613, 617, 120 C.R. 923; Clark Equipment Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 C.A.3d 503, 524, 154 C.R. 874; Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 521, 530, 3 C.R.2d 49, infra, §528; Rest.2d, Torts §682; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §438 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §4.9; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process, §19:35 et seq.; 40 Harv. L. Rev. 502; 1 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Abuse of Process §1 et seq.; 27 A.L.R.3d 1202 [use of criminal process to collect debt]; 87 A.L.R.3d 554 [use of confession of judgment procedure]; 87 A.L.R.3d 580 [action for breach of contract]; 97 A.L.R.3d 688 [liability of attorney for abuse of process]; 82 A.L.R.4th 1115 [raising claim for abuse of process in same proceeding in which abuse occurred]; 152 A.L.R. Fed 605 [Federal Tort Claims Act exemption of abuse of process claims]; 7 Proof of Facts 2d 413 [abuse of process in debt collection]; BAJI, No. 7.71 [abuse of process--defined]; CACI, No. 1520 [abuse of process--essential factual elements]; on pleading of abuse of process, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §715 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.168

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1366, 1372, 66 C.R.3d 733 [evidence that cross-defendant knowingly delayed serving complaint or revealing its existence until identical action was settled in order to obtain higher settlement than if two cases were joined was sufficient to establish abuse of process]; 1 Am.Jur.2d. (2005 ed.), Abuse of Process §1 et seq.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §759 et seq.

(New) SLAPPback actions: C.C.P. 425.18, added in 2005, exempts a "SLAPPback" from specified provisions of the anti-SLAPP statute (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.) and establishes separate procedures for these actions. A SLAPPback is a cause of action for abuse of process or malicious prosecution arising from the filing or maintenance of a prior cause of action that has been dismissed pursuant to a special motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute. (See Supp., supra, §469.)

52 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

2. Scope of "Process."

a. Any Judicial Procedure.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 518

[§ 518] Any Judicial Procedure.

" 'Process,' as used in the tort of 'abuse of process,' has never been limited to the strict sense of the term, but instead has been interpreted broadly to encompass the entire range of 'procedures' incident to litigation. ... This broad reach of the 'abuse of process' tort can be explained historically, since the tort evolved as a 'catch-all' category to cover improper uses of the judicial machinery that did not fit within the earlier established, but narrowly circumscribed, action of malicious prosecution." (Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 C.3d 94, 104, footnote 4, 101 C.R. 745, 496 P.2d 817, infra, §525.) (See Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 296, 113 C.R. 113, infra, §§526, 528 [request for written interrogatories]; Clark Equipment Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 C.A.3d 503, 526, 154 C.R. 874 [order to show cause re contempt]; Silver v. Gold (1989) 211 C.A.3d 17, 24, 259 C.R. 185, supra, §493 [motion to disqualify attorney]; 1 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Abuse of Process §§2, 11 et seq.)

Obviously, the mere filing of a lawsuit is not an abuse of process. (Seidner v. 1551 Greenfield Owners Assn. (1980) 108 C.A.3d 895, 904, 166 C.R. 803; Drasin v. Jacoby & Meyers (1984) 150 C.A.3d 481, 485, 197 C.R. 768; Loomis v. Murphy (1990) 217 C.A.3d 589, 594, 266 C.R. 82; Warren v. Wasserman, Comden & Casselman (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1297, 1301, 271 C.R. 579, supra, §502.)

As the court said in Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma (1986) 42 C.3d 1157, 1169, 232 C.R. 567, 728 P.2d 1202: "The rationale underlying these decisions is not difficult to ascertain. The elements of the common law malicious-prosecution cause of action have evolved over time as an appropriate accommodation between the freedom of an individual to seek redress in the courts and the interest of a potential defendant in being free from unjustified litigation. ... If ... the filing of an action for an improper 'ulterior' purpose were itself sufficient to give rise to an abuse of process action, the 'lack-of-probable-cause' element of the malicious prosecution tort would be completely negated; even if an individual could demonstrate that he had reasonable cause to believe that his initial lawsuit had merit when he filed the action, he would still face potential liability under an abuse of process theory. Because the lack-of-probable-cause requirement in the malicious prosecution tort plays a crucial role in protecting the right to seek judicial relief (see Rest.2d, Torts §675, coms. c-j), we agree with the prior decisions which have concluded that this element may not be circumvented through expansion of the abuse of process tort to encompass the alleged improper filing of a lawsuit." (42 C.3d 1169.) (See 35 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 99.)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.168

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1366, 1371, 66 C.R.3d 733 [abuse of process claim could be based on deliberate failure to join in identical action, or to sue, until that action was settled]; 1 Am.Jur.2d. (2005 ed.), Abuse of Process §§2, 11 et seq.

Mere filing of lawsuit is not abuse of process: See Ramona Unified School Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 C.A.4th 510, 521, 37 C.R.3d 381 [continued pursuit of meritless litigation for improper collateral purpose, even though actionable under malicious prosecution principles in proper circumstances, is not separately actionable under abuse of process theory; following Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma (1986) 42 C.3d 1157, 232 C.R. 567, 728 P.2d 1202, text, p. 769]; Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1043, 1058, 61 C.R.3d 434 [filing or maintaining lawsuit, even for improper purpose, is not in itself basis for abuse of process action; citing Oren Royal Oaks Venture].

53 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

2. Scope of "Process."

b. Distinction: Court Action Not Involved.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 519

[§ 519] Distinction: Court Action Not Involved.

The essence of the tort is "misuse of the power of the court; it is an act done in the name of the court and under its authority for the purpose of perpetrating an injustice." The court action may be the direct initiation of a legal proceeding by a summons or writ, or the initiation of ancillary proceedings such as attachment. (Meadows v. Bakersfield Savings & Loan Assn. (1967) 250 C.A.2d 749, 753, 59 C.R. 34.) And in Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 C.A.2d 80, 93, 53 C.R. 706, the court suggested that, although a notice of taking a deposition is not strictly "process," in a proper case the action for abuse of process may arise. The court in Meadows explains the Thornton dictum by observing that a deposition is ancillary to the filing of a legal proceeding, hence is "an act inherent in the judicial process." (250 C.A.2d 754.) (See 33 A.L.R.4th 650 [abuse of process by misuse of discovery or deposition procedures after commencement of civil action without seizure of person or property].)

In the Meadows case, the wrongful act charged was the recording by defendant, trustee under a deed of trust, of a notice of breach and election to sell plaintiffs' home. The complaint alleged that defendant did this after plaintiffs' refusal to meet "extortionate demands" for money not owed. Held, judgment of nonsuit affirmed. Plaintiffs' theory was that the trustee's sale proceeding was analogous to a foreclosure action, and that, if a court order for foreclosure sale can be the basis of the tort action, a trustee's notice of sale should likewise be. But the court found no authority to support this application of the concept of "process" to a proceeding that "in nowise emanates from or rests upon the authority or jurisdiction of a court." (250 C.A.2d 753.) The court pointed out that, if plaintiffs' allegations were true, they would still have a remedy, though not an action for abuse of process. The intentional breach of contract may be the basis of a tort action, with both general and punitive damages recoverable. (250 C.A.2d 755, citing the text.) (See Woodcourt II Ltd. v. McDonald Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 245, 251, 173 C.R. 836 [recording of lis pendens--a notice, not process]; Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1367, 1381, 1 C.R.3d 116 [recordation of notice of lis pendens, even if done for improper purpose, is not valid basis for cause of action for abuse of process; citing Woodcourt II].)

Because abuse of process requires misuse of a judicial process, the tort does not apply to the misuse of administrative process. (Stolz v. Wong Communications Ltd. Partnership (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1811, 1822, 31 C.R.2d 229, supra, §514 [alleged misuse of administrative process of Federal Communications Commission].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

54 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

2. Scope of "Process."

c. Distinction: Malicious Appeal.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 520

[§ 520] Distinction: Malicious Appeal.

In Tellefsen v. Key System Transit Lines (1961) 198 C.A.2d 611, 613, 17 C.R. 919, the court held that filing an allegedly frivolous appeal, with malicious intent, to take advantage of the successful party's need, was not a misuse of the process.

Tellefsen was followed in Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1986) 41 C.3d 782, 792, 226 C.R. 90, 718 P.2d 77, supra, §493: "As in Tellefsen, plaintiffs in the present case allege nothing more than the taking of an appeal to which the city was entitled. They assert no facts to support a finding that the use of process was done in an unauthorized manner, but only that Gulf's motive was improper." (41 C.3d 792.) The "threat," which plaintiffs can be said to have alleged, is implicit in every appeal, i.e., that it will be pursued to finality unless settlement is reached. (41 C.3d 793.) "And in view of the strong state interest in encouraging the settlement of litigation, it would clearly be improper to hold that the making of an offer to settle is itself sufficient to supply the missing element in an abuse of process action. Such a holding would inevitably have a devastating effect on the settlement process which many of our appellate courts have struggled hard to encourage, for no appellate counsel could properly advise his client to propose a settlement on appeal if that very proposal would itself provide the essential ingredient to subject the client to a second lawsuit for abuse of process." (41 C.3d 793.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

55 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS B. Abuse of Process. 3. Elements. a. Ulterior Purpose.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 521

[§ 521] Ulterior Purpose.

The tort requires an ulterior purpose by the person causing the process to issue. (See Kappel v. Bartlett (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1457, 1465, 246 C.R. 815, citing the text [allegation that process server executed false declaration of service with knowledge of its falsity satisfied element of ulterior purpose]; 1 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Abuse of Process §6; BAJI, Nos. 7.70, 7.73; CACI, No. 1520.) The improper purpose usually takes the form of coercion to obtain a collateral advantage, not properly involved in the proceeding itself. (Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 C.2d 210, 232, 317 P.2d 613.)

Like malicious prosecution, the tort of abuse of process has been said to require "malice," and for this reason is sometimes termed "malicious abuse of process." But there is no need to show actual ill will, and there is no abuse of process if it is used for its proper purpose even though the person uses it for wrongful and malicious motives. (Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 C.A.2d 884, 887, 226 P.2d 739; Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 298, 113 C.R. 113, infra, §§526, 528; see Cantu v. Resolution Trust Corp. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 857, 886, 6 C.R.2d 151, quoting the text [interpleader action used for proper purpose].) "Whether malice is a necessary element of this tort has been questioned ... but if malice is a necessary element it is settled that it may be inferred from the wilful abuse of the process." (Tranchina v. Arcinas (1947) 78 C.A.2d 522, 526, 178 P.2d 65.)

In Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Associates (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1009, 132 C.R.2d 602, defendant law firm represented a client in the underlying action who sued plaintiff attorney for legal malpractice. Defendant's client won, but the judgment was stayed pending a motion for new trial and filing of a notice of appeal. After the motion for new trial was denied, but before the time for filing an appeal had expired, defendant caused a writ of execution to be submitted to the county sheriff, and the sheriff subsequently levied on the writ with the result that certain funds of plaintiff's were frozen and some checks were dishonored. Plaintiff then filed this action for abuse of process, and defendant filed a special motion to strike under C.C.P. 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962 et seq.), on the ground that plaintiff could not satisfy the "ulterior motive" element of an abuse of process action. Defendant presented evidence that it thought the judgment was stayed only until action was taken on a new trial motion. Plaintiff, besides introducing the record, which clearly showed that the stay lasted until expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal and that defendant was present when the judgment was stayed, stated that defendant's motive for violating the stay was to ensure that plaintiff would not have sufficient funds to appeal the judgment in the underlying action. Although acknowledging the sufficiency of the evidence to establish a wilful improper use of process, the trial judge granted the special motion to strike on the ground that plaintiff had failed to show that defendant had acted with an ulterior motive. Held, reversed.

(a) Charles J. Vacanti, M.D. v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (2001) 24 C.4th 800, 102 C.R.2d 562, 14 P.3d 234, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §106, held that ulterior motive may be inferred from a wilful abuse of process. Here, the facts showed that defendant was present in court when the judgment was stayed, that it refused to cancel the writ of execution when reminded by plaintiff's counsel, that the judgment was stayed until expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal, and that defendant nevertheless caused the writ to be executed. This evidence of a wilful abuse of process, plus evidence of its timing and financial implications, was sufficient to allow a reasonable finder of fact to infer that the requisite ulterior motive was as suggested by plaintiff in his complaint, i.e., to hinder his ability to appeal. (107 C.A.4th 1017.)

(b) The fact that Vacanti involved a demurrer, rather than a C.C.P. 425.16 motion, is irrelevant. Ulterior motive is a state of mind, which, like other states of mind, can seldom be proved by direct evidence but must be inferred from objective or external circumstantial evidence. In Vacanti, the issue was whether the plaintiff pleaded sufficient facts from which ulterior motive could be inferred. In the context of a C.C.P. 425.16 motion, the issue is whether the plaintiff proffers sufficient evidence for such an inference. Under Vacanti, an allegation of an egregious wilful abuse of process is sufficient. The same rule applies to plaintiff's proffered evidence. (107 C.A.4th 1021.)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.168

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 C.4th 1048, 1057, 39 C.R.3d 516, 128 P.3d 713, Supp., infra, §567 [stating ulterior purpose element and disapproving Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Associates (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1009, 132 C.R.2d 602, text, p. 771, on other grounds]; 1 Am.Jur.2d. (2005 ed.), Abuse of Process §6.

Anti-SLAPP statute:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.

56 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

3. Elements.

b. Wilful Act in Use of Process.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 522

[§ 522] Wilful Act in Use of Process.

The second element of the tort is "a wilful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding." (Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 C.2d 461, 466, 72 C.R. 344, 446 P.2d 152; see Weisenburg v. Molina (1976) 58 C.A.3d 478, 489, 129 C.R. 813 [conspiracy of defendant judgment debtor and another to have a judgment entered and execution levied on his assets for purpose of hindering collection by plaintiff of his prior judgment against defendant]; Ion Equipment Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 C.A.3d 868, 876, 168 C.R. 361 [attempt to collect unsatisfied judgment by execution when enforcement was stayed on appeal; although issuance of writ was improper, there was no sufficient pleading of intent]; Kappel v. Bartlett (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1457, 1466, 246 C.R. 815, citing the text [process server's knowing execution of false declaration of service; wilful act shown]; 1 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Abuse of Process §5.)

Some definite act or threat that is not authorized by the process, or that is aimed at some collateral objective not legitimate in the use of the process, is required. The defendant is not liable for abuse of process where he or she has done nothing more than carry out the process to its authorized conclusion, even though with bad intentions. (Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 C.2d 210, 231, 317 P.2d 613; Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 C.3d 94, 103, 101 C.R. 745, 496 P.2d 817, infra, §525; Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 C.A.3d 295, 300, 97 C.R. 577; Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 297, 113 C.R. 113, infra, §§526, 528; Friedman v. Stadum (1985) 171 C.A.3d 775, 779, 217 C.R. 585, citing the text; see Silver v. Gold (1989) 211 C.A.3d 17, 24, 259 C.R. 185, supra, §493 [merely filing motion to disqualify attorney, even if done for improper purpose, is not type of wrongful act needed to establish abuse of process].)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.168

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 C.4th 1048, 1057, 39 C.R.3d 516, 128 P.3d 713, Supp., infra, §567 [stating improper use element]; Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 1579, 31 C.R.3d 368 [element of improper use was satisfied by allegation that defendant improperly employed temporary restraining order issued against plaintiff to corroborate false representations of plaintiff's alleged child abuse]; 1 Am.Jur.2d. (2005 ed.), Abuse of Process §5.

57 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

4. Particular Abuses.

a. Attachment.

1. Improper or Excessive Attachment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 523

[§ 523] Improper or Excessive Attachment.

(1) In General. The most common writ giving rise to claims of abuse of process has been attachment. The opinion in Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 C.A.2d 884, 226 P.2d 739, holding the complaint defective, nevertheless suggests the basis for a successful action where it is "alleged that said attachment covered property exempt from execution, that it covered an excessive amount of defendant's property, that the debt alleged to be owed by defendant was otherwise secured, or that defendant requested that the levy be made upon other property." (101 C.A.2d 886.)

(2) Exempt Property. Successive seizures of exempt property on attachment or execution may give rise to an action. (See White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 C.2d 336, 349, 66 C.R. 697, 438 P.2d 345; Arc Inv. Co. v. Tiffith (1958) 164 C.A.2d Supp. 853, 856, 330 P.2d 305; Czap v. Credit Bureau of Santa Clara Valley (1970) 7 C.A.3d 1, 5, 86 C.R. 417.)

(3) Wrong Type of Action. Maliciously procured attachment in an action in which the creditor is not entitled to the writ (e.g., a tort action) will support an action for abuse of process. (White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson, supra, 68 C.2d 348.)

(4) Excessive Attachment. In White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson, plaintiff sued to recover $ 850 allegedly owed by defendant. Defendant cross-complained, alleging that plaintiff had attached shares of stock worth $ 15,000 and an automobile worth $ 4,500, and was threatening to garnish wages and a bank account. Damage was also alleged, consisting of loss of use of the car and consequent diminution of income as a salesman, impairment of credit at the bank resulting in acceleration of a loan, and expenses in procuring release of the assets. Held, the cross-complaint stated a cause of action for abuse of process. The principal obstacle was the theory that the cause of action for excessive attachment is one for malicious prosecution, and cannot be maintained by cross-complaint in the primary action on the debt because the defendant cannot yet allege favorable termination (see supra, §498). Some California cases support this theory (68 C.2d 348, footnote 5), but it is unsound, and other cases correctly treat the action as one for abuse of process (68 C.2d 348, footnote 6). The court pointed out that malicious prosecution would seldom lie because the attaching creditor usually prevails on the claim. And the wrongfulness of excessive attachment does not lie in the suit itself (good) or the levy of attachment (proper), but only in tying up more property than is necessary. For this reason, the defendant should not be required to wait until final termination of the primary action, but should be able to assert his or her claim for damages in that action. (68 C.2d 350.) (See 9 Santa Clara Lawyer 132; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 139; 30 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1218; 56 A.L.R.3d 493 [liability of creditor for excessive attachment or garnishment].)

(5) Alternative Statutory Remedy. C.C.P. 490.010 et seq. provide a nonexclusive statutory remedy for wrongful attachment in specified situations. (See 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §234 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
(5) Alternative Statutory Remedy.

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §232 et seq.

58 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

4. Particular Abuses.

a. Attachment.

2. Distinctions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 524

[§ 524] Distinctions.

(1) Proper Attachment in Maliciously Motivated Action. An action may have been brought and an attachment levied, with the malicious motive of injuring the person sued. But (a) if the claim is valid, there was probable cause and no cause of action for malicious prosecution; and (b) the use of attachment for its proper purpose of securing the anticipated judgment was not an abuse of process. (See Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 C.A.2d 884, 226 P.2d 739.)

(2) Proper Attachment in Unsuccessful Action. An action may have been brought, with probable cause and without malice, and an attachment levied. After trial and judgment in favor of the person sued, he or she has a remedy, but not in tort. There was no malicious prosecution of a civil action, and there was no abuse of process. The harm done by the attachment pending the trial is redressed by a recovery against the sureties on the attachment bond, limited to the sum specified in the bond. And there is no additional tort remedy against the unsuccessful plaintiff if the damages suffered exceed the amount stated in the bond; to protect against that eventuality, the person sued could have moved the court to increase the amount of the bond. (Finn v. Witherbee (1954) 126 C.A.2d 45, 49, 271 P.2d 606; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §226.)

(3) Action Maliciously Prosecuted. An action may have been brought without probable cause and with malice, e.g., on a fictitious claim, and an attachment levied. After trial and judgment in favor of the person sued, he or she has a remedy. The attachment may have caused serious harm, but there was nothing wrongful in it, for it was used for its proper statutory purpose--security for an anticipated judgment. The wrongful act was the malicious filing of a groundless suit. Hence, the tort was not abuse of process but malicious prosecution of a civil action, the attachment being merely an act aggravating the damages. (Goland v. Peter Nolan & Co. (1934) 2 C.2d 96, 98, 38 P.2d 783.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Proper Attachment in Unsuccessful Action.

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §224.

59 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

4. Particular Abuses.

b. Action Disregarding Venue Statutes.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 525

[§ 525] Action Disregarding Venue Statutes.

In Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 C.3d 94, 101 C.R. 745, 496 P.2d 817, the court, after describing the broad reach of the tort (see supra, §518), held that a cause of action was pleaded by individual retail buyers against defendant collection agency. Defendant had filed numerous suits on overdue accounts, and there was no allegation of anything wrong in these suits commenced in an appropriate court. But C.C.P. 395 and C.C. 1812.10 require a statement in the complaint of facts to enable the court to determine the proper venue, and defendant allegedly made a practice of omitting these statements and wilfully and knowingly filing actions in improper courts "for the ulterior purpose of making the action more difficult to defend and thereby forcing its adversary to default or to settle on terms favorable to the agency." (7 C.3d 105.) This practice, if proved, would constitute an abuse of process.

In Yu v. Signet Bank/Virginia (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1377, 82 C.R.2d 304, Virginia banks collected credit card debts by improperly filing suits in Virginia against California residents. This practice was deemed even worse than that in Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn., because the suits were brought in the wrong state, rather than the wrong venue within California. (69 C.A.4th 1389.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

60 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

B. Abuse of Process.

4. Particular Abuses.

c. Improper Use of Discovery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 526

[§ 526] Improper Use of Discovery.

In Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 113 C.R. 113, infra, §528, S and nine other attorneys filed a letter with the State Bar accusing Y of organized county-wide ambulance chasing. The letter described six incidents of unlawful solicitation, with the names, dates, and description of the alleged activities; and it stated on information and belief that there were other cases and other attorneys in the county who could furnish the State Bar with the relevant facts for disciplinary action. Four days later, S filed a complaint against Y on behalf of J, one of the listed victims of Y's solicitation, seeking damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress and punitive damages for fraudulent acts of solicitation and wrongful interference with her settlement negotiations. The complaint contained allegations of Y's long-continued widespread ambulance chasing, and was followed 2 weeks later by a set of interrogatories, one of which attached a copy of the letter to the State Bar and called for Y's response to the charges of ambulance chasing. Y refused to answer the interrogatory, and filed a cross-complaint against S for abuse of process, alleging that S persuaded J to file her suit in order to enable S to make public the confidential letter to the State Bar and thereby to injure Y in his law practice. S moved for summary judgment, and in his declaration admitted that his purpose was to bring an end to Y's alleged ambulance chasing, and that he intended, through the suit of J, to attempt to inflict a substantial money loss on Y and to present to the State Bar any evidence of ambulance chasing developed through his interrogatory. Held, order granting summary judgment reversed.

(a) Interrogatory as process. Written interrogatories specifically authorized by the Civil Discovery Act, and enforced with sanctions, are "procedures incident to litigation," i.e., "process." (38 C.A.3d 296; on what constitutes "process" generally, see supra, §518.)

(b) Abuse of process. There was a triable issue of fact whether the process was abused. Insofar as the interrogatory was directed to discovery of matters relating to Y's defense to J's charges, it was a proper use of discovery. (38 C.A.3d 298.) It was reasonably inferable, however, that S had an additional purpose in mind: the disclosure and publication of the fact that a complaint for professional misconduct had been filed with the State Bar by ten attorneys in the county, in order to damage Y's reputation as an attorney and impede his activities as a professional competitor. The timing of the interrogatory assured publication of the fact of the charges long before the State Bar investigation would determine their truth or falsity. (38 C.A.3d 298.) (See 33 A.L.R.4th 650 [abuse of process in misuse of discovery and deposition procedures after commencement of civil action without seizure of person or property].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

61 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
B. Abuse of Process.
4. Particular Abuses.
d. Filing or Recording To Harass or Influence Public Employee.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 527

[§ 527] Filing or Recording To Harass or Influence Public Employee.

By statute, no person may record or file a lawsuit, lien, or other encumbrance against a public officer or employee, knowing it to be false, with the intent to harass the officer or employee or to influence or hinder discharge of his or her official duties. The lawsuit, lien, or other encumbrance must pertain to actions that arise in the course and scope of the officer's or employee's duties. This prohibition includes, but is not limited to, a notice of lis pendens. One violating, or directing another to violate, the prohibition is liable to the officer or employee or to the owner of the affected property for a specified civil penalty. (Govt.C. 6223.)

A public officer or employee whose property is subject to a lien or encumbrance violating the prohibition may bring an expedited proceeding for an order striking or releasing the lien or encumbrance and assessing the penalty. (C.C.P. 765.010 et seq.)

These provisions do not apply to claims of encumbrance by financial institutions or public entities. (C.C.P. 765.050.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

62 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
B. Abuse of Process.
5. Defense of Absolute Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 528

[§ 528] Defense of Absolute Privilege.

(1) In General. An abuse of process action may be barred by the absolute privilege for statements in judicial proceedings that is set forth C.C. 47(b) and usually arises in defamation actions (see infra, §567). (See Abraham v. Lancaster Community Hosp. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 796, 266 C.R. 360 [exhaustive review of Supreme Court and Court of Appeal decisions relating of application of privilege to abuse of process].) The absolute immunity attaches so long as the challenged process involves "a publication [that] (1) was made in a judicial proceeding; (2) had some connection or logical relation to the action; (3) was made to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) involved litigants or other participants authorized by law." (Loomis v. Superior Court (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1026, 1029, 241 C.R. 236 [quoting Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 C.A.3d 818, 825, 106 C.R. 718].)

(2) Defense Found Applicable. The defense was sustained in Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 C.A.3d 916, 925, 134 C.R. 145. After a dissolution, the wife instituted a contempt proceeding against the husband for failure to pay attorneys' fees and spousal support, and filed a request for admissions in which she accused him of forging her name on a joint income tax refund check and absconding with her half of the proceeds. Held: (a) A request for admissions is capable of abuse in the same way as interrogatories and depositions, and therefore can give rise to an action for abuse of process. (63 C.A.3d 923.) (b) However, the resulting harm, in this case, was minimal. (63 C.A.3d 924.) (c) Moreover, the request was made to achieve the objects of the contempt proceeding, and had a direct bearing on the potential issue--whether the husband had sufficient funds with which to purge himself of a possible contempt; hence, it had the necessary relation to the litigation to make the absolute privilege available. (63 C.A.3d 925, 926.) (On abuse of process in improper use of discovery, see supra, §526.)

The defense was again sustained in Umansky v. Urquhart (1978) 84 C.A.3d 368, 148 C.R. 547. Attorneys for heirs of decedent H brought a wrongful death action against Dr. U, alleging that by malicious acts, he caused the death of H, and seeking compensatory and punitive damages. By stipulation, an amended complaint was filed deleting the cause of action for punitive damages. Dr. U then brought the present action for abuse of process against the attorneys for the heirs, alleging that the cause of action for punitive damages did not lie as a matter of law, and that the allegations of malicious acts were made for the purpose of injuring his professional reputation, subjecting him to interrogation as to his finances, and pressuring him into a settlement with the heirs. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants affirmed.

(a) Dr. U argued that the pleading of elements for recovery of punitive damages did not meet the test of achieving the objects of the litigation, because punitive damages are not recoverable in a wrongful death action by heirs. (84 C.A.3d 371, 372; see infra, §1578.) But to curtail the privilege on this ground would have a chilling effect on lawyers desiring to challenge the validity of statutes, and two federal trial judges have found this statutory limitation unconstitutional. Hence, the cause of action "is consistent with the objects" of the litigation. (84 C.A.3d 372.)

(b) No decision is made as to whether Dr. U has a cause of action for malicious prosecution. (84 C.A.3d 373, footnote 1.)

In Loomis v. Superior Court, supra, attorney L represented K in an action against a corporation represented by attorney M. During a 30-day suspension from practicing law, M filed a motion for change of venue, and L countered with a motion to strike on the ground that the corporation could not be represented by a suspended attorney. After L served the motion to strike and the relevant State Bar documents on the corporation and two of its officers, M filed the present abuse of process action, arguing that the service of the State Bar documents was taken in retaliation for M's failure to reply to a request for production of documents. The trial judge denied L's motion for summary judgment, and he sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; the service was privileged.

(a) The denial of L's motion to strike did not establish that the publication of the State Bar documents was unrelated to the action. "The privilege would have little value if attorneys could not make colorable, but unsuccessful, arguments without fear of engendering litigation over publication of materials to support their arguments." (195 C.A.3d 1030.) Here, the documents were directly related to the motion to strike, which was not a palpably improper challenge to the change of venue motion. (195 C.A.3d 1030.) And because the corporation and its officers were "involved litigants or other participants authorized by law," service on them was proper. (195 C.A.3d 1030.)

(b) M contended that under C.C.P. 286 (see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §93), L should have requested the corporation to appoint another attorney. However, this procedure would also have involved informing the corporation of M's suspension. It cannot be the law that what counsel should have done under C.C.P. 286 is not privileged if done in connection with a motion to strike papers filed by the office of a suspended counsel. (195 C.A.3d 1031.)

(c) Although the point of the motion to strike could have been made without the documents showing the cause of M's suspension, the documents provided evidence that a suspension had occurred. Hence, it was not patently improper for L to have included them in the motion to strike. (195 C.A.3d 1031.)

In Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.A.4th 521, 3 C.R.2d 49, plaintiff was the defendant in a civil action in Monterey County initiated by the Ws and involving an allegedly fraudulent real estate transaction. Defendants were the Ws' attorneys in that action. Simultaneously, plaintiff was involved in criminal actions in San Mateo and Santa Clara counties in which he succeeded in having prior felony convictions either reduced or expunged. Thereafter, in order to preserve these convictions for impeachment of plaintiff in the civil action, defendants filed motions for reconsideration in both criminal actions, seeking to bring to the attention of the respective courts plaintiff's conduct in the fraudulent real estate transaction. The motions were denied, and plaintiff instituted the present action for abuse of process and malicious prosecution. Ruling on the abuse of process cause of action, the trial judge sustained defendants' demurrer, but with leave to amend; and they sought mandamus to compel him to sustain it without leave to amend. Held, writ granted; the motions for reconsideration were absolutely privileged, and in any event did not constitute an abuse of process. (For discussion of the malicious prosecution action, see supra, §493.)

(a) Motions were privileged.

(1) Defendants may rely on the defense of judicial privilege under C.C. 47(b) provided that there is some reasonable connection between the act claimed to be privileged, i.e., the motions for reconsideration, and the legitimate objects of the proceeding in which that act took place, i.e., reduction or expungement of criminal convictions. Because there is obviously a relationship between the criminal courts' decisions on reduction or expungement and plaintiff's behavior from the time of the convictions, there is a reasonable connection between the evidence of plaintiff's fraudulent behavior in the real estate transaction and the criminal proceedings. Hence, the use of motions for reconsideration to introduce that evidence is privileged. (2 C.A.4th 529.)

(2) Relying on the fact that the Santa Clara court denied defendants' motion for reconsideration on the ground of lack of standing (the San Mateo court denied the motion, but did not mention standing), plaintiff argued that this lack of standing destroyed defendants' claim of judicial privilege. Even assuming that defendants lacked standing, this argument is without merit. It is true that lack of standing might constitute such a lack of connection with the lawsuit as to make a motion tortious, but in that event it would be the lack of connection, not the lack of standing, that would be the reason for denying the privilege, and there was no such lack of connection here. (2 C.A.4th 530.)

(3) The tort of abuse of process depends partly on the fact that the court is not aware of the facts constituting the abuse and hence cannot control the misuse of its process. However, when a person without standing intervenes in a lawsuit, the court can readily exert control either by denying standing entirely or by allowing intervention but controlling its scope. Accordingly, attempts to intervene without standing need not give rise to tort remedies. (2 C.A.4th 532.)

(b) No abuse of process. Regardless of privilege, defendants' demurrer should have been granted because no misuse of process was alleged. Abuse of process requires more than merely obtaining or seeking process; there must be subsequent abuse by misusing the judicial process for a purpose other than that for which it was intended. (2 C.A.4th 530.) Here, defendants' motions for reconsideration were unsuccessful; hence, their efforts did not result in the issuance of any process of the court that was then abused. (2 C.A.4th 531.) (See 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 20 [Adams].)

The following cases are also illustrative: Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 C.A.3d 832, 842, 184 C.R. 317 [alleged "threat" to use CEQA action to coerce settlement of case was statement made between counsel during judicial proceeding and privileged]; Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma (1986) 42 C.3d 1157, 1165, 232 C.R. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 [citing Twyford, Younger, Umansky and other cases]; Profile Structures v. Long Beach Bldg. Material Co. (1986) 181 C.A.3d 437, 441, 226 C.R. 192 [service of protective order on bank and creditor of plaintiffs, both of which had property covered by the order, informed them of prohibition against plaintiff's transferring the property, hence, was privileged]; Merlet v. Rizzo (1998) 64 C.A.4th 53, 64, 75 C.R.2d 83, supra, §493 [motion for writ of sale and motion for reconsideration, meeting criteria for litigation privilege, did not support abuse of process action].

(3) Defense Found Inapplicable. In Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 C.A.3d 289, 113 C.R. 113, supra, §526, S contended that his conduct was protected by absolute privilege, and that any improper motive on his part was therefore immaterial. Held, the defense was unavailable under the facts.

(a) The judicial proceedings privilege usually arises in defamation actions (see infra, §567 et seq.), but it has a broader application (see Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §648; Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 99 C.R. 393, infra, §21). Hence, the privilege may be asserted in this action for abuse of process. (38 C.A.3d 300.)

(b) However, the relevancy limitation applies; i.e., the publication must have some connection with or logical relation to the judicial proceeding. (38 C.A.3d 301; citing Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., supra.) Here, S's interrogatory published the fact that a complaint had been made by 10 attorneys calling for disciplinary proceedings against appellant; and this matter had no logical relation to the underlying action. (38 C.A.3d 301, 302, citing the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Process k.168-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Defense Found Applicable. Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §66.(3) Defense Found Inapplicable. See Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1366, 1372, 66 C.R.3d 733 [litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) did not apply to abuse of process claim based on cross-defendant's knowing failure to institute underlying action until after prior suit was settled; cross-complaint was not based on communicative act].

63 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 529

[§ 529] Nature of Tort.

(1) Definition and Types. Defamation is an invasion of the interest in reputation. It may be libel or slander. (C.C. 44; on Restatement coverage, see Rest.2d, Torts §558 et seq.; on pleading, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §690 et seq.; on damages, see infra, §§1701, 1702; on alternative remedy of action for inducing breach of contract, see infra, §740.)

(2) Elements. The tort involves (a) a publication that is (b) false, (c) defamatory, and (d) unprivileged, and that (e) has a natural tendency to injure or that causes special damage. (C.C. 45, 46; Rest.2d, Torts §§558, 559; see Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 637, 645, 85 C.R.2d 397, infra, §558, citing the text; Seelig v. Infinity Broadcasting Corp. (2002) 97 C.A.4th 798, 809, 119 C.R.2d 108 [there can be no defamation recover without a falsehood]; on elements of defamation, see infra, §§535 et seq., 539 et seq.) Some kinds of disparagement, such as the charge of a serious crime, would be damaging in the minds of everyone. But other types of disparagement may be defamatory if they have a tendency to injure the reputation among members of some substantial group of persons. (Rest.2d, Torts, Comment e.)

Because libel and slander are intentional torts, the defendant must have intended the publication. But malice or actual ill will is not an element of defamation. It is relevant in only two situations: (a) It must, as in other tort actions, be shown in order to obtain punitive damages (infra, §1572); (b) lack of malice must be shown by a defendant whose defense is qualified privilege (infra, §592). (See 16 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 577 [malice in defamation cases].)

(3) Constitutional Issues. The tort has constitutional ramifications. Liability for defamation of a public official or public figure, or concerning matters of public concern, is subject to First Amendment limitations. (See infra, §601 et seq.)

An elected official is constitutionally subject to disqualification for defamation during a political campaign that is a major contributing cause of an opposing candidate's defeat. (Cal. Const., Art. VII, §10.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.471

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Definition and Types.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §734 et seq. West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k. 1, 1.5

64 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

1. In General.

b. Libel and Slander Distinguished.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 530

[§ 530] Libel and Slander Distinguished.

(1) General Principles. Libel includes the more permanent forms of defamatory matter; in California, it consists of a "writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye." (C.C. 45, infra, §539.) Slander is the more transitory form, generally restricted to oral statements and gestures. (See C.C. 46, infra, §551; Rest.2d, Torts §568; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 887; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 104 [arguing for abolition of distinction between libel and slander].) The Restatement stresses the importance of the type of dissemination and the premeditated character of the publication in applying this distinction. (See Rest.2d, Torts §568(3).) Thus, the Restatement considers defamatory words spoken over radio or television as a libel, regardless of whether read from a prepared script. (Rest.2d, Torts §568A.) (See 64 Harv. L. Rev. 730; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 476; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 887; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 384; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 104; 46 A.L.R.4th 403 [defamation by gestures or acts]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §9 et seq.; 50 A.L.R.3d 1311 [defamation by radio or television].)

(2) Broadcasting as Slander in California. The general principles governing broadcasts are rejected in California by a statutory definition designed to limit tort liability: Slander includes "communications by radio or any mechanical or other means" (C.C. 46), and "radio" includes "both visual and sound radio broadcasting" (C.C. 48.5(4)). (See White v. Valenta (1965) 234 C.A.2d 243, 247, 44 C.R. 241; Arno v. Stewart (1966) 245 C.A.2d 955, 961, 54 C.R. 392; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 121; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 44; BAJI, No. 7.00.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Principles. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §9 et seq.

65 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
1. In General.
c. Who May Be Defamed.
1. Class of Persons.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 531

[§ 531] Class of Persons.

An individual may have an action where the defamatory matter is directed against a class of persons to which he or she belongs, provided the class is not too large, and it can be shown that those to whom the matter is communicated reasonably understand that it is intended to apply to the plaintiff. (See Rest.2d, Torts §564A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §406; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.7; 29 Cal. L. Rev. 83; 41 Cal. L. Rev. 144; 71 Cal. L. Rev. 1532 [Group Defamation and Individual Actions: A New Look at an Old Rule]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 894, 898; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 682 [group libel laws]; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 213; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 176; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §349; 52 A.L.R.4th 618 [defamation of class or group as actionable by individual member]; 1 Proof of Facts 2d 513 [identification of individual allegedly defamed].)

The propriety of such an action has been recognized in two California cases in which recovery was denied. In Noral v. Hearst Publications (1940) 40 C.A.2d 348, 104 P.2d 860, the libelous statement was directed at the "officials" of the Workers' Alliance, a labor union. Plaintiff contended that this referred to him as one of the three paid officials, but the court pointed out that the 162 locals of the organization indicated that there were at least 162 officials besides state officers, and held that the group was too large. (40 C.A.2d 350.) Noral was followed in Los Angeles Fire & Police Protective League v. Rodgers (1970) 7 C.A.3d 419, 425, 86 C.R. 623, which involved an alleged defamation of the Los Angeles police, a class at that time of 5,000 persons.

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.21, 73, 77, 82

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.7; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §332.

66 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

1. In General.

c. Who May Be Defamed.

2. Corporation, Partnership, or Association.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 532

[§ 532] Corporation, Partnership, or Association.

(1) Business Corporation or Partnership. A corporation may be defamed by matter that has a tendency to injure its business reputation, as by deterring persons from dealing with it. (Vegod Corp. v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1979) 25 C.3d 763, 770, 160 C.R. 97, 603 P.2d 14; Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. American Federation of Labor & Congress of Industrial Organizations (1963) 215 C.A.2d 560, 570, 30 C.R. 350; Barnes-Hind v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 377, 381, 226 C.R. 354; Rest.2d, Torts §561.) The same rule applies to a partnership. (Rest.2d, Torts §562.) The publication "must have a tendency to directly affect the credit or property" of the enterprise "or occasion it pecuniary injury. The mere fact that a publication is unpleasant or hostile does not make it defamatory." (Western Broadcast Co. v. Times-Mirror Co. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 120, 124, 57 P.2d 977 [suit by corporation].) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §407; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 892; 30 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 139 [tobacco industry as subject of defamation]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§351, 354.)

(2) Nonprofit Corporation. A nonprofit corporation that relies on financial support from the public may likewise be defamed by something that prejudices it in the estimation of the public. (Rest.2d, Torts §561, Comment on Clause (b).)

(3) Unincorporated Labor Union. An unincorporated labor union is regarded as an entity that may be defamed and may sue for defamation. (Daniels v. Sanitarium Assn. (1963) 59 C.2d 602, 609, 30 C.R. 828, 381 P.2d 652; see Rest.2d, Torts §562 [defamation of associations]; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §82; 94 A.L.R.5th 149 [defamation regarding labor relations or disputes].)

(4) Other Unincorporated Associations. An unincorporated association has a cause of action for defamation under circumstances in which a corporation would have one. (Washburn v. Wright (1968) 261 C.A.2d 789, 793, 68 C.R. 224; Rest.2d, Torts §562; cf. Mullins v. Brando (1970) 13 C.A.3d 409, 422, 91 C.R. 796 [rule recognized but pleading insufficient].)

(5) Distinction: Municipal Corporation. California has held that a municipal corporation cannot sue an individual for libel, on the ground that criticism of the government is protected by the constitutional guarantee of free speech. (Albany v. Meyer (1929) 99 C.A. 651, 655, 279 P. 213 [circular during bond election campaign charging that city was facing bankruptcy].) The Restatement takes no position on the issue. (See Rest.2d, Torts §561, Caveats.) (See 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §350; 45 A.L.R.3d 1315 [right of governmental entity to maintain defamation action].)

(6) Distinction: Publication Directed Against Employee or Board Member. A corporation or other entity may not maintain a defamation action if the allegedly defamatory material is reasonably interpreted as directed against an employee or board member, rather than against the entity itself. (See Palm Springs Tennis Club v. Rangel (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1, 4, 86 C.R.2d 73 [statements on why board chairman should not be reelected were made regarding his capacity as candidate and did not pertain to plaintiff nonprofit corporation; thus, statements could not form basis for its defamation suit].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Business Corporation or Partnership. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §334 et seq.

(3) Unincorporated Labor Union.

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §94.(5) Distinction: Municipal Corporation. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §333.

67 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

1. In General.

c. Who May Be Defamed.

3. Distinction: Deceased Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 533

[§ 533] Distinction: Deceased Person.

Publication of a statement "tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead" was originally a crime in California under former P.C. 248, 249. But no civil action lies to protect the interest of the estate or surviving relatives in the good name of the deceased. (Saucer v. Giroux (1929) 54 C.A. 732, 733, 202 P. 887; Kelly v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1958) 160 C.A.2d 718, 723, 325 P.2d 659; Rest.2d, Torts §560; see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §407; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §356.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §339.

68 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS C. Defamation. 1. In General.

d. Commentary and Practice Works.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 534

[§ 534] Commentary and Practice Works.

The commentary on defamation is extensive. The following are illustrative:

(1) Texts. 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.0 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §399 et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §1 et seq.

(2) Law Reviews. 66 Harv. L. Rev. 476 [English reform proposals]; 74 Cal. L. Rev. 677 [symposium]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 875 [exhaustive discussion of modern law]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 1599, 1612 [defamation in cyberspace]; 35 McGeorge L. Rev. 1 [libel laws as ineffective safeguard against media abuses]; 26 Pacific L. J. 933 [evaluating harm to reputation]; 29 Pepperdine L. Rev. 533 [corporate criticism on Internet]; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 449 [need for new test of defamation in fiction]; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 504 [criticism of existing law and proposal of retraction-reply statute]; 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 1 [critique]; 98 Harv. L. Rev. 1909 ["libel-proof" plaintiffs].

(3) Annotations. 50 A.L.R.4th 1257 [who is "libel-proof"]; 53 A.L.R.4th 450 [defamation by question]; 45 A.L.R.5th 739 [defamation by charging breach or nonperformance of contract]; 54 A.L.R.5th 443 [defamation by newspaper's publication of letter to editor]; 69 A.L.R.5th 645 [defamation by charging cruelty to animals]; 84 A.L.R.5th 169 [liability of Internet service provider for Internet or e-mail defamation]; 94 A.L.R.5th 149 [defamation regarding labor relations or disputes]; 104 A.L.R.5th 523 [defamation of manufacturer regarding product, other than through statement charging breach or nonperformance of contract]; 109 A.L.R.5th 541 [defamation of church member by church or church official].

(4) Practice Works. Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Defamation, Chap. 21; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.111 et seq.; 5 Proof of Facts 3d 493 [defamation by employer]; 30 Proof of Facts 3d 53 [libel and slander actions by or against attorneys or physicians]; 45 Proof of Facts 3d 221 [defamation by supplying false information to credit reporting agency]; 68 Proof of Facts 3d 179 [liability for psychological harm from story or picture in media]; 19 Am.Jur. Trials 499 [defamation suits].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Texts. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.0 et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §1 et seq.(3)

Annotations. See 3 A.L.R.6th 153 [liability for defamatory statements sent or created electronically]; 7 A.L.R.6th 135

[imputation of homosexuality as defamation]; 22 A.L.R.6th 553 [liability of newspaper for defamation--21st century cases].

(4) Practice Works. See 105 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [employer liability for employee misuse of Internet].

69 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

2. Publication of Statement.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 535

[§ 535] In General.

(1) Meaning of Publication. The defamatory matter must be "published," i.e., communicated to some third person who understands its defamatory meaning and application to the plaintiff. (Ringler Associates v. Maryland Cas. Co. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1165, 1179, 96 C.R.2d 136, citing the text.) A statement made to the defamed person alone is not published. (Rest.2d, Torts §§558, 577; see Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 C.A.2d 36, 44, 281 P.2d 372, infra, §635 [exhibition of advertising copy to newspaper employees]; Cabesuela v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Calif. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 101, 111, 80 C.R.2d 60 [oral and written accusations that plaintiff threatened violence, communicated only to him, were not actionable]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §402; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.113 et seq.; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 881; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 287 [publication in magazine]; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 575 [libel in will]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §235 et seq.; BAJI, Nos. 7.02, 7.03; CACI, Nos. 1706, 1708.)

To be actionable, the publication must be in fact made by the defendant. Only one who "takes a responsible part" in the publication is liable for the defamation. Thus, in Matson v. Dvorak (1995) 40 C.A.4th 539, 549, 46 C.R.2d 880, a person did not "publish" a defamatory campaign mailer when he merely contributed money to the organization that did so, and when there was no allegation that he participated in preparing the mailer, knew of its contents in advance of publication, knew that the charges made in the mailer were false, or held any position in the organization from which his oversight of campaign literature could be inferred.

(2) Communication to Single Person. The publication need not be to the "public" or to any large group; communication to a single person is enough. (Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 637, 645, 85 C.R.2d 397, infra, §558, citing the text; see Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 C.3d 301, 306, 81 C.R. 855, 461 P.2d 39 [bank finance officer said to seller of car in presence of prospective buyer, "you've got a hot title"]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §243.)

(3) Communication for Transmission or to Agent. Delivery of a message for transmission is a publication to the recipient. (See Rest.2d, Torts §577, Comment g [delivery to telegraph company].) Likewise, communication to the defendant's own agent is a publication, but it may be privileged. (Rest.2d, Torts §577, Comments e, h; see Kelly v. General Tel. Co. (1982) 136 C.A.3d 278, 284, 186 C.R. 184 [statement by one of defendant's employees to other employees]; 4 Hastings L. J. 202; 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 229; 62 A.L.R.3d 1207 [dictation to stenographer]; 16 A.L.R.4th 1372 [delivery to commercial printer]; 47 A.L.R.4th 674 [intracorporate communication of employee's evaluation].)

(4) Communication Between Husband and Wife. An early California case held that a communication by a husband to his wife in the privacy of their home, and overheard by the plaintiff who was eavesdropping, was not a publication. (See Sesler v. Montgomery (1889) 78 C. 486, 489, 21 P. 185.) The better view seems to be that there is a publication, but that it is absolutely privileged. (Rest.2d, Torts §577, Comment j.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.2 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Meaning of Publication. See Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Assn. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1456, 1474, 37 C.R.3d 133 [allegedly defamatory letters from defendant's attorney to plaintiff were not actionable in absence of evidence of their publication, i.e., communication to third person who understood their defamatory meaning]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §220 et seq. Liability of one taking responsible part in publication: See Overstock.com v. Gradient Analytics (2007) 151 C.A.4th 688, 712, 61 C.R.3d 29 [investor-subscribers who directed publisher of analytic reports on public companies to publish false, negative reports on corporation in order to manipulate its share prices took responsible part in publication of defamatory material and were liable to corporation for defamation].

(New) Communication transmitted by fax and read by third party: In Martinelli v. International House USA (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1332, 75 C.R.3d 186, plaintiff, a lawyer, sued defendant school for libel and slander. Plaintiff's niece was an Italian national enrolled at the school, and the school terminated her enrollment for accepting employment in violation of her visa. The school transmitted by fax two documents falsely accusing plaintiff of asking the school to ignore immigration regulations. The first was sent to the family's insurance business, addressed to the attention of plaintiff's daughter, and the other to plaintiff's law office. Plaintiff's daughter read each document. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary adjudication. Held, affirmed.

(a) Transmission to plaintiff's office. The communication to plaintiff's office fax machine was not a publication. The school used the fax number on the letterhead of a letter plaintiff had sent the school protesting the school's allegation of her wrongdoing. By sending the letter with her office fax number, plaintiff invited return correspondence from the school. Plaintiff undertook the burden to protect her confidentiality, and the school had no duty to determine who had access to the fax machine (161 C.A.4th 1337.)

(b) Transmission to family business. The communication to the family business poses a closer question, but it also was not a publication. The niece had given the school that fax number as a means of communicating with plaintiff on issues concerning the niece and her immigration status. The school sent the fax to plaintiff's daughter because the niece had advised the school that the daughter worked closely with plaintiff and that plaintiff was not in the office on the day of the transmission. Under these facts, the school could reasonably believe that sending the fax to the daughter's attention was equivalent to sending it to plaintiff. (161 C.A.4th 1338.)

(2) Communication to Single Person. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §228.

70 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

2. Publication of Statement.

b. Unintended Publication.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 536

[§ 536] Unintended Publication.

Publication may be negligent as well as intentional. (Hellar v. Bianco (1952) 111 C.A.2d 424, 426, 244 P.2d 757, infra, §537; Rest.2d, Torts §577.) There may be a publication even though none was intended, e.g., where a defamatory personal letter is sent, knowing that the addressee is frequently absent and that others may read his mail. But no publication occurs where a letter is stolen and read, or opened despite a "personal" mark. (See Rest.2d, Torts §577, Comments k et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§237, 251; 92 A.L.R.2d 219 [publication by accidental communication, or communication only to plaintiff].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.2

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §223.

In Haley v. Casa Del Rey Homeowners Assn. (2007) 153 C.A.4th 863, 63 C.R.3d 514, plaintiff introduced evidence of defamatory remarks made to her by defendant that were overheard by a third person who was in another room and out of defendant's view. Held, nonsuit affirmed. If a reasonable person would recognize that an act creates an unreasonable risk that defamatory matter will be communicated to a third person, the conduct becomes a negligent communication and is actionable. (153 C.A.4th 878; citing Rest.2d, Torts §577, Comment k.) Here, however, the evidence does not indicate that defendant had any reason to believe that the third person would overhear her comments. (153 C.A.4th 879.)

71 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

2. Publication of Statement.

c. Republication.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 537

[§ 537] Republication.

(1) In General. If the defendant reprints or circulates a libelous writing, this has the same effect as an original publication. The same is true where the defendant repeats a slanderous charge, even though the defendant states the source of it, or indicates that he or she is merely repeating a rumor. (See Gilman v. McClatchy (1896) 111 C. 606, 612, 44 P. 241 [libel]; Ringler Associates v. Maryland Cas. Co. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1165, 1179, 96 C.R.2d 136, citing the text [libel]; Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 C.4th 1230, 1243, 7 C.R.3d 576, 80 P.3d 676, citing the text [rule that each publication of defamatory statement gives rise to new cause of action applies not only when original defamer repeats or recirculates original remarks to new audience, but also when person who heard, read, or saw original remarks repeats them to others]; Rest.2d, Torts §§576, 578; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §260 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.02.1.) And the original defamer may be liable for the repetition of it by a third person, if he or she had reason to expect the repetition. (See Schneider v. United Airlines (1989) 208 C.A.3d 71, 75, 256 C.R. 71 [airline that sent false information to credit reporting agency was liable for agency's republication to two banks]; Rest.2d, Torts §576(c); 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §263; 96 A.L.R.2d 373 [liability of publisher of defamatory statement for its repetition or republication by others]; cf. Spitler v. Children's Institute Int. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 432, 440, 14 C.R.2d 197 [defendant who gave privileged testimony before Congressional hearing was not liable for its republication in absence of evidence that defendant authorized republication].)

An unusual coupling of the doctrines of negligent publication and republication was made in Hellar v. Bianco (1952) 111 C.A.2d 424, 244 P.2d 757. Defendants were proprietors of a public tavern. An unknown person wrote plaintiff's first name and telephone number on the toilet wall, with the suggestion that she was available for illicit relations. Learning of this from a caller, her husband phoned defendants' bartender demanding removal of the writing. Shortly afterwards, plaintiff's husband and others came to the bar and found the libelous matter still there. A judgment of nonsuit was reversed: (a) Persons who invite the public to their premises owe a duty not to knowingly permit their walls to contain defamatory matter; and (b) a republication occurs when the proprietor has knowledge of the matter and allows it to remain after a reasonable opportunity to remove it. Here, defendants had imputed knowledge (through their agent, the bartender), and the period for which the matter must remain in order to establish republication is a question of fact for the jury. (111 C.A.2d 426.) (See 40 Cal. L. Rev. 625 [Hellar]; 4 Hastings L. J. 68 [same]; Stanf. L. Rev. 363 [same]; 28 A.L.R.2d 1454 [liability for permitting walls or other portions of place of public resort to be occupied with defamatory matter].)

(2) Foreseeable Republication by Person Defamed. The general rule is that where the person defamed voluntarily discloses the contents of a libelous communication to others, the originator of the libel is not responsible for the resulting damage. But an exception has been recognized where the originator has reason to believe that the person defamed will be under a strong compulsion to disclose the contents of the defamatory statement to a third person after the defamed person has read it or been informed of its contents. (Beroiz v. Wahl (2000) 84 C.A.4th 485, 497, 100 C.R.2d 905.) The exception was applied to uphold a pleading in McKinney v. Santa Clara (1980) 110 C.A.3d 787, 168 C.R. 89, in which a job seeker needed to tell a prospective employer what was in his personnel file in order to explain away a negative job reference. "The rationale for making the originator of a defamatory statement liable for its foreseeable republication is the strong causal link between the actions of the originator and the damage caused by the republication. This causal link is no less strong where the foreseeable republication is made by the person defamed operating under a strong compulsion to republish the defamatory statement and the circumstances which create the strong compulsion are known to the originator of the defamatory statement at the time he communicates it to the person defamed." (110 C.A.3d 797.)

McKinney was distinguished in Live Oak Publishing Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1277, 286 C.R. 198. Plaintiffs' newspaper published articles about each candidate for a local election, and garbled the article about the candidate supported by defendant. Defendant wrote a letter to the newspaper accusing it of intentional garbling, presumably to influence the outcome of the election. Defendant included a check to cover the cost of printing her letter as a full-page advertisement, and the paper printed it. The publisher and officers of the paper then sued defendant for libel. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Although it is typically the newspaper that seeks protection from liability for printing a letter to the editor, a newspaper or its agents may sue for defamation. (234 C.A.3d 1283.) However, a plaintiff cannot manufacture a defamation cause of action by publishing statements to third persons; the publication must ordinarily be done by the defendant. (234 C.A.3d 1284.)

(b) An exception has been recognized where it is foreseeable that a defendant's act will result in publication to a third person. (234 C.A.3d 1284, citing Schneider v. United Airlines, supra.) This necessity exception has been applied in two different contexts. The first is where the originator of the defamatory statement has reason to believe that the statement will fall into the hands of a third party before the defamed person reads it or is informed of its contents. (234 C.A.3d 1284.) The necessity exception may also apply where there is a threat amounting to coercion; e.g., where the originator of the defamatory statement has reason to believe that the person defamed will be under a strong compulsion to disclose the contents of the defamatory statement to a third person after the defamed person has read it or been informed of its contents. (234 C.A.3d 1284.) But this aspect of the exception has been limited to a narrow class of cases, usually where a plaintiff is compelled to republish the statements in aid of disproving them. (234 C.A.3d 1285.)

(c) Here plaintiff argued that it acted reasonably in publishing the letter. However, the evidence did not establish coerced publication, for the statement would not go un rebutted if plaintiff refused to publish. Plaintiffs could print an article contesting the accuracy of defendant's assertions if she made them from another forum. In stark contrast is the sort of situation presented by McKinney. In that situation there is no alternative but for the plaintiff to republish the defamation. (234 C.A.3d 1287.)

(3) Unauthorized Changes in Original Material. In Montandon v. Cox Broadcasting Corp. (1975) 45 C.A.3d 932, 120 C.R. 196, defendant, producer of a TV show, sent an unobjectionable press release to TV Guide. TV Guide changed it into a libelous statement. Held, although TV Guide's publisher was liable (see Montandon v. Triangle Publications (1975) 45 C.A.3d 938, 120 C.R. 196, infra, §611), defendant producer was not. There was no agency relationship between the two; and "[a]n author cannot be held liable for republication unless the original statement is defamatory." (45 C.A.3d 935.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.26 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §241 et seq.(4) (New) Immunity of Internet Service Providers and Users. Internet service providers and users are immune by federal statute from defamation liability for republication. (See 47 U.S.C., §230.) In Barrett v. Rosenthal (2006) 40 C.4th 33, 51 C.R.3d 55, 146 P.3d 510, plaintiffs sued defendant, an individual, for libel, alleging that she maliciously republished messages and postings on the Internet after being warned that they were defamatory. The trial court granted defendant's motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.), but the Court of Appeal reversed. Held, reversed.

(a) Statutory immunity and common law background. Under the Communications Decency Act of 1996, "[n]o provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be treated as the publisher or speaker of any information provided by another information content provider" (47 U.S.C., §230(c)(1)), and "[n]o cause of action may be brought and no liability may be imposed under any State or local law that is inconsistent with this section" (47 U.S.C., §230(e)(3)). These provisions have been widely and consistently interpreted to confer broad immunity against defamation liability for persons using the Internet to publish information that originates from another source. This immunity has been applied regardless of the traditional distinction between "publishers" and "distributors." Distributors (e.g., newspaper vendors and book sellers) are liable at common law only if they have notice of the defamatory nature of the statement. However, the publisher of the newspaper or book where the statement originally appears may be held liable at common law even without notice. Here, the Court of Appeal diverged from the prevailing interpretation of 47 U.S.C., §230 by holding that common law "distributor" liability survived the congressional grant of immunity, so that Internet service providers and users are exposed to liability if they republish a statement with notice of its defamatory character. This construction of the statute is incorrect. (40 C.4th 41.)

(b) Application of immunity to distributors. This federal statutory immunity provision applies to distributors as well as publishers. (40 C.4th 41.)

(1) The leading case on 47 U.S.C., §230 immunity, Zeran v. America Online (4th Cir. 1997) 129 F.3d 327, rejected the distributor liability theory that was adopted here by the Court of Appeal. (40 C.4th 43.) The Zeran court's views have been broadly accepted in both federal and state courts, including two other California Courts of Appeal. (40 C.4th 45, citing Kathleen R. v. Livermore (2001) 87 C.A.4th 684, 104 C.R.2d 772, and Gentry v. eBay (2002) 99 C.A.4th 816, 121 C.R.2d 703.)

(2) The Zeran court's construction of the term "publisher" in 47 U.S.C., §230(c)(1) to include "distributor" is sound. Given that distributors are also known as "secondary publishers," there is little reason to believe that Congress felt it necessary to address them separately. There is even less reason to suppose that Congress intended to immunize "publishers" but leave "distributors" open to liability, because the responsibility of publishers for offensive content is greater than that of mere distributors. (40 C.4th 48.) The legislative history reflects a congressional intent to broadly shield from liability all providers of online content provided by others, and not to maintain the common law distinction between publishers and distributors. (40 C.4th 50.)

(3) The Zeran court identified three deleterious effects that would flow from reading 47 U.S.C., §230 to permit liability of Internet distributors where there is notice. First, providers of information on the Internet who received notification of a defamatory message would be subject to liability only for maintaining the message, not for removing it. This fact, together with the burdens involved in evaluating the defamatory character of messages, would provide a natural incentive to simply remove messages on notification, chilling the freedom of Internet speech. Second, notice-based liability would deter providers from actively screening the content of material received, because discovering potentially defamatory material would only increase the provider's liability. Finally, notice-based liability would give third parties a cost-free means of manufacturing claims. (40 C.4th 54.) The volume and range of Internet communications make the "heckler's veto" a real threat to free speech under the Court of Appeal's holding. (40 C.4th

57.)

(c) Application of immunity to individual users. The immunity provision immunizes individual "users" of interactive computer services, such as defendant here, as well as the providers of these services. "User" is not defined in the statute, and the limited legislative record does not indicate why Congress included users as well as service providers under the umbrella of immunity. However, "user" plainly refers to someone who uses something, and the statutory context makes it clear that Congress simply meant someone who uses an interactive computer service. (40 C.4th 58.)

(d) Application of immunity to active use. The immunity applies whether the use is active or passive. The term "user" is not limited to those who simply receive offensive information or who screen and remove that information from an Internet site, but extends to persons who actively post or republish information. A user who merely receives information on a computer without making it available to anyone else would be neither a "publisher" nor a "speaker" under 47 U.S.C., §230(c)(1). Congress obviously had a broader meaning in mind. (40 C.4th 59.)

(e) Conclusion. "The prospect of blanket immunity for those who intentionally redistribute defamatory statements on the Internet has disturbing implications. Nevertheless, by its terms section 230 exempts Internet intermediaries from defamation liability for republication. The statutory immunity serves to protect online freedom of expression and to encourage self-regulation, as Congress intended. Section 230 has been interpreted literally. It does not permit Internet service providers or users to be sued as 'distributors,' nor does it expose 'active users' to liability. Plaintiffs are free under section 230 to pursue the originator of a defamatory Internet publication. Any further expansion of liability must await Congressional action." (40 C.4th 62.)

A concurring opinion suggests that an Internet publisher who conspires with the author of a defamatory statement would not be immune under the statute. However, there was no prima facie showing of conspiracy here. (40 C.4th 63.)

72 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

2. Publication of Statement.

d. Single Publication Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 538

[§ 538] Single Publication Rule.

(1) Common Law and Restatement Background. The early common law rule, treating any defamatory publication as a tort, would permit separate actions to be brought for each sale or delivery of a newspaper or magazine containing libelous matter. This unreasonable approach was abandoned by a number of jurisdictions in favor of the single publication rule, which treats one edition of a newspaper or magazine or one radio or television broadcast as a unit, giving rise to but one cause of action. (On problems of multiple defamation actions and multi state defamation, see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 146; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 136 [multiple printings of book]; 60 Harv. L. Rev. 941; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 1041; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 1272; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 946; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 51; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 104; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §264 et seq.; 58 A.L.R.2d 650 [conflict of laws with respect to the single publication].) The single publication rule is adopted by the Restatement. (See Rest.2d, Torts §577.)

(2) Uniform Single Publication Act. The single publication rule has been incorporated into the Uniform Single Publication Act, promulgated in 1952 (see 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 375), and adopted in California in 1955 (see C.C. 3425.1 et seq.). C.C. 3425.3, the main section, states: "No person shall have more than one cause of action for damages for libel or slander or invasion of privacy or any other tort founded upon any single publication or exhibition or utterance, such as one issue of a newspaper or book or magazine or any one presentation to an audience or any one broadcast over radio or television or any one exhibition of a motion picture. Recovery in any action shall include all damages for any such tort suffered by the plaintiff in all jurisdictions." (For discussions of Act, see 44 Cal. L. Rev. 146; 32 Golden Gate L. Rev. 325 [why single publication rule should not apply to defamatory Internet publications]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 950; 41 A.L.R.4th 541 [what constitutes "single publication" within meaning of single publication rule]; on effect of Act on statute of limitations, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §513.)

One cause of action arises, and the statute of limitations commences to run, on the first general publication or broadcast of a defamatory statement, notwithstanding how many copies of the publication are ultimately distributed or how many people ultimately hear or see the broadcast and regardless of when the plaintiff first becomes aware of the publication or broadcast. Any subsequent republication or rebroadcast gives rise to a new single cause of action. (See Traditional Cat Assn. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 C.A.4th 392, 395, 399, 13 C.R.3d 353 [1-year statute of limitations barred defamation claim based on publication of Internet website where site had not been altered, and statements on site had not been republished in other formats, in year preceding filing of action].)

"The Act is not intended to have any application to the causes of action of two or more separate plaintiffs who are defamed in the same publication, or to the causes of action of one plaintiff against two or more separate defendants, each of whom has published the same statement or taken part in the same publication." (Commissioners' Note, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 376; see Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 C.4th 1230, 1245, 7 C.R.3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 [even under single publication rule, multiple causes of action may be brought in one proceeding against several defendants for single defamatory statement; each person who takes responsible part in publication is liable].) Thus, the Act does not apply when the defamation on republication reaches a new person or entity. (See Schneider v. United Airlines (1989) 208 C.A.3d 71, 76, 256 C.R. 71 [republications of damaging credit report to separate entities that denied credit to plaintiff].)

The Uniform Act refers to an "edition" of a newspaper; the California statute changed this to "issue," a more comprehensive term. This difference may affect the timeliness of filing an action. (See Belli v. Roberts Bros. Furs (1966) 240 C.A.2d 284, 287, 289, 49 C.R. 625; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §513.) Further, when a hardcover book is republished in a paperback edition, there is a new "issue" giving rise to a new cause of action. (Kanarek v. Bugliosi (1980) 108 C.A.3d 327, 332, 166 C.R. 526.)

Plaintiffs may not circumvent the statutory limitation by proceeding on theories other than defamation. The statutory phrase "or any other tort" means exactly that. (Long v. Walt Disney Co. (2004) 116 C.A.4th 868, 873, 10 C.R.3d 836 [causes of action alleging violation of right of publicity, appropriation of likenesses, and intentional infliction of emotional distress by defendant's use of plaintiffs' computer-altered childhood likenesses in television programming and on Internet were within scope of Act].)

McGuire v. Brightman (1978) 79 C.A.3d 776, 145 C.R. 256, answered the question whether the Act's restriction to a single action applies where a libel is published in one state but has an effect in another state. Defendant, an officer and reporter of a small California newspaper, visited South Dakota, and while there, gathered material for an article libeling plaintiff, a South Dakota resident. The article was published and distributed to subscribers, a few of whom were in South Dakota. Held: (a) South Dakota had jurisdiction of a libel action based on the commission of the tort there (injury to plaintiff's reputation at his domicile). (79 C.A.3d 784, 788; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §139.) (b) The Uniform Act was concerned with preventing multiplicity of suits and lengthy tolling of the statute of limitations; it was not intended to nullify the established rules of jurisdiction. (79 C.A.3d 786.) (See Keeton v. Hustler Magazine (1984) 465 U.S. 770, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1480, 79 L.Ed.2d 790, 799 [interest in cooperating with other states in application of single publication rule was factor giving forum state jurisdiction over out-of-state publisher].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.5

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Common Law and Restatement Background. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §245 et seq.(2) Uniform Single Publication Act. Volume 14 of the Uniform Laws Annotated was revised in 2005. The Uniform Single Publication Act is now at 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 469.

Effect of Act on statute of limitations:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §551.Belli case:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §551.

Tortious act at domicile:

Cross-Reference: 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Jurisdiction, §145.

(3) (New) Publication With Limited Distribution. Hebrew Academy of San Francisco v. Goldman (2007) 42 C.4th 883, 70 C.R.3d 178, 173 P.3d 1004, addressed the application of the single publication rule to a publication with limited distribution. A private school and its dean brought a defamation action against a religious federation, its past president, and related defendants, alleging that the past president had made defamatory statements about the dean in an interview published 10 years earlier in an oral history with fewer than 10 copies distributed to academic libraries and without distribution to the general public. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment made on statute of limitations grounds. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed. The rule applies to a publication with only limited distribution, regardless of the date on which the plaintiff actually learns of the existence of the publication and reads its contents. This furthers the rule's purposes of avoiding potential multiplicity of actions from one edition of a book or newspaper and avoiding the creation of a new limitations period for each purported republication. Therefore, this action was time-barred. (42 C.4th 887, 890.)

73 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

1. In General.

aa. Statutory Definition.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 539

[§ 539] Statutory Definition.

C.C. 45 defines libel as "a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." (See Savage v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 434, 447, 26 C.R.2d 305 [statement that journalist was participating in legal action involving a utility while employed by trade journal covering that utility had tendency to injure her in her profession within meaning of C.C. 45]; Rest.2d, Torts §568(1) [defining libel as "publication of defamatory matter by written or printed words, by its embodiment in physical form or by any other form of communication that has the potentially harmful qualities characteristic of written or printed words"]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §403 et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §118 et seq.; 95 A.L.R.3d 660 [libel by newspaper headlines].)

Despite its broad language, C.C. 45 is limited to statements that either directly or implicitly disparage plaintiff personally, and does not encompass trade libel (infra, §645). (Polygram Records v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 543, 550, 216 C.R. 252.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6.1, 11 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §118 et seq.

74 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

1. In General.

bb. Common Law Rule: All Libel Is Actionable Without Proof of Special Damage.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 540

[§ 540] Common Law Rule: All Libel Is Actionable Without Proof of Special Damage.

Under the general common law rule, libel and slander have different effects. Libel is more permanent in form (see supra, §530), and is considered more serious and harmful. If the matter is defamatory, and is in written or other permanent form so as to amount to a libel, it is considered actionable per se; i.e., injury is presumed to follow from the act, and the plaintiff is not required to plead or prove special damages. The plaintiff is always entitled, in the absence of a good defense, to a judgment for at least nominal damages, to expose the false charges and vindicate his or her reputation. Under this view, any libel is actionable per se, and the use of the expression "libel per se" (see infra, §541) is meaningless. (See Rest.2d, Torts §569 [stating common law rule]; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 733; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 347.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

75 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

1. In General.

cc. California Doctrine of Libel Per Se.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 541

[§ 541] California Doctrine of Libel Per Se.

A special meaning has been given to the term "libel per se" in California and some other states. Where the statement is defamatory on its face, it is said to be libelous per se, and actionable without proof of special damage. But if it is defamation per quod, i.e., if the defamatory character is not apparent on its face and requires an explanation of the surrounding circumstances (the "innuendo") to make its meaning clear, it is not libelous per se, and is not actionable without pleading and proof of special damages. (See infra, §555.) Although greatly criticized as an illogical and undesirable innovation (see 79 Harv. L. Rev. 740; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 347), this doctrine of libel per se has long been established in California. (Tonini v. Cevasco (1896) 114 C. 266, 271, 46 P. 103; MacLeod v. Tribune Publishing Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 536, 549, 343 P.2d 36, infra, §550; Peabody v. Barham (1942) 52 C.A.2d 581, 584, 126 P.2d 668; Smith v. Los Angeles Bookbinders Union No. 63 (1955) 133 C.A.2d 486, 494, 284 P.2d 194; Menefee v. Codman (1957) 155 C.A.2d 396, 401, 317 P.2d 1032; White v. Valenta (1965) 234 C.A.2d 243, 255, 44 C.R. 241; Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 409, 46 C.R. 135, infra, §544; Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 637, 645, 85 C.R.2d 397, infra, §558; Walker v. Kiousis (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1432, 1441, 114 C.R.2d 69; see Triton Ins. Underwriters v. National Chiropractic Ins. Co. (1965) 232 C.A.2d 829, 833, 43 C.R. 504, citing the text [libel per se permits recovery of nominal damages; judgment proper for $ 1 and costs]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 889; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 119 [under doctrine of libel per se, there is little difference between libel and slander in the requirement of proof of special damages]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §144 et seq.)

The doctrine has been codified. "A libel which is defamatory of the plaintiff without the necessity of explanatory matter, such as an inducement, innuendo or other extrinsic fact, is said to be a libel on its face. Defamatory language not libelous on its face is not actionable unless the plaintiff alleges and proves that he has suffered special damage as a proximate result thereof." (C.C. 45a.) (See Babcock v. McClatchy Newspapers (1947) 82 C.A.2d 528, 539, 186 P.2d 737 [1945 adoption of C.C. 45a "merely enacts, in code form, the rule which has long been in force in this state"].)

In Barnes-Hind v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 377, 381, 385, 226 C.R. 354, citing the text, the court said: "If no reasonable reader would perceive in a false and unprivileged publication a meaning which tended to injure the subject's reputation in any of the enumerated respects, then there is no libel at all. If such a reader would perceive a defamatory meaning without extrinsic aid beyond his or her own intelligence and common sense, then ... there is a libel per se. But if the reader would be able to recognize a defamatory meaning only by virtue of his or her knowledge of specific facts and circumstances, extrinsic to the publication, which are not matters of common knowledge rationally attributable to all reasonable persons, then ... the libel cannot be libel per se but will be libel per quod," requiring pleading and proof of special damages. (181 C.A.3d 386.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §145 et seq.

76 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

2. Illustrations of Libel Per Se.

aa. Charges of Criminal Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 542

[§ 542] Charges of Criminal Conduct.

The charge of commission of some kind of crime is obviously libel per se. (See 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §166; 52 A.L.R.2d 1178 [statement or publication that plaintiff has been indicted or is under indictment as libelous]; 32 A.L.R.3d 1427 [actionability of accusation or imputation of tax evasion]; 38 A.L.R.2d 161 [imputation of perjury or false swearing as actionable per se]; 93 A.L.R.3d 625 [actionability of false newspaper report that plaintiff has been arrested].)

In Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Publishing Soc. (1893) 99 C. 431, 34 P. 128, a newspaper article stating that it was understood that a certain corporation was putting up money to corrupt voters, and that it was "reported that Edwards is to have charge of the sack" was held libelous per se. The term "sack" in this connection had an established meaning and plaintiff was not required to prove the sense in which it was used and understood. (99 C. 435.)

In Boyich v. Howell (1963) 221 C.A.2d 801, 34 C.R. 794, a circular charged that plaintiff, a city councilman and candidate for election, "was convicted, fined and barred from holding union office for five years ... because he stuffed the ballot box in a union election." Held, this was defamatory on its face; the average lay reader could well view this as a conviction of a crime. (221 C.A.2d 802.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.7

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 C.A.4th 71, 80, 55 C.R.3d 600, Supp., infra, §611 [statement on defendant's website that "Federal Criminal Mail Fraud Investigation" had been launched against plaintiffs constituted libel under C.C. 45]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §161.

77 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

2. Illustrations of Libel Per Se.

bb. Charges of Other Misconduct or Character Defect.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 543

[§ 543] Charges of Other Misconduct or Character Defect.

The charge may be that the plaintiff has been guilty of an act of dishonesty, or that plaintiff has some particular defect of character. It is not necessary that the publication charge the commission of a crime; it is sufficient if it so reflects on the person's integrity as to bring him or her into disrepute. (Maher v. Devlin (1928) 203 C. 270, 275, 263 P. 812; Stevens v. Snow (1923) 191 C. 58, 63, 214 P. 968; Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 153, 154, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, infra, §564; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 274 [charge that public official had religious and racial prejudice]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 88 [charge of Communist Party membership]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§192 et seq., 216 et seq.; 6 A.L.R.2d 1008 [imputing unfitness to employee]; 99 A.L.R.2d 700 [imputing credit unworthiness to nontrader]; 40 A.L.R.3d 490 [imputing inefficiency to schoolteacher]; 51 A.L.R.3d 1300 [imputing business misconduct in single transaction or occurrence]; 62 A.L.R.4th 314 [imputation of allegedly objectionable political or social beliefs or principles]; on character disparagement of particular professionals, see 37 A.L.R.4th 1088 [candidates for public office]; 38 A.L.R.4th 836 [doctors and dentists]; 38 A.L.R.4th 874 [psychiatrists, psychologists, and counselors]; 46 A.L.R.4th 326 [attorneys].)

Thus, falsely charging a person with "a violation of confidence reposed in him or with treachery to his associates" is actionable per se. (Dethlefsen v. Stull (1948) 86 C.A.2d 499, 502, 195 P.2d 56.) Here, a former partner's published letter stating that plaintiff received partnership funds that he failed to deposit to the firm's account was held libelous on its face, even though plaintiff, technically, was not guilty of larceny or embezzlement.

A statement that plaintiff, a publicity agent, after discharge from her employment, continued to use the employer's stationery without notifying newspapers of her change of status, thus misleading various persons, charged a breach of confidence and trust, and tended to injure plaintiff in her occupation. As such it was libelous per se. (Bates v. Campbell (1931) 213 C. 438, 443, 2 P.2d 383.)

The following cases are also illustrative:

Washer v. Bank of America (1943) 21 C.2d 822, 828, 136 P.2d 297 [charge that employee had been guilty of "flagrant insubordination"].

Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 C.2d 788, 790, 228 P.2d 6 [charge that plaintiff, member of American Embassy in Belgrade, engaged in such flagrant espionage that he was recalled].

MacLeod v. Tribune Publishing Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 536, 546, 343 P.2d 36 ["charge of membership in the Communist Party or communist affiliation or sympathy is libelous on its face"].

Peterson v. Rasmussen (1920) 47 C.A. 694, 698, 191 P. 30 [imputation of want of chastity in woman].

Kramer v. Ferguson (1964) 230 C.A.2d 237, 242, 41 C.R. 61, citing the text [statements urging recall of city councilmen as tools of an "undesirable element" and as acting in matters in which they had personal interest; but reversal for failure to instruct properly on privilege].

Fairfield v. Hagan (1967) 248 C.A.2d 194, 201, 56 C.R. 402 [letters sent to creditors of bankrupt estate implying that plaintiff, attorney for trustee, was receiving fees for little work done, and that his continued handling of the estate would produce little or nothing for creditors].

However, a charge of misconduct that tends to injure plaintiff in his or her occupation is not actionable where the occupation is unlawful. (Glenn v. Gibson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 649, 662, 171 P.2d 118.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6, 8 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§184 et seq., 206 et seq.; 120 A.L.R.5th 483 [character disparagement of dentist as defamation] and 16 A.L.R.6th 1 [character disparagement of doctor as defamation], together superseding 38 A.L.R.4th 836, text, p. 796.

78 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

2. Illustrations of Libel Per Se.

cc. Epithets and Derogatory Suggestions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 544

[§ 544] Epithets and Derogatory Suggestions.

There need not be a direct accusation or charge of misconduct; epithets or descriptive words or opinions that carry with them the implication of acts of misconduct are actionable. (See Newby v. Times-Mirror Co. (1916) 173 C. 387, 395, 160 P. 233 [statement that person is "hypocrite"]; Rosenberg v. J.C. Penney Co. (1939) 30 C.A.2d 609, 620, 87 P.2d 696, infra, §645 [display of rival merchant's goods, with placards containing comments imputing dishonest business methods, is both libel per se and trade libel]; Freeman v. Mills (1950) 97 C.A.2d 161, 166, 217 P.2d 687 [communication by investigating agency reporting several derogatory statements made about plaintiff employee]; Morris v. National Federation of the Blind (1961) 192 C.A.2d 162, 164, 13 C.R. 336 [charge that plaintiff is "racketeer"]; Montandon v. Triangle Publications (1975) 45 C.A.3d 938, 943, 120 C.R. 196, infra, §611; Rest.2d, Torts §566 [statement of opinion is actionable where it implies allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.2; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 883, 885; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 306; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §200 et seq.; 1 A.L.R.3d 844 [charge of being "crook"]; 11 A.L.R.3d 884 [statement of charging excessive or exorbitant prices or fees]; 13 A.L.R.3d 1286 [statement that plaintiff is "slut," "bitch," or "son of a bitch"]; 23 A.L.R.3d 652 [charge of mental disorder]; 49 A.L.R.3d 163 [charge of insolvency]; 49 A.L.R.3d 1074 [charge of being "slumlord"]; 57 A.L.R.4th 404 [charge of offensive sexual attitude or conduct]; 62 A.L.R.4th 314 [charge of having objectionable political or social beliefs]; 65 A.L.R.4th 1000 [designation as "scab"]; 85 A.L.R.4th 813 [false obituary or news report of death]; 87 A.L.R.2d 453 [attack on religious beliefs].)

In Megarry v. Norton (1955) 137 C.A.2d 581, 290 P.2d 571, defendant, warned by plaintiff women to stop illegal parking of his car in front of their business establishment, hung a sign on his car: "NUTS TO YOU--YOU OLD WITCH." Held, the words were clearly used in a derogatory sense, with the intent to expose plaintiffs to contempt and ridicule. (137 C.A.2d 583.)

In Menefee v. Codman (1957) 155 C.A.2d 396, 317 P.2d 1032, defendant published the following concerning plaintiff, a housewife, mother, teacher, and newspaper writer, who had taken a European trip: (a) "Some of us here think that [plaintiff] should have been named 'Narcissus.' Hunt up your psychology textbooks for that one." (b) "Who covered Audrey while Audrey covered the water front?" (c) Plaintiff on her trip "wore an old blouse and dirndl," and her husband should open a charge account so his wife "won't have to slink along the waterfront in an outdated dirndl," etc., accompanied with an advertisement for nightclothes. Held, all were libelous per se. (1) The innocent meaning suggestive of the Greek myth was negated by the reference to psychology textbooks; the statement, according to expert testimony, ascribed to her the sexual deviation known as narcissism, which had a tendency to expose her to contempt and obloquy, etc., and to injure her in her occupation of teacher and writer. (2) The reference to "cover," in its context, referred to the sexual act and clearly exposed her to ridicule. (c) The third publication similarly exposed her to ridicule, etc., and had a clear tendency to injure her in her occupation as a teacher and writer. (155 C.A.2d 402.) (See Shumate v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 121, 131, 293 P.2d 531 [false suggestions that plaintiff was sexual deviate and untrue to her husband].)

In Maidman v. Jewish Publications (1960) 54 C.2d 643, 7 C.R. 617, 355 P.2d 265, plaintiff was a practicing attorney in Los Angeles, an active leader in the Jewish community, and chairman of the board of the official local B'nai B'rith paper. While representing a non-Jewish plaintiff in a trial, in response to the non-Jewish defense counsel's request for a continuance for the holiday of Rosh Hashanah, plaintiff stated that it was a "joyous holiday" on which the litigation could appropriately proceed, and the continuance was denied. Defendants, publishers of a rival Jewish community newspaper, had knowledge of the incident within 2 weeks. Some 13 months later, they published an editorial sarcastically deriding plaintiff's statements. Plaintiff alleged these facts and malice. Held, the complaint stated a cause of action for libel per se. "[C]omments and opinions claimed to be libelous need not reach the extremity of vituperation before they become libelous. Maidman, who was allegedly a prominent leader in Jewish affairs, was accused of being unworthy of his high position in B'nai B'rith, of knowing less about his religion than an adolescent child and of causing all Jewry to look ridiculous. The charges made by defendant were aptly chosen to expose Maidman to the contempt and ridicule of the other members of B'nai B'rith as well as of his coreligionists generally." (54 C.2d 650.) The editorial also tended to injure plaintiff in his occupation as an attorney, by implying that he deliberately misled the court in order to obtain an advantage for his client and a disadvantage to the other parties. (54 C.2d 651.)

In Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 46 C.R. 135, plaintiffs, doing a public paving job, received some time extensions. At a city council meeting, the public works director said that the work was not progressing satisfactorily and that the contractor had been notified that he was subject to liquidated damages. Defendant, a local newspaper, published a report of the director's remarks, adding that the city's problems "are reminiscent of an earlier situation ... where a cheaply bid job dragged on for months past the original target date." Held, this was libelous per se, impliedly charging plaintiffs "with conduct inconsistent with the due fulfillment of what they, by virtue of their employment, had undertaken." (236 C.A.2d 411.)

In Patton v. Royal Industries (1968) 263 C.A.2d 760, 70 C.R. 44, plaintiffs, skilled workmen, quit defendant's employ to go into business for themselves. Defendant sent a letter to many potential customers of plaintiffs stating that they had been "terminated" and "replaced with personnel having more experience and knowledge." Held, this was a serious reflection on their abilities, and libelous per se. (263 C.A.2d 767.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.2; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §192 et seq.

79 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

2. Illustrations of Libel Per Se.

dd. Ascribing Damaging Statements to Plaintiff.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 545

[§ 545] Ascribing Damaging Statements to Plaintiff.

Falsely ascribing statements to the plaintiff which would have the same damaging effect as a defamatory statement about him or her may be libel. (See Kerby v. Hal Roach Studios (1942) 53 C.A.2d 207, 213, 127 P.2d 577 [studio advertising scheme involved sending suggestive letters purportedly signed by plaintiff]; 27 San Diego L. Rev. 247 [fabricated quotations].)

In Cameron v. Wernick (1967) 251 C.A.2d 890, 60 C.R. 102, plaintiff and defendant W collaborated as authors of a book. Defendant W and defendant C Co., publisher of a magazine of large circulation, published an article in which plaintiff was quoted as urging haste in publication and saying: "I can't be the only man in this country with an eye for a fast buck." The article also stated that while reporting to his collaborators a sales figure of about 4,000, he was quoted in a local newspaper as giving a figure of half a million. Held, both statements were libelous per se. The first indicated questionable business ethics; the second could be reasonably construed as a falsehood either to the press or to collaborators. (251 C.A.2d 894.)

In Selleck v. Globe Int. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1123, 212 C.R. 838, plaintiff, father of TV celebrity Tom Selleck, brought an action against defendant, publisher of a magazine featuring items about celebrities in the entertainment world. The article complained of was headlined "Tom Selleck's Love Secrets--By His Father," and contained a number of statements attributed to plaintiff which disparaged and downgraded the romantic character and capacity of his son. Plaintiff alleged that he never gave an interview to any of defendant's reporters and never made any statements to anyone concerning his son's "love secrets." Held, a cause of action was stated; the publication was libelous on its face. The content of the article, viewed in conjunction with the headline, clearly conveyed the impression that plaintiff had granted an interview to defendant in which he divulged for public dissemination matters that his son had revealed to him in confidence. Although some of the statements attributed to plaintiff were innocuous, others were not; e.g., Tom Selleck is "ill at ease with women," and "he' just not the person they think he should be." Some readers could consider these matters to be of the type that Tom Selleck expected his father not to divulge, because they damaged Tom Selleck's image as "TV" sexiest leading man." Because plaintiff himself was not a celebrity who would benefit by publicity, the article was subject to the inference that he was paid to divulge his son's secrets to defendant, "imputing to plaintiff a

Judas-like betrayal of his son." (166 C.A.3d 1132.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

80 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

3. Statements Not Susceptible of Defamatory Meaning.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 546

[§ 546] In General.

Statements not susceptible on their face of defamatory meaning are not actionable without a showing of special damage. (See supra, §541.)

In Sullivan v. Warner Bros. Theatres (1941) 42 C.A.2d 660, 109 P.2d 760, defendant, manager of a neighborhood theatre, urged employees and their friends to boycott an ice cream store that advertised a rival theatre, and called the store "disloyal ... to the neighborhood." Held, the ordinary meaning of the charge, where no special duty of loyalty was owed, was merely "uncooperative," and it was not libelous. (42 C.A.2d 663.)

In Harris v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1942) 49 C.A.2d 340, 121 P.2d 761, an article stated that plaintiff, a school board member, had opposed a students' savings bank system because they "should spend their money and let the Government take care of them when they are old." Held, this was not libelous per se; it was the expression of a widely prevalent political or economic theory, and injury would have to be specially shown. (49 C.A.2d 346.)

In Howard v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 95 C.A.2d 580, 213 P.2d 399, defendant's newspaper published a letter from a reader attacking plaintiff, who was leading a movement to recall city officers. The letter (a) asserted that the recall sponsors made no specific charges or proof, (b) denounced the movement as "illegitimate," a "mala fide attempt" to discredit officials, a "sinister movement," and (c) described the recall committee as "a disgrace to Glendale" and a "dangerous and unjust element." Held, on demurrer, there was no libel per se. "The justness and good faith of the recall were questioned without any words casting doubt upon the character of the members of the recall committee or the integrity of their actions apart from their active support of the recall." (95 C.A.2d 585.) "Mere expressions of opinion or severe criticism are not libelous if they clearly go only to the merits or demerits of a condition, cause or controversy which is under public scrutiny, even though they may adversely reflect upon the public activities or fitness for office of individuals who are intimately connected with the principal object of the attack." (95 C.A.2d 584.)

In Smith v. Los Angeles Bookbinders Union (1955) 133 C.A.2d 486, 284 P.2d 194, defendant labor union wrote

existing and potential customers of plaintiffs referring to their wage level (below union scale) and asserting that unlike other binders, plaintiffs were not bidding on equipment, quality, and service, but on their wage scale. Held, the language was capable of the innocent meaning that plaintiffs were running a nonunion shop and based their bids on a low cost of production; in other words, the letter was an appeal to customers to direct their business to a union shop. (133 C.A.2d 492.)

In Miller v. Bakersfield News-Bulletin (1975) 44 C.A.3d 899, 119 C.R. 92, defendant newspaper was opposing plaintiff's candidacy for reelection to the county board of supervisors. It published a statement attributed to Will Rogers, that he had never met a person he did not like, and added: "Will Rogers never met our supervisor." Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. "The entire thrust of the alleged libel is that the plaintiff is a disagreeable person and that the voters should consider this in voting. No crime is thereby attributed to plaintiff, no attribution of lack of integrity, no loathsome disease nor even any serious character defect. ... It is also an expression of opinion in an area in which individuals are prone to make their own judgments. Someone who is disagreeable to one person is a 'free spirit' to another. In fact, history is replete with examples of persons who have made capital of doing things which make them unloved and therefore noticed." (44 C.A.3d 902.) Moreover, in view of plaintiff's aspiration for public office, it is even more clear that no libel was committed by an opinion concerning a personality trait. (44 C.A.3d 902, citing Yorty v. Chandler (1970) 13 C.A.3d 467, 91 C.R. 709, infra, §548.)

The following cases are also illustrative:

Corman v. Blanchard (1962) 211 C.A.2d 126, 132, 27 C.R. 327 [pamphlet, attacking plaintiff Congressional candidate by stating allegedly subversive views of organizations endorsing him, was not libelous per se because it did not suggest that he had subversive views].

Washburn v. Wright (1968) 261 C.A.2d 789, 796, 799, 68 C.R. 224 [in the "mental climate of 1964," it was not defamatory per se to call person in California an "extremist," or to falsely ascribe membership in John Birch Society].

Okun v. Superior Court (1981) 29 C.3d 442, 450, 451, 454, 459, 175 C.R. 157, 629 P.2d 1369 ["rhetorical hyperbole" in public debate on proposed referendum].

Carr v. Warden (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1166, 1170, 206 C.R. 162 [statement of opinion in heat of a political controversy].

Alszev v. Home Box Office (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1456, 1460, 80 C.R.2d 16 [reasonable person could not believe that plaintiff and person depicted in unfavorable light in documentary were one and the same, despite fact that other person was allegedly connected with business having name similar to plaintiff's business].

Rosenaur v. Scherer (2001) 88 C.A.4th 260, 280, 105 C.R.2d 674 [in heated exchange during initiative campaign, opponent of measure called its drafter "thief" and "liar"; no liability, because anyone overhearing remarks would have regarded them as campaign hyperbole, rather than as accusation that drafter had criminal past].

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

81 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

3. Statements Not Susceptible of Defamatory Meaning.

bb. Humor or Parody.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 547

[§ 547] Humor or Parody.

Statements intended as humor or parody may in certain circumstances convey a defamatory meaning and be actionable even if the words used could not be understood in their literal sense or believed to be true. However, if the reasonable reader or hearer of the statements would understand that they could not have been intended to convey a provable false assertion of fact, but were clearly a mere joke or parody, there is no defamation as a matter of law. As in other defamation actions, the statements must be considered in their original context with respect to the totality of the circumstances. (Couch v. San Juan Unified School Dist. (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1491, 1500, 1501, 39 C.R.2d 848 [high school student newspaper article allegedly identifying campus security officer as murderer and drug dealer was not actionable, where average reader would have recognized it as parody of multiple choice test]; see San Francisco Bay Guardian v. Superior Court (1993) 17 C.A.4th 655, 658, 21 C.R.2d 464 [fake letter suggesting that plaintiff was happy with electroshock because it made his tenants more cooperative was not actionable where it appeared in edition of newspaper clearly marked as a parody of itself]; 57 A.L.R.4th 520 [libel by statement made in jest].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

3. Statements Not Susceptible of Defamatory Meaning.

cc. Political Cartoons.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 548

[§ 548] Political Cartoons.

Political caricature has a long journalistic history: "From Daumier and Tenniel to Low and Herblock the political cartoon has occupied a central position in the presentation of critical comment on events and personages of the times." (Yorty v. Chandler (1970) 13 C.A.3d 467, 471, 91 C.R. 709.) A cartoon is nevertheless subject to the law of libel if it maliciously presents as fact defamatory material that is false. "For example, a political cartoon which falsely depicts a public official selling franchises for personal gain, or a judge taking a bribe, or an attorney altering a public record, or a police officer shooting a defenseless prisoner, will not be exempt from redress under the laws of libel merely because the charge is depicted graphically in linear form rather than verbally in written statement." (Yorty v. Chandler, supra, 13 C.A.3d 472; see Snively v. Record Publishing Co. (1921) 185 C. 565, 580, 198 P. 1 [newspaper cartoon attacking chief of police; "common interest" privilege of C.C. 47(c) applied in absence of malice]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §152; 52 A.L.R.4th 424 [defamation by cartoon].)

In the Yorty case, plaintiff, mayor of Los Angeles, held a press conference in which he expressed interest in the cabinet post of Secretary of Defense. Defendant Los Angeles Times then printed a cartoon showing the mayor at his desk telephone, with white-coated medical orderlies standing beside him, one holding a straightjacket and the other beckoning with his finger. The caption was, "I've got to go now ... I've been appointed Secretary of Defense and the Secret Service men are here!" Plaintiff alleged that the cartoon was intended to convey the meaning that he suffered from the delusion that he had been appointed to the post, and that he was therefore insane. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The cartoon was not libelous in implying that the Mayor was unqualified for high national office. This was admittedly the opinion expressed in the cartoon, i.e., that the Mayor's aspirations so outran his qualifications as to be popularly described as "insane, mad, or crazy." But it was a proper comment, though presented in rhetorical hyperbole. (13 C.A.3d 473.)

(b) The meaning ascribed by plaintiff, that the cartoon depicted him as in fact insane, would have been libelous, but it was not susceptible of that meaning. Popular usage of words such as insane, mad, or crazy "to express the idea of excessive optimism, extravagant expectation, overweening ambition, foolish hope, distraction with eager desire," goes back to Milton and Shakespeare. (13 C.A.3d 474.)

(c) Hence, the lower court properly concluded that the publication was not defamatory: "It is simply impossible to believe that a viewer of the cartoon would not have understood exactly what was meant: it was Mayor Yorty's public aspiration for appointment as Secretary of Defense which was being ridiculed. No reader could have thought that either the cartoonist or the editor of the Los Angeles Times was charging Mayor Yorty with mental derangement or mental incompetency. On the contrary, even the most careless reader must have perceived that the cartoon was no more than rhetorical hyperbole, a vigorous expression of opinion by those who considered Mayor Yorty's aspiration for high national office preposterous. To penalize defendants for publishing this political cartoon would subvert the most fundamental meaning of a free press, protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments." (13 C.A.3d 476.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §151.

83 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

3. Statements Not Susceptible of Defamatory Meaning.

dd. Employee Evaluation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 549

[§ 549] Employee Evaluation.

In Jensen v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 958, 18 C.R.2d 83, plaintiff, an employee of defendant corporation, received an unfavorable written performance evaluation from his supervisor. The evaluation stated that plaintiff had been the subject of some third-party complaints, was not carrying his weight, had a negative attitude in dealing with others, evidenced a lack of direction in his project activities, and was unwilling to take responsibility for the projects he oversaw. After defendant's internal investigation affirmed the evaluation, plaintiff instituted the present defamation action. Held, judgment of nonsuit for defendant affirmed; the evaluation could not reasonably have been understood to have a libelous meaning.

(a) With regard to its context, the evaluation was a management tool used for the legitimate business purpose of judging and documenting employee performance. There was nothing in plaintiff's case suggesting that his evaluation was anything other than business as usual. With regard to its content, the evaluation contained nothing suggesting that plaintiff lacked honesty, integrity, or the inherent ability to do his job, or that he had reprehensible personal characteristics. (14 C.A.4th 970.) And even if the content consisted of comments that were objectively unjustified or made in bad faith, those comments could not provide a basis for defamation, because they would be statements of opinion, instead of false statements of fact. (14 C.A.4th 971.)

(b) "Based on the facts here, we hold that unless an employer's performance evaluation falsely accuses an employee of criminal conduct, lack of integrity, dishonesty, incompetence or reprehensible personal characteristics or behavior ... , it cannot support a cause of action for libel. This is true even when the employer's perceptions about the employee's efforts, attitude, performance, potential or worth to the enterprise are objectively wrong and cannot be supported by reference to concrete, provable facts." (14 C.A.4th 965.) (On qualified privilege for communications concerning qualifications of applicant for employment, see infra, §596.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

84 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

4. Statements Susceptible of Multiple Meanings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 550

[§ 550] Statements Susceptible of Multiple Meanings.

At one time, it was held that language is not libelous per se if the implied defamatory charge or insinuation leaves room for some innocent interpretation. (See Peabody v. Barham (1942) 52 C.A.2d 581, 584, 126 P.2d 668 [statement in defendant's newspaper that "Peabody's divorcing wife ... is also his aunt" was not libelous per se, for it might imply, instead of incestuous marriage, valid marriage to aunt by affinity (widow of deceased uncle)].) This rule was repudiated in MacLeod v. Tribune Publishing Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 536, 343 P.2d 36. Language may be libelous per se despite the possibility of an innocent interpretation. In McLeod, a dentist who ran for a local city council alleged that defendant printed a front page article in an election extra stating that the "People's World," a communist paper, had recommended his election; that the intended meaning was that he was a communist sympathizer or fellow traveler; and that this was false. Defendant asserted the possible innocent interpretation that support by communists might have been given to a person opposed to their views in order to taint him and aid in his defeat, rather than to one sympathetic to their views. "Such hair-splitting analysis of language has no place in the law of defamation, dealing as it does with the impact of communications between ordinary human beings. ... It protects, not the innocent defamer whose words are libelous only because of facts unknown to him, but the clever writer versed in the law of defamation who deliberately casts a grossly defamatory imputation in ambiguous language. It not only finds no support in, but is contrary to, the provisions of section 45a, which define, not language susceptible of only one meaning, but language that carries a defamatory meaning on its face. It would be a reproach to the law to hold that a defendant intent on destroying the reputation of a political opponent ... could achieve his purpose without liability by casting his defamatory language in the form of an insinuation that left room for an unintended innocent meaning." (52 C.2d 550.) (See Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 C.3d 792, 805, 163 C.R. 628, 608 P.2d 716 ["In determining the defamatory nature of written material, the fact that some person might, with extra sensitive perception, understand such a meaning cannot compel the court to establish liability at so low a threshold"]; Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 410, 46 C.R. 135, supra, §544 [language may be libelous on face even though susceptible of innocent meaning]; Mullins v. Brando (1970) 13 C.A.3d 409, 414, 91 C.R. 796 [defamatory impact measured by natural and probable effect on mind of average reader]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 88; 7 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 560.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

85 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

a. Libel.

5. (New) No Defamation by Omission.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 550A

[§ 550A] (New) No Defamation by Omission.

Paterno v. Superior Court (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1342, 78 C.R.3d 244, involved a novel theory of liability characterized by one party as "defamation by omissions." A newspaper publisher brought a defamation action against a university journalist for statements in a magazine article about the newspaper. The article stated that the newspaper had decided to "kill" a story about a drunk driving sentence imposed on its editorial page editor and that the newspaper pursued, and subsequently dropped, a workplace restraining order against a former employee, incurring legal costs and fees. Plaintiff did not challenge the truth of these statements, but asserted that the statements should be deemed false for defendant's failure to include available material facts explaining the reasons for plaintiff's decisions, thereby falsely implying improper motives. Held, there was no actionable defamation.

(a) Defendant had no constitutional obligation to include plaintiff's explanation for deciding not to publish the drunk driving story. The First Amendment allows nonobjective writing intended to expose wrongdoing and arouse righteous anger. (163 C.A.4th 1351.)

(b) Defendant had no obligation to include plaintiff's explanation of the context of the legal proceedings. Defendant's report of the court proceeding was absolutely privileged as fair report of a statement made in a legal proceeding (see text, §585 et seq.), and therefore there was no basis to explore whether defendant's statement was misleading. (163 C.A.4th 1353.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

86 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

b. Slander.

1. Statutory Definition.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 551

[§ 551] Statutory Definition.

Slander is "a false and unprivileged publication, orally uttered," that does one or more of the following:

- (1) "Charges any person with crime, or having been indicted, convicted, or punished for crime." (C.C. 46(1).)
- (2) "Imputes in him the present existence of an infectious, contagious, or loathsome disease." (C.C. 46(2).)
- (3) "Tends directly to injure him in respect to his office, profession, trade or business, either by imputing to him general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his office, profession, trade, or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profits." (C.C. 46(3).)
- (4) "Imputes to him impotence or a want of chastity." (C.C. 46(4).)
- (5) "[B]y natural consequence, causes actual damage." (C.C. 46(5).)

Contrasting this definition with that of libel (C.C. 45, supra, §539), the limited nature of the tort of slander becomes apparent. Only certain types of oral statements are presumed injurious; to recover for any other utterances, actual damage must be pleaded and proved. (See Rest.2d, Torts §570 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §408; 14 Cal. L. Rev. 61; 6 So. Cal. L. Rev. 253; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 347, 349.) If damage can be proved, e.g., discharge from employment, loss of opportunity for employment, loss of business customers or professional clients, etc., the action can be maintained. (See Rest.2d, Torts §575.)

Despite its broad language, C.C. 46 is limited to statements that either directly or implicitly disparage plaintiff personally, and does not encompass trade libel (infra, §645). (Polygram Records v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 543, 550, 216 C.R. 252.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6.1, 11 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

87 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

b. Slander.

2. Slander Per Se.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 552

[§ 552] Slander Per Se.

In the statutory definition (C.C. 46, supra, §551), the first four classes of statements are slanderous per se. With respect to the charge of crime, it is usually held that the offense must be one involving moral turpitude, indictable or punishable by death or imprisonment; lesser offenses harmful to reputation may be the basis of a libel, but are not slander per se. (See Clay v. Lagiss (1956) 143 C.A.2d 441, 448, 299 P.2d 1025 [charge of theft is slander per se]; Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 C.3d 301, 307, 81 C.R. 855, 461 P.2d 39 [charge of possession of "hot" title to car was slander per se]; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 65.)

The general rule makes it slander per se to charge a woman with unchastity. (See Rest.2d, Torts §574.) The California statute goes further and includes a charge of unchastity against a man or woman, or a charge of impotence. (C.C. 46, supra; Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 C.A.2d 827, 832, 271 P.2d 588 [charge that plaintiff, a woman cook and caterer, had syphilis was slander per se under C.C. 46(2), (3), (4)]; but cf. Martin v. Sutter (1922) 60 C.A. 8, 12, 212 P. 60 [calling woman a "bitch" does not impute unchastity and is not slander per se].) (See 3 A.L.R.4th 752 [imputation of homosexuality as defamation].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.6.1, 11 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

88 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

b. Slander.

3. Injury to Business or Professional Reputation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 553

[§ 553] Injury to Business or Professional Reputation.

An oral statement that tends directly to injure a person in respect to his or her office, profession, trade, or business may be slander per se. (See C.C. 46(3), supra, §551; Rest.2d, Torts §573; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §212 et seq.; 30 Proof of Facts 3d 53 [slander actions by or against attorneys or physicians]; 5 So. Cal. L. Rev. 655; 3 A.L.R.2d 8 [imputation of incapacity, inefficiency, misconduct, fraud, dishonesty, or the like by public officer or employee]; 1 A.L.R.3d 844 [charge of being a "crook"]; 13 A.L.R.3d 1286 [charge that "slut," "bitch," or "son of a bitch"]; 23 A.L.R.3d 652 [charge of mental disorder]; 29 A.L.R.3d 961 [charge of shoplifting]; 106 A.L.R.5th 475 [defamation of building contractor or subcontractor other than through statement charging breach or nonperformance of contract]; 108 A.L.R.5th 495 [defamation of member of clergy]; 120 A.L.R.5th 483 [criticism or disparagement of dentist's character, competence, or conduct as defamation].)

A general charge of dishonesty or immorality not amounting to a charge of crime, and not tending directly to injure the plaintiff in any business, profession, office, or occupation, is not actionable per se, and plaintiff must prove special damage in order to recover. But an attack on the honesty of an employee or business person endangers his or her position, and is actionable per se. Thus, a statement that a jeweler was a "crook" and "got away" with a ring entrusted to him reflected on his integrity as a bailee, and directly injured him in his business and constituted slander per se. (Williams v. Seiglitz (1921) 186 C. 767, 772, 200 P. 635.)

A statement that plaintiff, a school principal, was about to be dropped because his superior considered him "a weak spot" in the school system, was slanderous per se, imputing to the plaintiff a "general disqualification" in those respects that his profession "peculiarly requires," within the meaning of C.C. 46. (Oberkotter v. Woolman (1921) 187 C. 500, 503, 202 P. 669.)

Imputation of a want of integrity in one holding a private office of confidence or trust is slander per se; i.e., C.C. 46(3) is not restricted to public office. (Correia v. Santos (1961) 191 C.A.2d 844, 854, 13 C.R. 132 [plaintiff president of nonprofit corporation called liar, insane in command, etc.])

In Stoneking v. Briggs (1967) 254 C.A.2d 563, 62 C.R. 249, plaintiff was president of a local union. Difficulties of control arose and the international held a hearing and placed it under trusteeship. Defendant B, appointed by the international for this purpose, made a number of statements to newspaper reporters that were the subject of articles in newspapers of wide circulation in the locality. This action was brought for slander on the basis of the oral statements made to the reporters, and damages were sought on the basis of foreseeable republication of the slander in the articles. (No libel suit was brought against the newspaper, doubtless because of the retraction statute and privilege.) Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. B's statements that the local union had been taken over, that plaintiff and another had been removed from office, and that the two officers had been under long investigation, carried with it the insinuation of plaintiff's incompetence as a union officer, directly injuring him in that capacity. (254 C.A.2d 573.)

The following cases are also illustrative:

Swan v. Thompson (1899) 124 C. 193, 199, 56 P. 878 [charge that a master mariner "was in the habit of getting drunk"].

Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 C.A.2d 827, 832, 271 P.2d 588 [charge that cook and caterer had syphilis].

Larive v. Willitt (1957) 154 C.A.2d 140, 142, 315 P.2d 732 [charge that high school principal permitted pupils to "pet" in hallways without being disciplined].

Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary School Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 224, 234, 11 C.R. 97, 359 P.2d 465 [charge that school superintendent received "kickbacks" and engaged in "shady dealings"].

Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 C.3d 301, 306, 81 C.R. 855, 461 P.2d 39 [car dealer accused of having "hot" title].

Mercado v. Hoefler (1961) 190 C.A.2d 12, 22, 11 C.R. 787, infra, §636 [statements impugning plaintiff's vocational capacity].

Hanley v. Lund (1963) 218 C.A.2d 633, 644, 32 C.R. 733 [statements accusing doctor of malpractice].

White v. Valenta (1965) 234 C.A.2d 243, 250, 44 C.R. 241 [car dealer called "son of a bitch"].

Douglas v. Janis (1974) 43 C.A.3d 931, 938, 118 C.R. 280 [charges that plaintiff, producer of unsuccessful TV show from which he had made $ 100,000, had "taken" the money and "stolen" it from investors].

Albertini v. Schaefer (1979) 97 C.A.3d 822, 829, 159 C.R. 98 [calling attorney "crook"].

Kelly v. General Tel. Co. (1982) 136 C.A.3d 278, 285, 186 C.R. 184 [statement that plaintiff employee falsified invoices].

Palm Springs Tennis Club v. Rangel (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1, 5, 86 C.R.2d 73 [tennis club did not plead cause of action for libel, where it failed to plead that allegedly libelous statements about club officer had direct relation to club's trade or business].

Mann v. Quality Old Time Service (2004) 120 C.A.4th 90, 106, 15 C.R.3d 215 [informing customer of business maintaining industrial water systems that it used illegal chemicals and dumped them into city and storm drains].

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.9, 10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 A.L.R.6th 657 [criticism and disparagement of veterinarian's or animal trainer's competence or conduct as defamation]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §202 et seq.

89 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

b. Slander.

4. Statement Made in Jest.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 554

[§ 554] Statement Made in Jest.

The mere fact that the defendant intended his or her defamatory language only as a joke is not controlling unless it would be so understood by a reasonable person. But if a reasonable or "fair-minded" person would understand it as a joke, it is not actionable. (See Arno v. Stewart (1966) 245 C.A.2d 955, 965, 54 C.R. 392 [television announcer referred to invited vocalist as an "iron-clad singing member of the Mafia"; statement greeted with laughter from all present]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §157; 57 A.L.R.4th 520 [slander by statement made in jest].)

In Polygram Records v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 543, 216 C.R. 252, plaintiff Rege, who distributed wines under his own name, claimed that he had been defamed by a joke told by a performer during a comedy performance at a night club and republished in audio and video form. ("There are White wines, there are Red wines, but why are there no Black wines like: REGE, a MOTHERFUCKER. It goes with fish, meat, any damn thing it wants to.") Held, the statements were not defamatory as a matter of law.

(a) The statements, made in jest and a very small part of a comedy performance, were a spoof or parody of advertising practices and wine snobbery based on the fantasy of a black wine, and were "obvious figments of a comic imagination impossible for any sensible person to take seriously." Also, "in light of the occasion at which the joke was delivered and the attending circumstances, ... as a matter of law, it was not defamatory." (170 C.A.3d 556, 557.)

(b) Plaintiff's argument that the joke associated his wines with blacks, allegedly "a socio-economic group commonly considered to be the antithesis of wine connoisseurs," who "harbor obviously unsophisticated tastes in wines," was untenable. Even if it is assumed that the joke conveyed the alleged meanings, plaintiff could not recover on the theory that his wine had been disparaged by its association with a particular racial group. "Courts will not condone theories of recovery which promote or effectuate discriminatory conduct." (170 C.A.3d 557.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §155.

90 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

3. Defamatory Character of Statement.

c. Pleading and Proof of Defamatory Meaning.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 555

[§ 555] Pleading and Proof of Defamatory Meaning.

(1) Use of Statement in Defamatory Sense. Where words or other matters are of ambiguous meaning, or are innocent on their face but defamatory in light of extrinsic circumstances (i.e., not defamatory "per se"), the plaintiff must plead and prove that they were used in a particular meaning that makes them defamatory (the "innuendo"). (See Washer v. Bank of America (1943) 21 C.2d 822, 829, 136 P.2d 297; Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 637, 645, 85 C.R.2d 397, infra, §558, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §563, Comment f; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §409; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §442; on pleading innuendo, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§698, 699.)

In Washer v. Bank of America, supra, the complaint alleged that plaintiff had been discharged from defendant's employ, and that defendant's officer declared that defendant could not reinstate anyone who "had admitted he had falsified his expense account" and had been guilty of "flagrant insubordination"; that the statements were intended to convey the idea that plaintiff was guilty of the crime of embezzlement and was an unsatisfactory worker; and that as a result, plaintiff was unable to secure employment in any bank. Held, a cause of action was stated. (a) The word "falsify" could imply either an intentional or unintentional act, and, because the charge might have an innocent meaning, it was necessary to plead by way of innuendo that the defamatory meaning was intended; and this was done. (21 C.2d 828.) (b) The other statement related to his qualifications as an employee, was defamatory on its face, and no innuendo was necessary. (21 C.2d 828.)

However, the innuendo cannot be used to ascribe a meaning of which the words are not fairly susceptible in the light of the extrinsic facts alleged. (Chavez v. Times-Mirror Co. (1921) 185 C. 20, 25, 195 P. 666; Mellen v. Times-Mirror Co. (1914) 167 C. 587, 590, 140 P. 277; Vedovi v. Watson & Taylor (1930) 104 C.A. 80, 85, 285 P. 418; Corman v. Blanchard (1962) 211 C.A.2d 126, 138, 37 C.R. 327; Yorty v. Chandler (1970) 13 C.A.3d 467, 474, 91 C.R. 709, supra, §548; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 230.)

(2) Statement Reasonably Understood as Defamatory. Where the language is ambiguous, the extrinsic circumstances that show that the third person to whom the statement was published reasonably understood it in its derogatory sense must also be alleged (the "inducement"). (Grand v. Dreyfus (1898) 122 C. 58, 62, 54 P. 389; Vedovi v. Watson & Taylor, supra; Peabody v. Barham (1942) 52 C.A.2d 581, 585, 126 P.2d 668; see Palm Springs Tennis Club v. Rangel (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1, 5, 86 C.R.2d 73 [tennis club did not plead cause of action for libel, where it failed to plead that readers of documents published by defendants had special knowledge of facts from which they could discern that allegedly libelous comments about club officer defamed club]; Rest.2d, Torts §563, Comment f; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §409; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §697; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §441.) (On proof of inducement, see 69 Harv. L. Rev. 893; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 339; 1 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 163.)

(3) Application of Statement to Plaintiff. If the statements do not mention the plaintiff by name, it must be alleged that they were published or spoken concerning him or her (the "colloquium"). (See Washer v. Bank of America, supra, 21 C.2d 829; Semple v. Andrews (1938) 27 C.A.2d 228, 233, 81 P.2d 203; Ringler Associates v. Maryland Cas. Co. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1165, 1179, 96 C.R.2d 136, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §563, Comment f; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §409; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §444; 54 A.L.R.4th 746 [sufficiency of identification of plaintiff]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §700.)

(4) Questions of Law and Fact. When the effect of the language can be determined on its face, the question whether it is defamatory is one of law for the court. If the matter could have two meanings, one harmless and the other defamatory, the court must determine whether, in the light of the extrinsic facts shown, the language was capable of the defamatory meaning claimed by the plaintiff. If it does so determine, then the jury determines whether it was used in that defamatory sense. (See Yorty v. Chandler, supra, 13 C.A.3d 475; Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1599, 1609, 284 C.R. 244, infra, §624; Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1260, 1270, 20 C.R.3d 673; Rest.2d, Torts §§614, 615; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 372; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §119 et seq.)

(5) Fictional Character Based on Plaintiff. The claim that a fictional character in a book or motion picture is a libel (or invasion of privacy) on a real plaintiff has been the subject of a number of cases. (See Bindrim v. Mitchell (1979) 92 C.A.3d 61, 75, 155 C.R. 29 [defamatory statements in novel; plaintiff identifiable as character in novel]; 16 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 99 [Defamation in Fiction: With Malice Toward None and Punitive Damages for All]; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1029 [Fiction Based on Fact: Writers' Liability for Libel or Invasion of Privacy].)

In Aguilar v. Universal City Studios (1985) 174 C.A.3d 384, 219 C.R. 891, defendant produced a motion picture ("Zoot Suit") based on the 1942 Sleepy Lagoon murder case and the ensuing "zoot suit" riots (see People v. Zammora (1944) 66 C.A.2d 166, 152 P.2d 180). Plaintiff claimed that she and a minor character in the movie named "Bertha" were the same person. On the basis of a scene implying that Bertha had intercourse in the back seat of a car, plaintiff alleged that she was falsely portrayed as a woman of loose morals. In contesting a summary judgment for defendant, plaintiff presented evidence that her name was also "Bertha," that she participated in the Sleepy Lagoon incident, and that others concluded that she was the Bertha in the picture. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff had to show that a reasonable person viewing the film would believe that "Bertha" was in fact plaintiff conducting herself as portrayed. (174 C.A.3d 387.) Merely showing a similarity or even identity of names does not satisfy this test. (174 C.A.3d 388.)

(b) There were no similarities between the two in terms of age or physical appearance. At the time of the Sleepy Lagoon incident, plaintiff was 13, while "Bertha" appeared to be substantially older; and plaintiff admitted that she did not look or dress like "Bertha." (174 C.A.3d 389.)

(c) Plaintiff's involvement in the incident bore no resemblance to "Bertha's." Plaintiff was not a member of the street gang involved in the incident and never attended their parties, while "Bertha" behaved in ways clearly suggesting that she was a gang member. (174 C.A.3d 390.) Plaintiff never dated the gang leader; "Bertha" was depicted as his ex-girlfriend. (174 C.A.3d 380.) Plaintiff was at the scene of the incident, but was neither a witness to the murder nor a defendant; she testified at the trial and later was placed in a state school for girls as a result of her conduct. "Bertha" was not shown as present during the incident, and there was no reference to any criminal or juvenile proceeding involving her. (174 C.A.3d 390.)

(d) The author of the play on which the movie was based testified that he did not know plaintiff and that he chose the name "Bertha" because it was associated with someone big and strong, the characteristics he desired for the role. An author must be given some latitude in choosing names for his characters, since in a country of this size, it would be remarkable if he chose a name used by no one. (174 C.A.3d 391.)

(e) A cause of action is not established merely because someone believed that plaintiff and "Bertha" were the same person; the belief must be reasonable. Here, plaintiff's only witness on this point based her belief solely on the coincidence of first names. She never saw plaintiff as a teenager and did not believe that plaintiff ever resembled "Bertha." (174 C.A.3d 391.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.79.1, 81, 82, 89, 105, 108

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Use of Statement in Defamatory Sense. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §425.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§742, 743.(2) Statement Reasonably Understood as Defamatory.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §741.

(3) Application of Statement to Plaintiff. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §427.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §744.

(4) Questions of Law and Fact. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §119 et seq.

91 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

a. Truth.

1. Nature of Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 556

[§ 556] Nature of Defense.

(1) Truth Is Complete Defense. Truth of the statements made is a complete defense against liability for defamation, regardless of bad faith or malicious purpose. (Washer v. Bank of America (1948) 87 C.A.2d 501, 509, 197 P.2d 202; Nova v. Flaherty (1956) 145 C.A.2d 761, 763, 303 P.2d 382; Swaffield v. Universal Ecscro Corp. (1969) 271 C.A.2d 147, 164, 76 C.R. 680; Campanelli v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 572, 581, 51 C.R.2d 891; Rest.2d, Torts §581A; see Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 C.A.3d 1299, 1309, 278 C.R. 306 [statement that plaintiff was incompetent surgeon was not actionable where issue of truth had been decided against him in writ proceeding]; Francis v. Dun & Bradstreet (1992) 3 C.A.4th 535, 540, 4 C.R.2d 361, citing the text [credit report, even one causing harm, is not defamatory if true]; Ellenberger v. Espinosa (1994) 30 C.A.4th 943, 953, 36 C.R.2d 360, citing the text [statements as to dentist's misconduct were true given Board of Dental Examiners' determination that dentist had been grossly negligent and in violation of provisions of Business and Professions Code]; Schmidt v. Foundation Health (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1702, 1715, 42 C.R.2d 172 [statements that rebate scheme of health care plan broker was "illegal," "violated" regulations, and was "shady and unethical" were not actionable, where rebate scheme was, in fact, illegal]; Jackson v. Paramount Pictures Corp. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 10, 30, 80 C.R.2d 1 [use of "racy" language did not change fact that defendants truthfully reported that police were looking for tape showing plaintiff having sex with minor]; 2 California Affirmative Defenses, §51:1 et seq.; 16 Stanf. L. Rev. 789 [constitutionality of limitations on truth defense]; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.136 et seq.; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.20; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§410, 411; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§268, 269; 22 Proof of Facts 3d 305; BAJI, 7.07; CACI, No. 1720.) Also, privacy principles do not impact the effect of truth as a defense in a defamation action. (Hughes v. Hughes (2004) 122 C.A.4th 931, 939, footnote 17, 19 C.R.3d 247.)

Raising this defense may sometimes have adverse effects. In Shumate v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 121, 293 P.2d 531, the court quoted the following from a federal decision: "There is always a certain risk involved in the pleading of truth as a defense, since in proper cases and under proper instructions the jury may infer malice from the fact that a defendant repeats the defamatory matter, which is later found to be false." Accordingly, where defendant magazine publisher verified an answer alleging that the statements were true, and their falsity was established at the trial, an inference of malice was properly drawn by the jury and supported an award of exemplary damages. (139 C.A.2d 138, footnote 6.)

(2) Truth and Privilege Are Distinct Defenses. Although certain earlier California cases took a contrary position (see Dauphiny v. Buhne (1908) 153 C. 757, 761, 96 P. 880), it is now settled that the defenses of truth and of privilege (see infra, §561 et seq.) are distinct. If privileged, the publication may be false, and the words defamatory per se. (Snively v. Record Publishing Co. (1921) 185 C. 565, 574, 198 P. 1; Maher v. Devlin (1928) 203 C. 270, 275, 263 P. 812; Freeman v. Mills (1950) 97 C.A.2d 161, 166, 217 P.2d 687; Gantry Const. Co. v. American Pipe & Const. Co. (1975) 49 C.A.3d 186, 197, 122 C.R. 834, citing the text; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §413; 10 Cal. L. Rev. 84; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 693; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 226.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.41, 52 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Truth Is Complete Defense. See Terry v. Davis Community Church (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1534, 1553, 33 C.R.3d 145 [when plaintiff cannot negate defense of truth with admissible evidence, dismissal is compelled]; Gilbert v. Sykes (2007) 147 C.A.4th 13, 28, 53 C.R.3d 752 [as matter of law, before-and-after photographs on website of defendant patient that were substantially accurate representations of results of plastic surgery by plaintiff were not defamatory]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.20; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §249 et seq.; 99 Proof of Facts 3d 393 [establishing affirmative defense against defamation claim].

92 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

a. Truth.

2. Truth of Substance of Charge Is Sufficient.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 557

[§ 557] Truth of Substance of Charge Is Sufficient.

The defendant must "justify," i.e., show the truth of the statements, in the sense in which the plaintiff's innuendo explains their defamatory character, provided, of course, that they are capable of the meaning imputed by the innuendo. (Pyper v. Jennings (1920) 47 C.A. 623, 628, 191 P. 565; see 66 Harv. L. Rev. 484; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 932; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 370; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 314; on innuendo, see supra, §555.) But the defendant need not justify every word of the alleged defamatory matter; it is sufficient if the substance of the charge be proved true, irrespective of slight inaccuracy in the details. (Heuer v. Kee (1936) 15 C.A.2d 710, 714, 50 P.2d 1063; Glenn v. Gibson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 649, 658, 171 P.2d 118; Swaffield v. Universal Ecsco Corp. (1969) 271 C.A.2d 147, 164, 76 C.R. 680; Gantry Const. Co. v. American Pipe & Const. Co. (1975) 49 C.A.3d 186, 194, 122 C.R. 834, citing the text.) "The concept that it is the gist or sting of the alleged defamatory statements that must be false rather than the specific details of the charge is deeply rooted in our common law." (Weller v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 991, 1009, footnote 17, 283 C.R. 644.) (See Campanelli v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 572, 581, 51 C.R.2d 891 [admission that plaintiff basketball coach engaged in tirades so bad that seven players were thinking of quitting established truth of defendant's assertion that players "were in trouble psychologically"]; Hughes v. Hughes (2004) 122 C.A.4th 931, 936, 19 C.R.3d 247 [evidence of father's past activity was relevant and sufficient to establish truth of sons' statement "Our Dad's a pimp"; fact finder could reasonably conclude that gist or sting of remark did not depend on when father was pimp]; Rest.2d, Torts §581A, Comment f.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Carver v. Bonds (2005) 135 C.A.4th 328, 345, 37 C.R.3d 480 [professional baseball player's statement in newspaper article about podiatrist ("He's a liar") was not substantially false and thus did not constitute actionable slander; term "liar" was broad enough to encompass podiatrist's dishonest acts, which athlete described and podiatrist did not deny, of threatening to lie to press about him and reneging on offer to supply him with free orthotics].

93 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

a. Truth.

3. Effect of Emphasizing Truthful Statement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 558

[§ 558] Effect of Emphasizing Truthful Statement.

In Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 C.A.4th 637, 85 C.R.2d 397, plaintiffs applied for a permit to operate a card room. Defendants, a local citizens group, supported another applicant. The attorney for plaintiffs was indicted on the criminal charge of attempting to influence a legislator on plaintiffs' behalf by preventing the opposing applicant from obtaining the requisite state gaming registration. These facts were accurately printed in a newspaper article, which defendants reproduced in full and sent to 35 other persons. No changes were made to the article and no comment was added, but defendants highlighted the one paragraph mentioning that the attorney represented plaintiffs in their attempt to obtain a permit. Claiming that this act implied that plaintiffs themselves were involved in the allegedly illegal activities of the attorney, they sued for defamation. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs conceded that the article as printed was true, and they did not claim that defendants in any way edited, altered, or rearranged its content. Instead, they contended that by emphasizing a truthful statement of fact, a person may expose himself or herself to liability for defamation if some third person may conceivably understand that emphasis as having a defamatory innuendo. "We are not prepared to extend the reach of the tort of defamation to such an extent. Truth is, of course, an absolute defense to any libel action. ... The truth of a fact is not altered by stating it forcefully. By the same token, a truthful and accurate statement of fact is not rendered defamatory simply by repeating it with greater emphasis. ... In short, no matter how emphatically it is stated or repeated, the truth is still the truth." (72 C.A.4th 648.)

(b) If plaintiffs' position were accepted, the effect would be to discourage the dissemination of accurate news reports, thereby raising obvious First Amendment concerns. In fact, writers and public speakers in general would have to ensure that they did not place the "wrong" emphasis on truthful, accurate statements of fact. In that event, the chilling effect on the free flow of ideas would be substantial. (72 C.A.4th 649.) Moreover, accepting plaintiffs' position would require the courts to make subjective considerations of what constitutes undue emphasis. Thus, courts in libel actions would have to consider the effect of underlining, italicization, and print size and style; courts in slander cases would be forced to analyze such matter as tone, inflection, and pitch. In short, the highlighter could be held liable if a person to whom the highlighted material was communicated misinterpreted it by giving the highlighted matter a falsely defamatory meaning, even if the highlighter had no such intent. (72 C.A.4th 649.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

94 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

a. Truth.

4. Accurate Repetition Is No Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 559

[§ 559] Accurate Repetition Is No Defense.

Where one person purports to repeat another's defamatory statement, he or she is merely republishing the same libel or slander (see supra, §537). Proof that the first person actually made the statement is therefore immaterial; to constitute a defense, the defamatory charge itself must be shown to be true. (Arditto v. Putnam (1963) 214 C.A.2d 633, 639, footnote 2, 29 C.R. 700, quoting the text; Rest.2d, Torts §581A, Comment e.) "If A says B is a thief, and C publishes the statement that A said B was a thief, in a certain sense this would be the truth, but not in the sense that the law means. ... [I]t would be but a repetition by him of a slanderous charge. His defense must consist in showing that in fact B is a thief." (Gilman v. McClatchy (1896) 111 C. 606, 612, 44 P. 241; see Ray v. Citizen-News Co. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 6, 8, 57 P.2d 527 ["[a] false statement is not less libelous because it is the repetition of rumor or gossip or of statements or allegations that others have made concerning the matter"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

95 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
- 4. Defenses.
- a. Truth.
- 5. Burden of Proof.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 560

[§ 560] Burden of Proof.

It was formerly held in California that the plaintiff was required to allege falsity of the statements, but it is now recognized that the burdens of pleading and of proof of truth are both generally on the defendant. (See Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary School Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 224, 233, 11 C.R. 97, 359 P.2d 465, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §694, disapproving prior cases; BAJI, No. 7.07.)

However, in an action initiated against a news media defendant by a public official or public figure, or an action by a private person relating to statements on a matter of public concern, the First Amendment requires that the plaintiff bear the burden of proving falsity. (See infra, §§611, 614; Rest.2d, Torts §613, Comment j.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.101(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Lipman case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §738. Statements concerning public official or figure: See Vogel v. Felice (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1006, 1021, 26 C.R.3d 350 [plaintiff subject to New York Times rule (text, §601 et seq.) bears burden of proving falsity; statement must be capable of conveying provably false factual implication].

96 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
1. In General.
aa. Nature of Defense.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 561

[§ 561] Nature of Defense.

Absolute privilege is based on the necessity of complete protection from the threat of a civil action. When a publication is absolutely privileged, there is no liability even though it is made with actual malice; malice is not a proper subject of inquiry in such a case. (Gosewisch v. Doran (1911) 161 C. 511, 514, 119 P. 656; Financial Corp. of America v. Wilburn (1987) 189 C.A.3d 764, 771, 234 C.R. 653, infra, §757; see Rest.2d, Torts §585 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §412; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.139 et seq.; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 917; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §274; on absolute privilege or immunity of public officer from other tort liabilities, see supra, §165 et seq.; on truth and privilege as distinct defenses, see supra, §556.)

The privilege cannot be defeated by framing a complaint on the theory that the privileged communication constituted an intentional infliction of emotional distress (see supra, §449). (Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 636, 638, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21; Lerette v. Dean Witter Organization (1976) 60 C.A.3d 573, 579, 131 C.R. 592, infra, §577.)

Absolute privilege, unlike evidentiary privileges, which function by exclusion of evidence, operates as a limitation on liability rather than on the admission of evidence. (Shade Foods v. Innovative Products Sales & Marketing (2000) 78 C.A.4th 847, 915, 93 C.R.2d 364 [litigation privilege does not bar evidentiary use of statements protected by the litigation privilege, and thus did not bar introduction of evidence involving settlement offers or answers to interrogatories to prove bad faith in action against insurer].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.34, 36

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§256, 257.

97 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

1. In General.

bb. Statutory Framework.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 562

[§ 562] Statutory Framework.

The Civil Code lists publications that are absolutely privileged. They include those made:

(1) "In the proper discharge of an official duty." (C.C. 47(a), infra, §564 et seq.)

(2) "In any (1) legislative or (2) judicial proceeding, or (3) in any other official proceeding authorized by law, or (4) in the initiation or course of any other proceeding authorized by law and reviewable" by mandamus. (C.C. 47(b), infra, §567 et seq.; see 14 Pacific L. J. 105 [absolute privilege and C.C. 47(b)].) Certain communications in these proceedings are expressly excluded from the privilege. (See infra, §563.)

(3) "By a fair and true report in, or a communication to, a public journal of (1) a judicial, (2) legislative, or (3) other public official proceeding, or (4) of anything said in the course thereof, or (5) of a verified charge or complaint made by any person to a public official, upon which complaint a warrant shall have been issued." (C.C. 47(d), infra, §585 et seq.)

(4) "By a fair and true report of (1) the proceedings of a public meeting, if such meeting was lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and open to the public, or (2) the publication of the matter complained of was for the public benefit." (C.C. 47(e), infra, §589.)

The Restatement lists the persons absolutely privileged, including judicial, legislative, and executive officers, persons involved in judicial proceedings, grand jurors, and husband and wife. (See Rest.2d, Torts §585 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

98 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

1. In General.

cc. Scope of Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 563

[§ 563] Scope of Privilege.

(1) In General. Although the absolute privilege set forth in C.C. 47(b) (supra, §562 and infra, §567 et seq.) originally was understood as applicable only to the tort of defamation, the California Supreme Court has extended the privilege to other tort claims. The only tort claim that the court has identified as falling outside the privilege is malicious prosecution. (Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank FSB (2004) 32 C.4th 350, 361, 7 C.R.3d 803, 81 P.3d 244, infra, §582; on malicious prosecution, see supra, §469 et seq.)

Rosenthal v. Irell & Manella (1982) 135 C.A.3d 121, 185 C.R. 92, examined the broad scope of the privilege.

(a) It developed as part of the law of defamation; but in Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §648, it was held to constitute a defense in an action for disparagement of title based on filing a lis pendens. Then it was applied to defeat tort actions for abuse of process, intentional infliction of mental distress, inducing breach of contract, interference with prospective economic advantage, fraud, and negligence. (135 C.A.3d 125, citing many cases.)

(b) In Block v. Sacramento Clinical Labs (1982) 131 C.A.3d 386, 182 C.R. 438, infra, §568, the court said that the privilege will defeat a tort action which, however labeled and whatever its theory of liability, is predicated on publication of an injurious falsehood. But the reference to "falsehood" was not intended as a limitation. It is the conduct of publishing rather than the publication itself that is protected. (135 C.A.3d 127, 128.) Thus, a settlement proposal made in a threatening manner was held privileged in Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 C.A.3d 832, 184 C.R. 317. Hence, the acts of defendants in the instant case, allegedly inducing plaintiff's professional liability insurers to settle a malpractice action against him without his consent, were similarly privileged. The acts consisted of publications by parties to litigation made to persons vitally interested in the litigation and closely related to it. (135 C.A.3d 128.) (See Fuhrman v. California Satellite Systems (1986) 179 C.A.3d 408, 419, 231 C.R. 113 [reviewing cases on communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding].)

Statutes outside C.C. 47 may provide that certain matters are absolutely privileged under that provision. Thus, the mailing, publication, and delivery of notices of default or of sale under a deed of trust or mortgage, and the performance of related procedures, are deemed privileged communications within C.C. 47. (C.C. 2924.) Similarly, testimony provided by a pupil witness in a school expulsion hearing is deemed a communication protected by C.C. 47(b). (Educ.C. 48918.6.)

(2) Communications Expressly Excluded From C.C. 47(b). C.C. 47(b), providing an absolute privilege for participants in legislative, judicial, other official proceedings, and proceedings authorized by law and reviewable by mandamus (see infra, §567 et seq.) expressly excludes certain communications from the privilege:

(a) An allegation or averment contained in a pleading or affidavit filed in a dissolution or separation action concerning a person by or against whom no affirmative relief is prayed in the action is not privileged unless the pleading is verified or affidavit sworn to, and is made without malice, by one having reasonable and probable cause for believing the truth of the allegation or averment, and unless the allegation or averment is material and relevant to the issues in the action. (C.C. 47(b)(1).)

(b) A communication made in furtherance of an act of intentional destruction or alteration of physical evidence (as specified in Ev.C. 250 or C.C.P. 2031.010 et seq.), and made for the purpose of depriving a litigant of the use of that evidence, is not privileged, regardless of whether the communication's content is the subject of a subsequent, privileged publication or broadcast. (C.C. 47(b)(2).) (See 23 Pacific L. J. 779.)

(c) A communication made in a judicial proceeding knowingly concealing the existence of an insurance policy or policies is not privileged. (C.C. 47(b)(3).) (See Home Ins. Co. v. Zurich Ins. Co. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 17, 22, 116 C.R.2d 583 [insurance exception of C.C. 47(b)(3) applies to existence of insurance policy, not its terms].)

(d) A recorded lis pendens is not privileged unless it identifies an action that was previously filed with a court of competent jurisdiction and that affects title or right of possession of real property, as authorized or required by law. (C.C. 47(b)(4).) (On statutory framework generally, see supra, §562.)

(3) No Absolute Privilege for Noncommunicative Conduct. C.C. 47 does not apply to noncommunicative conduct. Thus, it cannot make a tortious course of conduct privileged. (Kupiec v. American Int. Adjustment Co. (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1326, 1331, 1 C.R.2d 371; Stacy & Witbeck v. San Francisco (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1, 9, 54 C.R.2d 530; see Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1466, 1479, 37 C.R.2d 769 [physician's negligence in examining workers' compensation patient, although committed in actions preparatory to judicial proceedings, was noncommunicative conduct, not privileged under C.C. 47(b)(2)].)

(4) No Absolute Privilege for Publication Required by Law. Rest.2d, Torts §592A states an absolute privilege for one who is required by law to publish material. In Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, infra, §564, the court refused to recognize this privilege.

(a) Albertson v. Raboff, supra, held that C.C. 47 completely covers the law of privilege in libel actions; and, "[d]eferred to legislative judgment, we decline to impose either our own or the Restatement's views of policy, especially in an area in which the Legislature has spoken so extensively." (32 C.3d 158.)

(b) Even if this were not so, the Restatement privilege should not apply to the present case: (1) Its chief present application is to radio and television broadcasters, which are required by the Federal Communications Act to give political candidates equal opportunity to be heard, with no power of censorship. The station, unable to control what a candidate says, is absolutely privileged, under statutes in a number of jurisdictions and under the Restatement. (2) Here, defendants do control the content of their communication and fall in a different category. The qualified privilege is sufficient to protect persons who, though required by law to communicate with others, nonetheless maintain control over the contents of the communications. (32 C.3d 159.) (On qualified privilege, see infra, §591 et seq.)

(5) No Absolute Privilege Under First Amendment Petition Clause. In McDonald v. Smith (1985) 472 U.S. 479, 105

S.Ct. 2787, 86 L.Ed.2d 384, defendant wrote letters to the President making charges of criminal and unethical activity on the part of plaintiff, an applicant for the position of United States Attorney. In plaintiff's action for libel, defendant claimed that the First Amendment right "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances" made his communication immune from a libel suit. Held, there is no such absolute privilege. Defendant's contention "would elevate the Petition Clause to special First Amendment status." But the clause was inspired by the same ideals of liberty and democracy that produced the freedoms of speech, publication and assembly, and there is no reason to grant greater constitutional protection to statements made in a petition to the President than other First Amendment expressions. "The right to petition is guaranteed; the right to commit libel with impunity is not." (105 S.Ct. 2791, 86 L.Ed.2d 390.)

(6) No Absolute Privilege for Disclosure of Trade Secrets. C.C. 47(b) does not apply to the disclosure of trade secret information to a competitor or potential competitor of the owner of the information or to the agent of the competitor or potential competitor, where the disclosure is voluntary, intentional, and unauthorized by the owner. (C.C. 3426.11; see 24 Pacific L. J. 676; on protection of trade secrets, see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §81 et seq.)

(7) No Absolute Privilege for False Claims. C.C. 47(b) does not apply to claims subject to Govt.C. 12650 et seq., relating to civil liability for presenting false claims to public entities (see infra, §767). (Govt.C. 12654(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Fontani v. Wells Fargo Inv., LLC (2005) 129 C.A.4th 719, 735, 28 C.R.3d 833 [C.C. 47(b) applied to claims for interference with prospective business advantage; absolute privilege, while on face relating to defamation actions, has long been interpreted to bar other causes of action based on defamatory nature of communication that is itself privileged under defamation laws]; Ramona Unified School Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 C.A.4th 510, 522, footnote 7, 37 C.R.3d 381 [litigation privilege under C.C. 47(b) bars abuse of process claim insofar as claim is premised on conduct within privilege]; Foothill Fed. Credit Union v. Superior Court (2007) 155 C.A.4th 632, 635, 66 C.R.3d 249 [C.C. 47(b) applied to causes of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress and invasion of privacy]; Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1366, 1373, 66 C.R.3d 733 [same as Ramona]. Statutes outside C.C. 47: C.C. 2924 was subdivided and amended in 2006. C.C. 2924(d) now provides that the mailing, publication, and delivery of notices of default or of sale under a deed of trust or mortgage, the performance of related procedures, and the performance of these functions and procedures to carry out statutory duties regarding sale of separate interests in common interest developments are deemed privileged communications within C.C. 47.(3) No Absolute Privilege for Noncommunicative Conduct. See Buchanan v. Maxfield Enterprises (2005) 130 C.A.4th 418, 423, 29 C.R.3d 909 [privilege did not apply to citizen's arrest performed by store employee who, accompanied by sheriff's deputies, took customer in handcuffs into parking lot where media had gathered]; Booker v. Rountree, supra [for conduct to be communicative, there must be allegation of statement, of representation, or of assertive conduct that was speech substitute].

99 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

2. Discharge of Official Duty.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 564

[§ 564] In General.

(1) Statutory Privilege. A publication made "[i]n the proper discharge of an official duty" is absolutely privileged. (C.C. 47(a).) (See Ingram v. Flippo (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1280, 1293, 89 C.R.2d 60, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, Supp., §25 [district attorney was discharging official duty in issuing press release concerning alleged violations of Brown Act; fact that ultimate decision was neither to prosecute nor to file civil action did not affect application of privilege]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.). Libel and Slander §286.)

(2) Communication Must Be by Public Official. The official duty privilege is restricted to communications by public officials; it does not apply to private individuals. In Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, plaintiff dentist had patients who were insured by defendant insurance company. Defendant dental director of the insurance company wrote letters to some of plaintiff's patients, stating that the insurance company would no longer process claims from plaintiff because of "overcharging," that some of his work was unnecessary, that it would report him to the regulatory body for disciplinary proceedings, and that the patients should make no further payments to him pending resolution of the dispute. Plaintiff sued for libel and interference with prospective advantage. Defendants demurred on the grounds that the statements were mere opinions, and were privileged. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed.

(a) The publication was defamatory, both as libel per se (on its face) and libel per quod (on proof of extrinsic facts showing damage). (32 C.3d 153, 154.) Plaintiff's patients reasonably may have understood that the letters accused him of charging excessive fees or performing unnecessary dental work; these accusations would tend to injure him professionally. Although the accusations made by laypersons might constitute mere opinion, when made by professional dental plan administrators, they reasonably might be understood as being based on fact. (32 C.3d 154.)

(b) The publication was not privileged. The official duty privilege protects only governmental officials. Here, though defendants were required by both federal and state law to provide an explanation of the reason for denying reimbursement of patients' claims, they were neither officials nor acting in an official capacity. (32 C.3d 155.) (See Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1492, 1499, 239 C.R. 161 [following Slaughter].)

(3) Communication Must Be Made in Official Capacity. The communication must be made by the public official in an official capacity. (Neary v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1986) 185 C.A.3d 1136, 1141, 230 C.R. 281 [whether vice chancellor of U.C. Davis, in determining that investigation report was required to be disclosed, was exercising official, policymaking function, as required under official duty privilege, was question of fact requiring reversal of summary judgment].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.36

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Privilege.

Ingram case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Administrative Proceedings, §31.

100 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

2. Discharge of Official Duty.

bb. High Ranking Officials.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 565

[§ 565] High Ranking Officials.

The First Torts Restatement declared that executive officers of "high rank" were absolutely privileged to publish defamatory matter in the exercise of an executive function. In the Second Restatement, the privilege is stated for "any executive or administrative officer of the United States" or "a governor or other superior executive officer of a state." (Rest.2d, Torts §591.) (See 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.23; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 44; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §288; 26 A.L.R.3d 492 [public officer's privilege as to statements made in connection with hiring and discharge]; 33 A.L.R.3d 1330 [public officer's privilege in connection with accusations that another has been guilty of sedition, subversion, espionage, or similar behavior].)

In Saroyan v. Burkett (1962) 57 C.2d 706, 21 C.R. 557, 371 P.2d 293, the court followed the general law recognizing an absolute privilege for executive officials of "high rank," citing the First Restatement and cases dealing with the Postmaster General, a cabinet officer, a governor, and an attorney general. The holding was that defendant, State Superintendent of Banks, was absolutely privileged, while defending the policy of the State Banking Department, in making derogatory statements concerning plaintiff, the department's former attorney. (57 C.2d 710.)

In Kilgore v. Younger (1982) 30 C.3d 770, 180 C.R. 657, 640 P.2d 793, defendant Attorney General of California established The Organized Crime Control Commission to study organized criminal conspiracies and to assess the effectiveness of existing controls. The commission's report listed the names of 92 persons suspected of involvement in a wide variety of organized criminal activity, and listed plaintiff as the operator of a wire service to bookmakers and as having been convicted of bookmaking and conspiracy to commit wire fraud. Defendant Attorney General then held a press conference during which he distributed copies of the report to members of the news media, and defendant newspapers identified plaintiff as being among the 92 persons included in the report. Held, demurrers to the complaints were properly granted.

(a) The Attorney General's release of the report to the media and his statement at the press conference that he adopted it were absolutely privileged under former C.C. 47(1) (now C.C. 47(a)). "[Y]ounger called his press conference in his capacity as Attorney General, purported to act in such role throughout its duration and, at least as is here relevant, dealt exclusively with law enforcement issues. As such, it may not be said that his actions were outside the scope of his official duties, or that his motives were in fact improper." (30 C.3d 779.)

(b) The news media statements were privileged under former C.C. 47(5) (now C.C. 47(e); see infra, §589), protecting reports of public meetings. (30 C.3d 777.) (See 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 319.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.39-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Maranatha Corrections, LLC v. Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1075, 1086, 70 C.R.3d 614 [public dissemination of letter by Director of Department of Corrections, terminating prison contract for contractor's misappropriation of state funds, was absolutely privileged under official duty privilege of C.C. 47(a)]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.23; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §270.

101 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

2. Discharge of Official Duty.

cc. Lower Ranking Officials.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 566

[§ 566] Lower Ranking Officials.

(1) Early Cases Denying Privilege. The first cases decided after Saroyan v. Burkett (1962) 57 C.2d 706, 21 C.R. 557, 371 P.2d 293, supra, §565, relied on it in holding that the official duty privilege did not apply to officers of lesser rank. (See White v. California (1971) 17 C.A.3d 621, 627, 95 C.R. 175 [Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation]; Frisk v. Merrihew (1974) 42 C.A.3d 319, 323, 116 C.R. 781, infra, §583 [school superintendent, secretary of school board]; Rest.2d, Torts §591, Comment c; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.23; on conflict of authority elsewhere, see 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §289.)

(2) Extension of Privilege to Policymaking Officials. In Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 134 C.R. 402, 556 P.2d 764, the Supreme Court suggested that the determining factor was the nature of an official's duties, rather than his or her title. "It has been noted by recognized authorities that the purpose of the so-called absolute 'official duty' privilege is to insure efficiency in government by encouraging policy-making officials to exercise their best judgment in the performance of their duties free from fear of general tort liability. ... [W]e have concluded that defendant Mongan was not exercising policy-making functions when he defamed plaintiff, and thus he is not protected by the absolute privilege." (18 C.3d 413.)

This statement was the basis of the holding in Royer v. Steinberg (1979) 90 C.A.3d 490, 501, 153 C.R. 499, extending the privilege to members of a school district board of trustees. The board had demoted the school superintendent for his alleged participation in preparing false election campaign literature. On being publicly challenged by the superintendent to prove the charges, the board passed a motion at a duly scheduled public meeting, stating that it was a fact that the superintendent had typed and distributed the material in question. Held, the board's act was privileged.

(a) "The clear import of this language is that the policy of protecting the free exercise of governmental decision-making mandates that [the official duty privilege] must be granted not only to 'high-level' state executive officers, but also to all state and local officials who engage in the policy-making process. We therefore hold that the privilege ... protects any statement by a public official, so long as it is made (1) while exercising policy-making functions, and (2) within the scope of his official duties." (90 C.A.3d 501.)

(b) The board's motion clearly meets these requirements. The trustees, as duly elected members of the governing body of the school district, were vested with policymaking powers. And the motion, having been made at a meeting authorized by law and dealing with the disciplining of an employee, was unquestionably within the scope of the trustees' official duties. (90 C.A.3d 501.)

In Copp v. Paxton (1996) 45 C.A.4th 829, 52 C.R.2d 831, defendant, the county official in charge of earthquake preparedness, wrote a memorandum to his staff criticizing the views of plaintiff. This memo was republished by his inclusion of the memo in a letter to a private citizen. Held, the memo pertained to the exercise of an executive function, and was absolutely privileged, but the republication was the sort of routine, ministerial task that might have been performed by any member of defendant's staff, and was not privileged. (45 C.A.4th 844.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.39

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Early Cases Denying Privilege. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.23; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §270.

(2) Extension of Privilege to Policymaking Officials. See Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 1424, 1440, 57 C.R.3d 885 [statements to press by school district superintendent and local superintendent criticizing high school principal's handling of student violence, and explaining why he was replaced by district, were protected by executive officer privilege of C.C. 47(a); privilege extends to lower ranking officials, and statements here related to legitimate policy-making function]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.23; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §271.

102 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 567

[§ 567] In General.

(1) Statutory Privilege. Generally, a publication made in a "judicial proceeding" is absolutely privileged. (C.C. 47(b).) (See 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.) Libel and Slander §299 et seq.)

(2) Scope. "The usual formulation" of the scope of the so-called "litigation privilege" is that it "applies to any communication made (a) in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (b) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (c) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (d) having some connection or logical relation to the action." (Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 212, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, infra, §570; see Olszewski v. Scripps Health (2003) 30 C.4th 798, 831, 135 C.R.2d 1, 69 P.3d 927 [litigation privilege applies to assertion of statutory liens]; Schoendorf v. U.D. Registry (2002) 97 C.A.4th 227, 241, 118 C.R.2d 313 [suit by tenant against consumer reporting agency that gathered information about unlawful detainer cases and sold it to landlords; agency's communication was not made in preparation for or in anticipation of trial, and was not covered by litigation privilege]; Kashian v. Harriman (2002) 98 C.A.4th 892, 917, 120 C.R.2d 576 [litigation privilege covers communicative conduct, including filing meritless lawsuits on behalf of sham plaintiffs]; Navellier v. Sletten (2003) 106 C.A.4th 763, 770, 131 C.R.2d 201 [acts falling within protection of anti-SLAPP statute (C.C.P. 425.16) because of their connection with judicial proceedings do not inevitably fall within litigation privilege].)

Specified types of communications are excluded from the privileges set forth in C.C. 47(b). (See supra, §563.)

While the litigation privilege is called "absolute" (supra, §562), this characterization somewhat overstates the matter. (Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 392, 406, 6 C.R. 781, infra, §568.) Nevertheless, although C.C. 47 appears in the chapter on defamation, "it applies to virtually all other causes of action, with the exception of an action for malicious prosecution. ... Underlying the privilege is the vital public policy of affording free access to the courts and facilitating the crucial functions of the finder of fact. ... This policy is equally compelling in the context of common law and statutory claims." (Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 C.3d 355, 364, 212 C.R. 143, 696 P.2d 637, supra, §14 [action for damages for violation of P.C. 631 (Invasion of Privacy Act) by eavesdropping on private telephone conversation].)

(3) Purpose. Its principal purpose is to afford litigants and witnesses freedom of access to the courts without fear of being harassed subsequently by derivative tort actions. A further purpose is to assure freedom of communication between citizens and public authorities whose responsibility is to investigate and remedy wrongdoing. The privilege also promotes the effectiveness of judicial proceedings by encouraging attorneys to zealously protect their clients' interests. (Silberg v. Anderson, supra, 50 C.3d 213; Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co., supra, 5 C.A.4th 413.) In immunizing participants from tort liability arising from communications made during judicial proceedings, the law places on litigants the burden of exposing during trial the bias of witnesses and the falsity of evidence, "thereby enhancing the finality of judgments and avoiding an unending roundelay of litigation, an evil far worse than an occasional unfair result." (Silberg v. Anderson, supra, 50 C.3d 214, citing Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21.)

(4) Distinction Between Communication and Conduct. In Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Associates (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1009, 132 C.R.2d 602, defendant law firm caused a writ of execution to be issued and levied on a judgment against plaintiff even though the judgment was stayed. Plaintiff sued for abuse of process (see supra, §517 et seq.), and defendant contended that, even if its action constituted an abuse of process, plaintiff's suit was barred by the litigation privilege. Held, defendant's conduct with respect to the writ of execution was not within the litigation privilege.

(a) The genesis of the litigation privilege resides in defamatory publications, but it is beyond dispute that it now applies to any communication, whether or not it amounts to a publication. Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 C.A.2d 80, 53 C.R. 706, infra, §569, first applied the privilege to an abuse of process suit. Also, the litigation privilege has now been affixed to matters beyond the courtroom. However, one limitation on the privilege that still survives is that the event claimed to be protected must be communication not conduct. If this limitation is not retained, such conduct as a criminal act would be privileged if it is done in anticipation of litigation. (107 C.A.4th 1021.)

(b) Under Rubin v. Green (1993) 4 C.4th 1187, 17 C.R.2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044, infra, §577, the appropriate inquiry is whether an activity is communicative "in its essential nature." With respect to the enforcement of judgments, preparing the judgment, applying for a writ of execution, issuing the writ, and instructing the levying officer are communicative, at least from the perspective of the judgment creditor and its lawyer. However, the actual levying on the property is conduct, and any communication is tangential and not essential. (107 C.A.4th 1025.)

(c) "Finally, we note that the failure to distinguish between conduct and communication runs the risk of essentially eliminating the tort of abuse of process, something we do not believe the Legislature intended when it amended the litigation privilege in the 1873-1874 session to include publications made in judicial proceedings. ... Given the expansion of the privilege to matters not only inside but outside the courtroom, and not only during trial but before and after trial, to sweep conduct within the privilege' ambit would in all likelihood nullify the tort. If that is the inevitable next step, it should be undertaken by the Legislature, not by the judiciary' expansive reading of a statute that itself was limited in its origins." (107 C.A.4th 1028.) (See Mansell v. Otto (2003) 108 C.A.4th 265, 271, 133 C.R.2d 276 [reading plaintiff's confidential psychiatric records was noncommunicative conduct not immunized by litigation privilege; plaintiff did not allege that any information in records was testified to or otherwise used in judicial proceeding]; Navellier v. Sletten, supra [where plaintiff challenged defendant's counterclaims on ground that they sought recovery for claims that defendant released, counterclaims were protected by litigation privilege, because challenge went to their content, rather than act or manner]; Pollock v. University of Southern Calif. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1416, 1430, 6 C.R.3d 122 [allegedly false declaration functioned as written testimony, and thus constituted communication, not conduct].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutory Privilege. See Action Apartment Assn. v. Santa Monica (2007) 41 C.4th 1232, 1243, 63 C.R.3d 398, 163 P.3d 89 [provision in municipal "tenant harassment" ordinance authorizing action against landlord who sues to recover possession of rental housing unit without reasonable factual or legal basis was preempted by statutory litigation privilege; provision was inimical to function of privilege to afford freedom of access to courts].

(2) Scope. See Jacob B. v. Shasta (2007) 40 C.4th 948, 959, 56 C.R.3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003, Supp., infra, §686

[litigation privilege may apply to constitutional claims, as well as those based on common law or statute; also, privilege extends to communications that might be deemed perjurious or confidential]; Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 C.A.4th 1563, 1577, 31 C.R.3d 368 [P.C. 11172(a) (text, §141), imposing liability on voluntary reporters for knowingly false child abuse reports, overrides litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b)]; Foothill Fed. Credit Union v. Superior Court (2007) 155 C.A.4th 632, 635, 66 C.R.3d 249 [litigation privilege barred action for invasion of privacy and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on credit union's disclosure of personal financial records beyond those sought in probate proceeding, even though credit union failed to comply with notice requirements of C.C.P. 1985.3 (governing discovery of personal records of consumers; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §228 et seq.); applying privilege did not frustrate purpose of C.C.P. 1985.3, which was not intended to create legal remedy against custodians of these records]; People v. The Pac. Lumber Co. (2008) 158 C.A.4th 950, 962, 70 C.R.3d 501, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, Supp., §128 [no exception to privilege for governmental enforcement actions under Unfair Competition Law (see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §105 et seq.)].

(New) Applicability of privilege in breach of contract actions: In Wentland v. Wass (2005) 126 C.A.4th 1484, 25 C.R.3d 109, a managing partner filed a cross-complaint against his partners in their accounting action against him, alleging breach of an agreement not to make accusations or comments that asserted wrongdoing by him concerning a particular investment. The breach allegedly occurred in statements made by cross-defendants' attorney and CPA in the course of the action. The trial court sustained cross-defendants' demurrers without leave to amend. Held, reversed; the cross-complaint was not barred by the litigation privilege.

(a) Whether the litigation privilege applies in the context of breach of contract litigation turns on whether its application furthers the policies underlying the privilege. (126 C.A.4th 1492.) Considering those policies, the privilege should not apply in this breach of contract case. (126 C.A.4th 1494.) One who validly contracts not to speak waives the protection of the litigation privilege. (126 C.A.4th 1494.)

(b) Unlike the usual derivative tort action, application of the privilege here does not serve to promote access to the courts, truthful testimony, or zealous advocacy. This cause of action is not based on allegedly wrongful conduct during litigation, but on breach of a separate promise independent of the litigation. This breach was not simply a communication, but also wrongful conduct or performance under the contract, and application of the privilege would frustrate the purpose of that contract. (126 C.A.4th 1494.)

(c) Cross-defendants contend that, even if the litigation privilege applies only to tort actions, it should apply here because the gravamen of the cross-complaint is that they tortiously damaged cross-complainant through their alleged false statements. Where the gravamen of a cause of action sounds in tort, not contract, the litigation privilege applies. (126 C.A.4th 1494.) If the cause of action arises from breach of a promise set forth in the contract, the action is ex contractu, but if it arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is ex delicto. The cross-complaint here alleged that cross-defendants breached the agreement by authorizing negative comments made about cross-complainant's management not because the comments were false, but because they had promised not to continue to make the comments. The cross-complaint sounds in contract, not tort. (126 C.A.4th 1495.)

See Performance Plastering v. Richmond Amer. Homes of Calif. (2007) 153 C.A.4th 659, 673, 63 C.R.3d 537 [litigation privilege did not apply to bar subcontractor and its liability insurer from suing general contractor that allegedly breached of settlement agreements by suing subcontractor for construction defects; general contractor was not being sued in tort based on publication made in connection with judicial proceeding, but rather in contract for breaching settlement agreements].

Feldman v. 1100 Park Lane Associates (2008) 160 C.A.4th 1467, 1494, 74 C.R.3d 1, distinguished Wentland and held that the litigation privilege barred subtenants' breach of contract claim, along with their tort claims, in their cross-complaint to an unlawful detainer complaint. The subtenants alleged that, by illegally evicting them, the landlord breached a lease addendum entitling them to occupy the apartment under the terms of the original tenant's lease. As with the tort causes of action, the core of their contract claim was that they were in lawful possession of the apartment and the landlord and its agent harassed them with threats of eviction, initiated the unlawful detainer action, and forced them to leave. This communicative conduct was preparatory to litigation and therefore covered by the privilege. (160 C.A.4th 1494, 1497.) (3) Purpose. See Wentland v. Wass, supra, 126 C.A.4th 1492 [quoting Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 213, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, text, p. 826].

(4) Distinction Between Communication and Conduct. Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Associates (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1009, 132 C.R.2d 602, text, p. 827, was disapproved in Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 C.4th 1048, 39 C.R.3d 516, 128 P.3d 713. After defendant judgment debtor filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff's attorney for abuse of process, the attorney filed a special motion to strike the cross-complaint as a SLAPP suit (see 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.), asserting that his actions were protected by the litigation privilege. The trial court granted the motion, and entered judgment for the attorney, but the Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that, while the attorney's filing allegedly false declarations of service to obtain a default judgment against defendant fell within the litigation privilege as communicative conduct, his execution on that judgment was unprivileged, noncommunicative conduct. Held, reversed. "[W]here the cause of action is based on a communicative act, the litigation privilege extends to those noncommunicative actions which are necessarily related to that communicative act" (37 C.4th 1052), and these actions may include those necessary to enforce the judgment.

(a) Because the litigation privilege protects only publications and communications, a threshold issue in determining the applicability of the privilege is whether conduct is communicative or noncommunicative. The distinction between communicative and noncommunicative conduct hinges on the gravamen of the action. In other words, the key in determining whether the privilege applies is whether the injury allegedly resulted from an act that was communicative in its essential nature. (37 C.4th 1058.)

(b) Here, because the gravamen of the complaint is a privileged communication (i.e., the allegedly perjured declarations of service), the privilege should extend to necessarily related noncommunicative acts (i.e., the act of levying on the judgment). Otherwise, application of the litigation privilege would be thwarted. (37 C.4th 1062.) Extending the litigation privilege to postjudgment enforcement activities that are necessarily related to the allegedly wrongful communicative act is consistent with public policy considerations. This extension would conform to the purposes of the litigation privilege, that is, to afford litigants and witnesses free access to the courts without fear of being harassed subsequently by derivative tort actions, to encourage open channels of communication and zealous advocacy, to promote complete and truthful testimony, to give finality to judgments, and to avoid unending litigation. Despite the concern voiced in Drum for the potential abolishment of the common law tort of abuse of process, modern public policy seeks to encourage free access to the courts and finality of judgments by limiting derivative tort claims arising out of litigation-related misconduct and by favoring sanctions within the original lawsuit. (37 C.4th 1063.) Given the alternative remedies for improper service and the procedural protections against improper enforcement, the litigation privilege should be applied "to limit the availability of the tort of abuse of process in the judgment enforcement context." (37 C.4th 1065.)

(c) If the gravamen of an action is communicative, the litigation privilege extends to noncommunicative acts that are necessarily related to the communicative conduct, which in this case included acts necessary to enforce the judgment and carry out the directive of the writ of execution. Stated another way, unless it is demonstrated that an independent, noncommunicative, wrongful act is the gravamen of the action, the litigation privilege applies. Here, because the execution of the judgment did not provide an independent basis for liability separate and apart from filing the false declarations of service, the gravamen of the action was the procurement of the judgment, not its enforcement. Thus, the enforcement of the judgment in reliance on the filing of privileged declarations of service was itself privileged. (37 C.4th 1065.)

See Jacob B. v. Shasta, supra, 40 C.4th 957 [litigation privilege applied where gravamen of invasion of privacy claim was not defendant's noncommunicative conduct in accessing information for party to judicial proceeding, but rather publication of information in proceeding, exposing it to public view; following Rusheen]; Ramalingam v. Thompson (2007) 151 C.A.4th 491, 502, 60 C.R.3d 11 [litigation privilege barred accounting malpractice claim, gravamen of which was accountant's communication of opinion as neutral expert in underlying marital dissolution proceeding; privilege extended to related noncommunicative conduct, including preparation for testifying; citing Rusheen and Jacob B.; Gallanis-Politis v. Medina (2007) 152 C.A.4th 600, 616, 61 C.R.3d 701 [litigation privilege barred county employee's retaliation action against supervisors, gravamen of which was their investigation and report in response to employee's discovery requests in her related discrimination action; investigation and report were quintessentially communicative acts; citing Rusheen].

103 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - b. Absolute Privilege.
- 3. Judicial Proceedings.
 - bb. Persons Protected.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 568

[§ 568] Persons Protected.

(1) In General. The statements of judges, attorneys, parties, witnesses, jurors, and other participants in judicial proceedings, made in relation to those proceedings, are generally held to be absolutely privileged. (Smith v. Hatch (1969) 271 C.A.2d 39, 46, 76 C.R. 350, infra, §569.) Nonlitigants and nonparticipants are not protected by the privilege. (Wise v. Thrifty Payless (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1296, 1303, 100 C.R.2d 437.) (See Obos v. Scripps Psychological Associates (1997) 59 C.A.4th 103, 108, 69 C.R.2d 30 [statements in custody battle by court-appointed psychologist concerning mother's boyfriend were privileged, even though boyfriend was nonparty]; Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. Santa Barbara (1998) 65 C.A.4th 713, 726, 77 C.R.2d 1 [consultant's Environmental Impact Report submitted to county considering development project was absolutely privileged under litigation privilege]; Laborde v. Aronson (2001) 92 C.A.4th 459, 463, 112 C.R.2d 119 [psychiatrist who was jointly retained to make custody evaluation and whose report was received into evidence in dissolution proceeding was protected by litigation privilege]; Rest.2d, Torts §585 [judicial officers], §586 [attorneys], §587 [parties], §588 [witnesses], §589 [jurors]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 920; 14 Pacific L. J. 105; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§299, 300; 32 A.L.R.2d 423 [statements in briefs as privileged]; 42 A.L.R.2d 825 [findings or report of judge or person acting in judicial capacity as privileged]; 54 A.L.R.2d 1298 [testimony of witness as basis for civil damages action]; 61 A.L.R.2d 1300 [statements in counsel's argument to jury as privileged].)

In Block v. Sacramento Clinical Labs (1982) 131 C.A.3d 386, 182 C.R. 438, plaintiff's infant daughter died, an autopsy was performed, and defendant toxicologist performed a blood analysis for the coroner. He found that the child's blood had a high concentration of salicylate, and the district attorney sought further information from him that was used as grounds for filing criminal murder and child neglect charges against plaintiff. At the preliminary hearing, defendant's calculations were found to be erroneous and the charges were dismissed. Plaintiff then filed this action against defendant for "professional negligence." Held, the communication was absolutely privileged. The litigation privilege is applied to a wide variety of tort actions, however labeled and whatever the theory of liability, which are predicated upon the publication of an injurious falsehood in protected proceedings. (131 C.A.3d 390, 391.) Plaintiff's theory of liability is based on defendant's communication to the district attorney and defendant's testimony as a witness in the criminal proceeding. These were related to and connected with a judicial proceeding. (131 C.A.3d 392, 393, 394.)

(2) Party's Own Expert Witness Is Not Protected. In Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 392, 6 C.R. 781, the court held that while the litigation privilege "has at times seemed to protect virtually anyone participating in litigation from subsequent suit, ... California precedent does not authorize, and the policies underlying the privilege do not support, its use to protect a negligent expert witness from liability to the party who hired that witness." (5 C.A.4th 395.) Here, plaintiff had engaged defendant to perform litigation support accounting work. After dismissal of its complaints in the federal and California trial courts, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendant alleging causes of action for professional malpractice, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of contract, tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, constructive trust, and fraudulent concealment. The trial judge granted defendants' motions for summary judgment, mainly on the ground that the litigation privilege barred the complaint as a matter of law. Held, reversed.

(a) This appeal involves causes of action sounding in contract and in tort against an expert witness hired by plaintiffs themselves to support their case in the underlying lawsuit. (5 C.A.4th 403.) Application of the privilege in these cases would not further the underlying policies of the privilege. (5 C.A.4th 403.) Several cases have applied the litigation privilege to protect statements by an expert witness; but they involve suits against expert witnesses who function adversely to the plaintiff. (5 C.A.4th 405, citing Carden v. Getzoff (1987) 190 C.A.3d 907, 235 C.R. 698, supra, §21.) The distinction is important, as Carden points out: "Otherwise, adverse witnesses would always be fearful of subsequent civil suits and would be extremely hesitant or unwilling to testify. ... As this reasoning suggests, the litigation privilege does not exist to protect one's own expert witnesses, but to protect adverse witnesses from suit by opposing parties after the lawsuit ends." (5 C.A.4th 405.)

(b) "The analogy between a party bringing a suit against its own expert witness and the party bringing a suit against its own attorney has some relevance." (5 C.A.4th 406.) If the privilege protected an attorney from any suit by a former client, no malpractice suit could be brought. (5 C.A.4th 406.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.38

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See American Products Co. v. Law Offices of Geller, Stewart & Foley, LLP (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1332, 1346, 37 C.R.3d 93 [litigation privilege did not foreclose unfair competition claim founded on attorney's misconduct in earlier litigation where claimant was not party to earlier litigation]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §279 et seq. (2) Party's Own Expert Witness Is Not Protected. See Lambert v. Carneghi (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1120, 1137, 1144, 70 C.R.3d 626, Supp., infra, §573 [litigation privilege does not prevent party from suing his or her own expert witness for negligence in testifying; citing Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 392, 406, 6 C.R. 781, text, p. 829]. (3) (New) Party's Attorney Is Not Protected. Kolar v. Donahue, McIntosh & Hammerton (2006) 145 C.A.4th 1532, 52 C.R.3d 712, involved an action by clients alleging their attorneys' malpractice in representing them in earlier litigation. Held, the litigation privilege did not apply. The privilege has been held to shield litigants, attorneys, and witnesses from liability for virtually all torts except malicious prosecution. However, no cases can be found holding that the privilege bars malpractice actions based on an attorney's litigation-related acts or omissions. This is understandable. If the privilege protected an attorney from suit by a former client, no malpractice action could ever be brought. "We perceive no sound reason why litigators should be exempted from malpractice liability, and therefore decline to extend the litigation privilege's protection to the present case." (145 C.A.4th 1541; citing Mattco Forge v. Arthur Young & Co.)

104 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

cc. Relevancy Limitation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 569

[§ 569] Relevancy Limitation.

(1) Background. The general American rule appears to be that a statement made in a judicial proceeding is not absolutely privileged unless it has some reasonable relevancy to the subject matter of the action. It need not be pertinent to an issue actually before the court, but must have some relation to the proceeding. (See Rest.2d, Torts §585, Comment e; §587, Comments c, e; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 618; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 922; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 161; 7 U.S.F. L. Rev. 176; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §301; 38 A.L.R.3d 272 [relevancy of matter contained in pleading as affecting privilege within law of libel].)

The early California decisions were conflicting. Some recognized the general rule requiring relevancy. (See Carpenter v. Ashley (1906) 148 C. 422, 426, 83 P. 444; Washer v. Bank of America (1943) 21 C.2d 822, 832, 136 P.2d 297; Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 381, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §648; Irwin v. Newby (1929) 102 C.A. 110, 116, 282 P. 370; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 161.) Other cases took the position that the California statute declares the privilege in unqualified terms, and that the relevancy exception cannot be made a part of it. (See Moore v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (1932) 122 C.A. 205, 210, 9 P.2d 562; Donnell v. Linforth (1935) 11 C.A.2d 25, 28, 52 P.2d 937; Lewis v. Linn (1962) 209 C.A.2d 394, 398, 399, 26 C.R. 6; Jordan v. Lemaire (1963) 222 C.A.2d 622, 625, 35 C.R. 337; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 105.)

(2) Limitation Established. The conflict was resolved in Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 C.A.2d 80, 53 C.R. 706. The alleged defamation occurred in the taking of a deposition, and consisted of questions by the attorney and answers by the witness derogatory to plaintiff. The court, upholding the privilege, reviewed the prior cases and followed the approach of earlier cases recognizing the relevancy limitation and the Torts Restatement. The test "requires the demonstration of some connection with the proceedings, yet dispenses with the requirement of relevancy, materiality or pertinency in their technical sense. ... On the one hand it does not protect attorneys, witnesses and litigants who use the mere fact that they are talking in the course of a judicial proceeding as a pretext to defame persons with respect to matters which have nothing whatever to do with the question under consideration, yet it does shield counsel, his client and witnesses from having their motives questioned and being subjected to litigation if some connection between the utterance of the judicial inquiry can be established." (245 C.A.2d 90.) (See Rader v. Thrasher (1972) 22 C.A.3d 883, 887, 99 C.R. 670 [quoting Thornton]; Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 C.A.3d 818, 824, 106 C.R. 718 [citing Thornton]; Earp v. Nobmann (1981) 122 C.A.3d 270, 284, 175 C.R. 767 [recognizing relevancy limitation]; Barbary Coast Furniture Co. v. Sjolie (1985) 167 C.A.3d 319, 332, 213 C.R. 168 [same].)

(3) Relevancy Test Met. A number of decisions have held the relevancy requirement to have been met. The following are illustrative:

Passman v. Torkan (1995) 34 C.A.4th 607, 615, 40 C.R.2d 291 [letter by party in civil action to his attorney concerning counsel representing opposing party had some relation to action and was absolutely privileged, where purpose of letter was to prompt attorney to conclude lawsuit before opposing party could dissipate funds at issue].

Obos v. Scripps Psychological Associates (1997) 59 C.A.4th 103, 106, 69 C.R.2d 30 [in custody battle, statements made by court-appointed psychologist to mother's attorney and therapist that mother's boyfriend had been dishonorably discharged from service and fired from his job for dishonesty met relevancy test].

Sacramento Brewing Co. v. Desmond, Miller & Desmond (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1082, 1085, 89 C.R.2d 760 [in bankruptcy proceeding, notice of motion to sell debtor's property that named wrong party as debtor was reasonably related to that proceeding and thus within litigation privilege].

Knoell v. Petrovich (1999) 76 C.A.4th 164, 169, 90 C.R.2d 162 [landowner's attorney's demand letter stating that easement might or might not be forgery was reasonably related to action against landowner by easement holder and, as privileged statement, could not be basis of action against attorney].

In Friedman v. Knecht (1967) 248 C.A.2d 455, 56 C.R. 540, defendant, while a deputy district attorney, was prosecuting a woman for prostitution. Plaintiff was the woman's attorney. At the time of trial, defendant moved for a continuance because of illness of the officer witness, and defendant and plaintiff exchanged words at some length. Plaintiff sued for slander on the theory that defendant had suggested improper conduct on his part. Held, a demurrer, on the ground of the litigation privilege, was properly sustained. If plaintiff can prove the allegations of defendant's false statements and malicious motives, defendant will be subject to discipline as an attorney, and this kind of sanction takes care of nearly all the cases. The absolute privilege of C.C. 47(b) is necessary to protect attorneys in their primary function of representation of clients, an interest deemed more important than an attorney's personal interest in not being slandered. (248 C.A.2d 462.)

In Smith v. Hatch (1969) 271 C.A.2d 39, 76 C.R. 350, a local contractors' association (GG) paid money for promotion to trustees of an area association (MCA). H, attorney for GG, obtained an order to show cause, directed against MCA and certain officers, to enjoin them from collecting and paying out money of the promotional trust funds. H then made two defamatory publications. The first was a letter to his client GG, stating that discovery proceedings showed that officers of MCA had engaged in litigation with the national association in order to appropriate money to themselves in the guise of fees and traveling expenses of attorneys, and that this "grab of funds" was without "a vestige of morality or legality." The second was a letter directed to the trial court judge from whom the order to show cause had issued, asking for a continuance of the hearing, and then proceeding to discuss the merits of the case, with a series of similar attacks on the same individuals. The defamed persons brought this action against H, who originally published the defamatory charges, and S, a director of GG, who republished them by reading the letter aloud at a meeting of MCA. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) Letter by attorney to client. H's letter to GG, though not directed to the court and not a part of any official court record, was protected. It had some relation to the judicial proceeding in pending litigation between GG and MCA. (271 C.A.2d 46.) Hence H, the attorney, was protected by the litigation privilege. S, the party who republished, was also absolutely privileged for the same reason; he was actively engaged in efforts to settle the differences between the two associations. (271 C.A.2d 47.)

(b) Letter by attorney to judge. Insofar as H's letter to the judge concerned the request for a continuance, it was clearly protected by absolute privilege. And the defamatory parts were concerned with the litigation, and hence bore some relation to its subject matter. (271 C.A.2d 48.)

(c) Availability of sanctions. As observed in Friedman v. Knecht, supra, attorneys who make false statements shielded by privilege can be sanctioned through disciplinary channels or by way of contempt proceedings. (271 C.A.2d 50.)

In Costa v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 673, 204 C.R. 1, defendant, chairman of the board of directors of the supreme council of a fraternal association, sent a letter to members explaining the purpose of pending litigation initiated by the supreme council against its subsidiary lodge, and seeking support and guidance from the membership. Held, the communication was privileged. Although made outside the courtroom, it was reasonably related to the pending action and designed to aid in accomplishing its objectives. (157 C.A.3d 678.)

(4) Relevancy Test Not Met. In Rothman v. Jackson (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1134, 1145, 57 C.R.2d 284, statements were made by defendants to the press, in which they accused plaintiff of leaking information for extortion purposes. Held, the statements were not made to achieve the objects of the litigation, and thus were not privileged.

In Nguyen v. Proton Technology Corp. (1999) 69 C.A.4th 140, 145, 81 C.R.2d 392, plaintiff's former employer, in a demand letter to his current employer threatened to bring an unfair competition action if plaintiff did not cease his wrongful solicitation of prior customers. In the letter, the former employer falsely accused plaintiff of having done prison time for wife beating. Held, this statement was not protected by the privilege; it was made to be vindictive, rather than to promote the threatened litigation.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Background. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §281.

105 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

dd. No Interest of Justice Exception.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 570

[§ 570] No Interest of Justice Exception.

In Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, plaintiff husband sued defendant attorney, who represented plaintiff's wife in a prior marital dissolution proceeding. In that proceeding, plaintiff's attorney and defendant stipulated to submission of family members to an evaluation and counseling by a "mutually agreeable and independent" psychologist for determining visitation and custody arrangements, and on defendant's recommendation a psychologist was selected. The psychologist's recommendation was adverse to plaintiff, who subsequently brought this action against defendant claiming damages for an "intentional tort" (apparently intentional infliction of emotional distress). The complaint alleged that, contrary to defendant's representation that the psychologist was independent and neutral, the psychologist and defendant had a preexisting personal relationship that caused him to make a report that was "biased, wholly inaccurate and defamatory"; and that defendant's "intentional tort" caused him the loss of reasonable visitation arrangements, damage to his reputation, and emotional distress. The trial judge sustained defendant's demurrer, which was based on the litigation privilege, and entered judgment of dismissal. The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that defendant's representations were not privileged because they were made to achieve personal advantages and not to promote the "interest of justice." Held, Court of Appeal judgment reversed; the privilege is absolute and is not subject to an "interest of justice" exception.

(a) To effectuate its vital purposes, the litigation privilege is held to be absolute in nature and to apply to a number of torts additional to defamation, including intentional infliction of emotional distress. (50 C.3d 215, citing Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §648, and other cases.)

(b) The "interest of justice" test appears to have originated with Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 C.A.3d 818, 106 C.R. 718, which read into the requirement that the communication be made "to achieve the objects of the litigation" the additional requirement that it must also have been made for the purpose of promoting the "interest of justice." This additional moral consideration was a drastic departure from precedent, and would permit derivative tort suits in many, if not most, cases on the ground that an otherwise privileged communication was not made for the purpose of promoting justice. (50 C.3d 217.) Further, this test, though embraced by a number of Court of Appeal decisions, has been rejected by others. (50 C.3d 217.) In addition, in some of the cases purporting to use the test, the same result could have been reached on the basis of the absence of one of the traditionally recognized factors. (50 C.3d 217.)

(c) "We conclude that the well-intentioned addition of the 'interest of justice' test must be rejected. A rule that an otherwise privileged communication is not privileged ... unless made for the purpose of promoting the 'interest of justice' is wholly inconsistent with the numerous cases in which fraudulent communications or perjured testimony have nevertheless been held privileged. ... Obviously, such a test would also be contrary to the decisions in which liability for abuse of process is held precluded by the privilege. ... One of the two necessary elements of that tort is an ulterior purpose. ... Finally, endorsement of the 'interest of justice' requirement would be tantamount to the exclusion of all tortious publications from the privilege, because tortious conduct is invariably inimical to the 'interest of justice.' Thus, the exception would subsume the rule." (50 C.3d 218.) (See 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 645 [Silberg].)

Howard v. Drapkin (1990) 222 C.A.3d 843, 271 C.R. 893, supra, §174, arose out of a dissolution proceeding involving child custody and visitation rights of the husband. Defendant psychologist had been engaged, under a stipulation signed by the husband and wife, to evaluate the facts and make nonbinding findings and recommendations. Plaintiff brought this action against defendant for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, alleging various kinds of misconduct in performance of her task. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. The court, on an elaborate analysis of Silberg v. Anderson, held it controlling. "Defendant's alleged wrongful communications (whether express or implied and whether screamed or simply stated) were 'not ... extraneous to the action' but rather had a 'logical relation' to it. ... Defendant's acts were part of a process undertaken by the husband and wife to aid the court in its decision on an important matter in the dissolution. Defendant's 'motives, morals, ethics or intent' are not in issue when asking whether her acts were in furtherance of the objects of the dissolution proceedings." (222 C.A.3d 863.) (See Gootee v. Lightner (1990) 224 C.A.3d 587, 596, 274 C.R. 697 [following Howard v. Drapkin on similar facts].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

106 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

ee. Steps Before and After Trial.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 571

[§ 571] Steps Before and After Trial.

(1) In General. The litigation privilege is not limited to statements made during a trial or other proceeding, but may extend to steps taken before or after the proceeding, provided they have some relation to it. (See Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 379, 295 P.2d 405, infra, §648 [notice of lis pendens]; Donnell v. Linforth (1935) 11 C.A.2d 25, 28, 52 P.2d 937 [allegations in complaint]; Spirac v. Superior Court (1976) 62 C.A.3d 33, 35, 133 C.R. 24 [same]; ITT Telecom Products Corp. v. Dooley (1989) 214 C.A.3d 307, 313, 262 C.R. 773 [statements made as consultant to aid potential litigant]; California Physicians' Service v. Superior Court (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1321, 1330, 12 C.R.2d 95 [allegations in answer]; O'Keefe v. Kompa (2000) 84 C.A.4th 130, 133, 100 C.R.2d 602 [judgment collection efforts]; Brown v. Kennard (2001) 94 C.A.4th 40, 44, 113 C.R.2d 891 [same]; Blanchard v. DIRECTV (2004) 123 C.A.4th 903, 918, 20 C.R.3d 385 [demand letter]; Rest.2d, Torts §586 and Comments a, e; §587 and Comment e; §588; 14 Pacific L. J. 105; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §302 et seq.; 23 A.L.R.3d 1172 [pretrial dispositions and discovery proceedings]; 23 A.L.R.4th 932 [attorney's statements during extrajudicial investigation or preparation].)

(2) Prospective Litigation Must Be Contemplated Seriously and in Good Faith. The privilege relating to statements regarding prospective litigation "is qualified rather than absolute; the prospective litigation must be contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration." (Laffer v. Levinson, Miller, Jacobs & Phillips (1995) 34 C.A.4th 117, 124, 40 C.R.2d 233 [action for intentional interference with economic relations; threat by defendants to sue plaintiff, allegedly causing third party to withdraw from settlement negotiations with plaintiff in another action].)

Aronson v. Kinsella (1997) 58 C.A.4th 254, 68 C.R.2d 305, clarified the Laffer holding, observing that the court there used the term "qualified" in the colloquial sense, rather than in the legal sense that there is no prelitigation privilege unless the statement was made without malice. The correct rule is that if the statement is made with a good faith belief in a legally viable claim and in serious contemplation of litigation, the statement is sufficiently connected to the litigation, and it will be protected by the litigation privilege. Then, the privilege is absolute. (58 C.A.4th 264, 266.) The fact that, in this case, defendant did not actually file a complaint (because plaintiff had taken action to remove the main basis of a suit) did not change the fact that the statements, when made, complied with this test. (58 C.A.4th 271.) (See Eisenberg v. Alameda Newspapers (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1359, 1377, 88 C.R.2d 802 [in defamation action based on defendant newspaper's retraction of plaintiff reporter's earlier article, fact that retraction was in response to C.C. 48a demand letter did not invoke litigation privilege, where purpose of demand letter was to avoid, rather than initiate, litigation and where litigation was mere possibility, rather than reality].)

When the privilege attaches prior to suit was addressed in Edwards v. Centex Real Estate Corp. (1997) 53 C.A.4th 15, 61 C.R.2d 518. Plaintiff homeowners in a development built on former saltwater marshland sued defendants, the developer and its engineers, for fraud and misrepresentation in the design and construction of their homes' concrete foundation, and for rescission of releases made in connection with their initial claims for repair of those foundations. When plaintiffs first complained of cracking and other problems with the foundations, they had signed general releases in exchange for repairs recommended by defendants. Several years thereafter, the homes suffered further foundation damage and plaintiffs filed suit, contending that defendants had fraudulently failed to disclose that the foundation problems were caused by a fundamental design defect not curable by the earlier repairs. The trial judge granted motions in limine by defendants, under the litigation privilege and the parol evidence rule, to exclude all communications made by defendants in response to plaintiffs' reports of foundation damage as evidence that defendants had fraudulently induced plaintiffs to execute the releases. Plaintiffs entered into a stipulated judgment in favor of defendants in order to obtain immediate appellate review of the issues raised by the trial judge's decision. Held, reversed.

(a) Judicial extension of litigation privilege in prelitigation context. C.C. 47(b) expressly applies only to communications made in any "judicial proceeding." The statute includes nothing about communications made before suit is filed. Nevertheless, the courts have applied the judicial privilege to various categories of communications made in advance of actual litigation. The result has been to transform the relatively simple statutory privilege for communications made in a judicial proceeding into an amorphous immunity encompassing all kinds of communications related to an anticipated lawsuit. (53 C.A.4th 30.)

(b) Need for limits on scope of privilege. Defendants argued that the privilege extends to all communications by any person involved in discussions or negotiations in connection with virtually any kind of dispute, whether or not litigation has actually been threatened, proposed, or seriously contemplated, as long as there is a possibility that a lawsuit may be filed in the future. This interpretation is overbroad and incorrect. In practice, this extension of the privilege would effectively permit a person to lie or make fraudulent miscommunications any time a claim is made, on the theory that the claim might ripen into an actual lawsuit. This extension of the privilege would swallow up much of the law of torts. (53 C.A.4th 32.) At some point there must be a limit to this judicial expansion of the prelitigation scope of the privilege. "It is not too late in the day to establish appropriate standards for extending the litigation privilege to communications made in anticipation of litigation." (53 C.A.4th 33.)

(c) Standards for applying privilege to prelitigation communications. The question that must be addressed is, at what point on the continuum between the mere possibility of an action and the reality of a filed lawsuit, does the privilege attach? In the present litigious society, there is always at least the potential for a lawsuit any time a dispute arises between individuals or entities. More than a mere possibility or vague anticipation of litigation must be required for the privilege to attach, or else the privilege may be misused in ways for which there is no public policy justification or purpose. (53 C.A.4th 33.) From the justifications for the privilege stated in Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 214, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, supra, §570, and in the Rest.2d, Torts §§586, 587, 588, the following four closely related yet distinct considerations may be derived for distinguishing the point at which the litigation privilege may attach to statements in advance of litigation:

(1) The communication must have been made preliminary to a proposed judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding. That is, a lawsuit or some other form of proceeding must actually have been suggested or proposed, orally or in writing. Without some actual verbalization of the danger that a given controversy may turn into a lawsuit, there is no unmistakably objective way to detect at what point on the continuum between the onset of a dispute and the filing of a lawsuit the threat of litigation has advanced from mere possibility or subjective anticipation to contemplated reality. (53 C.A.4th 34.)

(2) The verbal proposal of litigation must be made in good faith. It is not necessary that a party make an actual "threat" of litigation, as long as there is a serious, good faith proposal. Conversely, even a threat to file a lawsuit is insufficient to activate the privilege if the threat is merely a negotiating tactic and not a serious proposal made in good faith contemplation of going to court. (53 C.A.4th 35.)

(3) The contemplated litigation must be imminent. An offhand suggestion that a given claim or dispute might result in a lawsuit is insufficient to invoke the privilege. Unless and until the parties are negotiating under the actual threat of impending litigation, the justification for the litigation privilege of encouraging access to the courts can have no relevance to their communications. (53 C.A.4th 35.)

(4) The litigation must be proposed in order to obtain access to the courts for the purpose of resolving the dispute. Access to the courts is not an end in itself. Clearly, there is no public policy favoring litigation for its own sake. (53 C.A.4th 35.)

The critical point of each of these four elements is that the mere potential or bare possibility that judicial proceedings might be instituted in the future is insufficient to invoke the litigation privilege. In every case, the privileged communication must have some relation to an imminent lawsuit or judicial proceeding that is actually contemplated seriously and in good faith to resolve a dispute, and not simply as a tactical ploy to negotiate a bargain. (53 C.A.4th 36.)

(d) Privilege is inapplicable here. For purposes of their motions in limine based on the affirmative defense of the litigation privilege, defendants had the burden of establishing the preliminary facts, based on these standards. This they failed to do, and the trial judge erred in granting their motions on this basis. There is no evidence that either plaintiffs or defendants were actually contemplating commencing legal proceedings, seriously and in good faith, at the time of the communications. Nor is the preliminary factual basis established, as contended by defendants, by the allegations of plaintiffs' complaints. Plaintiffs merely alleged that defendants intended, by means of the communications, to protect themselves from potential liability by inducing appellants not to pursue their rightful judicial remedies. Plaintiffs never alleged or admitted that at the time they informed defendants of the cracks in their foundations, plaintiffs themselves were actually contemplating litigation, seriously and in good faith. Moreover, even if plaintiffs had made an allegation to that effect in their complaints, this still would not satisfy the requirements of the privilege in this prelitigation context. For defendants to take advantage of the privilege by applying it to their own communications, they were required to establish that at the time they made the subject communications, they themselves actually contemplated prospective litigation, seriously and in good faith. (53 C.A.4th 37.) (See Home Ins. Co. v. Zurich Ins. Co. (2002) 96 C.A.4th 17, 22, 116 C.R.2d 583 [in action by one insurer against another based on alleged misrepresentation of policy limits of defendant's insured, misrepresentation was made to induce settlement of underlying suit and was thus within litigation privilege; citing Edwards].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Action Apartment Assn. v. Santa Monica (2007) 41 C.4th 1232, 1250, 63 C.R.3d 398, 163 P.3d 89 [provision in municipal "tenant harassment" ordinance authorizing action against landlord serving eviction notice without reasonable factual or legal basis was preempted by statutory litigation privilege to extent, but only to extent, that provision prohibited notice relating to litigation contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration]; Navarro v. IHOP Properties (2005) 134 C.A.4th 834, 843, 36 C.R.3d 385 [statements made during settlement negotiations fall within litigation privilege]; American Products Co. v. Law Offices of Geller, Stewart & Foley, LLP (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1332, 1341, 37 C.R.3d 93 [in proper circumstances, litigation privilege applies to demand letters and other prelitigation communications by attorneys]; Healy v. Tuscany Hills Landscape & Recreation Corp. (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1, 5, 39 C.R.3d 547 [allegedly defamatory letter from attorneys for homeowners association to association members, expressly referring to litigation arising from homeowner's refusal to permit association's access to property for weed abatement and to enclosed litigation disclosure letter, came within litigation privilege]; Rohde v. Wolf (2007) 154 C.A.4th 28, 37, 64 C.R.3d 348 [where dispute between sister and brother concerning distribution of deceased father's assets resulted in threats of litigation, voicemail messages of brother's attorney to listing agent for decedent's real property, accusing agent of conspiring with sister to defraud brother and threatening to take "appropriate action," fell within litigation privilege]; Chabak v. Monroy (2007) 154 C.A.4th 1502, 1519, 65 C.R.3d 641 [minor victim's allegedly false comments to parents and paralegal concerning child abuse were protected by litigation privilege as communications made in anticipation of litigation].(2) Prospective Litigation Must Be Contemplated Seriously and in Good Faith. See Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Assn. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1456, 1473, 37 C.R.3d 133 [litigation privilege did not apply to letter from defendant's attorney to plaintiff concerning dispute when, at time of writing, neither party had written demand letter or otherwise seriously proposed litigation]; A.F. Brown Electrical Contractor v. Rhino Elec. Supply (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1118, 1128, 41 C.R.3d 1 [suppliers' actions in filing stop notices and undertaking other collection efforts against electrical contractor that cancelled purchase orders were not protected by litigation privilege in absence of showing that actions occurred when litigation was seriously contemplated; mere threat to pursue available legal remedies if contractor failed to make timely payment did not demonstrate serious consideration of lawsuit]; Haneline Pac. Properties, LLC v. May (2008) 167 C.A.4th 311, 318, 83 C.R.3d 919 [communications from one co-owner of real property to another concerning termination of lease and sale of property, which lessee claimed interfered with contract and prospective economic relations, were not protected by litigation privilege; overall tone of communications related to persuasion and negotiations regarding achievement of mutual goals without serious threats of litigation, despite references to "pursuing remedies"].

107 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

ff. Quasi-Judicial Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 572

[§ 572] Quasi-Judicial Proceedings.

(1) Communications Within Privilege. The litigation privilege extends to quasi-judicial proceedings. (See Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 C.A.3d 861, 867, 100 C.R. 656 [hearing by hospital district concerning hospital's denial of physician's application for staff privileges]; Cuenca v. Safeway San Francisco Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 C.A.3d 985, 994, footnote 2, 225 C.R. 852, infra, §595 [two factors indicative of quasi-judicial proceeding are holding of hearing and making of findings of fact]; Pollock v. University of Southern Calif. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1416, 1429, 6 C.R.3d 122 [litigation privilege applied to allegedly false declaration made in proceeding to terminate employment of tenured professor].) Thus, a doctor's report submitted to a workers' compensation carrier as part of a workers' compensation proceeding is absolutely privileged. (Harris v. King (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1185, 1187, 70 C.R.2d 790.) (On application of litigation privilege to arbitration proceedings, see infra, §573.)

The proceedings must be such as involve the agency's decisionmaking process. In Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 C.A.4th 402, 57 C.R.2d 46, one of defendant psychiatrists disclosed the details of his psychiatric evaluation of plaintiff employee who had requested stress-related disability leave to plaintiff's on-line supervisor. When plaintiff refused to enter an alcohol treatment program as a condition to continued employment, he was fired. Plaintiff's complaint against defendants alleged violation of the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518). The trial judge granted defendants' motion for judgment at the close of plaintiff's case-in-chief. Held, reversed; the disclosure was not within the litigation privilege. Although the litigation privilege has been extended to quasi-judicial proceedings that involve an administrative body or agency's decisionmaking process, plaintiff's request for leave and the subsequent disability verification procedure involved no dispute resolution mechanism and no hearings, and the only decisionmakers involved were a private employer and its employees and agents. (49 C.A.4th 436.)

A complaint to the State Bar is as privileged as statements made during the course of formal disciplinary proceedings. (Chen v. Fleming (1983) 147 C.A.3d 36, 40, 194 C.R. 913; see 77 A.L.R.2d 493 [privilege in connection with proceedings to disbar or discipline attorney].)

(2) Distinction: Imposition of Professional Discipline for Making Communications. In Budwin v. American Psychological Assn. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 875, 29 C.R.2d 453, plaintiff psychologist served as a neutral expert in a child custody proceeding, and his recommendation, i.e., that the mother retain custody of one child but relinquish custody of the other, was followed by the court. The mother then filed a complaint against plaintiff with the American Psychological Association (APA), which sustained the complaint, finding that plaintiff had made false representations and wrongfully refused to produce certain documents. As a result, plaintiff was censured, i.e., he retained all rights and privileges of membership in the APA, but was required to complete further training. Plaintiff petitioned for mandamus, seeking to overturn the APA's censure on the ground that his conduct, his report to the court, and his testimony in the custody proceeding were protected by the litigation privilege. Held, summary judgment for plaintiff reversed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that the APA's censure of him violated the public policies supporting the litigation privilege. However, a clear line has been drawn in the litigation privilege decisions between tort liability on the one hand and criminal and disciplinary liability on the other. And whatever the reach of C.C. 47(b), it has not been extended to preclude professional disciplinary liability. (24 C.A.4th 881.) Hence, "[i]n the context of the false representations assumed to exist in this case for summary judgment purposes, we conclude a private, voluntary, professional association is not precluded by the litigation privilege of section 47(b) from disciplining one of its members for making such representations in a judicial proceeding." (24 C.A.4th 883.)

(b) Bernstein v. Alameda-Contra Costa Med. Assn. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 241, 293 P.2d 862, does not require a different result. In that case, a physician was expelled from a local medical association for violating an American Medical Association rule prohibiting a physician from disparaging, by comment or insinuation, his predecessor on a case. "The Bernstein court focused on the width of this ethical broad brush, and concluded that its application to disparaging statements made in the course of legal proceedings violated the public policy articulated in section 47(b). ... The court did not hold that section 47(b) precludes a voluntary, professional association from disciplining a member for misrepresentations made in the course of an official proceeding; no California court in the nearly 40 years of Bernstein's existence has read the decision that way." (24 C.A.4th 882, citing cases.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Communications Within Privilege. See People v. The Pac. Lumber Co. (2008) 158 C.A.4th 950, 957, 70 C.R.3d 501, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, Supp., §128 [privilege barred state's fraud action under Unfair Competition Law against lumber company for alleged misrepresentations and concealments during administrative proceedings under California Environmental Quality Act regarding agreement to sell land to state and federal governments].

108 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

gg. Arbitration Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 573

[§ 573] Arbitration Proceedings.

Because of its similarity to a judicial proceeding, an arbitration proceeding is within the scope of the privilege, and causes of action based on injury stemming from arbitration testimony are barred. (Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 C.3d 355, 364, 212 C.R. 143, 696 P.2d 637, supra, §14.)

The privilege extends not only to judicial arbitration proceedings, but also to private, contractual arbitrations. (Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 C.4th 634, 643, 29 C.R.2d 152, 871 P.2d 204; on contractual arbitration, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §484 et seq.; on judicial arbitration, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §524 et seq.) In Moore, plaintiffs had claimed in the underlying wrongful death action that decedent had contracted hepatitis as a side effect of a drug, Isoniazid, that defendant health plan had prescribed because of her exposure to tuberculosis. Under contract, the matter was submitted to arbitration. Defendant health plan retained defendant C as a medical expert, who testified on deposition that decedent's death was caused by a form of viral hepatitis and was not drug-induced. He also testified that he was unaware of any medical literature attributing hepatitis to the use of Isoniazid. However, after the arbitrators had rendered their decision in favor of defendant health plan, plaintiffs discovered that C had contributed information concerning decedent's death, allegedly as an example of Isoniazid-induced death, to an article reviewing a number of hepatitis deaths in California. Claiming that C had intentionally provided false testimony at his deposition, plaintiffs instituted the present action against him on numerous causes of action. Defendant's demurrer on the ground that his testimony was within the litigation privilege was sustained, and the action dismissed. The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that the statute did not apply to a private, contractual arbitration proceeding. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Policies favoring application of privilege. Numerous policy considerations favor applying the litigation privilege in this setting:

(1) Because a private, contractual arbitration proceeding is designed to serve a function analogous to--and typically to eliminate the need to resort to--the court system, the need for an absolute privilege to foster complete and truthful testimony is as vital in the private contractual arbitration setting as it is in a court proceeding. (7 C.4th 643.)

(2) The risk that a witness' fear of potential liability either will deter him or her from testifying voluntarily at all, or as candidly and completely as desirable, is as great in the arbitration setting as in a court proceeding. (7 C.4th 643.)

(3) Because a witness may be compelled to testify in an arbitration proceeding as well as in a court proceeding, the unfairness of subjecting the witness to a potentially burdensome tort action on the basis of testimony he or she legally is obligated to provide is as significant a problem in the arbitration setting as in a court proceeding. (7 C.4th 644.)

(4) The fundamental objective of the litigation privilege in protecting the integrity and finality of dispute resolution from "an unending roundelay of litigation" applies with special force in the arbitration context. Because the importance of ensuring the finality of the arbitrator's decision is often a principal impetus for the parties' choice of an arbitral forum over a judicial one, the arbitrator's decision should be the end, not the beginning, of the dispute. And because a party's right to appeal an arbitration award is extremely limited, there is an especially strong risk that a losing party will seek to circumvent such limitations by filing a subsequent tort action against one or more of the participants in the arbitration proceeding on the basis of statements made in that proceeding. (7 C.4th 644.)

(b) Statute's language does not preclude its application.

(1) Plaintiffs argued that the phrase "judicial proceeding," as used in C.C. 47(b), does not encompass private contractual arbitration proceedings and that it is, therefore, the job of the Legislature, not the courts, to amend the statute to include such proceedings. This argument is refuted by both the governing precedent and the history of the privilege. (7 C.4th 644.)

(2) As is clear in this court's summary of the essential components of the litigation privilege in Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, supra, §570, the reference to "any judicial proceeding" has been interpreted to include "quasi-judicial" proceedings, such as private arbitration proceedings, that are functionally equivalent to court proceedings. And although Silberg's reference to "quasi-judicial proceedings" is dictum, Ribas v. Clark, supra, contains the following statement that is an essential element of the holding in that case: "Plaintiff concedes, as he must, that an arbitration hearing falls within the scope of this privilege because of its analogy to a judicial proceeding." (7 C.4th 645.)

(3) The Ribas decision did not disclose whether the arbitration in question was contractual or judicial in nature. However, its reasoning indicates that the statutory judicial proceedings privilege applies to any arbitration hearing that is functionally equivalent to a court proceeding, because of the analogy of such a hearing to a judicial proceeding. And the understanding that the Ribas decision is not limited to judicial arbitration proceedings is confirmed by subsequent Court of Appeal decisions, and by the fact that the Legislature has amended C.C. 47 several times since the Ribas case was decided without ever indicating disagreement or disapproval of its holding. (7 C.4th 648.)

(4) Even if viewed as a matter of first impression, the conclusion that the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) applies to statements made in contractual arbitration proceedings is correct, because the history of the statute supports such an application. The various privileges embodied in C.C. 47 are derived from the common law. And at common law, as revealed in Rest.2d, Torts §§585 and 588, the absolute privileges accorded both witnesses and officers performing a judicial function were parallel privileges, i.e., the scope of the term "judicial proceeding," to which the witness privilege applies, was understood to include proceedings in which an officer exercises judicial functions. Hence, because it has long been recognized that, in private arbitration proceedings an arbitrator enjoys the benefit of an arbitral privilege because his role is analogous to that of a judge, the conclusion in Ribas that a private arbitration proceeding is a "judicial proceeding" for purposes of C.C. 47(b) follows logically from the parallel treatment accorded witnesses and officers who exercise a judicial function under the common law. (7 C.4th 650.)

(c) Privilege is not limited to formal courtroom proceedings. Plaintiffs argued that the litigation privilege should not be applied to private arbitration proceedings because such proceedings lack the solemnity and formal trappings of court proceedings, thereby increasing the risk of perjury. However, the litigation privilege has never been confined to statements made before a judge in the confines of a formal public courtroom. (7 C.4th 653.) Furthermore, plaintiffs' argument is refuted by the language in C.C. 47(b), applying an absolute privilege to "any other official proceeding authorized by law and reviewable" by mandamus; accepting the argument would create the anomalous situation where a witness who testified in a private peer review proceeding would be entirely protected from a subsequent tort action, while a witness who testified in a private arbitration proceeding, which bears a much greater similarity to a traditional court proceeding, would enjoy no such protection. (7 C.4th 654.)

(d) Consumer protection argument is not tenable. On behalf of several consumer protection organizations, amicus curiae argued against applying the litigation privilege to contractual arbitration proceedings because arbitration clauses are frequently inserted into consumer contracts on a unilateral basis without voluntarily agreement by consumers. This argument is flawed in two separate respects:

(1) To the extent that the argument rests on the alleged unfairness of requiring a consumer to be bound by an arbitration thrust on the consumer in a contract of adhesion, the appropriate remedy would be a direct challenge to the validity of the arbitration proceeding itself, instead of a novel rule that would subject a witness testifying in such a proceeding to potential tort liability. (7 C.4th 657.)

(2) To the extent that the argument rests on an assumption that withholding the litigation privilege from arbitration proceedings will benefit consumers, it is based on a questionable premise. In an arbitration proceeding, which consumers often favor because of its relatively low costs, the consumer is just as likely to require the assistance of witnesses as his or her adversary. However, "in view of the disparity in resources between an individual consumer and an institutional adversary, it appears reasonable to suspect that, were this court to adopt a rule permitting a witness who testifies at an arbitration proceeding to be subjected to a collateral tort action, an individual consumer probably would be at a relative disadvantage in securing the testimony of witnesses, because such witnesses presumably would recognize that the consumer's institutional adversary has the financial resources to pursue just such a retaliatory action against them. Thus, we believe that consumers are, at the very least, as likely as other participants to benefit from application of the litigation privilege to arbitration proceedings." (7 C.4th 657.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1322 [Moore]; 30 U.S.F. L. Rev. 861 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Contractual arbitration:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §499 et seq.

Judicial arbitration:

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §579 et seq.

(New) Insurance appraisal proceeding: In Lambert v. Carneghi (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1120, 70 C.R.3d 626, an insured homeowner whose house had been destroyed in a fire invoked the appraisal process under the fire insurance policy to resolve a dispute about the replacement cost. After the process was completed, the dissatisfied homeowner brought a negligence action against the disinterested appraiser selected by the insurer. The trial court sustained the appraiser's demurrer and dismissed the action. Held, affirmed. The appraisal process, required to be included in fire insurance policies by Ins.C. 2071, is an arbitration subject to the law governing arbitrations, even though the appraiser's duties are somewhat different from those of a traditional arbitrator (see 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Proceedings Without Trial, §516). (158 C.A.4th 1129.) Like an arbitrator, the disinterested appraiser in this proceeding enjoys judicial immunity. (158 C.A.4th 1133.)

109 of 109 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
3. Judicial Proceedings.
hh. Grand Jury Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 574

[§ 574] Grand Jury Proceedings.

The litigation privilege extends to statements made in the course of a grand jury proceeding concerning the matter under investigation. (Irwin v. Murphy (1933) 129 C.A. 713, 716, 19 P.2d 292; see Rest.2d, §589; 48 A.L.R.2d 716 [proceedings, presentments, investigations, and reports of grand jury as privileged].) However, comments in grand jury reports with respect to persons not indicted are not privileged. (P.C. 930; see Brooks v. Binderup (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1287, 1293, 46 C.R.2d 501 [P.C. 930 does not violate constitutional rights of grand jurors].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
3. Judicial Proceedings.
ii. Petition for Probate.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 575

[§ 575] Petition for Probate.

There is a conflict whether an action lies for testamentary libel against the estate of a testator, but it seems clear that the executor in offering the will for probate is protected by absolute privilege. (See 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.15, 5.22; 7 Cal. Western L. Rev. 91; 12 Cal. Western L. Rev. 491; 48 Harv. L. Rev. 1028; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §254; 21 A.L.R.3d 754 [libel by will].) Thus, in Steiner v. Eikerling (1986) 181 C.A.3d 639, 642, 226 C.R. 694, supra, §488, executors who attempted to probate a forged will making themselves beneficiaries were immune, under the litigation privilege, from liability for civil conspiracy.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §§5.15, 5.22; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §280.

2 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
3. Judicial Proceedings.
jj. Proceedings in Foreign Country.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 576

[§ 576] Proceedings in Foreign Country.

The litigation privilege may apply to proceedings in foreign countries. Thus, in Beroiz v. Wahl (2000) 84 C.A.4th 485, 100 C.R.2d 905, the privilege was applied to complaints of dispossession filed in a Mexican condominium dispute. This position finds support in the policies underlying C.C. 47 privileges. "Although foreign judicial systems differ from California's judicial system, applying the privileges to proceedings and communications in foreign countries tends to promote these policies." (84 C.A.4th 494.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

kk. Attorney Communications.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 577

[§ 577] Attorney Communications.

The litigation privilege has been examined in several contexts involving communications by or among attorneys:

(1) Asserting Claim and Urging Settlement. In Lerette v. Dean Witter Organization (1976) 60 C.A.3d 573, 131 C.R. 592, defendant assistant general counsel of defendant corporation sent a letter to the chairman of the board of a bank of which plaintiff was president. The letter accused plaintiff of fraudulent misrepresentations inducing defendant corporation to extend credit to a debtor who defaulted, and indicated that unless a settlement could be reached, defendant corporation planned to sue. Held, the letter was absolutely privileged. The litigation privilege extends to communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding. (60 C.A.3d 577, citing the text; see supra, §571.) The privilege protects an attorney employed with reference to an impending judicial proceeding or the controversy underlying it, even though he or she does not become trial counsel in the action ultimately filed. (60 C.A.3d 578.) And if satisfaction of a claim can be obtained without a lawsuit, it is incumbent on an ethical attorney to pursue this course of action. "It is equally well established legal practice to communicate promptly with a potential adversary, setting out the claims made upon him, urging settlement, and warning of the alternative of judicial action." (60 C.A.3d 577.) (See Larmour v. Campanale (1979) 96 C.A.3d 566, 158 C.R. 143 [attorney's demand letter stating that he had advised his clients of their right to sue for specific performance and "possibly for punitive damages based upon fraud," with copy sent to escrow company handling sale]; Izzi v. Rellas (1980) 104 C.A.3d 254, 261, 264, 163 C.R. 689 [defendant attorney's response to plaintiff attorney's letter offering to set aside default against defendant's client; Lerette followed]; Blanchard v. DIRECTV (2004) 123 C.A.4th 903, 918, 20 C.R.3d 385 [prelitigation demand letter that plaintiff stop pirating television programming; following Lerette]; 36 A.L.R.3d 1328 [communications between attorneys as privileged].)

(2) Defaming Own Client. In O'Neil v. Cunningham (1981) 118 C.A.3d 466, 173 C.R. 422, the complaint alleged that plaintiff anesthesiologist and others were sued for malpractice; defendant P was insurer for the county hospital, and defendant C was its retained attorney; defendant C, in an effort to settle the case and minimize P's losses, wrote a letter to P stating that plaintiff had a severe sight problem affecting his performance of the surgery that gave rise to the suit; and this letter was sent to the county hospital, and eventually resulted in termination of plaintiff's contract. Plaintiff's theory was that although C's letter had the necessary connection with the underlying lawsuit and would normally be privileged, the privilege does not apply unless the publication is made "to promote the interest of justice," and that C had sought to protect P's interests by defaming plaintiff, in violation of his fiduciary obligation as an attorney. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The asserted "interest of justice" limitation on the privilege was based on a statement in Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 C.A.3d 818, 106 C.R. 718, but the phrase of uncertain meaning cannot justify an exception to the clear statutory language. (118 C.A.3d 475.) Thus, forgery and perjury have been protected as privileged publications. (118 C.A.3d 475, citing Pettitt v. Levy (1972) 28 C.A.3d 484, 104 C.R. 650, supra, §186, and Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 C.A.3d 626, 99 C.R. 393, supra, §21; on abrogation of "interest of justice" limitation, see supra, §570.)

(b) The analysis in Kinnamon v. Staitman & Snyder (1977) 66 C.A.3d 893, 136 C.R. 321, supra, §458, is erroneous. "If filing a forged building permit or giving perjured testimony are each privileged publications, it is difficult to rationalize why a publication that otherwise would be privileged is not privileged because the attorney uttering the publication violated a Rule of Professional Conduct." (118 C.A.3d 476.)

(3) Fraudulent Representation to Judgment Debtor. In Carney v. Rotkin, Schmerin & McIntyre (1988) 206 C.A.3d 1513, 254 C.R. 478, the complaint alleged the following: Plaintiff, a 74-year-old widow, owed $ 2,720.80 on a money judgment obtained by defendant creditor. The creditor retained defendant law firm to collect, and the firm served plaintiff with a court order to appear at a judgment-debtor examination on Friday. Plaintiff was unable to obtain transportation, and called defendant law firm on Monday to explain her absence from the hearing. Defendant firm's secretary told her that a bench warrant had been issued and would remain in effect until plaintiff paid $ 1,000 on the debt; and an attorney of the firm sent plaintiff a letter confirming this statement. Plaintiff had no funds to comply with the demand, and stayed at her apartment for the balance of the week awaiting arrest, and suffering emotional distress at the prospect of incarceration. She later discovered that the statement was false; there was no bench warrant and neither defendant creditor nor any member of defendant law firm had appeared at the hearing. The trial judge gave judgment on demurrer, applying the litigation privilege. Held, reversed.

(a) The absolute privilege, originally limited to defamation proceedings, now applies to virtually all other causes of action except malicious prosecution. (206 C.A.3d 1520.) But to come within the privilege, the communication must be made to achieve the purpose of the litigation. (206 C.A.3d 1521.) The purpose of the hearing was to have the court determine whether the debtor had any assets to satisfy the judgment, and "it cannot be said that it was to 'serve the purpose of litigation' that defendant attorney falsely told plaintiff that the court had issued a bench warrant as a result of her failure to appear." (206 C.A.3d 1522.)

(b) O'Neil v. Cunningham, supra, is distinguishable. There the statements were made to settle a malpractice suit; here no attempt to settle was made, for the attorneys specifically set forth the entire amount still owed. (206 C.A.3d 1522.)

(4) Fraudulent Representation to Judgment Creditor. In Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafon, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 C.A.4th 54, 131 C.R.2d 777, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §328, plaintiffs obtained an arbitration judgment against an insured and then filed an action against the insurer and its attorney, based on false statements about coverage made by the attorney. The attorney argued that the action was barred by the litigation privilege. Held, the litigation privilege was not applicable. Because the misrepresentation was made to a party standing in the shoes of the insured (the judgment creditor), application of the litigation privilege would be inconsistent with Ins.C. 11580, a more specific statute, which makes the judgment creditor of an insured a third-party beneficiary of the insurance contract. (107 C.A.4th 77.)

(5) Solicitation of Litigation. In Rubin v. Green (1993) 4 C.4th 1187, 17 C.R.2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044, the court granted review "to consider whether a defendant in an impending civil action may sue the attorneys for the opposing party on the ground that they wrongfully 'solicited' the litigation against them," concluding that such a proceeding

"undermines the established policy of allowing access to the courts" and that "given the availability of other remedies for the redress of attorney solicitation, this retaliatory suit is not maintainable." (4 C.4th 1190.) Green was a resident of Cedar Village Mobilehome Park, which was coowned by plaintiff. Green sent a notice of intention to sue plaintiff on behalf of the 450 residents of the park, enumerating alleged defects in the operation of the park, and seeking a variety of remedies. Plaintiff then filed an action against Green and the law firm for which she acted as agent, on the theory that these defendants had solicited mobilehome park residents as clients in anticipated litigation against plaintiff over park conditions, thereby interfering in plaintiff's contractual relations with them. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint on the ground that defendants' conduct was protected by the litigation privilege. The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the privilege did not apply to the act of defendants. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

(a) Defendants' acts are within scope of privilege.

(1) For well over a century, communications with "some relation" to judicial proceedings have been absolutely immune from tort liability by the privilege codified in C.C. 47(b). California courts have given the privilege an expansive reach; the principal exception to its application has been for malicious prosecution actions. (4 C.4th 1193.) And most recent cases have emphasized the policy of assuring litigants of virtually unhindered access to the courts. (4 C.4th 1194, and footnote 3, listing many decisions.)

(2) Numerous decisions have applied the privilege to prelitigation communications with "some relation" to an anticipated lawsuit, and these decisions are controlling here. "[W]e can imagine few communicated acts more clearly within the scope of the privilege than those alleged in the amended complaint, that is, meeting and discussing with Cedar Village residents park conditions and the merits of the proposed failure-to-maintain lawsuit, and filing the complaint and subsequent pleadings in the litigation." (4 C.4th 1195.)

(3) The fact that defendants' communications with the mobilehome park residents necessarily involved related acts does not destroy the privilege. While the privilege does not apply to courses of conduct, as opposed to communications, to the extent that the complaint rests on communicative acts the privilege is operative. (4 C.4th 1195.) Here, "[p]laintiff's claims, however styled, are founded essentially upon alleged misrepresentations made by the law firm (and Green) to Cedar Village residents in the course of discussions over park conditions and the possibility of being retained to prosecute the failure-to-maintain action, and the subsequent filing of pleadings in the lawsuit itself. Whether these acts amounted to wrongful attorney solicitation or not, they were communicative in their essential nature and therefore within the privilege of section 47(b)." (4 C.4th 1196.)

(b) Claim may not be maintained as malicious prosecution action.

(1) "[T]he gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is not that the claims of the Cedar Village litigants are themselves groundless, but that the methods employed by the law firm (through the use of Green) in being retained as counsel for the residents amounted to solicitation, conduct the Legislature has made criminal. Because the alleged wrong which plaintiff seeks to redress is not the filing of an unjustified lawsuit but of soliciting others to file what are, to all appearances, potentially meritorious claims, the question is not whether the solicitation claim should be subject to conditions analogous to those governing malicious prosecution actions, but whether such a derivative claim should be maintainable at all. A consideration of the administrative and criminal sanctions established by the Legislature for attorney solicitation, together with the remedies available to plaintiff within the scope of the failure-to-maintain suit itself, lead us to conclude that this action should be dismissed." (4 C.4th 1196.)

(2) "It is not difficult to imagine the consequences likely to follow in the wake of a rule permitting the defendant in a civil action to institute parallel litigation seeking to impose liability on the attorney for the adverse party based on the circumstances surrounding the formation of the attorney-client relationship that led to the filing of the original suit. Apart from provoking yet another round of litigation, all of the evils identified in our prior cases as accompanying retaliatory suits based on litigation-related communications would be promoted by such a tactic. The impairment of colorable claims by disrupting access to counsel, the intimidating effect on attorneys of facing an almost certain retaliatory proceeding, the distractions inherent in requiring counsel to deal with defending a personal countersuit as well as the predicate action and, in general, the dampening effect on the unobstructed presentation of claims which we have identified as the central value supporting limitations on other derivative tort actions, apply with equal force to this suit." (4 C.4th 1197.)

(3) The regulatory and prosecutorial sanctions available to remedy attorney solicitation, together with those available to litigants within the scope of the predicate action itself, are sufficient. For plaintiff in this case, potential remedies include the recovery of attorneys' fees and costs should he be the prevailing party in the failure-to-maintain litigation, and reasonable expenses including attorneys' fees if the residents are determined to have employed frivolous or delaying tactics in their suit. (4 C.4th 1199.) (See Stacy & Witbeck v. San Francisco (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1074, 1090, 44 C.R.2d 472 [Rubin rule is that litigation privilege bars injunctive relief if based on same communicative act respecting which privilege would bar tort action; privilege applies only to litigation, not to administrative procedures pursued for nonlitigation purposes]; Dove Audio v. Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman (1996) 47 C.A.4th 777, 781, 54 C.R.2d 830 [following Rubin]; LiMandri v. Judkins (1997) 52 C.A.4th 326, 347, 60 C.R.2d 539 [distinguishing Rubin where communication was unrelated to any anticipated litigation]; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 681 [Rubin].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Fraudulent Representation to Judgment Creditor.

Shafer case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §304.

4 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

3. Judicial Proceedings.

kk. Attorney Communications.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 578

[§ 578] (ll) Statements to Media.

In Susan A. v. Sonoma (1991) 2 C.A.4th 88, 3 C.R.2d 27, defendant psychologist complied with a public defender's request to interview a 14-year-old minor who had been arrested on suspicion of attempted murder. On the request of a reporter, and with the permission of the chief deputy public defender, defendant spoke to the reporter about his impressions of the minor, and the conversation was subsequently published. The minor and his parents filed an action against the psychologist and the county, and the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendants on grounds of the litigation privilege. Held, reversed; the communications were not made in a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding.

(a) The privilege may be available even though a publication is made outside the courtroom and involves no function of the court or its officers. But a republication to nonparticipants in the action, such as persons in no way connected with the proceeding, is generally not privileged; and here the press was not sufficiently connected with the proceeding. (2 C.A.4th 93.)

(b) The scope of C.C. 47(b) has been judicially expanded to include publication to nonparties with a substantial interest in the proceeding. (2 C.A.4th 94, citing Costa v. Superior Court (1984) 157 C.A.3d 673, 204 C.R. 1, supra, §569.) But to apply the statute to publication to the general public through the press would swallow up the general rule that the privilege is not available to nonparticipants in the action. (2 C.A.4th 94.)

(c) Defendant psychologist's contention that C.C. 47(b) applies because he spoke to the press to obtain a litigation advantage for plaintiff minor is untenable. Accepting this claim would open the door to the universally condemned trial by press, and would be contrary to the rule that application of C.C. 47(b) does not depend on the speaker's motives, morals, or intent. (2 C.A.4th 95.)

In Shahvar v. Superior Court (1994) 25 C.A.4th 653, 657, 30 C.R.2d 597, transmission of a facsimile copy of a complaint to a newspaper, which published an article based on false allegations in it, was held not privileged, citing Susan A. v. Sonoma. However, C.C. 47(d) was subsequently amended to provide that a communication to a public journal of a judicial or other public official proceeding, of anything said in the course of the proceeding, or of a verified charge or complaint to a public official on which a warrant has been issued is privileged, except as provided. (See infra, §588.) The intent of the amendment was to abrogate Shahvar v. Superior Court. (Stats. 1996, Chap. 1055, §1.)

Statements made to a reporter for the purpose of rehearsing before testifying at a preliminary hearing were held privileged in Spitler v. Children's Institute Int. (1992) 11 C.A.4th 432, 14 C.R.2d 197. These statements met all the requirements for application of the litigation privilege. (11 C.A.4th 438.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

5 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - b. Absolute Privilege.
 - 4. Legislative Proceedings.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 579

[§ 579] Legislative Proceedings.

(1) Congress. Under the federal Constitution, senators and representatives "shall not be questioned in any other place" for "any Speech or Debate in either house." (U.S. Const., Art. I, §6; see Rest.2d, Torts §590; on Speech and Debate Clause, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §150.)

(2) State and Local Legislative Bodies. Statements by participants in legislative proceedings are absolutely privileged under C.C. 47(b), except as provided. (On communications excluded from the privileges set forth in C.C. 47(b), see supra, §563.)

The privilege extends to publications made during the course of proceedings before either state or local bodies. (See Harnish v. Smith (1956) 138 C.A.2d 307, 310, 291 P.2d 532 [member of city council]; Scott v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1974) 37 C.A.3d 277, 285, 112 C.R. 609 [same]; Rest.2d, Torts §590; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.23; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §412; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§294, 295; 41 A.L.R.4th 1116 [statements made outside of formal proceedings].)

The privilege extends to legal steps taken prior to the proceeding that have some logical connection with it. (1-800 Contacts v. Steinberg (2003) 107 C.A.4th 568, 587, 132 C.R.2d 789.) Thus, in Cayley v. Nunn (1987) 190 C.A.3d 300, 235 C.R. 385, N and C, property owners, were engaged in a dispute over a height variance sought by N. Plaintiff C alleged that N, in preparation for an appeal to the city council, circulated a petition for neighborhood support for his height variance, and in doing so, made slanderous remarks about C. Held, the communications were privileged. (190 C.A.3d 303.)

Any communication to a public journal of a legislative or other public official proceeding or of anything said in the course of the proceeding is privileged, except as provided. (C.C. 47(d), infra, §588.)

(3) Legislative Committees. The statements of a witness before a legislative investigating committee are also absolutely privileged, on the same theory as those of a witness in a judicial proceeding, namely, he or she must reply to proper questions and is therefore entitled to protection. (Kelly v. Daro (1941) 47 C.A.2d 418, 423, 118 P.2d 37; see 15

So. Cal. L. Rev. 276; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §296.)

(4) No Relevancy Requirement. Dictum in Scott v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., supra, suggests that the relevancy doctrine (see supra, §569 and infra, §583) is inapplicable to proceedings before a legislative body. The court first declared that the publication in question was adequately related to the matter before the city council, but then made the following statement: "Moreover, we recognize that the immunity historically afforded to legislators does not impose a restriction that the statements made by a member of a legislative body are protected only if they are directed toward achieving the object of legislation. Rather, the rule appears well settled that the general immunity afforded legislators extends to all that is spoken or done in the course of legislative proceedings." (37 C.A.3d 288.) The Restatement is in accord. (See Rest.2d, Torts §590.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.37

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) State and Local Legislative Bodies. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.23; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§276, 277.

(3) Legislative Committees. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §278.

6 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

5. Other Official Proceedings.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 580

[§ 580] In General.

Communications made "in any other official proceeding authorized by law" are absolutely privileged, except as provided. (C.C. 47(b); see Rest.2d, Torts §591; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §412; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §303; 40 A.L.R.2d 941 [statements or utterances by member of municipal council, or of governing body of other political subdivision, in course of official proceedings, as privileged]; 45 A.L.R.2d 1296 [privilege applicable to judicial proceedings as extending to administrative proceedings]; 85 A.L.R.3d 1137 [privileged nature of statements or utterances by member of school board in course of official proceedings]; 33 A.L.R.4th 632 [privileged nature of statements or utterances by members of governing body of public institution of higher learning in course of official proceedings].)

Specified communications are excluded from the privileges set forth in C.C. 47(b). (See supra, §563.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.36

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§283, 284.

7 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

5. Other Official Proceedings.

bb. Scope of Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 581

[§ 581] Scope of Privilege.

(1) In General. The official proceedings privilege covers proceedings of administrative boards and quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative bodies. (See Whelan v. Welford (1958) 164 C.A.2d 689, 693, 331 P.2d 86 [property owners' written protest before city planning commission against plaintiff's application for use variance]; Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 C.A.3d 861, 865, 100 C.R. 656 [statements by defendant doctor to attorney for hospital obtained for hearing by hospital district on plaintiff's application for staff privileges]; Pettitt v. Levy (1972) 28 C.A.3d 484, 488, 104 C.R. 650, supra, §186 [submission to city of forged building permit, omitting address contained in original, in order to deny plaintiffs nonconforming use]; Martin v. Kearney (1975) 51 C.A.3d 309, 311, 124 C.R. 281 [letters of parents of school pupils to principal, pursuant to school board rules, asserting misconduct of teacher]; Royer v. Steinberg (1979) 90 C.A.3d 490, 503, 153 C.R. 499, citing the text [school board proceedings]; Lebbos v. State Bar (1985) 165 C.A.3d 656, 667, 211 C.R. 847 [bar association forwarded complaints by clients of plaintiff attorney to State Bar, which conducted investigation]; O'Shea v. General Tel. Co. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1040, 1048, 238 C.R. 715 [statements by employer about former employee made during California Highway Patrol employment background investigation]; Rosenthal v. Vogt (1991) 229 C.A.3d 69, 280 C.R. 1 [State Bar proceedings]; Ellenberger v. Espinosa (1994) 30 C.A.4th 943, 952, 36 C.R.2d 360 [statements at disciplinary hearing of Board of Dental Examiners as to dentist's misconduct were privileged under C.C. 47(b) and C.C. 43.8 (immunity as to communication in aid of evaluation of healing arts practitioner); see supra, §155]; Picton v. Anderson Union High School Dist. (1996) 50 C.A.4th 726, 736, 57 C.R.2d 829 [statements made before school district credentialing commission]; Cruey v. Gannett Co. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 356, 368, 76 C.R.2d 670 [statement to Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was absolutely privileged even if maliciously made]; Braun v. Bureau of State Audits (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1382, 1388, 79 C.R.2d 791 [investigative audit under Govt.C. 8547 et seq. is "official proceeding authorized by law," and all statements made in furtherance of audit are absolutely privileged]; Joel v. Valley Surgical Center (1998) 68 C.A.4th 360, 372, 80 C.R.2d 247 [hospital report involving suspended physician that was sent to National Practitioner Data Bank, as required by law, was privileged even if plaintiff physician was able to prove that report was improperly motivated]; Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 C.A.4th 513, 517, 104 C.R.2d 439 [expert's testimony at hearing before Contractors' State License Board]; Shaddox v. Bertani (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1406, 1415, 2 C.R.3d 808 [dentist, fearing that police officer was addicted to prescription drugs, reported alleged addiction to officer's superiors; communication was part of official proceeding and was privileged under C.C. 47(b), even though officer was off duty when visiting dentist[.]

Bardin v. Lockheed Aeronautical Systems Co. (1999) 70 C.A.4th 494, 82 C.R.2d 726, presented the question whether statements made by the former employer of an applicant for a position with the police department during the required background investigation are absolutely privileged under the "other official proceedings" provision of C.C. 47(b) or are subject to the conditional privilege of Govt.C. 1031.1 (employer immune if he or she acted without malice or fraud). Here, defendant, plaintiff's former employer, stated that she had had a drinking problem. Plaintiff claimed that this statement was false, that it was made without a good faith belief that it was true, and that it was made in retaliation for complaining about wrongful conduct. Claiming that the statement was absolutely privileged, defendant obtained summary judgment. Held, affirmed.

(a) Under Govt.C. 1031(d), police department applicants must be of good moral character, as determined by a background investigation. O'Shea v. General Tel. Co. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1040, 238 C.R. 715, held that, under C.C. 47(b), statements made by a former employer during the authorized background check are absolutely privileged. However, after the date of the O'Shea case, Govt.C. 1031.1 was adopted, dealing specifically with the requirement that former employers supply police departments with background information on former employees seeking employment. Govt.C. 1031.1(b) grants a conditional privilege to employers for statements made without fraud or malice, but also provides that it was not intended to abrogate or lessen the employers' existing common law or statutory immunities. (70 C.A.4th 499.)

(b) Plaintiff argues that the specific statute, Govt.C. 1031.1, applied over the general, C.C. 47. However, this approach applies only if the statutes in question cannot be reconciled, and the statutes here can. According to the plain language of Govt.C. 1031.1, if an employer enjoyed a privilege to provide background information (even in bad faith) prior to the enactment of that statute, Govt.C. 1031.1(b) means that the employer retains this privilege afterwards. (70 C.A.4th 502.)

(2) Communications Made Before Institution of Formal Proceedings. The privilege extends to communications to or from officials or agencies that precede institution of formal proceedings. (See King v. Borges (1972) 28 C.A.3d 27, 32, 104 C.R. 414 [letter of attorney for buyer to Division of Real Estate accusing broker of wrongfully withholding funds]; Brody v. Montalbano (1978) 87 C.A.3d 725, 732, 151 C.R. 206 [communications by parents to city board of education asserting misconduct of junior high school vice principal in handling problem of student discipline]; Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 C.A.3d 933, 942, 242 C.R. 259 [hospital administrator's letter to Board of Medical Quality Assurance concerning restrictions on doctor's privileges]; Passman v. Torkan (1995) 34 C.A.4th 607, 616, 40 C.R.2d 291, citing the text [letter by party in civil action to district attorney urging that opposing party be prosecuted and characterizing opposing party's attorneys as "crooked"]; Kashian v. Harriman (2002) 98 C.A.4th 892, 926, 120 C.R.2d 576 [attorney's delivery of letter to Attorney General requesting investigation of plaintiff's business activities].)

An official investigative and enforcement branch of the Internal Revenue Service, with authority to investigate tax liability, summon witnesses, subpoena records, take testimony, serve process, and perform arrests and seizures is a quasi-judicial body regularly engaged in an "official proceeding authorized by law" for purposes of C.C. 47(b). Hence, an informer's communication that a businessman is guilty of tax fraud, designed to prompt regulatory enforcement action, is a part of an official proceeding. (Tiedemann v. Superior Court (1978) 83 C.A.3d 918, 926, 148 C.R. 242.)

(3) Where Privilege Rejected. The official proceedings privilege does not apply unless the statement has, in fact, been made in an official proceeding. (See Hale Co. v. Lea (1923) 191 C. 202, 205, 215 P. 900 [defamatory letter by California agricultural official to agriculture department of another state was not in proper discharge of official duty nor in official proceeding]; Gunsul v. Ray (1935) 6 C.A.2d 528, 530, 45 P.2d 248 [statement in notice given to electors in recall proceeding was not made in official proceeding]; McMann v. Wadler (1961) 189 C.A.2d 124, 128, 11 C.R. 37 [meeting of board of directors of nonprofit corporation]; Katz v. Rosen (1975) 48 C.A.3d 1032, 1037, 121 C.R. 853, infra, §594 [local bar association has no power to impose sanctions against unethical conduct, and complaint made to that body is protected only by qualified privilege of C.C. 47(c) (infra, §591) for communications between interested parties]; Eisenberg v. Alameda Newspapers (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1359, 1377, 88 C.R.2d 802 [in defamation action based on defendant newspaper's retraction of plaintiff's earlier article, fact that retraction was in response to C.C. 48a demand letter (see infra, §630 et seq.) did not make it part of "other official proceeding"]; on extension of absolute privilege to private proceedings reviewable by mandamus, see infra, §584.)

Generally, the privilege does not extend to communications between private parties who are not acting in an official capacity. (Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 156, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, supra, §564.) However, the rule is different where the communications are preparatory to official proceedings. (Rubin v. Green (1993) 4 C.4th 1187, 1194, 17 C.R.2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044, supra, §577.)

The privilege does not arise merely because a proceeding is subject to regulation. In Cuenca v. Safeway San Francisco Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 C.A.3d 985, 225 C.R. 852, infra, §595, the court refused to apply the official proceeding privilege to an investigation by the supervisory committee of a federally regulated credit union. The official proceeding privilege applies only to governmental proceedings or quasi-judicial proceedings otherwise reviewable by mandamus. (180 C.A.3d 994, citing Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, supra, §564, and Wallin v. Vienna Sausage Mfg. Co. (1984) 156 C.A.3d 1051, 203 C.R. 375, infra, §584.) The federal credit unions are highly regulated by the federal statute; but none of the statutorily created duties makes the investigation or report of the supervisory committee an "official proceeding." (180 C.A.3d 995.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 452, 477, 27 C.R.3d 239 [allegedly defamatory letter written to Insurance Commissioner's office by outside counsel for insurer in liquidation satisfied requirements of official proceeding privilege; communication was made in course of proceeding authorized by law by participant with some connection or logical relation to proceeding]. (2) Communications Made Before Institution of Formal Proceedings. See Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co., supra, 128 C.A.4th 478 [official proceeding privilege extends to investigatory activities by public agencies; privilege is not restricted to statements made once proceeding has been commenced, but may apply to statements made in advance]; Fontani v. Wells Fargo Inv., LLC (2005) 129 C.A.4th 719, 728, 734, 28 C.R.3d 833 [official form required to be filed by employer of securities dealer with National Association of Securities Dealers, describing reasons for dealer's termination, was within official proceeding privilege; form could be precursor to investigation leading to later proceeding]; Brown v. Department of Corrections (2005) 132 C.A.4th 520, 527, 33 C.R.3d 754 [correctional officer's whistleblower action against Office of Inspector General, employer prison, and officer's supervisors, based on retaliation after he reported misconduct by supervisors, was barred by official proceedings privilege where his reports allegedly contained threats of criminal violence against supervisors, which prompted official investigation into suspected criminal wrongdoing by officer]; Lee v. Fick (2005) 135 C.A.4th 89, 96, 37 C.R.3d 375 [complaints to school authorities about coach, which were intended to prompt official action, were privileged; communications to official agency intended to induce action are part of "official proceeding" and protected under C.C. 47(b)].

8 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
5. Other Official Proceedings.
cc. Report to Police.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 582

[§ 582] Report to Police.

(1) Communications Concerning Officer Misconduct. In Imig v. Ferrar (1977) 70 C.A.3d 48, 138 C.R. 540, a communication to the Los Angeles Police Department concerning misconduct of one of its officers was held to be within the official proceedings privilege.

C.C. 47.5, added in 1982, nullified the Imig holding. Under that statute, a peace officer may bring an action for defamation against a person who has filed a complaint with the officer's employing agency alleging misconduct, criminal conduct or incompetence where (a) the complaint was false, (b) the complainant knew it was false, and (c) it was made with spite, hatred, or ill will, and the officer may prove knowledge that the complaint was false by showing that the complainant "had no reasonable grounds to believe the statement was true and that the complainant exhibited a reckless disregard for ascertaining the truth." (See 14 Pacific L. J. 747.)

However, Walker v. Kiousis (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1432, 1439, 114 C.R.2d 69, held C.C. 47.5 unconstitutional. Treating complaints against police officers differently from complaints against all other government officers was deemed an impermissible content-based restriction on speech that is not supported by a compelling governmental interest. (93 C.A.4th 1446.) (See People v. Stanistreet (2002) 29 C.4th 497, 512, 127 C.R.2d 633, 58 P.3d 465, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority, Supp., §28 [stating that court would "express no opinion" on validity of C.C. 47.5, because issue was not before it].)

Loshonkohl v. Kinder (2003) 109 C.A.4th 510, 135 C.R.2d 114, disagreed with Walker and held C.C. 47.5 constitutional for the following reasons:

(a) Walker ruled that C.C. 47.5 was unconstitutional on the ground that it was improper content-based discrimination. However, the discrimination is not improper; the potential for defamation under this statute creates no realistic possibility of the official suppression of ideas. C.C. 47.5 makes actionable only formal complaints against police officers based on knowingly false statements of fact and speech that is constitutionally unprotected, and the scienter requirement protects an individual who honestly misperceives the facts. In addition, the statute exceeds constitutional requirements by requiring that the statement be made with actual malice. (109 C.A.4th 517, applying reasoning of People v. Stanistreet (2002) 29 C.4th 497, 127 C.R.2d 633, 58 P.3d 465, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §411, upholding P.C. 148.6 [misdemeanor to make false allegations of misconduct against a police officer].)

(b) C.C. 47.5 does give peace officers a right to sue for defamation that is not afforded to other public officials. However, where, as here, there is no possibility of the official suppression of ideas, underinclusiveness of a statute restricting totally proscribable speech need not be justified by reference to a neutral basis. (109 C.A.4th 517, citing R.A.V. v. St. Paul, Minnesota (1992) 505 U.S. 377, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §459.)

(c) While citizen complainants have not received the reciprocal right to sue peace officers for defamation arising from an official investigation, this lack of reciprocity does not render the statute unconstitutional, because there is no indication that peace officer defamation of citizen complainants poses a problem. The First Amendment does not require states to regulate problems that do not exist. Moreover, C.C. 47.5 does not absolve peace officers from liability that does not fall under the C.C. 47 privilege. (109 C.A.4th 518.)

(2) Reports of Criminal Misconduct. Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 C.A.3d 745, 753, 181 C.R. 423, held a report to a police department concerning suspected criminal activity to be within the absolute privilege accorded official proceedings. Williams was disapproved in Fenelon v. Superior Court (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1476, 1479, 273 C.R. 367, holding that such a report was protected only by the qualified privilege given communications made without malice to interested persons (see infra, §591 et seq.). A number of subsequent Court of Appeal decisions followed Williams, rather than Fenelon. (See Hunsucker v. Sunnyvale Hilton Inn (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1498, 1502, 28 C.R.2d 722 [motel owner's report to police that woman with gun was seen in plaintiff's room was absolutely privileged]; Passman v. Torkan (1995) 34 C.A.4th 607, 616, 40 C.R.2d 291 [communications designed to prompt criminal prosecution directed to official governmental agency empowered to commence criminal prosecutions are absolutely privileged]; Fremont Comp. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 44 C.A.4th 867, 875, 52 C.R.2d 211 [defendant insurers were absolutely privileged to report plaintiff's overbilling to Insurance Department and local district attorney's office; Fenelon not followed].) (See Beroiz v. Wahl (2000) 84 C.A.4th 485, 495, 100 C.R.2d 905 [although "California courts have split about whether communications that initiate or prompt criminal investigation are subject to the absolute privilege," a "majority of cases that have addressed this issue follow Williams"].) Williams was followed, for example, in Devis v. Bank of America (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1002, 1008, 77 C.R.2d 238, which also extended the official reports privilege to investigations leading to police reports.

In Hagberg v. California Federal Bank FSB (2004) 32 C.4th 350, 7 C.R.3d 803, 81 P.3d 244, the California Supreme Court adopted the Williams rule. A customer filed suit against defendant bank for falsely reporting to police that she had attempted to cash an invalid check, alleging a number of tort causes of action. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The report was absolutely privileged.

(a) The question considered is whether tort liability may be imposed for statements made when a citizen contacts law enforcement personnel to report suspected criminal activity by another person. "[W]e agree with the trial court, the Court of Appeal, and the great weight of authority in this state" that these statements are privileged under C.C. 47(b) and can be the basis for tort liability only if the plaintiff can establish the elements of the tort of malicious prosecution. (32 C.4th 355.)

(b) C.C. 47 establishes a privilege that bars liability in tort for the making of certain statements. Under C.C. 47(b), the privilege bars a civil action for damages for communications made in any (1) legislative proceeding, (2) judicial proceeding, (3) other official proceeding authorized by law, or (4) mandamus proceeding, with certain statutory exceptions that do not apply to the present case. The privilege established by this subdivision often is referred to as an "absolute" privilege, and it bars all tort causes of action except claims for malicious prosecution. (32 C.4th 360.) C.C. 47(b) does not, of course, bar a criminal prosecution that is based on a statement or communication, when the speaker's utterance encompasses the elements of a criminal offense. (32 C.4th 361.)

(c) In its application to communications made in a "judicial proceeding," C.C. 47(b) is not limited to statements made in a courtroom. Many cases have held that C.C. 47(b) encompasses not only testimony in court and statements made in pleadings, but also statements made prior to the filing of a lawsuit, whether in preparation for anticipated litigation or to investigate the feasibility of filing a lawsuit. (32 C.4th 361.)

(d) By the terms of C.C. 47(b), statements that are made in quasi-judicial proceedings, or "any other official proceeding authorized by law," are privileged to the same extent as statements made in the course of a judicial proceeding. By analogy to cases extending the litigation privilege to statements made outside the courtroom, many cases have held that the official proceedings privilege applies to a communication intended to prompt an administrative agency charged with enforcing the law to investigate or remedy a wrongdoing. (32 C.4th 362.)

(e) By the same token, the overwhelming majority of cases, including the leading case of Williams v. Taylor, conclude that when a citizen contacts law enforcement personnel to report suspected criminal activity and to instigate law enforcement personnel to respond, the communication also enjoys an unqualified privilege under C.C. 47(b). These cases explain that a statement urging law enforcement personnel to investigate another person's suspected violation of criminal law, to apprehend a suspected lawbreaker, or to report a crime to prosecutorial authorities is shielded from tort liability to the same extent as a similar statement to administrative enforcement agencies. Reasoning that these communications are at least preparatory to "any other official proceeding authorized by law," the majority of decisions in the Courts of Appeal have held such statements to be shielded by an absolute privilege. These decisions are persuasive. (32 C.4th 364.)

(f) One Court of Appeal decision, Fenelon v. Superior Court, disagreed with these authorities, but its analysis has been rejected in numerous subsequent decisions. Fenelon determined that a citizen's statement to the police concerning the suspected criminal activity of another person did not concern an "official proceeding," reasoning that the term encompasses solely proceedings resembling judicial and legislative proceedings, such as transactions of administrative boards and quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative proceedings. The primary reason advanced for this conclusion was that it is only in such proceedings that persons accused of wrongdoing possess a certain minimum level of due process protection. (32 C.4th 366.) However, the court in Fenelon did not explain the many decisions that extend the privilege to communications requesting the initiation of investigation that might lead to such proceedings. As these decisions recognize, statements made in preparation for or to prompt investigation that may result in the initiation of judicial, legislative, quasi-judicial, or quasi-legislative proceedings fall within the privilege. It is not required that the statement be made during the proceeding itself. A statement to the police that is designed to prompt investigation of crime is not different, in this respect, from statements designed to elicit administrative action. Although the administrative action itself, like a criminal trial should one ensue, offers procedural protections to the accused person, there is no basis for concluding that similar protections must be in place at the moment an accusation or complaint is made in order for the privilege to apply. (32 C.4th 368.) (See Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 C.4th 384, 387, 7 C.R.3d 828, 81 P.3d 264 [companion case; Hagberg followed].)

A citizen's arrest is conduct, not communication, and thus not protected by the privilege stated in Hagberg for citizen reports of criminal activity. (Wang v. Hartunian (2003) 111 C.A.4th 744, 747, 3 C.R.3d 909; Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1128, 1137, 15 C.R.3d 118.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Reports of Criminal Misconduct. Citizen's arrest is not privileged: See Buchanan v. Maxfield Enterprises (2005) 130 C.A.4th 418, 423, 29 C.R.3d 909 [employee performed citizen's arrest to remove customer from store; following Wang v. Hartunian (2003) 111 C.A.4th 744, 3 C.R.3d 909, text, p. 861, and distinguishing Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank FSB (2004) 32 C.4th 350, 7 C.R.3d 803, 81 P.3d 244, text, p. 859].

9 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
5. Other Official Proceedings.
dd. Relevancy Limitation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 583

[§ 583] Relevancy Limitation.

The relevancy limitation to the litigation privilege (see supra, §569) applies as well to the official proceedings privilege. In Frisk v. Merrihew (1974) 42 C.A.3d 319, 116 C.R. 781, plaintiff appeared at a school board budget meeting in his capacity as attorney for an interested parent and taxpayer. Defendant, superintendent of the school district and secretary of the board, called him "incompetent," "a rabble-rouser," and "an agitator." Held, a directed verdict for defendant was improper. The evidence was conflicting, and it was a jury question whether there was a logical connection between the defamatory statement and the objective of the meeting. (42 C.A.3d 325.) "What has been said relative to judicial proceedings is applicable with equal force to other official proceedings authorized by law, such as the school board meeting in question. Thus, the determinative issue in this case is not whether the defamation took place on a privileged occasion, but whether the defamatory statement was made to achieve the object of the meeting convened to discuss the school budget." (42 C.A.3d 324.) (See 85 A.L.R.3d 1137 [on Frisk: Privileged nature of statements by member of school board in course of official proceeding].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

10 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

6. Proceedings Reviewable by Mandamus.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 584

[§ 584] Proceedings Reviewable by Mandamus.

Hackethal v. Weissbein (1979) 24 C.3d 55, 59, 154 C.R. 423, 592 P.2d 1175, held that statements made at a hearing before the judicial commission of a private medical society were not protected by absolute privilege. The statutory language in C.C. 47(b) applying the privilege to statements made in an "official proceeding authorized by law" (see supra, §580) was deemed not to extend to statements in proceedings before private bodies. (24 C.3d 59.)

In response, the 1979 Legislature created an absolute privilege for publications and broadcasts "in the initiation or course of any proceeding authorized by law" and reviewable by mandamus. (See C.C. 47(b)(4).) This enactment nullified the Hackethal holding and extended the scope of absolute privilege "to a host of quasi-judicial proceedings not deemed 'official,' and hence not previously protected." (Wallin v. Vienna Sausage Mfg. Co. (1984) 156 C.A.3d 1051, 1055, 203 C.R. 375; see Long v. Pinto (1981) 126 C.A.3d 946, 950, 179 C.R. 182 [letter to hospital board was absolutely privileged]; Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 C.A.4th 513, 517, 104 C.R.2d 439 [report prepared by floor expert for homeowner to be forwarded to Contractors' State License Board was absolutely privileged]; 11 Pacific L. J. 666; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §266.)

In Wallin, supra, the privilege was held applicable to statements made during the course of a grievance hearing held pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement, in which the committee upheld plaintiff employee's discharge from employment.

(a) The vast majority of collective bargaining agreements contain grievance procedures that preclude discharge except for good cause; and when grievance hearings result in the loss of fundamental rights, they are subject to review by mandamus under the holding of Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 C.3d 802, 140 C.R. 442, 567 P.2d 1162, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §266. The present agreement provides that a grievance may be subject to arbitration only if not resolved by the grievance committee; hence, in many instances, the parties will be bound by the decision with no right of arbitration or judicial review other than by mandamus. (156 C.A.3d 1055, 1056.)

(b) "We do not suggest that every decision of a grievance committee operating under similar contracts is so reviewable. However, when the decision of such a tribunal affects a fundamental right such as the right to employment, California courts have historically intervened to insure that the loss of that right was accomplished through a procedure that was fundamentally fair." (156 C.A.3d 1056.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Review by mandamus:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Extraordinary Writs, §265.

Anton case:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Extraordinary Writs, §265.

11 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

7. Report of Official Proceeding or Complaint.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 585

[§ 585] In General.

A "report in, or communication to, a public journal of (A) a judicial, (B) legislative, or (C) other public official proceeding, or (D) of anything said in the course thereof, or (E) of a verified charge or complaint made by any person to a public official, upon which complaint a warrant shall have been issued," is generally privileged, provided that it is "fair and true." (C.C. 47(d)(1); see Rest.2d, Torts §611 [requiring report to be "accurate and complete or a fair abridgment"]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §415; 33 Hastings L. J. 1203; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 319; 34 Stanf. L. Rev. 1041 [report of dated (not contemporaneous) proceeding]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §316 et seq.; 47 A.L.R.4th 718 [report of criminal activities based on information from public safety officers]; on limitations respecting privilege for communications, see infra, §588.)

The privilege was formerly qualified, rather than absolute, being conditioned on freedom from malice. However, the elimination of that condition in 1945 (see infra, §592) made the privilege absolute. (See Green v. Cortez (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1068, 1074, 199 C.R. 221.)

The existence of a privileged occasion is a question of law for the court; fairness of the report is a question of fact for the jury. (Handelsman v. San Francisco Chronicle (1970) 11 C.A.3d 381, 386, 90 C.R. 188, infra, §587.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.42(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §298 et seq.

12 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

7. Report of Official Proceeding or Complaint.

bb. Proceedings Within Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 586

[§ 586] Proceedings Within Privilege.

(1) In General. A "public official proceeding," for purposes of C.C. 47(d), is broadly construed. (See Braun v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 1036, 1049, 61 C.R.2d 58 [newspaper reports about state audit of medical research and training center were privileged under C.C. 47(d), even though audit itself was confidential]; Colt v. Freedom Communications (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1551, 1558, 1 C.R.3d 245 [despite some inaccuracies, defendants' characterization of plaintiffs' activities as "pump and dump scenario" fairly described nature of scheme detailed in SEC complaint so as to qualify for C.C. 47(d) privilege].)

In Howard v. Oakland Tribune (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1124, 245 C.R. 449, defendant newspaper published articles dealing with a state administrative agency investigation of misuse of public funds by a local state-subsidized child care program. The articles accurately reported the facts of the investigation and the summary of findings made, but plaintiffs contended that the findings were false and defamatory, and that the articles were not privileged because the reported proceedings were not "public official proceedings" within the meaning of the statute. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. A dictum in Green v. Cortez (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1068, 199 C.R. 221, interpreted the phrase to include a police investigation into allegations of use of excessive force by police. "If a police internal affairs investigation is a 'public official proceeding' ... , then a state administrative investigation into the expenditure of public funds must also be such a proceeding." (199 C.A.3d 1128.)

(2) Judicial Proceedings. The privilege expressly includes judicial proceedings, and it obviously applies to a report of a court proceeding, i.e., a trial or hearing. (See Jackson v. Underwriters' Report (1937) 21 C.A.2d 591, 597, 69 P.2d 878; Glenn v. Gibson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 649, 660, 171 P.2d 118; Jennings v. Telegram-Tribune Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 119, 122, 210 C.R. 485; McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court (1987) 189 C.A.3d 961, 965, 234 C.R. 702 [report of deposition]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 928; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §319 et seq.; 43 A.L.R.3d 634 [report of secret judicial proceedings].)

California follows the minority view that a complaint or other pleading is part of a "judicial proceeding" and a truthful report of defamatory statements made in a complaint is qualifiedly privileged. (Mortensen v. Los Angeles Examiner (1931) 112 C.A. 194, 201, 296 P. 927; Handelsman v. San Francisco Chronicle (1970) 11 C.A.3d 381, 386, 90 C.R. 188, infra, §587; see Kurata v. Los Angeles News Publishing Co. (1935) 4 C.A.2d 224, 227, 40 P.2d 520 [husband filed suit challenging legitimacy of child, implying that plaintiff wife had illicit relations with another; newspaper article discussing allegations of complaint was privileged]; Rest.2d, Torts §611, Comment e [contra]; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 343; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 56; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §320; 20 A.L.R.4th 576 [reports of pleadings].)

In Hayward v. Watsonville Register-Pajaronian & Sun (1968) 265 C.A.2d 255, 71 C.R. 295, plaintiff, a furniture store manager, was arrested and charged with grand theft of store furniture. After acquittal, he brought an action for libel against defendant newspaper and its editor, based on an article reporting the event. The article stated that "Police records show" that plaintiff had previously served a term in a Kansas prison on a check charge. Because the actual record showed "parole," which is the Kansas equivalent of California's "probation," this was not a report of an actual judicial proceeding in the narrow sense. But the information was obtained from a police crime report with attached FBI identification record (rap sheet). Held, the privilege of fair and true report of a judicial proceeding is broadly interpreted to include the history of the proceedings, including this kind of information. "Thus, if the oral statements of district attorneys, sheriffs, and police officers come under the privilege immunity, then surely the crime reports of a police department and FBI identification records which are part of such reports, and upon which a criminal complaint is filed and a warrant of arrest is issued, should likewise be qualifiedly privileged." (265 C.A.2d 260.) (See Jennings v. Telegram-Tribune Co., supra, 164 C.A.3d 126 [following Hayward].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.42(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Carver v. Bonds (2005) 135 C.A.4th 328, 350, 37 C.R.3d 480 [newspaper article's references to state medical board complaints filed against podiatrist were reports of public official proceeding for purposes of C.C. 47(d)].

(2) Judicial Proceedings. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §301. Pleadings are within privilege: See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §302.

13 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

7. Report of Official Proceeding or Complaint.

cc. Requirement That Statement Be Fair and True.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 587

[§ 587] Requirement That Statement Be Fair and True.

The requirement that the report be "fair and true" is satisfied if it is substantially true and does not misstate the gist of the proceedings. (See Sipple v. Foundation for Nat. Progress (1999) 71 C.A.4th 226, 244, 83 C.R.2d 677 [even though magazine article altered words somewhat, it was "fair and true" report of custody proceeding within meaning of C.C. 47(d), where it was supported by court testimony of plaintiff's two former wives and by deposition of one of them, and thus did not change gist of custody proceeding].)

In Handelsman v. San Francisco Chronicle (1970) 11 C.A.3d 381, 90 C.R. 188, a labor union filed an action against plaintiff and other officers of the union, alleging conversion of union funds and expending money for entertainment without rendering an accounting. Defendant newspaper printed a story about the action, which included statements that the officers were sued for having "despoiled" the union treasury and that they had been charged with "outright theft." In this libel action, the jury returned a special verdict that the article was a substantially fair and true report, and judgment was given for defendant. Held, affirmed. A report need only be substantially in accord with the proceeding; it need not be a verbatim statement of the complaint. (11 C.A.3d 386.) The complaint charged conspiracy on the part of the officers to convert union funds to their own use with oppression, fraud, and malice. The jury could therefore find the use of the criminal term "theft" within the ambit of fair reporting. (11 C.A.3d 388.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Carver v. Bonds (2005) 135 C.A.4th 328, 351, 37 C.R.3d 480 [newspaper article qualified as fair and true report of state Medical Board complaints filed against podiatrist, even though it overstated their number; "fair and true" requirement does not limit privilege to statements that contain no errors; news articles need only convey substance of proceedings reported, as measured by impact on average reader].

14 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
b. Absolute Privilege.
7. Report of Official Proceeding or Complaint.
dd. Limitations on Communications to Public Journals.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 588

[§ 588] Limitations on Communications to Public Journals.

As applied to communications to public journals, the privilege does not extend to a communication that does any of the following:

(1) Violates Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 5-120 (prejudicial publicizing of litigation; see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §520). (C.C. 47(d)(2)(A).)

(2) Breaches a court order. (C.C. 47(d)(2)(B).)

(3) Violates any requirement of confidentiality imposed by law. (C.C. 47(d)(2)(C).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §460.

15 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

8. Report of Public Meeting.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 589

[§ 589] Report of Public Meeting.

C.C. 47(e) establishes a privilege for "a fair and true report of (1) the proceedings of a public meeting, if such meeting was lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and open to the public, or (2) the publication of the matter complained of was for the public benefit." Originally, this provision was phrased in the typical language of a qualified privilege; but in 1945, the words "without malice" were deleted (see infra, §592). (See Kilgore v. Younger (1982) 30 C.3d 770, 794, 180 C.R. 657, 640 P.2d 793, supra, §565 [media reports of news conference called by Attorney General]; Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 418, 46 C.R. 135, supra, §544 [privilege is absolute for person within terms of statute]; Rest.2d, Torts §611; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §415; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §316; cf. Lewis v. Hayes (1913) 165 C. 527, 530, 132 P. 1022 [report of county health officer's remarks at social gathering of county medical society was not privileged; banquet was not "official occasion"].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.42(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§298, 300.

16 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

b. Absolute Privilege.

9. Consent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 590

[§ 590] Consent.

(1) Consent as Absolute Privilege. Consent to the publication of the defamatory matter is a defense, classified by the Restatement as a form of absolute privilege. Thus, a person suspected of misconduct may agree to an investigation with knowledge of the contemplated publication of findings, or may consent in advance to such investigations authorized by the rules of an organization which he or she joins. (See Rest.2d, Torts §583; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §412; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.17; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 931; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §272.)

(2) Republication of Statement by Plaintiff. In Royer v. Steinberg (1979) 90 C.A.3d 490, 153 C.R. 499, plaintiff school superintendent was demoted, and he wrote the school board requesting a statement of reasons. The board responded with a confidential letter stating that he had participated in distribution of fake election flyers. Plaintiff procured the publication of the letter in a newspaper along with his answer. Held, this act constituted a consent to the publication, making it absolutely privileged. (90 C.A.3d 498, 499, citing the text.)

(3) Repetition of Statement by Defendant at Plaintiff's Request. If the defendant privately makes slanderous statements, and later, at the request of the plaintiff, repeats them in the presence of others, there can be no action. The original statements were not published, and the plaintiff consented to the repetition. But where the original statements are published by the defendant, and then repeated in response to the plaintiff's efforts to discover the source of the defamation, there is no consent. (See Pouchan v. Godeau (1914) 167 C. 692, 694, 140 P. 952 [original statement made in presence of third persons, plaintiff drew out reiteration in more explicit language]; Moranville v. Aletto (1957) 153 C.A.2d 667, 671, 315 P.2d 91 [similar]; Rest.2d, Torts §584.)

(4) Scope of Consent. Where the waiver or consent is ambiguous, its scope is a question of fact to be determined by the trier of fact. In Kelly v. William Morrow & Co. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1625, 231 C.R. 497, plaintiff was a San Diego police officer on a special unit formed to control criminal activities in the Mexican border area. Defendant published a book about the unit, which included factual and fictional conduct of plaintiff. Plaintiff sued for invasion of privacy and libel, alleging that the book contained false statements and portrayed him as irresponsible toward his job. Defendant relied on plaintiff's signed "personal depiction waiver" for which he was paid, and the trial court gave judgment for defendant on demurrer. Held, reversed. Plaintiff contended that the agreement was a consent on a contingency that had not occurred, i.e., the formation of an agreement to determine the extent and manner of defendant's depiction of him, and that he was entitled to an opportunity for pre-publication review. This contention raised a question of fact: "[W]e cannot say as a matter of law the rights given in the waiver include a license to defame, slander and libel [plaintiff]. ... The waiver does not suggest [plaintiff] was aware he waived his rights to privacy. ... We conclude the extent of the privileges conferred by the waiver must be determined in the light of the circumstances in which it was executed." (186 C.A.3d 1635.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Consent as Absolute Privilege. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.17; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §254.

17 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
c. Qualified Privilege.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 591

[§ 591] In General.

A communication is qualifiedly privileged when made "without malice" (see infra, §592) and "to a person interested therein" (see infra, §594) by any of the following circumstances:

(1) Common interest. By "one who is also interested." (C.C. 47(c)(1).)

(2) Special relationship. By "one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent." (C.C. 47(c)(2).)

(3) Request for information. By one "who is requested by the person interested to give the information." (C.C. 47(c)(3); see infra, §596.) (See Kramer v. Ferguson (1964) 230 C.A.2d 237, 244, 41 C.R. 61 [error in failing to give clear instructions on privilege, and in leaving to jury question whether occasion was qualifiedly privileged]; Mann v. Quality Old Time Service (2004) 120 C.A.4th 90, 108, 15 C.R.3d 215 [C.C. 47(c) did not protect disparaging statements made by plaintiff's business competitor to plaintiff's customers where competitor presented no evidence of relationship with customers or their request for information]; Rest.2d, Torts §594 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§413, 414; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.26; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 924; Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1559; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 316; 39 Stanf. L. Rev. 1201; 20 52 A.L.R.3d 739 [employer's privilege to make communications to media concerning employees]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §276; 98 A.L.R.3d 561 [exchange among insurers of medical information concerning insured or applicant for insurance]; BAJI, No. 7.05; CACI, No. 1723.)

In addition to the privileges set forth in C.C. 47(c), certain communications may be qualifiedly privileged by the federal Constitution. (See infra, §601 et seq.) Also, various statutes provided privileges relating to particular types of communications conditioned on the absence of malice. (See, e.g., C.C. 48.7, supra, §145 [charges of child abuse]; C.C. 48.8, supra, §164 [reports of threats of violence on school grounds]; C.C. 48.9, supra, §163 [anonymous witness programs].)

When the communication involves disclosure of an employee's medical information by a health care provider to an employer, the more specific privileges established by the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.;

see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518) supersede the general privilege afforded under C.C. 47(c). (Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 C.A.4th 402, 437, 57 C.R.2d 46.)

Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, infra, §599, resolves "some minor confusion that has arisen in prior cases as to terminology ... and the relationship between malice and privilege. ... The privilege under [C.C. 47(c)] has usually been referred to as a qualified or conditional privilege, meaning that it can be overcome by a showing of malice. ... This characterization is somewhat misleading. [C.C. 47(c)] defines a privileged communication as one made without malice. Thus, if malice is shown, the privilege is not merely overcome; it never arises in the first instance. ... [T]he characterization of the privilege as qualified or conditional is incorrect to the extent that it suggests the privilege is defeasible. It is the occasion giving rise to the publication that is conditionally privileged, i.e., under specified conditions the occasion gives rise to a privilege. If the privilege arises, it is a complete defense." (48 C.3d 723, footnote 7.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.41 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 721, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, Supp., infra, §659 [defendant generally bears initial burden of establishing that statement alleged to be qualifiedly privileged was made on privileged occasion, and thereafter burden shifts to plaintiff to establish that statement was made with malice].

Circumstances of communication:

(3) Request for information. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.26; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§258, 259.

18 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - c. Qualified Privilege.
 - 2. Freedom From Malice.
 - aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 592

[§ 592] In General.

(1) Common-Law and Constitutional Principles. A qualified or conditional privilege is given in certain situations where the statement is made to protect some recognized interest (see infra, §594 et seq.) and is made in good faith and without malice. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§600, 603; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §§412, 413; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.27; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.145 et seq.; 16 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 577; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§199, 279; 24 A.L.R.4th 144 [loss of employer's privilege to publish employee's work record through malice]; on absolute privilege, see supra, §561 et seq.)

A showing of malice may be required for defamation recovery, in certain circumstances, as an element of constitutional due process. (See infra, §601 et seq.)

(2) Statutory Requirement. The California statute makes the privilege available if the communication is made "without malice." (C.C. 47(c), supra, §591.)

Formerly, C.C. 47 specified freedom from malice as a condition to the privilege in three situations: communication to a person interested, a fair and true report of an official proceeding, and a fair and true report of a public meeting. In 1945, the section was amended to delete the reference to freedom from malice in connection with the second and third situations, making the privilege in those two situations absolute. (See Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 418, 46 C.R. 135, supra, §544; supra, §585 et seq.) This change greatly limited the potential defamation liability of the media. (See 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 123.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.4, 51, 62

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Common Law and Constitutional Principles. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.27; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §261.

19 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
c. Qualified Privilege.
2. Freedom From Malice.
bb. What Constitutes Malice.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 593

[§ 593] What Constitutes Malice.

Certain general principles apply in determining what constitutes malice:

(1) Malice Must Be Actual or Express. Malice in defamation cases means "actual" or "express" malice, hatred, or ill will, and not the fictional malice "implied by law" from the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause. (Frommoethelydo v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1986) 42 C.3d 208, 228 C.R. 160, 721 P.2d 41; Nova v. Flaherty (1956) 145 C.A.2d 761, 764, 303 P.2d 382; Manguso v. Oceanside Unified School Dist. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 574, 577, 580, 200 C.R. 535; see Noel v. River Hills Wilsons (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1363, 1371, 7 C.R.3d 216 [mere negligence, in the sense of oversight or unintentional error, is not alone enough to constitute malice]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§4, 5, 26, 32; 20 A.L.R.3d 988 [actual malice towards public official]; BAJI, No. 7.05; CACI, No. 1723.)

(2) Effect of Presence or Absence of Ill Will. Malice must be ill will beyond the normal feeling toward a wrongdoer, i.e., a motive different from that which makes the communication privileged. (DeMott v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of North America (1958) 157 C.A.2d 13, 26, 320 P.2d 50; see Biggins v. Hanson (1967) 252 C.A.2d 16, 20, 59 C.R. 897 [if defendant's primary motive is advancement of interest that privilege protects and defendant speaks in good faith, "mere fact that he harbors ill will toward the plaintiff should be a neutral factor"]; Rest.2d, Torts §603, Comment a; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 350.) Although ill will may be circumstantial evidence of malice, it is not the equivalent of malice; there must be a link between the defendant's hostility and awareness of the probable falsity of the statements. (Live Oak Publishing Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1277, 1292, 286 C.R. 198, supra, §537.)

The absence of extrinsic facts showing hatred or ill will is similarly not determinative. Malice may be inferred from facts showing a lack of reasonable or probable cause to believe in the truth of a defamatory statement. The privilege remains, however, where the interest protected by the privilege makes it reasonable to report rumors or statements that the publisher has no reasonable cause to believe or may even know are false, if he or she states the defamatory matter as a rumor or suspicion and not as fact. Thus, a newspaper is privileged to print a fair report, attributed to a third party, of a claim of official misconduct denied by the official, and is under no duty to resolve conflicting claims. (Stockton Newspapers v. Superior Court (1988) 206 C.A.3d 966, 980, 254 C.R. 389; see Rest.2d, Torts §602.)

(3) Malice May Not Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Communication. Malice cannot be inferred from a mere communication by one person to another, where it does not appear on the face of the communication. (C.C. 48.) But actual malice may be established either by direct proof of the defendant's state of mind, or by circumstantial evidence from which the jury might infer it as a fact. (Davis v. Hearst (1911) 160 C. 143, 166, 116 P. 530; Snively v. Record Publishing Co. (1921) 185 C. 565, 577, 198 P. 1; Maher v. Devlin (1928) 203 C. 270, 278, 263 P. 812; Stationers Corp. v. Dun & Bradstreet (1965) 62 C.2d 412, 421, 42 C.R. 449, 398 P.2d 785, infra, §597; Shumate v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1956) 139 C.A.2d 121, 136, 293 P.2d 531; Fairfield v. Hagan (1967) 248 C.A.2d 194, 201, 56 C.R. 402, supra, §543; see McMann v. Wadler (1961) 189 C.A.2d 124, 129, 11 C.R. 37 [evidence of prior defamations of similar import]; Larrick v. Gilloon (1959) 176 C.A.2d 408, 416, 1 C.R. 360 [attack on officers of irrigation district by property owner; evidence of language and tenor of publications, threats of grand jury action, long continued controversy, and falsity of statements]; Mann v. Quality Old Time Service (2004) 120 C.A.4th 90, 108, 15 C.R.3d 215 [where parties were business competitors, it was not reasonable to assume that motive of defendant's communication of alleged defamatory statements to plaintiff's customers was innocent]; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 929; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 349; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §123; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Opinion Evidence, §8.)

(4) Effect of Knowledge of Falsity. The privilege is lost if the defendant knows the statement is false or has no reasonable ground for belief in the truth of the statement. (Sanborn v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1976) 18 C.3d 406, 413, 134 C.R. 402, 556 P.2d 764; Frommoethelydo v. Fire Ins. Exchange, supra, 42 C.3d 217; Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. American Federation of Labor & Congress of Industrial Organizations (1963) 215 C.A.2d 560, 569, 574, 30 C.R. 350; BAJI, No. 7.05; CACI, No. 1723.) But mere negligence in inquiring into facts, or blundering, is not enough to defeat the privilege. (Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1970) 3 C.A.3d 368, 371, 83 C.R. 540; see Bierbower v. FHP (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1, 4, 82 C.R.2d 393 [malice was not shown by incorrect date in employee's sexual harassment statement, where wrong date was result of mistake, three complaints were involved, complainant was upset, and there was no evidence that statement was written with malice].)

In Brewer v. Second Baptist Church of Los Angeles (1948) 32 C.2d 791, 197 P.2d 713, plaintiffs, a former minister and former church trustee, had instituted litigation involving the church, following which they were charged with misconduct and expelled. Defendants, officers of the church, then gave news releases of the charges and action taken, including statements that plaintiffs' suit against the church was admittedly groundless, that one plaintiff had a "vile spirit," that they were associated with "one of Satan's choicest tools," and that by their "downright falsehood" they had proven themselves unworthy of fellowship in the church. Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed. (a) The statements were clearly libelous. (b) The common interest of members of the church gave rise to a qualified privilege, which would be a defense even if the statements were false, provided that defendants were free from malice. (c) The privilege is lost if the publication is motivated by any cause other than the desire to protect the interest that is privileged; and "ordinarily the privilege is lost if defendant has no reasonable grounds for believing his statements to be true." In addition, though malice may not be inferred from the fact of the publication alone, "the tenor of the statement may be evidence of malice." (32 C.2d 799.) Here, the record contained sufficient evidence that defendants had made no attempt to learn the truth concerning plaintiffs' conduct, and the exaggerated tone of the charges supported the inference of malice. (32 C.2d 799.)

In Russell v. Geis (1967) 251 C.A.2d 560, 59 C.R. 569, plaintiffs were the bookkeeper and receptionist of defendant doctor. They testified that he had accused them of stealing money from him. The accusation had been made to law enforcement officers and the staff of the unemployment compensation department, all interested persons for purposes of C.C. 47(c). However, defendant, on the stand, denied having made any accusations and testified that he did not believe plaintiffs had taken any money from him. The trial judge then struck out the defense of privilege. Held, this was proper: "Every authority we find discussing the subject of conditional privilege ... is in accord that for one to assert the defense ... he must believe the defamatory matters to be true." (251 C.A.2d 566.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.4, 51, 62

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Malice Must Be Actual or Express. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§4, 5, 26, 32.

(2) Effect of Presence or Absence of Ill Will. See King v. United Parcel Service (2007) 152 C.A.4th 426, 440, 60 C.R.3d 359 [employer's statements to employees regarding reason for coworker's termination were not made with malice, so as to preclude application of common-interest privilege; evidence showed that employer's motive was to reassure workers, boost morale, and keep business running efficiently]; Mamou v. Trendwest Resorts (2008) 165 C.A.4th 686, 729, 81 C.R.3d 406 [in employee's defamation action, jury could find that senior managers' statements of Syrian employee's alleged misconduct and bad character were motivated by ill will to negate application of common interest privilege of C.C. 47(c); one manager characterized employee as member of "Syrian regime" and was reported to plan to "get" or "get even with" employee, another made extreme comments concerning employee's alleged breaches of loyalty, and managers ordered other employees to shun and avoid employee]. (3) Malice May Not Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Communication. See Terry v. Davis Community Church (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1534, 1558, 33 C.R.3d 145 [malice could not be inferred from fact that defendants' attorney advised against disclosure].

20 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - c. Qualified Privilege.
- 3. Requirement of Interest.
 - aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 594

[§ 594] In General.

(1) In General. The privileges set forth in C.C. 47(c) require "interest" by the publisher of the allegedly defamatory communication or by both publisher and recipient. (See supra, §591.) The "interest" protected must be one of direct and immediate concern, not the general curiosity of readers of newspapers and magazines. It must be private or pecuniary, and the relationship between the parties must be close. (Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 729, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, infra, §599; see Rancho La Costa v. Superior Court (1980) 106 C.A.3d 646, 665, 667, 165 C.R. 347, citing the text [contention of national magazine that its readership is interested in fight against organized crime did not support claim of privilege]; Kashian v. Harriman (2002) 98 C.A.4th 892, 930, 120 C.R.2d 576 [common professional or business interests support application of privilege]; Rest.2d, Torts §594; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1559; 57 So. Cal. L. Rev. 173; 39 Stanf. L. Rev. 1201; 73 A.L.R.2d 325 [privilege of doctor or nurse to make statements concerning patient].)

(2) Illustrations. The following circumstances have been found to constitute the requisite interest:

(a) An administrative agency is protected in performing a statutory duty to record and disseminate information from authorized persons. (White v. California (1971) 17 C.A.3d 621, 628, 95 C.R. 175 [information posted and disseminated by State Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation].)

(b) An employer's communications to his or her employees may be privileged. In Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Calif. (1974) 40 C.A.3d 841, 115 C.R. 582, plaintiff was allowed to retire from her employment as a chief operator of defendant's facility, after being charged with unauthorized absences and falsifying records. Her superiors then met with other employees in the department to explain the reasons for plaintiff's retirement, including specific instances of misconduct. Held, the communications were privileged; the statements were made in an effort to preserve employee morale and job efficiency. (40 C.A.3d 846.)

(c) A bonding company of a contractor in default, and a supplier who is the contractor's creditor, are both interested in the contractor's financial condition; and inquiries as to the risk of the contractor's future defaults are privileged. (

Gantry Const. Co. v. American Pipe & Const. Co. (1975) 49 C.A.3d 186, 197, 122 C.R. 834.)

(d) A telegraph company has a duty to transmit messages expeditiously, and may presume that the sender and addressee are interested persons. Hence, unless it knows or has reason to know that the communication is not privileged, the company is not liable for transmission of defamatory communications. (Mason v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 429, 436, 438, 125 C.R. 53; see 91 A.L.R.3d 1015.)

(e) A complaint to a local bar association, of allegedly unethical conduct of an attorney member, is within the privilege. In Katz v. Rosen (1975) 48 C.A.3d 1032, 121 C.R. 853, defendant doctor, whose bill for examination of a personal injury patient was long unpaid, wrote a letter to the San Francisco Bar Association complaining of pressure brought by plaintiff attorney to reduce his fee, expressing the view that this conduct was "shabby and unethical" but requesting an explanation "If I am wrong in this." The court, upholding a summary judgment for defendant doctor, said: "As one who felt aggrieved by the conduct of a member of the San Francisco Bar Association, respondent was a party interested in the subject matter of the communication. The bar association was also an interested party within the meaning of the statute since the association's medical-legal subcommittee assists doctors and lawyers to resolve their differences." (48 C.A.3d 1037.)

(f) A complaint by parents of school pupils, addressed to the principal and asserting misconduct of a teacher, is both absolutely privileged (made in an official proceeding; see supra, §580), and qualifiedly privileged (made between interested persons). (Martin v. Kearney (1975) 51 C.A.3d 309, 311, 124 C.R. 281.)

(g) A letter by a university professor of physical education to athletic organizations and sports magazines, criticizing plaintiff's psychological tests of athletic personality traits predictive of success, may affect the manner in which coaches conducted their professional activities, and is therefore of professional interest to them. (Institute of Athletic Motivation v. University of Illinois (1980) 114 C.A.3d 1, 9, 12, 170 C.R. 411, citing the text.)

(h) Statements by a company president to insurance adjusters who refer business to the company, concerning improper conduct of a former employee that led to the employee's termination, are calculated to protect the common interest of both the communicator and the recipient and therefore privileged. (Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 C.A.3d 745, 752, 181 C.R. 423, supra, §582.) (See 85 A.L.R.3d 1161 [privileged nature of communications between insurer and insured].)

(i) A letter from a hospital administrator concerning restrictions on a doctor's staff privileges, sent at the request of a hospital considering granting the doctor staff privileges, may be privileged under both C.C. 47(c) and 43.8 (immunity respecting evaluation of practitioner of healing arts; see supra, §155). (Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 C.A.3d 933, 944, 242 C.R. 259.)

(j) Sexual harassment complaints to private employers are within the scope of C.C. 47(c). (See Cruey v. Gannett Co. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 356, 368, 76 C.R.2d 670 [employee's letter to employer's human resources department charging her manager with sexual harassment and discrimination; issue of fact whether letter was written with malice]; Bierbower v. FHP (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1, 3, 82 C.R.2d 393 [defamation action by former employee against employer arising out of memo repeating another employee's claim that plaintiff sexually harassed her].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.45

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Illustrations: See Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 720, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, Supp., infra, §659 [statement by psychology professor criticizing prominent case study concerning plaintiff was protected by common-interest privilege; statement was made at professional conference attended by other mental health professionals, related to subject of conference, and was made without malice]; King v. United Parcel Service (2007) 152 C.A.4th 426, 440, 60 C.R.3d 359 [employer's statements to employees regarding reasons for coworker's termination were privileged; employer and its employees have common interest in protecting workplace from abuse].

21 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

3. Requirement of Interest.

bb. Communication Between Partners, Corporate Directors or Officers, or Association Members.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 595

[§ 595] Communication Between Partners, Corporate Directors or Officers, or Association Members.

Communications between partners, corporate officers or directors, and members of unincorporated associations may be justified by the common interest of the group. (See Emde v. San Joaquin County Cen. Labor Council (1943) 23 C.2d 146, 161, 143 P.2d 20 [statement in labor union publication]; Brewer v. Second Baptist Church of Los Angeles (1948) 32 C.2d 791, 796, 197 P.2d 713, supra, §593 [privilege of church members to comment on persons and matters involving church policy]; DeMott v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen of North America (1958) 157 C.A.2d 13, 27, 320 P.2d 50 [statements to union members by union officers in dispute over policies and administration]; Krause v. Bertrand (1958) 159 C.A.2d 318, 321, 323 P.2d 784 [statements to union members by candidate for union office in response to attack by other candidate]; Jeffers v. Screen Extras Guild (1958) 162 C.A.2d 717, 729, 328 P.2d 1030 [union controversy]; Rest.2d, Torts §596; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 35 [privileged publications in labor disputes]; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 300 [union charge that employer is unfair]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §339 et seq.; 60 A.L.R.3d 1080 [communication by employer of reasons for employee's discharge to other employees or to union]; 60 A.L.R.3d 1041 [statements made in course of grievance or arbitration proceeding provided for by collective bargaining agreement].)

In Cuenca v. Safeway San Francisco Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 C.A.3d 985, 225 C.R. 852, plaintiff, former manager of defendant credit union was the subject of an investigation by its supervisory committee, appointed pursuant to federal regulations. The committee and its chairman made various oral statements and issued a written report outlining suspicions that plaintiff was receiving kickbacks, spending much time doing outside liquidation work, and keeping infrequent office hours and that he had made an irregular business expense claim. At a meeting of the board of directors, the committee distributed copies of the report marked "Absolutely Personal and Confidential," and after the meeting all copies were collected and locked up. The board decided to ask for plaintiff's resignation and to terminate his employment if he refused to resign. Plaintiff sued for defamation, and summary judgment was given for defendants. Held, affirmed.

(a) The privilege has been held to cover employers' statements to other employees of the reasons for discharge of another employee, and statements relating to dishonesty of a former employee made to insurance adjusters. (180 C.A.3d 995; citing Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Calif. (1974) 40 C.A.3d 841, 115 C.R. 582, supra, §594, and Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 C.A.3d 745, 181 C.R. 423, supra, §582.)

(b) The publication here was limited to members of the supervisory committee and the board. The statements were relevant to plaintiff's fitness as manager, and hence, were matters of direct interest to them. (180 C.A.3d 996.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Terry v. Davis Community Church (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1534, 1556, 33 C.R.3d 145 [common interest of members of church in church matters is sufficient to give rise to qualified privilege to communications between them on subjects relating to church's interest; citing Brewer v. Second Baptist Church of Los Angeles (1948) 32 C.2d 791, 197 P.2d 713, text, p. 874]; Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Assn. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1456, 1474, 37 C.R.3d 133 [publication to community association's board members of allegedly defamatory letter, written by lawyer representing association to homeowner who was denied application for building permit, was privileged because of board member's interest in letter]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §322.

22 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

4. Request for Information.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 596

[§ 596] Request for Information.

(1) In General. A qualified privilege extends to a communication to an interested person by one who is requested by that person to give the information. (C.C. 47(c)(3), supra, §591; see Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 C.A.4th 513, 519, 104 C.R.2d 439 [where two interested parties asked expert to prepare report, report was within C.C. 47(c)(3)]; Rest.2d, Torts §595, Comment j; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §336.)

In Shoemaker v. Friedberg (1947) 80 C.A.2d 911, 183 P.2d 318, plaintiff consulted defendant physician for treatment of personal injuries, and he received a laboratory report indicating that she had a venereal disease. Held, a letter to her and a conversation with her while members of her household were present, disclosing these facts, were privileged. (80 C.A.2d 917.)

(2) Information Relating to Job Application. C.C. 47(c) expressly applies to "a communication concerning the job performance or qualifications of an applicant for employment, based on credible evidence and made without malice, by a current or former employer of the applicant to, and on request of, one whom the employer reasonably believes is a prospective employer." The current or former employer, or that employer's agent, is authorized to answer whether that employer would rehire the applicant. (C.C. 47(c); see Freeman v. Mills (1950) 97 C.A.2d 161, 167, 217 P.2d 687 [communication by investigating agency, under contract with employer, concerning fitness of employee]; Lesperance v. North Amer. Aviation (1963) 217 C.A.2d 336, 341, 31 C.R. 873 [former employer's response to inquiry from prospective employer]; Noel v. River Hills Wilsons (2003) 113 C.A.4th 1363, 1373, 7 C.R.3d 216 [condition that statement must be "based on credible evidence" means that privilege is lost if statement is based only on rumor; however, mere negligence in the sense of oversight or unintentional error is not alone enough to render privilege inapplicable]; 26 A.L.R.3d 492 [public officer's privilege where statement made in connection with hiring and firing].)

The privilege does not apply, however, to a communication concerning the speech or activities of the applicant if they are constitutionally protected, or are protected by C.C.P. 527.3 (concerted activity respecting labor disputes; see 2 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §653) "or any other provision of law." (C.C. 47(c).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §319.

23 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

5. Credit Report.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 597

[§ 597] Credit Report.

(1) Privilege Under C.C. 47(c). A credit report of a mercantile agency has been held privileged under C.C. 47(c), though not specifically mentioned in that statute. (See Stationers Corp. v. Dun & Bradstreet (1965) 62 C.2d 412, 418, 42 C.R. 449, 398 P.2d 785; Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1970) 3 C.A.3d 368, 370, 83 C.R. 540; 7 Cal. Western L. Rev. 216, 218.) (For the general law, see 15A Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Collection and Credit Agencies §28 et seq.; 9 Proof of Facts 2d 1 [commercial defamation]; 30 A.L.R.2d 776 [report of mercantile agency as privileged]; 40 A.L.R.3d 1049 [sufficiency of showing of malice or lack of reasonable care to support credit agency's liability for circulating inaccurate credit report]; 50 A.L.R.4th 745 [liability of better business bureau].)

In the Stationers Corp. case, supra, the agency failed to make the necessary showing of good faith to bring C.C. 47(c) into operation. Plaintiff officers of plaintiff corporation were sued by another corporation on allegations that the two individuals set high salaries for themselves, which constituted fraudulent misappropriation of assets. Defendant mercantile agency, after inquiries of several credit managers of firms doing business with the corporation, issued reports to its customers on the complaint, stating that "a number of authorities are of the opinion that this suit has considerable merit." In plaintiffs' libel suit, defendant was given summary judgment. Held, reversed. Plaintiffs' declaration showed that they were unable to ascertain from defendants the names of the "authorities" referred to, and, on the analogy of the cases requiring disclosure of an informer relied on for probable cause to arrest, the privilege could not be supported without disclosure. "It would be grossly unjust to permit a defendant, in the pursuit of his commercial interests, to rely upon the special privilege ... without requiring him to disclose information in his possession necessary to determine whether the statements were made without malice. Defendants cannot require a court to accept their ipse dixit assertion of good faith, particularly on motion for summary judgment." (62 C.2d 420.) (See 3 San Diego L. Rev. 127.)

(2) Privilege Under Specific Statute. Under C.C. 1785.32, a consumer may not bring a defamation action against a consumer reporting agency or any user or reporter of information, where the action is based on information disclosed pursuant to C.C. 1785.10, 1785.15, or 1785.20 (consumer's right to disclosure of reported information), "except as to false information furnished with malice or willful intent to injure such consumer." (On Consumer Credit Reporting Agencies Act and Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §297; 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1070; 24 Stanf. L. Rev. 550.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.42(.5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

24 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

6. Answer to Defamatory Charge.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 598

[§ 598] Answer to Defamatory Charge.

A person is privileged to protect the person's own interests by defending himself or herself against a defamatory charge. (Western Broadcast Co. v. Times-Mirror Co. (1936) 14 C.A.2d 120, 124, 57 P.2d 977; see 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §33; 41 A.L.R.3d 1083 [qualified privilege of reply to defamatory publication].) "A conditional privilege exists ... when the person making the publication reasonably believes that his interest in his own reputation has been unlawfully invaded by another person and that the defamatory matter that he publishes about the other is reasonably necessary to defend himself. The privilege here is analogous to that of self-defense against battery, assault or false imprisonment. ... Thus the defendant may publish in an appropriate manner anything that he reasonably believes to be necessary to defend his reputation against the defamation of another, including the statement that his accuser is an unmitigated liar." (Rest.2d, Torts §594, Comment k.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.46

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§33, 320.

25 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

7. No "Public Interest" Privilege for Media.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 599

[§ 599] No "Public Interest" Privilege for Media.

Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, holds that C.C. 47(c) does not protect the news media when they make false statements regarding a private individual, even though the communication pertains to a matter of public interest. Thus, a private-person plaintiff defamed by such a publication "is not required ... to prove malice to recover compensatory damages." (48 C.3d 719.) The case arose out of a broadcast by defendant television station on a consumer affairs program, in which statements were made indicating that plaintiff contractor's remodeling work on a home was shoddy. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendants on the ground that the broadcasts were qualifiedly privileged under C.C. 47(3) (now C.C. 47(c)), and that plaintiff had failed to raise a triable issue of material fact as to defendant's malice. The Court of Appeal reversed, finding sufficient evidence to raise a triable issue. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff, not on the ground of a triable issue of malice, but because the statutory privilege was not available.

(a) No constitutionally mandated privilege. Until the decision of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, infra, §601, the law of defamation was almost exclusively the business of state courts and legislatures. (48 C.3d 721.) In Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, infra, §613, the Court reaffirmed the New York Times constitutional standard governing liability to public figures, but declared that the standard of liability for defamatory falsehood injurious to a private individual was for the states to determine; i.e., that the public interest privilege advocated by defendants is not required by the federal Constitution. (48 C.3d 722, 728.)

(b) Statutory language. The language of the qualified privilege statute contains no reference to a "public interest" privilege or any other "special privilege for the news media." C.C. 47(4) (now C.C. 47(d)), on fair and true report in a "public journal" (see supra, §585), and C.C. 47(5) (now C.C. 47(e)), on fair and true report on a public meeting when the publication was for "the public benefit" (see supra, §589), suggest that the Legislature did not intend that the qualified privilege statute "apply to the news media as such or to communications on matters of public interest." (48 C.3d 725.)

(c) Legislative history. The legislative history confirms that the qualified privilege statute "is narrow in scope." It was intended to codify the narrow common law privilege of common interest, which protected communications made in good faith on a subject in which the speaker and hearer shared an interest or duty. The interest protected was private or pecuniary, the relationship between the parties was close (e.g., a family, business or organizational interest), and the request for information must have been in the course of the relationship. (48 C.3d 727, 729.) "The interest a news publisher has in a story may or may not be shared by its audience. Even if there is a shared interest, it is not 'common' within the meaning of the common-interest privilege." (48 C.3d 729.)

(d) Judicial construction.

(1) Gilman v. McClatchy (1896) 111 C. 606, 44 P. 241, Newby v. Times-Mirror Co. (1916) 173 C. 387, 160 P. 233, and Snively v. Record Publishing Co. (1921) 185 C. 565, 198 P. 1, consistently distinguished between public and private citizens. (48 C.3d 730, 731.) The court in Snively spoke in terms of a public interest, "but the defense it recognized was the right of fair comment, recognized at common law, which protected 'expressions of opinion about public officials, scientists, artists, composers, performers, authors, and other persons who place themselves or their work in the public eye.' ... That defense did not protect defamation of private citizens." (48 C.3d 732.)

(2) "Unfortunately, the fair-comment defense has often been misunderstood in a couple of respects. First, the common-interest privilege and the right of fair comment, which were distinct defenses under the common law, have often been treated as a single defense in cases under section 47(3). ... We conclude, however, that the Legislature did not intend to include the right of fair comment within section 47(3). ... [T]he fair-comment defense had existed long before section 47(3) was enacted, and there is no indication that the Legislature intended to abrogate the defense. Thus, the Snively court ... was correct in relying on the defense but should have treated it as a matter of common law, not as a defense based on section 47(3). The fair-comment defense arises independently of section 47(3), which encompasses only the common-interest privilege. We disapprove of the language in Snively and other cases indicating that the fair-comment defense is within section 47(3)." (48 C.3d 732, footnote 18, citing illustrative cases.) And the statement by courts and commentators that fair comment on matters of public concern is "privileged" is incorrect. A privileged occasion is one on which the privileged person is entitled to do something which no one who is not within the privilege is entitled to do on that occasion. "In the case of fair comment on matters of public concern, however, all persons may comment equally. ... Thus it is better practice to refer to fair comment as a right rather than a privilege." (48 C.3d 733, footnote 18; on right of fair comment, see infra, §617 et seq.)

(e) Policy considerations.

(1) Privilege would be overly broad. The asserted privilege would be so broad as to apply to almost every defamatory communication. "Presumably, the news media generally publish and broadcast only matters that the media believe are of public interest, and the media defendant in every defamation action would therefore argue that the communication was a matter of public interest. ... Thus, the practical result sought by the news media would be that nearly everything they publish and broadcast would be privileged." (48 C.3d 725.)

(2) Legislative prerogative. "[T]he result implicitly sought by the media in this case is a rule that in effect would be, 'If it is published, it is privileged.' Such an expansion of C.C. 47(3) would raise serious public policy questions including the need for further restriction of a defamed person's right to recover and whether such restriction should be accompanied by other changes in the law of defamation. ... Such changes require analysis of empirical data and are better dealt with in the legislative arena." (48 C.3d 740.)

(3) Decisions in other jurisdictions. A public interest privilege under C.C. 47(3) (now C.C. 47(c)) would impose a malice requirement on private persons, contrary to the overwhelming weight of authority from other states. (48 C.3d 740, 741, listing cases.) The Second Torts Restatement reflects this case law by adopting a negligence standard for private plaintiffs. (48 C.3d 742, citing Rest.2d, Torts §580B.) "We decline to diverge from the near unanimous authority that a private person need prove only negligence (rather than malice) to recover for defamation." (48 C.3d 742.)

(4) Importance of reputation. "Surely a decent, open society cannot, in the name of press and speech freedom, so thoroughly undermine this remedy as to render it useless to those people who have been damaged by a defamatory falsehood negligently uttered in the mass media and have not in any way sought the public limelight." (48 C.3d 743.) And interpreting the statute to require a private person to prove malice would call for a showing of a greater degree of culpability by the defendant than in the case of a public person under the common law fair-comment defense and its constitutional-malice standard. Malice under the statute is actual malice in fact, i.e., hatred or ill will evidencing a willingness to injure; constitutional malice means only that the defendant entertained serious doubts as to the truth of his or her publication. (48 C.3d 745.) And Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), stating that a person is responsible for abuse of the right of free speech, makes it clear that "the right is not unfettered and reflects a considered determination that the individual's interest in reputation is worthy of a constitutional protection." The federal Constitution contains no such express provision; and this difference refutes defendant's contention that California's Constitution "weighs in favor of a standard of fault higher than that required under the federal Constitution." (48 C.3d 746.)

(5) Constitutional protections for news media. Defamation defendants now have a panoply of constitutional protections, ameliorating the harsh effects of the common law strict liability. First, a private figure plaintiff must prove at least negligence; and when the speech involves a matter of public concern, he or she must also prove New York Times malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. (48 C.3d 747, citing Gertz, supra, and Dun & Bradstreet v. Greenmoss Builders (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S.Ct. 2939, 86 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §615.) Second, when the speech involves a matter of public concern, a private-figure plaintiff has the burden of proving falsity of the defamation. (48 C.3d 747, citing Philadelphia Newspapers v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S.Ct. 1558, 89 L.Ed.2d 783, infra, §614.) Third, contrary to the normal rule of review, the reviewing court must independently review all the evidence on the issue of malice. (48 C.3d 747, citing Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States (1984) 466 U.S. 485, 104 S.Ct. 1949, 80 L.Ed.2d 502, infra, §612, and McCoy v. Hearst Corp. (1986) 42 C.3d 835, 231 C.R. 518, 727 P.2d 711, infra, §612.) "These constitutional obstacles to recovery provide even greater protection for the news media than the common law privileges. The original reason for those privileges--strict liability for defamation--has disappeared. ... One of the foremost tort law commentators has explained that when some degree of fault is required, as is now the law, there is no need for any privilege." (48 C.3d 747, citing Prosser & Keeton.) "And expansion of the statutory privilege would unnecessarily complicate defamation law, which is now largely governed by constitutional doctrine." (48 C.3d 747.)

(6) Absence of need for expanded privilege. The media's contention that a negligence standard will subject them to such self-exacting scrutiny as to have a chilling effect on the free flow of information is not persuasive.

(a) Its implicit premise is that if the media business can be held responsible for falsehoods, it will be less likely to report the news. "This suggests that the news media's only reason to be accurate is to avoid legal liability. We are reluctant to attribute such a self-serving motive to the news media. It is equally or more likely that the great majority of journalists strive for accuracy because they are dedicated to the high standards of professional craftsmanship." (48 C.3d 748.)

(b) Defendants and amici curiae have not identified a single instance in which they have declined to report the news for fear that the qualified privilege statute is not as broad as they would like; and they have not attempted to show that the free flow of information has been restricted even in the slightest degree in the overwhelming number of states that have adopted a negligence standard for private figure plaintiffs. (48 C.3d 749.) And there is considerable evidence that the media are not unduly hampered in their reporting by defamation actions. (48 C.3d 750.)

(c) Under the New York Times standard of fault and related restrictions, a victim of defamation seldom recovers damages; imposing a malice requirement on private persons might therefore be of marginal benefit to increasing the free flow of information on public issues. (48 C.3d 751.)

(d) Apart from legal protections, the news media already have available to themselves the most powerful defense to a defamation action--the ability to correct the error. (48 C.3d 751.)

(e) The media themselves often select, by what they choose to publish, the subjects that become matters of public interest. This "bootstrap" extension of the privilege to everything published would largely do away with recovery for defamation, and give the media a privilege shared by no other speaker: "[W]e reject the notion that a news-media defendant should be allowed to determine for practical purposes, by virtue of what it chooses to publish or broadcast, whether its communication is privileged and thus to determine by what standard of fault it will be judged." (48 C.3d 753.)

(f) The malice standard of fault imposed by New York Times carries significant burdens as well as benefits to the news media. First, a plaintiff required to prove knowing falsehood or subjective awareness of probable falsity is allowed wide ranging discovery of the editorial process. (48 C.3d 753, citing Herbert v. Lando (1979) 441 U.S. 153, 99 S.Ct. 1635, 60 L.Ed.2d 115, infra, §610.) As a result, the largest cost to the media is not large damage awards but the insurance premiums for the cost of defending litigation. "In short, it has become widely recognized that the expense of defamation suits the news media seek to avoid appears to be in large measure the result of the very privilege they insisted they must have to avoid expensive litigation." (48 C.3d 754.) Second, in another subtle way, the constitutional-malice standard works against the news media. Defamation victims, faced with a refusal to correct the record, may have little choice but to litigate in order to clear their reputations. (48 C.3d 754.) And a popular perception of journalistic arrogance may be the reason why juries often rule against libel defendants. "Excessive protection for defamation may result in popular antipathy toward the press that manifests itself in lawsuits and jury verdicts." (48 C.3d 754.)

(g) "The vast majority of news media entities operate for profit. ... It has recently been reported that 'twenty-nine corporations control most of the business in daily newspapers, magazines, television, books, and motion pictures' and predicted that 'by the 1990s a half-dozen large corporations will own all the most powerful media outlets in the United States.' ... Indeed the news media amici curiae who have appeared in this action are entities of enormous financial resources. When they negligently defame a private person, it is not unfair for them to pay for the injury." (48 C.3d 753.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

26 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

c. Qualified Privilege.

8. Pleading and Proof.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 600

[§ 600] Pleading and Proof.

(1) Pleading and Burden of Proof. Generally, the defendant bears the initial burden of establishing that the statement was made on a privileged occasion. Once the defendant has met this burden, however, the burden then shifts to the plaintiff to establish that the statement was made with malice. (Lundquist v. Reusser (1994) 7 C.4th 1193, 2002, 31 C.R.2d 776, 875 P.2d 1279; see 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1765 [Lundquist]; BAJI, No. 7.05.1; CACI, No. 1723.)

Where the complaint shows that the statement is within a class qualifiedly privileged, it is necessary for the plaintiff to go further and plead and prove that the privilege is not available as a defense in the particular case, e.g., because of malice. (Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 29, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912; Jackson v. Underwriters' Report (1937) 21 C.A.2d 591, 593, 69 P.2d 878; Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Calif. (1974) 40 C.A.3d 841, 848, 115 C.R. 582, supra, §594, citing the text; see Locke v. Mitchell (1936) 7 C.2d 599, 602, 61 P.2d 922 [insufficient to allege bare conclusion of law that defendant "maliciously" published the matter]; Glenn v. Gibson (1946) 75 C.A.2d 649, 659, 171 P.2d 118 [complaint required to allege facts of malice]; Shoemaker v. Friedberg (1947) 80 C.A.2d 911, 919, 183 P.2d 318 [burden of proving malice rested on plaintiff under pleadings]; Freeman v. Mills (1950) 97 C.A.2d 161, 167, 217 P.2d 687 [same]; Noonan v. Rousselot (1966) 239 C.A.2d 447, 453, 48 C.R. 817 [same]; Mullins v. Brando (1970) 13 C.A.3d 409, 419, 91 C.R. 796 [pleading of malice held sufficient]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §869; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 226, 238; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 1023; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 225, 248.)

(2) Standard of Proof. In the absence of First Amendment considerations (see infra, §601 et seq.), the ordinary standard of preponderance of evidence applies to proof of the issue of malice. (Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44 C.A.3d 926, 932, 119 C.R. 82.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.83, 104.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Pleading and Burden of Proof.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §915.

27 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 601

[§ 601] In General.

(1) New York Times Case. In New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §426, the United States Supreme Court invoked the First and Fourteenth Amendments to make the defense of qualified privilege in defamation an element of constitutional due process. More specifically, the New York Times rule, applicable in actions by public officials or figures (infra, §602 et seq.), protects false statements of fact as well as opinions where made without actual malice; i.e., the privilege exists unless the statements were made with knowledge of falsity or in reckless disregard of the truth. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §417 et seq.; 2 Harper, James, & Gray 2d §5.0; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.151; 63 So. Cal. L. Rev. 433 [Protection of Reputation Versus Freedom of Expression: Striking a Manageable Compromise in the Tort of Defamation]; 34 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1657 [Constitutional Libel Law: The Role of Content]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §42 et seq.; for argument that summary judgment should be liberally granted to media defendants to avoid self-censorship resulting from high litigation costs, see 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1783.) The statement must specifically refer to, or be "of and concerning," the plaintiff in some way. (Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86 S.Ct. 669, 673, 15 L.Ed.2d 597, 603.)

(2) Restatement Rules Concerning Impact of First Amendment. Rest.2d, Torts, Division Five, p. 151, has a "Special Note on the Impact of the First Amendment of the Constitution on the Law of Defamation." A change in the law of torts, "so substantial as to be almost a transformation" has "come about with the holding in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan ... , that the law of defamation comes under the control of the First Amendment to the Constitution and its prohibition against any law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. Applied to judicial decisions under the common law as well as to legislative provisions and extended to state law through incorporation into the Fourteenth Amendment, this clause of the First Amendment is being used by the United States Supreme Court to rewrite many aspects of the law of defamation. "

The Special Note lists the following major changes:

"(1) Section 580A provides that in case of a defamatory communication published about a person in his capacity as a public official or public figure, the plaintiff must prove, with convincing clarity, that the defendant published the matter with knowledge or in reckless disregard of its falsity and its defamatory character; and that a finding of knowledge or reckless disregard involves the application of a constitutional standard that is subject to appellate review to determine whether the evidence is constitutionally adequate to sustaining the finding."

"(2) Section 580B provides that a private person cannot prevail in an action for defamation unless he proves that the defendant was at least negligent regarding the falsity and defamatory character of the communication."

"(3) Section 600 provides that a conditional privilege is lost through abuse, not by negligence regarding the truth or falsity of the communication, but by knowledge or reckless disregard of its falsity."

"(4) Section 621 provides that recoverable damages are limited to 'compensation for actual injury' and treats the meaning of actual injury."

"(5) Section 566 provides that there can be no recovery for a mere expression of opinion that does not carry by implication an expression of defamatory facts and explains that as a result of this rule the privilege of fair comment has become obsolete."

West's Key Number Digest, Constitutional Law k.90.1(5); Libel and Slander k.48, 51(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) New York Times Case. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.0; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §42 et seq.

28 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

aa. New York Times Rule: Requirement of Actual Malice.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 602

[§ 602] New York Times Rule: Requirement of Actual Malice.

Rest.2d, Torts §580A, stating the rule of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §601, as applied to public officials and public figures reads as follows: "One who publishes a false and defamatory communication concerning a public official or public figure in regard to his conduct, fitness or role in that capacity is subject to liability, if, but only if, he (a) knows that the statement is false and that it defames the other person, or (b) acts in reckless disregard of these matters."

The Restatement contains an extensive explanation of the nature, scope and application of the rule. (See Comment a [underlying principle]; Comment b [public officials]; Comment c [public figures]; Comment d [knowledge or reckless disregard as to falsity and defamatory character]; Comment e [burden of pleading and proving constitutional privilege]; Comment f [weight of evidence]; Comment g [constitutional standard and appellate review].) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §418; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.0.)

The required state of mind is generally referred to as "actual malice" or "New York Times malice." (See Harte-Hanks Communications v. Connaughton (1989) 491 U.S. 657, 109 S.Ct. 2678, 2685, 105 L.Ed.2d 562, 576 ["actual malice"]; Carney v. Santa Cruz Women Against Rape (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1009, 1013, 271 C.R. 30, infra, §615 ["New York Times malice"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.0; 94 Cal. L. Rev. 833 [increased access of both private and public figures to corrective speech through modern technology suggests new test for when actual malice is required].

29 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

bb. Public Official Plaintiffs.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 603

[§ 603] Public Official Plaintiffs.

(1) In General. The seminal holding in the New York Times case (supra, §601), recognizing a constitutional privilege to publish without actual malice, was itself directed to statements concerning public officials relating to official conduct. (See 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §426.)

(2) Who Are Public Officials. From an analysis of Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86 S.Ct. 669, 15 L.Ed.2d 597, supra, §601, and Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, infra, §613, the court in Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 C.A.3d 597, 252 C.R. 586, concluded that "the Supreme Court's vision of a 'public official' is someone in the government's employ who: (1) has, or appears to the public to have, substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs; (2) usually enjoys significantly greater access to the mass media and therefore a more realistic opportunity to contradict false statements than the private individual; (3) holds a position in government which has such apparent importance that the public has an independent interest in the person's qualifications and performance beyond the general public interest in the qualifications and performance of all government employees; and (4) holds a position which invites public scrutiny and discussion of the person holding it entirely apart from the scrutiny and discussion occasioned by the particular controversy." (205 C.A.3d 608.)

Many cases have held the plaintiffs to be public officials subject to the New York Times rule. (See Rosenblatt v. Baer, supra, 86 S.Ct. 676, 15 L.Ed.2d 605 [lower ranks of public employees who exercise substantial governmental power]; Tague v. Citizens for Law & Order (1977) 75 C.A.3d Supp. 16, 21, 24, 142 C.R. 689 [assistant public defender was public official, because of broad discretionary control over pretrial steps and trial of felony cases]; Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 C.A.3d 924, 933, 186 C.R. 605 [patrolman or low-level police officer]; McCoy v. Hearst Corp. (1986) 42 C.3d 835, 841, footnote 3, 231 C.R. 518, 727 P.2d 711, infra, §612 [police inspector]; 44 A.L.R.5th 193 [who is "public official" for purposes of defamation action]; BAJI, No. 7.04; CACI, Nos. 1700, 1701.)

(3) Who Are Not Public Officials. Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 C.A.3d 915, 159 C.R. 131, reached a contrary result, holding that a high school teacher was not a public official within the meaning of the New York Times rule. "Implicit in the reasoning of New York Times and Rosenblatt is the concept of a freedom of the governed to question the governor, of those who are influenced by the operation of government to criticize those who control the conduct of government. The governance or control which a public classroom teacher might be said to exercise over the conduct of government is at most remote and philosophical: Far too much so, in our view, to justify exposing each public classroom teacher to a qualifiedly privileged assault upon his or her reputation." (97 C.A.3d 924.) (Cf. Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1599, 1613, 284 C.R. 244, infra, §624 [county social worker with power over lives of handicapped children is more akin to prosecutor or police officer than to teacher, and hence is public official]; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 431.)

In Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers, supra, plaintiff was a 33% shareholder and a director of a corporation whose subsidiary, a horse racing association, was licensed to conduct a horse race meet in 1980, and had applied for a license to conduct a similar meet in 1981. Held, as a matter of law, plaintiff was not a public official.

(a) Because it is undisputed that plaintiff was not a government employee, a condition precedent for "public official" status, i.e., someone in the government's employ, is lacking here. (205 C.A.3d 609.)

(b) Defendants' primary contention is that plaintiff is a public official because he performs a government function, i.e., controlling gambling and the collection of public revenue, and protecting the public from organized crime. Not only is this contention based on an overbroad definition of "public official," it is also untenable for the following reasons:

(1) Even assuming a horse racing association could be a public official, that circumstance would not confer that status on plaintiff. The fact that plaintiff was the "main player" in the racing association's parent corporation is not grounds for piercing the corporate veil and treating plaintiff as the licensee. (205 C.A.3d 610.)

(2) Although plaintiff admitted that he was licensed as the general manager of the 1980 racing meet, the statutory and regulatory authorities cited by defendants as establishing a delegation of governmental function deal with the responsibilities of a horse racing association, not a general manager of a horse race meet. (205 C.A.3d 610.)

(3) The fact that horse racing associations are licensed and regulated by the government does not mean that they perform a governmental function any more than that the licensing of attorneys makes lawyering a governmental function or a lawyer a public official. (205 C.A.3d 610.)

(4) The fact that the public is concerned with illegal gambling and the dangers of organized crime does not make either the association or plaintiff a public official, as that concept is applied in defamation actions. (205 C.A.3d 611.)

James v. San Jose Mercury News (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1, 20 C.R.2d 890, applying the test set forth in Mosesian and disagreeing with Tague, held that a deputy public defender is not a public official. "From a practical perspective a deputy public defender in the discharge of his or her duties differs from a private criminal defense attorney only in the happenstance of his or her employment. Such control as he or she may exercise over the management of a particular case must invariably be controlled in turn by considerations of the best interests of the individual client, tempered only by professional constraints applicable to all attorneys and not by any generalized public interest beyond the concern that indigent defendants should be competently and professionally represented. It would be a gross overstatement to say that a deputy public defender has, or would appear to the public to have, 'substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs.'" (17 C.A.4th 11.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Who Are Public Officials. See Vogel v. Felice (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1006, 1017, 26 C.R.3d 350 [New York Times rule applies to candidates for public office, as well as persons already in office].

In Ghafur v. Bernstein (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1230, 32 C.R.3d 626, the superintendent of a charter school system sued defendants for libel for statements in a letter to the Superintendent of Public Instruction urging an investigation into the plaintiff's links to a terrorist organization and suspension of funding for the system. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed; the alleged libel concerned plaintiff's role as a public official, and she failed to establish actual malice.

(a) Whether someone is a "public official" for purposes of the New York Times rule is determined according to federal standards. Under those standards, the public official designation applies at the very least to those among the hierarchy of government employees who have, or appear to the public to have, substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs. The employee's position must be one that would invite public scrutiny and discussion of the person holding it, entirely apart from the scrutiny and discussion occasioned by the particular charges in controversy. (131 C.A.4th 1237.)

(b) There is disagreement among jurisdictions about whether public school principals and teachers are to be considered public officials. However, there is apparently universal agreement that public school superintendents and board members merit that designation. Clearly, the governance of a public school system is of the utmost importance to a community, and school board policies are often carefully scrutinized by residents. (131 C.A.4th 1238.)

(c) This reasoning is persuasive here. Plaintiff was the superintendent of what was described at the time as the fastest growing charter school system in the state. At their peak, these charter schools were educating 1,000 students. They had received over $ 1 million in public funds for their operation, and stood to receive millions of dollars more. Plaintiff was the primary, if not sole, spokesperson for these schools, and the one in charge of their management. In that capacity she had substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs, and her position was one of sufficient importance to invite public scrutiny. (131 C.A.4th 1238.)

(d) Plaintiff contends that she cannot be considered a public official under New York Times because she was not a governmental employee. However, California charter schools are part of this state's public school system, and charter school officials are officers of the public schools to the same extent as members of other boards of public school districts. (131 C.A.4th 1239.) Plaintiff, as the superintendent of a charter school system, was, like other public school superintendents and board members, a public official under New York Times, whether or not she was, strictly speaking, a governmental employee in that capacity. "A contrary conclusion would exalt form over substance." (131 C.A.4th 1240.)

30 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.
2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.
cc. Public Figure Plaintiffs.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 604

[§ 604] Public Figure Plaintiffs.

(1) New York Times Rule Applies. In Curtis Publishing Co v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S.Ct. 1975, 18 L.Ed.2d 1094, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §426, the rule was applied to criticism of public figures who are not public officials. (See Greenbelt Cooperative Publishing Assn. v. Bresler (1970) 398 U.S. 6, 90 S.Ct. 1537, 26 L.Ed.2d 6 [following Curtis]; Harte-Hanks Communications v. Connaughton (1989) 491 U.S. 657, 109 S.Ct. 2678, 2681, 105 L.Ed.2d 562, 571 [same]; Belli v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1972) 25 C.A.3d 384, 388, 102 C.R. 122 [same]; Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 244, 253, 208 C.R. 137, 690 P.2d 610 [same]; Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1260, 1272, 20 C.R.3d 673 [whether plaintiff in defamation action is public figure is question of law]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §418; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §5.0; 18 San Diego L. Rev. 72 [criticism of public figure--private figure test in context of corporate defamation plaintiff]; 34 Stanf. L. Rev. 901 [effect of passage of time on individual's status as public figure]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §67 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.04; CACI, Nos. 1702, 1703.)

(2) All-Purpose Public Figures. The cases have recognized two types of public figures: The first type consists of persons who "occupy positions of such persuasive power and influence that they are deemed public figures, for all purposes." (Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3009, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, 808, infra, §613; Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court, supra, 37 C.3d 253 [discussing Gertz classification]; 34 Hastings L. J. 809; 19 A.L.R.5th 1 [who is "public figure" for purposes of defamation action].)

(3) Limited-Purpose Public Figures. The second type includes those who are public figures only with respect to some particular controversy or set of events. A limited-purpose public figure "voluntarily injects himself or is drawn into a particular public controversy and thereby becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues." (Gertz v. Robert Welch, supra, 94 S.Ct. 3013, 41 L.Ed.2d 812; see Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court, supra, 37 C.3d 254 ["when called upon to make a determination of public figure status, courts should look for evidence of affirmative actions by which purported 'public figures' have thrust themselves into the forefront of particular public controversies"].)

(4) Illustrations. In numerous cases, plaintiffs have been held to be public figures subject to the New York Times rule. (See Okun v. Superior Court (1981) 29 C.3d 442, 451, 175 C.R. 157, 629 P.2d 1369, supra, §546 [developer seeking to construct condominiums contrary to protests of many residents]; Montandon v. Triangle Publications (1975) 45 C.A.3d 938, 120 C.R. 186, infra, §611 [author promoting sale of book by appearance on television and radio programs]; Widener v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 415, 433, 142 C.R. 304 [documentary film producer]; Wiengarten v. Block (1980) 102 C.A.3d 129, 141, 162 C.R. 701 [former city attorney and local attorney for redevelopment agency]; Kaufman v. Fidelity Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1983) 140 C.A.3d 913, 921, 189 C.R. 818 [plaintiff savings and loan association official injected himself into zoning dispute]; Nadel v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1251, 1269, 34 C.R.2d 188, infra, §607 [persons who played leadership role in protesting university's plan to build volleyball courts in park]; Rudnick v. McMillan (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1183, 1189, 31 C.R.2d 193 [rancher who induced publishers to write articles concerning alleged governmental misuse of his former land]; Denney v. Lawrence (1994) 22 C.A.4th 927, 935, 27 C.R.2d 556 [former sheriff's deputy who gave interviews concerning murder charges against his twin brother during which he promoted version favorable to his brother]; Copp v. Paxton (1996) 45 C.A.4th 829, 844, 52 C.R.2d 831 [person who posed as an expert on earthquake safety measures]; Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1072, 1090, 79 C.R.2d 597 [plaintiffs who had been outspoken in opposition to apartheid and Israeli policies regarding Palestine were limited public figures]; Annette F. v. Sharon S. (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1146, 1162, 15 C.R.3d 100 [plaintiff's purposeful activities in drawing public attention to her lesbian relationship with defendant, and to their earlier conduct of litigation on validity of second-parent adoptions, in order to promote gay marriage and second-parent adoptions, made her limited-purpose public figure on subject of that litigation]; Sipple v. Foundation for Nat. Progress (1999) 71 C.A.4th 226, 248, 83 C.R.2d 677 [nationally known political strategist was public figure]; 49 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1131 [relatives of public figures].)

Candidates for public office constitute public figures. (Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy (1971) 401 U.S. 265, 91 S.Ct. 621, 624, 28 L.Ed.2d 35, 40; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 28, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912; Noonan v. Rousselot (1966) 239 C.A.2d 447, 451, 48 C.R. 817.) The "need to protect a free flow of information regarding qualifications of persons applying for, as well as already holding, public office compels the application of an actual malice standard to candidates for office." (Miller v. Nestande (1987) 192 C.A.3d 191, 201, 237 C.R. 359, infra, §606.)

In Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court, supra, it was held that both Synanon, a foundation established as a rehabilitation program for drug addicts, and its founder were public figures. "While any person or organization has the right to engage in publicity efforts and to attempt to influence public and media opinion regarding their cause, such significant, voluntary efforts to inject oneself into the public arena require that such person or organization be classified as a public figure in any related defamation actions. In the instant case, Synanon and its founder have sponsored massive publicity and self-promotion efforts over a period of many years and apparently increased these efforts with regard to the present controversy. As such, they enjoyed remarkable access to the media through which to counter any criticisms they deemed to be unwarranted and voluntarily exposed themselves to increased risk of injury from unfavorable commentary about them. Thus they have clearly met the standards for 'public figure' status for purposes of this defamation action." (37 C.3d 256.)

In Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1991) 233 C.A.3d 1685, 285 C.R. 430, plaintiff obtained limited public figure status by being a shareholder, officer, and director of Calfax, a corporation that, after much public controversy, was awarded a license to conduct the first spring horse racing meet in Fresno in 1980. In this defamation action against defendant newspaper based on an article published after plaintiff announced his intention to reapply for a license in 1981, plaintiff argued that his status as a public figure had ended because he had been out of the news during the 5 months from his announcement to the publication of the article. Held, plaintiff remained a public figure for as long as the specific issue for which public status was achieved continued.

"While plaintiff's argument has a superficial appeal, it nonetheless must be rejected. ... [H]orse racing is a matter of serious public concern because it involves gambling on a large-scale basis. Gambling attracts criminal elements who will engage in illegal wagering, bookmaking and other unlawful acts. For this reason, the personal qualifications, background, and honesty of the license applicant, his organization and his associates are subject to public scrutiny. ... Thus, when plaintiff announced at the end of the 1980 meet that Calfax would apply for a license to operate the 1981 spring meet, plaintiff's status as a public figure continued for the limited purpose of his qualifications to obtain a license for that meet. The fact that plaintiff had not formally applied for the 1981 license when defendant's allegedly defamatory article appeared is of no moment. Public statements issued by plaintiff leading up to and during Calfax's operation of the 1980 spring horse racing meet, including his announcement that Calfax would seek relicensing for the 1981 season, constituted a purposeful reinjection of plaintiff's personality into the continuing public controversy over the operation of spring horse racing in Fresno." (233 C.A.3d 1702.)

In Live Oak Publishing Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1277, 286 C.R. 198, supra, §537, plaintiffs pleaded a cause of action for slander, based on statements that defendant made to employees of plaintiffs' newspaper. On appeal, plaintiff publishing company conceded that it was itself a public figure, but sought separate treatment for the individual plaintiffs--the managerial employees of the company. However, the individual plaintiffs "are intimately involved in public political debate in their community and the community has a legitimate and substantial interest in their conduct regarding the operation of the newspaper." (234 C.A.3d 1290.) Hence, they were also public figures. (234 C.A.3d 1290.) And mere evidence of ill will was insufficient to prove malice. (234 C.A.3d 1291; see supra, §593.)

In Stolz v. KSFM 102 FM (1994) 30 C.A.4th 195, 35 C.R.2d 740, plaintiff, the owner, operator, and general manager of a radio station, sued defendants, another radio station, one of its employees, and a broadcasting company, for defamation. The suit was based on statements made in a program on defendant station criticizing plaintiff's station as irresponsible for broadcasting racist and antihomosexual remarks and for allowing sex with minors in the station's van. The trial judge determined that plaintiff was a public figure and that the allegedly defamatory speech involved matters of public concern, thereby imposing on plaintiff the burden to prove falsity and actual malice. Held, jury verdict for defendants affirmed. Plaintiff's radio station was an all-purpose public figure by virtue of occupying a position of general fame and pervasive power and influence in the community in which the allegedly defamatory speech was broadcast. (30 C.A.4th 205.) Thus, plaintiff, who brought the action in his own name, alleging that he was "an individual conducting business as" his station, was also a public figure. The offensive speech related directly to the operation and management of the station. It was unnecessary to determine if plaintiff was a public figure for all purposes; it was sufficient to conclude that, at least with respect to matters directly related to the operation and management of the station, plaintiff was a limited purpose public figure. (30 C.A.4th 206.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(1), 48(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) New York Times Rule Applies. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.0; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §46 et seq.

(3) Limited-Purpose Public Figures. The "elements that must be present in order to characterize a plaintiff as a limited purpose public figure" are as follows: "First, there must be a public controversy, which means the issue was debated publicly and had foreseeable and substantial ramifications for nonparticipants. Second, the plaintiff must have undertaken some voluntary act through which he or she sought to influence resolution of the public issue. In this regard it is sufficient that the plaintiff attempts to thrust him or herself into the public eye. And finally, the alleged defamation must be germane to the plaintiff's participation in the controversy." (Ampex Corp. v. Cargle (2005) 128 C.A.4th 1569, 1577, 27 C.R.3d 863.) (See Gilbert v. Sykes (2007) 147 C.A.4th 13, 24, 53 C.R.3d 752 [quoting Ampex].)(4)

Illustrations. See Ampex Corp. v. Cargle, supra [corporation that was subject of allegedly defamatory Internet postings concerning its venture into Internet television business was limited-purpose public figure; it was publicly traded company and had inserted itself into controversy regarding venture through press releases and letters made available on Internet]; Gilbert v. Sykes, supra, 147 C.A.4th 25 [surgeon, prominent as expert in and advocate for plastic surgery as means of personal enhancement, was limited-purpose public figure, required to show actual malice to prevail on defamation claim]; Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 C.A.4th 71, 81, 55 C.R.3d 600, Supp., infra, §611 [nonprofit organization disseminating religious information and organization's president were public figures and thus had burden in defamation action of proving both that challenged statement was false and that defendant acted with actual malice]; Overstock.com v. Gradient Analytics (2007) 151 C.A.4th 688, 700, 61 C.R.3d 29 [online closeout retailer, offering customers brand name merchandise at discount while offering suppliers alternative way to distribute inventory liquidation, was limited-purpose public figure]; McGarry v. University of San Diego (2007) 154 C.A.4th 97, 115, 64 C.R.3d 467 [college coach was limited-purpose public figure; plaintiff voluntarily entered public arena by pursuing that career and lost certain protection for his reputation to extent that allegedly defamatory communications related to his job performance].

31 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

dd. Who Are Not Public Figures.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 605

[§ 605] Who Are Not Public Figures.

(1) In General. A number of cases have rejected attempts to bring plaintiffs within the "public figure" classification. It has been held, for example, that simply being a member of the clergy does not make one a public figure required to prove actual malice in a defamation action. Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1260, 1273, 20 C.R.3d 673.)

(2) Involuntary Involvement in Matter of Public Interest. In Wolston v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1979) 443 U.S. 157, 99 S.Ct. 2701, 61 L.Ed.2d 450, defendant Reader's Digest published a book entitled "KGB, The Secret Work of Soviet Agents," written by an individual defendant. It described the Soviet Union's espionage activities after World War II, and stated that plaintiff was an identified Soviet agent. Plaintiff sued in the federal district court, and, on defendants' motion for summary judgment, made the following showing: In 1957, plaintiff's aunt and uncle pleaded guilty to espionage; a federal grand jury, investigating other suspects, called plaintiff as a witness on several occasions, but he later failed to respond to a subpoena and was cited for contempt; he appeared at the hearing with an excuse based on health problems, but nevertheless pleaded guilty and received a suspended sentence and probation conditioned on cooperation in the investigation. Fifteen news stories in Washington and New York mentioned these events, but the publicity subsided after plaintiff was sentenced. The district court granted summary judgment to defendants on the ground that plaintiff was a "public figure" and that the affidavits and depositions raised no issue of actual malice. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff led a private life prior to the grand jury inquiry and returned to a position of relative obscurity after he was sentenced. Hence, he did not come within the first class of persons who occupy positions of such persuasive power and influence that they are deemed public figures for all purposes. (99 S.Ct. 2706, 61 L.Ed.2d 458.)

(b) Plaintiff was likewise not within the second category of "limited-purpose" public figures: those who have thrust themselves to the forefront of particular public controversies. He did not voluntarily inject himself into the controversy; he was brought into it unwillingly by the grand jury investigation, never discussed the matter with the press, and limited his involvement to defense against the contempt charge. (99 S.Ct. 2707, 61 L.Ed.2d 459.) "A private individual is not automatically transformed into a public figure just by becoming involved in or associated with a matter that attracts public attention." (99 S.Ct. 2708, 61 L.Ed.2d 460.)

(c) Defendants argued that any person who engages in criminal conduct automatically becomes a public figure for purposes of comment on a limited range of issues relating to his conviction. A similar argument was rejected in Time v. Firestone (1976) 424 U.S. 448, 96 S.Ct. 958, 47 L.Ed.2d 154, infra, §613, and the observations in that case are controlling. "To hold otherwise would create an 'open season's for all who sought to defame persons convicted of a crime." (99 S.Ct. 2708, 61 L.Ed.2d 461.) (See 13 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 179.)

Similar issues arose in Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 C.A.3d 915, 929, 159 C.R. 131, supra, §603, involving statements regarding the choice of instructional materials by plaintiff high school teacher. The court reviewed relevant United States Supreme Court decisions and stated: "In our view the definition of 'public figure' which has evolved from Butts through Gertz, Firestone and Wolston incorporate as an element a requirement that the libel plaintiff must have voluntarily and actively sought, in connection with any given matter of public interest, to influence the resolution of the issues involved. To us it seems clear that only by such voluntary and active participation could an individual be said to have 'relinquished ... his interest in the protection of his own name.' " (97 C.A.3d 929.) The court concluded that plaintiff, concededly not a public figure for all purposes, was also not a public figure for the limited purpose of the controversy over the teaching materials. She made a selection of materials for the purpose of discharging her teaching duties, and with no anticipation of controversy. She did not take her case to the public or in any other sense assume "special prominence." Hence, she maintained her status as a private individual and was not required to show that defendants had published with actual malice. (97 C.A.3d 931.) (See Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1072, 1091, 79 C.R.2d 597 [teaching university class involving issues of public concern does not constitute purposeful political activity justifying classification as limited purpose public figure]; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 431.)

These issues were discussed by the California Supreme Court in Khawar v. Globe Int. (1998) 19 C.4th 254, 79 C.R.2d 178, 965 P.2d 696. Plaintiff photojournalist was photographed on a podium near a famous politician who was assassinated moments later. Approximately 20 years later, a book, using this photograph, promulgated the theory that plaintiff was the assassin. After defendant newspaper reviewed the book and republished the false accusation regarding plaintiff, he sued for defamation, and the initial issue was whether plaintiff was a public figure. Held, he was not.

(a) Defendant relied on statements in Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, infra, §613, that it is possible for a person to become an involuntary public figure by being drawn into a public controversy, even though he or she engaged in no purposeful action to attain that classification. However, the U.S. Supreme Court has never held that it would be proper to characterize an individual as a public figure in the absence of the reasons for requiring plaintiffs to prove actual malice in defamation actions, e.g., the individual has engaged in a purposeful activity inviting criticism or has acquired substantial access to the controversy at issue. "Thus, assuming a person may ever be accurately characterized as an involuntary public figure, we infer from the logic of Gertz that the high court would reserve this characterization for an individual who, despite never having voluntarily engaged the public's attention in an attempt to influence the outcome of a public controversy, nonetheless has acquired such public prominence in relation to the controversy as to permit media access sufficient to effectively counter media-published defamatory statements." (19 C.4th 265.)

(b) Plaintiff did not acquire access to the media in connection with the controversy surrounding the assassination: he was not a suspect, he did not testify in the trial, and his own views on the assassination were never publicized. Also, he did not gain this access when the book was published. The book did not sell well, and defendant was the only newspaper that contained an article about it. (19 C.4th 265.)

(c) Defendant argued that plaintiff had become an involuntary public figure by deliberately obtaining a position next to the politician, knowing that there would be substantial media coverage of the event. This argument is unpersuasive. (1) Plaintiff's conduct took place before the politician was assassinated or the book was published. At most, he voluntarily associated himself with the politician's quest for the Presidential nomination, but this issue had nothing to do with the assassination. (19 C.4th 266.) (2) Even as to the public issues regarding the politician's candidacy, plaintiff's role was trivial at best. A journalist who is photographed with other journalists crowded around a political candidate does not thereby assume any special prominence in relation to the political campaign issues. (19 C.4th 267.)

(3) Notoriety Resulting From Defendant's Own Actions. A defendant may not create its own defense by making the plaintiff a public figure. In Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979) 443 U.S. 111, 99 S.Ct. 2675, 61 L.Ed.2d 411, plaintiff, a research scientist, received substantial federal grants for studies seeking an objective measure of aggression; his work was concentrated on the behavior patterns of certain animals when exposed to aggravating stressful stimuli. NASA and the Navy were interested in the potential of this research for resolving problems of humans confined in close quarters for extended periods. Defendant, a United States Senator, initiated the "Golden Fleece of the Month Award," to publicize what he perceived to be the most egregious examples of wasteful governmental spending. He made an award to NASA and other government agencies funding plaintiff's research, and gave a speech printed in the Congressional Record, describing plaintiff's work as "nonsense," and asserting that, in view of "the transparent worthlessness of Hutchinson's study of jaw-grinding and biting by angry or hard-drinking monkeys, it is time we put a stop to the bite Hutchinson and the bureaucrats who fund him have been taking of the taxpayer." Defendant then gave wide publicity to the award and speech in press releases and a newsletter, and his legislative assistant discussed the subject with the agencies that had sponsored the research. Plaintiff sued the Senator and his assistant for defamation, interference with contractual relationships, and invasion of privacy. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed. Plaintiff's studies reached a small group of professionals concerned with research in human behavior; and the fact that he received public grants did not make him a public figure. His writings became a matter of controversy only in consequence of the Golden Fleece Award; and "those charged with defamation cannot, by their own conduct, create their own defense by making the claimant a public figure." (99 S.Ct. 2688, 61 L.Ed.2d 431, citing Wolston v. Reader's Digest Assn., supra.) (See 13 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 179.)

(4) Commercial Conduct. In Vegod Corp. v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1979) 25 C.3d 763, 160 C.R. 97, 603 P.2d 14, plaintiffs were engaged in the business of liquidating stores that failed. A "landmark" San Francisco store advertised a "closing out sale," which plaintiffs conducted. Defendant's news reporter broadcast a story that plaintiffs were deceiving the public by bringing in inferior merchandise at inflated prices. In this defamation action, the trial judge ruled that plaintiffs were "public figures" who had to prove malice, and judgment was for defendants. Held, reversed. Selling advertised goods to the public did not make plaintiffs "public figures," or make them part of an existing public controversy. And criticism of commercial conduct does not deserve the special protection of the actual malice test. "[T]hose assuming the role of business practice critic do not acquire the First Amendment privilege to denigrate such entrepreneur." (25 C.3d 770.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) Commercial Conduct. See Carver v. Bonds (2005) 135 C.A.4th 328, 352, 37 C.R.3d 480 [podiatrist was not limited-purpose public figure with respect to newspaper's reports of his alleged false advertising; criticism of commercial conduct does not deserve special protection of actual malice test; following Vegod Corp. v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1979) 25 C.3d 763, 160 C.R. 97, 603 P.2d 14, text, p. 896].

32 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

ee. Nonmedia Defendants.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 606

[§ 606] Nonmedia Defendants.

There has been much discussion of the question whether the constitutional privilege to publish without actual malice is available only to the media or may be asserted by an individual nonmedia defendant. (See Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979) 443 U.S. 111, 99 S.Ct. 2675, 2687, 61 L.Ed.2d 411, 430, footnote 16 [noting that the court has never decided whether New York Times standard can apply to individual defendant]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 1876; 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 902; 25 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 915; 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 253; 38 A.L.R.4th 1114 [application of New York Times and related standards to nonmedia defendants]; on governmental defendants, see infra, §607.)

Miller v. Nestande (1987) 192 C.A.3d 191, 237 C.R. 359, held that the privilege could be asserted by a nonmedia defendant, at least with respect to matters of public concern. Plaintiff, a former prisoner of war in Vietnam, was an incumbent candidate for a county board of supervisors. Defendant, also a former prisoner of war, mailed statements to the voters charging plaintiff with cooperating with the enemy while a prisoner. Plaintiff contended that neither the New York Times actual malice test nor the evidentiary burden of proof by clear and convincing evidence protects a nonmedia defendant. Held, judgment for defendant was affirmed.

(a) The emphasis in Dun & Bradstreet v. Greenmoss Builders (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S.Ct. 2939, 2944, 86 L.Ed.2d 593, 601, infra, §615, "on the public concern content of the defamatory communication is central to our resolution of this case. In an era of increased awareness of the need for personal integrity in those to whom the public entrusts its governance, knowledge of the personal qualifications of candidate for public office is the lifeblood of an informed electorate." (192 C.A.3d 199.)

(b) Here plaintiff, in a fund solicitation, "pointedly interjected his military record and his North Vietnamese imprisonment into his campaign in a mailer portraying a Marine Corps insignia and a POW bracelet with his rank, name and date of capture." (192 C.A.3d 199.) Defendant's rebuttal mailer, describing plaintiff's conduct in captivity as unpatriotic, was the type of speech indispensable to decisionmaking in democracy. (192 C.A.3d 200.) "Whether criticism of public officials is published by the media or disseminated by individuals, we hold it is protected by the constitutional standard expressed in New York Times." (192 C.A.3d 200.) And to the extent that the court's earlier decision in Schomer v. Smidt (1980) 113 C.A.3d 828, 834, 170 C.R. 662, "may be construed" as suggesting a contrary rule, "it is disapproved." (192 C.A.3d 200, footnote 7.) (See 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 253 [criticism of Schomer v. Smidt].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.
2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.
ff. Governmental Defendants.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 607

[§ 607] Governmental Defendants.

In Nadel v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1994) 28 C.A.4th 1251, 34 C.R.2d 188, plaintiffs, who were leaders in an organization dedicated to preventing defendant university from constructing volleyball courts on a piece of university property, sued defendant and four of its employees for their characterization of plaintiffs as perpetrators of violence and destruction of property. The primary issue, which was one of first impression, was whether the New York Times standard, requiring public officers or figures to prove actual malice in order to establish a defendant's liability for defamation, applies to governmental defendants. Held, the standard applies.

(a) In deciding this issue, it is necessary to confront the two competing themes underlying the New York Times standard, i.e., the First Amendment right of the people to the unfettered interchange of ideas versus the state interest in protecting citizens from libel, plus a third theme, the overreaching constitutional interest in protecting people from abuses of governmental power. (28 C.A.4th 1261.)

(b) Because the First Amendment focuses on the right of listeners to receive information instead of on the identity of the speaker, it would seem irrelevant whether the speaker is media or not, or government or not. Moreover, the government has a legitimate role to play in the interchange of ideas. For example, to secure cooperation in implementing its programs, government must be able to maintain a dialogue with its citizens about their needs and the extent to which government can or should meet those needs. And in some situations, government may be the only entity capable of presenting a particular side of a public issue. These considerations favor applying First Amendment protections, and hence the New York Times standard, to governmental defendants. (28 C.A.4th 1262.)

(c) The state interest of protecting persons from libel is especially strong when the defendant is the government, because government possesses a unique advantage over an individual citizen in a war of words. And this remains true even in the face of the general post-Watergate skepticism about anything that the government has to say. Moreover, if citizens are indeed more vulnerable to governmental defamation because of its unique power, there may be a special danger that persons will refrain from exercising their First Amendment right to criticize the government for fear of retaliatory defamation. These considerations weigh against applying the New York Times standard to governmental defendants. (28 C.A.4th 1264.)

(d) Plaintiffs argue that the New York Times standard should not apply to governmental defendants because the First Amendment is designed to protect citizens from government, not government from its citizens. This simple argument, which has considerable merit, is a substantial counterbalance against the argument that the First Amendment purpose of assuring unfettered exchange of ideas favors application of First Amendment protections, including the New York Times standard, to governmental speech. (28 C.A.4th 1266.)

(e) However, on balance, "[w]e conclude that application of the New York Times standard of constitutional malice to government defendants in defamation cases represents an appropriate accommodation of the three competing interests implicated in this context of government speech." (28 C.A.4th 1267.)

(1) Any potential liability of government for publishing a defamatory statement is itself a check on governmental abuse of its power to defame. "Thus, even if the New York Times standard is applied to government speech, governments still face the threat of liability (assuming no privilege or immunity) for defamatory speech that is constitutionally malicious. This threat, though limited in practical application, provides at least a baseline level of protection to a vulnerable citizenry from abuse of government power." (28 C.A.4th 1266.)

(2) In view of the fact that government has a legitimate role to play in the interchange of ideas, government should have some measure of protection in performing that role, at least concerning matters of public interest, so that its speech will not be substantially inhibited and the citizenry less informed. Extending the New York Times standard to governmental defendants will further this interest as well as maintain the balance of conditional privilege between criticism of government and criticism by government in the absence of statutory privileges and immunities. (28 C.A.4th 1266.)

(3) With respect to the point that extension of First Amendment protection to government is inconsistent with the purpose of the Amendment, the best answer is that if the unfettered interchange of ideas is a central concern of the First Amendment, then application of it to government speech in the context of limited protection from liability for defamation is entirely consistent with First Amendment dogma, i.e., it will promote government's contribution to the marketplace of ideas. Moreover, in California, where a public entity's tort liability is derivative of employee liability (see Govt.C. 815.2), the primary concern is with the extension of First Amendment protection to the employee, who should not be treated as having relinquished this protection by virtue of government employment. (28 C.A.4th 1267.) (On nonmedia defendants generally, see supra, §606.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

34 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.
2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.
gg. Ambiguous Statements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 608

[§ 608] Ambiguous Statements.

In Good Government Group of Seal Beach v. Superior Court (1978) 22 C.3d 672, 150 C.R. 258, 586 P.2d 572, defendant citizens' organization published derogatory statements concerning plaintiff, a former city council member. Held, summary judgment for defendants was properly denied.

(a) The article was ambiguous, and could not as a matter of law be characterized as either a statement of fact or opinion. Hence, it was for the jury to determine whether an ordinary reader would have understood it as a factual assertion charging plaintiff with a crime, or as an opinion about his conduct in regard to a public project. (22 C.3d 682.)

(b) The New York Times test of malice is not satisfied by negligence in publication; the First Amendment protects not only the expression of political opinion but the choice of words used to convey that opinion: "It is clear that honest belief of the defendant is the touchstone of the privilege enunciated in New York Times, and that a statement is entitled to constitutional protection if the words used are ambiguous but the defendant honestly and without recklessness believes that they constitute an opinion or idea. We hold, therefore, that in order to find the requisite malice from the publication of ambiguous words which could constitute either fact or opinion, the jury must find not only that the words were reasonably understood in their defamatory, factual sense, but also that the defendant either deliberately cast his statements in equivocal fashion in the hope of insinuating a defamatory import to the reader, or that he knew or acted in reckless disregard of whether his words would be interpreted by the average reader as defamatory statements of fact." (22 C.3d 684.)

(c) Plaintiff made a sufficient showing to justify consideration of the issue as one of fact. "[A] jury could conclude from this evidence that at least some of the defendants were aware that the words used in the article could be interpreted as defamatory statements of fact instead of 'allegorical language ... voicing a vigorous political opinion, in strident tones,' as defendants claim." (22 C.3d 686.) (See Fuhrman v. Risner (1979) 92 C.A.3d 725, 731, 155 C.R. 122 [following Good Government in case arising out of same publication]; O'Conner v. McGraw-Hill (1984) 159 C.A.3d 478, 485, 206 C.R. 33 [following Good Government].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.19, 48, 51(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

35 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.
2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.
hh. Inaccurate Quotations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 609

[§ 609] Inaccurate Quotations.

In Masson v. New Yorker Magazine (1991) 501 U.S. 496, 111 S.Ct. 2419, 115 L.Ed.2d 447, plaintiff psychoanalyst was fired from his position as projects director of the Sigmund Freud Archives after attacking Freud's theories in an address to a psychoanalytical society. Thereafter, defendant author wrote an unflattering article about plaintiff's relationship with the archives that was published in the New Yorker magazine and later in book form. Plaintiff then sued the author, magazine, and book publisher for libel based primarily on six passages purporting to quote statements made by plaintiff during interviews with defendant author, although no identical statements appeared in the more than 40 hours of taped interviews. The parties agreed that plaintiff was a public figure who could escape summary judgment only if the evidence would allow a reasonable finder of fact, by clear and convincing evidence, to conclude that defendants published a defamatory statement with actual malice, i.e., with knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard as to truth or falsity. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) Effect of using quotations.

(1) Although writers sometimes use quotation marks in such a manner that no reasonable reader would understand them to be an actual statement of the speaker to whom they are attributed, they are most often used to indicate to the reader that the quoted passage is a verbatim reproduction of the speaker's words. (111 S.Ct. 2430, 115 L.Ed.2d 469.) Because the work in question provided the reader with no clue that quotation marks were being used as a rhetorical device or to paraphrase the speaker's actual statement, and because the work appeared in a magazine enjoying a reputation for scrupulous accuracy, a trier of fact could find that a reasonable reader would understand the quoted passages to be nearly verbatim reports of statements made by plaintiff. (111 S.Ct. 2431, 115 L.Ed.2d 470.)

(2) A fabricated quotation may injure reputation in at least two senses. First, it may attribute an untrue factual assertion to the speaker. Second, regardless of the truth of the quoted statement, it may cause injury to reputation by indicating a negative personal trait or an attitude that the speaker does not hold. And a self-condemnatory quotation, being against self-interest, may carry more force than criticism by another person. (111 S.Ct. 2430, 115 L.Ed.2d 469.)

(b) Degree of falsity required to constitute actual malice.

(1) In determining whether defendants acted with knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard as to truth or falsity, it is necessary to consider whether the requisite falsity inheres in the attribution of words to plaintiff that he did not speak. (111 S.Ct. 2431, 115 L.Ed.2d 470.)

(2) Writers and reporters by necessity often alter what people say, at the very least to eliminate grammatical and syntactical errors. However, something more than this mere technical falsity is required to establish falsity for purposes of proving actual malice. (111 S.Ct. 2431, 115 L.Ed.2d 470.)

(3) Plaintiff argued that any alteration, beyond correction for grammar or syntax, by itself proves falsity in the sense relevant to determining actual malice under the First Amendment. This position must be rejected for the following reasons:

First, even if a journalist has tape-recorded a public figure, the full and exact statement will only rarely be reported. "The existence of both a speaker and a reporter; the translation between two media, speech and the printed word; the addition of punctuation; and the practical necessity to edit and make intelligible a speaker's perhaps rambling comments, all make it misleading to suggest that a quotation will be reconstructed with complete accuracy." (111 S.Ct. 2432, 115 L.Ed.2d 471.)

Second, in some cases a journalist may deliberately alter the speaker's words to correct an obvious misstatement, thereby preserving the intended meaning, while in other situations he may use quotations out of context to distort meaning, even though the speaker used each reported word. (111 S.Ct. 2432, 115 L.Ed.2d 471.)

Third, technical distinctions between correcting grammar and some greater level of alteration are unworkable and constitute a departure from both First Amendment principles and the purpose of the tort of libel, i.e., redressing injury to reputation caused by a statement that is defamatory and false. "If an author alters a speaker's words but effects no material change in meaning, including any meaning conveyed by the manner or fact of expression, the speaker suffers no injury to reputation that is compensable as a defamation." (111 S.Ct. 2432, 115 L.Ed.2d 472.)

(4) The common law of libel utilizes but one approach to the question of falsity, regardless of the form of the communication. This approach overlooks minor inaccuracies and concentrates on substantial truth. (111 S.Ct. 2432, 115 L.Ed.2d 472, quoting the text.) Accordingly, "[w]e conclude that a deliberate alteration of the words uttered by a plaintiff does not equate with knowledge of falsity ... , unless the alteration results in a material change in the meaning conveyed by the statement. The use of quotations to attribute words not in fact spoken bears in a most important way on that inquiry, but it is not dispositive in every case." (111 S.Ct. 2433, 115 L.Ed.2d 473.)

(5) The Court of Appeals went beyond protecting quotations that convey the meaning of a speaker's statement with substantial accuracy, and instead concluded that an altered quotation is protected if it is a rational interpretation of an actual statement. This rational interpretation standard, which is derived from Time v. Pape (1971) 401 U.S. 279, 91 S.Ct. 633, 28 L.Ed.2d 45, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §427, and Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States (1984) 466 U.S. 485, 104 S.Ct. 1949, 80 L.Ed.2d 502, infra, §612, serves First Amendment principles by affording an author the interpretative license that is required when relying on ambiguous sources. It has no usefulness, however, where a writer uses quotation marks under circumstances indicating that he is not involved in an interpretation of the speaker's ambiguous statement, but rather is attempting to convey what the speaker said. Hence, assessing quotations under the rational interpretation standard would give journalists the freedom to place statements in their subjects' mouths without fear of liability, thereby both diminishing the trustworthiness of the printed word and discouraging public figures from speaking to reporters. (111 S.Ct. 2434, 115 L.Ed.2d 474.)

(c) Existence of factual questions. The evidence raises factual issues whether defendant author published the challenged statements with knowledge or reckless disregard of the alterations. (111 S.Ct. 2435, 115 L.Ed.2d 474.) And because five of the published passages differ materially in meaning from the tape-recorded statements, there is also a question of fact as to falsity. Hence, defendants' motion for summary judgment was improperly granted. (111 S.Ct. 2436, 115 L.Ed.2d. 476.) (See 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1483 [Masson and incremental harm doctrine]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 73 [Permission for Journalists to "Quote What I Mean, Not What I Say"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

36 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

ii. Discovery Concerning Defendant's State of Mind.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 610

[§ 610] Discovery Concerning Defendant's State of Mind.

In Herbert v. Lando (1979) 441 U.S. 153, 99 S.Ct. 1635, 60 L.Ed.2d 115, plaintiff, a retired Army officer, accused his superior officers of covering up atrocities in the Vietnam war. Defendant television network broadcast a report on plaintiff and his accusations, produced and edited by defendants L and W; and L published a related article in defendant magazine. Plaintiff sued for defamation in federal district court, on diversity grounds. He alleged that the program and article falsely and maliciously portrayed him as a liar who had made the charges to explain his relief from command. To meet the New York Times requirement of proof of malice by a "public figure," he had to show reckless disregard for truth, i.e., that the defendant entertained serious doubts as to the truth of his publication. He therefore took extended depositions of L, seeking to compel answers to questions relating to that defendant's state of mind. Defendants claimed a constitutional privilege against inquiry into the editorial processes of those responsible for a publication. Held, there is no such privilege.

(a) Proof constitutionally required in defamation cases involving public officials or figures. Prior to New York Times, it was the accepted view that neither civil nor criminal liability for defamatory publications abridges freedom of speech, and a majority of jurisdictions made publishers civilly liable regardless of intent. New York Times and Curtis Publishing Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S.Ct. 1975, 18 L.Ed.2d 1094, supra, §604, made major changes in the standards by requiring public officials and public figures to prove knowing or reckless falsehood; and Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, infra, §613, held that nonpublic figures must demonstrate some fault. (99 S.Ct. 1640, 60 L.Ed.2d 123.) "Given the required proof, however, damages liability for defamation abridges neither freedom of speech nor freedom of the press." (99 S.Ct. 1641, 60 L.Ed.2d 124.)

(b) Inquiry concerning state of mind is appropriate. New York Times and its progeny made it essential that plaintiffs focus on the conduct and state of mind of the defendant. (99 S.Ct. 1641, 60 L.Ed.2d 124.) Such an inquiry has long been appropriate as a means of proving malice in actions seeking recovery of punitive damages, and in meeting the defense of qualified privilege. (99 S.Ct. 1641, 1642, 1643, 60 L.Ed.2d 125, 126, 127.)

(c) Tornillo case distinguished. In Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. Tornillo (1974) 418 U.S. 241, 94 S.Ct. 2381, 41

L.Ed.2d 730, the court invalidated a governmental effort to preempt editorial decision by requiring the publication of specified material. But the opinion did not suggest that the editorial process is immune from any inquiry. (99 S.Ct. 1644, 1645, 60 L.Ed.2d 128.) Thus, "according an absolute privilege to the editorial process of a media defendant in a libel case is not required, authorized or presaged by our prior cases, and would substantially enhance the burden of proving actual malice, contrary to the expectations of New York Times, Butts and similar cases." (99 S.Ct. 1645, 60 L.Ed.2d 129.)

(d) Constitutional protection of editorial process is unnecessary. Defendants urged that the First Amendment should now be construed to place beyond the plaintiff's reach a range of direct evidence relevant to proof of knowing or reckless falsehood, because requiring disclosure of editorial conversations would have an intolerable chilling effect on the editorial process and editorial decisionmaking. The argument is not convincing: "Permitting plaintiffs ... to prove their cases by direct as well as indirect evidence is consistent with the balance struck by our prior decisions. If such proof results in liability for damages which in turn discourages the publication of erroneous information known to be false or probably false, this is no more than what our cases contemplate and does not abridge either freedom of speech or of the press." (99 S.Ct. 1647, 60 L.Ed.2d 131.) Moreover, creation of the suggested privilege would not cure the problem of the press; only complete immunity from liability for defamation would effect this result. (99 S.Ct. 1649, 60 L.Ed.2d 134.) Finally, the abuses of uncontrolled discovery are not peculiar to defamation suits, and, until there are changes in the rules of civil procedure, reliance must be placed on the powers of the district judge to prevent abuse. (99 S.Ct. 1649, 60 L.Ed.2d 134.) (See 66 Cal. L. Rev. 1127 [Herbert v. Lando in Court of Appeals]; 10 Golden Gate L. Rev. 691 [aftermath of Herbert v. Lando]; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 150; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 362; 7 Pepperdine L. Rev. 264; 26 Santa Clara L. Rev. 643 [Herbert v. Lando]; 31 Stanf. L. Rev. 1035, 1059; 13 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 374; on remedies for misuse of discovery procedures, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §239 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

37 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.
2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.
jj. Standard of Proof.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 611

[§ 611] Standard of Proof.

The constitutional requirement of actual malice requires "clear and convincing evidence" of knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard as to truth or falsity. (Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 244, 252, 208 C.R. 137, 690 P.2d 610; Widener v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 415, 433, 142 C.R. 304; see Anderson v. Liberty Lobby (1986) 477 U.S. 242, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2508, 91 L.Ed.2d 202, 209; Good Government Group of Seal Beach v. Superior Court (1978) 22 C.3d 672, 679, 150 C.R. 258, 586 P.2d 572, supra, §608 [ambiguous statement]; Khawar v. Globe Int. (1998) 19 C.4th 254, 273, 79 C.R.2d 178, 965 P.2d 696, supra, §605 [in failing to interview witnesses before republishing book's assertion that plaintiff, and not person convicted, had assassinated famous politician, defendant was making highly improbable claim that official investigation and court were mistaken; evidence was sufficient to support finding of actual malice]; Tague v. Citizens for Law & Order (1977) 75 C.A.3d Supp. 16, 25, 142 C.R. 689 [suggesting instructions on meaning of actual malice and requirement of proof by clear and convincing evidence]; Bindrim v. Mitchell (1979) 92 C.A.3d 61, 72, 155 C.R. 29 [test of clear and convincing evidence met]; Fisher v. Larsen (1982) 138 C.A.3d 627, 640, 188 C.R. 216 [charge of criminal conduct, based on information from source hostile to plaintiff, presented jury question as to whether there was reckless disregard of truth]; Fletcher v. San Jose Mercury News (1989) 216 C.A.3d 172, 184, 264 C.R. 699 [evidence of defendants' past and present hostility toward plaintiff, and lack of objectivity in reporting, did not show lack of belief in accuracy of articles and hence was not clear and convincing proof of requisite malice]; Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1041, 1049, 285 C.R. 863 [test of clear and convincing evidence met]; Robertson v. Rodriguez (1995) 36 C.A.4th 347, 358, 42 C.R.2d 464 [statement by city council member that other council member had been fined for running illegal business out of his home; actual malice was not shown by clear and convincing evidence]; Beilenson v. Superior Court (1996) 44 C.A.4th 944, 950, 52 C.R.2d 357 [statements made by candidate for Congress regarding another candidate; malice not established]; Jackson v. Paramount Pictures Corp. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 10, 33, 80 C.R.2d 1 [evidence that defendant, while having reason to believe that alleged defamatory statement was true, had some doubts as to its accuracy did not mean that she acted with "knowledge of falsity or in reckless disregard of the truth"]; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 250 [Anderson]; 57 So. Cal. L. Rev. 707 [summary judgment and actual malice]; 16 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 577; 14 Proof of Facts 2d 49 [proof of actual malice]; 71 Proof of Facts 3d 321 [proof of circumstances establishing constitutional malice in defamation case]; on meaning of malice for purposes of statutory qualified privileges, see supra, §593.)

"[T]he actual malice standard is not satisfied merely through a showing of ill will or 'malice' in the ordinary sense of the term. ... Actual malice ... requires at a minimum that the statements were made with a reckless disregard for the truth. And although the concept of 'reckless disregard' cannot be fully encompassed in one infallible definition, ... we have made clear that the defendant must have made the false publication with a 'high degree of awareness of ... probable falsity,' ... or must have 'entertained serious doubts as to the truth of his publication.'" (Harte-Hanks Communications v. Connaughton (1989) 491 U.S. 657, 109 S.Ct. 2678, 2681, 105 L.Ed.2d 562, 571, quoting St. Amant v. Thompson (1968) 390 U.S. 727, 88 S.Ct. 1323, 20 L.Ed.2d 262.)

In Montandon v. Triangle Publications (1975) 45 C.A.3d 938, 120 C.R. 196, plaintiff wrote a book entitled "How to Be a Party Girl." To promote it, her publicity agent arranged for her to appear on television and radio programs. The producer and host of one of these programs, without the knowledge of plaintiff or her agent, arranged to have an anonymous prostitute on the show with plaintiff. The producer then wrote a press release for various media, including defendant's TV Guide, that read: "FROM PARTY-GIRL to CALL-GIRL? How far can the 'party-girl' go until she becomes a 'call-girl' is discussed with T-V personality Pat Montandon, author, ('How to be a Party-Girl') and a masked-anonymous prostitute." Defendant's programmer rewrote the press release, and, after the revised version was approved by defendant's Northern California editor (whose duties included looking for defamatory material), it was published, as follows: "'From Party Girl to Call Girl.' Scheduled Guest: TV Personality Pat Montandon and author of 'How to Be a Party Girl.'" Held, judgment on a jury verdict for compensatory and punitive damages affirmed.

(a) The article was libelous. Several witnesses called by plaintiff, including a professor of English, a newspaper society editor, a bank vice president, two television producers, and one of plaintiff's young fans, testified that the average reader would conclude from the article that plaintiff "had progressed from being a party girl to being a call girl, with party girl meaning a girl who likes to give and go to parties and a call girl being a prostitute." (45 C.A.3d 944.) Defendant's programmer and editor testified to the contrary; i.e., that they did not interpret nor believe that the average reader would so interpret the publication. But the deletion of the question mark after the topic-caption, making it a statement rather than a question, and deletion of any reference to the anonymous prostitute, implying that plaintiff would be the only guest to discuss the topic, was convincing proof of knowing falsity of the rewritten release. (45 C.A.3d 943.)

(b) The programmer deleted reference to the prostitute, not from space limitations, but because she didn't want to use the word in TV Guide; and the deletion of this crucial fact--that a call girl would appear with plaintiff--implied that plaintiff herself was a call girl, i.e., that "she had experienced that progress herself." (45 C.A.3d 948.) These facts met the New York Times test. "Anyone participating in the publication of the article did so with reckless disregard of whether Miss Montandon had had that experience or had not." (45 C.A.3d 948.) Their conduct "was more than negligence, it amounted to an indifference to the impression being given to the general public." (45 C.A.3d 949.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(1), 51(5), 101(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Ampex Corp. v. Cargle (2005) 128 C.A.4th 1569, 1578, 27 C.R.3d 863 [where defendant produced detailed declarations setting forth basis for his allegedly defamatory postings on Internet message board, plaintiff's declarations, simply summarizing certain of defendant's comments and stating that they were false, were insufficient to establish prima facie showing of constitutional malice]; Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 C.A.4th 71, 81, 55 C.R.3d 600 [public figure plaintiff in defamation action has burden of proving both that challenged statement is false and that defendant acted with actual malice]; Overstock.com v. Gradient Analytics (2007) 151 C.A.4th 688, 710, 61 C.R.3d 29 [plaintiff corporation established prima facie case that investment analysts published reports in reckless disregard of truth; evidence showed that analyst published negative reports at behest of short-selling clients in order to depress price of plaintiff's shares]. (New) Standard of proof of falsity is preponderance of evidence: Christian Research Institute v. Alnor, supra, involved a defamation action by public figure plaintiffs (a nonprofit organization that disseminated religious information and its president) against an individual who maintained a website reporting on fundraising and spending practices of various Christian organizations. The action was based on a statement on the website that plaintiffs were under a federal criminal mail fraud investigation. Defendant contended that plaintiffs were required not only to prove malice by clear and convincing evidence, but also to prove falsity by the same standard. Held, defendant's contention was incorrect. Plaintiffs were required to prove falsity only by a preponderance of the evidence, and they met that burden in this case.

(a) CACI, No. 1700 requires falsity to be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Pattern jury instructions, while designed to accurately reflect the law, are not the law itself. However, this instruction correctly states the law. (148 C.A.4th 82.)

(b) While some courts have interpreted United States Supreme Court precedent to require proof of falsity by clear and convincing evidence, the Supreme Court itself has never done so. Indeed, in Harte-Hanks Communications v. Connaughton (1989) 491 U.S. 657, 661, footnote 2, 109 S.Ct. 2678, 2682, 105 L.Ed.2d 562, 572, the court specifically declined to express a view on this issue. (148 C.A.4th 82.)

(c) The requirement that a public figure plaintiff prove malice by clear and convincing evidence arises from First Amendment concerns that freedom of expression be provided the "breathing space" it needs to survive. (148 C.A.4th 82; quoting New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 721, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, 701, text, §601.) Defendant provides no argument why the element of falsity requires a clear and convincing evidence standard to protect freedom of expression. "Neither the California Supreme Court nor the United States Supreme Court has expressly mandated this requirement, and we perceive no reason to do so now. Where the law specifies no higher burden of proof, the preponderance of the evidence standard applies." (148 C.A.4th 82; citing Ev.C. 115, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §35.)

(d) Plaintiffs introduced Freedom of Information Act letters that stated, contrary to defendant's claim, that the postal service had not investigated alleged wrongdoing by them. This evidence was sufficient to meet plaintiffs' burden of showing falsity. (148 C.A.4th 84.)

38 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Public Officials or Public Figures.

kk. Independent Appellate Review.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 612

[§ 612] Independent Appellate Review.

In Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States (1984) 466 U.S. 485, 104 S.Ct. 1949, 80 L.Ed.2d 502, the court declared that the requirement of independent appellate review of the issue of actual malice is a rule of federal constitutional law. "It reflects a deeply held conviction that judges--and particularly Members of this Court--must exercise such review in order to preserve the precious liberties established and ordained by the Constitution. The question whether the evidence in the record in a defamation case is of the convincing clarity required to strip the utterance of First Amendment protection is not merely a question for the trier of fact. Judges, as expositors of the Constitution, must independently decide whether the evidence in the record is sufficient to cross the constitutional threshold that bars the entry of any judgment that is not supported by clear and convincing proof of 'actual malice.'" (104 S.Ct. 1965, 80 L.Ed.2d 523.) (See Harte-Hanks Communications v. Connaughton (1989) 491 U.S. 657, 109 S.Ct. 2678, 2694, 105 L.Ed.2d 562, 587, supra, §611 [following Bose]; Robertson v. Rodriguez (1995) 36 C.A.4th 347, 357, 42 C.R.2d 464 [same].)

In McCoy v. Hearst Corp. (1986) 42 C.3d 835, 231 C.R. 518, 727 P.2d 711, the court, following Bose, laid down the following rules governing Supreme Court review of a Court of Appeal opinion in such a case:

(a) "First, this court must independently review all the evidence presented on the issue of actual malice. It may not restrict itself, as the Court of Appeal did, to evidence favorable to judgment." (42 C.3d 845.)

(b) "Second, the execution of this 'constitutional responsibility ... cannot be delegated to the trier of fact' ... , and requires this court to step beyond the usual confines of appellate review. Normal principles of substantial evidence review do not apply to the appellate court's independent review of an actual malice determination in a First Amendment libel case." (42 C.3d 846.)

(c) "Finally, if warranted, the court may ... substitute its own inferences on the issue of actual malice for those drawn by the trier of fact. This court must independently determine the constitutional import of any particular witness's testimony as it relates to the question of actual malice." (42 C.3d 846.)

The court disapproved statements in earlier Court of Appeal cases suggesting that the substantial evidence rule applied and that de novo review was not required. (42 C.3d 846, footnote 9.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48, 51(5), 128

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 C.A.4th 71, 86, 55 C.R.3d 600, Supp., supra, §611 [court reviewing actual malice determination in First Amendment defamation case is not bound to consider evidence of malice in light most favorable to respondents or to draw all permissible inferences in favor of respondents; to do so would compromise independence of inquiry].

39 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Private Individuals.

aa. Gertz Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 613

[§ 613] Gertz Rule.

(1) Gertz Case: No Liability Without Fault. Application of the New York Times rule (supra, §602) to a radio broadcast defaming a private individual was approved in Rosenbloom v. Metromedia (1971) 403 U.S. 29, 91 S.Ct. 1811, 29 L.Ed.2d 296. (See 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 917.) The Rosenbloom holding was repudiated in Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, which did, however, require that such a plaintiff make a showing of fault. In Gertz, a policeman shot and killed a youth and was convicted of second degree murder. Petitioner, a reputable attorney, then represented the youth's family in a wrongful death action against the policeman. The managing editor of a magazine commissioned an article from a regular contributing editor on the policeman's criminal trial. The article, as published, was part of the magazine's continuing program of warning against a nationwide Communist conspiracy to discredit local police, and contained false charges against petitioner of criminal acts and Communist associations and activities. Petitioner sued defendant, publisher of the magazine, in a federal diversity suit. The defense, invoking the New York Times test, offered the managing editor's affidavit denying knowledge of the falsity of the statements, and asserting reliance on the author's reputation and prior experience with his writings. The jury held for petitioner, but the trial judge granted judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict. The Court of Appeals affirmed, on the ground that petitioner had failed to show actual malice. Held, reversed.

(a) The Rosenbloom plurality opinion. The principal issue here, whether the constitutional privilege may be asserted against a private individual where an issue of public interest was involved in the publication, was considered in Rosenbloom; but the eight participating justices wrote five opinions, none of which commanded more than three votes, and "no majority could agree on a controlling rationale." (94 S.Ct. 3004, 41 L.Ed.2d 801.)

(b) New York Times rule applies to public officials and public figures. (1) To encourage free debate on public issues and avoid self-censorship that would be induced by a rule of strict liability for false statements, "[t]he First Amendment requires that we protect some falsehood in order to protect speech that matters." (94 S.Ct. 3007, 41 L.Ed.2d 806.) (2) But the other societal interest is compensation of individuals for the harm inflicted on them by defamation; and the court "has extended a measure of strategic protection to defamatory falsehood." (94 S.Ct. 3008, 41 L.Ed.2d 806.) (3) The New York Times standard, accommodating these competing interests (the need for a vigorous and uninhibited press and the legitimate interest in redressing injury), "administers an extremely powerful antidote to the inducement to media self-censorship of the common law rule of strict liability for libel and slander." And "it exacts a correspondingly high price from the victims of defamatory falsehood." (94 S.Ct. 3008, 41 L.Ed.2d 807.) (4) The New York Times case and Curtis Publishing Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S.Ct. 1975, 18 L.Ed.2d 1094, supra, §604, correctly apply the standard to defamatory falsehoods concerning public officials and public figures. (94 S.Ct. 3008, 41 L.Ed.2d 807.)

(c) Rule does not apply to private individuals. The balance between needs of the press and the private individual's claim to compensation for wrongful injury might be struck on a case-by-case basis; but this would lead to unpredictable results and would render the Supreme Court's duty to supervise the lower courts unmanageable; hence, "we must lay down broad rules of general application." (94 S.Ct. 3009, 41 L.Ed.2d 807.) (1) Public officials and public figures have greater access to communications media and a more realistic opportunity for self-help--counteracting false statements and minimizing their adverse impact--than private individuals. "Private individuals are therefore more vulnerable to injury, and the state interest in protecting them is correspondingly greater." (94 S.Ct. 3009, 41 L.Ed.2d 808.) (2) Public officials and public figures must accept necessary consequences of involvement in public affairs, one of which is closer public scrutiny than that accorded private individuals. (94 S.Ct. 3009, 41 L.Ed.2d 808.) The communications media are entitled to act on the assumption that public officials and public figures have voluntarily exposed themselves to increased risk of injury from defamatory falsehoods. But a private individual has not done so. "Thus, private individuals are not only more vulnerable to injury than public officials and public figures; they are also more deserving of recovery." (94 S.Ct. 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 808.) (3) The states, therefore, "should retain substantial latitude in their efforts to enforce a legal remedy for defamatory falsehood injurious to the reputation of a private individual." (94 S.Ct. 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 809.)

(d) States may generally define appropriate standard of recovery by private individual so long as there is no liability without fault. "We hold that, so long as they do not impose liability without fault, the States may define for themselves the appropriate standard of liability for a publisher or broadcaster of defamatory falsehood injurious to a private individual. ... At least this conclusion obtains where, as here, the substance of the defamatory statement 'makes substantial danger to reputation apparent.' This phrase places in perspective the conclusion we announce today. Our inquiry would involve considerations somewhat different from those discussed above if a State purported to condition civil liability on a factual misstatement whose content did not warn a reasonably prudent editor or broadcaster of its defamatory potential." (94 S.Ct. 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 809.)

(e) New York Times standard applies to presumed damages. The state interest "extends no further than compensation for actual injury." (94 S.Ct. 3011, 41 L.Ed.2d 810.) "The common law of defamation is an oddity of tort law, for it allows recovery of purportedly compensatory damages without evidence of actual loss. Under the traditional rules pertaining to actions for libel, the existence of injury is presumed from the fact of publication. Juries may award substantial sums as compensation for supposed damage to reputation without any proof that such harm actually occurred. The largely uncontrolled discretion of juries to award damages where there is no loss unnecessarily compounds the potential of any system of liability for defamatory falsehood to inhibit the vigorous exercise of First Amendment freedoms. Additionally, the doctrine of presumed damages invites juries to punish unpopular opinion rather than to compensate individuals for injury sustained by the publication of a false fact. More to the point, the States have no substantial interest in securing for plaintiffs such as this petitioner gratuitous awards of money damages far in excess of any actual injury." (94 S.Ct. 3011, 41 L.Ed.2d 810.) Therefore, to reconcile state law with the competing interest grounded in the First Amendment, state remedies for defamatory falsehood must be limited. "It is necessary to restrict defamation plaintiffs who do not prove knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard for the truth to compensation for actual injury." (94 S.Ct. 3012, 41 L.Ed.2d 811.)

(f) New York Times standard applies to punitive damages. In most jurisdictions, jury discretion is limited only by the rule against "excessive" amounts, and juries assess punitive damages in wholly unpredictable amounts bearing no necessary relation to the harm caused. In doing so, they may selectively punish expression of unpopular views and exacerbate the danger of media self-censorship. Moreover, unlike presumed damages, punitive damages are wholly irrelevant to the state interest that justifies "a negligence standard" for private defamation actions: "They are not compensation for injury. Instead, they are private fines levied by civil juries to punish reprehensible conduct and to deter its further occurrence." (94 S.Ct. 3012, 41 L.Ed.2d 811.) "In short, the private defamation plaintiff who establishes liability under a less demanding standard than that stated by New York Times may recover only such damages as are sufficient to compensate him for actual injury." (94 S.Ct. 3012, 41 L.Ed.2d 811.)

(g) Petitioner is private figure. Defendant's contentions that petitioner became a "de facto public official" by appearing at the coroner's inquest, and that he was a "public figure," are rejected. Although active in community and professional affairs, he had achieved no general notoriety in the community, took no part in the criminal prosecution, and never discussed either the criminal or civil litigation with the press. (94 S.Ct. 3013, 41 L.Ed.2d 812.)

(2) Subsequent Supreme Court Decisions. The Gertz holding has been subsequently reaffirmed and its tests applied. (See Dun & Bradstreet v. Greenmoss Builders (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S.Ct. 2939, 2944, 86 L.Ed.2d 593, 601, infra, §615; Philadelphia Newspapers v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S.Ct. 1558, 1563, 89 L.Ed.2d 783, 792, infra, §614.)

In Time v. Firestone (1976) 424 U.S. 448, 96 S.Ct. 958, 47 L.Ed.2d 154, a wife filed a complaint for separate maintenance in Florida, and her husband counterclaimed for divorce on grounds of cruelty and adultery. The trial judge granted a divorce to the husband and alimony to the wife, in an unclear judgment mentioning evidence of the wife's marital infidelity. Despite the absence of an express finding of adultery, defendant magazine published an item reciting that the husband had been granted a divorce on the two grounds. The wife recovered a judgment for libel in the Florida courts. Held, reversed.

(a) The wife was not a "public figure" under the Gertz test; the fact that her husband was a socially prominent scion of a wealthy industrial family, and that the divorce was a matter of public interest, did not mean that she had assumed "special prominence in the resolution of public questions." (96 S.Ct. 965, 47 L.Ed.2d 163.)

(b) There is no blanket constitutional privilege for reports of judicial proceedings. Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §430, recognized the privilege of publishing truthful information, not inaccurate and defamatory reports of facts. (96 S.Ct. 966, 47 L.Ed.2d 164.)

(c) However, Gertz requires some evidence of fault, and the record contains no finding of negligence in defendant's report. The judgment must therefore be reversed for further proceedings to determine this issue of fact. (96 S.Ct. 970, 47 L.Ed.2d 168.)

(3) Restatement Rule. Rest.2d, Torts §580B, states the Gertz rule as follows: "One who publishes a false and defamatory communication concerning a private person, or concerning a public official or public figure in relation to a purely private matter not affecting his conduct, fitness or role in his public capacity, is subject to liability if, but only if, he (a) knows that the statement is false and that it defames the other, (b) acts in reckless disregard of these matters, or (c) acts negligently in failing to ascertain them."

(4) California Fault Standard: Negligence. Gertz leaves it to the states to determine the applicable fault standard for recovery of compensatory damages by a private-figure plaintiff in a defamation suit. In California, negligence is the applicable standard of fault for recovery of compensatory damages by such a plaintiff. Thus, the standard is no higher than the federal standard imposed in Gertz. When the statement involves a matter of public concern, the plaintiff must, under Gertz, prove New York Times malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. (Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 747, 748, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, supra, §599; see Carney v. Santa Cruz Women Against Rape (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1009, 1015, 1019, 271 C.R. 30, infra, §615 [in action by private plaintiff accused of attempted rape by women's group, trial judge erred in not instructing that negligence is element of libel and proof of New York Times malice is required for recovery of punitive damages]; BAJI, No. 7.04; CACI, Nos. 1700, 1701.)

(5) Commentary. The Gertz rule and its progeny have been the subject of considerable commentary. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §417; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §5.0; 12 Cal. Western L. Rev. 172; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 139; 26 Hastings L. J. 777; 30 Hastings L. J. 1515 [conflict of laws problems after Gertz]; 34 Hastings L. J. 809; 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 363; 6 Pacific L. J. 565 [effect of Gertz on California law]; 2 Pepperdine L. Rev. 383; 12 San Diego L. Rev. 455; 16 Santa Clara L. Rev. 77; 49 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1131 [distinction between public and private persons applied to relatives of public figures]; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 157; 18 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 359; 25 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 915; 33 A.L.R.4th 212 [constitutional protection of allegedly defamatory statements regarding private individual]; 36 A.L.R.4th 807 [proof of injury to reputation as prerequisite to recovery of damages in defamation action--post-Gertz cases]; 37 A.L.R.4th 987 [necessity of expert witness to establish negligence of media defendant].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(1), 51(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) Commentary. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.0.

40 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Private Individuals.

bb. Burden of Proof on Falsity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 614

[§ 614] Burden of Proof on Falsity.

In Philadelphia Newspapers v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S.Ct. 1558, 89 L.Ed.2d 783, the Court held that "at least where a newspaper publishes speech of public concern, a private-figure plaintiff cannot recover damages without also showing that the statements at issue are false." (106 S.Ct. 1559, 89 L.Ed.2d 787.)

(a) The decisions in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §601; Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, supra, §613; Time v. Firestone (1976) 424 U.S. 448, 96 S.Ct. 958, 47 L.Ed.2d 154, supra, §613; and Dun & Bradstreet v. Greenmoss Builders (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S.Ct. 2939, 86 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §615, disclose "two forces" that may reshape the common law to conform to the First Amendment. "The first is whether the plaintiff is a public official or figure, or is instead a private figure. The second is whether the speech at issue is of public concern. When the speech is of public concern and the plaintiff is a public official or public figure, the Constitution clearly requires the plaintiff to surmount a much higher barrier before recovering damages from a media defendant than is raised by the common law. When the speech is of public concern but the plaintiff is a private figure, as in Gertz, the Constitution still supplants the standards of common law, but the constitutional requirements are, in at least some of their range, less forbidding than when the plaintiff is a public figure and the speech is of public concern. When the speech is of exclusively private concern and the plaintiff is a private figure, as in Dun & Bradstreet, the constitutional requirements do not necessarily force any change in at least some of the features of the common-law landscape." (106 S.Ct. 1563, 89 L.Ed.2d 791.)

(b) The opinions have chiefly treated the necessary showings of fault rather than of falsity. Here, as in Gertz, plaintiff is a private figure and the newspaper articles are of public concern; and in Gertz, as in New York Times, the common law rule was superseded by a constitutional rule. "We believe that the common law's rule on falsity--that the defendant must bear the burden of proving truth--must similarly fall here to a constitutional requirement that the plaintiff bear the burden of showing falsity, as well as fault, before recovering damages." (106 S.Ct. 1563, 89 L.Ed.2d 792.)

(c) "We note that our decision adds only marginally to the burdens that the plaintiff must already bear as a result of our earlier decisions in the law of defamation. The plaintiff must show fault. A jury is obviously more likely to accept a plaintiff's contention that the defendant was at fault in publishing the statements at issue if convinced that the relative statements were false. As a practical matter, then, evidence offered by plaintiffs on the publisher's fault in adequately investigating the truth of the published statements will generally encompass evidence of the falsity of the matters asserted." (106 S.Ct. 1565, 89 L.Ed.2d 792.) (See Weller v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 991, 1010, 283 C.R. 644 [instruction properly placed on plaintiff burden of proving substantial falsity of statement by defendant television station on matter of public concern]; Aisenson v. American Broadcasting Co. (1990) 220 C.A.3d 146, 156, 269 C.R. 379 [plaintiff judge failed to show that results of television station's opinion poll showing him as lowest rated judge were false]; BAJI, No. 7.07; CACI, No. 1720.)

Nizam-Aldine v. Oakland (1996) 47 C.A.4th 364, 54 C.R.2d 781, similarly placed the burden proving falsity on plaintiffs in an action concerning statements on matters of public concern, this time by nonmedia defendants. Plaintiffs, licensed civil engineers, were accused by defendants, a city and several of its employees, of conducting inaccurate and fraudulent boundary surveys based on the earlier of two conflicting subdivision maps. When the surveys were disputed by neighboring property owners, the individual defendants and other city employees made statements that plaintiffs used improper surveying procedures. Defendant city then threatened to report plaintiffs to the California Board of Registration for Professional Engineers and Land Surveyors. After being instructed that defendants had the burden of proving that the allegedly defamatory statements were true, the jury returned a verdict against defendant city. Held, reversed; the instruction violated the city's First Amendment rights.

(a) Plaintiffs must prove falsity of defamatory statements that relate to matters of public concern. In Philadelphia Newspapers v. Hepps, supra, the United States Supreme Court held that a private-figure plaintiff could not recover damages from a newspaper that published allegedly defamatory statements regarding a matter of public concern without showing that the statements at issue were false. Although the Hepps court limited its holding to media defendants, it did not deny First Amendment protection to statements of public interest made by nonmedia defendants, but simply declined to address an issue that was not before it. (47 C.A.4th 373.) Hepps protection should be extended to nonmedia defendants whose statements involve matters of public interest. That extension is consistent with the reasoning in Hepps, other U.S. Supreme Court decisions, and decisions of other jurisdictions. While there are no direct holdings on this issue in California, the California Supreme Court has stated, in dicta, that when "speech involves a matter of public concern, a private-figure plaintiff has the burden of proving the falsity of the defamation." (47 C.A.4th 373, citing Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, supra, §599.) To recognize the existence of a First Amendment right and yet distinguish the level of protection accorded that right based on the type of entity involved is incompatible with the fundamental First Amendment principle that the inherent worth of speech in terms of its capacity for informing the public does not depend on the identity of its source. (47 C.A.4th 374.)

(b) Statements here related to matter of public concern. Whether speech involves a matter of public concern must be determined by the content, form, and context, as revealed by the whole record. A primary goal of the First Amendment is to protect the free discussion of governmental affairs. The statements at issue were responses by city employees to direct requests for information about a matter in which the city was involved by virtue of its exercise of a governmental function. (47 C.A.4th 375.) Although not all speech relating to governmental affairs necessarily deserves First Amendment protection, the challenged statements concern a genuine public interest: First, the fact that the city (through certain of its employees) believed plaintiffs' surveys were sufficiently defective to warrant reporting them to the appropriate licensing board indicates the public nature of the survey dispute. Second, when viewed in context, the negative statements about the surveys unquestionably relate to a broader public issue--whether boundary lines in the subdivision should be drawn in accordance with the earlier or the later map. (47 C.A.4th 377.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(1), 51(5), 101(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Nonmedia defendants: See Integrated Healthcare Holdings v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 C.A.4th 515, 529, 44 C.R.3d 517 [plaintiff company had burden to prove falsity where alleged defamatory statement respecting its financial position] related to issue of public concern, even though plaintiff was not public figure and defendant was not involved in media; following Nizam-Aldine v. Oakland (1996) 47 C.A.4th 364, 54 C.R.2d 781, text, p. 914].

41 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Private Individuals.

cc. Matters of Purely Private Concern.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 615

[§ 615] Matters of Purely Private Concern.

In Dun & Bradstreet v. Greenmoss Builders (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S.Ct. 2939, 86 L.Ed.2d 593, plaintiff construction contractor sued defendant credit reporting agency for libel in the Vermont courts. The action was based on a false credit report sent to five subscribers, indicating that plaintiff had filed a voluntary petition for bankruptcy. The error occurred when defendant relied on a mistaken review of bankruptcy petitioners in which a petition filed by one of plaintiff's employees had been inadvertently attributed to plaintiff. Plaintiff received judgment on a verdict that included both presumed and punitive damages. Held, affirmed. In a plurality opinion, the Court held that the requirement under Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, supra, §613, of proof of actual malice for recovery of such damages did not apply.

(a) Gertz held that, in an action brought by a private person, the state could not allow recovery of presumed and punitive damages without a showing of actual malice. However, nothing in the opinion indicated that the balancing of interests would call for the same result "regardless of the type of speech involved." (105 S.Ct. 2944, 86 L.Ed.2d 601.) "We have never considered whether the Gertz balance obtains when the defamatory statements involve no issue of public concern." (105 S.Ct. 2944, 86 L.Ed.2d 601.)

(b) While speech on matters of purely private concern is not totally unprotected by the First Amendment, its protections are less stringent. And in such cases, "we hold that the state interest adequately supports awards of presumed and punitive damages--even absent a showing of 'actual malice.'" (105 S.Ct. 2946, 86 L.Ed.2d 604.)

(c) Defendant's credit report concerns no public issue. "It was speech solely in the individual interest of the speaker and its specific business audience. ... The particular interest warrants no special protection when--as in this case--the speech is wholly false and clearly damaging to the victim's business reputation. ... Moreover, since the credit report was made available to only five subscribers who, under the terms of the subscription agreement, could not disseminate it further, it cannot be said that the report involves any 'strong interest in the free flow of commercial information.' ... In any case, the marketplace provides a powerful incentive to a credit reporting agency to be accurate, since false credit reporting is of no use to creditors." (105 S.Ct. 2947, 86 L.Ed.2d 604.) (See Roemer v. Retail Credit Co. (1975) 44

C.A.3d 926, 934, 119 C.R. 82 [anticipating Dun & Bradstreet holding]; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 213; 37 Hastings L. J. 1171; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 209; 14 Pepperdine L. Rev. 337; BAJI, No. 7.04.1; CACI, Nos. 1704, 1705.)

In Carney v. Santa Cruz Women Against Rape (1990) 221 C.A.3d 1009, 271 C.R. 30, defendant women's organization published in its newsletter the statement that plaintiff had committed attempted rape. Plaintiff sued for libel and was awarded a verdict that included punitive damages. In reversing the judgment on various grounds, the court set forth the method for determining whether the case involved a matter of public concern so as to require proof of New York Times malice for the recovery of punitive damages:

(a) "Carney argues that these circumstances simply represented 'three young persons voluntarily engaged in a drinking and petting party.' As such, he argues no matter of public concern was at stake. This argument frames the issue improperly. Carney is stating that there is no matter of public concern because the allegations were false. However, all libel, by definition, is false." (221 C.A.3d 1021.)

(b) "We think a more appropriate inquiry is whether, as Dunn & Bradstreet pointed out, the form, context and content of the publication as a whole demonstrate that a matter of public concern is implicated. Accordingly, we have focused on the broad topic of the newsletter in general, dealing with matters of sexual harassment and assault, rather than the specific accusation that a private individual committed a specific crime, as a basis for determining that this newsletter constitutes a matter in the public concern." (221 C.A.3d 1021.) (See Stolz v. KSFM 102 FM (1994) 30 C.A.4th 195, 207, 35 C.R.2d 740 [whether speech addresses matter of public concern must be determined by expression's content, form, and context as revealed by whole record].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

42 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

2. Statements Concerning Private Individuals.

dd. No Neutral Reportage Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 616

[§ 616] No Neutral Reportage Privilege.

At common law, a person who republishes a defamatory remark is held liable, along with the originator of the statement. (See supra, §537.) However, a neutral reportage privilege has been recognized by a federal appellate court: When a responsible, prominent organization makes serious charges against a public figure, the First Amendment protects the accurate and disinterested reporting of those charges, regardless of the reporter's private views regarding their validity. (See Khawar v. Globe Int. (1998) 19 C.4th 254, 268, 79 C.R.2d 178, 965 P.2d 696, supra, §605 [describing statement of privilege by federal 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals].)

In the Khawar case, which involved defendant's republication of a book's false charge that plaintiff, a private person, had assassinated a famous politician, the California Supreme Court refused to adopt this privilege with respect to private figures. To recognize an absolute privilege in the private person situation would be inconsistent with the U.S. Supreme Court policy of balancing the First Amendment interest in promoting the broad dissemination of information relevant to public controversies against the reputation interests of private persons. In other words, it would emasculate the distinction made in Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, supra, §613, between public and private figures. The court emphasized that it held only that there is no neutral reportage privilege in California for reports regarding private figures. Thus, left undecided were whether the First Amendment requires this privilege at all, whether it extends to public officials or public figures, and whether the party doing the republishing needs to be a public figure. (19 C.4th 270.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 13 A.L.R.6th 111 [construction and application of neutral reportage privilege].

43 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

e. Fair Comment.

1. Common Law Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 617

[§ 617] Common Law Privilege.

(1) In General. The common law developed a privilege of "fair comment"--an honest expression of opinion on matters of public interest, such as the qualifications of conduct of public officers or candidates for office, the manner in which public or charitable institutions are administered, and the merits of literary or dramatic productions (See 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §5.8; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.148; 10 Cal. L. Rev. 84; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 693; 26 Cal. L. Rev. 226, 228; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 925; 10 So. Cal. L. Rev. 520; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 274; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§334, 335; 90 A.L.R.2d 1279 [reliance on facts not stated or referred to in publication as support for fair comment defense]; 96 A.L.R.3d 609 [criticism of restaurant's food].)

(2) Recognition of Privilege in California. The fair comment privilege has been recognized and frequently applied in California. (See Maher v. Devlin (1928) 203 C. 270, 281, 263 P. 812; Jones v. Express Publishing Co. (1927) 87 C.A. 246, 256, 262 P. 78; Eva v. Smith (1928) 89 C.A. 324, 329, 264 P. 803; Taylor v. Lewis (1933) 132 C.A. 381, 384, 22 P.2d 569; Harris v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1942) 49 C.A.2d 340, 350, 121 P.2d 761 [article by national magazine referring to member of small town school board was privileged because the subject was matter of economic and political theory of universal interest]; Babcock v. McClatchy Newspapers (1947) 82 C.A.2d 528, 536, 186 P.2d 737; Kramer v. Ferguson (1964) 230 C.A.2d 237, 242, 244, 41 C.R. 61 [statements attacking political morality of city council members in recall election]; Williams v. Daily Review (1965) 236 C.A.2d 405, 416, 46 C.R. 135, supra, §544.)

The defense in California arises as a matter of common law, independently of the statutory common-interest privilege (see C.C. 47(c), supra, §591). (Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 732, footnote 18, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, supra, §599.)

(3) Scope of Privilege. In Maidman v. Jewish Publications (1960) 54 C.2d 643, 7 C.R. 617, 355 P.2d 265, supra, §544, the court made the following observations concerning the defense, which was revealed on the face of the complaint (criticism of a person of importance in the Jewish community):

(a) "The protection which the law affords to those who would comment or criticize extends only to comment which is 'fair,' not in the sense that it must be reasonable or moderate, but in the sense that it must be published 'in part at least, for the bona fide purpose of giving the public the benefit of comment which it is entitled to have, rather than for any ulterior motive of causing harm to the plaintiff.' " (54 C.2d 652, quoting Prosser.) And "allegations that the comments were not published primarily for a bona fide purpose, but were published because of malice, renders the publisher liable if his comments, opinions or criticisms are defamatory." (54 C.2d 652.)

(b) "Comments, opinions and criticisms may be defamatory even though based upon true or privileged statements of fact. The publisher is liable unless the comments themselves are privileged." (54 C.2d 649.)

The privilege does not protect defamation of private persons. (Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co., supra, 48 C.3d 732.)

(4) Determination Whether Statement Is Comment (Opinion) or Statement of Fact. Whether defamatory material constitutes an opinion merely or a potentially defamatory fact is a question of law. (Gregory v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 596, 600, 131 C.R. 641, 552 P.2d 425, infra, §621; see Sierra Breeze v. Superior Court (1978) 86 C.A.3d 102, 106, 149 C.R. 914 [newspaper headline that plaintiff county supervisor had voted to "squander" tax money was opinion; following Gregory]; Blackhawk Corp. v. Ewing (1979) 94 C.A.3d 640, 643, 156 C.R. 581 [opinions concerning effect of proposed housing development on the community; following Gregory]; Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High School Dist. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 720, 724, 275 C.R. 494, infra, §624; cf. Bindrim v. Mitchell (1979) 92 C.A.3d 61, 76, 78, 155 C.R. 29 [novel dealing with character identifiable as plaintiff; jury could determine that statements were factual]; Rollenhagen v. Orange (1981) 116 C.A.3d 414, 420, 426, 172 C.R. 49 [reviewing cases; broadcaster's television report on auto repair practices].) The test for determining the issue is the "totality of the circumstances." (Baker v. Los Angeles Herald Examiner (1986) 42 C.3d 254, 260, 228 C.R. 206, 721 P.2d 87, infra, §625.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.48(1), 51(5)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §5.8; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §§317, 318.

44 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - e. Fair Comment.
- 2. Constitutional Protections.
 - aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 618

[§ 618] In General.

The fair comment privilege was recognized in the First Torts Restatement (§606 et seq.), but the Second Restatement took the position that it was too narrow in scope in view of the following dictum in Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3007, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, 805, supra, §613: "Under the First Amendment there is no such thing as a false idea. However pernicious an opinion may seem, we depend for its correction not on the conscience of judges and juries but on the competition of other ideas. But there is no constitutional value in false statements of fact." (Rest.2d, Torts §566, Comment c.) (See 74 Cal. L. Rev. 1001.)

Accordingly, Rest.2d, Torts §566 provides: "A defamatory communication may consist of a statement in the form of an opinion, but a statement of this nature is actionable only if it implies the allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts as the basis for the opinion."

Comment b distinguishes between two kinds of expression of opinion: (1) the simple or pure type occurs when the maker states the facts on which he or she bases the opinion and then expresses a comment on the plaintiff's conduct, qualifications or character; or when the maker does not express the facts but both parties know the facts or assume their existence, and the comment is clearly based on those assumed facts. (2) The mixed type is one which, while in form or context an opinion, is apparently based on undisclosed facts that have not been stated or assumed to exist.

Comment c explains the effect of the Gertz dictum as follows: "This categoric statement was not necessary to the decision ... , and the Supreme Court's indications that an expression of opinion cannot be the basis of a defamation action have involved public communications on matters of public concern. Although it is thus possible that private communications on private matters will be treated differently, the logic of the constitutional principle would appear to apply to all expressions of opinion of the first, or pure, type." (See Special Note, Rest.2d, Torts, Vol. 3, p. 153, observing that as a result of §566, "the privilege of fair comment has become obsolete.")

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

45 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

e. Fair Comment.

2. Constitutional Protections.

bb. No Separate Constitutional Privilege for Opinions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 619

[§ 619] No Separate Constitutional Privilege for Opinions.

The dictum in Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3007, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, 805, supra, §613, that "there is no such thing as a false idea" was construed and limited in Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S.Ct. 2695, 111 L.Ed.2d 1, holding that there is no separate constitutional privilege protecting statements of opinion, and that the governing constitutional principle is that defamation liability may not be imposed unless the statement in question is provably false. Defendant wrote an article in defendant newspaper implying that plaintiff, a local high school wrestling coach, lied under oath in a judicial proceeding about an incident involving his team at a wrestling match. An Ohio court gave summary judgment for defendants on the ground that the article constituted an "opinion" entitled to First Amendment protection. Held, reversed.

(a) The Gertz dictum was not intended to create a wholesale defamation exemption for anything that might be labeled "opinion." (110 S.Ct. 2705, 111 L.Ed.2d 16.)

(b) "If a speaker says, 'In my opinion John Jones is a liar,' he implies a knowledge of facts which lead to the conclusion that Jones told an untruth. Even if the speaker states the facts upon which he bases his opinion, if those facts are either incorrect or incomplete, or if his assessment of them is erroneous, the statement may still imply a false assertion of fact. Simply couching such statements in terms of opinion does not dispel these implications; and the statement, 'In my opinion Jones is a liar,' can cause as much damage to reputation as the statement, 'Jones is a liar.' " (110 S.Ct. 2706, 111 L.Ed.2d 16.)

(c) No separate constitutional privilege for "opinion" is required to ensure the freedom of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment. The dispositive question is whether a reasonable factfinder could conclude that the statements in D's column imply an assertion that M perjured himself in a judicial proceeding. "We think this question must be answered in the affirmative." (110 S.Ct. 2707, 111 L.Ed.2d 19.) (See Ringler Associates v. Maryland Cas. Co. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1165, 1181, 96 C.R.2d 136 [statement of opinion may be actionable if it implies allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts as basis of opinion; following Milkovich]; Wilbanks v. Wolk (2004) 121 C.A.4th 883, 903, 17 C.R.3d 497 [even if speaker states facts on which opinion is based, statement may still imply false assertion of fact where facts stated are incorrect, incomplete, or erroneously assessed]; Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1260, 1270, 20 C.R.3d 673 [essential difference between statement of fact and statement of opinion is that statement of fact implies provable false factual assertion while statement of opinion does not]; 104 Harv. L. Rev. 219; BAJI, No. 7.00.1; CACI, No. 1707.)

After Milkovich, the question is not strictly whether the published statement is fact or opinion but whether a reasonable fact finder could conclude that the published statement declares or implies a provably false assertion of fact. The totality of circumstances test is used to determine whether the statement communicates or implies a provably false statement of fact, considering the context in which the statement was made. (Franklin v. Dynamic Details (2004) 116 C.A.4th 375, 385, 10 C.R.3d 429.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Totality of circumstances test: See Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Assn. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1456, 1471, 37 C.R.3d 133 [in determining whether allegedly defamatory statement is actionable opinion, totality of circumstances are examined, starting with opinion itself; citing Franklin v. Dynamic Details (2004) 116 C.A.4th 375, 10 C.R.3d 429, text, p. 922].

46 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - e. Fair Comment.
- 3. Particular Statements.
 - aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 620

[§ 620] In General.

The reasoning and holding of Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S.Ct. 2695, 111 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §619, have been followed in a number of cases. The following are illustrative:

Edwards v. Hall (1991) 234 C.A.3d 886, 904, 285 C.R. 810 [whether defendant wrongfully demanded $ 4,000 from talk show host to either refrain from creating unfounded controversy or look the other way was sufficiently factual to be susceptible of being proved true or false].

Rudnick v. McMillan (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1183, 1191, 31 C.R.2d 193 [letter to editor of newspaper expressing disagreement with previously published article was nonactionable].

Morningstar v. Superior Court (1994) 23 C.A.4th 676, 686, 29 C.R.2d 547 [article in financial newsletter labeled "commentary" and criticizing plaintiff's advertisement of its mutual funds on ground that it manipulated statistics to its advantage was nonactionable].

Copp v. Paxton (1996) 45 C.A.4th 829, 836, 52 C.R.2d 831 [words "As Doug Copp says, let us prey [sic]," which implied existence of undisclosed facts as basis for opinion, were actionable].

Seelig v. Infinity Broadcasting Corp. (2002) 97 C.A.4th 798, 809, 119 C.R.2d 108 [phrases "local loser," "chicken butt," and "big shank," said by radio commentators regarding contestant in TV show, were not actionable, because they were too subjective and vague for any fact finder to reasonably interpret these comments as stating provable facts].

Franklin v. Dynamic Details (2004) 116 C.A.4th 375, 383, 10 C.R.3d 429 [e-mails stating opinion that plaintiff had stolen copyrighted materials were not actionable where based on disclosed, provably true facts].

Wilbanks v. Wolk (2004) 121 C.A.4th 883, 901, 17 C.R.3d 497 [statements made on website by industry consumer watchdog suggesting that defendant had engaged in incompetent and unethical practices were actionable where statements included some truthful facts but omitted other facts that showed statements to be misleading].

Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 C.A.4th 1260, 1270, 20 C.R.3d 673 [assertion that trustee of elderly widow's trust who was subsequently named beneficiary "was there to help himself" was actionable; statement implied facts capable of being proved true or false].

In Weller v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 991, 283 C.R. 644, plaintiff, a dealer in silver antiques, obtained on consignment two candelabra for $ 45,000 from a Texas family and resold them to a museum for $ 65,000. Acting on a call from a confidential source, defendant television station aired a series of broadcasts allegedly implying that plaintiff had defrauded the museum by selling stolen property at a greatly inflated price. In the ensuing defamation suit, defendant unsuccessfully sought to exclude evidence of 25 specific statements on the ground that they constituted opinion and hence were privileged as a matter of federal constitutional law. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed.

(a) Constitutional standards. Milkovich disposes of defendant's argument that there is a separate constitutional privilege protecting statements of opinion. However, even after Milkovich, federal constitutional law precludes a statement's being the basis of a defamation claim unless (a) it expressly or impliedly asserts a fact that is susceptible of being proved false; and (b) its language and tenor can reasonably be interpreted as stating actual facts. (232 C.A.3d 1000.)

(b) Broadcasts could be understood as implying defamatory statements. The broadcasts implied that plaintiff had sold stolen property to the museum at a greatly inflated price by linking him to a convicted felon who had reportedly stolen the candelabra from the home of a well-known San Francisco sculptress, and by referring to the transaction with the museum as a "sweetheart deal." Although defendant repeatedly qualified its broadcasts by stating that it was merely posing the question and that there were conflicting stories, the broadcasts could nevertheless have been understood as implying defamatory facts, as alleged by plaintiff. Hence, it was proper to allow the jury to decide in what manner the broadcasts were ultimately understood. (232 C.A.3d 1003.)

(c) Implied defamatory facts were provably false.

(1) Although the valuation of antiques is an inexact science and experts could have reached varying estimates as to the value of the candelabra, Milkovich requires only that the allegedly defamatory fact be objectively verifiable. Hence, although there may have been a range of reasonable valuation, whether the museum acquired the candelabra at an unfair price could be objectively verified. (232 C.A.3d 1005.)

(2) The assertion that the candelabra had been stolen from the sculptress was obviously subject to being proved false by plaintiff's demonstration at trial that they had, in fact, belonged to the Texas family for at least the last 40 years and that a member of this family had sold them to plaintiff. Nevertheless, defendant argued that the origin of the candelabra could not have been verified at the time the broadcasts aired because plaintiff refused to disclose the name of the former owner (who wished to remain anonymous). This argument, however, misses the point. The issue is whether the statement was provably false in a court of law, not whether defendant knew or could have known it was false when it was made. (232 C.A.3d 1006.)

(d) Nature of broadcasts did not negate impression that they were assertions of actual fact. Defendant contended that the broadcasts were entitled to constitutional protection under Milkovich because they merely aired conflicting information on an issue of public importance, and hence were the type of material that could not reasonably have been understood as being assertions of actual fact. However, unlike hyperbole or satire, the publication of implied defamatory statements as part of an apparently objective and neutral investigation is almost certain to be understood as factual. "[W]e reject the notion that merely couching an assertion of a defamatory fact in cautionary language such as 'apparently' or 'some sources say' or even putting it in the form of a question necessarily defuses the impression that the speaker is communicating an actual fact." (232 C.A.3d 1004.)

(e) No protection under California Constitution. Brown v. Kelly Broadcasting Co. (1989) 48 C.3d 711, 257 C.R. 708, 771 P.2d 406, supra, §599, signaled a reluctance to provide greater protection for defamation defendants under the state Constitution than that provided by the federal Constitution. Nevertheless, defendant attempted to distinguish Brown on the ground that it addressed the issue whether the state Constitution should impose a higher standard of fault, not whether it should provide greater protection for speech designated as opinion or conjecture. However, the extension of state constitutional law sought by defendant would be even more expansive than the protection rejected in Brown, because it would protect false broadcasts without regard to both the degree of fault involved and the plaintiff's status as a private individual. "We read the Brown court's extensive refutation of the policy arguments advanced in favor of expanded constitutional protection for media defendants as a clear sign that such expansion is not warranted under our state Constitution." (232 C.A.3d 1007.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The following cases are likewise illustrative of those following the reasoning and holding of Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S.Ct. 2695, 111 L.Ed.2d 1, text, §619:

Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Assn. (2005) 134 C.A.4th 1456, 1472, 37 C.R.3d 133 [in letter to homeowner who had applied for building permit, lawyer representing community association that denied application stated that applicant was seeking "Shakespearean 'pound of flesh,' " making "cockamamy" document inspection requests, and "virtually stalking and staring down" directors at their meetings; statements constituted nonactionable "rhetorical hyperbole, epithets, and figurative statements"].

Integrated Healthcare Holdings v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 C.A.4th 515, 527, 44 C.R.3d 517 [opinions expressed in e-mail that plaintiff's financial position was poor were not actionable defamation; e-mail set forth basis for opinions that was not provably false].

Del Junco v. Hufnagel (2007) 150 C.A.4th 789, 797, 60 C.R.3d 22 [defendant's false accusations on website resembling that of plaintiff surgeon that plaintiff was untrained and lacked proper credentials were actionable statements of fact, not expressions of opinion].

Overstock.com v. Gradient Analytics (2007) 151 C.A.4th 688, 703, 61 C.R.3d 29 [investment analysts' publications falsely implying that plaintiff manipulated its accounting procedures to defraud investors were actionable statements of fact, even though framed as opinions].

Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1043, 1059, 61 C.R.3d 434 [defendants' comments in e-mail sent to its customers of "personal opinion" that "most everyone in the industry knows" that business rival "uses the courts as a weapon against its competitors" and that "I sincerely believe that the record must be set straight concerning [its] conduct and the baseless accusations that [it] has made against us" could be construed as declared or implied provable assertions of fact on which defamation claim could be based].

McGarry v. University of San Diego (2007) 154 C.A.4th 97, 116, 64 C.R.3d 467 [statement that plaintiff was immoral was nonactionable statement of opinion; because concepts of morality are infinitely debatable, and their precise meaning is extremely elusive, statement was not reasonably susceptible to interpretation implying provably false assertion of fact].

Nygard v. Uusi-Kerttula (2008) 159 C.A.4th 1027, 1048, 72 C.R.3d 210 [former employee's statements in magazine interview regarding high profile employer, such as that work conditions were "horrible," that he "slaved," "felt used" and endured taunting "around the clock," and that employer kept his eye on workers "like a hawk," were nonactionable statements of opinion or hyperbole, rather than provably false assertions of fact].

Paterno v. Superior Court (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1342, 1355, 78 C.R.3d 244, Supp., supra, §550A [journalist's statements in magazine article that employer had "slashed" employees' benefits and overtime pay were constitutionally acceptable "literary license"; citing Nygard].

Mamou v. Trendwest Resorts (2008) 165 C.A.4th 686, 727, 81 C.R.3d 406 [employer's statements of employee's misconduct and bad character, stated as flat assertion of facts with references to specific instances of alleged misconduct rather than "phrased in terms of apparency," were actionable statements of fact and not opinion].

47 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
e. Fair Comment.
3. Particular Statements.
bb. Statements in Labor Disputes.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 621

[§ 621] Statements in Labor Disputes.

In Gregory v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 596, 131 C.R. 641, 552 P.2d 425, after a labor dispute had resulted in an hourly wage increase, a disagreement arose between the employer and unions as to the implementation of retroactive payment. Union leaders released information opposing the employer's position, and the employer responded with a bulletin and a letter, in which it asserted that union officers and other union leaders were playing politics and seeking personal gain and political prestige rather than the best interests of their members. Plaintiffs, the president and vice president of the union, sued the employer for libel, alleging that the statements were defamatory and published with knowledge of their falsity and with a reckless disregard as to their truth. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The requirement of a showing of knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of truth applies to statements made in labor disputes, not as a constitutional requirement, but because of the policy of the Labor Management Relations Act. (17 C.3d 600.)

(b) The Constitution generally protects statements of opinion rather than of fact. (17 C.3d 600.) The distinction is frequently difficult, and in a heated labor dispute or similar controversy, "epithets, fiery rhetoric or hyperbole" that might generally be considered factual may be regarded as statements of pure opinion. (17 C.3d 601 et seq.) The statements in the present case are of the kind typically generated in the give-and-take of a spirited labor dispute, and are not of a factual nature. (17 C.3d 603.)

(c) Eva v. Smith (1928) 89 C.A. 324, 329, 264 P. 803, states that the right to criticize conduct of public officers "does not warrant aspersive attack on the motives or character of the officer." This was dictum, because the court held the statements privileged, and no subsequent case has adopted its distinction. (17 C.3d 604.)

(d) "Publications otherwise protected under the First Amendment do not lose their protection because they contain statements which attribute improper motives to a public officer or to an active participant in a labor dispute. The legal effect of attacks on motives must be carefully distinguished, however, from accusations that an individual has committed a crime or is personally dishonest. No First Amendment protection, of course, enfolds the latter charges." (17 C.3d 604.) (See Morales v. Coastside Scavenger Co. (1985) 167 C.A.3d 731, 753, 213 C.R. 482 [letter written by defendant manager of defendant company to union bargaining agent accusing latter of improper practices, with copy to company's labor attorney; Gregory followed]; Monterey Plaza Hotel v. Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees Local 483 (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1057, 1065, 82 C.R.2d 10 [televised statement in labor dispute that federal Government had found certain firings to be illegal, although slanderous when taken by itself, was not slanderous when whole broadcast was considered, because audience was repeatedly informed that plaintiff had only been charged and that hearing was going to be held].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

48 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

e. Fair Comment.

3. Particular Statements.

cc. Statements in Political Campaign.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 622

[§ 622] Statements in Political Campaign.

In Desert Sun Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 97 C.A.3d 49, 158 C.R. 519, plaintiff, a candidate for office as a director of a public hospital, sued defendant newspaper for printing a letter accusing him of political chicanery; e.g., using "touched-up photographs," "contrived public opinion polls," and "a lot of slick, big-time, expensive political public relations." Held, the publication was within the protected opinion type of political comment. The court observed that "[i]t is an essential part of our national heritage that an irresponsible slob can stand on a street corner and, with impunity, heap invective on all of us in public office. ... Our political history reeks of unfair, intemperate, scurrilous and irresponsible charges against those in or seeking public office. Washington was called a murderer, Jefferson a blackguard, a knave and insane (Mad Tom), Henry Clay a pimp, Andrew Jackson a murderer and an adulterer, and Andrew Johnson and Ulysses Grant drunkards. Lincoln was called a half-witted usurper, a baboon, a gorilla, a ghoul. Theodore Roosevelt was castigated as a traitor to his class, and Franklin Delano Roosevelt as a traitor to his country. Dwight D. Eisenhower was charged with being a conscious agent of the Communist Conspiracy." (97 C.A.3d 51.) (See Okun v. Superior Court (1981) 29 C.3d 442, 448, 453, 175 C.R. 157, 629 P.2d 1369, supra, §546 [in campaign to repeal ordinance allowing plaintiff to develop former city land, letters suggesting conspiracy with council member to improperly acquire the land, and comparing plaintiff with corrupt developer in popular novel, were nonactionable]; Carr v. Warden (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1166, 1170, 206 C.R. 162, supra, §546 [in initiative campaign, statement that change of vote meant someone on planning commission had been bought, but denying knowledge of sustaining evidence, implied no undisclosed defamatory facts, and hence was nonactionable]; 37 A.L.R.4th 1088 [criticism or disparagement of character, competence, or conduct of candidate for office as defamation].)

In Botos v. Los Angeles County Bar Assn. (1984) 151 C.A.3d 1083, 199 C.R. 236, plaintiff, a candidate for judge of the Los Angeles county superior court, was given a "not qualified" rating by defendant bar association. The statement was released to the newspapers and reported, and, after his defeat in the election, plaintiff sued for defamation. Held, the statement was one of opinion merely and was not libelous. The evaluation was only the collective opinion of the bar committee; and, by entering the arena of public elections, plaintiff subjected himself to evaluative comment from any and all interested persons. (151 C.A.3d 1088, 1089.) The public is well served by this kind of public comment; and "a local bar association has a vested interest in aiding the public to form sound judgments concerning the quality of judicial candidates." (151 C.A.3d 1090.)

A distinguishable situation--defamation by a committee supporting or opposing a candidate or ballot measure--is covered by statute. The candidate or proponent of the measure who controls the committee, or the sponsor of a sponsored committee, is liable for any slander or libel committed by the committee if the candidate, proponent, or sponsor "willfully and knowingly directs or permits the libel or slander." (Elec.C. 2050120.) (See 19 Pacific L. J. 590.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

49 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- C. Defamation.
 - 4. Defenses.
 - e. Fair Comment.
- 3. Particular Statements.
 - dd. Criticism of Judge.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 623

[§ 623] Criticism of Judge.

In Grillo v. Smith (1983) 144 C.A.3d 868, 193 C.R. 414, plaintiff, presiding judge of the Los Angeles Municipal Court, served a clerk in the auditor's office with an order to issue airline tickets for a Sacramento legislative hearing. The clerk, under orders from his superior, refused to issue the tickets. Plaintiff then personally arrested the clerk, had him brought to the courtroom, held him in contempt, and ordered that he serve 2 days in jail unless he complied with the order. The county bar association publicly censured plaintiff, and the Los Angeles Times published a strongly critical article and an editorial denouncing plaintiff's conduct. (144 C.A.3d 876, 877, 878.) Plaintiff then brought this libel action against the corporate owner and individual publisher of the newspaper. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) The statements in the article, e.g., that plaintiff was "angry," "shouted," "stormed," and that the proceeding was a "kangaroo court," were subjective words and phrases and matters of opinion; they were absolutely privileged as statements of mere opinion concerning the conduct of public officials. (144 C.A.3d 872, quoting at length from Desert Sun Publishing Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 97 C.A.3d 49, 158 C.R. 519, supra, §622.)

(b) An editorial is likewise an expression of opinion and equally privileged. Plaintiff nevertheless asserted that it contained five factual misstatements, which raised triable issues: (1) he "swept into the man's office, cited him for contempt, sentenced him to jail and harangued about separation of powers"; (2) he issued an "illegal court order"; (3) he "wanted the taxpayers to pay his way on a lobbying trip"; (4) he "commandeered the rights of an innocent man and embarked on an odyssey far outside his court's authority"; and (5) he later "changed his mind under pressure from his peers." (144 C.A.3d 874.) These statements were not actionable. "A newspaper is perfectly free to opine that court orders are illegal and to criticize judges for violating the rights of innocent persons and exceeding their authority. There is no requirement that opinion and criticism of that sort have any legal or factual basis whatsoever. ... The second and fourth items listed above are nothing more than the subjective opinions of the Times concerning the conduct in office of a public official; they are absolutely protected under the First Amendment. ... While the three remaining statements might be considered assertions of fact rather than expressions of opinion in some contexts, a newspaper editorial criticizing the official actions of the presiding judge of the largest municipal court in the state (if not the country), particularly concerning the application of harsh judicial remedies to administrative trivia, is not one of them." (144 C.A.3d 875.) (See Aisenson v. American Broadcasting Co. (1990) 220 C.A.3d 146, 156, 269 C.R. 379 [television station's opinion poll of attorneys showing plaintiff as county's lowest rated judge was not actionable even though published in nonelection year].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

50 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

e. Fair Comment.

3. Particular Statements.

ee. Criticism of Performance of Profession or Occupation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 624

[§ 624] Criticism of Performance of Profession or Occupation.

A number of cases concern criticism of the character or conduct of persons involved in particular professions or occupations. (See Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 C.A.3d 1299, 1309, 278 C.R. 306 [statement that plaintiff was incompetent surgeon was statement of fact, because it implied knowledge of supporting facts and was susceptible of being proved true or false]; James v. San Jose Mercury News (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1, 14, 20 C.R.2d 890 [newspaper article on deputy public defender's illegal acquisition of school records to use in child molestation case was fair comment]; Sommer v. Gabor (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1455, 1476, 48 C.R.2d 235 [statements that plaintiff actress was old, unattractive, impoverished, and a frequenter of sleazy bars, taken as whole, were ones of fact]; Campanelli v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 572, 577, 51 C.R.2d 891 [alleged defamatory statements to effect that plaintiff coach by his tirades inflicted psychological damage on his players were nonactionable]; Eisenberg v. Alameda Newspapers (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1359, 1377, 1381, 88 C.R.2d 802 [statement that plaintiff's reporting had been "unfair and lacked balance" was opinion; even if opinion implied knowledge of facts, it was not actionable, because any factual implication was not provably false]; Ferlauto v. Hamsher (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1394, 1401, 88 C.R.2d 843 [comments in book describing opposing attorney in spicy prose and employing hyperbole in manner consistent with rest of book were nonactionable].)

In Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High School Dist. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 720, 275 C.R. 494, plaintiff high school teacher filed a complaint against defendant district based on an article in the student publication of the school, reporting that a smoke bomb had gone off in plaintiff's classroom. The headline stated: "Students terrorize Moyer." The article quoted the bomb-thrower student, who merely "wanted to play a joke," as well as "The Shadow," the student who supplied the bomb, because "Mr. Moyer is a babbler, and babblers are annoying to me. ... Also he pissed me off, he is the worst teacher at FHS." Held, judgment on demurrer for defendants affirmed.

(a) "Before Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S.Ct. 2695, 111 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §619, the California courts had employed a 'totality of the circumstances' test to differentiate between fact and opinion. ... The crucial determination whether the statement was fact or opinion was held to be a question of law for the court. ... Milkovich did not substantially change these principles; it underscored that in cases such as this, raising First Amendment issues, a reviewing court must make an independent examination of the whole record in order to ensure that there is no infringement of free expression. ... The dispositive question for the court is whether a reasonable fact finder could conclude that the published statements imply a provably false factual assertion." (225 C.A.3d 724.)

(b) Considering the nature and meaning of the language used, including the verifiability of the statements, and the context in which the statements appeared, they were not actionable:

(1) The "worst teacher" statement was an expression of subjective judgment--an expression of anger or disgust; it contained no verifiable facts. (225 C.A.3d 725.)

(2) The "babbler" statement was a form of exaggerated expression conveying the student's disapproval of plaintiff's teaching or speaking style; it could not reasonably have been understood to be stating actual facts about plaintiff. (225 C.A.3d 726.)

(3) The headline "Students Terrorize Moyer" arguably implies a factual assertion. "But even if the descriptive term 'terrorize' is an exaggeration of the actual event, it nonetheless falls within the protectable category of rhetorical hyperbole--a word used in a loose figurative sense. Moreover, the article read in full context accurately reported that one student supplied another student with a smoke bomb that was set off during plaintiff's class." (225 C.A.3d 726.)

In Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1599, 284 C.R. 244, plaintiff was terminated from her job as a county social worker on the basis of a letter to her supervisor from defendant, the director of a children's center. Plaintiff's subsequent defamation action was based on the following statements contained in the letter: (1) that there are needy children whose lives "we feel" are seriously being interfered with by plaintiff's incompetence; (2) that the staff at the children's center has tried to figure out what is the matter with plaintiff; (3) that plaintiff's action in sending a child back to Alaska, contrary to the center's recommendation, goes so far beyond incompetence that "I almost wonder about some kind of hostility towards the child or toward handicapped children in general"; (4) that plaintiff's level of incompetence and the confusion, chaos, and time wasting make it impossible for the center to work with her. Plaintiff contended that these statements were actionable under Milkovich, because they conveyed the requisite false factual imputations, i.e., that she was incompetent and hostile to children. Held, the statements regarding incompetence were actionable, but those regarding hostility were not.

(a) The sentence regarding plaintiff's hostility towards children merely states that defendant was so mystified by plaintiff's conduct that she wondered whether it reflected such hostility. This sentence is cautiously phrased in terms of apparency or rumination, i.e., something less even than surmise or conjecture, and hence cannot be reasonably understood to assert as an actual fact that plaintiff is hostile towards children. (232 C.A.3d 1609.)

(b) The same cannot be said of the imputation of incompetence. Because of the professional status of both defendant and plaintiff's supervisor, the letter is susceptible to the interpretation that plaintiff's incompetence was being asserted as a matter of fact. And, with respect to the real issue, i.e., whether the assertion is provably false, the letter can be reasonably interpreted as meaning that plaintiff's performance of her duties as a social worker was so poor that it was deleterious to the children in her care and made it impossible for the center to economically provide services to those children. Because a jury can decide whether that premise is true or false, the statements imputing incompetence are actionable as against the objection that they lack the requisite factual content. (232 C.A.3d 1609.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 1424, 1444, 57 C.R.3d 885 [school district superintendent's reported statements that high school where plaintiff was principal needed "stronger leadership," that his retirement plans did not "fit with the district's needs," and that his "handling of the recent violence" at school had "accelerated" a decision to replace him" were all protected opinions]; Krinsky v. Doe 6 (2008) 159 C.A.4th 1154, 1173, 72 C.R.3d 231 [anonymous poster's references on Internet message board to corporate president as "crook" and "cockroach" and stating she had "fake medical degree" and "poor feminine hygiene" were not actionable; viewed in context of prolonged heated discussion of corporation, they could not be interpreted as asserting or implying objective facts].

51 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
C. Defamation.
4. Defenses.
e. Fair Comment.
3. Particular Statements.
ff. Review of Program.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 625

[§ 625] Review of Program.

In Baker v. Los Angeles Herald Examiner (1986) 42 C.3d 254, 228 C.R. 206, 721 P.2d 87, defendant Bunzel, a featured editorial columnist, wrote a column in defendant newspaper reviewing plaintiff producer's television documentary on sex education. The column, in eight paragraphs, contained the following passage alleged to be defamatory: "My impression is that the executive producer Walt Baker, who is also vice president in charge of programs for channel 9, told his writer/producer, Phil Reeder, 'We've got a hot potato here--let's pour on titillating innuendo and as much bare flesh as we can get away with. Viewers will eat it up.' " Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed; the statement was a nonactionable opinion.

(a) California decisions, such as Gregory v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 596, 131 C.R. 641, 552 P.2d 425, supra, §621, and Okun v. Superior Court (1981) 29 C.3d 442, 448, 453, 175 C.R. 157, 629 P.2d 1369, supra, §546, have developed a "totality of the circumstances" test.

(1) The language of the statement must be examined, and to be defamatory the words must be understood in a defamatory sense. Where the statement is "cautiously phrased in terms of apparency," it is less likely to be reasonably understood as a statement of fact. (42 C.3d 260.)

(2) The context in which the statement was made must be considered. The court must look to the nature and full content of the publication and the knowledge and understanding of the audience to whom it was directed. (42 C.3d 261.)

(b) The beginning phrase "my impression is" puts the reader on notice that the maker is not vouching for its accuracy; a reasonable person would understand that a statement of opinion is to follow. (42 C.3d 261, 262, citing Gregory and Carr v. Warden (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1166, 1170, 206 C.R. 162, supra, §546.)

(c) Selleck v. Globe Int. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1123, 212 C.R. 838, supra, §545, is distinguishable: Nowhere is it asserted as a fact that Baker made the disputed statement; by using the term "impression" Bunzel made it clear that he intended only to convey his opinion about what Baker might have said to his writer/producer. (42 C.3d 263.)

(d) Plaintiff's contention, that the use of quotation marks made the statement one of fact, is without merit. Plaintiff's use of a hypothetical conversation was a permissible literary means of emphasizing the message to be communicated. (42 C.3d 263, 264.)

(e) A contextual analysis of the column shows that it was a highly critical review of a television documentary, and the text was permeated with opinion. (42 C.3d 264, 265.)

(f) Under Rest.2d, Torts §566 (supra, §618) and Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 C.3d 149, 185 C.R. 244, 649 P.2d 886, supra, §564, a statement of opinion may be actionable if it implies the existence of undisclosed defamatory facts. But the statements here differ from those in Slaughter. An insured reasonably expects an insurance company's explanation regarding noncoverage of a claim to be based on facts; a reader of a television review expects a reviewer's opinions to be based on aesthetic sense and discriminating taste. And Bunzel's use of flashy hyperbole and sarcasm indicated that the conversation was a hypothetical tongue-in-cheek invention. (42 C.3d 267.)

(g) The consideration is strengthened by considering the societal context in which the article was published, the audience it intended to address, and the public debate to which it was meant to contribute. "Sex education in the public schools is a controversial subject. Discussion of this topic often engenders heated debate, similar in vigor to that typically experienced in labor disputes or in the political arena. ... Under these circumstances, a reader would be more likely to expect and understand critical commentary to be the intended statement of opinion." (42 C.3d 268.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

52 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

f. Innocence or Good Faith.

1. Original Publisher.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 626

[§ 626] Original Publisher.

The long established rule has been that innocence or good faith of the defendant who makes a defamatory statement is not a defense, although it may be shown in mitigation of damages (infra, §1630). Thus, where the defendant or the defendant's employees through an honest and reasonable mistake defame the wrong person, the defendant is liable. (See Taylor v. Hearst (1895) 107 C. 262, 270, 40 P. 392; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 902, 912; 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 346; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 359; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 684; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §270; cf. 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 82 [discussing unintended identity of name of character in novel with that of actual person].)

The same is true where the defendant did not intend a statement in any defamatory sense, or made it in jest or anger; he or she is liable if a third person reasonably understands it in a defamatory sense. (Ervin v. Record Publishing Co. (1908) 154 C. 79, 82, 97 P. 21.)

This rule is, however, subject to the New York Times requirement of proof of actual malice where the defamatory statement is directed at public officials or public figures (see supra, §602 et seq.), and to the Gertz requirement of proof of negligence where the defamatory statement is directed at a private individual (see supra, §613 et seq.). (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §417.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.51

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §252.

53 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

f. Innocence or Good Faith.

2. Ordinary Disseminator or Circulator.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 627

[§ 627] Ordinary Disseminator or Circulator.

Innocence is generally considered a defense where the defendant merely circulates another's libel; e.g., news dealers, bookstores, and circulating libraries are not liable where books or periodicals sold contain libelous materials, unless they knew or should have known of their defamatory nature. (Osmond v. EWAP (1984) 153 C.A.3d 842, 852, 200 C.R. 674, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §§581, 612; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 910.)

The Restatement discusses the effect of the rule on bookstores and libraries: "The vendor or lender is not liable, if there are no facts or circumstances known to him which would suggest to him, as a reasonable man, that a particular book contains matter which upon inspection, he would recognize as defamatory. Thus, when books of a reputable author or the publications of a reputable publishing house are offered for sale, rent or free circulation, he is not required to examine them to discover whether they contain anything of a defamatory character. If, however, a particular author or a particular publisher has frequently published notoriously sensational or scandalous books, a shop or library that offers to the public such literature may take the risk of becoming liable to any one who may be defamed by them." (Rest.2d, Torts §581, Comment e.)

In Osmond v. EWAP, supra, defendant operated a chain of retail "adult book stores" that sold sexually explicit films. One of the films contained matter allegedly libeling plaintiff, but all had been purchased from publishers or producers, and none of defendant's officers had any knowledge of plaintiff or any recollection of the libelous film. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The general rule, supported by the Restatement and text writers, is that a mere vendor or distributor of libelous matter is not liable unless he or she knew or should have known of the defamatory nature of the material. (153 C.A.3d 852.)

(b) This rule applies to an adult bookstore. "[F]ree speech guarantees of the First Amendment, as well as notions of due process, require that the activities of the 'adult' bookstores, like EWAP, receive the same protection from civil liability as ordinary bookstores and other distributors which merely disseminate libels produced or published by others." (153 C.A.3d 854.)

Although expressed in terms of privilege, the defense of a telegraph company, which ordinarily transmits a message without reason to know that it contains defamatory matter, is similar. (See Mason v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1975) 52 C.A.3d 429, 437, 125 C.R. 53; Rest.2d, Torts §§612, 581, Comment f; 4 Hastings L. J. 207; 91 A.L.R.3d 1015 [liability of telegraph or telephone company for transmitting or permitting transmission of libelous or slanderous messages].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

54 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

f. Innocence or Good Faith.

3. Radio or Television Broadcaster.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 628

[§ 628] Radio or Television Broadcaster.

An approach to the liability of broadcasters, on the basis of the strict common law liability of newspaper publishers, has not proved satisfactory. The newspaper publisher is in a broad sense in charge of everything that appears in his paper, while the broadcasting company usually sells time to a sponsor and is not always able to control a performer who uses no script or departs from it. Late cases and modern legislation, therefore, tend to reject absolute liability and to treat the broadcaster as a disseminator, liable only for failure to exercise reasonable care to prevent the defamatory publication. (See 64 Harv. L. Rev. 727, 740; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 483; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 907; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 216; 50 A.L.R.3d 1311 [defamation by radio or television].)

California has solved the problem by a broad statutory exemption from liability for unintended defamation by radio and television broadcasts. The owner, licensee, or operator of the station or network, and his or her agents or employees, are protected from liability in the following circumstances:

(1) The defendant alleges and proves that he or she exercised due care to prevent the publication of the defamatory matter. (C.C. 48.5(1).)

(2) The defamatory matter comes over a network, except as to the station originating the broadcast. (C.C. 48.5(2).)

(3) The defamatory matter is a part of a broadcast "by or on behalf of any candidate for public office, which broadcast cannot be censored by reason of the provisions of federal statute or regulation of the Federal Communications Commission." (C.C. 48.5(3).) (See 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 44.)

Even in the absence of such a state statute, the station will not be liable for defamation broadcast by a political candidate. Under the Federal Communications Act (47 U.S.C., §315), a station that permits a candidate for public office to broadcast must "afford equal opportunities" to other candidates, and "shall have no power of censorship over the material." In Farmers Educational Cooperative Union of America, North Dakota Div. v. WDAY (1959) 360 U.S. 525, 79 S.Ct. 1302, 3 L.Ed.2d 1407, a candidate for senator was allowed to give a defamatory reply to speeches of other candidates. Although the statute contains no express immunity provision for a station in these circumstances, the Court found an implied immunity in the provision against censorship. Two alternatives to an immunity rule were rejected: (a) Exercise of the station's statutory right to refuse to allow any candidate to broadcast (47 U.S.C., §315) would withdraw political discussion from the air and defeat a major public object of the license. (b) The possibility of insurance against liability is too speculative. (See 73 Harv. L. Rev. 233 [generally approving result but suggesting that insurance may be practical solution]; 53 Cal. L. Rev. 421 [television, tort law, and federalism]; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 478; 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 71.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

55 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

1. Background and Scope of Statute.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 629

[§ 629] Background and Scope of Statute.

The general rule is that a subsequent retraction or correction of a mistaken newspaper publication is not a defense, although proof of it is admissible in mitigation of damages. (Taylor v. Hearst (1895) 107 C. 262, 270, 40 P. 392; Turner v. Hearst (1896) 115 C. 394, 402, 47 P. 129.) The same is true, in the absence of statute, of defamatory broadcasts. (See 69 Harv. L. Rev. 940; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §342.)

In 1931, California enacted C.C. 48a, an extremely broad retraction or correction statute, applicable to newspaper libels. (See Behrendt v. Times-Mirror Co. (1938) 30 C.A.2d 77, 88, 85 P.2d 949.) In 1945 it was amended to cover slander by radio broadcast. C.C. 48.5, added in 1949, defines "radio broadcast" to include "both visual and sound radio broadcasting," thus including television broadcasting. (For general discussions, see Werner v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 35 C.2d 121, 132, 216 P.2d 825 [upholding constitutionality of statute]; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 30, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912, infra, §632; Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 C.A.2d 36, 43, 281 P.2d 372, infra, §635; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.150; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 951 [constitutionality and practical problems of application]; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 678; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 941; 3 Hastings L. J. 136; 4 Hastings L. J. 75 [comparing other retraction statutes]; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 225, 254; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 124; 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 89, 591; 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 275 [public policy and conflict of laws]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §342 et seq.)

In an action for libel or slander brought by a candidate for public office, the defendant's willingness or unwillingness to retract or correct a communication made during a campaign, and his or her action in doing so, are admissible in the exemplary damages phase of a bifurcated trial. (Elec.C. 20502(a); see Elec.C. 20502(b) [remedy is in addition to any other provided by law].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Retraction in absence of statute: See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §325.

Retraction legislation: See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §325 et seq.

56 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

2. Notice and Demand.

aa. Necessity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 630

[§ 630] Necessity.

(1) Statutory Requirement. The plaintiff, within 20 days after knowledge of the publication or broadcast, must serve a written notice on the publisher at the place of publication or the broadcaster at the place of broadcast, specifying the defamatory statements, and demanding a correction. (C.C. 48a(1); see Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 C.A.2d 36, 44, 281 P.2d 372, infra, §635 [telegrams to defendant newspaper's editors demanding attendance at meeting in office of plaintiff's attorney to arrange for a retraction was not demand for a retraction within meaning of statute]; O'Hara v. Storer Communications (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1101, 1111, 282 C.R. 712 [letter from plaintiff's attorney requesting that defendant contact him to discuss retraction was conditional request, instead of required demand for correction]; on persons served, see infra, §631; on specification of statements, see infra, §632.)

(2) Effect of Failure To Make Demand. If the plaintiff does not serve the demand, he or she may recover only special damages. (C.C. 48a(1); see Werner v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 35 C.2d 121, 125, 216 P.2d 825 [recovery limited to special damages]; Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 C.2d 788, 791, 228 P.2d 6 [same]; Farr v. Bramblett, supra, 132 C.A.2d 43 [same]; BAJI, No. 7.08; CACI, No. 1722.)

In Fisher v. Larsen (1982) 138 C.A.3d 627, 188 C.R. 216, the court considered whether special damages to a plaintiff candidate for public office, limited to benefits and salaries obtainable only by election to the office, are recoverable in a defamation action. Following the approach of other jurisdictions--that lost future financial perquisites of office are too uncertain and speculative because many factors might influence an election--partial summary judgment against plaintiff on this issue was affirmed. (138 C.A.3d 635, 636.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

57 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

2. Notice and Demand.

bb. Persons Served.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 631

[§ 631] Persons Served.

(1) Publisher or Broadcaster. Even though the defendant is a third party, the statute requires service of the notice on the publisher or broadcaster. The reason is that they alone have the power to make an effective correction or retraction. The authority of the newspaper or station gives the statement its credibility; many news stories do not reveal the identity of the author, and are accepted by the public as statements of the publishing or broadcasting enterprise; and, even when the participant is identified, the weight attached to the statement is determined largely by the reputation of the enterprise. (Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 110, 115, 77 C.R. 243, 453 P.2d 747 [expanding on views expressed in Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 C.2d 788, 791, 228 P.2d 6, infra, §634].)

In Freedom Newspapers v. Superior Court (1992) 4 C.4th 652, 14 C.R.2d 839, 842 P.2d 138, the required notice was served on the editor of the newspaper instead of to the publisher. It was nevertheless held sufficient under the pleadings because the complaint alleged that the editor had been designated by the publisher to receive such notices, and that the publisher acquired actual knowledge of the notice within the time period of C.C. 48a(1). (4 C.4th 655.) "[W]e hold that the requirements of section 48a(1) are satisfied when the demand for correction is (a) served upon the publisher, (b) served upon a person designated by the publisher to receive such notices, or (c) served upon someone employed at the newspaper other than the publisher or the publisher's designee and the publisher acquires actual knowledge of the request for correction within the time limit set forth in the statute. Such a rule is consistent with both the language of the statute and the policy it was designed to serve." (4 C.4th 658.)

(2) Author. Although the demand for retraction must be served on the publisher in order to hold the author liable, there is no need to serve it on the author. (Larrick v. Gilloon (1959) 176 C.A.2d 408, 420, 1 C.R. 360.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.56(4), 66-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

58 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

2. Notice and Demand.

cc. Specification of Statements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 632

[§ 632] Specification of Statements.

(1) Object of Requirement. In Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 30, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912, the court said: "The purpose of the requirement for the described specificity is to facilitate the publisher's investigative efforts in determining whether statements in the initial article contained error and should be corrected. By designating the remarks that the objector considers libelous, a notice may enable the publisher to narrow the scope of his investigation. We recognize, however, that letters written to request retraction of a statement do not compose formal legal complaints; we cannot expect that they will conform to the niceties of common law pleading. In enacting section 48a the Legislature intended to afford publishers an opportunity to correct committed errors before subjecting them to liability; it did not intend to build technical barricades to recovery by the individual who had given notice sufficient to advise a reasonable publisher acting in good faith of the claimed error."

(2) Test of Sufficiency. The test of a notice and demand is whether the publisher should reasonably have comprehended which statements the plaintiff protested and wished corrected. (Kapellas v. Kofman, supra; see MacLeod v. Tribune Publishing Co. (1959) 52 C.2d 536, 553, 343 P.2d 36 [demand sufficient]; Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 C.A.3d 924, 938, 186 C.R. 605 [insufficient specification].)

In Kapellas, the alleged libel consisted of an editorial stating that plaintiff, the mother of six children and a candidate for the city council, was needed at home rather than in public office, because her children had been guilty of specified misconduct according to police records. The notice requested correction of "every statement" concerning the conduct of the children, plaintiff's qualification for office, and her suitability as a mother. Held, it was sufficient. As to the children, it referred clearly enough to the police records; as to the mother, the libel consisted of false inferences or implications from apparently nonlibelous statements. "When the basis of a claim of libel lies in an implication flowing from the rhetoric of a publication, the allegedly damaging implication frequently cannot be connected to any one statement, or to even a few specific statements, but rather emanates from the tone of the article as a whole. In such an instance, section 48a's requirement of a specific notice must be interpreted in light of the nature of the alleged libel. The mere withdrawal of specific statements may not be adequate to purge the original implication; thus the notice requesting correction will necessarily be tailored to the mis-impression given." (1 C.3d 33.) Thus, the demand for the children was specific, and the demand for the mother, asking for a correction of the implications rather than rectification of any individual statement, was also sufficient, particularly where defendant never sought clarification. (1 C.3d 33, 34.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

59 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

3. Retraction.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 633

[§ 633] Retraction.

(1) Statutory Requirement. If a correction is not published or broadcast within 3 weeks after service of the demand, in "substantially as conspicuous a manner" as the original statements, the plaintiff may recover general and special damages; and plaintiff may also recover exemplary damages, in the discretion of the court or jury, if he or she pleads and proves actual malice. (C.C. 48a(2).)

(2) Sufficiency of Retraction. The question of the conspicuousness of a retraction, not being one of interpretation, is a question of fact. (Twin Coast Newspapers v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 656, 662, 256 C.R. 310 [on facts presented, no reasonable juror could find retractions insufficient under statutory standard]; Pierce v. San Jose Mercury News (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1626, 1630, 263 C.R. 410 [because reasonable jurors could differ on whether retraction was adequate, trial judge should have submitted question to jury]; 23 Pacific L. J. 1575 [sufficiency of retraction as question for judge or jury].)

In Weller v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 991, 283 C.R. 644, supra, §620, the trial judge, after instructing on the requirement of conspicuousness, added the following language: "For a correction to be legally sufficient and effective, it must be full and complete and cannot be evasive or equivocal, nor partial or hesitant, and it cannot contain any insinuations. It must be an honest endeavor to repair all the wrong caused by any defamatory statements or insinuations." (232 C.A.3d 1010.) Defendants argued that the additional language was erroneous because the only question for the jury was whether the retraction appeared in substantially as conspicuous a manner as did the alleged defamatory statement. Held, the instruction was proper. An equivocal or incomplete retraction would serve no purpose even if it were adequately conspicuous. (232 C.A.3d 1010.) (See 40 Proof of Facts 2d 649 [sufficiency of retraction].)

(3) Publication of Retraction Before Demand. A correction published before demand has the same effect as one published after. (C.C. 48a(3).) The statute does not, however, indicate the extent to which the publication of the correction, as demanded, absolves the defendant.

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.1.5, 56(4), 66-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

60 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

4. Scope of Statutory Protection.

aa. Publisher and Author.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 634

[§ 634] Publisher and Author.

(1) Newspaper Publisher and Broadcaster. C.C. 48a was sponsored by newspaper and broadcasting interests, and the demand must be served on the publisher or broadcaster (see supra, §631); hence, its primary purpose seems to be protection of publishers and broadcasters. (See 84 A.L.R.3d 1249 [who is protected by statute restricting recovery unless retraction is demanded].)

(2) Author. The statute also broadly applies to "any action for damages for the publication of a libel in a newspaper, or of a slander by radio broadcast." Hence, although the demand must be served on the publisher or broadcaster (because they have power to make the correction), and need not be served on the author (see supra, §631), the protection of the statute extends to reporters, columnists, etc., i.e., authors of the defamatory material. Hence, failure to demand a retraction from the publisher precludes recovery of general or exemplary damages against the author. (Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 C.2d 788, 791, 228 P.2d 6; see Di Giorgio Corp. v. Valley Labor Citizen (1968) 260 C.A.2d 268, 274, 67 C.R. 82, infra, §639 [newspaper reporter].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.56(4), 66

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

61 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

4. Scope of Statutory Protection.

bb. Other Participants.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 635

[§ 635] Other Participants.

The statutory scope was extended in Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 C.A.2d 36, 281 P.2d 372: "We cannot distinguish the authors of printed newspaper advertisements from other authors who have the products of their pen placed in a newspaper." Moreover, the defense is applicable to the prior display of a matrix or copy of the advertisement to editors, publishers and employees of the newspaper; though this exhibition is not literally publication in a newspaper, it is a common prelude thereto and much of the statutory protection would be lost under a contrary rule. (132 C.A.2d 44.) But a different result was reached in the situation where the advertiser's copy was rejected by the newspaper: "The exhibition of the libelous matter to the newspaper personnel is protected when the libel is afterwards published in the newspaper as a part of the necessary process of publication, but where the libel is not afterwards printed in the newspaper its exhibition to the newspaper personnel is no part of such process of publication and section 48a can have no application to it." (132 C.A.2d 45.) (For partial disapproval of Farr, see infra, §638.)

In Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 110, 77 C.R. 243, 453 P.2d 747, the statute was held inapplicable to nonparticipants (see infra, §638). But the court also reaffirmed the holding in Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 C.2d 788, 228 P.2d 6, supra, §634, that its protection is not limited to publishers and broadcasters: It protects all who participated in the publication or broadcast, including reporters, columnists, authors, critics, and editors. "Otherwise, that section would protect, not those engaged in the rapid dissemination of news, but merely those who owned or operated the facilities for such dissemination; it would protect, not a special form of news reporting, but a special form of investment. If without first demanding and being refused a retraction, plaintiffs could reach behind the publisher or broadcaster and sue instead the offending reporter or other participant, section 48a would serve little purpose and would actively discourage the very free and rapid dissemination of news it seeks to encourage." (71 C.2d 115.) (See 84 A.L.R.3d 1249 [who is protected by statute restricting recovery unless retraction is demanded].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

62 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

5. Where Statute Does Not Apply.

aa. Slander.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 636

[§ 636] Slander.

The statute refers to libel in a newspaper or slander by broadcast. (See C.C. 48a(1), supra, §629.)

(1) Slander Uttered to Newspaper Reporter. In Mercado v. Hoefler (1961) 190 C.A.2d 12, 11 C.R. 787, defendant employer discharged plaintiff employee, and gave a newspaper reporter an oral explanation, which was concededly slanderous per se. Defendant contended that, because the statements were subsequently printed in newspapers, the tort was libel and the retraction statute applied. Held, the mere fact that oral defamation is printed in a newspaper does not make it libel, and the purpose of the statute was to protect news disseminators, not those who make slanderous oral statements. (190 C.A.2d 18.) (See 84 A.L.R.3d 1249.)

(2) Slander by Intruder in Broadcast. In White v. Valenta (1965) 234 C.A.2d 243, 44 C.R. 241, plaintiff car dealer was broadcasting a television commercial on his lot. Defendant angrily entered and, in view of the camera, made a menacing gesture and a slanderous remark. In this action for slander, defendant invoked the retraction statute which, in literal terms, seemed applicable, because his slander did take place in a broadcast. But the court declared that it would be "a perversion of the legislative intent" and of doubtful constitutionality to allow the defense. (234 C.A.2d 248.) Defendant's position was like that of a person who secretly manages to insert a libelous statement in a newspaper: "[T]o afford him the protection of section 48a would be like clothing a burglar with the privileges and immunities appurtenant to the lawful possession of land." (234 C.A.2d 249.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.56(4), 66

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

63 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

5. Where Statute Does Not Apply.

bb. Publication in Magazines.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 637

[§ 637] Publication in Magazines.

The requirement of retraction published within 3 weeks of demand (see supra, §633) would often be impossible of fulfillment by a magazine, and it has been generally understood that magazines are not within the protected group. (See Morris v. National Federation of the Blind (1961) 192 C.A.2d 162, 165, 13 C.R. 336; 18 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 197 [reviewing cases and suggesting legislation to protect magazines].)

In Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 543, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692, the court held that a cause of action for invasion of privacy was stated, but that no action for libel could be maintained because of failure to comply with the retraction statute. The Briscoe dictum, set forth in that case without discussion and without citation of the Morris case, was repeated in Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich (1974) 43 C.A.3d 880, 894, 118 C.R. 370, infra, §689.

In Montandon v. Triangle Publications (1975) 45 C.A.3d 938, 952, 120 C.R. 186, supra, §611, the court declared that the Briscoe and Johnson dicta were not controlling, and reaffirmed the Morris holding that the statute does not apply to magazines.

In Burnett v. National Enquirer (1983) 144 C.A.3d 991, 193 C.R. 206, the court accepted "the better view" of Morris and Montandon, that C.C. 48a applies only to newspapers (144 C.A.3d 1001), and added some comments on the test to be applied. Defendant's publication did not give normal coverage of news, but followed a formula of "how to" stories, celebrity or medical or personal improvement stories, gossip items, etc. The court observed that the protection of C.C. 48a is limited "to those who engage in the immediate dissemination of news on the ground that the Legislature could reasonably conclude that such enterprises ... cannot always check their sources for accuracy and their stories for inadvertent publication errors." (144 C.A.3d 1004.) Hence, the essential question is not whether a publication is properly called a "magazine," but whether it can be characterized as a "newspaper" within the contemplation of the statute. And here, the evidence supported the trial judge's conclusion that the National Enquirer was not a "newspaper." (144 C.A.3d 1004, 1005.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

64 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

5. Where Statute Does Not Apply.

cc. Nonparticipants.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 638

[§ 638] Nonparticipants.

In Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 110, 77 C.R. 243, 453 P.2d 747, plaintiff produced a public opinion poll on candidates for governor in the Republican primary. Defendant, a candidate, made defamatory statements to newspaper and broadcasting company representatives (calling the poll inaccurate, corrupt, and dishonest). Plaintiff, without serving a demand for retraction, sued defendant. The trial judge held the statute applicable, and granted partial summary judgment for defendant. Held, mandamus granted to vacate order; the statute did not apply.

(a) Defendant was a private citizen, not a participant in the publishing or broadcasting enterprise. The fact that his statements were heard and recorded by representatives of news media did not make him a disseminator of news. "There is a significant difference ... between one who occasionally discovers and makes public an item that is newsworthy and one who, as a daily occupation or business, collects, collates, evaluates, reduces to communicable form, and communicates the news. It is these latter activities that the Legislature sought to protect by section 48a." (71 C.2d 115.)

(b) The newspapers and stations that reported defendant's statements could not have corrected or retracted effectively, for they could not speak for defendant. (71 C.2d 116.)

(c) Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 C.A.2d 36, 281 P.2d 372, supra, §635, suggesting that the statute applied to nonparticipants, is disapproved on that point. (71 C.2d 114, footnote 4.) (See Dietrich v. Litton Industries (1970) 12 C.A.3d 704, 711, 90 C.R. 856 [following Field; press release to news media distinguished from news story written by reporter; person issuing release is not protected by statute]; Denney v. Lawrence (1994) 22 C.A.4th 927, 936, 27 C.R.2d 556 [C.C. 48a did not apply to author of letter to newspaper editor; letter authors are not "participants" in business of news dissemination].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

65 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

C. Defamation.

4. Defenses.

g. Retraction by Newspaper or Broadcaster.

5. Where Statute Does Not Apply.

dd. Republication.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 639

[§ 639] Republication.

In Di Giorgio Corp. v. Valley Labor Citizen (1968) 260 C.A.2d 268, 67 C.R. 82, Boehm wrote an article which was published in the Union Gazette of Santa Clara County, using information supplied by G, a labor organizer. G mailed a clipping to the editor of the Valley Labor Citizen, independently owned and circulated in San Joaquin County, and the editor, Ballis, published it. It contained derogatory statements about plaintiff, who sued all the parties for libel. The verdict was for plaintiff, against all defendants, for general and punitive damages. Held, reversed.

(a) Boehm, the author of the original story, was not liable at all. Ordinarily, the originator of defamatory matter is liable for every repetition (a separate publication) if he could reasonably have foreseen it. (260 C.A.2d 273; see supra, §536.) But this rule was inapplicable here for two reasons: First, plaintiff did not raise the issue of foreseeability, either by pleading or by seeking an instruction on it. Second, plaintiff did not plead or prove a request for a retraction by the original publisher, Union Gazette. (260 C.A.2d 276.) "[B]y legislative fiat a newspaper reporter who authors a libelous article for publication in a newspaper or newspaper chain for which he is employed and who does not authorize, consent to or intentionally participate in the republication of his article by another independently owned and operated newspaper or newspaper chain is not liable for general damages for the republication if the plaintiff does not plead and prove that he requested a retraction by the publisher of the newspaper in which the article initially appeared and his request was refused by the publisher. A contrary holding would effectively defeat the objects and purposes of section 48a. It would subject the publisher of a newspaper (who had no control over retractions by other newspapers) and all others who participated in the original publication of defamatory matter to multiple suits for general damages even though the publisher had published a retraction in his own newspaper or newspaper chain." (260 C.A.2d 274.)

(b) Judgment against the other defendants is reversed because general and punitive damages were awarded against all, in a single amount, under erroneous instructions; thus, the judgment cannot be severed. (260 C.A.2d 278.)

(c) Two significant questions remain open: (1) Whether general damages would be recoverable against the author for a foreseeable republication if the original publisher refused a requested retraction. (2) Whether the author would be liable for special damages for a foreseeable republication. (260 C.A.2d 276.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.26.1, 56(4), 66

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

66 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Causes of Action.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 640

[§ 640] Nature of Causes of Action.

Slander of title and trade libel are distinct torts, but are classified in the Restatement under the general heading of "disparagement" (see Rest.2d, Torts, Division Six, Chapter 28, Topic 2), both being invasions of the interest in vendibility of property. Slander of title involves false disparagement of the title to property, while trade libel involves false disparagement of the quality of goods or services. (See infra, §§642, 645.) Although in some respects the action for defamation is similar to one for disparagement (see infra, §648), there is one basic difference: The action for defamation is designed to protect the reputation of the plaintiff, and the judgment vindicates that reputation, whereas the action for disparagement is based on pecuniary damage and lies only where that damage has been suffered. (See Smith v. Stuthman (1947) 79 C.A.2d 708, 709, 181 P.2d 123; Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 412, 423, 89 C.R. 514, infra, §643; Appel v. Burman (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1209, 1214, 206 C.R. 259, infra, §643; Guess v. Superior Court (1986) 176 C.A.3d 473, 479, 222 C.R. 79; Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 547, 572, 264 C.R. 883, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §623A et seq., infra, §641; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §6.1; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §457; Cal. Civil Practice, 6 Business Litigation, §65:1 et seq.; C.E.B., 1 Real Property Remedies and Damages 2d, §9.1 et seq.; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 45; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 159; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §548 et seq.; 55 Proof of Facts 3d 509 [proof of slander of title]; on Uniform Single Publication Act, see supra, §538.)

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act (see 15 U.S.C., §1125(a); 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §86) creates a related federal cause of action: "Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which ... in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of ... another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is likely to be damaged by such act." (15 U.S.C., §1125(a)(2); see 194 A.L.R. Fed 174 [application of doctrine of "reverse passing off" under Lanham Act]; 79 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [establishing claim for trade libel or product disparagement under §43(a) of Lanham Act].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.9, 130

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §6.1; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §524 et seq. Lanham Act cause of action: See Kirby v. Sega of America (2006) 144 C.A.4th 47, 57, 61, 50 C.R.3d 607 [Lanham Act cause of action for misrepresentation that celebrity endorsed product is subject to First Amendment defense recognized in right of publicity cases where there is transformative change (see text, §680); Lanham Act is federal equivalent of right of publicity claim].

67 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

1. In General.
- b. Restatement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 641

[§ 641] Restatement.

(1) General Principle. Chapter 28 of Division Six of the Second Restatement is entitled "Injurious Falsehood (Including Slander of Title and Trade Libel)," and Rest.2d, Torts §623A states the general principle: "One who publishes a false statement harmful to the interests of another is subject to liability for pecuniary loss resulting to the other if (a) he intends for publication of the statement to result in harm to interests of the other having a pecuniary value, or either recognizes or should recognize that it is likely to do so, and (b) he knows that the statement is false or acts in reckless disregard of its truth or falsity."

(2) Scope. Comment a points out that the principle is applied chiefly in cases of disparagement of property in land, chattels, or intangible things, or of their quality; but is equally applicable to other publications of false statements that do harm to interests of another having pecuniary value and so result in pecuniary loss.

(3) Intent. Comment b notes that it is not enough that some third person might be influenced by defendant's casual statement; "[h]e must know of some circumstance that would lead a reasonable man to realize that the publication of the falsehood would be likely to cause the pecuniary loss to the other."

(4) Effect of Constitution. Comment c discusses the possible effect of the New York Times rule (supra, §602). In §623A, Caveats, the Institute takes no position on the matter: "(1) Whether, instead of showing the publisher's knowledge or reckless disregard of the falsity of the statement, as indicated in Clause (b), the other may recover by showing that the publisher had either (a) a motive of ill will toward him, or (b) an intent to interfere in an unprivileged manner with his interests; or (2) Whether either of these alternate bases, if not alone sufficient, would be made sufficient by being combined with a showing of negligence regarding the truth or falsity of the statement."

(5) Damages. Comment f points out that compensatory damages have consistently been limited to harm to interests of the plaintiff having pecuniary value and to proved pecuniary loss.

(6) Defamation Distinguished. Comment g discusses the differences between injurious falsehood and defamation: "From the beginning, more stringent requirements were imposed upon the plaintiff seeking to recover for injurious falsehood in three important respects--falsity of the statement, fault of the defendant and proof of damage. At common law a defamatory statement was presumed to be false and truth was a matter to be proved by the defendant; in an action for injurious falsehood, the plaintiff must plead and prove that the statement is false. At common law, a defendant in a defamation action was held to strict liability insofar as falsity of the statement was concerned; in an action for injurious falsehood he was subject to liability only if he knew of the falsity or acted with reckless disregard concerning it, or if he acted with ill will or intended to interfere in the economic interests of the plaintiff in an unprivileged fashion. In defamation, it was only in a limited number of situations that a plaintiff was required to prove special damages; in injurious falsehood, pecuniary loss to the plaintiff must always be proved."

However, the two torts may overlap in cases of disparagement of the plaintiff's business or product. "If the statement reflects merely upon the quality of what the plaintiff has to sell or solely on the character of his business, then it is injurious falsehood alone. ... On the other hand, if the imputation fairly implied is that the plaintiff is dishonest or lacking in integrity or that he is perpetrating a fraud upon the public by selling something that he knows to be defective, the personal defamation may be found."

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.130

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

68 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

2. What Constitutes Slander of Title.

a. Elements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 642

[§ 642] Elements.

Slander of title is a false and unprivileged disparagement, oral or written, of the title to real or personal property, resulting in actual pecuniary damage. (Gudger v. Manton (1943) 21 C.2d 537, 541, 134 P.2d 217; Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 412, 419, 89 C.R. 514, infra, §643, citing the text; Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 857, 237 C.R. 282, infra, §644; Rest.2d, Torts §624; see Appel v. Burman (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1209, 1214, 206 C.R. 259, infra, §643 [elements are "publication, falsity, absence of privilege, and disparagement of another's land which is relied upon by a third party and which results in pecuniary loss"]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §6.1; C.E.B., 1 Real Property Remedies and Damages 2d, §9.3 et seq.; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §§548, 550 et seq.; 86 A.L.R.4th 738 [sufficiency of plaintiff's interest in real property to maintain action]; 55 Proof of Facts 3d 509 [slander of title]; 28 Am.Jur. Trials 229 [slander of title by improper recording of notice of default].)

The statement is disparaging if it throws any doubt on the ownership of the property. The disparagement may occur not only by complete denial of the title, but also by claim of some interest in it. Thus, filing or recording a document that appears to claim an interest or to cast doubt on the title may furnish the basis for an action. (Seeley v. Seymour, supra; see Coley v. Hecker (1928) 206 C. 22, 27, 272 P. 1045 [abstract of judgment recorded despite stay of execution]; Davis v. Wood (1943) 61 C.A.2d 788, 793, 143 P.2d 740 [notice of location of mining claim filed on property held by plaintiff as lessee]; Wright v. Rogers (1959) 172 C.A.2d 349, 366, 342 P.2d 447 [filing for record unfounded claim to property of another]; Contra Costa County Title Co. v. Waloff (1960) 184 C.A.2d 59, 64, 7 C.R. 358 [experienced purchaser, to gain modification of contract, made unfounded accusations of fraud and recorded unwarranted declaration of rescission, which clouded title and made another deal fall through]; Southcott v. Pioneer Title Co. (1962) 203 C.A.2d 673, 676, 21 C.R. 917 [no cause of action stated]; Rest.2d, Torts §629, Comment d; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §705.)

Although several older California cases dealing with slander of title refer to "malicious" disparagement and state that "malice" is an essential element of the cause of action (see Burkett v. Griffith (1891) 90 C. 532, 537, 27 P. 527; Fearon v. Fodera (1915) 169 C. 370, 380, 148 P. 200), it was later held, in accordance with the Restatement rule, that actual malice or ill will is unnecessary. These cases hold that all that is required is the fictional malice or "malice implied in law" from the unprivileged character of the act. (Gudger v. Manton, supra, 21 C.2d 543; see Contra Costa County Title Co. v. Waloff, supra, 184 C.A.2d 67 [inferred from intemperate statements and unfounded accusations against vendor]; Spencer v. Harmon Enterprises (1965) 234 C.A.2d 614, 622, 44 C.R. 683 [fraudulent attempt to secure title to property by wrongful means]; Rest.2d, Torts §623A, Comment d; 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §555.) However, it has been suggested, in the context of trade libel, that a showing of actual malice is constitutionally required where "injurious falsehood" involves a matter of public concern. (See Melaleuca v. Clark (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1344, 1363, 78 C.R.2d 627, infra, §650.)

The tort action protects the salability of property, and a title acquired by adverse possession is not a marketable title (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §212). Hence, until there is a judicial decree establishing of record the adverse possessor's title, the presumption of ownership in the record owner applies, and there can be no recovery by the adverse possessor, "whether one categorizes the missing element as involving a lack of malice or a lack of falsity of the publication." (Howard v. Schaniel (1980) 113 C.A.3d 256, 264, 169 C.R. 678.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.130 et seq., 134 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §6.1; 103 Am. Jur. Trials 1 [slander of title claims]; 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §530 et seq.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §749.

69 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

2. What Constitutes Slander of Title.

b. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 643

[§ 643] Illustrations.

In Phillips v. Glazer (1949) 94 C.A.2d 673, 211 P.2d 37, defendant, after obtaining judgment that plaintiff's adjoining house encroached five inches on her land, placed a large sign on her garage reading: "Notice. Anyone buying No. 20 Malibu [plaintiff's house] is buying law suit. Anyone renting or using main house or garage will be sued for rent. Title clouded rt. sides wall, foundation mine." As a result, prospective purchasers lost interest and brokers would not list the property. Held, defendant was liable for slander of title. Her right to the five-inch strip was no longer in dispute, and, apart from this settled issue, there was no cloud on plaintiff's title to the rest of his property. (94 C.A.2d 677.)

In Baker v. Kale (1947) 83 C.A.2d 89, 189 P.2d 57, plaintiff, lessee of business premises, contracted to sell the lease, the buyer being protected by a "satisfaction" clause. Defendant lessor falsely informed the buyer that the lease was invalid and that he would not be allowed to take possession. The buyer, invoking the satisfaction provision, refused to perform, asserting that he did not want to buy a lawsuit. In plaintiff's action for slander of title, defendant admitted that the lease was good, and contended that therefore the contract of sale was binding and plaintiff's remedy was against the buyer for breach of contract (citing a dictum in Burkett v. Griffith (1891) 90 C. 532, 27 P. 527). Held, the dictum was no longer law since the recognition in California of the tort of inducing breach of contract by unlawful means (see infra, §731), and plaintiff was entitled to recover for the difference between the buyer's price and the amount later received on a sale to another. (83 C.A.2d 92.) Although the opinion does not discuss the question of alternative remedies, it seems clear that, under these facts, plaintiff, at his election, could have sued for the tort of inducing breach of contract instead of for slander of title. (See Blender v. Superior Court (1942) 55 C.A.2d 24, 130 P.2d 179 [similar choice of remedies].)

In Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 412, 89 C.R. 514, plaintiffs, husband and wife, purchased a lot that had a private access road. Defendant, engaged in developing adjoining property into a city with a population of over 20,000, filed a master plan with the county planning commission, and publicly displayed a large model. The model and plan appeared to depict plaintiffs' road as a major public access route, and similar representations were made by statements of defendants' representatives, photographs, and radio broadcasts. Plaintiffs' efforts to obtain corrections were futile, and they brought this action for damages for slander of title and injunction against further representations. Held, verdict and judgment for plaintiffs affirmed. The court, however, added a word of caution: "[T]he mere planning for improvements which may have a disparaging effect on the value of a neighbor's property" does not give rise to an action "unless, as here, it is accompanied by evidence to sustain a false claim of right to use the neighbor's property for the purpose of effecting the planned improvement." (12 C.A.3d 440.)

In Appel v. Burman (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1209, 206 C.R. 259, plaintiffs, planning an addition to their home, had a survey made, which disclosed that a privacy fence between their land and defendants' land encroached on a six-foot strip of plaintiffs' land. In order to have a utility pole on the strip removed, plaintiffs paid the necessary charge to the utility and department of water and power, and plaintiffs also acquired a building permit for their construction. However, defendants claimed the privacy fence as an agreed boundary, thereby preventing plaintiffs from going ahead with construction until they obtained judgment in the present action for an injunction and damages (a period of two years). Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed. "The trial court made a finding in which it drew the inference from appellants' own testimony that to protect their privacy they used a claim of agreed upon boundary as an excuse to prevent the respondents from constructing their improvements for as long as possible without any sincere belief that appellants had any right, title or interest in the respondents' property. Appellants published the disparagement to several entities, principally the department of water and power, which agency then refused to move the power pole which resulted in damage to the respondents." (159 C.A.3d 1214.) (On measure of damages, see infra, §646.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

70 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

2. What Constitutes Slander of Title.

c. Instrument Void on Its Face.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 644

[§ 644] Instrument Void on Its Face.

In Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 237 C.R. 282, plaintiff Seeley, owner of an unimproved lot in the downtown area of San Francisco, entered into negotiations, in 1978, with defendant Seymour, who wanted a long-term lease. Although the parties were still negotiating, Seymour unilaterally prepared a "Memorandum of Agreement," signed by himself, containing the essential terms of a lease, and presented it to defendant Safeco Title Co., which had it recorded in San Francisco. Negotiations broke down, plaintiff later attempted to sell the property, and a preliminary title report disclosed the existence of the memorandum; but plaintiff's demand that Seymour execute a quitclaim deed was ignored. In 1981, plaintiff gave B an option to buy, conditioned on conveyance of a marketable title, but Seymour still refused to remove the cloud of the memorandum. Plaintiff then filed an action against Seymour and Safeco for slander of title, and another action against defendant San Francisco, its recorder, and Safeco, for negligent recordation of the memorandum. A jury verdict was rendered for compensatory damages against all defendants and punitive damages against Seymour. The trial judge then apportioned liability, 92% to Seymour, 5% to Safeco and 3% to San Francisco. Held, the action for slander of title was maintainable.

(a) Defendants contended that, because the memorandum was void on its face as a matter of law, it could not constitute a cloud on Seeley's title. The cases cited to support this contention dealt with the equitable action to cancel an instrument, and the reasoning was that such an instrument casts no legal cloud on title and, hence, there is no need for equitable relief. (190 C.A.3d 856.) But no California decision requires that the published matter create a legal "cloud"; even oral statements or signs may constitute an actionable disparagement. (190 C.A.3d 857, citing Burkett v. Griffith (1891) 90 C. 532, 27 P. 527, and Phillips v. Glazer (1949) 94 C.A.2d 673, 211 P.2d 37, supra, §643.)

(b) "[T]he key to whether the defendant's conduct is actionable is not whether he has succeeded in casting a legal cloud on the plaintiff's title, but whether he could reasonably foresee that 'the conduct of a third person as purchaser or lessee ... might be determined thereby.' " (190 C.A.3d 857, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §624.) The spurious memorandum is a perfect example of a publication that defendant could anticipate might chill the enthusiasm of any prospective purchaser. (190 C.A.3d 858.) Gudger v. Manton (1943) 21 C.2d 537, 134 P.2d 217, supports the rule that a recorded document may have no effect on title yet still give rise to a cause of action. (190 C.A.3d 858.)

(c) "We conclude that it is the reasonably foreseeable effect upon prospective purchasers or lessees, not the strictly legal effect on title of a recorded instrument, which is the gravamen of a cause of action for disparagement of title under California law." (190 C.A.3d 859.) (On actions to cancel void instrument, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §123; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §630.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Action to cancel void instrument:

Cross-References: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §129; 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §671.

71 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel. 3. What Constitutes Trade Libel.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 645

[§ 645] What Constitutes Trade Libel.

A trade libel is an intentional disparagement of the quality of property that results in pecuniary damage. (Rest.2d, Torts §626; see Nichols v. Great Amer. Ins. Cos. (1985) 169 C.A.3d 766, 773, 215 C.R. 416 [complaint that seller of device designed to intercept television signals damaged cable company's business alleged no disparagement, and hence, no trade libel]; Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 547, 572, 264 C.R. 883, citing the text [trade libel is well recognized tort in California]; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.88 et seq.; 74 A.L.R.3d 298 [disparagement of quality of intangible property]; 42 A.L.R.4th 318 [derogatory advertising].)

To constitute trade libel, a statement must be false. (Leonardini v. Shell Oil Co., supra; ComputerXpress v. Jackson (2001) 93 C.A.4th 993, 1010, 113 C.R.2d 625.) Because mere opinions cannot by definition be false statements of fact, opinions alone will not support a cause of action for trade libel. (Hofmann Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 390, 397, 248 C.R. 384; ComputerXpress v. Jackson, supra; see Melaleuca v. Clark (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1344, 78 C.R.2d 627, infra, §650 [holding statements in issue to be factual].)

Trade libel differs from defamation in that the plaintiff "must prove special damages in the form of pecuniary loss; he must carry the burden of proving that the disparaging statement is false; and 'such personal elements of damage as mental distress have been strictly excluded from these claims.'" (Guess v. Superior Court (1986) 176 C.A.3d 473, 479, 222 C.R. 79 [quoting Prosser in part]; see Polygram Records v. Superior Court (1985) 170 C.A.3d 543, 549, 216 C.R. 252, citing the text [distinguishing trade libel and defamation]; 104 A.L.R.5th 523 [defamation of manufacturer regarding product].)

If, however, disparagement of the goods is made in such a manner as to imply business dishonesty or incompetence of the plaintiff, plaintiff is not limited to the pecuniary damages resulting from the disparagement, but may sue for defamation. (See Rosenberg v. J.C. Penney Co. (1939) 30 C.A.2d 609, 620, 86 P.2d 696 [defendant displayed samples of plaintiff's gym shorts, labeling them "prison made merchandise," "seconds," "shoddy," etc.]; Rest.2d, Torts §623A, Comment g.)

The wiser strategic choice, as indicated in the Rosenberg case, is to sue for defamation. In Erlich v. Etner (1964) 224 C.A.2d 69, 36 C.R. 256, the court pointed out that in such an action, based on disparagement of goods that implied business dishonesty, recovery could have been had on the theory of libel per se, without proof of special damages. (224

C.A.2d 73.) But plaintiff elected to proceed solely on the theory of trade libel, and failed to meet the burden of proving particular losses caused by the disparagement. The opinion quotes Prosser as follows: "[T]he remedy has been so hedged about with limitations that its usefulness to the plaintiff has been seriously impaired. It is nearly always held that it is not enough to show a general decline in his business resulting from the falsehood, even where no other cause for it is apparent, and that it is only the loss of specific sales that can be recovered. This means, in the usual case, that the plaintiff must identify the particular purchasers who have refrained from dealing with him, and specify the transactions of which he claims to have been deprived." (224 C.A.2d 73.) (See 17 Hastings L. J. 394 [Erlich].)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.130, 131, 133 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

72 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel. 4. Damage: Pecuniary Loss.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 646

[§ 646] Damage: Pecuniary Loss.

Pecuniary loss is a necessary element in all injurious falsehood cases. (See Davis v. Wood (1943) 61 C.A.2d 788, 799, 143 P.2d 740; Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 412, 425, 89 C.R. 514; supra, §643; Seeley v. Seymour (1987) 190 C.A.3d 844, 864, 237 C.R. 282, supra, §644; supra, §§640, 641, 642, 645.)

This element is described in Rest.2d, Torts §633(1): "The pecuniary loss for which a publisher of injurious falsehood is subject to liability is restricted to (a) the pecuniary loss that results directly and immediately from the effect of the conduct of third persons, including impairment of vendibility or value caused by disparagement, and (b) the expense of measures reasonably necessary to counteract the publication, including litigation to remove the doubt cast upon vendibility or value by disparagement." The Comments on Clause (1)(a) discuss such losses as those caused by deprivation of opportunity to sell to a particular purchaser, resulting from diminution in price, and caused by prevention of sales to unidentified persons. (See Rest.2d, Torts §633, Comment c et seq.) The Comment on Clause (1)(b) points out that the recovery may be the expense of defending an action, or other expenses reasonably necessary to counteract the injurious publication, such as the cost of notifying customers of its falsity or the publication of denials. (See Rest.2d, Torts §633, Comment k.)

In Appel v. Burman (1984) 159 C.A.3d 1209, 206 C.R. 259, supra, §643, the trial judge found that, during the 2-year period of delay caused by defendants, the cost of construction of the planned addition to plaintiffs' home had risen, and damages representing the difference were awarded. The judgment also included attorneys' fees and costs incurred in clearing the title. Held, award affirmed. Though the disparagement may not have affected vendibility of the property (it could have been sold with or without the addition), the disparagement did result in a loss of value by reason of the increased cost of construction of the addition. "Regardless of how much the property could be sold for, then or now, this particular sum of money could never be recovered other than in the instant action." (159 C.A.3d 1215.)

A plaintiff suing for trade libel may not rely on a general decline in business to show pecuniary loss from the alleged falsehood, but must instead identify particular customers and transactions of which it was deprived as a result. (Mann v. Quality Old Time Service (2004) 120 C.A.4th 90, 109, 15 C.R.3d 215.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

73 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.
5. Defenses.
a. Truth.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 647

[§ 647] Truth.

To be actionable, the disparaging statement must be untrue. But truth is not merely a defense as in actions for defamation; falsity is an element of the cause of action, on which the plaintiff has the burden of proof. (Rest.2d, Torts §§634, 651(1)(c); see 50 Am.Jur.2d (1995 ed.), Libel and Slander §559.) (On functions of court and jury, see Rest.2d, Torts §652.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.136

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 50 Am.Jur.2d (2006 ed.), Libel and Slander §535.

74 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel. 5. Defenses. b. Absolute Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 648

[§ 648] Absolute Privilege.

The absolute privileges applicable in actions for defamation (see supra, §561 et seq.) are also available in disparagement of title actions. (Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C.2d 375, 378, 295 P.2d 405 ["Questions of privilege relating to both torts are now resolved in the light of" C.C. 47].) The same is true in actions for trade libel. (117 Sales Corp. v. Olsen (1978) 80 C.A.3d 645, 651, 145 C.R. 778.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §635; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.94.)

The privilege protecting publications in a judicial proceeding (see C.C. 47(b)(2), supra, §567) extends to any publication that "has a reasonable relation to the action and is permitted by law." (Albertson v. Raboff, supra, 46 C.2d 381.) In the Albertson case, it was held that a notice of lis pendens (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §344 et seq.) is a publication in the course of a judicial proceeding and is therefore absolutely privileged. The purpose of the lis pendens is to give constructive notice of the facts in the pleadings, and hence, it is in effect a republication of the absolutely privileged pleadings. "It would be anomalous to hold that a litigant is privileged to make a publication necessary to bring an action but that he can be sued for defamation if he lets anyone know that he has brought it ... particularly when he is expressly authorized by statute to let all the world know that he has brought it. Furthermore, [C.C. 47(d)] extends the privilege to reports of judicial proceedings in public journals. It cannot reasonably be held that the Legislature meant to accord such journals a greater immunity for giving actual notice of a proceeding to their numerous readers than that accorded litigants for giving the constructive notice thereof that the Legislature has authorized them to give." (46 C.2d 380.) (See Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 C.A.3d 1, 25, 105 C.R. 414 [filing of claim of mechanic's lien; Albertson followed]; Woodcourt II Ltd. v. McDonald Co. (1981) 119 C.A.3d 245, 249, 173 C.R. 836 [same]; Wilton v. Mountain Wood Homeowners Assn. (1993) 18 C.A.4th 565, 569, 22 C.R.2d 471 [following Frank Pisano & Associates; publication of assessment liens by condominium homeowners association is absolutely privileged]; Ojavan Investors v. California Coastal Commission (1994) 26 C.A.4th 516, 528, 32 C.R.2d 103 [cease and desist notice issued in proceedings before California Coastal Commission; litigation privilege applies to quasi-judicial as well as judicial proceedings]; Swanson v. St. John's Regional Med. Center (2002) 97 C.A.4th 245, 249, 118 C.R.2d 325 [lien notices authorized by law are protected by litigation privilege; liens were filed by hospitals for value of services against patients' recoveries from third-party tortfeasors]; Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1367, 1381, 1 C.R.3d 116 [in cause of action for slander of title, recordation of lis pendens is not absolutely privileged, unless underlying action properly alleges real property claim]; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev 107; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 159.)

In Earp v. Nobmann (1981) 122 C.A.3d 270, 175 C.R. 767, the absolute privilege was unsuccessfully invoked in connection with a lis pendens filed by E and an expungement order obtained by H.

(a) Filing of the lis pendens was clearly protected by absolute privilege under Albertson. (122 C.A.3d 284.)

(b) E could have filed an undertaking to prevent expungement, but chose not to do so: Instead, he attempted to circumvent the statute by permitting the lis pendens to be expunged and by personally notifying nonparties of his claim of an interest in the land. Held, the absolute privilege did not extend to this self-help remedy. "His actions were not intended to further the litigation and to promote justice, but rather were intended to circumvent a judicial determination with which he was unhappy and to impede the interests of justice implicit therein." (122 C.A.3d 285.)

(c) E's extrajudicial communications were within the qualified privilege of C.C. 47(3) (now C.C. 47(c)), concerning communications to persons interested in the subject matter (see supra, §591), but this privilege is defeated by a showing of malice. (122 C.A.3d 285.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.136

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Notice of lis pendens:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §371 et seq.

75 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.
5. Defenses.
c. Qualified Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 649

[§ 649] Qualified Privilege.

(1) Privileged Communications. The qualified privileges applicable to actions for defamation (see supra, §591 et seq.) are also applicable to publication of an injurious falsehood. (Franklin v. Dynamic Details (2004) 116 C.A.4th 375, 384, 10 C.R.3d 429; Rest.2d, Torts §646A; see C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.94.)

The most important is the privilege of a business competitor or rival claimant. Thus, a person who honestly claims title or an interest in property is privileged to assert that person's interest for his or her own protection. (See Thompson v. White (1886) 70 C. 135, 136, 11 P. 564; Rest.2d, Torts §647.) And a competitor may make a favorable comparison of his or her own goods with those of the plaintiff. This comparison, even though it involves deliberate exaggeration and is not honestly believed, is nevertheless an accepted practice, and is not actionable unless accompanied by particular false statements of fact. (Rest.2d, Torts §649; cf. Rosenberg v. J.C. Penney Co. (1939) 30 C.A.2d 609, 622, 86 P.2d 696, supra, §645 [disparagement imputing fraudulent business practices was libelous].)

(2) Abuse of Privilege. A qualified privilege is defeated by a showing of malice or lack of good faith. (Gudger v. Manton (1943) 21 C.2d 537, 545, 134 P.2d 217; Toney v. California (1976) 54 C.A.3d 779, 793, 126 C.R. 869; see Davis v. Wood (1943) 61 C.A.2d 788, 794, 143 P.2d 740 [slander of title by recording notice of location of mining claim on property leased by plaintiff]; Baker v. Kale (1947) 83 C.A.2d 89, 95, 189 P.2d 57, supra, §643 [lessor falsely informed lessee's purchaser that lease was invalid and that purchaser would not be allowed to take possession, his purpose being to break the lease and regain possession]; Rest.2d, Torts §650A.)

If the complaint discloses existence of a qualified privilege and the complaint does not allege malice, a general demurrer will lie. (Smith v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1986) 177 C.A.3d 625, 630, 223 C.R. 339.)

West's Key Number Digest, Libel and Slander k.136

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

76 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

D. Slander of Title and Trade Libel.

5. Defenses.

d. Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 650

[§ 650] Constitutional Limits on Recovery.

In Melaleuca v. Clark (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1344, 78 C.R.2d 627, plaintiff company sold household cleaning, nutrition, and pet care products. Defendant, an independent research scientist, ran a diagnostic center. She claimed to have discovered a cure for cancer, AIDS, and other serious diseases, through the development of a device called a syncrometer, which could detect the presence of benzene and other carcinogenic chemicals that supposedly caused the diseases. Through the use of the syncrometer, defendant claimed to have found benzene in plaintiff's products. When these findings were published in several books, plaintiff retained an independent laboratory, which did not find benzene in plaintiff's products. Plaintiff sued for trade libel and other causes of action. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed; the jury was not properly instructed on the constitutional requirement of actual malice.

(a) Defendant's statements about the quality and contents of consumer goods were a matter of public concern. Regardless of whether the plaintiff is a public official or figure or a private person, liability may not constitutionally be imposed for "injurious falsehood," including trade libel, without a showing of actual malice. This follows from the limited interest in protecting products and the constitutional preference for the free exchange of ideas. This principle stands in contrast to injury to reputation, where negligence will suffice when the plaintiff is a private person. This distinction between injury to reputation and injury to one's products is recognized in the Rest.2d, Torts §§623A, 626. (66 C.A.4th 1363.)

(b) The test of "actual malice" is a subjective one, i.e., did the defendant know of the falsity or act in reckless disregard of truth or falsity. Unfortunately the jury was instructed that it could find actual malice if defendant "must have had" serious doubts about the truth of her statements, thereby introducing an objective standard under which the jury could infer actual knowledge. And because the evidence with respect to defendant's requisite subjective knowledge was very close, the error was prejudicial. (66 C.A.4th 1365.) (On First Amendment protections in defamation actions, see supra, §601 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

77 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

a. Nature of Right to Privacy.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 651

[§ 651] Nature of Right to Privacy.

(1) Common Law Right. The "right of privacy," or right to be "left alone" to live an ordinary private life without being subjected to unwarranted or undesired publicity, was the creation of law writers in 1890, and is recognized by most courts. The tort action provides a remedy for situations in which there is neither injury to a property right nor breach of contract, and where a civil action for defamation would fail because of the defense of truth. (See generally Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 C.2d 273, 276, 239 P.2d 630; Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 287, 297 P. 91, infra, §664; Kerby v. Hal Roach Studios (1942) 53 C.A.2d 207, 210, 127 P.2d 577; Smith v. National Broadcasting Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 807, 811, 292 P.2d 600; Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 116, 14 C.R. 208; Carlisle v. Fawcett Publications (1962) 201 C.A.2d 733, 744, 20 C.R. 405; Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich (1974) 43 C.A.3d 880, 887, 118 C.R. 370, infra, §689; Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 409, 416, 198 C.R. 342, infra, §678; Rest.2d, Torts §652A et seq.; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383; BAJI, No. 7.20; CACI, No. 1800; on application of the Uniform Single Publication Act, see supra, §538; on pleading invasion of privacy, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §702 et seq.) "Acceptance of the right to privacy has grown with the increasing capability of the mass media and electronic devices with their capacity to destroy an individual's anonymity, intrude upon his most intimate activities, and expose his most personal characteristics to public gaze." (Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 533, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692.)

The common law right to privacy is generally analyzed under four categories of wrongs or types of invasion. (See Rest.2d, Torts §652A and Comment b; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §424.) These include intrusion into private affairs (see infra, §658 et seq.), public disclosure of private facts (see infra, §664 et seq.), placing the plaintiff in a false light (see infra, §673 et seq.), and appropriation of the plaintiff's name or likeness (see infra, §676 et seq.). More than one type of privacy tort may apply to a particular fact situation. (Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equipment Co. (1955) 138 C.A.2d 82, 86, 291 P.2d 194 ["false light" and "appropriation" theories].)

(2) Constitutional and Statutory Rights. The California Constitution (Art. I, §1) lists "privacy" among the fundamental "inalienable rights" of all people. This self-executing provision confers a right of action beyond the scope of the decisional law on the common law tort action. (Porten v. University of San Francisco (1976) 64 C.A.3d 825, 829, 134 C.R. 839; Burt v. Orange (2004) 120 C.A.4th 273, 284, 15 C.R.3d 373.) (For full discussion of California constitutional right to privacy, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §575 et seq.; on federal constitutional right to privacy, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §558 et seq.)

A number of statutes protect against specific types of privacy violations and provide remedies in the nature of tort actions. (See infra, §§660 et seq., 666 et seq., 681 et seq.; on privacy legislation generally, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §603 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(1), 8.5(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Common Law Right: See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §2.1 et seq. Pleading invasion of privacy:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §746 et seq.

(3) (New) Scope of Right. "The courts have found it analytically helpful to identify two meanings for 'the right of privacy': 'secrecy' and 'seclusion.' ... [A] person claiming the privacy right of seclusion asserts the right to be free, in a particular location, from disturbance by others. A person claiming the privacy right of secrecy asserts the right to prevent disclosure of personal information to others. Invasion of the privacy right of seclusion involves the means, manner, and method of communication in a location (or at a time) which disturbs the recipient's seclusion. By contrast, invasion of the privacy right of secrecy involves the content of communication that occurs when someone's private, personal information is disclosed to a third person." (ACS Systems v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (2007) 147 C.A.4th 137, 148, 53 C.R.3d 786, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, Supp., §91 [advertising injury clause in commercial general liability insurance policy covered liability for injuries resulting from invasion of "secrecy" privacy, but not "seclusion" privacy].)

78 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

b. Defamation Distinguished.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 652

[§ 652] Defamation Distinguished.

Although the damages in privacy cases are similar to those in defamation cases (see infra, §1704), the torts are fundamentally different. "The gist of the cause of action in a privacy case is not injury to the character or reputation, but a direct wrong of a personal character resulting in injury to the feelings without regard to any effect which the publication may have on the property, business, pecuniary interest, or the standing of the individual in the community. ... The right of privacy concerns one's own peace of mind, while the right of freedom from defamation concerns primarily one's reputation. ... The injury is mental and subjective. It impairs the mental peace and comfort of the person and may cause suffering much more acute than that caused by a bodily injury." (Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equipment Co. (1955) 138 C.A.2d 82, 86, 291 P.2d 194; see Rest.2d, Torts §652E, Comment b; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 291; 23 Stanf. L. Rev. 547; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §§6, 7.)

However, "[t]here has been a good deal of overlapping of defamation in the false light cases, and apparently either action, or both, will very often lie." (Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 120, 14 C.R. 208; on false light cases, see infra, §673 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

79 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

c. No Relational Right.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 653

[§ 653] No Relational Right.

(1) General Rule. A number of attempts have been made to recover for the invasion of privacy of another, usually by a spouse or other close relative of a deceased person whose privacy was allegedly invaded. The courts have uniformly held, in the absence of statute, that the right is personal and does not survive, and that there is no "relational right" on which an action may be based. (See Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 C.2d 315, 323, 239 P.2d 876 [no cause of action by father for unwarranted publicity concerning arrest and prosecution of son]; Kelly v. Johnson Publishing Co. (1958) 160 C.A.2d 718, 721, 325 P.2d 659 [no cause of action by sister for story that her deceased brother, an ex-boxing champion, "wound up a dope-sodden derelict"]; Hendrickson v. California Newspapers (1975) 48 C.A.3d 59, 62, 121 C.R. 429, citing the text [no cause of action by members of family of deceased whose prior criminal conviction was revealed in obituary published by defendant]; Flynn v. Higham (1983) 149 C.A.3d 677, 683, 197 C.R. 145, citing the text [no cause of action by children against publisher of book asserting that their father was homosexual and Nazi spy]; Rest.2d, Torts §652I; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 92; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §§14, 15, 16, 18.)

However, where the invasion of the other person's privacy also constitutes an invasion of the plaintiff's privacy, recovery is allowed. In Vescovo v. New Way Enterprises, Ltd. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 582, 130 C.R. 86, defendant published the following classified advertisement in its Los Angeles Free Press: "Hot Lips--Deep Throat Sexy young bored housewife Norma." The advertisement gave the address of plaintiff Norma Vescovo. She and her husband joined in an action for invasion of their privacy (not yet tried) and for invasion of privacy of their daughter Frankie, aged 14 years. Defendant's demurrer, based on the rule that even a close relative may not recover for invasion of the privacy of another, was sustained and judgment was rendered against Frankie. Held, reversed. The complaint alleged that, as a result of the advertisement, the Vescovo home had been wrongfully invaded by many undesirable and unsavory persons demanding to see Norma, and using lewd, abusive, and threatening language on being asked to leave; that these acts frightened Frankie and made her the subject of contempt and ridicule of her neighbors and friends, with resulting physical and mental suffering. Thus, the cause of action was not based on the derogatory information about Norma. "Frankie seeks to recover for the physical intrusion by various unsavory characters on her own solitude in her own home." (60 C.A.3d 588.)

(2) Statutory Modification of Rule. C.C. 3344.1 allows specified relatives of a deceased personality to recover damages for the commercial exploitation of the deceased personality's identity occurring within 70 years of his death.

(See infra, §685; Rest.2d, Torts §652I, Comment b [nature of statutes permitting invasion of privacy actions after death].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

80 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

d. Private Disclosure.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 654

[§ 654] Private Disclosure.

The right of privacy is violated only by "publicity" or "public disclosure"--a communication to the public in general, or to a large number of persons, as distinguished from an individual or a few persons. (See Schwartz v. Thiele (1966) 242 C.A.2d 799, 805, 51 C.R. 767 [defendant's filing of petition asserting that plaintiff was mentally ill]; Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment a; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 393.)

This limitation has an important application to collection agency practices. In Timperley v. Chase Collection Service (1969) 272 C.A.2d 697, 77 C.R. 782, defendant collection agency had an attorney's bill that was allegedly owed by plaintiff, a postal employee. Defendant wrote a letter to plaintiff's employer, the U.S. Post Office, informing the employer of the bill, and asking that plaintiff be advised that, unless payment was made within 5 days, legal action would be taken. Plaintiff alleged that, as a result, he was forced to resign his job, and also that the debt was disputed. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed. A creditor, or his or her collection agent, has a limited right to reveal to others the existence of the debt in order to collect it. The privilege covers communications to the debtor's employer disclosing the fact of the debt (even if it is disputed), and requesting aid of the employer. (272 C.A.2d 699.) The court observed, however, that it would be an invasion of privacy to inform the public generally of the plaintiff's failure to pay his debts, e.g., by publication in a newspaper or publicly posted notice. (272 C.A.2d 700.) And harassment by continual calls and letters, or letters simulating court documents, or service of an illegal wage assignment, would be actionable. (272 C.A.2d 700.) (See 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §§63, 117 et seq.; 42 A.L.R.3d 865 [threats, institution, or prosecution of legal action as invasion of privacy].)

In Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 C.A.3d 265, 165 C.R. 608, defendant, relying on Schwartz and Timperley, contended that mailing letters to some 20 people--a small select group--did not meet the requirement of public exposure. Affirming a judgment for plaintiff, the court observed that defendant's letters were sent to "a diverse group of people living in several states and totally unconnected either socially or professionally," including former spouses, parents, neighbors, and faculty members of a university at which plaintiff was doing advanced study. (107 C.A.3d 272.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

81 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

e. Oral Disclosure.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 655

[§ 655] Oral Disclosure.

In Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 297 P. 91, infra, §664, the court summarized the then recognized rules limiting recovery, one of which was: "The right of privacy can only be violated by printings, writings, pictures or other permanent publications or reproductions, and not by word of mouth." (112 C.A. 290.) This dictum was followed by direct holdings in Gautier v. General Tel. Co. (1965) 234 C.A.2d 302, 309, 44 C.R. 404, and Grimes v. Carter (1966) 241 C.A.2d 694, 698, 50 C.R. 808, which noted that "[w]hatever may be the ruling in other jurisdictions, California adheres to the proposition that the right of privacy may not be violated by word of mouth only."

Some jurisdictions take the opposite view, i.e., that oral declarations may in a proper case provide the basis for a cause of action. (See 62A Am.Jur. (2005 ed.), Privacy §35; 19 A.L.R.3d 1318 [invasion of right of privacy by merely oral declarations].) And the statute authorizing an action for commercial use of a name or likeness does not exclude oral advertising or solicitation. (See C.C. 3344, infra, §§681, 683.)

In H & M Associates v. El Centro (1980) 109 C.A.3d 399, 167 C.R. 392, the court observed that the rule rejecting oral declarations had been criticized, particularly since the growth of radio, and that it was laid down before the adoption of the California constitutional provision (see supra, §577). "There is nothing in section 1 which suggests that one's right to privacy may be inalienable except for the intrusion caused by oral statements. In this electronic age, where oral statements may ultimately receive wider coverage than a printed statement, there is no reason to immunize parties making such statements from liability. The test should turn on the nature of the privacy invaded and not on the means of communication." (109 C.A.3d 412.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

1. In General.

f. Necessity of Showing Malice.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 656

[§ 656] Necessity of Showing Malice.

Generally, malice is not an element of the tort. "The motives of a person charged with invading the right are not material with respect to the determination whether there is a right of action, and malice is not an essential element of a violation of the right. ... Inadvertence or mistake is no defense where the publication does in fact refer to the plaintiff in such manner as to violate his right of privacy." (Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equipment Co. (1955) 138 C.A.2d 82, 87, 291 P.2d 194.) (See Kerby v. Hal Roach Studios (1942) 53 C.A.2d 207, 213, 127 P.2d 577 [malice not required]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §37.)

However, false light invasion of privacy cases are deemed comparable to defamation actions and a showing of constitutional (actual) malice is required in circumstances where it would be necessary under defamation law. (See infra, §673.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

83 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS E. Invasion of Privacy. 1. In General. g. Commentary.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 657

[§ 657] Commentary.

The tort has been a favorite subject of commentators. The following are illustrative:

(1) Texts. C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §§10.1 et seq., 11.34 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §424 et seq.; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §9.5; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §1 et seq.

(2) Practice Works. Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Invasion of Privacy, Chap. 20; Cal. Civil Practice, Civil Rights, §6:4 et seq.; 43 Proof of Facts 2d 449 [disclosure of private facts]; 40 Proof of Facts 3d 237 [governmental liability for privacy deprivation resulting from erroneous information in public records].

(3) Law Reviews. 27 Cal. L. Rev. 84; 29 Cal. L. Rev. 229, 233; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383; 50 Cal. L. Rev. 357; 77 Cal. L. Rev. 957 [The Social Foundations of Privacy: Community and Self in the Common Law Tort]; 80 Cal. L. Rev. 1133 [The Right to Privacy Revisited: Privacy, News, and Social Change, 1890-1900]; 7 Cal. Western L. Rev. 216, 222; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 863; 83 Harv. L. Rev. 1923; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 1892; 17 Hastings L. J. 377; 54 Hastings L. J. 877 [privacy wrongs without remedies]; 12 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 301 ["Tenant Reports as an Invasion of Privacy: A Legislative Proposal"]; 18 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 949 [privacy and the press]; 7 Santa Clara Lawyer 242; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 53 [business entity's right to privacy]; 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 81; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 125; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 82; 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 102, 311; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 280; 41 So. Cal. L. Rev. 902; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 604; 16 Stanf. L. Rev. 107; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 919 [damages recoverable for publication of information tortiously obtained by newsmen]; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 92; 9 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 862; 46 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1633 [proposed legislative regulation of paparazzi conduct]; 2 West L.A. L. Rev. 74 [computer use and privacy].

(4) Annotations. 11 A.L.R.3d 1296 [eavesdropping as violating right of privacy]; 18 A.L.R.3d 873 [invasion of privacy by publication dealing with one other than plaintiff]; 23 A.L.R.3d 865 [invasion of privacy by use of plaintiff's name or likeness in advertising]; 30 A.L.R.3d 203 [invasion of privacy by use of plaintiff's name or likeness for nonadvertising purposes]; 33 A.L.R.3d 154 [public disclosure of person's indebtedness as invasion of privacy]; 56 A.L.R.3d 386 [invasion of privacy by radio or television]; 56 A.L.R.3d 434 [uninvited entry into another's living quarters as invasion of privacy]; 56 A.L.R.3d 457 [unsolicited mailing, distribution, house call, or telephone call as invasion of privacy]; 57 A.L.R.3d 16 [waiver or loss of right of privacy]; 84 A.L.R.3d 1159 [publication of address as well as name of person as invasion of privacy]; 87 A.L.R.3d 145 [state or municipal liability for invasion of privacy]; 58 A.L.R.4th 902 [false light invasion of privacy--accusation or innuendo as to criminal acts]; 67 A.L.R.4th 1086 [invasion of privacy by member of clergy, church, or religious group]; 69 A.L.R.4th 1059 [newsgathering entity's intrusion as invasion of privacy].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Texts. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.5.

(2) Practice Works. See 105 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [employer liability for employee misuse of Internet]; 103 Proof of Facts 3d 159 [public disclosure of private facts; superseding 43 Proof of Facts 2d 449, text, p. 962].

(3) Law Reviews. See 28 J. Juvenile Law 30 [invasion of privacy and defamation on "Myspace" Internet service]; 33 Pepperdine L. Rev. 311 [right to anonymity in public places]; 45 Santa Clara L. Rev. 679 [camera phone technology and privacy rights].

84 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
E. Invasion of Privacy.
2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.
a. Common Law Action.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 658

[§ 658] In General.

"One who intentionally intrudes, physically or otherwise, upon the solitude or seclusion of another or his private affairs or concerns, is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy, if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person." (Rest.2d, Torts §652B.) (See C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.41 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §426; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d, §9.6; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 389; 27 Hastings Const. L. Q. 539 [First Amendment Protection for Newsgathering: Applying the Actual Malice Standard to Recovery of Damages for Intrusion]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (1990 ed.), Privacy §§29, 30, 46; 67 Proof of Facts 3d 249 [violation of privacy of Internet user by cookies or other means]; 86 A.L.R.3d 374 [unauthorized photographs]; 77 A.L.R.5th 541 [HIV testing without consent as giving rise to invasion of privacy claim for intrusion on seclusion]; BAJI, No. 7.20; CACI, No. 1800.)

Shadowing in an objectionable manner is an example of actionable intrusion. In Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 C.A.3d 654, 109 C.R. 269, plaintiff sued defendant for personal injuries allegedly caused while shopping in the store. Defendant engaged attorneys and a private investigating firm. The latter sent an employee to gain admittance to plaintiff's hospital room and, by deception, to secure the address of a man who had accompanied plaintiff on her shopping trip. Plaintiff brought this action for invasion of privacy. Held, a cause of action was stated. (33 C.A.3d 659.) (See 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §47 et seq.; 13 A.L.R.3d 1025 [shadowing and trailing]; 38 A.L.R.4th 954 [retailer's surveillance of fitting or dressing rooms]; on statutory tort of stalking, see infra, §662.)

Eavesdropping is another example. (See Rest.2d, Torts §652B, Comment b; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §46; 49 A.L.R.4th 430 [eavesdropping on extension telephone].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 734, footnote 18, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, Supp., infra, §659 [common law tort of intrusion into private affairs may extend to intrusions that do not rise to level of federal constitutional violation; tort was developed to provide remedy for highly offensive intrusions on privacy that otherwise would go unredressed]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §9.6; C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §2.8 et seq.

85 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS
E. Invasion of Privacy.
2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.
a. Common Law Action.
2. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 659

[§ 659] Illustrations.

In Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 232 C.R. 668, defendant N, an NBC news field producer in charge of new stories, was assigned a minidocumentary on fire department paramedics and their work. He obtained permission from the City of Los Angeles for his camera crew and himself to accompany a unit of paramedics, and on several occasions entered private homes with the paramedics and filmed their activities. In the present case, plaintiffs' husband and father had a heart attack in his bedroom, and N filmed the unsuccessful attempt to save his life. The film was then used by defendant NBC on its nightly news and in a commercial advertising its minidocumentary. Plaintiff wife was present at the filming, but no attempt was made to obtain her consent to the intrusion, and she and her daughter filed this action. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed as to plaintiff wife, but affirmed as to plaintiff daughter (who was not present when the intrusion occurred and was not the owner of the premises).

(a) The plaintiff must meet the Restatement test of "highly offensive to a reasonable person." (187 C.A.3d 1482.) "A court determining the existence of 'offensiveness' would consider the degree of intrusion, the context, conduct and circumstances surrounding the intrusion as well as the intruder's motives and objectives, the setting into which he intrudes, and the expectations of those whose privacy is invaded." (187 C.A.3d 1483.)

(b) Here, reasonable people could regard the NBC camera crew's intrusion in the bedroom at a time of vulnerability and confusion occasioned by his seizure as "highly offensive" conduct. (187 C.A.3d 1484.)

Shulman v. Group W Productions (1998) 18 C.4th 200, 74 C.R.2d 843, 955 P.2d 469, involved the broadcast of audio and video material showing plaintiffs being rescued from an automobile accident. (The facts are set forth in detail, infra, §665.) Plaintiffs sued for invasion of privacy, based in part on defendant TV station's intrusion into private affairs. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Intrusion into private place, conversation, or matter.

(1) To prove actionable intrusion, the plaintiff must show that the defendant penetrated some zone of physical or sensory privacy surrounding, or obtained unwanted access to data about, the plaintiff. The tort is proven only if the plaintiff had an objectively reasonable expectation of seclusion or solitude in the place, conversation, or data source. (18 C.4th 232.)

(2) In this case, the cameraman's mere presence at the accident scene could not be regarded as intrusive, because plaintiffs did not own or control the accident scene, and the presence of journalists to record rescue efforts was in no way unusual or unexpected. However, triable issues of fact existed about the following matters concerning plaintiffs' reasonable expectation of privacy: First, plaintiffs arguably had that expectation with respect to the interior of the rescue helicopter, a place where no law or custom permitted access by the press. Second, by placing a microphone on the rescue nurse, defendant may have listened in on conversations that the parties could reasonably have expected to be private. Third, plaintiffs had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the accident scene itself, because its isolated location prevented the rescue efforts from being seen by passersby. (18 C.4th 232.)

(b) Intrusion highly offensive to reasonable person.

(1) In deciding whether a reporter's alleged intrusion into private matters is offensive, courts must consider the extent to which the intrusion is justified by the legitimate motive of gathering the news. Information collecting techniques that may be highly offensive when used for socially unprotected reasons may not be offensive to a reasonable person when employed by a journalist in pursuit of an important story. However, the mere fact that the intruder is in pursuit of a story does not justify an otherwise offensive intrusion, such as trespass into a home or wiretapping. (18 C.4th 236.)

(2) Here, recording plaintiffs' conversations with the rescuers and filming in the helicopter could be found by a jury to have been highly offensive. Arguably, the last thing an injured accident victim should have to worry about while being pried from a wrecked car is that a television producer may be recording everything that he or she says to medical personnel. Similarly, a triable issue of fact existed as to the offensiveness of the intrusion into the helicopter. A reasonable jury could have concluded that defendant's desire to get footage that would convey the real "feel" of the event did not justify the tactics employed. (18 C.4th 237.) (See 27 Western State L. Rev. 535 [Shulman].)

In Sanders v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1999) 20 C.4th 907, 85 C.R.2d 909, 978 P.2d 67, a reporter for defendant obtained employment with a "telepsychic" group and, while there, covertly video- and audiotaped several conversations with plaintiff and other coworkers. Plaintiff expected that the taped conversations could be overheard by other employees, but not that they would be videotaped by a reporter. Plaintiff alleged common law intrusion into private affairs and was awarded judgment on that cause of action. The Court of Appeal reversed on the ground that the parties did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed. In stating that the common law tort of intrusion into private affairs had two elements, i.e., (1) intrusion into a private matter (2) in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person, Shulman reiterated the requirement that an intrusion plaintiff must have had a reasonable expectation of privacy. However, neither Shulman nor any other case stated that the expectation of privacy, in order to be reasonable for purposes of the intrusion tort, must have been of absolute or complete privacy. (20 C.4th 915.) Therefore, "we conclude that in the workplace, as elsewhere, the reasonableness of a person's expectation of visual and aural privacy depends not only on who might have been able to observe the subject interaction, but on the identity of the claimed intruder and the means of intrusion. ... For this reason, we answer the briefed question affirmatively: a person who lacks a reasonable expectation of complete privacy in a conversation, because it could be seen and overheard by coworkers (but not the general public), may nevertheless have a claim for invasion of privacy by intrusion based on a television reporter's covert videotaping of that conversation." (20 C.4th 923.)

The following cases are also illustrative of intrusion into private affairs:

Vescovo v. New Way Enterprises, Ltd. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 582, 587, 130 C.R. 86, supra, §653 [newspaper was liable for invasion of daughter's privacy by persons answering unauthorized ad accusing her mother of promiscuity].

Sacramento County Deputy Sheriffs' Assn. v. Sacramento (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1468, 1487, 59 C.R.2d 834 [video surveillance of nonprivate office in booking area of county jail was not sufficiently "offensive" to constitute invasion of privacy, where objective was lawful (to catch a thief), intrusiveness was abated by absence of audio capabilities, and plaintiffs had little expectation of privacy].

Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1066, 1075, 84 C.R.2d 329 [defendants, TV reporters posing as investors, taped plaintiffs' "sales pitch" in crowded restaurant; defendants neither intruded into private place nor acted in manner highly offensive to reasonable person].

Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharmaceuticals (2001) 86 C.A.4th 365, 372, 103 C.R.2d 410 [doctor's breast examination of patient in front of drug salesperson, who was present as part of training program, was intrusion into private affairs; consent defense was unavailable where salesperson was introduced as "someone observing physician's work," and his true identity was not revealed prior to examination].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, plaintiff, the subject of a prominent case study on recovered memory of childhood abuse, sued a critic of the study and of the repressed memory theory for intrusion into private affairs. In response to defendant's anti-SLAPP motion, plaintiff offered evidence that defendant obtained personal and sensitive information about plaintiff from plaintiff's former foster mother by misrepresenting herself as an associate of the psychiatrist who undertook the study. Held, denial of the motion affirmed. An action for intrusion may be based on the defendant obtaining personal information about the plaintiff from another person or entity by improper means. (40 C.4th 732.)

86 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 660

[§ 660] In General.

Certain kinds of intrusion have been made actionable by legislation. Among these statutes are the following and those in the immediately succeeding sections.

(1) Harassment. C.C.P. 527.6 authorizes a temporary restraining order and injunction against "harassment," defined as "unlawful violence, a credible threat of violence, or a knowing and wilful course of conduct directed at a specific person which seriously alarms, annoys, or harasses the person, and which serves no legitimate purpose." (For full discussion of statute and procedure under it, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §318 et seq.)

(2) Use of Voice Stress Analyzer Without Consent. A voice stress analyzer is a system that examines or records voice prints or other voice stress patterns of a person to determine the truth or falsity of statements made. Its covert use for investigative purposes may be an invasion of privacy, and P.C. 637.3 prohibits its use without the person's express written consent given before the examination or recordation. Violation of the statute gives the injured person a right of action for actual damages or $ 1,000, whichever is greater. An exception to the consent requirement exists, however, for a peace officer carrying out his or her official duties. (See 10 Pacific L. J. 603.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Harassment.

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §316 et seq.

87 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.

b. Statutory Actions.

2. Wiretapping and Electronic Eavesdropping.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 661

[§ 661] Wiretapping and Electronic Eavesdropping.

P.C. 630 et seq. make it a felony-misdemeanor for any person to engage in wiretapping or various forms of electronic eavesdropping. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §414 et seq.) P.C. 637.2 allows an injured person to recover the greater of $ 5,000 or three times the amount of actual damages, or to seek both an injunction and damages. (P.C. 637.2(a), (b).) (See Shulman v. Group W Productions (1998) 18 C.4th 200, 234, 74 C.R.2d 843, 955 P.2d 469, infra, §665 [requisite confidentiality of communication does not depend on reasonable expectation that contents of communication will be confidential but on whether any participant reasonably expected and desired that communication would not be overheard or recorded by nonparticipant]; Sanders v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1999) 20 C.4th 907, 85 C.R.2d 909, 924, 978 P.2d 67, supra, §659 [fact that plaintiff may have expected conversations taped by stranger to have been overheard by coworkers meant that communications were not a "confidential communication" within meaning of statute]; Ion Equipment Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 C.A.3d 868, 879, 168 C.R. 361 [although corporation may not sue for common law invasion of privacy, it may bring statutory action]; 18 U.S.C., §2520 [authorizing civil action for interception, disclosure, or intentional use of wire, oral, or electronic communication in violation of Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968]; Marich v. MGM/UA Telecommunications (2003) 113 C.A.4th 415, 425, 7 C.R.3d 60 [eavesdropping or recording of conversations without consent is prohibited regardless of whether party expects that content of conversation may later be conveyed to third party]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 818; 49 A.L.R.4th 430 [eavesdropping on extension telephone as invasion of privacy]; 9 A.L.R.5th 553 ["caller ID" system, allowing telephone call recipients to ascertain number of telephone from which call originated, as violation of right to privacy, wiretapping statute, or similar protection]; 164 A.L.R. Fed 139 [construction and application of 18 U.S.C., §2520].) It is not necessary that the person have suffered, or be threatened with, actual damages. (P.C. 637.2(c).)

In Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 C.3d 355, 212 C.R. 143, 696 P.2d 637, supra, §14, defendant eavesdropped on a telephone conversation between plaintiff and his former wife, and the information obtained was later referred to in testimony in an arbitration proceeding to plaintiff's detriment. The court held that the "litigation" privilege was a defense to plaintiff's claim for actual damages (see supra, §567), but the statutory penalty was recoverable. "Because the right to such an award accrues at the moment of the violation, it is not barred by the judicial privilege. Here, plaintiff asserts a violation of the Privacy Act that is alleged to have taken place during a conversation with his wife prior to, and not in the context of, any judicial proceeding. Section 637.2 therefore permits him to pursue his statutory remedy of a civil lawsuit for $ 3,000 [now $5,000], even though the judicial privilege bars his recovery for the only actual damage he claims to have suffered. In view of the manifest legislative purpose to accord every citizen's privacy the utmost sanctity, section 637.2 was intended to provide those who suffer an infringement of this aspect of their personal liberty a means of vindicating their right." (38 C.3d 365.) (See Friddle v. Epstein (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1649, 1660, 21 C.R.2d 85 [statutory damages are recoverable for any invasion of privacy; following Ribas]; Lieberman v. KCOP Television (2003) 110 C.A.4th 156, 166, 1 C.R.3d 536 [to recover statutory damages for violation of P.C. 632, plaintiff was not required to prove actual damages; by providing for statutory damages of up to specified amount plus actual damages, P.C. 637.2 shows that Legislature did not intend victim to recover only actual damages].)

In Kimmel v. Goland (1990) 51 C.3d 202, 271 C.R. 191, 793 P.2d 524, an action by mobilehome owners alleging that the management representatives of a mobilehome park refused to permit them to sell their mobilehomes in place in violation of statute, the park management cross-complained against the owners and their attorney for unlawfully recording confidential telephone conversations between the parties in violation of P.C. 637.2. These recordings were transcribed by plaintiff's attorney, who subsequently filed suit. Prior to trial, the trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings as to the cross-complaint, finding that the tapes were subject to the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(2) (now C.C. 47(b)(2)) because they were made for the purpose of gathering evidence in anticipation of litigation, and that plaintiffs were therefore immune from liability for the alleged violations of the Privacy Act. The case proceeded to trial, and the tapes were admitted into evidence over the park management's objections. The jury awarded damages to plaintiffs. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed; the privilege does not apply to noncommunicative conduct.

(a) The litigation privilege extends to any communication that has some connection or logical relation to the action. (51 C.3d 209, citing Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C.3d 205, 266 C.R. 638, 786 P.2d 365, supra, §570, and other cases.) However, the statute applies only to "publications or broadcasts" made in the course of a judicial proceeding; and in the present case, in which defendants complain of injury from taping, not from publication, the privilege is not applicable. (51 C.3d 209.)

(b) Ribas and the present case share several common features. Both cases involve alleged violations of the Privacy Act in which the offending party claimed immunity under the litigation privilege. In both cases, moreover, the acts on which liability was premised were committed in anticipation of litigation but prior to the commencement of any actual judicial proceeding. These factual congruities, and the sound reasoning of Ribas, compel the conclusion that park management's claim for damages under P.C. 637.2 is not barred by the litigation privilege. (51 C.3d 211.)

(c) Implicit in the Ribas decision was the distinction between injury allegedly arising from communicative acts, i.e., the attorney's testimony, and injury resulting from noncommunicative conduct, i.e., the invasion of privacy resulting from the attorney's eavesdropping. This distinction has traditionally served as a threshold issue in determining the applicability of the litigation privilege. (51 C.3d 211, citing Westlake Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 465, 131 C.R. 90, 551 P.2d 410.) No case has been cited in which the statute was held to bar a suit arising from noncommunicative conduct; and many cases demonstrate that the privilege has been applied only to torts arising from statements or publications. (51 C.3d 211.) "Moreover, since park management's right to a statutory remedy accrued at the moment of the violation, plaintiffs' contention that the telephone conversations were made in anticipation of litigation is simply irrelevant." (51 C.3d 212.)

(d) The attorney for the plaintiffs has no special immunity. He argued that a broad application of the litigation privilege was necessary to avoid the conflict of interest that may arise when an attorney is forced to defend against a cause of action as a codefendant with his clients, and that in the course of such an action, opposing counsel will make efforts to force the attorney to reveal his work product. (51 C.3d 212.) There is no merit in this argument. Under Ev.C. 956 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §153 et seq.), the attorney-client privilege does not apply if the services of the lawyer were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime. The threat of liability in a civil action based on violation of the Privacy Act or other illegal conduct "may toll the zealouslyness of an attorney's efforts in the advance of his or her client's cause." But such forbearance "is, in fact, healthy to the extent it inhibits an attorney from assisting clients in the commission of crimes." (51 C.3d 213.)

Neither the state nor federal Constitution requires the creation of an affirmative defense to P.C. 632 based solely on a legitimate newsgathering motive. (Lieberman v. KCOP Television, supra, 110 C.A.4th 169.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

88 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 3. Stalking.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 662

[§ 662] Stalking.

(1) In General. C.C. 1708.7 creates the tort of stalking. (See 25 Pacific L. J. 827; BAJI, No. 7.58; CACI, No. 1808; on crime of stalking, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §294 et seq.) The statute is not to be construed to impair any constitutionally protected activity, including speech, protest, and assembly. (C.C. 1708.7(f).)

(2) Elements. To establish the tort of stalking, the plaintiff must prove all of the following elements:

(a) That the defendant "engaged in a pattern of conduct the intent of which was to follow, alarm, or harass the plaintiff." To establish this element, the allegations must be supported with independent corroborating evidence. (C.C. 1708.7(a)(1).)

(b) That as a result of the defendant's pattern of conduct, the plaintiff reasonably feared for his or her safety, or that of an immediate family member. "Immediate family member" refers to a spouse, parent, child, or any person related by consanguinity or affinity within the second degree. The term also includes any person who regularly resides in the plaintiff's household, or who did so within the 6 months preceding any portion of the pattern of conduct. (C.C. 1708.7(a)(2).)

(c) That the defendant either (1) as part of a pattern of conduct, made a credible threat with the intention of placing the plaintiff in reasonable fear for his or her safety, or that of an immediate family member; and, on at least one occasion, the plaintiff clearly and definitively, but unsuccessfully, demanded that the defendant stop that pattern of conduct (C.C. 1708.7(a)(3)(A)), or (2) violated a restraining order, including one issued under C.C.P. 527.6 (harassment; see supra, §660) to prohibit any act described in C.C. 1708.7(a). (C.C. 1708.7(a)(3)(B).) (See BAJI, No. 7.58.)

A "pattern of conduct" refers to "conduct composed of a series of acts over a period of time, however short, evidencing a continuity of purpose," but does not include constitutionally protected activity. (C.C. 1708.7(b)(1).) A "credible threat" refers to a verbal or written threat, including one communicated by an electronic communications device, or a threat implied by a pattern of conduct, or a combination of statements and conduct, made with the intent and apparent ability to carry out the threat so as to cause the target to reasonably fear for his or her safety or that of an immediate family member. (C.C. 1708.7(b)(2).) "Electronic communications device" includes, but is not limited to, telephones, cellular telephones, computers, video recorders, fax machines, and pagers. (C.C. 1708.7(b)(3).) "Harass" refers to "a knowing and wilful course of conduct directed at a specific person which seriously alarms, annoys, torments, or terrorizes the person, and which serves no legitimate purpose." The course of conduct must be of the type that would cause a reasonable person to suffer substantial emotional distress, and must actually cause such distress to the person stalked. (C.C. 1708.7(b)(4).)

(3) Remedies. A person committing the tort of stalking is liable for general, special and punitive damages. (C.C. 1708.7(c).) In addition, the court may grant equitable relief, including an injunction. (C.C. 1708.7(d).) The rights and remedies provided by C.C. 1708.7 are cumulative and in addition to any other rights and remedies provided by law. (C.C. 1708.7(e).)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

89 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 2. Intrusion into Private Affairs.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
- 4. Capturing Impression of Personal or Familial Activity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 663

[§ 663] Capturing Impression of Personal or Familial Activity.

A person is liable for a physical invasion of privacy if the person knowingly commits an act of trespass in order to physically invade the privacy of the plaintiff "with the intent to capture any type of visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff engaging in a personal or familial activity, and the invasion occurs in a manner that is offensive to a reasonable person." (C.C. 1708.8(a).) A person is liable for a constructive invasion of privacy in these circumstances, regardless of whether there is a physical trespass, if the visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression could not have been achieved without a trespass unless a visual or auditory enhancing device was used. (C.C. 1708.8(b).)

A person who commits either or both types of invasion of privacy is liable for up to three times the amount of any general and special damages proximately caused by the violation, and may also be liable for punitive damages, subject to proof according to C.C. 3294 (see infra, §1559). If the plaintiff proves that the invasion of privacy was committed for a commercial purpose, the defendant is further subject to disgorgement of any proceeds obtained as a result of the violation. (C.C. 1708.8(c).) One who directs, solicits, or otherwise causes another to commit a violation is likewise subject to prescribed liability. (C.C. 1708.8(d).) (See 112 Harv. L. Rev. 1367 [California "anti-paparazzi" statute].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

C.C. 1708.8(c) was relettered C.C. 1708.8(d) in 2005, and was amended to refer to a person who commits any act described in C.C. 1708.8(a), (b), or (c) (infra, this section). C.C. 1708.8(d) was relettered C.C. 1708.8(e) in 2005.

See Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 C.A.4th 1056, 1063, 69 C.R.3d 176 [C.C. 1708.8 does not provide exception to governmental investigatory immunity under Govt.C. 821.6 held by school district employees who videotaped teacher at her wedding and honeymoon during investigation of teacher's workers' compensation claim].

(New) Assault with intent to capture physical impression: A person committing an assault with intent to capture a visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff is subject to liability under C.C. 1708.8. (C.C. 1708.8(c), added in 2005.)

90 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - a. Common Law Action.
 - 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 664

[§ 664] In General.

Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 297 P. 91, the first California case to recognize the right of privacy, applied it in the context of public disclosure of private facts. Defendant produced a film called "The Red Kimono," and advertised it as the true life story of a prostitute, using plaintiff's maiden name. Plaintiff sued, alleging that she had given up her former life and had become rehabilitated, and that as a result of the film she had been abandoned by her friends and subjected to scorn and obloquy. The court held that a cause of action was stated. (112 C.A. 291.) (See Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 540, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692 ["great general interest in an unfettered press may sometimes be outweighed by other great societal interests"]; Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 C.A.3d 265, 271, 168 C.R. 608 [interest to be protected is individual freedom from wrongful publicizing of private affairs and activities that are outside realm of legitimate public concern]; Rest.2d, Torts §652D; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.45 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §427; 20 Cal. L. Rev. 100; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 392; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1042; 36 San Diego L. Rev. 489 [reemergence of disclosure of private facts tort]; 39 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1217 [disclosure of private facts tort and First Amendment]; 1 So. Cal. L. Rev. 293; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1029 [fiction based on real persons or events]; 48 A.L.R.4th 668 [doctor's unauthorized disclosure of confidential information about patient]; 40 A.L.R.5th 787 [publication of identity of sexual assault victim]; 43 Proof of Facts 2d 449 [public disclosure of private facts]; 68 Proof of Facts 3d 179 [liability for psychological harm from story or picture in media]; BAJI, No. 7.21; CACI, No. 1801.)

Because the right to privacy must be balanced against the often competing right of the press to publish newsworthy matters, the plaintiff must show (1) public disclosure (2) of a private fact (3) which would be offensive and objectionable to the reasonable person and (4) which is not of legitimate public concern. (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune (1983) 139 C.A.3d 118, 126, 188 C.R. 762, infra, §665.) (See Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 C.3d 792, 812, 163 C.R. 628 [disclosure was not offensive to reasonable person]; Shulman v. Group W Productions (1998) 18 C.4th 200, 230, 74 C.R.2d 843, 955 P.2d 469, infra, §665 [summary judgment was proper where broadcast of accident in which plaintiff was involved included no images or information regarding him that could be offensive to reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities]; Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1420, 1427, 244 C.R. 556 [name of witness who confronted murder suspect remained "private fact" despite her cooperating with police and revealing her role to selected neighbors and family members]; M.G. v. Time Warner (2001) 89 C.A.4th 623, 631, 107 C.R.2d 504 [in story covering manager of Little League baseball team who had pleaded guilty to child molestation, publication of team photograph, which thus linked plaintiffs with molestation, either as victims, perpetrators, or collaborators, constituted public disclosure of private facts, where no previous story covering manager had identified plaintiffs as members of team].)

The First Amendment generally precludes recovery for disclosure of facts that are a matter of public record. (Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1028, 1045, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, 348, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §430.) However, even a matter that was once of public record may be protected as a private fact where disclosure would not be newsworthy. (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, supra, 139 C.A.3d 132.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(5.1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 723, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, Supp., supra, §659 [disclosure of plaintiff's initials during deposition in unrelated case was not public disclosure of plaintiff's identity sufficient to support cause of action for public disclosure of private facts]; 103 Proof of Facts 3d 159 [public disclosure of private facts; superseding 43 Proof of Facts 2d 449, text, p. 973].

91 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - a. Common Law Action.
- 2. Absence of Newsworthiness.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 665

[§ 665] Absence of Newsworthiness.

One of the elements to be shown for recovery in an action based on public disclosure of private facts is the absence of "newsworthiness" of or "public concern" respecting the disclosure, i.e., the lack of legitimate public concern. (See Matson v. Dvorak (1995) 40 C.A.4th 539, 549, 550, 46 C.R.2d 880 [whether candidate for public office has refused or neglected to pay traffic fines is legitimate issue of public concern]; on defense of public interest generally, see infra, §687 et seq.)

In Diaz v. Oakland Tribune (1983) 139 C.A.3d 118, 188 C.R. 762, plaintiff, a transsexual, was born a male. After years of emotional distress and psychological counseling, plaintiff underwent successful gender corrective surgery and became a woman. She made every effort to keep her past identity and the surgery secret, enrolled in a college under her new name, and was elected student body president. During a controversy with the college administrators during her term, defendant J, a columnist on defendant newspaper, was informed by confidential sources that plaintiff was a man. J sought confirmation from unidentified persons, and later defendant newspaper's city editor found city police records of a misdemeanor charge against plaintiff as a man. J then placed this item in his column: "The students at the College of Alameda will be surprised to learn that their student body president, Toni Diaz, is no lady, but is in fact a man whose real name is Antonio. Now I realize, that in these times, such a matter is no big deal, but I suspect his female classmates in P.E. 97 may wish to make other showering arrangements." Plaintiff then brought this action for invasion of privacy, and the jury awarded her sizeable compensatory and punitive damages. Held, judgment reversed for errors in instructions, but other issues were discussed "in the interests of judicial administration." (139 C.A.3d 131.)

(a) No requirement of compelling public need. The court added to its basic description of the right to privacy the statement that the right "should be abridged only when there is a compelling public need." This language, taken from White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §357 (covert police surveillance of college classrooms) was directed at the government's burden of demonstrating a need for interference with First Amendment freedoms. (139 C.A.3d 127.) Unlike the government's activity in White, defendant's publication is a preferred right--the right to publish information in which the public has a legitimate interest; and to require that the article meet the compelling public need standard would severely abridge the constitutional right of free speech and press. (139 C.A.3d 127, citing Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d

34, infra, §§691, 692, Virgil v. Time (9th Cir. 1975) 527 F.2d 1122, and Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment d.)

(b) Error in instruction on burden of proving newsworthiness. The trial judge instructed the jury that the plaintiff had the burden of proving specified elements of the tort, but struck out defendants' proposed element that the article was not newsworthy, thus leaving the jury with the impression that it was defendants' burden to prove newsworthiness. This is erroneous. While a publisher may defend by proving that the matter was newsworthy, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that the publication was not privileged, i.e., that it was not newsworthy. (139 C.A.3d 128, 129.) "The proof that defendants have published an article containing highly offensive private matters does not itself establish a claim for relief. It certainly must be recognized that an otherwise embarrassing article may be newsworthy, depending on the circumstances. Only when the embarrassing publicity is not newsworthy can plaintiff recover damages, consistent with defendants' rights of free speech and press." (139 C.A.3d 130, citing Rest.2d, Torts §625D, and Virgil v. Time.)

(c) Newsworthiness: test and determination. In an effort to reconcile the competing interests--the individual's right to keep private facts from the public's gaze and the public's right to know--the courts have adopted a three-part test: (1) the social value of the facts published, (2) the depth of the article's intrusion into ostensibly private affairs, and (3) the extent to which the party voluntarily acceded to a position of public notoriety. (139 C.A.3d 132.)

(1) Newsworthiness as a jury question. As in the related field of obscenity, whether a publication is or is not newsworthy depends on "contemporary community mores and standards of decency." (139 C.A.3d 133, citing Briscoe, Virgil v. Time, and Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment h.) This is largely a question of fact for the jury; and "where reasonable minds could differ, we see no constitutional infirmity in allowing the jury to decide the issue of newsworthiness." (139 C.A.3d 133.)

(2) Newsworthiness as a matter of law. Defendants' contention that, as the first female student body president of the college, plaintiff was a public figure whose sexual identity was a newsworthy item, is unsound. She was a public figure for some purposes, but there was little if any connection between the information disclosed and her fitness for office; and the fact that she was the first woman student body president did not in itself warrant opening her entire private life to public inspection. (139 C.A.3d 134, citing Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment h.)

Shulman v. Group W Productions (1998) 18 C.4th 200, 74 C.R.2d 843, 955 P.2d 469, addresses the balance between privacy and the press in the context of an automobile accident. Plaintiffs R and her son W, who were not public figures, were involved in an automobile accident when their car went off the highway, overturning and trapping them inside. A rescue helicopter, containing a nurse equipped with a microphone and a cameraman employed by defendant, was sent to the accident scene. Without plaintiffs' knowledge or permission, a video was made of the rescue. It included such information as shots of R, her first name, her age, and various personal comments about the accident revealing her physical condition and mental state at that time. This video was shown on TV several months later, and plaintiffs then sued for invasion of privacy based on publication of private facts and intrusion into private affairs. Held, with respect to the count of publication of private facts, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; the accident was newsworthy. (For holding on intrusion into private affairs, see supra, §659.)

(a) Lack of newsworthiness is both an element of the tort of publication of private facts and a constitutional defense to liability for publication of truthful information, and the requirements of tort law and the Constitution are congruent. However, the exact meaning of newsworthiness, common law or constitutional, is obscured by the fact that the term is used both as a descriptive predicate and a value predicate, i.e., it can refer to the fact that there is widespread public interest or to the fact that publication, and the public's interest in it, is praiseworthy. (18 C.4th 224.) In either event, "newsworthiness" is not based on the taste of an individual judge or juror, but on the taste of reasonable members of the community. (18 C.4th 225.)

(b) A review of past decisions reveals the competing interests to be balanced in determining newsworthiness. First, the analysis requires the courts to undertake to some degree a normative assessment of the social value of a publication. Second, the evaluation depends on the degree of intrusion and the extent to which the plaintiff played an important role in public events. Courts balancing these interests have recognized that when a person is involuntarily involved in a newsworthy incident, not everything the person says or does is rendered newsworthy. Instead, newsworthiness depends on the logical relationship or nexus between the event that brought the plaintiff into the public eye and the particular facts disclosed. This approach draws a protective line at the point that the material revealed ceases to have any substantial connection to the subject matter of the newsworthy event. However, even when the required nexus exists, a holding of not newsworthy might be mandated when the intrusiveness of the revelation is greatly disproportionate to its relevance, such as when the revelation is intensely personal or intimate. (18 C.4th 226.)

(c) Here, the subject matter of the broadcast as a whole was of legitimate public concern. Automobile accidents are by their nature of interest to the great portion of the public that travels frequently by automobile, as is the rescue and medical treatment of victims, a critical service that any member of the public may someday need. A more difficult question is whether R's appearance and words at the time of the rescue were of legitimate concern. Pursuant to the aforementioned principles, this material was also newsworthy as a matter of law. Given that the focus of the broadcast was on the nurse, one of the challenges faced by her was the confusion, pain, and fear that R felt in the aftermath of the accident. Thus, the video depicting R's physical state (which was not luridly shown) and the audio showing her disorientation and despair were substantially relevant to the segment's newsworthy subject matter. Nor were the video and the audio so sensational in emotional tone or so personal in content as to make their intrusiveness disproportionate to their relevance. And the fact that the broadcast could have been edited to exclude some of R's words and images is not determinative, because the courts do not, and constitutionally could not, sit as superior editors of the press. (18 C.4th 228.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 C.4th 683, 719, 54 C.R.3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185, Supp., supra, §659 [statement at professional conference, by critic of theory of recovery of repressed memory of childhood abuse, that subject of prominent case study supporting theory engaged in destructive behavior and was currently in military could not form basis of action for public disclosure of private facts; disclosure of these facts was newsworthy in light of controversy in mental health community regarding theory]; Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 1424, 1440, 57 C.R.3d 885 [high school principal could not prevail in action for public disclosure of private facts based on statements to press by school district superintendent and local superintendent criticizing his handling of student brawls and explaining his replacement by district; statements were logically relevant to newsworthy subject of violence at school and district's response to it].

92 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.
3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
b. Statutory Actions.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 666

[§ 666] In General.

A number of statutes relate to misuse or improper disclosure of personal information, frequently providing civil remedies. Among the more significant are the following:

- (1) B. & P.C. 350, 352 [Office of Privacy Protection].
- (2) C.C. 56 et seq., 1798.91 (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518 et seq.) [regulating disclosure of medical information].
- (3) C.C. 1785.1 et seq. (4 Summary (10th), Sales, §297 et seq.) [duties of consumer credit reporting agencies].
- (4) C.C. 1786 et seq. (4 Summary (10th), Sales, §306) [duties of investigative consumer reporting agencies].
- (5) C.C. 1792 et seq. (infra, §668) [rights of identity theft victims regarding claimants against them].
- (6) C.C. 1798.29, 1798.82 (infra, §671) [disclosure of breaches of security concerning computerized personal information].
- (7) C.C. 1798 et seq. (infra, §667) [Information Practices Act, prohibiting state agencies from disclosing personal information except in designated situations].
- (8) C.C. 1798.80 et seq. (infra, §670) [destruction of customer records and restrictions on disclosure of information in them].
- (9) C.C. 1798.81.5 (infra, §669) [requiring reasonable security practices to protect personal information].
- (10) C.C. 1799.1a [disclosure of information obtained from income tax return or schedule obtained in financial or other business-related transaction].

(11) C.C. 1799.1, 1799.2 [disclosure by business performing bookkeeping services of information in its records].

(12) C.C. 1799.3 and 18 U.S.C., §2710 (infra, §672) [disclosures of personal information by videotape providers].

(13) Fin.C. 4050 et seq. [California Financial Information Privacy Act, requiring banks, insurance companies, and other financial institutions to provide specified written form to consumers on sharing nonpublic personal information and generally allowing consumers to direct that information not be shared].

(14) Ins.C. 791 et seq. (2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §521) [restrictions on collection, management, and disclosure of personal information by insurance companies].

(15) P.C. 530.5 et seq. (2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §209) [identity theft as crime].

(16) Pub.Util.C. 2891 [prohibiting phone or telegraph corporations from disclosing without consent specified information regarding residential customers or subscribers, including personal calling patterns, credit or other personal financial information, services received from the corporation, and demographic information].

(17) Welf.C. 5330 (3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.) [permitting recovery of damages, as prescribed, for release of confidential information or records in violation of the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act].

(18) 15 U.S.C., §1681 et seq. [federal Fair Credit Reporting Act, which preempts state legislation to the extent inconsistent (see 15 U.S.C., §1681t)].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) B. & P.C. 350 and 352 were repealed in 2007 and replaced by Govt.C. 11549.5.(17) Welf.C 5330:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §80 et seq.

93 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 2. Information Practices Act.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 667

[§ 667] Information Practices Act.

The Information Practices Act of 1977 (C.C. 1798 et seq.; see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §604) prohibits state agencies from disclosing personal information, except in designated situations. (C.C. 1798.24.) An individual harmed by an unauthorized disclosure may bring a civil action against the agency (C.C. 1798.45(c)) and recover an amount equal to the sum of his or her actual damages, including those for mental suffering, plus costs and attorneys' fees (C.C. 1798.48).

A civil action may also be brought against any person, other than a governmental employee acting in the scope of his or her employment, who intentionally discloses personal information obtained from information maintained by a state agency or from records within a system of records maintained by a federal agency. A successful plaintiff may recover special or general damages and must be awarded punitive damages of at least $ 2,500, plus costs and attorneys' fees. (C.C. 1798.53.)

However, the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press may be a defense to a newspaper sued under C.C. 1798.53. In Alim v. Superior Court (1986) 185 C.A.3d 144, 229 C.R. 599, the action was based in part on a newspaper's disclosure of truthful information about a former state official. The court said: "Almost any truthful commentary on public officials or public affairs, no matter how serious the invasion of privacy, will be privileged. By volunteering his services for public office the official (as opposed to the ordinary employee) waives much of his right to privacy." (185 C.A.3d 153.) Hence, "we view the press disclosure of information bearing on the fitness for office of a public official as within the protective ambit of ... California's constitutional free press constraint." (185 C.A.3d 153, citing Landmark Communications v. Virginia (1978) 435 U.S. 829, 98 S.Ct. 1535, 56 L.Ed.2d 1, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §66.) (See Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith v. Superior Court (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1072, 1091, 79 C.R. 597 [defendants were immune as journalists from liability under C.C. 1798.53 to extent that plaintiffs were limited public figures; however, defendants were entitled to First Amendment protection only insofar as information in question was used for legitimate journalistic purposes, and this protection did not extend to private disclosure of personal information].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Landmark Communications case:

Cross-Reference: 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Courts, §68.

94 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 3. Identity Theft.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 668

[§ 668] Identity Theft.

(1) In General. C.C. 1798.92 et seq. authorize a cause of action for identity theft in prescribed circumstances. (On required preliminary steps by defendant who is victim of identity theft, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §209.)

(2) Definitions. "Claimant" means a person who has or purports to have a claim for money or an interest in property in connection with a transaction procured through identity theft. (C.C. 1798.92(a).)

"Identity theft" is the unauthorized use of another person's personal identifying information to obtain credit, goods, services, money, or property. (C.C. 1798.92(b).)

"Personal identifying information" means a person's name, address, telephone number, driver's license number, Social Security number, place of employment, employee identification number, mother's maiden name, demand deposit account number, savings account number, or credit card number. (C.C. 1798.92(c).)

"Victim of identity theft" is a person whose personal identifying information is used without authorization by another to obtain credit, goods, services, money, or property, which the person did not use, and who filed a police report alleging misuse of personal identifying information under P.C. 530.5 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §209). (C.C. 1798.92(d).)

(3) Nature of Action. The action may be brought against a claimant to establish that the person bringing the action is a victim of identity theft in connection with that claim. If the claimant has sued to recover on the claim, the person may file a cross-complaint to establish that he or she is a victim of identity theft. (C.C. 1798.93(a).) A person establishes that he or she is a victim of identity theft by a preponderance of the evidence. (C.C. 1798.93(b).)

(4) Types of Relief. The victim may obtain a judgment that, as appropriate, declares that the victim is not obligated on the claim, declares void security interests in the victim's property, dismisses any cause of action based on a claim arising from the identity theft, provides an injunction restraining attempts to collect on the claim, and includes actual damages, attorneys' fees, and costs. In order to recover actual damages or attorneys' fees, the victim must show that he or she provided written notice to the claimant that a situation of identity theft might exist, including, on written request of the claimant, a valid copy of the police report or the Department of Motor Vehicles investigative report promptly filed pursuant to P.C. 530.5 at least 30 days prior to filing the action or cross-complaint. (C.C. 1798.93(c)(1)-(c)(5).)

A civil penalty, of up to $ 30,000, in addition to other damages, is recoverable if the victim establishes by clear and convincing evidence (a) that at least 30 days prior to filing the action or cross-complaint, he or she provided written notice to the claimant at the address designated by the claimant for complaints related to credit reporting issues that a situation of identity theft might exist and explaining the basis for that belief, (b) that the claimant failed to diligently investigate the victim's notification of a possible identity theft, and (c) that the claimant continued to pursue its claim against the victim after the claimant was presented with facts that were later held to entitle the victim to a judgment. (C.C. 1798.93(c)(6); on injunctive relief against claims arising from identity theft, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, Supp., §313A.)

(5) Continuing Jurisdiction. A court has continuing jurisdiction over an action or cross-complaint filed pursuant to these provisions in order to provide for the joinder of related causes of action based on the theft of the same person's identity and the joinder of further defendants based on that theft. The court's continuing jurisdiction terminates 10 years after filing of the original action unless the court, prior to that date, finds good cause to extend jurisdiction over the matter. (C.C. 1798.95.)

(6) Statute of Limitations. The action may be brought, or the defendant joined, within 4 years of the date the victim knew or, in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, of the existence of facts that would give rise to bringing the action or joining the defendant. (C.C. 1798.96.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §10.1 et seq.

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §214.(4) Types of Relief. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §10.1 et seq.

Cross-Reference: 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §§291, 311.

95 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
- 4. Failure To Protect Security of Personal Information.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 669

[§ 669] Failure To Protect Security of Personal Information.

(1) In General. A business that owns or licenses personal information about a California resident must implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices to protect the information from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure. (C.C. 1798.81.5(b); see C.C. 1798.81.5(a) [phrase "owns or licenses" includes, but is not limited to, personal information retained as part of internal customer account or for purpose of using that information in transactions with person to whom information relates].) Also, a business that discloses personal information to a nonaffiliated third party must require by contract that the third party maintain reasonable security procedures. (C.C. 1798.81.5(c).)

(2) Information Protected. "Personal information" means an individual's first name or first initial and his or her last name in combination with any one or more of specified data elements, including the individual's (a) Social Security number, (b) California driver's license or identification card number, (c) account number, credit card, or debit card number, in combination with a required security code, access code, or password that would permit access to an individual's financial account, and (d) medical information. "Personal information" does not include publicly available information that is lawfully made available to the general public from federal, state, or local government records. (C.C. 1798.81.5(d).)

(3) Exclusions. A business that is regulated by state or federal law providing greater protection to personal information than that provided by these requirements is deemed in compliance with them. Specifically, these requirements do not apply to (a) a provider of health care, health care service plan, or contractor regulated by the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.), (b) a financial institution subject to the California Financial Information Privacy Act (Fin.C. 4050), (c) a covered entity governed by the medical privacy and security rules issued by the federal Department of Health and Human Services, or (d) an entity that obtains information under an agreement pursuant to Veh.C. 1800 et seq. (Department of Motor Vehicles records) and is subject to the confidentiality requirements of the Vehicle Code. (C.C. 1798.81.5(e).)

(4) Remedies. A customer injured by a violation of these provisions may institute a civil action to recover damages. A business that fails to comply with the provisions may be enjoined. (C.C. 1798.84.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §3.1 et seq.

(3) Exclusions. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §6.47 et seq.

96 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 5. Failure To Destroy Consumer Records.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 670

[§ 670] Failure To Destroy Consumer Records.

A business is required to take all reasonable steps to destroy a customer's records within its custody or control containing personal information that is no longer to be retained. Destruction may be by (1) shredding, (2) erasing, or (3) otherwise modifying the personal information to make it unreadable or undecipherable through any means. (C.C. 1798.81.)

Subject to specified exceptions, a business that discloses a customer's personal information, including information relating to income or purchases, to a third party for direct marketing purposes must provide the customer, within 30 days after request, in writing or by e-mail, the names and addresses of the recipients of that information and specified details regarding the information disclosed. The business must also provide information to customers regarding its privacy policy and the designated means of making an inquiry regarding that policy. (C.C. 1798.83.)

A customer injured by a violation of these requirements may institute a civil action to recover damages. Also, a business that violates or proposes to violate the requirements may be enjoined. In the case of a violation of C.C. 1798.83, prescribed civil penalties are recoverable, as well as attorneys' fees and costs. These remedies are cumulative to each other and any others available under the law. Unless an alleged violation of C.C. 1798.83 is wilful, intentional, or reckless, however, the business may assert as a complete defense that it properly provided the information sought within 90 days of learning of the violation. (C.C. 1798.84.)

The term "business" is broadly defined as "a sole proprietorship, partnership, corporation, association, or other group, however organized and whether or not organized to operate at a profit." The definition specifically includes financial institutions and entities that destroy records. (C.C. 1798.80(a).)

A "customer" is a "natural person" who provides personal information to a business for the purpose of purchasing or leasing a product or obtaining a service. (C.C. 1798.80(c), (d).)

"Personal information" includes any information that identifies, relates to, describes, or is capable of being associated with, a particular individual, including, but not limited to, his or her name, signature, Social Security number, physical characteristics or description, address, telephone number, passport number, driver's license or state identification card number, insurance policy number, education, employment, employment history, bank account number, credit card number, debit card number, or any other financial information. (C.C. 1798.80(e).)

"Records" include any material, regardless of the physical form, on which information is recorded or preserved by any means, including in written or spoken words, graphically depicted, printed, or electromagnetically transmitted. However, the term does not include publicly available directories containing information an individual has voluntarily consented to have publicly disseminated or listed, such as name, address, or telephone number. (C.C. 1798.80(b).)

A waiver of these provisions is contrary to public policy, void, and unenforceable. (C.C. 1798.84(a).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §5.71 et seq.

97 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.

b. Statutory Actions.

6. Breach of Security for Computerized Personal Information.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 671

[§ 671] Breach of Security for Computerized Personal Information.

(1) Enactment and Purpose of Legislation. C.C. 1798.29 and 1798.82 require those who own or license computerized data including personal information to disclose breaches of security in prescribed circumstances.

The Legislature finds that "[t]he privacy and financial security of individuals is increasingly at risk due to the ever more widespread collection of personal information by both the private and public sector," that "[c]redit card transactions, magazine subscriptions, telephone numbers, real estate records, automobile registrations, consumer surveys, warranty registrations, credit reports, and Internet Web sites are all sources of personal information and form the source material for identity thieves," that "[i]dentity theft is one of the fastest growing crimes committed in California" and "is costly to the marketplace and to consumers," that "victims of identity theft must act quickly to minimize the damage," and that "therefore expeditious notification of possible misuse of a person's personal information is imperative." (2002 Stats., Chap. 1054, §1.)

It is the Legislature's intent to preempt all local regulation of the subject matter of these provisions. (2002 Stats., Chap. 1054, §6.)

(2) Duty To Disclose Breach of Security. A state agency, or a person or business conducting business in California, that owns or licenses computerized data including personal information must disclose any breach of the security of a computer system following discovery or notification of the breach in the security of the data to any state resident whose unencrypted personal information was, or is reasonably believed to have been, acquired by an unauthorized person. (C.C. 1798.29(a), 1798.82(a).) If the computerized data includes personal information that the agency, person, or business does not own, it must also notify the owner or licensee of that information of the breach. (C.C. 1798.29(b), 1798.82(b).)

(3) Time of Disclosure. The disclosure must be made in the most expedient time possible and without unreasonable delay, consistent with the legitimate needs of law enforcement and the measures necessary to determine the scope of the breach and restore the reasonable integrity of the data system. (C.C. 1798.29(a), 1798.82(a).) The notification may be delayed, however, if a law enforcement agency determines that the notification will impede a criminal investigation. In these circumstances, the notification may be made after the law enforcement agency determines that it will not compromise the investigation. (C.C. 1798.29(c), 1798.82(c).)

(4) Manner of Notification. Notice must generally be provided by one of the following methods:

(a) Written notice. (C.C. 1798.29(g)(1), 1798.82(g)(1).)

(b) Electronic notice, if the notice provided is consistent with the provisions regarding electronic records and signatures set forth in 15 U.S.C., §7001. (C.C. 1798.29(g)(2), 1798.82(g)(2).)

(c) Substitute notice, if the agency, person, or business demonstrates that the cost of providing notice would exceed $ 250,000, the affected class of subject persons to be notified exceeds 500,000, or the agency, person, or business does not have sufficient contact information. Substitute notice must consist of all of the following: (1) e-mail notice when the agency, person, or business has an e-mail address for the subject persons, (2) conspicuous posting of the notice on the website of the agency, person, or business, if one is maintained, and (3) notification to major statewide media. (C.C. 1798.29(g)(3), 1798.82(g)(3).)

However, an agency, person, or business that maintains its own notification procedures as part of an information security policy for the treatment of personal information which is otherwise consistent with the timing requirements of these provisions is deemed to be in compliance with the notification requirements if it notifies subject persons in accordance with its policies. (C.C. 1798.29(h), 1798.82(h).)

(5) Remedies. A customer injured by a violation of these provisions may institute a civil action to recover damages. A business that fails to comply with the provisions may be enjoined. (C.C. 1798.47, 1798.48, 1798.84.)

(6) Definitions. "Breach of the security of the system" means unauthorized acquisition of computerized data that compromises the security, confidentiality, or integrity of personal information maintained by the agency, person, or business. Good faith acquisition of personal information by an employee or agent of the agency, person, or business for the purposes of the agency, person, or business is not a breach of the security of the system, provided that the personal information is not used or subject to further unauthorized disclosure. (C.C. 1798.29(d), 1798.82(d).)

"Personal information" means an individual's first name or first initial and last name in combination with any one or more of the following data elements, when either the name or the data elements are not encrypted: (a) Social Security number; (b) driver's license number or California identification card number; (c) account number, credit or debit card number, in combination with any required security code, access code, or password that would permit access to an individual's financial account. (C.C. 1798.29(e), 1798.82(e).) However, "personal information" does not include publicly available information that is lawfully made available to the general public from federal, state, or local government records. (C.C. 1798.29(f), 1798.82(f).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Enactment and Purpose of Legislation. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation §4.1 et seq.(6)

Definitions. "Personal information": The specified data elements also include medical information and health insurance information. (C.C. 1798.29(e)(4), (e)(5); C.C. 1798.82(e)(4), (e)(5), both added in 2007.) "Medical information" means any information regarding an individual's medical history, mental or physical condition, or medical treatment or diagnosis by a health care professional. (C.C. 1798.29(f)(2), 1798.82(f)(2), added in 2007.) "Health insurance information" means an individual's health insurance policy number or subscriber identification number, any unique identifier used by a health insurer to identify the individual, or any information in an individual's application and claims history, including any appeals records. (C.C. 1798.29(f)(3), 1798.82(f)(3), added in 2007.)

C.C. 1798.29(f) and 1798.82(f) were both subdivided in 2007. The exclusion from the definition of "personal information" of publicly available information is now in C.C. 1798.29(f)(1) and 1798.82(f)(1).

98 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 3. Public Disclosure of Private Facts.
 - b. Statutory Actions.
 - 7. Disclosure by Videotape Provider.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 672

[§ 672] Disclosure by Videotape Provider.

(1) California Statute. C.C. 1799.3 prohibits providers of video cassette sales or rental services from disclosing "any personal information or the contents of any record, including sales or rental information," without the written consent of the person who is the subject of the record. (C.C. 1799.3(a); see 20 Pacific L. J. 469.)

The statute does not apply to disclosures made (a) in compliance with a subpoena, court order, or search warrant, (b) in response to the proper use of discovery in a pending civil action, (c) to a law enforcement agency investigating criminal activity, unless prohibited by law, or (d) to a taxing agency for the purpose of tax administration. It is also inapplicable to disclosures of names and addresses for commercial purposes only. (C.C. 1799.3(b).)

Each wilful violation is subject to a civil penalty of up to $ 500, recoverable by the subject of the record. (C.C. 1799.3(c).) A penalty in the same amount is recoverable by the state, if a provider has three or more violations within a 6-month period. (C.C. 1799.3(d).)

(2) Federal Statute. 18 U.S.C., §2710 prohibits a videotape service provider from knowingly disclosing "personally identifiable information" concerning a customer without the customer's written consent. (18 U.S.C., §2710(b); on exceptions, similar to those specified in the California statute, see 18 U.S.C., §2710(b)(2).) The term "personally identifiable information" includes "information which identifies a person as having requested or obtained specific video material or services" from a provider. (18 U.S.C., §2710(a)(3).)

Any person aggrieved by a violation of the statute may recover actual damages (but not less than liquidated damages of $ 2,500), punitive damages, attorneys' fees and costs, and other appropriate preliminary and equitable relief. (18 U.S.C., §2710(c).) Personally identifiable information obtained in violation of the statute may not be received in evidence in any trial, hearing, arbitration, or other proceeding. (18 U.S.C., §2710(d).)

The federal statute does not preempt state or local law unless that law requires disclosure prohibited by the statute. (18 U.S.C., §2710(f).)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(5.1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

99 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

4. Placing Plaintiff in False Light.

a. Nature of Wrong.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 673

[§ 673] Nature of Wrong.

(1) Resemblance to Defamation. On the borderline of defamation and privacy is the wrong inflicted by publicity that puts the plaintiff, in Prosser's words, in "a false but not necessarily defamatory position in the public eye." "The question may well be raised, and apparently still is unanswered, whether this branch of the tort is not capable of swallowing up and engulfing the whole law of public defamation; and whether there is any false libel printed, for example, in a newspaper, which cannot be redressed upon the alternative ground." (Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 120, 14 C.R. 208, quoting Prosser on Torts and Prosser, "Privacy," 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383, 400; see Fellows v. National Enquirer (1986) 42 C.3d 234, 238, 228 C.R. 215, 721 P.2d 97, infra, §675 [publicity placing one in false light will generally be defamatory as well; noting substantial overlap between two torts]; Grimes v. Carter (1966) 241 C.A.2d 694, 701, 50 C.R. 808 [same quotation as Werner]; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.49 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §428; 57 A.L.R.4th 22 [cognizability and elements]; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 135 [False Light Invasion of Privacy: False Tort?]; 57 A.L.R.4th 244 [remedies and defenses]; 58 A.L.R.4th 902 [accusation or innuendo as to criminal acts]; 59 A.L.R.4th 502 [neutral or laudatory depiction of subject]; 60 A.L.R.4th 51 [disparaging but noncriminal depiction: dishonesty, cruelty, sexual perversion or promiscuity, substance abuse, financial distress, disease, disability or infirmity, and many other false depictions]; 6 Proof of Facts 3d 585 [false light publicity]; 68 Proof of Facts 3d 179 [liability for psychological harm from story or picture in media]; BAJI, No. 7.22; CACI, No. 1802.)

The Restatement describes the relationship of false light invasion of privacy to defamation as follows: "In many cases to which the rule stated here applies, the publicity given to the plaintiff is defamatory, so that he would have an action for libel or slander. ... In such a case the action for invasion of privacy will afford an alternative or additional remedy, and the plaintiff can proceed upon either theory, or both, although he can have but one recovery for a single instance of publicity." However, it is not necessary that the plaintiff be defamed: "It is enough that he is given unreasonable and highly objectionable publicity that attributes to him characteristics, conduct or beliefs that are false, and so is placed before the public in a false position." (Rest.2d, Torts §625E, Comment b.)

(2) Constitutional Requirements. The New York Times rule governing defamation cases (see supra, §§601, 602) applies to false light privacy cases. (Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 87 S.Ct. 534, 542, 17 L.Ed.2d 456, 466, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §429; Cantrell v. Forest City Publishing Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 95 S.Ct. 465, 469, 42 L.Ed.2d 419, 426, infra, §674; Rest.2d, Torts §652E, Comment d; see 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 543.) A showing of constitutional (actual) malice is required in circumstances where it would be necessary under defamation law. (Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich (1974) 43 C.A.3d 880, 893, 118 C.R. 370, infra, §689; on when actual malice is constitutionally required for defamation recovery, see supra, §601 et seq.)

The First Amendment may preclude recovery where the disclosure is of a matter of public concern (see infra, §679) or is transformative in nature (see infra, §680).

(3) Applicability of Retraction Statute. The retraction statute (C.C. 48a) governs where it would apply in defamation cases. (Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, supra; on retraction by newspaper or broadcaster, see supra, §629 et seq.)

(4) Statement of Elements. The Restatement defines the tort as follows: "One who gives publicity to a matter concerning another that places the other before the public in a false light is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy, if (a) the false light in which the other was placed would be highly offensive to a reasonable person, and (b) the actor had knowledge of or acted in reckless disregard as to the falsity of the publicized matter and the false light in which the other would be placed." (Rest.2d, Torts §652E.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(5.1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

100 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

4. Placing Plaintiff in False Light.

b. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 674

[§ 674] Illustrations.

In Kerby v. Hal Roach Studios (1942) 53 C.A.2d 207, 127 P.2d 577, a moving picture studio, to advertise a picture with a character named "Marion Kerby," sent 1,000 fictitious personal letters to men whose names were taken from the city directory, suggesting a rendezvous, and signed with that name. Plaintiff, an actress and singer of the same name, was subjected to embarrassing calls and adverse publicity. Held, a cause of action was stated for invasion of the right of privacy, or perhaps even for libel. The court declared that, in conformity with the rule in defamation cases, neither inadvertence nor mistake is a defense. The decision, however, appears to impose an unusual duty toward an indeterminate class of unknown persons, for the opinion states that, so far as appears, defendants "had no intent to refer therein to plaintiff and did not know of her existence, although they might easily have discovered it." (53 C.A.2d 213.)

In Cantrell v. Forest City Publishing Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 95 S.Ct. 465, 42 L.Ed.2d 419, plaintiffs were the wife and son of a man who was killed, with 43 others, in the collapse of a West Virginia bridge, in 1967. Defendant newspaper published a news story focusing on the funeral of the husband and the impact of his death on the family. Some months later defendant reporter, after conferring with the editor of defendant newspaper's Sunday magazine, went to the family's home, talked with the children, and then published a lead feature stressing the family's poverty and the dilapidated conditions of the home. Some parts of the article were false, including descriptions of the home, and the appearance and behavior of the mother, who was in fact not at home when the interviews took place. Held, the evidence was sufficient to support a judgment for invasion of privacy against the reporter and publisher.

(a) Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 87 S.Ct. 534, 542, 17 L.Ed.2d 456, 466, governs in this false light privacy case; i.e., liability can be imposed only if the false statements were made with knowledge of their falsity or in reckless disregard of the truth. (95 S.Ct. 469, 42 L.Ed.2d 426.) Common law malice, which could be mere personal ill will toward the plaintiff, is insufficient; it "would focus on the defendant's attitude toward the plaintiff's privacy, not toward the truth or falsity of the material published." (95 S.Ct. 470, 42 L.Ed.2d 427.)

(b) The evidence met the test: defendant reporter must have known that his statements were false; and his editor approved the idea and told the reporter that the feature would be published if it was good. (95 S.Ct. 471, 42 L.Ed.2d 427.)

In O'Hilderbrandt v. Columbia Broadcasting System (1974) 40 C.A.3d 323, 114 C.R. 826, plaintiff, who was formerly movie actress Mary Miles Minter, was acting in pictures directed by William Desmond Taylor, and was reputedly engaged to marry him. He was murdered in 1922 by an unknown person. Plaintiff retired from moving pictures a year later. In 1970, defendant broadcast a program called "Rod Serling's Wonderful World of Crime," dealing with celebrated women murderers. The unsolved Taylor murder and Taylor's romantic attachments, including his relationship with plaintiff, were mentioned, and the following added: "A shrouded figure was observed by a neighbor running from the scene. It could have been a man. It could have been a woman." Plaintiff's theory was that, since her name had been mentioned and her picture shown "in a context of crime, perversion, depravity and conjecture," her privacy had been invaded; i.e., she had been injected into a discourse on murder, with the implication that a reasonable connection did exist. Held, a nonsuit was properly granted.

(a) Prosser notes that a form in which the false light branch of invasion of privacy "frequently has made its appearance is the use of the plaintiff's picture to illustrate a book or an article with which he has no reasonable connection. ... [P]ublic interest may justify a use for appropriate and pertinent illustration. But when the face of some quite innocent and unrelated citizen is employed to ornament an article on the cheating propensities of taxi drivers, the negligence of children, profane love, 'man hungry' women, juvenile delinquents, or the peddling of narcotics, there is an obvious innuendo that the article applies to him, which places him in a false light before the public, and is actionable." (40 C.A.3d 331, quoting Prosser, "Privacy," 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383, 399.)

(b) Here, however, plaintiff was a public figure at the time of the murder, and remained one in lesser degree at the time of the telecast; the murder was newsworthy at the time and was still a matter of public interest; plaintiff was mentioned only in connection with that particular event, and the statements about her were true. (40 C.A.3d 334.)

(c) "While it may not have been in good taste to place the recitation of plaintiff's professional and social relationship with the murdered William Desmond Taylor in juxtaposition with the story of the heinous deeds of Louise Peete and Winnie Ruth Judd, that circumstance was not, as a matter of law, so offensive as to shock the community's notions of decency." (40 C.A.3d 334.)

In M.G. v. Time Warner (2001) 89 C.A.4th 623, 107 C.R.2d 504, a published story covering the manager of a Little League baseball team who had pleaded guilty to child molestation included a team photograph, and plaintiffs pictured sued for invasion of privacy. Held, defendants' motion to strike the complaint was properly denied. Publication of the photograph linked plaintiffs with the molestation, either as victims, perpetrators, or collaborators. Those plaintiffs who were not involved in the molestation had a false light claim, because the story could be interpreted as reporting that all or some of the persons pictured had participated in some way in the molestation. (89 C.A.4th 636.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

101 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

4. Placing Plaintiff in False Light.

c. Special Damages Requirement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 675

[§ 675] Special Damages Requirement.

In Fellows v. National Enquirer (1986) 42 C.3d 234, 228 C.R. 215, 721 P.2d 97, the court held that where a false light action is based on a publication that is defamatory within the meaning of C.C. 45a (not libelous on its face; see supra, §541), pleading and proof of special damages are required. Defendant National Enquirer carried a photograph of plaintiff Arthur Fellows and actress Angie Dickinson with this accompanying two-sentence article: "Gorgeous Angie Dickinson's all smiles about the new man in her life--TV producer Arthur Fellows. Angie's steady-dating Fellows all over Tinseltown, and happily posed for photographers with him as they exited the swanky Spago restaurant in Beverly Hills." Plaintiff filed a complaint for libel and false light invasion of privacy, alleging that the article cast him in a false light in the eyes of those who knew of his marital status by suggesting that he was engaged in immoral conduct. In a later amended complaint, plaintiff, who had conceded that he had not suffered any special damages, dropped the libel count. Defendant's demurrer was sustained by the trial court and judgment of dismissal was entered. Held, the order and judgment were correct.

(a) Nature of problem. Placing a person in a highly offensive false light will in most cases be defamatory as well, and Prosser many years ago expressed concern about this overlap: "[W]hat of the numerous restrictions and limitations which have hedged defamation about for many years, in the interest of freedom of the press and the discouragement of trivial and extortionate claims?" (42 C.3d 239, quoting 48 Cal. L. Rev. 401.)

(b) Prior California decisions. In Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 14 C.R. 208, plaintiff, city attorney of Los Angeles from 1929 to 1933, sued defendant newspaper for publishing a story suggesting that he and his first wife had been involved in political scandals and criminal wrongdoing 30 years earlier. The complaint sought only general damages and did not allege a demand for a retraction. The court held that to allow the invasion of privacy suit would be to sanction an evasion of the statutory protections of C.C. 48a. (42 C.3d 241.) The Werner view was followed in Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 35, footnote 16, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912, holding a privacy count superfluous; and the Kapellas holding was reaffirmed in Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 543, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692. (42 C.3d 242.)

(c) Rule in other states and Torts Restatement 2d. "The overwhelming majority of decisions in other jurisdictions enforce defamation restrictions in actions for false light invasion of privacy when such actions are based on a defamatory publication." (42 C.3d 245, listing a number of cases.) Rest.2d, Torts §652E(e) supports this view. (42 C.3d 246.)

(d) Purpose and policy underlying C.C. 45a. C.C. 45(a) "manifests a legislative determination that liability imposed for a publication which affords no warning of its defamatory nature, and has not caused actual pecuniary injury, would place too great a burden on the editorial process and would hamper the free dissemination of the news." (42 C.3d 250.)

(e) Applicability of C.C. 45a in false light cases. "We find the public policy embodied in section 45a equally applicable to an action for false light invasion of privacy based upon a defamatory publication. Since virtually every published defamation would support an action for false light invasion of privacy, exempting such actions from the requirement of proving special damages would render the statute a nullity. Permitting a plaintiff to circumvent the statutory requirement by labeling the action as one for false light invasion of privacy would defeat the legislative purpose of providing a zone of protection for the operation of a free press. The Werner, Kapellas and Briscoe courts would not allow such an evasion of legislative purpose, nor shall we. We hold that whenever claim for false light invasion of privacy is based on language that is defamatory within the meaning of section 45a, pleading and proof of special damages are required." (42 C.3d 251.)

(f) Qualification on holding. "Our holding would not apply to false light publicity that would be actionable as a public disclosure of private facts had the representations made in the publication been true. The public disclosure branch of the privacy tort involves the publication by defendant of non-newsworthy intimate details of plaintiff's private life. In the public disclosure of private facts context, the policies of section 45a are inapposite, since the injurious nature of the report should have been apparent on its face and the question of innocent mistake does not arise. Those false light cases based on publications which, if true, would be actionable as public disclosure of private facts, are conceptually indistinguishable from the latter category, and should not be subject to the special damages requirement of section 45a." (42 C.3d 251, footnote 13.) (See 19 Pacific L. J. 355 [Fellows v. National Enquirer].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

102 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

a. Common Law Cause of Action.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 676

[§ 676] In General.

(1) Nature and Elements of Action. "One who appropriates to his own use or benefit the name or likeness of another is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy." (Rest.2d, Torts §652C; see C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §§10.4 et seq., 11.53; 81 Cal. L. Rev. 125 [Private Ownership of Public Image: Popular Culture and Publicity Rights]; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1536; 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1433; 37 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 85 [commercial use of celebrity's name or likeness]; 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 313; 32 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 761 [use of celebrity's likeness in news stories in conjunction with advertisements]; 27 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 97 [The Parodist's Claim to Fame: A Parody Exception to the Right of Publicity]; 36 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 543 [right of publicity and fair use doctrine]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §68 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.23; CACI, No. 1803.)

As in the case of other forms of invasion of privacy, protection of plaintiff's personal feelings "is an important factor leading to a recognition of the rule." However, "the right created by it is in the nature of a property right, for the exercise of which an exclusive license may be given to a third person, which will entitle the licensee to maintain an action to protect it." (Rest.2d, Torts §652C, Comment a; see Dora v. Frontline Video (1993) 15 C.A.4th 536, 541, 18 C.R.2d 790, infra, §679 [appropriation has two aspects, relating to interest protected and resulting injury].)

(2) Right of Publicity. The category of appropriation of name or likeness in which the interest involved is proprietary or commercial is often referred to as invasion of the "right of publicity." While origins of the right of publicity are thus in the common law right of privacy, it "has come to be recognized as distinct" from that right." What may have originated as a concern for the right to be left alone has become a tool to control the commercial use and, thus, protect the economic value of one's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness." (KNB Enterprises v. Matthews (2000) 78 C.A.4th 362, 366, 92 C.R.2d 713.) Commercial appropriation statutes have been enacted that complement the common law tort of appropriation. (See C.C. 3344, infra, §681; C.C. 3344.1, infra, §685.)

(3) Commentary. The right of publicity has been the subject of extensive comment. (See 70 Cal. L. Rev. 786 [An Assessment of the Copyright Model in Right of Publicity Cases]; 46 Hastings L. J. 853 [The Right of Publicity: Maturation of an Independent Right Protecting the Associative Value of Personality]; 48 Hastings L. J. 601 [application of right of publicity to use of digitally reproduced actors in film]; 14 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 129 [The Right of Publicity as a Means of Protecting Performers' Style]; 14 Pacific L. J. 181 [The Service Mark Alternative to the Right of Publicity]; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 111 [Posthumous Right of Publicity: Jurisdictional Conflict and a Proposal for Solution]; 43 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1455 [conflict between right of publicity and First Amendment]; 55 So. Cal. L. Rev. 727 [Publicity as an Aspect of Privacy and Personal Autonomy]; 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1179 [proposal of federal statute]; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 755 [Apple Corp. v. Leber: Did "Beatlemania" Infringe the Beatles' Right of Publicity?]; 17 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 191 [Is Independence Day Dawning for the Right of Publicity]; 36 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 199 [right of publicity and copyright preemption]; 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1103 [Transfer of the Right of Publicity: Dracula's Progeny and Privacy's Stepchild; analysis of emerging proprietary right of publicity and implications of transfer of the interest].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Commentary. See 27 California Lawyer 36 (February 2007) [Protecting the Right of Publicity]; 35 Pepperdine L. Rev. 347 [acquisition of celebrity's right of publicity]; 45 Santa Clara L. Rev. 557 [right to control commercial use of name, image, and identity]; 78 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1371 [threat to right of publicity by punitive damages limitation of State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S.Ct. 1513, 155 L.Ed.2d 585, text, §1568]; 58 Stanf. L. Rev. 1161 [What the Right of Publicity Can Learn from Trademark Law].

103 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

a. Common Law Cause of Action.

2. Use of Picture.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 677

[§ 677] Use of Picture.

(1) Commercial Use. The use of a person's photograph without consent for commercial purposes, such as advertising, is a well recognized basis of liability. (See Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 409, 417, 198 C.R. 342, infra, §678; Rest.2d, Torts §652C; 9 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 863 [right of publicity respecting computer-animated celebrities]; 35 Santa Clara L. Rev. 725 [commercial appropriation of identity]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §78; 223 A.L.R.3d 865 [invasion of privacy by use of plaintiff's likeness in advertising]; cf. 87 A.L.R.3d 1279 [invasion of privacy by use of picture of plaintiff's property for advertising purposes].)

(2) Noncommercial Use. Even where a picture is published in connection with a noncommercial article of public interest, its injurious effect on a normal person's feelings may be such as to give rise to a cause of action. Thus, in Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 C.2d 273, 239 P. 630, a complaint by husband and wife was held sufficient where it alleged that defendants snapped their picture in a romantic pose and published it with an article disparaging love founded on sex attraction alone. In balancing the public interest against the individual's interest, the court said: "Factors deserving consideration may include the medium of publication, the extent of the use, the public interest served by the publication, and the seriousness of the interference with the person's privacy." (38 C.2d 278.) Here, assuming that the article was within the range of public interest, the use of plaintiff's picture was not necessary and the harmful impact on them was substantial. (See 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 314, 317; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §§68, 74; but cf. Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 224, 230, 253 P.2d 441, infra, §689 [reaching contrary result despite similar photograph].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

104 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

a. Common Law Cause of Action.

3. Use of Name.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 678

[§ 678] Use of Name.

The commercial use of a person's name is also an invasion of privacy. (See Rest.2d, Torts §652C; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 401; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1238; 35 Santa Clara L. Rev. 725 [commercial appropriation of identity]; 32 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 761 [use of celebrity's name in news stories in conjunction with advertisements]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §78; 23 A.L.R.3d 865 [invasion of privacy by use of plaintiff's name in advertising]; 82 A.L.R.3d 772 [sale or rental of list of customers, subscribers, or the like, to one who will use it for advertising purposes]; 52 A.L.R.4th 156 [use by employer or former employer]; BAJI, No. 7.23; CACI, No. 1803.)

In Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equipment Co. (1955) 138 C.A.2d 82, 291 P.2d 194, defendant manufacturer circulated 30,000 copies of an advertisement throughout the United States, listing the names of satisfied users of its machine. Plaintiff, the only Los Angeles lawyer listed, had purchased and returned a machine as unsatisfactory. Held, nonsuit reversed. The advertisement, a pretended endorsement of defendant's product, was "an unauthorized and unwarranted appropriation of plaintiff's personality as a lawyer for pecuniary gain and profit." (138 C.A.2d 87.) (See Williams v. Weisser (1969) 273 C.A.2d 726, 741, 78 C.R. 542, 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §46 [following Fairfield and applying rule to unauthorized commercial distribution of professor's class notes].)

In Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 409, 198 C.R. 342, defendant National Enquirer (Enquirer), a national magazine, published a 600-word article about plaintiff, a well-known motion picture actor, detailing problems involved in a supposed romantic involvement with a celebrated singer and a celebrated actress. Plaintiff's complaint, alleging that defendant employed his name and photograph for the purpose of promoting sales of its magazine, was held to state a cause of action. "The first step toward selling a product or service is to attract the consumers' attention. Because of a celebrity's audience appeal, people respond almost automatically to a celebrity's name or picture. Here, the Enquirer used Eastwood's personality and fame on the cover of the subject publication and in related telecast advertisements. To the extent their use attracted the readers' attention, the Enquirer gained a commercial advantage. Furthermore, the Enquirer used Eastwood's personality in the context of an alleged news account, entitled 'Clint Eastwood in Love Triangle with Tanya Tucker' to generate maximum curiosity and the necessary motivation to purchase the newspaper." (149 C.A.3d 420.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

105 of 105 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.
 - a. Common Law Cause of Action.
 - 4. Newsworthy Matters.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 679

[§ 679] Newsworthy Matters.

Reporting of matters that are newsworthy or of public interest is not an appropriation for which invasion of privacy liability may constitutionally be imposed, even though the reported matter yields profits for the defendant. (Dora v. Frontline Video (1993) 15 C.A.4th 536, 542, 18 C.R.2d 790; on defense of public interest generally, see infra, §687 et seq.) In Dora, defendant produced a video documentary on surfing entitled "The Legends of Malibu." Film of plaintiff, who was one of those legends, was featured in the program. Also featured was the audio portion of an interview of plaintiff, which is heard in the background as the viewer sees plaintiff in photographs. Plaintiff sued defendant for both common law and statutory appropriation of his name, voice, and likeness, claiming that he had not consented to that use nor been interviewed or photographed by defendant. Held, on the common law cause of action, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; because the documentary contained matters of public interest, defendant was not required to obtain plaintiff's consent to the use of his name, likeness, and voice. (For similar holding on the statutory cause of action, see infra, §681.)

(a) Although both celebrities and noncelebrities have the right to be free from the unauthorized exploitation of their names and likenesses, there is ordinarily no cause of action for the publication of matters in the public interest. The right to publish these matters rests on the right of the public to know, and the freedom of the press to tell, them. And this right and freedom extend to the reproduction of past events. (15 C.A.4th 542.)

(b) "The program in question in this case is a documentary about a certain time and place in California history and, indeed, in American legend. The people who were a part of that era contributed, willingly or unwillingly, to the development of a life-style that has become world-famous and celebrated in popular culture. Although any one of them as individuals may not have had a particular influence on our time, as a group they had great impact. This is the point of the program, and it seems fair comment on real life events 'which have caught the popular imagination.' " (15 C.A.4th 543, quoting Smith v. National Broadcasting Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 807, 292 P.2d 600.)

(c) Plaintiff argues that the documentary does not meet the criteria of newsworthiness stated in Maheu v. CBS (1988) 201 C.A.3d 662, 247 C.R. 304, infra, §689, i.e., the social value of the facts published; the depth of the intrusion into private affairs; and the extent to which the person voluntarily acceded to a position of public notoriety. This argument is without merit. The Maheu criteria relate to an action for disclosure of private facts, instead of one for appropriation of name and likeness. (15 C.A.4th 543.) However, for the following reasons, the result in this case would not change even if the Maheu criteria were applied:

(1) The documentary has public interest, which gives it social value. (15 C.A.4th 543.)

(2) Although the social value might be limited, so also is the level of intrusion into plaintiff's private affairs. A viewing of the documentary discloses little, if anything, of a private nature about plaintiff. (15 C.A.4th 543.)

(3) Although plaintiff sought to avoid the limelight, he became a public personage by his voluntary action of surfing and by the force of circumstances. A person's voluntary action in a public place waives his right of privacy, because there can be no privacy in that which is already public. (15 C.A.4th 544, citing Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 224, 253 P.2d 441, infra, §689.) And, with respect to the audiotaped interview of plaintiff, there is no evidence that it was private or given for restricted use. Publication of such an interview is constitutionally protected in the absence of a showing that the publisher knew that plaintiff's statements were false or published them in reckless disregard of the truth. (15 C.A.4th 544.)

(d) To establish damage to his feelings, plaintiff complains that the cover of the program packaging and the program itself "prominently" featured scantily clothed women. However, although there is a cartoon drawing of two bikini-clad women and several scenes in which the host is surrounded by such women, they are not prominently featured. Although those scenes are superfluous, they are few and very short. (15 C.A.4th 544.)

In Montana v. San Jose Mercury News (1995) 34 C.A.4th 790, 40 C.R.2d 639, defendant newspaper reproduced, in poster form for sale to the general public, previously published pages depicting plaintiff, a professional football player, in connection with his team's winning of two consecutive Super Bowls and four championships in a single decade. Plaintiff brought an action for common law and statutory commercial misappropriation of his name, photograph, and likeness, and the trial judge granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Held, affirmed as to both common law and statutory (see infra, §681) causes of action.

(a) No common law cause of action. There is no common law cause of action for the publication of matters in the public interest. A matter in the public interest may be a past event. (34 C.A.4th 793.)

(b) Matter of public interest. Defendant's accounts of the Super Bowls and championships by plaintiff's team constituted publication of matters in the public interest entitled to First Amendment protection. The relatively contemporaneous reproduction of the pages, in poster form for resale, was also entitled to that protection, because plaintiff's name and likeness appeared in the posters for the same reason they appeared on the original newspaper pages: plaintiff was a major player in contemporaneous newsworthy sports events. The same public interest considerations applicable to surfing, recognized in Dora, apply with equal force to professional football. (34 C.A.4th 794.)

(c) Right of newspaper to republish. Defendant had a right to republish its stories to show the quality of its work product. A person's photograph originally published in one issue of a periodical as a newsworthy subject (and therefore exempt from tort liability) may be republished in another medium as an advertisement for the periodical itself, without the person's written consent. The posters were exact reproductions of pages from the paper, and they did not state or imply that plaintiff endorsed the newspaper. (34 C.A.4th 796.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

a. Common Law Cause of Action.

5. Transformative Matters.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 680

[§ 680] Transformative Matters.

In Comedy III Productions v. Gary Saderup (2001) 25 C.4th 387, 106 C.R.2d 126, 21 P.3d 797, plaintiff was the registered owner, within the meaning of former C.C. 990 (now C.C. 3344.1), of all rights to the former comedy act known as "The Three Stooges," and defendant was an artist who made charcoal portraits of the Stooges used in lithographic prints and silk screen images on T-shirts. Without obtaining plaintiff's permission, defendant sold these items, and plaintiff, arguing violation of its right of publicity, obtained a favorable judgment, which included damages, attorneys' fees, and an injunction. The Court of Appeal deleted the injunction and affirmed the judgment as modified. Held, affirmed.

(a) The right of publicity is often invoked in the context of commercial speech, when the appropriation of a celebrity's likeness creates the false impression that the celebrity is endorsing a product. Because commercial speech, if misleading, is not protected by the First Amendment and, even if not misleading, is entitled to lesser First Amendment protection, many commercial speech cases do not involve tension between the right of publicity and free speech. However, the present case does not concern commercial speech. As the trial judge found, defendant's portraits consisted of expressive works and not an advertisement for or endorsement of a product. (25 C.4th 396.)

(b) The primary purposes of the First Amendment, i.e., to preserve an uninhibited marketplace of ideas and to foster a fundamental respect for individual development, are often in opposition to the right of publicity. The right of publicity often censors expression by suppressing alternative versions of celebrity images that are irreverent or that otherwise attempt to redefine the celebrity's meaning. (25 C.4th 397.)

(c) Defendant's works, as expressive speech, are clearly eligible for First Amendment protection. This protection continues even though the works are (1) for the purpose of entertaining, rather than informing; (2) take the form of nonverbal, visual representation; (3) convey no discernible message; and (4) appear in large part on a less conventional means of communication. However, because of the considerable time and energy necessary to create the type of celebrity status that is capable of commercial promotion, society may recognize, as the Legislature did with the passage of former C.C. 990, that a celebrity's heirs and assigns have a legitimate interest in benefiting from the merchandizing of the celebrity's image. Thus, the two rights must be balanced according to the relative importance of the interests at stake. (25 C.4th 398, citing Zacchini v. Scripps-Howard Broadcasting Co. (1977) 433 U.S. 562, 97 S.Ct. 2849, 53 L.Ed.2d 965, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §433.)

(d) This relative importance fluctuates in accordance with the number of creative contributions made by the artist. "When artistic expression takes the form of a literal depiction or limitation of a celebrity for commercial gain, directly trespassing on the right of publicity without adding significant expression beyond that trespass, the state law interest in protecting the fruits of artistic labor outweighs the expressive interests of the imitative artist." However, "when a work contains significant transformative elements, it is not only especially worthy of First Amendment protection, but it is also less likely to interfere with the economic interest protected by the right of publicity. ... Accordingly, First Amendment protection of such works outweighs whatever interest the state may have in enforcing the right of publicity." (25 C.4th 405.) Furthermore, the transformative elements or creative contributions that require First Amendment protection are not confined to parody, but can take many forms, from factual reporting to fictionalized portrayal, from heavy-handed lampooning to social criticism. (25 C.4th 406.)

(e) In determining whether the work is sufficiently transformative to warrant First Amendment protection, courts must ask (1) is the celebrity likeness but one of the "raw materials" from which an original work is synthesized? and (2) does the value of the work come from the skill and reputation of the artist, rather than from the fame of the celebrity depicted? If each question is answered in the affirmative, it is probable that sufficient transformative elements are present to warrant First Amendment protection. On the other hand, courts should not be concerned with the quality of the artistic contribution, because a vulgar form of expression may qualify for First Amendment protection, while a literal depiction of a celebrity, even if done with great skill, may still be subject to a right of publicity challenge. (25 C.4th 406.)

(f) The Court of Appeal correctly determined that defendant's works were not within the First Amendment, but for the wrong reason. It based this conclusion on the fact that the works were reproductions, rather than original works. This position has no basis in logic or authority. Rather, the inquiry should have been whether defendant's works were sufficiently transformative. Applying this test reveals that defendant made no significant creative contribution in this case. Rather, his undeniable skill was subordinated to the overall goal of creating literal depictions of the Three Stooges in order to exploit their fame. Moreover, the marketability of defendant's works came from the fame of the celebrities depicted, not from the fame of the artist. There were thus no transformative elements requiring the aid of the First Amendment. (25 C.4th 409.)

(g) Noting that all portraiture involves creative decisions, defendant argued that all portraits are therefore protected by the First Amendment. This categorical position is without merit. "Without denying that all portraiture involves the making of artistic choices, we find it equally undeniable, under the test formulated above, that when an artist's skill and talent is manifestly subordinated to the overall goal of creating a conventional portrait of a celebrity so as to commercially exploit his or her fame, then the artist's right of free expression is outweighed by the right of publicity." In other words, the artist must create something recognizable as his or her own work. (25 C.4th 408.)

The Comedy III Productions case was cited and distinguished in Winter v. DC Comics (2003) 30 C.4th 881, 887, 134 C.R.2d 634, 69 P.3d 473, holding that the comic book figures there in issue, although based on real musicians, contained significant creative elements so as to transform them into something more than mere celebrity likenesses, and were accordingly entitled to First Amendment protection. (See 29 Western State L. Rev. 359 [Comedy III Productions]; 118 A.L.R.5th 213 [First Amendment protection afforded to comic books, comic strips, and cartoons]; BAJI, Nos. 7.24.1, 7.24.2 [First Amendment defense respecting transformative changes]; CACI, No. 1805 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Kirby v. Sega of America (2006) 144 C.A.4th 47, 57, 50 C.R.3d 607 [defendants' video game character was transformative and protected by First Amendment, notwithstanding similarities between character and plaintiff celebrity; game character was primarily result of defendants' new expression rather than mere recreation of celebrity's likeness].

2 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

b. Statutory Action.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 681

[§ 681] In General.

(1) Nature of Statute. C.C. 3344 codifies a person's right to recover damages for the knowing use of his or her "name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness" in or on commercial products, or to advertise, sell, or solicit sales of products or services, without the person's prior consent or, in the case of a minor, without the prior consent of his or her parent or legal guardian. (C.C. 3344(a); see Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich (1974) 43 C.A.3d 880, 895, 118 C.R. 370, infra, §689 [statute held inapplicable to article reprinted in college textbook, where article was not primary reason for textbook and not substantial factor in student purchases of it]; Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 C.A.4th 400, 408, 114 C.R.2d 307 [right to publicity is statutory as well as common law right]; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §10.8 et seq.; 23 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 601 [advertisement using imitation of famous singer's voice]; 19 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1337 [same]; 3 Pacific L. J. 651; 36 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 543 [right of publicity and fair use doctrine]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §8 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.24; CACI, No. 1804; on statutory liability for invasion of privacy to capture visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of plaintiff engaging in personal or familial activity, see supra, §663.)

(2) Remedies. The injured party may recover (1) the greater of $ 750 or actual damages, and (2) any profits attributable to the unauthorized use and not accounted for in computing damages. In establishing profits, the burden is on the injured party to prove the gross revenue, and on the violator to prove deductible expenses. The injured party may also recover punitive damages, and the prevailing party is entitled to attorneys' fees and costs. (C.C. 3344(a).) The remedies provided by the statute are cumulative and in addition to any others provided for by law. (C.C. 3344(g).)

(3) Effect of Copyright Act. C.C. 3344 is preempted by the federal Copyright Act (17 U.S.C., §301 et seq.) as to rights subject to copyright. (Fleet v. CBS (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1911, 1918, 58 C.R.2d 645, 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §60; see KNB Enterprises v. Matthews (2000) 78 C.A.4th 362, 366, 92 C.R.2d 713 [in action by copyright owner to photographs asserting C.C. 3344 misappropriation claims against person who allegedly displayed photos on website without authorization, claims were not equivalent to copyright claims and thus were not preempted by federal copyright law].)

(4) Related Legislation. Several related statutes are noteworthy:

(a) C.C. 3344.1 [providing cause of action for appropriation of deceased person's identity similar to that provided living person by C.C. 3344; see infra, §685].

(b) P.C. 115.1 [making it crime to publish, with intent to deceive, campaign advertisement containing signature known to be unauthorized].

(c) C.C. 3344.5 [affording cause of action for violation of P.C. 115.1 to person whose signature is used without authorization in campaign advertisement and to candidate whose election or defeat is expressly advocated in campaign advertisement containing unauthorized signature].

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(6)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Statute. See Kirby v. Sega of America (2006) 144 C.A.4th 47, 61, 50 C.R.3d 607 [C.C. 3344 action, like action for infringement of common law right of publicity, is subject to First Amendment defense arising from transformative change (see text, §680)].

(2) Remedies. See Miller v. Collectors Universe (2008) 159 C.A.4th 988, 999, 72 C.R.3d 194 [plaintiff whose name was used without authorization on 14,060 certificates of authenticity for collectible autographs and memorabilia was entitled to only one $ 750 damages award under C.C. 3344(a), not to one for each certificate].

Award of attorneys' fees to prevailing party: See Kirby v. Sega of America, supra, 144 C.A.4th 62 [attorneys' fee provision of C.C. 3344(a) is clearly mandatory and is not limited to cases where action is frivolous or in bad faith or without substantial justification].

3 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.
 - b. Statutory Action.
- 2. Conditions of Recovery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 682

[§ 682] Conditions of Recovery.

(1) Readily Identifiable Photograph. To be actionable, the photograph--whether still or moving, videotaped or by live television transmission--must show the person complaining as "readily identifiable," so that "one who views the photograph with the naked eye can reasonably determine that the person depicted in the photograph is the same person who is complaining of its unauthorized use." (C.C. 3344(b)(1); see Polydoros v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. (1997) 67 C.A.4th 318, 325, 79 C.R.2d 207 [plaintiff could not recover for commercial appropriation of name or likeness merely because defendants used name sounding like plaintiff's or employed actor in film resembling plaintiff at age 10].)

If the photograph includes more than one identifiable person, as in a crowd at a sporting event, in a street or public building, at a theatrical production, in a glee club, or on a baseball team, the complaining persons must be represented "as individuals rather than solely as members of a definable group." (C.C. 3344(b)(2).) A person is considered a member of a definable group if he or she is represented in the photograph solely as a result of being present when the photograph is taken and is not singled out as an individual in any manner. (C.C. 3344(b)(3).)

(2) Employee's Photograph. If the photograph or likeness of an employee has appeared in an advertisement or other publication prepared for the employer, and the use was only incidental rather than essential to the publication's purpose, a rebuttable presumption arises "that the failure to obtain the consent of the employee was not a knowing use of the employee's photograph or likeness." The presumption affects the burden of producing evidence. (C.C. 3344(c).)

(3) Commercial Use. A use is not actionable merely because the material in which the name, photograph, or likeness appears is commercially sponsored or contained paid advertising. It is a question of fact whether the use "was so directly connected with the commercial sponsorship or with the paid advertising as to constitute a use for which consent is required." (C.C. 3344(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

4 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
- 5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.
 - b. Statutory Action.
 - 3. Exemptions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 683

[§ 683] Exemptions.

C.C. 3344 contains two kinds of exemptions:

(1) It does not apply to owners or employees of an advertising medium (newspapers, magazines, radio and television stations, cable television systems, billboards and transit ads, etc.), unless they had knowledge of the unauthorized use. (C.C. 3344(f).)

(2) It does not apply to certain specified uses that are not deemed commercial: "use of a name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness in connection with any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, or any political campaign." (C.C. 3344(d); see Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 C.A.4th 400, 415, 114 C.R.2d 307 [uses of former baseball players' names, images, and likenesses were within "public affairs" exemption of C.C. 3344(d)].) The C.C. 3344(d) exemption does not extend to knowing or reckless falsehood. (Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 409, 425, 198 C.R. 342, supra, §678 [this cannot have been legislative intent].)

In Dora v. Frontline Video (1993) 15 C.A.4th 536, 18 C.R.2d 790, supra, §679, the use of plaintiff's name, voice, and likeness in defendant's surfing video documentary was the basis for a statutory cause of action under C.C. 3344. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed; because the documentary related to "public affairs" within the meaning of C.C. 3344(d), defendant was not required to obtain plaintiff's consent.

(a) Because C.C. 3344(d) applies to both "news" and "public affairs," it must be presumed that the Legislature intended the category of public affairs to include things that would not necessarily be considered news. As has been established in the cases involving common law privacy and appropriation, the public is interested in and constitutionally entitled to know about matters that affect it. To limit the term "public affairs" to topics that might be covered on public television or public radio would be to jeopardize society's right to know. (15 C.A.4th 546.)

(b) "Having said that, we find that surfing is of more than passing interest to some. It has created a life-style that influences speech, behavior, dress, and entertainment, among other things. A phenomenon of such scope has an economic impact, because it affects purchases, travel, and the housing market. Surfing has also had a significant influence on the popular culture, and in that way touches many people. It would be difficult to conclude that a surfing documentary does not fall within the category of public affairs." (15 C.A.4th 546.)

In Montana v. San Jose Mercury News (1995) 34 C.A.4th 790, 40 C.R.2d 639, supra, §679, defendant newspaper reproduced, in poster form for sale to the general public, previously published pages depicting plaintiff professional football player in connection with his team's winning of Super Bowls. Held, the publication was exempt from liability under C.C. 3344(d). Like the common law cause of action for appropriation, the statutory cause of action specifically exempts from liability the use of a name or likeness in connection with the reporting of a matter in the public interest. (34 C.A.4th 793.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

5 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

c. Survivable Right of Publicity.

1. Background.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 684

[§ 684] Background.

(1) Lugosi Case. Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 C.3d 813, 160 C.R. 323, 603 P.2d 425, held that there was no survivable right of publicity. (On right of publicity generally, see supra, §676.) Bela Lugosi, an actor, played the character of Count Dracula in a dramatic version of Bram Stoker's novel and in a later movie produced by defendant Universal. The producer's contract gave it the right to use Lugosi's name, likeness, voice, and other unique characteristics in exploiting the picture. Plaintiffs, Lugosi's widow and surviving son, claimed a property interest in decedent's movie portrayal of Count Dracula, and brought this action to recover profits made by defendant from licensing agreements authorizing licensees to use the Count Dracula character. Held, judgment for plaintiffs reversed.

(a) Lugosi's rights during his lifetime. If Lugosi had established a business and sold the right to have his name and characteristics in the Count Dracula part used by licensees, he would have created a property right apart from that granted to defendant by the production contract. (25 C.3d 820.) This right to exploit his name and likeness could have been assigned, and an assignment was made to defendant, during the actor's lifetime. (25 C.3d 823.)

(b) No survivable right. (1) Commentators and decisions support the conclusion that there is no common law right of action for invasion of privacy after death of the individual involved; i.e., there is no right in heirs of the deceased person whose privacy was invaded. (25 C.3d 820, 821, citing the text.) (2) This general position is taken by the better reasoned authorities to extend to the so-called right of publicity. "[U]pon Lugosi's death, anyone, related or unrelated to Lugosi, with the imagination, the enterprise, the energy and the cash could, in his or her own name or in a fictitious name, or a trade name coupled with that of Lugosi, have impressed a name so selected with a secondary meaning and realized a profit or loss by so doing depending upon the value of the idea, its acceptance by the public and the management of the enterprise undertaken. After Lugosi's death, his name was in the public domain. Anyone, including plaintiffs or any person other than, or either of them, or Universal, could use it for a legitimate commercial purpose." (25 C.3d 822, 823.)

(c) Policy considerations. If rights to the exploitation of artistic or intellectual property never exercised during the lifetime of the creator were to survive his death, "neither society's interest in the free dissemination of ideas nor the artist's rights to the fruits of his own labor would be served." (25 C.3d 824.) Hence, "the right to exploit name and likeness is personal to the artist and must be exercised, if at all, by him during his lifetime." (25 C.3d 824.) (See Guglielmi v. Spelling-Goldberg Productions (1979) 25 C.3d 860, 160 C.R. 352, 603 P.2d 454 [memorandum opinion based on Lugosi]; 29 Hastings L. J. 751 [on Court of Appeal opinion in Lugosi]; 12 Pacific L. J. 987 [The Right of Publicity: Premature Burial for California Property Rights in the Wake of Lugosi]; 20 Cal. Western L. Rev. 415 [right of publicity: concerns involving survivability preemption and First Amendment]; 17 Pepperdine L. Rev. 933 [A Descendible Right of Publicity: Has the Time Finally Come for a National Standard?]; 10 A.L.R.4th 1193 [Lugosi: right to publicize or commercially exploit deceased person's name or likeness as inheritable].)

(2) Legislative Abrogation of Lugosi. The rule in Lugosi was statutorily abrogated by C.C. 3344.1. (See infra, §685.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

6 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

5. Appropriation of Name or Likeness.

c. Survivable Right of Publicity.

2. Statutory Right.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 685

[§ 685] Statutory Right.

(1) In General. C.C. 3344.1 provides a cause of action for the exploitation of a deceased personality's identity that closely parallels that provided by C.C. 3344 for the exploitation of one's own identity (see supra, §681 et seq.). This statute, which abrogates the holding in Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 C.3d 813, 160 C.R. 323, 603 P.2d 425, supra, §684, is known as the Astaire Celebrity Image Protection Act. (C.C. 3344.1(o).) (See C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §10.20 et seq.; 16 Pacific L. J. 725; 31 McGeorge L. Rev. 611.)

(2) Nature of Right. The cause of action is for the use of a deceased personality's "name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, in any manner, on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of advertising or selling, or soliciting purchases of, products, merchandise, goods, or services, without prior consent" from the persons entitled to give consent. (C.C. 3344.1(a)(1).) The remedies are identical to those provided by C.C. 3344, and are likewise cumulative and additional to any others provided by law. (C.C. 3344.1(a)(1), (m).)

"Deceased personality" is any natural person whose name, voice, etc., has commercial value at the time of his death, regardless of whether that person made commercial use of the person's identity during his or her lifetime. (C.C. 3344.1(h).)

A "photograph" is any still or moving photographic reproduction, or any videotape or live television transmission, in which the deceased personality is readily identifiable, i.e., identifiable by one viewing the photograph with the naked eye. (C.C. 3344.1(i).)

(3) Expiration of Right. No action may be brought for use of a deceased personality's name, voice, etc., occurring more than 70 years after the deceased personality's death. (C.C. 3344.1(g).)

(4) Persons Entitled To Give Consent. The right to give consent to the use of a deceased personality's identity belongs to the persons to whom that right has passed by transfer or descent. (C.C. 3344.1(c).)

(5) Transfer. The rights created by C.C. 3344.1 are "property rights freely transferable in whole or in part, by contract or by means of trust or testamentary documents." (C.C. 3344.1(b).) Prior to death, the rights may be transferred by the deceased personality or his or her transferees; after death, transfer may be by the persons receiving the rights by descent, or by their transferees. (C.C. 3344.1(b).)

(6) Rights of Survivors Where No Transfer Made. If no transfer has been made, the rights pass to the surviving personality's spouse, children and grandchildren, and parents, as follows: all to the spouse if there are no surviving children or grandchildren; all to the children and grandchildren if there is no surviving spouse; all to the parents if there is no surviving spouse or children and grandchildren; one-half to the spouse and one-half to the children and grandchildren if each survives. (C.C. 3344.1(d).) If there are no survivors in these categories, the rights terminate. (C.C. 3344.1(e).)

The rights may be exercised, for the benefit of all, "by those persons who, in the aggregate, are entitled to more than a one-half interest in the rights." (C.C. 3344.1(d).)

(7) Registration. Any person claiming to be a successor in interest to the rights of a deceased personality, or a licensee of that successor in interest, may register that claim with the Secretary of State on a verified form specifying the deceased personality's name and date of death, the claimant's name and address, the claim's basis, and the rights claimed. (C.C. 3344.1(f)(2).) Claims so registered are public records. (C.C. 3344.1(f)(4).) Neither the successor in interest nor any licensee may recover damages for any unauthorized use occurring before registration. (C.C. 3344.1(f)(1).)

The Secretary of State must post any filing under the statute, along with the entire registry of claimants, on the Internet. The filings may be microfilmed or otherwise reproduced, and the reproduction is admissible in any court. The reproduction may be destroyed 70 years after the deceased personality's death. (C.C. 3344.1(f)(4).) (C.C. 3344.1(f)(3).)

(8) Exemptions and Conditions. C.C. 3344.1 contains the same exemptions as C.C. 3344 with respect to uses for news, sports, and political campaigns (C.C. 3344.1(j)) and the liability of owners and employees of advertising mediums (C.C. 3344.1(l)), as well as the same provision on the effect of uses contained in commercially sponsored material (C.C. 3344.1(k)). (See supra, §681 et seq.)

The statute is generally inapplicable to a play, book, magazine, newspaper, musical composition, audiovisual work, radio or television program, single and original work of art, work of political or newsworthy value, or an advertisement or commercial announcement for any of these works if it is fictional or nonfictional entertainment, or a dramatic, literary, or musical work. (C.C. 3344.1(a)(2).) If, however, that work includes within it a use in connection with a product, article of merchandise, good, or service, this use is not exempt where the claimant proves that the use is so directly connected with the product, article of merchandise, good, or service as to constitute an act of advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of that product, article of merchandise, good, or service by the deceased personality without prior consent from the persons entitled to give consent. (C.C. 3344.1(a)(3).) (See 13 Berkeley Technology L. J. 319 [media exemptions in statute concerning exploitation of deceased personality's identity].)

(9) Limitation to Acts Occurring Directly in State. The statute applies to the adjudication of liability and the imposition of damages or other remedies in cases "in which the liability, damages, and other remedies arise from acts occurring directly in the state." Acts giving rise to liability are limited, for these purposes, to use on or in products, merchandise, goods, or services, or advertising or selling, or soliciting purchases of, products, merchandise, goods, or services prohibited by the statute. (C.C. 3344.1(n).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. C.C. 3344.1(o), as amended in 2007, deletes the designation of the statute as the Astaire Celebrity Image Protection Act.(5) Transfer. As amended in 2007, C.C. 3344.1(b) provides as follows: The rights recognized under C.C. 3344.1 are property rights, freely transferable or descendible, in whole or in part, by contract or by means of any trust or any other testamentary instrument, whether executed before or after January 1, 1985 (the operative date of the statute).

These rights are deemed to have existed at the time of death of any deceased personality who died prior to January 1, 1985, and, except in specified circumstances, vest in the persons entitled to these property rights under the testamentary instrument of the deceased personality effective as of the date of death. In the absence of an express transfer in a testamentary instrument of the deceased personality's rights in his or her name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, a provision in the testamentary instrument that provides for the disposition of the residue of the deceased personality's assets is effective to transfer these rights in accordance with the terms of that provision. These rights are also freely transferable or descendible by contract, trust, or any other testamentary instrument by any subsequent owner of the deceased personality's rights. Nothing in C.C. 3344.1 may be construed to render invalid or unenforceable any contract entered into by a deceased personality during his or her lifetime by which the deceased personality assigned the rights, in whole or in part, to use his or her name, voice, signature, photograph or likeness, regardless of whether the contract was entered into before or after January 1, 1985.(10) (New) Retroactivity of Rights Under Statute. The rights recognized in C.C. 3344.1 are expressly made retroactive, including with respect to those deceased personalities who died before January 1, 1985. (C.C. 3344.1(p), added in 2007.)

7 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS E. Invasion of Privacy. 6. Privileges.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 686

[§ 686] Privileges.

Rest.2d, Torts §§652F, 652G state that the rules on absolute privilege and conditional privilege in invasion of privacy cases are the same as those in defamation (see supra, §561 et seq.), and the California courts are in accord. (See Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 C.A.4th 345, 356, 101 C.R.2d 916 [litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) (see supra, §567 et seq.)].)

In Conklin v. Sloss (1978) 86 C.A.3d 241, 150 C.R. 121, it was assumed that the privilege for reports of official proceedings (supra, §585) was available as a defense in an action for invasion of privacy; but plaintiff contended that it extended only to contemporaneous news coverage of current events. Although all of the reported cases involved contemporaneous coverage, the court found no authority to support this limitation on the privilege. (86 C.A.3d 247.) However, the court, interpreting language in Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692, and quoting the Torts Restatement, concluded that the privilege covered only the publication of "newsworthy items." Thus, plaintiff's allegation of facts indicating that he had "reverted to the lawful and unexciting life led by the great bulk of the community" presented a question to the trier of fact: If these allegations were sustained by proof, the publication might be found not newsworthy and therefore not within the privilege. (86 C.A.3d 247, 248.)

To be privileged, the conduct in question must, of course, fall within the applicable statutory language. In Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1290, 1299, 67 C.R.2d 42, an attorney representing the defendant in a sexual battery action invaded the privacy of the plaintiff in that action by reading her medical records and sending them to the defense psychologist. Held, the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) (see supra, §567 et seq.) was unavailable to the attorney. The cause of action did not depend on the "publication" or "broadcast" of the medical records within the terms of C.C. 47 but rested on the attorney's conduct in reading those records. (55 C.A.4th 1299.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Buchanan v. Maxfield Enterprises (2005) 130 C.A.4th 418, 423, 29 C.R.3d 909 [neither citizen's arrest by store employee to remove customer (who refused to leave because celebrities were shopping there), nor employee's action, with sheriff's deputies, of taking customer in handcuffs into parking lot where media had gathered, was privileged; these events were not communicative in nature, but rather unprotected conduct]; Foothill Fed. Credit Union v. Superior Court (2007) 155 C.A.4th 632, 635, 66 C.R.3d 249 [litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) barred invasion of privacy action based on credit union's disclosure of personal financial records beyond those sought in probate proceeding, even though credit union failed to comply with notice requirements of C.C.P. 1985.3 (governing discovery of personal records of consumers; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §228 et seq.)].

(New) Litigation privilege applies to constitutional claims: In Jacob B. v. Shasta (2007) 40 C.4th 948, 56 C.R.3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003, a county agency supervisor's letter, which was attached to a declaration presented in a child visitation proceeding, referred to plaintiff's earlier molestation of the child. Based on the letter, plaintiff sued the county and the program supervisor for invasion of the constitutional right of privacy under Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, among other causes of action. The trial court ruled that the litigation privilege of C.C. 47(b) protected the letter, granted a nonsuit as to all the claims other than the constitutional invasion of privacy claim, and denied nonsuit as to that claim on the ground that plaintiff's constitutional privacy interests prevailed over the privilege. The jury rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor, and the trial court entered judgment accordingly. The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the litigation privilege protected against all the causes of action, including the constitutional claim. Held, affirmed; the litigation privilege barred the constitutional invasion of privacy claim.

(a) It has been repeatedly held that the litigation privilege bars all tort actions except malicious prosecution. Thus, the privilege has been applied to invasion of privacy actions. The question here is whether a distinction should be made between common law and statutory claims for invasion of privacy and a claim based on the state Constitution. (40 C.4th 960.)

(b) There is a conflict in the Courts of Appeal. The courts in Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 C.A.3d 836, 228 C.R. 545, and Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 C.A.4th 345, 101 C.R.2d 916, held that the application of the litigation privilege in the constitutional context calls for a balancing of interests on a case-by-case basis, despite the unqualified application of the privilege in other legal contexts. The main argument in favor of this conclusion is that the litigation privilege, being merely a statutory creation, must yield to the constitutional right to privacy. (40 C.4th 960.) The court in Wise v. Thrifty Payless (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1296, 100 C.R.2d 437, disagreed with Cutter, and the Court of Appeal in this case disagrees with both Cutter and Jeffrey H. The Wise court and the Court of Appeal here conclude that the litigation privilege is an absolute bar to a privacy cause of action based on the Constitution as well as one based on common law or statute. This is correct. (40 C.4th 961.)

(c) Obviously, if C.C. 47(b) conflicted with Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, the statute would have to yield to the Constitution. But the statutory and constitutional provisions are not in conflict; they can and do coexist. The litigation privilege has existed for well over a century, and since then California courts have given the privilege an expansive reach. When the voters adopted Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, they did so mindful of the preexisting litigation privilege. (40 C.4th 961.)

(d) Jeffrey H. and Cutter require a balancing of the litigation privilege and the constitutional right of privacy on a case-by-case basis. This is improper. In adopting the litigation privilege, the Legislature has already done the balancing. The litigation privilege furthers the vital public policy of affording free access to the courts and facilitating the crucial functions of the finder of fact. This policy exists even if a privacy cause of action invokes the Constitution, and not on a case-by-case basis but in all cases. Litigants and witnesses could never be free of the fear of derivative tort actions (which the privilege is designed to overcome) if the privilege applied only in some cases but not others. Accordingly, California courts have held that the litigation privilege bars all common law and statutory causes of action for invasion of privacy. The privilege should apply equally to a constitutionally based cause of action for invasion of privacy. Jeffrey H. and Cutter are disapproved to the extent that they are inconsistent with this opinion. (40 C.4th 962.)

8 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

7. Defense of Public Interest.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 687

[§ 687] In General.

The protection is given to persons who live ordinary private lives, and covers the private aspects of their lives. Those whose lives are matters of public interest, and those who become involved in an incident of public interest, cannot complain of the normally expectable publicity that results. This is a rule not only of the common law of torts, but also of the federal Constitution. The right to privacy must be balanced against the competing constitutional right of freedom of the press. (Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 C.3d 792, 811, 812, 163 C.R. 628, 608 P.2d 716; Sipple v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1984) 154 C.A.3d 1040, 1047, 1048, 201 C.R. 665, infra, §690; Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 C.A.3d 409, 422, 198 C.R. 342, supra, §678; Wasser v. San Diego Union (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1455, 236 C.R. 772; Pasadena Star-News v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 131, 133, 249 C.R. 729; Gilbert v. National Enquirer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1135, 1146, 51 C.R.2d 91; Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Special Note and Comment d; see Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §430 [disclosure of name of victim of rape, obtained from official sources open to public inspection, did not violate First Amendment]; Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1420, 1428, 244 C.R. 556 [newsworthiness of name of witness who confronted murder suspect depended on balancing public's need to know against possible harm to witness, and hence was question for jury]; Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 C.A.4th 400, 409, 114 C.R.2d 307 [major league baseball may disseminate factual data concerning players; profit alone does not render expression "commercial" and thus outside scope of constitutional protection, and this is especially true where profit is accompanied by public interest in information conveyed]; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 280; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 410, 415; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §186 et seq.; BAJI, No. 7.21; CACI, No. 1801; on public interest as affecting liability for disclosure of private facts and appropriation of name or likeness, see supra, §§665, 679; on freedom of speech and press generally, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §311 et seq.)

As the court said in Stryker v. Republic Pictures Corp. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 191, 238 P.2d 670, infra, §690: "The right of the individual to privacy of his 'private' life is a limited right in that it is always subject to the right of the public to a disclosure thereof where there is a proper warranted public interest as to the facts of his life. The dividing line between the individual right and the so-called public right is not easily drawn and must be determined in every instance by the facts of each case. The general test, in large measure, is whether the public interest in obtaining or having disclosed to it the information outweighs the protection of the individual's personal interest and desires." (108 C.A.2d 194.)

In Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 232 C.R. 668, supra, §659, the court observed that ordinarily an intrusion on privacy does not raise a First Amendment issue because intrusion is an observation of private affairs, not a publication of those observations. However, where there was both physical observation and filming and dissemination of it, a First Amendment claim could be made, and newsgathering, as well as news dissemination, was protected. (187 C.A.3d 1490, 1491, 1492.) But the First Amendment does not give immunity to newsgathering by unlawful means such as trespass. (187 C.A.3d 1492.) And to forbid unauthorized entry into the private premises of individuals is not likely to have a chilling effect on the exercise of First Amendment rights. (187 C.A.3d 1493.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(7)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 79 So. Cal. L. Rev. 945 [right of publicity and First Amendment].

9 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

7. Defense of Public Interest.

b. Voluntary Exposure to Publicity.

1. General Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 688

[§ 688] General Rule.

Candidates for office, figures of the stage and screen, and other persons who seek or voluntarily submit to publicity cannot complain of the resulting publicity. (Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 224, 230, 253 P.2d 441, infra, §689; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 34, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912; Smith v. National Broadcasting Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 807, 813, 292 P.2d 600, infra, §689; Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 117, 14 C.R. 208, infra, §675; Carlisle v. Fawcett Publications (1962) 201 C.A.2d 733, 747, 20 C.R. 405; Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment e.) "A person who by his accomplishments, fame, or mode of life, or by adopting a profession or calling which gives the public a legitimate interest in his doings, affairs, or character, is said to become a public personage, and thereby relinquishes a part of his right of privacy." (Cohen v. Marx (1949) 94 C.A.2d 704, 705, 211 P.2d 320 [prizefighter, who retired from ring in 1939 after unsuccessful career, denied recovery for derisive remark by radio comedian on program in 1949].) (See 29 Cal. L. Rev. 87; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 410, 415, 419; 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 815 [Unauthorized Biographies and Other "Books of Revelations": A Celebrity's Legal Recourse to a Truthful Public Disclosure]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §199 et seq.; 57 A.L.R.3d 16 [waiver of right of privacy]; BAJI, No. 7.21.)

The matters publicized about the person need not be current provided they are newsworthy. In Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 14 C.R. 208, the court quoted Prosser on the authorities upholding the propriety of revival of past events that once were news: "Such decisions indicate that once a man has become a public figure, or news, he remains a matter of legitimate recall to the public mind to the end of his days." (193 C.A.2d 118.) (See Cohen v. Marx, supra [statement 10 years after plaintiff boxer's retirement].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(7)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

10 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

7. Defense of Public Interest.

b. Voluntary Exposure to Publicity.

2. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 689

[§ 689] Illustrations.

In Gill v. Hearst Publishing Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 224, 253 P.2d 441, plaintiffs, husband and wife, were at their place of business in Los Angeles Farmers' Market, publicly embracing in full view of onlookers. A photograph of this romantic pose was taken and published by defendants. In holding that no right of recovery was established, the court first restated the basic test of "the norm of the ordinary man," i.e., that the publication must appear offensive in the light of "ordinary sensibilities" (40 C.2d 229), and then pointed out that (a) there was nothing shocking or indecent in the picture; (b) it was not used for commercial advertising; and (c) it was not snapped surreptitiously on private grounds but in a public place, and it merely allowed other members of the public who were not there to see plaintiffs as they voluntarily exhibited themselves. (40 C.2d 230.)

In Smith v. National Broadcasting Co. (1956) 138 C.A.2d 807, 292 P.2d 600, plaintiff had previously reported to the police the supposed escape of a black panther in Los Angeles, and was arrested and subjected to psychiatric examination. He brought this action against defendant for a production of a television program based on the incident but not mentioning his name. Held, the matter was of public interest and concerned a person in the public eye, despite the fact that the broadcast was 3 months after the event. "There is no allegation that any fictional embellishments were added to the incident; plaintiff's name was not used; from the face of the complaint there appears only the fact that defendants broadcast a factual dramatization of an actual incident which had excited great public interest and concern and had resulted in plaintiff's arrest as the protagonist in the events described. It is clear that the principles which govern the right to recover for the invasion of one's privacy do not encompass facts such as are here alleged." (138 C.A.2d 813.)

In Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich (1974) 43 C.A.3d 880, 118 C.R. 370, plaintiff, a janitor, found a sack containing $ 240,000 in cash, on a Los Angeles street in March 1961. He reported the discovery to the authorities, and Brink's, which had lost the money in transit, gave him a $ 10,000 reward. Several magazine articles were written about the incident, including one in the Nation in June 1963. In 1965, the Nation article was reprinted in a college English textbook entitled "From Thought to Theme." Plaintiff learned of the republication in 1972, and filed a complaint against defendant publishers for invasion of privacy. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Related decisions. In Sidis v. F.R. Publishing Corp. (2d Cir. 1940) 113 F.2d 806, defendant published a biographical description of a former child prodigy who had sought obscurity 27 years before; his life was held still newsworthy. The California cases of Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 297 P. 91, supra, §664, and Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692, are distinguishable, in that they involved rehabilitated criminals. (43 C.A.3d 890.) Cases before Briscoe had held that a person who became a matter of public interest could not reclaim his private status merely by lapse of time (see, e.g., Smith v. National Broadcasting Co., supra, and Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 111, 14 C.R. 208). But Briscoe took a different position: "The fact that a plaintiff may have been a public personage at one time may no longer be a viable defense to this type of invasion of privacy suit. Where the plaintiff is a past criminal and his name is used in a publication, the mere lapse of time may provide a basis for an invasion of privacy suit. The length of time between the commission of the crime and its subsequent redisclosure becomes a factor in the statement of a cause of action." (43 C.A.3d 891.)

(b) Plaintiff's theory untenable. Plaintiff pointed out that the article, entitled "Unexpected Rewards of Virtue," had reported that his neighbors and fellow workers had ridiculed him and his sons' schoolmates said their father was dumb and stupid; and in the textbook the reader was asked for comment on the conduct of plaintiff, Brink's, and the public reaction, and for an answer to the question: "Why would anyone consider Johnson a fool for returning the money? Do you?" The court held that there was nothing actionable in these recitals and questions:

(1) The plaintiff was newsworthy. He was not a reformed criminal (as in Briscoe and Melvin), or a person who tried to avoid public scrutiny (as in Sidis). He "injected himself into the vortex of publicity" by his act, for which he received a large reward and a letter from President Kennedy commending him for his "unflinching honesty." (43 C.A.3d 892.)

(2) The article did not reveal facts offensive to notions of decency; rather it praised the act as one deserving of admiration. "[T]he subject matter continued on over the years as one of public attention, and continued in its newsworthiness. Johnson's name became an indispensable part of the total theme of honesty. Just as the fable is an educational tool, so likewise is a true life example of integrity one which justifies repetitive recounting. This was the text's purpose, as well as others more directly related to the literary field, such as style and clarity, development of topic matter, and the like." (43 C.A.3d 893.)

The following cases are also illustrative of waiver of the right to privacy through voluntary exposure to publicity:

Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 37, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912 [government officials and candidates for office are "public figures" who should be subjected to most thorough scrutiny of themselves or those closely related to them].

Beruan v. French (1976) 56 C.A.3d 825, 828, 128 C.R. 869 [disclosure of prior criminal record of candidate for office in labor union].

McCall v. Oroville Mercury Co. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 805, 806, 191 C.R. 280 [P.C. 11143, prohibiting person from receiving record that he knows he is unauthorized to have, did not destroy newspaper's privilege to publish public officeholder's criminal record].

Maheu v. CBS (1988) 201 C.A.3d 662, 675, 247 C.R. 304 [aide to Howard Hughes who functioned as his "alter ego" and personal representative to world was public figure barred from bringing privacy action based on book about Hughes].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

11 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

7. Defense of Public Interest.

c. Involuntary Exposure to Publicity.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 690

[§ 690] In General.

Publicity resulting from a public incident in which the plaintiff involuntarily becomes involved, e.g., an accident or crime, is equally expectable and no subject for complaint. (Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 537, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §§691, 692; Wasser v. San Diego Union (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1455, 1462, 236 C.R. 772; Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment f; see Metter v. Los Angeles Examiner (1939) 35 C.A.2d 304, 312, 95 P.2d 491 [publication of picture and story of suicide committed by jumping from office building]; Pasadena Star-News v. Superior Court (1988) 203 C.A.3d 131, 134, 249 C.R. 729 [name of young mother who abandoned her newborn child was newsworthy as matter of law]; 48 Cal. L. Rev. 410, 415; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 320 [publication of photograph of party to divorce action]; 16 Stanf. L. Rev. 107 [reporting fact of sexual attack on victim]; 57 A.L.R.3d 16 [waiver or loss of right to privacy]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Privacy §196 et seq.)

This theory was applied to reject liability in Stryker v. Republic Pictures Corp. (1951) 108 C.A.2d 191, 238 P.2d 670, where plaintiff alleged that defendants made a motion picture portraying incidents in his military service. Pointing out that nothing in his private life was included, the court said: "We think that men who are called to the colors subject their activities in that particular field to the public gaze and may not contend that in the discharge of such activities their actions may not be publicized." (108 C.A.2d 194.) (See 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 102 [Stryker].)

The concepts of matters that are already public and matters that are newsworthy were explored in Sipple v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1984) 154 C.A.3d 1040, 201 C.R. 665. In September 1975, Sara Jane Moore attempted to assassinate President Ford while he was in San Francisco's Union Square. Plaintiff, an ex-Marine, grabbed or struck Moore's arm as she was about to fire and the attempt failed. Plaintiff's act received immediate and broad publicity in which he was portrayed as a hero. Defendant Chronicle's columnist Caen wrote an article that characterized plaintiff as "One of the heroes of the day," and added facts concerning his prominent membership in the gay community. Defendant Los Angeles Times and many out-of-state newspapers published similar articles, mentioning both the heroic act and his sexual orientation, and speculating on the reason for the President's failure to promptly thank him. Plaintiff sued for invasion of privacy, alleging that the unauthorized disclosure of homosexuality caused various kinds of emotional distress. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) The facts published were not private. The matters dealt with in the newspaper articles were widely known in the gay community, and plaintiff did not make a secret of his being a homosexual. "[S]ince appellant's sexual orientation was already in public domain and since the articles in question did no more than to give further publicity to matters which appellant left open to the eye of the public, a vital element of the tort was missing rendering it vulnerable to summary disposal." (154 C.A.3d 1048.)

(b) The publication was newsworthy. The paramount test of newsworthiness is whether the matter is of legitimate public interest, and this in turn is determined according to the community mores. (154 C.A.3d 1048, citing Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 C.3d 20, 81 C.R. 360, 459 P.2d 912, and federal case of Virgil v. Time (9th Cir. 1975) 527 F.2d 1122.) Here, "the publications were prompted by legitimate political considerations, i.e., to dispel the false public opinion that gays were timid, weak and unheroic figures and to raise the equally important political question whether the President of the United States entertained a discriminatory attitude or bias against a minority group such as homosexuals." (154 C.A.3d 1049.)

(c) Plaintiff's contention that he did not intend to enter into the limelight is answered by Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment f: "There are other individuals who have not sought publicity or consented to it, but through their own conduct or otherwise have become a legitimate subject of public interest. They have, in other words, become 'news.' ... These persons are regarded as properly subject to the public interest, and publishers are permitted to satisfy the curiosity of the public as to its heroes, leaders, villains and victims, and those who are closely associated with them. As in the case of the voluntary public figure, the authorized publicity is not limited to the event that itself arouses the public interest, and to some reasonable extent includes publicity given to facts about the individual that would otherwise be purely private." (154 C.A.3d 1049.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.8.5(7)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

12 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

E. Invasion of Privacy.

7. Defense of Public Interest.

c. Involuntary Exposure to Publicity.

2. News Report of Current Criminal Activities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 691

[§ 691] News Report of Current Criminal Activities.

In Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, infra, §692, the court found an actionable invasion of privacy in a news report of past criminal activities of plaintiff. (See infra, §692.) But the opinion commences with an exposition of the First Amendment freedom to comment on all issues about which information is appropriate to the public. Thus:

(a) It is ordinarily proper to report recent events of immediate public interest, even though this involves publication of the name or likeness of a person. (4 C.3d 535.) But there are limits; e.g., no absolute privilege has been given to publication of films of naked inmates in a mental hospital, the phone number of a woman identified as having a sexy voice, or the picture of a convicted murderer in the courthouse just before sentencing. (4 C.3d 535, footnote 7.)

(b) Reports of current criminal activities come within this category: The circumstances, the techniques of the criminals, the tragedy of the victims, are vital information for people "coping with the exigencies of modern life." And they promote the values of a public trial, by encouraging unknown witnesses to come forward with useful testimony and friends or relatives to come to the aid of the victim. (4 C.3d 536.)

(c) Identification of an adult person currently charged with commission of a crime is also in the social interest. "While such an identification may not presume guilt, it may legitimately put others on notice that the named individual is suspected of having committed a crime. Naming the suspect may also persuade eyewitnesses and character witnesses to testify. For these reasons, while the suspect or offender obviously does not consent to public exposure, his right to privacy must give way to the overriding social interest." (4 C.3d 536.)

(d) "In general, therefore, truthful reports of recent crimes and the names of suspects or offenders will be deemed protected by the First Amendment." (4 C.3d 537.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment g ["news" as authorized publicity]; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1042 [Briscoe]; 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 544 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

13 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. INTENTIONAL INJURIES TO REPUTATION AND SIMILAR INTERESTS

- E. Invasion of Privacy.
 - 7. Defense of Public Interest.
 - c. Involuntary Exposure to Publicity.
 - 3. News Report of Past Criminal Activities.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 692

[§ 692] News Report of Past Criminal Activities.

(1) Briscoe Case: Privacy Action May Lie. In Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Assn. (1971) 4 C.3d 529, 93 C.R. 866, 483 P.2d 34, supra, §692, defendant published a condensed version of a magazine article about truck hijacking crimes. One sentence started with "Typical of many beginners," and described plaintiff's hijacking of a truck and gun battle with police. The article did not mention the fact that the incident occurred 11 years before. Plaintiff sued for invasion of privacy, alleging that he had paid the legal penalty and had become a law-abiding citizen, and that the disclosure of these facts had exposed him to contempt and ridicule. Held, judgment on demurrer reversed; a cause of action was stated.

(a) Generally speaking, reports of the facts of past crimes, and identification of past offenders, is protected by the same privilege as are reports of current criminal activities. (4 C.3d 537; see supra, §691.)

(b) But identification of the actor usually serves little independent public purpose, and the integrity of the rehabilitative process must be considered in determining newsworthiness of such an exposure. (4 C.3d 539, 542; citing Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 297 P. 91, supra, §664.)

(c) Under the facts pleaded, a jury could reasonably find that plaintiff's identity as a former hijacker was not newsworthy: First, it was of minimal social value; plaintiff had once again become an anonymous member of the community. (4 C.3d 541.) Second, the revelation of a criminal past is grossly offensive, more so than a humiliating disease or business debts; its consequences may be ostracism, isolation, and alienation of one's family. (4 C.3d 542.) Third, there was no consent by plaintiff, who had become rehabilitated. (4 C.3d 542.)

(d) Thus, the pleading was sufficient. "It is for the trier of fact to determine (1) whether plaintiff had become a rehabilitated member of society, (2) whether identifying him as a former criminal would be highly offensive and injurious to the reasonable man, (3) whether defendant published this information with a reckless disregard for its offensiveness, and (4) whether any independent justification for printing plaintiff's identity existed." (4 C.3d 543.) (See Conklin v. Sloss (1978) 86 C.A.3d 241, 244, 150 C.R. 121 [cause of action stated under Briscoe, despite factual differences; crime committed in small community to which plaintiff returned after serving prison term for murder]; Rest.2d, Torts §652D, Comment k [effect of lapse of time on right to publicize matter of public interest]; 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 544 [Briscoe].)

Briscoe and Conklin were distinguished in Wasser v. San Diego Union (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1455, 236 C.R. 772, in which defendant newspaper published an article in 1985, referring to a prosecution of plaintiff for murder in 1974 that resulted in an acquittal. "Largely through his own lawful choices, Wasser had continued to rekindle public interest in his criminal trial and acquittal by engaging in one public lawsuit after another, all of which bore some relationship to the 1974 incidents." (191 C.A.3d 1463.)

(2) Briscoe Overruled. The Briscoe case was overruled in Gates v. Discovery Communications (2004) 34 C.4th 679, 21 C.R.3d 663, 101 P.3d 552. A rehabilitated convict brought an invasion of privacy action against producers and presenters of a television documentary about a 13-year-old murder case in which plaintiff was implicated. Defendants' anti-SLAPP motion (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962 et seq.) was denied. Held, this was error.

(a) The U.S. Supreme Court in Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §430, and subsequent decisions has determined that the states may not constitutionally impose sanctions on the publication of truthful information contained in official court records open to public inspection. These decisions have fatally undermined Briscoe's holding that a media defendant may be held liable in tort for recklessly publishing true but not newsworthy facts concerning a rehabilitated former criminal, insofar as that holding applies to facts obtained from public official court records. On matters of federal constitutional law, California courts are bound by the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court. (34 C.4th 692.)

(b) Neither the fact that defendants' documentary was of an historical nature nor the fact that it involved reenactments, rather than firsthand coverage, diminishes any constitutional protection it enjoys. The constitutional guarantees of freedom of expression apply with equal force to the publication whether it be a news report or an entertainment feature. (34 C.4th 695.)

(c) "Accordingly, following Cox and its progeny, we conclude that an invasion of privacy claim based on allegations of harm caused by a media defendant's publication of facts obtained from public official records of a criminal proceeding is barred by the First Amendment." (34 C.4th 696.) It follows that defendants' anti-SLAPP motion should have been granted, because, as a matter of law, plaintiff cannot prevail on his invasion of privacy claim. (34 C.4th 696.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Briscoe Overruled.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1017 et seq.

14 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

A. Trespass to Land.

1. Nature of Tort.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 693

[§ 693] In General.

Trespass to property is the unlawful interference with its possession. (See Rest.2d, Torts §157 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 Real Property Remedies and Damages 2d, §§11.17, 11.18; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §50 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §1.1 et seq.; 75 Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trespass §25 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Trespass, Chap. 18; CACI, No. 2000 et seq.) In some situations, it is a crime as well as a tort. (See P.C. 602; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §247 et seq.)

The tort may be committed by an act that is intentional, reckless, negligent, or the result of ultrahazardous activity. (Gallin v. Poulou (1956) 140 C.A.2d 638, 645, 295 P.2d 958.) The only intent required is an intent to enter, regardless of the actor's motivation. (Miller v. National Broadcasting Co. (1986) 187 C.A.3d 1463, 1480, 232 C.R. 668, supra, §659.)

Because it is the plaintiff's right to exclusive possession that is protected by an action for trespass, the invasion must be physical and accomplished by tangible matter. (See Wilson v. Interlake Steel Co. (1982) 32 C.3d 229, 233, 185 C.R. 280, 649 P.2d 922, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §136 ["actionable trespass may not be predicated upon nondamaging noise, odor, or light intrusion"]; San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 C.4th 893, 935, 55 C.R.2d 724, 920 P.2d 669, 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §1089 [no trespass cause of action existed for property damage caused by electric and magnetic fields arising from power lines operated by defendant public utility, where intrusions from power lines were wholly intangible, and plaintiffs did not allege any physical damage to their property].)

There may be trespass by personal intrusion of the wrongdoer or by his or her failure to leave; by throwing or placing something on the land; or by causing the entry of some other person. (Rest.2d, Torts §158; see Elton v. Anheuser-Busch Beverage Group (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1301, 1304, 58 C.R.2d 303 [unnecessary to determine whether damages to plaintiff's property were indirect result of defendant's act of lighting fire or direct result of defendant's negligence in allowing fire to escape because, in either event, fire constituted trespass]; 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 39 [trespass claims in environmental litigation]; 25 Proof of Facts 3d 473 [dioxin contamination]; 37 Proof of Facts 3d 439 [injury from environmental condition on neighboring land]; 57 Am.Jur. Trials 395 [toxic tort litigation].)

Trespass and nuisance are separate torts that protect different interests, although the same conduct may invade both. Trespass protects the possessor's interest in exclusive possession of property, while nuisance protects the use and enjoyment of the property. (See Capogeannis v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 668, 674, 15 C.R.2d 796 [landowner had no trespass action against previous owner who had contaminated property; previous owner's act was nuisance, not continuing trespass against present owner]; 26 Pacific L. J. 1, 24 [Capogeannis]; 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §136.)

The injured party may recover damages already suffered and an injunction. But if the injured party elects to sue for all damages both past and prospective, and obtains satisfaction of judgment for the amount of diminution in market value of the land, he or she thereby consents to the permanent continuance of the invasion by the defendant. (Slater v. Shell Oil Co. (1943) 58 C.A.2d 864, 870, 137 P.2d 713; see 33 A.L.R.3d 1132 [condemnation proceeding or award as precluding action for damages arising from prior trespass on the land]; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §400; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§180, 548 et seq.; on damages for trespass to realty, see infra, §1726 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.1, 9 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 75 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trespass §18 et seq. Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §§185, 596 et seq.

15 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

A. Trespass to Land.

1. Nature of Tort.

b. Invasion on, Above, or Below Surface.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 694

[§ 694] Invasion on, Above, or Below Surface.

A trespass may be above the land, as well as on the surface. (Rest.2d, Torts §159(1); see 37 Cal. L. Rev. 120 [treating injury from artificial rainmaking as trespass]; 1 Stanf. L. Rev. 532 [same]; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 339; 2 A.L.R.4th 1054 [injury to land caused by airborne pollutants].) (On ownership of airspace above land, see infra, §698.) An encroachment on the space above land, as by trees, roots, or an overlapping portion of a building, is a continuing trespass, which may amount to a nuisance. (Slater v. Shell Oil Co. (1943) 58 C.A.2d 864, 870, 137 P.2d 713.)

The invasion may also be below the surface. (Rest.2d, Torts §159(1); see Cassinis v. Union Oil Co. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1770, 1778, 18 C.R.2d 574 [damage to mineral estate by injection of offsite wastewater into oil well]; Martin Marietta Corp. v. Insurance Co. of North America (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1113, 1121, 47 C.R.2d 670 [plaintiff required to remediate groundwater and contamination emanating from landfill and other sites].) Thus, intentional slant drilling for oil under another's land is a trespass. (See C.C.P. 349 3/4; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Mutual Oil Co. (1937) 19 C.A.2d 409, 413, 65 P.2d 896; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Reconstruction Oil Co. (1937) 20 C.A.2d 170, 182, 66 P.2d 1215; Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v. Bell View Oil Syndicate (1938) 24 C.A.2d 587, 591, 593, 76 P.2d 167; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Domengeaux (1939) 30 C.A.2d 266, 270, 86 P.2d 127; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 192; 11 So. Cal. L. Rev. 526; 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 664; 78 Proof of Facts 3d 107 [petroleum contamination from leaking underground storage tank].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

16 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

A. Trespass to Land.

1. Nature of Tort.

c. Actual or Constructive Possession by Plaintiff.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 695

[§ 695] Actual or Constructive Possession by Plaintiff.

The action may be brought only by a person in actual or constructive possession, but he or she need not show legal title. (Lightner Mining Co. v. Lane (1911) 161 C. 689, 694, 120 P. 771; Alechoff v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp. (1927) 84 C.A. 33, 41, 257 P. 569; Whittaker v. Otto (1967) 248 C.A.2d 666, 672, 56 C.R. 836; Williams v. Goodwin (1974) 41 C.A.3d 496, 508, 116 C.R. 200, infra, §1406; Allen v. McMillion (1978) 82 C.A.3d 211, 218, 147 C.R. 77, supra, §421; see Smpardos v. Piombo Const. Co. (1952) 111 C.A.2d 415, 423, 244 P.2d 435 [plaintiff in actual peaceful possession of property may maintain ejectment or recover damages against stranger trespasser]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §590 et seq.)

The appropriate remedy of an out-of-possession property owner for an injury to land by a trespasser is an action for waste. (Smith v. Cap Concrete (1982) 133 C.A.3d 769, 774, 775, 184 C.R. 308, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §372.) However, the pleading of waste in such a case has been held not crucial. (See Hassoldt v. Patrick Media Group (2000) 84 C.A.4th 153, 171, 100 C.R.2d 662 [lessors of realty have right to bring trespass action if intruder harms their ownership interest; owner may seek recovery "whether the cause of action be technically labeled trespass or some other form of action, such as waste"].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.20

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §631 et seq.

17 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

- A. Trespass to Land.
- 2. Defense of Privilege.
- a. Entry by Consent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 696

[§ 696] Entry by Consent.

A peaceable entry on land by consent is not actionable. (Rest.2d, Torts §§167, 892 et seq.; see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §95 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d, §1.11; 75 Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trespass §§84, 86.) The following are illustrations of entry by consent:

(1) Entry by a conditional seller, lessor, chattel mortgagee, or other secured party at a reasonable time to repossess personal property on default (a privilege based on consent expressed in, or inferred from, the contract). (Rest.2d, Torts §183; see Williams v. General Elec. Credit Corp. (1958) 159 C.A.2d 527, 532, 323 P.2d 1046 [defendant's agent entered unlocked door after receiving no reply to knocks, looked for television set to repossess, departed peaceably when ordered to leave]; 99 A.L.R.2d 358 [what conduct by repossessing chattel mortgagee or conditional vendor entails tort liability]; 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §285; 4 Summary (10th), Secured Transactions in Personal Property, §178.) However, if the consent is exceeded, e.g., by taking possession of the premises, the privilege is lost, and the tort is committed. (Civic Western Corp. v. Zila Industries (1977) 66 C.A.3d 1, 17, 135 C.R. 915, citing the text and distinguishing Williams.)

(2) Reentry of leased premises by a lessor, under a lease provision, on the tenant's default (i.e., by advance consent). But the entry must be peaceful; forcible entry is an abuse of the privilege and is no defense in an action for damages for wrongful eviction. (Eichhorn v. De La Cantera (1953) 117 C.A.2d 50, 54, 255 P.2d 70; see Bedi v. McMullan (1984) 160 C.A.3d 272, 275, 206 C.R. 578, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §760 [entry under invalid writ of execution].)

A conditional or restricted consent to enter land creates a privilege to do so only to the extent that the condition or restriction is complied with. In Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1125, 281 C.R. 827, plaintiff landowners alleged that defendant corporation committed a trespass by contaminating the property with hazardous waste during its lease of the property from a prior owner and by failing to remove the waste after plaintiffs acquired the property. Defendant argued that a person cannot trespass on land in his or her own possession. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer reversed. A trespass may occur if a party entering land by limited consent exceeds those limits by divergent conduct. Whether defendant exceeded its consent, i.e., the lease, by depositing the waste and refusing to clean it up must be determined by extrinsic evidence. (230 C.A.3d 1141, citing the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.25

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 C.A.4th 292, 315, 40 C.R.3d 313 [property owner who voluntarily places product on property that turns out to be hazardous cannot prosecute trespass action against product's manufacturer; owner has consented to entry of product onto property]; 75 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trespass §71 et seq.

18 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

- A. Trespass to Land.
- 2. Defense of Privilege.
- b. Other Privileged Entries.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 697

[§ 697] Other Privileged Entries.

The following entries are privileged:

(1) Private Nuisance. Entry on land by possessor of neighboring land to abate a private nuisance. (See C.C. 3503; Rest.2d, Torts §201; 75 Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trespass §92; 11 Summary (10th), Equity, §153.) But he or she cannot cut down trees growing on the neighboring land merely because the branches or roots encroach. (Fick v. Nilson (1950) 98 C.A.2d 683, 685, 220 P.2d 752; see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §374.)

(2) Emergency. Entry and destruction of property in emergencies, for reasons of public necessity, to avert disaster such as fire or flood. (Surocco v. Geary (1853) 3 C. 69, 73; Rest.2d, Torts §196; see 75 Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trespass §§101, 102.)

(3) Private Necessity. Entry in some cases for private necessity (a more limited privilege), to protect person or property from serious harm. (See Rest.2d, Torts §197 [entry to protect actor, possessor of land, or third person or to protect their land or chattels, subject to stated conditions].)

(4) Domestic Animal. Entry to care for a domestic animal. Somewhat analogous to the public and private necessity privileges is the statutory privilege to enter a place where a domestic animal is confined, to give it necessary food and water. (See P.C. 597e.)

(5) Landlord. Entry by the keeper of an apartment house, on court order, to enforce his or her lien for rent on the property of the tenant. (See C.C. 1861a; 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §224; 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §759.)

(6) Surveyor. Entry by a professional land surveyor to investigate and utilize boundary evidence and to perform surveys. The owner must provide reasonable access without undue delay. (C.C. 846.5; see 5 Pacific L. J. 465; 75 Am.Jur.2d (1991 ed.), Trespass §§103, 104.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.23, 24, 26, 27-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Private Nuisance. See 75 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trespass §70.

(2) Emergency. See 75 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trespass §69.

(3) Private Necessity. See CACI, No. 2005 [Affirmative Defense--Necessity], and CACI, No. VF-2001 [Trespass--Affirmative Defense--Necessity].

(6) Surveyor. See 75 Am.Jur.2d (2007 ed.), Trespass §§78, 79.

19 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

- A. Trespass to Land.
- 2. Defense of Privilege.
- c. Flight at Reasonable Height.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 698

[§ 698] Flight at Reasonable Height.

Although there may be trespass by an entry above the surface of the earth (see supra, §694), legitimate flying in aircraft at a reasonable height, in conformity with state and federal regulations, is regarded as privileged. (Rest.2d, Torts §§159, 194.) The old common law doctrine of ownership to the sky has been repudiated. "The air is a public highway, as Congress has declared. Were that not true, every transcontinental flight would subject the operator to countless trespass suits. Common sense revolts at the idea. To recognize such private claims to the airspace would clog these highways, seriously interfere with their control and development in the public interest, and transfer into private ownership that to which only the public has a just claim." (United States v. Causby (1946) 328 U.S. 256, 66 S.Ct. 1062, 1065, 90 L.Ed. 1206, 1210; see Drennen v. Ventura (1974) 38 C.A.3d 84, 87, 112 C.R. 907, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §403 [overflights are qualifiedly privileged]; 35 Cal. L. Rev. 110; 73 Harv. L. Rev. 790 [infringement of property rights by cloud seeding].) The right of overflight is prescribed and limited by statute. (See Pub.Util.C. 21403.)

However, the privilege applies only to the higher airspace; the lower airspace, i.e., the part immediately above the land that is capable of reasonable and beneficial use, belongs exclusively to the landowner. Hence, the operator of an airplane who flies at such a low height that there is danger of striking structures erected by the owner is guilty of an unprivileged trespass. (Strother v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1949) 94 C.A.2d 525, 537, 211 P.2d 624; see Rest.2d, Torts §159(2) [flight is trespass if "(a) it enters into the immediate reaches of the air space next to the land, and (b) it interferes substantially with the other's use and enjoyment of his land"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

20 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
1. In General.
a. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 699

[§ 699] Nature of Tort.

Conversion is the wrongful exercise of dominion over personal property of another. (Steele v. Marsicano (1894) 102 C. 666, 669, 36 P. 920; Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 C. 372, 375, 139 P. 815; Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 51 C.3d 120, 137, 271 C.R. 146, 793 P.2d 479, infra, §704; Kee v. Becker (1942) 54 C.A.2d 466, 470, 129 P.2d 159; Farmers Insurance Exchange v. Zerin (1997) 53 C.A.4th 445, 451, 61 C.R.2d 707; Rest.2d, Torts §222A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §59 et seq.; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §2.7 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Conversion, Chap. 15; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §1 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.99; CACI, No. 2100; on statute of limitations, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §567 et seq.) The property need not be appropriated to the use of the defendant; it may be destroyed, or merely damaged. (Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 C.A.2d 622, 628, 96 P.2d 805; Rest.2d, Torts §§223, 226; on destruction or alteration, see infra, §711.)

An action for conversion properly lies only where there is some substantial interference with possession or the right to possession, and the plaintiff in a conversion suit recovers the full value of the property, in effect forcing the defendant to buy it. Where the act does not amount to a dispossession, but consists of use of or damage to the property, the normal action will be for trespass, in which the plaintiff recovers only the actual damages suffered by impairment of the property or loss of its use. (Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 C.2d 541, 551, 176 P.2d 1; on alternative remedies where conversion, see infra, §700; on trespass to personalty, see infra, 720; on damages for injury to personal property, see infra, §1718 et seq.)

The defenses of assumption of risk and contributory or comparative negligence, properly invoked in negligence actions (see infra, §1336 et seq.), do not apply to conversion suits. Thus, in Fresno Air Service v. Wood (1965) 232 C.A.2d 801, 43 C.R. 276, defendant, known to have a drinking problem, chartered a plane and pilot from plaintiff. After a forced landing, the pilot left the plane with the keys in it, and defendant, intoxicated, started it and cracked up. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. (232 C.A.2d 807, quoting the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.1, 13

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Fremont Indem. Co. v. Fremont General Corp. (2007) 148 C.A.4th 97, 119, 55 C.R.3d 621, Supp., infra, §702

[basic elements of tort of conversion are (a) plaintiff's ownership or right to possession of personal property, (b) defendant's disposition of property in manner inconsistent with plaintiff's property rights, and (c) resulting damages]; 90 Proof of Facts 3d 341 [landlord's conversion of tenant's personal property]; Salma v. Capon (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1275, 1295, 74 C.R.3d 873, citing the text [tort of conversion applies to personal property, not real property].

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §619 et seq.

21 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
1. In General.
b. Remedies.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 700

[§ 700] Remedies.

The injured party usually may elect among several remedies in cases involving dispossession of personalty:

(1) Damages for conversion, based on the value of the property. (Rest.2d, Torts §222A, Comment c, §927; see Gonzales v. Personal Storage (1997) 56 C.A.4th 464, 477, 65 C.R.2d 473, infra, §1706 [emotional distress damages are also recoverable]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §67; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §2.36; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §116 et seq.; CACI, No. 2102; on measure of damages for conversion, see infra, §§1722, 1723; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §660.)

(2) Specific recovery of the property, with damages for its detention. (C.C. 3379; C.C.P. 511.010 et seq.; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §651 et seq.; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §247 et seq.)

(3) Quasi-contractual recovery based on "waiver of tort." (Acme Paper Co. v. Goffstein (1954) 125 C.A.2d 175, 178, 270 P.2d 505; Shahood v. Cavin (1957) 154 C.A.2d 745, 748, 316 P.2d 700; H. Russell Taylor's Fire Prevention Service v. Coca Cola Bottling Corp. (1979) 99 C.A.3d 711, 719, 160 C.R. 411, 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §213; 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §1040; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §160.)

(4) Action to quiet title. (See 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §664.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.13 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Damages for conversion:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §702.

(2) Specific recovery:

Cross-References: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§692, 693; 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §245 et seq. (3) Quasi-contractual recovery:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §164.

(4) Action to quiet title:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §706.

22 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
2. Property Subject to Conversion.
a. Tangible Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 701

[§ 701] Tangible Property.

Historically, the tort action of trover and conversion was limited to cases involving tangible personal property, and most of the cases deal with ordinary chattels. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §63; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §2.13; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §7; infra, §708 et seq.; on interference with rights in human biological materials, see supra, §402.)

In Palm Springs-La Quinta Dev. Co. v. Kieberk Corp. (1941) 46 C.A.2d 234, 115 P.2d 548, a judgment for conversion was upheld where defendant appropriated a card index file with names and information concerning prospective customers. The court distinguished Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 C.A. 282, 262 P. 43, infra, §702, as not involving a tangible list. (46 C.A.2d 240.)

Although in California neither the lessor nor lessee of oil lands has title to the oil in place (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §791), oil actually removed by a trespasser becomes personal property subject to conversion, and the trespasser may be held for the value of the oil taken. (Union Oil Co. v. Mutual Oil Co. (1937) 19 C.A.2d 409, 413, 65 P.2d 896; Alphonzo E. Bell Corp. v. Bell View Oil Syndicate (1938) 24 C.A.2d 587, 606, 76 P.2d 167; see 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 664 [slant drilling]; 84 A.L.R.2d 790 [earth, sand, or gravel as subject of conversion].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.2

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

23 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
2. Property Subject to Conversion.
b. Intangible Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 702

[§ 702] Intangible Property.

Generally, conversion requires interference with tangible property. (See supra, §701.) Thus, there can be no conversion of the goodwill of a business, trade secrets, a newspaper route, or a laundry list of customers. The usual remedy for the improper use of trade secrets or customers' lists is an injunction. (Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 C.A. 282, 286, 262 P. 43; see Rest.2d, Torts §242, Comment f; on equitable relief for improper use of trade secrets, see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §§83, 89.) And a leasehold interest cannot be converted. (Vuich v. Smith (1934) 140 C.A. 453, 455, 35 P. 365.)

However, there may be a conversion of intangibles represented by documents, such as bonds, notes, bills of exchange, stock certificates, and warehouse receipts. (See Acme Paper Co. v. Goffstein (1954) 125 C.A.2d 175, 179, 270 P.2d 505 [conversion of check]; Rest.2d, Torts §242; 44 A.L.R.2d 927 [nature of property or rights other than tangible chattels that may be subject of conversion]; on payee's conversion action against holder of negotiable instrument under forged indorsement, see 4 Summary (10th), Negotiable Instruments, §58.)

Shares of stock, as well as the certificate representing them, may be the subject of conversion. In Mears v. Crocker First Nat. Bank (1948) 84 C.A.2d 637, 191 P.2d 501, plaintiff sued in conversion for refusal of defendant transfer agent, for some 6 weeks, to break up his certificates into a number of 20-share certificates, as required by the stock exchange. Although this could have been viewed as an exercise of wrongful dominion over the tangible certificates, the court stated that the rule regarding conversion of corporate stock "applies as well to the shares represented by a certificate as to the actual certificate," and that "where a corporation refuses to allow a transfer of shares upon its books, the assignee may treat this as a conversion of his shares and sue the company for their value." (84 C.A.2d 644.)

The infringement of property rights in a literary or artistic production is a distinct tort (plagiarism). (See Italiani v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corp. (1941) 45 C.A.2d 464, 466, 114 P.2d 370 [C.C.P. 338(c), statute of limitations on actions for conversion, was not applicable to suit for plagiarism of literary composition]; Melchior v. New Line Productions (2003) 106 C.A.4th 779, 791, 131 C.R.2d 347, citing the text [conversion does not apply to ideas (movie based on plaintiff's life)]; on plagiarism, see infra, §722.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.2

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Shares of stock: See Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 C.A.4th 688, 707, 44 C.R.3d 702 [escrow holder converted seller's stock certificates by effecting transfer of shares before satisfaction of escrow conditions].

(New) Net operating losses: In Fremont Indem. Co. v. Fremont General Corp. (2007) 148 C.A.4th 97, 55 C.R.3d 621, plaintiff subsidiary, by and through the Insurance Commissioner as its liquidator, sued its parent company and another subsidiary for conversion of net operating losses of plaintiff's predecessor in interest. The trial court dismissed the complaint after sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. Held, reversed.

(a) Defendants argued that the unauthorized taking of an intangible property interest that is not merged with or reflected in tangible property is not actionable as conversion. This was the rule at common law, noted in Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, text, §720, and has applied in Olschewski v. Hudson (1927) 87 C.A. 282, 262 P. 43, text, p. 1025, in the context of appropriation of a competitor's customer list. (148 C.A.4th 119.)

(b) However, the California Supreme Court early concluded in Payne v. Elliot (1880) 54 C. 339, 342, that to allow a conversion action if the defendant misappropriated shares of stock by converting share certificates but disallow the action if the defendant misappropriated shares of stock without converting share certificates would perpetuate a technicality "not based upon reason." Payne concluded that the defendant's conversion of shares of stock, an intangible property interest, was an actionable conversion even without conversion of the share certificates. (148 C.A.4th 121.)

(c) Rather than attempt to conform to the common law rule restricting a conversion action to tangible property, Payne acknowledged that shares of stock were intangible property and rejected the common law rule, at least as applied to shares of stock. Moreover, the statement in Payne, that "the action no longer exists as it did at common law, but has been developed into a remedy for the conversion of every species of personal property" suggests a much broader rejection of the restrictive common law rule. (148 C.A.4th 124.)

(d) Olschewski held that a list of customers that had not been reduced to writing was more akin to business goodwill or a trade secret than to tangible personal property and was too "intangible, uncertain, and indefinite a property right" to be the subject of a conversion action. The common law of conversion, which developed initially as a remedy for the dispossession or other loss of chattel, may be inappropriate for some modern intangible personal property, the unauthorized use of which can take many forms. In some circumstances, newer economic torts have developed that may better take into account the nature and uses of intangible property, the interests at stake, and the appropriate measure of damages. "On the other hand, if the law of conversion can be adapted to particular types of intangible property and will not displace other, more suitable law, it may be appropriate to do so." (148 C.A.4th 124.)

(e) A net operating loss is a definite amount that can be recorded in tax and accounting records. Both the property and the owner's rights of possession and exclusive use are sufficiently definite and certain. The misappropriation of a net operation loss without compensation is comparable to the misappropriation of tangible personal property or shares of stock. There is no sound basis in reason to allow recovery in tort for one but not the other. (148 C.A.4th 125, declining to follow Olschewski and Thrifty-Tel.) "At this juncture, we need not decide whether in these circumstances the cause of action should differ in any material respect from a traditional conversion action. ... For purposes of ruling on the demurrer, it is sufficient to conclude ... that the misappropriation of intangible net operating losses alleged here supports a cause of action for conversion." (148 C.A.4th 125.)

24 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
2. Property Subject to Conversion.
c. Money.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 703

[§ 703] Money.

Money cannot be the subject of conversion unless a specific, identifiable sum is involved. (Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 C.2d 674, 681, 117 P.2d 331; see Vu v. California Commerce Club (1997) 58 C.A.4th 229, 235, 68 C.R.2d 31 [money allegedly lost in gambling club was not sufficiently identified].) But where an agent failed to turn over a definite sum received by him for his principal's account, the action was held proper. (Haigler v. Donnelly, supra; see Watson v. Stockton Morris Plan Co. (1939) 34 C.A.2d 393, 403, 93 P.2d 855 [defendant savings and loan society was liable for conversion of account where it issued duplicate passbook and delivered funds to third party]; Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1069, 1072, 58 C.R.2d 213 [action was proper for conversion of funds that commission merchant received for sale of consigned farm products and used for his personal use, rather than turning them over to plaintiff as obligated to do]; cf. Shahood v. Cavin (1957) 154 C.A.2d 745, 748, 316 P.2d 700 [by ratifying wrongful sale of his property, plaintiff waived tort and elected to sue on implied contract theory].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.2

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Mendoza v. Continental Sales Co. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1395, 1404, 45 C.R.3d 525 [allegation that commission merchants retained proceeds from sale of reconsigned farm products they sold as subagents for farmer stated cognizable claim; applying rule in Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1069, 58 C.R.2d 213, text, p. 1027, respecting liability of commission merchant acting as farmer's agent]; McKell v. Washington Mut. (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1457, 1491, 49 C.R.3d 227 [conversion action may not be based on overcharge; money may be subject of conversion only when specific, identifiable sum is involved]; PCO v. Christensen, Miller, Fink, Jacobs, Glaser, Weil & Shapiro, LLP (2007) 150 C.A.4th 384, 395, 58 C.R.3d 516, citing the text [summary adjudication for defendants was proper on conversion claim that could only estimate amount of cash allegedly taken; money cannot be subject of conversion unless specific, identifiable sum is involved].

25 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
2. Property Subject to Conversion.
d. Human Biological Material.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 704

[§ 704] Human Biological Material.

For conversion to lie, the interest interfered with must be a property right, rather than a purely personal right. In Moore v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 51 C.3d 120, 271 C.R. 146, 793 P.2d 479, the issue was whether plaintiff had stated a cause of action against his physician and other defendants (the hospital and other researchers) for using his blood cells, obtained in the course of surgery to remove his spleen, in potentially lucrative medical research without his permission. Held, no cause of action was stated for conversion because plaintiff lacked any proprietary interest in those cells, although a cause of action was stated against the physician for breach of fiduciary duty to failing to obtain plaintiff's informed consent (see supra, §395).

(a) Plaintiff theorizes that he continued to own his cells following their removal from his body, and that defendants' use of them without consent was an invasion of his proprietary interests, amounting to the tort of conversion. It is therefore necessary to consider whether the existing law of conversion supports his right of action, or, if not, whether it is advisable to extend the tort to this context. (51 C.3d 134, 135, 136.)

(b) Existing law does not support the cause of action. To establish a conversion, plaintiff must establish an interference with his ownership or right of possession. Because he clearly did not expect to retain possession of his cells following their removal, he must have retained an ownership interest in them in order to sue for their conversion. There are several reasons to doubt that he did retain any such interest. (1) No reported decisions do so; (2) California statutory law drastically limits any continuing interest of a patient in excised cells; (3) the patented cell line and the products derived from it cannot be plaintiff's property. (51 C.3d 137.) The decisions on privacy rights, such as the wrongful publicity cases, are not analogous. The genetic material responsible for the production of lymphokines is no more unique to plaintiff than the number of vertebrae in the spine or the chemical formula of hemoglobin. (51 C.3d 138.) And the privacy right of a patient to refuse medical treatment does not call for the conclusion that interference with the right amounts to a conversion of personal property. (51 C.3d 139.)

(c) "While we do not purport to hold that excised cells can never be property for any purpose whatsoever, the novelty of [plaintiff's] claim demands express consideration of the policies to be served by extending liability." (51 C.3d 142.) There are three reasons why it is inappropriate to impose liability for conversion based on plaintiff's complaint.

(1) A fair balancing of the relevant policy considerations counsels against this extension. The patient's right to make medical decisions should be protected, but it is important "that we not threaten with disabling civil liability innocent parties who are engaged in socially useful activities, such as researchers who have no reason to believe that their use of a particular cell sample is, or may be, against a donor's wishes." (51 C.3d 143.) The appropriate balance is this: "Liability based upon existing disclosure obligations, rather than an unprecedented extension of the conversion theory, protects patients' rights of privacy and autonomy without unnecessarily hindering research." (51 C.3d 144.) Research on human cells plays a critical role in medical research; and the extension of conversion law into this area will restrict access to the necessary raw materials. (51 C.3d 144.)

(2) Problems in this area are better suited to legislative resolution. "Complex policy choices affecting all society are involved, and '[l]egislatures, in making such policy decisions, have the ability to gather empirical evidence, solicit the advice of experts, and hold hearings at which all interested parties present evidence and express their views.' ... Legislative competence to act in this area is demonstrated by the existing statutes governing the use and disposition of human biological materials. Legislative interest is demonstrated by the extensive study recently commissioned by the United States Congress. ... Commentators are also recommending legislative solutions." (51 C.3d 147.)

(3) The tort of conversion is not necessary to protect the patient's rights. "So long as a physician discloses research and economic interests that may affect his judgment, the patient is protected from conflicts of interest. Aware of any conflicts the patient can make an informed decision to consent to treatment, or to withhold consent and look elsewhere for medical assistance. As already discussed, enforcement of physicians' disclosure obligations protects patients directly, without hindering the socially useful activities of innocent researchers." (51 C.3d 147.) (See 27 Cal. Western L. Rev. 209; 104 Harv. L. Rev. 808; 51 Hastings L. J. 909 [appropriation of identity under Moore]; 24 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 115 [proposed legislative solution]; 32 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 381 [misappropriation of human eggs and embryos and tort of conversion; Moore]; 23 Pacific L. J. 267; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1216; 28 San Diego L. Rev. 455; 32 San Diego L. Rev. 1167 [rights in human biological materials; Moore]; 35 San Diego L. Rev. 951 [physician's fiduciary duty to disclose managed care financial incentives]; 34 U.S.F. L. Rev. 733 [same]; 37 U.S.F. L. Rev. 757 [property rights in human tissue; Moore]; 43 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 711, 815 [property rights in body parts under Moore]; 16 A.L.R.5th 143 [physician's use of patient's tissue, cells, or bodily substances for medical research or economic purposes]; 121 A.L.R.5th 315 [conversion of genetic material]; on interference with dominion generally, see infra, §708 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.2

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

26 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

- B. Conversion of Personal Property.
- 3. Plaintiff's Title or Interest in Property.
- a. Person Without Title or Possession.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 705

[§ 705] Person Without Title or Possession.

One who has neither title nor possession, nor any right to possession, may not sue for conversion. (Yukon River Steamboat Co. v. Gratto (1902) 136 C. 538, 542, 69 P. 252; Schweitzer v. Bank of America (1941) 42 C.A.2d 536, 544, 109 P.2d 441; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. San Francisco Bank (1943) 58 C.A.2d 528, 534, 136 P.2d 853; Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1062, 1066, 80 C.R.2d 704; see Hilmer v. Hills (1902) 138 C. 134, 139, 70 P. 1080 [no title: plaintiffs were buyers under executory contract of sale]; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §68.)

Thus, where a conversion by the defendant takes place after sale of an automobile to the plaintiff buyer, the buyer's right to sue requires showing that a proper transfer of the certificate of ownership was made to the buyer, or that he or she was in actual possession at the time. If the buyer cannot show either, he or she cannot recover. (General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Dallas (1926) 198 C. 365, 370, 245 P. 184; see 28 Cal. L. Rev. 69.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.4, 16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

27 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

B. Conversion of Personal Property.
3. Plaintiff's Title or Interest in Property.
b. Possessor Who Is Not Owner.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 706

[§ 706] Possessor Who Is Not Owner.

It is not necessary that the plaintiff have legal title in order to sue; possession alone is sufficient. The possessor may be liable to the true owner, and consequently is entitled to recover from the converter. Hence, the rule is that a bailee, pledgee, finder, or other person with a special or limited interest may sue for conversion. (Rosenthal v. McMann (1892) 93 C. 505, 508, 29 P. 121; Perlick v. Pacific Discount Corp. (1942) 53 C.A.2d 136, 141, 127 P.2d 647; Spates v. Dameron Hosp. Assn. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 208, 221, 7 C.R.3d 597, infra, §712 [next of kin have temporary, quasi-property right in body of deceased; action for conversion requires neither legal title nor absolute ownership]; see Rest.2d, Torts §895; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §70; on pleading of plaintiff's right to possession, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §653 et seq.)

A person may sue if he or she has a special interest with a right of possession. (Bastanchury v. Times-Mirror Co. (1945) 68 C.A.2d 217, 236, 156 P.2d 488; Everfresh v. Goodman (1955) 131 C.A.2d 818, 820, 281 P.2d 560; see McCafferty v. Gilbank (1967) 249 C.A.2d 569, 572, 57 C.R. 695 [plaintiff, with equitable lien on proceeds of settlement of personal injury action, was entitled to sue defendant for cashing draft without accounting to him]; Department of Industrial Relations v. UI Video Stores (1997) 55 C.A.4th 1084, 1095, 64 C.R.2d 457 [state agency that, by statute, had right to immediate possession of checks could successfully claim that defendant unlawfully converted checks to its own use].) An example is a chattel mortgagee after the mortgagor has defaulted, where the mortgage contains a provision allowing the mortgagee to take possession. (See Mathew v. Mathew (1903) 138 C. 334, 336, 71 P. 344.)

The person with a special interest will normally be permitted to recover the full value from the converter, being accountable for the proceeds to the true owner, and the plaintiff's full recovery will be a bar to any additional action by the true owner. The basis for this recovery is that "the party having the limited or qualified interest is liable over to the owner of the remaining interest, and in order to be adequately compensated must receive sufficient compensation not only to compensate himself for his own loss but to satisfy the demands of such owner." (Goldberg v. List (1938) 11 C.2d 389, 393, 79 P.2d 1087; see Camp v. Ortega (1962) 209 C.A.2d 275, 286, 25 C.R. 873 [stating rule and citing Goldberg].)

But where the complaint alleges conversion by the true owner, or by someone in privity with the true owner, the plaintiff may recover only the value of plaintiff's special interest. (California Cured Fruit Assn. v. Ainsworth (1901) 134

C. 461, 463, 66 P. 586; see Watson v. Stockton Morris Plan Co. (1939) 34 C.A.2d 393, 400, 93 P.2d 855 [pledge of savings and loan account passbook; pledgee sued pledgor (depositor) and savings and loan company that wrongfully paid money to depositor].)

In Goldberg v. List, supra, defendants converted equipment that plaintiff had contracted to buy on conditional sale, and defendants then on demand delivered it to the conditional seller. Held, plaintiff buyer could not recover from defendants, for the repossession by the conditional seller ended plaintiff's liability to him, there was no showing that plaintiff had made any payments on the price, and consequently his naked right of possession had no monetary value.

In Hartford Financial Corp. v. Burns (1979) 96 C.A.3d 591, 598, 158 C.R. 169, defendant contended that the holder of a security interest may recover only the remaining amount owed by the debtor. In concluding that plaintiff could recover the full market value of the property at the date of conversion, the court made this distinction: (a) Where the lienholder sues the debtor-owner, the damages are so limited. (96 C.A.3d 605, citing Bastanchury, supra.) (b) Where the lienholder sues a stranger, the plaintiff may recover the full value because plaintiff will be liable to the owner for any amount that exceeds plaintiff's claim. (96 C.A.3d 605, citing Goldberg and Camp, supra.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.4, 16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Pleading right to possession:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §695 et seq.

28 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

- B. Conversion of Personal Property.
- 3. Plaintiff's Title or Interest in Property.
- c. Owner Not in Possession.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 707

[§ 707] Owner Not in Possession.

Either title or a right to possession may be sufficient. (National Bank of New Zealand v. Finn (1927) 81 C.A. 317, 344, 253 P. 757.) The clearest example is where the plaintiff has both legal title and a right to immediate possession. (See Rest.2d, Torts §225; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §70.) An assignee of the owner may likewise sue, because the assignee asserts the assignor's right to possession. (Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 C.A.2d 622, 626, 96 P.2d 805.)

There was formerly some uncertainty in California whether an owner not entitled to possession may sue, for some of the cases stressed the requirement of right to immediate possession at the time of conversion. (See Staley v. McClurken, supra; cf. Rest.2d, Torts §243 [person entitled to future possession may sue].) The doubt was dissipated, however, in Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 C.A.2d 586, 292 P.2d 559. Defendant sheriff, sued by plaintiff judgment debtor for a wrongful sale of the debtor's attached property, contended that plaintiff had no right of immediate possession because the attachment was in effect at the time of the sale. In affirming judgment for plaintiff, the court said: "But he was the owner and we hold that in a case such as this, where the sale divests the owner's title entirely, right of immediate possession is not essential to his recovery for conversion. True, the general rule seems to be that title without immediate right to possession is not sufficient basis for a conversion action, but this rule reflects common law concepts as to the action of trover and has no sound basis for survival with respect to a factual situation such as we have at bar." (138 C.A.2d 596.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.4, 16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Frazier Nuts v. American AG Credit (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1263, 1282, 46 C.R.3d 869 [growers with statutory lien giving them priority rights to proceeds of sale of farm products by processor stated cause of action for conversion against lender that was paid from proceeds to reduce processor's loan balance; creditor with superior claim to collateral may assert conversion claim against another creditor that has possession of collateral].

29 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

B. Conversion of Personal Property.

4. Interference With Plaintiff's Dominion Over Property.

a. Actual Interference Required.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 708

[§ 708] Actual Interference Required.

There must be some actual interference with the plaintiff's "dominion," i.e., with his or her ownership or right of property. (Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 C.2d 541, 550, 176 P.2d 1; Jordan v. Talbot (1961) 55 C.2d 597, 610, 12 C.R. 488, 361 P.2d 20, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §759; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Zerin (1997) 53 C.A.4th 445, 451, 61 C.R.2d 707; see 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §23; on requirement that interference be with property right, rather than purely personal interest, see supra, §402.) However, the interference need occur only at the time of the conversion; the fact that plaintiff later regains possession of the property does not preclude a conversion action. (Enterprise Leasing Corp. v. Shugart Corp. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 737, 748, 282 C.R. 620.)

In Home v. Kramer (1936) 7 C.2d 361, 60 P.2d 854, a tenant of defendant became bankrupt, and plaintiff trustee in bankruptcy claimed the fixtures that the tenant had installed. Defendant sold the premises and gave the purchaser a bill of sale of the fixtures, but the purchaser knew of the controversy over their ownership and acknowledged that the purpose of the bill of sale was merely to transfer such interest as defendant owner might have. The fixtures remained on the premises. Held, there was no conversion by defendant; the possession of the property was not changed, and there was no assertion of a right or title hostile to the claim of plaintiff. (7 C.2d 363.)

Despite occasional broad language in certain cases (see Gruber v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. (1939) 13 C.2d 144, 149, 88 P.2d 137), a mere claim of ownership or a statement of intention to interfere with the property under an asserted right will not of itself amount to a conversion. Thus, in Kee v. Becker (1942) 54 C.A.2d 466, 474, 129 P.2d 159, a purported execution sale under a void judgment did not constitute conversion where the property actually remained in undisturbed physical possession of a sublessee.

In Aronson v. Bank of America (1937) 9 C.2d 640, 72 P.2d 548, defendant administrators indorsed stock certificates of decedent, then had them cancelled and new ones issued to themselves. Plaintiff heirs alleged that defendants intended to use the shares for their individual benefit. Held, on demurrer, the complaint failed to show actual unwarranted exercise of dominion over plaintiff's property. In the absence of contrary evidence, it was presumed that the administrators were innocent of wrong (this former presumption is now restated as a rule of burden of proof; see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §14) and were holding the certificates for the benefit of the heirs and not adversely to them. (9 C.2d 643.) (Cf. Aronson v. Bank of America (1941) 42 C.A.2d 710, 716, 109 P.2d 1001 [subsequent action, allegations that defendant made transfer of shares after entry of decree of distribution; cause of action stated].)

In Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage (1968) 267 C.A.2d 84, 72 C.R. 823, defendant operated a boat mooring area for which it paid a certain amount to the city of Los Angeles. Plaintiff docked his commercial fishing boat there, but was continuously delinquent in payment of charges. After many warnings, defendant moved plaintiff's boat to a work area for which defendant paid no rent to the city. The boat sank, and, when raised, many articles were missing. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed. (a) There might have been recovery for negligence, but the parties stipulated that plaintiff would not make that claim. (267 C.A.2d 88.) (b) The landlord-tenant theory of eviction was untenable; plaintiff remained a tenant of the mooring slip, and there was no showing that eviction was the proximate cause of the sinking and loss. (267 C.A.2d 88.) (c) There was no conversion, for defendant did not exercise dominion over the boat. Defendant wanted plaintiff to get it and was willing to have him take it at any time, and moving it from one slip to another with no intent to prevent the owner from taking possession was not a substantial interference with possession. (267 C.A.2d 89.) (d) There was perhaps a trespass--intermeddling with personal property--but plaintiff failed to show that damages were proximately caused by the intermeddling. (267 C.A.2d 90.)

In Simonian v. Patterson (1994) 27 C.A.4th 773, 780, 32 C.R.2d 722, defendant moved certain property apparently belonging to his daughter from her old apartment, which she shared with plaintiff, to her new apartment. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendant affirmed. The act of moving personal property from one place to another, without asserting ownership or preventing the owner from asserting all rights of ownership, is not enough to constitute a conversion. (27 C.A.4th 780; citing Itano v. Colonial Yacht Anchorage.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.4 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

30 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
4. Interference With Plaintiff's Dominion Over Property.
b. Actual Taking Unnecessary.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 709

[§ 709] Actual Taking Unnecessary.

There need not be a manual taking of the property; any wrongful interference with its possession may be enough. (Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Zerlin (1997) 53 C.A.4th 445, 451, 61 C.R.2d 707; see 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §23.)

Thus, in Gruber v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. (1939) 13 C.2d 144, 88 P.2d 137, plaintiff tenant fell into arrears in rent, and defendant landlord refused to permit him to remove personal property stored there, threatening to sell it to pay the indebtedness. Held, the refusal amounted to a conversion; plaintiff "was not required to resort to physical violence to remove his property over the defendant's opposition." (13 C.3d 147.) (See Price v. Hovsepian (1952) 114 C.A.2d 385, 387, 250 P.2d 252 [defendant landlord locked plaintiffs out; denial of access to personal property was conversion]; Igaue v. Howard (1952) 114 C.A.2d 122, 126, 249 P.2d 558 [defendant lessors, without proper notice to quit, took possession of leased hotel, including lessee's furniture and furnishings, and made new lease]; Kessinger v. Organic Fertilizers (1957) 151 C.A.2d 741, 751, 754, 312 P.2d 345 [immaterial that property is in actual possession of third party].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.5

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

31 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

B. Conversion of Personal Property.

4. Interference With Plaintiff's Dominion Over Property.

c. Particular Acts.

1. Taking.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 710

[§ 710] Taking.

Taking the property from the plaintiff's possession is a conversion. (Ferraro v. Pacific Finance Corp. (1970) 8 C.A.3d 339, 348, 87 C.R. 226, infra, §1589; see Union Oil Co. v. Mutual Oil Co. (1937) 19 C.A.2d 409, 413, 65 P.2d 896 [oil removed by trespasser]; Bonner v. Santa Ana (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1465, 1476, 53 C.R.2d 671 [tossing homeless person's property into trash]; Rest.2d, Torts §§221, 222, 223(a), 225; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §25.) This is so even though there is consent, if the consent is obtained by fraud. (Elliott v. Federated Fruit & Vegetable Growers (1930) 108 C.A. 412, 417, 291 P. 681; see Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co. (1908) 153 C. 411, 414, 95 P. 1029 [sale induced by fraud]; Rest.2d, Torts §§221, 229; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §27.)

Where only a part of a machine or appliance is taken, and the property is thus rendered unfit for use, an action for conversion is proper. But if it is still fit for use, the recovery will be restricted to damages for the actual loss sustained. The same theory has been applied to fungibles: Taking a part does not justify an action for conversion of the whole. (Horn v. Klatt (1944) 65 C.A.2d 510, 516, 151 P.2d 149.)

A collecting bank may be liable to a payee for conversion when it pays on a forged indorsement. (Cooper v. Union Bank (1973) 9 C.3d 371, 380, 107 C.R. 1, 507 P.2d 609.)

A sheriff or other officer may be guilty of conversion where he or she levies attachment or execution on property without the authority of process valid on its face. (Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Gillette (1932) 215 C. 709, 711, 12 P.2d 955; Brinkley-Douglas Fruit Co. v. Silman (1917) 33 C.A. 643, 651, 166 P. 371; Silva v. MacAuley (1933) 135 C.A. 249, 257, 26 P. 887; see Rest.2d, Torts §266; on defense where process appears valid, see supra, §161.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.4

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

B. Conversion of Personal Property.

4. Interference With Plaintiff's Dominion Over Property.

c. Particular Acts.

2. Destruction, Alteration, or Transfer.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 711

[§ 711] Destruction, Alteration, or Transfer.

(1) Destruction or Alteration. Intentional destruction or alteration of personal property is a conversion. (Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 C.A.2d 622, 628, 96 P.2d 805; Bedell v. Mashburn (1948) 87 C.A.2d 417, 423, 197 P.2d 98; see Rest.2d, Torts §226; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §65; 1 Harper, James & Gray 3d §2.26; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §§47, 50.)

(2) Unauthorized Transfer. An unauthorized sale or other transfer of property is a conversion. (See Metheny v. Davis (1930) 107 C.A. 137, 139, 290 P. 91 [sale by chattel mortgagee in possession, without complying with required formalities]; Meyers v. Lasker (1930) 110 C.A. 538, 540, 294 P. 80 [unauthorized sale of pledged stock by pledgeholders]; Meyer v. Thomas (1936) 18 C.A.2d 299, 302, 63 P.2d 1176 [release of pledged securities by pledgee, otherwise than on collection]; Horn v. Klatt (1944) 65 C.A.2d 510, 516, 151 P.2d 149 [sale of part of pledged shares]; Wade v. Markwell & Co. (1953) 118 C.A.2d 410, 418, 258 P.2d 497 [pledgee's unauthorized sale of mink coat]; Reynolds v. Lerman (1956) 138 C.A.2d 586, 592, 292 P.2d 559 [unauthorized sale of attached property by sheriff's agent]; Lee v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1957) 155 C.A.2d 762, 765, 318 P.2d 701 [execution sale under void judgment]; Cerra v. Blackstone (1985) 172 C.A.3d 604, 609, 218 C.R. 15 [sale by automobile dealer of repossessed car without required notice]; Rest.2d, Torts §§223(e), 233, 234; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §33 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY

B. Conversion of Personal Property.

4. Interference With Plaintiff's Dominion Over Property.

c. Particular Acts.

3. Other Acts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 712

[§ 712] Other Acts.

(1) Unauthorized Use. The unauthorized use of personal property by a bailee may give a right of action. (See Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1069, 1072, 1074, 58 C.R.2d 213 [commission merchant's failure to turn over funds that he had received for sale of consigned farm goods constituted conversion; fact that this situation was dealt with by federal and state law did not preclude plaintiff from bringing common law action for conversion]; Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1062, 1066, 80 C.R.2d 704 [because creditor did not have security interest in property he stored solely as favor to debtor rather than pursuant to security agreement, property could be converted by creditor]; Rest.2d, Torts §227, 228, 256; on bailee's liability for unauthorized use generally, see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §164; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §45.)

(2) Refusal To Return Property on Demand. Even where possession of property has been lawfully acquired, wrongful withholding is actionable. Hence, where the person entitled to possession demands it, the unjustified refusal to give it up is a conversion. (Edwards v. Jenkins (1932) 214 C. 713, 720, 7 P.2d 702; Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 918, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662; Wolfe v. Willard H. George (1930) 110 C.A. 532, 535, 294 P. 436; Atwood v. Southern Calif. Ice Co. (1923) 63 C.A. 343, 345, 218 P. 283; see Rest.2d, Torts 237 et seq.; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §41; on bailee's liability for failure to redeliver generally, see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §165.)

(3) Misdelivery. Delivery of goods by a carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee to the wrong person is a conversion. (Byer v. Canadian Bank of Commerce (1937) 8 C.2d 297, 299, 65 P.2d 67; Fisher v. Pickwick Hotel (1940) 42 C.A.2d Supp. 823, 825, 108 P.2d 1001; see Rest.2d, §§234, 235.)

(4) Transfer From One Without Title or Right. Generally, a buyer, pledgee, or other transferee of an interest in property, whose transferor is a thief or other person without right, gets nothing by the transfer. Hence, his or her possession of the true owner's goods under a claim of title or interest is a conversion. (Culp v. Signal Van & Storage (1956) 142 C.A.2d Supp. 859, 861, 298 P.2d 162, infra, §716; see Jackins v. Bacon (1923) 63 C.A. 463, 467, 218 P. 1027 [purchase at void execution sale]; First Nat. Bank v. Thompson (1943) 60 C.A.2d 79, 82, 140 P.2d 75 [purchasers from conditional buyer]; State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1997) 53 C.A.4th 1076, 1080, 62 C.R.2d 178, citing the text [rightful owner versus one who purchased car from party lacking title and right to sell]; Rest.2d, Torts §229; on effect of innocence or lack of knowledge, see infra, §715 et seq.)

(5) False Third-Party Claim. A person who defeats a levy of execution by a false third-party claim is guilty of conversion. (Service v. Trombetta (1963) 212 C.A.2d 313, 316, 28 C.R. 68.)

(6) Repossession by Unlawful Entry. In Henderson v. Security Nat. Bank (1977) 72 C.A.3d 764, 140 C.R. 388, defendant bank, having financed plaintiff's automobile purchase contract, hired a licensed "repossession" to take the car on defendant's default, and the repossession got it by breaking the lock on plaintiff's garage door. Held, defendant was liable for conversion. (72 C.A.3d 770.)

(7) Improper Disposition of Remains. A hospital did not exercise the requisite dominion or control over the body of plaintiff's deceased mother where it took steps to turn the body over to plaintiff, this attempt failed, and the hospital then turned the body over to the coroner, which was the proper governmental authority. The hospital did nothing to deprive plaintiff of any property interest she had in her mother's body. (Spates v. Dameron Hosp. Assn. (2003) 114 C.A.4th 208, 222, 7 C.R.3d 597.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(8) (New) Improper Transfer by Escrow Agent. An escrow holder converts the property held in escrow by effectuating its transfer where the conditions for closure of escrow have not been met. (Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 C.A.4th 688, 707, 44 C.R.3d 702 [escrow holder converted seller's stock certificates when he completed transaction before conditions of escrow instructions had been satisfied, before parties had reached written agreement on material contract terms, and after he had received seller's notice of rescission and demand for return of certificates].)

34 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
a. Wrongful Intent Unnecessary.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 713

[§ 713] Wrongful Intent Unnecessary.

(1) In General. The act constituting conversion must be knowing or intentional. However, a wrongful intent is not necessary. "The foundation for the action of conversion rests neither in the knowledge nor the intent of the defendant. It rests upon the unwarranted interference by defendant with the dominion over the property of the plaintiff from which the injury to the latter results. Therefore, neither good nor bad faith, neither care nor negligence, neither knowledge nor ignorance, are of the gist of the action." (Poggi v. Scott (1914) 167 C. 372, 375, 139 P. 815.) (See Henderson v. Security Nat. Bank (1977) 72 C.A.3d 764, 771, 140 C.R. 388 [wrongful motive or intent is not required].) "Conversion is a strict liability tort. ... [T]he tort consists in the breach of an absolute duty; the act of conversion itself is tortious." (Burlesci v. Petersen (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1062, 1066, 80 C.R.2d 704.)

(2) Mistake, Good Faith, and Due Care Are Not Defenses. It follows that mistake, good faith, and due care are ordinarily immaterial, and may not be set up as defenses in an action for conversion. (Chatterton v. Boone (1947) 81 C.A.2d 943, 946, 185 P.2d 610; Shahood v. Cavin (1957) 154 C.A.2d 745, 751, 316 P.2d 700; Beverly Finance Co. v. American Cas. Co. of Reading, Pennsylvania (1969) 273 C.A.2d 259, 264, 78 C.R. 334; see Poggi v. Scott, supra [ignorance of ownership of wine barrels, and mistaken belief that they were empty]; Edwards v. Jenkins (1932) 214 C. 713, 719, 7 P.2d 702 [stockbroker failed to deliver securities to buyer on demand, no defense that he sent them to corporation transfer office to be reissued in name of purchaser]; Byer v. Canadian Bank of Commerce (1937) 8 C.2d 297, 299, 65 P.2d 67 [goods mistakenly delivered to wrong person]; Fisher v. Pickwick Hotel (1940) 42 C.A.2d Supp. 823, 826, 108 P.2d 1001 [garage keeper delivered car to stranger without requiring presentation of claim check]; Rest.2d, Torts §244; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §3.)

(3) Innocent Converter in More Favorable Position. However, an innocent converter, though liable, is in a more favorable position than one whose act is wilful. Under the rules of accession and confusion, he or she may in some situations be allowed to retain the property and pay its value (see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §§121, 122); and, by a prompt return or tender of the property on discovery of the true owner's rights, the innocent converter may mitigate the damages (see infra, §1630).

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.3

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

35 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
b. Innocent Agent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 714

[§ 714] Innocent Agent.

An innocent agent, who at his or her principal's request sells goods that the principal has converted, is liable to the true owner. (Swim v. Wilson (1891) 90 C. 126, 129, 27 P. 33; Rest.2d, Torts §233; cf. 45 Cal L. Rev. 776 [agents who are "mere conduits" are not liable]; 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 202 [same]; on liability of agent for principal's torts generally, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §201.) Similarly, an agent who turns over money to the principal, with knowledge of a paramount title, may be guilty of conversion. (McCafferty v. Gilbank (1967) 249 C.A.2d 569, 576, 57 C.R. 695.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

36 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
c. Innocent Bailee or Trustee.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 715

[§ 715] Innocent Bailee or Trustee.

Generally, a bailee who receives the bailed property from a thief and, without notice of the true owner's claim, returns it to his bailor is not guilty of conversion; the bailee may comply with his or her bailor's demand. (Steele v. Marsicano (1894) 102 C. 666, 669, 36 P. 920; Rest.2d, Torts §§230, 235.)

A broker or other agent or bailee that has dealt with a security or other financial asset at the direction of its customer or principal, or a securities intermediary that has transferred a financial asset under an effective entitlement order, is not liable to an adverse claimant to the financial asset, unless it (a) took the action after being served with an injunction, restraining order, or other legal process enjoining it from doing so, on which it had a reasonable opportunity to act, (b) acted in collusion with the wrongdoer in violating the adverse claimant's rights, or (c) in the case of a security certificate that has been stolen, acted with notice of the adverse claim. (U.C.C. 8115; on transfer of securities generally, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §§129 et seq., 132 et seq.)

Giacomelos v. Bank of America (1965) 237 C.A.2d 99, 46 C.R. 612, involved the liability of a trustee. Trust property was taken by condemnation. The trustee and probate court thought the law required immediate division of the proceeds between the life-income beneficiary and the remaindermen, and acted accordingly. After reversal on appeal, the trustee invested the money. Plaintiff, life-income beneficiary, sued on a theory of conversion to recover additional income that would have been hers if the money had been invested at the time of condemnation (over 2 years before). Held, without determining whether this interest was subject to conversion (see supra, §702), the tort was not committed. The trustee's position was similar to that of a bailee when a demand is made by a third party: It is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to determine the claim, and its prompt recourse to the courts negated any theory of conversion. (237 C.A.2d 101.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

37 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
d. Innocent Buyer.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 716

[§ 716] Innocent Buyer.

An innocent buyer from one without title or right to sell is ordinarily liable for conversion. In Culp v. Signal Van & Storage (1956) 142 C.A.2d Supp. 859, 298 P.2d 162, M Co. sold jukeboxes to G on conditional sale. G, in default, wrongfully sold them to S, and S resold them to G on a second conditional sale. When G defaulted on the second contract, S sued to repossess, M Co. intervened, and S denied M's claim. Held, S, though without knowledge and in good faith, was guilty of conversion for wrongfully asserting ownership and denying the right of the true owner. (142 C.A.2d Supp. 863.) S's theory of escape from this rule (which the dissenting opinion accepts) was that by its second sale it returned the property to G, the conditional buyer, so that M, the first conditional seller, was in the same position as it was prior to G's original wrongful sale. The court, however, distinguished the situations where an innocent bailee returns goods to his or her bailor or an innocent buyer returns goods to the owner without making any claim for himself or herself. Here, the so-called "return" was not to the owner but to G, and not free of adverse claim but under a new conditional sale by which S claimed the title. (142 C.A.2d Supp. 861.) (On liability of transferee of converted property generally, see supra, §712.)

However, a purchaser for value and without notice that his or her vendor's title to the property is voidable, such as where the vendor obtained the property by fraud, is not liable for conversion. This rule was stated but found inapplicable in Oakdale Village Group v. Fong (1996) 43 C.A.4th 539, 546, 50 C.R.2d 810. Defendant received partnership money, which had been converted when a partner sold a partnership note and, in excess of his authority, used the proceeds to pay off a personal debt to defendant. Plaintiff partnership then sued defendant for conversion of the funds. Held, defendant was guilty of conversion.

(a) As a general rule, an innocent purchaser for value and without actual or constructive notice that his or her vendor has secured the goods by a fraudulent purchase is not liable for conversion. However, the result is different where the goods are taken with actual or constructive knowledge of the fraud, even though full value has been paid for the property. (43 C.A.4th 546.)

(b) Defendant satisfied neither requirement of an innocent purchaser. First, instead of a purchase for "value," defendant only promised to release the partner from his debt in return for the converted funds. Defendant was left in the same position that he had been in before, i.e., with a cause of action against the partner. In short, defendant had given up nothing. (43 C.A.4th 547.) Second, defendant had knowledge that other partners were involved. This knowledge provided defendant with constructive knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficient to put a prudent purchaser on inquiry, and defeated any claim by defendant that he was an innocent purchaser. (43 C.A.4th 549.)

Entrusting possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives the merchant power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in ordinary course of business. (U.C.C. 2403(2), 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §137.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

38 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
e. Innocent Auctioneer.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 717

[§ 717] Innocent Auctioneer.

In Jessup v. Cattle Center (1968) 259 C.A.2d 434, 66 C.R. 361, plaintiffs sold cattle to C, a fraudulent dealer, whose draft was without funds and was not paid. C consigned them to defendant auctioneer. Defendant sold them to a bona fide purchaser and then paid the net proceeds to C. Held, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the loss from defendant auctioneer.

(a) Where an auctioneer sells stolen property, the auctioneer is liable to the true owner, notwithstanding his or her good faith and lack of knowledge. (259 C.A.2d 436.)

(b) The situation is different when the auctioneer sells property on behalf of a principal who obtains it from the owner by fraud. If the auctioneer has knowledge of the fraud, he or she may be liable to the true owner; if the auctioneer is without knowledge or notice, he or she is not liable. And here, the trial judge found on sufficient evidence that plaintiffs were estopped. Plaintiffs knew that the cattle were consigned to defendant, they transferred physical possession to C, and they knew they were accepting a draft. Plaintiffs were in a position to inquire into defendant's ability to pay before putting him in possession and clothing him with indicia of title. (259 C.A.2d 438.) (See 96 A.L.R.2d 208 [personal liability of auctioneer to owner or mortgagee for conversion].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

39 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
5. Defendant's State of Mind.
f. Negligent Loss or Destruction.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 718

[§ 718] Negligent Loss or Destruction.

Because the act itself must be knowingly done, no action for conversion will lie where only a negligent loss or destruction of property is shown. (Emmert v. United Bank (1936) 14 C.A.2d 1, 4, 57 P.2d 963; Rest.2d, Torts §224, Comment b; see 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Conversion §22.)

In George v. Bekins Van & Storage Co. (1949) 33 C.2d 834, 848, 205 P.2d 1037, the court explained contrary dicta in prior cases, and held that where the trial court found that goods were destroyed as a result of defendant warehouseman's negligence, a further finding that defendant had converted the goods could not be sustained.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

40 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
B. Conversion of Personal Property.
6. Defense of Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 719

[§ 719] Defense of Privilege.

Acts that would otherwise be a tortious interference with possession of personal property may be protected by various privileges. (See generally Rest.2d, Torts §259 et seq.; supra, §131 et seq.) Thus:

(1) Repossession by Person Entitled. A person entitled to possession, such as an unpaid conditional seller, has a privilege to peacefully repossess the goods. (Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase (1919) 181 C. 51, 53, 183 P. 451; see Rest.2d, Torts §§183, 272.)

(2) Landlord's Lien. An apartment house keeper with a lien on his or her tenant's personal property for unpaid rent may, on court order, take possession of the property peaceably. (C.C. 1861a; see Rest.2d, Torts §273; on entry under C.C. 1861a as defense to trespass to land, see supra, §697.)

(3) Court Order. A public officer, e.g., a sheriff, may take goods under a writ or other court order valid on its face. (Rest.2d, Torts §266; supra, §161.) And a peace officer or game warden may seize property used or obtained in violation of the law. (See Bruce v. Sibeck (1938) 25 C.A.2d 691, 696, 78 P.2d 741 [game wardens seized boats and equipment of men arrested for illegal fishing].)

(4) Self-Defense. A person "is privileged to commit an act which would otherwise be a trespass to or a conversion of a chattel in the possession of another, for the purpose of defending himself or a third person against the other." (Church of Scientology v. Armstrong (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1060, 1072, 283 C.R. 917 [quoting Rest.2d, Torts §261].) In Church of Scientology, defendant, a former member of plaintiff church, was given permission to conduct research for a planned biography of the church founder. During the search he ultimately obtained 500,000 to 600,000 documents. He was forced to take a lie detector test for reporting discrepancies between the information in the documents and representations previously made concerning the founder, and he left the church. Plaintiff then issued a series of "suppressive person declares" labeling defendant as an enemy of the church and subjecting him to the "Fair Game Doctrine"; i.e., he could be tricked, sued, lied to, deprived of property, or otherwise injured by any church member. Plaintiff also confiscated photographs of the founder that defendant had arranged to sell to a third party and ordered him to leave the church property when he objected. Thereafter, defendant received a letter from plaintiff threatening him with a lawsuit, and he became aware of investigators watching his house and following him. Fearing that his life was in danger and that he would be subjected to costly and harassing lawsuits, defendant sent a number of the documents to his attorney, and plaintiff brought this action for conversion. Held, judgment for defendant affirmed. Because he believed that his knowledge about the founder's life and the church's secret financial activities endangered the physical and mental well-being of himself and his wife, defendant was justified in taking the documents as a means of enabling him to support what he had said about the founder and the church and to refute the church's allegations against him. (232 C.A.3d 1073.)

West's Key Number Digest, Trover and Conversion k.22

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

41 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
C. Trespass to Personal Property.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 720

[§ 720] Trespass to Personal Property.

(1) In General. Where the act in question does not amount to a dispossession, as in the case of conversion (see supra, §699), but of intermeddling with or use of or damage to the property, the normal action will be for trespass. The plaintiff recovers the actual damages suffered by impairment of the property or loss of its use. (Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 C.2d 541, 551, 176 P.2d 1 [defendant cotenant removed plaintiff's personal property to warehouse, notifying him that it could be obtained on request]; see Rest.2d, Torts §217 et seq.; 37 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 869 [electronic trespass on restricted websites]; CACI, No. 2101 [trespass to chattels].)

The privilege of self-defense may prevent liability for trespass to personalty. (See Church of Scientology v. Armstrong (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1060, 1072, 283 C.R. 917, supra, §719; Rest.2d, Torts §261.)

(2) Unauthorized Electronic Communications. In Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, plaintiff, a telephone long-distance carrier, sued defendants, the parents of teenage boys who employed computer technology in their efforts to crack plaintiff's system and make long-distance phone calls without paying. In November, defendants' sons used the family home computer and modem to enter plaintiff's system through a confidential "access" code, which one of them knew, and then conducted manual random searches for a six-digit "authorization" code, which would permit them to make calls. Three months later, in February, the sons again tried to find an authorization code. This time they used computer software to perform rapid-fire random number searches, generating over 1,300 calls in 6 or 7 hours and overburdening plaintiff's system. Plaintiff's complaint included a cause of action for conversion. Held, judgment for plaintiffs approved on a trespass to personalty theory.

(a) Traditionally, the tort of conversion has provided a remedy for the loss of intangible property interests only if those interests are reflected in something tangible that can be physically taken. Whether the intangible computer access code, which was never reduced to paper or reflected on a computer disk, and the tie-up of plaintiff's system, could be the subjects of conversion presents an issue of first impression in California, and apparently most other jurisdictions as well. However, it is unnecessary to resolve this question because the evidence supports the judgment on a trespass theory. (46 C.A.4th 1565.)

(b) The mislabeling of the cause of action as one for conversion is not fatal. Plaintiff pleaded and proved a claim for trespass to personal property, and the defendants are properly liable under that theory. "Trespass to chattel," although seldom employed as a tort theory in California, lies where an intentional interference with the possession of personal property has proximately caused injury. Trespass to chattel has evolved considerably from its original common law application--concerning the asportation of another's tangible property--to include the unauthorized use of such property. The chief importance of the theory today, according to Prosser, is that there may be recovery for interferences with the possession of personal property that are not sufficiently important to be classed as conversion, i.e., as a "little brother of conversion." (46 C.A.4th 1566.) (On fraud cause of action alleged in complaint, see infra, §808; on damages aspect of case, see infra, §§1230, 1551.)

In Intel Corp. v. Hamidi (2003) 30 C.4th 1342, 1 C.R.3d 32, 71 P.3d 296, plaintiff corporation maintained an electronic mail system, connected to the Internet, through which messages between the employees and those outside the company could be sent and received. On six occasions over almost 2 years, defendant, a former employee of plaintiff, sent e-mail criticizing plaintiff's employment practices to numerous current employees on plaintiff's mail system. Plaintiff sued, claiming that by communicating with its employees over its e-mail system defendant committed the tort of trespass to chattels, the claimed injury being the disruption or distraction caused to recipients by the content of the e-mail. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and enjoined defendant from further mailings, and a divided Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) Current California tort law.

(1) The tort of trespass to chattels, dubbed by Prosser the "little brother of conversion," allows recovery for interferences with possession of personal property not sufficiently important to be classified as conversion. Though not amounting to conversion, the defendant's interference, to be actionable, must nevertheless have caused some injury to the chattel or the plaintiff's rights to it. The plaintiff may only recover the actual damage suffered by reason of the impairment, rather than the full value of the chattel, as is the case with conversion. (30 C.4th 1350, citing Rest.2d, Torts §218.)

(2) Plaintiff suggested that the requirement of actual harm does not apply here because it sought only injunctive relief. This argument is incorrect, because in order to obtain this relief, the plaintiff must ordinarily show that the defendant's wrongful acts threatened irreparable injuries. In short, it would make little legal sense to issue an injunction and not require injury in an action where injury is an element of the offense. (30 C.4th 1352.)

(3) The undisputed evidence revealed no actual or threatened harm to plaintiff's computer hardware or software and no interference with its ordinary and intended operation. Moreover, plaintiff was not dispossessed of its computers or prevented from using them for any length of time. And there was no indication that plaintiff's computer system was slowed by the burden of delivering defendant's messages or that transmission of the messages imposed any cost on the operation of plaintiff's computers. Relying on a line of decisions applying the tort of trespass to chattels to various types of unwanted contact between computers, plaintiff contended that, while its computers were not damaged, its interest in their " 'physical condition, quality or value' " was harmed. (30 C.4th 1353, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §218, Comment e.) "We disagree. The cited line of decisions does not persuade us that the mere sending of electronic communications that assertedly cause injury only because of their contents constitutes an actionable trespass to a computer system through which the messages are transmitted. Rather, the decisions finding electronic contact to be a trespass to computer systems have generally involved some actual or threatened interference with the computers' functioning." (30 C.4th 1353, citing Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek, supra, and numerous federal decisions.) That defendant's messages temporarily used some portion of plaintiff's computers' processors or storage is not enough; plaintiff must, but did not, demonstrate some measurable loss from the use of its computer system. (30 C.4th 1357.)

(b) Rejection of proposed extension of California tort law. California tort law should not be extended to cover, as a trespass to chattels, an otherwise harmless electronic communication with objectionable content. The Legislature has already adopted detailed regulations governing commercial e-mail. "It may see fit in the future also to regulate noncommercial e-mail ... or other kinds of unwanted contact between computers on the Internet. ... But we are not persuaded that these perceived problems call at present for judicial creation of a rigid property rule of computer server inviolability. We therefore decline to create an exception ... to the general rule that a trespass to chattels is not actionable if it does not involve actual or threatened injury to the personal property or to the possessor's legally protected interest in the personal property." (30 C.4th 1364.)

(c) Constitutional considerations. The injunction here was issued by a state court and thus implicated First Amendment rights. Moreover, the nonexistence of a constitutional right to trespass does make the injunction in this case valid, because defendant no more invaded plaintiff's property than does a protester holding a sign or shouting through a bullhorn outside corporate headquarters. Nor does the constitutional right not to listen compel a remedy against defendant's messages. There was no evidence that defendant sent the messages to any employee who notified him that the messages were unwelcome. In any event, even if there was such evidence, it would support only a narrow injunction aimed at protecting individual recipients who gave notice of their rejection. (30 C.4th 1364.) (See 40 Cal. Western L. Rev. 355 [Intel Corp. v. Hamidi]; 40 San Diego L. Rev. 461 [incursions through Internet and trespass to chattels]; 76 So. Cal. L. Rev. 893 [liability of Internet advertisers using cookie technology on trespass to chattels grounds]; 107 A.L.R.5th 549 [applicability of common law trespass actions to electronic communications].)

West's Key Number Digest, Trespass k.1, 6 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Unauthorized Electronic Communications. See 78 So. Cal. L. Rev. 363 [spam (unsolicited bulk e-mail) as within common law doctrine of trespass to personalty].

42 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
D. Infringement of Trademark, Trade Name, or Trade Secret.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 721

[§ 721] Infringement of Trademark, Trade Name, or Trade Secret.

Trademarks and trade names are personal property (see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §81 et seq.), and their wrongful imitation is a tort, for which damages are recoverable. (See Rest.3d, Unfair Competition §9 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §457; C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §6.28 et seq.; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 184; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 864; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 165 [commercial parodies as constituting copyright or trademark infringement]; 74 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Trademarks and Tradenames §132 et seq.; 17 Proof of Facts 3d 609 [recovery for trademark infringement]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §733.) The principal remedy, however, is an injunction against wrongful use, and the tort is therefore discussed in detail in another chapter. (See 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §78 et seq.)

A trade secret is not a property right, but is protected from unwarranted disclosure in breach of duty. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §459; 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §81; C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §6.34 et seq.) Although the remedy of damages is available, the important remedy is injunctive relief. (See 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §83; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §734.) This tort is likewise treated in detail elsewhere. (See 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §81 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(5); Trade Regulation k.1, 331 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Trade marks and trade names:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §777.

Trade secret:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §778.

43 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. INTENTIONAL INVASION OF INTERESTS IN PROPERTY
E. Literary Infringement or Plagiarism.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 722

[§ 722] Literary Infringement or Plagiarism.

There is a protectable interest in literary property under the federal and state copyright statutes. (See 17 U.S.C., §101 et seq.; C.C. 980 et seq.; 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Copyright and Literary Property §1 et seq.) The federal Copyright Act preempts state laws creating equivalent rights in works in a tangible medium of expression. (17 U.S.C., §301; see 18 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Copyright and Literary Property §5 et seq.) Unlawful copying is a tort, commonly called plagiarism. (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §461; C.E.B., Attorney's Guide to Damages 2d, §6.15 et seq.; 76 Cal. L. Rev. 421 [An Improved Framework for Music Plagiarism Litigation]; 80 Cal. L. Rev. 513 [Copy Wrong: Plagiarism, Process, Property, and the Law]; 80 Cal. L. Rev. 1413 [A Theory of Law and Information: Copyright, Spleens, Blackmail, and Insider Trading]; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 1685 [imitation of actor's distinctive comic delivery]; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1661 [Reconstructing the Fair Use Doctrine]; 45 Hastings L. J. 359 [digital sound sampling in popular music]; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 165 [commercial parodies as constituting copyright infringement]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 190 [civil remedies for unauthorized duplication of phonograph records]; 33 So. Cal. L. Rev. 233 [intent and related problems]; 35 So. Cal. L. Rev. 225 [Copyright and Tort Aspects of Parody, Mimicry and Humorous Commentary]; 40 A.L.R.3d 249 [punitive damages for invasion of common law rights in literary property]; 20 Proof of Facts 727 [plagiarism in narrative fiction]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§665, 666.)

Damages are recoverable in accordance with the usual rules applicable to taking of personal property. (Golding v. R.K.O. Pictures (1950) 35 C.2d 690, 696, 221 P.2d 95; Kovacs v. Mutual Broadcasting System (1950) 99 C.A.2d 56, 221 P.2d 108; see 61 Harv. L. Rev. 182 [recovery under federal statute]; on measure of damages for conversion, see infra, §1722.) In the Golding case, the court discussed the three elements of recovery: (1) ownership of a protectable property interest; (2) unauthorized copying of the material by the defendant; (3) damage. Where the protectable property interest--an original product of the writer's mind--is shown, the important issue is whether the defendant has copied it. Direct evidence is seldom available, but circumstantial evidence--proof of access to the original and similarity of the copy--is sufficient. (35 C.2d 696; see Burtis v. Universal Pictures Co. (1953) 40 C.2d 823, 833, 256 P.2d 933 [judgment for damages reversed; no substantial evidence of similarity]; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 332; 64 Harv. L. Rev. 1125.)

The tort is discussed in detail in another chapter. (See 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §46 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Copyrights and Intellectual Property k.1, 2, 51 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 105 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [employer liability for employee misuse of Internet].

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§707, 708.

44 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS A. Abolished Actions. 1. Types of Actions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 723

[§ 723] Types of Actions.

The common law created a number of torts based on interference with the relations of husband and wife and parent and child that were recognized in California until legislation in 1939 eliminated most of them. (See Stats. 1939, Chap. 128, §§1, 2, 5 [adding C.C. 43.5 and amending C.C. 49]; Thome v. Macken (1943) 58 C.A.2d 76, 77, 136 P.2d 116 [trial court properly declined jurisdiction over alienation of affections action arising in another state; C.C. 43.5 constitutes declaration of public policy]; 28 Cal. L. Rev. 442.) This legislation adopts the policy that the law will not try to repair damaged relationships. (See Shin v. Kong (2000) 80 C.A.4th 498, 509, 95 C.R.2d 304 [tort action against defendant doctor as true biological father, based on defendant's artificial insemination of plaintiff's wife without his consent, was barred by policy underlying C.C. 43.5]; Askew v. Askew (1994) 22 C.A.4th 942, 954, footnote 20, 28 C.R.2d 284, infra, §785 [provisions abolishing common law torts of seduction, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and alienation of affections are sometimes referred to as "anti-heartbalm" legislation].) The following are the abolished actions:

- (1) Abduction of husband or wife or parent. (Former C.C. 49.)
- (2) Enticement of husband or wife. (Former C.C. 49; see Humphrey v. Pope (1898) 122 C. 253, 257, 54 P. 847 [wife's action for enticement of husband]; Rest.2d, Torts §684.)
- (3) Criminal conversation with a wife (sexual intercourse with an outsider); i.e., adultery as a tort. (Former C.C. 49; see C.C. 43.5(b) [abolishing action]; Bedan v. Turney (1893) 99 C. 649, 653, 34 P. 442 [mere fact of intercourse is all that is required; use of force only relevant to damages]; Barlow v. Barnes (1916) 172 C. 98, 100, 155 P. 457 [action is distinct from alienation of affections]; Hirschy v. Coodley (1953) 116 C.A.2d 102, 103, 253 P.2d 93 [action no longer lies]; Rest.2d, Torts §685.)
- (4) Alienation of affections of husband or wife. (See C.C. 43.5(a) [abolishing action]; Rogers v. Haines (1930) 104 C.A. 191, 195, 285 P. 412 [malice not an element]; Jefferson v. Kenoss (1940) 38 C.A.2d 496, 501, 101 P.2d 711 [action against father for inducing son to separate from wife]; Rest.2d, Torts §683.)
- (5) Enticement of parent (alienation of affections of father or mother). In Rudley v. Tobias (1948) 84 C.A.2d 454, 190 P.2d 984, the complaint on behalf of plaintiff child alleged that defendant, a woman, induced the father to leave the household, thus depriving plaintiff of his care, society, and guidance. Held, the legislative intent in eliminating the cause of action for abduction of a parent was broad enough to preclude the substantially similar action for enticement. (84 C.A.2d 457.) (See 39 Cal. L. Rev. 294, 300; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 297 [on federal case reaching contrary result]; 19 So. Cal. L. Rev. 455 [same]; 5 Hastings L. J. 251; 12 A.L.R.2d 1178 [right of child or parent to recover for alienation of other's affections].)

(6) Breach of promise of marriage. (See C.C. 43.5(d) [abolishing action]; Harned v. Watson (1941) 17 C.2d 396, 399, 110 P.2d 431 [punitive damages might be recoverable]; Syfert v. Solomon (1928) 95 C.A. 228, 231, 272 P. 810 [same]; Boyd v. Boyd (1964) 228 C.A.2d 374, 376, 39 C.R. 400 [cause of action abolished].) The constitutionality of the abolition of the action was sustained in Langdon v. Sayre (1946) 74 C.A.2d 41, 44, 168 P.2d 57, and Ikuta v. Ikuta (1950) 97 C.A.2d 787, 789, 218 P.2d 854.

(7) Seduction of woman over age of legal consent. (Former C.C. 49(3) ["wife, daughter, orphan sister, or servant"]; see C.C. 43.5(c) [abolishing action for seduction of person over age of legal consent].)

(8) Seduction of woman under age of legal consent. Although C.C. 49(b) still forbids the seduction of a person under the age of legal consent, the repeal of former C.C.P. 374 and 375 in 1967 abolished the action. The only sanction is the felony-misdemeanor of "unlawful sexual intercourse" with a person under 18 years of age. (P.C. 261.5 [providing both criminal punishment and civil penalties]; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §20 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Parent and Child k.7, 18

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

45 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS

A. Abolished Actions.

2. Distinction: Professional Negligence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 724

[§ 724] Distinction: Professional Negligence.

In Richard H. v. Larry D. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 591, 243 C.R. 807, plaintiff and his wife were patients of defendant for purposes of marital counseling, and the complaint alleged that defendant had surreptitious sexual relations with the wife during the period in which he was acting as their psychiatrist. The trial judge rendered judgment for defendant on demurrer on the ground that the action was barred by C.C. 43.5. Held, reversed.

(a) "Section 43.5 was enacted to eliminate a class of lawsuits which were often fruitful sources of fraud and extortion and easy methods 'to embarrass, harass, and besmirch the reputation of one wholly innocent of wrongdoing.' ... A review of the decisional law, however, reveals that section 43.5 does not create a blanket immunization from liability for conduct which, although technically within the constraints of section 43.5, breaches a duty of care independent of the causes of action barred therein." (198 C.A.3d 595, quoting Ikuta v. Ikuta (1950) 97 C.A.2d 787, 218 P.2d 854.) Thus, a physician who engages in sexual relations with a patient may be liable for professional negligence if his conduct constitutes a breach of his or her duty of care. (198 C.A.3d 595.)

(b) As a psychiatrist rendering marriage counseling, defendant owed plaintiff a special duty to use due care for his health in the conduct of the therapist-patient relationship. "It is readily foreseeable that a patient seeing a psychiatrist for purposes of stabilizing and improving his or her marriage would feel betrayed and suffer emotional distress upon learning that the psychiatrist has, during the course of the patient's treatment, been engaging in sexual relations with the patient's spouse." (198 C.A.3d 596.)

Smith v. Pust (1993) 19 C.A.4th 263, 23 C.R.2d 364, applied the reasoning of Richard H. v. Larry D., but reached the opposite result. Plaintiff's wife had a brief sexual encounter with defendant therapist that destroyed the marriage, and plaintiff sued him for negligence. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) Although couched in terms of negligence, the substance of plaintiff's action is plainly alienation of affection and criminal conversation. In other words, looking at the nub of plaintiff's action, he is suing on long-dead causes of action. (19 C.A.4th 268.)

(b) Richard H. v. Larry D. established that conduct that constitutes alienation of affection or criminal conversation is not immune from tort liability if it breaches a duty of care independent of those old causes of action. (19 C.A.4th 269.) However, subsequent cases have established two requirements for such an independent duty of care: (1) a genuine professional relationship must exist between the plaintiff and the defendant, and (2) the wrongful conduct must have a meaningful connection to the purpose of that professional relationship. (19 C.A.4th 270, citing Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic (1989) 48 C.3d 583, 257 C.R. 98, 770 P.2d 278, infra, §1024, Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 C.A.3d 388, 239 C.R. 454, infra, §973, Schwarz v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1990) 226 C.A.3d 149, 276 C.R. 470, infra, §1035, and McDaniel v. Gile (1991) 230 C.A.3d 363, 281 C.R. 242, supra, §461.)

(c) Here, plaintiff fails to meet either requirement.

(1) Despite plaintiff's presence at two therapy sessions, and his own subjective belief that he was defendant's patient "when in counsel" with defendant, it is clear from his own deposition testimony that he was not defendant's patient. Also, there is no evidence that plaintiff ever filled out a patient questionnaire, and it is undisputed that he did not sign a contract with defendant. In fact, plaintiff even left one of the sessions 15 minutes early, underscoring the purpose of the therapy to help his wife and not himself. (19 C.A.4th 272.)

(2) The "intent and purpose" of defendant's initial engagement was to help plaintiff's wife deal with her individual problems with "repressed memories" and childhood sexual abuse, as distinct from the couple's relationship per se. Any advice that plaintiff may have received from defendant appears to be strictly incidental to the purpose of dealing with his wife's own problems. (19 C.A.4th 272.)

(d) Thus, defendant had no more duty to plaintiff than any other person not to cause plaintiff emotional distress by having sex with his wife. In other words, no "independent duty" existed to rescue this case from its essential nature as a suit for alienation of affection and criminal conversation. (19 C.A.4th 273.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

46 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS B. Personal Injury to Spouse.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 725

[§ 725] Personal Injury to Spouse.

(1) Injuries to Wife. An injury to the wife gives rise to two causes of action in the husband based on separate torts against his marital interests. (a) He may recover "consequential damages" for the value of the wife's domestic services and the expense of medical care. (Sanderson v. Niemann (1941) 17 C.2d 563, 567, 110 P.2d 1025; Edminster v. Thorp (1951) 101 C.A.2d 756, 759, 226 P.2d 373.) (b) He may recover for loss of consortium, i.e., conjugal fellowship and sexual relations. (See infra, §1679; BAJI, No. 14.40; CACI, Nos. 3903E, 3920; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §135.)

The wife may sue for personal injuries without her husband being joined as a party. (See C.C.P. 370 [married person "may sue without his or her spouse being joined as a party in all actions"]; Sanderson v. Niemann, supra; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §135.) Both causes (i.e., those of husband and wife) may be joined and sued on in one action. (Fassett v. Nascimiento (1930) 108 C.A. 14, 17, 291 P. 269; Martin v. Southern Pac. Co. (1900) 130 C. 285, 286, 62 P. 515; Robbins v. Roques (1932) 128 C.A. 1, 6, 16 P.2d 695.)

As to the cause of action for her general damages, the wife is the necessary party; though the husband may join with her to recover on both causes in one suit, he cannot sue alone to recover for her physical and emotional suffering. (Redwing v. Moncravie (1933) 131 C.A. 569, 572, 21 P.2d 986; see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§134, 135.) In Wetzstein v. Thomasson (1939) 34 C.A.2d 554, 561, 93 P.2d 1028, it was held that because the husband cannot sue alone for damages, he cannot give a release of liability for them.

(2) Injuries to Husband. A husband may sue for personal injuries without his wife being joined as a party. (See C.C.P. 370.) Because the husband recovers for the loss of earning power (see infra, §1667), his wife does not suffer any loss of support. However, she does have a cause of action for loss of consortium. (See infra, §1679.)

West's Key Number Digest, Husband and Wife k.209(2), 209(3), 209(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Injuries to Wife.

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §153.

47 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS C. Personal Injury to Minor Child. 1. Action by Parents.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 726

[§ 726] Action by Parents.

(1) Former California Law and General Law. Under early law, the parent (usually the father) entitled to the services of a minor unmarried child had a cause of action for injuries to the child. He could recover the value of the child's services during the period of minority, and the expenses of medical care. (See Durkee v. Central Pac. R. Co. (1880) 56 C. 388, 392; Edgar v. Citraro (1931) 112 C.A. 183, 186, 297 P. 653; Finnerty v. Cummings (1933) 132 C.A. 48, 50, 22 P.2d 37; Bauman v. San Francisco (1940) 42 C.A.2d 144, 160, 108 P.2d 989.)

This is the common law rule. (Rest.2d, Torts §703; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §443; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §8.8; see 6 So. Cal. L. Rev. 170; 36 U.S.F. L. Rev. 535 [waiver by parents of children's tort liability claims]; 32 A.L.R.2d 1060 [what items of damages for child's personal injury belong to child and what to parent]; 54 A.L.R.4th 93 [sexual child abuser's civil liability to child's parent].)

(2) Revision of C.C.P. 376. C.C.P. 376, formerly authorizing the action in general terms, was recast in 1949 and 1975 to set forth the following substantive rights and procedural requirements:

(a) Legitimate child. Both parents of a legitimate unmarried minor child may bring the action jointly, and if either fails to do so on demand or is dead or cannot be found, the other may sue and must join the coparent, if living, as a defendant. (C.C.P. 376(a).)

(b) Illegitimate child. Either parent of an illegitimate unmarried minor child may bring the action if a guardian has not been appointed, and the other may be joined as a party. (C.C.P. 376(b), (d).) If the action is brought by the parent not having custody, the other must be served with summons. (C.C.P. 376(b).) If the action is brought by the father, he must, prior to the child's injury, either have acknowledged in writing before a competent witness that he is the father or have been judicially determined to be the father. (C.C.P. 376(c).)

(c) Parents' rights to award. The respective rights of the parents in the award "shall be determined by the court." (C.C.P. 376(a), (b).)

(d) Action by guardian. A guardian may maintain the action for a ward. (C.C.P. 376(e).)

(e) Measure of damages. Damages may be awarded "as under all of the circumstances of the case may be just," subject to certain restrictions after the death of the child. (C.C.P. 376(g); see BAJI, No. 14.32.)

West's Key Number Digest, Parent and Child k.7(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Former California Law and General Law. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §8.8.

48 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS
C. Personal Injury to Minor Child.
2. Action by Child.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 727

[§ 727] Action by Child.

The child himself or herself, unless emancipated, has a cause of action only for "general damages" for physical and mental suffering, and for future loss of earning power after majority. (See Rest.2d, Torts §703, Comment h.) However, it has been held that, where the parent sues as guardian ad litem of the child, recovery may be had for loss of earnings or services and medical expenses, on the theory that the parent is thus giving the right to the child. (Bauman v. San Francisco (1940) 42 C.A.2d 144, 161, 108 P.2d 989; McManus v. Arnold Taxi Corp. (1927) 82 C.A. 215, 223, 255 P. 755; Girard v. Irvine (1929) 97 C.A. 377, 386, 275 P. 840; see 36 U.S.F. L. Rev. 535 [waiver by parents of children's tort liability claims]; BAJI, Nos. 14.30, 14.31.)

The distinction between the rights of action of the parent and those of the child was emphasized in Harper v. Vallejo Housing Authority (1951) 104 C.A.2d 621, 232 P.2d 262. Plaintiff child was injured by a negligent automobile driver while playing in the recreation area of a housing project. The tenant (his parent) had by lease provision agreed to relieve the landlord from liability for injury "to the tenant or the members of his household." The court held that this purported to release only liability to the parents. "We may assume here that it would bar them from recovering damages accruing to themselves, as for medical, surgical and hospital expenses in caring for their injured child. But this is a suit by the child through her guardian ad litem for injuries suffered to herself from the accident. The parents did not by the release attempt to contract away the child's rights. It is unnecessary to discuss the question of whether or not they could lawfully have done so." (104 C.A.2d 626.)

West's Key Number Digest, Infants k.72(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

49 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS
C. Personal Injury to Minor Child.
3. Injury to Unborn Child.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 728

[§ 728] Injury to Unborn Child.

Considerable dispute developed over the question whether a right of action exists for injuries received by a child prior to its birth. The usual cases involve (1) negligence of a physician who, in treating the mother or delivering the child, injures the latter, or (2) automobile accidents causing injuries to a pregnant woman. The early view that no duty was owed to the unborn child has given way to the modern recognition of the duty and right of action. (Rest.2d, Torts §869; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §288; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.3; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 173; 3 Hastings L. J. 76; 13 Pacific L. J. 147; 20 So. Cal. L. Rev. 231; 40 A.L.R.3d 1222 [liability for prenatal injuries]; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Prenatal Injuries; Wrongful Life, Birth, or Conception §4 et seq.; on preconception torts, see Dobbs, The Law of Torts §290; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.3; 91 A.L.R.3d 316 [liability for preconception torts]; on whether child may sue mother for infliction of prenatal injuries, see 103 Harv. L. Rev. 823; 78 A.L.R.4th 1082.) The right of action exists even where the child is not viable, although in such a case, it will be more difficult to prove a causal connection between the wrongful act and the harm suffered. (Rest.2d, Torts §869, Comment d.)

Scott v. McPheeters (1939) 33 C.A.2d 629, 92 P.2d 678, held that an action would lie on behalf of a child of 11 years for injuries suffered before birth, from the alleged negligence of defendant physician. The court found some support in C.C. 29, providing that an unborn child "is to be deemed an existing person, so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth." (33 C.A.2d 637.) (See 28 Cal. L. Rev. 107 [Scott].) (For denial of recovery for wrongful death of unborn child, see infra, §1382.)

C.C. 29 was subsequently amended to place a 6-year statute of limitations on the right to sue, running from the time of birth. This provision merely creates a limitation, not a condition on the right; hence, the period may be tolled by the usual factors. (See Myers v. Stevenson (1954) 125 C.A.2d 399, 402, 270 P.2d 885 [malpractice; statute begins to run from date plaintiff, with reasonable diligence, should have discovered wrongful act]; Segura v. Brundage (1979) 91 C.A.3d 19, 27, 153 C.R. 777 [same]; Call v. Kezirian (1982) 135 C.A.3d 189, 195, 198, 185 C.R. 103 [same].)

C.C. 29 was later replaced by C.C. 43.1 and C.C.P. 340.4 without substantive change.

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.9

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §18.3; 62A Am.Jur.2d (2005 ed.), Prenatal Injuries; Wrongful Life, Birth, or Conception §4 et seq.

50 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. INTERFERENCE WITH DOMESTIC RELATIONS D. Abduction of Child.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 729

[§ 729] Abduction of Child.

(1) In General. C.C. 49(a) recognizes an action for "[t]he abduction or enticement of a child from a parent, or from a guardian entitled to its custody." (See Robbins v. Hamburger Home for Girls (1995) 32 C.A.4th 671, 680, 38 C.R.2d 534, supra, §143 [girls' shelter and counselor did not violate C.C. 49 by allowing 15-year-old girl to stay at shelter voluntarily and refusing to disclose her whereabouts to her parents while authorities investigated claimed child abuse]; Rest.2d, Torts §700; 49 A.L.R.4th 7 [liability of legal or natural parent or one who aids and abets abduction of child].)

In Surina v. Lucey (1985) 168 C.A.3d 539, 214 C.R. 509, the court discussed various issues of liability and damages in an abduction suit. Plaintiffs, parents of a 16-year-old girl, alleged that defendant, her maternal uncle, enticed her from their home and engaged in sexual relations with her for 7 months. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) A third person may not interfere with the parents' right of custody, even if motivated by kindness or affection toward the child. The consent of the child is no defense, and the child need not be joined in the action. (168 C.A.3d 543.)

(b) Borer v. American Airlines (1977) 19 C.3d 441, 138 C.R. 302, 563 P.2d 858, infra, §1683, denying a right of action for negligent loss of parent-child consortium, emphasized the nonstatutory basis for the action for loss of consortium, and further emphasized the distinction between a negligent and intentional wrong--here the intentional interference with parental consortium. (168 C.A.3d 544.)

(c) The right of action may be based not only on the loss of services but also the parent's right to care, custody, and companionship of the child. Damages may be recovered for the emotional distress resulting from loss of the child, and for the expense incurred in vindicating the parent's rights; also, where malice is shown, punitive damages may be awarded. (168 C.A.3d 544.)

(d) Defendant contended that, because there is no longer a cause of action for seduction of a minor female child (see supra, §723), the allegation of sexual relations adds nothing to the complaint and should be stricken. This reasoning is unsound. The allegation serves to support the claim of emotional distress. (168 C.A.3d 545.)

(2) Abduction by Parent. The crime of child-stealing (see P.C. 278) is against the parent, not the child, and one parent, unless deprived of any right to custody by court order, cannot be held criminally liable for taking the child from the actual custody of the other parent. (Wilborn v. Superior Court (1959) 51 C.2d 828, 830, 337 P.2d 65, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §285.) However, Rosefield v. Rosefield (1963) 221 C.A.2d 431, 34 C.R. 479, suggests that such a parent may be liable in tort.

The Rosefield case involved the liability of one assisting the taking parent, but the opinion suggests that the parent may be liable as well. The complaint alleged that plaintiff mother and defendant father had a young daughter; that they separated shortly after her birth, leaving her with the mother; that defendant father and defendant grandfather (the father's father) abducted and secreted the child; and that the mother expended a stated amount in efforts to locate her and anticipated further expense. Three causes of action were stated: (a) By the mother, for direct participation in the acts alleged; (b) by the mother, for conspiracy; (c) by a guardian ad litem on behalf of the child. The father was never served, and the grandfather was given judgment of dismissal after demurrer was sustained. Held, reversed.

(a) First count: direct participation by grandfather. The Wilborn case, supra, held the parent's assistant criminally liable on the ground that the immunity of the parent was personal and nondelegable. (See 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §286.) This case, as well as C.C. 49(a), supports an action against the grandfather, even though the father might have had a right to take the child. "The actions of the third party, as alleged, did not simply help the father to gain custody of the child, as from a stranger, but effectively deprived the mother of a right, elemental and of value inestimable, which she, too, had." (221 C.A.2d 433.)

(b) Second count: conspiracy. Defendant grandfather contended that, because conspiracy is only actionable if the object is a wrong (see supra, §46), and the object of the father in taking the child was not wrongful, no action could lie against a third person for conspiring with the father. Under the facts, however, the father's taking is a legal wrong. "If ... one parent makes away with the offspring, removes it effectually from judicial control, conceals it, and leaves the other parent utterly bereft of the means of enjoying any of the privileges of parenthood, it is folly to say that the decamping parent is merely exercising his 'equal right' to the custody of the child. There is no equality about it." (221 C.A.2d 435.) Although no precedent can be found for this holding, new torts can be developed. (221 C.A.2d 435, citing the text.) Also, there is statutory support in the broad declaration of C.C. 1708, that every person must abstain from infringing on the rights of another. "One of the highest rights has been infringed upon according to the pleading in this case." (221 C.A.2d 435.) Contrary authorities, including Rest.2d, Torts §700, Comment (c), may be dismissed as resting on the now repudiated interspousal immunity. (221 C.A.2d 436; on abrogation of interspousal immunity, see supra, §27.)

(c) Third count: child's action against grandfather. C.C. 49(a), which gives a remedy to the parent, furnishes no support for this count; but the maxim may be invoked that for every wrong there is a remedy (see C.C. 3523, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §5). (221 C.A.2d 437.) "The child is entitled to the society and care, and protection and affection of her mother. The acts of respondent as alleged have deprived her of these rights. If respondent had taken the child and placed her with strangers, we think it clear that a right of the child had been taken away. The fact that the father participated does not change matters so far as the child's rights are concerned, though it may bear on damage." (221 C.A.2d 436.)

West's Key Number Digest, Parent and Child k.7, 18

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Abduction by Parent. Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §5.

51 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

1. In General.

a. Development of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 730

[§ 730] Development of Tort.

In the celebrated case of Lumley v. Gye (1853) 118 Eng.Rep.R. 749, an opera singer had agreed to sing exclusively for plaintiff, and defendant, with knowledge of the contract, persuaded her to refuse to perform. The court held that an action would lie for wilfully inducing the breach of contract. The doctrine of this case has been gradually extended to apply to inducing breach of any type of contract, and even to inducing refusal to do business where no contract relations exist. (See Rest.2d, Torts §766 et seq.; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.4 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §452; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §6.5; 61 Harv. L. Rev. 897; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 959; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1510 [Tortious Interference With Contractual Relations in the Nineteenth Century]; 48 Hastings L. J. 981 [hiring competitors' employees]; 18 Stanf. L. Rev. 1406; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 304 [wrongful threat of civil action as basis of recovery]; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §37 et seq.; 26 A.L.R.2d 1227 [liability for procuring breach of contract]; 27 A.L.R.3d 1227 [purchaser's interference with land purchase contract]; 29 A.L.R.3d 1229 [purchaser's interference with contract between vendor and broker]; 34 A.L.R.3d 720 [broker's interference with contract between vendor and another broker]; 79 A.L.R.3d 672 [interference with employment contract by threat to end contract with employer]; 96 A.L.R.3d 862 [interference with lease]; 7 A.L.R.4th 572 [interference with physician's contract or relationship with hospital]; 44 A.L.R.4th 1078 [punitive damages for interference with contract]; 50 Proof of Facts 2d 455 [employment contract]; 17 Proof of Facts 3d 685 [parent corporation's interference with subsidiary's contract with third party]; 50 Proof of Facts 3d 317 [relocation company's liability for tortious interference with contractual relationship between seller employee and real estate broker]; 64 Proof of Facts 3d 273 [tortious interference with contractual relationship involving sale of real estate]; 67 Proof of Facts 3d 147 [tortious interference with real estate lease]; 18 Am.Jur. Trials 57 [Actions for Interference With Contract Rights].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §6.5; 97 Am.Jur. Trials 107 [prospective purchaser's recovery of damages for inducing breach of real estate contract].

52 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

1. In General.

b. California Law.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 731

[§ 731] California Law.

(1) Adoption of Majority Rule. In the early case of Boyson v. Thorn (1893) 98 C. 578, 580, 33 P. 492, the court held that an action would not lie against one who, from malicious motives, but without threats, violence, falsehood, deception, or benefit to himself, induced another to violate his contract with the plaintiff.

The Boyson case was greatly criticized, and was finally repudiated in Imperial Ice Co. v. Rossier (1941) 18 C.2d 33, 112 P.2d 631, which adopted the majority rule that an action lies for inducement to breach a contract even though the means employed are otherwise lawful. Plaintiff bought a business from C who covenanted not to compete, and defendants induced C to violate this contract. Held, an injunction would lie. (18 C.2d 37.) (See Cal. Civil Practice, 6 Business Litigation, §64:14 et seq.; 23 Cal. L. Rev. 420; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 208; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 181; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 74; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 487; 3 Stanf. L. Rev. 554; BAJI, Nos. 7.80, 7.81; CACI, Nos. 2200, 2201; on pleading cause of action, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §727 et seq.)

A number of decisions recognize the tort. (See Herron v. State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. (1961) 56 C.2d 202, 205, 14 C.R. 294, 363 P.2d 310, infra, §756; Blender v. Superior Court (1942) 55 C.A.2d 24, 26, 130 P.2d 179 [defamatory statements by defendant resulting in plaintiff's discharge from employment]; Elsbach v. Mulligan (1943) 58 C.A.2d 354, 366, 136 P.2d 651 [fraudulent inducement by one of two joint adventurers, to obtain contract solely for himself]; California Auto Court Assn. v. Cohn (1950) 98 C.A.2d 145, 149, 219 P.2d 511 [conspiracy to prevent plaintiff broker from obtaining real estate commission]; Campbell v. Veith (1953) 121 C.A.2d 729, 733, 264 P.2d 141 [defendant landlord threatened tenant with termination of tenancy unless he evicted plaintiff subtenant]; Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 C.A.2d 55, 57, 12 C.R. 319, infra, §733; Federal Automotive Services v. Lane Buick Co. (1962) 204 C.A.2d 689, 691, 22 C.R. 603, citing the text; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Zerin (1997) 53 C.A.4th 445, 458, 61 C.R.2d 707 [attorney receiving payment of judgment or settlement on behalf of client has no obligation to satisfy client's debts out of that fund, unless creditor has property interest in fund or unless trust relationship exists between attorney and creditor; where neither condition existed, attorney did not interfere with contract between insurer and its insureds by failing to make payment]; AB Group v. Wertin (1997) 59 C.A.4th 1022, 1033, 69 C.R.2d 652 [for purposes of intentional interference with contract, possibility of obtaining discount on loan by threatening default is not protected economic interest that could be actionably interfered with by making payments].)

(2) Elements of Cause of Action. The elements of the cause of action are (a) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (b) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (c) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (d) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (e) resulting damage. (Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 1126, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, infra, §763; Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 55, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, infra, §737; Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 C.4th 1140, 1148, 17 C.R.3d 289, 95 P.3d 513, infra, §755.)

Unlike the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage (see infra, §744), it is not an element of the action that the defendant's conduct be wrongful apart from the interference itself. (Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., supra.)

Liability has also been recognized, in proper circumstances, for negligent interference with contractual interests. (See infra, §751 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Adoption of Majority Rule. See 56 Hastings L. J. 1277 [attorneys' liability to adverse parties where California settlement agreement is breached].

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §771 et seq. (2) Elements of Cause of Action. See Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 212, 237, 26 C.R.3d 798 [stating elements].

53 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

2. Existing and Valid Contract.

a. Void Contract.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 732

[§ 732] Void Contract.

A contract that is void for any reason cannot be the subject of an action for interference with contractual relations. (See A-Mark Coin Co. v. General Mills (1983) 148 C.A.3d 312, 320, 321, 195 C.R. 859 [agreement to purchase estate assets based on probate court order later vacated by the probate court, rendering agreement wholly void].) "The particular agreement must be in force and effect at the time of the breach that the actor has caused; and if for any reason it is entirely void, there is no liability for causing its breach." (Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment f.)

The cause of action cannot be based on a contract that is illegal or against public policy. (Renaissance Realty v. Soriano (1981) 120 C.A.3d Supp. 13, 18, 174 C.R. 837.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

54 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

2. Existing and Valid Contract.

b. Voidable Contract.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 733

[§ 733] Voidable Contract.

In Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 C.A.2d 55, 12 C.R. 319, plaintiff alleged that he made oral agreements with two sets of property owners to employ him as a real estate broker, that he negotiated an exchange of their properties and an agreement to pay him a stated commission, and that defendant's employee brought the property owners together and induced them to breach their contract with plaintiff. In this case of first impression in California, the defense, that plaintiff's oral contract was unenforceable (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §392), was rejected. The great weight of authority and critical opinion holds that the action for inducing breach of contract is merely a part of the broader protection against interference with advantageous economic relations (infra, §741). Hence, if it is available even in the absence of any contract, it is not made unavailable by the fact that the contract is voidable by reason of the statute of frauds, lack of consideration, or even uncertainty. (191 C.A.2d 58, citing Prosser.)

The California Supreme Court subsequently stated generally that voidable contracts "afford a basis for a tort action when the defendant interferes with their performance." (Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C.3d 815, 824, 122 C.R. 745, 537 P.2d 865, infra, §748 [in action for interference with prospective advantage].) However, that court noted, in Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, infra, §763, that "[m]any cases have treated claims of interference with voidable and terminable contracts as coming within the cause of action for interference with prospective advantage," rather than of interference with a contractual relationship, but it failed to resolve the issue, which was unnecessary to the decision in the case. (50 C.3d 1128, footnote 4.) (See Di Lorenzo v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1965) 232 C.A.2d 839, 842, 43 C.R. 261 [following Zimmerman]; Golden v. Anderson (1967) 256 C.A.2d 714, 719, 64 C.R. 404 [same]; Friedman v. Jackson (1968) 266 C.A.2d 517, 520, 72 C.R. 129 [following Zimmerman and Golden]; Keely v. Price (1972) 27 C.A.3d 209, 215, 103 C.R. 531 [following Zimmerman]; Shamblin v. Berge (1985) 166 C.A.3d 118, 124, 212 C.R. 313 [citing Zimmerman and Buckaloo]; Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 C.A.3d 10, 28, 223 C.R. 806, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment f; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 963; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §5; 96 A.L.R.3d 1294 [liability for interference with invalid or unenforceable contract].)

Courts of Appeal have later held that an action based on interference with a voidable contract must be brought on an interference with prospective advantage theory, and that a valid enforceable contract is a necessary element of an action for interference with a contract. (See PMC v. Saban Entertainment (1996) 45 C.A.4th 579, 601, 52 C.R.2d 877 [limiting Zimmerman rule]; Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52 C.A.4th 867, 877, 60 C.R.2d 830 [following PMC v. Saban Entertainment; no interference with contractual relations where underlying contract was voidable under statute of frauds].)

The court in PMC reasoned as follows: "[W]e are compelled to conclude that a cause of action for intentional interference with contract requires an underlying enforceable contract. Where there is no existing, enforceable contract, only a claim for interference with prospective advantage may be pleaded. To do otherwise unnecessarily confuses the two torts and fails to recognize their inherent differences. The tort of interference with contractual relations protects an existing, formally cemented economic relationship. The tort of interference with prospective business relations protects nonformalized or anticipated business relationships which are reasonably certain to occur, but which are nonetheless prospective. Thus, if a plaintiff is to be successful in the former, it is necessary that an enforceable contract be pled and proven." (45 C.A.4th 601.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

55 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

2. Existing and Valid Contract.

c. Contract Terminable at Will.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 734

[§ 734] Contract Terminable at Will.

There is some authority denying relief where the contract may be terminated at will by the parties. (See Bentley v. Mountain (1942) 51 C.A.2d 95, 97, 124 P.2d 91.) This view has been repudiated in California. (See Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pac. (1946) 29 C.2d 34, 39, 172 P.2d 867 ["Recognizing that the fact that a contract is 'at the will of the parties, respectively does not make it one at the will of others' ... the great majority of the cases have held that unjustified interference with contracts terminable at will is actionable"]; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 1128, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, infra, §763 [express termination provisions create no privilege to intervene]; Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 C.4th 1140, 1148, 17 C.R.3d 289, 95 P.3d 513, infra, §755 [third party's interference with at-will contract is actionable interference with contractual relationship because contractual relationship is at will of parties, not at will of third party]; Romano v. Wilbur Ellis & Co. (1947) 82 C.A.2d 670, 673, 186 P.2d 1012 [immaterial that contract was "at will"]; Freed v. Manchester Service (1958) 165 C.A.2d 186, 188, 331 P.2d 689 [same]; Kozlowsky v. Westminster Nat. Bank (1970) 6 C.A.3d 593, 598, 86 C.R. 52 [employment contract]; Savage v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 434, 448, 26 C.R.2d 305 [same].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

56 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

- A. Inducing Breach of Contract.
- 2. Existing and Valid Contract.
- d. Contract Subject to Condition Precedent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 735

[§ 735] Contract Subject to Condition Precedent.

In SCEcorp v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 673, 4 C.R.2d 372, plaintiff power company and another power company entered into a merger agreement that was subject to the condition precedent that all governmental approvals necessary for consummation of the merger be obtained. Before the parties were able to obtain the required regulatory approvals, defendant power company allegedly interfered with the merger agreement, causing its abandonment. Plaintiff filed a complaint alleging three causes of action based on tortious interference. Defendant demurred, arguing that the unsatisfied condition precedent precluded plaintiff from stating these causes of action. Held, the condition precedent did not preclude plaintiff, as a matter of law, from stating valid causes of action for intentional and negligent interference with the merger agreement and for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

(a) Contracts subject to conditions precedent can be the basis for tortious interference claims (3 C.A.4th 681, citing Prosser and Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment f), and there is no compelling reason to treat conditions precedent requiring regulatory approval differently. (3 C.A.4th 681.) Disallowing tortious interference claims in this context would lead to the illogical situation where contracts not requiring regulatory approvals would be protected from interference, but those contracts requiring such approvals would be unprotected and subject to virtually unrestricted interference by officious intermeddlers who, especially in the case of public utilities, would be likely to have a great deal of information about the transactions and operations of the utilities. (3 C.A.4th 682.)

(b) Defendant argued that the existence of regulatory approval as a condition precedent to completion of the merger agreement permitted and even encouraged intervention in the merger process. This argument is without merit. Defendant was entitled to participate in the regulatory approval process by appearing before the regulatory agencies and presenting evidence as to why the proposed merger would not be in the public interest. However, it should not be allowed to subvert the regulatory approval process by taking independent and wrongful action, as defendant allegedly did here, to disrupt a merger before the regulatory agencies have had an opportunity fully to consider its merits. (3 C.A.4th 682.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

57 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
A. Inducing Breach of Contract.
3. Knowledge and Intent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 736

[§ 736] Knowledge and Intent.

The defendant must know of the contract, and must intend to interfere with contractual relations. (Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 1126, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, infra, §763.) However, the defendant's primary purpose need not be disruption of the contract. It is sufficient if the interference is known by him or her to be a necessary consequence of his or her action. (Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 56, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, infra, §737; Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment j.) (On recovery for negligent interference with business interests, see infra, §751 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Integrated Healthcare Holdings v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 C.A.4th 515, 532, 44 C.R.3d 517 [defendant's e-mail disparaging plaintiff was forwarded by recipient to company with which plaintiff was negotiating; e-mail did not support claim for interference with contractual relationship where there was no evidence that defendant intended that company receive e-mail].

58 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
A. Inducing Breach of Contract.
4. Breach or Disruption of Contractual Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 737

[§ 737] Breach or Disruption of Contractual Relationship.

(1) Interference With Performance of Contract by Third Person. The usual case involves a successful inducement of the other party to breach the contract. (See Rest.2d, Torts §766; cf. Tuchscher Dev. Enterprises v. San Diego Unified Port Dist. (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1219, 1239, 132 C.R.2d 57 [defendants did not interfere with exclusive negotiating contract between plaintiff developer and city merely by discussing project with another developer, which discussions were communicated to city; city let contract expire, which was its right].)

(2) Interference With Plaintiff's Performance of Own Contract. "[B]ut the rule is also applicable where the plaintiff's performance has been prevented or rendered more expensive or burdensome and where he has been induced to breach the contract by conduct of the defendant, such as threats of economic reprisals." (Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary School Dist. (1961) 55 C.2d 224, 232, 11 C.R. 97, 359 P.2d 465; see 49 Cal. L. Rev. 700, 772; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 968; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 346; cf. 1-800 Contacts v. Steinberg (2003) 107 C.A.4th 568, 585, 132 C.R.2d 789 [defendant did not induce plaintiff's attorney to breach his severance contract where attorney repeatedly showed intent to comply with contract by insisting that he could not reveal confidential information; defendant had no knowledge that breach would occur].)

This rule is set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §766A as follows: "One who intentionally and improperly interferes with the performance of a contract (except a contract to marry) between another and a third person, by preventing the other from performing the contract or causing his performance to be more expensive or burdensome, is subject to liability to the other for the pecuniary loss resulting to him." Comment c explains: "This section and §766 both involve interference with an existing contract. Under §766, the plaintiff's interest in obtaining performance of the contract is interfered with directly. Under this Section the interference is indirect, in that the plaintiff is unable to obtain performance of the contract by the third person because he has been prevented from performing his part of the contract and thus from assuring himself of receiving the performance by the third person." And "[i]f the plaintiff's performance has intentionally been made more burdensome or more expensive by the actor, the cost that he incurs in order to obtain the performance by the third party has increased, and the net benefit from the third person's performance has been correspondingly diminished. This Section covers that loss, too."

(3) Wrongful Act Is Not Required. Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 55, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, involved a title insurer's refusal to issue title insurance because the seller had acquired the property at a tax sale. Held, the defendant's act need not be wrongful other than in the fact that it interferes with the plaintiff's contract. This differs from the tort of interference with prospective economic advantage, which requires wrongfulness independent of the fact of the interference itself (see infra, §744); "interference with an existing contract receives greater solicitude than does interference with prospective economic advantage." (19 C.4th 55.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Interference With Performance of Contract by Third Person. See Woods v. Fox Broadcasting Subsidiaries (2005) 129 C.A.4th 344, 356, 28 C.R.3d 463, Supp., infra, §739 [corporate directors and officers sufficiently alleged disruption or breach of their contractual stock option rights by alleging that value of options was tied to sale price of corporation and that defendant major shareholder intentionally acted to defeat or diminish those rights by rigging sale terms to hold down price].

59 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
A. Inducing Breach of Contract.
5. Causation and Damage.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 738

[§ 738] Causation and Damage.

It must be alleged and proved that the defendant's act caused the breach, i.e., that otherwise the contract would have been performed. (See Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 55, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, supra, §737 [plaintiff must plead actual breach or disruption of contractual relationship]; Augustine v. Trucco (1954) 124 C.A.2d 229, 245, 268 P.2d 780 [complaint insufficient; no allegations that defendants caused landowner to sell property through them, rather than plaintiff]; Dryden v. Tri-Valley Growers (1977) 65 C.A.3d 990, 997, 135 C.R. 720, infra, §739 [complaint insufficient; judicially noticed letters established that other party had abandoned contract prior to defendant's alleged interference]; Mayes v. Sturdy Northern Sales (1979) 91 C.A.3d 69, 79, 154 C.R. 43 [complaint sufficient; allegation that defendants conspired to destroy plaintiff's business by specified acts was sufficient pleading of causation]; H & M Associates v. El Centro (1980) 109 C.A.3d 399, 405, 167 C.R. 392 [complaint sufficient; causation element was satisfied by allegations that defendant city's cutting off water supply to plaintiff's apartment building resulted in termination of numerous tenant contracts and plaintiff's inability to make mortgage payments]; Franklin v. Dynamic Details (2004) 116 C.A.4th 375, 391, 10 C.R.3d 429 [trier of fact could not draw reasonable inference that defendant's e-mails were substantial factor in bringing about plaintiff's lost business merely because e-mails preceded loss]; on pleading of causation, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §728.)

There must be resulting damage. (Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 1126, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, infra, §763; Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 55, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, supra, §737.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Causation: See Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 212, 238, 26 C.R.3d 798 [evidence of defendant's conduct before contract was formed was irrelevant to claim for interference with contractual relations, which requires existence of valid contract].

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §772.

60 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

A. Inducing Breach of Contract.

6. No Action Against Other Contracting Party.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 739

[§ 739] No Action Against Other Contracting Party.

(1) General Rule. Ordinarily, a breaching contractual party is not liable for inducing breach of contract. (Kelly v. General Tel. Co. (1982) 136 C.A.3d 278, 288, 186 C.R. 184; Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 C.3d 1, 24, 276 C.R. 303, 801 P.2d 1054, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §47; Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1507, 1523, 281 C.R. 890; Webber v. Inland Empire Inv. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 884, 907, 88 C.R.2d 594; Scripps Clinic v. Superior Court (2003) 108 C.A.4th 917, 928, 134 C.R.2d 101 [in action against clinic for interfering with patient's contracts with treating physicians, clinic did not meet its burden of showing that treating physicians were its employees]; cf. Shapoff v. Scull (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1457, 1469, 272 C.R. 480 [alter ego finding did not, as matter of law, relieve individual defendant from liability for interference with corporation's contract].)

In Dryden v. Tri-Valley Growers (1977) 65 C.A.3d 990, 998, 135 C.R. 720, the court followed the weight of authority holding that the action lies only for acts of a third person. Plaintiffs alleged a contract with the Irvings, a cancellation of it by the Irvings, and a sale by the Irvings to defendant Tri-Valley. The complaint alleged that the contract provided that it should bind the successors of the Irvings; hence the purported cause of action was against a defendant who had become a party to the contract. The reason for the general rule is set forth as follows: "It is obvious that if an action is brought for interference with contractual relationship by one party to a contract against another who is also a party to that same contract, the grievance of the plaintiff is, in essence, breach of contract; and, in such case, plaintiff is entitled to recover all damages flowing from the breach. In such an instance to allow the plaintiff to sue under the tort theory of wrongful interference with contractual rights would not only be superfluous, but also would enable him to recover tort damages (e.g., punitive damages, damages for mental suffering) to which he is not entitled under California law." (65 C.A.3d 999.)

(2) No Conspiracy Liability. Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, involved two contracts: (1) a subcontract between plaintiff and L, calling for plaintiff to procure and supply L with spare parts needed by defendant to perform its general contract to provide military equipment to Saudi Arabia; and (2) a purchase contract between plaintiff and V, whereby plaintiff ordered from V eleven electron tubes at a stated price per unit. Subsequently, L contacted V directly and renegotiated the purchase contract in a manner that resulted in a reduction in plaintiff's commission. Plaintiff sued both parties for breach of contract and conspiracy to interfere with contractual relations. The trial judge entered judgment for plaintiff against both defendants that included both contract and tort damages. The Court of Appeal affirmed the contract awards and reversed the tort judgment for inconsistency in the jury's verdicts. However, it rejected V's argument that the rule enunciated in Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 C.A.2d 50, 35 C.R. 652, that a contracting party may be held liable in tort for conspiracy to interfere with its own contract, should be overturned. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed; the Wise rule must be rejected because it illogically expands the doctrine of civil conspiracy and obliterates vital and established distinctions between contract and tort theories of liability.

(a) Conspiracy.

(1) Conspiracy is a legal doctrine imposing liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the actual tortfeasor a common plan or design in its perpetration. For tort liability to arise, the conspiracy must be activated by the commission of an actual tort and the coconspirator must be legally capable of committing the tort, i.e., he or she must owe a duty to the plaintiff recognized by law and be potentially subject to liability for a breach of that duty. (7 C.4th 511.)

(2) California recognizes a cause of action against a noncontracting party who interferes with the performance of a contract. (7 C.4th 513.) However, consistent with its underlying policy of protecting the expectations of contracting parties against frustration by outsiders, the tort of interference with contract does not lie against a party to the contract. (7 C.4th 514, citing Dryden v. Tri-Valley Growers and other cases.)

(3) Plaintiff's conspiracy theory "is fundamentally irreconcilable with the law of conspiracy and the tort of interference with contract as just discussed. One contracting party owes no general tort duty to another not to interfere with performance of the contract; its duty is simply to perform the contract according to its terms. The tort duty not to interfere with the contract falls only on strangers--interlopers who have no legitimate interest in the scope or course of the contract's performance." (7 C.4th 514.)

(4) This fundamental allocation of duty is not altered by the invocation of conspiracy. Because conspiracy is not an independent tort, it cannot create a duty or abrogate an immunity. Instead, it allows tort recovery only against a party who already owes the duty and is not immune from liability. Hence, "[b]ecause a party to a contract owes no tort duty to refrain from interference with its performance, he or she cannot be bootstrapped into tort liability by the pejorative plea of conspiracy." (7 C.4th 514.)

(b) Contract and tort.

(1) The law of contracts is designed to enforce legally binding agreements, while the law of torts is designed to vindicate social policy. A breach of contract is a tort only when it also violates an independent duty arising from principles of tort law. (7 C.4th 515.)

(2) These differences between contract and tort law give rise to distinctions in assessing damages and in evaluating motive for particular acts. Contract damages seek to approximate the agreed upon performance. Tort damages are awarded to compensate the victim for the harm suffered. In an intentional tort action, a motive amounting to malice, oppression, or fraud may justify punitive damages. But the law does not generally distinguish between good and bad motives in a breach of contract action. Thus, in the absence of an independent tort, punitive damages may not be awarded for a breach of contract even where the breach was wilful, fraudulent, or malicious. (7 C.4th 516.)

(3) These fundamental differences between contract and tort would be obscured if tort liability were imposed on a contracting party for conspiracy to interfere with the contract. "Whether or not a stranger to the contract induces its breach, the essential character of a contracting party's conduct remains the same--an unjustified failure or refusal to perform. In economic terms, the impact is identical--plaintiff has lost the benefit of a bargain and is entitled to recover compensation in the form of contract damages. In ethical terms, the mere entry of a stranger onto the scene does not render the contracting party's breach more socially or morally reprehensible. A party may breach a contract without any third party inducement because of personal, racial, or ethnic animus, or for other nefarious or unethical reasons. In contrast, a breach may be the product of naive or innocent misunderstanding or misperception created by the aggressive solicitation of an outsider. In any case, motivation is irrelevant. Regardless of the presence or absence of third party involvement, the contracting party has done nothing more socially opprobrious than to fall short in meeting a contractual commitment. Only contract damages are due." (7 C.4th 516.)

(4) The imposition of tort liability for conspiracy to interfere with one's own contract would also thwart legal rules and policies limiting contract damages to those sums reasonably foreseeable to the contracting parties. For example, in the present case, V, in its contract with plaintiff, assumed only the obligation to perform the contract or pay damages for its breach. It did not assume the independent tort obligation not to interfere with performance of its own contract. Hence, V is legally responsible only in contract. (7 C.4th 518.)

(c) Contrary holding would not promote stability. Plaintiff maintained that the imposition of tort liability on contracting parties would promote stability in the contractual relationship. Actually the opposite result would occur. "As a practical matter, it is difficult, if not impossible, for a third party to induce a breach of contract without communicating with the contracting party. Therefore, any and every induced breach creates a potentially triable conspiracy case against the contracting party. In this way, the potential consequences of any breach of contract--efficient or inefficient, socially desirable or undesirable--become uncertain and unpredictable. Tort liability may or may not follow, depending upon a myriad of imponderable factors. As a result, a business fearful of unfathomable tort exposure might lose the ability to respond flexibly to changing economic conditions or hesitate to enter into contracts at all in fast-moving aspects of commercial enterprise. ... Another business, reasonably viewing the prospect of significant tort liability as remote, might not react at all. Tort liability in this context would more likely produce uncertainty, not stability, in commercial dealings." (7 C.4th 520.)

(d) Conclusion. All prior cases are disapproved "to the extent they hold that a party to a contract can be held liable in tort based on a conspiracy to interfere with its own contract," including Wise and a number of other named Court of Appeal cases. (7 C.4th 521, footnote 10.) (See Kasparian v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 242, 45 C.R.2d 90, infra, §746 [applying principles approved in Applied Equipment Corp. to tortious interference with prospective economic advantage]; Webber v. Inland Empire Inv. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 884, 897, 88 C.R.2d 594 [by refusing to apply alter ego theory, court did not run afoul of rule that party cannot interfere with his or her own contract; Applied Equipment Corp. distinguished]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 893 [Applied Equipment Corp.]; 30 U.S.F. L. Rev. 561 [same]; 26 West L.A. L. Rev. 561 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) General Rule. See PM Group v. Stewart (2007) 154 C.A.4th 55, 64, 64 C.R.3d 227 [singer and singer's agents were not liable to promoters of concert tour for interfering with subcontracts providing for performances; because contracting party is incapable of interfering with performance of own contract, tort of intentional interference with contractual relations may be committed only by strangers to contract].(3) (New) Distinction: Claim May Lie Against Owner, Director, or Officer of Business Entity That Is Party to Contract. In Woods v. Fox Broadcasting Subsidiaries (2005) 129 C.A.4th 344, 28 C.R.3d 463, corporate directors and officers sued a major shareholder of the corporation for interference with contract rights in connection with the sale of the corporation, alleging that the decreased sale price, negotiated by the shareholder in order to relieve itself of certain obligations, reduced the value of their contractual stock options. The shareholder's demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Held, reversed. The courts have long allowed contract interference claims to be stated against owners, officers, and directors of a company the contracts of which are the subject of the litigation. While these defendants may attempt to prove that their conduct was privileged or justified, that is a defense that must be pleaded and proved. Thus, the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer on the ground that defendant was not a stranger to the stock option contracts. (129 C.A.4th 350.)

61 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
A. Inducing Breach of Contract.
7. Remedies.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 740

[§ 740] Remedies.

(1) Damages and Injunctive Relief. In the action for the tort of inducing breach of contract, the plaintiff may recover damages and may be granted an injunction in a proper case. (See Remillard-Dandini Co. v. Dandini (1941) 46 C.A.2d 678, 680, 116 P.2d 641; California Auto Court Assn. v. Cohn (1950) 98 C.A.2d 145, 149, 219 P.2d 511; Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment u; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §455; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §52 et seq.)

(2) Alternative Tort Actions. The wrongful act, moreover, may give rise to more than one kind of tort action. Thus, the defendant will sometimes interfere with the contract by means of slander or slander of title or fraud, causing the plaintiff to suffer loss of a contract or employment or a contract of sale of property. The plaintiff may elect to frame his or her complaint on the theory of defamation, slander of title, fraud and deceit, or inducing breach of contract, for whatever advantage the election may give plaintiff. (See Blender v. Superior Court (1942) 55 C.A.2d 24, 26, 130 P.2d 179 [suit for inducing breach of contract, thereby avoiding bond then required for slander action]; Romano v. Wilbur Ellis & Co. (1947) 82 C.A.2d 670, 673, 186 P.2d 1012 [election to sue for fraud and deceit to obtain favorable statute of limitations]; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 74; on alternative tort remedies, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §170 et seq.)

(3) Successive Contract and Tort Actions. In Duff v. Engelberg (1965) 237 C.A.2d 505, 47 C.R. 114, plaintiffs contracted to buy a lot from vendors M. Defendant neighbors E and C induced vendors M to repudiate the contract and convey to C as trustee. Plaintiffs first sued vendors M in contract, and received a decree of specific performance with incidental damages for wrongful withholding of the land. Then they sued defendants E and C in tort. In this action, the broader tort measure of damages (covering unexpected loss) was available (237 C.A.2d 508, citing the text), and recovery of compensatory and punitive damages was upheld.

On these facts, considered alone, the judgment suggests that plaintiffs obtained an unwarranted double recovery, for the first judgment seemingly made them whole, and the opinion does not point to any other loss for which the second judgment was compensation. But if this was true it was entirely the fault of defendants. They appealed on the judgment roll, the findings were therefore binding on issues of fact, and the general finding that plaintiffs were damaged in the sum awarded was binding on appeal in the absence of a request for special findings. (237 C.A.2d 509.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
(2) Alternative Tort Actions.

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §175 et seq.

62 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
 B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.

1. Intentional Interference.

a. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 741

[§ 741] Nature of Tort.

The basic principle underlying the tort of inducing breach of contract (supra, §730) has been extended to impose liability for intentional interference with business relations or advantages that are merely prospective and ordinarily not the subject of an existing contract. The wrong consists of intentional and improper methods of diverting or taking business from another that are not within the privilege of fair competition. (Buxbom v. Smith (1944) 23 C.2d 535, 548, 145 P.2d 305, infra, §747; A.F. Arnold & Co. v. Pacific Professional Ins. (1972) 27 C.A.3d 710, 714, 104 C.R. 96, quoting the text; Gold v. Los Angeles Democratic League (1975) 49 C.A.3d 365, 375, 122 C.R. 732, infra, §747, citing the text; Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 13, 17, 144 C.R. 664, infra, §747, 756, citing the text; Worldwide Commerce v. Fruehauf Corp. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 803, 809, 149 C.R. 42, quoting the text; Olivet v. Frischling (1980) 104 C.A.3d 831, 837, 164 C.R. 87; Ramona Manor Convalescent Hosp. v. Care Enterprises (1986) 177 C.A.3d 1120, 1130, 225 C.R. 120, infra, §743; Hofmann Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 390, 401, 248 C.R. 384; see Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 C.A.3d 832, 840, 184 C.R. 317, citing the text [complaint insufficient and conduct privileged]; Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman v. Cohen (1983) 146 C.A.3d 200, 220, 194 C.R. 180 [pleading]; Savage v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 434, 449, 26 C.R.2d 305 [triable issue of fact whether public utility's refusal to deal with freelance journalist interfered with her prospective relationship with business journal]; Westside Center Associates v. Safeway Stores 23 (1996) 42 C.A.4th 507, 523, 49 C.R.2d 793 [no liability where defendant, which allegedly drove down value of plaintiff's supermarket, causing it to sell at loss, did not interfere with existing relationship]; Colome v. State Athletic Com. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 1444, 1459, 55 C.R.2d 300 [Boxing Commission's denial of license to fighter did not interfere with manager's prospective engagements]; BAJI, No. 7.82; CACI, No. 2202; on privilege of fair competition, see infra, §§758, 759; on pleading of cause of action, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §730 et seq.)

The tort is variously known as interference with "prospective economic advantage," "prospective contractual relations," and "prospective economic relations." (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C.4th 376, 378, 45 C.R.2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, infra, §744; cf. Manor Inv. Co. v. F.W. Woolworth Co. (1984) 159 C.A.3d 586, 592, 206 C.R. 37 [criticizing loose practice of using terms "inducing breach of contract" and "interference with business relations" (prospective economic advantage) interchangeably, without distinguishing between two torts].)

It has been suggested that the tort of inducing breach of contact "is merely a species of the broader tort of interference with prospective economic advantage." (Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C.3d 815, 823, 122 C.R. 745, 537 P.2d 865, infra, §748.) However, interference with prospective economic advantage, unlike inducing breach of contract, requires wrongful conduct other than the act of interference itself. (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., supra, 11 C.4th 393.)

Liability has also been recognized, in proper circumstances, for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage. (See infra, §751 et seq.)

The commentary on interference with prospective economic advantage is extensive. (See Rest.2d, Torts §766B; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.11 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 6 Business Litigation, §64:3 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §450; 32 Cal. L. Rev. 205; 30 Ecology L. Q. 521 [Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) as preempting claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 444 [recovery by commercial fishermen of profits lost as result of negligently caused oil spill]; 15 Pacific L. J. 381 [surreptitious geophysical survey as interfering with landowner's expectancies]; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 359 [intentional interference with prospective economic relations]; 22 San Diego L. Rev. 401 [necessity of contract]; 8 Stanf. L. Rev. 301; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 341; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §48; 97 A.L.R.3d 890 [interference with franchise]; 5 A.L.R.4th 9 [interference with at-will business relationship]; 6 A.L.R.4th 195 [interference with prospective contractual relationship]; 44 A.L.R.4th 1078 [punitive damages for interference with business relationship]; 65 A.L.R.4th 1126 [business interruption without physical damage]; 87 A.L.R.4th 845 [interference with physician-patient relationship]; 90 A.L.R.4th 621 [interference with attorney-client relationship]; 17 Proof of Facts 2d 517 [interference with at-will business relationship]; 50 Proof of Facts 3d 317 [relocation company's liability for tortious interference with prospective business relationship between seller employee and real estate broker]; 67 Proof of Facts 3d 147 [tortious interference with formation of prospective real estate lease agreement]; on liability for interference with expected inheritance or gift, see 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §47; 22 A.L.R.4th 1229 [interference in making, changing, or revoking of will]; 18 A.L.R.5th 211 [tortious interference with bequest as precluded by will contest remedy].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 97 Am.Jur. Trials 107 [prospective purchaser's recovery of damages for interference with prospective economic advantage from real estate contract]; 103 Proof of Facts 3d 275 [interference with prospective contractual relations; superseding 17 Proof of Facts 2d 517, text, p. 1071].

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §774 et seq.

63 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.

1. Intentional Interference.

b. Elements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 742

[§ 742] Elements.

(1) In General. Under Youst v. Longo (1987) 43 C.3d 64, 71, footnote 6, 233 C.R. 294, 729 P.2d 728, infra, §749, and Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C.4th 376, 378, 45 C.R.2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, infra, §744, the elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage include the following:

(a) An economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff.

(b) The defendant's knowledge of the relationship.

(c) Intentional acts by the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship.

(d) Actual disruption of the relationship.

(e) Economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.

(f) Conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself. (See BAJI, Nos. 7.82, 7.86.1; on elements of negligent interference with economic interests, see infra, §753.)

(2) Nonjustification Is Not an Element. In Rickel v. Schwinn Bicycle Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 648, 192 C.R. 732, the trial judge ruled that the plaintiff must allege that the defendant's conduct was not justified or privileged. Held, nonjustification is not an element of the tort but an affirmative defense to be pleaded by the defendant.

(a) The cases contain conflicting expressions on this point, but the confusion was resolved in A.F. Arnold & Co. v. Pacific Professional Ins. (1972) 27 C.A.3d 710, 104 C.R. 96, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §731, distinguishing between wrongfulness and nonjustification: The plaintiff must plead that defendant's interference is somehow wrongful, and can do this by alleging nonjustification; but plaintiff can also do it by alleging facts that take defendant's actions out of the realm of legitimate business transactions. (144 C.A.3d 657, 658.)

(b) In cases involving inducement of a third party to breach a contract with the plaintiff, the defendant's wrongful method is apparent from the allegations of fact. Where the interference is with relations which are not contractual but merely prospective, some other element of wrongfulness must be shown; e.g., fraud, misrepresentation, or duress. More commonly, the wrong will be found in the defendant's motive; e.g., when a defendant appropriates a commission after arranging to cut out a prior agent or middleman. In such cases, the wrongfulness of the defendant's actions is apparent from the allegations of fact. (144 C.A.3d 659.)

The Rickel case was followed in Saunders v. Superior Court (1994) 27 C.A.4th 832, 33 C.R.2d 438. Plaintiffs brought an action against shorthand reporters and insurance companies, alleging interference with prospective economic advantage as a result of "directing contracting" between defendants. The complaint alleged that (1) defendant reporters, who were competitors of plaintiffs, formed an organization (CRA) and agreed that they would provide reporting services to defendant insurers in accordance with terms set by the CRA; (2) defendant insurers entered into contracts with the CRA, the effect of which was that defendants would not pay for reporting services unless the attorneys representing their policyholders used CRA members; and (3) defendant insurers instructed the attorneys representing their policyholders to sever all existing contracts with reporters and to use exclusively the services of CRA reporters. Defendant reporters demurred on the ground of competitive privilege, and defendant insurers demurred on the ground that, as the clients who paid for the depositions, they had the right to determine which reporting service their attorneys should use. The trial judge sustained the demurrers. Held, this was error. While both classes of defendant may be able to show at trial that their actions were justified, justification is an affirmative defense, not a ground for sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. (27 C.A.4th 843.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 212, 241, 26 C.R.3d 798 [stating elements]. (a) Economic relationship: See San Jose Const. v. S.B.C.C. (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1528, 1544, 67 C.R.3d 54 [action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage by construction company against competitor and former employee, who brought several of company's clients with him to competitor allegedly by misappropriation of confidential information; evidence that clients' shift to competitor resulted from employee's misconduct, rather than from employee's termination, was sufficient to show that company had economic relationship with clients that offered probability of future economic benefit]; Salma v. Capon (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1275, 1290, 74 C.R.3d 873, citing the text [property owner's allegation that he would have to disclose trespasser's conduct to prospective purchasers and lenders did not state cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage against trespasser; owner failed to show existing relationship that was disrupted by trespasser or any economic detriment resulting from disruption].

(f) Wrongful conduct: See Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1043, 1060, 61 C.R.3d 434 [action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage could not be based on conduct insufficient to prove plaintiffs' alleged malicious prosecution, abuse of process, or defamation claims; plaintiffs were required to show that defendants engaged in conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than fact of interference itself].

(2) Nonjustification Is Not an Element.

A.F. Arnold case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §775.

64 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
1. Intentional Interference.
c. Intent.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 743

[§ 743] Intent.

Interference with prospective economic advantage, like interference with contractual relations (see supra, §731) is an intentional tort, and it is essential to show that the defendant intended to cause the result. Thus, in either type of action, the plaintiff must plead and prove intentional acts designed to disrupt the relationship. (Seaman's Direct Buying Service v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 752, 765, 766, 206 C.R. 354, 686 P.2d 1158; Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 C.4th 1140, 1151, 17 C.R.3d 289, 95 P.3d 513, infra, §755; Rest.2d, Torts §766B; BAJI, No. 7.83; CACI, No. 2203.) (On recovery for negligent interference with economic interests, see infra, §751 et seq.) In contrast, defendant's motive is not an element of the cause of action, but is relevant only to the affirmative defense of justification (see infra, §756). (Seaman's Direct Buying Service v. Standard Oil Co., supra, 36 C.3d 766, 767.) The disruptive act intended must be "wrongful." (Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C.4th 376, 378, 45 C.R.2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, infra, §744.)

In the Seaman's case, the jury was instructed that the defendant is deemed to have acted intentionally if it knew that disruption or interference with an advantageous relationship was substantially certain to result from its conduct. This was prejudicial error. Intent may be established by inference, and it would have been proper to instruct the jury that it might infer culpable intent from conduct substantially certain to interfere with the relationship; but the instruction that culpable intent was deemed to exist if defendant knew that its conduct would interfere was erroneous. And, because there was no evidence in the record that defendant acted with the purpose or design to interfere with plaintiff's relationship, plaintiff failed to carry its burden of proving intent. (36 C.3d 767.)

In Ramona Manor Convalescent Hosp. v. Care Enterprises (1986) 177 C.A.3d 1120, 225 C.R. 120, plaintiff was a prospective lessee of a nursing facility from the owner. Defendant, the existing lessee, was told by the owner that its lease would not be renewed, and that the owner was negotiating with an unnamed third party to take over the lease. Defendant nevertheless remained in possession on termination of the lease, and brought an action seeking a declaration of its right to remain under an alleged oral agreement. The owner promptly cross-complained for unlawful detainer, and was successful at the trial and on appeal. Plaintiff then brought this action for interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendant, citing Rest.2d, Torts §766, Comment p (conduct intended to affect a specific person), argued that it could not be held liable because it had no knowledge of the name or identity of the party with whom the owner was negotiating. Held, this was incorrect.

(a) The Restatement Comment states: "The rule does not require, however, that the person who loses the performance of the contract as a result of the conduct of the actor should be specifically mentioned by name. It is sufficient that he is identified in some manner." (177 C.A.3d 1133.)

(b) Defendant's decision to hold over was made with the knowledge that this action would frustrate the legitimate contractual expectations of a specific, albeit unnamed, new lessee; and that is all it was required to know to incur liability. (177 C.A.3d 1133.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

65 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
1. Intentional Interference.
d. Wrongful Conduct.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 744

[§ 744] Wrongful Conduct.

In Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C.4th 376, 45 C.R.2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, plaintiff automobile wholesaler sued defendant automobile manufacturer for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, based on defendant's enforcement of its "no-export" policy resulting in a lack of cars for plaintiff to export. The trial judge, in instructing the jury, modified the then appropriate BAJI instruction (former BAJI (8th ed.), No. 7.82) to require the jury to find that defendant's interference was "wrongful," and the jury returned a verdict for defendant. Held, affirmed.

(a) Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C.3d 815, 122 C.R. 745, 537 P.2d 865, infra, §748, and Seaman's Direct Buying Service v. Standard Oil Co. (1984) 36 C.3d 752, 206 C.R. 354, 686 P.2d 1158, supra, §743, followed the view of the pleading and burden of proof requirements for intentional torts adopted by the first Restatement of Torts: the plaintiff need only allege a so-called "prima facie tort" by showing the defendant's awareness of the economic relation, a deliberate interference with it, and the plaintiff's resultant injury. The burden then passes to the defendant to demonstrate that its conduct was privileged, that is, "justified" by one or more recognized defenses (see infra, §756 et seq.). (11 C.4th 387.)

(b) However, even before Seaman's, Rest.2d, Torts §776B had discarded the prima facie tort requirement and required that the defendant's conduct be "improper" (11 C.4th 384), and several Court of Appeal decisions both before and after Seaman's, including Rickel v. Schwinn Bicycle Co. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 648, 192 C.R. 732, have appeared to engraft onto the elements of the plaintiff's cause of action allegations and proof the defendant's conduct was "wrongful" or was "based on facts that take the defendant's actions out of the realm of legitimate business transactions." Further, former BAJI (8th ed.), No. 7.82.1, enacted in 1990 and based on the Second Restatement of Torts, provides that a defendant in an economic relations tort case may defeat liability by showing that its conduct was not independently "wrongful." (11 C.4th 390.)

(c) These developments, together with a change in views within the American Law Institute and other jurisdictions, present the opportunity for the court to reconstruct the formal elements of the tort. The primary concern is to draw and enforce a sharpened distinction between claims for the tortious disruption of an existing contract and claims that a prospective contractual or economic relationship has been interfered with by the defendant. A doctrine that blurs the analytical line between these two torts invites both uncertainty in conduct and unpredictability of its legal effect. The courts should firmly distinguish between the two kinds of business contexts, bringing a greater solicitude to those relationships that have ripened into agreements, while recognizing that relationships short of that subsist in a zone where the rewards and risks of competition are dominant. (11 C.4th 391.)

(d) Thus, "a plaintiff seeking to recover from an alleged interference with prospective contractual or economic relations must plead and prove as part of its case-in-chief that the defendant not only knowingly interfered with the plaintiff's expectancy, but engaged in conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than the fact of interference itself." (11 C.4th 393, disapproving Buckaloo and Seaman's to the extent they contain inconsistent language addressing the pleading and proof requirements.) (See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 C.4th 1134, 1153, 131 C.R.2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 [act must be wrongful by some legal measure, rather than merely product of improper, but lawful, purpose or motive; independent wrong element was satisfied by allegations of bribery and offering sexual favors]; Arntz Contracting Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (1996) 47 C.A.4th 464, 475, 54 C.R.2d 888 [surety's rightful protection of its contractual rights, which interfered with plaintiff's relationships with other sureties, was not "wrongful," regardless of motive]; LiMandri v. Judkins (1997) 52 C.A.4th 326, 336, 60 C.R.2d 539 [obtaining lien on judgment proceeds superior to lien possessed by plaintiff was not independently wrongful within Della Penna test]; National Med. Trans. Network v. Deloitte & Touche (1998) 62 C.A.4th 412, 438, 72 C.R.2d 720 [duty to instruct that interference was "independently wrongful"]; Lange v. TIG Ins. Co. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1179, 1187, 81 C.R.2d 39 [exercise of contractual right of termination did not constitute independently wrongful act required for interference with prospective economic advantage]; Gemini Aluminum Corp. v. California Custom Shapes (2002) 95 C.A.4th 1249, 1255, 116 C.R.2d 358 ["industry standards" test does not satisfy Della Penna requirement that defendant's conduct be wrongful by some legal measure other than fact of interference itself]; Tuchscher Dev. Enterprises v. San Diego Unified Port Dist. (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1219, 1242, 132 C.R.2d 57 [plaintiff developer had exclusive negotiating contract with city; even assuming that defendants helped draft agreement between city and another developer or suggested other developer to city, defendants did nothing wrong apart from alleged interference itself]; on retroactive application of court's holding, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §981.)

BAJI, No. 7.82 includes, among the essential elements of a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, that "[t]he defendant intentionally engaged in wrongful conduct designed to interfere with or disrupt this relationship." (See BAJI, No. 7.86.1 [defining "wrongful conduct"]; on intent requirement generally, see supra, §743.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Edwards v. Arthur Andersen L.L.P. (2008) 44 C.4th 937, 950, 952, 954, 81 C.R.3d 282, 189 P.3d 285, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, Supp., §122 [requiring employee to sign, as condition of resignation, "Termination of Non-Compete Agreement" (TONC) that released employer from "any and all" claims arising from employment could be considered wrongful act for claim of interference with prospective business advantage, but broad language of TONC did not constitute independent wrongful act as it did not encompass nonwaivable statutory rights]. Retroactivity of Della Penna case:

Cross-Reference: 9 Cal. Proc. (5th), Appeal, §545.

(New) Violation of trade, association, or professional standards may support interference claim: In Stevenson Real Estate Services v. CB Richard Ellis Real Estate Services (2006) 138 C.A.4th 1215, 42 C.R.3d 235, a licensed real estate broker brought an action for interference with prospective economic advantage against other brokers, alleging that defendants violated the rules of a realtors' association in connection with the procurement of real property for a client. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings without leave to amend. Held, ruling on motion affirmed but judgment vacated with directions to grant plaintiff leave to amend the complaint.

(a) In certain circumstances, a violation of well-defined, established rules or standards of a trade, association, or profession may constitute the type of wrongful conduct that will support a cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage. Under Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2003) 29 C.4th 1134, 1159, 131 C.R.2d 29, 63 P.3d 937, text, p. 1075, wrongful conduct is sufficient to support the cause of action if it is proscribed by "some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal standard" and amounts to "independently actionable conduct." In an action between competitors who are bound by well-defined, established rules or standards of a trade, association, or profession, those rules may constitute "a determinable legal standard" within the scope of Korea Supply. However, the defendant's conduct must also amount to "independently actionable conduct"; this necessarily requires that the rules or standards provide for, or give rise to, a sanction or means of enforcement for a violation of the particular rule or standard that allegedly makes the defendant's conduct wrongful. Although the rules or standards of associations, trades, and professions are unlikely to give rise to legal causes of action, internal remedies available within the association, such as a right of arbitration between the aggrieved members, would suffice to establish "independently actionable conduct." (138 C.A.4th 1223.)

(b) Plaintiff failed to state a cause of action here by failing to allege that defendant brokers' claimed violation of the realtors' association rules was independently actionable. However, plaintiff was entitled to amend the complaint to allege, if such was the case, that the violation was independently actionable because the rules provided for arbitration or another adequate remedy. (138 C.A.4th 1224.)

66 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
1. Intentional Interference.
e. Probability of Benefit.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 745

[§ 745] Probability of Benefit.

There can be no recovery unless the plaintiff shows that, except for the tortious interference, there was a reasonable probability that the contract or profit would have been obtained. (Youst v. Longo (1987) 43 C.3d 64, 223 C.R. 294, 729 P.2d 728, infra, §749; Campbell v. Rayburn (1954) 129 C.A.2d 232, 234, 276 P.2d 671; Worldwide Commerce v. Fruehauf Corp. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 803, 811, 149 C.R. 42; see Roth v. Rhodes (1994) 25 C.A.4th 530, 545, 30 C.R.2d 706 [podiatrist who was denied space in defendants' medical building had no business relationship with lost future patients that could be interfered with]; Kasparian v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 242, 45 C.R.2d 90, infra, §746 [insufficient evidence to show that, but for actions of county supervisor, there was reasonable probability that negotiations to buy out plaintiff's interest in partnership would have concluded to his economic advantage]; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §10.)

In Wilson v. Loew's (1956) 142 C.A.2d 183, 298 P.2d 152, twenty-three motion picture writers sued defendant producers and distributors. They alleged that they were excluded from employment in the industry after refusal to answer questions on their "political affiliations, beliefs and associations" as witnesses before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Held, no cause of action was stated. (a) No existing contract was alleged but only a prior employment and its termination. (b) No negotiations pending, request for or denial of work, or reasonable prospect of employment, were alleged. Hence the complaint did not show an interference with a legally protected interest. (See 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 268 [Wilson case in lower court].)

In Osteopathic Physicians & Surgeons v. California Med. Assn. (1964) 224 C.A.2d 378, 36 C.R. 641, the complaint, by individual and corporate osteopaths, attacked a merger of defendant state medical association with defendant state osteopathic association as an attempt to destroy osteopathic practice. The court held that the merger agreement, made a part of the complaint, showed no resulting interference with the rights of individual physicians. (224 C.A.2d 396.) (See Diodes v. Franzen (1968) 260 C.A.2d 244, 256, 67 C.R. 19 [solicitation of plaintiff's employees to work for competitor; no allegation of causal relation between loss of employees and loss of customers].)

In Larez v. Oberti (1972) 23 C.A.3d 217, 223, 226, 100 C.R. 57, plaintiff migratory workers brought a farmworkers' class action against defendant grower and labor contractors, seeking an injunction and money damages because employment of illegal aliens from Mexico deprived American workers of employment. Held, neither injunctive relief nor damages was proper. The related federal statute does not expressly provide a remedy for its violation, and there is no federal decision that such a remedy exists or that the state may fashion one. (23 C.A.3d 221.) Also, because defendants were under no duty to hire particular persons, they were not interfering with a prospective employment relationship. (23 C.A.3d 223.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Sole Energy Co. v. Petrominerals Corp. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 212, 243, 26 C.R.3d 798 [defendant's misrepresentations made to induce plaintiffs into seeking economic relationship with third parties, not to disrupt existing economic relationship involving plaintiffs, did not give rise to tort of interference with prospective economic advantage; tort protects expectation that relationship will produce desired benefit, not more speculative expectation that potentially beneficial relationship will arise].

67 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
1. Intentional Interference.
f. No Action Against Other Party to Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 746

[§ 746] No Action Against Other Party to Relationship.

In Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C.4th 503, 28 C.R.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454, supra, §739, the California Supreme Court held that a cause of action for interference with contractual relations does not lie against a party to the contract. In Kasparian v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 242, 45 C.R.2d 90, the issue was whether a party to a prospective economic relationship can commit or conspire to commit a tortious interference with that relationship. Plaintiff, a limited partner in a joint venture, brought an action for civil conspiracy against a county and certain general partners in the joint venture, alleging that the general partners and a county supervisor intentionally interfered with plaintiff's prospective economic advantage arising from negotiations to resolve partnership and other disputes between plaintiff and the general partners. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed and remanded with directions to enter judgment for defendants.

(a) Liability of general partners.

(1) The torts of interference with prospective economic advantage and that of interference with contract involve similar conduct and issues. In one case the interference takes place when a contract is already in existence; in the other, when a contract would, with certainty, have been consummated but for the conduct of the tortfeasor. (38 C.A.4th 260.)

(2) In determining that a party to a contract cannot, in addition to a breach of contract action, bring a tort action for interference against another party to the contract, the court in Applied Equipment Corp. reasoned that to allow the tort action would not only be superfluous, but also would enable the plaintiff to recover tort damages to which he or she is not entitled. The same rationale should also bar prosecution of interference with prospective economic advantage against a party to the relationship from which anticipated economic advantage would arise. Thus, the general partners may not be properly charged with liability under that tort theory. (38 C.A.4th 262.)

(3) Here, the jury found that the general partners had only conspired to commit the tort. The court in Applied Equipment Corp. rejected the notion that one contracting party, by use of a conspiracy theory, can impose liability on another for interference with that contract. That reasoning is persuasive here also. It is illogical to expand the doctrine of civil conspiracy by imposing tort liability for an alleged wrong that the purported tortfeasor is legally incapable of committing, and it obliterates distinctions between contract and tort theories to allow recovery of tort damages for an ordinary breach of contract. If the general partners were not legally capable of committing the tort on which plaintiff's judgment rested, then nothing was added by attempting to metamorphose their conduct through reliance on a claim of conspiracy. (38 C.A.4th 262.)

(4) As a simple matter of logic, it makes no sense to distinguish between interference with contractual relations and interference with prospective economic advantage. If a party has no liability in tort for refusing to perform an existing contract, no matter what the reason, that party certainly should not have to bear a burden in tort for refusing to enter into a contract where he or she has no obligation to do so. If that same party cannot conspire with a third party to breach or interfere with his or her own contract, then the result should be no different where the "conspiracy" is to disrupt a relationship that has not even risen to the dignity of an existing contract. (38 C.A.4th 265.)

(b) Liability of county. With respect to the county, the evidence was not sufficient to prove that it intentionally interfered with negotiations to buy out plaintiff's interest in the partnership. There was insufficient evidence to prove that the supervisor, who had placed a telephone call to a trial judge assigned to a lawsuit pending between the general partners and plaintiff, had any knowledge of the buy-out negotiations, or that the supervisor intended to disrupt negotiations, which had already failed. (38 C.A.4th 267.) (See JRS Products v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of America (2004) 115 C.A.4th 168, 170, 179, 8 C.R.3d 840 [franchisor that wrongfully terminates franchise is liable to franchisee for breach of contract, not for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and only contract damages are recoverable; following Applied Equipment and Kasparian].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Woods v. Fox Broadcasting Subsidiaries (2005) 129 C.A.4th 344, 354, 28 C.R.3d 463, Supp., supra, §739 [declining to follow Kasparian v. Los Angeles (1995) 38 C.A.4th 242, 45 C.R.2d 90, text, p. 1078, "to the extent it might hold that some of the individual owners of a business entity are automatically deemed to be exempt from contract interference liability because their economic interest in the entity means they are not strangers to any of the entity's contractual obligations"].

68 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.

1. Intentional Interference.

g. Particular Types of Interference.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 747

[§ 747] In General.

Relief has been sought for interference with various types of prospective economic opportunities. The following cases are illustrative:

In International News Service v. Associated Press (1918) 248 U.S. 215, 39 S.Ct. 68, 70, 63 L.Ed. 211, 218, AP issued bulletins with news gathered at considerable expense, and INS took items from them for distribution to its own users. The Court held that this was an unauthorized interference with and diversion of profits from AP's business, which should be enjoined.

In Buxbom v. Smith (1944) 23 C.2d 535, 145 P.2d 305, defendants induced plaintiff to contract for the distribution of defendants' publication. Then, after plaintiff had built up and trained an organization for the purpose of performance, defendants breached the contract and hired plaintiff's crews themselves, thus obtaining the fruits of plaintiff's efforts. Held, plaintiff was entitled to damages for the loss of goodwill and business. "A breach of contract is a wrong and in itself actionable. It is also wrongful when intentionally utilized as the means of depriving plaintiff of his employees, and ... constitutes an unfair method of interference with advantageous relations." (23 C.2d 548.) (See 32 Cal. L. Rev. 205.)

In McCord Co. v. Plotnick (1951) 108 C.A.2d 392, 239 P.2d 32, plaintiff published Pacific Coast McCord's Daily Notification Sheet containing credit items, and defendant L published "Credit Briefs" with pirated items. Held, judgment for damages affirmed. "Defendants took material acquired by plaintiff as the result of organization and the expenditure of labor, skill and money and appropriating it without expense on their part, offered it to their subscribers as their own, diverting customers from plaintiff to themselves." (108 C.A.2d 394.)

In Guillory v. Godfrey (1955) 134 C.A.2d 628, 286 P.2d 474, following a dispute over plaintiffs' employment of a black cook in their cafe, defendants intimidated customers by insults and disparagement of the cooking. Recovery was upheld for this malicious interference with the right to pursue a lawful business. (134 C.A.2d 632.)

In Ojala v. Bohlin (1960) 178 C.A.2d 292, 2 C.R. 919, plaintiff, with a Hollywood reputation as a fast draw artist, conceived the design of a "fast draw holster." He first manufactured the product himself, then contracted with defendant to manufacture it. After a disagreement, plaintiff resumed his own manufacture. Defendant, using the designs and patterns, manufactured and sold in competition, and in violation of their original agreement not to compete. Held, an injunction and damages were properly granted under the broad and flexible doctrine making it tortious to appropriate the property of another. (178 C.A.2d 301.)

In Uptown Enterprises v. Strand (1961) 195 C.A.2d 45, 50, 15 C.R. 486, the court held that a cause of action for an injunction was stated against a sheriff and his deputies, for unlawful searches of automobiles in plaintiff's drive-in theatre.

In Ernst & Ernst v. Carlson (1966) 247 C.A.2d 125, 55 C.R. 626, defendant, a C.P.A. discharged from plaintiff firm, attempted in various ways to discredit the firm's handling of one of its tax clients, because of his difference of opinion on an accounting decision. Held, this interference with the advantageous contractual relations of the firm was properly enjoined. (247 C.A.2d 128.)

In Gold v. Los Angeles Democratic League (1975) 49 C.A.3d 365, 122 C.R. 732, plaintiff, an unsuccessful candidate for office in a Los Angeles city election, sued a number of defendants, alleging that he was the endorsed candidate of the official Democratic Central Committee and that defendant League mailed a pamphlet on the day before the election, endorsing another candidate and conveying the false impression that it was the official body. Counts based on violation of the Elections Code and fraud were found defective (49 C.A.3d 372 et seq.), but judgment on demurrer to a count of intentional interference with prospective advantage was reversed. The allegations "state a cause of action for defendants' intentional interference with plaintiff's opportunity to be elected to the office of city controller." (49 C.A.3d 375.) A strong dissent argued that the defense of First Amendment freedoms, rejected by the majority as not appearing on the face of the complaint, should have been sustained. (49 C.A.3d 381.)

In Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 13, 144 C.R. 664, the complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner of a trucking firm receiving 40% of its business from an oral contract to perform delivery services for defendant; that plaintiff intended to sell the business, and one of the prospective buyers conditioned his offer on the firm's continued business with defendant; that defendant informed the prospective buyers that the delivery contract would be terminated if plaintiff sold to a third person; that defendant intended to discourage buyers and thereby depress the purchase price substantially below market value; and that plaintiff thereafter sold the business at substantially below true value. Held, a cause of action was stated. (79 C.A.3d 17, 19.) (See 71 A.L.R.5th 491 [liability for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations involving sale of business, stock, or real estate].)

In Levin v. Gulf Ins. Group (1999) 69 C.A.4th 1282, 1285, 82 C.R.2d 228, the complaint stated that an insurer and attorneys retained to defend its insureds in a personal injury action, after receiving notice of a lien for fees and costs filed by an attorney discharged by the plaintiff, paid the plaintiff and his new attorney in settlement of the action. Held, the trial court erred in dismissing the action. An action was properly alleged for interference with prospective economic advantage.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

69 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.

1. Intentional Interference.

g. Particular Types of Interference.

2. Interference With Unenforceable Contract.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 748

[§ 748] Interference With Unenforceable Contract.

(1) Buckaloo Case. In Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C.3d 815, 122 C.R. 745, 537 P.2d 865, plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, for 2 years had an exclusive right to sell defendant B's undeveloped beach property known as Dark Gulch. His listing expired in 1968, and in 1972, B placed a sign on the property reading: "For Sale--Contact Your Local Broker." Plaintiff was later approached by defendants A, prospective buyers interested in beach land, who were accompanied by defendant J, a real estate salesman for defendant G, and plaintiff gave them a full discussion of beach properties and of Dark Gulch in particular. The group left, promising to return, but never did. Plaintiff sent B a note advising her that he was the "procuring cause" of the A group, and asking that they be referred to him if they came to see her. Instead, she sold directly to them and refused his demand for a commission. Plaintiff brought this action for breach of an implied contract and intentional interference with prospective advantage. His theory was that B's sign was intended to be an "open listing" with brokers operating in the area, who could solicit prospective buyers and obtain a commission if a sale on terms satisfactory to the vendor was negotiated. B did not demur, but a separate judgment on demurrer was rendered in favor of the other defendants. Held, affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court promptly disposed of plaintiff's first cause of action by pointing out that the requirement of a writing for a real estate agency (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §385) precluded any contract recovery, because the sign, not subscribed by the owner, could not possibly be a memorandum. But the allegations of the complaint, liberally construed, would support recovery on the tort theory.

(a) Principles summarized. The tort of interference with prospective advantage is broad in scope and applies to real estate brokers acting without an enforceable written contract. (14 C.3d 823, 824, 825.) The fundamental principles are:

(1) The tort "is considerably more inclusive than actions based on contract or interference with contract, and thus is not dependent on the existence of a valid contract. But this broad assertion must be qualified by the statement that the wrong complained of cannot be merely a failure on the part of the actor to comply with an unenforceable contract. The statute of frauds conclusively establishes that brokerage contracts with either the vendor or the vendee must be in writing. We have neither the authority nor the inclination to circumvent that declared policy by permitting tort actions to become an expedient substitute for contract actions specifically forbidden by statute." (14 C.3d 826.)

(2) The "mere fact that a prospective economic relationship has not attained the dignity of a legally enforceable agreement does not permit third parties to interfere with performance. This of course does no violence to traditional contract principles because the third party, a stranger to the economic relationship, was not the party whom the contract principle was designed to affect." (14 C.3d 827.) Hence, a prospective purchaser may not induce a seller to breach an oral agreement with the broker and sell at a price that excludes the broker. This is so not only where fraud is involved, but in any case in which the purchaser, with knowledge of the relationship between broker and seller, "intentionally induces the latter to violate the terms of the relationship and seek refuge in the unenforceability of the contract." However, the broker must show that "the interloper received pecuniary benefit in the way of a reduced selling price resulting from the exclusion of the broker's commission." (14 C.3d 827.)

(3) The elements of the tort, in the real estate brokerage context, are: "(1) an economic relationship between broker and vendor or broker and vendee containing the probability of future economic benefit to the broker, (2) knowledge by the defendant of the existence of the relationship, (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship, (4) actual disruption of the relationship, (5) damages to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant." (14 C.3d 827.)

(b) Sufficiency of complaint.

(1) Plaintiff met the economic relationship test by alleging (1) that B intended her sign to constitute an open listing with all area brokers, (2) that B intended that brokers induced by the sign to cooperate with buyers would be paid a commission for procuring a buyer on terms B would accept, and (3) that plaintiff understood this to constitute an invitation to himself and other area brokers to attempt to find a buyer for the B property. These facts, plus any evidence that might establish the real estate custom in the community, "establish a colorable economic relationship" between B and plaintiff "with the potential to develop into a full contractual relationship." (14 C.3d 828.) And plaintiff further alleged that he in fact provided the necessary buyer, and that without his services the sale would not have been made. (14 C.3d 829.)

(2) Knowledge by the A group of the special relationship between plaintiff and B was adequately pleaded; it was alleged that they knew that the sign constituted a promise to pay a commission to any local broker whose efforts procured the buyer, and, with that knowledge, induced B to make the agreement leaving plaintiff uncompensated. (14 C.3d 829.)

(3) Intent, causation and damages were sufficiently pleaded. (14 C.3d 829.) (See Deeter v. Angus (1986) 179 C.A.3d 241, 251, 224 C.R. 801 ["where there is an understanding, albeit oral, that the seller is to pay a brokerage commission, a prospective economic relationship exists between only the seller and broker" and "[w]here an outside party, such as the buyer, intentionally disrupts that relationship a cause of action may lie for interference with a prospective economic advantage"]; 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1219 [tort of interference with prospective economic advantage as eviscerating real estate broker's statute of frauds]; 15 U.S.F. L. Rev. 205 [Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Relationships: A Case For Intentional Tort Recovery for the California Real Estate Broker]; 71 A.L.R.5th 491 [liability for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations involving sale of real estate]; 41 Proof of Facts 2d 393 [interference with broker's relationship with seller].)

(2) Limitation of Holding. Buckaloo was disapproved in Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A. (1995) 11 C.4th 376, 393, 45 C.R.2d 436, 902 P.2d 740, supra, §744, to the extent that it does not require pleading and proof of wrongful conduct other than the act of interference itself. (On element of wrongful conduct, see supra, §744.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Buckaloo Case. See 90 Proof of Facts 3d 207 [interference with real estate broker's contractual relationship with seller; superseding 41 Proof of Facts 2d 393, text, p. 1084].

70 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
1. Intentional Interference.
g. Particular Types of Interference.
3. Interference With Noncommercial Opportunity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 749

[§ 749] Interference With Noncommercial Opportunity.

The tort of interference with prospective economic advantage is not necessarily limited to deprivation of future opportunities that are commercial or contractual in nature. (See Rest.2d, Torts §774B, Special Note; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §451.) The Restatement provides that "[o]ne who by fraud, duress or other tortious means intentionally prevents another from receiving from a third person an inheritance or gift that he would otherwise have received is subject to liability to the other for loss of the inheritance or gift." (Rest.2d, Torts §774B.)

However, a claim was denied in Youst v. Longo (1987) 43 C.3d 64, 233 C.R. 294, 729 P.2d 728, with respect to interference with the opportunity to win a sporting contest. The complaint alleged that plaintiff entered his horse Bat Champ in a harness race; that defendant, driving The Thilly Brudder, struck Bat Champ with his whip, causing the horse to break stride; and that Bat Champ finished a disappointing sixth. Plaintiff sued in tort, seeking as compensatory damages the difference in prize money that allegedly would have been received but for defendant's interference. Held, judgment on demurrer for defendant affirmed; a cause of action will not lie for prospective economic loss arising between competitors in a sporting contest.

(a) No liability under record.

(1) Prosser says: "When the attempt has been made to carry liability for interference ... into such areas as ... deprivation of the chance of winning a contest, the courts have been disturbed by a feeling that they were embarking upon uncharted seas, and recovery has been denied; and it is significant that the reason usually given is that there is no sufficient degree of certainty that the plaintiff ever would have received the anticipated benefits." (43 C.3d 74.) In Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 C.3d 311, 216 C.R. 718, 703 P.2d 58, this court acknowledged Prosser's suggestion that the interests generally protected in this field are business expectancies. (43 C.3d 75.)

(2) Rest.2d, Torts §774B, Special Note describes a situation which may justify liability for interference with prospective benefits of a noncontractual nature: The plaintiff is deprived of the expectancy of winning a race or contest when he has a substantial certainty or at least a high probability of success; e.g., a contest for obtaining the largest number of subscriptions to a magazine, with 1 week more to run and plaintiff leading all other competitors by a margin of 2-1. But the Note adds that "if the plaintiff has a horse entered in a race and the defendant wrongfully prevents him from running, there may well not be sufficient certainty to entitle the plaintiff to recover." (43 C.3d 76.)

(3) "We conclude, as a matter of law, that the threshold element of probability for interference with prospective economic advantage was not met by the facts alleged, whether or not some 'conspiracy' between a competitor and noncompetitor may have existed. It was not reasonably probable, on the facts alleged, that Bat Champ would have finished in a better position. Indeed, we may take judicial notice of the impossibility of predicting such matters." (43 C.3d 77.)

(b) Public policy considerations.

(1) "The courts are not appropriate forums for adjudicating claimed sporting event violations which allegedly resulted in prospective economic loss." The regulation of sports conduct has been delegated to supervising agencies, and numerous administrative remedies are available through the California Horse Racing Board to punish drivers who intentionally or recklessly drive their horses. "If the tort of interference were recognized in the context of a sporting competition, virtually no such event would take place without a tort claim from some losing competitor seeking to recover his supposed economic loss; a player's every move would be highly scrutinized for possible use in the courtroom." (43 C.3d 78.)

(2) Allegations of conspiracy do not call for a different holding. "[W]e fail to see why the act of competitors conspiring with others (e.g., teammates, friends, coaches, other competitors) to commit an intentional improper play in a sporting competition is so different in kind from the commission of that act by a competitor acting on his own. It would become impossible to draw a distinction between behavior that is sufficient to justify liability, i.e., a conspiracy, and behavior that is excusable as being committed in the heat of competition, i.e., fair play. Further, the fact that a conspiracy exists does not affect the lack of any reasonable probability that economic gain would have been realized." (43 C.3d 79.)

(c) Jurisdiction of Horse Racing Board. The Board has been given broad power to regulate and discipline wrongful conduct, but none of the statutes vest it with power to award compensatory relief such as tort damages. (43 C.3d 80, 82.) The only remedy available from the Board in this case is to reorder the finishing positions of the competitors, which it did. (43 C.3d 83.) The possible authority of the Board to require compensatory relief as a condition for reinstatement of licenses is not in issue here. (43 C.3d 82, footnote 15.) (See 85 A.L.R.4th 1048 [recovery in tort for wrongful interference with chance to win game, sporting event, or contest].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

71 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.

1. Intentional Interference.

g. Particular Types of Interference.

4. Destruction of Evidence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 750

[§ 750] Destruction of Evidence.

Courts of Appeal in Smith v. Superior Court (1984) 151 C.A.3d 491, 496, 198 C.R. 829, and Willard v. Caterpillar (1995) 40 C.A.4th 892, 912, 48 C.R.2d 607, held that a cause of action could be stated for intentional destruction (spoliation) of evidence needed for prospective litigation. These cases were disapproved, however, in Cedars-Sinai Med. Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 C.4th 1, 7, 74 C.R.2d 248, 954 P.2d 511, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §117, in which the California Supreme Court determined that the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence does not exist. In Temple Community Hosp. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 464, 471, 84 C.R.2d 852, 976 P.2d 223, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §118, the Supreme Court held that no tort cause of action will lie against a third party, as well as a first party, for intentional spoliation of evidence. Recovery for spoliation of evidence is treated in detail in 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §117 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

72 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
2. Negligent Interference.
a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 751

[§ 751] In General.

The Restatement rejects liability for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage (see Rest.2d, Torts §766C), and this was formerly the rule in California. (See Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 C.2d 632, 7 C.R. 377, 354 P.2d 1073; Stromer v. Yuba City (1964) 225 C.A.2d 286, 291, 37 C.R. 240; Costello v. Wells Fargo Bank (1968) 258 C.A.2d 90, 95, 65 C.R. 612; Adams v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1975) 50 C.A.3d 37, 41, 123 C.R. 216.) In 1979, however, the California Supreme Court held in the landmark case of J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, that liability may result from negligent interference with future economic interests. Plaintiff alleged that the county leased airport premises to plaintiff for operation of a restaurant; the lease required that the county furnish heat and air conditioning; the county engaged defendant contractor to make improvements in the premises, including renovation of the heating and air conditioning system; the contract contained no completion date; during 1 month, the restaurant could not operate, and for a longer period, it was without air conditioning; defendant negligently failed to complete the work within a reasonable time; and plaintiff suffered loss of business with resulting loss of profits, in a specified amount. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Applicable rule and criteria. Damages are recoverable for negligence where there is a special relationship, despite lack of contractual privity. This rule is set forth in Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, as are the criteria for determining whether a duty of care is owed. These criteria are the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm. (24 C.3d 804.) The facts pleaded bring the case within the six Biakanja criteria: (1) The contract between defendant and the county could not be performed without a direct effect on plaintiff's business. (2) It was clearly foreseeable that any significant delay would adversely affect plaintiff's business. (3) Plaintiff suffered injury from inability to operate for a time and from loss of business while without heat or air conditioning. (4) The delays were closely connected with plaintiff's injury, because they were the direct cause. (5) Defendant's conduct was particularly blameworthy, for it continued after the probability of damage was drawn to defendant's attention. (6) Public policy supports a duty of care, for failure or refusal of a contractor to perform a construction project with diligence, which causes injury to another, is grounds for discipline. (24 C.3d 804, 805.)

(b) Holding consistent with cases and statute. Upholding the cause of action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage is consistent with the recent trend in tort cases, which stress foreseeability rather than traditional notions of duty (e.g., Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008, and Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086). (24 C.3d 805, 806.) It is also consistent with the basic principle of tort liability embodied in C.C. 1714, that every person is responsible for injuries caused by his or her lack of ordinary care. (24 C.3d 806.)

(c) Limited scope of rule announced. This kind of recovery involves the danger of imposing liability for remote consequences out of proportion to the magnitude of the defendant's wrongful conduct. But the Biakanja factors place a limit on recovery by focusing judicial attention on foreseeability of the injury and the nexus between the defendant's conduct and the injury. "Following these principles, recovery for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage will be limited to instances where the risk of harm is foreseeable and is closely connected with the defendant's conduct, where damages are not wholly speculative and the injury is not part of the plaintiff's ordinary business risk." (24 C.3d 808.)

(d) Conclusion. The conclusion on these facts is that "a contractor owes a duty of care to the tenant of a building undergoing construction work to prosecute that work in a manner which does not cause undue injury to the tenant's business, where such injury is reasonably foreseeable." (24 C.3d 808.) (See C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.18; 23 San Diego L. Rev. 37; 12 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 87; 37 Stanf. L. Rev. 1513; BAJI, No. 7.82.1; CACI, No. 2204.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

73 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
2. Negligent Interference.
b. Scope of Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 752

[§ 752] Scope of Rule.

(1) In General. The rationale of J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, supra, §751, has been applied in subsequent cases. (See Chameleon Engineering Corp. v. Air Dynamics (1980) 101 C.A.3d 418, 423, 161 C.R. 463 [general contractor's cross-complaint against supplier of subcontractor for negligent failure to supply equipment; following J'Aire]; Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri (1995) 31 C.A.4th 1439, 1455, 37 C.R.2d 790 [applying six-part test for duty of care derived from J'Aire, owners of dairy farm did not establish right to recover economic damages for alleged negligence of milking machine manufacturers, where they failed to show special relationship or that their injury was reasonably foreseeable]; Transwestern Pipeline Co. v. Monsanto Co. (1996) 46 C.A.4th 502, 523, 53 C.R.2d 887 [citing J'Aire and Ott]; North Amer. Chemical Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 764, 781, 69 C.R.2d 466 [J'Aire principles applied to allow plaintiff to recover in tort for economic losses caused by breach of services contract].)

(2) Interference Caused by Negligently Manufactured Product. The J'Aire rule has been extended beyond the negligent rendering of services to include recovery for interference with prospective economic advantage caused by a negligently manufactured product. In Ales-Peratis Foods Int. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 C.A.3d 277, 209 C.R. 917, plaintiffs AP, a buyer, packager, and seller of seafood, was offered a contract to buy, pack, and sell a quantity of abalone in Mexico. It needed cans with a "C" type enamel lining suitable for packing abalone, and contracted for them with Gencan, a Los Angeles can supplier. Gencan informed American Can, a manufacturer, of the type needed, and American Can supplied them; but when they were delivered to AP it was discovered that they did not have the "C" enamel and were unsuitable for packing abalone. As a result, AP was left with 119,200 deficient cans, and lost the contract for sale of the abalone. In plaintiff's action against American Can, summary judgment was granted for defendant on the theory that recovery for economic loss is not allowed in a negligence action. Held, reversed. A cause of action was stated on the theory of negligent interference with prospective economic advantage.

(a) Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179, with its six-part test was the basis for the J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory line of cases, allowing recovery in negligence actions where the economic loss is especially foreseeable despite the absence of physical injury or property damage. Although Biakanja and J'Aire involved negligent rendition of services, neither the language nor the logic of the opinions exempts negligent manufacture of a product. (164 C.A.3d 285.)

(b) Applying the six Biakanja criteria:

(1) The contract between Gencan and American Can was for supplying cans necessary to performance of the AP contract with its customer, and both Gencan and American Can knew this. "Thus American Can's performance was intended to and did directly affect" AP. (164 C.A.3d 289.)

(2) Under the facts alleged, American Can could have reasonably foreseen that its failure to perform would affect AP's ability to perform. (164 C.A.3d 289.)

(3) Because American Can did not properly perform, AP lost the profits it would have received. (164 C.A.3d 289.)

(4) The facts pleaded a close connection between American Can's acts and the damages suffered. (164 C.A.3d 289.)

(5) The moral blame attaches to American Can because it shipped defective goods which may have proved hazardous to consumers if actually used.

(6) Policy considerations warrant imposition of liability: "Society gains nothing from tolerating a level of negligence by container manufacturers which allows them to ship defective and potentially dangerous cans which will be used to pack foods destined to be purchased and eaten by hapless consumers. Indeed the general public has a stake in the early detection of these defective cans and their immediate removal from the stream of commerce before they cause injury. Cannery and other intermediate enterprises should be encouraged to do just that." (164 C.A.3d 290.)

(c) Applying the J'Aire principles, plaintiff has stated a cause of action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage: (1) A triable issue exists whether defendant knew that a large quantity of its product had been ordered for a single customer and for a specific purpose. (2) A triable issue also exists whether defendant shipped negligently manufactured products not suitable for that purpose and which might have been dangerous to human health if actually used. (3) A triable issue exists whether defendant could reasonably foresee that plaintiff would suffer economic injury if the shipment of cans was defective. (164 C.A.3d 290.) (On strict products liability, see infra, §1428 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

74 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
2. Negligent Interference.
c. Elements of Action.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 753

[§ 753] Elements of Action.

BAJI, No. 7.82.1 states that the "essential elements" of the claim are as follows:

"1. An economic relationship existed between the plaintiff and (third party), containing a probable future economic benefit or advantage to plaintiff;"

"2. The defendant knew of the existence of the economic relationship;"

"3. The defendant engaged in wrongful conduct;"

"4. It was reasonably foreseeable that this wrongful conduct would interfere with or disrupt this economic relationship if defendant failed to exercise due care;"

"5. The defendant was negligent in his or her conduct, that is, the defendant failed to exercise due care;"

"6. The economic relationship was actually interfered with or disrupted; and"

"7. The above described conduct caused plaintiff damage, namely, plaintiff lost in whole or in part the economic benefit or advantage from the economic relationship."

However, the court "must first determine as a matter of law whether defendant owed plaintiff a duty of care, by applying the criteria set forth in" Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179. (Use Note to BAJI, No. 7.82.1 [citing J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 C.3d 799, 157 C.R. 407, 598 P.2d 60, supra, §751].)

The duty to instruct that interference with future economic advantage must be "independently wrongful" (see supra, §744) applies whether the act is intentional or negligent. (National Med. Trans. Network v. Deloitte & Touche (1998) 62 C.A.4th 412, 438, 72 C.R.2d 720; see BAJI, No. 7.86.1 [defining "wrongful conduct"].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See CACI, No. 2204 [Negligent Interference With Prospective Economic Relations], listing elements generally similar to those stated in BAJI, No. 7.82.1.

(3) Wrongful conduct: See Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro (2007) 152 C.A.4th 1043, 1060, 61 C.R.3d 434 [action for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage could not be based on conduct insufficient to prove plaintiffs' alleged malicious prosecution, abuse of process, or defamation claims; plaintiffs were required to show that defendants engaged in conduct that was wrongful by some legal measure other than fact of interference itself]; Venhaus v. Shultz (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1072, 1077, 66 C.R.3d 432 [trial court erred in modifying CACI, No. 2204 to require that defendant's wrongful conduct be intentional or wilful; negligent misconduct or violation of statutory obligation is sufficient for liability].

75 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
B. Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage.
2. Negligent Interference.
d. Destruction of Evidence.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 754

[§ 754] Destruction of Evidence.

Despite the California Supreme Court holdings that there is no cause of action for intentional spoliation of evidence (see supra, §750), a Court of Appeal recognized a limited cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence by a third party in Johnson v. United Services Auto. Assn. (1998) 67 C.A.4th 626, 629, 79 C.R.2d 234, 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §119. With respect to duty, an action for negligent spoliation by a third-party spoliator requires (a) an agreement to preserve; (b) a specific request to preserve accompanied by an offer to pay the cost or otherwise bear the burden of preserving; (c) a voluntary undertaking to preserve that induces reasonable and detrimental reliance; or (d) a duty imposed by contract, statute, regulation or some analogous special relationship. (67 C.A.4th 629.)

A contrary conclusion has been reached by other courts, declaring that there is no tort of negligent spoliation of evidence in either the first-party or third-party situation. (See Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 C.A.4th 1400, 1403, 95 C.R.2d 51; Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1081, 1088, 1089, 95 C.R.2d 884; 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, Supp., §119; Lueter v. California (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1285, 1295, 115 C.R.2d 68; Forbes v. San Bernardino (2002) 101 C.A.4th 48, 57, 123 C.R.2d 721 [no cause of action despite public entity's duty to preserve evidence].)

Recovery for spoliation of evidence is treated in detail in 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §117 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

76 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
C. Interference With Employment Relation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 755

[§ 755] Interference With Employment Relation.

(1) Injuries to Employee. "The rights of personal relations forbid ... [a]ny injury to a servant which affects his ability to serve his master." (C.C. 49.) The Code Commissioners' Note to the 1872 Code provision shows that it was intended to codify the common law action for loss of services of a domestic servant who was member of the master's household. Dictum in Darmour Productions Corp. v. Herbert M. Baruch Corp. (1933) 135 C.A. 351, 27 P.2d 664, declared, however, that the right of action covers injuries to ordinary business employees. (135 C.A. 353.) (See Offshore Rental Co. v. Continental Oil Co. (1978) 22 C.3d 157, 162, 163, 167, 148 C.R. 867, 583 P.2d 721, supra, §192 [Darmour rule was inapplicable to business losses suffered by partnership by reason of injury to partner]; 23 Cal. L. Rev. 420 [criticizing Darmour opinion on principle and policy grounds]; 36 A.L.R.3d 1375 [right of partnership to recover damages for injury to partner]; 4 A.L.R.4th 504 [employer's right of action for loss of services or the like against third person tortiously killing or injuring employee].)

The Darmour rule has been repudiated. In I.J. Weinrot & Son v. Jackson (1985) 40 C.3d 327, 220 C.R. 103, 708 P.2d 682, plaintiff was a closely held corporation. W was its president, employee, and majority shareholder. He was injured in an automobile collision as a result of alleged negligence of defendants. The complaints set forth three main causes of action: (1) damages for W's personal injuries; (2) damages for his wife's loss of consortium; and (3) corporate recovery for salary paid to W while he was unable to work, lost business profits, and reimbursement for payments for his medical expenses. In support of the third cause of action, it was alleged that plaintiff corporation was contractually obligated to pay W's medical expenses and salary despite his inability to perform his usual duties. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Darmour did not discuss the common law, the precedents from other jurisdictions, or the grave policy implications of its rule, and its dictum is disapproved. (40 C.3d 336.)

(b) The 1939 Legislature reenacted C.C. 49 without changing the statutory language in question (subdivision (c)), and plaintiff contends that this was an implied adoption of the Darmour interpretation. But the legislative history, including the Governor's message, does not support this contention. (40 C.3d 336, 337, 338.) "[W]e conclude the Legislature simply reenacted the statute as codified in 1872, with appropriate restrictions, to comply with the Governor's request that it not unintentionally curtail an action granted by prior law." (40 C.3d 339.)

(c) The opinion in Offshore Rental Co. v. Continental Oil Co. (1978) 22 C.3d 157, 148 C.R. 867, 583 P.2d 721, supra, §192, suggests that granting the plaintiff corporation a right of recovery for injuries to an employee would be contrary to public policy, and these observations are equally applicable to the present case. (40 C.3d 340.) Moreover, any legitimate objective of the broad interpretation urged is already available by other features of modern California law:

(1) Employers covered under workers' compensation law have a statutory right of subrogation to recover compensation of salary paid to employees injured by third parties. (40 C.3d 340.)

(2) Employers not subject to workers' compensation law who provide employees with contractually guaranteed benefits in the event of incapacity may incorporate in the employment contract a right of reimbursement from the injured employee who eventually recovers from a third-party tortfeasor. (40 C.3d 340.)

(3) Where the third party's intended acts are calculated to disrupt the employer-employee relationship, the employer may sue for intentional interference with contractual relations. (40 C.3d 341.)

Weinrot has been followed in subsequent cases. (See Von Batsch v. American Dist. Tel. Co. (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1111, 1118, 222 C.R. 239 [action for wrongful death]; Fischl v. Paller & Goldstein (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1299, 1303, 282 C.R. 802 [applying Weinrot to general negligence cause of action, and holding that employer could not recover for increased workers' compensation premiums and lost profits].)

In Herrick v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 787, 233 C.R. 675, the court rejected the contention that an employer's action would lie for injuries to an employee caused by an intoxicated driver. Plaintiff employer relied on the dictum in Weinrot, that an action might lie for an intentional act calculated to disrupt the employer-employee relationship (40 C.3d 341), and Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 890, 157 C.R. 693, 598 P.2d 854, infra, §1775, permitting recovery of punitive damages from a drunken driver. But while some authorities suggest that there might be recovery where the defendant's act is intentional, there appears to be no square holding to that effect. (188 C.A.3d 792.) "[W]e conclude that the policy considerations upon which Taylor was based have been served by holding the defendant subject to liability for punitive damages for the injuries caused directly to such a plaintiff. Those policy considerations do not require the extension of liability in favor of an employer for injuries to his employee, in contravention of other important policy considerations." (188 C.A.3d 793.)

(2) Inducing At-Will Employee To Leave Employment. In Reeves v. Hanlon (2004) 33 C.4th 1140, 17 C.R.3d 289, 95 P.3d 513, a professional law corporation sued two attorneys formerly associated with the firm for improperly inducing firm employees to resign. This conduct was part of a deliberate campaign to disrupt plaintiffs' business that also included solicitation of plaintiffs' clients, misappropriation of trade secrets, and destruction of computer data. The employment relationship between plaintiffs and their resigning employees was at will. Held, judgment for plaintiffs affirmed.

(a) A plaintiff may recover damages for intentional interference with an at-will employment relation under the same California standard applicable to claims for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage generally. (33 C.4th 1152, 1154, disapproving GAB Business Services v. Lindsey & Newsom Claim Services (2000) 83 C.A.4th 409, 99 C.R.2d 665.) To recover for a defendant's interference with an at-will employment relation, a plaintiff must plead and prove that the defendant engaged in an independently wrongful act that induced the employee to leave the plaintiff. It is sufficient for this purpose that the act be proscribed by some constitutional, statutory, regulatory, common law, or other determinable legal rule. (33 C.4th 1152.)

(b) Under this standard, a defendant is not subject to liability for intentional interference if the interference consists merely of extending a job offer that induces an employee to terminate his or her at-will employment. (33 C.4th 1153.) However, defendants did not simply extend job offers to plaintiffs' at-will employees. Rather, they purposely engaged in unlawful acts that crippled plaintiffs' business operations and caused plaintiffs' personnel to terminate their employment. Accordingly, judgment was proper for damages attributable to that wrongful conduct. (33 C.4th 1155.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(2), 10(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

77 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS D. Defense of Privilege. 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 756

[§ 756] In General.

The Restatement lists a number of privileges specifically applicable in cases involving interference with business relationships. These include competition (Rest.2d, Torts §768, infra, §758); having a financial interest in the business of the person induced (Rest.2d, Torts §769; see infra, §760); responsibility for the welfare of another (Rest.2d, Torts §770); inducement to influence another's business policy (Rest.2d, Torts §771); giving of information or advice (Rest.2d, Torts §772); and asserting a bona fide claim (Rest.2d, Torts §773). (See C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.22 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §446; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §§6.12, 6.13; 12 Cal. Western L. Rev. 475 [agent's privilege to interfere with his principal's contracts]; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Interference §25; on defense of privilege generally, see supra, §131 et seq.)

The issue of privilege is one of fact, and the Rest.2d, Torts §767 sets forth the following factors to be considered in determining whether intentional interference with a contract or prospective contractual relation is proper: "(a) The nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the actor's motive, (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes, (d) the interests sought to be advanced by the actor, (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other, (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference and (g) the relations between the parties." (See, quoting the Restatement, H & M Associates v. El Centro (1980) 109 C.A.3d 399, 409, 167 C.R. 392; Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman v. Cohen (1983) 146 C.A.3d 200, 230, 194 C.R. 180; Bert G. Gianelli Distr. Co. v. Beck & Co. (1985) 172 C.A.3d 1020, 1054, 219 C.R. 203.)

Privilege is an affirmative defense and ordinarily must be specially pleaded. (A.F. Arnold & Co. v. Pacific Professional Ins. (1972) 27 C.A.3d 710, 714, 104 C.R. 96; Mayes v. Sturdy Northern Sales (1979) 91 C.A.3d 69, 80, 154 C.R. 43; see Culcal Stylco v. Vornado (1972) 26 C.A.3d 879, 881, 103 C.R. 419 [defendant must plead privilege unless facts constituting that defense appear on face of complaint]; 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1027.)

In Herron v. State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. (1961) 56 C.2d 202, 14 C.R. 294, 363 P.2d 310, the complaint alleged that plaintiff attorneys had a contingent fee contract (to advance costs and expenses and receive one-third of recovery after deduction of costs) covering a personal injury suit; that defendant, insurance carrier of the allegedly negligent driver, although immediately notified by plaintiffs of their contract, nevertheless told plaintiffs' clients that they did not need an attorney, and induced them to discharge plaintiffs, thereafter settling the claim. Plaintiffs sought compensatory damages of one-third of the reasonable value of the personal injury claim, or one-third of the settlement amount, whichever was the lesser, plus punitive damages. Held, a cause of action was stated. The chief issue was the defense of privilege, which the court rejected on the following analysis:

(a) "Whether an intentional interference by a third party is justifiable depends upon a balancing of the importance, social and private, of the objective advanced by the interference against the importance of the interest interfered with, considering all circumstances including the nature of the actor's conduct and the relationship between the parties." (56 C.2d 206.)

(b) Privilege is an affirmative defense, ordinarily to be pleaded by defendant. (56 C.2d 207.) And the fact that the defendant was the insurance carrier of the alleged tortfeasor (which appeared on the face of the complaint) did not make its action privileged. Defendants argued that the policy of the law encourages settlement, and that an insurance company has a legal duty to effect a settlement of a claim against its insured in an appropriate case; also that settlement furthers its own economic interests. But it did not appear from the complaint that any efforts were made to negotiate with plaintiffs, and "there is no indication that State Farm could not have protected its interests and obtained a satisfactory settlement without interfering with the contract." (56 C.2d 207.) (See Frazier v. Boccardo (1977) 70 C.A.3d 331, 339, 138 C.R. 670 [triable issue of fact whether defendant attorney firm had knowledge of prior contract with plaintiff attorney firm; summary judgment for defendant reversed]; 13 Am.Jur. Trials 153 [interference with attorney's contingent fee contract]; 26 A.L.R.3d 679 [liability in tort for interference with attorney-client relationship].)

In Lowell v. Mother's Cake & Cookie Co. (1978) 79 C.A.3d 13, 144 C.R. 664, supra, §747, defendant argued that it was free to terminate its business relationship with plaintiff's company or any potential successor, that it was also at liberty to inform prospective buyers that it would not utilize the services of the company if it changed hands, and that, hence, the complaint showed lawful acts on its face and established privilege as a matter of law. The court rejected the contention as follows:

(a) Defendant was not entitled to claim the privilege of a competitor (see infra, §§758, 759), for defendant and plaintiff were not competitors. (79 C.A.3d 21.)

(b) Defendant was not entitled to claim the privilege of a person with a financial interest (see infra, §760), for (1) the interest privileged is that of a part owner, partner, stockholder and the like, not that of a person who looks to the other for business; and (2) the privilege is based on a state of mind, and the defendant's predominant purpose must be determined by proof. (79 C.A.3d 22.)

The defense of privilege is often referred to alternatively by the courts as the defense of justification. (See Environmental Planning & Information Council v. Superior Court (1984) 36 C.3d 188, 193, 203 C.R. 127, 680 P.2d 1086, infra, §759.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1), 12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §§6.12, 6.13. Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1101.

78 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS D. Defense of Privilege. 2. Litigation Privilege.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 757

[§ 757] Litigation Privilege.

The absolute privilege in C.C. 47(b) for statements in judicial proceedings that applies in defamation actions (see supra, §567 et seq.) is also available in actions involving interference with business relationships. (Brody v. Montalbano (1978) 87 C.A.3d 725, 738, 151 C.R. 206; Rosenthal v. Irell & Manella (1982) 135 C.A.3d 121, 125, 128, 185 C.R. 92; see Herzog v. "A" Co. (1982) 138 C.A.3d 656, 661, 662, 188 C.R. 133 [privilege must be asserted in good faith for legitimate purpose]; Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman v. Cohen (1983) 146 C.A.3d 200, 231, 234, 194 C.R. 180 [applying relevancy test and rejecting claim of privilege]; C.E.B., 2 California Business Litigation, §11.22 et seq.; on absolute privilege, see supra, §561 et seq.)

In Financial Corp. of America v. Wilburn (1987) 189 C.A.3d 764, 234 C.R. 653, plaintiffs alleged that defendant, an attorney, made false accusations of narcotics trafficking and other criminal activities in an action he had brought against plaintiffs in federal court, seeking relief under RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act); that he had also made these accusations to plaintiffs' employees, investors, customers, and others before filing the federal actions; and that his purpose was to have the accusations republished in the news media in order to damage plaintiff's business and to extort money and property as the price for ceasing. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the cause of action for interference with economic advantage on the ground of privilege. Held, reversed in part.

(a) Relevancy test. For the litigation privilege to apply, the publication must be made in furtherance of the litigation and to promote the interest of justice. (189 C.A.3d 773; see supra, §569.) But if the test is met, an attorney is protected irrespective of the purpose in publishing the matter or his or her belief in its truth. (189 C.A.3d 773, 776.)

(b) Prelitigation statements. The alleged statements threatening litigation, i.e., demands to resolve disputes in anticipation of litigation, are privileged. (189 C.A.3d 777.) The same is true of accusations made in preliminary proceedings gathering evidence from prospective witnesses for anticipated litigation. (189 C.A.3d 777, 778.) But the statements allegedly made to "persons throughout Northern California" could be actionable. An attorney will not be protected by absolute privilege as to actionable words spoken to persons in no way connected with the judicial proceeding. (189 C.A.3d 778.) As to this allegation, therefore, the complaint was not subject to demurrer. (189 C.A.3d 778.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1), 12-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

79 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

D. Defense of Privilege.

3. Competition.

a. Restatement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 758

[§ 758] Restatement.

Rest.2d, Torts §768 reads as follows:

"One who intentionally causes a third person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another who is his competitor or not to continue an existing contract terminable at will does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if (a) the relation concerns a matter involved in the competition between the actor and the other and (b) the actor does not employ wrongful means and (c) his action does not create or continue an unlawful restraint of trade and (d) his purpose is at least in part to advance his interest in competing with the other." (Rest.2d, Torts §768(1).)

"The fact that one is a competitor of another for the business of a third person does not prevent his causing a breach of an existing contract with the other from being an improper interference if the contract is not terminable at will." (Rest.2d, Torts §768(2).)

Comment h gives this explanation of Subsection (2): "The rule that competition is not an improper interference with prospective contractual relations as stated in Subsection (1) does not apply to inducement of breach of contract. When B is legally free to deal either with C or with A, freedom to engage in competition implies a privilege on the part of A to induce B to deal with him rather than with C. But when B is legally obligated to deal with C, A is not justified by the mere fact of competition in inducing B to commit a breach of his legal duty."

Comment i explains the provision on contracts terminable at will: "If the third person is free to terminate his contractual relation with the plaintiff when he chooses, there is still a subsisting contract relation; but any interference with it that induces its termination is primarily an interference with the future relation between the parties. ... As for the future hopes he has no legal right but only an expectancy; and when the contract is terminated by the choice of the third person there is no breach of it."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

80 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

D. Defense of Privilege.

3. Competition.

b. California Law.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 759

[§ 759] California Law.

(1) Privilege Applicable. The privilege of competition, as articulated in the Restatement (see supra, §758), is an affirmative defense in California to actions for intentional interference with economic relations. (San Francisco Design Center Associates v. Portman Cos. (1995) 41 C.A.4th 29, 40, 50 C.R.2d 716; see Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52 C.A.4th 867, 880, 60 C.R.2d 830 [competitor obtained lease by paying higher price after lessor's contract with plaintiff was held unenforceable due to statute of frauds]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §445; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §6.13; BAJI, Nos. 7.86, 7.86.1.) Generally, one competitor may induce customers of the other to do business with that competitor. (Shida v. Japan Food Corp. (1967) 251 C.A.2d 864, 867, 60 C.R. 43; see Charles C. Chapman Bldg. Co. v. California Mart (1969) 2 C.A.3d 846, 855, 82 C.R. 830 [defendant constructed modern building, solicited commercial tenants of plaintiff's old building to move, offering reduced rentals and other favorable terms].) Whether the competition privilege constitutes a defense in a particular case is a factual issue to be decided on all the circumstances in that case. (San Francisco Design Center Associates v. Portman Cos., supra, 41 C.A.4th 41.)

In Katz v. Kapper (1935) 7 C.A.2d 1, 44 P.2d 1060, plaintiff and defendants were rival wholesale fish dealers. It was alleged that defendants offered price reductions to retail customers of plaintiff, and opened competing retail stores to drive these customers out of business, as a means of inducing them to cease trading with plaintiff. Held, this competition, however ruthless, was not unlawful. (7 C.A.2d 4.) (See 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 425 [Katz].)

In A-Mark Coin Co. v. General Mills (1983) 148 C.A.3d 312, 195 C.R. 859, the court held that an agreement to purchase estate assets, based on a probate court order later vacated, could not give rise to a protectable expectancy of future economic benefit. (148 C.A.3d 323.) In addition, the court held that defendants' action in offering a competitive bid for those assets clearly came within the privilege of competition. The opinion cites the Restatement and Charles C. Chapman Bldg. Co., supra, and quotes Prosser as follows: "So long as the plaintiff's contractual relations are merely contemplated or potential, it is considered to be in the interest of the public that any competitor should be free to divert them to himself by all fair and reasonable means. ... In short, it is no tort to beat a business rival to prospective customers. Thus, in the absence of prohibition by statute, illegitimate means or some other unlawful element, a defendant seeking to increase his own business may cut rates or prices, allow discounts or rebates, enter into secret negotiations behind the plaintiff's back, refuse to deal with him or threaten to discharge employees who do, or even deal with third parties unless they cease dealing with the plaintiff, all without incurring liability." (148 C.A.3d 323.)

In PMC v. Saban Entertainment (1996) 45 C.A.4th 579, 52 C.R.2d 877, involving two companies striving to get an exclusive license from the same company, the following acts were covered by the competition privilege, and thus were not tortious:

(a) Defendant was notified that the company granting the license had decided to grant the license to a company other than defendant. This communication did not preclude defendant from continuing to pursue the deal. (45 C.A.4th 604.)

(b) Defendant promised to indemnify the company if it awarded the license to defendant, and was a party to lawsuits involving the license. "The indemnity agreement is not against public policy as it does not encourage litigation that was not otherwise likely to occur; it merely reallocated the cost of that event." (45 C.A.4th 605.)

(2) Privilege Is Inapplicable If Existing Contract Is Not at Will. The interest of a competitor does not justify inducing breach of an existing contract that is not at will. (Imperial Ice Co. v. Rossier (1941) 18 C.2d 33, 36, 112 P.2d 631; Freed v. Manchester Service (1958) 165 C.A.2d 186, 191, 331 P.2d 689; see Rest.2d, Torts §768(1), supra, §758; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 208, 211.)

(3) Privilege Is Inapplicable If Wrongful Means Are Employed. Employment of "wrongful means" will defeat the defense. (Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners, supra; see Rest.2d, Torts §768(1)(b), supra, §758.) In other words, the defendant's conduct "must be unlawful or illegitimate." The plaintiff "must show the competitor's conduct violated a statute or constituted a tort such as fraud or unfair competition. The defendant's conduct must be independently actionable." (San Francisco Design Center Associates v. Portman Cos., supra, 41 C.A.4th 41.)

Where a purchaser of real property, after taking advantage of a broker's efforts, induces the seller to accept the "low net price" by excluding broker's commission, the competition privilege does not apply. "There is no public policy to be served by encouraging such devious dealings; on the contrary, such an intrusion into a protected economic relationship is precisely the conduct condemned by the traditional tort of interference with contract." And "the mere fact that the relationship has not yet ripened into a contract is of no moment when the cause of action is based on the actor's subversion of a prospective contractual relationship." (Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C.3d 815, 828, 122 C.R. 745, 537 P.2d 865, supra, §748.)

In Settimo Associates v. Environ Systems (1993) 14 C.A.4th 842, 17 C.R.2d 757, plaintiff, the holder of a general B-1 contractor's license, was twice underbid on a private construction project by defendant, the holder of only a specialty contractor's license that was not sufficient for some of the work involved. Plaintiff pleaded alternative causes of action for intentional or negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, asserting that defendant's lack of a general contracting license alone satisfied the element of unlawful interference. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed.

(a) Persons involved in the competitive bidding process strive to surpass the competition by submitting the lowest bid possible. This conduct, while admittedly designed to disrupt the prospective business relationships of competitors, is nonetheless essential to the proper functioning of a free-market system. (14 C.A.4th 845.)

(b) The fact that defendant was not properly licensed does not amount to actionable unlawful interference with contracts. There is no statutory authority requiring a private entity to accept bids only from duly licensed contractors. And although defendant's conduct amounted to a misdemeanor and precluded it from enforcing an awarded contract, the regulatory statutes give responsibility for sanctioning the misconduct to the Contractors' Licensing Board. These statutes do not create any action for civil damages in competing bidders who lose projects to unlicensed contractors. (14 C.A.4th 846.)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(1), 12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Privilege Applicable. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §6.13.

81 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
D. Defense of Privilege.
4. Financial Interest in Business.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 760

[§ 760] Financial Interest in Business.

"One who, having a financial interest in the business of a third person intentionally causes that person not to enter into a prospective contractual relation with another, does not interfere improperly with the other's relation if he (a) does not employ wrongful means and (b) acts to protect his interest from being prejudiced by the relation." (Rest.2d, Torts §769.) While the privilege applies in actions for interference with prospective economic advantage, it is inapplicable to actions for inducing breach of an existing contract. (Winn v. McCulloch Corp. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 663, 673, 131 C.R. 597.) (See Culcal Stylco v. Vornado (1972) 26 C.A.3d 879, 882, 883, 103 C.R. 419 [privilege cannot be asserted unless alleged as affirmative defense]; 46 Hastings L. J. 609 [agent's privilege to interfere with principal's contracts].)

Comment c to Restatement §769 points out that the "financial interest" required for application of the privilege is an interest in the nature of an investment: "A part owner of the business, as for example, a partner or stockholder, has at least an interest of this nature. A bondholder or other creditor may also have it. On the other hand, the interest of a person who looks to a third person for business and will lose business opportunities if that person enters into the business relations involved is not a financial interest under the rule stated in this Section."

The privileged act must be done in good faith by appropriate means. (Richardson v. La Rancherita of La Jolla (1979) 98 C.A.3d 73, 81, 159 C.R. 285 [citing the Restatement and Prosser].) "Something other than sincerity and an honest conviction by a party in his position is required before justification for his conduct on the grounds of 'good faith' can be established. There must be an objective basis for the belief which requires more than reliance on counsel. ... [T]o merely equate reliance on an attorney's advice with 'good faith' is to shield those parties from liability who seek and obtain counsel." (98 C.A.3d 82.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

82 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

D. Defense of Privilege. 5. Refusal To Do Business With Another.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 761

[§ 761] Refusal To Do Business With Another.

(1) In General. Ordinarily, one may select the persons with whom he or she wishes to do business, and may refuse to deal with any others. But there are several established exceptions to this rule:

(a) Refusal to deal may violate a statute prohibiting discrimination. (See 8 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §890 et seq.)

(b) Refusal to do business in order to create a monopoly may be violative of either statute or public policy. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §591 et seq.)

(c) Where a number of persons agree together to refuse to deal with another, this organized or concerted refusal (usually called a "boycott") may be a tort unless it has a reasonable and justifiable business objective. (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 925; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 267; 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §640 et seq.; cf. Sullivan v. Warner Bros. Theatres (1941) 42 C.A.2d 660, 662, 109 P.2d 760 [employer may seek to induce employees not to patronize an unfriendly business].)

(2) Politically Motivated Boycott. Boycott is also permissible when it has a political objective. Environmental Planning & Information Council v. Superior Court (1984) 36 C.3d 188, 203 C.R. 127, 680 P.2d 1086, upholds the common law and constitutional right to maintain a politically motivated boycott. Plaintiff published a newspaper, in El Dorado County. Defendant, a nonprofit corporation with a membership of 100 persons in the county, sought to promote conservationist policies in the county. Defendant's newsletter criticized the editorial policies of the newspaper, accusing it of ignoring facts, printing inaccuracies, and editorializing in its news articles; and the newsletter suggested various methods of combatting this "vicious, irresponsible journalism," including contacting businesses advertising in the newspaper and requesting that they discontinue that advertising. Plaintiff brought an action for injunctive relief and damages, defendant moved for summary judgment, and the motion was denied. Held, mandamus issued to compel granting of summary judgment.

(a) Common law on boycott.

(1) California has recognized that an unjustified or unprivileged intentional interference with prospective economic advantage may be tortious. (36 C.3d 193, citing the text.)

(2) The contours of justification, or privilege, are not precisely defined. Where the tort is interference with contract, a balancing of the importance of the objective advanced against the importance of the interest interfered with is required. (36 C.3d 193.) However, when the defendant's action does not interfere with the performance of existing contracts, the range of justification is broader; e.g., a competitor's stake in advancing his or her own economic interest will not justify inducement of a contract breach but will suffice where contractual relations are merely contemplated. (36 C.3d 194.)

(3) Most of the cases have involved either commercial or union-management relationships, and there is little authority on a situation in which a group organized for political purposes allegedly undertakes a consumer boycott to achieve its ends. (36 C.3d 194.) But the authority that does exist strongly suggests that this conduct will not give rise to liability. Certainly defendant's objective--to change the editorial policies of the newspaper in relation to public issues affecting the environment--is a lawful one, and the means used--a peaceful secondary boycott--have likewise been held to be lawful under the common law of the state. (36 C.3d 194.)

(b) Constitutional principles.

(1) NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co. (1982) 458 U.S. 886, 102 S.Ct. 3409, 73 L.Ed.2d 1215, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §386, held that a state cannot prohibit a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change. The case drew a crucial distinction between solely economic boycott activity, which can be regulated (i.e., by antitrust laws), and political boycotts. The same distinction is present here. (36 C.3d 196.)

(2) Plaintiff seeks to distinguish Claiborne on the ground that the objective of the boycott in that case was to vindicate rights of equality and freedom, while here defendants are seeking to further merely their private views on environmental matters. This argument might have merit if this were an ordinary case of interference with advantageous economic relationship in the commercial context; in such a case, the balancing of objective and interest is required. Here, however, as in Claiborne, defendant's activities constitute a "politically motivated boycott," and the fact that the changes it seek "bears upon environmental quality rather than racial equality" does not call for a different result. (36 C.3d 197.)

(3) The fact that the boycott is aimed at changing the editorial policies of a newspaper is likewise not a reason for a different result. "The freedom of a newspaper to formulate editorial policies is obviously of great value in our society, and the spectacle of different groups seeking to influence those policies through the use of economic boycott is troublesome to contemplate. Yet, the newspaper is not in a position to claim infringement of its own constitutional rights by such conduct, since no governmental action is implicated, and the degree of economic coercion which exists may be no greater than that which might lawfully be exerted by an advertiser who, on his own, seeks to influence editorial policy by withdrawing or threatening to withdraw its patronage. The market place of ideas contemplated by the First Amendment ... cannot be so insulated." (36 C.3d 197.) (See Lam v. Ngo (2001) 91 C.A.4th 832, 847, 111 C.R.2d 582 [picketing restaurant because owner failed to support demonstrations against video store displaying North Vietnamese insignia was constitutionally protected peaceful political activity and could not support tort action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage; following NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co. and Environmental Planning & Information Council v. Superior Court].)

West's Key Number Digest, Torts k.10(3), 10(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

83 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS D. Defense of Privilege. 6. Confidential Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 762

[§ 762] Confidential Relationship.

A person who is in a confidential relationship with a party to a contract may induce breach of the contract when acting in the party's interests. When an employment relationship is involved with the party, this is sometimes referred to as the "manager's privilege." (See Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank (1990) 224 C.A.3d 674, 684, 274 C.R. 81.)

In Lawless v. Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators & Paperhangers of America (1956) 143 C.A.2d 474, 300 P.2d 159, plaintiff, an officer of a local union, had a written contract of employment with the local and also held notes of the local for past services. Defendant international union suspended plaintiff in contravention of his contract and also suspended the local's charter, making it impossible for the local to meet its obligation on the notes. Plaintiff brought this action for damages for inducing breach of contract. Held, defendant was protected by its confidential relationship with the local, as well as two other types of privilege.

(a) Defendant was in a confidential relationship with the local, one of the contracting parties. An agent, e.g., may influence his or her employer in its business relations; and an international union stands in a similar position to a local, with common objectives and the same system of internal laws. (143 C.A.2d 478.)

(b) Where two parties have separate contracts with a third, each may resort to any legitimate means to secure performance though the necessary result will be to cause a breach of the other contract; so here, defendant international was privileged to insist on its contract with the local (the union constitution) even though this rendered the local unable to perform its obligations to its creditors. (143 C.A.2d 478.)

(c) Where the inducement to breach is ancillary to the exercise of lawful methods directed to attainment of a legitimate labor objective, it is privileged; here the object was maintenance of internal union discipline. (143 C.A.2d 479.) (On labor union's concerted action as privileged despite inducement of employer breach of contract, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §619 et seq.)

In Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, supra, plaintiff cashier of a national bank brought this action against the bank and officers after he was forcibly retired for age. Defendants relied on the manager's privilege. A manager or agent may, with impersonal or disinterested motive, counsel breach of contract with a third party that he or she reasonably believes to be harmful to his or her employer's best interests. Held, the privilege was a defense.

(a) The privilege has been recognized in California; but the question whether it is absolute (requiring only a showing that a defendant occupied such a position), or qualified (requiring a defendant to establish a prima facie case of entitlement to it) "is somewhat muddled in California law." (224 C.A.3d 684.) Some authorities, without much analysis, suggest that it is absolute; others seem to hold that it should not be based merely on a defendant's position but on the defendant's purpose in inducing the breach. (224 C.A.3d 685.)

(b) However, even if the privilege is not absolute, the uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that defendants acted not in self-interest but in the bank's interest, "by attempting to reduce the Bank's costs through elimination of a highly paid employee, albeit by allegedly impermissible means, and replacing him with lower-paid workers." (224 C.A.3d 685.)

In Halvorsen v. Aramark Uniform Services (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1383, 77 C.R.2d 383, plaintiff sued defendant manager for inducing their employer to terminate plaintiff's at-will employment contract. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed; under the manager's privilege, defendant's action was absolutely privileged. The cases are divided as to whether this privilege is absolute or whether the manager's motive is relevant and to what degree. However, when the employment is at will, the manager's motives and communications with the employer should receive the strongest protection from interlopers--an absolute manager's privilege. This is so, because in this situation, the justification for judicial interference is weak. Just as there is no reason to cause disruption of the business enterprise by investigating the employer's reasons and motives for terminating an employee when the employment is at will, so also there is little justification for causing essentially the same disruption to discern the motives of management and the communications of management with the employer. (65 C.A.4th 1391.)

In Huynh v. Vu (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1183, 4 C.R.3d 595, plaintiff broker alleged defendant husband's intentional interference with his wife's contract with plaintiff, and defendant raised the manager's privilege as a defense. The court noted three formulations of the manager's privilege: (1) absolute (the only requirement is that the defendant be the breaching party's agent or manager); (2) mixed motive (the privilege applies if the manager is motivated, at least in part, to benefit the principal); (3) predominant motive (the privilege applies only when the manager's predominant motive is to benefit the principal). (111 C.A.4th 1195, citing Halvorsen.) After an exhaustive survey of the cases (111 C.A.4th 1195, 1196, 1197), the court adopted the predominant motive formulation, at least for most commercial tort claims. (111 C.A.4th 1198.) Three reasons support adopting the predominant motive formulation:

(a) Adopting the mixed motive test would be tantamount to proclaiming absolute immunity, which has been applied, although not unanimously, only in the at-will employment context. "Rare indeed would be the case where the principal's interest could not be advanced at least to some degree by the manager's advice." (111 C.A.4th 1198.)

(b) Providing a manager with immunity where the advice to breach is given predominantly to benefit the principal is consistent with the efficient breach theory (where it is more efficient to breach and pay expectation damages than to perform): the principal/promisor is able to obtain and rely on the manager's advice in determining whether its interests are best served by performance or by breach. However, if the manager's privilege is absolute, or subject only to the mixed motive test, the privilege would allow the manager to retain the manager's own benefit from the principal's breach while escaping any allocated share of liability. (111 C.A.4th 1198.)

(c) The predominant motive test has been adopted in several other states. (111 C.A.4th 1199, citing cases from Alaska, Iowa, Minnesota, and Tennessee.)

The court rejected the following two contentions:

(1) That the principal must be a business, rather than a natural person. (111 C.A.4th 1195.)

(2) That a manager's desire to advance his or her own personal interest as a secondary or indirect result of benefiting the principal (as where a husband is motivated to some extent by a desire to enhance whatever community property interest he might have in the proceeds of the transaction) should vitiate the privilege. (111 C.A.4th 1200.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

84 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS

D. Defense of Privilege.
7. Inducing Suit on Colorable Claim.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 763

[§ 763] Inducing Suit on Colorable Claim.

In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, the court held that to allow a cause of action to be stated for intentional interference with contractual relations or intentional interference with prospective economic advantage when the only interference alleged is that defendant induced the bringing of potentially meritorious litigation "would be an unwarranted expansion of the scope of these torts and a pernicious barrier to free access to the court." (50 C.3d 1123.) In 1963, plaintiff P G & E entered into a power purchase contract with the Placer County water agency to buy all of the power generated by its Middle Fork American River Project. The contract provided that the agreement would terminate in 2013 or at the end of the years in which the agency completed retirement of its project bonds, whichever occurred first. Energy prices rose, and defendant Bear Stearns, an investment broker, persuaded the agency to join in an effort to terminate the power contract by retiring its bonds; and with the financial and legal assistance of Bear Stearns, the agency sought a declaratory judgment that it could terminate the contract in this manner. While that proceeding was still pending, plaintiff brought the present action seeking an injunction and damages for disruption of the contractual relations and interference with prospective economic advantage. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Inducing a party to seek termination of its contract according to its terms may be actionable under the cases upholding actions for interference with at-will and voidable contracts; i.e., a contract at the will of the parties is not at the will of others. (50 C.3d 1127, citing Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pac. (1946) 29 C.2d 34, 172 P.2d 867, supra, §734, Zimmerman v. Bank of America (1961) 191 C.A.2d 55, 12 C.R. 319, supra, §733, and other cases.) And express termination provisions do not create a privilege to interfere: "[I]f we protect an economic relationship that is wholly prospective from outside interference, we must also protect contractual relations that are subject to termination." (50 C.3d 1128.)

(b) The plaintiff need not allege an actual or inevitable breach of contract in order to state a cause of action for disruption of contractual relations. It is enough to show that the plaintiff's performance is made more costly or more burdensome. (50 C.3d 1129.) But P G & E has not alleged that defendant's conduct had any impact on P G & E. "It is not alleged that Bear Stearns induced the Agency to undertake a plan to terminate the contract unilaterally and immediately begin to sell its power elsewhere. ... It is not alleged that Bear Stearns's marketing campaign for the Agency's power has caused P G & E a present or imminent injury. There is no allegation that unilateral termination is threatened. The only threat to the contract is the litigation. There will be no termination of the contract unless there is a judicial determination that the Agency may terminate, and it appears that P G & E's only present damages are in responding to the action for declaratory relief." (50 C.3d 1130.)

(c) The only common law tort claim that treats the instigation of bringing a lawsuit as an actionable injury is the action for malicious prosecution. The actionable harm is in forcing the individual to expend financial and emotional resources to defend against a baseless claim; bringing a colorable claim is not actionable. If bringing a colorable claim were actionable, "tort law would inhibit free access to the courts and impair our society's commitment to the peaceful, judicial resolution of the differences." (50 C.3d 1131.) California's concern with assuring free access to the courts has extended to the privilege for statements made in the course of litigation (50 C.3d 1132), and other courts have held that the scope of the interference torts is limited by the constitutional right to petition for redress of grievances (50 C.3d 1133).

(d) The constitutional doctrine assuring the right to petition protects not only the litigant but others who wish to achieve the object of a lawsuit or are involved in bringing it. "If any person who induced another to bring a lawsuit involving a colorable claim could be liable in tort, free access to the courts could be choked off with an assiduous search for unnamed parties. It is important to remember what P G & E is trying to achieve through this lawsuit. It seeks to enjoin Bear Stearns from further participation in the lawsuit in order to avert what it considers to be the irreparable harm of an adverse judgment. It is essentially seeking to abort the lawsuit by starving the litigant of funds." (50 C.3d 1136.) (See Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Newman & Holtzinger (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1194, 1202, 46 C.R.2d 151 [disclosure of documents protected by secrecy agreement and by protective discovery order, which forced plaintiff to defend numerous lawsuits, could not be basis for tort claim because inducing third party to bring litigation on meritorious claim is not tortious; following Bear Stearns]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 843 [Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

85 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
D. Defense of Privilege.
8. Petitioning Government for Redress of Grievance.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 764

[§ 764] Petitioning Government for Redress of Grievance.

Actions for interference with business relations are limited by the constitutional right to petition for grievances; an exception exists, however, where the defendant's efforts to influence the government are merely a sham. In Hi-Top Steel Corp. v. Lehrer (1994) 24 C.A.4th 570, 29 C.R.2d 646, plaintiffs brought an action against defendants for unfair competition and intentional interference with contractual relations and prospective economic advantage. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants engaged in the following actions that caused plaintiffs to abandon their plan to enter into the automobile body shredding business: (a) made false statements to the city concerning plaintiffs' installation of the shredding equipment; (b) after the city approved plaintiffs' plan design, filed an appeal for the purpose of delaying installation of the shredding equipment; (c) circulated a flyer to residents of the city and the surrounding communities that contained false statements about the shredding equipment and encouraged the residents to oppose plaintiffs' plan of design; and (d) after plaintiffs' plan of design was affirmed on appeal, informed plaintiffs that they would withdraw their appeal if plaintiffs would agree not to shred automobile bodies, but that otherwise they would attempt to delay installation by asking the city to require plaintiffs to provide an environmental impact report. The complaint further alleged that during this time defendants themselves were gathering information about the same type of shredding equipment that plaintiffs were seeking to install. The trial judge, ruling that defendants' actions were protected under Cal. Const., Art. I, §3 (right to petition for redress of grievances), entered judgment on the pleadings for defendants. Held, reversed; plaintiffs stated a cause of action under the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

(a) Under the so-called Noerr-Pennington doctrine, there is no antitrust liability for efforts to influence government that are protected by the First Amendment right to petition for redress of grievances, even if the motive behind these efforts is anticompetitive. However, there is an exception to the doctrine when the efforts to influence government are merely a sham, i.e., where a person is not genuinely attempting to petition the government for redress of grievance, but is simply attempting to interfere with a competitor. These sham efforts are subject to antitrust liability. (24 C.A.4th 574; see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §562.) These principles, although arising in the antitrust context, have been applied or discussed in cases involving other types of liability, including liability for interference with contractual relationships or prospective economic advantage. (24 C.A.4th 577.)

(b) There is no impediment to applying the sham exception in California: (1) In Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 C.3d 311, 216 C.R. 718, 703 P.2d 58, and Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 C.3d 1118, 270 C.R. 1, 791 P.2d 587, supra, §763, the Supreme Court set forth the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and the sham exception, but did not apply them because they were inapplicable. However, in neither case did the court question the sham exception or suggest that it should not be applied in California. (24 C.A.4th 579.) (2) The right-to-petition language in Cal. Const., Art. I, §3, differs from the corresponding language in the First Amendment. However, in the context of the sham exception, these differences in language are irrelevant. (24 C.A.4th 578.) (3) There is no reason not to apply the exception in California. A person should not be protected from tort liability if the person is not engaging in a genuine exercise of his or her constitutional rights. (24 C.A.4th 579.) "Accordingly, we hold the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is applicable in California." (24 C.A.4th 579.)

(c) Defendants argued that even if the sham exception applies in California, it can only be applied in an adjudicatory context. This argument is without merit. The Noerr case itself (see Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight (1961) 365 U.S. 127, 81 S.Ct. 523, 528, 5 L.Ed.2d 464, 470, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §562) never limited the sham exception to the adjudicatory process only. And subsequent cases have either refused to apply the exception outside the adjudicatory context because the petitioning activity in question was genuine or have applied it in the adjudicatory context without holding that it applies only in that context. (24 C.A.4th 579.)

(d) Plaintiffs' allegations show that defendants prosecuted their appeal of plaintiffs' plan design without regard to its merits; that they agreed to withdraw the appeal if plaintiffs would agree not to shred automobile bodies, but threatened additional obstacles if plaintiffs would not agree; and that defendants were working on installing their own automobile body shredder, thus indicating that they had no genuine concern as to its effects on the environment. In other words, defendants were not concerned with stopping plaintiffs' installation of an automobile body shredder through governmental action but through the imposition of costs and burdens associated with the governmental process. Thus, plaintiffs stated a cause of action under the sham exception. (24 C.A.4th 582.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See People v. The Pac. Lumber Co. (2008) 158 C.A.4th 950, 964, 70 C.R.3d 501, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, Supp., §128 [sham exception to Noerr-Pennington doctrine did not operate to allow state to pursue fraud action against lumber company for alleged misrepresentations and concealments during California Environmental Quality Act proceedings; company's activities were genuine effort to influence government and to secure approval of its sustained yield plan].

86 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
D. Defense of Privilege.
9. First Amendment Guarantees.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 765

[§ 765] First Amendment Guarantees.

Injurious statements affecting the plaintiff's business relations may be subject to First Amendment protections. (Blatty v. New York Times Co. (1986) 42 C.3d 1033, 1042, 232 C.R. 542, 728 P.2d 1177; see 24 Hastings Const. L. Q. 709 [First Amendment defense in tortious interference with contract cases]; on constitutional limitations on liability for injurious statements generally, see supra, §601 et seq.) Thus, the Blatty case held that a newspaper cannot be held liable for failure to include a book in its list of "best sellers." Plaintiff, an author of fiction, brought this action against defendant, a newspaper publisher, alleging that defendant published a weekly list "purporting to rank best selling books ... based on actual sales"; that the list had a substantial influence on promotion and purchase of books, and defendant knew or should have known of this influence; that plaintiff's novel met all the criteria for inclusion on the list, but defendant failed to include it; and that as a result plaintiff suffered loss of the benefits that inclusion would have brought. The trial court gave judgment for defendant on demurrer. Held, affirmed: "[T]he First Amendment establishes a broad zone of protection within which the press may publish without fear of incurring liability" on the basis of statements made. (42 C.3d 1042; see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §425 et seq.)

(a) In defamation actions (in which the alleged injurious falsehood is the gravamen of plaintiff's claim), the Amendment has abrogated the common law of strict liability. "For constitutional purposes it is not enough that the traditional affirmative defense of truth, with the burden of proof on the defendant, be available to the press; rather it is the plaintiff who is required to plead and prove falsehood." (42 C.3d 1042, citing New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §601, and Gertz v. Robert Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, supra, §613.) And the Amendment also requires that the statement must specifically refer to, or be "of and concerning," the plaintiff. (42 C.3d 1042, citing Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86 S.Ct. 669, 15 L.Ed.2d 597, supra, §601.)

(b) The limitations that define the Amendment's zone of protection for the press are not limited to defamation cases but apply to all claims whose gravamen is the alleged injurious falsehood of a statement. (42 C.3d 1042, citing Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 244, 253, 208 C.R. 137, 690 P.2d 610, supra, §604.) The reason is that, although the limitations arose in defamation actions, "they do not concern matters peculiar to such actions but broadly protect free-expression and free-press values." (42 C.3d 1043.)

(c) "The 'of and concerning' or specific reference requirement limits the right of action for injurious falsehood, granting it to those who are the direct object of criticism and denying it to those who merely complain of nonspecific statements that they believe cause them some hurt." (42 C.3d 1044.) The absence of the requirement could invite vexatious lawsuits and seriously interfere with public discussion of issues or groups in the public eye. (42 C.3d 1044.)

(d) Pragmatic concerns also compel the conclusion that First Amendment limitations apply to all these claims, however labeled; e.g., intentional infliction of emotional distress or 'false light' invasion of privacy. (42 C.3d 1045.)

(e) Under these principles, the cause of action for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage--essentially an action for injurious falsehood--is barred. Plaintiff failed to allege, and could not allege, that the statement in the newspaper either expressly mentioned him or referred to him by reasonable implication. (42 C.3d 1046.) And his contention that to require him to make such a showing improperly adds a new element to the tort is unsound: A state's definition of a tort cannot undermine the requirements of the First Amendment. (42 C.3d 1047.)

In Hofmann Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 390, 248 C.R. 384, an action for damages for intentional interference with prospective advantage and other claims, the First Amendment defense was raised and held sufficient. "Blatty ... put a new gloss on California business tort law. Prior to Blatty it appeared that torts involving intentional interference could be accomplished by speech that would ordinarily be protected under the First Amendment. ... Blatty repudiated this view by holding that the First Amendment necessarily comes into play when a media defendant is accused of publishing false statements that damage business interests." (202 C.A.3d 402.) Moreover, the Blatty rule is not limited to media defendants, and the rule applies to statements of opinion as well as fact. (202 C.A.3d 402.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Krinsky v. Doe 6 (2008) 159 C.A.4th 1154, 1178, 72 C.R.3d 231 [anonymous poster's satirical remarks on Internet message board concerning corporate president, "while offensive" and "juvenile," were protected by First Amendment; thus, president's action for interference with contractual or business relationships was precluded].

87 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS RELATIONS
D. Defense of Privilege.
10. Other Privileges.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 766

[§ 766] Other Privileges.

Additional types of conduct have been held to be privileged in actions for interference to business relations. The following cases are illustrative:

In Masoni v. Board of Trade (1953) 119 C.A.2d 738, 260 P.2d 205, plaintiff partners owed $ 17,000 to 65 creditors, and were negotiating for settlement at a lesser amount or for an extension of time. Defendant association of merchants and manufacturers, following its usual practice, invited creditors to form a committee and assign claims to its agents. But it also advised them that one partner had ample means to pay in full, and that was thereby forced to pay. In denying recovery, the court first reaffirmed the principle underlying the tort and suggested that in a proper case an action would lie against a defendant who, to destroy the plaintiff's business, induced creditors to demand immediate payment and to refuse to extend credit. (119 C.A.2d 742.) Here, however, the legitimate purpose of defendant association was to promote cooperation among creditors of insolvent debtors, and the legitimate means used were the communication of truthful information as to one partner's ability to pay and the offer of collection services. (119 C.A.2d 743.)

In Cal-Medicon v. Los Angeles County Med. Assn. (1971) 20 C.A.3d 148, 97 C.R. 530, plaintiff Cal-Medicon assisted the Los Angeles County Department of Public Social Services in transporting disabled persons to doctors' offices for examination. The doctors participating in its program received a letter from defendant county medical society suggesting that their agreements violated the code of ethics of the national and county associations, and also involved illegal solicitation of business. The letter closed with a request for an explanation. Plaintiff Cal-Medicon and Dr. D, a participant in its activities, brought an action for interference with business. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer sustained. Assuming that the acts complained of constituted an interference with Cal-Medicon's business, the complaint showed justification on its face. The relationship between the medical association and its members was sufficient to justify its inquiry into possible violation of professional ethics. (20 C.A.3d 153.)

In Bledsoe v. Watson (1973) 30 C.A.3d 105, 106 C.R. 197, plaintiff attorney had a written contract with a city and its council members to challenge asserted irregularities in recall petitions directed at the members. The proponents of the recall engaged defendant W, an attorney, to support their objectives. Plaintiff alleged that defendant W maliciously and by fraudulent representations of law persuaded the city treasurer to repudiate plaintiff's contract and to refuse to disburse city funds to him. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Public policy, made explicit by C.C.P. 526a, encourages citizens to challenge illegal expenditures of public funds. "Since defendants were specifically authorized to initiate a lawsuit to prevent an alleged illegal expenditure of funds by the city treasurer, their less drastic act in writing the treasurer to persuade him not to make an illegal expenditure of funds was likewise justified for the social interest attached to both acts is identical." (30 C.A.3d 109.)

(b) Defendant's conduct was also justifiable under the right of a citizen to protest a public expenditure by petition and instruction (Cal. Const., Art. I, §3; U.S. Const., Amendments I, XIV). "Correspondence with the public officer responsible for the disbursement of the funds under question appears to us an appropriate means of petition and instruction. In our view protection of the means appropriate to prevent an illegal expenditure of public funds and to achieve fiscal integrity in local government carries a greater social value than protection from challenge of plaintiff's employment contract with the city and its council members." (30 C.A.3d 109.)

(c) The official proceeding privilege in defamation (C.C. 47(b), supra, §585) is analogous: "[T]he tort of inducing breach of contract cannot be used to dam up the open channel of communication through which citizens may express their grievances to public officials and challenge questioned expenditures of public funds. At bench the balance in favor of the public interest is unusually strong for the operation of the electoral process itself was involved." (30 C.A.3d 110.)

In Worldvision Enterprises v. American Broadcasting Cos. (1983) 142 C.A.3d 589, 191 C.R. 148, plaintiff, owner of future syndication rights in a television series, alleged that defendant broadcasting company disparaged the value of the rights by its statements about their unsuitability for general family viewing. Held, summary judgment for defendant was affirmed.

(a) "All defendant did in this case was to voice an opinion, through its president, on the merits of a series of dramatic productions and on an issue of significant public interest which had been addressed by Congress, the Federal Communications Commission, and the press: the difficult question of defining what is appropriate television programming for exposure to children. Strong public policy favors defendant's right to comment without malice on matters of public interest." (142 C.A.3d 596, citing the text.)

(b) "The speech was given to defendant's network affiliates who bore a special relationship to defendant and who had an interest in knowing defendant's broadcasting philosophy and the reasons for defendant's scheduling decisions." (142 C.A.3d 596, citing Cal-Medicon, supra, and the text.)

(c) "In considering whether there should be recovery for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, courts and commentators have suggested that a balancing is required among societal interests, the interests of the plaintiff in freedom from interference, and the interests of the defendant in maximum freedom of economic action. ... Here the defendant has a legitimate right to make programming scheduling decisions to promote its economic interests and its judgment of the public interest. If defendant could be held liable on a negligence theory to the owners of syndication rights of each program presently broadcast by defendant, programming decisions would be impossible because scheduling or promoting one program at a particular time necessarily excludes all other programs from that time slot, arguably damaging the other syndicators." (142 C.A.3d 597.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

88 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witkin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
A. In General.
1. Governing Statutes.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 767

[§ 767] Governing Statutes.

(1) General Fraud Statute. C.C. 1709 provides a cause of action for "fraudulent deceit": "One who willfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers." C.C. 1710 specifies four kinds of "deceit" within the meaning of C.C. 1709:

(a) Intentional misrepresentation: "The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true." (C.C. 1710(1).)

(b) Negligent misrepresentation: "The assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true." (C.C. 1710(2).)

(c) Concealment: "The suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact." (C.C. 1710(3).)

(d) False promise: "A promise, made without any intention of performing it." (C.C. 1710(4).)

(2) Fraud in Making Contract. C.C. 1572, dealing with fraud in the making of contracts, defines "actual fraud" by essentially setting forth the same four acts as C.C. 1710:

(a) Intentional misrepresentation: "The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true." (C.C. 1572(1).)

(b) Negligent misrepresentation: "The positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true." (C.C. 1572(2).)

(c) Concealment: "The suppression of that which is true, by one having knowledge or belief of the fact." (C.C. 1572(3).)

(d) False promise: "A promise made without any intention of performing it." (C.C. 1572(4).)

The definition also includes, as a fifth category, "[a]ny other act fitted to deceive." (C.C. 1572(5).) (See 1 Summary

(10th), Contracts, §286.)

(3) False Claims Act. The False Claims Act (Govt.C. 12650 et seq.) imposes civil liability for submitting false claims to state or local public entities. (See 19 Pacific L. J. 678; on recovery of treble damages, see infra, §1570; on statute of limitations, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §450.) The Attorney General, or the prosecuting authority of the local public entity is authorized to initiate the action. (Govt.C. 12652(a), (b).) A private person ("the qui tam plaintiff") may likewise sue, for himself or herself and on behalf of the public entity. (Govt.C. 12652(c).) (See Judicial Council Form No. MC-060 [Confidential Cover Sheet--False Claims Action]; Rothschild v. Tyco Int. (2000) 83 C.A.4th 488, 496, 99 C.R.2d 721 [bar against related actions arising from same conduct in Govt.C. 12652(c)(10) does not preclude unfair competition action; provision applies only to subsequent actions filed under False Claims Act]; Pomona v. Superior Court (2001) 89 C.A.4th 793, 803, 107 C.R.2d 710 [sufficient allegations in complaint by city and qui tam plaintiff against manufacturer of water distribution parts for using metal inferior to that specified in its catalog]; American Contract Services v. Allied Mold & Die (2001) 94 C.A.4th 854, 859, 862, 114 C.R.2d 773 [where qui tam action, in which Attorney General has intervened, appears to have little or no merit, good cause for dismissal by Attorney General exists, despite objection by qui tam plaintiff]; West v. Sundown Little League of Stockton (2002) 96 C.A.4th 351, 357, 116 C.R.2d 849 ["good cause," within meaning of Govt.C. 12652(e)(2)(A) governing dismissals, exists when dismissal is rationally related to legitimate governmental purpose]; Hawthorne v. H&C Disposal Co. (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1668, 1679, 1 C.R.3d 312 [rejecting bar of Govt.C. 12652(c)(10) (no person may bring related action based on facts underlying pending action) because previous claims had been dismissed and were thus not "pending"; rejecting bar of Govt.C. 12652(d)(3)(A) (action may not be based on public disclosures respecting earlier proceedings) because neither of earlier actions presented same issue as present action]; 23 California Lawyer 47 (September 2003) [actions under False Claims Act].)

(4) Other Statutes. Other statutes govern particular types or aspects of fraud. (See C.C. 1573, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §294 [constructive fraud]; Corp.C. 25400 et seq., 25500 et seq., 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §443 et seq. [fraud in the sale or purchase of securities]; 11 U.S.C., §523(a)(2), 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §491 [liability based on intentional fraud as a debt nondischargeable in bankruptcy].)

(5) Terminology. Although C.C. 1572 and 1710 seemingly incorporate negligent misrepresentation within "actual fraud" and "deceit," it is treated as a separate type of claim subject to its own requirements. (See infra, §818 et seq.)

"California courts have consistently used the words fraud and deceit interchangeably." (Sixta v. Ochsner (1960) 187 C.A.2d 485, 490, 9 C.R. 617.) (On pleading of fraud and deceit, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §667 et seq.; for basic instructions, see BAJI, No. 12.30 et seq.; CACI, No. 1900 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.1

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) False Claims Act. A number of decisions have addressed the scope and application of the False Claims Act, including the following:

Campbell v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2005) 35 C.4th 311, 324, 25 C.R.3d 320, 106 P.3d 976, 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §337 [Govt.C. 12653 (allowing employees to bring suit for retaliatory discharge for reporting false claims) did not excuse terminated University of California employee from exhausting university internal administrative remedies before bringing action under that statute].

California v. Altus Finance, S.A. (2005) 36 C.4th 1284, 1294, 32 C.R.3d 498, 116 P.3d 1175 [assets of insolvent insurer to which Insurance Commissioner acquires title as conservator or liquidator are held in trust for private parties, primarily policyholders, and do not constitute "state funds" for purposes of action under False Claims Act].

Wells v. One2One Learning Foundation (2006) 39 C.4th 1164, 1189, 1199, 1213, 48 C.R.3d 108, 141 P.3d 225

[charter schools and their operators, but not public schools, were "persons" as defined in Govt.C. 12650(b)(5) and therefore subject to suit under False Claims Act; suits under Act, even where qui tam, are not subject to Government Claims Act requirement of prior claim for payment].

California v. PricewaterhouseCoopers, LLP (2006) 39 C.4th 1220, 1227, 48 C.R.3d 144, 141 P.3d 256 [city could not bring false claims action on behalf of state; public entities are not "persons" under False Claims Act, authorized to bring qui tam actions on behalf of other public entities].

California v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 C.A.4th 225, 231, 240, 23 C.R.3d 746 [under Govt.C. 12651(a)(7), which attaches liability for "reverse false claims" (knowingly filing false record to conceal obligation to pay money or transmit property to state or political subdivision), obligation must be certain and liquidated].

Solano v. Lionsgate Corp. (2005) 126 C.A.4th 741, 746, 24 C.R.3d 362 [False Claims Act issues were arbitrable under contract providing that all demands for monetary compensation or damages arising under or related to performance would be arbitrated unless arbitration was waived by both parties; references in Govt.C. 12651 to "a civil action" to recover penalties and damages and to findings and assessments by "the court" did not preclude arbitration].

Armenta v. Mueller Co. (2006) 142 C.A.4th 636, 647, 47 C.R.3d 832 [Govt.C. 12651(a)(8) (imposing liability on beneficiaries of false claims that subsequently discover, and fail to disclose, falsity) applies to third persons who do not submit false claims themselves].

California v. Pacific Bell Tel. Co. (2006) 142 C.A.4th 741, 752, 48 C.R.3d 427 [Govt.C. 12652(d)(3)(A) (jurisdictional bar to qui tam false claim actions based on publicly disclosed information unless plaintiff is original source) applied where information had already been publicly disclosed in trade and tax periodicals and plaintiff lacked direct and independent knowledge of that information].

Kern v. Sparks (2007) 149 C.A.4th 11, 17, 56 C.R.3d 551 [trial court erred in granting nonsuit and directed verdict as to county's action against sheriff under False Claims Act where reasonable jury could infer from evidence that sheriff acted recklessly in certifying that unauthorized pay to employees was proper; specific intent to defraud is not required for liability under Act (Govt.C. 12650(b)(2)(C))].

Fassberg Const. Co. v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (2007) 152 C.A.4th 720, 736, 60 C.R.3d 375 [contractor's change order proposals and weekly payroll reports submitted to housing authority were not "claims" under False Claims Act and could not alone support civil penalty; while Act authorizes treble damages award for knowingly presenting either false claim or false record or statement in support of false claim, it authorizes civil penalty only for each false claim].

Thompson Pac. Const. v. Sunnyvale (2007) 155 C.A.4th 525, 548, 66 C.R.3d 175 [trial court did not err in rejecting proposed instruction that demand or request must be "lie" in order to be "false" for purposes of False Claims Act; Govt.C. 12560(b) and 12561(a) do not require deliberate lie but allows for liability where defendant acts in deliberate ignorance or in reckless disregard of truth of claim].

California v. Hamby (2008) 162 C.A.4th 480, 484, 75 C.R.3d 567 [employees of public agency, acting in course and scope of employment and solely on agency's behalf, are not proper defendants in action under False Claims Act; following Wells and PricewaterhouseCoopers].

Statute of limitations:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §483.

(4) Other Statutes. C.C. 1668 provides: "All contracts which have for their object, directly or indirectly, to exempt any one from responsibility for his own fraud ... are against the policy of the law." (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §660.) Accordingly, a party who has fraudulently induced the other party to enter into a contract cannot be relieved of liability by an exculpatory clause. (Manderville v. PCG&S Group (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1486, 1501, 55 C.R.3d 59.)

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Enforcement of Judgments, §518.(5) Terminology.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §709 et seq.

89 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
A. In General.
2. Restatement.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 768

[§ 768] Restatement.

Division Four of the Second Restatement of Torts is entitled "Misrepresentation."

Chapter 22, entitled "Misrepresentation and Nondisclosure Causing Pecuniary Loss," consists of four topics: (1) Fraudulent Misrepresentation (Deceit); (2) Concealment and Nondisclosure; (3) Negligent Misrepresentation; and (4) Innocent Misrepresentation. Topic 1 is further subdivided into Title A, Fraudulent Character of Misrepresentation; Title B, Exception of Influencing Conduct; and Title C, Justifiable Reliance.

Chapter 23 deals with fraudulent misrepresentations and nondisclosure in miscellaneous transactions: §553 [inducing gifts to maker or third persons]; §554 [nondisclosure of physical conditions making marital relation dangerous]; §555 [inducing recipient to enter into meretricious relations with maker or third person]; §556 [misrepresentation of third person's fitness for or freedom to marry]; §557 [inducing unlawful acts or omissions]; and §557A [misrepresentations causing physical harm].

The Scope Note on Chapter 22 (p. 54) discusses the general nature of misrepresentation: "Misrepresentation runs all through the law of torts as a method of accomplishing various types of tortious conduct which, for reasons of historical development or as a matter of convenience, usually are grouped under categories of their own. Thus a battery may be committed by feeding the plaintiff poisoned chocolates or inducing his consent to a physical contact by misrepresenting its character. False imprisonment may result from a pretense of authority to make an arrest, a trespass to land from fraudulent statements inducing another to enter, or a conversion from obtaining possession of goods by fraudulent representations. Many of the common forms of negligent conduct, resulting in physical harm to person or property, are in their essence nothing more than misrepresentation, as in the case of a misleading signal by a driver of an automobile about to make a turn or an assurance that a danger does not exist."

"So far as misrepresentation has been treated as giving rise in and of itself to a distinct form of tort liability, it has been concerned and identified with resulting pecuniary loss. Its origins lay in the common law action of deceit, although, as indicated in Topics 3 and 4 of this Chapter, the liability has now progressed in some respects beyond that action. Accordingly, this Chapter is concerned only with the liability for pecuniary loss resulting from misrepresentation or nondisclosure."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

90 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witkin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
A. In General.
3. Standard of Proof.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 769

[§ 769] Standard of Proof.

Earlier Court of Appeal opinions stating that fraud must be proved by "clear and convincing evidence" were disapproved in Liodas v. Sahadi (1977) 19 C.3d 278, footnotes 3, 8, 13, 137 C.R. 635, 562 P.2d 316. The court examined the conflicting cases and clarified the law as follows:

(a) The cases approving the clear and convincing standard emphasized the former statutory presumption against "crime or wrong," and usually involved equitable remedies such as reformation or rescission of documents. During the same period, cases dealing with actions for damages for fraud followed the general rule applicable to all civil actions, that the proper standard of proof is a preponderance of the evidence. (19 C.3d 287.)

(b) The Evidence Code abolished the presumption and replaced it with an allocation of the burden of proof in Ev.C. 520 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §14), and the standard of proof by a preponderance of evidence applies under Ev.C. 115 (see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §35). (19 C.3d 290, 291.) The decisions in other jurisdictions are in accord. (19 C.3d 291.)

(c) Aggregates Associated v. Packwood (1962) 58 C.2d 580, 25 C.R. 545, 375 P.2d 425, dealing with sufficiency of the evidence to support a finding of fraudulent conveyance, contains a dictum that clear and convincing evidence is required. This statement is inconsistent with the law laid down by other Supreme Court decisions, in fraudulent conveyance cases as well as others in which the issue of fraud was involved, and is not to be followed. (19 C.3d 292, 293.) (See BAJI, No 2.60 [burden and standard of proof generally]; CACI, No. 200 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

91 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
A. In General.
4. Constitutional Limitations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 770

[§ 770] Constitutional Limitations.

A constitutional defense was raised to a fraud action in Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, but rejected under the facts. Plaintiffs were approached by members of defendant church, and after a long continued series of meetings and educational programs with group members, were allegedly "brainwashed" and induced to join the church. During the period of indoctrination, they frequently asked whether the group was associated with any religious organization and were told that it was not. At the end of the period, the identity and purpose of defendant were fully disclosed, and the initial deception was explained as necessary to carry out the recruitment objective. Plaintiffs nevertheless continued as church members until abducted by "deprogrammers" hired by their parents, and the deprogrammers persuaded them to leave the church. Thereafter they filed the present action for fraud. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) Applicable principles.

(1) Under United States v. Ballard (1944) 322 U.S. 78, 64 S.Ct. 882, 88 L.Ed. 1148, 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §514, religious belief is absolutely protected under the First Amendment. However, religiously motivated conduct is not. This conduct is subject to regulation for the protection of society, under a balancing test, in which the importance of a state's interest is weighed against the severity of the burden imposed. And even if the balancing test is met, it must further be shown that (a) no action imposing a lesser burden would satisfy the government's interest, and (b) the action does not discriminate between religions or between religion and nonreligion. (46 C.3d 1112, 1113.)

(2) Although judicial sanctioning of tort recovery is state action sufficient under the Fourteenth Amendment to invoke the same constitutional protections as statutes and other legislative actions, religious groups are not immune from all tort liability. They may be liable even for acts that are religiously motivated. (46 C.3d 1114.)

(3) The present action does not interfere with religious belief: "The legal question is simply whether a religious organization can be held liable on a traditional cause of action in fraud for deceiving nonmembers into subjecting themselves, without their knowledge or consent, to coercive persuasion." (46 C.3d 1116.)

(b) Analysis of claim.

(1) Tort liability for fraudulent recruitment does impair the church's ability to recruit members; but the burden is not substantial. "Being subject to liability for fraud does not in any way or degree prevent or inhibit Church members from operating their religious communities, worshiping as they see fit, freely associating with one another, selling or distributing literature, proselytizing on the street, soliciting funds, or generally spreading Reverend Moon's message among the population. ... At most, it potentially closes one questionable avenue for bringing new members into the Church." (46 C.3d 1117.)

(2) The state's interest justifies this marginal burden: "[I]t is one thing when a person knowingly and voluntarily submits to a process involving coercive influence, as a novice does on entering a monastery or seminary. ... But it is quite another when a person is subjected to coercive persuasion without his knowledge or consent. While some individuals who experience coercive persuasion emerge unscathed, many others develop serious and sometimes irreversible physical and psychiatric disorders, up to and including schizophrenia, self-mutilation, and suicide. ... The state clearly has a compelling interest in preventing its citizens from being deceived into submitting unknowingly to such a potentially dangerous process." (46 C.3d 1118.) And the state has an equally compelling interest in protecting families from suffering great stress and incurring significant financial loss as a result of that deception. (46 C.3d 1118.)

(3) To allow injured parties to bring private actions for fraud is the least restrictive means available for advancing this state interest. (46 C.3d 1119.) And the traditional tort liability is nondiscriminatory. "Were a nonreligious organization--e.g., a group espousing a political or social cause--to deceive a person into unknowingly submitting to coercive persuasion, the same liability would ensue." (46 C.3d 1119.) (See 25 Loyola L.A. Law Rev. 499, 518 [Molko].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

92 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
A. In General.
5. Commentary.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 771

[§ 771] Commentary.

The subject of fraud is comprehensively covered not only in the Torts Restatement (see supra, §768), but in additional texts and articles. The following are illustrative:

(1) Texts. See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §469 et seq.; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.1 et seq.; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §1 et seq.

(2) Practice Works. See Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Torts, Fraud, Deceit, and Bad Faith, Chap. 22; 5 Proof of Facts 363 [fraud]; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 607 [misrepresentation in sale of animal]; 50 Proof of Facts 3d 371 [liability for sale of forged antique or work of art]; 51 Proof of Facts 3d 361 [liability of real estate professional for interstate real estate fraud]; 20 Proof of Facts 3d 621 [computer vendor's liability for misrepresentation in sale or lease of computer system]; 30 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [fraudulent representations inducing purchase of small business]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 309 [real estate broker's fraud as to condition or value of realty]; 43 Proof of Facts 3d 407 [fraud by land sales broker]; 36 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [broker-dealer fraud: churning]; 39 Am.Jur. Trials 527 [fraud in sale of show horse].

(3) Law Reviews. See 16 California Lawyer 78 (June 1996) [fraud claims in employment litigation]; 28 San Diego L. Rev. 401 [misrepresentation of research results]; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 553 [You May Have Already Won ... Telemarketing Fraud and the Need for a Federal Legislative Solution]; 77 So. Cal. L. Rev. 53 [expansion of liability for corporate fraud to accountants, underwriters, lawyers, and other "gatekeepers"].

(4) Annotations. See 64 A.L.R.3d 6 [fraud in connection with franchise or distributor relationship]; 90 A.L.R.3d 568 [vendor's misrepresentation or concealment of danger of flooding or other unfavorable water conditions]; 30 A.L.R.4th 474 [vendor's action against vendee's lender for misrepresentation concerning loan commitment]; 85 A.L.R.4th 1079 [vocational or trade school's misrepresentations inducing student to enroll or pay fees]; 14 A.L.R.5th 537 [employer's liability for fraud in inducing employees to take early retirement].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Texts. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.1 et seq.

(2) Practice Works. See 104 Am. Jur. Trials 1 [real estate seller's fraudulent misrepresentation of quantity of land sold].

93 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
 B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
 1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 772

[§ 772] In General.

(1) Elements. The elements of fraud, which give rise to the tort action for deceit, are (a) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (b) knowledge of falsity (or "scienter"); (c) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (d) justifiable reliance; and (e) resulting damage. (C.C. 1709; Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 414, 115 P.2d 977; Andrew v. Bankers & Shippers Ins. Co. (1929) 101 C.A. 566, 575, 281 P. 1091; Nathanson v. Murphy (1955) 132 C.A.2d 363, 367, 282 P.2d 174; Harazim v. Lynam (1968) 267 C.A.2d 127, 130, 72 C.R. 670, quoting the text; Cicone v. URS Corp. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 194, 200, 227 C.R. 887; Conrad v. Bank of America (1996) 45 C.A.4th 133, 155, 53 C.R.2d 336, citing the text; Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 C.A.4th 596, 599, 603, 15 C.R.3d 565; see Continental Airlines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 388, 404, 264 C.R. 779 [reversible error to omit intent and reliance elements in instructions to jury]; Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1038, 1046, 281 C.R. 640 ["It is the element of intent which makes the fraud actionable, irrespective of any contractual or fiduciary duty one party might owe the other"]; Atascadero v. Merrill Lynch (1998) 68 C.A.4th 445, 481, 80 C.R.2d 329, quoting the text [fraudulent intent is element that distinguishes fraud from actionable negligent misrepresentation and from nonactionable innocent misrepresentation]; Rest.2d, Torts §525; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §470; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.1; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §22 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.31; CACI, No. 1900; on pleading elements of fraud, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §667 et seq.)

(2) Benefit Is Not Required. It is not essential to liability for fraud that the person charged should have received any benefit. (Snyder v. Security First Nat. Bank (1939) 31 C.A.2d 660, 665, 88 P.2d 760.) For example, the person may be liable for misrepresentations concerning property that he or she does not own. (Swasey v. de L'Etanche (1936) 17 C.A.2d 713, 718, 62 P.2d 753.)

(3) Jury Verdict. Nine of the 12 jurors must agree on all the elements of fraud. However, this requirement is satisfied if 9 of the 12 jurors agree that some act of fraud was committed; they do not have to agree on the nature of the specific act. (Stoner v. Williams (1996) 46 C.A.4th 986, 993, 54 C.R.2d 243; on 9-3 verdict in civil actions, see Cal. Const., Art. I, §16, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §90.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.3, 6

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Elements. See R & B Auto Center v. Farmers Group (2006) 140 C.A.4th 327, 345, 44 C.R.3d 426 [trial court's finding that insurer had no fiduciary duty to insured did not require nonsuit in favor of insurer on misrepresentation claim; misrepresentation cause of action is not predicated on existence of fiduciary duty]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.1.

In Manderville v. PCG&S Group (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1486, 55 C.R.3d 59, the court stated: "To establish a claim for deceit based on intentional misrepresentation, the plaintiff must prove seven essential elements: (1) the defendant represented to the plaintiff that an important fact was true; (2) that representation was false; (3) the defendant knew that the representation was false when the defendant made it, or the defendant made the representation recklessly and without regard for its truth; (4) the defendant intended that the plaintiff rely on the representation; (5) the plaintiff reasonably relied on the representation; (6) the plaintiff was harmed; and (7) the plaintiff's reliance on the defendant's representation was a substantial factor in causing that harm to the plaintiff." (146 C.A.4th 1498, citing CACI, No. 1900.) However, the tort "is sometimes stated with five, or even four, elements." (146 C.A.4th 1498, footnote 4.) Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §709 et seq.

(3) Jury Verdict.

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §80.

94 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

a. General Requirement That Misrepresentation Must Be of Fact.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 773

[§ 773] General Requirement That Misrepresentation Must Be of Fact.

The representation must ordinarily be an affirmation of fact. (C.C. 1710(1); Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 917, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 622; Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 C.3d 104, 112, 120 C.R. 681, 534 P.2d 377, infra, §778; Nibbi Bros. v. Home Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1415, 1425, 253 C.R. 289, citing the text; see Nathanson v. Murphy (1955) 132 C.A.2d 363, 367, 282 P.2d 174 [misrepresentation of acreage of land sold]; Ashburn v. Miller (1958) 161 C.A.2d 71, 75, 326 P.2d 229 [misrepresentation of character of soil that was uncompacted fill]; Buist v. C. Dudley De Velbiss Corp. (1960) 182 C.A.2d 325, 330, 6 C.R. 259 [representation that land on which house was sold was on cut when in fact it was on fill, not properly compacted, and in area of ancient slide and underground water]; Wilson v. Houston Funeral Home (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1124, 1139, 50 C.R.2d 169 [misrepresentations that funeral director would inform plaintiff whether it was necessary to cash insurance check, and would wait whatever time was required for check to clear bank]; Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafon, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 C.A.4th 54, 74, 131 C.R.2d 777, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, Supp., §328 [insurer's attorney made statement about coverage to nonclient who was engaged in litigation with insured; in view of previous communications between attorney and nonclient, statement was misrepresentation of factual nature]; Intrieri v. Superior Court (2004) 117 C.A.4th 72, 85, 12 C.R.3d 97 [misrepresentations that Alzheimer's unit in nursing home was secure and accessible only by authorized persons]; Rest.2d, Torts §525, Comment d; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §470; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.8; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§60 et seq., 138 et seq.; 54 A.L.R.2d 660 [misrepresentation of area of land]; 32 A.L.R.4th 828 [misrepresentation of heating or cooling costs]; BAJI, No. 12.31; CACI, No. 1900.) (On misrepresentations of opinion, see infra, §774 et seq.)

A representation that property produces a certain income is one of fact. (See Hefferan v. Freebairn (1950) 34 C.2d 715, 721, 214 P.2d 386 [representation that coffee shop sold for $ 55,000 would net over $ 20,000 in year of sale]; Salvati v. Cusolito (1950) 98 C.A.2d 582, 584, 220 P.2d 800 [representations that house was connected with public utilities and that fruit and crops produced $ 2,000 annual return]; Mariani v. Schonfeld (1954) 126 C.A.2d 187, 189, 271 P.2d 940 [defendants used false statement of operation of business to show profit when actual records showed loss]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §186; 27 A.L.R.2d 14 [false representations as to income, profits, or productivity of property as fraud]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 309 [real estate broker's misrepresentation or nondisclosure as to condition or value of realty].)

Although a misrepresentation of law is ordinarily not actionable (see infra, §779), it may become so either as an actionable opinion or as a statement of mixed law and fact (see infra, §780).

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.9, 12

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Apollo Capital Fund LLC v. Roth Capital Partners, LLC (2007) 158 C.A.4th 226, 241, 70 C.R.3d 199

[broker-dealer's oral representations concerning offering of company's bridge notes, that preferred stock offering was "done deal" and that early prepayment of notes was "guaranteed," were actionable statements of facts, rather than opinion or prediction]; Unterberger v. Red Bull North America (2008) 162 C.A.4th 414, 422, 75 C.R.3d 368, citing the text [beverage distributor failed to present evidence of fraud by energy drink manufacturer sufficient to withstand summary adjudication motion; distributor did not present evidence of specific misrepresentation of fact, knowing falsity of misrepresentation, or intent to defraud, but merely restated claim that manufacturer breached contract in terminating business relationship]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.8.

Shafer case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §304.

95 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

b. Statement of Opinion.

1. General Rule That Opinions Are Not Actionable.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 774

[§ 774] General Rule That Opinions Are Not Actionable.

A representation is one of opinion "if it expresses only (a) the belief of the maker, without certainty, as to the existence of a fact; or (b) his judgment as to quality, value, authenticity, or other matters of judgment." (Rest.2d, Torts §538A.) Representations of opinion are ordinarily not actionable. (See Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1270, 1284, 63 C.R.2d 373 [real estate broker's opinion as to fair market value of real property].)

Thus, assertions to the effect that a particular article is the "best," or speculative statements about possible profits, are "dealer's talk," and a party is not entitled to rely on them. (Williams v. Lowenthal (1932) 124 C.A. 179, 185, 12 P.2d 75; see Pacesetter Homes v. Brodtkin (1970) 5 C.A.3d 206, 211, 85 C.R. 39 [vendor of duplex buildings stated that they would be an excellent investment "[i]f you receive the rents as we contemplate"]; Gentry v. eBay (2002) 99 C.A.4th 816, 833, 121 C.R.2d 703, citing the text [Internet auction provider's statement that its positive rating was "worth its weight in gold" was one of opinion that could not support action for misrepresentation]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §75.)

Moreover, the representation must ordinarily be about past or existing facts; predictions about future events, or statements about future action by some third party, are deemed opinions, and not actionable fraud. (Henry v. Continental Bldg. & Loan Assn. (1909) 156 C. 667, 680, 105 P. 960; Zeh v. Alameda Community Hotel Corp. (1932) 122 C.A. 366, 368, 10 P.2d 190; see Richard P. v. Vista Del Mar Child Care Service (1980) 106 C.A.3d 860, 864, 165 C.R. 370, citing the text [future events]; Borba v. Thomas (1977) 70 C.A.3d 144, 152, 138 C.R. 565, quoting the text [future action by third party]; Neu-Visions Sports v. Soren/McAdam/Bartells (2000) 86 C.A.4th 303, 307, 103 C.R.2d 159 [alleged misrepresentations about value of property to be used to obtain loan and whether lessor would have clear title at time of financing were opinions about future events]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §80 et seq.)

In Chavez v. Citizens For a Fair Farm Labor Law (1978) 84 C.A.3d 77, 148 C.R. 278, plaintiffs, who campaigned in favor of the initiative measure creating the Agricultural Labor Relations Act, sued defendants, who campaigned against it. The complaint alleged that defendants made false representations to the electorate as to the effect of the proposed law on property and personal rights, and compensatory damages (money spent to combat the representations) and punitive damages were sought. Held, no cause of action was stated. Debate on public issues should be uninhibited, and statements made in the course of that debate generally are, and should be, treated as opinions, not representations of fact. (84 C.A.3d 81, 82, citing and quoting from Gregory v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1976) 17 C.3d 596, 600, 131 C.R. 641, 552 P.2d 425, supra, §621.)

In Finch v. McKee (1936) 18 C.A.2d 90, 94, 62 P.2d 1380, a representation by defendant vendors that a building would withstand shocks of earthquake was said to be mere opinion and speculation, the court observing that "every person of common understanding knows it is impossible to estimate the destructive forces of nature accompanying earthquakes, tornadoes, cyclones, storms or floods." This view seems unsound, for the representation fairly implied that established construction methods of minimizing the effects of earthquake had been employed.

In certain circumstances, however, statements of opinion may be actionable. (See infra, §775 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.11

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Fraudulent misrepresentation must ordinarily be about past or existing facts: See Hinesley v. Oakshade Town Center (2005) 135 C.A.4th 289, 295, 37 C.R.3d 364 [statements by shopping center's agent to prospective tenant suggesting that major chain businesses would be located in vicinity of tenant's leased premises contained implied assertion that landlord had already signed leases with these businesses, which was false assertion of existing fact, rather than nonactionable opinion regarding future actions of third parties].

96 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

b. Statement of Opinion.

2. Assumption of Superior Knowledge: Expert Opinion.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 775

[§ 775] Assumption of Superior Knowledge: Expert Opinion.

Despite the general rule just stated (supra, §774), misrepresentations of opinion are actionable in several situations, the first being where the defendant holds himself or herself out to be specially qualified. (Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 412, 433, 434, 159 P.2d 958; Gammon v. Ealey & Thompson (1929) 97 C.A. 452, 458, 275 P. 1005; Sime v. Malouf (1949) 95 C.A.2d 82, 101, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; Harazim v. Lynam (1968) 267 C.A.2d 127, 131, 72 C.R. 670; Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 C.A.2d 680, 686, 81 C.R. 519, citing the text; O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 798, 805, 142 C.R. 487, infra, §817, citing the text; Cohen v. S & S Const. Co. (1983) 151 C.A.3d 941, 946, 201 C.R. 173.) "When one of the parties possesses, or assumes to possess, superior knowledge or special information regarding the subject matter of the representation, and the other party is so situated that he may reasonably rely upon such supposed superior knowledge or special information, a representation made by the party possessing or assuming to possess such knowledge or information, though it might be regarded as but the expression of an opinion if made by any other person, is not excused if it be false." (Haserot v. Keller (1924) 67 C.A. 659, 670, 228 P. 383.) (See Rest.2d, Torts §542; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §477; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.8; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §71; BAJI, No. 12.32; CACI, No. 1904.)

Thus, representations by the vendor of land, that it was free from alkali and excellent for raising grapes and general farming purposes, constituted actionable deceit. (Palladine v. Imperial Valley Farm Land Assn. (1924) 65 C.A. 727, 737, 225 P. 291.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.8.

97 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

b. Statement of Opinion.

3. Opinion Stated as Fact or Implying Justifying Facts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 776

[§ 776] Opinion Stated as Fact or Implying Justifying Facts.

(1) In General. "Wherever a party states a matter which might otherwise be only an opinion, and does not state it as the mere expression of his own opinion, but affirms it as an existing fact material to the transaction, so that the other party may reasonably treat it as a fact and rely and act upon it as such, then the statement clearly becomes an affirmation of fact." (Crandall v. Parks (1908) 152 C. 772, 776, 93 P. 1018 [quoting Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence]; Rest.2d, Torts §539; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §478; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.8; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §69; BAJI, No. 12.32.)

(2) Value of Property. Statements concerning value of property, though ordinarily matters of opinion, may be actionable under this rule. (Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 412, 430, 159 P.2d 958; Crandall v. Parks, supra; Williams v. Myers (1930) 110 C.A. 265, 276, 294 P. 61; Dunshee v. Boadway (1932) 119 C.A. 678, 684, 7 P.2d 325; Bedell Engineering Co. v. Rouse (1943) 57 C.A.2d 734, 736, 135 P.2d 404; Timberlake v. Schwank (1967) 248 C.A.2d 708, 711, 56 C.R. 799, citing the text; Cooper v. Jevne (1976) 56 C.A.3d 860, 866, 128 C.R. 724; Southern Calif. Dist. Council, Assemblies of God v. Shepherd of Hills Evangelical Lutheran Church (1978) 77 C.A.3d 951, 960, 144 C.R. 46; Cohen v. S & S Const. Co. (1983) 151 C.A.3d 941, 946, 201 C.R. 173; see Willson v. Municipal Bond Co. (1936) 7 C.2d 144, 151, 59 P.2d 974 [representation that bonds were "worth 100 cents on the dollar," coupled with statement that a certain bank would lend $ 27,500 on them]; Rest.2d, Torts §525, Comment b; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §175.)

(3) Future Events. As pointed out above (supra, §774), predictions or representations as to what will happen in the future are normally treated as opinions; but sometimes they may be interpreted as implying knowledge of facts that make the predictions probable. If the defendant does not know of these facts, the statement is an actionable misrepresentation. (See Rest.2d, Torts §§539, 525, Comment f; 35 A.L.R.3d 1369 [purchaser's misrepresentations as to intended use of land].) Thus, a statement by an architect that a building will not cost more than a certain amount may be regarded as an affirmation of fact. (Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co. (1912) 163 C. 561, 574, 126 P. 351.) The same is true where an agent states that his or her principal will advance money to harvest a crop, or where a corporation agent represents that the corporation will lease certain property or locate a plant in a certain city. (See Eade v. Reich (1932) 120 C.A. 32, 35, 7 P.2d 1043 [discussing holdings to this effect].)

(4) Returns on Investment. Although general statements made to prospective purchasers of stock, to the effect that profits will be earned or dividends paid, have been held not actionable (Zeh v. Alameda Community Hotel Corp. (1932) 122 C.A. 366, 368, 10 P.2d 190), a representation by a corporation's agent that a particular dividend will be paid within a specified period implies a superior knowledge and amounts to a representation of fact. (H.W. Smith v. Swenson (1930) 105 C.A. 60, 63, 286 P. 1050.) (See Dyke v. Zaiser (1947) 80 C.A.2d 639, 652, 182 P.2d 344 [actionable representations as to profitable future business of amusement center, with knowledge that law enforcement officers intended to close it up immediately]; Daniels v. Oldenburg (1950) 100 C.A.2d 724, 728, 224 P.2d 472 [actionable representation by seller of motel that plaintiffs could keep it rented all the time]; Gillespie v. Ormsby (1954) 126 C.A.2d 513, 527, 272 P.2d 949 [actionable representation that oil well could be made commercially productive at 1,100 feet]; 16 A.L.R.3d 1311 [employer's misrepresentations of employee's or agent's future earnings]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§187, 188.)

In Wilke v. Coinway (1967) 257 C.A.2d 126, 64 C.R. 845, plaintiffs were elderly people without business experience. Defendants induced them to buy coin-operated machines to test reflexes, on representations that the devices were in great demand and would produce large profits. The income did not pay for upkeep, and plaintiffs sought rescission. Held, judgment for defendants reversed; the opinion was asserted as an existing fact. (257 C.A.2d 137.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.8.

98 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

b. Statement of Opinion.

4. Opinion by Fiduciary or Other Trusted Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 777

[§ 777] Opinion by Fiduciary or Other Trusted Person.

Where the defendant is a fiduciary, such as a trustee or agent, reliance on his or her opinion is of course justifiable; and this theory has been extended to other confidential relationships resulting from friendly social or business dealings over a period of time that are such as to induce the plaintiff to place confidence in the defendant's integrity. (Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 412, 433, 159 P.2d 958; George v. Simpson (1936) 14 C.A.2d 571, 576, 58 P.2d 666; Martin v. Martin (1952) 110 C.A.2d 228, 233, 242 P.2d 688; see Bank of America v. Sanchez (1934) 3 C.A.2d 238, 242, 38 P.2d 787 [escrow officer of bank]; Lynch v. Cruttenden & Co. (1993) 18 C.A.4th 802, 808, 22 C.R.2d 636 [plaintiff could rely on legal opinion of nonlawyer who, by gaining plaintiff's trust and confidence, had assumed control over plaintiff's financial affairs]; Rest.2d, Torts §542; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 170; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §71 et seq.)

The Restatement goes still further by justifying reliance on the opinion of an apparently disinterested person, though the person expressing the opinion has neither superior knowledge to, nor a confidential relationship with, the recipient. (Rest.2d, Torts §543.) The recipient's reasonable belief, even if incorrect, that the person expressing the opinion has no interest adverse to the recipient is sufficient to justify his or her reliance on the opinion. (Rest.2d, Torts §543, Comment a.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

99 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

b. Statement of Opinion.

5. Opinion on Quality or Safety of Goods.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 778

[§ 778] Opinion on Quality or Safety of Goods.

Seller's opinions regarding the quality or safety of goods may be actionable. In Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 C.3d 104, 120 C.R. 681, 534 P.2d 377, defendants were the manufacturer and seller of the "Golfing Gizmo," a training device for golfers described as a "completely equipped backyard driving range." It consisted of metal pegs driven into the ground 25 inches apart, with an elastic cord looped over them and a 21-foot cotton cord with ball attached tied to the middle of the elastic cord. The user hit the ball and its place of return indicated the correctness or defect in the shot. The label on the carton and cover of the instruction booklet contained the statement "Completely Safe Ball Will Not Hit Player." Mrs. H bought the device, gave it to Fred, her 13 1/2-year-old son, as a present, and he read the instructions and proceeded to use it. In a shot underneath the ball, his club caught the cord and the ball looped over and struck him on the head, causing serious injuries. In plaintiffs' action, their experts testified that the device was dangerous. Defendants offered no contradictory evidence on this issue. The jury verdict was for defendants, but the trial judge granted plaintiffs' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Held, affirmed; plaintiffs were entitled to recover as a matter of law on each of four causes of action.

(a) Defendants contended first that the assertion of safety was mere "puffing," a statement of opinion. Many cases, and Rest.2d, Torts §402B, hold such dealer's talk nonactionable (14 C.3d 111), and defendant seller's catalogue furnishes an illustration: "You may be a duffer and divot digger but just give yourself a few hours with this and you'll be challenging Jack Nicklaus!" (14 C.3d 112, footnote 5.) But a representation of safety is generally held to be one of fact—a description of an important characteristic of the product. (14 C.3d 112, 113; see Rest.2d, Torts §402B.) And the former tendency of courts to allow the seller considerable latitude in puffing has given way to a modern tendency to construe language liberally in favor of the injured consumers. (14 C.3d 112.) "This expansion of sellers' liability has been necessary to counteract the shrewd technique of those sellers who, instead of making broad factual assertions about their products, seek to couch their representations in opinion form." (14 C.3d 112, footnote 7.)

(b) Defendants also contended that plaintiffs' reliance on the assurance of safety was not justifiable (see infra, §812 et seq.), because there is danger inherent in the sport, and the Gizmo was completely safe only when the ball was hit squarely. But Fred was not playing golf, subject to the risks of the game; he was learning to play with the aid of a supposedly danger-free training device. "Fred Hauter's injury stemmed from a risk inherent in defendants' product, not a risk inherent in the game of golf." (14 C.3d 113.) The assurance of safety would be illusory if limited to the relatively infrequent instances in which duffers managed to hit the ball solidly. (14 C.3d 114.) (For the holding on express and implied warranties, see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §§59, 71.) (See Westlye v. Look Sports (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1715, 1750, 22 C.R.2d 781 [advertising representing that ski safety bindings were safe and would release easily long before injury to the leg; following Hauter]; 35 Proof of Facts 2d 255 [misrepresentation as to quality or character of product]; 74 A.L.R.3d 1298 [statements on container that enclosed toy, game, sports equipment, or the like, is safe].)

Misrepresentations of material fact concerning a product are subject to strict liability for resulting harm to persons or property. (See Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §9; infra, §826.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

100 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

c. Misrepresentation of Law.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 779

[§ 779] In General.

The earlier cases contain statements to the effect that, in the absence of a confidential relationship or other special circumstances, misrepresentation of law does not constitute fraud. The theory was either that everyone is bound to know the law, or that a statement regarding the law is a mere opinion on which one may not rely. (See Champion v. Woods (1889) 79 C. 17, 21, 21 P. 534 [representations by husband to wife, that certain property was separate and not community, were not actionable]; Haviland v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1916) 172 C. 601, 608, 158 P. 328 [recovery denied where plaintiff signed release of claims for injuries, with full knowledge of its contents, relying on statements of defendant's agent that same was mere matter of form and not binding]; Zeh v. Alameda Community Hotel Corp. (1932) 122 C.A. 366, 368, 10 P.2d 190; Watt v. Patterson (1954) 125 C.A.2d 788, 793, 271 P.2d 200; Miller v. San Francisco (1960) 187 C.A.2d 480, 483, 9 C.R. 767; Orange County Rock Products Co. v. Cook Bros. Equipment Co. (1966) 246 C.A.2d 698, 701, 55 C.R. 265 [defendant rented dump trucks to plaintiff, falsely representing that they were allowable deductions from gross income under federal and state income tax laws].)

Rest.2d, Torts §545 states the modern view as follows:

(1) "If a misrepresentation as to a matter of law includes, expressly or by implication, a misrepresentation of fact, the recipient is justified in relying upon the misrepresentation of fact to the same extent as though it were any other misrepresentation of fact." (Rest.2d, Torts §545(1).)

(2) "If a misrepresentation as to a matter of law is only one of opinion as to the legal consequences of facts, the recipient is justified in relying upon it to the same extent as though it were a representation of any other opinion." (Rest.2d, Torts §545(2).) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §477; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.8; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §97 et seq.; on actionable misrepresentations, see infra, §780.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.10

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Modern view under Restatement: See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.8.

101 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

c. Misrepresentation of Law.

2. Actionable Misrepresentations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 780

[§ 780] Actionable Misrepresentations.

(a) Misrepresentations of Opinion. The "presumption" that everyone is bound to know the law is outmoded, and the rule seems to rest mainly upon the "mere opinion" theory (supra, §779). Hence, misrepresentations of law may be actionable under any of the exceptions to the rule governing misrepresentations of opinion (see supra, §775 et seq.), namely, assumption of superior knowledge, opinion stated as fact, or existence of confidential relations. (See Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 416, 115 P.2d 977 [opinion stated as fact]; Bowman v. Payne (1921) 55 C.A. 789, 796, 204 P. 406 [assumption of superior knowledge]; Jarvis v. Singleton (1933) 129 C.A. 250, 253, 18 P.2d 382 [statement by vendor that path across property was not legally binding easement, held representation of fact]; Bank of America v. Sanchez (1934) 3 C.A.2d 238, 242, 38 P.2d 787 [confidential relation between escrow officer and client of bank]; George v. Simpson (1936) 14 C.A.2d 571, 576, 58 P.2d 66 [confidential relations]; Regus v. Schartkoff (1957) 156 C.A.2d 382, 388, 319 P.2d 721 [statement by party purporting to have expert knowledge]; Rest.2d, Torts §545; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 197; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §100 et seq.; 24 A.L.R.2d 1039 [foreign law]; 29 A.L.R.2d 213 [misrepresentation by one other than insurance agent as to effect of policy].)

(b) Misrepresentations of Mixed Fact and Law. In Bobak v. Mackey (1951) 107 C.A.2d 55, 236 P.2d 626, defendant seller represented that Los Angeles land was located in zone C-2, permitting manufacture of plaintiff's food product. Actually, it was in zone R-3, in which no manufacturing was allowed. In upholding recovery, the court said: "Such a statement, if made and relied upon by the purchaser is as much a representation of fact as would be a statement that the premises involved were within the corporate limits of Los Angeles, when they were not, or that they abutted on a certain named thoroughfare in Los Angeles, when they did not. In each of these examples the facts represented come about by reason of law. But the facts as stated are not for that reason misrepresentations of law, but on the contrary of facts. The same is true here. ... The representation was not a mere misrepresentation of law, i.e., the classification made by the law, but of the fact that the property lay within a zone of a particular character." (107 C.A.2d 57.) (See De Zemplén v. Home Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1963) 221 C.A.2d 197, 202, 34 C.R. 334 [representation by loan association employee that there was indemnity agreement between vendors and title company that would protect plaintiffs against mechanics' liens]; Southern Calif. Dist. Council, Assemblies of God v. Shepherd of Hills Evangelical Lutheran Church (1978) 77 C.A.3d 951, 956, 144 C.R. 46 [following Bobak and De Zemplén]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §102; 33

A.L.R.3d 1077 [fraud used to prevent bringing of action within statute of limitations].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

102 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

1. Theory of Misrepresentation of Intention.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 781

[§ 781] Theory of Misrepresentation of Intention.

Statements relating to what may happen in the future are generally not actionable (see supra, §774), and the mere failure to perform a promise is not a tort. (Rheingans v. Smith (1911) 161 C. 362, 366, 119 P. 494.) On the other hand, a statement of what the defendant or some third person intends to do relates to an existing state of mind, and is a representation of fact.

It is on this theory that a promise made without any intention to perform may constitute fraud. A promise to do something necessarily implies the intention to perform, and where that intention is absent, there is an implied misrepresentation of fact, which is actionable fraud. (C.C. 1710(4); Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 C.4th 631, 49 C.R.2d 377, 909 P.2d 981, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §265; California Credit & Collection Corp. v. Carpenter (1926) 77 C.A. 18, 28, 246 P. 126; Masten v. Fox West Coast Theatres (1931) 117 C.A. 303, 311, 3 P.2d 610; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich (1934) 138 C.A. 760, 764, 33 P.2d 455; Union Flower Market Ltd. v. Southern Calif. Flower Market (1938) 10 C.2d 671, 676, 76 P.2d 503; Squire's Department Store v. Dudum (1953) 115 C.A.2d 320, 323, 252 P.2d 418; Grant v. United States Electronics Corp. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 193, 199, 270 P.2d 64; Valdez v. Taylor Auto. Co. (1954) 129 C.A.2d 810, 815, 278 P.2d 91; Vogelsang v. Wolpert (1964) 227 C.A.2d 102, 116, 38 C.R. 440; Brockway v. Heilman (1967) 250 C.A.2d 807, 811, 58 C.R. 772, quoting the text; Hills Trans. Co. v. Southwest Forest Industries (1968) 266 C.A.2d 702, 708, 72 C.R. 441; R.D. Reeder Lathing Co. v. Cypress Ins. Co. (1970) 3 C.A.3d 995, 999, 84 C.R. 98; Kuffel v. Seaside Oil Co. (1970) 11 C.A.3d 354, 360, 90 C.R. 209; Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 C.A.3d 721, 728, 99 C.R. 488; Glendale Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Marina View Heights Dev. Co. (1977) 66 C.A.3d 101, 133, 135 C.R. 802, citing the text; Walker v. Signal Cos. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 982, 994, 149 C.R. 119, infra, §787; Cicone v. URS Corp. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 194, 203, 227 C.R. 887; Manson v. Reed (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1493, 1502, 231 C.R. 446; Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 2 C.A.4th 153, 158, 2 C.R.2d 861; Service by Medallion v. Clorox Co. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1807, 1816, 52 C.R.2d 650; Locke v. Warner Bros. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 354, 367, 66 C.R.2d 921, infra, §787, citing the text; see Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 C.A.4th 596, 599, 606, 15 C.R.3d 565 [fraudulent inducement of employment contract is actionable, regardless whether employment is at will]; Rest.2d, Torts §§530, 544; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §479; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§88, 89; 40 A.L.R.2d 971 [misrepresentation as to third person's intention]; BAJI, No. 12.40; CACI, No. 1902; on actions respecting fraud in inducement of contract generally, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §148 et seq.) This type of action has been referred to as one of "promissory fraud." (See Lazar v. Superior Court, supra, 12 C.4th 638; Agosta v. Astor, supra, 120 C.A.4th 603; Building Permit Consultants v. Mazur (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1400, 1414, 19 C.R.3d 562.)

A declaration of intention, although in the nature of a promise, made in good faith, without intention to deceive, and in the honest expectation that it will be fulfilled, does not constitute fraud, even though it is not carried out. (See Church of Merciful Saviour v. Volunteers of America (1960) 184 C.A.2d 851, 859, 8 C.R. 48 [no fraud where, at time of statement, defendant intended to perform promise and actually made efforts to carry it out]; Edmunds v. Valley Circle Estates (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1290, 1301, 20 C.R.2d 701 [no fraud where breach of promise not to sell lots to third parties evolved naturally due to changed circumstances]; Magpali v. Farmers Group (1996) 48 C.A.4th 471, 480, 55 C.R.2d 225 [promise not to interfere with plaintiff's insurance business was true when made, as evidenced by its being kept for many years, and was not basis for fraud, even though subsequent events made it necessary for defendant to interfere].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.9

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Helmer v. Bingham Toyota Isuzu (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1121, 1128, 29 C.R.3d 136 [plaintiff induced to leave employment by promissory fraud may recover damages based on future loss of income from that employment, provided that damages are not speculative or remote]; Yield Dynamics v. TEA Systems Corp. (2007) 154 C.A.4th 547, 575, 66 C.R.3d 1, citing the text [although fraud requires intentional representation of fact, declarant's intention may constitute fact for this purpose]. Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §152 et seq.

103 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

2. Proof of Intention Not To Perform.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 782

[§ 782] Proof of Intention Not To Perform.

It is a difficult matter to prove the original lack of intention by direct evidence. But circumstantial evidence of subsequent conduct is admissible and may be sufficient. (Longway v. Newbery (1939) 13 C.2d 603, 611, 91 P.2d 110; Masten v. Fox West Coast Theatres (1931) 117 C.A. 303, 307, 3 P.2d 610; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich (1934) 138 C.A. 760, 765, 33 P.2d 455; Estate of Barrow (1938) 27 C.A.2d 402, 405, 80 P.2d 1006; Grant v. United States Electronics Corp. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 193, 199, 270 P.2d 64; Boyd v. Bevilacqua (1966) 247 C.A.2d 272, 292, 55 C.R. 610; Green Trees Enterprises v. Palm Springs Alpine Estates (1967) 66 C.2d 782, 786, 59 C.R. 141, 427 P.2d 805; Brockway v. Heilman (1967) 250 C.A.2d 807, 811, 58 C.R. 772; Wilkenson v. Linnecke (1967) 251 C.A.2d 291, 293, 59 C.R. 290; Rambo v. Blain (1968) 263 C.A.2d 158, 163, 69 C.R. 132; see Miller v. National Amer. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 C.A.3d 331, 338, 126 C.R. 731, infra, §787 [instructions to claims examiners and subsequent conduct of insurer in processing claim]; Diamond Woodworks v. Argonaut Ins. Co. (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1020, 1046, 135 C.R.2d 736 [where leasing company impliedly promised plaintiff that its new hires were leasing company employees from the outset and thus covered under workers' compensation policy, its unhesitating rejection of worker's claim for benefits because of lack of certain employment papers constituted substantial evidence that it never intended to fulfill its promise]; Rest.2d, Torts §530, Comment d; BAJI, No. 12.41; CACI, No. 1902; cf. Mack v. White (1950) 97 C.A.2d 497, 499, 218 P.2d 76 [defendant's admission of lack of intention of keeping promise]; on evidence of subsequent conduct generally, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §107 et seq.)

In Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 C.A.3d 721, 99 C.R. 488, plaintiff's former wife promised to remarry him if he purchased a house and had the title placed in their names as joint tenants. He did so and, 2 months later, she moved out and immediately returned to her second husband. "Since direct proof of fraudulent intent is often impossible, the intent may be established by inference from acts of the parties." (22 C.A.3d 727.)

An extraordinarily liberal application of this rule appears in Jarkieh v. Badagliacco (1946) 75 C.A.2d 505, 170 P.2d 994, where the court held: "[T]he trier of the facts was justified in inferring from the fact of the subsequent repudiation that defendant never intended to carry out the agreement when it was made. The subsequent repudiation relates back to the original promise." (75 C.A.2d 509.) This language would imply that a plaintiff may prevail if he or she can convince the trial judge that the oral agreement was made and not performed; the fraudulent character of the promise is then inferable without the need of any other evidence of prior or subsequent acts or statements.

However, Jarkieh and similar language in Santoro were disapproved by the California Supreme Court in Tenzer v. Superscope (1985) 39 C.3d 18, 31, 216 C.R. 130, 702 P.2d 212, infra, §783, holding that mere nonperformance is insufficient to warrant an inference of intent not to perform.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

104 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

3. Oral Promise Unenforceable in Contract Action.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 783

[§ 783] Oral Promise Unenforceable in Contract Action.

(1) Former Denial of Recovery. Sometimes an action based on fraud is chosen by the plaintiff merely because of advantages that plaintiff may gain by suing in tort rather than on the contract. But if the contract itself is unenforceable, the tort action may be the only one available. In that case, it has been successfully argued that the fraud action is a means of evasion of the law making the contract unenforceable.

(a) Statute of Frauds. In Kroger v. Baur (1941) 46 C.A.2d 801, 117 P.2d 50, plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, sued his client for damages for fraud, alleging that plaintiff performed services in reliance on defendant's oral promise to compensate him, which promise defendant made falsely, without any intention to perform. Held, an objection to this evidence was properly sustained. "If the law can be thus nullified by the transparent device of predicated a tort action upon the invalid oral promise on the ground that the promisor did not intend to perform it, then the section might just as well be stricken from the statute." (46 C.A.2d 803.) (See Beach v. Arblaster (1961) 194 C.A.2d 145, 163, 14 C.R. 854 [following Kroger]; Keely v. Price (1972) 27 C.A.3d 209, 215, 103 C.R. 531 [same; alleged oral promise to reduce agreement to writing]; Munoz v. Kaiser Steel Corp. (1984) 156 C.A.3d 965, 976, 203 C.R. 345 [same].)

(b) Parol Evidence Rule. The same result was reached where the oral promise contradicted the terms of a written agreement. The oral promise, ineffective under the parol evidence rule, could not be the foundation of either a contract or tort action. (Cobbs v. Cobbs (1942) 53 C.A.2d 780, 783, 128 P.2d 373; Shyvers v. Mitchell (1955) 133 C.A.2d 569, 572, 284 P.2d 826; see 38 Cal. L. Rev. 535; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 876 [criticizing rule].)

(2) Recovery Allowed.

(a) Statute of Frauds. The Kroger rule was disapproved in Tenzer v. Superscope (1985) 39 C.3d 18, 216 C.R. 130, 702 P.2d 212. The complaint alleged that T, acting for defendant, falsely promised to compensate plaintiff for his services, and that plaintiff, in reliance on the fraud, suffered damages. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) The Kroger rule, supra, is rejected by Rest.2d, Torts §530, Comment c; the rule is difficult to reconcile with the estoppel doctrine; it is untrue that the plaintiff is attempting to get around the statute of frauds by a "transparent device" as suggested in Kroger; and Kroger dealt with the statute of frauds relating to brokers' contracts at a time when the law had little sympathy with a broker who failed to sign up a client. (39 C.3d 29.) The Kroger approach is also inconsistent with the rule that the statute of frauds should not be used to aid in the preparation of a fraud. (39 C.3d 30; see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §406.)

(b) The Kroger rule is not necessary to prevent nullification of the statute of frauds. Although some California cases have suggested that subsequent failure to perform warrants the inference that the defendant did not intend to perform (citing Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 C.A.3d 721, 99 C.R. 488, supra, §782, and Jarkieh v. Badagliacco (1946) 75 C.A.2d 505, 170 P.2d 994, supra, §782), this is not correct; something more than nonperformance is required. (39 C.3d 30, citing Rest.2d, Torts §530, Comment d.) Prosser cites cases on fraudulent intent inferred from such circumstances as defendant's insolvency, his hasty repudiation of the promise, his failure even to attempt performance, or his continued assurances after it was clear that he would not perform. "However, if plaintiff adduces no further evidence of fraudulent intent than proof of nonperformance of an oral promise, he will never reach a jury. The policies of the statute of frauds will not be subverted by affording plaintiffs who can prove actual fraud the opportunity to do so." (39 C.3d 31.) (See Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1038, 1052, 281 C.R. 640 [following Tenzer].)

However, Phillippe v. Shapell Industries (1987) 43 C.3d 1247, 241 C.R. 22, 743 P.2d 1279, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §354, subsequently created an exception for oral promises to licensed brokers. The court noted in dictum that a licensed broker cannot maintain a fraud action based on an oral promise to pay a commission, because the broker is presumed to be aware of the statute of frauds and thus reliance on the oral promise is unreasonable as a matter of law. (43 C.3d 1270; on requirement of justifiable reliance generally, see infra, §808 et seq.)

(b) Parol Evidence Rule. The statute stating the parol evidence rule was amended in 1978 to provide that the rule does not exclude evidence "to establish illegality or fraud." (C.C.P. 1856(g).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Correction: Page 1135, fifth line of page, "preparation" should be "perpetration".

105 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

4. Representations Involving Promise of Marriage.

aa. Promise Inducing Transfer: Restitution.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 784

[§ 784] Promise Inducing Transfer: Restitution.

In Mack v. White (1950) 97 C.A.2d 497, 218 P.2d 76, plaintiff gave defendant part of the proceeds of the sale of certain property in consideration of his oral false promise to marry her. Held, she was entitled to recover the money.

(a) The statute of frauds is not a bar, because it applies to contract and not tort actions. (97 C.A.2d 500.) (On statute of frauds respecting premarital agreements, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §399.)

(b) The anti-heartbalm statute (C.C. 43.5(d), supra, §723) is not a bar, because this action is not for breach of promise to marry but for obtaining money by fraud. (97 C.A.2d 500.) (See 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 204; 44 A.L.R.5th 1 [right to engagement or courtship present when marriage does not ensue]; cf. Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 C.A.3d 721, 99 C.R. 488, supra, §782 [false promise to remarry].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

106 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

4. Representations Involving Promise of Marriage.

bb. Promise Inducing Marriage: Damages.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 785

[§ 785] Promise Inducing Marriage: Damages.

(1) Former Rule Permitting Recovery. Where a person is promised marriage, and, although not transferring any money or property, changes position in reliance on the promise, does that person have a remedy? At common law, an action would lie for general damages for breach of marriage promise; though expressed in terms of contract, it was generally regarded as more a tort than a contract action. But this action was eliminated by the anti-heartbalm statute (supra, §723). And it has been generally held that this legislation was intended to prevent any action for harm resulting from the failure to perform a marriage promise, whether in the form of a contract or tort action. (See dissent, Langley v. Schumacker (1956) 46 C.2d 601, 604, 297 P.2d 977; 9 Stanf. L. Rev. 406.)

Nevertheless, in Langley v. Schumacker, a divided court upheld recovery. Plaintiff alleged that she was induced to leave her employment (with a stated monthly salary and fringe benefits) in reliance on defendant's fraudulent representations that he intended marriage; that they went through a ceremony, but he refused to cohabit and that she then obtained an annulment. Held, a cause of action was stated. The brief opinion did not fully explore the problem, but held simply that the language of the anti-heartbalm statute "indicates that it was only intended to abolish causes of action based on an alleged breach of contract. The plaintiff's complaint states a cause of action for fraud--the making of promises without any intention of performing them." (46 C.2d 603.)

(2) Legislative Response: Abrogation of Cause of Action. Law review comment on the decision was uniformly critical. (See 70 Harv. L. Rev. 1098 [suggesting that better theory for instant case would have been failure to carry out obligations of marriage actually celebrated rather than breach of promise to marry]; 8 Hastings L. J. 210; 30 So. Cal. L. Rev. 548; 6 Stanf. L. Rev. 406; 4 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 114.) In 1959, the Legislature nullified the rule by the enactment of C.C. 43.4: "A fraudulent promise to marry or to cohabit after marriage does not give rise to a cause of action for damages."

(3) Representation of Love or Sexual Attraction Is Not Actionable. In Askew v. Askew (1994) 22 C.A.4th 942, 28 C.R.2d 284, defendant wife filed for dissolution of her 13-year marriage with plaintiff. Shortly before filing, defendant admitted during a therapy session that she had no sexual desire for plaintiff prior to or during the marriage. As a result, plaintiff brought a separate action for fraud and related causes of action. Plaintiff alleged that prior to their marriage, defendant had stated that she felt a sexual attraction for him, that before and after the marriage, defendant promised to hold any separate property he transferred to her for the benefit of his minor children by a previous marriage, and that these false representations induced him to marry defendant and to put certain parcels of real property, which he claimed were his separate property, into both their names as joint tenants. After a jury verdict for plaintiff, judgment was entered awarding damages and imposing resulting and constructive trusts on defendant's interest in the properties. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff argued that the analysis should be limited to those statements that arguably support the notion that the couple had an oral trust arrangement for plaintiff's separate property, independent of any statement of love, sex, or passion. However, the record shows that it was defendant's misrepresentation concerning her love and sexual attraction for plaintiff that was the very essence of his case, i.e., had defendant not misrepresented her feelings concerning love and sexual desire, plaintiff would never have married her and put property into joint tenancy. Thus, the substance of plaintiff's case was nothing more than the latter-day incarnation of a breach of promise suit. (22 C.A.4th 953.)

(b) From the Legislature's swift reaction to Langley v. Schumacker by the enactment of C.C. 43.4, it is clear that the fact of false representations, even fraudulent representations, is not enough, by itself, to escape California's anti-heartbalm legislation. (22 C.A.4th 957.)

(c) Love and sexual desire are generally part of the "bundle of expectations" of marriage. Hence, even if such representations are "fraudulently" false, they substantively come under the rubric of the words "promise of marriage" or, to be more precise, "cohabitation after marriage," as used in C.C. 43.4. Because the word "cohabitation" encompasses copulation, defendant's false statement that she loved and sexually desired plaintiff clearly comes within the legal category of a fraudulent promise to "cohabit" after marriage. (22 C.A.4th 957.)

(d) The anti-heartbalm statutes reveal a basic reluctance on the part of the Legislature and the judiciary to allow recovery for promises of love. "Words of love, passion and sexual desire are simply unsuited to the cumbersome strictures of common law fraud and deceit. The idea that a judge, or jury of 12 solid citizens, can arbitrate whether an individual's romantic declarations at a certain time are true or false, or made with intent to deceive, seems almost ridiculously wooden, particularly where the statements were made prior to marriage and the marriage lasted more than 13 years." (22 C.A.4th 959.)

(e) Another aspect of the policy against heartbalm suits is that these suits are fundamentally incompatible with a statutory scheme of no-fault divorce. Either concept allows the ready circumvention of the other. For example, the large assortment of tort and contract damages recoverable in the old-fashioned breach of promise of marriage action can be circumvented by the unwilling spouse's tactic of going through with the marriage and then filing a petition for dissolution where recovery is basically limited to half the community property and support. On the other hand, the limited recovery available in a dissolution action is easily circumvented if the spouses are allowed to sue each other because of love-related promises. "As in the present case, a couple undergoing the unpleasantness of a dissolution could wind up in civil court litigating the very emotional underpinnings of the marriage itself in a 'fraud' action. This is just another name for 'fault' divorce." (22 C.A.4th 960.)

(4) Protection Under Other Theories. In some situations, however, the defrauded person may receive protection on other theories. Thus, a person may be induced to enter into a bigamous marriage, but if the circumstances are such as to raise an estoppel against the other party, the void marriage will be binding between the parties and that person will have same rights as if married. (See Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 C.2d 210, 222, 317 P.2d 613, 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §112; In re Marriage of Buckley (1982) 133 C.A.3d 927, 932, 184 C.R. 290 [discussing Langley, criticism of decision, legislative response in enactment of C.C. 43.4, and citing the text on defrauded wife's protection on estoppel theory].) And the Restatement recognizes an action for damages based on a fraudulent misrepresentation that the promisor is free to contract a lawful marriage (Rest.2d, Torts §555), or that a third person is physically fit and legally free to marry (Rest.2d, Torts §556). (See 72 A.L.R.2d 956 [liability of one putative spouse to other for wrongfully inducing entry into or cohabitation under illegal, void, or nonexistent marriage].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

107 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

4. Representations Involving Promise of Marriage.

cc. Promise To Support.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 786

[§ 786] Promise To Support.

Another ingenious but unsuccessful attempt to overcome the barrier of C.C. 43.4 (supra, §785) and C.C. 43.5 (supra, §723) was made in Boyd v. Boyd (1964) 228 C.A.2d 374, 39 C.R. 400. Plaintiff alleged that while a widow, she received monthly payments from the Veterans' Administration and a Social Security allowance; that she married defendant in reliance on his false promise to live with and support her; that upon her marriage, the payments were terminated; and that 2 days after the marriage, defendant left her and has since refused to live with her or support her. Held, judgment on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The fact of an actual marriage, rather than a broken promise to marry, does not take the case outside the statutory bar. The policy is the same, whether the defendant jilts his bride at the church door or afterwards. (228 C.A.2d 377.)

(b) An express promise of support does not take the case outside the statute. The express promise is no more binding than the implied obligation. (228 C.A.2d 379.)

(c) The allegation of a fraudulent promise to live with and support plaintiff, though avoiding use of the word "cohabit," nevertheless amounts in substance to that, and comes within C.C. 43.4. (228 C.A.2d 381.)

(d) The loss of government payments superficially appears to be hardship of a kind distinct from loss of the usual marital advantages. But C.C. 43.4 abolishes the action without regard to differences between kinds of damage. (228 C.A.2d 380.)

(e) An alternative count, pleading negligent marriage and negligent leaving, could not be maintained; i.e., the claim was purely breach of promise, and could not be transformed into a tort by allegations of negligent breach. (228 C.A.2d 382.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

108 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

d. False Promise.

5. Illustrations.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 787

[§ 787] Illustrations.

A representation by a vendor of land that the vendor will install improvements may be actionable as a false promise, and the vendor's statement that third persons planned to construct buildings nearby, though relating to the future, may nevertheless be actionable as a misrepresentation of fact. (Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich (1934) 138 C.A. 760, 764, 33 P.2d 455.)

In Nyulassie v. Mozer (1948) 85 C.A.2d Supp. 827, 193 P.2d 167, the complaint alleged that (a) defendant owner, to get rid of plaintiff tenant during World War II, obtained an Office of Price Administration eviction certificate on the false representation that his son was to occupy the premises; (b) defendant served a notice to quit on plaintiff, making the same false representation of intended use; and (c) plaintiff, in reliance on the representations, gave up possession. Held, a cause of action was stated. The basis of the action is the deceit practiced directly on plaintiff. "The fact that as a necessary step in the fraudulent plan defendant also deceived the Office of Price Administration in order to get the certificate does not alter the situation." (85 C.A.2d Supp. 830.) (Cf. Tranchina v. Arcinas (1947) 78 C.A.2d 522, 524, 178 P.2d 65 [same fraud was practiced on O.P.A., but tort to plaintiffs was eviction by writ of possession, an abuse of process].)

In Kuffel v. Seaside Oil Co. (1970) 11 C.A.3d 354, 90 C.R. 209, plaintiffs were induced to terminate existing leases and a sale contract on defendant's promise that he would continue to serve them and give them a new contract. Held, the refusal to send the new contract--that had been represented as being on the sales manager's desk in another city--and stopping services constituted fraud. (11 C.A.3d 360.)

In Miller v. National Amer. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 C.A.3d 331, 126 C.R. 731, plaintiff insured alleged that defendant insurer falsely represented that it would make certain mortgage payments for certain periods if he became disabled from performing his occupation. In its appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, defendant contended that representations made only in the policy itself, and not in a communication prior to formation of the contract, could not support a finding of fraud. Held, there is no such rule. The inducement "may be more blatant" where it is contained in a separate communication, but "it is no less apparent where, as here, it is found in the very contractual promises that constitute the consideration for which the insured enters the agreement and exchanges his premium payments." (54

C.A.3d 338.)

In Walker v. Signal Cos. (1978) 84 C.A.3d 982, 149 C.R. 119, plaintiffs contracted with defendants for construction of a residential home, and defendants agreed to complete it at a specified date to avoid a capital gains tax from the sale of plaintiffs' former home. The complaint alleged that completion was delayed nearly 5 months, and that the contemplated tax benefits were lost. Held, judgment for compensatory and punitive damages affirmed. (84 C.A.3d 994.)

In Locke v. Warner Bros. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 354, 66 C.R.2d 921, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §784, defendant film studio contracted to pay plaintiff director $ 250,000 per year for 3 years in exchange for plaintiff's agreement to first submit to defendant any picture plaintiff was interested in developing, which defendant could accept or reject in 30 days, and to pay plaintiff $ 750,000 for a directing deal whether or not her services were used. Plaintiff sued for fraud, alleging that defendant never intended to accept any of her proposals or to use her as a director. Plaintiff presented testimony of two witnesses regarding conversations they had with executives of defendant who stated defendant would never work with plaintiff. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed. Fraudulent intent must often be established by circumstantial evidence, and may be inferred from such circumstances as defendant's failure even to attempt performance. Based on the evidence that defendant expressed an absolute unwillingness to work with plaintiff, a trier of fact reasonably could infer that defendant never intended to give plaintiff's proposals a good faith evaluation and that defendant entered into the agreement with plaintiff solely as an accommodation to a film star who was attempting to settle litigation involving plaintiff. (57 C.A.4th 367.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 C.A.4th 96, 110, 49 C.R.3d 122 [finding of real estate agent's actual and constructive fraud was supported by evidence that she deliberately and falsely promised purchaser that she would place his name on title to property if he went along with her plan for structuring transaction, that she never intended to perform promise but intended to procure property for herself, and that she both kept property and retained his downpayment]; Yield Dynamics v. TEA Systems Corp. (2007) 154 C.A.4th 547, 575, 66 C.R.3d 1 [unperformed promise to deliver source code to software developer did not constitute fraudulent inducement of developer into entering into asset purchase agreement, absent evidence that defendants lacked intention to perform obligations at time of agreement].

109 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
2. Misrepresentation.
e. Representations Concerning Credit.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 788

[§ 788] Representations Concerning Credit.

Under the statutes of frauds of California and a few other states, a writing is necessary to charge a person "upon a representation as to the credit of a third person." (C.C.P. 1974; see Carr v. Tatum (1933) 133 C.A. 274, 277, 24 P.2d 195; Cutler v. Bowen (1935) 10 C.A.2d 31, 34, 51 P.2d 164; Beckjord v. Slusher (1937) 22 C.A.2d 559, 567, 71 P.2d 820; Bank of America v. Western United Constructors (1952) 110 C.A.2d 166, 168, 242 P.2d 365; Seneca Communications v. International Bank of Calif. (1980) 103 C.A.3d 541, 547, 163 C.R. 176 [statute applies to all third-party deceit actions, including negligent misrepresentation]; for commentary, see 22 Cal. L. Rev. 358; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 57; 16 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 603; 32 A.L.R.2d 184 [misrepresentations as to financial condition or credit of third person as actionable by one extending credit].)

The statute ordinarily applies to a representation by a corporate officer as to the credit of the corporation. But where a corporation is the defendant's alter ego, the court may disregard the corporate entity and avoid the bar of the statute; i.e., the statements will not be regarded as dealing with the credit of a third person, but as representations of the credit of the defendant himself or herself. (Grant v. United States Electronics Corp. (1954) 125 C.A.2d 193, 198, 270 P.2d 64.)

It has been held that the statute applies even where the defendant receives an incidental benefit. In Baron v. Lange (1949) 92 C.A.2d 718, 207 P.2d 611, defendant father, in order to induce plaintiffs to sell his son Harold an interest in a business for $ 20,000 on credit, repeatedly represented that the son was the beneficiary of a $ 500,000 trust; that the trustees, including the father, had discretion to distribute accumulated income to the son in excess of $ 180,000; and that they would shortly do so. The interest in the business was sold, the son's note was eventually dishonored, and thereafter, plaintiffs were informed that there was no such trust. Held, on demurrer, C.C.P. 1974 was a complete bar to recovery against the father. It was apparently conceded that the first representation (that the son would receive money) was a representation as to the son's credit; the court held also that the representation by defendant father that he and others would cause distribution to be made was "so inextricably interwoven with the other representations as to Harold's financial status and credit as to be unseverable therefrom, since, in effect, it is a representation that Harold's note was good." (92 C.A.2d 723.) The opinion laid down the following rule: "Where the primary purpose in making the representation is to procure credit for another, the representation comes within the purview of the statute, even though in making it the person also makes false representations concerning himself or derives an incidental benefit therefrom." (92 C.A.2d 721.) (See Bank of America v. Western United Constructors, supra, 110 C.A.2d 169 [to same effect].)

If, however, the primary purpose of the defendant is to gain a benefit for himself or herself, the "main purpose" or "leading object" rule of the statute of frauds applies, and the defendant may be held liable. This result follows from the second sentence of C.C.P. 1974, which provides: "This section is a Statute of Frauds provision and is to be applied in a manner that is consistent with the manner in which subdivision 2 of Section 1624 of the Civil Code [now C.C. 1624(a)(2)] is applied." The Legislative Committee Comment states: "The most significant effect of the second sentence is to make construction of the general Statute of Frauds applicable in cases where the representation is made under circumstances where ... the defendant receives a benefit to himself." (See Seneca Communications v. International Bank of Calif., supra, 103 C.A.3d 548, 555 [discussing 1970 amendment to C.C.P. 1974 adding second sentence]; on main purpose rule, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §376.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Lease & Rental Management Corp. v. Arrowhead Cen. Credit Union (2005) 126 C.A.4th 1052, 1060, 24 C.R.3d 483 [credit union representing that borrower had satisfactory credit in response to lender's inquiry was not liable for fraud, even though substantial loan and borrower's subsequent bankruptcy resulted in financial loss to lender, where inadequacy of lender's credit reference request form was root of problem; there is no basis for liability when credit union's subjective opinion about customer's creditworthiness is not demonstrably false].

110 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

f. Representations Concerning Sexual Relations.

1. Representation That Contraceptive Measures Were Taken.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 789

[§ 789] Representation That Contraceptive Measures Were Taken.

In Stephen K. v. Roni L. (1980) 105 C.A.3d 640, 164 C.R. 618, Roni brought a paternity suit against Stephen. He admitted paternity and cross-complained for damages, alleging that Roni had falsely represented that she was taking birth control pills, and that in reliance on that representation, he had engaged in intercourse that resulted in the birth of an unwanted child, subjecting him to the obligation of support and causing him emotional distress. Held, no cause of action was stated. Although phrased in terms of tort liability for fraud, the pleading sought judicial interference with private activity in which the state has only a minimal interest. "[W]e need not and do not reach the question of whether Stephen has established or pleaded tort liability on the part of Roni under recognized principles of tort law. ... [T]he circumstances and the highly intimate nature of the relationship wherein the false representations may have occurred, are such that a court should not define any standard of conduct therefor." (105 C.A.3d 643.) (See 2 A.L.R.5th 301 [fraudulent misrepresentation regarding use of birth control].) (Cf. Perry v. Atkinson (1987) 195 C.A.3d 14, 18, 240 C.R. 402 [unmarried pregnant woman held to have no cause of action against the father, who induced her to have abortion by falsely promising to impregnate her at later date; Stephen K. followed; Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 369, 193 C.R. 422, infra, §790, rejected; Kathleen K. v. Robert B. (1984) 150 C.A.3d 992, 198 C.R. 273, infra, §791, distinguished].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

111 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

f. Representations Concerning Sexual Relations.

2. Representation of Sterility.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 790

[§ 790] Representation of Sterility.

In Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 369, 193 C.R. 422, an attorney sued his client for fees, and the client filed a cross-complaint seeking damages on theories of battery and fraud. The cross-complaint alleged that the parties engaged in intercourse after cross-complainant had declared that she would not do so if there was a likelihood of pregnancy; that he falsely represented that he was sterile; that the attorney-client relationship produced a sense of trust justifying her reliance on the representation; and that she had a tubal pregnancy requiring surgery that made her sterile. Held, the cross-complaint stated a cause of action for battery (see supra, §416) and fraud.

(a) Cause of action for fraud. The cross-complaint alleged the elements of an action for deceit under C.C. 1709 and 1710 (supra, §767). (145 C.A.3d 375, 376.)

(b) Anti-heartbalm statute inapplicable.

(1) C.C. 43.5, abolishing the cause of action for seduction, is not a bar to the cross-action. Seduction involves illicit intercourse accomplished by persuading a chaste female to step aside from the paths of virtue; and the action "was used primarily to protect young, inexperienced women who had succumbed to the sexual advances of older men." But "[i]t is no longer possible for two consenting adults in the State of California to engage in 'illicit intercourse.'" (145 C.A.3d 377, citing note; 13 San Diego L. Rev. 439.)

(2) Here, cross-complainant complains "not because her virtue was violated or because she suffered humiliation and loss of reputation but because the sexual act was unprotected and led to an ectopic pregnancy." (145 C.A.3d 377.) And the policy grounds of the anti-heartbalm statute (eliminate fraud and extortion and harassment) are not present here. As the Supreme Court said in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008, the fear of unfounded or fraudulent claims is not a valid reason for disallowing a tort action based on a meritorious claim. (145 C.A.3d 377.)

(c) Stephen K. is distinguishable. Stephen K. v. Roni L. (1980) 105 C.A.3d 640, 164 C.R. 618, supra, §789, and the present case are both based on deceit, but the significant distinction between them lies in the element of damage.

Plaintiff there was seeking damages for the "wrongful birth" of his child, which resulted in support obligations and alleged mental suffering; Cross-complainant here is seeking damages for severe injury to her own body. (145 C.A.3d 378, 379.) Stephen K. correctly concluded that it was against public policy to allow one parent to sue the other over the wrongful birth of their child. (145 C.A.3d 379.)

(d) Constitutional right of privacy is not a defense. The constitutional right of privacy is not absolute, and "governmental intervention in matters affecting an individual's right to privacy in sexual matters has been sanctioned in both criminal and civil law." (145 C.A.3d 380.) Examples are Penal statutes such as P.C. 262, on spousal rape, and Ev.C. 621 (now Family C. 7540, 7541), allowing an exception to the conclusive presumption of parentage. (145 C.A.3d 380, 381.) Hence, the right of privacy should not insulate from liability one sexual partner who by intentionally tortious conduct causes physical injury to the other. (See 2 A.L.R.5th 301 [fraudulent misrepresentation regarding sterility].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

112 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

f. Representations Concerning Sexual Relations.

3. Representation of Freedom From Disease.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 791

[§ 791] Representation of Freedom From Disease.

In Kathleen K. v. Robert B. (1984) 150 C.A.3d 992, 198 C.R. 273, plaintiff voluntarily engaged in sexual intercourse with defendant and contracted genital herpes. She brought an action for damages for this physical injury on four theories: (1) Negligence: defendant had intercourse with her when he knew or should have known that he was a carrier of venereal disease. (2) Battery. (3) Intentional infliction of emotional distress. (4) Fraud: defendant deliberately represented to her that he was free from venereal disease, and she had intercourse with him in reliance on the false representation. The trial judge, relying on Stephen K. v. Roni L. (1980) 105 C.A.3d 640, 164 C.R. 618, supra, §789, granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. Held, reversed; Stephen K. is distinguishable and Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 369, 193 C.R. 422, supra, §790, is controlling.

(a) As in Barbara A., there is no child involved, and the public policy considerations related to parentage are not present. (150 C.A.3d 992.)

(b) The chief defense here was the constitutional right of privacy in matters relating to marriage, family, and sexual acts. The courts have frowned on unwarranted governmental intrusion into these matters. But the right of privacy may be outweighed by the authority of the state to promote the public health (as in penal statutes covering both forcible and consensual sexual acts, and laws relating to paternity). And in Barbara A., the court concluded that liability exists when one sexual partner by intentionally tortious conduct causes physical injury to the other. That is the case here. Plaintiff alleged that she sustained physical injury due to defendant's tortious conduct in either negligently or deliberately failing to inform her that he was infected with venereal disease. (150 C.A.3d 996.)

(c) Defendant further contended that several out-of-state cases relied on in the Barbara A. opinion involved the confidential relationship of trust and confidence between husband and wife, and that this does not exist between nonmarried persons. "However, a certain amount of trust and confidence exists in any intimate relationship, at least to the extent that one sexual partner represents to the other that he or she is free from venereal or other dangerous contagious disease. The basic premise underlying these old cases--consent to sexual intercourse vitiated by one partner's fraudulent concealment of the risk of infection with venereal disease--is equally applicable today, whether or not the partners involved are married to each other." (150 C.A.3d 997.)

(d) Defendant finally contended that plaintiff was attempting to revive the abolished action for seduction--"the use of deception to effect intercourse." But, under Barbara A., seduction "imports the idea of illicit intercourse"; here, plaintiff willingly engaged in intercourse and complains only of injury to her body caused by her reliance on his misrepresentation that he was free from disease. (150 C.A.3d 997.) (See 40 A.L.R.4th 1089 [tort liability for infliction of venereal disease].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

113 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

f. Representations Concerning Sexual Relations.

4. Representation of Paternity.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 792

[§ 792] Representation of Paternity.

In Richard P. v. Superior Court (1988) 202 C.A.3d 1089, 249 C.R. 246, Linda and Gerald were married, and Linda had an affair with Richard, resulting in the birth of two children in 1984. In 1985, Linda filed a petition for dissolution and in 1986, Richard filed a complaint to establish his paternity. The cases were consolidated, and in January 1987, a stipulated judgment was entered recognizing Richard's paternity, awarding custody of the children to Linda and Richard, and providing for child support to be paid by Richard. In February 1987, the present action was filed by Gerald and his mother and stepfather against Richard, seeking damages for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The complaint alleged in substance that Richard concealed his paternity and falsely represented that Gerald was the father of the children, and that in reliance on the fraud, Gerald and his mother and stepfather became emotionally attached to the children, and Gerald was induced to support them. Richard's demurrer was overruled. Held, mandamus granted to compel judgment on demurrer in favor of Richard.

(a) "[A]ny wrong which has occurred as a result of Richard's actions is not one which can be redressed in a tort action. We do not doubt that this lawsuit emanated from an unhappy situation in which the real parties in interest suffered grief. We feel, however, that the innocent children here may suffer significant harm from having their family involved in litigation such as this and that this is exactly the type of lawsuit which, if allowed to proceed, might result in more social damage than will occur if the courts decline to intervene." (202 C.A.3d 1094.)

(b) Several analogous cases support this conclusion, including Boyd v. Boyd (1964) 228 C.A.2d 374, 39 C.R. 400, supra, §786, and Stephen K. v. Roni L. (1980) 105 C.A.3d 640, 164 C.R. 618, supra, §789. Barbara A. v. John G. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 369, 193 C.R. 422, supra, §790, and Kathleen K. v. Robert B. (1984) 150 C.A.3d 992, 198 C.R. 273, supra, §791, are distinguishable in that both cases involved physical injury to the plaintiff and had no potential for harming innocent children. (202 C.A.3d 1094, 1095.)

(c) "We find Gerald, who did not participate in the conception of the children involved here, in a more sympathetic position than the plaintiff in Stephen K. Nevertheless, we conclude that this case which involves no physical injuries to the plaintiffs and the potential for harm to the innocent children is much more like Stephen K. than Barbara A. or Kathleen K. For a man married to the mother of children at the time of their conception to be allowed to bring a tort action such as this against the true father of the children could, as in Stephen K., 'seldom, if ever, result in benefit to a child.' " (202 C.A.3d 1095.)

(d) "Furthermore, to allow the imposition of tortious liability in circumstances such as these would frustrate the strong public policy in having natural fathers acknowledge and support their own children. Men in Richard's situation, who are otherwise willing to voluntarily acknowledge and support their children, would have strong disincentive to do so since revealing the truth would expose them to this type of tort action for compensatory and punitive damages. We deem this result undesirable as a matter of public policy." (202 C.A.3d 1096.)

(e) "We do not foreclose the possibility that a man in Gerald's position might be able to recover actual out of pocket costs incurred in supporting another man's children on an equitable theory for reimbursement, such as unjust enrichment. We do not decide that issue as it is not before us." (202 C.A.3d 1096, footnote 3.)

Nagy v. Nagy (1989) 210 C.A.3d 1262, 258 C.R. 787, reached a similar conclusion. Plaintiff ex-husband brought this action against his ex-wife for damages for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress alleging the following: While they were married, defendant represented to him that she was pregnant with his child; on birth of the child, plaintiff, relying on the representation, developed a close father and son relationship with the child; in a subsequent dissolution proceeding defendant, at a deposition, disclosed to him that he was not the father; this fact was confirmed by a blood test; and the false representation was intentional and malicious and for the purpose of causing him emotional distress. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) An action for fraud would be contrary to public policy. "[A]llowing a nonbiological parent to recover damages for developing a close relationship with a child misrepresented to be his and performing parental acts is not a 'damage' which should be compensable under the law. Although we do not condone respondent's misrepresentations, they are similar to a 'betrayal' for which the law wisely should not provide a remedy." (210 C.A.3d 1269, citing Stephen K. and Barbara A.)

(b) The falsity of the representation was disclosed during a deposition in the dissolution proceeding, and therefore was protected by the absolute privilege for publication in a judicial proceeding set forth in C.C. 47 (see supra, §567). Hence, any emotional distress that the statement caused was not actionable. (210 C.A.3d 1270.) And even if plaintiff could separate future emotional distress from the privileged disclosure, public policy would still preclude recovery. (210 C.A.3d 1271.) (See 33 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 449 [emotional distress claims based on domestic deceit that interferes with parent-child relationship].)

In McBride v. Boughton (2004) 123 C.A.4th 379, 20 C.R.3d 115, the plaintiff sought to recover funds expended for the child on an unjust enrichment theory, noting that the court in Richard P. expressly declined to foreclose the possibility of recovery on this basis. Held, the action could not be maintained. "For much the same public policy reasons on which Nagy and Richard P. relied in declining to authorize a tort claim for the loss of a purported father's relationship with a child, we likewise decline to authorize a restitution remedy for support payments" in these circumstances. (123 C.A.4th 392.) (See 33 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 449 [emotional distress claims based on domestic deceit that interferes with parent-child relationship].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

114 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.

1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 793

[§ 793] In General.

An action for deceit will lie for the "suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact." (C.C. 1710(3); see C.C. 1572(3) ["actual fraud" includes the "suppression of that which is true, by one having knowledge or belief of the fact"].)

Although material facts are known to one party and not the other, failure to disclose them is ordinarily not actionable fraud unless there is some fiduciary relationship giving rise to a duty to disclose (see infra, §§794, 795). (Mesmer v. White (1953) 121 C.A.2d 665, 670, 264 P.2d 60; Watt v. Patterson (1954) 125 C.A.2d 788, 792, 271 P.2d 200; Cooper v. Jevne (1976) 56 C.A.3d 860, 874, 128 C.R. 724, citing the text; La Jolla Village Homeowners' Assn. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1131, 1152, 261 C.R. 146, citing the text; Nussbaum v. Weeks (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1589, 1599, 263 C.R. 360, infra, §797, citing the text; see Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 C.3d 335, 347, 348, 134 C.R. 375, 556 P.2d 737 [no liability where no facts alleged to show confidential relationship, representation or active concealment, or defendant's exclusive knowledge]; People v. Highland Fed. Savings & Loan (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1692, 1719, 19 C.R.2d 555 [savings and loan institution, as beneficial owner of rental properties, was not required to disclose that ownership to tenants]; LiMandri v. Judkins (1997) 52 C.A.4th 326, 336, 60 C.R.2d 539 [attorney for lender had no duty to plaintiff attorney to disclose that he was obtaining lien on judgment proceeds superior to contractual lien possessed by plaintiff]; Rest.2d, Torts §551; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §481; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 378; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §200 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.35 et seq.; on failure to disclose cause of action as ground for tolling statute of limitations, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §693 et seq.)

However, the duty necessary to support a fraud cause of action for failure to disclose may be based on statute, rather than on fiduciary duty. (Pastoria v. Nationwide Ins. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1490, 1499, 6 C.R.3d 148 [insurer, knowing that rate increases were imminent, had duty under Ins.C. 330 et seq. to disclose this fact to prospective insureds, and failure to do so was fraud]; Lovejoy v. AT & T Corp. (2004) 119 C.A.4th 151, 158, 14 C.R.3d 117, infra, §807 [duty to disclose in context of changing provider of telephone service is governed by Pub.Util.C. 2889.5, which requires both full disclosure and customer's agreement and thus knowing receipt of information disclosed; sufficiency of disclosure in monthly billing statements to fulfill statutory duty was triable issue of fact].) Also, active concealment of facts may be fraudulent. (See infra, §798.) Moreover, mere nondisclosure may be actionable where the facts are within the defendant's exclusive knowledge. (See infra, §§796, 797; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 378; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §203.)

In Heliotis v. Schuman (1986) 181 C.A.3d 646, 226 C.R. 509, citing the text, plaintiff purchaser brought an action against defendant S, the vendor, based on failure to disclose facts of unstable soil. He also joined B, the vendor's attorney, contending that he owed the same duty to disclose material facts as a real estate broker would owe in the same situation. Held, the attorney, who merely represented the vendor and handled the details of the sale, was not liable; he did not attempt to persuade plaintiff to purchase and did not interfere with plaintiff's investigation. (181 C.A.3d 650.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Hahn v. Mirda (2007) 147 C.A.4th 740, 54 C.R.3d 527, a patient and her husband sued her physicians for fraudulent concealment. The complaint alleged that the physicians informed the patient that she had a particularly aggressive form of breast cancer; that she underwent chemotherapy and had a radical mastectomy in an attempt to save her life; that the pathology report prepared after the surgery showed that she did not have cancer at all; that the physicians, despite learning this, did not tell the patient; and that, as a result, she lived for more than 2 years believing that she had a fatal disease. Held, the complaint stated a cause of action. "[T]he elements of an action for fraud and deceit based on concealment are: (1) the defendant must have concealed or suppressed a material fact, (2) the defendant must have been under a duty to disclose the fact to the plaintiff, (3) the defendant must have intentionally concealed or suppressed the fact with the intent to defraud the plaintiff, (4) the plaintiff must have been unaware of the fact and would not have acted as he did if he had known of the concealed or suppressed fact, and (5) as a result of the concealment or suppression of the fact, the plaintiff must have sustained damage." (147 C.A.4th 748, quoting Marketing West v. Sanyo Fisher (USA) Corp. (1992) 6 C.A.4th 603, 612, 7 C.R.2d 859.) The complaint here met these requirements. (147 C.A.4th 748.)

See Apollo Capital Fund LLC v. Roth Capital Partners, LLC (2007) 158 C.A.4th 226, 241, 70 C.R.3d 199 [broker-dealer's written representations concerning offering of company's bridge notes, that notes would be repaid in full from proceeds of preferred stock offering, made without disclosing conditions on broker-dealer's obligation to proceed with offering, stated cause of action for fraud by concealment].

Tolling statute of limitations:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §770 et seq.

115 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.

2. Fiduciary Relationship.

aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 794

[§ 794] In General.

Liability is imposed for concealment where the defendant is in a fiduciary or other confidential relationship that imposes a duty of disclosure. (C.C. 1710(3) ["suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it"]; see Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 412, 433, 159 P.2d 958 [corporate director]; Fink v. Weisman (1933) 129 C.A. 305, 311, 18 P.2d 961 [joint venturer]; Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co. (1912) 163 C. 561, 576, 126 P. 351 [architect is fiduciary of client]; Sime v. Malouf (1949) 95 C.A.2d 82, 94, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788 [joint venturer]; Black v. Shearson, Hammill & Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 362, 367, 72 C.R. 157, infra, §795, citing the text [stockbroker is fiduciary of customers]; Cooper v. Jevne (1976) 56 C.A.3d 860, 866, 128 C.R. 724 [real estate broker or agent]; Roddenberry v. Roddenberry (1996) 44 C.A.4th 634, 664, 51 C.R.2d 907 [husband's corporation had duty to inform ex-wife that, as part of divorce settlement, she was receiving only one-third, rather than one-half, of profits from television series]; Rest.2d, Torts §551; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §481; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.14; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §207; 51 Proof of Facts 3d 361 [liability of real estate professional for interstate real estate fraud]; 80 A.L.R.3d 13 [duty to disclose material facts to stock purchaser]; BAJI, No. 12.36; CACI, No. 1901; on abuse of fiduciary relationship as constructive fraud rendering contract voidable, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §295; on corporate director as fiduciary, see 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §98 et seq.; on pleading constructive fraud, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §673.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.17

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Schauer v. Mandarin Gems of Calif. (2005) 125 C.A.4th 949, 960, 23 C.R.3d 233 [wife did not state constructive fraud cause of action against jewelry store that allegedly misrepresented value of engagement ring sold to husband; complaint failed to plead facts establishing requisite fiduciary or special confidential relationship between plaintiff and defendant]; Persson v. Smart Inventions (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1141, 1159, 23 C.R.3d 335, Supp., infra, §830 [no confidential relationship arose in arm's-length buyout negotiations between coowners of company, both of whom were represented by counsel and accountants, simply because one professed to paint truest picture possible of company's financial situation and other relied on him to do so; vulnerability or incapacity is necessary predicate to confidential relationship]; Hahn v. Mirda (2007) 147 C.A.4th 740, 748, 54 C.R.3d 527, Supp., supra, §793 [because physician-patient relationship is fiduciary one, physician is prohibited from concealing or otherwise misrepresenting nature of patient's medical condition]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.14; BAJI, No. 12.37.1 [Negligent Disclosure by Fiduciary]. Pleading constructive fraud:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §717. Correction: Page 1149, line 6 of section, "Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co." should be "Edward Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co."

116 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.

2. Fiduciary Relationship.

bb. Dual Fiduciary Relationship.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 795

[§ 795] Dual Fiduciary Relationship.

In Black v. Shearson, Hammill & Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 362, 72 C.R. 157, defendant Shearson, a national stockbrokerage partnership, engaged in the common practice of having partners serve as directors of newly-formed corporations, giving financing and other advice. Defendant D, a Shearson partner, became a director and advisor of USAMCO, a new venture in the automatic vending machine business. He "made the market" for its stock on over-the-counter sales by having Shearson buy it and sell at a markup, instead of handling sales on commission. He actively pushed sales among Shearson customers through Shearson sales representatives, and Shearson distributed press releases and reports, supplemented by oral statements, about the good financial condition and excellent prospects of USAMCO. Actually, the corporation was a failure from the start, the statements were false, and the corporation's financial plight was concealed by D from Shearson personnel; also, D himself sold much of his holdings at a high profit. Plaintiffs bought in reliance on the representations, and their stock proved worthless. They sued Shearson, D, and the sales representatives. The trial judge absolved the innocent sales representatives, but held Shearson and D liable for compensatory damages (the amount paid for worthless stock) and punitive damages. Held, affirmed.

(a) Shearson's chief defense was that D, as a USAMCO director, had a fiduciary duty not to reveal information about the corporation, and that this was a higher duty than that of a stockbroker to his or her customer. In this connection, a New York Stock Exchange Educational Circular was read by stipulation. It stated that the broker partner "should recognize that his first responsibility in this area is to the corporation on whose Board he serves." (266 C.A.2d 368, footnote.) There is no merit in the defense and no support for it in the circular. This case presents the classic problem of serving two masters, and it cannot be resolved by weighing the conflicting duties. It should be avoided in advance, or terminated when it arises. (266 C.A.2d 367.)

(b) The court is even less impressed with the prediction of defendants that the "salutary practice" of stockbrokers giving expertise in financing and other problems facing newly-formed corporations "will end" if the broker-director is held to a "traditional fraud standard." Even if this came to pass, customers should not be deprived of the protection against fraud merely because the broker chooses to occupy the dual role. (266 C.A.2d 368.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

117 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
2. Misrepresentation.
g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.
3. Defendant With Exclusive Knowledge.
aa. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 796

[§ 796] In General.

The duty to disclose may arise without any confidential relationship where the defendant alone has knowledge of material facts that are not accessible to the plaintiff. (Sime v. Malouf (1949) 95 C.A.2d 82, 100, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; De Spirito v. Andrews (1957) 151 C.A.2d 126, 130, 311 P.2d 173; Lingsch v. Savage (1963) 213 C.A.2d 729, 735, 29 C.R. 201; Massei v. Lettunich (1967) 248 C.A.2d 68, 73, 56 C.R. 232; Magpali v. Farmers Group (1996) 48 C.A.4th 471, 482, 55 C.R.2d 225, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §551; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §205; BAJI, No. 12.36; CACI, No. 1901.)

Wells v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1978) 85 C.A.3d 66, 149 C.R. 171, is illustrative. Plaintiff loaned money to P over a period between May 1, 1973, and August 1, 1974. In September 1974, the loan total was $ 31,000, and P assigned to plaintiff as security a life insurance policy with defendant insurer. In October 1974, defendant acknowledged receipt of the assignment on its printed form, with a disclaimer of responsibility for its sufficiency or validity. Defendant did not advise plaintiff that P had assigned the same policy on May 22, 1974, to secure a loan of $ 35,000 from F Bank, and also did not advise plaintiff that at the time of the assignment to her, the policy had lapsed for nonpayment of premium. In this action against defendant insurer for damages for fraud and deceit, a general demurrer was sustained. Held, reversed.

(a) Defendant was under no duty to disclose the fact of the previous assignment. It had no way of knowing whether the debt secured had been paid; and to advise plaintiff that P had made a previous loan on the strength of the policy would have been a betrayal of confidential information, perhaps serving no useful purpose. (85 C.A.3d 70.)

(b) Defendant was under a duty to disclose the fact that the policy had lapsed. (1) Because it was returning the duplicate assignment form to plaintiff, the information could have been given without extra effort. (2) It was not a disinterested party; it had established procedures for notification of assignments. "By thus involving itself in the transaction, John Hancock acts in part in its own interest: it not only promotes the efficiency of life insurance policies as a security device, but also keeps itself informed concerning the changing interests of owners and creditors of owners in the policies which it has issued." (85 C.A.3d 71.) (3) Knowledge of the legal status of the policy is peculiarly that of the insurer, and in such cases, there is a duty of disclosure. (85 C.A.3d 72, citing the text, Rest.2d, Torts §551, and cases.)

(c) The disclaimer in the assignment form relates only to validity of the assignment, not to the policy itself. (85 C.A.3d 73.)

(d) Defendant was not estopped to deny validity of the policy. If an estoppel were found, plaintiff would be able to collect the full amount of her loan from the policy proceeds ($ 85,900). But at the time of the assignment by P, she had already loaned the money to P; hence, she could not claim that defendant's nondisclosure induced her to do so. Her loss, if any, must be shown by proving that she could have obtained other security if she had been aware of the undisclosed fact of the policy's lapse. (85 C.A.3d 74.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.17

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

118 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
2. Misrepresentation.
g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.
3. Defendant With Exclusive Knowledge.
bb. Real Estate Transactions.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 797

[§ 797] Real Estate Transactions.

(1) General Duty of Seller. Where material facts are accessible only to the vendor of property, and the vendor knows them not to be accessible to the purchaser, the vendor has a duty to disclose those facts. (See Rothstein v. Janss Inv. Corp. (1941) 45 C.A.2d 64, 68, 113 P.2d 465 [vendor failed to disclose fact that land was filled ground]; Barder v. McClung (1949) 93 C.A.2d 692, 697, 209 P.2d 808 [vendor failed to disclose that part of house violated zoning ordinances]; Curran v. Heslop (1953) 115 C.A.2d 476, 480, 252 P.2d 378 [vendors failed to disclose that old house violated state law in respects not discoverable by ordinary casual inspection]; Karoutas v. Homefed Bank (1991) 232 C.A.3d 767, 775, 283 C.R. 809, 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §165 [deed of trust beneficiary selling property under power of sale may owe duty to prospective bidders to disclose known facts materially affecting property's value]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 309 [real estate broker's nondisclosure of condition or value of realty]; 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1571 [commercial real estate seller's duty to disclose]; 22 A.L.R.3d 972 [real estate vendor's failure to disclose termite infestation]; 18 A.L.R.4th 1168 [liability of vendor of existing structure for property damage occurring after transfer]; 46 A.L.R.4th 546 [real estate broker's liability for nondisclosure to buyer of physical defects in property].)

For example, a subdivider or vendor of real property has a duty to disclose to purchasers that the property has a history of underground water or has been filled. These soil conditions are factors, not observable by the purchaser, that materially affect the desirability or value of the property. And neither a certification that fill has been properly compacted nor a belief that preexisting slides, seeps, and springs have been permanently repaired, eliminates the duty of disclosure. (Barnhouse v. Pinole (1982) 133 C.A.3d 171, 188, 183 C.R. 881; see 80 A.L.R.2d 1453 [liability of vendor for failure to disclose that structure was built on filled ground].)

Reed v. King (1983) 145 C.A.3d 261, 193 C.R. 130, is also illustrative. The complaint alleged that defendant vendor and his agents represented to plaintiff purchaser that a house was in good condition and fit for an "elderly lady" living alone; and they did not disclose the fact that 10 years earlier, a woman and her four children had been murdered there. The lower court sustained a demurrer on the ground that the pleading did not allege concealment of a material fact. Held, reversed; a cause of action was stated for rescission and damages.

(a) Many cases have upheld recovery for nondisclosure of physical defects and legal impediments to the use of real property (145 C.A.3d 266, and footnote 5), but no prior case has presented the issue of nondisclosure of "this variety of ill-repute" (145 C.A.3d 266). The chief argument against imposing liability is that "[a]ny fact that might disquiet the enjoyment of some segment of the buying public may be seized upon by a disgruntled purchaser to void a bargain." (145 C.A.3d 266.)

(b) But murder is not such a common occurrence that purchasers should be charged with anticipating and discovering it; and a purchaser may be unable to reside in a home where it has occurred. (145 C.A.3d 267.) If plaintiff can prove her allegation that the decade-old multiple murder had a significant effect on the market value of the home, she is entitled to a favorable ruling on the issues of materiality and duty to disclose. (145 C.A.3d 268.)

(2) Distinction: Facts Equally Accessible to Both Parties. There is no fraud from nondisclosure of facts equally accessible to both parties to the transaction, and nothing is said or done to mislead the other. (See Kallgren v. Steele (1955) 131 C.A.2d 43, 45, 279 P.2d 1027 [liability established although possible effect of known defect was probably overlooked rather than intentionally concealed]; Stevenson v. Baum (1998) 65 C.A.4th 159, 75 C.R.2d 904 [where purchase contract warned purchaser that it took mobilehome park subject to easements of record, seller had no duty to disclose oil company pipeline easement that was matter of public record equally accessible to both parties, even though title insurance failed to mention easement]; Assilzadeh v. California Fed. Bank (2000) 82 C.A.4th 399, 410, 98 C.R.2d 176 [where seller disclosed that it had acquired property at foreclosure sale, that it had little knowledge of property, and that lawsuit for construction defects had been settled, it fulfilled its common law duty of disclosure; details of lawsuit required diligent attention of buyer]; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 378 [Kallgren].)

(3) Distinction: Legal Ramifications of Status of Property. Also, the legal ramifications of the factual nature of realty, and a conclusion as to how they may adversely impact value, are not "facts" subject to required disclosure. (Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 C.A.4th 603, 608, 43 C.R.2d 399 [where fact that house was in floodplain was revealed to buyers, sellers had no duty to disclose existence and effect of city ordinances regulating rebuilding or improvement of house in floodplain, because this was information as readily available to buyers as to sellers].)

(4) Statutory Requirements and Immunities. C.C. 1102 et seq. require transferors of real property (or of specified manufactured homes and mobilehomes) and their brokers to give prospective purchasers prescribed written disclosures concerning the condition of the property. (See 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §471 et seq.)

Under C.C. 1710.2, no cause of action arises against an owner of real property, his or her agent or the transferee's agent for failing to disclose to the transferee the occurrence, or manner, of an occupant's death on the premises where the death occurred more than 3 years prior to the date of the transferee's offer to purchase, lease, or rent the property, or that an occupant was afflicted with, or died from, AIDS. (C.C. 1710.2(a).) However, this statute does not immunize an owner or agent from making an intentional misrepresentation in response to a direct inquiry from a transferee or a prospective transferee concerning deaths on the property. (C.C. 1710.2(d).)

(5) Limited Duty of Buyer. The duty to disclose may likewise rest on a buyer with exclusive knowledge but is more limited than that placed on the seller. Nussbaum v. Weeks (1989) 214 C.A.3d 1589, 263 C.R. 360, citing the text, discussed this duty as follows: "The buyer has the same duty to disclose material facts affecting the property to the seller, but it is rare that the buyer has knowledge of such facts which would impose a disclosure duty. While the duty has been expressed in the context of a fact that would affect the 'value or desirability' of the property, the extent that a party must disclose matters which do not affect the physical integrity of the property, but which affect the property's value, has not been fully developed. If the buyer's duty were extended as broadly as the seller's duty, the rule would result in the ridiculous conclusion that a buyer must disclose to the seller factors that have or will indicate that the seller is selling the property below its true value. Absent affirmative representation, such a rule would eliminate the freedom to negotiate in the marketplace." (214 C.A.3d 1600.) The buyer has a duty to disclose material facts only under limited circumstances. These include situations in which a fiduciary or confidential relationship exists, situations in which a partial or misleading disclosure is made, and situations in which the buyer knows that the seller would reasonably expect a disclosure to be made. (214 C.A.3d 1600, citing Rest.2d, Torts §551.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5) Limited Duty of Buyer. See Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 C.A.4th 858, 868, 76 C.R.3d 325 [realtor who represented lessee in commercial lease transaction did not have duty to disclose to lessor, after lease was executed, that lessee's financial condition had weakened such that lessee might not be able to perform conditions of lease].

119 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.

4. Active Concealment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 798

[§ 798] Active Concealment.

Even more obnoxious than failure to disclose is active concealment of material facts. (See Outboard Marine Corp. v. Superior Court (1975) 52 C.A.3d 30, 37, 124 C.R. 852 [legal effect of active concealment is same as that of affirmative misrepresentation]; Stevens v. Superior Court (1986) 180 C.A.3d 605, 609, 225 C.R. 624, citing the text [concealment by defendant hospital of fact that foreign physicians not licensed to practice in California were authorized to function as staff physicians without supervision required by statute]; Rest.2d, Torts §550; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§200, 203, 233 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.37; CACI, No. 1901.)

Liability may result, for example, from conduct seeking to conceal defects in real property, or to prevent investigation and discovery of material facts about the property. (Sime v. Malouf (1949) 95 C.A.2d 82, 99, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; see Williams v. Graham (1948) 83 C.A.2d 649, 652, 189 P.2d 324 [defendant agreed to sell property, concealing from purchaser the fact (and instructing his agent to do likewise) that he had no title and was endeavoring to obtain title].)

Lovejoy v. AT & T Corp. (2001) 92 C.A.4th 85, 111 C.R.2d 711, infra, §807, is also illustrative of active concealment. Defendant, plaintiff's long-distance phone carrier, fraudulently induced the carrier of plaintiff's toll-free business service to switch this service to defendant. Defendant concealed the switch from plaintiff, and when the long-distance service was terminated over a dispute about the bill, the toll-free service was also terminated, causing plaintiff much loss of business and forcing him into bankruptcy. Held, this constituted fraudulent concealment. Because of the concealment of the switch of the toll-free service, plaintiff permitted his long-distance service to be terminated, something that he would not have done had he known of the switch, because he would have known that termination of the long-distance service would have also led to termination of a service that was vital to his business. Plaintiff was not aware of the termination of the toll-free service. (92 C.A.4th 95.) (See 92 A.L.R.5th 1 [state regulation of telephone "slamming"].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

120 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

g. Nondisclosure or Concealment.

5. Partial Suppression of Facts.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 799

[§ 799] Partial Suppression of Facts.

Liability is also recognized where one who is under no duty to speak nevertheless does so. "Deceit" includes "suppression of a fact, by one ... who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact." (C.C. 1710(3).) In such a case, he or she is bound to speak honestly, and not to suppress facts that materially qualify those stated. In other words, misleading half-truths may be actionable. (Pohl v. Mills (1933) 218 C. 641, 654, 24 P.2d 476; American Trust Co. v. California Western States Life Ins. Co. (1940) 15 C.2d 42, 65, 98 P.2d 497; Rogers v. Warden (1942) 20 C.2d 286, 289, 125 P.2d 7; Dyke v. Zaiser (1947) 80 C.A.2d 639, 652, 182 P.2d 344; Sime v. Malouf (1949) 95 C.A.2d 82, 101, 212 P.2d 946, 213 P.2d 788; Wice v. Schilling (1954) 124 C.A.2d 735, 746, 269 P.2d 231; Milmoe v. Dixon (1950) 101 C.A.2d 257, 260, 225 P.2d 273; Gillespie v. Ormsby (1954) 126 C.A.2d 513, 527, 272 P.2d 949; De Spirito v. Andrews (1957) 151 C.A.2d 126, 130, 311 P.2d 173; Sanfran Co. v. Rees Blow Pipe Mfg. Co. (1959) 168 C.A.2d 191, 202, 335 P.2d 995; McCue v. Bruce Enterprises (1964) 228 C.A.2d 21, 27, 39 C.R. 125; see Rest.2d, Torts §529; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §209; BAJI, No. 12.37.)

In Sullivan v. Helbing (1924) 66 C.A. 478, 226 P. 803, plaintiffs and defendants were negotiating for an exchange of real properties. Defendants stated that their premises were under lease for a rental of a stated amount per month, but failed to disclose the fact that they were regularly accepting a lesser sum from the tenant. Held, the representation, though literally true, was, by reason of the concealment, deceptive and fraudulent. (66 C.A. 483.)

In Vega v. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 C.A.4th 282, 17 C.R.3d 26, plaintiff shareholder of the acquired corporation in a merger transaction sued the law firm for the acquiring corporation, alleging that the firm specifically undertook to disclose the acquiring corporation's financing transaction that would precede acquisition, but then failed to disclose that the financing involved issuance of worthless "toxic" stock to be exchanged for plaintiff's shares. The firm's demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Held, reversed; the complaint properly stated a fraud claim based on nondisclosure. (121 C.A.4th 292, 300.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.16

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Persson v. Smart Inventions (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1141, 1161, 23 C.R.3d 335, Supp., infra, §830 [owner of half interest in company, who specifically undertook to provide all relevant financial information in buyout negotiations with coowner, was liable for intentional concealment where he suppressed facts materially qualifying those provided].

121 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

2. Misrepresentation.

h. (New) Representations Concerning Employment.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 799A

[§ 799A] (New) Representations Concerning Employment.

"The elements of a cause of action for fraudulent inducement to an employment contract are (1) that the employer misrepresented or concealed a material fact during the hiring process, (2) knowledge of the falsity of the fact or lack of reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, (3) an intent to induce reliance, (4) justifiable reliance by the employee, and (5) resulting damages." (Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co. (2005) 128 C.A.4th 452, 470, 27 C.R.3d 239.) The Garamendi case held that evidence submitted to the Insurance Commissioner by former employees of an insurer in liquidation, concerning the insurer's fraudulent business practices, was insufficient to establish fraudulent inducement of their employment contracts. There was no evidence regarding any specific false representations made in hiring them. (128 C.A.4th 471.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

122 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

3. Knowledge of Falsity (Scienter).

a. Actual Knowledge.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 800

[§ 800] Actual Knowledge.

Knowledge of falsity or "scienter" is ordinarily considered an essential element of fraud. (Griswold v. Morrison (1921) 53 C.A. 93, 100, 200 P. 62; Wishnick v. Frye (1952) 111 C.A.2d 926, 930, 245 P.2d 532; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1324, 1331, 231 C.R. 355, citing the text; Anderson v. Deloitte & Touche LLP (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1468, 1475, 66 C.R.2d 512, infra, §820; see Hayter v. Fulmor (1949) 92 C.A.2d 392, 399, 206 P.2d 1101 [representations of ownership of land, with knowledge of previous relinquishment of title to substantial parties]; Rest.2d, Torts §526(a); 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §116 et seq.; 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 583; BAJI, No. 12.31; CACI, No. 1900.) And ambiguous statements, with a possible true or false meaning, are fraudulent only if the false meaning was intended, or if the statement was made with either reckless indifference as to how it would be interpreted or without any belief as to how it would be understood. (Rest.2d, Torts §527.)

In Black v. Shearson, Hammill & Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 362, 367, 72 C.R. 157, supra, §795, defendants contended that scienter was not shown because there was testimony that defendant D did not know that his statements were false at the time he made them. Held, this evidence did not negative scienter, for it was clear that D permitted the statements to stand after he learned of their falsity and before plaintiffs relied on them. Thus, his knowledge and approval were part of a continuing course of conduct. (266 C.A.2d 366.)

If the defendant does believe the representations to be true, and merely lacks reasonable grounds for the belief, he is guilty only of negligent misrepresentation. (See infra, §818.) Hence, an instruction that a party "knowing the circumstances is guilty of fraud when he negligently, carelessly or with lack of foresight makes representations" which will cause deception, and that "gross negligence alone may furnish conclusive evidence of fraudulent intent even where there is no actual intention to deceive," was held reversible error. (Rutherford v. Standard Engineering Corp. (1948) 88 C.A.2d 554, 563, 199 P.2d 354.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.13(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

123 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

3. Knowledge of Falsity (Scienter).

b. Reckless Misrepresentation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 801

[§ 801] Reckless Misrepresentation.

Actual knowledge is not always required. If the defendant has no belief in the truth of the statement, and makes it recklessly, without knowing whether it is true or false, the element of scienter is satisfied. (See C.C. 1572(1) ["the suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true" constitutes "actual fraud"]; C.C. 1710(1) [same included in definition of "deceit"]; Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 487, 275 P.2d 15; Gaffney v. Graf (1925) 73 C.A. 622, 625, 238 P. 1054; Andrew v. Bankers & Shippers Ins. Co. (1929) 101 C.A. 566, 578, 281 P. 1091; Hargrove v. Henderson (1930) 108 C.A. 667, 673, 292 P. 148; White v. Sarff (1931) 115 C.A. 317, 318, 1 P.2d 519; Lerner v. Riverside Citrus Assn. (1953) 115 C.A.2d 544, 547, 252 P.2d 744; Horrell v. Santa Fe Tank & Tower Co. (1953) 117 C.A.2d 114, 119, 254 P.2d 893; Nathanson v. Murphy (1955) 132 C.A.2d 363, 367, 282 P.2d 174; Textron Financial Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1061, 1073, 13 C.R.3d 586, citing the text; see Yellow Creek Logging Corp. v. Dare (1963) 216 C.A.2d 50, 55, 30 C.R. 629 ["false representations made recklessly and without regard for their truth in order to induce action by another are the equivalent of misrepresentations knowingly and intentionally uttered"]; Rest.2d, Torts §526(b), (c); 5 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 588; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §120 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.31; CACI, No. 1900.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.13(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

124 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 802

[§ 802] In General.

The representation must be made with the intent to defraud the plaintiff, that is, to induce his or her reliance. (See C.C. 1709, supra, §767 [imposing liability on "[o]ne who willfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk"]; Lovejoy v. AT& T Corp. (2004) 119 C.A.4th 151, 161, 14 C.R.3d 117 [telecommunications carrier's failure to disclose change in provider of telephone service, as required by Pub.Util.C. 2889.5, supported inference of intent to defraud]; Rios v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (2004) 119 C.A.4th 1020, 1029, 15 C.R.3d 18 [insurer's alteration of insured's application for policy was not fraudulent misrepresentation where alteration was intended as counteroffer]; Rest.2d, Torts §531; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §471; 4 Stanf. L. Rev. 310; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§107, 108; BAJI, Nos. 12.50, 12.50.1; CACI, No. 1906.)

Intent to defraud is not shown by evidence that statements were made recklessly but without knowledge of falsity. (Textron Financial Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. (2004) 118 C.A.4th 1061, 1074, 13 C.R.3d 586, citing the text.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.4, 21, 29, 42, 54, 62(2), 65(2)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

125 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

b. Intent To Deceive Particular Persons.

1. General Rule.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 803

[§ 803] General Rule.

The representation must be made to induce action by some particular person or persons in reliance on it, and the defendant is liable only to those persons to whom the representation was made with this intent. If others become aware of the statements and act on them, there is no liability even though the defendant should reasonably have foreseen this possibility. (See Bell v. Renaldo (1975) 51 C.A.3d 779, 781, 124 C.R. 233; Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 C.A.3d 1, 19, 147 C.R. 655, quoting the text.)

However, the representation may be made indirectly as well as directly. (See infra, §804.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

126 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

b. Intent To Deceive Particular Persons.

2. Representation to One for Another.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 804

[§ 804] Representation to One for Another.

The statement may be made to one person intending that he or she shall communicate it to another, as where a misrepresentation is made to one of two spouses, to an agent, or to a credit rating agency that communicates it to one who extends credit. (See Lewis v. McClure (1932) 127 C.A. 439, 447, 16 P.2d 166; Varwig v. Anderson-Behel Porsche/Audi (1977) 74 C.A.3d 578, 580, 141 C.R. 539, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §533; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§109, 110; BAJI, Nos. 12.50, 12.50.1; CACI, No. 1906.)

In Crystal Pier Amusement Co. v. Cannan (1933) 219 C. 184, 25 P.2d 839, false representations were made to certain individuals, officers of a corporation, with respect to quality of materials to be used for a pier. Later, these individuals organized another corporation to take title and build certain structures on the pier. Held, the second corporation could sue for the fraud, despite the fact that it was not in existence at the time of the representations. The representations were actually made to individuals rather than to the "corporation," and that they were relied on by these individuals in acting for the second corporation. (219 C. 186.) (See Nathanson v. Murphy (1955) 132 C.A.2d 363, 368, 282 P.2d 174 [following Crystal Pier Amusement Corp.].)

A cause of action was also stated in Geernaert v. Mitchell (1995) 31 C.A.4th 601, 37 C.R.2d 483. Plaintiff real property purchasers sued defendants, two entities that had owned the property prior to the seller, alleging fraudulent misrepresentations and concealment regarding significant structural and foundation problems with the property. The trial judge, determining that defendants owed no duty to plaintiffs, sustained defendants' demurrers and dismissed the case. Held, reversed with directions to overrule the demurrers.

(a) Under Rest.2d, Torts §533, the maker of a fraudulent representation is liable to a person who acts in justifiable reliance on it if the misrepresentation, although not made directly to the person, is made to a third person and the maker intends or has reason to expect that its terms will be repeated or its substance communicated to the person, and he or she will be influenced by it. (31 C.A.4th 605.)

(b) Plaintiffs stated facts to support a cause of action under this standard. One defendant was a corporation that quickly resold the property, presumably for commercial gain, and had special reason to expect that fraud would be transmitted to subsequent purchasers, such as plaintiffs. The other defendant, although two sales removed from plaintiffs, allegedly used his construction expertise to take extraordinary measures to conceal the true condition of the property and therefore knew there was a strong likelihood that the deception would be passed on to a subsequent buyer. (31 C.A.4th 608.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

127 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

b. Intent To Deceive Particular Persons.

3. Representation to Public or Class.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 805

[§ 805] Representation to Public or Class.

(1) In General. "One who practices a deceit with intent to defraud the public, or a particular class of persons, is deemed to have intended to defraud every individual in that class, who is actually misled by the deceit." (C.C. 1711; see Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 C.3d 104, 111, 120 C.R. 681, 534 P.2d 377, supra, §778 [label on carton and cover of instruction booklet on device]; Gill v. Johnson (1932) 125 C.A. 296, 300, 13 P.2d 857, 14 P.2d 1017 [false showing of service of summons in default action]; Quirici v. Freeman (1950) 98 C.A.2d 194, 201, 219 P.2d 897 [falsely inadequate label on paint can]; Block v. Tobin (1975) 45 C.A.3d 214, 219, 119 C.R. 288 [notice by trustee and beneficiary of deed of trust announcing public auction, with secret intention to arrange for private sale without competitive bids]; Varwig v. Anderson-Behel Porsche/Audi (1977) 74 C.A.3d 578, 580, 141 C.R. 539, quoting the text [defendant automobile dealer sold car to another dealer, representing that title was good; plaintiff, who purchased from second dealer in reliance on representation, was entitled to sue defendant]; Barnhouse v. Pinole (1982) 133 C.A.3d 171, 192, 183 C.R. 881, citing the text [liability of developer of land to subpurchasers]; cf. Cohen v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Savings Bank (1956) 143 C.A.2d 480, 486, 300 P.2d 14, infra, §806 [discussing scope of statute]; Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 680, 11 C.R.3d 807 [tobacco companies' misrepresentations regarding health risks of smoking]; Rest.2d, Torts §534; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §111; BAJI, Nos. 12.50, 12.50.1; CACI, No. 1906.)

(2) Representation in Document. The false statement may be made in a document that circulates among the public or some group of persons. (See Andrew v. Bankers & Shippers Ins. Co. (1929) 101 C.A. 566, 575, 281 P. 1091 [forged conditional sale contracts]; Fuhrman v. American Nat. Bldg. & Loan Assn. (1932) 126 C.A. 202, 213, 14 P.2d 601 [corporation prospectus and other advertising matter]; Mary Pickford Co. v. Bayly Bros. (1939) 12 C.2d 501, 521, 86 P.2d 102 [certificates of interest violating Corporate Securities Act]; Wice v. Schilling (1954) 124 C.A.2d 735, 745, 269 P.2d 231 [false certificate that property was free from termites, sent to escrow holder with knowledge that buyer might rely on it]; Rest.2d, Torts §532; 27 Cal. L. Rev. 477.)

(3) Information Required by Statute. False statements in a financial or other report required by statute, e.g., from banks or other corporations, may give rise to liability. (See American Trust Co. v. California Western States Life Ins. Co. (1940) 15 C.2d 42, 68, 98 P.2d 497; Rest.2d, Torts §536; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §112.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Representation in Document. See OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 835, 859, 68 C.R.3d 828 [investment bank that prepared offering memorandum for company's promissory notes was subject to liability in fraud to ultimate purchasers of notes for failure to disclose company's negative financial information; bank was initial purchaser of unregistered notes and sold them knowing that they would be transformed to registered notes and traded on open market].

128 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

b. Intent To Deceive Particular Persons.

4. Unknown Third Persons.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 806

[§ 806] Unknown Third Persons.

(1) In General. The situations described in preceding sections, where liability for indirect representations was imposed, were distinguished in Cohen v. Citizens Nat. Trust & Savings Bank (1956) 143 C.A.2d 480, 300 P.2d 14. The complaint alleged that A (now deceased and represented by defendant bank) unlawfully added basement apartments without a permit, and sold the apartment house to D with intent to defraud D and subsequent purchasers; that D, presumably ignorant of the defects, sold to plaintiffs, who were subsequently cited by the health department and suffered damages. Held, no cause of action was stated. A had no dealings with plaintiffs, did not know they existed, and could not have had any interest in defrauding them since they came into the transaction after A had parted with title and made his profit. In the absence of an assignment of the defrauded party's cause of action to the plaintiff, there is no authority supporting relief "to a subsequent grantee of property upon the latter's complaint that a fraud had been perpetrated by defendant upon one such grantee's predecessors in title." (143 C.A.2d 485.)

Cohen was disapproved in Varwig v. Anderson-Behel Porsche/Audi (1977) 74 C.A.3d 578, 581, 582, 141 C.R. 539, adopting the rule of Rest.2d, Torts §533 that subjects the maker of a fraudulent misrepresentation to liability "to another who acts in justifiable reliance upon it if the misrepresentation, although not made directly to the other, is made to a third person and the maker intends or has reason to expect that its terms will be repeated or its substance communicated to the other, and that it will influence his conduct." This principle has been followed in subsequent cases. (See Barnhouse v. Pinole (1982) 133 C.A.3d 171, 192, 183 C.R. 881; Geernaert v. Mitchell (1995) 31 C.A.4th 601, 605, 37 C.R.2d 539.) It has been referred to as the "indirect deception" doctrine. (Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1534, 1548, 76 C.R.2d 101.)

Shapiro v. Sutherland is illustrative. Defendant, having received a job transfer, sold his house to a relocation management service, who then sold it to plaintiff. Prior to the initial sale, defendant had executed a disclosure form indicating, falsely, that he was unaware of any neighborhood noise problem. In holding that plaintiff could rely on this misrepresentation even though it was not made by defendant directly to him, the court stated that the Cohen rule had been rejected and replaced by the principle of indirect deception. The court emphasized that when defendant made the misrepresentation, it was obvious that the service, having purchased the property as an employment benefit solely for resale, was going to show it to someone when the property was resold. (64 C.A.4th 1548.)

(2) Representations Resulting in Physical Harm. Under Rest.2d, Torts §310, a defendant who makes an intentional misrepresentation "is subject to liability to another for physical harm which results from an act done by ... a third person in reliance upon the truth of the representation," if the actor intends the statement to induce action, or should realize that it is likely to induce action, "which involves an unreasonable risk of physical harm." This rule was followed in Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 1075, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, infra, §822, which authorizes recovery, in prescribed circumstances, for physical injury to a third person resulting from a misrepresentation.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

129 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

4. Intent To Defraud.

c. Intent To Induce Particular Action.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 807

[§ 807] Intent To Induce Particular Action.

The theory of intent to defraud has been given a further limitation that seems unjustly to narrow liability: Under this view, except where documents are circulated or public reports are made, it must be shown that the defendant intended to induce the particular action that took place, or conduct in substantially the same transaction. It is not considered enough that defendant should have realized the likelihood of the plaintiff's action, for the law of deceit (as distinguished from the law of negligence) does not impose liability for unintended consequences. (See Conrad v. Bank of America (1996) 45 C.A.4th 133, 157, 53 C.R.2d 336 [defendant "must intend to induce a particular act of the plaintiff and is not liable in fraud for unintended consequences"]; Rest.2d, Torts §531 [requiring defendant's intent or reasonable expectation that pecuniary loss be suffered by plaintiffs "in the type of transaction in which he intends or has reason to expect their conduct to be influenced"].)

In Carlson v. Murphy (1935) 8 C.A.2d 607, 47 P.2d 1100, plaintiffs purchased a note and mortgage from Joseph Murphy Mortgage Company, with a written guaranty by Joseph Murphy. Defendant falsely represented that the company was a corporation, and in reliance thereon after Murphy's death, plaintiffs failed to file a claim against his estate on the guaranty, believing that the purported corporation was responsible. Suit was brought to recover loss. It appeared from the complaint that the false representations had been made not to induce plaintiffs to refrain from presenting the claim, but with the object of gaining further business from plaintiffs. Held, no cause of action was stated. (8 C.A.2d 611.)

This view was rejected, and the Carlson and Conrad cases disapproved, in Lovejoy v. AT & T Corp. (2001) 92 C.A.4th 85, 111 C.R.2d 711. Plaintiff businessman had long-distance phone service with defendant carrier, and his business had toll-free 800 service with another carrier. Due to a false representation by defendant to the other carrier that plaintiff wished to switch his toll-free service to defendant, the other carrier was induced to do so. Defendant then charged plaintiff for the toll-free service, but hid the charges within those for long-distance service. When plaintiff disputed the bill for his long-distance service, both services were terminated, but plaintiff, unaware that the toll-free service had been transferred, was also unaware that it had been terminated. As a result, plaintiff found it necessary to file for bankruptcy. The trial judge implied that, in order to state a cause of action for fraud, it is necessary that the defendant intend to cause the plaintiff a particular type of damage, and ruled that the intent here was to keep plaintiff as a toll-free service customer, not to drive him out of business. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant reversed.

"[T]he only intent by a defendant necessary to prove a case of fraud is the intent to induce reliance. Moreover, liability is affixed not only where the plaintiff's reliance is intended by the defendant but also where it is reasonably expected to occur." (92 C.A.4th 93.) (See 92 A.L.R.5th 1 [state regulation of telephone "slamming"].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.4

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

130 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.
a. Actual Reliance.
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 808

[§ 808] In General.

It must be shown that the plaintiff actually relied on the misrepresentation. (Schroeder v. Auto Driveaway Co. (1974) 11 C.3d 908, 917, 114 C.R. 622, 523 P.2d 662; Mirkin v. Wasserman (1993) 5 C.4th 1082, 1088, 23 C.R.2d 101, 858 P.2d 568, infra, §811; Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C.4th 1226, 1239, 1246, 44 C.R.2d 352, 900 P.2d 601, 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §177, citing the text; Elkind v. Woodward (1957) 152 C.A.2d 170, 175, 313 P.2d 66; Bernson v. Bowman (1960) 182 C.A.2d 697, 703, 6 C.R. 455; Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 C.A.3d 858, 866, 161 C.R. 342, citing the text; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1324, 1332, 231 C.R. 355, citing the text; Commonwealth Mortg. Assur. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 508, 520, 259 C.R. 425; see Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 C.A.4th 508, 534, 73 C.R.2d 708 [plaintiffs purchased building in reliance on incorrect formula for calculating tenant's rent]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §474 et seq.; Rest.2d, Torts §546 et seq.; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.13; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §239 et seq.; BAJI, No. 12.51; CACI, No. 1907; on pleading actual reliance, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §686; cf. Podlasky v. Price (1948) 87 C.A.2d 151, 162, 196 P.2d 608, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §306 [recovery denied, but decision based on both lack of reliance and unjustifiable reliance]; Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71 C.A.4th 1066, 1081, 84 C.R.2d 329 [no actual reliance where plaintiff sales representatives being investigated by TV network would have given same "sales pitch" had they known that defendants were TV reporters, rather than potential investors]; Furia v. Helm (2003) 111 C.A.4th 945, 4 C.R.3d 357 [contractor who successfully asserted in prior proceeding before Contractors' State License Board that he did not abandon construction project could not later claim abandonment in reliance on attorney's fraudulent advice; expenses contractor incurred in defending case before board were not caused by reliance on attorney's advice, because contractor did not rely on this advice].)

Thus, it must appear that the representation was "an immediate cause of his conduct which alters his legal relations," and that without such representation, "he would not, in all reasonable probability, have entered into the contract or other transaction." (Spinks v. Clark (1905) 147 C. 439, 444, 82 P. 45 [quoting Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence].)

However, the fraud need not be the sole cause; reliance is established where the representation substantially influenced plaintiff's choice, even though other influences operated as well. (See Rest.2d, Torts §546; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001), Fraud and Deceit §245.) And reliance may be shown by direct evidence or may be inferred from the circumstances. (Hunter v. McKenzie (1925) 197 C. 176, 185, 239 P. 1090; Peskin v. Squires (1957) 156 C.A.2d 240, 249, 319 P.2d 405.)

The words "as is" in a contract of sale do not give immunity from fraud, but are a factor to be considered in determining whether the buyer was misled, i.e., whether he or she relied on a seller's failure to disclose relevant information. (Driver v. Melone (1970) 11 C.A.3d 746, 752, 90 C.R. 98.)

Reliance may be indirect, as through an agent. In Thrifty-Tel v. Bezenek (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1559, 54 C.R.2d 468, supra, §720, plaintiff, a telephone long-distance carrier, sued defendants, the parents of teenage boys who employed computer technology in their efforts to crack plaintiff's system and make long-distance phone calls without paying. Plaintiff's complaint included a fraud cause of action on which it was successful at trial. Held, affirmed. As asserted by plaintiff, the use by defendants' sons of a confidential access code was the legal equivalent of a misrepresentation that they were authorized users of plaintiff's services, and plaintiff relied to its detriment on that misrepresentation when its computer automatically granted them access. (46 C.A.4th 1567.) It is true that no human received and acted on the misrepresentation. However, reliance may be indirect, and reliance by an agent may be imputed to the principal, even though the misrepresentation was never communicated to that principal. (46 C.A.4th 1568.) Plaintiff's computerized network can be viewed as an agent or the legal equivalent. Thus, plaintiff, through its agent, relied on the misrepresentation, and that reliance was detrimental because the access, in effect, permitted the boys to steal plaintiff's services. (46 C.A.4th 1568.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.20, 46, 56, 62(5), 65(4)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois (2004) 125 C.A.4th 513, 519, 23 C.R.3d 1, Supp., supra, §44 [plaintiff injured by exposure to asbestos did not state cause of action for fraud against company that had sold its asbestos business before plaintiff was exposed to product made by successor company; while original company may have knowingly misrepresented that product was safe and concealed its hazardous nature, plaintiff did not allege actual reliance on this misrepresentation]; Schauer v. Mandarin Gems of Calif. (2005) 125 C.A.4th 949, 960, 23 C.R.3d 233 [wife did not have cause of action for fraud against jewelry store that allegedly misrepresented value of engagement ring sold to husband; only husband could show requisite reliance on representation]; Boeken v. Philip Morris (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1640, 1659, 26 C.R.3d 638 [evidence was sufficient to establish actual reliance on tobacco company's fraudulent statements by smoker who contracted cancer, even though he could not recall words of specific advertising that made him decide to smoke; smoker remembered company's advertising themes with "fair certainty" and how they "enticed him to smoke with false images of health, sophistication, and machismo"]; Leegin Creative Leather Products v. Diaz (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1517, 1524, 33 C.R.3d 139 [employer failed to establish reliance on employee's allegedly fraudulent workers' compensation claim as inducing employer to forward claim to insurer; employer was required by both law and insurance policy to forward all claims, and thus had no choice but to do so]; 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.13.

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §730.

131 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.

a. Actual Reliance.

2. Investigation or Examination.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 809

[§ 809] Investigation or Examination.

(1) Recovery Denied. A plaintiff who has access to the necessary information and actually makes an independent investigation that the defendant does not hinder will be charged with knowledge of the facts that reasonable diligence would have disclosed and cannot claim reliance on the representations. (Hackleman v. Lyman (1920) 50 C.A. 323, 326, 195 P. 263; Beggs v. Spalding (1921) 56 C.A. 21, 27, 204 P. 429; Cameron v. Cameron (1948) 88 C.A.2d 585, 594, 199 P. 443, infra, §812; Vickerson v. Frey (1950) 100 C.A.2d 621, 626, 224 P.2d 126; Carlson v. Brickman (1952) 110 C.A.2d 237, 245, 242 P.2d 94; Elkind v. Woodward (1957) 152 C.A.2d 170, 176, 313 P.2d 66; see Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 C.A.4th 1411, 1418, 92 C.R.2d 577 [fraud action did not lie where, although purchaser of foreclosed property was unaware that second, senior lien remained on property, he did not rely on any misrepresentation by defendants but instead reached wrong conclusion based on own investigation]; Rest.2d, Torts §547; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §239; BAJI, No. 12.53.)

In Carpenter v. Hamilton (1936) 18 C.A.2d 69, 62 P.2d 1397, plaintiffs, buying a house, inspected it four times, going through nearly all rooms, and they employed an expert to look for dry rot and termites underneath the structure. But they did not discover other conspicuous defects, such as sunken floor levels and foundation, warped window frames, plaster cracks, and defective condition of the roof. Held, they could not rely on defendant's representations as to these matters, for having undertaken to inspect, they were bound by what was easily discoverable. (18 C.A.2d 71.)

(2) Recovery Allowed. The mere fact that some investigation was made does not conclusively show that the plaintiff relied on his or her own judgment. (Sullivan v. Helbing (1924) 66 C.A. 478, 483, 226 P. 803; Ferguson v. Koch (1928) 204 C. 342, 346, 268 P. 342; Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 C.A.4th 508, 527, 73 C.R.2d 708; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §252.) "An independent investigation or an examination of property does not preclude reliance on representations where the falsity of the statement is not apparent from an inspection, or the person making the representations has a superior knowledge, or the party relying thereon is not competent to judge the facts without expert assistance." (Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 748, 192 P.2d 935, infra, §830.)

Thus, where an inexperienced person buys property, a mere visit to the premises not accompanied by an expert, or a casual survey of books or equipment, does not preclude that person from showing reliance on the representations. (Dow

v. Swain (1899) 125 C. 674, 682, 58 P. 271; French v. Freeman (1923) 191 C. 579, 587, 217 P. 515; Willson v. Municipal Bond Co. (1936) 7 C.2d 144, 151, 59 P.2d 974; Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 412, 434, 435, 159 P.2d 958; Palladine v. Imperial Valley Farm Land Assn. (1924) 65 C.A. 727, 744, 225 P. 291; Payne v. Clow (1931) 114 C.A. 597, 600, 300 P. 138.)

Recovery will be allowed, despite plaintiff's independent investigation, where the defendant prevents plaintiff from learning the true facts. In Kramer v. Musser (1943) 57 C.A.2d 942, 944, 136 P.2d 74, recovery was upheld where plaintiff, an experienced businessman, inspected a house, but there was some evidence of deception preventing investigation of termite damage.

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.22(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

132 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.
a. Actual Reliance.
3. Time of Reliance.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 810

[§ 810] Time of Reliance.

(1) In General. Ordinarily, of course, the plaintiff must not know of the falsity of the representation at the time that he or she relies on it. (Kazerouni v. De Satnick (1991) 228 C.A.3d 871, 873, 279 C.R. 74.) An exception exists, however, where the defendant's actions have prevented plaintiff from acting on that knowledge. (Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 1108, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, supra, §770 [plaintiff allegedly "brainwashed" by defendant church before joining it despite learning of falsity of its representations].)

If the statements did not come to the knowledge of the plaintiff until after he or she acted, obviously plaintiff cannot claim reliance on them. (Bank of St. Helena v. Lilienthal-Brayton Co. (1928) 89 C.A. 258, 263, 264 P. 546.)

(2) Reliance at Inception Is Sufficient. It has been held sufficient that reliance exist at the formation or inception of the agreement, and that it need not continue until the agreement is executed. (Storage Services v. C.R. Oosterbaan (1989) 214 C.A.3d 498, 510, 262 C.R. 689.) In Jue v. Smiser (1994) 23 C.A.4th 312, 28 C.R.2d 242, plaintiffs executed an agreement to purchase defendants' home on April 28, escrow to close on June 11. Part of the inducement for plaintiffs' purchase was a brochure indicating that the home had been designed by a famous architect. Shortly before the close of escrow plaintiffs received information that there was no official proof that the home had been designed by this particular architect. Nevertheless, plaintiffs closed escrow, and then sued defendants for damages. The trial judge entered summary judgment for defendants on the ground that plaintiffs did not justifiably rely on the alleged fraud because, despite having actual knowledge of all material facts before the close of escrow, they voluntarily elected to proceed with the purchase. Held, reversed.

(a) Storage Services v. C.R. Oosterbaan, supra, held that reliance must be established at the time the initial contract was made. In other words, it is not necessary that a plaintiff establish continuing reliance until the contract is fully executed in order to maintain an action for damages. (23 C.A.4th 317.) There is no reason to deviate from or limit that holding. (23 C.A.4th 318; disapproving, to extent that it suggests to contrary, Kazerouni v. De Satnick, supra.)

(b) Defendants argued that Storage Services should be read as reconfirming the general rule that a party discovering fraud while the contract is still executory cannot complete performance and still sue for fraud. This argument is without merit. The Storage Services court did note that a party who learns of a fraud before a contract has been completed will not complete it in "reliance" on the fraud. However, that court also noted that, under Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 192 P.2d 935, infra, §830, a party's continued performance of an agreement does not constitute a waiver of his or her action for damages. (23 C.A.4th 317.)

(c) Sound public policy considerations support a rule allowing a purchaser to bring an action for damages even though he or she learns the truth prior to the close of escrow. That rule encourages sellers and their representatives to investigate and learn the true facts before property is offered for sale. And the possession and communication of that knowledge will benefit all parties in the course of negotiations leading to execution of a sales agreement. (23 C.A.4th 319.)

(d) "In addition, if we were to adopt the rule urged upon us by respondents, a buyer of real property who learns of a misrepresentation or a potential misrepresentation after a purchase contract is struck but before escrow closes would be faced with an extraordinarily difficult choice: (1) consummate the purchase and waive any claim for damages or (2) rescind and deal with the consequences of that choice. Among those consequences may be (1) problems in securing a return of moneys deposited with the escrow holder; (2) the loss of moneys spent to secure a loan and to meet other costs of acquisition, such as escrow fees; and (3) the risk of being sued by the seller and/or the seller's representatives. One who may be the victim of another's fraud should not be forced to make such a choice. That policy is especially strong where, as here, it is unclear whether or not a particular representation was (is), in fact, false at the time a choice is required, and the time period in which to choose is extraordinarily short." (23 C.A.4th 319.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

133 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.

a. Actual Reliance.

4. Securities Cases.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 811

[§ 811] Securities Cases.

In Mirkin v. Wasserman (1993) 5 C.4th 1082, 23 C.R.2d 101, 858 P.2d 568, the California Supreme Court declined to apply to common law fraud actions involving the sale of securities the "fraud-on-the-market" doctrine used in actions under the securities laws, reaffirming the requirement that actual reliance be pled and proved. Plaintiffs purported to represent all persons who purchased defendant corporation's shares of common stock during a prescribed period of time. Defendants were the corporation, its officers and directors, the accounting firm that audited its financial statements, and the underwriters of public offerings of the securities. The complaint alleged that defendants, after the stock experienced a dramatic drop in value, made numerous misrepresentations about the corporation's prospects and financial status in prospectuses, documents filed with the SEC, and in other public communications, thus allowing them to sell the securities for more than their true value. Plaintiffs conceded that they could not plead or prove that they had actually read or heard the alleged misrepresentations, but contended that the fraud-on-the-market doctrine obviates the need for this pleading and proof. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Fraud-on-the-market doctrine.

(1) To justify their failure to plead actual reliance on the alleged misrepresentation, plaintiffs argued that the price of securities traded in an open and developed market adjusts in response to material information, regardless of whether the information is true or false. Thus, misrepresentations are reflected in the market price of a security, and a person relying on the market price as indicating the actual value of a security is relying, although indirectly, on the misrepresentation. (5 C.4th 1089.)

(2) Based on this reasoning, which is sometimes referred to as the "fraud-on-the-market doctrine," the United States Supreme Court has held that it is appropriate to apply a presumption of reliance in actions brought under SEC Rule 10b-5. However, the characteristics of a private action under that Rule are not derived from, or identical to, the common law of deceit. The Rule was promulgated by the SEC under a broad statutory grant of authority, and the federal courts have gone far beyond the limits of the common law in imposing liability. (5 C.4th 1089, 1090.)

(3) Plaintiffs' argument is in essence a plea to incorporate the fraud-on-the-market doctrine into the common law of deceit. No appellate court has done so. (5 C.4th 1090.) And it is not necessary to do so in order to create a remedy for an unremedied wrong. Plaintiffs already have remedies under federal and state securities laws, both of which afford a presumption of reliance in actions based on material misrepresentations. (5 C.4th 1090.) Indeed, a class action on behalf of defendant corporation's investors under Rule 10b-5 has been filed in the federal court. Nevertheless, a presumption of reliance under state common law would offer plaintiffs a more favorable statute of limitations and the possibility of recovering punitive damages. Thus, to obtain these advantages, plaintiffs argued that California law already affords a presumption of reliance, and that if it does not, California should adopt one as a matter of policy. (5 C.4th 1091.)

(b) Requirement of reliance under California statutes. The deceit statutes (C.C. 1709, 1710) do not expressly require a showing of actual reliance, and plaintiffs contend that reliance is merely one method of proving causation, and can be pleaded by alleging that defendants' misrepresentations had the purpose and effect of causing plaintiffs to purchase or to sell, whether or not such representations come to plaintiffs' attention. This conclusion is unsound:

(1) The law of deceit in California is a mixture of statutory and common law; and C.C. 1709 and 1710 have been recognized as continuations of the common law. It is entirely consistent with these statutes to require plaintiffs to plead and prove the common law element of actual reliance. (5 C.4th 1091, 1092, citing Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, supra, §770, Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 728, 268 C.R. 779, 789 P.2d 960, infra, §821, and other cases.)

(2) C.C. 1711, dealing with deceit to defraud the public or a class of persons (see supra, §805), simply points out that one who makes false representations with fraudulent intent need not have any particular victim in mind. (5 C.4th 1092.)

(3) C.C. 3343, defining the measure of damages for one defrauded in the purchase, sale, or exchange of property (see infra, §1714), provides that lost profits are available only when the party reasonably relied on the fraud in entering into the transaction and in anticipating profits from the subsequent use or sale. This statute cannot plausibly be read as eliminating the element of reliance from the tort of deceit. (5 C.4th 1093.)

(c) Reliance on omission is susceptible of proof. Plaintiffs argued that actual reliance cannot logically be an element of a cause of action for deceit based on an omission because it is impossible to demonstrate reliance on something that one was not told. In support of this argument, plaintiffs relied on Affiliated Ute Citizens of Utah v. United States (1972) 406 U.S. 128, 92 S.Ct. 1456, 31 L.Ed.2d 741, in which the United States Supreme Court, in interpreting Rule 10b-5, created a presumption of reliance in a fact situation involving an omission. However, one can prove reliance on an omission by proving that, had the omitted information been disclosed, one would have been aware of it and behaved differently. Moreover, Rule 10b-5 is not sufficiently analogous to the law of fraud to justify adoption of the Ute presumption as California law. (5 C.4th 1093.)

(d) Consumer class actions. Plaintiffs relied heavily on two cases involving consumer class actions, Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 C.3d 800, 821, 94 C.R. 796, 484 P.2d 964, and Occidental Land v. Superior Court (1976) 18 C.3d 355, 361, 134 C.R. 388, 556 P.2d 750, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §269, which held that it would be appropriate to infer that each member of a class had actually relied on the defendant's alleged misrepresentations. However, the plaintiffs in each case specifically pleaded that the defendants had made identical representations to each class member. Thus, the holding in these decisions was that when the same material misrepresentations have actually been communicated to each member of a class, an inference of reliance arises as to the entire class. These decisions do not support an argument for presuming reliance on the part of a person who never read or heard the alleged misrepresentation, such as plaintiffs in the present case. (5 C.4th 1095.)

(e) Indirect communication cases. Plaintiffs next argued that an indirect communication of the alleged misrepresentation is sufficient to state a cause of action for deceit. Plaintiffs relied on Rest.2d, Torts §533, which provides that the maker of a fraudulent misrepresentation is liable to a person who acts in justifiable reliance on it if the misrepresentation, although not made directly to the person, is made to a third person and the maker intends or has reason to expect that its terms will be repeated or its substance communicated to the other. This provision, and the cases involving indirect communication, offer plaintiffs no assistance. As the Restatement provision indicates, a plaintiff who hears of a misrepresentation indirectly must still show justifiable reliance on it. In other words, to say that a plaintiff who relies on secondhand misrepresentations can state a cause of action for deceit is not to say, as plaintiffs contended, that reliance may be presumed. (5 C.4th 1096, citing Varwig v. Anderson-Behel Porsche/Audi (1977) 74 C.A.3d 578, 141 C.R. 539, supra, §806, and many other cases.)

(f) Should the law be changed?

(1) Plaintiffs contended that incorporating the fraud-on-the-market doctrine into California law is necessary to provide a remedy for victimized investors. However, investors do have these remedies: (a) In federal court actions, Rule 10b-5 affords a private right of action and a presumption of reliance. (5 C.4th 1101.) (b) Defrauded investors may also sue under the antifraud provisions of state securities law. (5 C.4th 1102, 1103, discussing Corp.C. 25400 and 25500, 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §443 et seq.)

(2) Plaintiffs pointed out that incorporation of the fraud-on-the-market doctrine would afford advantages beyond those that the relevant statutes provide. But the advantages appear to conflict with several specific legislative policy choices. (5 C.4th 1105.)

First, a more favorable statute of limitations is provided by federal law. But the shorter limitations period in the Corporations Code was specifically intended to counterbalance the tremendous advantage that a presumption of reliance affords to plaintiffs. (5 C.4th 1105.)

Second, the securities laws do not permit an award of punitive damages. However: (a) The federal decisions reflect a long-standing consensus that the burden on the securities business from punitive damages outweighs their contribution to enforcement of securities laws. (5 C.4th 1106.) (b) Actual damages alone represent a potentially crushing liability in securities fraud cases, and the class action mechanism tends to ensure that the securities laws will be enforced. (5 C.4th 1106.) (c) The prospect of punitive damages may discourage settlement of marginal claims. (5 C.4th 1107.)

(3) To incorporate the fraud-on-the-market doctrine into the law of deceit would permit plaintiffs to avoid two important limitations that the federal courts have imposed on cases brought under Rule 10b-5. A plaintiff must plead and prove (a) actual purchase or sale of securities, and (b) that the defendant had scienter. "These requirements ... reflect a deliberate effort, guided by judicial experience with securities fraud cases, to balance the advantages associated with a presumption of reliance against the danger of speculative and harassing claims." (5 C.4th 1107.)

(g) Conclusion. "[T]o incorporate the fraud-on-the-market doctrine into the common law of deceit would only bring about difficulties that the state Legislature and the federal courts have apparently attempted to avoid. Nor would the proposed expansion of the common law of deceit offer benefits sufficient to offset the difficulties, since the state and federal securities laws already offer remedies that give plaintiffs the benefit of a presumption of reliance. Under these circumstances, there is insufficient justification for upsetting the policy choices that the existing laws reflect. Accordingly, we decline to do so." (5 C.4th 1108.) (See Gawara v. United States Brass Corp. (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1341, 1348, 74 C.R.2d 663 [rejecting fraud-on-the-market doctrine and holding that plaintiff in economic loss cases must show reliance; following Mirkin and distinguishing Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, infra, §822, on ground that it involved personal injury loss]; Small v. Fritz Cos. (2003) 30 C.4th 167, 173, 183, 132 C.R.2d 490, 65 P.3d 1255 [policy considerations do not justify categorical denial of fraud cause of action by those allegedly induced by corporate misrepresentations to hold stock rather than selling it; however, actual reliance on misrepresentations must be pleaded with specificity].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Occidental Land case:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §303.

134 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.
b. Right To Rely (Justifiable Reliance).
1. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 812

[§ 812] In General.

The plaintiff must show not only actual reliance (supra, §808), but justifiable reliance; i.e., that the circumstances were such as to make it reasonable for plaintiff to accept the defendant's statements without an independent inquiry or investigation. (Kahn v. Lischner (1954) 128 C.A.2d 480, 489, 275 P.2d 539, infra, §815; Bank of America v. Vannini (1956) 140 C.A.2d 120, 131, 295 P.2d 102; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 C.A.3d 1324, 1332, 231 C.R. 355, citing the text; see Pacesetter Homes v. Brodtkin (1970) 5 C.A.3d 206, 210, 85 C.R. 39, citing the text [statements by vendor about future rentals were hedged with significant qualifications ("if" and "we contemplate"); trial judge properly concluded that purchaser could not justifiably rely]; Hadland v. NN Investors Life Ins. Co. (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1578, 1586, 30 C.R.2d 88, citing the text [plaintiff insureds could not justifiably rely on representation by insurer's associate that new policy would be as good as or better than old policy where this was patently at odds with express provisions of written contract]; Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 C.A.4th 620, 639, 41 C.R.2d 329, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §211 [at-will employee, who had no reasonable expectation of employment for any particular length of time, could not justifiably rely on statements by employer as to availability of other positions within company, so as not to seek other employment]; Rest.2d, Torts §537 et seq.; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §474 et seq.; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §239; BAJI, No. 12.52; CACI, No. 1908; on pleading justifiable reliance, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§688, 689; on effect of negligent failure to read an instrument or other paper, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §301.) However, negligence by plaintiff in failing to discover the falsity of a statement is no defense provided the misrepresentation was intentional rather than negligent. The issue is whether the plaintiff was justified in believing the representation in the light of his or her own knowledge and experience. (Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 684, 11 C.R.3d 807 [trier of fact could reasonably conclude that smoker's reliance on tobacco companies' misrepresentations concerning health risks was justifiable based on her lack of sophistication, cigarette addiction, and lack of information to contrary].) Whether reliance is reasonable is a question of fact. (Blankenheim v. E.F. Hutton & Co. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1463, 1473, 1475, 266 C.R. 593.)

Issues of justifiable reliance and the effect of actual investigation are likely to arise in actions by a spouse, after a dissolution of marriage and property settlement, to set aside the property settlement agreement for fraud. (See Jorgensen v. Jorgensen (1948) 32 C.2d 13, 22, 193 P.2d 728.) In Cameron v. Cameron (1948) 88 C.A.2d 585, 199 P.2d 443, for example, plaintiff contended that defendant, her former husband, had induced her to sign the agreement by misrepresenting that his interest in a partnership was his separate property, and by misstating its value. Relief was denied on two alternative grounds: (1) Her attorneys were aware of the problems, made their own investigations, were not denied access to any information, and advised her to sign the agreement. (2) Even if her attorneys did not fully or competently carry out their investigation and did not ascertain all material facts, their neglect was chargeable to her and defendant was not responsible for it. (88 C.A.2d 594.)

In the absence of a special relationship between the parties, a private person is not entitled to rely on the opinion of another private person concerning the future decision of a public body. (Borba v. Thomas (1977) 70 C.A.3d 144, 154, 138 C.R. 565.)

In a political campaign, a plaintiff who alleges that the defendant disseminated false information to prospective voters obviously had knowledge of its falsity and could not justifiably have relied on it. (Gold v. Los Angeles Democratic League (1975) 49 C.A.3d 365, 374, 122 C.R. 732; see Chavez v. Citizens For a Fair Farm Labor Law (1978) 84 C.A.3d 77, 80, 148 C.R. 278 [following Gold].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.22(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Dore v. Arnold Worldwide (2006) 39 C.4th 384, 393, 46 C.R.3d 668, 139 P.3d 56 [plaintiff-employee admitted signing defendant-employer's letter stating that employment was at will and terminable at any time; as matter of law, admission defeated plaintiff's contention that he reasonably understood defendant to have promised him long-term employment]; Hinesley v. Oakshade Town Center (2005) 135 C.A.4th 289, 297, 37 C.R.3d 364 [shopping center tenant failed to show that he justifiably relied on false representations by landlord's agent that certain major chain businesses had signed leases in vicinity of leased premises; lease provision specifically disavowed reliance on these representations, and tenant failed to question, clarify, or confirm agent's statements, to notify his attorney of agent's statements, or to seek to modify provision]; Manderville v. PCG&S Group (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1486, 1501, 55 C.R.3d 59 [exculpatory provisions in real estate sales agreement did not preclude, as matter of law, showing justifiable reliance as element of fraud claim; under C.C. 1668 (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §660), contract provisions exempting party from responsibility for fraud are against public policy]; OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 835, 863, 68 C.R.3d 828, citing the text [evidence was sufficient to show that purchasers of company's promissory notes justifiably relied on representations in investment bank's offering memorandum, which failed to disclose negative information, despite evidence of availability of negative information from other sources and purported disclaimers in memorandum; bank's fraud was proximate cause of purchasers' out-of-pocket losses, even though purchasers were aware of company's distressed conditions, where company would not have collapsed if it had assets represented in memorandum].

Reasonableness of reliance as affected by plaintiff's own circumstances: Whether reliance is reasonable in an intentional fraud case is not tested against the standard of precaution or minimum knowledge of a hypothetical reasonable person. (Boeken v. Philip Morris (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1640, 1666, 26 C.R.3d 638 [evidence was sufficient to establish that reliance on tobacco company's fraudulent statements by smoker who contracted cancer was justifiable; evidence supported conclusion that company knew and intended that addicted smokers, like plaintiff, would use its misrepresentations about health dangers of smoking to engage in denial and rationalization].)

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§732, 733.

135 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
 B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
 5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.
 b. Right To Rely (Justifiable Reliance).
 2. No General Duty To Investigate.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 813

[§ 813] No General Duty To Investigate.

(1) In General. The rule of unjustifiable reliance (supra, §812) is seldom applied in practice, for the old notion of "caveat emptor" is thoroughly discredited. There is ordinarily no duty to investigate, and the former defense of contributory negligence of the plaintiff was held not to be a defense to the intentional tort of fraud. (Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 414, 115 P.2d 977; Anderson v. Thacher (1946) 76 C.A.2d 50, 70, 172 P.2d 533; Ashburn v. Miller (1958) 161 C.A.2d 71, 79, 326 P.2d 229; Arthur L. Sachs v. Oceanside (1984) 151 C.A.3d 315, 323, 198 C.R. 483, supra, §241, quoting the text; see Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C.4th 1226, 1239, 1240, 44 C.R.2d 352, 900 P.2d 601 [plaintiff's negligence in failing to discover falsity of statement is no defense when misrepresentation is intentional]; Charpentier v. Los Angeles Rams Football Co. (1999) 75 C.A.4th 301, 322, 89 C.R.2d 115 [jury could find that, in deciding to purchase season ticket, football fan could justifiably rely on promise that club had no plans to move in following seasons]; Rest.2d, Torts §§540, 545A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §474 et seq.; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §239; BAJI, No. 12.52; CACI, No. 1908.) (On present system of comparative negligence, see infra, §1327 et seq.)

(2) Opportunity To Investigate Does Not Preclude Reliance. The mere existence of an opportunity to investigate, or of sources of information, will not preclude the plaintiff from relying on the representations. (Teague v. Hall (1916) 171 C. 668, 670, 154 P. 851; McMahon v. Grimes (1929) 206 C. 526, 536, 275 P. 440; Williams v. Myers (1930) 110 C.A. 265, 282, 294 P. 61; Jackson v. Meinhardt (1929) 99 C.A. 283, 287, 278 P. 462; Seeger v. Odell, supra, 18 C.2d 415; Milmoe v. Dixon (1950) 101 C.A.2d 257, 260, 225 P.2d 273; Lobdell v. Miller (1952) 114 C.A.2d 328, 340, 250 P.2d 357; Nathanson v. Murphy (1955) 132 C.A.2d 363, 369, 282 P.2d 174; Perkins v. Ketchum (1962) 211 C.A.2d 245, 251, 27 C.R. 278, citing the text; Winn v. McCulloch Corp. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 663, 671, 131 C.R. 597; see Clement v. Smith (1993) 16 C.A.4th 39, 45, 19 C.R.2d 676 [insured was justified in relying on agent's representation that previously purchased policy covered breach of contract actions].)

In Blackman v. Howes (1947) 82 C.A.2d 275, 185 P.2d 1019, the representation was that a filled lot was solid. The court observed that the truth could be determined only by an expert, and that "a buyer is not required to employ experts to investigate matters of a technical nature, as to which the seller has full knowledge and the buyer none, and if for this reason the investigation is incomplete he (the buyer) may show that he relied upon the representation as to the matters which he did not investigate." (82 C.A.2d 280.)

Blackman was followed in Hefferan v. Freebairn (1950) 34 C.2d 715, 214 P.2d 386, where the representation was that a coffee shop sold to plaintiff would net over a specified amount a year. Plaintiff had never been in the restaurant business, although he inspected some records, he was not shown all of them, and defendant falsely explained a discrepancy. (34 C.2d 720.)

In Mariani v. Schonfeld (1954) 126 C.A.2d 187, 271 P.2d 940, plaintiffs purchased a bowling alley in reliance on a false statement of the operations of the business, showing a profit instead of an actual loss. Held, recovery was proper despite the fact that plaintiffs had investigated bowling alleys generally, checked the daily receipts of this business and worked there for a time; many concealed expenses were not apparent, and an accountant's statement was not then available. (126 C.A.2d 189.)

(3) When Duty To Investigate Arises. A plaintiff who is aware of circumstances indicating that defendant's representations may be false has a duty to investigate the truth of the facts represented. In Bishop Creek Lodge v. Scira (1996) 46 C.A.4th 1721, 54 C.R.2d 745, defendants, the owners of property burdened by a restrictive covenant, were sued by the owners of the property benefited by the covenant for its alleged violation. As part of that action, defendants filed a cross-complaint, accompanied by a lis pendens. Plaintiff, knowing of the lis pendens, purchased the property from the party benefited by the covenant. While the purchase was in escrow, the parties to the original lawsuit entered into a settlement, which included withdrawal of the lis pendens and a stipulated judgment that the covenant was not to be enforced. Although plaintiff had insisted that the lis pendens be removed, he did not know about the agreement not to enforce the covenant, and he brought a fraud action against defendants to enforce it. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed. The lis pendens did not justify plaintiff in relying on defendants' failure to disclose. Instead, it gave him actual knowledge that mandated that he inquire further into precisely how the lis pendens was cleared. (46 C.A.4th 1736.)

Also, even where the original reliance is justified, if facts subsequently come to the plaintiff's notice that should arouse an inquiry, failure to investigate may result in the bar of the statute of limitations being interposed (under C.C.P. 338(d), 3 years after discovery of the fraud), or denial of equitable relief for laches. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §602; 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §§16, 18.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.22(1)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Manderville v. PCG&S Group (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1486, 1502, 55 C.R.3d 59 [lack of due diligence by buyers in investigating zoning laws did not preclude, as matter of law, showing of justifiable reliance on sellers' alleged misrepresentations that property could be subdivided]. (3) When Duty To Investigate Arises. Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §659.

136 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
 B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.
 5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.
 b. Right To Rely (Justifiable Reliance).
 3. Constructive Notice Is Not a Bar.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 814

[§ 814] Constructive Notice Is Not a Bar.

(1) In General. The plaintiff is not barred by constructive notice, e.g., where public records disclose the falsity of representations; the recording acts are designed for the protection of bona fide purchasers, not persons guilty of fraud. (Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 C.A.2d 857, 864, 297 P.2d 674; Grange Co. v. Simmons (1962) 203 C.A.2d 567, 576, 21 C.R. 757; see Jackson v. Meinhardt (1929) 99 C.A. 283, 287, 278 P. 462 [statement that land was corner lot, actionable even though recorded map showed the contrary]; Brown v. Oxtoby (1941) 45 C.A.2d 702, 706, 114 P.2d 622 [representation by vendor that title was clear except for first trust deed, actionable even though record showed second trust deed]; Mills v. Hellinger (1950) 100 C.A.2d 482, 487, 224 P.2d 34 [representation that land comprised 9 acres, actionable even though record showed true area of 6.6 acres]; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §258.)

(2) State of Plaintiff's Own Title. It has been occasionally stated that an owner of property is conclusively presumed to know the state of his or her own title, and hence cannot rely on misrepresentations concerning it. (See Robins v. Hope (1881) 57 C. 493, 495.) This theory was repudiated and the Robins case overruled in Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 115 P.2d 977. A mortgage on plaintiffs' lot was foreclosed. To induce them to refrain from redeeming it, defendants falsely represented that defendants had purchased it at an execution sale, and prevailed on plaintiffs to execute an oil lease to one of defendants. Held, plaintiffs could rescind. (See Rogers v. Warden (1942) 20 C.2d 286, 288, 125 P.2d 7 [following Seeger]; Stoll v. Selander (1947) 81 C.A.2d 286, 292, 183 P.2d 935 [same]; Hayter v. Fulmor (1949) 92 C.A.2d 392, 399, 206 P.2d 1101 [same]; Barder v. McClung (1949) 93 C.A.2d 692, 697, 209 P.2d 808 [same]; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 197 [Seeger].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Manderville v. PCG&S Group (2007) 146 C.A.4th 1486, 1502, 55 C.R.3d 59 [buyers' failure to examine county general plan was not defense to action based on sellers' alleged misrepresentation that property could be subdivided].

137 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

5. Causation: Reliance and Right To Rely.

b. Right To Rely (Justifiable Reliance).

4. Exceptionally Gullible or Careless Person.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 815

[§ 815] Exceptionally Gullible or Careless Person.

Representations are sometimes made that are too preposterous to be believed by a person of ordinary intelligence, yet an exceptionally ignorant, careless, or gullible person may in fact rely on them. The decisions on this point are not always consistent, but the modern tendency is to reject the "reasonable person" standard, and to permit the deluded plaintiff to recover, particularly where the defendant knew of his or her weakness and took advantage of it. (See Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 415, 115 P.2d 977; Ashburn v. Miller (1958) 161 C.A.2d 71, 79, 326 P.2d 229; Carroll v. Dungey (1963) 223 C.A.2d 247, 256, 35 C.R. 681; Hartong v. Partake (1968) 266 C.A.2d 942, 964, 72 C.R. 722; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §249.)

If, however, the falsity of the statements should be apparent even to the plaintiff's limited intelligence, or is obvious to the senses, e.g., where a cursory glance at property shown to the plaintiff would disclose the truth, reliance is not justified. (See Rest.2d, Torts §541.) It has also been suggested that where a person deals with another who was guilty of previous fraudulent representations to that person, a greater degree of caution should be employed. (Turman v. Holmes (1938) 29 C.A.2d 198, 206, 84 P.2d 225.)

These loose and somewhat contradictory propositions were examined in the light of an unusual factual background in Kahn v. Lischner (1954) 128 C.A.2d 480, 275 P.2d 539. "It is true that a victim in a fraud action is not necessarily held to the standard of precaution or of minimum knowledge of a hypothetically reasonable man. The law under appropriate circumstances will protect the gullible and the ignorant from those who would take advantage of them, even where persons of normal intelligence would not have been misled." But, "if the conduct of the complaining party in the light of his own intelligence and information, or ready availability of information, was manifestly unreasonable, he will be denied a recovery." (128 C.A.2d 489.) In Kahn, defendant vendor, living in Los Angeles, contracted to sell Humboldt County timberland to plaintiff purchaser, living in Portland. The negotiations were by mail and the parties never met. Later, defendant breached by a sale to a third person for $ 7,500. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover $ 5,000 damages. Defendant vendor's main defense was that plaintiff purchaser had falsely represented the value of the property, by stating, with some qualification, that she had been offered a similar tract for $ 2,000. The court first observed that "[t]here is a plethora of cases in which owners have misled prospective purchasers as to value in order to induce the latter to buy. But cases are rare indeed, and appellant has cited none, where an owner complains that he was deceived as to the value of his own property by a designing purchaser. This may be because the law generally assumes one will have some knowledge of the value of that which he owns." (128 C.A.2d 487.) Here, assuming that the statement was an actionable misrepresentation, there was no justifiable reliance on it. Defendant, a professional man, knew that property values were going up and should have made inquiry as to values; though the property was distant from him, it was also distant from the purchaser. (128 C.A.2d 488.)

The Restatement offers the following observations: "Although the plaintiff's reliance on the misrepresentation must be justifiable ... , this does not mean that his conduct must conform to the standard of the reasonable man. Justification is a matter of the qualities and characteristics of the particular plaintiff, and the circumstances of the particular case, rather than the application of a community standard of conduct to all cases. ... Cases frequently arise in which negligent reliance is justified, when the defendant knows of the plaintiff's incapacity to conform to the standard of conduct of a reasonable man, or of his credulity, gullibility or other tendency to depart from it, and deliberately practices upon the deficiencies of the plaintiff in order to deceive him." (Rest.2d, Torts §545A, Comment b.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

138 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

6. Resulting Damage.

a. Pecuniary or Property Loss.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 816

[§ 816] Pecuniary or Property Loss.

The final element in actionable fraud is damage resulting from reliance on the misrepresentation. (C.C. 1709; Guttermann v. Gally (1933) 131 C.A. 647, 651, 21 P.2d 1000; Gaffney v. Graf (1925) 73 C.A. 622, 626, 238 P. 1054; Billings v. Farm Dev. Co. (1925) 74 C.A. 254, 259, 240 P. 298; Tsang v. Kan (1947) 78 C.A.2d 275, 281, 177 P.2d 630; Hill v. Wrather (1958) 158 C.A.2d 818, 825, 323 P.2d 567; Bernson v. Bowman (1960) 182 C.A.2d 697, 704, 6 C.R. 455; Lane v. Davis (1959) 172 C.A.2d 302, 307, 342 P.2d 267, 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §687; Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1038, 1049, 281 C.R. 640, citing the text; Service by Medallion v. Clorox Co. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1807, 1818, 52 C.R.2d 650; see Agnew v. Parks (1959) 172 C.A.2d 756, 768, 343 P.2d 118 [allegations were insufficient where damages were highly speculative]; Goehring v. Chapman University (2004) 121 C.A.4th 353, 365, 17 C.R.3d 39 [summary adjudication for defendant law school was proper where evidence showed that plaintiff student's damages were caused by academic dismissal due to poor academic performance, rather than defendant's alleged misrepresentations on consequences of its lack of accreditation]; Building Permit Consultants v. Mazur (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1400, 1415, 19 C.R.3d 562 [fraud without damage is not actionable]; Rest.2d, Torts §549(1) ["The recipient of a fraudulent misrepresentation is entitled to recover as damages in an action of deceit against the maker the pecuniary loss to him of which the misrepresentation is a legal cause"]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §470; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §272 et seq.; 11 A.L.R.5th 88 [right to recover for mental or emotional distress in fraud action]; BAJI, No. 12.31; CACI, No. 1900.) (On pleading damage, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§687, 894; on measure of damages, see infra, §1710 et seq.)

Typically, the resulting damage is pecuniary or property loss. (See Hull v. Sheehan (1952) 108 C.A.2d 804, 239 P.2d 704 [no proof by plaintiff purchaser that property was worth less than he paid for it]; Bramaric v. Churich (1951) 101 C.A.2d 846, 850, 226 P.2d 657 [sale of apartment house; lot area less than represented but no evidence that property less valuable or rentals less than previously received]; Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1538, 1542, 50 C.R.2d 395 [plaintiff failed to prove out-of-pocket loss, i.e., that price he paid for house was greater than actual value].) Thus, in Gonsalves v. Hodgson (1951) 38 C.2d 91, 237 P.2d 656, an action for deceit in estimating the cost of construction of a vessel, recovery was denied. Plaintiff made no showing of its value, and the fact that it cost more than he expected to pay was not proof of injury or damage. (38 C.2d 101.) Also, in Auerbach v. Great Western Bank (1999) 74 C.A.4th 1172, 1184, 88 C.R.2d 718, the court held that a borrower's continuing to make payments on a preexisting note in reliance on the lender's fraudulent promise to negotiate in good faith to modify the loan did not constitute damages necessary for a fraud action.

However, where rescission is sought, pleading and proof of material injury is sufficient, without a showing of loss of a specific sum as damages. (See 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §303; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §506.)

Sometimes a judgment is obtained by fraud practiced in a judicial proceeding that has the effect of preventing a fair or "adversary" trial of the case. This is known as "extrinsic fraud" and the appropriate remedy is a suit in equity to set aside the judgment. An ordinary action of deceit will fail because the judgment, until set aside, refutes any showing of damage, and it cannot be collaterally attacked in the deceit action. (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §214 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.25, 59 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Leegin Creative Leather Products v. Diaz (2005) 131 C.A.4th 1517, 1525, 33 C.R.3d 139 [employer failed to show damages resulting from employee's allegedly fraudulent workers' compensation claim; damages resulting from employer's payment of higher insurance premiums were speculative, given that claim had not yet been adjudicated, and costs of replacing employee because of her absence would have been necessary regardless of whether claim was false]; Fladeboe v. American Isuzu Motors (2007) 150 C.A.4th 42, 64, 58 C.R.3d 225 [although commonly owned automobile dealerships failed to disclose to manufacturer that one dealership had dissolved and the other used first's dealer identification number, manufacturer could not recover damages either for warranty reimbursements it made or for dealer incentives it paid as to cars not existing in first dealership's inventory at time of dissolution; manufacturer would have made those payments to some entity in any event, and deception without resulting loss is not actionable fraud]; Patrick v. Alacer Corp. (2008) 167 C.A.4th 995, 1016, 84 C.R.3d 642 [corporate cofounder could not allege causal connection between any misrepresentations by three corporate trustees that induced cofounder to vote them onto board of directors and her resulting damages; because trust had five trustees, these three could have installed themselves as directors without cofounder's vote]. Lane case:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §731.

Pleading damages:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§731, 941. Where rescission is sought:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §545.

Equitable relief:

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §215 et seq.

139 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

B. Fraudulent Misrepresentation.

6. Resulting Damage.

b. Other Elements.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 817

[§ 817] Other Elements.

Ordinarily, the damage is pecuniary or property loss (see supra, §816); the great majority of fraud cases involve transfer of property or payment of money in reliance on the misrepresentation. However, this is not necessarily the case. For example, a wife was held to have a cause of action against a third person who, by false representations, induced the plaintiff to mistreat her husband, causing them to separate. (Work v. Campbell (1912) 164 C. 343, 348, 128 P. 943; see 1 Cal. L. Rev. 296 [Work]; on representations involving promise of marriage, see supra, §784 et seq.; on right to recover for mental or emotional distress in fraud action, see 11 A.L.R.5th 88.)

In O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 798, 142 C.R. 487, plaintiff tenant in defendant's apartment complex was raped in her apartment. She sued on two causes of action--negligence and fraud--alleging that defendants were aware of previous rapes of tenants, and had composite drawings of the suspect furnished by the local police; that they nevertheless assured plaintiff at the time of renting that the premises were safe and patrolled by professional guards, and did not inform her of the previous crimes; and that the person who raped her was the one depicted in the composite drawings. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer reversed. The representations of safety were either of fact or of opinions of one with presumed superior knowledge. (75 C.A.3d 805, citing the text.) And, although a deceit action usually seeks recovery of pecuniary loss, this is not a limitation. (75 C.A.3d 805, citing Work v. Campbell, supra, and Rest.2d, Torts §557A.) (For the holding on negligence liability, see infra, §1142.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

140 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
1. Nature of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 818

[§ 818] Nature of Tort.

(1) In General. Where the defendant makes false statements, honestly believing that they are true, but without reasonable ground for that belief, he or she may be liable for negligent misrepresentation. (See Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 487, 488, 275 P.2d 15, infra, §1711 [holding against plaintiff on the facts]; Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, infra, §822; Cicone v. URS Corp. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 194, 211, 227 C.R. 887, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §328; Anderson v. Deloitte & Touche LLP (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1468, 1476, 66 C.R.2d 512, infra, §820.)

If, however, defendant's belief is both honest and reasonable, the misrepresentation is innocent and there is ordinarily no tort liability. (See infra, §826.)

(2) Elements. BAJI lists the elements of a claim of fraud by negligent misrepresentation as follows:

(a) "The defendant made a representation as to a past or existing material fact."

(b) "The representation was untrue."

(c) "Regardless of [his] [her] actual belief the defendant made the representation without any reasonable ground for believing it to be true."

(d) "The representation was made with the intent to induce plaintiff to rely upon it."

(e) "The plaintiff was unaware of the falsity of the representation; must have acted in reliance upon the truth of the representation and was justified in relying upon the representation."

(f) "[A]s a result of the reliance upon the truth of the representation, the plaintiff sustained damage." (BAJI, No. 12.45; see Byrum v. Brand (1990) 219 C.A.3d 926, 940, 268 C.R. 609 [approving giving of instruction]; Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 967, 132 C.R.2d 635 [negligent misrepresentation requires false statement of past or existing material fact]; BAJI, No. 16.50.3 [form of special verdict--negligent misrepresentation]; CACI, No. 1903 [negligent misrepresentation], CACI, No. VF-1903 [form of special verdict--negligent misrepresentation].)

(3) Commentary. The commentary on the tort is considerable. (See, e.g., Dobbs, The Law of Torts §472; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.6; 77 Harv. L. Rev. 773; 22 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 761 [The Expanding Scope of the Tort of Negligent Misrepresentation: Are Publishers Next?]; 39 Santa Clara L. Rev. 905 [liability for negligent misrepresentation of system operator posting third person's misstatements on electronic bulletin board]; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 77 [discussing distinction and problem of liability for personal injuries resulting from reliance on negligent misrepresentation]; 28 So. Cal. L. Rev. 193; 66 So. Cal. L. Rev. 2251 [negligent misrepresentation of real estate appraiser]; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 464; 56 A.L.R.4th 1162 [newspaper's liability to reader-investor for negligent misstatement of financial news]; 39 Proof of Facts 3d 309 [real estate broker's negligent misrepresentation as to condition or value of realty]; 43 Proof of Facts 3d 407 [negligent misrepresentation by land sales broker]; 47 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [negligent misrepresentation in employment reference].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.13(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General.

Cicone case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §304.

(3) Commentary. See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.6.

141 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
2. Tort as Form of Deceit.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 819

[§ 819] Tort as Form of Deceit.

By statutory definition, negligent misrepresentation is a form of deceit. (See C.C. 1710(2) [defining "deceit" as including "[t]he assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true"]; C.C. 1572(2) [defining "actual fraud" as including "[t]he positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true"].) And California courts generally treat it as such. (See McMahon v. Grimes (1929) 206 C. 526, 534, 275 P. 440; Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 487, 488, 275 P.2d 15; De Zemplen v. Home Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1963) 221 C.A.2d 197, 205, 34 C.R. 334; Continental Airlines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 388, 403, 264 C.R. 779, citing the text.)

Hence, the broad statements that "scienter" is an element of every cause of action for deceit, and that an "intent to deceive" is essential, are untrue, because neither is a requisite of negligent misrepresentation. (Spreckels v. Gorrill (1907) 152 C. 383, 387, 92 P. 1011; Clar v. Board of Trade (1958) 164 C.A.2d 636, 644, 331 P.2d 89; De Zemplen v. Home Fed. Savings & Loan Assn., supra, 221 C.A.2d 206; Hale v. George A. Hormel & Co. (1975) 48 C.A.2d 73, 84, 121 C.R. 144, citing the text; Roberts v. Ball, Hunt, Hart, Brown & Baerwitz (1976) 57 C.A.3d 104, 111, 128 C.R. 901, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §327; Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 C.A.4th 596, 599, 603, 15 C.R.3d 565; see Intrieri v. Superior Court (2004) 117 C.A.4th 72, 85, 12 C.R.3d 97 [although elements of causes of action for fraud and negligent misrepresentation are similar, fraud is intentional tort while negligent misrepresentation is not].)

In jurisdictions in which negligent misrepresentation is considered a form of negligence governed by the rules of negligence liability, comparative negligence would limit recovery. (See Rest.2d, Torts §552A; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §472; 2 Harper, James & Gray 2d §7.6.) California, classifying the tort as a form of deceit, does not recognize the defense in these cases. (See Howell v. Courtesy Chevrolet (1971) 16 C.A.3d 391, 403, 94 C.R. 33, quoting the text; Carroll v. Gava (1979) 98 C.A.3d 892, 897, 159 C.R. 778 [in buying and selling transactions, "application of comparative fault principles, designed to mitigate the often catastrophic consequences of personal injury, would only create unnecessary confusion and complexity"]; Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 C.A.3d 780, 789, 231 C.R. 72 [employee of mortgage company was justified in relying on colleague's loan brochure, even though independent investigation would have uncovered error in appraiser's report]; 22 A.L.R.5th 464 [applicability of comparative negligence doctrine to negligent misrepresentation actions].) Thus, in Van Meter v. Bent Const. Co. (1956) 46 C.2d 588, 297 P.2d 644, plaintiff made a subcontract bid to clear a reservoir basin, relying on defendant contractor's representation as to the area involved. The contractors believed their representation to be true, but it was not warranted by their information. Plaintiff relied on it, but did not exercise reasonable care to ascertain the area. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover the expense of the additional work. (46 C.2d 595.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.13(3)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Oakland Raiders v. Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum (2006) 144 C.A.4th 1175, 1184, 51 C.R.3d 144, Supp., infra, §830 [term "fraud" may be used to describe not just intentional representation, but also certain misrepresentations that are merely negligent; negligent misrepresentation, though separate and distinct tort, is "species of the tort of deceit"].

Scienter is not required: See Melican v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2007) 151 C.A.4th 168, 182, 59 C.R.3d 672 [elements of negligent misrepresentation are similar to those of intentional fraud except for requirement of scienter; plaintiff need not allege that statement was intentionally false statement, but simply that defendant lacked any reasonable ground for believing its truth].

Roberts case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §303. Comparative negligence is not defense: See 2 Harper, James & Gray 3d §7.6.

142 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
3. Scope of Tort.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 820

[§ 820] Scope of Tort.

The difference in the language of the code sections defining negligent misrepresentation as a form of deceit (see C.C. 1572(2), 1710(2), supra, §819) was emphasized in Williams v. Spazier (1933) 134 C.A. 340, 25 P.2d 851. Defendants, casual acquaintances of plaintiffs, misrepresented the value of stock and financial condition of a corporation, and plaintiffs, in reliance, bought shares from the corporation. Defendants were not connected with the company; they believed their statements were true, having heard them from an officer, but they did not investigate. The court reasoned that if these had been parties to a contract, it might be concluded that defendants were guilty of fraud under C.C. 1572(2) because they had no information "sufficient to warrant" their statements; but because they were third parties, they would only be liable under C.C. 1710(2) if they had "no reasonable ground for believing" the statements. The lower court had made no finding on this latter issue, and for that reason the judgment was reversed. (134 C.A. 347.)

Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C.2d 481, 275 P.2d 15, apparently treating the statutory language as substantially similar, carefully analyzes the possible theories of recovery in this confused field. Plaintiffs contracted to purchase two lots for the construction of an apartment house. They engaged defendant to make a soil test, and he reported that the land was normal without more than 12 to 16 inches of fill. In reliance, plaintiffs contracted for construction of the building, agreeing to pay an extra charge for unforeseen conditions of fill. The land actually contained areas of 3 to 6 feet of fill, and the foundation cost over $ 3,000 extra. Plaintiffs were awarded judgment in the trial court for that amount, on three theories: (a) strict liability for breach of warranty; (b) deceit; and (c) negligence. Held:

(a) No strict liability for breach of warranty. "For historical reasons warranties have become identified primarily with transactions involving the sale or furnishing of tangible chattels ... , but they are not confined to such transactions. Strict liability has also been imposed for innocent misrepresentations of facts that the maker purported to know, that the recipient relied on in matters affecting his economic interests, and that the maker positively affirmed under circumstances that justify the conclusion that he assumed responsibility for their accuracy." (43 C.2d 486.) Here, however, defendant was not a seller of property, and there were no facts to show that he had assumed responsibility for the accuracy of his statements. Hence, "the general rule is applicable that those who sell their services for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, and personal affairs are not liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct." (43 C.2d 487.)

(b) Liability for deceit (negligent misrepresentation). Defendant held himself out as an expert, plaintiffs hired him to supply information on matters of which they were ignorant, and his statement was either a representation of fact or an actionable opinion. The representation or opinion need not be made with knowledge of actual falsity, but only as an assertion of fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true. (43 C.2d 489.)

(c) Liability for negligence. "The services of experts are sought because of their special skill. They have a duty to exercise the ordinary skill and competence of members of their profession, and a failure to discharge that duty will subject them to liability for negligence. Those who hire such persons are not justified in expecting infallibility, but can expect only reasonable care and competence. They purchase service, not insurance." (43 C.2d 489.) Here, defendant's duty was established by the contract with plaintiffs; the breach was shown by evidence that his employee discovered a deep fill and that defendant failed to make a necessary laboratory test. (43 C.2d 490; on negligence in performance of contract, see infra, §1179.)

In B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 C.A.4th 823, 64 C.R.2d 335, plaintiff developer, in the course of negotiations with a city concerning a public construction project, was wrongly told by defendants, the attorneys for the city, that the prevailing wage laws did not apply. Plaintiff then filed a complaint against defendants that included a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed. There was no allegation that defendants made the statement with the intent that plaintiff rely on it. The mere fact that they made the statement is insufficient to supply this element. Also, the complaint fails to allege justifiable reliance by plaintiff. In fact, plaintiff had been given the opposite information by its own counsel. A third party, such as plaintiff, can successfully sue an attorney for negligence if he or she is the person intended to be benefited by the attorney's performance. However, plaintiff was negotiating with defendants' client at arm's length, and thus was not justified in relying on someone who owed it no duty of due care. (55 C.A.4th 834.)

In Anderson v. Deloitte & Touche LLP (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1468, 66 C.R.2d 512, plaintiffs, through V Corp. as the general partner, invested in four limited partnerships that had been formed to purchase four wineries that included M and J. The goals were to earn a high rate of income during the existence of the partnerships and to sell the wineries at a profit. Defendant accounting firm prepared a confidential offering memorandum (COM) for V Corp. in which it projected a rate of return of 16 to 19% over a 6-year period. However, all of the limited partnerships and V Corp. filed for bankruptcy, and plaintiffs lost their investments. They then sued for negligent, as well as intentional, misrepresentation. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed as it applied to the M and J offerings.

(a) In connection with the COMs for the M and J wineries, defendant had prepared an Independent Accountants' Report (IAR), stating that the two wineries had supplied certain information and that, according to the standards of the American Institute of Certified Accountants, this information was a reasonable basis for defendant's forecasts. However, plaintiffs presented expert testimony that defendant's actions severely departed from good accounting practices. Based on this state of the evidence, plaintiffs attempted to supply the requisite knowledge by arguing that, given the inadequacies of defendant's accounting techniques, it must have known that the information supplied by the wineries was not a reasonable basis on which to make its predictions. However, this contention goes to negligent, rather than intentional, misrepresentation. (56 C.A.4th 1476.)

(b) Plaintiffs' allegations raised substantial questions as to the existence of negligent misrepresentation with respect to the M and the J offerings: (1) the misrepresentation, i.e., that the wineries would earn a certain rate of income, although stated in the form of an opinion, was of a fact, because it was a deliberate assertion of the matters stated by one who had special expertise in the area; (2) the misrepresentation was arguably made without a reasonable belief in its truthfulness, because there was evidence that defendant had used faulty practices on which it could not rely; (3) the intent to induce reliance by plaintiffs was supplied by evidence that defendant knew that plaintiffs would rely on the report it had made for its client; (4) there was ample evidence that defendant knew that the reports were not for V Corp.'s internal use only but were to be communicated to potential investors, that the forecasts, and the assumptions on which they were based, were designed for the specific purpose of attracting investors, and that several investors relied on the IARs in making their investment decisions; and (5) except for rare cases, the question whether plaintiff's reliance was reasonable is one of fact. (56 C.A.4th 1476.)

The following cases also analyze various aspects of negligent misrepresentation claims:

Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 C.A.3d 780, 788, 231 C.R. 72 [defendant mortgage company employee had no reasonable basis for believing appraiser's report which, patently and incorrectly, included value of personalty in its final estimate].

Quality Wash Group V, Ltd. v. Hallak (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1687, 1696, 58 C.R.2d 592 [seller's misrepresentation as to property's boundaries, based on longtime experience, was reasonable, and thus could not be basis for negligent misrepresentation].

Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1069, 1077, 76 C.R.2d 911 [for summary judgment purposes, there were questions of fact (a) whether approximation of square footage over 20% too high was negligent misrepresentation, and (b) whether plaintiff relied on alleged misrepresentation, even though he was invited to hire his own expert to estimate footage].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Lease & Rental Management Corp. v. Arrowhead Cen. Credit Union (2005) 126 C.A.4th 1052, 1061, 24 C.R.3d 483 [credit union representing that borrower had satisfactory credit in response to lender's inquiry was not liable for negligence, even though substantial loan and borrower's subsequent bankruptcy resulted in financial loss to lender, where inadequacy of lender's credit reference request form was root of problem, seemingly large number of borrower's overdrafts with credit union was actually small percentage of volume of borrower's checks processed, and borrower was not truly in financial difficulties until after time of inquiry]; Melican v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2007) 151 C.A.4th 168, 182, 59 C.R.3d 672 [decedent's siblings failed to establish cause of action against university based on alleged negligent misrepresentations that decedent's donated body would be used exclusively for cancer research; decedent's widow, who was not plaintiff in action, was sole holder of dispositional rights respecting decedent's body, and thus only person who could have detrimentally relied on representations]; OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 835, 854, 68 C.R.3d 828 [multiple representations of company's success contained in investment bank's offering memorandum for company's promissory notes, without reference to company's poor quarter or factors inflating its financial estimates, were "half truths" as misleading as affirmative representations in action for negligent misrepresentation]; Apollo Capital Fund LLC v. Roth Capital Partners, LLC (2007) 158 C.A.4th 226, 243, 70 C.R.3d 199 [allegations of broker's affirmative representations that sufficiently stated claim for fraud necessarily also stated claim for negligent representation].

143 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

C. Negligent Misrepresentation.

4. Representation Resulting in Physical Harm.

a. In General.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 821

[§ 821] In General.

Under the Restatement, one "who negligently gives false information to another is subject to liability for physical harm caused by action taken by the other in reasonable reliance upon such information." The negligence may consist of failure to exercise reasonable care either in ascertaining the accuracy of the information or in the manner in which it is communicated. (Rest.2d, Torts §311.)

This rule was followed in Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 728, 268 C.R. 779, 789 P.2d 960. Plaintiffs, the children of a woman killed by a parolee (a convicted murderer) with whom she had previously cohabited, filed a wrongful death action against the state and a parole officer, alleging that the parole officer knew that the parolee had threatened to kill decedent but nevertheless told her that the parolee would "not come looking" for her; that decedent therefore failed to take steps to protect herself from the parolee, and that the parolee subsequently kidnaped and shot her. The trial court sustained demurrers by the parole officer and the state without leave to amend and the Court of Appeal denied a writ. Held, reversed insofar as decision denied plaintiffs leave to amend to state a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation involving a risk of physical harm.

(a) No need to establish special relationship. The Court of Appeal held that plaintiffs' allegations did not establish a special relationship with either the parolee or decedent under the theory enunciated in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, infra, §1050. However, a special relationship is a prerequisite only for liability based on a defendant's failure to act; here plaintiffs assert that defendant parole officer's acts (negligent misrepresentations) induced decedent to be less careful. (50 C.3d 734.)

(b) Liability for negligent misrepresentations involving risk of physical harm. Negligent misrepresentations involving risk of physical harm are actionable under the circumstances described in Rest.2d, Torts §311. California courts have relied both on the Restatement and C.C. 1710(2) (see supra, §818) in holding that causes of action have been stated for negligent misrepresentations causing physical harm. (50 C.3d 735.)

(c) Information may be supplied gratuitously. Ordinarily, liability for negligent misrepresentations is imposed only on those who supply information for business purposes in the course of a business or profession; in financial matters, a plaintiff cannot expect the defendant to exercise the same degree of care in social meetings as he or she would when acting in a business or professional capacity. (50 C.3d 735, citing the text.) However, the duty to use reasonable care in giving information applies more broadly when physical safety is involved. Thus, there may be liability even though the information is given gratuitously and the actor derives no benefit from giving it. (50 C.3d 735, citing Rest.2d, Torts §311, Comment c.)

(d) Elements of sufficient complaint.

(1) Plaintiffs must allege that defendant parole officer had a duty to exercise reasonable care in giving decedent information about the parolee. "In this context, 'duty' and 'reasonable reliance' are closely connected. The likelihood that one's statements about personal safety will be taken seriously is a primary factor in determining whether one has a duty to exercise care in making such statements." (50 C.3d 735.) Ordinarily, law enforcement officers have no duty to volunteer information about released criminals under their supervision; but the absence of a duty to speak does not entitle one to speak falsely. Accordingly, defendant parole officer, having chosen to communicate information about the parolee to decedent, had a duty to use reasonable care in doing so. (50 C.3d 736.)

(2) Plaintiffs must allege that defendant parole officer negligently gave false information to decedent, and the complaint is sufficient in this respect: its allegations raised the question whether he exercised due care in communicating what he knew about the parolee's threats. (50 C.3d 736.)

(3) As in all actions for negligent misrepresentation, plaintiffs must allege facts to show that the person for whom recovery is sought actually and reasonably relied on the alleged misrepresentations, and the complaint is deficient in this respect. (50 C.3d 737.) The complaint contains a general allegation of causation, but plaintiffs cannot establish a complete causal relationship between defendant parole officer's statements and decedent's death without the further allegation that decedent actually and reasonably relied on the statements. (50 C.3d 737.)

(e) No statutory immunity. For guidance of the trial judge on remand, it should be noted that the statutory immunity of public employees from liability for misrepresentations provided by Govt.C. 818.8 and 822.2 "does not apply to negligent misrepresentations involving a risk of physical harm." (50 C.3d 738, footnote 8, discussing Johnson v. California (1968) 69 C.2d 782, 73 C.R. 240, 447 P.2d 352, supra, §352, which held that the legislative intent was to limit immunity to cases involving misrepresentations of financial or commercial character.)

In Weissich v. Marin (1990) 224 C.A.3d 1069, 274 C.R. 342, the court distinguished Garcia in denying recovery for negligent misrepresentation. The complaint alleged that defendants represented to plaintiff that they would inform him promptly of any conduct by S that posed a threat to his physical well-being; that plaintiff "reasonably believed and it was implicit in such representation, that the mechanism was in place to implement same"; and that in fact no such procedures had been established and defendants were not in a position to carry out the representation. (224 C.A.3d 1082.) Held, these allegations did not state a cause of action.

(a) Although Garcia did not discuss the question whether an implied representation is sufficient, cases decided before Garcia indicate that it is not. (224 C.A.3d 1082, citing Yanase v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 468, 260 C.R. 513, infra, §824, and Huber, Hunt & Nichols v. Moore (1977) 67 C.A.3d 278, 136 C.R. 603, infra, §825.)

(b) The complaint did not allege facts to show reasonable reliance by plaintiff on the negligent misrepresentation; he was aware of S's plans for revenge, and it would have been unreasonable for him to rely on the continued existence of a mechanism to monitor S's conduct for 11 years. (224 C.A.3d 1083.)

Recovery was also denied in M.B. v. San Diego (1991) 233 C.A.3d 699, 284 C.R. 555, supra, §304. Plaintiff received a phone call from J, who stated that he was the man who had recently stolen some lingerie from her home and that he was going to return. When she relayed this information to the police, she was told, on two separate occasions, not to worry because persons making threatening phone calls do not return to the scene. After J returned 2 days later and raped her, plaintiff sued defendant city, alleging police negligence in investigating the case and giving advice. On appeal from summary judgment for defendant, plaintiff sought to amend her complaint to include a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation as outlined in Garcia. Held, the allegations did not state a cause of action.

(a) To establish a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation under Garcia, plaintiff had to show that the police had a duty to exercise reasonable care in giving her information about J; that they gave her false information with a degree of culpability at least equal to negligence; that plaintiff reasonably relied on the false misrepresentations; and that her reliance proximately caused her harm. (233 C.A.3d 708.)

(b) Instead of making representations that were based on any special knowledge about the suspect, as was the case in Garcia, the officers here gave only generalized reassurances that suspects such as J are usually not dangerous, and there was nothing to indicate that the reassurances were false. Also, instead of merely relying on the representations that the perpetrator would not return, plaintiff took precautionary actions on her own, including changing the locks on her house. And the fact that the officers coupled their generalized representations with advice as to precautionary measures, e.g., to obtain Mace or a stun gun, did not establish a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation; this was advice applicable to crime victims generally. (233 C.A.3d 708.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

144 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT

C. Negligent Misrepresentation.

4. Representation Resulting in Physical Harm.

b. Liability to Third Parties.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 822

[§ 822] Liability to Third Parties.

Under the Restatement, liability for negligent furnishing of false information resulting in physical harm extends to "such third persons as the actor should expect to be put in peril by the action taken." (Rest.2d, Torts §311(1)(b).)

Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, involved liability for fraud (i.e., intentional misrepresentation; see supra, §806) as well as negligent misrepresentation. G sexually molested plaintiff, a 13-year-old student, while he was employed as a vice-principal. Prior to that, he had been employed in various administrative positions by defendant school districts. At the conclusion of these employments, defendants sent a placement bureau positive letters of recommendation, not mentioning that G had been involved in various acts of sexual misconduct during his employment. It was partly on the basis of these letters that G was hired by his current employer. Plaintiff sued defendant districts and various school officials on several causes of action. The trial judge sustained a demurrer as to all counts on the theory that defendants owed no duty to plaintiff. The Court of Appeal reversed as to those counts alleging fraud and negligent misrepresentation and the Supreme Court affirmed.

(a) Required analysis. Rest.2d, Torts §§310 (supra, §806) and 311 authorize recovery, in prescribed circumstances, where an intentional or negligent misrepresentation results in physical harm to a third person. Although ordinarily a duty of care analysis is unnecessary with respect to fraud (intentional misrepresentation), the matter of liability to an injured third person is an extension of ordinary tort liability based on fraud. Accordingly, in deciding whether to adopt the two Restatement provisions in the circumstances of this case, it is necessary to inquire whether plaintiff sufficiently alleged that defendants owed her a duty, that they breached that duty by making misrepresentations or giving false information, that G's current employer reasonably relied on their statements, and that this reliance proximately caused plaintiff's injury. (14 C.4th 1075.)

(b) Duty to plaintiff. The question, one of first impression, is whether a person who intentionally or negligently communicates false information to another owes a duty of care to a third person who neither receives the information nor has any special relationship with the provider. As a starting point, it must be recognized that the general rule in this state is that all persons have a duty to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as the result of their conduct. To determine whether departure from this general rule is appropriate, it is necessary to analyze the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. (14 C.4th 1076.) The following factors are especially relevant in this case:

(1) First is the question whether plaintiff's injuries were a foreseeable result of defendants' misrepresentations. Based on the allegations, it seems that defendants could have foreseen that G's current employer would read and rely on the letters of recommendation in deciding to hire him; that, had they not unqualifiedly recommended G, the current employer would not have hired him; and that, once hired, G might molest a student, such as plaintiff. (14 C.4th 1077.)

(2) Second is the moral blame to be attached to defendants' conduct. Although the determination whether defendants were actually guilty of any moral blame must await trial, it is certainly arguable from the allegations that unreservedly recommending G, while failing to disclose facts necessary to reduce the risk of further child molestation, could be called morally blameworthy. (14 C.4th 1078.)

(3) Third is the availability of either insurance or alternative courses of conduct. It may be assumed that standard business liability insurance is available with respect to negligent misrepresentation, but not with respect to the intentional torts. However, regarding the latter, defendants could have avoided tort liability either by writing a "full disclosure" letter revealing all relevant facts about G's background, or writing a "no comment" letter that merely verified basic employment dates and details. There is no authority suggesting that a former employer has an affirmative duty of disclosure that would preclude such a no comment letter, at least in the absence of some special relationship, not alleged here. (14 C.4th 1078.)

(4) Fourth is the analysis of competing policy considerations. It cannot be questioned that one of society's highest priorities is to protect children from sexual or physical abuse. Defendants, however, argue that imposing tort liability will have the effect of forcing employers to either write no letters of recommendation for former employees or, at most, to write only a "no comment" letter, to the detriment of both employers and employees. Noting that doing otherwise would subject the employer to the risk of a defamation, breach of privacy, or wrongful interference suit from a rejected jobseeker, plaintiff correctly points out that an employer would be protected from a defamation suit by the qualified immunity granted by C.C. 47(c) (supra, §591) concerning letters of recommendation regarding former employees. However, the legislative history of this provision indicates that it was intended to afford employers with a defense to actions by former employees, rather than to insulate employers from all tort liability arising from the disclosure, or nondisclosure, of employment information. Furthermore, assuming that C.C. 47(c) would provide a defense in negligent or intentional actions brought by injured third persons, it would not apply in this case, because, by its terms, the privilege pertains only to communications made "upon request of" the former employer, a condition not satisfied here. (14 C.4th 1078.)

(5) "In light of these factors and policy considerations, we hold, consistent with Restatement Second of Torts sections 310 and 311, that the writer of a letter of recommendation owes to prospective employers and third persons a duty not to misrepresent the facts in describing the qualifications and character of a former employee, if making these misrepresentations would present a substantial, foreseeable risk of physical injury to the prospective employer or third persons. In the absence, however, of resulting physical injury, or some special relationship between the parties, the writer of a letter of recommendation should have no duty of care extending to third persons for misrepresentations made concerning former employees. In those cases, the policy favoring free and open communication with prospective employers should prevail." (14 C.4th 1081.)

(c) Misrepresentation or nondisclosure. Defendants were not duty bound to disclose G's sexual misconduct. However, this case may properly be viewed as a "misleading half-truth" situation in which defendants, having undertaken to provide some information regarding G's credentials and character, were obligated to disclose all other facts that "materially qualify" the limited facts disclosed. In other words, because the letters of recommendation praised G's character, e.g., he was described by the use of such terms as "pleasant personality," "high standards," and "relates well to students," defendants were required "to complete the picture" by disclosing the material facts regarding the sexual improprieties. An incomplete picture, such as the one presented, amounts to an actionable, affirmative misrepresentation, rather than a mere nondisclosure, which is nonactionable. (14 C.4th 1084.)

(d) Reliance. Plaintiff pleaded that G's current employer relied on the letters of recommendation in hiring G, but the complaint is silent regarding plaintiff's own reliance on these letters. However, "even though defendants made no misrepresentations directly to plaintiff, who probably neither knew of, nor relied on, their statements, she was nonetheless entitled to protection in accordance with the Restatement principles previously discussed." The Court of Appeal was correct in determining that neither Rest.2d, Torts §310 nor §311 requires plaintiff to plead his or her own reliance on the misrepresentation. The cases relied on by defendants, in which reliance by the plaintiff was required, all involved economic loss, rather than personal injury, and were thus subject to a more restrictive rule. (14 C.4th 1084.)

(e) Proximate cause. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that her injury was a proximate result of defendants' fraud and misrepresentation, and defendants do not suggest otherwise, assuming that the other elements of duty, misrepresentation, and reliance are sufficiently pleaded. In other words, plaintiff's injury foreseeably and proximately resulted from her employer's decision to hire G in reliance on defendants' unqualified recommendation of him. (14 C.4th 1086.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

145 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
5. Endorsement of Commercial Product.
a. Recovery Allowed.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 823

[§ 823] Recovery Allowed.

There has been considerable discussion by law writers on the liability of a commercial product certifier or endorser, i.e., whether the basis may be express warranty, strict products liability, or negligent misrepresentation. (See 2 Stanf. L. Rev. 496; 5 U.S.F. L. Rev. 137; 39 A.L.R.3d 181 [liability of product endorser or certifier for product-caused injury]; 1 A.L.R.5th 431 [products liability of endorser, trade association, or certifier expressing approval of product].) Several California cases have analyzed liability in the context of negligent misrepresentation, allowing recovery, or denying it (see infra, §824), under the particular circumstances.

The Torts Restatement classifies negligently giving false information as negligent misrepresentation where it results in physical harm (see Rest.2d, Torts §311, supra, §821), and this approach was followed in Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 C.A.2d 680, 81 C.R. 519, in a commercial endorsement case. Plaintiff alleged purchase of a defective pair of shoes from a local dealer, and injury resulting from a slip and fall on a vinyl floor. She sued the dealer and manufacturer, but also joined Hearst Corp., publisher of Good Housekeeping magazine, on the ground that the shoes contained the "Good Housekeeping Consumers' Guaranty Seal," on which she relied in buying them. She alleged that this defendant either did not examine the shoes or did so negligently, in violation of its duty to exercise ordinary care in issuance of the seal. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) Defendant Hearst is not just a publisher of a magazine that accepts advertisements of consumer products. To enhance the value of its magazine as an advertising medium, it offers its advertisers, whose products meet the standards it sets, the seal and certification: "We have satisfied ourselves the products and services advertised in Good Housekeeping are good ones and the advertising claims made for them in our magazine are truthful." (276 C.A.2d 684.)

(b) Defendant's endorsement is not confined to the pages of the magazine; manufacturers or retailers of a certified product are permitted to advertise this fact and use the seal in the ads. This is an implied representation that defendant "has taken reasonable steps to make an independent examination of the product endorsed, with some degree of expertise, and found it satisfactory." And it is foreseeable that consumers will rely on the representation, in some instances, even more than on statements made by the retailer, manufacturer, or distributor. (276 C.A.2d 684.)

(c) "Having voluntarily involved itself into the marketing process, having in effect loaned its reputation to promote and induce the sale of a given product, ... Hearst has placed itself in the position where public policy imposes on it the duty to use ordinary care in the issuance of its seal and certification of quality so that members of the consuming public who rely on its endorsement are not unreasonably exposed to the risk of harm." (276 C.A.2d 684.)

(d) Lack of privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant is not a defense where the duty arises out of a voluntarily assumed relationship and is dictated by public policy. (276 C.A.2d 685, citing Merrill v. Buck (1962) 58 C.2d 552, 25 C.R. 456, 375 P.2d 304, infra, §1060, and Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 C.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, infra, §1179.)

(e) Defendant's express contractual limitation of liability in its seal, to replacement or refund, does not affect its full liability for tortious negligent misrepresentation. (276 C.A.2d 686.)

(f) This conclusion is "influenced more by public policy than by whether such cause of action can be comfortably fitted into one of the law's traditional categories of liability." (276 C.A.2d 683.) The theory is rejected that a product endorser could be subjected to strict products liability. (276 C.A.2d 687.) (For a strong argument in favor of the latter theory, see 5 U.S.F. L. Rev. 137, 143.)

Liability was based on another Restatement provision in FNS Mortg. Service Corp. v. Pacific General Group (1994) 24 C.A.4th 1564, 29 C.R.2d 916. The owner of an apartment complex brought an action for damages caused by defective plastic plumbing pipe installed in the complex. Defendant was a nonprofit association that promotes uniformity in the plumbing trade by means of its uniform plumbing code and its publication of a plumbing research directory listing plumbing products that it finds meet the code's standards. Most public entities had adopted the code, and an unlisted pipe not bearing the code logo was unmarketable. Plaintiff sought to hold defendant liable on a negligence theory, but the trial judge entered summary judgment for defendant on the grounds that, being a nonprofit organization, it had no duty and that its activities were in the nature of a governmental function. Held, reversed.

(a) The relevant rule of liability is set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §324A: "One who undertakes, gratuitously or for consideration, to render services to another which he should recognize as necessary for the protection of a third person or his things, is subject to liability to the third person for physical harm resulting from his failure to exercise reasonable care to protect his undertaking, if (a) his failure to exercise reasonable care increases the risk of such harm, or (b) he has undertaken to perform a duty owed by the other to the third person, or (c) the harm is suffered because of reliance of the other or the third person upon the undertaking." (24 C.A.4th 1572.)

(b) Defendant has undertaken to render the services of pipe inspection and the delisting of manufacturers whose products do not conform to code standards. Customer protection is one of its avowed purposes. Arguably it performs a duty owed by local building officials to consumers. In the present case, consumers suffered harm because of the reliance of local building officials on defendant's undertakings. Under the Restatement principles, defendant should be subject to liability for physical harm resulting from its failure to exercise reasonable care. (24 C.A.4th 1572.)

(c) There are no persuasive policy reasons why the general rule should not apply. Defendant's conduct is intended to affect consumers, such as plaintiff, and the harm to plaintiff was foreseeable. If defendant had delisted the product at issue, it would not have been installed, and thus defendant's conduct was a cause of the damage suffered. The fact that that conduct was not intentional or outrageous does not render it moral. Finally, the policy of preventing future harm will be advanced by a rule inducing competent inspection, and defendant has presented no evidence that insurance is unavailable. In light of these factors supporting imposition of a duty of care, summary judgment for defendant was error. (24 C.A.4th 1575, 1576.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

146 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
5. Endorsement of Commercial Product.
b. Recovery Denied.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 824

[§ 824] Recovery Denied.

In Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 C.A.3d 1119, 241 C.R. 101, an action against defendant magazine by a reader who suffered toxic shock after using one of the tampons advertised in it, the court, noting that the ads bore absolutely no resemblance to regular copy, rejected the contention that their mere placement amidst articles on menstruation, sex, and the female body constituted an implied endorsement to the immature reader. (195 C.A.3d 1122.) And the court refused to create a new tort of negligently failing to investigate the safety of advertised products: "Such a tort would require publications to maintain huge staffs scrutinizing and testing each product offered. The enormous cost of these groups, along with skyrocketing insurance rates, would deter many magazines from accepting advertising, hastening their demise from lack of revenue. Others would comply, but raise their prices beyond the reach of the average reader. Still others would be wiped out by tort judgments, never to revive. Soon the total number of publications in circulation would drop dramatically." (195 C.A.3d 1122.)

The reasoning of the Walters case was followed in Yanase v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 468, 260 C.R. 513. Decedent, a member of defendant Auto Club, stayed in a motel listed and favorably rated in defendant's Tourbook. He was shot and killed by an unknown assailant at night in the motel parking lot. Plaintiff widow and children brought this action for negligent misrepresentation, alleging that defendant's negligent failure to inspect and warn that the motel was located in a high crime area resulted in decedent's death. Held, judgment on the pleadings for defendant affirmed.

(a) The tort of negligent misrepresentation requires a positive assertion, and does not apply to implied representations; hence no cause of action was stated. (212 C.A.3d 473, citing the text.)

(b) The facts alleged do not establish a duty of care owed to the decedent for an injury occurring on premises over which defendant had no control. (212 C.A.3d 473.) "[I]f those closely connected with the safety of premises, such as hired security guards, are not subject to a duty even to warn of possible danger represented by nearby third persons not on the premises, then a fortiori those having no particular connection with the premises, such as Auto Club, have no duty of care." (212 C.A.3d 475.)

(c) The Tourbook ratings relate to quality of "accommodations." They serve the same purpose as an advertisement; and, as said in Walters, "we are loathe to create a new tort of negligently failing to investigate the safety of an advertised product." (212 C.A.3d 478.)

In McCulloch v. Ford Dealers Advertising Assn. (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1385, 286 C.R. 223, plaintiff entered and won a car race sponsored by defendants, but was not paid the $ 1 million promised to the winner. In addition to suing defendant sponsors for breach of contract and deceit, plaintiff sued defendant advertising association for negligent misrepresentation on the theory that by allowing its logo to be placed on the promotional materials it falsely represented that the winner would receive $ 1 million. Held, summary judgment for defendant association affirmed; under the factors set forth in Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 C.A.2d 680, 81 C.R. 519, defendant had no duty to investigate the truth of the statements contained in the promotional materials.

(a) The connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury was remote. The promotional materials clearly stated that defendant sponsors had organized the race and were responsible for the publicity and prize money. The aura of legitimacy given to the race by the participation of defendant association, which was nationally known, is an insufficient basis for holding it as guarantor of the truth of all statements made by the race sponsors. (234 C.A.3d 1391.)

(b) Defendant association was free of moral blame; it had performed all obligations under its contract with defendant sponsors, and was relieved by that contract of any obligation to provide prize money. And no moral blame attached to defendant's failure to investigate the truth of the promotional materials; there was no reason for it to believe that it had such an obligation. (234 C.A.3d 1391.)

(c) Requiring defendant to investigate the truth of all materials to which it attaches its logo, although reducing the risk of harm such as that suffered by plaintiff, would have a drastic impact on corporate sponsorship of events of every description. "The risk of tort liability could bring an end to corporate sponsorship of all but the wealthiest of enterprises and could cripple the functioning of organizations at every level of our society." (234 C.A.3d 1392.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

147 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
C. Negligent Misrepresentation.
6. Limitations on Recovery.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 825

[§ 825] Limitations on Recovery.

Under the prevailing view, the scope of liability for negligent misrepresentation is not as broad as in other fields of negligence (see infra, §831 et seq.), but is subject to important limitations derived from the rules governing intentional fraud (see supra, §767 et seq.). In fact, it is not as broad, in significant respects, as is the scope of liability for intentional fraud.

(1) Persons Entitled To Rely. The class of persons entitled to rely on the representations is restricted to those to whom or for whom the misrepresentations were made. Even though the defendant should have anticipated that the misinformation might reach others, he or she is ordinarily not liable to them. (See Rest.2d, Torts §552, Comments g, h; Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guaranty Co. (1958) 165 C.A.2d 116, 128, 331 P.2d 742 [title company negligently searched title for H, who transferred to B 10 years later; title company was not liable to B]; Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 C.A.3d 780, 787, 231 C.R. 72 [appraiser negligently evaluated property for mortgage company, which then arranged for investors to make loan secured by property; appraiser was not liable to investors]; Cicone v. URS Corp. (1986) 183 C.A.3d 194, 208, 227 C.R. 887, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §328 [recognizing rule, but holding buyer's attorney liable to seller's attorney for misrepresentation made directly to him]; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 355; on general requirement in deceit actions of intent to deceive particular persons, see supra, §803 et seq.) However, liability is not limited to the initial recipient of the misinformation, but extends to third parties for whose benefit and guidance it is supplied. (See Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1760, 1764, 52 C.R.2d 635 [distinguishing and limiting Christiansen v. Roddy, supra; defendant appraiser, who made appraisal for broker, was liable to plaintiff investors who were members of group that he contemplated would rely on appraisal, even though broker rather than defendant furnished appraisal to investors].)

(2) Intended Rather Than Foreseeable Reliance. The liability does not extend to damages resulting from any reliance that might have been foreseen, but only to damage from the particular action which the defendant intended to induce, or something substantially similar. (See Rest.2d, Torts §552; 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 285; on general requirement in deceit actions of intent to induce particular action, see supra, §807.)

(3) Information Supplied for Business Purposes. The liability has generally been imposed only on those who supply information for business purposes in the course of a business or profession. This rules out casual statements or opinions given in ordinary private conversations or social meetings; the plaintiff cannot expect the defendant to exercise the same degree of care as he or she would when acting in a business or professional capacity. (See Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guaranty Co., supra, 165 C.A.2d 125; De Zemplén v. Home Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1963) 221 C.A.2d 197, 205, 34 C.R. 334; Rest.2d, Torts §552, Comment c; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 454; but cf. Williams v. Spazier (1933) 134 C.A. 340, 25 P.2d 851, infra, §820 [repeating statements heard from corporate officer].) However, a contractual or fiduciary relationship is not a necessary condition for liability. (Lacher v. Superior Court (1991) 230 C.A.3d 1038, 1047, 281 C.R. 640.)

(4) Liability Dischargeable in Bankruptcy. To come within the fraud exception of the Bankruptcy Act, the liability must be based on knowing or reckless misrepresentation; if the basis is merely negligent misrepresentation, the obligation is discharged. (See Yellow Creek Logging Corp. v. Dare (1963) 216 C.A.2d 50, 57, 30 C.R. 629 [stating the distinction and construing findings to make debt nondischargeable]; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §491.)

(5) No Implied Representations. "[N]o case has been cited and we find none in which any court held that the doctrine of negligent misrepresentation applies to implied representations. In all cases a 'positive assertion' was involved." (Huber, Hunt & Nichols v. Moore (1977) 67 C.A.3d 278, 304, 136 C.R. 603, citing the text.) (See Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 C.A.3d 1, 17, 147 C.R. 655 [title insurance policy covering contingency of house encroaching on neighboring land was not actionable representation that it did not so encroach]; Byrum v. Brand (1990) 219 C.A.3d 926, 942, 268 C.R. 609 [financial advisor's failure to disclose material facts concerning land investment did not constitute negligent implied misrepresentation; following Huber, Hunt & Nichols v. Moore]; Wilson v. Century 21 Great Western Realty (1993) 15 C.A.4th 298, 306, 18 C.R.2d 779 [homeowner's statement that he was unaware of any defect in foundation, coupled with disclosure of other defects, was not positive assertion that foundation was defect-free]; Yanase v. Automobile Club of Southern Calif. (1989) 212 C.A.3d 468, 473, 260 C.R. 513, supra, §824, citing the text [motel rating in defendant auto club's tourbook was not positive assertion].)

(6) No Punitive Damages or Damages for Emotional Distress. Punitive damages are not recoverable in these actions. (See Reid v. Moskovitz (1989) 208 C.A.3d 29, 32, 255 C.R. 910; on punitive damages in fraud cases generally, see infra, §1587.) The same is true of damages for emotional distress. (Branch v. Homefed Bank (1992) 6 C.A.4th 793, 8 C.R.2d 182, infra, §1031; Friedman v. Merck & Co. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 454, 484, 131 C.R.2d 885, infra, §836.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Persons Entitled To Rely.

Cicone case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §304.(3) Information Supplied for Business Purpose. See OCM Principal Opportunities Fund, L.P. v. CIBC World Markets Corp. (2007) 157 C.A.4th 835, 856, 68 C.R.3d 828 [investment bank that prepared offering memorandum for company's promissory notes was not shielded from liability to purchasers for negligent misrepresentation under "secondary role" rule for opinion givers; bank was aware of company's poor fiscal quarter, of information that negated positive financial forecast, and that memorandum was basis for securities registration statement].

(4) Liability Dischargeable in Bankruptcy.

Cross-Reference: 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Enforcement of Judgment, §518.(6) No Punitive Damages or Damages for Emotional Distress. See PM Group v. Stewart (2007) 154 C.A.4th 55, 69, 64 C.R.3d 227 ["it is well settled that punitive damages are not recoverable for negligent representation"; trial court properly granted nonsuit on claim].

148 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
D. Innocent Misrepresentation.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 826

[§ 826] Innocent Misrepresentation.

(1) General Rule of Nonliability. Liability may result, in proper circumstances, from either intentional (see supra, §772 et seq.) or negligent (see supra, §818 et seq.) misrepresentation. If the defendant's belief is both honest and reasonable, however, the misrepresentation is innocent and there is ordinarily no tort liability. (See Graham v. Ellmore (1933) 135 C.A. 129, 132, 26 P.2d 696; cf. Podlasky v. Price (1948) 87 C.A.2d 151, 161, 196 P.2d 608, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §306 [court seems to confuse negligent and innocent misrepresentation].) However, certain exceptions have been recognized.

(2) Sale, Rental, or Exchange Transaction. The Second Restatement adopts the rule followed in a number of jurisdictions upholding tort recovery for innocent misrepresentations in a sale, rental, or exchange transaction. (Rest.2d, Torts §552C(1).) Damages recoverable are limited to the difference between the value of what the plaintiff has parted with and the value of what he or she has received in the transaction. (Rest.2d, Torts §552C(2).) Transactions within the rule include "any sale, rental or exchange of land, chattels, securities or anything else of value, such as copyrights, patents and other valuable intangible rights." (Rest.2d, Torts, Comment c.) The rule is restricted to the immediate parties to the transaction. (Rest.2d, Torts §552C, Comment d.)

In view of the similarities between this rule and the remedy of restitution, "it is difficult to say with certainty whether this rule should be regarded as one of strict liability in the law of torts, eliminating the requirement of intent or negligence in making the representation, or one of the law of restitution, eliminating the requirement of rescinding and restoring the status quo." (Rest.2d, Torts §552C, Comment b; on remedy of rescission and restitution, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §930 et seq.)

(3) Sale or Distribution of Product. Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability provides that one engaged in the business of selling or otherwise distributing products who, in connection with the sale of a product, makes a misrepresentation of material fact concerning the product is subject to liability for harm to persons or property caused by the misrepresentation. The representation may be either fraudulent, negligent, or innocent. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §9.) The plaintiff is not required to show that the product was defective at the time of the sale or distribution. (Rest.3d, Torts: Products Liability §9, Comment d.) (On strict products liability generally, see infra, §1428 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

149 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
E. Alternative Remedies.
1. Rescission and Restitution.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 827

[§ 827] Rescission and Restitution.

The majority of the cases involve actions by the defrauded party to a contract, and the preliminary question is whether he or she intends to affirm or rescind it. If the defrauded party rescinds, and restores any benefits received, he or she is entitled to restitution of the consideration given. (Seeger v. Odell (1941) 18 C.2d 409, 417, 115 P.2d 977; see Denevi v. LGCC (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1211, 1220, 18 C.R.3d 276 [fraud victim may elect to undo transaction in entirety, restoring both parties to status quo ante]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §483; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §§374, 375; 53 Cal. L. Rev. 1062 [real property purchaser's remedies]; on rescission generally, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §937; on notice of rescission, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §201; on pleading in action for restitution after rescission, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §502; on demand for rescission and restitution set up as partial defense or cross-claim, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§1016, 1037.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.31-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Notice of rescission:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §206.

Pleading in action for restitution after rescission:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§541, 542.

Demand for rescission and restitution as partial defense or cross-claim:

Cross-Reference: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §§1090, 1111.

150 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
 Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
 VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
 E. Alternative Remedies.
 2. Affirmance and Damages.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 828

[§ 828] Affirmance and Damages.

The injured party may elect to retain the benefits of the contract, e.g., the property purchased, and make up in damages the loss suffered by the fraud. Hence, he or she may affirm the contract, and simply sue for damages for the fraud. (Campbell v. Birch (1942) 19 C.2d 778, 791, 122 P.2d 902; Montes v. Peck (1931) 112 C.A. 333, 340, 296 P. 624; Fink v. Weisman (1933) 129 C.A. 305, 313, 18 P.2d 961; Gogo v. Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. (1941) 45 C.A.2d 334, 338, 114 P.2d 65; De Campos v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1954) 122 C.A.2d 519, 525, 265 P.2d 617; Brockway v. Heilman (1967) 250 C.A.2d 807, 811, 58 C.R. 772; Jue v. Smiser (1994) 23 C.A.4th 312, 315, 28 C.R.2d 242, supra, §810; Denevi v. LGCC (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1211, 1220, 18 C.R.3d 276; see Hargrove v. Henderson (1930) 108 C.A. 667, 675, 292 P. 148 [action for damages by defrauded grantee was proper, not limited to suit on covenants in deed]; Vista v. Robert Thomas Sec. (2000) 84 C.A.4th 882, 888, 101 C.R.2d 237; 37 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Fraud and Deceit §368; on nature of tort action for damages for fraud generally, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §125.)

The remedy may also be invoked defensively; i.e., the defrauded purchaser may keep the property, and, when the vendor sues for the price or for possession, the defendant may set up the claim for damages by way of affirmative defense or cross-complaint. (Nevada Land & Inv. Corp. v. Sistrunk (1934) 220 C. 174, 178, 30 P.2d 389; Pavlovich v. Neidhardt (1954) 128 C.A.2d 559, 561, 275 P.2d 836; on pleading fraud as defense, see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §1016.)

A buyer may recover damages for fraud even where in default; and this is true even though he or she may have lost property through foreclosure or repossession by the seller. (Garrett v. Perry (1959) 53 C.2d 178, 182, 346 P.2d 758.)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.31

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Nature of tort action for fraud:

Cross-References: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §131.

Pleading fraud as defense:

Cross-References: 5 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §1090.

151 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
E. Alternative Remedies.
3. Election of Remedies.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 829

[§ 829] Election of Remedies.

The remedies of affirmance and rescission are inconsistent, involving different types and amounts of recovery, and the defrauded party must elect to proceed on one theory or another. But the mere attempt to obtain one remedy, or even the commencement of an action seeking one remedy, is not a binding election. Thus, where the plaintiff gives an ineffectual notice of rescission, or fails to obtain restitution, he or she may nevertheless sue for damages; i.e., plaintiff's right to recover damages for the fraud is not lost by election unless he or she successfully disaffirms the contract. (See Hjorth v. Bernstein (1941) 44 C.A.2d 561, 564, 112 P.2d 643; MacIsaac v. Pozzo (1945) 26 C.2d 809, 814, 161 P.2d 449; Karapetian v. Carolan (1948) 83 C.A.2d 344, 355, 188 P.2d 809; Denevi v. LGCC (2004) 121 C.A.4th 1211, 1221, 18 C.R.3d 276; see 36 Cal. L. Rev. 636; 21 So. Cal. L. Rev. 399; cf. Evans v. Rancho Royale Hotel Co. (1952) 114 C.A.2d 503, 507, 250 P.2d 283 [completed rescission terminates contract and bars action for damages]; for election of tort remedy where contract action is precluded by illegality, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §149.)

In De Campos v. State Comp. Ins. Fund (1954) 122 C.A.2d 519, 265 P.2d 617, plaintiff partners had an employee-partner, P, who was a poor credit risk, so they concealed his membership and employment from defendant workers' compensation insurer. P died and his dependents received a death benefit award from the former Industrial Accident Commission against the insurer. Plaintiffs brought this action for reimbursement of costs and attorneys' fees incurred in their defense of the Commission proceedings after the insurer's failure to act. Defendant cross-complained for damages for fraud (the amount of compensation it paid the dependents). Held, judgment for defendant affirmed. "Whether the failure to rescind occurred by deliberate choice of the insurer or by lapse of time and force of circumstances is immaterial. The insurer well may have deemed it good business to pay this particular risk, recoup the amount thereof from the insured, and continue with its coverage of other risks at the mine. It is not for a defaulting employer to tell the aggrieved insurer which of several available remedies it shall elect to pursue, or that if it neglects to make a timely rescission it shall forfeit its right to damages." (122 C.A.2d 528.)

If, however, the defrauded party elects to affirm and recover damages, and fails to establish his or her right, the rule is different. Having affirmed the contract, he or she cannot thereafter attempt to rescind. (Bancroft v. Woodward (1920) 183 C. 99, 101, 190 P. 445; Helm v. K.O.G. Alarm Co. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 194, 204, footnote 10, 5 C.R.2d 615, quoting the text; see Guterman v. Gally (1933) 131 C.A. 647, 653, 21 P.2d 1000 ["plaintiff's election to affirm and sue for alleged damages constituted a waiver of any right to subsequently disaffirm and sue for the money paid"].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.32, 35

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Illegal contract:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §153.

152 of 152 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
VIII. FRAUD AND DECEIT
E. Alternative Remedies.
4. Waiver of Tort Remedy.

5 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 830

[§ 830] Waiver of Tort Remedy.

Various acts, such as the acceptance of substantial benefits from the other contracting party, have been held to result in a waiver of the tort remedy. Thus, in Schied v. Bodinson Mfg. Co. (1947) 79 C.A.2d 134, 179 P.2d 380, plaintiff buyer agreed to purchase gold dredging equipment from defendant conditional seller on an installment contract. The equipment was installed and the buyer later complained of fraud. By agreement, the seller then made repairs and installed additional equipment, and the buyer agreed to resume payments under the contract. Held, "a party to an executory contract, who, with full knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud complained of, subsequently, with intention to do so, affirms the contract and recognizes it as valid, either by his written agreement or by acts and conduct, and accepts substantial payments, property or the performance of work or labor not required by the original contract, thereby waives his right to damages on account of the fraud." (79 C.A.2d 142.) (On what constitutes election of remedy generally, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §178 et seq.)

However, later decisions refuse to find a waiver in acceptance of benefits unless there is an estoppel, i.e., the change would work a substantial injury to the adverse party. The leading case is Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 192 P.2d 935. Plaintiff vendor sued to foreclose a mortgage securing the price, and defendant purchaser, electing to affirm, cross-complained for damages for fraud. The vendor showed that the purchaser had asked for favors (e.g., requesting an extension of time for payment of his notes). Held, no waiver resulted, none of the requested favors having in fact been granted. The court, disapproving earlier dicta, squarely held that merely making an unfulfilled request will not constitute a waiver as a matter of law, and observed that there is "serious doubt whether even a granted request of a favor, such as an extension of time, should be held to constitute a waiver in the absence of estoppel or the making of a new agreement supported by consideration." (31 C.2d 751.) (See Lawson v. Town & Country Shops (1958) 159 C.A.2d 196, 200, 323 P.2d 843 [false representations by lessor to induce lessee to lease; lessee's acceptance of modifications was not a waiver]; Jue v. Smiser (1994) 23 C.A.4th 312, 317, 28 C.R.2d 242, supra, §810 [no waiver by real estate purchasers who proceeded to close escrow after learning of sellers' misrepresentation and only then to sue for damages; following Bagdasarian]; 13 A.L.R.2d 807 [proceeding under executory contract after discovering fraud as waiver of right to recover damages for the fraud].)

West's Key Number Digest, Fraud k.35

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Oakland Raiders v. Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum (2006) 144 C.A.4th 1175, 51 C.R.3d 144, plaintiff, a professional football team, sued defendant, a nonprofit public corporation administering a public coliseum and stadium, for negligent misrepresentation regarding the status of season ticket sales, representations that were allegedly made to induce the team to leave Los Angeles and sign a long-term contract to play at their former home in Oakland. After learning the true facts regarding the ticket sales, plaintiff entered into a supplemental contract with defendant providing plaintiff with significant concessions. The trial court determined that the issue of implied waiver by entering the supplemental contract was a question of fact for the jury, and instructed the jury that defendant was required to prove that plaintiff intended to waive its fraud claim at that time. The jury awarded plaintiff substantial damages, and the trial court denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Held, reversed.

(a) The California Supreme Court, first in the seminal case of Schmidt v. Mesmer (1897) 116 C. 267, 48 P. 54, and subsequently in Bagdasarian v. Gragnon (1948) 31 C.2d 744, 192 P.2d 935, text, p. 1203, has established the rule that one who, after discovery of an alleged fraud, ratifies an original contract by entering into a new agreement granting that party substantial benefits with respect to the same subject matter is deemed to have waived the right to claim damages for fraudulent inducement. While the rule has not recently been the central focus of judicial scrutiny in this state, it still stands as binding precedent, and it is universally recognized and is illustrated in cases from numerous other jurisdictions. (144 C.A.4th 1185.)

(b) The implied waiver recognized in Schmidt and Bagdasarian is better understood as an application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel than "waiver" in the traditional sense, which generally rests on a party's intent. The doctrine of equitable estoppel is founded on concepts of equity and fair dealing. It provides that a person may not deny the existence of a state of facts if the person intentionally led another to believe a particular circumstance to be true and to rely on that belief to the other's detriment. While the question of waiver ordinarily turns on the intent of the party against whom it is asserted, estoppel focuses solely on the party's conduct. Equitable estoppel is, for practical purposes, indistinguishable from the doctrine of implied waiver through conduct. (144 C.A.4th 1189.) Application of the Schmidt/Bagdasarian rule to the facts of this case vindicates the estoppel principles on which it rests. By signing the supplemental contract, plaintiff reaffirmed the validity of the original contract and induced defendant to change its position, to its detriment. (144 C.A.4th 1193.)

(c) The record establishes an implied waiver of plaintiff's fraud claim as a matter of law. Although the existence of waiver is ordinarily a question of fact, this does not mean that it can never be a question of law. Implied waiver, especially where it is based on conduct manifestly inconsistent with the intention to enforce a known right, may be determined as a matter of law where the underlying facts are undisputed or the evidence is susceptible of only one reasonable conclusion. The facts surrounding the execution of the supplemental contract satisfied all the elements of implied waiver, while the only evidence to the contrary--plaintiff's undisclosed subjective intent to preserve its fraud claim--was entitled to "no weight whatsoever." (144 C.A.4th 1191.) Because implied waiver of plaintiff's fraud claim was established as a matter of law, the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion. (144 C.A.4th 1194.)

(New) Effect of release in fraudulently induced contract: In Persson v. Smart Inventions (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1141, 23 C.R.3d 335, plaintiff, one of two shareholders in a closely held household products corporation, sold his shares to the other shareholder in a buyout agreement at less than their true value. He sued the buyer for fraud, alleging concealment of the existence of a promising new product about to be marketed when the agreement was made. The agreement contained mutual releases of all liability, known or unknown, arising from the agreement. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed.

(a) A party who is fraudulently induced to contract cannot be deprived of the well-recognized option to affirm the contract and sue for damages for fraud simply because the contract contains a release of claims. "Not only would that result be a 'Catch-22' of major proportions, the cases do not support it." (125 C.A.4th 1154.)

(b) A party may not ordinarily rescind only part of a contract. However, this rule does not apply in all circumstances. A court has equitable power to set aside a release in a contract it finds to be induced by fraud, and is not constrained by the rule against partial rescission, which is itself founded on equitable principles. (125 C.A.4th 1153, 1156.)

Election of remedies:

Cross-Reference: 3 Cal. Proc. (5th), Actions, §183 et seq.

1 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
A. Meaning of Negligence.
1. Definitions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 831

[§ 831] Definitions.

"Negligence is not the act itself, but the fact which defines the character of the act, and makes it a legal wrong." (Stephenson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1894) 102 C. 143, 147, 34 P. 618, 36 P. 407.) "Negligence is either the omission of a person to do something which an ordinarily prudent person would have done under given circumstances or the doing of something which an ordinarily prudent person would not have done under such circumstances. It is not absolute or to be measured in all cases in accordance with some precise standard but always relates to some circumstance of time, place and person." (Fouch v. Werner (1929) 99 C.A. 557, 564, 279 P. 183.) (See Tucker v. Lombardo (1956) 47 C.2d 457, 462, 303 P.2d 1041; Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 C.4th 714, 728, 80 C.R.2d 506, 968 P.2d 65, infra, §1099 [distinguishing wilful misconduct]; Delaney v. Baker (1999) 20 C.4th 23, 31, 82 C.R.2d 610, 971 P.2d 986, infra, §1687; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §16.1 [comparing theories based on conduct and state of mind]; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §110 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d, Negligence (2004 ed.) §5 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice, 1 Torts, Negligence, Chap. 1; 54 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 [Negligence Reconsidered: The Role of Rationality in Tort Theory]; 74 So. Cal. L. Rev. 193 [Distributive and Corrective Justice in the Tort Law of Accidents]; infra, §833 et seq.)

The Restatement (Rest.2d, Torts §282) defines the term as follows: "[N]egligence is conduct which falls below the standard established by law for the protection of others against unreasonable risk of harm. It does not include conduct recklessly disregarding of an interest of others."

Comment e to Rest.2d, Torts §282 distinguishes recklessness: "As defined in this Section, the word 'negligence' excludes conduct which the actor does or should realize as involving a risk to others which is not merely in excess of its utility, but which is out of all proportion thereto and is therefore 'recklessly disregarding of the interests of others.' As the disproportion between risk and utility increases, there enters into the actor's conduct a degree of culpability which approaches and finally becomes indistinguishable from that which is shown by conduct intended to invade similar interests. Therefore, where this disproportion is great, there is a marked tendency to give the conduct a legal effect closely analogous to that given conduct which is intended to cause the resulting harm." And comment g to Rest.2d, Torts §500 adds that recklessness involves more than "inadvertence, incompetence, unskillfulness, or a failure to take precautions" but rather rises to the level of a "conscious choice of a course of action ... with knowledge of the serious danger to others involved in it."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §16.1; CACI, No. 425 ["gross negligence" explained].

2 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
A. Meaning of Negligence.
2. Jury Instructions.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 832

[§ 832] Jury Instructions.

(1) BAJI. The basic negligence instruction, BAJI, No. 3.10, states as follows:

"Negligence is the doing of something which a reasonably prudent person would not do, or the failure to do something which a reasonably prudent person would do, under circumstances similar to those shown by the evidence."

"It is the failure to use ordinary or reasonable care."

"Ordinary or reasonable care is that care which persons of ordinary prudence would use in order to avoid injury to themselves or others under circumstances similar to those shown by the evidence."

BAJI, No. 3.10 is intended for ordinary negligence cases that do not involve special standards of conduct or affirmative duties, such as those affecting children, common carriers, and medical practitioners; these are covered by appropriate special instructions. (See BAJI, No. 3.10, Use Note; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §286.)

(2) CACI. The basic negligence instruction, CACI, No. 401, states as follows:

"Negligence is the failure to use reasonable care to prevent harm to oneself or to others."

"A person can be negligent by acting or by failing to act. A person is negligent if he or she does something that a reasonably careful person would not do in the same situation or fails to do something that a reasonably careful person would do in the same situation."

"You must decide how a reasonably careful person would have acted in [name of plaintiff/defendant]'s situation."

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.200

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) BAJI.

Cross-Reference: 7 Cal. Proc. (5th), Trial, §273.

(2) CACI. See CACI, No. 424 [Negligence Not Contested--Essential Factual Elements].

3 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
B. California Statute.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 833

[§ 833] California Statute.

C.C. 1714(a), derived from the common law and included in the original code, reads in part as follows: "Every one is responsible, not only for the result of his or her willful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by his or her want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his or her property or person, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury upon himself or herself."

In Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, the court reexamined negligence liability and came to the surprising conclusion that this general section is the foundation of California negligence law. Rephrased, it establishes the general principle that "[a]ll persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others being injured as the result of their conduct." And, "in the absence of statutory provision declaring an exception to the fundamental principle ... , no such exception should be made unless clearly supported by public policy." (69 C.2d 112.)

The opinion then sets forth broad criteria for determining the applicability of the principle or an exception: "A departure from this fundamental principle involves the balancing of a number of considerations; the major ones are the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved." (69 C.2d 112.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.203

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

4 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
C. Restatement.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 834

[§ 834] Restatement.

(1) Restatement 2d. The Restatement 2d covers negligence in Chapters 12-19, §§281-503.

Chapter 12. General Principles.

Topic 1. The Elements of a Cause of Action for Negligence. (§281.)

Topic 2. The Standard by Which Negligence Is Determined. (§§282-284.)

Topic 3. Determination of Standard of Conduct. (§§285-296.)

Topic 4. Types of Negligent Acts. (§§297-309.)

Topic 5. Misrepresentations Threatening Physical Harm. (§§310, 311.)

Topic 6. Conduct Negligent Because Intended or Likely To Cause Physically Dangerous Emotional Distress.
(§§312, 313.)

Topic 7. Duties of Affirmative Action. (§§314-325.)

Chapter 13. Liability for Condition and Use of Land.

Topic 1. Liability of Possessors of Land to Persons on the Land. (§§328E-350.)

Topic 2. Liability of Vendors and Other Transferors of Land to Persons on the Land. (§§351-354.)

Topic 3. Liability of Lessors of Land to Persons on the Land. (§§355-362.)

Topic 4. Liability for Natural Conditions to Persons Outside of the Land. (§363.)

Topic 5. Liability of Possessors to Persons Outside of the Land. (§§364-371.)

Topic 6. Liability of Vendors and Other Transferors to Persons Outside of the Land. (§§372-376.)

Topic 7. Liability of Lessors to Persons Outside of the Land. (§§377-379A.)

Topic 8. Liability of Persons Other Than a Possessor, Vendor, or Lessor. (§§380-387.)

Chapter 14. Liability of Persons Supplying Chattels for the Use of Others.

Topic 1. Rules Applicable to All Suppliers. (§§388-390.)

Topic 2. Persons Supplying Chattels To Be Used for Their Business Purposes. (§§391-393.)

Topic 3. Manufacturers of Chattels. (§§394-398.)

Topic 4. Sellers of Chattels Manufactured by Third Persons. (§§399-402.)

Topic 5. Strict Liability. (§§402A, 402B.)

Topic 6. Independent Contractors. (§§403, 404.)

Topic 7. Donors, Lenders, and Lessors of Chattels. (§§405-408.)

Chapter 15. Liability of an Employer of an Independent Contractor.

Topic 1. Harm Caused by Fault of Employers of Independent Contractors. (§§410-415.)

Topic 2. Harm Caused by Negligence of a Carefully Selected Independent Contractor. (§§416-429.)

Chapter 16. The Causal Relation Necessary to Responsibility for Negligence.

Topic 1. Causal Relation Necessary to the Existence of Liability for Another's Harm. (§§430-453.)

Topic 2. Causal Relation Affecting the Extent of Liability But Not Its Existence. (§§454-461.)

Topic 3. Causal Relation Necessary To Make Actor's Conduct Contributory Negligence. (§462.)

Chapter 17. Contributory Negligence.

Topic 1. General Principles. (§§463-466.)

Topic 2. When Bar to Action. (§§467-478.)

Topic 3. When No Bar to Action. (§§479-484.)

Topic 4. Contributory Negligence of Third Persons; Imputed Negligence. (§§485-494A.)

Topic 5. Failure To Control Conduct of Third Persons. (§§495, 496.)

Chapter 17A. Assumption of Risk.

Chapter 18. Negligent Invasions of Interests in the Physical Condition of Land and Chattels.

Chapter 19. Reckless Disregard of Safety.

(2) Restatement 3d. A single volume of the Restatement 3d deals with the apportionment of liability.

Topic 1. Basic Rules of Comparative Responsibility. (§§1-9.)

Topic 2. Liability of Multiple Tortfeasors for Indivisible Harm. (§§10-21.)

Topic 3. Contribution and Indemnity. (§§22, 23.)

Topic 4. Settlement. (§§24, 25.)

Topic 5. Apportionment of Liability When Damages Can Be Divided by Causation. (§26.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

5 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
D. Elements of Actionable Negligence.
1. Traditional Analysis.
a. Duty--Breach--Causation.
1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 835

[§ 835] In General.

Actionable negligence is traditionally regarded as involving the following: (1) a legal duty to use due care; (2) a breach of that duty; and (3) the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the resulting injury. (See Toomey v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (1890) 86 C. 374, 381, 24 P. 1074; Means v. Southern Calif. Ry. Co. (1904) 144 C. 473, 478, 77 P. 1001; Johnstone v. Panama Pac. Int. Exposition Co. (1921) 187 C. 323, 326, 202 P. 34; Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 C.2d 232, 241, footnote 9, 60 C.R. 510, 430 P.2d 68; United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes (1970) 1 C.3d 586, 594, 83 C.R. 418, 463 P.2d 770, citing the text; Artiglio v. Corning (1998) 18 C.4th 604, 614, 76 C.R.2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313, infra, §1061, citing the text; Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 57, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, citing the text; Casson v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1931) 119 C.A. 222, 225, 6 P.2d 336; Raymond v. Paradise Unified School Dist. of Butte (1963) 218 C.A.2d 1, 6, 31 C.R. 847, infra, §861; Ewart v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (1965) 237 C.A.2d 163, 170, 46 C.R. 631, infra, §1216; Galanis v. Mercury Int. Ins. Underwriters (1967) 247 C.A.2d 690, 695, 55 C.R. 890; Fuller v. Standard Stations (1967) 250 C.A.2d 687, 691, 58 C.R. 792; Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 814, 821, 131 C.R. 854, supra, §8, citing the text; Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 C.A.3d 208, 213, 219 C.R. 845, infra, §1064; Jackson v. Ryder Truck Rental (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1830, 1837, 20 C.R.2d 913, quoting the text; Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 C.A.4th 1207, 1211, 69 C.R.2d 370 [duty, breach, and causation elements are interrelated; whether act or omission is considered breach of duty or proximate cause of injury necessarily depends on scope of duty imposed]; Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 C.A.4th 603, 612, 79 C.R.2d 73, citing the text; Rest.2d, Torts §§281, 497, 499; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §16.1; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §71 et seq.; 15 Cal. L. Rev. 1; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 253; 34 San Diego L. Rev. 1503 [use of policy considerations in analyzing duty to limit liability]; 48 Stanf. L. Rev. 311 [Reasonableness and Rationality in Negligence Theory]; 100 A.L.R.2d 942 [foreseeability as element of negligence and proximate cause]; BAJI, Nos. 3.00, 16.00; CACI, Nos. 400 et seq.; VF-400 et seq.; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §537; on inference of negligence under doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §114 et seq.)

The "legal duty" of care may be of two general types: (1) the duty of a person to use ordinary care in activities from which harm might reasonably be anticipated. (See infra, §867 et seq.) (2) An affirmative duty where the person occupies a particular relationship to others. (See infra, §1038 et seq.) In the first situation, the person is not liable unless he or she is actively careless; in the second, the person may be liable for failure to act affirmatively to prevent harm. (See McGettigan v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 1011, 1017, 67 C.R.2d 516, quoting the text.)

The rules governing negligence causing injury to property are the same as those that apply to personal injuries. (See Royal Ins. Co. v. Mazzei (1942) 50 C.A.2d 549, 552, 123 P.2d 586; Rest.2d, Torts §497.) (On the concept of duty as it applies to intentional as well as negligent torts, see supra, §6 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.202

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §16.1. Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §576.

6 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
D. Elements of Actionable Negligence.
1. Traditional Analysis.
a. Duty--Breach--Causation.
2. Duty as Matter of Law and Assumed Duty.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 836

[§ 836] Duty as Matter of Law and Assumed Duty.

In Friedman v. Merck & Co. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 454, 131 C.R.2d 885, plaintiff applied for a position with a medical group and was required, as a condition of employment, to undergo a TB test. Because he was a strict ethical vegan with a strong belief that it was immoral to kill or exploit animals for any reason, plaintiff said that he could not submit to this test if it contained animal products. An employee of the medical group inquired of defendants, the distributors of the test, and was told that the TB test was "Vegan safe." This information was given to plaintiff, but, after he had taken the test, he learned that the test did, in fact, contain animal products. Plaintiff then sued for negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress, alleging that he suffered and continues to suffer severe mental pain. Defendants' demurrer was sustained on the ground that they owed no duty to plaintiff, and judgment was entered in their favor. Held, affirmed.

(a) Duty as matter of law.

(1) A court's task, in determining duty as a matter of law, is not to decide whether a particular plaintiff's injury was reasonably foreseeable in light of a particular defendant's conduct, but rather to evaluate more generally whether the category of negligent conduct at issue is sufficiently likely to result in the kind of harm experienced that liability may appropriately be imposed on the negligent party. In applying the "sufficiently likely" standard, the court must determine whether the negligent conduct at issue is likely enough to cause harm that a reasonably thoughtful person would take account of in guiding practical conduct. (107 C.A.4th 465.)

(2) Plaintiff's injury arose because of his strongly held beliefs as an ethical vegan, but there was no allegation that the class of ethical vegans who would suffer serious harm upon taking a test containing animal products is sufficiently appreciable or substantial so as to permit the imposition of tort liability under these circumstances. In other words, there is no duty to warn of the possibility of rare, hypertensive reactions to otherwise safe products. (107 C.A.4th 466, citing Briggs v. National Industries (1949) 92 C.A.2d 542, 207 P.2d 110, and Rest.2d, Torts §402A, Comment j.)

(3) The TB test distributor's negligent failure to warn that the test contains animal products is not sufficiently likely to result in serious harm to a sufficiently significant segment of the population as to impose a duty to so advise on defendants as a matter of law. However, this conclusion does not resolve the issue whether defendants, with knowledge of plaintiff's ethical veganism, reasonably should have anticipated that their negligence would put him at risk of serious emotional harm. (107 C.A.4th 468.)

(b) Assumed duty: negligence.

(1) The issue is whether defendants assumed a duty to plaintiff in which his emotional condition was an object. Although the courts have found an assumed duty in a variety of situations, such as misdiagnosing a patient or mistreating a decedent's remains, the cases do not provide any bright-line guidance about the meaning of an assumed duty in which the plaintiff's emotional condition is an object. Even if defendants knew that plaintiff was a strict ethical vegan, "it was not reasonably foreseeable that their negligence in responding to the prospective employer's inquiry would likely cause plaintiff to suffer serious emotional distress. ... It was reasonably foreseeable, under these circumstances, that plaintiff would be upset upon subsequently learning the TB test did in fact contain cow serum. However, it was not reasonably foreseeable plaintiff would suffer serious emotional harm. There is no allegation defendants knew who plaintiff was or the strength of his ethical beliefs." (107 C.A.4th 474.)

(2) Moreover, defendants did not assume a duty in which plaintiff's emotional condition was an object. At best, defendants assumed a duty to exercise reasonable care to provide accurate information, but the duty assumed was "not of a personal nature involving an unavoidable risk of serious emotional trauma." (107 C.A.4th 475.)

(c) Assumed duty: negligent misrepresentation.

(1) The complaint, although labeled "negligence," more accurately alleges negligent misrepresentation in that it focuses on defendants' representations and plaintiff's reliance on them. With respect to duty, plaintiff contended that, even if defendants had no general duty to advise that the TB test contained animal products, once they chose to respond to plaintiff's prospective employer's inquiry, they had a legal responsibility to respond accurately. However, California and the Rest.2d, Torts recognize a duty to communicate accurate information only where there is a risk of physical harm or the representation is made in a commercial setting for a business purpose. No California court has recognized a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation involving a risk of emotional injury alone. (107 C.A.4th 475.)

(2) The rule that negligent misrepresentation causing physical harm is actionable, as recognized in Rest.2d, Torts §311, is an exception to the general rule that the negligent misrepresentation must occur in a commercial context (see supra, §825). In the present case, plaintiff alleged both emotional and physical pain, but conceded that the physical injuries flowed from the emotional harm, not directly from the negligent misrepresentation. In other words, plaintiff was so upset that he became physically ill. Defendants had insufficient reason to believe that plaintiff's physical safety might depend on the accuracy of their information about the TB test. "That plaintiff, for sincere ethical reasons, would not submit to the TB test if it did contain animal products raised no apparent threat of physical harm." (107 C.A.4th 481.)

(3) The usual rule, i.e., that negligent misrepresentation only occurs in a commercial setting, set forth in Rest.2d, Torts §552, applies only when the defendant has a pecuniary interest in the transaction in which the information is given. "Defendants are in the business of distributing the TB test. And they did respond to the inquiry in their business capacities. But the inaccurate information concerning the TB test was not offered ... as part of a business transaction between plaintiff and defendants. Defendants had no significant pecuniary interest in whether plaintiff submitted to the TB test or not. Defendants' alleged misrepresentations did not interfere with any financial or business interest. Under these circumstances, plaintiff has not stated a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation in a business setting for a business purpose." (107 C.A.4th 483.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

7 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
D. Elements of Actionable Negligence.
1. Traditional Analysis.
b. Palsgraf Theory: Negligence Toward Class.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 837

[§ 837] Palsgraf Theory: Negligence Toward Class.

Under the duty approach (supra, §§835, 836), conduct is negligent when it creates an unreasonable risk of harm to some general class of persons. If the plaintiff is not within that class toward whom the defendant is negligent, the injury does not give rise to liability. (See Rest.2d, Torts §281.)

This doctrine was fully expounded in the leading case of Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co. (1928) 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99. Plaintiff stood on a platform of defendant's railroad. A man, carrying a package of fireworks wrapped in a newspaper, attempted to board a moving train. Defendant's employee assisted him, and the package was dislodged, fell, and exploded. The shock threw down platform scales many feet away, and these struck plaintiff. Held, Plaintiff could not recover from defendant. (a) Assuming that the package was dislodged through the employee's negligence, there was nothing in the appearance of the package to indicate its danger to persons far away, and consequently the only wrong was toward the man carrying the package. (b) Negligence in the abstract is not a tort; there must be a violation of duty toward the plaintiff, and he or she cannot recover for negligence toward someone else. (c) The question of proximate cause is not involved where there is no negligence as to the plaintiff.

The important practical effect of the Palsgraf theory is that liability for unforeseeable consequences is avoided by limiting the scope of the duty, rather than by the application of restrictive rules of proximate cause. Hence, the admonition of writers to "look for the duty before you talk causation," and "there is no duty to an unforeseeable plaintiff." (See Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 C.2d 213, 220, 157 P.2d 372 [concurring opinion]; Hatch v. Ford Motor Co. (1958) 163 C.A.2d 393, 396, 329 P.2d 605; Kane v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 C.A.3d 350, 455, 159 C.R. 446; Wawanesa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Matlock (1997) 60 C.A.4th 583, 585, 70 C.R.2d 512; Rest.2d, Torts §281, Comment c; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.2; 38 Cal. L. Rev. 412; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 671, 677; 27 Hastings L. J. 776 [cartoon strip poking fun at Palsgraf]; 31 So. Cal. L. Rev. 99; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 146.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Practical effect of theory: See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §18.2.

8 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
D. Elements of Actionable Negligence.
2. Restatement 2d.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 838

[§ 838] Restatement 2d.

Rest.2d, Torts §281 sets forth the elements of a cause of action for negligence as follows:

"The actor is liable for an invasion of an interest of another, if:"

"(a) the interest invaded is protected against unintentional invasion, and"

"(b) the conduct of the actor is negligent with respect to the other, or a class of persons within which he is included, and"

"(c) the actor's conduct is a legal cause of the invasion, and"

"(d) the other has not so conducted himself as to disable himself from bringing an action for such invasion."

Comment h explains the relation of duty to legal cause: "The problem which is involved in determining whether a particular intervening force is or is not a superseding cause of the harm is in reality a problem of determining whether the intervention of the force was within the scope of the reasons imposing the duty upon the actor to refrain from negligent conduct. If the duty is designed, in part at least, to protect the other from the hazard of being harmed by the intervening force, or by the effect of the intervening force operating on the condition created by the negligent conduct, then that hazard is within the duty, and the intervening force is not a superseding cause. ... A completely accurate analysis of the hazard element in negligence would require the material on superseding cause in Chapter 16 to be placed in this chapter. However, in the past the courts generally have discussed the effect of intervening forces in terms of causation. The solution of the problem of determining whether the presence of an intervening force should relieve the actor from liability for harm which his conduct was a substantial factor in bringing about ... is facilitated by an appreciation of the fact that the problem is a 'hazard problem' rather than a problem of causation."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

9 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
D. Elements of Actionable Negligence.
3. Relaxation of Duty Approach.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 839

[§ 839] Relaxation of Duty Approach.

In Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008, the court, relying heavily on modern text writers, found the legal duty approach unsatisfactory in the particular case, and cast doubt on its usefulness in other situations:

(a) The duty analysis begs the question. It is a shorthand statement of the conclusion--merely the sum of policy considerations that say that the plaintiff is entitled to protection. (68 C.2d 734.)

(b) The duty concept is not deep-rooted; it is a legal device of the latter half of the 19th century designed to curtail the propensities of jurors to give redress for all foreseeable harms. (68 C.2d 734.)

(c) Use of the concept as a means of preventing fraudulent claims is unjustified. (68 C.2d 735.)

(d) The concept should not be used as a means of limiting potential liability where there is a difficulty in fixing definitions for recovery. (68 C.2d 739.)

A number of later decisions are instructive. (See Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1077; Adams v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1975) 50 C.A.3d 37, 41, 123 C.R. 216; Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 C.A.3d 494, 505, 124 C.R. 467; Smith v. Alameda County Social Services Agency (1979) 90 C.A.3d 929, 935, 153 C.R. 712; George A. Hormel & Co. v. Maez (1979) 92 C.A.3d 963, 967, 155 C.R. 337; Bastian v. San Luis Obispo (1988) 199 C.A.3d 520, 530, 245 C.R. 78, infra, §1080; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.2; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 206; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 148; 16 San Diego L. Rev. 793 [Current Status of Duty Concept in California]; 34 San Diego L. Rev. 1503 [use of policy considerations in analyzing duty so as to limit liability].)

Despite this criticism, the duty approach, as illustrated in the preceding sections, has continued to be employed in numerous decisions. (See infra, §840 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]
Later decisions: See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §18.2.

10 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
1. Ignition Key Left in Vehicle.
a. General Rule: No Liability.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 840

[§ 840] General Rule: No Liability.

A common illustration of the duty analysis occurs when a vehicle, left with the ignition key in the lock, is stolen; and the thief, driving negligently, injures the plaintiff. (On the concept of duty as it applies to intentional as well as to negligent torts, see supra, §6 et seq.)

Some courts treat the problem as one of proximate cause. Negligence of the vehicle owner is assumed (ignoring the Palsgraf requirement of negligence toward a class of persons; see supra, §837), and liability is based on the conclusion that the intervening act of the thief is either foreseeable or a superseding cause. However, the realizable likelihood of an intervening criminal act is often the reason why leaving the key in the ignition is negligent, and the fact that the intervening act is intentional or criminal does not by itself make it a superseding cause. (See infra, §842.)

Other jurisdictions, including California, have treated the issue as one of the nature and scope of legal duty: Does the car owner, under common law or statutory principles, owe a duty of care to the stranger who is ultimately injured by the thief? Or, in the Palsgraf analysis, is the stranger an unforeseeable plaintiff, so that the negligent defendant is not negligent toward him or her? On that approach, many courts have reached the conclusion of nonliability, holding that the automobile owner owes no duty to persons who might be injured. (See Holder v. Reber (1956) 146 C.A.2d 557, 558, 304 P.2d 204; Brooker v. El Encino Co. (1963) 216 C.A.2d 598, 602, 31 C.R. 24; 13 Proof of Facts 3d 405 [liability of motorist leaving keys in vehicle for injury caused by thief operating vehicle]; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 140; 14 Hastings L. J. 444; 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 146; 45 A.L.R.3d 787 [liability of motorist leaving key in ignition for injury caused by stranger operating vehicle]; see 70 A.L.R.4th 276 [liability where ignition key had been removed].)

In Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 271 P.2d 23, plaintiff alleged that defendant wife left her car parked with the ignition key in the lock, in violation of a city ordinance, and that R stole the car and negligently struck plaintiff. Held, no cause of action was stated.

(a) A key-removal statute, clearly intended to impose a duty to lock cars for the protection of persons who might be injured by a thief, would be a proper basis for liability here. But the ordinance under consideration showed, by its terms, that it was designed only to prevent theft and not to establish a duty toward the class of persons who might be injured by negligent driving. (43 C.2d 63.)

(b) Defendant wife was negligent, but only to her own and her husband's proprietary interests; in the absence of statute, there was no negligence toward plaintiff. There was a foreseeable risk of possible theft and negligent driving by a thief, but this is less than the risk of negligent driving by a person to whom the car is actually entrusted for driving. This latter risk has not been considered unreasonable in the absence of knowledge of incompetence of the driver, and the statutory liability of an owner for negligence of one driving with permission is limited in amount. (43 C.2d 65.)

(c) "By leaving the key in her car she at most increased the risk that it might be stolen. Even if she should have foreseen the theft, she had no reason to believe that the thief would be an incompetent driver. In view of the fact that the risk of negligent driving she created was less than the risk she might intentionally have created without negligence by entrusting her car to another, and in the light of the rule that she owed no duty to protect plaintiff from harm resulting from the activities of third persons, we conclude that her duty to exercise reasonable care in the management of her automobile did not encompass a duty to protect plaintiff from the negligent driving of a thief." (43 C.2d 66.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

11 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

1. Ignition Key Left in Vehicle.

b. Criticism of General Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 841

[§ 841] Criticism of General Rule.

In Kiick v. Levias (1980) 113 C.A.3d 399, 169 C.R. 859, the court, though necessarily following Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 63, 271 P.2d 23, supra, §840, suggested that its holding--though still the majority rule--should be reexamined in the light of later California decisions and current conditions:

(a) "Insofar as the issue is one of foreseeability, it is certainly a matter of common knowledge that the risk of auto thefts in metropolitan areas has increased substantially over the years since that decision; and it is at least arguable that auto thefts are more likely to occur when keys are left in or about the car, that vehicles operated by thieves are more likely to end up in accidents, and that city dwellers should be held to knowledge of these matters." (113 C.A.3d 404.)

(b) "Insofar as the issue calls for an overall policy determination under the heading of duty, a weighing of relevant factors in addition to foreseeability arguably inclines toward liability as well: the burden upon the defendant in exercising due care is slight, the imposition of liability may increase citizen diligence, and insurance against such risks by owners (assuming liability based on negligence) is presumably both available and prevalent. Thieves, by contrast, are not likely to carry applicable liability insurance, and absent liability on the part of the owner, the entire burden of the accident would fall upon the wholly innocent victim." (113 C.A.3d 404.) (See Hosking v. San Pedro Marine (1979) 98 C.A.3d 98, 104, footnote 4, 159 C.R. 369 [arguing that criteria of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, supra, §833, and empirical data justify departure from Richards v. Stanley rule]; Archer v. Sybert (1985) 167 C.A.3d 722, 730, 213 C.R. 486 ["It may be time to reexamine Richards, but such action can come only from the Legislature or the Supreme Court"]; concurring and dissenting opinion in Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 C.3d 564, 581, 587, 588, 224 C.R. 664, 715 P.2d 624, infra, §842.)

Numerous later cases, while not abolishing the rule in favor of nonliability, have found reasons for not applying it. (See infra, §842 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

12 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

1. Ignition Key Left in Vehicle.

c. Special Circumstances Exception.

1. Trucks and Other Heavy Vehicles.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 842

[§ 842] Trucks and Other Heavy Vehicles.

In Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 C.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269, a duty was found in the special circumstances, and, under modern proximate cause rules (see infra, §1215), the intervening negligent driving of the thief was not a superseding cause. Defendants, earth movers, left two 26-ton bulldozers on a mesa at the close of Saturday's work, one unlocked. Three intoxicated young men (aged 17, 18, and 20) managed to start the unlocked one, drove around causing damage, and then lost control of the machine, which went for about a mile, damaging plaintiffs' house and injuring them. Held, defendants were liable.

(a) Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 63, 271 P.2d 23, supra, §840, is distinguishable. Unlike an ordinary automobile, a bulldozer attracts spectators; curious persons are known to climb on them, and they are attractive to children. Hence, "there was a reasonably foreseeable risk that defendants' bulldozers might be tampered with when left unattended." (44 C.2d 776.) The bulldozer's size, particularly when left on top of a mesa, made it particularly dangerous. (44 C.2d 776.)

(b) As to causation, the theory of §449 of the Restatement applies; i.e., the likelihood of intermeddling was what made defendants' conduct negligence. (See infra, §1215.) "[D]efendants' duty to protect plaintiffs from injuries caused by the uncontrolled and unauthorized operation of their bulldozer included a duty to protect plaintiffs from the intentional misconduct of the young men, and such misconduct did not therefore constitute a superseding cause of plaintiffs' harm." (44 C.2d 777.) (See 2 San Diego L. Rev. 153; 5 Santa Clara Lawyer 91; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 381; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 125; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1260.)

In Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 C.3d 564, 224 C.R. 664, 715 P.2d 624, defendant was a concrete subcontractor of Atkinson, a general contractor constructing a freeway interchange. Defendant brought his truck-mounted aerial manlift to the job, but discovered that the stabilizing cable of the ladder was frayed and broken; he then obtained permission from Atkinson's manager to leave the lift in Atkinson's fenced equipment yard until defendant's mechanic could repair it. Defendant told Atkinson's manager that he could use the machine after repairing it; and, contrary to his usual practice (and industry custom), he left the keys to both the truck and the lift engine in the truck without posting any warning signs. Atkinson's master mechanic removed the broken cable and ordered a replacement. But before it arrived, plaintiff, defendant's employee, while using the lift in sandblasting a bridge column, was thrown from the ladder basket and seriously injured. Held, judgment for plaintiff affirmed. The fact that the machine was left in a fenced-in area instead of an unenclosed location, as in Richardson, did not compel a contrary conclusion.

(a) "Although the location in which defendant has left his machinery, as well as other steps which defendant may have taken to minimize the danger of injury--for example, notifying Atkinson's foreman and other supervisory employees of the lift's dangerous condition--could well have been found by the jury to render defendant nonnegligent in controlling his machinery, those factors, in themselves, did not negate defendant's general duty--as the owner of a piece of heavy construction machinery--to use due care to prevent injurious misuse. That general duty applies wherever the machinery may be found." (41 C.3d 573.)

(b) The issue of negligence was properly left to the jury. "[I]t may have concluded that defendant did not act with due care in leaving the keys to the defective lift with the machinery where it could be used by unknowing employees or in failing to attach warning tags to the vehicle." (41 C.3d 574.) (See 14 Pepperdine L. Rev. 220.)

In Hergenrether v. East (1964) 61 C.2d 440, 39 C.R. 4, 393 P.2d 164, defendants E and C were employees of defendant roofing contractor. With E driving, they took defendant's truck out of town on business, and with implied authority, stayed overnight at a hotel. While eating and drinking, they left the truck parked in the local "skid row" area. During the night, it was stolen, and an unidentified thief drove it negligently and collided with plaintiffs' car. Held, judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdicts reversed; the driver and his employer were liable for plaintiffs' injuries. The special circumstances supporting the jury's verdict were: (a) The vehicle was left in a neighborhood frequented by lawless persons and drunks. (b) It was intended to be left there for a relatively long time--midafternoon to the following morning, and, more important, overnight. (c) It was a partially loaded truck, which possessed unusual potentiality of harm, because its safe operation was not a matter of common experience, and it was capable of inflicting more serious injury than an ordinary vehicle when not properly controlled. (61 C.2d 445.) (For criticism see 2 San Diego L. Rev. 153; 5 Santa Clara Lawyer 91; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 125; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1260.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

13 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

1. Ignition Key Left in Vehicle.

c. Special Circumstances Exception.

2. Ordinary Vehicles.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 843

[§ 843] Ordinary Vehicles.

In Enders v. Apcoa (1976) 55 C.A.3d 897, 127 C.R. 751, Z left her car with defendant's parking lot attendant. The car was stolen, and plaintiff, a police officer, was injured in a collision with the fleeing thieves. Held, summary judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) The special circumstances that could establish foreseeability of the harm were as follows: (1) It is a common practice of parking lots to require patrons to leave keys in their vehicles so that attendants may move them, and failure to guard against car theft thereafter may be negligence. (2) Only one attendant was on duty, and this may sometimes be as ineffectual in guarding against theft as no attendant at all. (3) Prior thefts of cars from defendant's lot could establish foreseeability of the danger of injury to a police officer who was under a duty to recover a stolen car. (55 C.A.3d 904.)

(b) The police intervention, the attempt of the thief to avoid arrest, negligent driving during this attempt, and the likelihood of injury to the arresting officer or others were all foreseeable. (55 C.A.3d 905.)

(c) Plaintiff offered empirical data to demonstrate that it is foreseeable that a stolen vehicle will be involved in an accident. Although the admissibility of this data is doubtful, "we take notice of the widely published warnings by law enforcement offices against leaving a key in the ignition. A parking lot operator is no less knowledgeable of these risks and dangers than a private citizen, and perhaps should be held to a greater degree of responsibility because of the volume of cars left in his care." (55 C.A.3d 906.) (See Murray v. Wright (1958) 166 C.A.2d 589, 592, 333 P.2d 111 [defendants, who operated used car lot and left ignition keys in all cars to encourage public to examine and operate vehicles, was liable when B took car and collided with plaintiff].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

14 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

1. Ignition Key Left in Vehicle.

c. Special Circumstances Exception.

3. Exception Not Applicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 844

[§ 844] Exception Not Applicable.

In Avis Rent A Car System v. Superior Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 221, 15 C.R.2d 711, J stole a rental car from defendant rental car company's check-in parking lot. During the check-in process, keys were left in the cars for as long as 45 minutes. There was no fence or wall around the check-in lot and no guarded gate where cars leaving the lot might be examined. Defendant had been warned about security problems, and other cars had been stolen from the check-in area. In fact, J herself had been convicted of an earlier theft of a vehicle from the same lot. One week after the present theft, J, while driving the stolen vehicle and being pursued by the police from the scene of a shoplifting, ran a stop sign and collided with plaintiff's vehicle. After its motion for summary judgment was denied, defendant sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; the "special circumstances" doctrine was not applicable to this case.

(a) Supreme Court decisions establish that special circumstances exist when heavy vehicles are left unattended and available for use by those not accustomed to driving them. (12 C.A.4th 228, citing Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 C.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269, supra, §842, and other cases.) Also, dictum in Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 63, 271 P.2d 23, supra, §840, suggests that an owner might be liable, under some circumstances, for leaving keys in an ordinary automobile, such as where the car is left in front of a school; the special circumstance of making a car available to irresponsible children is similar to an invitation to tamper with heavy equipment. Hence, the Richards dictum means only that one has a duty not to invite or entice others to tamper with vehicles that they are incompetent to drive. (12 C.A.4th 229.)

(b) Two Court of Appeal decisions, Murray v. Wright (1958) 166 C.A.2d 589, 333 P.2d 111, supra, §843, and Enders v. Apcoa (1976) 55 C.A.3d 897, 127 C.R. 751, supra, §843, have found special circumstances to exist in situations involving keys left in ordinary automobiles. However, Murray is distinguishable from the present case, because the policy of used car dealers leaving vehicles unlocked with keys in the ignition was found to encourage intoxicated persons to drive the vehicles. (12 C.A.4th 230.) And Enders, which involved a police chase while the thief was driving the stolen vehicle, focused solely on the foreseeability of the particular accident, and hence is an improper extension of the special circumstances doctrine. (12 C.A.4th 232.)

(c) As explained in Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 C.3d 564, 224 C.R. 664, 715 P.2d 624, supra, §842, foreseeability of harm is only one factor in the calculus for determining duty, and the court's task is to evaluate generally whether the type of negligent conduct in question is sufficiently likely to result in the kind of harm experienced to allow liability to be imposed on the negligent party. Injuries to motorists during police chases (as a general kind of harm) are a foreseeable result of leaving a key in the ignition (a category of negligence). However, for policy reasons, the Richards court found no duty, i.e., even the possibility of injury during a chase is not a special circumstance creating a duty to protect motorists from negligent driving by a thief. (12 C.A.4th 232.)

(d) Here, defendant's conduct of parking its cars in a negligently attended lot with keys in the ignitions did not create a duty to control the conduct of a thief. "It is true that the risk of theft increases when more cars are involved and when they are in a fixed location. Thieves may learn about the target cars and may find ways to defeat the security provided. But this increase in the risk of theft due to negligence of an owner of a fleet of cars is much like the increased risk associated with leaving keys in the ignition of a car left unattended on the street. It is not equivalent to inviting or enticing an incompetent driver to tamper with a vehicle. These actions are not the 'special circumstances' which create a special relationship between or among the parties. Thus, they do not impose on the car owner the duty to control the actions of the thief." (12 C.A.4th 233.)

(e) Even if the circumstances in this case were "special," the resulting duty would not be perpetual and unlimited. As a matter of law, the duty would not extend to this accident, which occurred in another county 1 week later during a police chase not caused by a report of the vehicle theft. (12 C.A.4th 233.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See May v. Nine Plus Properties (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1538, 1544, 50 C.R.3d 13 [conduct of automobile body shop in parking cars with keys in ignition in lot with fence and security cameras was not special circumstance that created duty to control conduct of thief and protect third parties, notwithstanding previous thefts from shop, and thus shop was not liable for injuries suffered by police officer, 2 days later, in collision with stolen vehicle].

15 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
a. Adoption of Firefighter's Rule.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 845

[§ 845] Adoption of Firefighter's Rule.

Where a person negligently causes a fire that results in injury or death to a firefighter, is the negligent person liable for that death or injury? Under the "fireman's rule," adopted for California in Giorgi v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1968) 266 C.A.2d 355, 72 C.R. 119, the negligent person is not. Plaintiffs were six federal employees in the government service, required to fight forest fires and trained to do so. A fire broke out in a National Forest, and they were trapped when the fire shifted. Four were killed, two were injured. Actions were brought against defendant utility on the theory that its negligent maintenance of a pole and wires caused the fire. Held, judgment for plaintiffs reversed; there was no liability.

(a) The fireman's rule has been established by almost unanimous agreement of authorities elsewhere. (266 C.A.2d 357.) Some of the theories relied on by other courts are unacceptable: e.g., assumption of risk, not applicable under late California cases, and the limited duty owed to a licensee, now repudiated by Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. "Hence our early reaction was that the fireman's rule was but an anachronism still extant only because of a somewhat myopic adherence to stare decisis." (266 C.A.2d 359.)

(b) However, as pointed out in a leading New Jersey case, "it is the fireman's business to deal with that very hazard," and "he cannot complain of negligence in the creation of the very occasion for his engagement." "In terms of duty, it may be said there is none owed the fireman to exercise care so as not to require the special services for which he is trained and paid." For that risk, the firefighter should receive compensation from the public he or she serves--in pay and compensation benefits. (266 C.A.2d 359.)

(c) Other policy considerations are opposed to liability: (1) Judicial determination of the cause of a fire, after its destruction, presents difficult problems. (2) There are grave dangers of expansion of such a rule: May an ambulance driver, responding to a call to pick up victims of an automobile collision, and injured, recover from the negligent driver in the collision? May an attendant or nurse in a contagious disease ward of a public hospital, contracting illness from a patient confined there through the patient's negligent exposure to infection, recover from the patient? (266 C.A.2d 360.)

(d) "We hold that a paid fireman has no cause of action against one whose passive negligence caused the fire in which he was injured. We do not deal with the arsonist or with one who prankishly or maliciously turns in a false alarm." (266 C.A.2d 360.) (See Dobbs, The Law of Torts §284 et seq.; 41 Proof of Facts 2d 133 [breach of duty of care to fire fighter or police officer]; 71 Cal. L. Rev. 218; 4 U.S.F. L. Rev. 125; 11 A.L.R.4th 597 [liability to firefighter coming on premises in discharge of duty]; 30 A.L.R.4th 81 [liability to police officer coming on premises in discharge of duty]; 62 A.L.R.4th 727 [firefighter's rule as defense in products liability case]; 89 A.L.R.4th 1079 [application of rule to bar recovery by emergency medical personnel injured in responding to, or at scene, of emergency].)

The scope of the firefighter's rule was refined in later cases:

(1) It is immaterial that the defendant's negligence is passive rather than active or that the injury is caused by an explosion rather than a fire. (Scott v. E. L. Yeager Const. Co. (1970) 12 C.A.3d 1190, 1195, 1198, 91 C.R. 232.)

(2) The firefighter's rule applies even though the defendant was engaged in an ultrahazardous activity. (Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 362, 376, 182 C.R. 629, 644 P.2d 822 [boilover at chemical manufacturing plant]; see Rowland v. Shell Oil Co. (1986) 179 C.A.3d 399, 224 C.R. 547 [cleanup of chemical spill is "ordinary" duty].)

(3) A defendant stipulating to negligence may not assert the rule. (Assad v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1609, 1612, 50 C.R.2d 443.)

(4) The rule applies only to injuries caused by the very misconduct that created the risk that necessitated the firefighter's presence. (Lipson v. Superior Court, supra.)

The firefighter's rule has survived all challenges in subsequent cases (see Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries (1994) 8 C.4th 532, 34 C.R.2d 630, 882 P.2d 347, infra, §850), but it has been subjected to both judicial and statutory exceptions (see infra, §853 et seq.).

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.570, 1060, 1315

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

16 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

b. Injured Party.

1. Volunteer Firefighter.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 846

[§ 846] Volunteer Firefighter.

In Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 C.A.3d 710, 181 C.R. 311, plaintiffs were "paid-call" members of a county fire department, i.e., volunteer firefighters who, when informed of a fire, could elect to assist in fighting it. They received some hours of training, provided their own transportation and firefighting clothing, and were paid $ 5 regardless of the length of time spent. An agricultural burn went out of control, the fire department was called, and plaintiffs elected to assist. When a truck in which they were riding backed up to escape flames, they jumped to the ground and were run over. They brought this action against the owners and employees of the ranch, seeking damages for the injuries from the fall and for burns received in fighting the fire. Held, they were not entitled to recover.

(a) Nearly all of the firefighter's rule cases have involved full-time professional firefighters or police officers, and the opinions uniformly mention the fact that the injured firefighter or police officer was a professional or paid to undertake the very risk involved. (129 C.A.3d 716.) But no valid distinction can be made on this basis. Plaintiffs had special training; they were compensated (although in a meager sum); by statute they were entitled to workers' compensation benefits, to the same special presumptions of industrial causation as full-time firefighters, and to reasonably necessary medical treatment. (129 C.A.3d 716, 717.)

(b) Plaintiffs contended that Walters v. Sloan (1977) 20 C.3d 199, 142 C.R. 152, 571 P.2d 609, infra, §848, in pointing to the assumption of risk basis of the rule, stressed the element of compensation. This is unsound. The opinion "discloses no intent on the part of the court to limit the assumption of the risk basis for the rule to cases in which the risk was assumed for compensation." (129 C.A.3d 719.)

(c) Plaintiffs further contended that assumption of risk has become a disfavored doctrine in view of the comparative negligence case of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, infra, §1329. But Li abolished the defense only where it was a variant of contributory negligence; true assumption of risk--which negates a duty of care--remains as a defense and as a support for the firefighter's rule. (129 C.A.3d 720.)

(d) Certain policy reasons for the firefighter's rule, as set forth in Walters, apply equally to the present plaintiffs. And an additional policy consideration is entitled to some weight: If liability to paid-call firefighters is imposed, persons such as defendants may be reluctant to call on fire departments for fear of lawsuits; i.e., they will have no way of knowing whether firefighters who respond are paid-call or regular firefighters. (129 C.A.3d 721, 722.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.570, 1060, 1315

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

17 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

b. Injured Party.

2. Police Officer.

aa. Off-Duty Officer.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 847

[§ 847] Off-Duty Officer.

In Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 C.A.4th 973, 62 C.R.2d 130, an off-duty deputy sheriff was injured when he confronted, shot, and killed a suspected burglar in the apartment building in which he lived. He sued the apartment building owners, alleging that their failure to correct known security and maintenance problems was the cause of his injuries. Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed; the fact that plaintiff's injuries were sustained off duty did not avoid the firefighter's rule.

(a) Firefighter's rule is applicable. As a matter of law, the firefighter's rule bars plaintiff's claims. Plaintiff acted in response to suspected criminal activity; he acted as a California peace officer, utilizing his professional training; he asserted his authority as a California peace officer; and he exercised his statutory authority to use force, including deadly force. (53 C.A.4th 980.) These activities were inherently part of plaintiff's job and were the types of hazards plaintiff had been trained and employed to confront. Also, plaintiff was eligible for special public compensation, such as disability benefits, for confronting the dangers posed by defendants' failure to provide security measures to prevent criminal intrusions. Because residents of the county, probably including defendants, had already been taxed to provide these benefits, they were entitled to the benefit of the cost-spreading aspect of the public compensation system. (53 C.A.4th 981.)

(b) Risk need not be assumed for compensation. The firefighter's rule is not strictly limited to cases in which the particular risk was assumed for compensation. (53 C.A.4th 982.) It is not the fact or amount of compensation that is determinative, but rather the relationship between the public and the firefighters or police officers who serve it. Although peace officers like plaintiff are entitled to special public compensation for undertaking the hazards peculiar to their line of work, it is not this that determines the applicability of the firefighter's rule. Plaintiff performed a "public" service when he sought to apprehend the suspected burglar. Indeed, he points to no material difference between the "service" he would have performed if on duty and the "service" he performed in this case. (53 C.A.4th 983.)

(c) Nexus required between plaintiff's employment and presence at scene is not required. Moreover, a nexus between plaintiff's presence at the scene and his employment is not required for application of the firefighter's rule.

Whether he entered the premises as an ordinary citizen or a police officer was irrelevant. The firefighter's rule was triggered because he reacted as a police officer to the disturbance, and deliberately encountered the danger posed. (53 C.A.4th 984.)

(d) Plaintiff is distinguishable from ordinary tenant. In light of plaintiff's status, he was not similarly situated to an ordinary tenant who may have been able to recover from defendants. A peace officer is not similarly situated to an ordinary tenant when it comes to handling the type of risk plaintiff confronted. An ordinary tenant is neither trained nor under any duty to apprehend a criminal suspect. Those are precisely the types of "public functions" the taxpayers expect, pay, and equip California peace officers to perform. (53 C.A.4th 984.)

(e) Exception for wilful acts is inapplicable. C.C. 1714.9(a)(1) provides an exception to the firefighter's rule where a peace officer's injuries result from a person's wilful acts and the person knows or should know of the peace officer's presence (see infra, §857 et seq.). This exception does not allow recovery here. The statute may have applied if the deputy were seeking damages from the suspect for his injuries. But he was not, and there was no showing that the persons he attempted to hold responsible "knew or should have known" of his presence on the premises as a peace officer. (53 C.A.4th 985.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

18 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
b. Injured Party.
2. Police Officer.
bb. Officer Responding to Existing Crisis.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 848

[§ 848] Officer Responding to Existing Crisis.

In Walters v. Sloan (1977) 20 C.3d 199, 142 C.R. 152, 571 P.2d 609, the complaint alleged that defendants left their home in charge of their 16-year-old daughter. She hosted a party attended by 200 people, including many minors, and provided the guests with liquor. Plaintiff police officer, who was sent to the home to quell a disturbance, was attacked and injured while attempting to arrest a minor for public drunkenness. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The firefighter's rule has received nearly unanimous acceptance, and is applicable to police officers. (20 C.3d 202.) Although repeatedly attacked as based on outdated concepts of tort liability, the rule is premised on sound public policy and is in accord with modern tort liability principles. (20 C.3d 203.)

(b) The rule is in accord with public policy and fundamental concepts of justice. For the risk of negligence, the firefighter should receive appropriate compensation from the public, both in pay that reflects the hazard and in workers' compensation benefits for the consequences of the inherent risks of the calling. (20 C.3d 205.) California statutes make adequate provision for this compensation. (20 C.3d 205, 206.) And, if the rule were abolished, Witt v. Jackson (1961) 57 C.2d 57, 17 C.R. 369, 366 P.2d 641, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §92, would give the public agency employer a lien against the recovery, so that much of it would not go to the public employee but would be returned to the public agency. And the courts would be burdened with litigation among the public agency employer, the retirement system, and the negligence insurer. (20 C.3d 206.)

(c) The argument that the firefighter's rule should not apply where the theory of the action is negligence per se (see infra, §890), is not persuasive. The presumption of negligence arises where the plaintiff was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute was adopted. (20 C.3d 206, citing the text.) Ordinarily, a criminal statute is enacted not to protect police officers from injury while investigating or terminating the prohibited conduct, but rather to protect the public. (20 C.3d 207.)

(d) The rule precludes recovery only where the negligence alleged--in this case furnishing liquor to minors who became drunk--was the same negligence that resulted in summoning the police. (20 C.3d 207.) (See Kelhi v. Fitzpatrick (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1149, 31 C.R.2d 182 [rule applied where highway patrol officer, responding to emergency created by truck losing rear tires, was injured when tires bounced off retaining wall and struck him]; Tilley v. Schulte (1999) 70 C.A.4th 79, 82, 82 C.R.2d 497 [rule applied in police officer's action against allegedly negligent psychiatrist of man who shot officer responding to report of gunshots]; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 585 [urging adoption of professional rescuers rule]; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 529 [Walters v. Sloan]; 41 Proof of Facts 2d 133 [breach of duty of care to firefighter or police officer].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.570, 1060, 1315

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See May v. Nine Plus Properties (2006) 143 C.A.4th 1538, 1544, 50 C.R.3d 13 [under firefighter's rule, police officer, who was injured while pursuing vehicle that, 2 days earlier had been stolen from repair shop parking area, could not recover from shop owner].

19 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

b. Injured Party.

2. Police Officer.

cc. Officer Responding to New Crisis.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 849

[§ 849] Officer Responding to New Crisis.

In Seibert Sec. Services v. Superior Court (1993) 18 C.A.4th 394, 22 C.R.2d 514, plaintiff police officer brought an arrested suspect to a hospital for an examination of possible injuries. While plaintiff was there, a mental patient became abusive toward a security guard employed by defendant, and plaintiff helped to subdue him. The patient was then handcuffed and put into a security cell, but the handcuffs were soon removed by another security guard, L. Shortly thereafter, the patient attacked L, plaintiff responded to L's call for help, and plaintiff was injured while attempting to subdue the patient. During the struggle, L dropped back and did not assist, but another security guard did offer assistance. Relying on the firefighter's rule as a defense, defendant security service moved for summary judgment, but the motion was denied. Defendant then sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted.

(a) Effect of defendant's contractual duty to provide security services. Plaintiff argued that the firefighter's rule is superseded in this case because defendant breached its contractual duty to protect visitors to the hospital, including plaintiff. This argument is without merit. If plaintiff's injury had occurred while he was completing paper work at the hospital counter, it is arguable that defendant would have been liable. However, plaintiff's injury occurred after he had responded, as a police officer, to a request for help. Thus, at the moment of his injury, plaintiff was no longer a business invitee or visitor to whom the landowner owed a duty of protection that had been delegated to defendant. Instead, as a police officer acting on behalf of the public, he waived any duty of care owed to him by defendant, and became subject to the greater social policy denying him recovery in tort against those who caused the danger. (18 C.A.4th 414.)

(b) Effect of defendant's ineffective assistance. Also without merit is plaintiff's argument that liability may be imposed because one of defendant's employees apparently assisted plaintiff in restraining the patient, while another backed away from the struggle. When attempting to apprehend or subdue a suspect or dangerous person, a police officer has no right to expect private assistance. Hence, the officer cannot complain if any assistance that is offered is not enough. (18 C.A.4th 416.) The result might have been different had plaintiff been injured because of the assistance. However, this possibility was not raised, and hence is not decided. With respect to L, backing away from the struggle may have been a breach of the duty owed to defendant. However, L, who, like plaintiff, was a victim of the patient's assault, owed no duty to plaintiff to rejoin the fray. (18 C.A.4th 416, footnote 15.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

20 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

b. Injured Party.

3. Private Safety Employee.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 850

[§ 850] Private Safety Employee.

Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries (1994) 8 C.4th 532, 34 C.R.2d 630, 882 P.2d 347, presents the question whether a private safety employee who has occasional firefighting duties may state a cause of action against a third party, not the employer, for injuries caused by the third party's negligence in starting a fire. Two oil refinery employees working as safety supervisors brought a personal injury action against a maintenance services contractor after they were burned in a petroleum fire started by the contractor's employee (the third person). The job duties of both plaintiffs included responding to emergencies at the refinery and participating in the fire brigade, and both had training in firefighting. The trial judge granted summary judgment for defendant, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed; because the firefighter's rule did not apply, plaintiffs stated a cause of action.

(a) The firefighter's rule should not be viewed as a separate concept, but as an example of the proper application of the doctrine of assumption of risk, i.e., as an illustration of when it is appropriate to find that the defendant owes no duty of care. (8 C.4th 538.) Moreover, after Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 C.4th 296, 11 C.R.2d 2, 834 P.2d 696, infra, §1339, the rule cannot be said to rest on the firefighter's voluntary acceptance of a known risk of injury in the course of employment. Thus, the court in Holland v. Crumb (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1844, 32 C.R.2d 366, reasoned incorrectly in applying the rule to the claim of a privately employed tow truck driver on the theory that the tow truck driver must assume the foreseeable risks of his hazardous employment. (8 C.4th 541, 545.)

(b) The proper basis for the rule is the legal conclusion that the person who starts a fire owes no duty of care to the firefighter who is called to respond to the fire. The policy reasons supporting this conclusion do not apply where the plaintiff is a privately employed firefighter or safety employee. (8 C.4th 541, 542.)

(c) When the public secures the services of a firefighter by taxing itself, it purchases exoneration from the duty of care. It should not have to pay twice (through taxation and individual liability) for those services. "But when a safety employee is privately employed, a third party lacks the relationship that justifies exonerating him or her from the usual duty of care. ... Having no relationship with the employee, and not having contracted for his or her services, it would not be unfair to charge the third party with the usual duty of care towards the private safety employee." (8 C.4th 543.) (See Marquez v. Mainframe (1996) 42 C.A.4th 881, 885, 50 C.R.2d 34 [private security guard was not subject to firefighter's rule; citing Neighbarger]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1785 [Neighbarger]; cf. Bryant v. Glastetter (1995) 32 C.A.4th 770, 38 C.R.2d 291, infra, §862 [Neighbarger is controlling, but court believed that Holland v. Crumb stated correct result]; Herrle v. Estate of Marshall (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1761, 1771, 53 C.R.2d 713, infra, §1353 [firefighter's rule may apply to private employees; distinguishing Neighbarger.])

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

21 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

b. Injured Party.

4. Tow Truck Operator.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 851

[§ 851] Tow Truck Operator.

Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries (1994) 8 C.4th 532, 34 C.R.2d 630, 882 P.2d 347, supra, §850, was distinguished in Dyer v. Superior Court (1997) 56 C.A.4th 61, 65 C.R.2d 85, and the firefighter's rule was applied to a private tow truck operator who was injured while rendering services. The tow truck driver sued defendant motorist on the ground that negligent failure to maintain his car caused a mechanical breakdown that brought plaintiff to a freeway location where defendant's car was struck by another car. Held, the trial judge erred in denying defendant's motion for summary judgment. Given that plaintiff had a contract-based obligation to help defendant in case of mechanical breakdown (through defendant's automobile club membership), the firefighter's rule applied as a matter of law, i.e., defendant did not owe a duty to plaintiff to keep his car in good mechanical order so that defendant would not need plaintiff's assistance on the freeway. (56 C.A.4th 69.) Hence, the firefighter's rule precludes imposing liability. It is good social policy to encourage motorists like defendant to rely on their contractual arrangements for aid from private towing services, rather than to discourage them by imposing on them potential liability for asking for help. (56 C.A.4th 72.) The crucial question in applying the firefighter's rule is the relationship between the public and the safety worker, not whether the worker is a public or private employee. (56 C.A.4th 73.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

22 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

c. Extension of Firefighter's Rule to All Public Safety Personnel.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 852

[§ 852] Extension of Firefighter's Rule to All Public Safety Personnel.

Oceanside v. Superior Court (2000) 81 C.A.4th 269, 96 C.R.2d 621, on unusual facts, has extended the firefighter's rule to all public safety personnel. Plaintiff and defendant, both lifeguards, but employed by different agencies, conducted a joint rescue operation to save a jet ski collision victim stranded in ocean water next to a jetty. After the lifeguards experienced difficulty in transporting the victim over the jetty rocks, defendant asserted authority over the mission by directing plaintiff and others to lower the victim off the rocks and onto a floating sled. During this procedure, a wave pushed plaintiff into the jetty rocks, resulting in her injury. In this personal injury action, defendant's motion for summary judgment was denied, and he sought mandamus. Held, mandamus issued; the firefighter's rule barred the action.

(a) The firefighter's rule extends to all public safety personnel, including publicly employed lifeguards. The rule is not limited to firefighters, police officers, and emergency medical personnel referred to in C.C. 1714.9, the statutory exception for wilful misconduct or negligent acts. All respond to public emergencies or crises for which they have been employed and specially trained. (81 C.A.4th 279.)

(b) Both the common law exception for independent acts of misconduct that are committed after the public safety officer has arrived on the scene (supra, §§855, 856), and the statutory exception for wilful misconduct or negligent acts relating to conduct after the defendant knows or should know of the public safety officer's presence (supra, §857 et seq.) do not apply to actions between public safety officers engaged in a joint operation. The same public policy considerations underlying the application of the firefighter's rule to exonerate the victim should also apply to exonerate a fellow lifeguard whose presence and actions are in furtherance of the joint rescue operation for that victim. Allowing public safety officers to be threatened with personal injury lawsuits by fellow public safety officers would (1) endanger public safety, (2) encourage costly litigation even though the public has already financed statutory compensation of injured public safety personnel, (3) impair efficient judicial administration by encouraging complicated lawsuits, and (4) threaten the exclusivity of the Workers' Compensation Act by allowing an injured officer to sue when the negligent officer is employed by another agency but not by his or her own employer. (81 C.A.4th 280.)

(c) That plaintiff received only ordinary workers' compensation benefits is immaterial. The absence of special compensation or benefits to which firefighters and police officers are entitled does not preclude the application of the firefighter's rule. (81 C.A.4th 284.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

23 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
d. Judicial Exception for Fraud.
1. Firefighter Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 853

[§ 853] Firefighter Cases.

In Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 362, 182 C.R. 629, 644 P.2d 822, plaintiff B, a fireman, responded to a chemical boilover at defendants' chemical manufacturing plant, and was injured while attempting to contain it. His complaint alleged in part that defendants, negligently or intentionally, incorrectly informed him that the boilover did not involve toxic chemicals or materials, thereby causing him to suffer injury that could have been avoided had he been correctly informed. Held, under the fraud exception to the firefighter's rule, the complaint stated a cause of action, and denial of summary judgment for defendants was proper.

(a) A number of jurisdictions have allowed recovery where a landowner or occupier failed to warn a firefighter or police officer of a known, hidden danger on the premises; and California, in Bartholomew v. Klingler Co. (1975) 53 C.A.3d 975, 978, 126 C.R. 191, infra, 856, applied this exception. (31 C.3d 371, 372.)

(b) Intentional misrepresentation of the nature of a hazard cannot be distinguished from failure to warn of a known hidden danger, for in both situations, the defendant misleads the firefighter about the nature or extent of the hazards, and is responsible for the firefighter's erroneous belief that controlling the fire will not require any special safety precautions. (31 C.3d 372.)

(c) The fraud exception is supported by the doctrine of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086. "This court can conceive of no policy reason to shield from liability a landowner or occupier whose negligent or intentional misrepresentation of the nature of a hazard proximately causes injury to a firefighter. Indeed, firefighters may often have to rely on information provided by the owner or occupier of the premises to determine how most effectively and safely to combat a fire. If this information is misleading, the result may well be the tragic loss of not only the fireman's life but also the lives of members of the public. Public policy dictates that recovery for injuries or for loss of life should be compensated and the fireman's rule should not be used to shield property owners or occupiers from liability for such tortious acts." (31 C.3d 373.) (For holding on claim that defendants' activity was ultrahazardous, and thus beyond scope of firefighter's rule, see supra, §845 et seq.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

24 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
d. Judicial Exception for Fraud.
2. Police Officer Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 854

[§ 854] Police Officer Cases.

In Boon v. Rivera (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1322, 96 C.R.2d 276, plaintiff police officer, responding to a 911 call, found defendant's husband barricaded in his house. Defendant advised plaintiff and other officers that her husband was not violent, even though she had information to the contrary. Relying on this fraudulent information, plaintiff responded with nonlethal force and was shot as a result. In the resulting personal injury action, the trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground of the firefighter's rule. Held, judgment for defendant reversed.

(a) In applying the firefighter's rule, courts have distinguished between conduct occurring before the officer's arrival (recovery barred) and conduct occurring after the officer's arrival (recovery not barred). (80 C.A.4th 1328, citing Spargur v. Park (1982) 128 C.A.3d 469, 180 C.R. 257, infra, §856, and other cases.)

(b) The present case is governed by Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 362, 182 C.R.2d 629, 644 P.2d 822, supra, §853, where the firefighter's rule was held not to bar recovery for injury to a firefighter who, after his arrival, received misrepresentations about the nature of a chemical boilover. Here, defendant's statement that her husband was nonviolent was a misrepresentation, because defendant knew that he had an M-16 rifle in the house, had threatened to kill the first officer on the scene, had been declared to be a danger to himself and others, and had recently held a gun to defendant's head and had threatened to kill her and her child. As in Lipson, where the firefighter, relying on the statement that the chemicals were nontoxic, was injured when he did not take adequate precautions, so plaintiff here alleged that he relied on the misrepresentation and, as a result, was injured when he applied nonlethal force. (80 C.A.4th 1328.)

(c) "[A] police officer may expect force, even deadly force, in responding to an emergency call of a barricaded man, but the risk that someone at the scene will deceive the officer as to the nature of the violent tendencies of the person inside is not an inherent risk of a police officer's job. An officer cannot reasonably be expected to anticipate such misconduct." (80 C.A.4th 1330.)

(d) Defendant contended that even if the firefighter's rule did not bar recovery, traditional duty analysis did so. Defendant's assumption that the duty inquiry must proceed separately is inappropriate, because the firefighter's rule is but a limitation on traditional duty principles, which require every person to use due care to prevent harm to another. As to the duty of care owed to police officers, C.C. 1714.9 (infra, §857) incorporates the "before/after" distinction. Although most of the cases analyzing the effect of this section have treated it as an exception to the firefighter's rule, more accurately, it can be described as reimposing the duty of ordinary care that was otherwise abrogated by the firefighter's rule. In an emergency, the duty imposed on those present at the scene is to refrain from misstating material facts concerning the nature of the emergency to those public officials present. (80 C.A.4th 1330, citing Lipson.)

(e) Relying on Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 C.A.3d 1008, 272 C.R. 222, infra, §1220, defendant argued that she could not be held liable for the criminal act of another. However, Wise dealt with a failure to warn and was based on the principle that, lacking a special relationship, a person should not be liable for nonfeasance. This principle has no application where the defendant, through misfeasance, has created a foreseeable risk of harm from the criminal act of a third person. (80 C.A.4th 1331, citing Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 C.A.3d 206, 169 C.R. 282, infra, §1058.) Here, both the victim and the harm were foreseeable in view of defendant's affirmative misrepresentation that her husband was not violent. Based on these facts, defendant owed a duty to plaintiff not to misrepresent the nature of the hazard that he faced. (80 C.A.4th 1332.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

25 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
e. Judicial Exception for Independent Cause.
1. Firefighter Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 855

[§ 855] Firefighter Cases.

Under the independent cause exception, the firefighter's rule does not apply where acts of misconduct are independent of those that necessitated summoning the plaintiff. Although the exception has been applied mainly in police officer cases (see infra, §856), it is equally applicable to firefighters. (Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 C.3d 362, 369, 182 C.R. 629, 644 P.2d 822, supra, §853; Krueger v. Anaheim (1982) 130 C.A.3d 166, 171, 181 C.R. 631.)

In Lipson, plaintiff sought recovery mainly on the theory of fraud (see supra, §853), but also contended that the firefighter's rule should not apply to strict liability for an ultrahazardous activity. The court held that the fraud exception applied (see supra, §§853, 854), but then added a dictum on the independent cause exception.

(a) Where the firefighter's injuries are proximately caused by tortious conduct independent from the conduct that was responsible for summoning him or her, the rule does not bar recovery; and this exception applies whether that independent act is fraud or maintenance of an ultrahazardous activity or condition on the premises. (31 C.3d 376.)

(b) Illustrative of this distinction are two hypothetical situations in which storage of a gasoline tank in the basement of a house constitutes an ultrahazardous activity: (1) The tank explodes, causing a fire, and the firefighter is burned while trying to extinguish it; he or she cannot recover, because the defendant's maintenance of the ultrahazardous condition was the very occasion for the firefighter's presence. (2) Faulty electrical wiring on the first floor causes a fire; the responding firefighter, unaware of a tank in the basement, attempts to extinguish the fire; the tank explodes, causing the floor to collapse, and flames from the explosion engulf the firefighter. The firefighter can recover; the tank explosion occurred independently of the electrical fire that was responsible for his or her presence. (31 C.3d 377.)

(c) If the toxic chemicals here were a factor in causing the chemical boilover, the firefighter's rule would bar recovery; but if the chemicals were independent from the cause of the boilover, the action could be maintained. (31 C.3d 377.) The record on the motion for summary judgment did not show how plaintiff sustained his injuries or how the boilover began; hence, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the firefighter's rule was a bar. (31 C.3d 378.)

Lipson was followed in Terhell v. American Commonwealth Associates (1985) 172 C.A.3d 434, 218 C.R. 256, where the complaint alleged that defendants negligently constructed and maintained a roof with an unguarded and concealed opening, and failed to warn plaintiff or anyone else of the danger. Held, a cause of action was stated: "Having an unguarded hole in the roof was not the cause of appellant's presence at the scene, and the firefighter's rule has never been applied to negligence which did not cause the fire." (172 C.A.3d 441.) (See Donohue v. San Francisco Housing Authority (1993) 16 C.A.4th 658, 663, 20 C.R.2d 148, infra, §1354 [firefighter's rule did not bar claim by firefighter who fell on slippery steps while on defendant's premises to inspect for fire code violations]; Stapper v. GMI Holdings (1999) 73 C.A.4th 787, 791, 86 C.R.2d 688 [firefighter's rule did not preclude claim for injuries sustained in responding to fire, where injuries were allegedly caused by failure of defectively designed garage door opener to function properly].)

C.C. 1714.9, providing statutory exceptions to the firefighter's rule (see infra, §857), "is not intended to change or modify the common law independent cause exception." (C.C. 1714.9(e).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

26 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL
E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.
2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.
e. Judicial Exception for Independent Cause.
2. Police Officer Cases.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 856

[§ 856] Police Officer Cases.

The independent cause exception, although applicable to firefighters (supra, §855), has been applied mainly to police officers.

Spargur v. Park (1982) 128 C.A.3d 469, 180 C.R. 257, reversing summary judgment for defendant, presents a close issue of independent cause. Plaintiff motorcycle officer stopped defendant driver for speeding, and then stopped his own motorcycle in front of defendant's car. Defendant did not come to a full stop, but continued on, striking the motorcycle and injuring plaintiff. Held, there was a question of fact whether the officer was injured because of a continuation of the speeding that brought him to the scene, or because of a separate independent act. (128 C.A.3d 473, 474, 475.)

In Krueger v. Anaheim (1982) 130 C.A.3d 166, 181 C.R. 631, K, attending a professional baseball game, became unruly, and R, a security guard, sustained injuries in attempting to subdue him. In K's action against the city, the latter cross-complained to obtain reimbursement for workers' compensation payments to R. K set up the firefighter's rule as a defense and was granted summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) The firefighter's rule applies not only to negligence but also to wilful misconduct. (130 C.A.3d 168.) But an intentional tort in the nature of an assault and battery, intended to interfere with or prevent the performance of the officer's duties, and occurring after the incident giving rise to his presence on the scene, is distinguishable. (130 C.A.3d 169, 170.)

(b) A police officer confronts certain risks when called to the scene of a crime, but there is no public policy supporting assumption of the risk of intentional abuse directed specifically and independently at the officer. Such an assault is a separate and different criminal act arising after the offense that occasions the officer's presence; and to permit the firefighter's rule to apply "would be to countenance unlimited violence directed at the policeman in the course of most routine duties." (130 C.A.3d 171.)

A number of other decisions apply the exception. (See Bartholomew v. Klingler Co. (1975) 53 C.A.3d 975, 978, 126 C.R. 191 [deputy sheriff fell through defective ceiling while answering silent burglar alarm; exception was applicable]; Kocan v. Garino (1980) 107 C.A.3d 291, 296, 165 C.R. 712 [police officer, pursuing felony suspect into backyard of defendant's property, was injured when fence gave way; exception was applicable]; Malo v. Willis (1981) 126 C.A.3d 543, 178 C.R. 774 [police officer stopped defendant for speeding, and was then injured by defendant's negligent driving of unfamiliar vehicle; exception was applicable]; Shaw v. Plunkett (1982) 135 C.A.3d 756, 185 C.R. 571 [police officer in process of arresting prostitute in parking lot of motel was struck by automobile driven by prostitute's customer; exception was applicable]; Rose v. Los Angeles (1984) 159 C.A.3d 883, 888, 206 C.R. 49 [plaintiff was shot by fellow police officer while attempting to serve warrant; exception was applicable]; Terry v. Garcia (2003) 109 C.A.4th 245, 252, 134 C.R.2d 565 [negligence of truck driver was independent of misconduct that summoned officer to high-speed response to domestic disturbance incident; exception was applicable]; on effect of C.C. 1714.9 on the independent cause exception, see supra, §855.)

In Seibert Sec. Services v. Superior Court (1993) 18 C.A.4th 394, 22 C.R.2d 514, plaintiff police officer brought an arrested suspect to a hospital for an examination of possible injuries. While there, he was himself injured while trying to subdue a patient who had attacked a security guard. (For complete statements of facts, see supra, §849.) Relying on the firefighter's rule as a defense, defendant security company moved for summary judgment, but the motion was denied. Defendant then sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; the independent cause exception was not applicable.

(a) The trial judge erred in ruling that a triable issue of fact existed whether defendant's employees committed an independent act of negligence. The independent act exception applies only where the police officer or firefighter has come to a specific location to perform a specific immediate duty, and the defendant's unrelated negligent or intentional conduct increases the risks inherent in performing that duty. This was the situation in Rose where a police officer was carrying out a specific law enforcement duty, i.e., serving a warrant, when the negligence of a fellow officer increased the risk inherent in that duty and caused injury. (18 C.A.4th 411.)

(b) Here, on the other hand, plaintiff was performing one duty, i.e., completing paperwork relating to the injured suspect, when the alleged negligence of defendant's employees caused him to initiate the new and different law enforcement action of attempting to subdue the patient. While the conduct of defendant's employees might have been independent of the conduct that originally brought plaintiff to the hospital, it was factually undisputed that it was the immediate cause of plaintiff's presence in or near the holding cell in which the patient was struggling with one of defendant's employees. (18 C.A.4th 411.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

27 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

f. Statutory Exception for Wilful or Negligent Acts.

1. In General.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 857

[§ 857] In General.

(1) Former Law. Prior to the statutory exception, the cases did not recognize an exception for wilful misconduct or intentional acts of the defendant. (See Hubbard v. Boelt (1980) 28 C.3d 480, 484, 169 C.R. 706, 620 P.2d 156 [plaintiff police officer pursued defendant speeding motorist who collided with third vehicle, scattering debris on roadway; attempting to avoid debris at high speed, plaintiff drove onto embankment and was injured; firefighter's rule was applicable despite claim that defendant's conduct was reckless]; Lenthall v. Maxwell (1982) 138 C.A.3d 716, 719, 188 C.R. 260 [plaintiff police officer was called to subdue violent offense involving firearms at defendant's home, and was shot and injured by defendant; rule was applicable].)

(2) Liability for Wilful or Negligent Acts. C.C. 1714.9 provides additional exceptions to the firefighter's rule for wilful or negligent acts causing injury to a peace officer, firefighter, or any emergency medical personnel employed by a public entity, in any of the following situations:

(a) Where the conduct occurs after the defendant knows or should have known of the presence of the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel. (C.C. 1714.9(a)(1).)

(b) Where the conduct causing injury violates a statute, ordinance, or regulation and was itself not the event that precipitated either the response or presence of the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel. (C.C. 1714.9(a)(2).)

(c) Where the defendant's conduct was intended to injure the plaintiff. (C.C. 1714.9(a)(3).)

(d) Where the defendant's conduct is arson as defined in P.C. 451. (C.C. 1714.9(a)(4).)

The statute does not preclude the reduction of an award because of the comparative fault of the plaintiff (C.C. 1714.9(b)), and the liability does not apply to an employer of a peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel (C.C. 1714.9(d)). However, the employer may be subrogated to the rights granted by the statute "to the extent of the workers' compensation benefits, and other liabilities of the employer, including all salary, wage, pension, or other emolument paid to the employee or the employee's dependents." (C.C. 1714.9(c).)

The liability imposed is not intended to abrogate the independent cause exception (see supra, §§855, 856) as set forth in Donohue v. San Francisco Housing Authority (1993) 16 C.A.4th 658, 663, 20 C.R.2d 148, supra, §855. (C.C. 1714.9(e).) (See 71 Cal. L. Rev. 250; 14 Pacific L. J. 744; 15 Pacific L. J. 687; BAJI, No. 4.61; CACI, No. 453 [rescue doctrine and exceptions].)

The statute was applied retroactively in Redlands v. Sorensen (1985) 176 C.A.3d 202, 221 C.R. 728, infra, §858.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

28 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

f. Statutory Exception for Wilful or Negligent Acts.

2. Exception Applicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 858

[§ 858] Exception Applicable.

In Redlands v. Sorensen (1985) 176 C.A.3d 202, 221 C.R. 728, plaintiff, B, a city of Redlands police officer, responded to a radio announcement that the California Highway Patrol was in pursuit of two vehicles, one of which was probably stolen. He followed one of the vehicles at high speeds, flashing his police car's red lights and sounding his siren. Arriving at an area where children had been skating on the street, B deliberately rammed the suspect vehicle to prevent the driver from turning the corner into that street. He received workers' compensation benefits for his injuries, and then filed a third-party action against the driver of the fleeing vehicle. The city filed an action to recover the benefits paid to B, the two actions were consolidated, and the trial court, relying on Hubbard v. Boelt (1980) 28 C.3d 480, 169 C.R. 706, 620 P.2d 156, gave summary judgment against both B and the city. Held, reversed.

(a) "Whether classified as only a specific subcategory of the independent act exception or a separate exception, there is also a public policy exception to application of the fireman's rule for situations in which the negligence causing injury occurred after the plaintiff's presence was known or should have been known and involved the violation of a statute enacted to protect the class of persons of which the plaintiff is a member." (176 C.A.3d 207.) Hubbard rejected this public policy exception, holding that the statutes in question were designed to protect the general public, not pursuing police officers; i.e., the officer was not within the protected class of persons. (176 C.A.3d 209.)

(b) However, in 1982, a statute established liability for injury to a police officer "[n]otwithstanding statutory or decisional law to the contrary." (176 C.A.3d 209.) In 1983, it was replaced, clarified, and expanded. "It is inferable that the driver of the vehicle being chased either knew or should have known of the officer's presence and that, through the flashing red lights and siren, he was being ordered to stop. His continued high speed flight therefore inferably constituted a violation of a statute or ordinance designed for the protection of the officer." (176 C.A.3d 210.)

Gibbs v. Stetson (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1008, 245 C.R. 283, applies the exception of C.C. 1714.9(a)(1). Plaintiff, a deputy marshal acting as the bailiff in a criminal trial, took defendant into custody on order of the court. Defendant resisted, and in the course of subduing her, plaintiff was injured. He brought this action alleging negligence and battery. The trial court, relying on Hubbard gave summary judgment for defendant. Held, reversed. The statute was intended to abrogate the Hubbard holding and adopt the view of the Hubbard dissent. (199 C.A.3d 1014.) Here, defendant was aware of the presence of the bailiff at the time of the injury, and plaintiff's causes of action clearly lie. (199 C.A.3d 1015.) (See Yamaguchi v. Harnsmut (2003) 106 C.A.4th 472, 479, 130 C.R.2d 706 [where participant in fight knew of police officer's presence and committed wilful act (throwing hot oil at officer), C.C. 1714.9 reimposed duty of ordinary care, which otherwise would have been abrogated by firefighter's rule].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

29 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

E. Illustrations of Duty Approach.

2. Injuries to Safety Personnel.

f. Statutory Exception for Wilful or Negligent Acts.

3. Exception Not Applicable.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 859

[§ 859] Exception Not Applicable.

In Calatayud v. California (1998) 18 C.4th 1057, 77 C.R.2d 202, 959 P.2d 360, plaintiff, a city police officer, and defendant, a state highway patrol officer, were subduing a suspect. During the struggle, defendant's shotgun discharged, injuring plaintiff. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed. Plaintiff's action was barred by the firefighter's rule, and the exception in C.C. 1714.9(a)(1) (supra, §857), for conduct of "any person" causing injury that occurs after the person knows or should have known of the presence of the peace officer, did not apply.

(a) The Legislature did not intend "any person" to include fellow public safety members who are jointly engaged in the discharge of their responsibilities. The evil to be prevented by the statute is the situation in which the firefighter's rule is invoked to shield a defendant whose original misconduct occasioned an officer's presence and whose subsequent acts caused injury. Thus, whatever literal meaning "any person" may have in other contexts, applying it to fellow officers also involved in responding to the original misconduct does not conform to the spirit of the statute. (18 C.4th 1068.)

(b) Extending C.C. 1714.9(a)(1) to jointly engaged fellow officers would raise substantial policy concerns inconsistent with the purpose of the statute. The potential for conflicting duties would be substantial. Imposing liability in these circumstances would override statutory immunities currently conferred on public safety personnel and their employers. The extension would compromise the cost-spreading rationale underlying the firefighter's rule. It would impair efficient judicial administration. Finally, extension would create serious anomalies, because C.C. 1714.9(d) preserves the exclusivity of the Workers' Compensation Act where the fellow officer is employed by the same agency, and it would be irrational to permit recovery only where the officer has another employer. (18 C.4th 1069.) (See Farnam v. California (2000) 84 C.A.4th 1448, 1450, 101 C.R.2d 642 [applying Calatayud reasoning in holding that defendant police officer was not liable when his canine companion bit fellow officer]; McElroy v. California (2002) 100 C.A.4th 546, 548, 122 C.R.2d 612 [C.C. 1714.9(a)(1) did not apply where highway patrol officers voluntarily joined in pursuit being conducted by city police officers and caused injury; highway patrol officers were "jointly engaged" within meaning of Calatayud].)

In Seibert Sec. Services v. Superior Court (1993) 18 C.A.4th 394, 22 C.R.2d 514, plaintiff police officer brought an arrested suspect to a hospital for examination of possible injuries. While there, he was himself injured while trying to subdue a mental patient who had attacked a security guard. (For complete statement of facts, see supra, §849.) Relying on the firefighter's rule as a defense, defendant security company moved for summary judgment, but the motion was denied. Defendant then sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted; the statutory exception to the firefighter's rule was not applicable under the facts presented.

(a) Under C.C. 1714.9(a)(1), an injured police officer may recover if the negligence occurs after the defendant knows or should have known of the officer's presence. Read literally, this provision would impose liability on defendant here because at the time of the alleged negligent act, i.e., the removal of handcuffs from a patient known to be violent, plaintiff's presence was known to defendant's employees. (18 C.A.4th 408.)

(b) However, reading the statute as applying to conduct occurring while a police officer is present, but before the officer has undertaken his or her duties of protection or crime prevention, would produce unreasonable results. For example, a driver on a mountain road who happened to observe a fire truck behind him or her and who then carelessly flicked a lighted cigarette butt out the window, thereby negligently causing a brush fire, would be liable for an injury incurred by a firefighter. However, there would be no liability if, at the time of the negligent act, the driver was unaware of the presence of the fire truck. "As long as conduct is merely negligent, and not wilful or malicious, there is no point in imposing liability on the defendant whose acts are likely to involve a specific police officer, while precluding liability on the defendant whose negligent acts require the summoning of an officer at random." (18 C.A.4th 409.)

(c) Hence, the trial judge erred in relying on C.C. 1714.9 in determining that a triable issue of fact existed concerning whether the negligent act occurred after defendant knew or should have known of plaintiff's presence. Because plaintiff was not performing any police duty with respect to the patient when the negligent act occurred, he could, for purposes of the firefighter's rule, just as well have been 20 blocks away instead of 20 feet. (18 C.A.4th 410.)

In a number of other decisions, the exception was not applicable. (See Kelhi v. Fitzpatrick (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1149, 31 C.R.2d 182, supra, §848 [exception was not applicable where highway patrol officer, responding to emergency created by truck losing its rear tires, was injured when tires bounced off retaining wall and struck him]; Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 C.A.4th 973, 985, 62 C.R.2d 130, supra, §847 [off-duty police officer was injured when he shot and killed burglary suspect in building where he lived; exception was not applicable]; Tilley v. Schulte (1999) 70 C.A.4th 79, 84, 82 C.R.2d 497 [although psychiatric patient intentionally shot plaintiff officer, psychiatrist was not vicariously liable under C.C. 1714.9(a)]; Hamilton v. Martinelli & Associates (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1012, 1026, 2 C.R.3d 168 [C.C. 1714.9(a)(1) applies only when officer is injured by separate act of negligence other than that which necessitated officer's presence; thus, where officer was present for training, allegedly negligent injury that occurred during training course was not within statutory exception].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

30 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

a. Question of Law.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 860

[§ 860] Question of Law.

Unlike the factual issues of due care, causation, and contributory fault in the particular case (see infra, §866), the existence of a legal duty on the part of a person in the defendant's situation to the class of persons of which the plaintiff is a member (see supra, §837) is primarily for the court to determine, for a judicial declaration of duty may constitute a statement of law that operates as a precedent. (See Artiglio v. Corning (1998) 18 C.4th 604, 614, 76 C.R.2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313, infra, §1061, citing the text; Quelimane Co. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C.4th 26, 57, 77 C.R.2d 709, 960 P.2d 513, citing the text; Wright v. Arcade School Dist. (1964) 230 C.A.2d 272, 40 C.R. 812; Galanis v. Mercury Int. Ins. Underwriters (1967) 247 C.A.2d 690, 695, 55 C.R. 890; Fuller v. Standard Stations (1967) 250 C.A.2d 687, 691, 58 C.R. 792; Matthias v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 752, 754, 67 C.R. 511; Harris v. De La Chapelle (1976) 55 C.A.3d 644, 647, 127 C.R. 695; Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1976) 60 C.A.3d 814, 822, 131 C.R. 854, supra, §8, citing the text; Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 C.A.3d 813, 818, 216 C.R. 575, citing the text; Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 C.A.3d 208, 214, 219 C.R. 845, infra, §1064, citing the text; St. Francis Med. Center v. Superior Court (1987) 194 C.A.3d 668, 671, 239 C.R. 765; Nymark v. Heart Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1089, 1095, 283 C.R. 53, infra, §864; Nichols v. Keller (1993) 15 C.A.4th 1672, 1686, 19 C.R.2d 601, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §320; Jackson v. Ryder Truck Rental (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1830, 1837, 20 C.R.2d 913; Ord & Norman v. Surplus Line Assn. of Calif. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1276, 1279, 45 C.R.2d 292; DiRosa v. Showa Denko K.K. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 799, 805, 52 C.R.2d 128; Hernandez v. Pomona (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1492, 57 C.R.2d 406, supra, §304; Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 C.A.4th 491, 498, 71 C.R.2d 552, infra, §1056; Asplund v. Selected Inv. in Financial Equities (2000) 86 C.A.4th 26, 50, 103 C.R.2d 34 [existence and scope of duty are legal question that depends on nature of activity involved and on parties' relationship to it]; Rest.2d, Torts §328B; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §18.8; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.) Negligence §17 et seq.) (See Dutton v. Pacifica (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1171, 1175, 41 C.R.2d 816 [existence of duty "must be decided by the court on a case-by-case basis"].)

Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 C.3d 564, 572, footnote 6, 224 C.R. 664, 715 P.2d 624, citing the text, makes the following distinctions:

(a) Duty is decided by the court, not the jury. Foreseeability of a particular kind of harm plays a significant rule in determining the issue; "but a court's task--in determining 'duty'--is not to decide whether a particular plaintiff's injury was reasonably foreseeable in light of a particular defendant's conduct, but rather to evaluate more generally whether the category of negligent conduct at issue is sufficiently likely to result in the kind of harm experienced that liability may appropriately be imposed on the negligent party." (41 C.3d 573, footnote 6.)

(b) The jury considers foreseeability in two "more focused, fact-specific" settings. "First, the jury may consider the likelihood of foreseeability of injury in determining whether, in fact, the particular defendant's conduct was negligent in the first place. Second, foreseeability may be relevant to the jury's determination of whether the defendant's negligence was a proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's injury." (41 C.3d 573, footnote 6.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.692

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Baptist v. Robinson (2006) 143 C.A.4th 151, 167, 49 C.R.3d 153 [winery had no duty to train employee to secure agricultural bin to pickup truck, and thus was not liable in negligence for injuries to motorcyclist who struck bin after it fell from employee's truck; bin was used for fermenting, not hauling, and thus it was not foreseeable that employee would use bin for hauling]; 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §18.8.

Nichols case:

Cross-Reference: 1 Cal. Proc. (5th), Attorneys, §295.

31 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

b. Illustrations.

1. School District and Children on School Property.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 861

[§ 861] School District and Children on School Property.

In Raymond v. Paradise Unified School Dist. of Butte (1963) 218 C.A.2d 1, 8, 31 C.R. 847, defendant school district provided bus transportation. A major stop was at the high school premises, where high school students were discharged and some elementary school children taken on. The loading zone, used by several buses, was a semicircular driveway next to the high school lawn. Plaintiff, a 7-year-old elementary student, ran to the bus, placed his hand on it while it was operating, and fell backward, suffering injuries. The evidence showed that the driver had warned children not to approach the bus until it stopped, that plaintiff had received this warning, that no driver had called the matter to the attention of the school authorities, and that they had made no provision for supervision of the area. Held, judgment for plaintiff against the district affirmed.

(a) Factors involved. "The social utility of the activity out of which the injury arises, compared with the risks involved in its conduct; the kind of person with whom the actor is dealing; the workability of a rule of care, especially in terms of the parties' relative ability to adopt practical means of preventing injury; the relative ability of the parties to bear the financial burden of injury and the availability of means by which the loss may be shifted or spread; the body of statutes and judicial precedents which color the parties' relationship; the prophylactic effect of a rule of liability; in the case of a public agency defendant, the extent of its powers, the role imposed upon it by law and the limitations imposed upon it by budget; and finally, the moral imperatives which judges share with their fellow citizens--such are the factors which play a role in the determination of duty." (218 C.A.2d 8.)

(b) Application. There was no dispute about the district's duty in connection with the actual movement of buses; the issue was conduct in a bus stop area, and it presented many practical problems, e.g., the number of stops, the location requiring cooperation of owners, and children playing. Hence, it was undesirable to attempt a general formulation of the duty with respect to supervision at bus stops. But as to this accident, the following considerations were deemed controlling: (1) The area was not an isolated roadside stop, but a principal pickup and discharge point; (2) the district had knowledge of the presence of primary school students lacking the judgment of high school students; (3) the district had complete control of the location, and had employees nearby available for supervision. Hence, "as a matter of law defendant had a duty to provide adequate supervisory measures to protect children using the bus loading zone on the grounds of the high school." (218 C.A.2d 11.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

32 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

b. Illustrations.

2. Negligent Motorist and Tow Truck Driver.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 862

[§ 862] Negligent Motorist and Tow Truck Driver.

In Bryant v. Glastetter (1995) 32 C.A.4th 770, 38 C.R.2d 291, defendant was seen by highway patrol officers weaving in and out of traffic, and was pulled over to the side of the road. Field sobriety tests determined that she was driving under the influence, and the police called decedent tow truck driver to haul her car away. While decedent was involved in his duties, he was hit and killed by a third party. Plaintiffs, the relatives of decedent, brought this wrongful death action against defendant. Defendant filed a successful demurrer, and the action was dismissed. Held, affirmed; under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, infra, §1086, defendant owed decedent no duty to prevent him, while working, from being hit by a third party.

(a) Foreseeability of harm. "The risk reasonably to be perceived defines the duty to be obeyed." (32 C.A.4th 778, quoting Palsgraf v. Long Island R. Co. (1928) 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99, supra, §837.) Defendant, of course, owed a duty to decedent, and to every other person on the road, not to drive under the influence. That conduct might reasonably be expected to cause a collision by defendant's car with another vehicle or a pedestrian, or with an inanimate object. However, the harm suffered by decedent was not a "harm of a kind normally to be expected" as a consequence of negligent driving. (32 C.A.4th 779, quoting Rest.2d, Torts §281.) Indeed, even without being intoxicated, defendant might have ended up on the side of the road in need of a tow truck for any number of reasons. Other than making it more probable that decedent would be in the place where the accident happened, her consumption of alcohol did not make more probable the accident that occurred. (32 C.A.4th 780.)

(b) Closeness of connection between defendant's conduct and decedent's injury. Related to the question of foreseeability is the question of the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered. Defendant's negligence consisted of driving under the influence of alcohol. There is no logical cause-and-effect relationship between that negligence and the harm suffered by decedent except for the fact that it placed decedent in a position to be acted on by the negligent third party. Here, defendant was not even directly responsible for having brought decedent to the place where he was injured, because he had been contacted by the police officers. (32 C.A.4th 782.)

(c) Consequences to community of imposing duty. If defendant's initial negligence expands her liability beyond its usual scope to include harm resulting from the fact that she needed decedent's services, a rule would be established requiring a court to examine the culpability of a defendant in needing the help of a tow truck. (32 C.A.4th 782.) As a matter of policy, it is unwise to create an incentive for drivers whose cars are disabled to attempt self-help solutions rather than to call for assistance. Even if those drivers were negligent in having created the initial problem, they should be encouraged to seek help in resolving it in the interest of the safety of all drivers. Although society has a great interest in discouraging driving under the influence of alcohol, there is the countervailing interest in encouraging drivers to obtain the help they need. (32 C.A.4th 782.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

33 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

b. Illustrations.

3. Negligent Motorist and Child Not Yet Conceived.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 863

[§ 863] Negligent Motorist and Child Not Yet Conceived.

In Hegyes v. Unjian Enterprises (1991) 234 C.A.3d 1103, 286 C.R. 85, the issue on appeal was: "Does a negligent motorist owe a legal duty of care to the subsequently conceived child of a woman who is injured in an automobile accident?" (234 C.A.3d 1110.) Plaintiff, a minor, sued defendant, the employer of an employee whose negligent operation of an automobile seriously injured plaintiff's mother (O'Hare) before plaintiff was conceived. A prior proceeding by O'Hare against defendant was settled, and defendant was released from liability for the injuries to O'Hare. As a result of the accident O'Hare was fitted with a lumbo-peritoneal shunt, and 2 years later she became pregnant with plaintiff. During the pregnancy, the fetus compressed the shunt, and plaintiff was delivered by cesarean section 50 days premature. In the present action, plaintiff alleged that she suffered injuries related to the premature birth due to the negligence of defendant. Held, defendant owed no duty to plaintiff

(a) Plaintiff relied on the wrongful life cases in which liability was imposed for preconception negligence on a medical professional or a product manufacturer. But no such liability has been imposed in the absence of a special relationship giving rise to such a duty. (234 C.A.3d 1113 et seq., reviewing California cases; see infra, §979 et seq.) "[T]he prevailing principle is clear. A special relationship between physician and patient may, in certain circumstances where the conduct is directly related to the resulting pregnancy and birth, give rise to a duty to the subsequently conceived child. Unlike in the present case, the defendants held liable in those cases were health care providers who were retained to provide genetic counseling to the respective parents. Understandably, their negligence in performing that function led the courts to recognize a duty owed to the foreseeably impaired children. Those defendants were specifically consulted for conception and pregnancy related purposes, and the parents relied on the doctors' advice in deciding whether to conceive a child or to terminate a pregnancy." (234 C.A.3d 1118.)

(b) No special relationship exists between motorists, and the ordinary principles of negligence apply. (234 C.A.3d 1118, 1119.) "Those principles cannot be validly extended to encompass a duty owed to a child conceived several years after her mother was involved in an automobile accident. ... The implications associated with finding a duty under the present facts are indeed staggering, and the trial court properly refused to find one." (234 C.A.3d 1119.)

(c) Liability for preconception negligence in other jurisdictions hinges on the existence of duty. (234 C.A.3d 1119) et seq., analyzing cases.) Plaintiff's theory that actual causation substitutes for duty, and that the existence of damage obviates the necessity of a finding that a duty was violated, is untenable. (234 C.A.3d 1134.)

There was one dissenting justice. (234 C.A.3d 1153.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

34 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

b. Illustrations.

4. Lender and Borrower.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 864

[§ 864] Lender and Borrower.

In Nymark v. Heart Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1089, 283 C.R. 53, plaintiff purchased a residence, and executed a promissory note and deed of trust for $ 129,000. He sought to refinance with a $ 100,000 loan from defendant. Defendant conducted an appraisal of the property, found it in excellent condition, and approved the loan with a deed of trust as security. In the present action against defendant lender, plaintiff alleged that he relied on the representations of good condition in the appraisal report; that later a county inspection revealed defects and building code violations requiring an expenditure of $ 50,000 in repairs; and that the property was "red-tagged" as unsafe for habitation, as a result of which plaintiff was forced to vacate it and obtain another residence, at considerable expense. Defendant answered and cross-complained for judicial foreclosure, alleging that plaintiff was in default on the note and that defendant elected to declare the whole sum immediately due. Defendant then moved for summary judgment on its cross-complaint for foreclosure and a deficiency judgment, and plaintiff argued that there were triable issues with respect to his entitlement to damages as a setoff. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed.

(a) "The parties have not identified, nor have we found, any California case specifically addressing whether a lender has a duty of care to a borrower in appraising the borrower's collateral to determine if it is adequate security for a loan. However, as a general rule, a financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money." (231 C.A.3d 1095.)

(b) Defendant performed the appraisal in the usual manner to protect its own interest in adequate security for the loan. The complaint did not allege, and the summary judgment papers did not indicate, that the appraisal was intended to induce plaintiff to enter into the loan transaction or to assure him that his collateral was sound. Thus, defendant owed no duty of care to plaintiff. (231 C.A.3d 1096, 1099.)

(c) "While it was foreseeable the appraisal might be considered by plaintiff in completing the loan transaction, the foreseeability of harm was remote. Plaintiff was in as good a position as, if not a better position than, defendant to know the value and condition of the property. One who seeks financing to purchase real property has many means available to assess the property's value and condition, including comparable sales, advice from a realtor, independent appraisal, contractors' inspections, personal observation and opinion, and the like. Here, plaintiff already had purchased the house and had lived in it for two years, apparently without complaint, before applying to defendant for a refinancing loan." (231 C.A.3d 1099.)

(d) Creation of a lender's duty of care in the preparation of an appraisal would adversely affect consumers. "A lender which currently obtains a cursory appraisal at minimal cost to the borrower in order to satisfy itself that the collateral provides adequate security for the loan would be compelled by the threat of negligent appraisal liability to undertake a comprehensive examination of the collateral. The added cost of such a detailed appraisal undoubtedly would be passed on to the borrower. For housing loans, this consequence would be contrary to the public interest in reducing the cost of acquiring housing." (231 C.A.3d 1100.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

35 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law

IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

1. Legal Duty.

b. Illustrations.

5. Other Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 865

[§ 865] Other Illustrations.

(1) Duty of Utility. In Schauf v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1966) 243 C.A.2d 450, 52 C.R. 518, defendant, acting under its franchise, placed a power pole in a proper place near an intersection. Three years later, the county installed a stop sign at a place where the pole obscured it for westbound traffic. The county did not relocate the sign or request the relocation of the pole. Held, defendant had no duty to take steps to protect the public against this hazard.

(a) The franchise would not relieve the utility from liability for negligence in installing or maintaining a pole or other structure (see supra, §188), but there was no similar negligence here. The dangerous condition was in the relationship of the stop sign to the pole, for which the county was responsible. (243 C.A.2d 460.)

(b) The remaining question was whether defendant, not originally negligent in the creation of the condition, nevertheless, by reason of constructive notice of the danger and the power to correct it by relocating the pole, had a duty to take affirmative steps to protect motorists. There is no basis for imposing that duty. There was no special relationship (see infra, §1038 et seq.) and no strong policy consideration: Defendant could assume that the governmental agency would act properly by moving the badly placed sign or posting an advance warning, and injured persons have a remedy against the governmental agency for failure to repair the defective sign. (243 C.A.2d 463.)

(2) Duty of Insurer. In Galanis v. Mercury Int. Ins. Underwriters (1967) 247 C.A.2d 690, 695, 55 C.R. 890, the court held that an insurance company selling flight insurance through vending machines is under no duty to investigate to determine the possible suicidal intentions of a buyer. (247 C.A.2d 696.) And in Stopp v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1970) 4 C.A.3d 239, 84 C.R. 344, the court held that there was no duty to post signs or indicate on the policy that it would not cover death or injury caused by the voluntary act of the insured. Hence, plaintiffs, heirs of passengers who died in a crash allegedly caused by another passenger who had purchased large amounts of insurance from defendant, were not entitled to recover from defendant. (See 3250 Wilshire Boulevard Bldg. v. Employers Ins. of Wausau (1995) 39 C.A.4th 1277, 1279, 46 C.R.2d 399 [insurance information clearinghouse that had no regulatory power over insurers as matter of law was not in privity with, and had no duty toward, plaintiff, who purchased policy from nonadmitted insurer that became insolvent].)

In Matthias v. United Pac. Ins. Co. (1968) 260 C.A.2d 752, 754, 67 C.R. 511, plaintiff was injured by a fall on a defective stairway of rented premises. He sued the owner's insurer, alleging that with actual knowledge of the defective condition, it issued a liability policy instead of advising or directing the owner to make the stairway safe. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed. Balancing the factors: (a) The activity out of which the injury arose--writing of public liability insurance--has obvious social utility, in spreading losses and assuring plaintiffs of recovery up to policy limits. (b) The risk of negligence by the insured owner is the very risk against which the insurance issues. To accept plaintiff's argument would subject the insurer to direct and unlimited liability in every case in which the risk materialized. This would defeat the social purposes--making insurance more expensive for the insured or less attractive to the insurer, and would tend to limit insurance to cases in which it serves no purpose, i.e., where there is no possibility of negligence and loss. (260 C.A.2d 754.) (c) The insurer has no reason to foresee that the owner would fail to repair or maintain the premises merely because of limited liability coverage. (260 C.A.2d 755.)

(3) Duty of Police. In Munoz v. Union City (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1077, 16 C.R.3d 521, officer W and other police officers, responding to an emergency call, found L, high on drugs and hallucinating, standing in the front doorway with a knife. For about 15 minutes, W unsuccessfully tried to persuade L to put down the knife. L was then shot and killed by W when she allegedly moved toward other occupants of the house. With respect to duty, the court, relying heavily on Adams v. Fremont (1998) 68 C.A.4th 243, 80 C.R.2d 196, infra, §1044, distinguished police activity prior to the shooting from the shooting itself.

(a) "[L]ike Adams, the need to protect the overall safety of the community by encouraging law enforcement officers to exercise their best judgment in deciding how to deal with public safety emergencies vastly outweighs the societal value of imposing tort liability for the judgments they make in emergency situations. Adams stands for the proposition that law enforcement officers are shielded from ordinary negligence claims based on their response to public safety emergencies when those efforts prove to be ineffective in preventing self-inflicted harm or harm caused by third parties. Applied to the present case, Adams means that the conduct of the police--Woodward's decisions as to how to deploy his officers at the scene, the efforts made in an attempt to defuse the situation as safely as possible, and other such factors--cannot subject appellants to liability. For these reasons, finding a tort duty and submitting to the jury the question of whether police decisions fell below the standard of care, was error." (120 C.A.4th 1097.)

(b) However, under Grudt v. Los Angeles (1970) 2 C.3d 575, 86 C.R. 465, 468 P.2d 825, and Munoz v. Olin (1979) 24 C.3d 629, 156 C.R. 727, 596 P.2d 1143, there is a duty on the part of police officers to use reasonable care in deciding to use and in fact using deadly force. (120 C.A.4th 1099.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Duty of Driver. In Gilmer v. Ellington (2008) 159 C.A.4th 190, 70 C.R.3d 893, defendant driver, after yielding his right of way, gestured for a left-turning motorist to proceed. The left-turning motorist did so, striking plaintiff motorcyclist, who had refused to yield his right-of-way. In the ensuing action, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. Held, affirmed; under three of the factors enunciated in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, text, §833, defendant owed no duty of care to plaintiff.

(a) The collision occurred because plaintiff refused to yield his right-of-way to the left-turning motorist. Defendant merely gestured for the left-turning motorist to proceed as an act of courtesy, and thus bore no moral blame for the resulting collision. (159 C.A.4th 198.)

(b) Holding defendant liable under these circumstances would place an unreasonable burden on yielding drivers by imposing on them a duty of assuring that left-turning motorists could safely cross all lanes of traffic. (159 C.A.4th 199.)

(c) The relaxed vigilance by left-turning motorists would result in negative consequences to the community, such as "road rage" and suits against courteous drivers. (159 C.A.4th 199.)

36 of 36 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
IX. NEGLIGENCE: IN GENERAL

F. Questions of Law and Fact.

2. Due Care and Causation Are Questions of Fact.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 866

[§ 866] Due Care and Causation Are Questions of Fact.

In the usual negligence case, the elements of due care and proximate cause present questions of fact for the jury. A verdict and judgment for or against the plaintiff will be upheld on appeal, even though there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions can rationally be drawn from the evidence. (See Wahlgren v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1901) 132 C. 656, 663, 62 P. 308, 64 P. 993; Hoff v. Los Angeles Pac. Co. (1910) 158 C. 596, 599, 112 P. 53; Mark v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1972) 7 C.3d 170, 174, 101 C.R. 908, 496 P.2d 1276, infra, §§1096, 1097, ; Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 46, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, infra, §914; Phoenix Assur. Co., Ltd., of London v. Texas Holding Co. (1927) 81 C.A. 61, 68, 252 P. 1082; Terrell v. Key System (1945) 69 C.A.2d 682, 686, 159 P.2d 704; McIntyre v. Doe & Roe (1954) 125 C.A.2d 285, 287, 270 P.2d 21; Williams v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1960) 181 C.A.2d 691, 701, 5 C.R. 585; Ishmael v. Millington (1966) 241 C.A.2d 520, 525, 50 C.R. 592; Rice v. Southern Pac. Co. (1967) 247 C.A.2d 701, 706, 55 C.R. 840; Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court (1970) 3 C.A.3d 356, 360, 83 C.R. 343, infra, §923; Diamond Springs Lime Co. v. American River Constructors (1971) 16 C.A.3d 581, 593, 597, 94 C.R. 200; DiRosa v. Showa Denko K.K. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 799, 806, 52 C.R.2d 128 [two of four elements to be proved to establish negligence per se under Ev.C. 669 (infra, §§873, 874), i.e., that defendant violated statute, ordinance, or regulation of public entity, and that violation proximately caused injury, "are normally considered questions for the trier of fact"]; Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 C.A.4th 491, 498, 71 C.R.2d 552, infra, §1056 [whether psychiatrist breached duty to prevent suicide of patient was question of fact]; Munoz v. Union City (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1077, 1101, 16 C.R.3d 521 [whether police officer acted with due care in shooting person high on drugs was question of fact]; Rest.2d, Torts §328C.)

As a result, few of the decisions actually lay down rules of what constitutes due care or negligence or what intervening acts are foreseeable. Instead, the large majority of the cases that uphold recovery for the plaintiff merely purport to decide that, in the light of the evidence produced, the jury could have inferred that the defendant did not act with due care and that an intervening act was foreseeable. These cases are generally presented to the appellate court on (a) an appeal by the defendant from a judgment for the plaintiff in accordance with a verdict in his or her favor, or (b) an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment for the defendant following a nonsuit or directed verdict, or from a judgment for the defendant notwithstanding the verdict. Pursuant to the basic principle declared in these decisions, a verdict against the plaintiff would likewise be sustained on appeal in the absence of reversible error.

The significance to this limited appellate review (which is not, of course, confined to negligence cases or to tort cases) is that the statement of the holdings in terms of propositions of law is, theoretically as well as practically, misleading, although there appears to be no other convenient way of stating them without continual repetition of language to the effect that "the jury could have inferred" as a fact, the legal conclusion of negligence, proximate cause, or contributory negligence.

In rare cases, the evidence will support a finding of negligence or lack of negligence as a matter of law. (See Toschi v. Christian (1944) 24 C.2d 354, 364, 149 P.2d 848; Gray v. Brinkerhoff (1953) 41 C.2d 180, 183, 258 P.2d 834; Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 C.2d 60, 66, 271 P.2d 23; Huetter v. Andrews (1949) 91 C.A.2d 142, 145, 204 P.2d 655 [judgment for defendants reversed]; Whinery v. Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 6 C.A.3d 126, 132, 85 C.R. 649; Rest.2d, Torts §285, Comment f; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §21 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.693-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

1 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
A. Standard of Due Care: In General.
1. The Ordinarily Prudent Person.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 867

[§ 867] The Ordinarily Prudent Person.

The duty is of ordinary care under all the circumstances, and it varies with changing circumstances. The standard is that of the "ordinary prudent or reasonable person." (Tucker v. Lombardo (1956) 47 C.2d 457, 464, 303 P.2d 1041; Phoenix Assur. Co., Ltd., of London v. Texas Holding Co. (1927) 81 C.A. 61, 73, 252 P. 1082; Fouch v. Werner (1929) 99 C.A. 557, 565, 279 P. 183; Beck v. Sirota (1941) 42 C.A.2d 551, 557, 109 P.2d 419 ["The amount of care must be in proportion to the danger to be avoided and the consequences reasonably to be anticipated"]; see Rest.2d, Torts §§283, 289; 3 Harper, James & Gray 2d §16.2; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §116 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §132 et seq.; BAJI, Nos. 3.10, 3.11; CACI, No. 401.)

The principle just stated is subject to several practical qualifications: (a) Certain types of persons, or persons engaging in certain types of conduct, are required to exercise a higher degree of care, although this requirement of greater care may be explained in terms of reasonable care under the circumstances. (See infra, §§869, 918.) (b) A statute regulating certain kinds of conduct may conclusively establish the minimum standards of ordinary care. (See infra, §871.) (3) Proof at trial of care and lack of care may be affected by the jury's power to determine the issue in accordance with the inference of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. (See 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §118 et seq.)

It has been said that the test is not what the jurors would have done in the defendant's place under the circumstances, and an instruction to that effect has been held improper. (Freeman v. Adams (1923) 63 C.A. 225, 226, 218 P. 600.) However, later cases have declared instructions of this type to be unobjectionable. (See Kelley v. Hodge Trans. System (1925) 197 C. 598, 607, 242 P. 76.) In Chalmers v. Hawkins (1926) 78 C.A. 733, 741, 248 P. 727, the court said: "The jury represent the ideal prudent man whose assumed course of conduct under given circumstances constitutes ordinary care; and whether such care was used in view of the facts of a particular case ... is necessarily determined by the sense and experience of the individual jurors collectively expressed in the verdict."

Many articles and notes are available on negligence actions classified under headings descriptive of the subject matter or the parties. (See listing in 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §539; and see 12 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), Boats and Boating §35 et seq.; 15 Proof. of Facts 411 [swimming accidents]; 23 Proof. of Facts 393 [toys causing injury or disease]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [nonuse of computer]; 31 Proof of Facts 3d 145 [motorist's signaling vehicle or pedestrian to proceed or pass]; 46 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [ski accidents]; 7 Am.Jur. Trials 1 [motorboat accidents]; 7 Am.Jur. Trials 643 [swimming pool accidents]; 14 Am.Jur. Trials 101 [glass door accidents]; 15 Am.Jur. Trials 147 [skiing accidents]; 1 Lincoln L. Rev. 52 [motorboat accidents]; 75 A.L.R.2d 792 [merry-go-rounds]; 94 A.L.R.2d 1431 [winter sports--skiing, tobogganing, bobsledding]; 14 A.L.R.3d 629 [funeral homes]; 15 A.L.R.3d 1420 [pool halls]; 20 A.L.R.3d 1395 [swimming pool accidents]; 24 A.L.R.3d 945 [carnival games]; 24 A.L.R.3d 1447 [skiing]; 26 A.L.R.3d 1314 [drive-in movie theatres]; 33 A.L.R.3d 316 [ice skating]; 38 A.L.R.3d 10 [parking lots]; 38 A.L.R.3d 419 [dance halls]; 41 A.L.R.3d 690 [automatic car washes]; 41 A.L.R.3d 986 [power lawnmowers]; 42 A.L.R.3d 1442 [snowmobiles, skimobiles]; 45 A.L.R.3d 1428 [drive-in restaurants]; 63 A.L.R.3d 1252 [cemeteries]; 95 A.L.R.3d 203 [ski lifts]; 2 A.L.R.4th 795 [dune buggies]; 13 A.L.R.4th 623 [race tracks]; 66 A.L.R.4th 622 [golf carts]; 38 A.L.R.5th 107 [skating rinks]; 49 A.L.R.5th 659 [wire, structure, or pole struck by aircraft].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.230 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 3 Harper, James & Gray 3d §16.2.

Negligence actions classified under descriptive headings:

Cross-Reference: 4 Cal. Proc. (5th), Pleading, §578.

2 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
A. Standard of Due Care: In General.
2. Foreseeability of Unreasonable Risk.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 868

[§ 868] Foreseeability of Unreasonable Risk.

(1) Theory of Unreasonable Risk. Due care requires the avoidance of any "unreasonable risk," which means any "unduly dangerous conduct." The basic question is whether the risk of danger to others outweighs the utility of the act or the manner in which it is done; if so, the risk is unreasonable and the act is negligent. (See Crane v. Smith (1943) 23 C.2d 288, 299, 144 P.2d 356 ["If the actor reasonably can accomplish the same result by other conduct which involves less opportunity for harm to others, the risk incurred in the manner of doing business which resulted in injury is clearly unreasonable"]; Rest.2d, Torts §§282, 289, 291, 292, 293, 297; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §143 et seq.; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 671; 47 Hastings L. J. 61 [explaining reasonableness to jurors]; 52 Hastings L. J. 207 [video game manufacturer's tort liability based on violent video games]; 48 Stanf. L. Rev. 311 [Reasonableness and Rationality in Negligence Theory]; BAJI, No. 3.10; CACI, No. 401.)

(2) Test of Foreseeability. Conduct is negligent where some unreasonable risk of danger to others would have been foreseen by a reasonable person. (See Crane v. Smith, supra, 23 C.2d 298; Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 C.2d 728, 739, 69 C.R. 72, 441 P.2d 912, infra, §1008; Weirum v. RKO General (1975) 15 C.3d 40, 46, 123 C.R. 468, 539 P.2d 36, infra, §914; Sweatman v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp. (1929) 101 C.A. 318, 322, 281 P. 677; Darnold v. Voges (1956) 143 C.A.2d 230, 240, 300 P.2d 255; George A. Hormel & Co. v. Maez (1979) 92 C.A.3d 963, 969, 155 C.R. 337; Dutton v. Pacifica (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1171, 41 C.R.2d 816 [defendant police officer owed no duty to plaintiff, who, when ordered to leave park, was directed to ride in back of truck that was subsequently involved in accident]; Chaney v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 152, 157, 46 C.R.2d 73, infra, §1058 [sexual abuse of child visiting assailant's home was not reasonably foreseeable by assailant's wife]; Ludwig v. San Diego (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1105, 1110, 76 C.R.2d 809 [traffic inspector was not negligent in denying permission to place cement-like substance in trench, where there was no evidence that collapse of trench was reasonably foreseeable]; Rest.2d, Torts §§284, 289, 291; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §124 et seq.; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 671; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 188; 100 A.L.R.3d 942; 15 A.L.R.4th 1148 [liability of one other than electric power or light company or its employee for interruption, failure, or inadequacy of electric power]; BAJI, No. 3.11.)

As the court said in Brandenburg v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1946) 28 C.2d 282, 285, 169 P.2d 909: "Thus an actor's duties vary according to whether he faces a child or an adult, a blind man or one who can see, one who sleeps or one who is awake. His duties also vary according to whether he may reasonably expect another to be aware of danger or must know that another's sense of security has been relaxed."

The foreseeability test of unreasonable risk has been used in the analysis of either duty or proximate cause: "Many of the circumstances involved in a consideration of the foreseeability of an occurrence which will determine the existence of a duty to exercise due care toward a particular person may ... be equally pertinent in considering the test of foreseeability of an injury to determine whether a precedent act of negligence proximately caused that injury." (Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 C.A.2d 536, 542, 6 C.R. 65.) "The California Supreme Court recently has considered the superseding intervening cause cases, as one eminent scholar in the field of torts has declared courts should do, not as presenting issues of causation, or even of proximate (i.e., legal) causation, but as a problem of determining the duty of the defendant to protect the person injured against the particular intervening cause." (Premo v. Grigg (1965) 237 C.A.2d 192, 195, 46 C.R. 683, infra, §1197; Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1159, 221 C.R. 675, quoting the text; cf. Gonzalez v. Derrington (1961) 56 C.2d 130, 133, 14 C.R. 1, 363 P.2d 1 [analysis solely in terms of proximate cause].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.213, 387, 431, 504

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

3 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
A. Standard of Due Care: In General.
3. Degrees of Care and Negligence.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 869

[§ 869] Degrees of Care and Negligence.

The division of negligence into degrees ("slight," "ordinary," and "gross") has been criticized by modern courts and writers. It has been pointed out that frequently, in cases where a higher "degree" of care is said to be required, all that is meant is that the particular circumstances require a greater amount of care, but that the standard remains the same: ordinary care under the circumstances. (See Henderson v. Los Angeles Traction Co. (1907) 150 C. 689, 693, 89 P. 976; Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co. (1941) 18 C.2d 863, 870, 118 P.2d 465; Polk v. Los Angeles (1945) 26 C.2d 519, 525, 159 P.2d 931; De Greek v. Freeman (1930) 108 C.A. 645, 646, 291 P. 854; Beck v. Sirota (1941) 42 C.A.2d 551, 557, 109 P.2d 419; McNear v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1944) 63 C.A.2d 11, 18, 146 P.2d 34; Rangel v. Badolato (1955) 133 C.A.2d 254, 259, 284 P.2d 138; Continental Ins. Co. v. American Protection Industries (1987) 197 C.A.3d 322, 330, 242 C.R. 784 [adoption of comparative negligence doctrine removed need for degrees of negligence]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (1989 ed.), Negligence §218 et seq.)

In Lasater v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1945) 71 C.A.2d 217, 162 P.2d 486, the court criticized the proposed instruction that plaintiff, a pedestrian, crossing a street in the dark while dressed in black, should have used "a greater degree of care" for her own safety: "The degree of care required of a person for his own safety is always the same, i.e., ordinary care, although in some circumstances the quantum or amount of care required to reach the degree of ordinary care is greater than in others. While neither courts nor lawyers have uniformly observed this distinction in terminology, it is a substantial one and well established in our law." (71 C.A.2d 221.) (See Dalzell v. Los Angeles (1948) 88 C.A.2d 271, 276, 198 P.2d 554 [quoting from Minnesota case: "It is but ordinary prudence to exercise a high degree of care in the presence of imminent danger, when casualty is apt to come unless much care is exerted to avoid it"].)

Nevertheless, some statutory provisions and some decisions prescribed different degrees of care, and distinguish between "ordinary" and "gross" negligence. (See C.C. 1846, 1852 [degrees of care of different kinds of bailees]; Colich & Sons v. Pacific Bell (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1225, 1240, 244 C.R. 714 [tariff permitting recovery of damages up to $ 10,000 for telephone utility's gross negligence]; 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §159 et seq.; infra, §918 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.272 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

4 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
A. Standard of Due Care: In General.
4. Wilful Misconduct.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 870

[§ 870] Wilful Misconduct.

The law recognizes a distinct type of misconduct that is more culpable than negligence, yet falls short of intentional wrong. The Torts Restatement characterizes this as "reckless disregard of the safety of another" (Rest.2d, Torts §500); its usual designation is "wanton" or "wilful" misconduct. (See Donnelly v. Southern Pac. Co. (1941) 18 C.2d 863, 869, 118 P.2d 465; Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 779, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465 [evidence of knowledge of violation of safety regulations was admissible on issue]; Mahoney v. Corralejo (1974) 36 C.A.3d 966, 973, 112 C.R. 61, infra, §1302 [wilful misconduct not found]; Morgan v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1974) 37 C.A.3d 1006, 1012, 112 C.R. 695, citing the text [backing train at night; wilful misconduct found]; Bains v. Western Pac. R. Co. (1976) 56 C.A.3d 902, 905, 128 C.R. 778 [wilful misconduct not found in maintaining railroad crossing without automatic gates, in rural area with little traffic]; Colich & Sons v. Pacific Bell (1988) 198 C.A.3d 1225, 1242, 244 C.R. 714 [no allegation of conscious act or omission]; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §241 et seq.)

Wilful misconduct is also relevant where the unsuccessful defendant afterward attempts to plead that the judgment was discharged by bankruptcy. (See Fitzgerald v. Herzer (1947) 78 C.A.2d 127, 131, 177 P.2d 364; supra, §187.) And liability for a child's wilful misconduct is imposed on his or her parent or guardian. (See infra, §§1229, 1230.) (On "conscious disregard of rights or safety" as basis for award of punitive damages, see infra, §1574 et seq.); on diminished importance of wilful misconduct concept as result of adoption of doctrine of comparative negligence, see Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. California (1981) 115 C.A.3d 116, 121, 171 C.R. 187, infra, §1333.)

In New v. Consolidated Rock Products Co. (1985) 171 C.A.3d 681, 217 C.R. 522, infra, §1111), the court, holding defendant liable under the wilful misconduct exception of C.C. 846 (the recreational licensee statute, infra, §1103), examined the concept in some detail.

(a) " 'Wilful or wanton misconduct' travels under several other names. Its aliases include 'serious and wilful misconduct,' 'wanton misconduct,' 'reckless disregard,' 'recklessness,' and combinations of some or all of these. These terms are interchangeable because they all identify the same thing--an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care.' The usual meaning assigned to 'wilful,' 'wanton' or 'reckless,' according to taste as to the word used, is that the actor has intentionally done an act of an unreasonable character in disregard of a risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow." (171 C.A.3d 689, quoting Prosser.)

(b) "Three essential elements must be present to raise a negligent act to the level of wilful misconduct: (1) actual or constructive knowledge of the peril to be apprehended, (2) actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable, as opposed to a possible, result of the danger, and (3) conscious failure to act to avoid the peril." (171 C.A.3d 689, quoting Morgan v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co., supra.)

(c) "It is obvious that constructive knowledge must be measured by an objective standard, since there is no other way to measure it. ... The test ... is whether a reasonable man under the same or similar circumstances as those faced by the actor would be aware of the dangerous character of his conduct. ... If conduct is sufficiently lacking in consideration for the rights of others, reckless, heedless to an extreme, and indifferent to the consequences it may impose, then, regardless of the actual state of mind of the actor and his actual concern for the rights of others, we call it wilful misconduct, and apply to it the consequences and legal rules which we use in the field of intended torts." (171 C.A.3d 690.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Berkley v. Dowds (2007) 152 C.A.4th 518, 61 C.R.3d 304, plaintiff widow sued defendant physician, who had treated plaintiff's husband for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, alleging a cause of action for "willful misconduct." The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. Held, affirmed.

(a) The parties argued extensively about whether a tort called "willful misconduct" is recognized in California. That cause of action exists. However, it is not a separate tort but simply an aggravated form of negligence, differing in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care. Its pleading requirements are similar to negligence but stricter. (152 C.A.4th 526.)

(b) The well-known elements of any negligence cause of action (see text, §835 et seq.) are duty, breach of duty, proximate cause, and damages. (152 C.A.4th 526.) In addition, three essential elements must be present to raise a negligent act to the level of wilful misconduct: (1) actual or constructive knowledge of the peril to be apprehended, (2) actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable, as opposed to a possible, result of the danger, and (3) conscious failure to act to avoid the peril. (152 C.A.4th 528.)

(c) Plaintiff failed to state a cause of action, either in negligence or wilful misconduct. No causation connection was alleged between defendant's alleged denial of medically appropriate procedures and the husband's death. Also, no facts were alleged to show that defendant knew that the lack of these procedures would probably cause injury or death. (152 C.A.4th 528.)

5 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
1. In General.
a. Nature of Doctrine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 871

[§ 871] Nature of Doctrine.

(1) In General. What constitutes due care under the circumstances is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury in each case. (See supra, §866.) But the proper conduct of a reasonable person in particular situations may become settled by judicial decision, or be prescribed by statute or ordinance, and conduct below this standard is negligence per se, or negligence as a matter of law. In other words, "if the evidence establishes that the plaintiff's or defendant's violation of the statute or ordinance proximately caused the injury and no excuse or justification for violation is shown by the evidence, responsibility may be fixed upon the violator without other proof of failure to exercise due care." (Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist. of San Diego (1947) 29 C.2d 581, 588, 177 P.2d 279; see Clinkscales v. Carver (1943) 22 C.2d 72, 75, 136 P.2d 777; Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co. (1950) 35 C.2d 409, 416, 218 P.2d 17; Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 C.3d 756, 763, 91 C.R. 745, 478 P.2d 465; Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 C.3d 153, 164, 95 C.R. 623, 486 P.2d 151; Alechoff v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Corp. (1927) 84 C.A. 33, 38, 257 P. 569; Reid & Sibell v. Gilmore & Edwards Co. (1955) 134 C.A.2d 60, 71, 285 P.2d 364; Whinery v. Southern Pac. Co. (1970) 6 C.A.3d 126, 129, 85 C.R. 649; Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1163, 221 C.R. 675; Rest.2d, Torts §§285, 286; Dobbs, The Law of Torts §132 et seq.; 57A Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Negligence §674 et seq.; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 428; 11 Pacific L. J. 907; BAJI, No. 3.45; cf. Rest.2d, Torts §288 [circumstances in which statutory or administrative standard is not adopted].)

Standards settled by judicial decision are less numerous than those imposed by statute (infra, §875), and are usually found in decisions involving the former doctrine of contributory negligence. (See infra, §1315 et seq.); Rest.2d, Torts §285, Comment e; on inapplicability of doctrine to immature child, see infra, §896.)

(2) Applicability to Motor Vehicle Cases. Rules and standards for driving and parking motor vehicles, established by the Vehicle Code and local ordinances, are the most common types of regulations the violation of which constitutes negligence per se. (See infra, §878 et seq.)

Some jurisdictions have held it to be negligence per se for a motorist to drive at so great a speed that he or she cannot stop to avoid an object coming within the range of vision, or for one whose vision has been obscured by the lights of another car to fail to bring it under such control that he or she can stop it immediately. California cases have rejected both rules, and permit the case to go to the jury. (See Casey v. Gritsch (1934) 1 C.A.2d 206, 213, 36 P.2d 696; Smarda v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co. (1934) 1 C.A.2d 265, 271, 36 P.2d 701; Scoville v. Kegl (1938) 27 C.A.2d 17, 33, 80 P.2d 162; 23 Cal. L. Rev. 498.)

(3) Applicability to Professional Negligence. In Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 C.A.3d 404, 203 C.R. 800, the court pointed out that, in California and elsewhere, the doctrine operates in the professional negligence context. (157 C.A.3d 414, citing Derrick v. Ontario Community Hosp. (1975) 47 C.A.3d 145, 151, 120 C.R. 566, infra, §875.) The California cases so far have applied the presumption only in medical malpractice actions, but "there is no reason to limit the presumption strictly to that context." Hence, it may properly be applied in an action against a professional design engineer. (157 C.A.3d 415.) (See 11 U.S.F. L. Rev. 517 [medical malpractice actions].)

(4) Employer and Employee. The presumption of negligence from a violation of safety orders occurs only in the employer-employee situation. (Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist. (1997) 14 C.4th 1066, 1086, 60 C.R.2d 263, 929 P.2d 582, supra, §822.) Thus, a premises owner, who was not responsible for asbestos contamination, was not an employer presumed negligent for failing to comply with safety orders. (Smith v. ACandS (1994) 31 C.A.4th 77, 89, 37 C.R.2d 457.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. The doctrine of negligence per se does not provide a private right of action for violation of a statute; instead, it operates to establish a presumption of negligence for which the statute serves the subsidiary function of providing evidence of an element of a preexisting common law cause of action. (Quiroz v. Seventh Avenue Center (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1256, 2384, 45 C.R.3d 222.)

6 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE

B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.

1. In General.

b. Federal Law Violations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 872

[§ 872] Federal Law Violations.

The courts have differed on whether negligence per se causes of action survive federal preemption of other tort claims based on the same conduct.

In Evraets v. Intermedics Intraocular (1994) 29 C.A.4th 779, 34 C.R.2d 852, infra, §1540, the negligence per se claim was held to survive. A negligence per se claim could be based on a violation of federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (FDCA) standards, even though those standards preempt strict liability and negligence claims based on the same conduct. The preemption provision (21 U.S.C., §360k) only preempts state requirements "different from, or in addition to" federal requirements. "In applying a negligence per se theory, the state's requirements are equal to the federal requirements; in fact, they simply adopt the federal standard of conduct." (29 C.A.4th 792.)

However, in Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. (1995) 38 C.A.4th 307, 314, 44 C.R.2d 902, also involving FDCA preemption, the court expressly disagreed with Evraets. "[T]here is no basis for allowing a negligence [per se] claim to proceed ... while finding that negligence itself is a preempted cause of action." Absent preemption, "California plaintiffs would have an advantage over plaintiffs in other jurisdictions, all of which prohibit state claims based on asserted violations of federal regulations." (38 C.A.4th 324.) (On federal supremacy, see 7 Summary (10th), Constitutional Law, §8 et seq.)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.222, 238, 259

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

7 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
1. In General.
c. Codification of Doctrine.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 873

[§ 873] Codification of Doctrine.

(1) Statute. Ev.C. 669, enacted in 1967, codified the doctrine of negligence per se as a presumption affecting the burden of proof. (See 11 Pacific L. J. 907; Casey v. Russell (1982) 138 C.A.3d 379, 383, 188 C.R. 18, citing the text; Sagadin v. Ripper (1985) 175 C.A.3d 1141, 1164, 221 C.R. 675; BAJI, No. 3.45.)

The failure of a person to exercise due care is presumed if all the following conditions are met:

- (a) "He violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity" (Ev.C. 669(a)(1).)
- (b) "The violation proximately caused death or injury to person or property." (Ev.C. 669(a)(2).)
- (c) "The death or injury resulted from an occurrence of the nature which the statute, ordinance, or regulation was designed to prevent." (Ev.C. 669(a)(3).)
- (d) "The person suffering the death or the injury to his person or property was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute, ordinance, or regulation was adopted." (Ev.C. 669(a)(4).)

Application of the doctrine depends on a showing of all of the four statutory elements. (Capolungo v. Bondi (1986) 179 C.A.3d 346, 352, 224 C.R. 326.)

(2) Questions of law and Fact. Of the four elements to be proved to establish negligence per se under Ev.C. 669, the first two elements (i.e., that the defendant violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity, and that the violation proximately caused the injury) are normally considered questions of fact for the trier of fact. The last two elements (i.e., that the injury resulted from an occurrence of the nature that the statute was designed to prevent, and that the plaintiff was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute was adopted) are determined by the trial court as a matter of law, because they involve statutory interpretation. (Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 227 C.A.3d 318, 326, 277 C.R. 753; see Hoff v. Vacaville Unified School Dist. (1998) 19 C.4th 925, 938, 80 C.R.2d 811, 968 P.2d 522, supra, §328 [whether injury resulted from occurrence of nature that statute was designed to prevent and whether plaintiff was one of persons for whose protection it was enacted are questions of law]; DiRosa v. Showa Denko K.K. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 799, 805, 52 C.R.2d 128 [jury was properly allowed to determine whether defendant manufacturer and importer of contaminated dietary supplement violated federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C., §301 et seq.)); Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 C.A.4th 451, 463, 76 C.R.2d 457 [whether statutory violation proximately caused injury is generally question of fact.]) (On questions of law and fact generally, see supra, §§860, 866).)

(3) Underlying Negligence Action. Satisfying the four elements of Ev.C. 669 does not alone entitle the plaintiff to a presumption of negligence, unless he or she has an underlying negligence action. It is the tort of negligence, and not the violation of the statute itself, that entitles a plaintiff to recover damages. Either the courts or the Legislature must have created a duty of care. The presumption of negligence created by Ev.C. 669 concerns the standard of care, rather than the duty of care. (California Service Station & Auto. Repair Assn. v. American Home Assur. Co. (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1166, 1177, 73 C.R.2d 182 [regulation requiring workers' compensation insurer to provide prescribed disclosure statement did not, under Ev.C. 669, create duty of care on which to base negligence action against insurer for failure to provide statement].)

West's Key Number Digest, Negligence k.203, 222, 238-

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

8 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
1. In General.
d. Illustrations.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 874

[§ 874] Illustrations.

In Capolungo v. Bondi (1986) 179 C.A.3d 346, 224 C.R. 326, plaintiff sued for injuries sustained in a bicycle accident when she swerved her bicycle to clear defendant's parked car and was struck by another car. The basis of her action was that defendant had parked his car too long in a yellow-curb loading zone. Held, summary judgment for defendant affirmed. The only element of Ev.C. 669 (supra, §873) established was the first--violation of a local parking ordinance specifying a maximum of 24 minutes for parking in a yellow zone. As to the other elements:

(a) The ordinance was not designed for the purpose of providing safety to motorists and pedestrians on the street; limitation to loading and unloading, and the maximum time provision, show that the purpose was to prevent motorist from monopolizing parking spaces. (179 C.A.3d 353.)

(b) In view of that purpose, plaintiff--a passing bicyclist--was not a member of the class of persons for whose protection the ordinance was adopted--persons desiring access to curb space for loading or unloading. (179 C.A.3d 354.)

(c) The violation of the parking restriction was not a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury: She would have had to swerve around the car in exactly the same manner whether it had been parked there 5 minutes or 5 hours. (179 C.A.3d 354.)

In Sierra-Bay Fed. Land Bank Assn. v. Superior Court (1991) 227 C.A.3d 318, 277 C.R. 753, plaintiff farmer obtained two loans, secured by different parcels of real property, from defendant members of the Farm Credit System. After plaintiff defaulted and the parcels were sold at a trustee's sale, plaintiff alleged that defendants were negligent in that they violated the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 by failing to accept and later review denial of plaintiff's loan restructure proposals and by refusing to lease the property to him after the foreclosure. The trial judge overruled defendants' demurrer, and they sought mandamus. Held, mandamus granted.

(a) Plaintiff argued that defendants were presumptively negligent under Ev.C. 669 because they violated a federal statute that was designed to prevent the harm suffered by plaintiff, a member of the class for whose protection the statutory scheme was adopted. This position is unique and anomalous in that it attempts to take a portion of federal law and engraft it onto state law to create a cause of action that neither jurisdiction would otherwise recognize. (227 C.A.3d

331.)

(b) Some decisions have held that a federal statute may be adopted as a standard of care in a state negligence action under Ev.C. 669. (227 C.A.3d 332, citing Toole v. Richardson-Merrell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 689, 60 C.R. 398, infra, §875.) However, the plaintiffs in those decisions were relying on federal safety standards while pursuing recognized state causes of action for personal injury based on negligence. By contrast, plaintiff here is relying on economic legislation intended by Congress to guide the credit decisions of the component members of the Farm Credit System; and his allegations, i.e., that he defaulted on loans obtained from defendants who then exercised the powers of sale in the deeds of trust given to secure his performance, do not even hint at a viable cause of action for negligence under California law. (227 C.A.3d 334.) Hence, plaintiff is not pursuing a negligence action in which he urges adoption of a congressionally devised standard of care. (227 C.A.3d 335.)

(c) For Ev.C. 669 to apply, the injured person must be within the protected class and the injury must result from an occurrence the nature of which the transgressed statute was designed to prevent. These requirements can be satisfied here only by focusing on the loan restructure provisions of the Act and ignoring its primary objectives, which are to restore financial integrity to the Farm Credit System and to minimize the possible exposure of the federal budget. Indeed, when the entire Act is considered, it appears that farmers who might qualify for restructuring are nothing more than incidental beneficiaries. (227 C.A.3d 336.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

9 of 172 DOCUMENTS

Witkin Summary of California Law, Tenth Edition
Copyright (c) 2010 By B.E. Witlin Article Sixth Testamentary Trust

CHAPTER IX - Torts

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. NEGLIGENCE: GENERAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE
B. Standard of Due Care: Negligence Per Se.
2. Statute, Ordinance, or Administrative Regulation.
a. In General.
1. Statute or Ordinance.

6 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Torts § 875

[§ 875] Statute or Ordinance.

