I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

A. Limited Powers of Federal Government.

1. Source of Federal Powers.

[§ 1] Source of Federal Powers.

(1) In General. The United States Constitution was adopted in 1787, and went into effect in 1789. It grants power to the federal government, which has only those powers that are expressly or impliedly granted to it. Thus, the Tenth Amendment to the federal Constitution declares that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, or to the people." The doctrine of limited powers, however, is true only as to internal affairs. In foreign affairs, a broader scope of federal power is recognized. (United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. (1936) 299 U.S. 304, 57 S.Ct. 216, 219, 81 L.Ed. 255, 260; see infra, §1337.)

Neither the preamble to the Constitution (see Jacobson v. Massachusetts (1905) 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 359, 49 L.Ed. 643, 648) nor the "general welfare" clause (Art. I, §8) gives substantive power to the federal government. (See 36 Harv. L. Rev. 548.) (On federal tax powers under Art. I, §8, see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation §105.) Nor has Congress any "emergency power"; an emergency cannot create a power previously nonexistent. (Home Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell (1934) 290 U.S. 398, 54 S.Ct. 231, 235, 78 L.Ed. 413, 422, infra, §1289; Ex parte Milligan (1866) 71 U.S. 2, 18 L.Ed. 281; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §52; but see infra, §1323 et seq., for illustrations of broadened war power; and see 36 So. Cal. L. Rev. 373 ["Tomorrow's Weapons vs. The Constitution"].)

(2) Texts and Law Reviews. Commentary on the Constitution and federalism in general has been extensive. (See Rotunda & Nowak, Treatise on Constitutional Law; Substance and Procedure (3d ed., 1999, 5 volumes), hereinafter cited as Rotunda; Tribe, American Constitutional Law (3d ed., 2000, 2 volumes), hereinafter cited as Tribe; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §51 et seq.; 101 *Harv. I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

A. Limited Powers of Federal Government.

2. Reserved Powers of States.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 2

[§ 2] In General.

(1) Earlier View of Independent Limitation. The Tenth Amendment (supra, §1) has sometimes been considered an independent limitation on actual federal powers, so that legislation beyond the express and implied powers of the federal government is an unconstitutional invasion of the reserved powers of the states. Thus, it was held that even where a recognized federal power is exercised, e.g., the taxing power, if it is used for the purpose of regulating or controlling subjects beyond the scope of federal power, it is void as a means to an unconstitutional end. (United States v. Butler (1936) 297 U.S. 1, 56, S.Ct. 312, 320, 80 L.Ed. 477, 489; Hopkins Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Cleary (1935) 296 U.S. 315, 56 S.Ct. 235, 240, 80 L.Ed. 251, 258 [federal statute permitting federal incorporation of state building and loan associations, in violation of state law, held invalid]; see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation §108.)

(2) Development of Modern View. In United States v. Darby (1941) 312 U.S. 100, 61 S.Ct. 451, 85 L.Ed. 609, the theory that the Tenth Amendment is an independent limitation was abandoned. The Court declared that the amendment "states but a truism" indicating the relationship between the national and state governments, the purpose of which was to "allay fears that the new national government might seek to exercise powers not granted." (61 S.Ct. 462, 85 L.Ed. 622.) (See 52 Harv. L. Rev. 1342.)

In Case v. Bowles (1946) 327 U.S. 92, 66 S.Ct. 438, 90 L.Ed. 552, the Washington state commissioner of public lands sought to sell school lands to the highest bidder, pursuant to state law. The court held that the federal Emergency Price Control Act applied to prevent a sale in excess of the ceiling. The argument that, because the sale was for the purpose of carrying on the essential state governmental function of education, it was free from federal regulatory power, was summarily rejected. "Where, as here, Congress has enacted legislation authorized by its granted powers, and where at the same time, a state has a conflicting law which but for the Congressional Act would be valid, the Constitution marks the course for courts to follow." (66 S.Ct. 443, 90 L.Ed. 560.) (See Fernandez v. Wiener (1945) 326 U.S. 340, 66 S.Ct. 178, 189, 90 L.Ed. 116, 134.)

In United States v. Oregon (1961) 366 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1278, 6 L.Ed.2d 575, an incompetent Oregon resident died in a V.A. Hospital, leaving an estate of $ 13,000 in personal property. A federal statute provided that when a veteran patient in a veteran's hospital or other facility died leaving personal property not disposed of by will and without heirs at law, the property should vest in the U.S. for the use of the General Post Fund, to be used for recreational purposes of other veterans. Oregon claimed it by escheat, contending that devolution of property is a local matter and that the statute contravened the Tenth Amendment. Held, the U.S. was entitled to the money. The express war power authorizes, under the Necessary and Proper Clause, payment of pensions and the building of hospitals and homes for veterans. "We think it plain that the same sources of power authorize Congress to require that the personal property left by its wards when they die in government facilities shall be devoted to the comfort and recreation of other ex-service people who must depend upon the Government for care. The fact that this law pertains to the devolution of property does not render it invalid. Although it is true that this is an area normally left to the States, it is not immune under the Tenth Amendment from laws passed by the Federal Government which are, as is the law here, necessary and proper to the exercise of a delegated power." (81 S.Ct. 1281, 6 L.Ed.2d 579.)

The same result was reached in Estate of Turner (1959) 171 C.A.2d 591, 595, 341 P.2d 376, on the ground that the decedent veteran, on entering the hospital, executed a valid contract for the assignment to the U.S. (See generally 1 Rotunda, §4.8 et seq.; 1 Tribe, §5-10 et seq.; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 1871 [Municipal Bankruptcy, the Tenth Amendment and the New Federalism]; 13 San Diego L. Rev. 876 [The Tenth Amendment and the Resolution of Federalism Conflicts]; on requirement under Supremacy Clause that state courts apply federal law, see infra, §25.)

The Tenth Amendment also has been used to challenge the constitutionality of child support and custody orders. (See Kilroy v. Superior Court (1997) 54 C.A.4th 793, 816, 63 C.R.2d 390 [insofar as Full Faith and Credit for Child Support Orders Act required California to defer to Georgia support order, there was no violation of Tenth Amendment]; In re Santos Y. (2001) 92 C.A.4th 1274, 1322, 112 C.R.2d 692 [in dependency action, federal Indian Child Welfare Act impermissibly intruded on California's reserved power to care for dependent children where child's only connection with Tribe was one-quarter genetic contribution]; on Full Faith and Credit Clause generally, see infra, §31.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

A. Limited Powers of Federal Government.

2. Reserved Powers of States.

b. Regulation of State Employees.

1. Former Rule.

[§ 3] Former Rule.

State sovereignty was given substantial recognition in National League of Cities v. Usery (1976) 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L.Ed.2d 245. The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 regulated wages of employees in private employment (see infra, §1321; 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §540). A series of amendments extended its coverage to some public employees, including those of state hospitals, institutions, and schools (see Maryland v. Wirtz (1968) 392 U.S. 183, 88 S.Ct. 2017, 20 L.Ed.2d 1020). In 1974, the statute was again amended to make it applicable to virtually all employees of states and their political subdivisions, so that the minimum wage, maximum hour, and overtime provisions were essentially identical to those imposed on private employers. The 1974 legislation was challenged by individual cities and the National League of Cities. The district court, believing itself bound by "the far-reaching implications" of Maryland v. Wirtz, upheld the amendments. Held, reversed.

(a) Congressional enactments, though within the broad power granted by the Commerce Clause, may nevertheless be invalid if in conflict with constitutional limitations such as the jury trial right or the Due Process Clause. (96 S.Ct. 2469, 49 L.Ed.2d 251.) And the same is true where the exercise of power invades state sovereignty: "It is one thing to recognize the authority of Congress to enact laws regulating individual businesses necessarily subject to the dual sovereignty of the government of the Nation and of the State in which they reside. It is quite another to uphold a similar exercise of congressional authority directed not to private citizens but to the States as States. We have repeatedly recognized that there are attributes of sovereignty attaching to every state government which may not be impaired by Congress, not because Congress may lack an affirmative grant of legislative authority to reach the matter, but because the Constitution prohibits it from exercising the authority in that manner." (96 S.Ct. 2471, 49 L.Ed.2d 253.)

(b) Determination of the wages and hours of public employees is an attribute of state sovereignty. (96 S.Ct. 2471, 49 L.Ed.2d 254.) And imposition of the federal requirements would result in substantially increased costs to state governmental agencies and in the forced relinquishment of various activities, such as training of new employees, affirmative action programs, and handling of overtime. (96 S.Ct. 2471, 49 L.Ed.2d 254.) This would be an impermissible interference with governmental functions of the states. "We hold that insofar as the challenged amendments operate to directly displace the States' freedom to structure integral operations in areas of traditional governmental functions, they are not within the authority granted Congress." (96 S.Ct. 2474, 49 L.Ed.2d 257.)

(c) The language of Maryland v. Wirtz was too broad: "While there are obvious differences between the schools and hospitals involved in Wirtz, and the fire and police departments affected here, each provides an integral portion of those governmental services which the States and their political subdivisions have traditionally afforded their citizens. We are therefore persuaded that Wirtz must be overruled." (96 S.Ct. 2476, 49 L.Ed.2d 259.)

Three justices joined in a strong dissenting opinion attacking the holding as unsound in principle and totally lacking in authority. (See 1 Rotunda, §4.10; 1 Tribe, §5-11; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 1871 [implications of the decision]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 62; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1065; 30 Hastings L. J. 1763.)

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

A. Limited Powers of Federal Government.

2. Reserved Powers of States.

b. Regulation of State Employees.

2. Valid Regulation.

[§ 4] Valid Regulation.

In Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority (1985) 469 U.S. 528, 105 S.Ct. 1005, 83 L.Ed.2d 1016, defendant SAMTA operated a mass transit system that received large grants of federal funds. The issue raised in this case was whether it was subject to the minimum-wage and overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), or was immune under National League of Cities v. Usery (1976) 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L.Ed.2d 245, supra, §3. Held, it is not immune, and National League of Cities is overruled.

(a) Immunity under National League of Cities has been recognized where the challenged federal statute impaired the state's ability "to structure integral operations in areas of traditional governmental functions." (105 S.Ct. 1010, 83 L.Ed.2d 1025.) But the numerous federal decisions have not identified an organizing principle that places a case on one or the other side of the line. "The constitutional distinction between licensing drivers and regulating traffic, for example, or between operating a highway authority and operating a mental health facility, is elusive at best." (105 S.Ct. 1011, 83 L.Ed.2d 1026.) And in the tax immunity cases, the distinction between "governmental" and "proprietary" functions was discarded as unworkable. (105 S.Ct. 1013, 1014, 83 L.Ed.2d 1027, 1028, 1029.)

(b) "The problem is that neither the governmental/proprietary distinction nor any other that purports to separate out important governmental functions can be faithful to the role of federalism in a democratic society. The essence of our federal system is that within the realm of authority left open to them under the Constitution, the States must be equally free to engage in any activity that their citizens choose for the common weal, no matter how unorthodox or unnecessary anyone else—including the judiciary—deems state involvement to be. Any rule of state immunity that looks to the 'traditional,' 'integral,' or 'necessary' nature of governmental functions inevitably invites an unelected federal judiciary to make decisions about which state policies it favors and which ones it dislikes." (105 S.Ct. 1015, 83 L.Ed.2d 1030, 1031.) This rule is unsound in principle and unworkable in practice. (105 S.Ct. 1016, 83 L.Ed.2d 1031.)

(c) The underlying issue in National League of Cities was the manner in which the Constitution insulates states from the reach of Congress' power under the Commerce Clause. (105 S.Ct. 1016, 83 L.Ed.2d 1031.) In the present case, "we perceive nothing in the overtime and minimum-wage requirements of the FLSA, as applied to SAMTA, that is destructive of state sovereignty or violative of any constitutional provision. SAMTA faces nothing more than the same minimum-wage and overtime obligations that hundreds of thousands of other employers, public as well as private, have to meet." (105 S.Ct. 1019, 83 L.Ed.2d 1036.)

(d) "Of course, we continue to recognize that the States occupy a special and specific position in our constitutional system and that the scope of Congress' authority under the Commerce Clause must reflect that position. But the principal and basic limit on the federal commerce power is that inherent in all congressional action--the built-in restraints that our system provides through state participation in federal governmental action. The political process ensures that laws that unduly burden the States will not be promulgated. In the factual setting of these cases the internal safeguards of the political process have performed as intended." (105 S.Ct. 1020, 83 L.Ed.2d 1037.)

Four justices dissented in two opinions, arguing that National League of Cities was correctly decided and that its principle had been repeatedly reaffirmed. The first dissenting opinion also asserts that "[t]here have been few cases ... in which the principle of stare decisis and the rationale of recent decisions were ignored as abruptly as we now witness." (105 S.Ct. 1021, 83 L.Ed.2d 1038.) (See South Carolina v. Baker (1988) 485 U.S. 505, 108 S.Ct. 1355, 1360, 99 L.Ed.2d 592, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §15; 1 Rotunda, §4.10; 1 Tribe, §5-11; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 105; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 84; 13 Hastings Const. L. Q. 271; 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1311; 20 U.S.F. L. Rev. 675.)

[§ 5] Invalid Regulation.

In Gregory v. Ashcroft (1991) 501 U.S. 452, 111 S.Ct. 2395, 115 L.Ed. 2d 410, the Court held that the Supremacy Clause did not override a state's Tenth Amendment right to impose retirement rules on its judges, even though those rules were otherwise violative of the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act (see infra, §873). "Congressional interference with this decision of the people of Missouri, defining their constitutional officers, would upset the usual constitutional balance of federal and state powers. For this reason, 'it is incumbent upon federal courts to be certain of Congress' intent before finding that federal law overrides' this balance.'" (111 S.Ct. 2401, 115 L.Ed. 2d 423.) Where, as here, it is ambiguous whether Congress intended that appointed judges be excluded from coverage by the federal Act, the court will not attribute an intent to intrude on state governmental functions. (111 S.Ct. 2406, 115 L.Ed.2d 430.) (See 1 Tribe, §5-11; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 196; 41 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 903.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

A. Limited Powers of Federal Government.

2. Reserved Powers of States.

c. No Requirement That State Officials Administer Federal Law.

[§ 6] No Requirement That State Officials Administer Federal Law.

In New York v. United States (1992) 505 U.S. 144, 112 S.Ct. 2408, 120 L.Ed.2d 120, the Court addressed the constitutionality of three provisions of the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Amendments Act of 1985:

(a) "[W]hile Congress has substantial power under the Constitution to encourage the States to provide for the disposal of the radioactive waste generated within their borders, the Constitution does not confer upon Congress the ability simply to compel the States to do so. We therefore find that only two of the Act's three provisions at issue are consistent with the Constitution's allocation of power to the Federal Government." (112 S.Ct. 2414, 120 L.Ed.2d 133.) "States are not mere political subdivisions of the United States. State governments are neither regional offices nor administrative agencies of the Federal Government. The positions occupied by state officials appear nowhere on the Federal Government's most detailed organizational chart. The Constitution instead 'leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty,' ... reserved explicitly to the States by the Tenth Amendment." (112 S.Ct. 2434, 120 L.Ed.2d 158.)

(b) "Whatever the outer limits of that sovereignty may be, one thing is clear: The Federal Government may not compel the States to enact or administer a federal regulatory program. The Constitution permits both the Federal Government and the States to enact legislation regarding the disposal of low level radioactive waste. The Constitution enables the Federal Government to pre-empt state regulation contrary to federal interests, and it permits the Federal Government to hold out incentives to the States as a means of encouraging them to adopt suggested regulatory schemes. It does not, however, authorize Congress simply to direct the States to provide for the disposal of the radioactive waste generated within their borders. While there may be many constitutional methods of achieving regional self-sufficiency in radioactive waste disposal, the method Congress has chosen is not one of them." (112 S.Ct. 2435, 120 L.Ed.2d 158.) (See 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 489, 577, 593, 611 [health care reform, Tenth Amendment, and New York v. United States].)

Printz v. United States (1997) 521 U.S. 898, 117 S.Ct. 2365, 138 L.Ed.2d 914, and Mack v. United States (1997) 521 U.S. 898, 117 S.Ct. 2365, 138 L.Ed.2d 914, involved certain interim provisions of the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act, which requires the Attorney General to establish a national background check system for the purchase of handguns. Until the system becomes operative, state law enforcement officers are required to receive notice of a proposed transfer from a firearms dealer and to perform a background check on the prospective purchaser. Held, these provisions are unconstitutional; Congress may not compel state officers to execute federal laws. Because the Constitution itself does not speak to this precise question, the answer must be found in historical understanding and practice, the structure of the Constitution, and the Court's jurisprudence:

(a) Historical understanding and practice.

(1) Early federal statutes imposing obligations on state courts have their basis in U.S. Const., Art. III, §1 (which established a Supreme Court but made the creation of lower federal courts optional, even though one court could not possibly hear all federal matters), and in U.S. Const., Art. VI, Cl. 2 (the Supremacy Clause, providing that judges in every state are bound by the laws of the United States). These statutes do not imply a power of Congress to impose obligations on the state executive. Until very recent years, federal enactments that made demands on the state executive did so either under the direct authority of the Constitution, as a nonbinding "recommendation" offering compensation, by entering into contracts with the states, or by a request to the governors. Federal statutes enacted in the last few decades are too recent to shed light on the historical understanding of the text of the Constitution. (117 S.Ct. 2371, 138 L.Ed.2d 927.)

(2) Suggestions in The Federalist that the national government would be able to employ the "ordinary magistracy" of the states to execute its laws did not suggest that it could do so without the consent of the states. (117 S.Ct. 2372, 138 L.Ed.2d 929, quoting The Federalist, No. 27, at 176 (A. Hamilton).) And statements in The Federalist that state executive officers are bound by an oath to observe "the laws of the Confederacy as to the enumerated and legitimate objects of its jurisdiction," that they are "incorporated into the operations of the national government," and are "auxiliary to the enforcement of its laws," mean only that state officials must enact, enforce, and interpret state laws so as not to obstruct federal law. (117 S.Ct. 2373, 138 L.Ed.2d 929, quoting The Federalist, No. 27, at 177 (A. Hamilton).)

(b) Structure of the Constitution.

(1) The Constitution establishes a system of dual sovereignty in which the states retain a "residuary and inviolable sovereignty," implicit in the grant to Congress of only enumerated powers (U.S. Const., Art I., §8) and express in the reservation to the states of powers not delegated to the federal government (Tenth Amendment). (117 S.Ct. 2376, 138 L.Ed.2d 934.) In designing the system, the framers of the Constitution rejected a central government that would act on and through the states: "[T]he local or municipal authorities form distinct and independent portions of the supremacy, no more subject, within their respective spheres, to the general authority than the general authority is subject to them, within its own sphere." (117 S.Ct. 2377, 138 L.Ed.2d 935, quoting The Federalist, No. 39, at 245 (J. Madison).)

(2) Federal control of state officers also violates the separation of powers within the federal Government. It is the President who is required to execute the laws of the land. The Brady Act interim provisions transfer this responsibility to thousands of state law enforcement officers who are left to implement it without meaningful Presidential control. (117 S.Ct. 2378, 138 L.Ed.2d 936.)

(3) The interim provisions cannot be justified under U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, as "necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the power of Congress under the Commerce Clause to regulate the sale of handguns. When a law for executing the Commerce Clause violates the principle of state sovereignty set forth in the constitutional provisions mentioned above, it is not a law proper for carrying into execution the Commerce Clause. (117 S.Ct. 2378, 138 L.Ed.2d 937.)

are required to provide only "limited, nonpolicymaking help in enforcing" the Brady Act. There is arguably a policymaking component in determining what constitutes "reasonable efforts" to be expended in conducting a background check, but even if there is not, making the state officers into "puppets of a ventriloquist Congress" only worsens the intrusion on state sovereignty. (117 S.Ct. 2380, 138 L.Ed.2d 939.) Nor can it be distinguished because the subject regulations are directed to individuals, rather than to the state; the Brady Act is directed to individuals only in their official capacities as state officers, and thus as agents of the state. (117 S.Ct. 2382, 138 L.Ed.2d 941.) Finally, claims that the Brady Act serves very important purposes best administered by state law enforcement officers during the interim period, and places only a minimal and temporary burden on state officers, are beside the point. A balancing analysis is inappropriate under the circumstances, because an enactment may not violate the division of powers among sovereigns as "an expedient solution to the crisis of the day." (117 S.Ct. 2383, 138 L.Ed.2d 943, quoting New York v. United States, supra.)

Two justices wrote concurring opinions and four others dissented. One concurring opinion pointed out that the states may still voluntarily carry out the Brady Act provisions, or Congress may amend them to provide for their enforcement through contracts with the states. (117 S.Ct. 2385, 138 L.Ed.2d 945.) (See 1 Tribe, §§5-11, 5-12; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 207 [Printz]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 2180 [same]; 51 Hastings L. J. 231 [Printz and New York]; 25 Pepperdine L. Rev. 24 [gun control; discussing Printz and New York]; on requirement under Supremacy Clause that state courts enforce federal law, see infra, §25.)

d. Regulation of State Utilities.

[§ 7] Regulation of State Utilities.

The Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978 (PURPA) (16 U.S.C., §2601 et seq.) requires state consideration of federal rate-making standards and imposes certain procedures on state commissions. In Federal Energy Regulatory Com. v. Mississippi (1982) 456 U.S. 742, 102 S.Ct. 2126, 72 L.Ed.2d 532, the Court, distinguishing National League of Cities v. Usery (1976) 426 U.S. 833, 96 S.Ct. 2465, 49 L.Ed.2d 245, supra, §3 (now overruled, see supra, §4), upheld the statute.

National League of Cities involved the problem of "the extent to which state sovereignty shields the States from generally applicable federal regulations." In PURPA, "the Federal Government attempts to use state regulatory machinery to advance federal goals." (102 S.Ct. 2137, 72 L.Ed.2d 546.) On the critical issue of procedural requirements, the court said: "If Congress can require a state administrative body to consider proposed regulations as a condition to its continued involvement in a pre-emptible field--and we hold today that it can--there is nothing unconstitutional about Congress' requiring certain procedural minima as that body goes about undertaking its tasks. The procedural requirements obviously do not compel the exercise of the State's sovereign powers, and do not purport to set standards to be followed in all areas of the state commission's endeavors." (102 S.Ct. 2143, 72 L.Ed.2d 554.)

Four justices dissented. (See 1 Tribe, §5-11; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 196.)

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

a. Conflicting State Law Is Invalid.

1. Constitutional Principle.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 8

[§ 8] Constitutional Principle.

(1) In General. The supremacy of the federal Government is expressed in Article VI of the federal Constitution: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." (See 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §51 et seq.; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §238 et seq.)

"The relative importance to the State of its own law is not material when there is a conflict with a valid federal law. ... [A]ny state law, however clearly within a State's acknowledged power, which interferes with or is contrary to federal law, must yield." (Free v. Bland (1962) 369 U.S. 663, 82 S.Ct. 1089, 1092, 8 L.Ed.2d 180, 183.)

In Sterling v. Constantin (1932) 287 U.S. 378, 53 S.Ct. 190, 77 L.Ed. 375, the Texas Railroad Commission imposed limits on the production of oil wells. After a federal injunction against enforcement of the restrictions was secured, the Governor declared martial law and enforced his orders with state troops. An injunction against the Governor and state military authorities was sustained. The Court declared that "[t]here is no avenue of escape from the paramount authority of the Federal Constitution," and held that the military and executive power of the state could not be used to subvert the authority of a federal court having jurisdiction over the cause. (53 S.Ct. 195, 77 L.Ed. 385.) (See Hines v. Davidowitz (1941) 312 U.S. 52, 61 S.Ct. 399, 404, 85 L.Ed. 581, 584; Antoine v. Washington (1975) 420 U.S. 194, 95 S.Ct. 944, 950, 43 L.Ed.2d 129, 137 [when ratified by Act of Congress, agreement between Executive Branch and Indians is binding on states]; Howlett v. Rose (1990) 496 U.S. 356, 110 S.Ct. 2430, 2438, 110 L.Ed.2d 332, 347; Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 10, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529; People v. Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co. (1985) 38 C.3d 509, 522, 213 C.R. 247, 698 P.2d 150 [state regulation of outdoor advertising on Indian reservations is preempted by federal law]; Webb v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 990, 999, 275 C.R. 581; Steele v. Collagen Corp. (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1474, 1490, 63 C.R.2d 879 [burden of proving preemption is on defendant]; F & L Farm Co. v. City Council of Lindsay (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1345, 1353, 77 C.R.2d 360 [judicial construction of California constitutional debt and tax limitations to prevent payment of inverse condemnation judgments would conflict with Fifth Amendment to U.S. Constitution and would violate Supremacy Clause]; for illustrations, see infra, §20 et seq.)

(2) Promotion of State Purpose Is Insufficient. The supremacy doctrine was reexamined in Perez v. Campbell (1971) 402 U.S. 637, 91 S.Ct. 1704, 1711, 29 L.Ed.2d 233, 242. The Arizona Motor Vehicle Responsibility Act, based on the Uniform Act, contains the usual provisions on suspension of a license. (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §406 et seq.) Mr. and Mrs. P, uninsured motorists, were involved in an accident. The other parties recovered a judgment by confession on November 8, 1967. On November 6, 1967, Mr. and Mrs. P filed voluntary bankruptcy petitions, scheduled the judgment debt, and received a discharge on July 8, 1968. The Arizona Act stated that a discharge following rendition of judgment "shall not relieve the judgment debtor from any of the requirements of this article." Mr. and Mrs. P sought injunctive relief in the federal court, asserting a conflict with the Bankruptcy Act. Held, the Arizona statute was invalid.

(a) The primary purpose of the statute, as construed by the Arizona Supreme Court, is protection of the public using the highways from financial hardship that may result from use of automobiles by financially irresponsible persons. (91 S.Ct. 1708, 29 L.Ed.2d 239.)

(b) The primary purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to give debtors a new opportunity for future effort, unhampered by preexisting debt. Congress intended this new opportunity to include freedom "from most kinds of preexisting tort judgments." (91 S.Ct. 1711, 29 L.Ed.2d 241.)

(c) Kesler v. Department of Public Safety, Financial Responsibility Division, Utah (1962) 369 U.S. 153, 82 S.Ct. 807, 7 L.Ed.2d 641, and Reitz v. Mealey (1941) 314 U.S. 33, 62 S.Ct. 24, 86 L.Ed. 21, held that such statutes did not conflict with the Bankruptcy Act. But they relied on the purpose of the state law--not to circumvent the Bankruptcy Act but to promote highway safety; and this approach is mistaken: "We can no longer adhere to the aberrational doctrine of Kesler and Reitz that state law may frustrate the operation of federal law as long as the state legislature in passing its law had some purpose in mind other than one of frustration. Apart from the fact that it is at odds with the approach taken in nearly all our Supremacy Clause cases, such a doctrine would enable state legislatures to nullify nearly all unwanted federal legislation by simply publishing a legislative committee report articulating some state interest or policy--other than frustration of the federal objective--that would be tangentially furthered by the proposed state law." (91 S.Ct. 1712, 29 L.Ed.2d 243.) (See 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 298.)

(3) Texts and Law Reviews. Commentary on federal supremacy has been extensive. (See 2 Rotunda, §12.1 et seq.; 1 Tribe, Chap. 6; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 22 [problems arising under federal and state regulation of atomic energy]; 50 Cal. L. Rev. 800 [Supreme Court and Federal System]; 87 Cal. L. I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

a. Conflicting State Law Is Invalid.

2. Questions Involved.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 9

[§ 9] Questions Involved.

Before a state law can apply, the following questions must be answered in the negative:

(1) Does the state policy in fact conflict with declared federal policy in whole or in part? If it does, the state policy must yield under the Supremacy Clause. (See supra, §8.)

(2) If it does not conflict, did Congress nevertheless intend to preempt the field with its policy? If so, the state policy must yield under the Supremacy Clause. (See Pennsylvania v. Nelson (1956) 350 U.S. 497, 76 S.Ct. 477, 481, 100 L.Ed. 640, 653 [federal criminal statute preempts similar preexisting state statutes]; Burbank v. Lockheed Air Terminal (1973) 411 U.S. 624, 93 S.Ct. 1854, 1862, 36 L.Ed.2d 547, 556 [Federal Aviation Act requires uniform and exclusive system of federal regulation, and precludes local curfew for jet aircraft takeoffs]; Ray v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1978) 435 U.S. 151, 98 S.Ct. 988, 994, 55 L.Ed.2d 179, 189; Greater Westchester Homeowners Assn. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 C.3d 86, 93, 160 C.R. 733, 603 P.2d 1329; Hartenstine v. Superior Court (1987) 196 C.A.3d 206, 217, 241 C.R. 756 [express preemption clause]; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 191 [Ray v. Atlantic Richfield Co.]; 13 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1 [California's Nuclear Law as a Preemption Case Study].)

(3) Apart from the Supremacy Clause, does the state policy purport to regulate an area over which the federal Constitution has delegated exclusive control to the federal government? If so, state laws are invalid even in the absence of federal legislation. (See Southern Pac. Co. v. Jensen (1917) 244 U.S. 205, 37 S.Ct. 524, 529, 61 L.Ed. 1086, 1099 [state compensation laws applied to injuries on navigable waters affecting foreign shipping]; Zschernig v. Miller (1968) 389 U.S. 429, 88 S.Ct. 664, 670, 19 L.Ed.2d 683, 692 [Oregon escheat statute affecting rights of nonresident aliens].)

These questions are difficult to answer, and federal supremacy is sometimes denied on doubtful reasoning. In United States v. Yazell (1966) 382 U.S. 341, 86 S.Ct. 500, 15 L.Ed.2d 404, Mrs. Y and her husband, partners in a business in Texas, suffered a disaster loss, and borrowed money from the Disaster Loan Office of the Small Business Administration. The loan was negotiated with full knowledge of Texas law, which at that time retained the archaic defense of coverture for a married woman; i.e., she could not bind her separate property until she had first obtained a court decree removing her disability to contract. In this action by the United States against Mrs. Y for the balance due, the court held that there was no overriding federal interest that called for disregarding the state law on married women's contractual power. (86 S.Ct. 504, 15 L.Ed.2d 408.) Three dissenting justices argued that (a) a "loan from the Federal Government is a federal matter and should be governed by federal law"; (b) the Small Business Act, under which many loans were made throughout the country, should be of uniform application; and (c) if a person has the capacity to receive money from the federal government, the person has the capacity to return it. (86 S.Ct. 510, 15 L.Ed.2d 414.)

[§ 10] Arbitration.

Section 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act (see 9 U.S.C., §1 et seq.), which requires enforcement of arbitration provisions in contracts involving commerce, is a substantive rule applicable in state as well as federal courts and forecloses state attempts to undercut enforceability of arbitration agreements. Hence, Corp.C. 31512, as interpreted by the California Supreme Court to require judicial consideration of claims brought under the state Franchise Investment Law, thus rendering arbitration provisions unenforceable, violates the Supremacy Clause. (Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 465 U.S. 1, 104 S.Ct. 852, 858, 861, 79 L.Ed.2d 1, 11, 15; see *Perry v. cc. Banking.

[§ 12] Banking.

(1) In General. Federal banking laws have been held to preempt a number of state claims relating to banking. (See Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank (1990) 224 C.A.3d 674, 689, 692, 274 C.R. 81 [National Bank Act preempts contractual claims of employment rights, including plaintiff's claim of discharge constituting age discrimination in violation of California statute]; Smiley v. Citibank (1995) 11 C.4th 138, 44 C.R.2d 441, 900 P.2d 690, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, §164 [Section 30 of National Bank Act (12 U.S.C., §85), permitting national bank to charge interest at rate allowed by its home state, includes late payment fees and preempts conflicting state usury laws]; Smiley v. Citibank (1996) 517 U.S. 735, 116 S.Ct. 1730, 1735, 135 L.Ed.2d 25, 34 [same]; Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court (2002) 95 C.A.4th 606, 615, 115 C.R.2d 765 [action challenging practice of charging interest on home loans funded before close of escrow was preempted by Home Owner's Loan Act and its implementing regulations]; Lopez v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 729, 737, 130 C.R.2d 42 [federal regulations preempt entire field of lending by federal savings associations, which includes charges for providing payoff demand statements].)

However, in Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 C.4th 147, 172, 183, 91 C.R.2d 659, 990 P.2d 539, there was no plurality opinion on the preemption issue. Three justices wrote that the National Bank Act provision permitting discharge of bank officers "at pleasure" preempts the FEHA only when it conflicts with the Act, while three other justices wrote that the provision preempts the FEHA absolutely. A seventh justice wrote that the provision "completely preempts FEHA in all cases involving bank 'officers,'" but that there was no preemption here because plaintiff was not an officer.

(2) D'Oench, Duhme Doctrine. In Resolution Trust Corp. v. Winslow (1992) 9 C.A.4th 1799, 12 C.R.2d 510, the court explored the nature and application of the doctrine established by D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. (1942) 315 U.S. 447, 62 S.Ct. 676, 86 L.Ed. 956.

(a) The D'Oench case. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) sued on a note after it took over a bank. The obligor set up the defense of a side agreement precluding liability. The Court held that public policy requires a person who, for the accommodation of a bank, executes an instrument which is in form a binding obligation, "should be estopped from thereafter asserting that simultaneously the parties agreed that the instrument should not be enforced." (9 C.A.4th 1805.)

(b) Codification of doctrine. The doctrine was partially codified in 12 U.S.C., §1823(e), providing that no agreement that tends to diminish or defeat the interest of the FDIC in any asset acquired under 12 U.S.C., §1821 or 1823 is valid unless certain conditions are met (writing, approval, and official record). (9 C.A.4th 1806.)

(c) Extended coverage. In 1989, statutory revisions extended the protection of 12 U.S.C., §1823(e) to other federal entities. (9 C.A.4th 1806.) The policy, however, remains the same: to retain public confidence in the banking system and to minimize loss to the depositors and the FDIC when a banking institution fails. "Secret agreements between banks and their customers cannot be recognized if this goal is to be achieved." (9 C.A.4th 1807, quoting Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Dureau (1989) 212 C.A.3d 956, 965, 261 C.R. 19.)

(d) Federal law governs in state action. Although the cause of action in the present case was for misrepresentation based entirely on state law, "the involvement of the RTC imports a federal issue into the case which requires the application of federal law." (9 C.A.4th 1807.) The federal statutory scheme establishes a federal policy that the responsibility of the federal entities must not extend to agreements that are not positively reflected in the financial institution's records. "This policy is supreme over state law both because it is indispensable to the achievement of the underlying federal goal of preventing a national financial collapse and because it involves, as a party, an entity created and financed by the federal government. Thus, notwithstanding Erie, federal statutory and common law is supreme in this case." (9 C.A.4th 1809, distinguishing Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins (1938) 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed 1188, infra, §58.)

(e) Affirmative claims for relief. The doctrine applies not only to defensive use of alleged oral promises, but also to offensive use, such as fraud or breach of contract claims based on alleged oral agreements. [§ 13] Bankruptcy.

In Perez v. Campbell (1971) 402 U.S. 637, 91 S.Ct. 1704, 1712, 29 L.Ed.2d 233, 244, supra, §8, it was held that a discharge in bankruptcy bars enforcement of a local financial responsibility law providing for suspension of a driver's license.

In Grimes v. Hoschler (1974) 12 C.3d 305, 115 C.R. 625, 525 P.2d 65, the court, following Perez and overruling Tracy v. Contractors' State License Bd. (1965) 63 C.2d 598, 47 C.R. 561, 407 P.2d 865, held that the provision in B. & P.C. 7113.5, making an adjudication in bankruptcy a cause for disciplinary action against a contractor, is unconstitutional.

(a) Tracy held the statute valid on the ground that its purpose was not to aid collection of debts but to protect the public welfare. Perez, however, established a test involving both purpose and effect. (12 C.3d 312.)

(b) Applying the Perez test, even though the statutory purpose was valid, the statutory effect was to frustrate the objectives of Congress in three respects: (1) it tends to discourage a licensed contractor from having his or her business debts discharged in bankruptcy; (2) if the contractor is adjudicated a bankrupt, the board may revoke or suspend his or her license, thus depriving the contractor of a means of livelihood; (3) the statute in effect compels the disciplined licensee to pay the discharged business debts in order to have the license reissued or reinstated. "In sum, the relevant sections of the Contractors License Law here under examination not only discourage licensed contractors from voluntarily availing themselves of the beneficial provisions of the Bankruptcy Act but sternly deny a fresh start to all licensees who are adjudicated bankrupts either voluntarily or involuntarily." (12 C.3d 312.) (See 10 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 753 [Bankruptcy Act and State Statutes].) (A 1975 amendment to B. & P.C. 7113.5 deleted the unconstitutional provision.)

In Gene R. Smith Corp. v. Terry's Tractor (1989) 209 C.A.3d 951, 954, 257 C.R. 598, the court held that federal bankruptcy law preempts a state action for abuse of process and malicious prosecution based on the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition. (See Pauletto v. Reliance Ins. Co. (1998) 64 C.A.4th 597, 605, 75 C.R.2d 334 [applying Gene R. Smith to voluntary bankruptcy proceeding]; Saks v. Parilla, Hubbard & Militzok (1998) 67 C.A.4th 565, 572, 79 C.R.2d 120 [following Gene R. Smith and Pauletto]; Ross v. Universal Studios Credit Union (2002) 95 C.A.4th 537, 539, 115 C.R.2d 712 [following Pauletto]; Choy v. Redland Ins. Co. (2002) 103 C.A.4th 789, 798, 127 C.R.2d 94 [following Gene R. Smith, Pauletto, and Saks; third party's action against insurer for misuse of bankruptcy process by causing insured to declare bankruptcy was preempted by federal law].)

The court distinguished Gene R. Smith, Pauletto, Saks, and Ross in Satten v. Webb (2002) 99 C.A.4th 365, 121 C.R.2d 234, holding that the trial court erred in sustaining a demurrer to a malicious prosecution action based on federal preemption. The underlying common law fraud action was removed to bankruptcy court because the bankruptcy trustee's administration of the estate was also challenged, and that action was resolved on state law grounds. State court jurisdiction here would not interfere with the uniformity of the application of bankruptcy law or the bankruptcy court's control over the proceedings. (99 C.A.4th 377, 386.)

ee. Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

[§ 14] Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §406 et seq.) has been held to preempt state actions based on a wide range of claims. For example, in Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Dedeaux (1987) 481 U.S. 41, 107 S.Ct. 1549, 1553, 1558, 95 L.Ed.2d 39, 48, 54, the court held that ERISA preempted state common law actions based on improper processing of claims for disability insurance benefits. In Commercial Life Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 47 C.3d 473, 475, 484, 253 C.R. 682, 764 P.2d 1059, the court held that ERISA preempted an action under Ins.C. 790.03(h) for bad faith rejection of a claim arising from an employee benefit plan. (See Faria v. Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1129, 1134, 265 C.R. 309 [Pilot Life and Commercial Life are fully retroactive]; 21 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1343 [Blind Faith Conquers Bad Faith; criticism of Pilot Life]; 24 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 255 [Unhealthy Federalism: Barriers to Increasing Health Care Access for the Uninsured].)

Several cases have held that ERISA preempts state law claims for wrongful termination. (See Johnson v. Trans World Airlines (1983) 149 C.A.3d 518, 524, 196 C.R. 896 [federal proscription against discharge of employee for purpose of depriving him of retirement benefits preempts common law action for damages based on same wrongful conduct]; Lembo v. Texaco (1987) 194 C.A.3d 531, 537, 239 C.R. 596 [ERISA preempts employees' state action based on claim that employer fraudulently induced employees to retire to deprive them of pension benefits]; Ingersoll-Rand Co. v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 111 S.Ct. 478, 112 L.Ed.2d 474 [ERISA preempted employee's state law claim that he was wrongfully discharged to prevent his attainment of benefits under pension plan]; AT&T Communications v. Superior Court (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1673, 1681, 26 C.R.2d 802 [ERISA preempted employee's state law claim that he was wrongfully terminated for not returning from illness when medically cleared by employer's physicians, but not by his personal physician].)

FMC Corp. v. Holliday (1990) 498 U.S. 52, 111 S.Ct. 403, 112 L.Ed.2d 356 [Pennsylvania law precluding employee welfare benefit plans from exercising subrogation rights on a claimant's tort recovery].

Carpenters Southern Calif. Administrative Corp. v. El Capitan Dev. Co. (1991) 53 C.3d 1041, 282 C.R. 277, 811 P.2d 296 [California mechanic's lien enforcement statute as it related to employee benefit plans]. (See 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 818.)

Bruenn v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (1987) 197 C.A.3d 1000, 1003 et seq., 243 C.R. 262 [ERISA preempts action, under Ins.C. 790.03 (unfair insurance business practices), by employee against administrator of plan even though administrator also provided excess insurance coverage, where employee's claim was below amount that would have made administrator liable as insurer].

District of Columbia v. Greater Washington Bd. of Trade (1992) 506 U.S. 125, 113 S.Ct. 580, 121 L.Ed.2d 513 [District of Columbia requirement of health insurance coverage for employees eligible for workers' compensation benefits];

Marshall v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. (1992) 2 C.4th 1045, 1051, 10 C.R.2d 72, 832 P.2d 573 [citing Pilot Life and Commercial Life; employer's purchase of group health insurance policy established "employee benefit plan" within meaning of ERISA, despite employer's minimal involvement in administration of plan; thus, action for damages under state law for denial of benefits was preempted].

Hollingshead v. Matsen (1995) 34 C.A.4th 525, 533, 539, 40 C.R.2d 603 [multiple employer group health insurance plan was employee benefit plan within meaning of ERISA, even though plan was administered by third party; hence, state law claims against insurer for failure to pay benefits were preempted by ERISA].

Operating Engineers Pension Trust v. Insurance Co. of the West (1995) 35 C.A.4th 59, 63, 66, 42 C.R.2d 1 [action by third-party beneficiaries seeking to collect on payment and performance bonds to recover unpaid fringe benefits owed by employer was preempted by ERISA; review of California state remedies preempted by ERISA].

Employee apprenticeship programs, including the standards under which these programs operate, are employee welfare benefit plans within the scope of ERISA's general preemption clause. However, because the federal Fitzgerald Act (29 U.S.C., §50) grants states the general authority to approve or disapprove apprenticeship programs, they are saved from preemption under ERISA's general savings clause. (Southern Calif. Chapter of Associated Builders & Contractors, Joint Apprenticeship Committee v. California Apprenticeship Council (1992) 4 C.4th 422, 436, 450, 14 C.R.2d 491, 841 P.2d 1011 [concluding that California regulation prohibiting programs with adverse effect on prevailing conditions would impair Fitzgerald Act and thus was preempted by ERISA]; 21 *Pepperdine L. The cases apply the supremacy doctrine to conflicts between competing federal and state policies in many other areas of substantive law. Examples are:

(1) Agriculture. See Michigan Canners & Freezers Assn. v. Agricultural Marketing & Bargaining Bd. (1984) 467 U.S. 461, 104 S.Ct. 2518, 2528, 81 L.Ed.2d 399, 411, 412 [state act conferring exclusive bargaining authority on agricultural cooperatives is preempted by provision of Federal Agricultural Fair Practices Act prohibiting coercion of producers in marketing of products].

(2) Criminal Law. In *Pennsylvania v. The court followed the test developed in the commerce cases (infra, §§1307, 1308). (See Henry v. Mississippi (1965) 379 U.S. 443, 85 S.Ct. 564, 567, 13 L.Ed.2d 408, 412 [state procedural rule cannot be invoked mechanically to defeat federal constitutional right]; *Burbank v. (6) Fishing Restrictions in Territorial Waters. See Douglas v. Miller (1988) 486 U.S. 174, 108 S.Ct. 1704, 100 L.Ed.2d 158, the issue was whether the Supremacy Clause bars a state "from subjecting a private contractor operating a federally owned nuclear production facility to a state-law workers' compensation provision that provides an increased award for injuries resulting from an employer's violation of a state safety regulation." The court recognized, as a general rule, that "a federally owned facility performing a federal function is shielded from direct state regulation, even though the federal function is carried out by a private contractor, unless Congress clearly authorizes such regulation." Without deciding whether the additional-award provision was "sufficiently akin to direct regulation" to be potentially barred by the Supremacy Clause, the court found that application of the provision to workers at the facility was authorized by 40 U.S.C., §290 (now 40 U.S.C., §3172), which empowers states to apply their workers' compensation laws to federal premises "in the same way and to the same extent as if said premises were under the exclusive jurisdiction of the State." I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

b. When State Law Will Be Upheld.

1. General Principles.

[§ 20] General Principles.

Where Congress has not preempted the entire field, a state law will be upheld if it does not conflict with, or is authorized by, the federal statute. (See 1 Rotunda, §12.1 et seq.; 1 Tribe, §6-28 et seq.; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §241 et seq.) Many cases have upheld state statutes against claims of federal preemption; the cases discussed below and in subsequent sections (see infra, §21 et seq.) illustrate the analysis.

In DeCanas v. Bica (1976) 424 U.S. 351, 96 S.Ct. 933, 47 L.Ed.2d 43, the United States Supreme Court upheld former Lab.C. 2805, which made it a crime to knowingly employ an illegal alien if the employment would have an adverse effect on lawful resident workers. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §337.)

(a) Although regulation of immigration is exclusively a federal power (see infra, §183), the fact that aliens are the subject of a state statute does not render it a regulation of immigration, i.e., a determination of who should be admitted and the conditions under which a legal entrant may remain. "In this case, California has sought to strengthen its economy by adopting federal standards in imposing criminal sanctions against state employers who knowingly employ aliens who have no federal right to employment within the country; even if such local regulation has some purely speculative and indirect impact on immigration, it does not thereby become a constitutionally proscribed regulation of immigration that Congress itself would be powerless to authorize or approve." (96 S.Ct. 936, 47 L.Ed.2d 49.)

(b) The first rule of federal preemption--that the nature of the regulated subject matter permits no other conclusion--does not apply here. The California statute is a proper exercise of police power to protect its fiscal interests and lawfully resident labor force; and it has not been demonstrated that either the wording or legislative history of the federal Immigration and Nationality Act indicates a congressional intention to preclude this state regulation of employment. (96 S.Ct. 937, 47 L.Ed.2d 49.) The second rule--that Congress has unmistakably so ordained--is likewise inapplicable. The provisions of the statute indicate a congressional intention that states may, consistently with federal law, regulate the employment of illegal aliens. (96 S.Ct. 939, 47 L.Ed.2d 52.)

(c) Hines v. Davidowitz (1941) 312 U.S. 52, 61 S.Ct. 399, 85 L.Ed. 581, supra, §16, and Pennsylvania v. Nelson (1956) 350 U.S. 497, 76 S.Ct. 477, 100 L.Ed. 640, supra, §19, are distinguishable. Both of these cases dealt with federal statutes in the specific field that the states were attempting to regulate; in neither was there affirmative evidence that Congress sanctioned concurrent state legislation on the subject covered; and both imposed burdens on aliens lawfully within the country, in conflict with various federal laws. (96 S.Ct. 940, 47 L.Ed.2d 53.) (See 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 295; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 909; 7 Golden Gate L. Rev. 291; 14 San Diego L. Rev. 282; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 198, 751.)

In Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 C.3d 540, 208 C.R. 874, 691 P.2d 630, a wrongful death action arising out of an airplane crash, plaintiffs sought recovery on a theory of negligence per se, based on defendant's failure to comply with safety regulations of the FAA, and the trial judge gave a negligence per se instruction. Defendant, on appeal from the judgment against it, contended that determinative effect should have been given to the FAA's certification of the plane's design as complying with applicable safety regulations, and that the instruction permitted intrusion into a field preempted by federal law. The court rejected the preemption claim and affirmed the judgment on the verdict.

(a) There is no inconsistency in the federal government entirely occupying a regulated field and the state simultaneously granting damages for violation of regulations. (37 C.3d 548, 549, citing Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp. (1984) 464 U.S. 238, 104 S.Ct. 615, 78 L.Ed.2d 443, infra, §21.) The Federal Aviation Act expressly declares that its provisions are not intended to abridge remedies that a party may have under state law, and the doctrine of negligence per se is one of those remedies. (37 C.3d 549.)

(b) There is no irreconcilable conflict between federal and state standards. Plaintiffs do not challenge the power of the FAA to adopt safety regulations or to certify aircraft as complying, and they do not seek to revoke the certification of the airplane; and the jury could make the same determination of defective design if the airplane complied with every regulation. Thus, the negligence per se instruction affects only the jury's reason for finding a design defect. (37 C.3d 550.)

(c) State law does not pose an obstacle to the federal regulatory scheme; if anything, the converse is true: An inquiry in a state court into whether the manufacturer has in fact complied with regulations would assist the FAA in policing a manufacturer's compliance. (37 C.3d 550.)

See Fonseca v. Fong (2008) 167 C.A.4th 922, 936, 941, 84 C.R.3d 567 [applying test of De Canas v. Bica (1976) 424 U.S. 351, 96 S.Ct. 933, 47 L.Ed.2d 43, text, p. 96; federal immigration law did not preempt state statute requiring state and local law enforcement agencies to notify federal authorities when they suspect that person arrested for one of specific drug offenses is not U.S. citizen; statute did not require arresting agencies to independently determine whether arrestee was U.S. citizen or whether arrestee was lawfully in U.S.]; 2 Rotunda 4th, §12.1 et seq.

2. Where No Conflict Exists.

aa. United States Supreme Court.

[§ 21] United States Supreme Court.

A state law that does not frustrate or impede the operation of the federal law normally may apply in the same area. Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp. (1984) 464 U.S. 238, 104 S.Ct. 615, 78 L.Ed.2d 443, illustrates the approach. A state-authorized award of punitive damages, in an action to recover for contamination injuries caused by the escape of plutonium from a nuclear facility, was held not preempted by federal law. Although federal statutes preempt state regulation of the safety aspects of nuclear energy, an award of punitive damages for injuries caused by nuclear hazards neither conflicts with nor frustrates the federal scheme. (104 S.Ct. 625, 626, 78 L.Ed.2d 457, 458.) (See Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Dev. Com. (1983) 461 U.S. 190, 103 S.Ct. 1713, 75 L.Ed.2d 752, infra, §24 [state regulation of economic aspects of nuclear power is not preempted by federal regulation of safety aspects]; *English v. Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

b. When State Law Will Be Upheld.

2. Where No Conflict Exists.

bb. California Supreme Court.

[§ 22] California Supreme Court.

In O'Reilly v. Board of Med. Examiners (1967) 66 C.2d 381, 387, 58 C.R. 7, 426 P.2d 167, a federal statute established an exchange-visitor program for students, teachers, and persons of special skill. Held, while Congress could have made this statute supersede state regulation of the medical profession, it did not; consequently petitioner, a sponsor of foreign doctors, was properly found guilty of violating former B. & P.C. 2392 (now B. & P.C. 2264), prohibiting employment of an unlicensed practitioner.

Perdue v. Crocker Nat. Bank (1985) 38 C.3d 913, 216 C.R. 345, 702 P.2d 503, rejected the claim that California law, as applied to prohibit national banks from exacting unreasonable charges for processing checks without sufficient funds (see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §339), is preempted by federal law: "In sum, the controlling doctrines of California law do not facially conflict with any federal statute or regulation. Neither does it appear from the pleading that the application of these doctrines to national bank contracts will impair the efficiency or viability of national banks, or frustrate the purpose of legislation regulating (or deregulating) those banks. Although conceivably information not contained in the pleadings might lead to a different conclusion, such information is not before us in reviewing a judgment upon demurrer. We cannot presume, without evidence, that prohibiting a national bank from setting unreasonable prices or enforcing an unconscionable contract will render that bank less efficient, less competitive or less able to fulfill its function in a national banking system." (38 C.3d 943.)

Other illustrative cases include the following:

People v. Conklin (1974) 12 C.3d 259, 269, 114 C.R. 241, 522 P.2d 1049 [P.C. 631, prohibiting wiretapping by persons other than law enforcement officers, unless consent is given, is not preempted by federal legislation].

Greater Westchester Homeowners Assn. v. Los Angeles (1979) 26 C.3d 86, 96, 100, 160 C.R. 733, 603 P.2d 1329 [claims for personal injuries caused by noise from aircraft using city-owned airport is not preempted by federal control of aircraft flight; "proprietor exception" governs]. (See 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 533.)

Younger v. Jensen (1980) 26 C.3d 397, 404, 161 C.R. 905, 605 P.2d 813 [state Attorney General's investigation of antitrust violations affecting marketing in California of Alaska natural gas is not preempted by federal statutes].

People v. Mendocino (1984) 36 C.3d 476, 493, 204 C.R. 897, 683 P.2d 1150 [county regulation prohibiting aerial application of phenoxy herbicides is not preempted by Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act].

Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 C.3d 1082, 1086, 1103, 282 C.R. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 [National Bank Act, granting board of directors of bank power to discharge bank officers "at pleasure," does not preempt state action for wrongful discharge unless board itself either dismissed officer or approved or ratified discharge]. (See 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 822.)

Mangini v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (1994) 7 C.4th 1057, 1060, 1065, 31 C.R.2d 358, 875 P.2d 73 [Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, as amended by Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act, does not preempt state action for unfair competition based on advertising campaign seeking to induce minors to smoke and illegally to purchase cigarettes].

Rosenthal v. Great Western Financial Sec. Corp. (1996) 14 C.4th 394, 409, 58 C.R.2d 875, 926 P.2d 1061, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §488A [procedural provisions of federal Arbitration Act are not binding on state courts if state procedures serve to further, rather than defeat, federal objectives].

Tidewater Marine Western v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 C.4th 557, 566, 59 C.R.2d 186, 927 P.2d 296 [federal law does not preempt state regulation of seamen's overtime pay].

Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 C.4th 147, 172, 183, 91 C.R.2d 659, 990 P.2d 539, supra, §12 [no plurality opinion on preemption of FEHA by National Bank Act provision permitting discharge of bank officers "at pleasure"].

McCall v. PacifiCare of Calif. (2001) 25 C.4th 412, 424, 425, 106 C.R.2d 271, 21 P.3d 1189 [Medicare Act does not preempt state tort law remedies that are "collateral to, and not inextricably intertwined with, Medicare benefit claims"].

Bronco Wine Co. v. Jolly (2004) 33 C.4th 943, 989, 17 C.R.3d 180, 95 P.3d 422 [state wine labeling statute that prevents use of "Napa," or other federally recognized viticultural area in Napa County, in brand name or on label unless 75% of grapes used in wine are from Napa County is not preempted by Federal Alcohol Administration Act].

LaPlante v. Wellcraft Marine Corp. (2001) 94 C.A.4th 282, 294, 114 C.R.2d 196 [Federal Boat Safety Act did not preempt claims for negligence, strict liability, and breach of warranty arising from personal injuries suffered in boating accident, and claims based on manufacturer's failure to provide and maintain necessary safety devices].

Sun Valley Packing v. Consep (2001) 94 C.A.4th 315, 322, 114 C.R.2d 237 [Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act did not preempt state law claims for breach of warranty and negligence against manufacturer of pesticide based on manufacturer's voluntary guarantee that product was fit for particular purpose].

Consumer Justice Center v. Olympian Labs (2002) 99 C.A.4th 1056, 1058, 121 C.R.2d 749 [federal law did not preempt false advertising action against dietary supplements manufacturer].

Personal Watercraft Coalition v. Marin County Bd. of Supervisors (2002) 100 C.A.4th 129, 153, 154, 122 C.R.2d 425 [Federal Boat Safety Act and Federal Clean Air Act did not preempt county ordinance banning use of personal watercraft within its territorial waters].

Gibson v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (2002) 103 C.A.4th 1291, 1299, 128 C.R.2d 19 [federal regulations concerning operation of savings associations did not preempt claim for restitution under Unfair Competition Law for overcharging borrowers for replacement insurance].

Hussey-Head v. World Savings & Loan Assn. (2003) 111 C.A.4th 773, 782, 4 C.R.3d 171 [following Gibson, supra; lender that voluntarily provided credit agencies with credit information about borrowers was subject to California law requiring fair and accurate reporting; law only comes into play after loan is made, and it does not affect manner in which lender services or maintains loan].

Zolezzi v. PacifiCare of Calif. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 573, 585, 129 C.R.2d 526 [following McCall v. PacifiCare of Calif. (2001) 25 C.4th 412, 106 C.R.2d 271, 21 P.3d 539; in circumstances of this case, Medicare Act did not preempt arbitration disclosure provisions of Health & Saf.C. 1363.1, which do not affect coverage determinations].

Aquino v. Asiana Airlines (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1272, 1284, 130 C.R.2d 223 [Airline Deregulation Act does not preempt state law personal injury and discrimination actions that only have peripheral effect on deregulation].

Whiteley v. Philip Morris (2004) 117 C.A.4th 635, 666, 11 C.R.3d 807, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §812 [fraud claims against tobacco companies based on false statements and affirmative misrepresentations were not preempted by Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, which specifically preempts state laws relating to advertising or promotion].

The following Court of Appeal cases found no federal preemption:

Farmers Bros. Coffee v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (2005) 133 C.A.4th 533, 539, 35 C.R.3d 23 [Immigration Reform Control Act does not preempt state law providing that immigration status is irrelevant to issue of liability under state labor and employment laws, which include Workers' Compensation Act].

Smith v. Wells Fargo Bank (2005) 135 C.A.4th 1463, 1482, 38 C.R.3d 653 [preemption regulations of federal Office of Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) did not preempt plaintiff's state unfair competition action against bank alleging violations of OCC's disclosure regulations].

Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Public Util. Com. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 1085, 1100, 45 C.R.3d 485 [National Labor Relations Act did not preempt PUC order requiring payment of prevailing wages on energy utility construction projects].

People v. Union Pac. R. Co. (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1228, 1253, 1257, 1260, 47 C.R.3d 92 [federal Hazardous Materials Transportation Authorization Act does not preempt state laws requiring verbal notification of spills of hazardous substances or remedial claims arising from spills; although civil penalties for spills are generally preempted, civil penalty for failure to give verbal notification is not].

McKell v. Washington Mut. (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1457, 1486, 49 C.R.3d 227, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, Supp., §117 [neither federal Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act nor Home Owners' Loan Act preempted action against lender using state Unfair Competition Law to enforce federal law].

Hood v. Santa Barbara Bank & Trust (2006) 143 C.A.4th 526, 541, 49 C.R.3d 369 [federal visitorial powers, deposit-taking, and lending regulations of Office of Comptroller of the Currency did not preempt class action under state consumer protection laws challenging bank's practice of seizing loan applicants' tax refunds, without valid contract, proper notice, or knowing consent, for collection purposes to repay tax refund anticipation loans made by other lenders].

Reyes v. Val Elk, Ltd. (2007) 148 C.A.4th 604, 616, 56 C.R.3d 68, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, Supp., §391 [Immigration Reform and Control Act did not preempt state prevailing wage law].

Ramanathan v. Bank of America (2007) 155 C.A.4th 1017, 1028, 66 C.R.3d 471 [state employment discrimination claims were not preempted by section of National Bank Act providing that officers serve at pleasure of bank; defendant failed to show that plaintiff, who had title of vice-president, was vested with any of duties or responsibilities normally associated with position].

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

b. When State Law Will Be Upheld.

3. Federal Authorization.

[§ 24] Federal Authorization.

When Congress expressly recognizes the propriety of state regulation, application of state law turns solely on the extent to which the state policy conflicts with federal policy. (See Askew v. American Waterways Operators (1973) 411 U.S. 325, 93 S.Ct. 1590, 36 L.Ed.2d 280 [federal statute establishing strict federal liability for oil spillage but expressly authorizing local state regulation that does not conflict with federal policy]; California Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Guerra (1987) 479 U.S. 272, 107 S.Ct. 683, 690, 93 L.Ed.2d 613, 627 [narrow scope of preemption available under Pregnancy Discrimination Act reflects importance Congress attached to state antidiscrimination laws in achieving Title VII's goal of equal employment opportunity]; 2 Rotunda, §12.6; 1 Tribe, §6-35.) No impermissible conflict was found in the following areas:

(1) Nuclear Power Plants. The Atomic Energy Act provides that it shall not affect the state or local power to regulate activities for purposes other than protection against radiation hazards. (42 U.S.C., §2021(k).) Accordingly, in Northern Calif. Assn. to Preserve Bodega Head & Harbor v. Public Util. Com. (1964) 61 C.2d 126, 133, 37 C.R. 432, 390 P.2d 200, the court held that the California Public Utilities Commission could inquire into the safety of the location of an atomic reactor near an earthquake fault zone.

In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Dev. Com. (1983) 461 U.S. 190, 103 S.Ct. 1713, 1718, 75 L.Ed.2d 752, 773, 777, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the California statute (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §910), conditioning construction of nuclear power plants on findings that adequate storage facilities and means of waste disposal are available, is an economic rather than a safety regulation and hence is not preempted by the federal act. (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 238.)

(2) Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA). Language in RESPA and Regulation X (regulating settlement procedures involving federal loans) declaring that no provision of state law is to be deemed "inconsistent" for purposes of preemption if the state law gives greater protection to the consumer means that Congress "intended that consumers should receive maximum protection not only in the form of federal legislation but also in the form of state laws" as long as the state laws do not interfere with the operation of federal law and it is possible to comply with both. (Washington Mut. Bank v. Superior Court (1999) 75 C.A.4th 773, 785, 787, 89 C.R.2d 560 [permitting borrowers to sue lender for unlawful disclosures or omissions regarding its real estate settlement procedures will not interfere with federal law].)

(3) Securities Exchange Act. Except as modified by the Securities Uniform Standards Act of 1998, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C., §78bb(a)) supplements but does not displace state regulations and remedies. (Diamond Multimedia Systems v. Superior Court (1999) 19 C.4th 1036, 1057, 80 C.R.2d 828, 968 P.2d 539, 9 Summary (10th), Corporations, §443; Roskind v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter & Co. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 345, 352, 95 C.R.2d 258 [trial court erred in finding preemption in action under California's unfair competition law claiming that brokerage firm violated duty to its customers by "trading ahead" for its own benefit rather than executing customers' orders in timely manner].)

(4) State Licensed Pilot. "In this case of apparent first impression, we hold that state authorities can suspend the state pilot license of a ship's pilot, even though the grounds for his suspension occurred when he was acting under the authority of his federal pilot license--at the time he crashed a loaded oil tanker into a terminal. Action by state authorities against the pilot's state license does not offend principles of federal-state comity, where the state does not purport to suspend or otherwise impair the pilot's federal license." (Hochstetler v. Board of Pilot Commrs. (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1659, 1661, 8 C.R.2d 403.)

(5) Telecommunications. Although the Federal Communications Act (47 U.S.C., §332) preempts state regulation of cellular telephone rates, it specifically allows states to regulate "the other terms and conditions" of cellular services, including "customer billing information" and "other consumer protection matters." (Ball v. GTE Mobilnet of Calif. (2000) 81 C.A.4th 529, 543, 96 C.R.2d 801; see Spielholz v. Superior Court (2001) 86 C.A.4th 1366, 1373, 104 C.R.2d 197 [Federal Communications Act does not preempt state action for monetary relief against wireless phone company based on claim for false advertising].)

See 2 Rotunda 4th, §12.6.(3a) (New) National Securities Markets Improvement Act. The savings provision of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act permits a state to retain jurisdiction to investigate and bring enforcement actions for "fraud and deceit, or unlawful conduct by a broker or dealer, in connection with securities or securities transactions." (Capital Research & Management Co. v. Brown (2007) 147 C.A.4th 58, 66, 53 C.R.3d 770 [Act did not preempt state action against investment advisor and wholesale distributor for making inaccurate or inadequate representations to purchasers].)(5) Telecommunications. See Pacific Bell Wireless, LLC v. Public Util. Com. (2006) 140 C.A.4th 718, 734, 44 C.R.3d 733 [Federal Communications Act did not preempt PUC order imposing penalties on wireless company for charging early termination fee with no grace period and making misrepresentations regarding service].

(6) (New) Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. The Act allows states to adopt statutes that are identical to federal law. These state laws may be enforced by private parties. (Farm Raised Salmon Cases (2008) 42 C.4th 1077, 1090, 1095, 72 C.R.3d 112, 175 P.3d 1170 [Act did not preempt private state action for deceptive marketing of food products based on failure to disclose that farmed salmon contained color additives].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

1. Federal Supremacy.

c. State Court Must Apply Federal Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 25

[§ 25] State Court Must Apply Federal Law.

The Full Faith and Credit Clause (infra, §31) does not compel a state court to apply a federal statute, but the Supremacy Clause has that effect. (Miller v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1943) 22 C.2d 818, 841, 851, 142 P.2d 297 [by assuming jurisdiction of consumer action pursuant to federal Emergency Price Control Act, state court is not entertaining action created by totally unrelated sovereign, but is merely yielding to superior exercise of lawful right granted Congress by U.S. Constitution].) (On lack of federal power to require state officials to administer federal programs, see supra, §6.)

A far-reaching effect was given to this clause, compelling a state court to enforce a federal statute irrespective of objections of local policy, in Testa v. Katt (1947) 330 U.S. 386, 67 S.Ct. 810, 91 L.Ed. 967. K sold an automobile to T at a price above that imposed by the Emergency Price Control Act. T filed suit in a Rhode Island court, seeking treble damages under a provision of the Act that gave concurrent jurisdiction to federal and state courts. The Rhode Island court allowed recovery only of the actual amount of the overcharge. Held, even if the law was penal in the international sense, so that the lower court would be free to refuse to enforce a similar statute of a "foreign" jurisdiction or sister state, this was not a proper basis for refusal to enforce the federal statute. "It cannot be assumed, the supremacy clause considered, that the responsibilities of a state to enforce the laws of a sister state are identical with its responsibilities to enforce federal laws." (67 S.Ct. 812, 91 L.Ed. 970.)

The most common examples of cases in which California courts are compelled to enforce federal law are suits under the Federal Employers Liability Act (45 U.S.C., §51) and the Jones Act (46 U.S.C. Appx., §688). (See 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §§118 et seq., 131 et seq.)

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

2. Interference With Governmental Functions.

[§ 26] Interference With Governmental Functions.

A state government cannot interfere with the federal Government and its agencies, instrumentalities, or operations, and the federal Government is under a similar limitation. This principle finds its chief application in taxation cases. (See United States v. Allegheny County, PA. (1944) 322 U.S. 174, 64 S.Ct. 908, 88 L.Ed. 1209; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 700.) But it has some application in other fields.

In First Nat. Bank of San Jose v. California (1923) 262 U.S. 366, 43 S.Ct. 602, 67 L.Ed. 1030, a California statute providing for escheat of inactive bank deposits was held invalid because of harsh provisions deemed a deterrent to depositors dealing with national banks. (Cf. Anderson Nat. Bank v. Lueckett (1944) 321 U.S. 233, 64 S.Ct. 599, 607, 88 L.Ed. 692, 705, where a more reasonable state statute was upheld.)

Although a federal postal driver cannot be required to obtain a state driver's license as a prerequisite to using the highways (see Johnson v. Maryland (1920) 254 U.S. 51, 41 S.Ct. 16, 65 L.Ed. 126), the worker may be convicted of a violation of local traffic laws. (People v. Don Carlos (1941) 47 C.A.2d Supp. 863, 867, 117 P.2d 748; see 72 Harv. L. Rev. 161; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 247.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

B. Relations Between States and Federal Government.

3. Enclave: Federal Territory Within State.

a. Federal Jurisdiction.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 27

[§ 27] Federal Jurisdiction.

The federal Government may acquire territory within a state by purchase with consent of the state (U.S. Const., Art. I, §8), or by cession by the state. (See 77 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), United States §35 et seq.) (On retrocession, see infra, §29.)

The earlier cases held that the state lost jurisdiction over these areas. (See Standard Oil Co. v. California (1934) 291 U.S. 242, 54 S.Ct. 381, 78 L.Ed. 775 [state cannot tax transaction taking place on military reservation]; Pacific Coast Dairy v. Department of Agriculture of Calif. (1943) 318 U.S. 285, 63 S.Ct. 628, 630, 87 L.Ed. 761, 766 [California Milk Control Act cannot be applied to sales]; 8 So. Cal. L. Rev. 61; cf. Collins v. Yosemite Park & Curry Co. (1938) 304 U.S. 518, 58 S.Ct. 1009, 1016, 82 L.Ed. 1502, 1512 [state cannot regulate sale of liquor licenses, but can levy excise tax].)

A state may, however, reserve jurisdiction over purely local matters that do not interfere with the exercise of federal governmental functions. (See infra, §28.)

Federal jurisdiction was held exclusive in Humble Pipe Line Co. v. Waggonner (1964) 376 U.S. 369, 84 S.Ct. 857, 11 L.Ed.2d 782, where the U.S., by donations from the state, acquired the fee title to Louisiana land for use as a military base. The Government then made an oil and gas lease to petitioner. Louisiana sought to tax the drilling equipment and pipe lines. Held, the tax was invalid; the federal legislative power is exclusive, whether the land is acquired by purchase for consideration or by cession. S.R.A. v. Minnesota (1946) 327 U.S. 558, 66 S.Ct. 749, 90 L.Ed. 851, infra, §29, is distinguishable. There the land was sold, while here, the Government continued to hold it subject to the lease for exploitation of oil. And the lease requirement that the company pay all lawful taxes was merely a standard precaution, which could not alone manifest a purpose of the Government to abandon exclusive jurisdiction over a military enclave.

In Paul v. United States (1963) 371 U.S. 245, 83 S.Ct. 426, 9 L.Ed.2d 292, California sought to apply its minimum wholesale price regulations to milk sold at three military installations in this state. As to sales to the U.S., the federal statutory procurement policy, requiring competitive bidding, clearly controlled. (83 S.Ct. 431, 432, 9 L.Ed.2d 298.) As to milk bought with nonappropriated funds for use in military clubs and for resale at post exchanges, the question was whether Congress had exclusive jurisdiction over these enclaves, and this called for consideration of the conditions existing at the time of their purchases from California: (a) If the California price-control laws were not in effect at that time, the state could not enforce them, for only the state law existing at the time of federal acquisition remained enforceable. (b) If, however, the basic milk control law was in effect at that time, the state regulations--though differing in some respects--still applied. The record being uncertain on this issue, the case was remanded for its determination. (83 S.Ct. 440, 9 L.Ed.2d 307.)

3. Enclave: Federal Territory Within State.

b. Reserved State Jurisdiction.

[§ 28] Reserved State Jurisdiction.

A state, in consenting to federal purchase, or in ceding territory, may reserve jurisdiction for local purposes that involve no interference with governmental functions. (James v. Dravo Contracting Co. (1937) 302 U.S. 134, 58 S.Ct. 208, 213, 82 L.Ed. 155, 162 [retention of power to tax local activities]; Wilson v. Cook (1946) 327 U.S. 474, 66 S.Ct. 663, 670, 90 L.Ed. 793, 802; see Coso Energy Developers v. Inyo (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1512, 1523, 19 C.R.3d 669 [county properly taxed plaintiff's geothermal energy operations located on land within naval weapons center, which land was ceded to U.S. by Mexico pursuant to treaty in 1848; 1891 statute ceding exclusive jurisdiction to U.S. over land ceded by California did not apply to land ceded to U.S. by Mexico]; 77 Am.Jur.2d (1997 ed.), United States §37.)

In California, Govt.C. 126 cedes concurrent criminal jurisdiction to the United States, within land held by the U.S. for specified purposes, with the following conditions: (1) The U.S. must request the cession in writing. (Govt.C. 126(c).) (2) The state Lands Commission must find that the cession is in the interest of the state and must specify the purposes of the cession in its order. (Govt.C. 126(d).) (3) The state reserves jurisdiction over water and its use (Govt.C. 126(g)) and over all mineral deposits, including oil and gas (Govt.C. 126(h).)

There is also a tendency, both by congressional legislation and judicial decision, to recognize the continued effect of much state civil and criminal authority not expressly abrogated, in order that these areas not be left without a developed legal system. (See James Stewart & Co. v. Sadrakula (1940) 309 U.S. 94, 60 S.Ct. 431, 84 L.Ed. 596 [New York Labor Law safety rule was effective in tort action for death based on its violation, in absence of contrary federal legislation]; People v. Brown (1945) 69 C.A.2d 602, 605, 159 P.2d 686 [California had jurisdiction over crime committed in governmental military reservation]; Arapajolu v. McMenamin (1952) 113 C.A.2d 824, 249 P.2d 318 [residence in California military reservation was California residence for voting purposes]; In re Terry Y. (1980) 101 C.A.3d 178, 181, 161 C.R. 452 [juvenile court had jurisdiction to declare child dependent where child and parents were residents of federal military installation]; People v. Crusilla (1999) 77 C.A.4th 141, 150, 91 C.R.2d 415 [presumption of state jurisdiction applies to drunk driving offense committed at federal border crossing facility]; 49 Cal. L. Rev. 550 [rights of residents of enclave to state residency benefits].) (On federal Assimilative Crimes Act, 18 U.S.C., §13, allowing state criminal laws to operate, see United States v. Sharpnack (1958) 355 U.S. 286, 78 S.Ct. 291, 2 L.Ed.2d 282; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 685.)

A person working in a federal enclave may sue under (1) federal law, (2) any California law not in conflict with federal law that existed when the area became a federal enclave, and (3) subsequently enacted state law to the extent authorized by Congress. (Taylor v. Lockheed Martin Corp. (2000) 78 C.A.4th 472, 482, 484, 92 C.R.2d 873, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Proceedings Without Trial, Supp., §186 [employee could pursue "whistle-blower" claim against private contractor under Lab.C. 6310 because federal OSHA did not claim exclusive jurisdiction over worker safety issues on military base].)

c. Retrocession.

[§ 29] Retrocession.

Notwithstanding unrestricted cession of land by a state to the federal Government, federal sovereignty and jurisdiction may be relinquished to the state (1) by "express retrocession" to the state, or (2) perhaps by sale and transfer of the land by the federal Government to private persons.

In S.R.A. v. Minnesota (1946) 327 U.S. 558, 66 S.Ct. 749, 753, 90 L.Ed. 851, 857, the majority opinion, in a strong dictum on the second point, declared that "it would seem that the sovereignty of the United States would end with the reason for its existence and the disposition of the property." (See 20 So. Cal. L. Rev. 212.) A lease of mineral rights, however, does not constitute a retrocession. (Humble Pipe Line Co. v. Waggonner (1964) 376 U.S. 369, 84 S.Ct. 857, 11 L.Ed.2d 782, supra, §27.)

The California statute expressly provides that the cession "continues only so long" as the land belongs to and is held by the U.S. for the purpose specified. (Govt.C. 126(e).)

4. Full Faith and Credit to Judgments.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 30

[§ 30] Full Faith and Credit to Judgments.

(1) State Judgment in Federal Court. The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the U.S. Constitution requires recognition of judgments of state courts "in each state." (See infra, §31.) The provisions of the Federal Judicial Code, enacted pursuant to that clause, also impose the requirement on "every court within the United States." (28 U.S.C., §1738.) Hence, federal courts must accord full faith and credit to judgments of state courts. (See Davis v. Davis (1938) 305 U.S. 32, 59 S.Ct. 3, 83 L.Ed. 26; Huron Holding Corp. v. Lincoln Mine Operating Co. (1941) 312 U.S. 183, 61 S.Ct. 513, 517, 85 L.Ed. 725, 732.) (On state judgment binding in federal court action, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §297.)

(2) Federal Judgment in State Court. The Full Faith and Credit Clause does not expressly cover judgments of federal courts, but they are entitled to equal res judicata effect under the constitutional judicial power of the United States, the Necessary and Proper Clause, and the Supremacy Clause. (See Embry v. Palmer (1883) 107 U.S. 3, 2 S.Ct. 25, 27 L.Ed. 346, 348; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum (1900) 176 U.S. 640, 20 S.Ct. 506, 44 L.Ed. 619; *Stoll v. 1. Full Faith and Credit Clause.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 31

[§ 31] In General.

U.S. Const. Art. IV, §1, provides that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state." This is supplemented by a provision in the Federal Judicial Code that states: "Such Acts, records and judicial proceedings or copies thereof ... shall have the same full faith and credit in every court within the United States and its Territories and Possessions as they have by law or usage in the courts of such State, Territory or Possession from which they are taken." (28 U.S.C., §1738; see 2 Rotunda, §12.7; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §973 et seq.)

As to statutes, the purpose of the Clause is not to give the state law extraterritorial force, but to protect rights and enforce obligations created in one state when asserted or challenged in another, except where strong considerations of local policy are opposed. (See 28 Cal. L. Rev. 507; 3 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1; 12 Stanf. L. Rev. 653 [misconstruction of state law]; infra, §§33, 34.)

As to judgments, the Clause takes them out of the class of foreign judgments subject to reexamination, and establishes "throughout the federal system the salutary principle of the common law that a litigation once pursued to judgment shall be as conclusive of the rights of the parties in every other court as in that where the judgment was rendered." (Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Hunt (1943) 320 U.S. 430, 64 S.Ct. 208, 214, 88 L.Ed. 149, 155; see infra, §35 et seq.)

b. Choice of Law Questions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 32

[§ 32] Choice of Law Questions.

In Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hague (1981) 449 U.S. 302, 101 S.Ct. 633, 66 L.Ed.2d 521, H, plaintiff's husband, was killed in a collision with a car operated by an uninsured motorist. H had an insurance policy covering three automobiles owned by him, with uninsured motorist coverage limited to $ 15,000 for each automobile. Under Minnesota law, this coverage could be "stacked" to provide a total of $ 45,000; under Wisconsin law, it could not be stacked. Plaintiff sued the insurer in Minnesota and sought to apply the favorable law of that state. Defendant contended that Wisconsin law should apply because the insurance policy was delivered there, the accident occurred there, and all persons involved were residents of that state at the time of the accident. The Minnesota Supreme Court approved the application of Minnesota law on the basis of the state's contacts: decedent was employed there, defendant insurer did business there, and plaintiff became a resident prior to instituting the litigation. Held, affirmed. Four justices joined in an opinion making the following points:

(a) In deciding constitutional choice of law questions under either the Due Process Clause or the Full Faith and Credit Clause, the Court has traditionally examined the contacts of the state with the parties and the occurrence or transaction giving rise to the litigation. (101 S.Ct. 637, 66 L.Ed.2d 527.)

(b) Cases such as John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Yates (1936) 299 U.S. 178, 57 S.Ct. 129, 81 L.Ed. 106, hold that if a state has only insignificant contacts, application of its law is unconstitutional. (101 S.Ct. 638, 66 L.Ed.2d 528.) Cases such as Alaska Packers' Assn. v. Industrial Acc. Com. of Calif. (1934) 1 C.2d 250, 34 P.2d 716, affirmed Alaska Packers' Assn. v. Industrial Acc. Com. of Calif. (1935) 294 U.S. 532, 55 S.Ct. 518, 79 L.Ed. 1044, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §111, and Clay v. Sun Ins. Office, Ltd. (1964) 377 U.S. 179, 84 S.Ct. 1197, 1199, 12 L.Ed.2d 229, 232, infra, §34, sustain the choice of law where the contacts are significant. (101 S.Ct. 639, 640, 66 L.Ed.2d 529, 530.)

(c) The principal contacts with Minnesota (decedent working there and insurer doing business there) were significant; and although plaintiff's change of residence was not sufficient in itself, her subsequent appointment in Minnesota as personal representative of her late husband's estate was relevant. (101 S.Ct. 640, 66 L.Ed.2d 531.) "In sum, Minnesota had a significant aggregation of contacts with the parties and the occurrence, creating state interests, such that application of its law was neither arbitrary nor fundamentally unfair." (101 S.Ct. 644, 66 L.Ed.2d 535.)

Three justices dissented, arguing that the contacts were trivial and insufficient. (101 S.Ct. 650, 66 L.Ed.2d 543.) (See 18 Hastings Const. L. Q. 325 [Full Faith and Credit, Choice of Laws, and Extraterritorial Regulation of Corporate Transactions]; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 61 [State Autonomy in Choice of Law: A Suggested Approach].)

Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts (1985) 472 U.S. 797, 105 S.Ct. 2965, 86 L.Ed.2d 628, was a class action to recover interest on delayed royalty payments on gas leases. Although 99% of the leases and 97% of the class members had no apparent connection to Kansas other than the action, the Kansas Supreme Court approved application of Kansas law to every claim. Held, reversed.

(a) The Due Process Clause and the Full Faith and Credit Clause require the state, before applying its substantive law, to have significant contact or contacts to ensure that choice of its law is neither arbitrary nor fundamentally unfair. (105 S.Ct. 2978, 86 L.Ed.2d 646, quoting Allstate Ins. Co., supra.)

(b) Kansas properly asserted personal jurisdiction over the plaintiffs (see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §260), but assumption of jurisdiction does not supply the necessary contacts to resolve the distinct issue of choice of law. Because Kansas lacks interest in claims unrelated to that state, and because there are material substantive conflicts with the laws of other jurisdictions, "application of Kansas law to every claim in this case is sufficiently arbitrary and unfair as to exceed constitutional limits." (105 S.Ct. 2979, 86 L.Ed.2d 648.) (See 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1299.)

[§ 33] Right of Action.

(1) In General. The court of the forum must enforce a right of action arising under the statutes of another state unless some strong policy objection is present. However, this type of objection is not likely to be sustained, for a mere difference in laws does not justify rejection of rights founded on the law of another state. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §§361, 362.)

In Hughes v. Fetter (1951) 341 U.S. 609, 71 S.Ct. 980, 95 L.Ed. 1212, Wisconsin sought to prevent wrongful death suits based on the statutes of another state. Because it allowed domestic suits for wrongful death, it had no true policy against this type of action, and could not deny access to its courts for foreign causes of action. (See First Nat. Bank of Chicago v. United Air Lines (1952) 342 U.S. 396, 72 S.Ct. 421, 96 L.Ed. 441 [following Hughes]; *Luikart v. (2) Penal and Tax Statutes. The Full Faith and Credit Clause may yield, however, where the statutory obligation is considered penal. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §360.) And there is still no decisive departure from the old rule that foreign governmental claims, such as those for taxes, are not entitled to obligatory enforcement. c. State Statutes.

2. Substantive Defense.

[§ 34] Substantive Defense.

Bradford Elec. Light Co. v. Clapper (1932) 286 U.S. 145, 52 S.Ct. 571, 576, 76 L.Ed. 1026, 1035, held that a Vermont statute, making its workers' compensation remedy exclusive, was a good defense to a suit in New Hampshire for a death occurring there, where the deceased had been employed in Vermont. The court pointed out that one state does not have to enforce every right conferred by another state's statute; it may refuse enforcement (a) where the statute is beyond the legislative jurisdiction of the enacting state; (b) where enforcement would be obnoxious to the public policy of the forum; (c) where the liability is penal in character; or (d) where the forum has no court with jurisdiction or no procedure appropriate to the determination. In these cases, denial of a remedy--leaving the right unimpaired for enforcement elsewhere--may be proper; but a state may not refuse to give effect to a substantive defense and thereby subject the defendant to an irremediable liability. (On when forum must be provided, see supra, §33.)

Although the result reached in Clapper is no longer likely in compensation cases (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §115 et seq.), the general principle that the forum state must give effect to a substantive defense established by the law of another state is still sound. (See John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Yates (1936) 299 U.S. 178, 57 S.Ct. 129, 81 L.Ed. 106 [Texas court was required to give effect to statutory defense of fraud under insurance policy made in New York]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §975 et seq.; cf. People v. Shear (1999) 71 C.A.4th 278, 283, 83 C.R.2d 707, citing the text [Full Faith and Credit Clause did not preclude California from convicting defendant of possession of firearm by felon based on felony conviction in Arizona, even though his right to possess firearm in Arizona had been restored].)

The Clause was successfully invoked to compel enforcement of the governing rules of a fraternal benefit society in Order of United Commercial Travelers of America v. Wolfe (1947) 331 U.S. 586, 67 S.Ct. 1355, 91 L.Ed. 1687. The society, incorporated in Ohio, had a provision in its constitution, valid under Ohio law, allowing only 6 months to sue on a rejected claim for benefits resulting from death of an insured. Plaintiff sued on such a claim in South Dakota, after the period had passed. He relied on the South Dakota 6-year statute of limitations and another South Dakota statute declaring void all contractual provisions cutting down the statute of limitations. Held, the South Dakota judgment for plaintiff should be reversed. The society existed by virtue of the public acts of Ohio, and "the rights and obligations incident to membership therein are as much entitled to full faith and credit as the statutes upon which they depend." (67

[§ 35] General Principle.

In Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Hunt (1943) 320 U.S. 430, 64 S.Ct. 208, 88 L.Ed. 149, the court emphasized the distinction between enforcement of statutes and judgments. While a state, for sound reasons of policy, may refuse to substitute the conflicting statute of another state, ordinarily it must, regardless of policy objections, recognize the judgment of another state court as res judicata. This is so even though the action or proceeding that resulted in the judgment could not have been brought under the law or policy of the forum, or a statute on which the judgment was based could have been refused recognition on policy grounds. (See Fauntleroy v. Lum (1908) 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, 52 L.Ed. 1039 [gambling debt]; Kenney v. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §280 et seq.)

A strong application of the rule was made in Morris v. Jones (1947) 329 U.S. 545, 67 S.Ct. 451, 91 L.Ed. 488. An Illinois unincorporated insurance association was sued in a tort action in Missouri. While the action was pending, Illinois appointed a statutory liquidator who ordered all suits stayed. The plaintiff in the Missouri suit, with knowledge of the stay order, nevertheless obtained a default judgment against the association, and this was held entitled to full faith and credit. The argument of convenience in administration of assets in Illinois was answered by the statement that full faith and credit is "a more inexorable command," and that "its applicability does not turn on a balance of convenience as between litigants." The opinion made it clear, however, that the judgment did not interfere with the title of the liquidator or with the determination of priorities among claimants. "The single point of our decision is that the nature and amount of petitioner's claim has been conclusively determined by the Missouri judgment and may not be relitigated in the Illinois proceedings, it not appearing that the Missouri court lacked jurisdiction over either the parties or the subject matter." (67 S.Ct. 457, 91 L.Ed. 497.) (See 35 Cal. L. Rev. 575.)

1. Full Faith and Credit Clause.

d. State Judgments.

2. Public Policy Exception.

[§ 36] Public Policy Exception.

In Smith v. Superior Court (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1014, 49 C.R.2d 20, two plaintiffs injured in separate accidents involving defendant General Motors' vehicles sought to depose an expert witness formerly employed by defendant. As part of the settlement of an earlier wrongful termination suit against defendant, a Michigan court issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting the expert from discussing or disclosing any of defendant's "trade secrets confidential information or matters of attorney-client work product relating in any manner to the subject matter of any products liability litigation." (41 C.A.4th 1019.) Held, the Michigan injunction is not enforceable in California.

(a) A cause of action is a form of property. The Michigan injunction adversely affects plaintiffs' causes of action against defendant by effectively destroying their ability to prove a substantial portion of their case. These causes of action are "situated" in California, having been filed here. Neither plaintiffs nor their causes of action were subject to the Michigan court's jurisdiction. (41 C.A.4th 1023.)

(b) Except in the case of a money judgment in a civil suit, there are limitations on the extent to which a state may be required by the Full Faith and Credit Clause to enforce the judgment of another state in contravention of its own statutes or policy. (41 C.A.4th 1023, citing Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Hunt (1943) 320 U.S. 430, 64 S.Ct. 208, 88 L.Ed. 149, supra, §35.) This public policy exception is " 'implied from the nature of our dual system of government, and recognizes that consistently with the full faith and credit clause there may be limits to the extent to which the policy of one state, in many respects sovereign, may be subordinated to the policy of another.' " (41 C.A.4th 1024; quoting Milwaukee v. M.E. White Co. (1935) 296 U.S. 268, 56 S.Ct. 229, 80 L.Ed. 220.) Although use of this exception is rare, it is necessary here. Not only were plaintiffs "not parties to the Michigan proceedings, having no notice thereof or opportunity to contest issuance of the injunction, but this equitable decree blatantly and irreconcilably conflicts with our fundamental policy against suppression of evidence." (41 C.A.4th 1025.)

(c) Defendant essentially purchased the expert's agreement not to testify at any judicial proceeding. (41 C.A.4th 1025.) The injunction not only prevented the expert from speaking on his own behalf, but prevents anyone else from finding out what he knows, effectively blocking a litigant's search for the truth and redress. Thus, besides violating California's fundamental policy against suppression of evidence, recognition of the injunction would undermine the fundamental integrity of this state's judicial system. "We can imagine no stronger instance compelling application of the public policy exception to the full faith and credit clause." (41 C.A.4th 1026.) (See Medical Legal Consulting Services v. Covarrubias (1991) 234 C.A.3d 80, 89, 285 C.R. 559 [discussing limited public policy exception].)

3. Necessity of Jurisdiction.

[§ 37] Necessity of Jurisdiction.

A judgment is entitled to full faith and credit only if rendered by a state court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter. Where lack of jurisdiction is shown, the judgment will be denied enforcement. (See Riley v. New York Trust Co. (1942) 315 U.S. 343, 62 S.Ct. 608, 86 L.Ed. 885; Williams v. North Carolina (1945) 325 U.S. 226, 65 S.Ct. 1092, 89 L.Ed. 1577; Griffin v. Griffin (1946) 327 U.S. 220, 66 S.Ct. 556, 560, 90 L.Ed. 635, 640; May v. Anderson (1953) 345 U.S. 528, 73 S.Ct. 840, 97 L.Ed. 1221; Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §104; 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §375; 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §129 et seq.; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §§10, 11, 108 et seq.)

This principle, however, is subject to the qualification that the determination of jurisdiction in the first action may be res judicata and not subject to challenge. (See Bank of America v. Jennett (1999) 77 C.A.4th 104, 114, 91 C.R.2d 359 [sister state judgment may be challenged only if issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in sister state]; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §335 et seq.)

Thus, in Durfee v. Duke (1963) 375 U.S. 106, 84 S.Ct. 242, 11 L.Ed.2d 186, G sued D in Nebraska to quiet title to a tract of bottom land adjacent to the Missouri River. The main channel of the river is the boundary between Nebraska and Missouri, and whether the land was in Nebraska and subject to the Nebraska court's jurisdiction depended on determination of the fact of a shift in the river's course by accretion. D appeared in the Nebraska action and contested the court's jurisdiction; the court found for G and quieted title; D appealed and the Supreme Court of Nebraska affirmed, expressly holding that the land was in Nebraska. D did not seek review in the United States Supreme Court, but filed a suit against G in Missouri to quiet title to the same land, alleging that it was in Missouri. The suit was removed to a federal district court on diversity grounds, and that court held the Nebraska judgment binding. Held, affirmed. A judgment is entitled to full faith and credit, even as to jurisdictional questions, when these questions have been litigated and decided in the first court. (84 S.Ct. 245, 11 L.Ed.2d 191.) The broad declaration that courts of one state "are completely without jurisdiction directly to affect title to land in other States" is subject to this rule. (84 S.Ct. 247, 11 L.Ed.2d 193.)

The Court pointed out that the judgment was binding only between the parties to this litigation and their privies in Missouri; it did not bind either of the two states as to the location of their boundary or their sovereignty over the land; and either state might at any time protect its interest by initiating judicial proceedings in the U.S. Supreme Court. The Full Faith and Credit Clause requires only that the judgment be given as much effect in the state of the forum as in the state of its rendition. (See *People v. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 39

[§ 39] Judgment Barred by Limitations.

Where a judgment rendered by State A is still enforceable under State A's longer statute of limitations, it may nevertheless be denied enforcement in State B if State B's shorter statute of limitations has run. Where a judgment rendered by State A is barred by State A's shorter statute of limitations, State B is nevertheless free to enforce it under its longer statute. In this latter case, if State B gives a new judgment on the basis of the original one, that new judgment is entitled to obligatory full faith and credit in State A, which cannot look behind the new judgment. (See Union Nat. Bank of Wichita, Kansas v. Lamb (1949) 337 U.S. 38, 69 S.Ct. 911, 915, 93 L.Ed. 1190, 1197 [dissenting opinion]; Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §118.)

In Lamb, petitioner's outlawed Colorado judgment was revived by valid proceedings in Colorado in 1945. In petitioner's suit in Missouri on the revived judgment, recovery was denied on the ground that Missouri's 10-year statute of limitations was a bar. Held, judgment reversed. (a) If the revival proceedings in Colorado had merely extended the statutory period in which to enforce the old judgment in Colorado, Missouri would be entitled to apply its own 10-year statute of limitations and refuse enforcement. (b) But if, as appeared here, the revival proceedings created a new judgment in Colorado, the Missouri courts were bound to enforce it. Thus, the ultimate result in this kind of case depends entirely on the nature of the revival proceeding. (69 S.Ct. 913, 93 L.Ed. 1194.) (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §110.)

[§ 40] Penal and Tax Judgments.

(1) Penal Judgments. The rule that the clause does not require enforcement of a judgment that is penal in character still persists. (See Nelson v. George (1970) 399 U.S. 224, 90 S.Ct. 1963, 1966, 26 L.Ed.2d 578, 582, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §364; *People v. But what constitutes a penalty is subject to the controlling determination of the U.S. Supreme Court. (See *Huntington v. I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

C. Relations Between States.

2. Actions Against States.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 41

[§ 41] In General.

(1) Eleventh Amendment Immunities. U.S. Const., Art. III, §2, gives the federal courts jurisdiction over actions between a state or its citizens and foreign states, citizens, and subjects. But the Eleventh Amendment deprives them of jurisdiction over actions against a state by a citizen of another state, or a foreign citizen or subject. (See Missouri v. Fiske (1933) 290 U.S. 18, 54 S.Ct. 18, 24, 78 L.Ed. 145, 149; Puerto Rico Aqueduct & Sewer Authority v. Metcalf & Eddy (1993) 506 U.S. 139, 113 S.Ct. 684, 686, 687, 121 L.Ed.2d 605, 610, 612 [district court order denying state or state agency's claim of Eleventh Amendment immunity is immediately appealable]; California v. Deep Sea Research (1998) 523 U.S. 491, 118 S.Ct. 1464, 1473, 140 L.Ed.2d 626, 640 [Eleventh Amendment does not bar federal court jurisdiction over in rem admiralty action where res, shipwreck, is not within California's possession].)

The Amendment does not specifically cover all the limitations. By reason of its sovereignty, a state is immune from an action in a federal court by a foreign country, by a federal corporation, or by its own citizens. (Monaco v. Mississippi (1934) 292 U.S. 313, 54 S.Ct. 745, 749, 78 L.Ed. 1282, 1285; Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury of Indiana (1945) 323 U.S. 459, 65 S.Ct. 347, 350, 89 L.Ed. 389, 394; Employees of Dept. of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri v. Department of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri (1973) 411 U.S. 279, 93 S.Ct. 1614, 1618, 36 L.Ed.2d 251, 254; Edelman v. Jordan (1974) 415 U.S. 651, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, infra, §53; Federal Maritime Com. v. South Carolina State Ports Authority (2002) 535 U.S. 743, 122 S.Ct. 1864, 1874, 1878, 152 L.Ed.2d 962, 978, 982 [state sovereign immunity bars Federal Maritime Commission from adjudicating complaint filed by private party against nonconsenting state; Commission may still investigate violations of Shipping Act and institute administrative proceeding against state-run port]; Pyne v. Rev. 210 [Federal Maritime]; 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §92 et seq.)

Likewise, the Eleventh Amendment bars an action by an Indian tribe against a state. (Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak & Circle Village (1991) 501 U.S. 775, 111 S.Ct. 2578, 2582, 115 L.Ed.2d 686, 695 [following Monaco v. Mississippi]; Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, infra, §46; Idaho v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Idaho (1997) 521 U.S. 261, 117 S.Ct. 2028, 2036, 138 L.Ed.2d 438, 451 [state forum was available to tribe]; see 111 Harv. L. Rev. 269 [Coeur d'Alene]; 86 *Cal. L. (2) Who May Bring Action. Only the following parties may bring actions against states without their consent:

(a) The United States. (See United States v. Texas (1892) 143 U.S. 621, 12 S.Ct. 488, 493, 36 L.Ed. 285, 291.)

(c) Citizen authorized by federal statute. (See infra, §43.)

(3) Waiver of Immunity. A state that voluntarily removes a case from state to federal court waives its Eleventh Amendment immunity. (Lapides v. Board of Regents of University System of Georgia (2002) 535 U.S. 613, 122 S.Ct. 1640, 1643, 152 L.Ed.2d 806, 812 [fact that federal court might remand plaintiff's state-law tort claims against state to state court does not change rule]; see 29 *Hastings Const. 1. Former Rule.

Parden v. Terminal Ry. of Alabama State Docks Dept. (1964) 377 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1207, 12 L.Ed.2d 233, held that a railroad employee could sue a state-owned railroad by virtue of 45 U.S.C., §51. A resident citizen may sue his or her own state when Congress, acting within its constitutional powers, provides a federal remedy; such an action is not barred by the Eleventh Amendment, and the Supremacy Clause overrides the state's immunity. (84 S.Ct. 1211, 12 L.Ed.2d 239.) (See 69 Cal. L. Rev. 189 [citizen's right to bring action in state court for federal constitutional violations].)

Parden was partially overruled in Welch v. Texas Dept. of Highways & Public Trans. (1987) 483 U.S. 468, 107 S.Ct. 2941, 97 L.Ed.2d 389, infra, §45, and fully overruled in College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Bd. (1999) 527 U.S. 666, 119 S.Ct. 2219, 144 L.Ed.2d 605, infra, §47.

In Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co. (1989) 491 U.S. 1, 109 S.Ct. 2273, 105 L.Ed.2d 1, the majority concluded that the authority of Congress to abrogate a state's Eleventh Amendment immunity is not limited to the Fourteenth Amendment (see infra, §43). The case involved federal statutes providing for cleanup of hazardous waste sites. The Court first held that Congress had clearly expressed its intent to authorize actions for monetary damages against a state. (109 S.Ct. 2280, 2295, 105 L.Ed.2d 15, 33.) The lead opinion, joined by four justices, then considered the issue of congressional authority:

(a) The Supreme Court's prior decisions lead unmistakably to the conclusion that the commerce power includes the authority to override the states' Eleventh Amendment immunity. The Commerce Clause, like the Fourteenth Amendment, expands congressional power while contracting state power, and the rationale of Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer (1976) 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614, infra, §43, thus applies to both provisions. (109 S.Ct. 2281, 2282, 105 L.Ed.2d 15, 16, 17.) Nothing indicates that the Eleventh Amendment was intended to limit congressional authority; it refers only to judicial power. (109 S.Ct. 2283, 105 L.Ed.2d 18.)

(b) The special nature of the commerce power also supports the conclusion that Congress may override the states' immunity when exercising that power. (1) In approving the Commerce Clause, the states relinquished their immunity and consented to actions against them where Congress found it necessary in exercising its authority. (109 S.Ct. 2284, 105 L.Ed.2d 19.) (2) Where the Commerce Clause precludes state regulation, "a conclusion that Congress may not create a cause of action for money damages against the States would mean that no one could do so. And in many situations, it is only money damages that will carry out Congress' legitimate objectives under the Commerce Clause." (109 S.Ct. 2285, 105 L.Ed.2d 20.)

(c) This case illustrates these points. Environmental problems often require federal solutions that must include money damages. States are among the owners and operators of hazardous waste sites, and failure to make them pay for cleanup costs would seriously affect the congressional desire to encourage voluntary cleanups. (109 S.Ct. 2284, 2285, 105 L.Ed.2d 20, 21.)

One justice disagreed with the Court's statutory interpretation. (109 S.Ct. 2295, 105 L.Ed.2d 33.) Another justice agreed that Congress intended to subject the states to monetary liability but disagreed that it had the power to do so. (109 S.Ct. 2295, 2296, 105 L.Ed.2d 33, 34.) Three justices dissented on both the statutory and constitutional issues. (109 S.Ct. 2289, 2296, 105 L.Ed.2d 26, 34.)

Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co. was overruled in Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 1128, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, 273, infra, §46.

In Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer (1976) 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614, the court upheld the 1972 amendments to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (infra, §855), authorizing federal courts to award money damages to a private individual in an action against a state government found to have subjected the individual to prohibited employment discrimination. The amendments were enacted under the authority of §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, giving Congress the power to enforce the substantive provisions of the Amendment "by appropriate legislation" (see infra, §§694, 814). Following Parden v. Terminal Ry. of Alabama State Docks Dept. (1964) 377 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1207, 12 L.Ed.2d 233, supra, §42, and distinguishing Edelman v. Jordan (1974) 415 U.S. 651, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, infra, §53, the court said: "When Congress acts pursuant to §5, not only is it exercising legislative authority that is plenary within the terms of the constitutional grant, it is exercising that authority under one section of a constitutional Amendment whose other sections by their own terms embody limitations on state authority. We think that Congress may, in determining what is 'appropriate legislation' for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, provide for private suits against States or state officials which are constitutionally impermissible in other contexts." (96 S.Ct. 2671, 49 L.Ed.2d 621.) (See 47 U.C.L.A. L. C. Relations Between States.

2. Actions Against States.

b. Action Authorized by Federal Statute.

3. Family and Medical Leave Act.

[§ 44] Family and Medical Leave Act.

Nevada Dept. of Human Resources v. Hibbs (2003) 538 U.S. 721, 123 S.Ct. 1972, 155 L.Ed.2d 953, held that state employees may recover money damages from the state for violating the family care provision of the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), 29 U.S.C., §2612(a).

(a) Congress may abrogate state sovereign immunity in federal court if it makes this intention clear in the statutory language and acts pursuant to a valid exercise of its power under §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Here, congressional intent is clear. 29 U.S.C., §2617(a)(2) permits employees to seek damages against any employer, including a public agency (which includes the state), in any federal or state court of competent jurisdiction. Thus, the case turns on "whether Congress acted within its constitutional authority when it sought to abrogate the States' immunity" for purposes of the family leave provision. (123 S.Ct. 1977, 155 L.Ed.2d 962.)

(b) Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment grants Congress the power to enact "appropriate legislation" to enforce equal protection of the laws. This power includes the authority to enact "legislation that proscribes facially constitutional conduct, in order to prevent and deter unconstitutional conduct." (123 S.Ct. 1977, 155 L.Ed.2d 963.) The aim of the FMLA is to protect an employee's right to be free from gender-based discrimination. Unlike the age and disability discrimination involved in Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents (2000) 528 U.S. 62, 120 S.Ct. 631, 145 L.Ed.2d 522, infra, §49, and Board of Trustees of University of Alabama v. Garrett (2001) 531 U.S. 356, 121 S.Ct. 955, 148 L.Ed.2d 866, infra, §50, a gender-based classification is subject to heightened scrutiny. (123 S.Ct. 1981, 155 L.Ed.2d 967.)

(c) The classification serves an important governmental interest. Congress had evidence of a long, extensive, and persistent history of sex discrimination in the administration of leave benefits which justified passage of the FMLA. (123 S.Ct. 1978, 155 L.Ed.2d 964.) Although many states have enacted some form of family-care leave laws, many are inadequate. For example, in seven states the laws only apply to women; in 12 states there is no provision for caring for a sick child or family member; and in many states there is no statutorily guaranteed right to take the leave. (123 S.Ct. 1980, 155 L.Ed.2d 966.)

(d) The discriminatory means employed is substantially related to the achievement of the objective. "By creating an across-the-board, routine employment benefit for all eligible employees, Congress sought to ensure that family-care leave would no longer be stigmatized as an inordinate drain on the workplace caused by female employees, and that employers could not evade leave obligations simply by hiring men. By setting a minimum standard of family leave for all eligible employees, irrespective of gender, the FMLA attacks the formerly state-sanctioned stereotype that only women are responsible for family caregiving, thereby reducing employers' incentives to engage in discrimination by basing hiring and promotion decisions on stereotypes." (123 S.Ct. 1982, 155 L.Ed.2d 969.) The FMLA is narrowly tailored to address the targeted unconstitutional behavior. It requires only unpaid leave of limited duration and excludes elected state officials, their staffs, and appointed policymakers. (123 S.Ct. 1983, 155 L.Ed.2d 970.)

[§ 44A] (New) Americans With Disabilities.

In Tennessee v. Lane (2004) 541 U.S. 509, 124 S.Ct. 1978, 158 L.Ed.2d 820, a criminal defendant and a court reporter, both paraplegics who used wheelchairs for mobility, sought money damages and injunctive relief for being denied access to, and the services of, the state court system because of their disabilities. The criminal defendant, required to appear on the second floor of a courthouse without an elevator, alleged that he was compelled to crawl up two flights of stairs to attend his first hearing and was arrested for failure to appear when he refused to do so again at his second hearing. The court reporter alleged that she had lost both work and an opportunity to participate in the judicial process because she was unable to gain access to a number of county courthouses. The Court answered the question left open in Board of Trustees of University of Alabama v. Garrett (2001) 531 U.S. 356, 121 S.Ct. 955, 148 L.Ed.2d 866, text, §50: whether the Eleventh Amendment permits suits for money damages under Title II of the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA). Title II prohibits discrimination by public entities in the provision of public services and activities to qualified persons with disabilities. It incorporates by reference the provision of the Rehabilitation Act authorizing private citizens to bring actions for money damages. Held, Title II, as it applies to cases implicating the fundamental right of access to the courts, is a valid exercise of Congress' authority, under §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, to enforce Fourteenth Amendment guarantees.

(a) There are significant differences between Titles I and II of the ADA. The purpose of Title I is to enforce the command of the Fourteenth Amendment that "all persons similarly situated should be treated alike." As observed in Garrett, "classifications based on disability violate that constitutional command if they lack a rational relationship to a legitimate governmental purpose." (124 S.Ct. 1988, 158 L.Ed.2d 836.) "Title II, like Title I, seeks to enforce this prohibition on irrational disability discrimination. But it also seeks to enforce a variety of other basic constitutional guarantees, infringements of which are subject to more searching judicial review. ... These rights include some, like the right of access to the courts at issue in this case, that are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment" and the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment. Further, the public's right of access to criminal proceedings is secured by the First Amendment. (124 S.Ct. 1988, 158 L.Ed.2d 836, 837.)

(b) "While §5 authorizes Congress to enact reasonably prophylactic remedial legislation, the appropriateness of the remedy depends on the gravity of the harm it seeks to prevent." (124 S.Ct. 1988, 158 L.Ed.2d 837.) Here, the gravity of the harm was sufficient to support the prophylactic legislation it enacted. (124 S.Ct. 1992, 158 L.Ed.2d 841.) Title II was written "against a backdrop of pervasive unequal treatment in the administration of state services and programs, including systematic deprivations of fundamental rights." (124 S.Ct. 1989, 158 L.Ed.2d 837.) "A report before Congress showed that some 76% of public services and programs housed in state-owned buildings were inaccessible to and unusable by persons with disabilities." (124 S.Ct. 1990, 158 L.Ed.2d 839.) The evidence before Congress was sufficient for it to conclude in the text of the ADA itself (see 42 U.S.C., §12101(a)(3)) that discrimination against the disabled persists in "access to public services." (124 S.Ct. 1992, 158 L.Ed.2d 841.)

(c) Title II is an appropriate response to the history and pattern of unequal treatment of persons with disabilities regarding the accessibility of judicial services. "Faced with considerable evidence of the shortcomings of previous legislative responses, Congress was justified in concluding that" the problem warranted additional prophylactic measures. Title II "requires only 'reasonable modifications' that would not fundamentally alter the nature of the service provided, and only when the individual seeking modification is otherwise eligible for the service." (124 S.Ct. 1993, 158 L.Ed.2d 842.) Its duty to accommodate persons with disabilities in the administration of justice is consistent with due process and its objective of preventing unconstitutional behavior. (124 S.Ct. 1994, 158 L.Ed.2d 843.)

See United States v. Georgia (2006) 546 U.S. 151, 126 S.Ct. 877, 882, 163 L.Ed.2d 650, 659, Supp., infra, §882 [Title II of ADA abrogates state immunity to extent conduct actually violates Fourteenth Amendment].

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

C. Relations Between States.

2. Actions Against States.

c. Action Not Authorized by Federal Statute.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 45

[§ 45] In General.

In Welch v. Texas Dept. of Highways & Public Trans. (1987) 483 U.S. 468, 107 S.Ct. 2941, 97 L.Ed.2d 389, the Court held that the Jones Act (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §131 et seq.) did not authorize a federal court action against a state by its employee. The lead opinion, joined by four justices, reasons as follows:

(a) "We assume, without deciding or intimating a view of the question, that the authority of Congress to subject unconsenting States to suit in federal court is not confined to §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. ... Petitioner's argument fails in any event because Congress has not expressed in unmistakable statutory language its intention to allow States to be sued in federal court under the Jones Act." (107 S.Ct. 2947, 97 L.Ed.2d 397, 398.)

(b) Parden v. Terminal Ry. of Alabama State Docks Dept. (1964) 377 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1207, 12 L.Ed.2d 233, supra, §42, found congressional intent from the general language of the statute. (107 S.Ct. 2947, 97 L.Ed.2d 398.) "Although our later decisions do not expressly overrule Parden, they leave no doubt that Parden's discussion of congressional intent to negate Eleventh Amendment immunity is no longer good law." (107 S.Ct. 2948, 97 L.Ed.2d 399.) In Employees of Dept. of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri v. Department of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri (1973) 411 U.S. 279, 93 S.Ct. 1614, 1618, 36 L.Ed.2d 251, 254, and later cases, "the Court consistently has required an unequivocal expression that Congress intended to override Eleventh Amendment immunity." To the extent that it is inconsistent with this requirement, Parden is overruled. (107 S.Ct. 2948, 97 L.Ed.2d 399.)

(c) Hans v. Louisiana (1890) 134 U.S. 1, 10 S.Ct. 504, 33 L.Ed. 842, holding that the Eleventh Amendment bars a citizen from suing his or her own state in federal court, has been followed in many cases and will not be overruled without special justification which is not present here. (107 S.Ct. 2952, 97 L.Ed.2d 400.)

Four justices dissented, arguing that the Eleventh Amendment does not apply to suits by a state's own citizens and that Hans should be overruled. (107 S.Ct. 2958, 97 L.Ed.2d 416.)

Other federal acts have been held not to abrogate state sovereign immunity. (See Dellmuth v. Muth (1989) 491 U.S. 223, 109 S.Ct. 2397, 2402, 105 L.Ed.2d 181, 190 [language of Education of the Handicapped Act (now Individuals with Disabilities Education Act; see infra, §881) does not show unmistakably clear intent to abrogate states' Eleventh Amendment immunity]; Hoffman v. Connecticut Dept. of Income Maintenance (1989) 492 U.S. 96, 109 S.Ct. 2818, 2824, 106 L.Ed.2d 76, 86 [Bankruptcy Code does not abrogate states' immunity from suit for monetary damages]; infra, §46 et seq.)

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

C. Relations Between States.

2. Actions Against States.

c. Action Not Authorized by Federal Statute.

2. Indian Gaming.

[§ 46] Indian Gaming.

Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co. (1989) 491 U.S. 1, 109 S.Ct. 2273, 105 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §42, was overruled in Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252. Plaintiff Indian tribe sued the state of Florida and its Governor in federal court under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, passed by Congress under the Indian Commerce Clause, to force defendants to negotiate for the inclusion of certain gaming activities in a tribal-state compact. Held, the Eleventh Amendment prohibits Congress from making Florida subject to suit in federal court under the Act, and the exception provided by Ex parte Young (1908) 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714, infra, §54, is inapplicable.

(1) To determine whether Congress has abrogated a state's sovereign immunity, the Court must ask whether Congress has unequivocally expressed its intent to abrogate the immunity, and whether it acted pursuant to a valid exercise of power. (116 S.Ct. 1123, 134 L.Ed.2d 266, citing Green v. Mansour (1985) 474 U.S. 64, 106 S.Ct. 423, 88 L.Ed.2d 371, infra, §55.) Numerous references to the "State" in the Act make it clear that Congress intended to abrogate the states' sovereign immunity from suit. (116 S.Ct. 1124, 134 L.Ed.2d 267.)

(2) Determining whether Congress acted pursuant to a valid exercise of power depends on whether the Act was passed pursuant to a constitutional provision granting Congress the power to abrogate. Authority to abrogate has been found under only two constitutional provisions. In Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer (1976) 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614, supra, §43, the Court recognized that "the Fourteenth Amendment, by expanding federal power at the expense of state autonomy, had fundamentally altered the balance of state and federal power struck by the Constitution. ... We noted that § 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment contained prohibitions expressly directed at the States and that § 5 of the Amendment expressly provided that 'The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.' ... We held that through the Fourteenth Amendment, federal power extended to intrude upon the province of the Eleventh Amendment and therefore that §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment allowed Congress to abrogate the immunity from suit guaranteed by that Amendment." (116 S.Ct. 1125, 134 L.Ed.2d 268.) In Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., a plurality of the Court found that the Interstate Commerce Clause granted Congress the power to abrogate state sovereign immunity. (116 S.Ct. 1125, 134 L.Ed.2d 268.) That opinion "allows no principled distinction" in favor of the states between the Indian Commerce Clause and the Interstate Commerce Clause. (116 S.Ct. 1127, 134 L.Ed.2d 271.)

(3) "The Court in Union Gas reached a result without an expressed rationale agreed upon by a majority of the Court. ... Union Gas has created confusion among the lower courts that have sought to understand and apply the deeply fractured decision." (116 S.Ct. 1127, 134 L.Ed.2d 271.) "Never before the decision in Union Gas had we suggested that the bounds of Article III could be expanded by Congress operating pursuant to any constitutional provision other than the Fourteenth Amendment. Indeed, it had seemed fundamental that Congress could not expand the jurisdiction of the federal courts beyond the bounds of Article III. ... The plurality's citation of prior decisions for support was based on what we believe to be a misreading of precedent." (116 S.Ct. 1128, 134 L.Ed.2d 272.) The plurality's reliance on Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer is also misplaced. Fitzpatrick was based on "a rationale wholly inapplicable to the Interstate Commerce Clause, viz., that the Fourteenth Amendment, adopted well after the adoption of the Eleventh Amendment and the ratification of the Constitution, operated to alter the preexisting balance between state and federal power achieved by Article III and the Eleventh Amendment." (116 S.Ct. 1128, 134 L.Ed.2d 272.)

(4) Union Gas has proven to be a solitary departure from established law. None of the policies underlying stare decisis require continuing adherence to its holding. "[B]oth the result in Union Gas and the plurality's rationale depart from our established understanding of the Eleventh Amendment and undermine the accepted function of Article III. We feel bound to conclude that Union Gas was wrongly decided and that it should be, and now is, overruled." (116 S.Ct. 1128, 134 L.Ed.2d 273.)

(5) In overruling Union Gas, "we reconfirm that the background principle of state sovereign immunity embodied in the Eleventh Amendment is not so ephemeral as to dissipate when the subject of the suit is an area, like the regulation of Indian commerce, that is under the exclusive control of the Federal Government. Even when the Constitution vests in Congress complete lawmaking authority over a particular area, the Eleventh Amendment prevents congressional authorization of suits by private parties against unconsenting States. The Eleventh Amendment restricts the judicial power under Article III, and Article I cannot be used to circumvent the constitutional limitations placed upon federal jurisdiction." (116 S.Ct. 1131, 134 L.Ed.2d 276.)

(b) Exception for prospective injunctive relief inapplicable. Where Congress has prescribed a detailed remedial scheme for enforcement against a state of a statutorily created right, a court should hesitate before casting it aside and permitting an action against a state officer based on Ex parte Young, supra. Here, Congress intended §2710(d)(3) of the Act, requiring a state to negotiate in good faith toward the formation of a compact, "to be enforced against the State in an action brought under §2710(d)(7); the intricate procedures set forth in that provision show that Congress intended therein not only to define, but also significantly to limit, the duty imposed by §2710(d)(3)." (116 S.Ct. 1132, 134 L.Ed.2d 278.) If §2710(d)(3) could be enforced in a suit under Ex parte Young, §2710(d)(7) would have been superfluous. Although Congress does not have the authority to make the state amenable to suit in federal court under §2710(d)(7), "the fact that Congress chose to impose upon the State a liability which is significantly more limited than would be the liability imposed upon the state officer under Ex parte Young strongly indicates that Congress had no wish to create the latter under §2710(d)(3)." (116 S.Ct. 1133, 134 L.Ed.2d 279.)

Four justices dissented in two separate opinions. One justice stated that the majority opinion is an "affront to a coequal branch of our Government," and that it prevents Congress from providing a federal forum for a broad range of actions against states, including those sounding in copyright and patent law, bankruptcy, and environmental law. (116 S.Ct. 1133, 1134, 134 L.Ed.2d 279, 280.) Three justices agreed that the statute should have been construed to harmonize with Ex parte Young, which would have saved an act of Congress and rendered a discussion on constitutional grounds wholly unnecessary. Lacking the application of Ex parte Young, they would have followed Union Gas in recognizing congressional power under Article I to abrogate sovereign immunity. (116 S.Ct. 1145, 1184, 134 L.Ed.2d 294, 344.) (See 110 Harv. L. Rev. 102 [Seminole Tribe]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 1759 [constructive waiver after Seminole Tribe]; 113 Harv. L. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 47

In Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Bd. v. College Savings Bank (1999) 527 U.S. 627, 119 S.Ct. 2199, 144 L.Ed.2d 575, plaintiff bank sued Florida for patent infringement. The district court held that the patent laws failed to contain the requisite statement of intent to abrogate state sovereign immunity from infringement suits. The Court of Appeals held that Congress, in the Patent Remedy Act, had validly abrogated the state's sovereign immunity from infringement suits under §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment. Held, reversed and remanded.

(b) Necessity for congressional action. "The underlying conduct at issue here is state infringement of patents and the use of sovereign immunity to deny patent owners compensation for the invasion of their patent rights. ... It is this conduct then--unremedied patent infringement by the States--that must give rise to the Fourteenth Amendment violation that Congress sought to redress in the Patent Remedy Act." (119 S.Ct. 2207, 144 L.Ed.2d 588.) However, "Congress identified no pattern of patent infringement by the States, let alone a pattern of constitutional violations." (119 S.Ct. 2207, 144 L.Ed.2d 588.) Because of the lack of evidence of widespread and persistent deprivation of patent owners' property without due process of law by claims of sovereign immunity, the provisions of the Patent Remedy Act are out of proportion to the remedial or preventive object they are designed to prevent. (119 S.Ct. 2210, 144 L.Ed.2d 592.)

(c) Insufficiency of Article I authority. "The statute's apparent and more basic aims were to provide a uniform remedy for patent infringement and to place the States on the same footing as private parties under that regime. These are proper Article I concerns, but that Article does not give Congress the power to enact such legislation after Seminole Tribe." (119 S.Ct. 2211, 144 L.Ed.2d 593.)

Four justices dissented, stating that Boerne "amply supports congressional authority to enact the Patent Remedy Act, whether one assumes that States seldom infringe patents, ... or that patent infringements potentially permeate an 'unlimited range of state conduct.'" (119 S.Ct. 2211, 144 L.Ed.2d 594.) (See 113 Harv. L. Rev. 223 [Florida Prepaid]; 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 645 [Boerne]; 73 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1161 [same]; 53 Stanf. L. Rev. 1127 ["Appropriate" Means-Ends Constraints on Section 5 Powers; discussing Boerne]; 34 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 271 [Florida Prepaid].)

In College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Bd. (1999) 527 U.S. 666, 119 S.Ct. 2219, 144 L.Ed.2d 605, a companion case to Florida Prepaid, plaintiff bank claimed that Florida was subject to suit in federal court under the Trademark Remedy Clarification Act (TRCA) for false and misleading advertising. Held, sovereign immunity was neither validly abrogated by the TRCA nor voluntarily waived by the state's activities in interstate commerce.

(a) Need for protectable property right. To abrogate sovereign immunity under §5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, there must be a protectable property right. Neither "(1) a right to be free from a business competitor's false advertising about its own product," nor "(2) a more generalized right to be secure in one's business interests" qualifies (119 S.Ct. 2224, 144 L.Ed.2d 614):

(1) "As to the first: The hallmark of a protected property interest is the right to exclude." (119 S.Ct. 2224, 144 L.Ed.2d 614.) Although the Act's provisions dealing with infringement of trademarks deal with "property" that an owner can exclude others from using, the false advertising provisions "bear no relationship to any right to exclude; and Florida Prepaid's alleged misrepresentations concerning its own products intruded upon no interest over which petitioner had exclusive dominion." (119 S.Ct. 2224, 144 L.Ed.2d 615.)

(2) As to the second: Although assets of a business unquestionably are property, "business in the sense of the activity of doing business or the activity of making a profit is not property in the ordinary sense--and it is only that, and not any business asset, which is impinged upon by a competitor's false advertising." (119 S.Ct. 2225, 144 L.Ed.2d 616.)

Four justices dissented, asserting that Congress should have the power to regulate commercial activities of a state that is acting like a private person. (119 S.Ct. 2235, 144 L.Ed.2d 628.) (See 89 Cal. L. Rev. 507 [Holding the Sovereign's Universities Accountable for Patent Infringement After Florida Prepaid and College Savings Bank]; 51 Hastings L. J. 1003 [Florida Prepaid and College Savings Bank]; 37 San Diego L. Rev. 637 [same]; 53 *Stanf. L. [§ 48] Fair Labor Standards.

In Employees of Dept. of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri v. Department of Public Health & Welfare, Missouri (1973) 411 U.S. 279, 93 S.Ct. 1614, 36 L.Ed.2d 251, the Court concluded that Congress, in extending coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) to state employees, did not intend to authorize an action by a citizen against his or her state. Parden v. Terminal Ry. of Alabama State Docks Dept. (1964) 377 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1207, 12 L.Ed.2d 233, supra, §42, was distinguished on the ground that the conclusion there was ultimately premised on a theory of consent by the state. (93 S.Ct. 1617, 36 L.Ed.2d 254, 255, and footnote 1.)

In Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 119 S.Ct. 2240, 144 L.Ed.2d 636, a case of first impression, plaintiff probation officers claimed that Maine had violated the overtime provisions of the FLSA, and sought compensation and liquidated damages in federal court. While the action was pending, the Court decided Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, supra, §46, and the district court dismissed plaintiffs' action. Plaintiffs then filed the same action in state court, where it was dismissed based on the state's sovereign immunity. Held, affirmed. The powers delegated to Congress under Article I "do not include the power to subject nonconsenting States to private suits for damages in state courts." Here, "Maine has not consented to suits for overtime pay and liquidated damages under the FLSA." (119 S.Ct. 2246, 144 L.Ed.2d 652.)

(a) Constitutional history. The silence of the founders of the Constitution on congressional power to strip states of immunity from suit in their own courts "is best explained by the simple fact that no one, not even the Constitution's most ardent opponents, suggested the document might strip States of the immunity." (119 S.Ct. 2260, 144 L.Ed.2d 670.) The Eleventh Amendment "was directed toward the only provisions of the constitutional text believed to call the States' immunity from private suit into question. Although Article III expressly contemplated jurisdiction over suits between States and individuals, nothing in the Article or in any other part of the Constitution suggested States could not assert immunity from private suit in their own courts or that Congress had the power to abrogate sovereign immunity there." (119 S.Ct. 2260, 144 L.Ed.2d 671.)

(b) Statutory history. "The provisions of the FLSA at issue here, which were enacted in the aftermath of Parden, are among the first statutory enactments purporting in express terms to subject nonconsenting States to private suits.

Although similar statutes have multiplied in the last generation, 'they are of such recent vintage that they are no more probative than the [FLSA] of a constitutional tradition that lends meaning to the text. Their persuasive force is far outweighed by almost two centuries of apparent congressional avoidance of the practice.' " (119 S.Ct. 2261, 144 L.Ed.2d 672, quoting Printz v. United States (1997) 521 U.S. 898, 117 S.Ct. 2365, 138 L.Ed.2d 914, supra, §6.)

(c) States' right to reciprocal privilege. "It is unquestioned that the Federal Government retains its own immunity from suit not only in state tribunals but also in its own courts. In light of our constitutional system recognizing the essential sovereignty of the States, we are reluctant to conclude that the States are not entitled to a reciprocal privilege." (119 S.Ct. 2264, 144 L.Ed.2d 675.)

(d) No immunity where state consents to suit. Sovereign immunity "does not bar all judicial review of state compliance with the Constitution and valid federal law. Rather, certain limits are implicit in the constitutional principle of state sovereign immunity." (119 S.Ct. 2266, 144 L.Ed.2d 679.) One "of these limits is that sovereign immunity bars suits only in the absence of consent. Many States, on their own initiative, have enacted statutes consenting to a wide variety of suits. ... Nor, subject to constitutional limitations, does the Federal Government lack the authority or means to seek the States' voluntary consent to private suits." (119 S.Ct. 2267, 144 L.Ed.2d 679.) Here, however, the state has not consented to suit. (119 S.Ct. 2268, 144 L.Ed.2d 680.)

Four justices joined in a lengthy dissent: "The Court's federalism ignores the accepted authority of Congress to bind States under the FLSA and to provide enforcement of federal rights in state court. The Court's history simply disparages the capacity of the Constitution to order relationships in a Republic that has changed since the founding." (119 S.Ct. 2270, 144 L.Ed.2d 683.) (See 113 Harv. L. Rev. 200 [Alden]; 89 Cal. L. Rev. 183 [same]; 33 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 325 [same].)

In Kimel v. Florida Bd. of Regents (2000) 528 U.S. 62, 120 S.Ct. 631, 643, 645, 145 L.Ed.2d 522, 539, 542, the Court extended the reasoning of Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, supra, §46, and following cases, to the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Held, 5-4, neither the Commerce Clause nor the Fourteenth Amendment authorized Congress to abrogate the state's immunity from suit under the Act.

(a) Commerce Clause. Congress' powers under Article I "do not include the power to subject States to suit at the hands of private individuals." (120 S.Ct. 644, 145 L.Ed.2d 539.)

(b) Fourteenth Amendment. Age "is not a suspect classification under the Equal Protection Clause." (120 S.Ct. 646, 145 L.Ed.2d 542.) Thus, "states may discriminate on the basis of age without offending the Fourteenth Amendment if the age classification in question is rationally related to a legitimate state interest." (120 S.Ct. 646, 145 L.Ed.2d 542.) The Act is " 'so out of proportion to a supposed remedial or preventive object that it cannot be understood as responsive to, or designed to prevent, unconstitutional behavior.' " (120 S.Ct. 647, 145 L.Ed.2d 544, quoting Boerne v. Flores (1997) 521 U.S. 507, 117 S.Ct. 2157, 138 L.Ed.2d 624, infra, §516.) Under 29 U.S.C., §623(a)(1), all discrimination " 'against any individual ... because of such individual's age' " is made unlawful. (120 S.Ct. 647, 145 L.Ed.2d 544.) Thus, the Act "prohibits substantially more state employment decisions and practices than would likely be held unconstitutional under the applicable equal protection, rational basis standard." (120 S.Ct. 647, 145 L.Ed.2d 544.) Further, in extending the Act to the States in 1974, Congress failed to identify any pattern of discrimination by the states rising to the level of constitutional violation necessitating broad prophylactic legislation. 2. Actions Against States.

c. Action Not Authorized by Federal Statute.

6. Americans With Disabilities.

[§ 50] Americans With Disabilities.

In Board of Trustees of University of Alabama v. Garrett (2001) 531 U.S. 356, 121 S.Ct. 955, 148 L.Ed.2d 866, plaintiff employees sued two state entities for failing to comply with the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) (see infra, §882) by refusing to make the required "special accommodations" necessary to prevent discrimination against the disabled. Held, 5-4, under the Eleventh Amendment, states are immune from private damages actions under the ADA.

(a) Although by its terms the Eleventh Amendment grants immunity to a state only when that state is sued by a citizen of "another state," it has been held that the Amendment's immunity extends to a suit by a citizen against his or her own state. (121 S.Ct. 962, 148 L.Ed.2d 876, citing Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, supra, §46.)

(b) Congress may abrogate the states' Eleventh Amendment immunity when (1) it unequivocally intends to do so, and (2) it acts pursuant to a valid grant of constitutional authority. Because the ADA specifically abrogates Eleventh Amendment immunity, the question is whether Congress acted within its constitutional authority by subjecting the states to federal suits for damages under the ADA. Under Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Bd. v. College Savings Bank (1999) 527 U.S. 627, 119 S.Ct. 2199, 144 L.Ed.2d 575, supra, §47, Congress may not base abrogation on its power under the Commerce Clause. However, under Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer (1976) 427 U.S. 445, 96 S.Ct. 2666, 49 L.Ed.2d 614, supra, §43, it may base abrogation on Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, which grants Congress the power to enforce that Amendment's substantive guarantees by enacting "appropriate legislation." Thus, the ADA can apply to the states only to the extent that it is appropriate Section 5 legislation. (121 S.Ct. 962, 148 L.Ed.2d 877.)

(c) The initial step in applying these principles is to identify the scope of the constitutional right at issue, i.e., the limitations that the substantive provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment place on state treatment of the disabled. Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center (1985) 473 U.S. 432, 105 S.Ct. 3249, 87 L.Ed.2d 313, infra, §789, which dealt with an Equal Protection Clause challenge to an ordinance requiring a special use permit to operate a home for the mentally retarded, held that "mental retardation" did not qualify as a "quasi-suspect" classification, but instead that the ordinance incurred only the minimum "rational basis" review applicable to general social and economic legislation. (121 S.Ct.

963, 148 L.Ed.2d 878.) Thus, under Cleburne, states are not required by the Fourteenth Amendment to make special accommodations for the disabled, so long as their actions are rational. They could quite hardheadedly--and perhaps hard-heartedly--hold to job qualification requirements that make no allowance for the disabled. "If special accommodations for the disabled are to be required, they must come from positive law and not through the Equal Protection Clause." (121 S.Ct. 964, 148 L.Ed.2d 879.)

(d) Next, it is necessary to determine whether Congress identified a history and pattern of unconstitutional employment discrimination by the states against the disabled, because Congress' Section 5 authority is appropriately exercised only in response to state transgressions. (121 S.Ct. 964, 148 L.Ed.2d 880.) This inquiry does not extend, as plaintiffs contend, to units of local governments, because Eleventh Amendment immunity does not extend beyond the state level. Although the record assembled by Congress in enacting the ADA contains many examples supporting its general finding that society has tended to discriminate against the disabled, the majority of the incidents do not deal with the activities of states. Also, the relatively few examples of state discrimination against the disabled fall far short of the pattern of unconstitutional discrimination on which Section 5 legislation must be based, especially because 43 million Americans are disabled and the states employ more than 4.5 million people. (121 S.Ct. 965, 148 L.Ed.2d 880, 881.) Moreover, had Congress believed that the assembled material on discrimination reflected a pattern of state discrimination, it would have so found (it did not), and language in the legislative history of the ADA refutes the contention that general, societal discrimination against the disabled includes discrimination by the states. (121 S.Ct. 966, 148 L.Ed.2d 882.)

The dissenting opinion characterized the congressional record as showing "massive society-wide discrimination," concluded that this discrimination was sufficient to implicate the states, and reasoned that the ADA was an "appropriate" way of dealing with this problem. (121 S.Ct. 966, 148 L.Ed.2d 885, 886.) (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 2146 [The Irrational Application of Rational Basis: Kimel, Garrett, and Congressional Power To Abrogate State Sovereign Immunity]; 115 Harv. L. Rev. 306 [Garrett]; 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 645 [same]; 54 Stanf. L. Rev. 87 [same].)

2. Actions Against States.

d. Action in State Court.

[§ 51] Action in State Court.

Hall v. University of Nevada (1972) 8 C.3d 522, 524, 105 C.R. 355, 503 P.2d 1363, held that the immunity from being sued by citizens of another state does not exist where the cause of action is based on the defendant state's activities in another state. (See 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §93; 63 Cal. L. Rev. 1144; 6 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 585; 81 A.L.R.3d 1239.) In the subsequent trial, the Court of Appeal affirmed a tort judgment for damages in favor of a California plaintiff in the action against the state of Nevada. (Hall v. University of Nevada (1977) 74 C.A.3d 280, 141 C.R. 439.) In Nevada v. Hall (1979) 440 U.S. 410, 99 S.Ct. 1182, 59 L.Ed.2d 416, the United States Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal, holding that a state has no constitutional immunity from suit in a state court.

(a) Nature of sovereign immunity. A truly independent sovereign is immune from being sued in its own courts. But immunity from being sued in another sovereign's courts must depend on an agreement or a voluntary decision to respect the dignity of the first sovereign as a matter of comity. The California court has said that it does not, as a matter of comity, extend this immunity. (99 S.Ct. 1186, 1187, 59 L.Ed.2d 423.)

(b) Eleventh Amendment and Article III. Nothing in these sections provides a basis for imposing limits on the exercise of one state's power to authorize its courts to assert jurisdiction over another state. (99 S.Ct. 1188, 59 L.Ed.2d 425.)

(c) Full faith and credit. Under the Full Faith and Credit Clause, a state may in some situations be required to apply the statutory law of another state; but it is not required to apply that law in violation of its own legitimate public policy. (99 S.Ct. 1189, 59 L.Ed.2d 426.) A similar conclusion is appropriate in this case. California's interest in providing full protection to those who are injured on its highways through negligence is substantial. To effectuate this interest, California has provided for jurisdiction over residents and nonresidents alike, and has waived its own immunity from liability. "As the California courts have found, to require California either to surrender jurisdiction or to limit respondents' recovery to the $ 25,000 maximum of the Nevada statute would be obnoxious to its statutorily based policies of jurisdiction over nonresident motorists and full recovery. The Full Faith and Credit Clause does not require this result." (99 S.Ct. 1190, 59 L.Ed.2d 427.)

(d) No implied constitutional limitations. Nevada's argument that the Constitution implicitly requires respect for the sovereignty of another state is unsound. Several constitutional limitations (imports, extradition, etc.) show that the states are not wholly independent sovereigns, but do not imply that a state's immunity from suit rests on anything but comity. It may be a wise policy for states to accord each other immunity; but if a federal court were to hold, by inference from the structure of the Constitution, that California is not free to enforce its policy of full compensation, that holding would constitute the real intrusion on the sovereignty of the states and the power of the people. (99 S.Ct. 1191, 59 L.Ed.2d 429.) (See Children's Hosp. & Med. Center v. Bonta (2002) 97 C.A.4th 740, 757, 758, 118 C.R.2d 629 [Eleventh Amendment did not bar state action based on disparity of Medi-Cal reimbursements for in-state and out-of-state hospitals where issues were based on violations of Equal Protection and Commerce Clauses, and did not derive from any private right of action under Medicaid Act; distinguishing Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 119 S.Ct. 2240, 144 L.Ed.2d 636, supra, §48]; Franchise Tax Bd. of Calif. v. Hyatt (2003) 538 U.S. 488, 123 S.Ct. 1683, 1689, 155 L.Ed.2d 702, 712 [following Nevada v. Hall; in tort action in Nevada against California tax board, Nevada was not required to apply California statute immunizing its tax collection agency where that application would violate Nevada's own legitimate public policy]; 93 Harv. 2. Actions Against States.

e. Action Against State Officer or Agency.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 52

[§ 52] In General.

(1) Action Based on Personal Liability. A plaintiff may sue a state officer, such as a tax collector, to recover a personal judgment against the officer based on his or her wrongful individual action in violation of law, e.g., improper collection of money under color of state law. (See 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §92.) And actions "against state and county officials to enjoin them from invading constitutional rights are not forbidden by the Eleventh Amendment." (Griffin v. County School Bd. of Prince Edward County (1964) 377 U.S. 218, 84 S.Ct. 1226, 1232, 12 L.Ed.2d 256, 264, infra, §96; see Scheuer v. Rhodes (1974) 416 U.S. 232, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §177.)

The Eleventh Amendment is also not a bar to an action based on the theory that the officer acted beyond the scope of his or her statutory authority, or, if the officer acted within his or her authority, that that authority is unconstitutional. (Florida Dept. of State v. Treasure Salvors (1982) 458 U.S. 670, 102 S.Ct. 3304, 3317, 73 L.Ed.2d 1057, 1072; see 96 Harv. L. Rev. 246.)

(2) Distinction: Action To Enforce State Liability. An action nominally against individuals may affect them in their capacities as state officers, and may in substance be a forbidden action against the state to enforce state liability. (See Worcester County Trust Co. v. Riley (1937) 302 U.S. 292, 58 S.Ct. 185, 82 L.Ed. 268; infra, §639; Great Northern Life Ins. Co. v. Read (1944) 322 U.S. 47, 64 S.Ct. 873, 876, 88 L.Ed. 1121, 1126; Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury, Indiana (1945) 323 U.S. 459, 65 S.Ct. 347, 350, 89 L.Ed. 389, 394, infra, §36.) (For the comparable theory that an action against a federal officer may be deemed a forbidden action against the United States, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §87 et seq.)

(3) Action Against State Agency or Instrumentality. An action against a state agency that is in reality an action against the state is barred by the Eleventh Amendment. (See Arkansas v. Texas (1953) 346 U.S. 368, 74 S.Ct. 109, 98 L.Ed. 80; Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Doe (1997) 519 U.S. 425, 117 S.Ct. 900, 904, 137 L.Ed.2d 55, 60; infra, §§53, 55.) However, an action against a political subdivision that is not considered to be an arm of the state is not barred. (Lynch v. San Francisco Housing Authority (1997) 55 C.A.4th 527, 541, 65 C.R.2d 620 [local housing authority is not state agency immune from being sued under Eleventh Amendment]; see *Hess v. Eleventh Amendment immunity that states enjoy; suing railway in federal court under Federal Employer's Liability Act does not affect states' dignity and solvency, the two concerns that underpin Eleventh Amendment].)

A state agency's Eleventh Amendment immunity may be waived by a state statute consenting to being sued. (See Petty v. Tennessee-Missouri Bridge Com. (1959) 359 U.S. 275, 79 S.Ct. 785, 3 L.Ed.2d 804 [immunity waived by interstate compact]; *Port Authority Trans-Hudson Corp. v. 2. Action To Recover Money.

[§ 53] Action To Recover Money.

An action that seeks the recovery of money from the state is barred by the Eleventh Amendment. This rule applies without regard to the nominal defendant or the type of action involved. (See 1 Rotunda, §2.12.)

In Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury of Indiana (1945) 323 U.S. 459, 65 S.Ct. 347, 89 L.Ed. 389, plaintiff, a foreign corporation, sued the Indiana Department of Treasury in a federal district court, to recover taxes paid. Held: (a) the claim was for a refund from the state itself, and barred by the Eleventh Amendment; (b) the state had by statute consented to refund actions only in the state court; and (c) the fact that the state Attorney General appeared and defended on the merits in the district court and Court of Appeals was not a waiver of the objection; the Amendment "declares a policy and sets forth an explicit limitation on federal judicial power of such compelling force that this Court will consider the issue ... even though urged for the first time in this Court." (65 S.Ct. 352, 89 L.Ed. 396.) (See Kennecott Copper Corp. v. State Tax Com. (1946) 327 U.S. 573, 66 S.Ct. 745, 90 L.Ed. 862 [statutory consent was insufficient to permit suit in federal court]; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 802; on consent generally, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §92 et seq.)

In Edelman v. Jordan (1974) 415 U.S. 651, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, Jordan brought an action individually and on behalf of a class of persons receiving Aid to Aged, Blind, and Disabled, against directors of the Illinois Department of Public Aid. The theory of the action was that the Illinois officials were following state regulations that did not comply with federal time limits for processing applications. The federal district court issued a permanent injunction requiring compliance with the federal time limits and ordering retroactive payment of benefits wrongfully withheld from July, 1968, the date of the federal regulations, to the date of the injunction. Held, reversed as to the retroactive payments.

(a) Although the Eleventh Amendment does not by its terms bar an action by the state's own citizen, the immunity has consistently been upheld. (94 S.Ct. 1355, 39 L.Ed.2d 672.)

(b) An action may be barred even though the state itself is not named, if it seeks a judgment that must be paid from public funds in the state treasury. (94 S.Ct. 1356, 39 L.Ed.2d 672, citing Ford Motor Co.)

(c) An exception is recognized for an action seeking an injunction against unconstitutional acts, which operates prospectively to compel compliance with federal regulations. (94 S.Ct. 1356, 39 L.Ed.2d 673; see infra, §54.) But the label of equitable relief in the nature of restitution cannot support a judgment for money, which would be the effect of retroactive application of the injunction in the instant case. (94 S.Ct. 1357, 39 L.Ed.2d 674.)

(d) There was no congressional authorization for suit against a class of defendants that included state instrumentalities, and the state did not waive its immunity by participating in the program. "In deciding whether a State has waived its constitutional protection under the Eleventh Amendment, we will find waiver only where stated 'by the most express language or by such overwhelming implications from the text as will leave no room for any other reasonable construction.' " (94 S.Ct. 1361, 39 L.Ed.2d 678.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 243; 63 Cal. L. Rev. 1167; on effect of Edelman on award of attorneys' fees in public benefit class actions against the state or state officers, see 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1875; 9 U.S.F. L. Rev. 465; and see *Quern v. The fact that the federal government has agreed to indemnify a state agency against the costs of litigation, including adverse judgments, does not divest the state agency of Eleventh Amendment immunity. (Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Doe (1997) 519 U.S. 425, 117 S.Ct. 900, 902, 137 L.Ed.2d 55, 59.)

Ex parte Young (1908) 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714, held that a state official could be enjoined in a federal action from enforcing an unconstitutional state law. Later cases have extended the Young exception to permit a federal court to order prospective relief, even where the relief requires the future expenditure of state funds, where a state statute is unconstitutional or otherwise conflicts with federal law. (See Edelman v. Jordan (1974) 415 U.S. 651, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 1356, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, 673, supra, §53; Pennhurst State School & Hosp. v. Halderman (1984) 465 U.S. 89, 104 S.Ct. 900, 909, 79 L.Ed.2d 67, 79, infra, §56; 1 Rotunda, §2.12; 1 Tribe, §3-27.)

Papasan v. Allain (1986) 478 U.S. 265, 106 S.Ct. 2932, 2939, 92 L.Ed.2d 209, 226, was an action against state officials challenging Mississippi's distribution of public school land funds on various grounds, including a claimed denial of equal protection. The Court noted that the line between permitted and prohibited actions under the Eleventh Amendment is indistinct. "In discerning on which side of the line a particular case falls, we look to the substance rather than to the form of the relief sought, ... and will be guided by the policies underlying the decision in Ex parte Young." (106 S.Ct. 2941, 92 L.Ed.2d 227.) The Court then held that the Amendment does not bar a remedy necessary to correct a current violation of the Equal Protection Clause, even if the remedy might require expenditure of state funds. (106 S.Ct. 2943, 92 L.Ed.2d 229, 230.)

Frew v. Hawkins (2004) 540 U.S. 431, 124 S.Ct. 899, 157 L.Ed.2d 855, held that a consent decree was enforceable against state officials who had accepted it. The federal decree was entered to implement a federal statute, and the fact that the decree required the officials to implement many detailed procedures not specifically required by the federal statute did not make its enforcement violative of the Eleventh Amendment. (124 S.Ct. 904, 157 L.Ed.2d 864.)

[§ 55] Action For Injunctive or Declaratory Relief.

The bar of the Eleventh Amendment is not limited to actions seeking money damages. Hence where an action seeking an injunction against a state official was in reality an action against the state itself, it was barred by the Amendment. (See Cory v. White (1982) 457 U.S. 85, 102 S.Ct. 2325, 2329, 72 L.Ed.2d 694, 699 [Federal Interpleader Act does not give federal district court jurisdiction to resolve inconsistent death tax claims by officials of two states]; Idaho v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Idaho (1997) 521 U.S. 261, 117 S.Ct. 2028, 2040, 2043, 138 L.Ed.2d 438, 455, 459 [where Indian tribe's action seeking injunctive and declaratory relief against state was functional equivalent of quiet title action implicating special sovereignty interests, exception of Ex parte Young (1908) 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714, supra, §54, was not available]; Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 U.S. 44, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 134 L.Ed.2d 252, supra, §46; 86 Cal. L. Rev. 879 [Coeur d'Alene]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 269 [same]; 53 Stanf. L. Rev. 1311 [The Irony of Immunity: The Eleventh Amendment, Irreparable Injury, and Section 1983].)

The rule also applies to other types of actions seeking prospective relief. In Green v. Mansour (1985) 474 U.S. 64, 106 S.Ct. 423, 88 L.Ed.2d 371, plaintiffs claimed that defendant state official's calculation of benefits under the AFDC program violated federal law. Before final determination of the merits, Congress amended the statute, rendering any demand for injunctive relief moot. Plaintiffs still sought declaratory and "notice relief" that defendant's prior conduct violated federal law. Held, the Eleventh Amendment was a bar. Unless some exception applies, the Amendment precludes both prospective and retroactive relief. Quern v. Jordan (1979) 440 U.S. 332, 99 S.Ct. 1139, 59 L.Ed.2d 358, permitted "notice relief" ancillary to prospective relief enjoining violation of federal regulations. In the present case, there is no continuing violation of federal law, and hence no appropriate relief to which the requested declaratory relief can be ancillary. (106 S.Ct. 426, 427, 88 L.Ed.2d 377, 379.)

[§ 56] Action To Compel Compliance With State Law.

In Pennhurst State School & Hosp. v. Halderman (1984) 465 U.S. 89, 104 S.Ct. 900, 79 L.Ed.2d 67, plaintiffs sued defendant state and county officials, alleging that conditions at a state institution for the mentally retarded violated federal constitutional and statutory rights, as well as state law. The district court awarded injunctive relief on the basis of both federal and state law, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) The doctrine of Ex parte Young (1908) 209 U.S. 123, 28 S.Ct. 441, 52 L.Ed. 714, supra, §54, is based on the need to harmonize the principles of the Eleventh Amendment with the supremacy of federal law. (104 S.Ct. 911, 79 L.Ed.2d 81.) "This need to reconcile competing interests is wholly absent, however, when a plaintiff alleges that a state official has violated state law. A federal court's grant of relief against state officials on the basis of state law, whether prospective or retroactive, does not vindicate the supreme authority of federal law. On the contrary, it is difficult to think of a greater intrusion on state sovereignty than when a federal court instructs state officials on how to conform their conduct to state law." (104 S.Ct. 911, 79 L.Ed.2d 82.)

(b) The claim that once jurisdiction is established on the basis of a federal question, the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §73) permits consideration of state law claims without further consideration of the Eleventh Amendment is mistaken. Pendent jurisdiction is a judge-made doctrine inferred from the general language of Article III and cannot displace the explicit limitation on federal jurisdiction contained in the Eleventh Amendment. (104 S.Ct. 917, 79 L.Ed.2d 91.) That amendment bars a claim that state officials violated state law, and the bar "applies as well to state-law claims brought into federal court under pendent jurisdiction." (104 S.Ct. 919, 79 L.Ed.2d 92.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 61; 75 Cal. L. Rev. 129; 12 Hastings Const. L. Q. 643.)

The federal Constitution (Art. III, §2), and the federal Judicial Code (28 U.S.C., §1332), give the federal courts jurisdiction of actions between citizens of different states (including the territories and District of Columbia), who thus have a right to choose the federal courts at their option. (See Meredith v. Winter Haven (1943) 320 U.S. 228, 64 S.Ct. 7, 11, 88 L.Ed. 9, 13; Indianapolis v. Chase Nat. Bank (1941) 314 U.S. 63, 62 S.Ct. 15, 86 L.Ed. 47; *National Mut. Ins. D. Diversity Jurisdiction: Rules of Decision Act.

1. In General.

b. Erie Doctrine.

[§ 58] Erie Doctrine.

(1) Former Doctrine of Swift v. Tyson. A federal statute known as the Rules of Decision Act (28 U.S.C., §1652) provides that "[t]he laws of the several states, except where the Constitution or treaties of the United States or Acts of Congress otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in civil actions in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply." In Swift v. Tyson (1842) 41 U.S. 1, 10 L.Ed. 865, the court limited this rule of conformity to state statutes and permanent usages, or cases where a rule of property is involved, and held that in matters of general law, the federal courts need not follow the decisions of the local state courts but may apply their own views. (See Black & White Taxicab & Transfer Co. v. Brown & Yellow Taxicab & Transfer Co. (1928) 276 U.S. 518, 48 S.Ct. 404, 72 L.Ed. 681.)

(2) Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins. In Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins (1938) 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 1188, the court reexamined the problem and concluded that the doctrine of Swift v. Tyson was unsound in theory, discriminatory and unfair in practice, and an unconstitutional invasion of rights reserved to the states. "Except in matters governed by the federal Constitution or by acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state. And whether the law of the state shall be declared by its Legislature in a statute or by its highest court in a decision is not a matter of federal concern. There is no federal general common law. Congress has no power to declare substantive rules of common law applicable in a state whether they be local in their nature or 'general,' be they commercial law or a part of the law of torts." (58 S.Ct. 822, 82 L.Ed. 1194.)

The Erie decision "was premised on the theory that in diversity cases the rights enjoyed under local law should not vary because enforcement of those rights was sought in the federal court rather than in the state court. If recovery could not be had in the state court it should be denied in the federal court. Otherwise, those authorized to invoke the diversity jurisdiction would gain advantages over those confined to state courts." (Ragan v. Merchants Transfer & Warehouse Co. (1949) 337 U.S. 530, 69 S.Ct. 1233, 1234, 93 L.Ed. 1520, 1523.)

Later decisions reaffirmed the broad scope of the Erie rule. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York (1945) 326 U.S. 99, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 1470, 89 L.Ed. 2079, 2086, held that the rule applies to equity suits as well as actions at law. "[I]n all cases where a federal court is exercising jurisdiction solely because of the diversity of citizenship of the parties, the outcome of the litigation in the federal court should be substantially the same, so far as legal rules determine the outcome of a litigation, as it would be if tried in a State court." (See O'Melveny & Myers v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. (1994) 512 U.S. 79, 114 S.Ct. 2048, 2052, 2053, 129 L.Ed.2d 67, 73, 74 [in suit by FDIC, as receiver of federally insured bank, asserting California causes of action against attorneys who provided services to bank, California rule of decision governs issue whether corporate officers' knowledge is imputed to FDIC]; *Semtek Int. v. L. Rev. 467 [Semtek].) (On whether Erie doctrine applies to questions of maritime law, see Wilburn Boat Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1955) 348 U.S. 310, 75 S.Ct. 368, 99 L.Ed. 337; 64 Harv. Parnell* (1956) 352 U.S. 29, 77 S.Ct. 119, 1 L.Ed.2d 93; Miree v. DeKalb County, Georgia (1977) 433 U.S. 25, 97 S.Ct. 2490, 2495, 53 L.Ed.2d 557, 565 [following Parnell; federal interest was too speculative to justify application of federal law to transaction essentially of local concern]; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 131 [Parnell]; 45 Cal. L. Rev. 212 [same]; on converse problem of state law based on federal law in federal courts, see 83 Harv. L. Rev. 289.)

I. THE FEDERAL SYSTEM

D. Diversity Jurisdiction: Rules of Decision Act.

1. In General.

c. Determination of State Law.

[§ 59] Determination of State Law.

(1) In General. In applying the Erie rule (supra, §58), difficulty may be encountered in determining what is the state law, in the absence of a clear, controlling decision by the state's highest court. One aspect of the problem involves an analysis of appellate court decisions to discover whether the point has been the subject of a ruling or persuasive dictum. The other aspect concerns the type of state court, other than the highest court, whose decisions are invoked. (See 59 Harv. L. Rev. 1299.)

It has been held that the federal court must follow the decisions of intermediate state appellate courts, unless there is convincing evidence that the law is otherwise. (See Six Cos. of Calif. v. Joint Highway Dist. No. 13 of Calif. (1940) 311 U.S. 180, 61 S.Ct. 186, 85 L.Ed. 114 [decision of California Court of Appeal followed]; 59 Harv. L. Rev. 1299; 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 186.) The rule stops short, however, of requiring rigid adherence to the decisions of trial courts. In King v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America (1948) 333 U.S. 153, 68 S.Ct. 488, 92 L.Ed. 608, a ruling of a South Carolina Court of Common Pleas was held not binding because (a) there was no showing that the decisions of that court were accepted as precedents in the state, and (b) the decisions of the court were not reported and ascertainment of the holding by searching the records would be impracticable. The opinion adds a qualification, however: "Nor is our decision to be taken as promulgating a general rule that federal courts need never abide by determinations of state law by state trial courts. ... [O]ther situations in other states may well call for a different result." (68 S.Ct. 493, 92 L.Ed. 613.) (See 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 186.)

The federal courts cannot refuse jurisdiction on the ground of uncertainty of the state law, but must determine and apply it. (Meredith v. Winter Haven (1943) 320 U.S. 228, 64 S.Ct. 7, 11, 88 L.Ed. 9, 13; see 40 Cal. L. Rev. 305.) Moreover, where the state precedent is old and of doubtful strength, there has been some suggestion that the federal court may either seek to declare the probable present state view or determine the law of the case independently. (See 45 Cal. L. Rev. 87; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 294.)

C.R.C., Rule 29.8 provides a procedure by which the United States Supreme Court, a Court of Appeal, or a court of another jurisdiction may request a decision on a question of California law from the California Supreme Court. (See 9 Cal. Procedure (4th), Appeal, Supp., §11A.)

(2) Independent Review of District Court's Determination. In Salve Regina College v. Russell (1991) 499 U.S. 225, 111 S.Ct. 1217, 113 L.Ed.2d 190, the Court explained its rejection of the rule of deference as follows: "District judges preside alone over fast-paced trials: of necessity they devote much of their energy and resources to hearing witnesses and reviewing evidence. Similarly, the logistical burdens of trial advocacy limit the extent to which trial counsel is able to supplement the district judge's legal research with memoranda and briefs. ... Courts of appeals, on the other hand, are structurally suited to the collaborative judicial process that promotes decisional accuracy. With the record having been constructed below and settled for purposes of the appeal, appellate judges are able to devote their primary attention to legal issues. Perhaps most important, courts of appeals employ multi-judge panels ... that permit reflective dialogue and collective judgment." (111 S.Ct. 1221, 113 L.Ed.2d 198.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 309.)

Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins (1938) 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed. 118, supra, §58, makes only the state substantive law the rule of decision in federal courts; procedure remained subject to federal law. But the line between substance and procedure cannot be drawn with precision, and some "procedural" matters, particularly under the Federal Rules of Procedure, have so pronounced an effect on rights and liabilities that they may be regarded, in part at least, as "substantive" in nature. (See Bernhardt v. Polygraphic Co. of America (1956) 350 U.S. 198, 76 S.Ct. 273, 100 L.Ed. 199 [state law governs enforceability of arbitration agreement]; Byrd v. Blue Ridge Rural Elec. Cooperative (1958) 356 U.S. 525, 78 S.Ct. 893, 901, 2 L.Ed.2d 953, 962 [federal right to jury determination of employment relationship prevails over state rule committing determination to judge]; *Hanna v. The problem of substance versus procedure has been the subject of extensive comment. (See 60 Harv. L. Rev. 822; 62 Harv. L. Rev. 1030; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1516; 67 Harv. L. Rev. 150; 69 *Harv. In Woods v. Interstate Realty Co. (1949) 337 U.S. 535, 69 S.Ct. 1235, 93 L.Ed. 1524, a foreign corporation brought suit in the federal district court in Mississippi, without having qualified under Mississippi law by designating an agent for service of process. The state statute provided that any foreign corporation failing to comply with this provision "shall not be permitted to bring or maintain any action or suit in any of the courts of this State." Held, plaintiff could not maintain the action in the federal court. Under the rule of Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York (1945) 326 U.S. 99, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 89 L.Ed. 2079, supra, §58, a right that "local law creates but which it does not supply with a remedy is no right at all for purposes of enforcement in a federal court in a diversity case," and where, in these cases, one is barred from recovery in the state court, one "should likewise be barred in the federal court. The contrary result would create discriminations against citizens of the State in favor of those authorized to invoke the diversity jurisdiction of the federal courts." (69 S.Ct. 1237, 93 L.Ed. 1527.)

In Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp. (1949) 337 U.S. 541, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 1230, 93 L.Ed. 1528, 1541, a New Jersey statute provided that a corporation shareholder bringing a derivative action might be required to give security for costs and attorneys' fees. Federal Rule 23 did not impose this requirement. Held, the condition was binding in an action in the federal district court in New Jersey. It was not solely a regulation of procedure. It created a substantive liability on the part of the shareholder to pay costs if he or she did not prevail, and provided a procedure (requirement of an indemnity bond in advance) for enforcing the liability. (See 63 Harv. L. Rev. 126; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 708 [construction of Federal Rule 17(b) (capacity of corporation to sue) in cases where forum state would deny right to sue]; 40 Cal. L. Rev. 433.)

[§ 62] Statute of Limitations.

In Ragan v. Merchants Transfer & Warehouse Co. (1949) 337 U.S. 530, 69 S.Ct. 1233, 93 L.Ed. 1520, plaintiff filed a tort claim for personal injuries in the federal district court in Kansas. The state statute established a 2-year limitation period and provided that actions were deemed commenced on the date of service of summons, contrary to Federal Rule 3, under which the earlier filing of the complaint was the crucial date. Plaintiff's complaint was filed within 2 years, but defendant was served after the period had run. Held, though apparently maintainable under the federal rule, the action was barred. "[W]e look to local law to find the cause of action on which suit is brought. Since that cause of action is created by local law, the measure of it is to be found only in local law. It carries the same burden and is subject to the same defenses in the federal court as in the state court. ... It accrues and comes to an end when local law so declares. ... Where local law qualifies or abridges it, the federal court must follow suit. Otherwise there is a different measure of the cause of action in one court than in the other, and the principle of Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins is transgressed." (69 S.Ct. 1235, 93 L.Ed. 1523.) (See Walker v. Armco Steel Corp. (1980) 446 U.S. 740, 100 S.Ct. 1978, 1984, 64 L.Ed.2d 659, 669 [following Ragan]; 63 Harv. L. Rev. 126; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 627; 10 Cal. Western L. Rev. 131; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 332; 90 A.L.R.2d 265 [effect of federal court's adoption of state period of limitation in action to enforce federally created right].)

D. Diversity Jurisdiction: Rules of Decision Act.

4. Federal Statute or Policy.

a. Case Involving Federal Statute.

[§ 64] Case Involving Federal Statute.

The underlying theory of the Rules of Decision Act (supra, §58) and Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins (1938) 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed 1188, supra, §58, has no application to a suit based on a federal statute. Here the emphasis is not on uniformity of decision in all the courts sitting within a state, but rather on uniformity of decision in all courts throughout the U.S. that deal with the same federal right. (See 59 Harv. L. Rev. 966.)

In Holmberg v. Armbrrecht (1946) 327 U.S. 392, 66 S.Ct. 582, 90 L.Ed. 743, creditors of a Joint Stock Land Bank brought an action in equity in the federal court in New York to enforce the shareholders' liability imposed by the Federal Farm Loan Act. The defendants contended that the action was barred by the New York statute of limitations. Held, the action was maintainable, being subject to the equitable rules of laches rather than the state statute of limitations. In distinguishing Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. York (1945) 326 U.S. 99, 65 S.Ct. 1464, 89 L.Ed. 2079, supra, §58, the Court said: "We do not have the duty of a federal court, sitting as it were as a court of a State, to approximate as closely as may be State law in order to vindicate without discrimination a right derived solely from a State. We have the duty of federal courts, sitting as national courts throughout the country, to apply their own principles in enforcing an equitable right created by Congress. When Congress leaves to the federal courts the formulation of remedial details, it can hardly expect them to break with historic principles of equity in the enforcement of federally-created equitable rights." (66 S.Ct. 584, 90 L.Ed. 747.) (See Francis v. Southern Pac. Co. (1948) 333 U.S. 445, 68 S.Ct. 611, 92 L.Ed. 798 [federal rule allowing interstate railroads to stipulate against liability for ordinary negligence in free passes was matter of interpretation of Hepburn Act regulating issuance of free passes]; *Dice v. D. Diversity Jurisdiction: Rules of Decision Act.

4. Federal Statute or Policy.

b. Case Involving Federal Policy.

[§ 65] Case Involving Federal Policy.

A suggestion of a substantial field for federal common law comes from United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1947) 332 U.S. 301, 67 S.Ct. 1604, 91 L.Ed. 2067. The Court held that the liability, if any, of a third party tortfeasor to the United States government for injury to a soldier is not within the rule of Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins (1938) 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817, 82 L.Ed 1188, supra, §58, and hence is not governed by the law of the state where the tort occurred. The reasons are that (a) the government-soldier relation is distinctively and exclusively a creation of federal law, and (b) the liability is one that affects the federal treasury and is chiefly one of federal fiscal policy. Hence, the type of case is one that calls for uniform national treatment, rather than diversified local rulings.

In making this preliminary decision on choice of law, the court noted that there was no federal legislative basis for a determination of liability, and that therefore it was required to reach its decision by applying its view of the common law. Erie, said the court, repudiated the notion that the federal courts could make independent determinations of common law in areas essentially of local interest and state control, but did not wholly exclude common law from the federal courts. "In this sense therefore there remains what may be termed, for want of a better label, an area of 'federal common law' or perhaps more accurately 'law of independent federal judicial decision,' outside the constitutional realm, untouched by the Erie decision." (67 S.Ct. 1608, 91 L.Ed. 2072.) (See Sibbach v. Wilson & Co. (1941) 312 U.S. 1, 61 S.Ct. 422, 85 L.Ed. 479 [federal discovery rule requiring personal injury plaintiff to submit to physical examination]; United States v. Little Lake Misere Land Co. (1973) 412 U.S. 580, 93 S.Ct. 2389, 2397, 37 L.Ed.2d 187, 197; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1519 [Sibbach]; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1046 [discovery]; 75 Harv. L. Witkin Summary of California Law

E. Interstate Compacts and Reciprocal Agreements.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 66

[§ 66] Interstate Compacts and Reciprocal Agreements.

The Compact Clause of the federal Constitution (Art. I, §10, cl. 3) recognizes the authority of states, with the approval of Congress, to enter into compacts with each other to solve problems that call for joint action. The validity and construction of these agreements are federal questions on which the Supreme Court has the final determination. (See West Virginia v. Sims (1951) 341 U.S. 22, 71 S.Ct. 557, 560, 95 L.Ed. 713, 722 [eight-state compact to handle sewage]; Petty v. Tennessee-Missouri Bridge Com. (1959) 359 U.S. 275, 79 S.Ct. 785, 788, 3 L.Ed.2d 804, 808 [compact between Tennessee and Missouri to create bistate corporation to build bridge across Mississippi River]; California Radioactive Materials Management Forum v. Department of Health Services (1993) 15 C.A.4th 841, 851, 852, 19 C.R.2d 357; Kansas v. Colorado (1995) 514 U.S. 673, 115 S.Ct. 1733, 131 L.Ed.2d 759 [resolving disputes arising under Arkansas River Compact]; Kingston Constructors v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (1997) 14 C.4th 939, 951, 59 C.R.2d 866, 928 P.2d 581 [California trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction of action against transit authority created by compact between District of Columbia and states of Maryland and Virginia, which granted original jurisdiction to U.S. district courts, concurrent with courts of Maryland and Virginia]; 2 Rotunda, §12.5.)

In De Veau v. Braisted (1960) 363 U.S. 144, 80 S.Ct. 1146, 4 L.Ed.2d 1109, New York and New Jersey, after long legislative investigation, made a compact establishing a bistate Waterfront Commission to keep criminals away from the waterfront. Following congressional approval, the New York Waterfront Commission Act was passed, providing that no person could solicit dues for a union if any officer or agent of that union had been previously convicted of a felony and not pardoned, or otherwise relieved of the disability. Appellant, a union officer with a prior conviction of grand larceny, was suspended by the union after the district attorney threatened to prohibit the local from collecting dues. He sued for a declaratory judgment and injunction. Held, the statute was valid. It was not a bill of attainder (infra, §205) or ex post facto law (1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §10 et seq.), and did not deny due process.

The chief attack on the statute, which three dissenting justices supported, was that federal statutes had preempted the field of labor representation. But the majority declared that (a) the state law was part of a program to vindicate a compelling state interest in combating local crime in a particular industry, and (b) Congress, well aware of the purposes, had approved the compact and its implementing legislation. (80 S.Ct. 1150, 4 L.Ed.2d 1113.) (See infra, §§1308, 1309.)

California has entered into a number of these compacts. The following are illustrative:

(1) Pest Control Compact. (See Food & Ag.C. 8801 et seq.)

(2) Tahoe Regional Planning Compact. (Govt.C. 66801; see People v. El Dorado (1971) 5 C.3d 480, 96 C.R. 553, 487 P.2d 1193 [upholding Compact].)

(3) Tahoe Conservancy Agency Compact. (See Govt.C. 66900 et seq.)

(4) California-Nevada Interstate Compact. (See Water C. 5975 et seq. [water apportionment and conservation].)

(5) Interstate Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas. (See Pub.Res.C. 3275 et seq.)

(6) Interstate Civil Defense and Disaster Compact. (See Govt.C. 177 et seq.)

(7) Interstate Corrections Compact. (See P.C. 11189 et seq.)

(8) Interstate Agreement on Qualification of Educational Personnel. (See Educ.C. 12500 et seq.)

(9) Multistate Tax Compact. (Rev.C. 38006, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §333; see United States Steel Corp. v. Multistate Tax Com. (1978) 434 U.S. 452, 98 S.Ct. 799, 54 L.Ed.2d 682 [rejecting contention that act is unconstitutional because it has not received congressional approval].)

Notwithstanding the anticasino provisions of Cal. Const., Art. IV, §19(e), the Governor, with the approval of the Legislature, is authorized to negotiate and conclude compacts with federally recognized Indian tribes for casino-style gambling on Indian lands in California, in accordance with federal law. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §19(f).)

Although no constitutional enabling provision exists, the states may enter into reciprocal agreements of a cooperative nature, such as that contained in the Uniform Act To Secure the Attendance of Witnesses From Without the State in Criminal Cases (11 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), p. 1; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §9 et seq.). "The Constitution ... does not preclude resourcefulness of relationships between States on matters as to which there is no grant of power to Congress and as to which the range of authority restricted within an individual State is inadequate. By reciprocal, voluntary legislation the States have invented methods to accomplish fruitful and unprohibited ends." (New York v. O'Neill (1959) 359 U.S. 1, 79 S.Ct. 564, 571, 3 L.Ed.2d 585, 592; see 32 So. Cal. L. Rev. 405; 11 Stanf. L. Rev. 173 [state court decision that was reversed].)

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW
A. Constitution of California.
1. History.

[§ 67] History.

California was first under Spanish rule, then under Mexican; and from May 30, 1848, when the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo was signed, the Constitution of the United States extended over California.

The California Constitution was adopted by a convention on October 10, 1849, ratified by the people on November 13, 1849, and went into effect by proclamation on December 20, 1849. It was amended in 1857 and 1871. A new Constitution was adopted by a convention on March 3, 1879, ratified on May 7, 1879, and went into effect for election of officers on July 4, 1879, and completely on January 1, 1880. (See 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 697 [review of California Constitutions]; 15 Hastings Const. L. Q. 391 [reflections on state constitutions]; 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 389.) Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

A. Constitution of California. 2. Restrictive and Enabling Provisions.

[§ 68] Restrictive and Enabling Provisions.

(1) Restrictions on State Powers. The California Constitution, like other state constitutions, is generally a restriction on the powers of the state. Unless restricted by the federal or state Constitution, the Legislature has any power that it chooses to exercise. (Sheehan v. Scott (1905) 145 C. 684, 686, 79 P. 350; Fitts v. Superior Court (1936) 6 C.2d 230, 234, 57 P.2d 510 ["we do not look to the Constitution to determine whether the Legislature is authorized to do an act, but only to see if it is prohibited"]; Collins v. Riley (1944) 24 C.2d 912, 916, 152 P.2d 169; Delaney v. Lowery (1944) 25 C.2d 561, 568, 154 P.2d 674; Dean v. Kuchel (1951) 37 C.2d 97, 100, 230 P.2d 811; San Francisco v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1978) 22 C.3d 103, 112, 148 C.R. 626, 583 P.2d 151, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §§3, 241; Laborers' Int. Union of North America, Local 89, AFL-CIO v. El Dorado Landscape Co. (1989) 208 C.A.3d 993, 1000, 256 C.R. 632, citing the text; see 33 Cal. L. Rev. 147.)

Accordingly, all intendments favor legislation; i.e., constitutional limitations should be construed strictly, and constitutional amendments removing restrictions should be construed liberally. (Methodist Hosp. of Sacramento v. Saylor (1971) 5 C.3d 685, 691, 97 C.R. 1, 488 P.2d 161.)

(2) Enabling Provisions. The state Constitution also contains special enabling provisions that give the Legislature power to pass laws on certain subjects. Two important provisions are those for the Public Utilities Act (Art. XII, §5), and for the Workers' Compensation Act (Art. XIV, §4; 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §2).

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW A. Constitution of California. 3. Self-Executing Provisions.

[§ 69] Self-Executing Provisions.

(1) Construction of Provision. Early state constitutions were drafted on the theory that they should outline the broad principles of government, provide for officers and departments, and place certain restrictions on the various departments for the protection of individual rights, leaving lawmaking to the Legislature. The later tendency was to include a great deal of law.

As a result of this change in content, it has been declared that a constitutional provision will now be presumed to be self-executing, and will be given effect, without legislation, unless it clearly appears that this was not intended. (Winchester v. Howard (1902) 136 C. 432, 439, 64 P. 692, 69 P. 77; see Rose v. California (1942) 19 C.2d 713, 719, 123 P.2d 505 [former Art. I, §14, now Art. I, §19, compensation for damages in eminent domain]; Flood v. Riggs (1978) 80 C.A.3d 138, 154, 145 C.R. 573, citing the text [Art. II, §4, directing Legislature to prohibit improper election practices and provide for disqualification of electors]; on interpretation in general, see infra, §112 et seq.; 14 Hastings Const. L. Q. 789 ["Safe Schools" provision of Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(c)].)

However, in People v. Vega-Hernandez (1986) 179 C.A.3d 1084, 225 C.R. 209, the court held that a "directive to the Legislature to implement a constitutional provision is an expression of intent that the provision not be self-executing." (179 C.A.3d 1092.) The court distinguished Flood v. Riggs, where the amendment was not intended to alter existing statutes. Here, the opposite was true. The intention of Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(b), was to establish a new and unqualified right to restitution for crime victims. (179 C.A.3d 1094.) "The general rule we distill from the case law is this: a nonprohibitory constitutional provision which does not merely permit but directs the Legislature to implement a newly conferred right is not self-executing unless, as is extremely unlikely, the legislative directive is purposeless because the provision is so complete with respect to the nature of the right and the means of its enforcement as to deprive the Legislature of any discretion in either respect." (179 C.A.3d 1099.)

(2) Legislative Power. Although the Legislature may not impair or unreasonably burden a self-executing constitutional right, it may impose reasonable conditions on its exercise. (See Bergevin v. Curtz (1899) 127 C. 86, 88, 59 P. 312 [requirement that elector register before being allowed to vote]; Chesney v. Byram (1940) 15 C.2d 460, 463, 101 P.2d 1106 [requirement that veteran file affidavit with assessor to claim tax exemption]; Vinnicombe v. California (1959) 172 C.A.2d 54, 57, 341 P.2d 705 [former requirement that bond be furnished, as applied to plaintiff seeking damages in eminent domain].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Construction of Provision. The Safe Schools provision of Cal. Const., Art. II, §28, was relettered as Cal. Const., Art. II, §28(f), in 2008.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW B. Amendment of Constitutions. 1. Federal Constitution.

(1) In General. Amendments to the federal Constitution are proposed by: (a) a two-thirds vote of each house of Congress; or (b) a convention called by Congress on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the states. They are ratified by: (a) legislatures of three-fourths of the states; or (b) conventions in three-fourths of the states. (U.S. Const., Art. V.) All amendments except the Twenty-First have been ratified by the legislatures, and not by conventions. (See United States v. Sprague (1931) 282 U.S. 716, 51 S.Ct. 220, 75 L.Ed. 640; American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations v. Eu (1984) 36 C.3d 687, 691, 206 C.R. 89, 686 P.2d 609; Bramberg v. Jones (1999) 20 C.4th 1045, 1060, 1063, 86 C.R.2d 319, 978 P.2d 1240 [following American Federation; voters may not thwart or mandate operation of federal constitutional amendment process; holding Proposition 225, on congressional term limits, unconstitutional]; 109 Harv. L. Rev. 1747 [reconciling oath to uphold constitution with power to amend it]; 114 Harv. L. Rev. 1457 [The Irrelevance of Constitutional Amendments]; 24 Hastings Const. L. Q. 545 [ratification and expiration of pending amendment]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §12 et seq.)

The convention method has been the subject of extensive comment. (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1612 [proposed legislation]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 2010 [review of Edel, Constitutional Convention: Threat or Challenge]; 60 A.B.A.J. 285 [Amending the Constitution Through a Convention]; 11 Hastings Const. L. J. 641 [Convention Method: Its Meaning, Usefulness, and Wisdom]; 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 207 [It's Time for a New U.S. Constitution].)

(3) Limitations on Amending Power. The Constitution contains two express provisions that limit the amending power: (a) "[N]o state, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." (U.S. Const., Art. V,

§1.) (b) "[N]o new state shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other state; nor any state be formed by the junction of two or more states or parts of states, without the consent of the Legislatures of the states concerned as well as of Congress." (U.S. Const., Art. IV, §3.)

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 71

[§ 71] In General.

(1) Amendments. Amendments to the California Constitution are proposed by: (a) a two-thirds roll call vote of each house; or (b) an initiative petition signed by qualified voters equal to 8% of all votes cast for governor at the last election. (Cal. Const., Art. XVIII, §1 [legislative proposal]; Cal. Const., Art. II, §8 [initiative]; see Cal. Const., Art. II, §12 [no amendment may be submitted that names an individual to office].) They are ratified by a majority of the votes at the election. (Cal. Const., Art. XVIII, §4.) (See California Assn. of Retail Tobacconists v. California (2003) 109 C.A.4th 792, 833, 135 C.R.2d 224 [constitutional changes made as part of initiative Act creating commission to administer antismoking and early childhood development programs funded by increase in tobacco tax constituted constitutional amendment and not revision; Act provides for exclusive management and control by state and does not substantially alter basic government framework]; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 609 [state court review of validity of adoption of state constitutional amendment]; 75 Cal. L. Rev. 1473; 81 Harv. L. Rev. 697 [criticizing Kentucky decision that method of revision prescribed by constitution need not be followed if proposed constitution is submitted to voters]; 1 Stanf. L. Rev. 279 [excessive use of amending power in California]; on amendment of state constitutions generally, see 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §19 et seq.)

(2) Revision. A convention to revise the Constitution may be called by (a) roll call vote of two-thirds of the Legislature, and (b) approval of a majority of the voting members. (Cal. Const., Art. XVIII, §2; see 29 So. Cal. L. Rev. 391.)

The Constitutions of 1849 and 1879 (supra, §67) provided that the Legislature could propose "amendments," and it was generally felt that overall constitutional revision required a convention. In the election of November, 1962, Proposition 7, authorizing the Legislature to submit proposed constitutional revisions in the same manner as it submits proposed amendments, was approved; the proposition eliminated the necessity of a constitutional convention. To implement that authority, the California Constitution Revision Commission was created. (See 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 246.)

The Commission's completed study and recommendations are contained in three reports to the Legislature, made between 1966 and 1971. The recommendations were incorporated in a series of propositions dealing with separate articles, submitted to the voters in 1966 and subsequent elections. Some were defeated, but by 1976, most of the provisions of the Constitution had been renumbered, revised, or both. (See 1 Western State L. Rev. 48.)

(1) Amendments. In Californians For An Open Primary v. McPherson (2006) 38 C.4th 735, 43 C.R.3d 315, 134 P.3d 299, the court addressed an issue of first impression: the proper interpretation of the provision of Cal. Const., Art. XVIII, §1, requiring the Legislature to prepare and submit each proposed amendment to the California Constitution so that "it can be voted on separately." Proposition 60 proposed two constitutional changes. The first proposed change was designed to supersede a competing initiative measure regarding open primaries (Proposition 62); the second proposed change concerned the sale of surplus state property to help pay state bond obligations. Proposition 60 was challenged by supporters of Proposition 62 on the ground that it violated the separate-vote provision. The Court of Appeal agreed that the proposition violated this provision, but instead of striking the measure, the court ordered it bifurcated into two propositions, 60 and 60A. On appeal, the California Supreme Court, because of the impending election and ballot preparation deadlines, directed that the two amendments be placed on the ballot as separate provisions. Proposition 62 was defeated and Propositions 60 and 60A were adopted. Plaintiffs then challenged both Propositions 60 and 60A, claiming that the Court of Appeal erred in bifurcating the resolution and in directing that it be placed on the ballot as separate propositions, and seeking invalidation of the two provisions despite their adoption by the voters. Held, the proposed submission of two distinct changes in a single constitutional amendment violated the separate-vote provision, and the Court of Appeal erred in ordering the bifurcation. However, it is unnecessary and inappropriate to invalidate the adoption of either provision.

(a) The separate-vote provision applies to amendments, but not revisions, of the California Constitution. (38 C.4th 760.) Although it has existed in the California Constitution since 1879, no California decision has defined its scope. (38 C.4th 742.) However, the derivation and history of the provision show that it was meant to be a limitation on legislative power. (38 C.4th 747, 762.) This history includes decisions of sister states that have unanimously interpreted their own similar provisions as imposing limitations on the power of their legislatures to submit constitutional changes to the voters by "barring submissions that otherwise might cause voter confusion or constitute 'logrolling'--that is, the practice of combining two or more unrelated provisions in one measure, thereby forcing a single take-it-or-leave-it vote on matters that properly should be voted on separately." (38 C.4th 749.) Further, the separate-vote provision has survived other revisions and amendments to Article XVIII. (38 C.4th 760.)

(b) The separate-vote provision applies to disparate constitutional changes proposed in a single measure. The test for the proposed changes should be the same as that employed under the related single-subject provision (see text, §131 et seq.). Under this test, the word "amendment" as used in Cal. Const., Art. XVIII, §1, refers to a substantive change that is "reasonably germane to a common theme, purpose, or subject." (38 C.4th 763.) "The separate-vote provision does not impose a stricter standard requiring a showing of 'close' or 'functional' relatedness." (38 C.4th 777.) Hence, if, as is the case here, the Legislature proposes a resolution that presents in a single measure substantive changes to the California Constitution "that are not reasonably germane to a common theme, purpose, or subject," the presentation of that "measure to the voters as an amendment will violate the separate-vote provision." (38 C.4th 763.)

(c) The Court of Appeal erred in bifurcating the two measures. (38 C.4th 781.) Propositions 60 and 60A, as adopted by the voters after bifurcation, were never separately adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature, and nobody in the Legislature ever proposed that they be submitted to the voters as separate measures. (38 C.4th 780.) Allowing bifurcation of a measure that violates the separate-vote provision would permit the logrolling-type manipulation in the Legislature that the provision was partially designed to prevent. For example, a faction within the Legislature, knowing that it did not have the two-thirds vote necessary to pass an amendment, could join its change in a single measure with a disparate change supported by another faction. Both factions would vote for the measure "knowing that a court likely would find a separate-vote violation but thereafter could order the provisions bifurcated and presented separately to the electorate as discrete amendments." (38 C.4th 781.) The result would be that legislators constituting less than two-thirds of each house could place measures before the electorate in violation of the Constitution. (38 C.4th 782.)

(d) However, in the absence of evidence of manipulation and under the unusual circumstances presented here, it is inappropriate to invalidate the two measures that were separately submitted to, and approved by, the electorate. (38 C.4th 782.)

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

B. Amendment of Constitutions.

2. California Constitution.

b. No Revision by Initiative.

[§ 72] No Revision by Initiative.

A significant distinction between amendment and revision was made in McFadden v. Jordan (1948) 32 C.2d 330, 196 P.2d 787. An initiative measure was proposed to add to the Constitution 208 sections of over 21,000 words (as compared with the existing 347 sections of about 55,000 words). It covered a wide variety of distinct subjects, and had a modifying effect on practically every part of the existing instrument. Held, mandamus should issue to compel omission of the measure from the ballot. Describing it as substantially a revision rather than an amendment, the court held that only a constitutional convention could propose such far-reaching changes. "The initiative power ... applies only to the proposing and the adopting or rejecting of 'laws and amendments to the Constitution' and does not purport to extend to a constitutional revision." (32 C.2d 333.) (See Amador Valley Joint Union High School Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1978) 22 C.3d 208, 229, 149 C.R. 239, 583 P.2d 1281 [Article XIII A (Jarvis-Gann initiative) is valid amendment, not invalid revision; distinguishing McFadden]; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 461 [Judicial Review of Initiative Constitutional Amendments]; on legislative urgency measure establishing sufficiency of signatures to permit measure to go on ballot, see Brosnahan v. Eu (1982) 31 C.3d 1, 181 C.R. 100, 641 P.2d 200; on power of Legislature to propose revisions, see supra, § 71; on initiative generally, see infra, § 153 et seq.)

Raven v. Deukmejian (1990) 52 C.3d 336, 276 C.R. 326, 801 P.2d 1077, involved a constitutional challenge by mandamus to the validity of Proposition 115 (the Crime Victims Justice Reform Act) adopted at the June 5, 1990, primary election. Plaintiff taxpayers and voters attacked the measure as violative of the single-subject rule (infra, § 131) and the rule requiring constitutional "revisions" to be accomplished by more formal procedures than are contemplated for mere constitutional "amendments." Defendants were certain public officials and courts charged with the responsibility of implementing, enforcing, or applying the measure. Held, the measure did not violate the single-subject rule but did violate the constitutional revisions rule.

(a) "[O]ur revision/amendment analysis has a dual aspect, requiring us to examine both the quantitative and qualitative effects of the measure on our constitutional scheme. Substantial changes in either respect could amount to a revision." (52 C.3d 350.)

(b) Petitioners attacked the provision that amends Cal. Const., Art. I, § 24, relating to the independent nature of certain rights guaranteed by the California Constitution. Proposition 115 adds an important proviso to that section:

"In criminal cases the rights of a defendant to equal protection of the laws, to due process of law, to the assistance of counsel, to be personally present with counsel, to a speedy and public trial, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to confront the witnesses against him or her, to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures, to privacy, to not be compelled to be a witness against himself or herself, to not be placed twice in jeopardy for the same offense, and not to suffer the imposition of cruel or unusual punishment, shall be construed by the courts of this state in a manner consistent with the Constitution of the United States. This Constitution shall not be construed by the courts to afford greater rights to criminal defendants than those afforded by the Constitution of the United States, nor shall it be construed to afford greater rights to minors in juvenile proceedings on criminal causes than those afforded by the Constitution of the United States." (52 C.3d 350.)

(c) The quantitative effects of Proposition 115 are not more extensive than those presented in prior cases upholding initiative measures, e.g., Amador Valley and Brosnahan v. Brown (1982) 32 C.3d 236, 186 C.R. 30, 651 P.2d 274, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §104; but its qualitative effect is devastating; in essence it "would vest all judicial interpretive power, as to fundamental criminal defense rights, in the United States Supreme Court." (52 C.3d 352.) "In effect, new article I, section 24, would substantially alter the substance and integrity of the state Constitution as a document of independent force and effect. As an historical matter, Article I and its Declaration of Rights was viewed as the only available protection for our citizens charged with crimes, because the federal Constitution and its Bill of Rights was initially deemed to apply only to the conduct of the federal government." (52 C.3d 352.)

(d) The idea of deferring to the U.S. Supreme Court in interpreting identical or similar constitutional language found in the state and federal Constitutions is not new. The authorities acknowledge and support a general principle or policy of deference to U.S. Supreme Court decisions in the absence of good cause for departure or deviation. (52 C.3d 353.) But to mandate the state courts' blind obedience to these decisions, as a constitutional imperative, is an entirely different matter. "Proposition 115 imposes such an imperative for the first time in California's history. It substantially alters the preexisting constitutional scheme or framework heretofore extensively and repeatedly used by courts in interpreting and enforcing state constitutional protections. It directly contradicts the well-established jurisprudential principle that '[t]he judiciary, from the very nature of its powers and means given it by the Constitution, must possess the right to construe the Constitution in the last resort.' " (52 C.3d 354.)

Frierson* (1979) 25 C.3d 142, 158 C.R. 281, 599 P.2d 587, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §210, rejected revision challenges to initiative measures that included similar restrictions on judicial power. "But neither case involved a broad attack on state court authority to exercise independent judgment in construing a wide spectrum of important rights under the state Constitution." (52 C.3d 355.) (See Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 C.3d 492, 513, 286 C.R. 283, 816 P.2d 1309, infra, §269 [distinguishing Raven v. Deukmejian; term limits initiative]; 18 *Pepperdine L. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

1. In General.

a. Origin and Nature of Power.

[§ 73] Origin and Nature of Power.

(1) In General. The power of the judiciary to review the constitutionality of legislation is not derived from any specific provision in the federal Constitution, but was declared a necessary consequence of our system of government in the famous case of Marbury v. Madison (1803) 5 U.S. 137, 2 L.Ed. 60. President Adams appointed Marbury to the office of Justice of the Peace in the District of Columbia, but Adams' term ended before the commission was delivered. After President Jefferson took office, his Secretary of State, Madison, refused to deliver the commission. Marbury applied for a writ of mandamus from the Supreme Court to compel him to do so. An act of Congress authorized the Supreme Court to issue the writ in such a case, but the original jurisdiction of the court, as stated in the Constitution, included no such power. Held, the Supreme Court could not issue the writ, because of the express constitutional limitation on the jurisdiction of the court. Chief Justice Marshall reasoned that the Constitution was a grant of power to Congress, and that if it acted beyond its powers, its acts were void, and the judiciary was bound to uphold the Constitution by disregarding these acts. (See 1 Rotunda §§1.2, 1.3; 1 Tribe, §3-2.)

A state constitutional requirement for concurrence of more than a majority of supreme court justices to declare the unconstitutionality of a state statute is valid. (Ohio v. Akron Metropolitan Park Dist. For Summit County (1930) 281 U.S. 74, 50 S.Ct. 228, 230, 74 L.Ed. 710, 716; see 18 Cal. L. Rev. 439.)

(2) Texts and Law Reviews. Since the decision in Marbury v. Madison, the courts have exercised the power in numerous instances, and in spite of criticism and agitation for its curtailment, it is firmly entrenched as a basic principle of American government. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

1. In General.

b. Administrative Agency Cannot Exercise Power.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 74

[§ 74] Administrative Agency Cannot Exercise Power.

(1) Former Rule. In Southern Pac. Trans. Co. v. Public Util. Com. (1976) 18 C.3d 308, 134 C.R. 189, 556 P.2d 289, the Public Utilities Commission, in a proceeding involving the allocation of costs of installing and maintaining a safety device on a publicly used road, concluded that Pub.Util.C. 1202.3 was unconstitutionally vague, and rendered a decision contrary to its terms. The Supreme Court, on review, annulled the decision, holding the statute valid. But on the basic issue of the authority of the Commission to hold a statute unconstitutional, the court (5-2) upheld the authority in an elaborate footnote (18 C.3d 311, footnote 2), reasoning that an "administrative agency's obligation to adhere to the Constitution is not limited to mere promulgation of rules, but extends to the agency's application of legislation to the facts presented." Further, the Constitution and statutes grant the Commission "wide administrative, legislative and judicial powers" (see infra, §1084), and restrict review to the Supreme Court to determine whether the Commission has regularly pursued its authority, "including a determination of whether the order or decision under review violates any right of the petitioner under the Constitution of the United States or of this State" (see infra, §1108 et seq.).

Hand v. Board of Examiners in Veterinary Medicine (1977) 66 C.A.3d 605, 619, 136 C.R. 187, reconciled Southern Pac. Trans. Co. with a conflicting holding in California v. Superior Court (Veta Co.) (1974) 12 C.3d 237, 251, 115 C.R. 497, 524 P.2d 1281, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §321, by limiting the power to administrative agencies of constitutional origin. (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1682; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 180.)

(2) Constitutional Prohibition of Power. The majority ruling in Southern Pac. Trans. Co. was nullified in 1978 by the adoption of Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5. The section provides that an "administrative agency, including an administrative agency created by the Constitution or an initiative statute," has no power to do the following:

(a) "To declare a statute unenforceable, or refuse to enforce a statute, on the basis of it being unconstitutional unless an appellate court has made a determination" that the statute is unconstitutional. (Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(a).)

(b) "To declare a statute unconstitutional." (Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(b).)

(c) "To declare a statute unenforceable, or to refuse to enforce a statute on the basis that federal law or federal regulations prohibit the enforcement" of the statute, unless an appellate court has made a determination that enforcement of the statute is prohibited by federal law or regulations. (Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(c).)

(3) Interpretation of Constitutional Prohibition. Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(c) was construed in Reese v. Kizer (1988) 46 C.3d 996, 251 C.R. 299, 760 P.2d 495, holding that the Legislature may direct an administrative agency to implement a statute to the extent that it does not conflict with federal law. Welf.C. 14005.16, a provision of the Medi-Cal Act, provides for the determination of eligibility for benefits of married persons; and the Legislature, recognizing the possibility that the use of community property principles might be in conflict with federal law, directed (in an uncodified section) that the state Department of Health Services (DHS) should seek federal waivers necessary to implement the provisions, and that provisions for which waivers could not be obtained would not be implemented. (46 C.3d 999.) Plaintiffs brought a class action demanding implementation of Welf.C. 14005.16 notwithstanding DHS's determination that the statute was in conflict with federal law and regulations. The Court of Appeal ruled in their favor, construing the section as giving DHS the power to determine independently that Welf.C. 14005.16 was in conflict with federal law; to refuse to enforce it was an unconstitutional grant of power under Article III, §3.5(c). (46 C.3d 1001.) Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) "This question, one of first impression, has profound implications for the state's participation in a number of joint federal-state programs. To assure the continued availability of federal funds for these programs the state must operate plans which conform to the governing federal statutes and regulations. As these myriad guidelines are subject to constant change, the state plans must remain flexible in their application or risk running afoul of federal rules. To accomplish this purpose, the state statutes governing the operation of these plans contain numerous provisions which call upon the administering state agency to determine the impact of federal law and federal regulations and to avoid doing anything which would create a conflict therewith." (46 C.3d 998.)

(b) The uncodified section merely directs the agency to effectuate the statute to the maximum extent allowed under federal law as determined by the relevant federal authorities. Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(c), was designed to prevent agencies from using their own interpretation of the Constitution or federal law to thwart the mandates of the Legislature. "Its language, however, cannot reasonably be construed to place a restriction on the authority of the Legislature to limit the scope of its own enactments. By limiting the implementation of a statute as directed by the Legislature, an agency neither 'declares it unenforceable' nor 'refuses to enforce it.' Indeed, far from thwarting the Legislature's mandate, such action precisely fulfills it." (46 C.3d 1002.) (See Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Public Util. Com. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 881, 886, 5 C.R.3d 503 [Cal. Const., Art. III, §3.5(c) does not prohibit PUC from refusing to enforce statute that is inconsistent with another statute].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

1. In General.

c. Presumption of Validity.

[§ 75] Presumption of Validity.

A legislative act is presumed to be constitutional. Unconstitutionality must be clearly shown, and doubts will be resolved in favor of its validity. (Alabama State Federation of Labor, Local Union No. 103, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America v. McAdory (1945) 325 U.S. 450, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 1394, 89 L.Ed. 1725, 1737; People v. Globe Grain & Milling Co. (1930) 211 C. 121, 127, 294 P. 3; Lockyer v. San Francisco (2004) 33 C.4th 1055, 1086, 17 C.R.3d 225, 95 P.3d 459, quoting the text; Horeczko v. State Bd. of Registration (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1352, 1358, 284 C.R. 149; see 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §166 et seq.) Thus, the speculative possibility of discriminatory or other invalid administration of a statute is not a ground for holding it void. (People v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., supra; Estate of Monks (1941) 48 C.A.2d 603, 614, 120 P.2d 167; see infra, §703.)

In Queenside Hills Realty Co. v. Saxl (1946) 328 U.S. 80, 66 S.Ct. 850, 90 L.Ed. 1096, a statute required that lodging houses of nonfireproof construction existing prior to its enactment install automatic sprinkler systems. Appellant objected that since the law in terms applied only to existing houses, a new house could be erected without being subject to the regulation. Held, this was not a proper basis of attack. No showing was made that a new building had been constructed and the Legislature was competent to handle that situation when it arose by making the law applicable or by imposing different regulations.

American Motorists Ins. Co. v. Starnes (1976) 425 U.S. 637, 96 S.Ct. 1800, 48 L.Ed.2d 263, involved a Texas statute permitting suit (a) against a domestic corporation outside the county of its domicile only on proof by the plaintiff at a preliminary venue hearing by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she has a cause of action; but (b) against a foreign corporation outside of that county without this proof. Appellant, a foreign corporation sued outside the county of its residence, contended that the statute was unconstitutionally discriminatory in affording to domestic corporations an opportunity to preview its adversary's case and in requiring that adversary to prove his or her cause of action by a preponderance of the evidence. Held, the statute was not subject to constitutional challenge. Despite its seeming discriminatory operation, in practice, as counsel for both parties agreed, the proceedings are brief and prima facie proof is regarded as sufficient to meet the plaintiff's burden. Thus, the domestic corporate defendant does not have any appreciable advantage over the foreign corporate defendant. "Just as a statute nondiscriminatory on its face may be grossly discriminatory in its operation, ... so may a statute discriminatory on its face be nondiscriminatory in its operation." (96 S.Ct. 1804, 48 L.Ed.2d 271.)

However, where the statute limits the exercise of a fundamental right, particularly freedom of speech, the presumption is given less effect. (See 37 Cal. L. Rev. 122, 125; 21 So. Cal. L. Rev. 61, 63; infra, §406.) And in any case, "[c]onstitutional concepts are not static"; a law, deemed valid when originally enacted, may, in the light of modern thinking, be declared unconstitutional. (People v. Belous (1969) 71 C.2d 954, 967, 80 C.R. 354, 458 P.2d 194 [holding California abortion statute invalid].)

[§ 76] Nature of Standing Requirement.

(1) In General. Ordinarily, the courts will not consider the constitutionality of a statute at the request of a person whose rights are not affected by it. The party attacking it must therefore show some injury, actual or threatened. (Doremus v. Board of Education of Borough of Hawthorne (1952) 342 U.S. 429, 72 S.Ct. 394, 397, 96 L.Ed. 475, 479; Communist Party of the United States of America v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1961) 367 U.S. 1, 81 S.Ct. 1357, 1396, 6 L.Ed.2d 625, 674; McGowan v. Maryland (1961) 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1107, 6 L.Ed.2d 393, 401; Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction of Orange County, Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 278, 82 S.Ct. 275, 278, 7 L.Ed.2d 285, 289.)

In Allen v. Wright (1984) 468 U.S. 737, 104 S.Ct. 3315, 82 L.Ed.2d 556, infra, §77, the court, after pointing out that the standing doctrine "incorporates concepts concededly not susceptible of precise definition," said: "Determining standing in a particular case may be facilitated by clarifying principles or even clean rules developed in prior cases. Typically, however, the standing inquiry requires careful judicial examination of a complaint's allegations to ascertain whether the particular plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication of the particular claims asserted. Is the injury too abstract, or otherwise not appropriate, to be considered judicially cognizable? Is the line of causation between the illegal conduct and injury too attenuated? Is the prospect of obtaining relief from the injury as a result of a favorable ruling too speculative?" (104 S.Ct. 3325, 82 L.Ed.2d 569, 570.) (See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife (1992) 504 U.S. 555, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 364, infra, §139.)

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional. 2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality. a. In General. 2. Standing Not Shown.

[§ 77] Standing Not Shown.

In Alabama Power Co. v. Ickes (1938) 302 U.S. 464, 58 S.Ct. 300, 82 L.Ed. 374, a federal statute authorized contracts for financial assistance to municipalities for public power systems, and petitioner, a private power distributor in the particular area, sued to enjoin the making of the contracts. Held, it could not raise the constitutional issue of validity of the grants, because its only loss would be from lawful competition, and this would not be a legal injury. (58 S.Ct. 303, 82 L.Ed. 378.) (See 51 Harv. L. Rev. 897.)

In Franklin v. Peterson (1948) 87 C.A.2d 727, 197 P.2d 788, a Los Angeles city ordinance imposed license fees on persons engaged in various occupations and professions. Appellant, an attorney with a law office within the city, was held unable to raise the objection that the provisions of the ordinance were so broad as to include occupations carried on wholly outside the city by persons not residents of the city. (87 C.A.2d 730.)

In Linda R.S. v. Richard D. (1973) 410 U.S. 614, 93 S.Ct. 1146, 35 L.Ed.2d 536, the mother of an illegitimate child brought a class action in the federal district court to "enjoin" a local district attorney in Texas from forbidding or declining prosecution of the father of her illegitimate child. The Texas law, as judicially construed, provided for criminal prosecution only of married parents, and plaintiff mother challenged this as an unconstitutional discrimination. Held, dismissal for want of standing affirmed: "[A] private citizen lacks a judicially cognizable interest in the prosecution or nonprosecution of another. Appellant does have an interest in the support of her child. But given the special status of criminal prosecutions in our system, we hold that appellant has made an insufficient showing of a direct nexus between the vindication of her interest and the enforcement of the State's criminal laws." (93 S.Ct. 1149, 35 L.Ed.2d 541.) (See Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization (1976) 426 U.S. 26, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1927, 48 L.Ed.2d 450, 464 [following Linda R.S.]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 205 [Simon].)

In Allen v. Wright (1984) 468 U.S. 737, 104 S.Ct. 3315, 82 L.Ed.2d 556, plaintiffs, parents of black public school children, brought a nationwide class action against the IRS, alleging that it had not adopted sufficient standards and procedures to deny tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory private schools. Held, they lacked standing.

(a) An asserted right to have the government act in accordance with the law is not sufficient, standing alone, to confer jurisdiction. (104 S.Ct. 3326, 82 L.Ed.2d 571.) Standing may be based on "the stigmatizing injury often caused by racial discrimination," but only to those persons who are personally denied equal treatment. (104 S.Ct. 3326, 3327, 82 L.Ed.2d 572, citing Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis (1972) 407 U.S. 163, 92 S.Ct. 1965, 32 L.Ed.2d 627, infra, §698; O'shea v. Littleton (1974) 414 U.S. 488, 94 S.Ct. 669, 38 L.Ed.2d 674, and Rizzo v. Goode (1976) 423 U.S. 362, 96 S.Ct. 598, 46 L.Ed.2d 561, infra, §843.) "In each of those cases, the plaintiffs alleged official racial discrimination comparable to that alleged by respondents here. Yet standing was denied in each case because the plaintiffs were not personally subject to the challenged discrimination." (104 S.Ct. 3327, 82 L.Ed.2d 572.) If the abstract stigmatic injury were cognizable, "standing would extend nationwide to all members of the particular racial groups against which the Government was alleged to be discriminating by its grant of a tax exemption to a racially discriminatory school, regardless of the location of that school." (104 S.Ct. 3327, 82 L.Ed.2d 572, 573.)

(b) Plaintiffs further allege an identified injury--their children's diminished ability to receive an education in a racially integrated school. But this alleged injury cannot support standing because it is not fairly traceable to the government's conduct. The causal link--as in Simon--is too weak, for plaintiffs have not alleged that there were enough racially discriminatory private schools receiving tax exemptions in their communities to make an appreciable difference in public school integration. (104 S.Ct. 3328, 82 L.Ed.2d 574.)

In Bender v. Williamsport Area School Dist. (1986) 475 U.S. 534, 106 S.Ct. 1326, 89 L.Ed.2d 501, high school students were denied permission to use school facilities for meetings of a religious club. They sued the school district, school board and its members, and other school officials, claiming violation of freedom of speech. The district court entered judgment for plaintiffs. The school district did not appeal, but an individual board member did. Held, the board member lacked standing. (a) No relief was sought against him in his individual capacity. (106 S.Ct. 1332, 89 L.Ed.2d 512.) (b) As a board member sued in his official capacity, he had no personal stake in the outcome of the litigation. (106 S.Ct. 1332, 89 L.Ed.2d 512.) (c) His status as parent of a student did not confer standing, because he was not sued in that capacity. (106 S.Ct. 1334, 89 L.Ed.2d 514.)

Many other cases exhibit a lack of standing. The following are illustrative:

Diamond v. Charles (1986) 476 U.S. 54, 106 S.Ct. 1697, 90 L.Ed.2d 48, 63 [pediatrician who intervened to defend validity of state abortion statute had no standing to appeal where state did not].

United States v. Hays (1995) 515 U.S. 737, 115 S.Ct. 2431, 2433, 2436, 132 L.Ed.2d 635, 639, 643 [state residents who lived in one congressional district lacked standing to raise racial gerrymandering claim with respect to different congressional district].

Raines v. Byrd (1997) 521 U.S. 811, 117 S.Ct. 2312, 2322, 138 L.Ed.2d 849, 864 [individual members of Congress lacked standing to challenge constitutionality of Line Item Veto Act where they had insufficient "personal stake" in dispute and failed to allege sufficiently concrete injury]. (See 54 Stanf. L. Rev. 205 [Raines].)

Cornelius v. Los Angeles County Metropolitan Trans. Authority (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1761, 1768, 1770, 57 C.R.2d 618 [engineer lacked standing to challenge affirmative action program for award of contracts, where he was not licensed contractor and thus was legally unable to submit bids and lacked ownership interest in firms that could submit bids; applying Northeastern Florida Chapter of Associated General Contractors of America v. Jacksonville, Florida (1993) 508 U.S. 656, 113 S.Ct. 2297, 124 L.Ed.2d 586, infra, §78, and Adarand Constructors v. Pena (1995) 515 U.S. 200, 115 S.Ct. 2097, 132 L.Ed.2d 158, infra, §78].

People v. Superior Court (Manuel G.) (2002) 104 C.A.4th 915, 933, 128 C.R.2d 794 [minor lacked standing to assert equal protection challenge to statute prohibiting sealing of juvenile records of conviction for certain offenses; he was not treated differently than adult who commits same offense and cannot have conviction expunged under another provision].

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional. 2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality. a. In General. 3. Standing Shown.

In Board of Education of Central School Dist. No. 1 v. Allen (1968) 392 U.S. 236, 88 S.Ct. 1923, 20 L.Ed.2d 1060, state school officials were held to have standing to challenge the constitutionality of a statutory duty imposed on them by state law. Having "taken an oath to support the United States Constitution," and believing the law "to be unconstitutional, they are in the position of having to choose between violating their oath and taking a step ... that would be likely to bring their expulsion from office and also a reduction in state funds for their school districts. There can be no doubt that appellants thus have a 'personal stake in the outcome' of this litigation." (88 S.Ct. 1925, 20 L.Ed.2d 1064, footnote 5.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 173, 174.)

In Heckler v. Mathews (1984) 465 U.S. 728, 104 S.Ct. 1387, 79 L.Ed.2d 646, a nondependent husband was held to have standing to challenge a provision of the Social Security Act granting greater benefits to nondependent women than to similarly situated men, despite a provision of the Act that prevented him from receiving greater benefits even if he prevailed. The Court explained:

"[T]he right to equal treatment guaranteed by the Constitution is not coextensive with any substantive rights to the benefits denied the party discriminated against. Rather, as we have repeatedly emphasized, discrimination itself, by perpetuating 'archaic and stereotypic notions' or by stigmatizing members of the disfavored group ... , can cause serious non-economic injuries to those persons who are personally denied equal treatment solely because of their membership in a disfavored group. Accordingly ... the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by withdrawal of benefits from the favored class as well as by extension of benefits to the excluded class." (104 S.Ct. 1395, 79 L.Ed.2d 657.)

In Northeastern Florida Chapter of Associated General Contractors of America v. Jacksonville, Florida (1993) 508 U.S. 656, 113 S.Ct. 2297, 124 L.Ed.2d 586, plaintiff association of contractors challenged a city ordinance that gave preferential treatment to certain minority-owned businesses in the award of city contracts. The issue was whether, to make its challenge, plaintiff was required to show that one of its members would have received a contract absent the ordinance. Held, this showing was not required. (113 S.Ct. 2299, 124 L.Ed.2d 592.) The Court distinguished Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation (1990) 497 U.S. 871, 110 S.Ct. 3177, 111 L.Ed.2d 695, infra, §139, and Warth v. Seldin

(1975) 422 U.S. 490, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343, infra, §82, and followed Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Bakke (1978) 438 U.S. 265, 98 S.Ct. 2733, 57 L.Ed.2d 750, infra, §969. (113 S.Ct. 2301 et seq., 124 L.Ed.2d 595 et seq.) The Court, after reviewing the relevant decisions, explained the basis for its conclusion as follows:

"Singly and collectively, these cases stand for the following proposition: When the government erects a barrier that makes it more difficult for members of one group to obtain a benefit than it is for members of another group, a member of the former group seeking to challenge the barrier need not allege that he would have obtained the benefit but for the barrier in order to establish standing. The 'injury in fact' is the denial of equal treatment, resulting from the imposition of the barrier, not the ultimate inability to obtain the benefit. ... To establish standing, therefore, a party challenging a set-aside program like Jacksonville's need only demonstrate that it is able and ready to bid on contracts and that a discriminatory policy prevents it from doing so on an equal basis." (113 S.Ct. 2303, 124 L.Ed.2d 597.)

In Adarand Constructors v. Pena (1995) 515 U.S. 200, 115 S.Ct. 2097, 2104, 2105, 132 L.Ed.2d 158, 170, 172, an action seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against future use of subcontractor compensation clauses favoring disadvantaged businesses, the Court held that allegations that the use of these clauses denied plaintiff, a nondisadvantaged subcontractor, equal protection, and that plaintiff was very likely to bid on these contracts in the near future, were sufficient to establish that the injury was particularized and imminent.

In Environmental Protection Information Center v. Department of Forestry & Fire Protection (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1011, 50 C.R.2d 892, the court, disapproving its decision in Associated Boat Industries of Northern Calif. v. Marshall (1951) 104 C.A.2d 21, 230 P.2d 379, and declining to follow Lujan, held that an organization may be an "interested" party, for purposes of challenging an administrative regulation under Govt.C. 11350 (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Admin. Proc., §118), if it or its members may be impacted by the regulation. (43 C.A.4th 1016, 1017, 1020.) (See Coral Const. v. San Francisco (2004) 116 C.A.4th 6, 19, 10 C.R.3d 65 [although contractor failed to identify city contract on which it would be bidding, contractor had standing to challenge ordinance giving preferential treatment to women-and minority-owned businesses in bids for city contracts; contractor had suffered actual injury from application of ordinance in past and is ready, willing, and able to bid on future contracts but, under ordinance, will be forced to compete on unequal basis].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW
C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.
2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.
b. First Amendment Challenge.

[§ 79] First Amendment Challenge.

(1) In General. In the area of First Amendment freedoms, there is great danger in allowing a penal statute of broad scope to remain unchallenged until a party is able to show its injurious application to him or her. Accordingly, the cases relax the requirement. Thus, in Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 737, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, 653, infra, §371, appellant was allowed to challenge Maryland's moving picture censorship law for failure to provide adequate procedural safeguards, even though he could have had a license for his own picture if he had asked for it. (See N.A.A.C.P. v. Button (1963) 371 U.S. 415, 83 S.Ct. 328, 338, 9 L.Ed.2d 405, 415, infra, §383; Fort v. Civil Service Com. of Alameda (1964) 61 C.2d 331, 339, 38 C.R. 625, 392 P.2d 385, infra, §255 [exception is appropriate wherever overly broad or vague provision, "if allowed to stand, would amount to a coercive restraint on free speech"]; on uncertainty and overbreadth challenge to statute on First Amendment grounds, see infra, §408 et seq.)

But unless a substantial First Amendment right is involved, a litigant whose conduct is precisely proscribed by a statute has no standing to argue that the law is vague or overly broad as applied to others. (See Broadrick v. Oklahoma (1973) 413 U.S. 601, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2915, 37 L.Ed.2d 830, 838 [state employees clearly covered by valid prohibitions against partisan political activity had no standing to attack overbreadth of statute that might affect rights of others]; Vallejo v. Adult Books (1985) 167 C.A.3d 1169, 1175, 213 C.R. 143; In re Andre P. (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1164, 1170, 277 C.R. 363 [following Broadrick; statute clearly pertained to defendant's conduct]; Bailey v. National City (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1319, 1331, 277 C.R. 427 [rule regulating right of "intimate," but not "expressive," association is not subject to First Amendment overbreadth challenge by defendant whose conduct is proscribed by rule].)

(2) Strict View: No Standing. In Laird v. Tatum (1972) 408 U.S. 1, 92 S.Ct. 2318, 33 L.Ed.2d 154, a stricter view of standing in the First Amendment area was declared. Plaintiffs were civilians whose lawful political actions in protesting governmental policies were subjected to surveillance by Army intelligence personnel. The Army alleged the need for data on potential disruptions, so that its duties under 10 U.S.C., §311 (to suppress domestic insurrection when ordered to do so by the President) could be performed without resort to "blind force." Plaintiffs sought declaratory and injunctive relief on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated. They did not allege any misuse of the information collected, asserting only that the Army's actions "chilled" their exercise of First Amendment rights. Held (5-4), the complaint was properly dismissed. The Army's actions were neither "regulatory, proscriptive, [n]or compulsory in nature," and "[a]llegations of a subjective 'chill' are not an adequate substitute for a claim of specific present objective

The dissent agreed with the Court of Appeals that the Army's activities imposed a "present inhibiting effect." (92 S.Ct. 2331, 2337, 33 L.Ed.2d 170, 177.) (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 135 [Laird v. Tatum; suggesting that majority introduced innovation in requiring immediate threat, explainable in part by class nature of action]; 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 254 [Laird v. Tatum]; 30 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 976 [The Justiciability and Constitutionality of Political Intelligence Gathering].)

(3) Liberal View: Standing Shown. In Secretary of State of Maryland v. Joseph H. Munson Co. (1984) 467 U.S. 947, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 81 L.Ed.2d 786, respondent, a professional fundraiser, challenged a statute that prohibited any charitable organization from paying expenses of more than 25% of the amount it raised. Held, standing was shown. Respondent has suffered both threatened and actual injury and hence satisfies the "case or controversy" requirement of Article III; and, because the case involves a First Amendment challenge to an allegedly overbroad statute, respondent may assert the third-party rights of the charities regardless of their own ability to do so. (104 S.Ct. 2847, 81 L.Ed.2d 794, 796.)

The basic theory was stated in People v. Fogelson (1978) 21 C.3d 158, 145 C.R. 542, 577 P.2d 677: "[R]eview is permitted in these circumstances because case-by-case adjudication may not fully vindicate the constitutional rights at stake. The actual application of an overbroad ordinance is not its only vice; it may also have a substantial deterrent impact or 'chilling effect' on the exercise of constitutional rights. Faced with a regulation that threatens to impose sanctions upon free speech or the free exercise of religion, significant numbers of persons may elect not to exercise those rather than undergo the rigors of litigation and the risk of eventual punishment. While it is crucial that persons not be punished for having exercised their rights of free speech and religion, it is equally important that they not be deterred from such conduct." (21 C.3d 163.)

(1) In General. See Matrixx Initiatives v. Doe (2006) 138 C.A.4th 872, 879, 42 C.R.3d 79 [litigants who were not parties in underlying defamation action had no standing to challenge discovery of identities of Doe defendants in that action; there was no close relationship between litigants and persons for whom they were seeking First Amendment protection, and litigants failed to demonstrate that there was some hindrance to ability of Doe defendants to protect their own interests].

A taxpayer may challenge the constitutionality of a tax or the expenditure of tax money by the state or its subdivisions. (See Crampton v. Zabriskie (1879) 101 U.S. 601, 25 L.Ed. 1070 [issuance of county bonds in violation of state statute]; Ames v. Hermosa Beach (1971) 16 C.A.3d 146, 150, 93 C.R. 786 [enforcement of overbroad penal statute]; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1265; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 224; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §155.)

C.C.P. 526a has been used to claim or deny standing in a variety of situations. (See Fiske v. Gillespie (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1243, 1245, 1246, 246 C.R. 552 [C.C.P. 526a does not authorize general challenge with no reference to specific application of statute; actual expenditure or threat of expenditure of public funds is required]; Ventura v. State Bar (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1055, 1059, 1060, 41 C.R.2d 794 [district attorney had standing to challenge State Bar's calculation of Hudson fees deduction from bar dues (see infra, §385), because payment of those fees by district attorney would constitute financial contribution to political and ideological activities and hence would subject him to taxpayer's action under C.C.P. 526a for waste of public funds]; Cornelius v. Los Angeles County Metropolitan Trans. Authority (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1761, 1768, 1770, 57 C.R.2d 618 [plaintiff who did not reside or pay property taxes in county, but alleged that he paid state income taxes and county sales and gasoline taxes, lacked standing under C.C.P. 526a to challenge affirmative action program].)

In White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 764, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, infra, §575, a city taxpayer brought an action under C.C.P. 526a against defendant Chief of Police to enjoin expenditure of public funds for an intelligence gathering program. Held, the taxpayer had standing to sue. Laird v. Tatum (1972) 408 U.S. 1, 92 S.Ct. 2318, 33 L.Ed.2d 154, supra, §79, and other federal cases holding that no justiciable issue was presented for a federal court action under the Civil Rights Act, are distinguishable. Under C.C.P. 526a, no showing of special damage to the particular taxpayer is necessary; the primary purpose of the statute is to enable a large body of the citizenry to challenge governmental action that would otherwise go unchallenged because of the standing requirement. (13 C.3d 764.) The use of C.C.P. 526a to challenge the legality of ongoing police practices is established by Wirin v. Horrall (1948) 85 C.A.2d 497, 193 P.2d 470, and Wirin v. Parker (1957) 48 C.2d 890, 313 P.2d 844, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §354. (13 C.3d 763.) (See Blair v. Pitchess (1971) 5 C.3d 258, 96 C.R. 42, 486 P.2d 1242, 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §145 [liberal construction of statute]; on taxpayers' actions generally, see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §144 et seq.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW
C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.
2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.
d. Federal Taxpayer.

[§ 81] Federal Taxpayer.

(1) Attack on Levy of Tax. A federal taxpayer may object to the levy of a tax against him or her before it is paid. (United States v. Butler (1936) 297 U.S. 1, 56 S.Ct. 312, 315, 80 L.Ed. 477, 484; see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §108; 1 Rotunda, §2.13.)

(2) Action To Enjoin Expenditure: Sufficient Showing. It was originally thought that a taxpayer's interest was too remote to permit him or her to enjoin a federal appropriation. Hence, in Massachusetts v. Mellon (1923) 262 U.S. 447, 43 S.Ct. 597, 601, 67 L.Ed. 1078, 1085, relief was denied to a federal taxpayer who attacked the Maternity Act (a statute appropriating funds for promoting infant hygiene) as unconstitutional. (See 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §155.)

The Mellon case was distinguished and limited in Flast v. Cohen (1968) 392 U.S. 83, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed.2d 947. Appellants sought to enjoin defendant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare from expending federal funds under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. The ground urged was that some of the money was being used to further instruction in religious schools in violation of the First Amendment (infra, §529). Held, appellants had standing to sue.

(a) Basic concepts. "Justiciability," a word of uncertain meaning, embraces the ideas of nonjusticiable question (e.g., political question or moot case) and standing; and it has become a blend of constitutional requirements and policy considerations. (88 S.Ct. 1951, 20 L.Ed.2d 960.) "Standing" is an aspect of justiciability--an amorphous concept that sometimes serves as a shorthand expression for all elements of justiciability. (88 S.Ct. 1952, 20 L.Ed.2d 961.) But standing raises the question whether the person whose standing is challenged is a proper party to request adjudication of a particular issue, not whether the issue itself is justiciable. (88 S.Ct. 1952, 20 L.Ed.2d 961.)

(b) Test of standing of federal taxpayer. A federal taxpayer must establish two links: First, a logical link between his or her status and the type of legislative enactment attacked; i.e., the taxpayer may only attack the exercise of congressional power under the Taxing and Spending Clause of U.S. Const., Art. I, §8. Second, a link between the taxpayer's status and the precise nature of the constitutional infringement; i.e., the taxpayer must show that the enactment is a violation of the taxing and spending power, not merely that it is beyond congressional powers. (88 S.Ct.

(c) Mellon distinguished. The taxpayer in Mellon satisfied only the first link: He attacked a federal spending program, but merely contended that the Maternity Act invaded state powers reserved by the Tenth Amendment. (88 S.Ct. 1955, 20 L.Ed.2d 964.)

(d) Standing established. The taxpayer in the instant case satisfied both requirements: The Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses (infra, §507 et seq.) were drafted because of fear that the taxing and spending power would be used to favor one religion or support religion, and the Establishment Clause operates as a specific constitutional limitation on the exercise of the taxing and spending power. (88 S.Ct. 1954, 20 L.Ed.2d 963.)

(e) Conclusion. "[A] taxpayer will have standing consistent with Article III to invoke federal judicial power when he alleges that congressional action under the taxing and spending clause is in derogation of those constitutional provisions which operate to restrict the exercise of the taxing and spending power. The taxpayer's allegation in such cases would be that his tax money is being extracted and spent in violation of specific constitutional protections against such abuses of legislative power. Such an injury is appropriate for judicial redress, and the taxpayer has established the necessary nexus between his status and the nature of the allegedly unconstitutional action to support his claim of standing to secure judicial review." (88 S.Ct. 1955, 20 L.Ed.2d 967.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 224, 296; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 660; 16 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 444.)

(3) Action To Enjoin Expenditure: Insufficient Showing. In United States v. Richardson (1974) 418 U.S. 166, 94 S.Ct. 2940, 41 L.Ed.2d 678, plaintiff, a federal taxpayer, sued to compel defendant Secretary of the Treasury to give an accounting of expenditures by the Central Intelligence Agency and to enjoin further publication of statements that did not reflect those expenditures. Held, the taxpayer lacked standing. He was seeking "to employ a federal court as a forum in which to air his generalized grievances about the conduct of the government." (94 S.Ct. 2946, 41 L.Ed.2d 687.) "It can be argued that if respondent is not permitted to litigate this issue, no one can do so. In a very real sense, the absence of any particular individual or class to litigate these claims gives support to the argument that the subject matter is committed to the surveillance of Congress, and ultimately to the political process." (94 S.Ct. 2947, 41 L.Ed.2d 689.)

Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee To Stop The War (1974) 418 U.S. 208, 94 S.Ct. 2925, 41 L.Ed.2d 706, took the same position regarding a class suit against the Secretary of Defense and others challenging the military policy allowing members of Congress to retain their status in the Armed Forces Reserves.

Both opinions emphasize the continued vitality of Ex parte Levitt (1937) 302 U.S. 633, 58 S.Ct. 1, 82 L.Ed. 493, holding that standing may not be based on an interest held in common by all members of the public. (94 S.Ct. 2932, 2937, 41 L.Ed.2d 716, 720.) (See Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization (1976) 426 U.S. 26, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1924, 48 L.Ed.2d 450, 461; Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State (1982) 454 U.S. 464, 102 S.Ct. 752, 758, 70 L.Ed.2d 700, 712; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 236 [Richardson and Schlesinger]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 205 [Simon]; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 12, 196 [Valley Forge]; 27 Hastings L. J. 213 [Richardson and Schlesinger].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Attack on Levy of Tax. See 1 Rotunda 4th, §2.13.(3) Action To Enjoin Expenditure: Insufficient Showing. In Hein v. Freedom From Religion Foundation (2007) 551 U.S. 587, 127 S.Ct. 2553, 2564, 168 L.Ed.2d 424, 439, the Court refused to extend the exception for taxpayer standing established in Flast v. Cohen (1968) 392 U.S. 83, 88 S.Ct. 1942, 20 L.Ed.2d 947, text, p. 177, to expenditures by the Executive Branch that do not involve an Act of Congress. Plaintiff members of an organization that opposed government endorsement of religion claimed that expenditures for conferences held in connection with the Executive Branch's faith-based initiatives program violated the Establishment Clause by promoting religious community groups over secular ones. Held, in the plurality opinion and judgment of the court, plaintiffs lacked standing. Two justices would have overruled Flast (127 S.Ct. 2573, 168 L.Ed. 2d 450), and four justices would have applied Flast to provide standing here (127 S.Ct. 2584, 168 L.Ed. 2d 462). (See 121 Harv. L. Rev.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional. 2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality. e. Member of Injured Class. 1. General Rule and Warth Test.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 82

[§ 82] General Rule and Warth Test.

(1) Theory of Rule. In consonance with the general doctrine that injury must be shown (supra, §76), it is often declared that, where a statute is alleged to be discriminatory, only a member of the class discriminated against can attack it. (Tileston v. Ullman (1943) 318 U.S. 44, 63 S.Ct. 493, 87 L.Ed. 603; In re Nowak (1921) 184 C. 701, 709, 195 P. 402; Fox-Woodsum Lumber Co. v. Bank of America (1936) 7 C.2d 14, 22, 59 P.2d 1019.) However, this rule is not inflexible, and several important exceptions have been recognized. (See infra, §84 et seq.; 1 Tribe, §3-15 et seq.; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 645 [functional analysis of standing]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §147 et seq.)

(2) Warth Case. In Warth v. Seldin (1975) 422 U.S. 490, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343, plaintiffs, residents of Rochester, sued an adjacent town, claiming that its zoning ordinance excluded persons of low and moderate income from living there. Held, they lacked standing because they asserted only a remote possibility of harm to their personal interests. (95 S.Ct. 2209, 45 L.Ed.2d 360.) "[A] plaintiff who seeks to challenge exclusionary zoning practices must allege specific, concrete facts demonstrating that the challenged practices harm him, and that he personally would benefit in a tangible way from the courts' intervention." (95 S.Ct. 2210, 45 L.Ed.2d 360.) (See Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization (1976) 426 U.S. 26, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1927, 48 L.Ed.2d 450, 464 [following Warth]; Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp. (1977) 429 U.S. 252, 97 S.Ct. 555, 562, 50 L.Ed.2d 450, 464 [Warth test met]; Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Com. (1977) 432 U.S. 333, 97 S.Ct. 2434, 2440, 53 L.Ed.2d 383, 394 [same]; Allen v. Wright (1984) 468 U.S. 737, 104 S.Ct. 3315, 82 L.Ed.2d 556, supra, §77; on rejection of Warth test in California, see infra, §83.)

In Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood (1979) 441 U.S. 91, 99 S.Ct. 1601, 60 L.Ed.2d 66, infra, §89, an action alleging discrimination in housing under Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 (see infra, §851), the Court restated the doctrine as follows:

(a) The inquiry into standing "involves both constitutional limitations on federal-court jurisdiction and prudential limitations on its exercise." (99 S.Ct. 1607, 60 L.Ed.2d 76, quoting Warth.)

(b) Even when a case falls within constitutional boundaries, a plaintiff may still lack standing under "the prudential principles by which the judiciary seeks to avoid deciding questions of broad social import where no individual rights would be vindicated and to limit access to the federal courts to those litigants best suited to assert a particular claim." (99 S.Ct. 1608, 60 L.Ed.2d 77.) The plaintiff must normally assert an injury peculiar to himself or herself or to a distinct group of which the plaintiff is a part, rather than an injury shared in substantially equal measure by all or a large class; and the plaintiff must also assert his or her own legal interests rather than those of third parties. (99 S.Ct. 1608, 60 L.Ed.2d 77, citing Warth.)

(3) Texts and Law Reviews. The Warth rule has been the subject of numerous texts and law reviews. (See 1 Rotunda §2.13; 1 Tribe §3-18; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 423 [analysis and criticism]; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 189; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 205 [Simon case]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1632 [standing of member of Congress to challenge validity of executive action or policy]; 91 Harv. L. Rev. 1373 [Insular Majorities Unabated]; 3 Hastings Const. L. Q. 485; 23 Pacific L. J. 223 [later cases]; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 183 [federal standing since Warth]; 9 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1247 [aftermath of Warth]; 29 Stanf. L. Rev. 323.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.

e. Member of Injured Class.

2. California Test.

[§ 83] California Test.

In Stocks v. Irvine (1981) 114 C.A.3d 520, 170 C.R. 724, six plaintiffs alleged that by exclusionary zoning practices (see infra, §1030 et seq.), defendant city of Irvine had made it impossible for them to find affordable housing in the city, thereby denying them equal protection of the law. The trial judge, relying on Warth v. Seldin (1975) 422 U.S. 490, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343, supra, §82, granted summary judgment for defendants on the ground that plaintiffs had no standing to sue. The appellate court first observed that the relevant facts in Warth were identical to those in this case (114 C.A.3d 526, 527), and that the sole issue was standing to sue. Hence, for purposes of the appeal, "we will assume that Irvine's zoning practices purposefully excluded low and middle income persons, violating constitutional and statutory rights of the persons excluded and of those persons harmed by the adverse effect on the regional housing market." (114 C.A.3d 526.) Held, summary judgment reversed.

(a) Warth standing requirements are not binding on California courts. Although Warth was cited in two California cases, neither adopted its standing test. (114 C.A.3d 528, 530.)

(b) Sufficiency of complaint. Plaintiffs alleged facts showing that they are aggrieved and have a real and personal interest in the outcome of the litigation. "[T]o challenge exclusionary zoning practices in California does not depend on plaintiffs showing a 'substantial probability' that their injuries would not exist but for those practices. It is sufficient that they show a causal relationship by alleging that the city's zoning practices have excluded them from desired residency in that city or that those practices have raised their housing costs outside that city by adversely affecting the regional housing market. Such allegations show membership in the class discriminated against and the 'real' and 'personal' interest that entitles plaintiffs to bring the action. To require more would deny access to the courts to plaintiffs with legitimate justiciable causes." (114 C.A.3d 532.)

(c) Effect on judicial review. "Applying the Warth standard in California would have the effect of putting the most restrictive zoning ordinances beyond judicial review. The more restrictive a city's zoning becomes, the less likely it will be that a builder will propose a housing project that would satisfy the needs of the excluded group. Such an act by a builder becomes an increasingly futile gesture. Without a proposed project, however, plaintiffs could not meet Warth's 'substantial probability' test." (114 C.A.3d 533.)

(d) Conclusion. "We do not share the concern expressed in Warth that plaintiffs' dependence on third party builders to obtain housing may render a trial court's decision advisory. We are concerned that making plaintiffs' standing to challenge exclusionary zoning practices dependent on the discretionary acts of the housing construction industry (i.e., the proposal of projects) will unjustly deny the plaintiffs access to judicial redress." (114 C.A.3d 537.)

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.

e. Member of Injured Class.

3. Class Member Unable To Challenge Law.

[§ 84] Class Member Unable To Challenge Law.

When there is no way in which a member of the class discriminated against can raise the objection, anyone affected by the statute can raise it. In Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. of Calif. (1920) 184 C. 26, 192 P. 1021, the validity of the Workers' Compensation Act was attacked by an employer on the ground that it gave the Commission jurisdiction, where the contract of employment was made within the state, over injuries incurred outside the state, only when the workers were residents of California, and not when they were nonresidents. Because the Commission could not consider the claim of a nonresident employee, the Supreme Court could never hear his or her objection to the constitutionality of the Act. Held, the employer could raise the question. (184 C. 33.)

N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 1170, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, 1497, infra, §379, is another illustration. Petitioner, an organization, was allowed to challenge an order for disclosure of its membership lists. Obviously, the individual members affected could not raise the issue without disclosing their membership and nullifying their claimed right of privacy.

In Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349, a Massachusetts statute authorized distribution of contraceptives only by physicians and pharmacists, and only to married persons. B, not a physician or pharmacist, delivered a lecture, after which he gave a contraceptive to a woman described as "an unmarried adult." He was convicted of violating the statute, and his standing to attack its discriminatory nature (see infra, §560) was challenged by the state on the grounds that he was married and not prohibited from obtaining contraceptives himself, and, unlike the appellants in Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, infra, §85, he had no professional relationship to the distributee. Held, he had standing. The unmarried user of the contraceptive was not subject to prosecution, and had no forum to assert his or her own rights. (92 S.Ct. 1034, 31 L.Ed.2d 356.) (See Craig v. Boren (1976) 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 457, 50 L.Ed.2d 397, 406 [following Eisenstadt; licensed vendor of beer was entitled to challenge statute discriminating against males under 21 years of age]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 116 [Eisenstadt]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 426 [same].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.

e. Member of Injured Class.

4. Complainant Injured by Law.

[§ 85] Complainant Injured by Law.

Where the complainant is injured by legislation, he or she may raise the question of the constitutionality of the statute, even though the complainant is not a member of the class discriminated against. Thus, in Buchanan v. Warley (1917) 245 U.S. 60, 38 S.Ct. 16, 62 L.Ed. 149, an ordinance prohibited "colored" persons from living in a particular area. Plaintiff, a Caucasian, contracted to sell to a Black, and, in a suit for specific performance, defendant relied on the ordinance as a defense. Plaintiff claimed that it was an unconstitutional discrimination against "colored" persons. Held, the claim could be heard, because the law injured the plaintiff by narrowing the market for his land. (See Clinton v. New York (1998) 524 U.S. 417, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 2099, 141 L.Ed.2d 393, 409 [health care providers had standing to challenge constitutionality of Line Item Veto Act where they were injured by President's cancellation of statutory protection against federal government's right to recoup taxes that state had levied against Medicaid providers]; Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 6, footnote 1, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529, infra, §765 [employer could raise constitutional rights of women excluded from employment in bar because statute subjected employer to criminal liability and license revocation for hiring them]; Gowens v. Bakersfield (1960) 179 C.A.2d 282, 285, 3 C.R. 746, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §50; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 667 [standing of white defendant to challenge exclusion of Blacks from jury lists]; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1667 [standing of Blacks already admitted to white school to challenge segregated school system]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §145 et seq.)

In Barrows v. Jackson (1953) 346 U.S. 249, 73 S.Ct. 1031, 97 L.Ed. 1586, defendant, a Caucasian who sold land and permitted non-Caucasians to occupy it, was sued for damages by other parties to a racial restrictive covenant, and challenged the constitutionality of this attempted indirect enforcement of the covenant (infra, §746). The situation was unique in that the attack was not on a statute but against state court action (infra, §700), and it would have been difficult if not impossible for the members of the class discriminated against to raise the issue. Hence, the Court thought that the reasons underlying its rule of practice were outweighed by the need to protect the fundamental rights involved. "The relation between the coercion exerted on respondent and her possible pecuniary loss thereby is so close to the purpose of the restrictive covenant, to violate the constitutional rights of those discriminated against, that respondent is the only effective adversary of the unworthy covenant in its last stand. She will be permitted to protect herself and, by so doing, close the gap to the use of this covenant, so universally condemned by the courts." (73 S.Ct. 1036, 97 L.Ed. 1597.) (See

In Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 1679, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, 512, infra, §560, appellants, officials of the Planned Parenthood League, were held to have standing to raise the constitutional rights of married persons to advise on contraception, where they had a professional relationship with these persons. The court relied on Truax v. Raich (1915) 239 U.S. 33, 36 S.Ct. 7, 60 L.Ed. 131, infra, §721, where an employee asserted the rights of an employer; Pierce v. Jackson, supra. (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 162; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 423.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

2. Standing: Interest of Party Attacking Constitutionality.

e. Member of Injured Class.

5. Challenge by State, Subdivision, or Court.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 86

[§ 86] Challenge by State, Subdivision, or Court.

(1) State. The state, in enforcing a regulatory statute, may challenge an invalid exemption from its terms. If the exemption is unconstitutional it has no effect (see infra, §105), and those who are not exempted have no basis for a challenge on equal protection grounds. Hence, unless the state can make a challenge, the exempted class escapes operation of the statute and those not exempted would be denied equal protection. (People v. Building Maintenance Contractors' Assn. (1953) 41 C.2d 719, 726, 264 P.2d 31; see 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1157 [standing of U.S. to sue to enjoin city segregative practice]; on standing of state to challenge federal statute, see infra, §87.)

(2) State Agencies. As a general rule, state agencies may not raise constitutional challenges to actions by other state agencies. This rule applies where the right is a First Amendment right designed to protect individuals from government encroachment. (Native Amer. Heritage Com. v. Board of Trustees (1996) 51 C.A.4th 675, 683, 59 C.R.2d 402 [university lacked standing to challenge actions of California Native American Heritage Commission].)

(3) Special Districts. Fire protection and water districts, as political subdivisions of the state, lack standing to challenge the constitutionality of statutes allocating property tax revenues. (San Miguel Consol. Fire Protection Dist. v. Davis (1994) 25 C.A.4th 134, 143, 145, 30 C.R.2d 343.)

(4) County or City. A city or county has a limited right to challenge state legislation: (a) A subordinate political entity, as a "creature" of the state, cannot challenge state action as violative of the entity's rights under the Due Process, Equal Protection, or Contract Clauses. (b) But it has standing to raise the claim of federal supremacy or commerce power. "State action cannot be so insulated from scrutiny that encroachments on the federal government's constitutional powers go unredressed." (Star-Kist Foods v. Los Angeles (1986) 42 C.3d 1, 8, 9, 227 C.R. 391, 719 P.2d 987; see Selinger v. City Council (1989) 216 C.A.3d 259, 271, 264 C.R. 499 [city had standing to challenge constitutionality of Permit Streamlining Act, Govt.C. 65920 et seq., where citizens' rights were bound up with city's duties under law and short time period for making challenges created obstacles to citizens' ability to protect own rights].)

(5) Court. A court has jurisdiction to determine its own jurisdiction; hence, it may inquire into the constitutionality of a statute conferring jurisdiction on it. (Mendoza v. Small Claims Court of Los Angeles Judicial Dist. (1958) 49 C.2d 668, 670, 321 P.2d 9.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) County or City. See Santa Monica v. Stewart (2005) 126 C.A.4th 43, 60, 24 C.R.3d 72 [distinguishing Selinger v. City Council (1989) 216 C.A.3d 259, 264 C.R. 499, text, p. 184; city lacked standing to challenge constitutionality of voter-approved initiative; city had minimal responsibilities under initiative, and there was no allegation of actual or threatened action that would injure city or violate its rights]; Sanchez v. Modesto (2006) 145 C.A.4th 660, 676, 51 C.R.3d 821 [following Selinger; city had standing on behalf of citizens to assert equal protection challenge to race-related changes in voting system; citizens' equal protection interest was inextricably bound up with city's interest in continuing present system and there were genuine obstacles to citizens asserting own rights]; San Diego v. San Diego NORML (2008) 165 C.A.4th 798, 818, 81 C.R.3d 461 [although counties lacked standing to obtain advisory opinion declaring entirety of Medical Marijuana Program Act invalid under preemption principles, they had standing to challenge those portions of Act that created obligation on them to adopt and operate identification card system, which obligation would be obviated if Act were preempted by federal law].

a. General Rule.

[§ 87] General Rule.

It has long been held that the courts have no power to make decisions on political matters; relief is limited to cases in which the rights of persons or property are involved. (Luther v. Borden (1849) 48 U.S. 1, 7 How. 1, 12 L.Ed. 581, 598; Taylor v. Beckham (1900) 178 U.S. 548, 20 S.Ct. 890, 44 L.Ed. 1187; Pacific States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Oregon (1912) 223 U.S. 118, 32 S.Ct. 224, 56 L.Ed. 377; Coleman v. Miller (1939) 307 U.S. 433, 59 S.Ct. 972, 83 L.Ed. 1385; Colegrove v. Green (1946) 328 U.S. 549, 66 S.Ct. 1198, 90 L.Ed. 1432, infra, §88; Nixon v. United States (1993) 506 U.S. 224, 113 S.Ct. 732, 735, 740, 122 L.Ed.2d 1, 8,14; see 1 Rotunda, §2.16; 1 Tribe, §3-13; 62 Cal. L. Rev. 1344; 78 Cal. L. Rev. 633; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §123.)

In Massachusetts v. Mellon (1923) 262 U.S. 447, 43 S.Ct. 597, 67 L.Ed. 1078, Massachusetts sought to enjoin federal officers from administering the federal Maternity Act on the ground that the Act was beyond the powers of Congress and a usurpation of the reserved powers of the state. Held, the question was merely one of political power, there being no injury to property rights of the state itself. (43 S.Ct. 600, 67 L.Ed. 1084.) (See Hopkins Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Cleary (1935) 296 U.S. 315, 56 S.Ct. 235, 242, 80 L.Ed. 251, 260 [federal statute attempted to permit conversion of state corporations to federal corporations in violation of local law; state, to protect its citizens from these unauthorized acts of the corporations, could bring the action]; see 56 Harv. L. Rev. 800.)

"The political question doctrine excludes from judicial review those controversies which revolve around policy choices and value determinations constitutionally committed for resolution to the halls of Congress or the confines of the Executive Branch." (Japan Whaling Assn. v. American Cetacean Soc. (1986) 478 U.S. 221, 106 S.Ct. 2860, 2866, 92 L.Ed.2d 166, 178, infra, §88.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

3. Political Questions.

b. Illustrations.

[§ 88] Illustrations.

(1) Election Matters. In Colegrove v. Green (1946) 328 U.S. 549, 66 S.Ct. 1198, 90 L.Ed. 1432, an Illinois statute set up congressional election districts differing widely in population. Plaintiffs, contending that the result was to deny them, as voters, the equal protection of the laws, sought to restrain officials from conducting an election. The Court denied relief without a majority opinion (three justices holding the question political and hence nonjusticiable, one holding it a proper case for discretionary refusal of equitable relief, and three dissenting). (See Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960) 364 U.S. 339, 81 S.Ct. 125, 130, 5 L.Ed.2d 110, 116, infra, §238 [distinguishing Colegrove and holding question justiciable]; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 1057 [Legislative Apportionment and the Federal Courts].)

A new and more liberal approach to election matters was inaugurated in Baker v. Carr (1962) 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, holding that the issue of discriminatory apportionment of election districts was justiciable. (See infra, §294.)

(2) Republican Form of Government. The political question restriction was invoked to refuse judicial determination of questions arising under Article IV, §4 of the federal Constitution: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and, on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence." (Pacific States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Oregon (1912) 223 U.S. 118, 32 S.Ct. 224, 228, 56 L.Ed. 377, 382, 386; see 1 Rotunda, §2.16; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 681; 62 So. Cal. L. Rev. 369 [Guarantee Clause as basis for federal prosecution of state and local officials]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §634 et seq.)

(3) International Relations. The courts may construe treaties and executive agreements. Hence, the decision of the Secretary of Commerce, not to certify Japan for harvesting whales in excess of the quotas established by the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling, could be challenged in federal court. (Japan Whaling Assn. v. American Cetacean Soc. (1986) 478 U.S. 221, 106 S.Ct. 2860, 2866, 92 L.Ed.2d 166, 178; see 1 Rotunda, §2.16; 17 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1135 [foreign relations]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §124.)

(4) Constitutional Amendments. The Supreme Court has refused to decide the validity of a state's ratification of an amendment. (Coleman v. Miller (1939) 307 U.S. 433, 59 S.Ct. 972, 980, 83 L.Ed. 1385, 1394.) However, the courts have decided other issues relating to the amendment process. (See Hawke v. Smith (1920) 253 U.S. 221, 40 S.Ct. 495, 501, 64 L.Ed. 871, 877 [state requirement that legislative ratification be submitted to referendum was unconstitutional].)

In American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations v. Eu (1984) 36 C.3d 687, 206 C.R. 89, 686 P.2d 609, petitioners challenged a proposed initiative that would require the state Legislature to apply to Congress to convene a constitutional convention, arguing that under Article V only the Legislature could make this application. The court rejected the claim that the constitutional issues were nonjusticiable. Assuming that Coleman v. Miller remains controlling on the issues it decided, it did not overrule Hawke v. Smith, which permitted removal of a proposal from a state election ballot on the ground of nonconformity with Article V. Determination of whether the present initiative should be removed from the ballot depends on the meaning of the word "Legislatures" in Article V, and that word is subject to judicial construction. (36 C.3d 698, 699.) (See 1 Rotunda, §2.16; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 745 [case for judicial restraint in resolving Article V issues].)

(5) State Budget Act. In Schabarum v. California Legislature (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1205, 70 C.R.2d 745, plaintiff contended that an aspect of the State Budget Act violated a constitutional limitation on legislative spending. Held, the constitutional question is justiciable. Because the enactment of a budget bill is a legislative function, the usual rules of judicial review that accord appropriate deference to the legislative and executive exercise of political prerogatives must be applied. But deference does not mean complete forbearance. The potential for unwarranted judicial intrusion may be addressed by limiting discovery and trial to the appropriate scope of the justiciable issue. (60 C.A.4th 1217.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional. 4. Case or Controversy Requirement in Federal Courts. a. Constitutional Limitation.

[§ 89] Constitutional Limitation.

Under U.S. Const., Article III, §2, jurisdiction of the federal courts extends only to cases and controversies. Unless a proceeding comes within this classification, the federal courts will not take cognizance of it and will not declare constitutional rights. (See Muskrat v. United States (1911) 219 U.S. 346, 31 S.Ct. 250, 55 L.Ed. 246; Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1947) 331 U.S. 549, 67 S.Ct. 1409, 1419, 91 L.Ed. 1666, 1679; Doremus v. Board of Education of Borough of Hawthorne (1952) 342 U.S. 429, 72 S.Ct. 394, 397, 96 L.Ed. 475, 479; Poe v. Ullman (1961) 367 U.S. 497, 81 S.Ct. 1752, 1756, 6 L.Ed.2d 989, 995; Bender v. Williamsport Area School Dist. (1986) 475 U.S. 534, 106 S.Ct. 1326, 89 L.Ed.2d 501, supra, §77; Diamond v. Charles (1986) 476 U.S. 54, 106 S.Ct. 1697, 1704, 90 L.Ed.2d 48, 56; 1 Rotunda, §2.13; 1 Tribe, §3-7 et seq.; 74 Cal. L. Rev. 1915; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 297, 1698, 1727; 42 Stanf. L. Rev. 227 [discussing lack of coherent definition of "case" and suggesting model definition].)

In Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood (1979) 441 U.S. 91, 99 S.Ct. 1601, 60 L.Ed.2d 66, the court explained the requirements of Article III as follows:

(a) The constitutional limits eliminate claims in which the plaintiff has failed to make out a case or controversy between himself or herself and the defendant. To satisfy Article III, the plaintiff must show that he or she personally has suffered some actual or threatened injury as a result of the defendant's conduct. (99 S.Ct. 1608, 60 L.Ed.2d 76.)

(b) Congress may by legislation expand standing to the full extent permitted by Article III, thus permitting litigation by one who would otherwise be barred by the prudential standing rules; but in no event may Congress abrogate the Article III minima. A plaintiff must always have personally suffered a distinct and palpable injury that is likely to be redressed if the requested relief is granted. (99 S.Ct. 1608, 60 L.Ed.2d 77.) (See Los Angeles v. Lyons (1983) 461 U.S. 95, 103 S.Ct. 1660, 1665, 75 L.Ed.2d 675, 684 [threat of injury must be "real and immediate," not "conjectural" or "hypothetical"]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 215 [Lyons].)

See 1 Rotunda 4th, §2.13; 95 Cal. L. Rev. 849 [Article III standing in class action context].

[§ 90] Jurisdiction Rejected.

(1) Where Party Declines To Violate Law. In United Public Workers of America (C.I.O.) v. Mitchell (1947) 330 U.S. 75, 67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754, federal employees who desired to engage in political activity in violation of the Hatch Act, but who had not actually done so, brought an action to restrain its enforcement. Held, there was no justiciable controversy. It is well known that the federal courts "do not render advisory opinions. For adjudication of constitutional issues 'concrete legal issues, presented in actual cases, not abstractions' are requisite." (67 S.Ct. 564, 91 L.Ed 766.) (See 66 Harv. L. Rev. 121; cf. Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction of Orange County, Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 278, 82 S.Ct. 275, 279, 7 L.Ed.2d 285, 290, infra, §409 [loyalty oath]; on relaxation of related abstention doctrine when First Amendment rights are asserted, see infra, §96.)

(2) Where State Declines To Enforce Law. In Poe v. Ullman (1961) 367 U.S. 497, 81 S.Ct. 1752, 6 L.Ed.2d 989, a Connecticut statute prohibited using contraceptive devices and giving medical advice in their use. Three declaratory relief actions were brought against the state's attorney. Two were by married persons alleging their need for medical advice on contraceptives, and their inability to obtain the contraceptives or information concerning them, and one was by their doctor, alleging deprivation of liberty and property without due process in preventing him from giving the advice. The state court sustained demurrers. Held, dismissed for lack of a justiciable question (5-4 decision).

The "undeviating policy of nullification by Connecticut of its anti-contraceptive laws throughout all the long years that they have been on the statute books bespeaks more than prosecutorial paralysis." (81 S.Ct. 1755, 6 L.Ed.2d 995.) Further, the "fact that Connecticut has not chosen to press the enforcement of this statute deprives these controversies of the immediacy which is an indispensable condition of constitutional adjudication. This Court cannot be umpire to debates concerning harmless, empty shadows. To find it necessary to pass on these statutes now, in order to protect appellants from the hazards of prosecution, would be to close our eyes to reality." (81 S.Ct. 1758, 6 L.Ed.2d 999.) (See 50 Cal. L. Rev. 137; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 58.)

(3) Moot Case. Under Article III, the federal courts have no jurisdiction to review a case that, as a result of subsequent acts or events, has become moot. (See DeFunis v. Odegaard (1974) 416 U.S. 312, 94 S.Ct. 1704, 1706, 1707, 40 L.Ed.2d 164, 169, 170, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §643 [white petitioner's challenge of law school's admissions policies as racially discriminatory rendered moot by petitioner's subsequent admission and impending graduation from school]; Preiser v. Newkirk (1975) 422 U.S. 395, 95 S.Ct. 2330, 2334, 45 L.Ed.2d 272, 278 [prisoner's constitutional challenge of transfer from medium to maximum security prison was rendered moot by subsequent transfers to medium and then minimum security prisons]; Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona (1997) 520 U.S. 43, 117 S.Ct. 1055, 1069, 137 L.Ed.2d 170, 193, 194 [when plaintiff, who as state employee challenged state constitutional amendment declaring English as official language, took job in private sector where speech was not governed by amendment, she lacked still vital claim for prospective relief]; 1 Rotunda, §2.13; 1 Tribe, §3-11.)

[§ 91] Jurisdiction Accepted.

On a strict application of the case or controversy limitation, the Supreme Court originally held that federal courts could not render a declaratory judgment. (Liberty Warehouse Co. v. Grannis (1927) 273 U.S. 70, 47 S.Ct. 282, 71 L.Ed. 541.) However, in Nashville, Chattanooga, & St. Louis Ry. v. Wallace (1933) 288 U.S. 249, 53 S.Ct. 345, 77 L.Ed. 730, appellant railway attacked the constitutionality of a Tennessee statute by a proceeding for declaratory relief. The state court upheld the law and appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. Held, this was a case or controversy of which the court would take jurisdiction; the state statute required an actual controversy as a prerequisite to relief, and it was not necessary that this be in the traditional form of procedure. (53 S.Ct. 346, 77 L.Ed. 734.) (On the subsequently enacted Federal Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C., §§2201, 2202, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. of Hartford Connecticut v. Haworth (1937) 300 U.S. 227, 57 S.Ct. 461, 81 L.Ed. 617; Super Tire Engineering Co. v. McCorkle (1974) 416 U.S. 115, 94 S.Ct. 1694, 1698, 40 L.Ed.2d 1, 8 [Federal Act satisfied]; 26 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 239.)

In Public Util. Com. of Calif. v. United States (1958) 355 U.S. 534, 78 S.Ct. 446, 450, 2 L.Ed.2d 470, 475, the California Public Utilities Code was amended to regulate rates of carriers dealing with the federal Government. A constitutional attack was upheld where it appeared that, by its official orders, the Commission had plainly indicated an intent to enforce the statute.

In Times Film Corp. v. Chicago (1961) 365 U.S. 43, 81 S.Ct. 391, 5 L.Ed.2d 403, infra, §371, involving censorship of a movie, the district court and Court of Appeals thought no justiciable controversy was presented without evidence of the film itself. The Supreme Court held, however, that because petitioner had submitted the film and was denied a permit, a broad justiciable issue was presented on whether the constitutional free speech provision guarantees complete freedom to exhibit any kind of motion picture once. (81 S.Ct. 393, 5 L.Ed.2d 405.) (See 75 Harv. L. Rev. 51.)

In Federal Election Com. v. Wisconsin Right to Life (2007) 551 U.S. 449, 127 S.Ct. 2652, 168 L.Ed.2d 329, Supp., infra, §256, plaintiff, a nonprofit advocacy corporation, challenged a provision of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 prohibiting the use of corporate or union treasury funds to pay for "electioneering communications" broadcast within a specified time before an election. Although the election had passed and plaintiff did not assert that it had a continuing interest in running the same ads that it had pulled before the election, it planned to run similar ads in the future. The Court held that this case fit within the exception to mootness for disputes capable of repetition, yet evading review. The exception applies where (1) the duration of the challenged action is too short to fully litigate the issue prior to cessation or expiration, and (2) there is a reasonable expectation that the same controversy involving the same complaining party will recur. (127 S.Ct. 2662, 168 L.Ed.2d 341.)

The U.S. Supreme Court, in reviewing a state court decision, will not pass on the federal question of constitutionality where the judgment can be upheld on an alternative, nonfederal ground, e.g., on an interpretation of the state law. (Minnesota v. National Tea Co. (1940) 309 U.S. 551, 60 S.Ct. 676, 678, 84 L.Ed. 920, 923; Herb v. Pitcairn (1945) 324 U.S. 117, 65 S.Ct. 459, 463, 89 L.Ed. 789, 794; cf. Alabama State Federation of Labor, Local Union No. 103, United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America v. McAdory (1945) 325 U.S. 450, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 1393, 89 L.Ed. 1725, 1739 [federal courts should ordinarily not attempt to determine constitutionality of state statute in reviewing declaratory judgment unless state court has first had opportunity to construe statute]; see 1 Rotunda, §2.15; 1 Tribe, §§3-29, 3-30; 43 Cal. L. Rev. 234; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 943; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 604; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 769 [scholarly tradition and Supreme Court]; 4 Pepperdine L. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §354 et seq.; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §122.)

The same policy of "judicial self restraint" is followed in avoidance of unnecessary determination of constitutional issues arising under federal law. (See Peters v. Hobby (1955) 349 U.S. 331, 75 S.Ct. 790, 794, 99 L.Ed. 1129, 1137; United States v. International Union United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW-CIO) (1957) 352 U.S. 567, 77 S.Ct. 529, 540, 1 L.Ed.2d 563, 577; United States v. Raines (1960) 362 U.S. 17, 80 S.Ct. 519, 522, 4 L.Ed.2d 524, 529, infra, §846.)

"There are, of course, two primary types of federal abstention. The first, usually referred to as Pullman abstention, involves an inquiry focused on the possibility that the state courts may interpret a challenged state statute so as to eliminate or at least to alter materially, the constitutional question presented . . . The second type is Younger abstention, in which the court is primarily concerned, in an equitable setting, with considerations of comity and federalism, both as they relate to the State's interest in pursuing an on-going state proceeding, and as they involve the ability of the state courts to consider federal constitutional claims in that context." (Ohio Bureau of Emp. Services v. Hodory (1977) 431 U.S. 471, 97 S.Ct. 1898, 1902, 52 L.Ed.2d 513, 520; see infra, §§93, 94; on third type of abstention, referred to as Burford doctrine, see infra, §95.)

Louisiana State Bd. of Med. Examiners* (1964) 375 U.S. 411, 84 S.Ct. 461, 11 L.Ed.2d 440, to return to federal court; although plaintiff originally chose federal court as its forum, by time it filed state court claims, there was no federal forum with jurisdiction over matter for plaintiff to go back to]; 1 Rotunda 4th, §2.15; 93 Cal. [§ 93] Pullman Abstention.

If state remedies have not been exhausted, or a state court decision might be based on a nonfederal ground, or a state statute might be interpreted so as to eliminate and thus avoid determination of the constitutional issue, the case may be dismissed, continued, or remanded on the ground that the issue is "not ripe for decision." (See Railroad Com. of Texas v. Pullman Co. (1941) 312 U.S. 496, 61 S.Ct. 643, 85 L.Ed. 971 [case retained until state court decision on statutory question]; 1 Tribe, §§3-10, 3-29; 90 Harv. L. Fed 429 [propriety of federal court's abstention under Pullman regarding First Amendment claim].) This principle has been applied in the following cases:

Herb v. Pitcairn (1945) 324 U.S. 117, 65 S.Ct. 459, 463, 89 L.Ed.2d 789, 794 [case continued to allow counsel to apply to state court for certificate or other showing on necessity of decision of federal question].

Witkin Summary of California Law

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

5. Abstention: Where Decision on Constitutionality Is Unnecessary.

c. Younger Abstention.

[§ 94] Younger Abstention.

In Younger v. Harris (1971) 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746, 27 L.Ed.2d 669, the Court, holding that a three-judge district court had improperly restrained a state criminal prosecution, gave this explanation: "The precise reasons for this longstanding public policy against federal court interference with state court proceedings have never been specifically identified but the primary sources of the policy are plain. One is the basic doctrine of equity jurisprudence that courts of equity should not act, and particularly should not act to restrain a criminal prosecution, when the moving party has an adequate remedy at law and will not suffer irreparable injury if denied equitable relief. ... This underlying reason for restraining courts of equity from interfering with criminal prosecutions is reinforced by an even more vital consideration, the notion of 'comity,' that is, a proper respect for state functions. ... This, perhaps for lack of a better and clearer way to describe it, is referred to by many as 'Our Federalism.'" (91 S.Ct. 750, 27 L.Ed.2d 675.)

Younger has been followed in a number of decisions. (See Juidice v. Vail (1977) 430 U.S. 327, 97 S.Ct. 1211, 1216, 1218, 51 L.Ed.2d 376, 382 [federal district court erred in enjoining state contempt proceedings]; Moore v. Sims (1979) 442 U.S. 415, 99 S.Ct. 2371, 2377, 60 L.Ed.2d 994, 1001 [three-judge district court erred in taking jurisdiction of civil action challenging constitutionality of state child abuse statute]; Middlesex County Ethics Committee v. Garden State Bar Assn. (1982) 457 U.S. 423, 102 S.Ct. 2515, 2523, 73 L.Ed.2d 116, 127 [federal court erred in entertaining challenge to State Bar disciplinary proceeding]; Deakins v. Monaghan (1988) 484 U.S. 193, 108 S.Ct. 523, 529, 98 L.Ed.2d 529, 540 [even if Younger abstention doctrine applies to federal action seeking only monetary relief, federal district court had no discretion to stay claims for monetary relief that could not be redressed in state proceeding]; 1 Rotunda, §2.15; 1 Tribe, §3-30; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 1318 [limiting Younger]; 69 Cal. L. Rev. 377 [abstention in land use litigation]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1274 et seq. [Younger]; 33 Hastings L. J. 103 [Younger: federalism in context]; 38 Hastings L. J. 665, 684; 10 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 969 [Juidice v. Vail]; on abstention under Younger as exception rather than rule, see infra, §95.)

In Ohio Civil Rights Com. v. Dayton Christian Schools (1986) 477 U.S. 619, 106 S.Ct. 2718, 91 L.Ed.2d 512, Linda H. was a teacher at Dayton, a church school. She became pregnant and was informed that her contract would not be renewed. Although the contract contained a requirement of internal dispute resolution before the Board of Directors, she filed a discrimination complaint with the state Civil Rights Commission. Dayton, asserting its constitutional rights under the First Amendment Religion Clauses, sought an injunction in the federal district court. The Commission stipulated to the court's jurisdiction. Held, the court should have abstained from adjudicating the cause.

(a) A state may voluntarily submit to federal jurisdiction even though it might have a tenable claim for abstention, as in Brown v. Hotel & Restaurant Employees & Bartenders Int. Union Local 54 (1984) 468 U.S. 491, 104 S.Ct. 3179, 82 L.Ed.2d 373; Ohio Bureau of Emp. Services v. Hodory (1977) 431 U.S. 471, 97 S.Ct. 1898, 52 L.Ed.2d 513, supra, §92; and Sosna v. Iowa (1975) 419 U.S. 393, 95 S.Ct. 553, 42 L.Ed.2d 532, 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §73. But in each of these cases, the state expressly urged an adjudication on the merits, and there was no similar consent here. (106 S.Ct. 2722, 91 L.Ed.2d 521.)

In Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco (1987) 481 U.S. 1, 107 S.Ct. 1519, 95 L.Ed.2d 1, Pennzoil obtained a jury verdict of $ 10.53 billion in the state court. Texaco, unable to post a supersedeas bond in the required amount, filed an action in the federal district court, alleging that the state proceedings violated federal constitutional and statutory rights. The district court issued a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of the judgment, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, reversed.

(a) One reason for Younger abstention is to avoid unwarranted determination of federal constitutional questions. Texaco never presented its federal claims to the state courts; had it done so, the case might have been resolved on state grounds without reaching the federal constitutional questions. (107 S.Ct. 1526, 95 L.Ed.2d 16.)

(b) The argument that there is no vital state interest justifying abstention "reflects a misreading of our precedents." The state's interest in administering its judicial system extends to enforcement of orders and judgments of its courts. "Not only would federal injunctions in such cases interfere with the execution of state judgments, but they would do so on grounds that challenge the very process by which those judgments were obtained." (107 S.Ct. 1527, 95 L.Ed.2d 17.)

(c) Texaco has not met its burden of proving that state procedural law barred presentation of its claims. Where, as here, "a litigant has not attempted to present his federal claims in related state court proceedings, a federal court should assume that state procedures will afford an adequate remedy, in the absence of unambiguous authority to the contrary." (107 S.Ct. 1528, 95 L.Ed.2d 18.)

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

5. Abstention: Where Decision on Constitutionality Is Unnecessary.

d. Burford Abstention.

[§ 95] Burford Abstention.

New Orleans Public Service v. Council of New Orleans (1989) 491 U.S. 350, 109 S.Ct. 2506, 105 L.Ed.2d 298, discusses a third type of abstention. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) allocated the costs of a nuclear reactor among various companies, including New Orleans Public Service, Inc. (NOPSI). However, the New Orleans City Council, the local ratemaking body, found that NOPSI had been negligent in failing to diversify and refused its request for complete reimbursement by means of a rate increase. NOPSI challenged the order in state court, and, claiming that the Council's order was preempted by federal law, also sought relief in federal district court. That court and the Court of Appeals concluded that abstention was proper under Burford v. Sun Oil Co. (1943) 319 U.S. 315, 63 S.Ct. 1098, 87 L.Ed. 1424, as well as Younger v. Harris (1971) 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746, 27 L.Ed.2d 669, supra, §94. Held, neither Burford nor Younger justified abstention.

(a) Burford. The Court described the "Burford doctrine" as follows: "Where timely and adequate state court review is available, a federal court sitting in equity must decline to interfere with the proceedings or orders of state administrative agencies: (1) when there are 'difficult questions of state law bearing on policy problems of substantial public import whose importance transcends the result in the case then at bar'; or (2) where the 'exercise of federal review of the question in a case and in similar cases would be disruptive of state efforts to establish a coherent policy with respect to a matter of substantial public concern.'" (109 S.Ct. 2514, 105 L.Ed.2d 312.) However, the fact that a complex state regulatory system is involved does not automatically require abstention. Where, as here, the question is whether the rate order is facially preempted by federal law, it may be decided without the undue intrusion into local problems that Burford guards against. (109 S.Ct. 2514, 2515, 105 L.Ed.2d 313.) Hence, abstention under Burford was improper. (109 S.Ct. 2515, 105 L.Ed.2d 314.)

(b) Younger. Abstention under Younger is the exception rather than the rule. (1) "[I]t has never been suggested that Younger requires abstention in deference to a state judicial proceeding reviewing legislative or executive action." (109 S.Ct. 2518, 105 L.Ed.2d 317.) (2) The City Council's order setting rates was a legislative rather than a judicial act, and Younger has never been extended to proceedings that are not "judicial in nature." (109 S.Ct. 2519, 105 L.Ed.2d 318.) (3) The Louisiana court's review of the City Council's order is judicial, not legislative, in nature. Thus, while abstention on ripeness grounds would be proper if the legislative process were ongoing, that is not the case here. (109 S.Ct. 2520, 105 L.Ed.2d 319.) "As a challenge to completed legislative action, NOPSI's suit represents neither the interference with ongoing judicial proceedings against which Younger was directed, nor the interference with an ongoing legislative process against which our ripeness holding in Prentis was directed." (109 S.Ct. 2520, 105 L.Ed.2d 320; referring to Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co. (1908) 211 U.S. 210, 29 S.Ct. 67, 53 L.Ed. 150.) (See 1 Tribe §3-29; 87 Cal. L. Rev. 613 [review of state administrative action by federal courts]; 192 A.L.R. Fed 429 [propriety of federal court's abstention under Burford regarding state tort claim].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

5. Abstention: Where Decision on Constitutionality Is Unnecessary.

e. Exceptions.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 96

[§ 96] In General.

"The abstention doctrine is not an automatic rule applied whenever a federal court is faced with a doubtful issue of state law; it rather involves a discretionary exercise of a court's equity powers." It is applied where there are special circumstances that call for it, and the determination whether they exist is made on a case by case basis. (Baggett v. Bullitt (1964) 377 U.S. 360, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 1324, 12 L.Ed.2d 377, 387, infra, §409.)

Griffin v. County School Bd. of Prince Edward County (1964) 377 U.S. 218, 84 S.Ct. 1226, 12 L.Ed.2d 256, infra, §752, involved the question of school integration: "[W]e hold that the issues here imperatively call for decision now. The case has been delayed since 1951 by resistance at the state and county level, by legislation, and by lawsuits. The original plaintiffs have doubtless all passed high school age. There has been entirely too much deliberation and not enough speed in enforcing the constitutional rights which we held in Brown v. Board of Education, ... had been denied Prince Edward County Negro children." (84 S.Ct. 1232, 12 L.Ed.2d 264.)

Baggett v. Bullitt, supra, challenged a Washington loyalty oath for teachers. The state contended that the statute, though on the books for 3 decades, had never been construed by Washington courts, and that they might so interpret it as to eliminate the necessity of deciding the vagueness issue. The Court thought it doubtful whether state interpretation would alter the constitutional issue. In most of the abstention cases, the unsettled issue of state law concerned applicability of the statute to a person or defined course of conduct, and its resolution would terminate the action. In the instant case, the statutory oath was subject to an indefinite number of interpretations, and the challenge was that persons could not understand the required promise or the range of activities in which they might engage. Only a series of costly and lengthy piecemeal suits could bring the oath within constitutional bounds. (84 S.Ct. 1326, 12 L.Ed.2d 389.)

In N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1964) 377 U.S. 288, 84 S.Ct. 1302, 12 L.Ed.2d 325, infra, §379, the Alabama Attorney General made a number of attempts to oust the N.A.A.C.P. from the state, each time being prevented by the U.S. Supreme Court without a decision reaching the merits of the issue. Then the trial court issued a restraining order, which the Alabama Supreme Court affirmed, on inadequacy of the form of the brief under its rules (several assignments of error allegedly argued together). The U.S. Supreme Court found this ground untenable: "The consideration of asserted constitutional rights may not be thwarted by simple recitation that there has not been observance of a procedural rule with which there has been compliance in both substance and form in every real sense." (84 S.Ct. 1308, 12 L.Ed.2d 332.) Alabama's last ditch request--that if the procedural ground were found insufficient the case should be remanded to its courts for a decision on the merits--was rejected because of the history of the case (four times before the U.S. Supreme Court without a determination of the issue). (84 S.Ct. 1311, 12 L.Ed.2d 335.) (See Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp. (1964) 377 U.S. 324, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 1296, 12 L.Ed.2d 350, 354 [long procedural delays, neither party requested abstention].)

In Harman v. Forssenius (1965) 380 U.S. 528, 85 S.Ct. 1177, 14 L.Ed.2d 50, challenging Virginia's discriminatory voting law, the abstention doctrine was held inapplicable for two reasons. First, the statute, though never interpreted by the state courts, was unambiguous and left no reasonable room for construction. (85 S.Ct. 1182, 14 L.Ed.2d 55.) Second, the consequences of abstaining would be serious. The right to vote was being challenged by a broad class of citizens shortly before an election. (85 S.Ct. 1183, 14 L.Ed.2d 56.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 139.)

The following cases also illustrate the willingness of the Supreme Court to reject the limitation where important constitutional issues are presented:

Dombrowski v. Pfister (1965) 380 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 1124, 14 L.Ed.2d 22, 30 [flat declaration that abstention doctrine is inapplicable where statute regulating speech is attacked on its face; dissent asserts that decision abolishes doctrine in all suits challenging state criminal statutes for vagueness]. (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 170; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 611; 3 San Diego L. Rev. 76; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 153.)

Zwickler v. Koota (1967) 389 U.S. 241, 88 S.Ct. 391, 19 L.Ed.2d 444 [plaintiff's claim for declaratory relief against New York criminal statute regulating distribution of election handbills, challenging it as unconstitutional on its face for overbreadth]. (See 83 Harv. L. Rev. 844 [overbreadth].)

Wisconsin v. Constantineau (1971) 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 510, 27 L.Ed.2d 515, 517, infra, §659 [doctrine was inapplicable where state statute was not ambiguous and there were no unresolved state law questions, even though counsel deliberately avoided raising constitutional issue in state court in order to get three-judge federal court decision with direct appeal to Supreme Court; see strong dissent].

In Ankenbrandt v. Richards (1992) 504 U.S. 689, 112 S.Ct. 2206, 119 L.Ed.2d 468, petitioner Carol, a citizen of Missouri, brought a suit on behalf of her daughters against her former husband Jon and his female companion Debra, citizens of Louisiana, seeking damages for alleged sexual and physical abuse of the children. The suit was filed in the federal district court of Louisiana. The district court granted respondents' motion to dismiss on two grounds: (1) the case fell within the "domestic relations" exception to diversity jurisdiction, and (2) the abstention doctrine of Younger v. Harris (1971) 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746, 27 L.Ed.2d 669, supra, §94, applied. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, the Supreme Court reversed.

(a) The domestic relations exception stemmed from the announcement in Barber v. Barber (1858) 62 U.S. 582, 16 L.Ed. 226, that federal courts have no jurisdiction over actions for divorce or alimony. The statements in Barber, although technically dicta, formed the basis for a jurisdictional limitation that the lower federal courts have recognized ever since. "Because we are unwilling to cast aside an understood rule that has been recognized for nearly a century and a half, we feel compelled to explain why we will continue to recognize this limitation on federal jurisdiction." (112 S.Ct. 2210, 119 L.Ed.2d 476, 477.)

(b) The language in Barber and in subsequent decisions makes it clear that Barber was not relying on constitutional limits in justifying the exception. (112 S.Ct. 2210, 2211, 119 L.Ed.2d 477.) And the Barber Court did not intend to strip federal courts of authority to hear cases arising from domestic relations of persons unless they sought granting or modification of a divorce or alimony decree. (112 S.Ct. 2214, 119 L.Ed.2d 481.) Subsequently this Court expanded the exception to include decrees in child custody cases. (112 S.Ct. 2214, 119 L.Ed.2d 482.) "Given the long passage of time without any expression of congressional dissatisfaction, we have no trouble today reaffirming the validity of the exception as it pertains to divorce and alimony decrees and child custody cases." (112 S.Ct. 2215, 119 L.Ed.2d 482.) This conclusion is supported by sound policy considerations. State courts are more eminently suited to work of this type than are federal courts. (112 S.Ct. 2215, 119 L.Ed.2d 482.)

(c) The present lawsuit does not seek a divorce, alimony, or child custody decree; the complaint seeks damages for torts allegedly committed against petitioner's children. Hence, federal subject matter jurisdiction is proper in this case.

(d) The final question is whether, even though jurisdiction might be proper, sufficient grounds exist to warrant Younger abstention, as the district court and the Court of Appeals concluded. Although Younger abstention has been applied in civil cases, this Court has never applied it when no state proceeding was pending nor any assertion of important state interest made. "Absent any pending proceeding in state tribunals, therefore, application by the lower courts of Younger abstention was clearly erroneous." (112 S.Ct. 2216, 119 L.Ed.2d 483.)

(e) In certain circumstances the abstention principles developed in Burford v. Sun Oil Co. (1943) 319 U.S. 315, 63 S.Ct. 1098, 87 L.Ed. 1424, supra, §95, might be relevant in a case involving elements of the domestic relationship even when the parties do not seek divorce, alimony, or child custody. This "might well be the case if a federal suit were filed prior to effectuation of a divorce, alimony, or child custody decree, and the suit depended on a determination of the status of the parties." (112 S.Ct. 2216, 119 L.Ed.2d 484.)

A concurring opinion of one justice disagreed with the majority's recognition of a domestic relations "exception." (112 S.Ct. 2217, 119 L.Ed.2d 485.)

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 98

[§ 98] In General.

The enforcement, or threatened enforcement, of an unconstitutional statute affecting property rights may be enjoined where the remedy at law is inadequate. (Pierce v. Society of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus & Mary (1925) 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070; Abbott v. Los Angeles (1960) 53 C.2d 674, 678, footnote 2, 3 C.R. 158, 349 P.2d 974; see Brown v. Chote (1973) 411 U.S. 452, 93 S.Ct. 1732, 36 L.Ed.2d 420 [injunction against enforcement of statute allegedly abridging political rights of candidates and voters]; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §332; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 1133 [remedies for denial of equal protection]; on injunction against prosecution, see 4 Cal. Crim. Proc. (3d), Jurisdiction and Venue, §10 et seq.)

The provisions of C.C.P. 526 and C.C. 3423, to the effect that "[a]n injunction cannot be granted ... to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit," have been held inapplicable to unconstitutional statutes or ordinances. (Bueneman v. Santa Barbara (1937) 8 C.2d 405, 407, 65 P.2d 884; McKay Jewelers v. Bowron (1942) 19 C.2d 595, 599, 122 P.2d 543; Wade v. San Francisco (1947) 82 C.A.2d 337, 341, 186 P.2d 181; People v. Amdur (1954) 123 C.A.2d Supp. 951, 968, 267 P.2d 445 [unconstitutional application of valid statute].)

It has also been recognized that in a rare case an injunction might be granted against the enactment of unconstitutional legislation. (See Harnett v. Sacramento (1925) 195 C. 676, 682, 235 P. 445; Johnston v. Board of Supervisors of Marin County (1947) 31 C.2d 66, 71, 187 P.2d 686 [denied where there was no showing of irreparable injury]; Santa Clara v. Superior Court (1949) 33 C.2d 552, 557, 203 P.2d 1 [same]; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §333; on use of extraordinary writ to challenge proposed legislation, see infra, §102.)

When the constitutionality of a federal statute "affecting the public interest" is questioned in any federal court, and the government is not already a party, it may intervene and present its argument in support of the law. (28 U.S.C., §2403(a).) (See International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union v. Donnelly Garment Co. (1938) 304 U.S. 243, 58 S.Ct. 875, 879, 82 L.Ed. 1316, 1322; 51 Harv. L. Rev. 148; 35 Cal. L. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

6. Methods of Raising Constitutionality.

a. Injunction.

2. Limitations on Federal Injunction of State Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 99

[§ 99] Limitations on Federal Injunction of State Law.

(1) Judicially Declared Limitation. The United States Supreme Court has imposed a limitation on the power of federal courts over state statutes. No federal injunction should issue against a state statute "unless in a case reasonably free from doubt and when necessary to prevent great and irreparable injury." (Massachusetts State Grange v. Benton (1926) 272 U.S. 525, 47 S.Ct. 189, 190, 71 L.Ed. 387, 391.) It has further been declared that no federal injunction will issue against a state criminal statute even though it is unconstitutional, except under unusual circumstances and on a clear showing of great and immediate danger of irreparable loss. (Watson v. Buck (1941) 313 U.S. 387, 61 S.Ct. 962, 966, 85 L.Ed. 1416, 1423; American Federation of Labor v. Watson (1946) 327 U.S. 582, 66 S.Ct. 761, 766, 90 L.Ed. 873, 880 [sufficient irreparable injury shown].)

(2) Federal Judicial Code. Additional limitations on injunctions are imposed by the federal Judicial Code when the constitutionality of a state law is questioned in a federal court.

(a) A federal court "may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments." (28 U.S.C., §2283; see 83 Harv. L. Rev. 1870; 42 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Injunctions §208 et seq.)

(b) A three-judge district court must "be convened when otherwise required by Act of Congress, or when an action is filed challenging the constitutionality of the apportionment of congressional districts or the apportionment of any statewide legislative body." (28 U.S.C., §2284(a); on composition of court, see 28 U.S.C., §2284(b).)

(c) Federal courts cannot enjoin a state order affecting the rates to be charged by public utilities where the order does not interfere with interstate commerce, has been made after reasonable notice and hearing, and a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had in the courts of the state. (28 U.S.C., §1342.)

(d) When the constitutionality of a state statute "affecting the public interest" is questioned in any federal court, and the state is not already a party, the state may intervene on the question of constitutionality. (28 U.S.C., §2403(b).)

(e) The district courts must not enjoin, suspend, or restrain the assessment, levy, or "collection of any tax under State law where a plain, speedy and efficient remedy may be had in the courts of such State." (28 U.S.C., §1341; see 35 Cal. L. Rev. 263; 151 A.L.R. Fed. 387 [what constitutes "tax" under Tax Injunction Act].)

In California v. Grace Brethren Church (1982) 457 U.S. 393, 102 S.Ct. 2498, 73 L.Ed.2d 93, plaintiffs, California churches and religious schools, brought an action in the federal district court raising First Amendment objections to the application of the California unemployment insurance tax statutes to the employees of the schools, and seeking an injunction against collection of the taxes. Held, the district court had no jurisdiction. Although the Tax Injunction Act expressly refers to an injunction, it necessarily prohibits a district court from issuing a declaratory judgment holding state tax laws unconstitutional, for the declaratory judgment procedure may in every practical sense operate to suspend collection of the taxes and thereby defeat the statutory objective. (102 S.Ct. 2508, 2509, 73 L.Ed.2d 107, 108.)

The exception where the state remedy is not "plain, speedy, and efficient" was fully considered in Rosewell v. LaSalle Nat. Bank (1981) 450 U.S. 503, 101 S.Ct. 1221, 67 L.Ed.2d 464, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §285. Under Rosewell, the California refund procedure is sufficient. (102 S.Ct. 2509, 2513, 73 L.Ed.2d 108, 112.) (See Franchise Tax Bd. of Calif. v. Alcan Aluminium Ltd. (1990) 493 U.S. 331, 110 S.Ct. 661, 666, 667, 107 L.Ed.2d 696, 705, 707, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §99 [action by foreign corporation challenging application of California's unitary business formula to California subsidiary was barred by 28 U.S.C., §1341; California refund procedure provided plain, speedy, and efficient remedy for parent's claims, because parent had total control of subsidiary and could direct all aspects of its pursuit of relief in state court].)

6. Methods of Raising Constitutionality.

b. Declaratory Relief and Quiet Title.

[§ 100] Declaratory Relief and Quiet Title.

(1) Declaratory Relief. The validity of a statute or ordinance may be challenged in a proceeding for declaratory relief under C.C.P. 1060. (LaFranchi v. Santa Rosa (1937) 8 C.2d 331, 65 P.2d 1301 [zoning ordinance]; Abbott v. Los Angeles (1960) 53 C.2d 674, 678, footnote 2, 3 C.R. 158, 349 P.2d 974 [listing cases]; *Floresta v. (2) Quiet Title. A declaration of invalidity of a zoning ordinance may also be obtained in an action to quiet title against the municipality. The theory is that the invalid ordinance, like an unenforceable building restriction in a deed, constitutes a cloud on the title and interferes with the right to sell or use the property. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

6. Methods of Raising Constitutionality.

c. Extraordinary Writs and Appeal.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 101

[§ 101] In General.

(1) Habeas Corpus. In a criminal case, where the defendant is imprisoned pursuant to a charge or conviction under an unconstitutional statute, the defendant may attack the statute by an application for habeas corpus. (See Ex parte Siebold (1879) 100 U.S. 371, 25 L.Ed. 717; In re Deane (1937) 8 C.2d 599, 67 P.2d 333; In re Bell (1942) 19 C.2d 488, 492, 122 P.2d 22; In re Dixon (1953) 41 C.2d 756, 762, 264 P.2d 513; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §89; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §37 et seq.)

A person "constructively in custody," e.g., at liberty on bail or on personal recognizance, may invoke this remedy. (See Hensley v. Municipal Court (1973) 411 U.S. 345, 93 S.Ct. 1571, 36 L.Ed.2d 294; In re Petersen (1958) 51 C.2d 177, 181, 331 P.2d 24; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §14.)

(2) Prohibition. A defendant who is not in actual or constructive custody cannot obtain a writ of habeas corpus. But the defendant can achieve the same result, i.e., can test the constitutionality of a criminal statute before trial, by a writ of prohibition. (See Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1946) 28 C.2d 460, 462, 171 P.2d 8; Moore v. Municipal Court of Salinas Judicial Dist., Monterey County (1959) 170 C.A.2d 548, 551, 339 P.2d 196; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §89; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §84.) Similarly, in the rare situation in which a civil proceeding is based entirely on an unconstitutional statute, prohibition will lie to restrain the proceeding. (See Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court (1946) 28 C.2d 481, 483, 171 P.2d 21; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §90.)

(3) Mandamus. A public ministerial officer, such as the president or secretary of a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation, may refuse, in good faith, to sign bonds he or she believes to be invalid. The public corporation may then raise the question of constitutionality by a proceeding in mandamus to compel the officer to sign. (Golden Gate Bridge & Highway Dist. v. Felt (1931) 214 C. 308, 317, 5 P.2d 585; see Connerly v. State Personnel Bd. (2001) 92 C.A.4th 16, 30, 112 C.R.2d 5, infra, §967 [mandamus may be used to test constitutional validity of statute]; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §77; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §84 et seq.) And where an administrative agency or local official allegedly denies a constitutional right, mandamus has sometimes been used to review the administrative action. (See Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885 [writ issued to compel school board to give permission to use auditorium for public meeting]; Floresta v. City Council of San Leandro (1961) 190 C.A.2d 599, 612, 12 C.R. 182; cf. Reynolds v. Barrett (1938) 12 C.2d 244, 83 P.2d 29 [writ sought to compel issuance of building permit; constitutional issue considered and relief denied].) (On use of mandamus to preserve constitutional rights of criminal defendants, see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §93 et seq.)

(4) Certiorari and Appeal. Certiorari will not lie where an appeal is possible. (See 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §40.) Hence, because a defendant in a criminal or civil proceeding brought under a statute may challenge its constitutionality in the trial court and appeal from an adverse decision, the defendant cannot seek certiorari to annul the judgment. (See Portnoy v. Superior Court (1942) 20 C.2d 375, 125 P.2d 487, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §43; Hatch v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 170, 192, footnote 16, 94 C.R.2d 453, citing the text [where defendant raised constitutionality issue on P.C. 995 motion and received adverse ruling, issue was properly before appellate court]; 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §82.)

However, if a defendant is convicted of a misdemeanor or infraction and the conviction is affirmed by the appellate division of the superior court (see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §182 et seq.), there is no further appeal in California, but only a discretionary transfer to the Court of Appeal. (See 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §190; 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §45.)

Where a judicial decree, such as an injunction, is based on an allegedly unconstitutional statute, the United States Supreme Court has held that the proper remedy is a motion to dissolve it, and that if this motion was not made, the claim of unconstitutionality cannot be raised in a contempt proceeding for deliberate violation of the order. (See Walker v. Birmingham (1967) 388 U.S. 307, 87 S.Ct. 1824, 1832, 18 L.Ed.2d 1210, 1219, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §333; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 405 [discussing applicability of "collateral bar" rule, under which party who disobeys judicial order cannot later challenge its validity, to First Amendment cases involving media organizations].) The California rule is contra: A void order can be disobeyed and its invalidity asserted in the contempt hearing and on review of a contempt adjudication by certiorari. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §334.)

aa. In General: No Relief.

[§ 102] In General: No Relief.

Successful challenges of proposed legislation are extremely rare. Injunctive relief is usually denied (see supra, §98), and mandamus will not issue for the same reason. "Regardless of how clearly a statute's unconstitutionality appeared, it would be an intolerable interference with the coordinate branches of government to invoke the judicial power to prevent the Legislature from recording its vote on a statute or from submitting it to the Governor for his signature, or to prevent the Governor from signing it, or to prevent the Secretary of State from filing it as required by law. ... It would likewise be an intolerable interference with the people's reserved legislative power to prevent the official recordation of their vote." (Kevelin v. Jordan (1964) 62 C.2d 82, 83, 41 C.R. 169, 396 P.2d 585 [petition for mandamus directing Secretary of State not to file statement of vote on ballot proposition; writ denied].) Thus, in a preelection challenge, a ballot measure will be removed only on a "compelling showing" of invalidity. (Save Stanislaus Area Farm Economy v. Board of Supervisors (1993) 13 C.A.4th 141, 150, 153, 16 C.R.2d 408, infra, §155; Memorial Hosp. Assn. v. Randol (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1300, 1306, 1307, 45 C.R.2d 547 ["compelling showing" standard applies only to preelection challenge; in postelection challenge, issue is only whether ballot measure is valid].) (See 71 Cal. L. Rev. 1216 [preelection judicial review]; 15 Pacific L. J. 1127 [same]; 25 Santa Clara L. Rev. 529 [same]; on amendment and repeal of initiative or referendum, see infra, §158.)

Mandamus may be granted, however, for the opposite purpose: to compel a county clerk to count signatures for an initiative measure without passing on constitutional objections. (See Gayle v. Hamm (1972) 25 C.A.3d 250, 101 C.R. 628; infra, §155.)

2. Challenge to Proposed Legislation.

bb. Invalid Initiative.

[§ 103] Invalid Initiative.

In Legislature v. Deukmejian (1983) 34 C.3d 658, 194 C.R. 781, 669 P.2d 17, the 1983 Legislature, pursuant to Cal. Const., Art. XXI, enacted a statute reapportioning election districts. Although the constitutional section provides for apportionment once every 10 years, real parties in interest proposed an initiative measure that would repeal the legislative reapportionment and realign the Assembly, Senate, and congressional districts. The Governor proclaimed a special election to submit the measure to the voters, and petitioners--the Legislature and other officials--sought mandamus to prevent the Governor and others from carrying out the election. Held, writ granted.

(a) Propriety of preelection review. It is usually more appropriate to review challenges to a measure after an election than to prevent its submission to the voters; but this general rule favoring postelection review contemplates that no serious consequences will result if consideration of the measure is delayed until after the election. Here, the high cost of a special election, the lack of time for orderly implementation of changes, and the fact that the Legislature has already completed its constitutional duty to establish district boundaries for this decennial period, make it imperative to decide the issue in this proceeding. (34 C.3d 665, 666, 667.)

(b) Constitutional limitation applies to initiative. A long line of decisions holds that the constitutional limitation to a single decennial redistricting precludes a further change of district boundaries by the Legislature. The same rule should apply to an initiative, which is equally subject to state and federal constitutional limitations. (34 C.3d 673, 674.) Hence, the proposed initiative may not be submitted to the voters. (34 C.3d 663, 680.)

One justice dissented, arguing that nothing in the Constitution suggests that the 10-year redistricting rule applies to the initiative, and that the holding is an unwarranted impairment of the people's right "to approve or disapprove a blatantly gerrymandered reapportionment plan." (34 C.3d 690.)

In American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations v. Eu (1984) 36 C.3d 687, 206 C.R. 89, 686 P.2d 609, proponents of an amendment to the federal Constitution calling for a balanced federal budget obtained sufficient signatures for an initiative measure compelling the California Legislature to apply to Congress to convene a constitutional convention to propose the amendment, with sanctions against the Legislature if it failed to comply. Held, mandamus granted to prevent defendant Secretary of State from placing the measure on the ballot.

(a) Proposed initiative is invalid. The measure does not adopt a California statute; it is only a step in a process to amend the federal Constitution. (See supra, §70.) Hence, it is not an exercise of legislative power reserved to the people under the California Constitution. (36 C.3d 694.)

(b) Preelection review is proper under Legislature v. Deukmejian. "The presence of an invalid measure on the ballot steals attention, time and money from the numerous valid propositions on the same ballot. It will confuse some voters and frustrate others, and an ultimate decision that the measure is invalid, coming after the voters have voted in favor of the measure, tends to denigrate the legitimate use of the initiative procedure." (36 C.3d 697.)

(c) Proposed initiative in part violates U.S. Const., Art. V. The reference to "Legislatures" in Article V (see supra, §70) does not include the people exercising the initiative power; hence, they cannot apply directly to Congress for a constitutional convention. (36 C.3d 697, citing Barlotti v. Lyons (1920) 182 C. 575, 189 P. 282, and out-of-state cases.) The proposed initiative seeks to bypass the Legislature by mandating it to adopt a resolution calling for a constitutional convention. This is a violation of Article V. "Under article V, the legislators must be free to vote their own considered judgment, being responsible to their constituents through the electoral process." (36 C.3d 706.)

(d) Violation of California Constitution. The initiative also violates Article II of the California Constitution. The reserved powers of initiative and referendum are limited to the adoption or rejection of "statutes"; they do not include a resolution merely expressing the wishes of the enacting body. (36 C.3d 708 et seq., 715.)

One justice filed a lengthy dissent. (36 C.3d 717 et seq.) (See California Trial Lawyers Assn. v. Eu (1988) 200 C.A.3d 351, 357, 245 C.R. 916 [preelection review is proper where initiative palpably violates single subject rule and circumstances do not militate against review]; San Francisco v. Patterson (1988) 202 C.A.3d 95, 100, 248 C.R. 290 [preelection review is proper where claim is that proposed initiative is beyond power of the electorate to adopt].)

In Citizens for Responsible Behavior v. Superior Court (1991) 1 C.A.4th 1013, 2 C.R.2d 648, the Riverside Citizens for Responsible Behavior, a nonprofit corporation, produced an initiative measure to repeal existing ordinances protecting homosexual rights, and to require voter approval for any future ordinances concerning sexual orientation, homosexuality, or AIDS. The city of Riverside refused to place the initiative on the ballot, and Citizens sought mandamus from the superior court, which denied the petition. Citizens then filed a petition seeking the same relief from the Court of Appeal. Held, writ denied.

(a) Although there is a mandatory duty to place a properly qualified measure on the ballot, a court may determine that the measure is invalid and direct the appropriate official not to place it on the ballot. (1 C.A.4th 1021, 1022, 1023, citing Legislature v. Deukmajian and American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations, supra.) "The costs of an election--and of preparing the ballot materials necessary for each measure--are far from insignificant. ... Proponents and opponents of a measure may both expend large sums of money during the election campaign. Frequently, the heated rhetoric of an election campaign may open permanent rifts in a community. That the people's right to directly legislate through the initiative process is to be respected and cherished does not require the useless expenditure of money and creation of emotional community divisions concerning a measure which is for any reason legally invalid." (1 C.A.4th 1023.)

(b) In the present case, the proposed ordinance is substantively invalid in that it denies equal protection to homosexuals who, as citizens, are entitled to equal protection. (1 C.A.4th 1025.) The Notice of Intent to Circulate shows that it is designed to encourage discrimination and promote bias against a selected class of citizens. (1 C.A.4th 1030, 1031.) The ordinance is also beyond the power of the electorate to enact in both prohibiting the enactment of any future ordinance that "promotes, encourages, endorses, legitimizes, or justifies homosexuality," and in prohibiting the funding of any individual, organization, or activity that takes a similar position. (1 C.A.4th 1031.)

There is no sanctity in a claim of constitutional right that "prevents its being waived as any other claim of right may be." (*Wall v. The following are the chief methods of waiver:

(1) Acceptance of benefits under the statute claimed to be unconstitutional. (See Wall v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., supra; *Hershey v. Reclamation Dist. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional. 8. Effect of Determination of Unconstitutionality.

[§ 105] Effect of Determination of Unconstitutionality.

In Norton v. Shelby County (1886) 118 U.S. 425, 6 S.Ct. 1121, 1125, 30 L.Ed. 178, 186, the Court declared that an unconstitutional statute "is not a law; it confers no rights, it imposes no duties; it affords no protection and creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed." And Newberry v. United States (1921) 256 U.S. 232, 41 S.Ct. 469, 473, 65 L.Ed. 913, 920, later held that if a statute is unconstitutional at the time of its enactment, a subsequent grant of power to the Legislature by constitutional amendment cannot validate it ex proprio vigore. (See 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §203 et seq.)

Under this general principle, it has been held that persons acting in reliance on an unconstitutional statute, such as public enforcement officers, may become liable in damages to persons injured by their acts. (See Hopkins v. Clemson Agricultural College of South Carolina (1911) 221 U.S. 636, 31 S.Ct. 654, 55 L.Ed. 890; Golden Gate Bridge & Highway Dist. v. Felt (1931) 214 C. 308, 317, 5 P.2d 585, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §77.) However, in California public officers or employees are relieved from civil liability when acting in good faith under statutes subsequently declared unconstitutional. (Govt.C. 820.6; see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §348.) And the United States Supreme Court has held that state police officers relying in good faith on an unconstitutional statute are not liable under the Civil Rights Act. (See Pierson v. Ray (1967) 386 U.S. 547, 87 S.Ct. 1213, 1218, 18 L.Ed.2d 288, 295; 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §§166, 348.)

Moreover, the unqualified statement in Norton has been criticized in later decisions pointing out that binding rights and obligations may be based on a statute that is subsequently declared unconstitutional, and that not every declaration of unconstitutionality is retroactive in its effect. (See Chicot County Drainage Dist. v. Baxter State Bank (1940) 308 U.S. 371, 60 S.Ct. 317, 84 L.Ed. 329; 30 Cal. L. Rev. 108 [effect of unconstitutionality of repealing act]; 73 Harv. L. Rev. 416; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §340.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

9. Partial Unconstitutionality and Severability.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 106

[§ 106] In General.

The effect on the remainder of a statute when certain parts of it are held to be unconstitutional depends on whether the Legislature intended it to be severable. If so, the objectionable portions are void, but the rest of the statute remains valid. (Regan v. Time (1984) 468 U.S. 641, 104 S.Ct. 3262, 3269, 3272, 82 L.Ed.2d 487, 496, 501, infra, §365 [severability found]; Brockett v. Spokane Arcades (1985) 472 U.S. 491, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 2801, 2803, 86 L.Ed.2d 394, 404, 407 [same]; Hale v. McGettigan (1896) 114 C. 112, 119, 45 P. 1049; Estate of Phillips (1928) 203 C. 106, 112, 263 P. 1017; People v. McCaughan (1957) 49 C.2d 409, 416, 317 P.2d 974 [severability found]; Board of Osteopathic Examiners v. Board of Med. Examiners (1975) 53 C.A.3d 78, 85, 125 C.R. 619 [same]; Lewis v. Hayward (1986) 177 C.A.3d 103, 115, 222 C.R. 781 [same]; People's Advocate v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 316, 329, 333, 226 C.R. 640, infra, §162 [same]; see 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §207 et seq.)

Where, however, to sustain the remaining valid portion would accomplish a result different from that intended by the Legislature or the People, the whole will be declared invalid. (Robert v. Police Court of San Francisco (1905) 148 C. 131, 82 P. 838; People v. Stevenson (1962) 58 C.2d 794, 798, 26 C.R. 297, 376 P.2d 297, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §528 [inseverable where wholesale rewriting would be necessary to make statute constitutional]; Birkenfeld v. Berkeley (1976) 17 C.3d 129, 173, 174, 130 C.R. 465, 550 P.2d 1001, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §577 [municipal rent control initiative; inseverable where adding matter necessary to make initiative constitutional might defeat intent of voters adopting measure]; see Pederson v. Superior Court (2003) 105 C.A.4th 931, 942, 130 C.R.2d 289 [constitutional infirmity of statute that deprived misdemeanor defendants of equal protection could only be remedied by declaring statute invalid in its entirety because portion that would remain after severing objectionable parts would be incomplete and reformation was not possible].)

In the celebrated case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (1895) 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108, the first federal income tax law (passed before the Sixteenth Amendment) taxed all income in excess of $ 4,000, regardless of its source. The tax on income from real and personal property was held to be a direct tax, and invalid under the Constitution because not apportioned according to population. But to eliminate the tax on this income would place the entire burden on income derived from other sources. The Court concluded that this was not the legislative intention and therefore held the entire act void.

Where the general provisions of a statute are constitutional but it contains an unconstitutional exception, the tendency is to sustain the statute and invalidate only the exception, particularly where there is a severability clause. (See Bacon Service Corp. v. Huss (1926) 199 C. 21, 32, 248 P. 235; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pac. (1946) 29 C.2d 34, 46, 172 P.2d 867; People v. Building Maintenance Contractors' Assn. (1953) 41 C.2d 719, 726, 264 P.2d 31.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.

9. Partial Unconstitutionality and Severability.

b. Severability Clause.

[§ 107] Severability Clause.

(1) Simple Clause. A typical severability clause is a stereotyped statement to the effect that if any provision is held unconstitutional the validity of the remainder shall be unaffected. This kind of statement, though not conclusive, is persuasive evidence of legislative intention. (Bacon Service Corp. v. Huss (1926) 199 C. 21, 34, 248 P. 235; Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 555, 171 P.2d 885; People's Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. State Franchise Tax Bd. (1952) 110 C.A.2d 696, 701, 243 P.2d 902.)

(2) Broad Provision. A broader clause, now in common use, contains language similar to the following: "If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of the act that can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this act are severable." This kind of clause provides for what might be called "application severability"; the court is required to determine, not the validity of particular parts of the statute, but the validity of its application to particular persons under particular circumstances. (See U.C.C. 1108 [model severability section recommended by commissioners on Uniform State Laws].)

That a severability clause does not always accomplish its purpose appears from In re Blaney (1947) 30 C.2d 643, 184 P.2d 892. The Hot Cargo Act of 1941 was held invalid in part as an unconstitutional interference with freedom of speech, and the court made no determination of the validity of its prohibitions against some types of secondary boycotts, holding that the partial invalidity nullified the entire statute. After stating the general presumption of constitutionality and the policy of sustaining valid parts, the court said: "This is possible and proper where the language of the statute is mechanically severable, that is, where the valid and invalid parts can be separated by paragraph, sentence, clause, phrase, or even single words. ... On the other hand, where there is no possibility of mechanical severance, as where the language is so broad as to cover subjects within and without the legislative power, and the defeat cannot be cured by excising any word or group of words, the problem is quite different." (30 C.2d 655.)

Here, the statute applied generally to "any combination or agreement" causing third parties to refuse to deal with the employer involved in the dispute; its provisions were not segregated so as to distinguish between peaceful publicizing of the facts of a labor dispute and economic pressure against third parties. This was held to be a fatal defect. "The only way in which such segregation could be made would be by judicial interpretation, first holding that the act as it stands is wholly unconstitutional, but then determining that, by inserting qualifications and exceptions in the statutory language, a judicially reformed statute might be given some effect. ... [T]he Legislature has in effect sought to delegate to the courts the task of rewriting the statute. ... It is an inescapable result that, in the meantime, those individuals who guess correctly will be released by the courts, and those who guess incorrectly will be punished; but that no one, employer, employee, union or any one will know what the law is until, after violation of the statute, and judgment thereon, a higher court is given an opportunity to pass on the question of its validity as applied to the particular 'person or circumstance.' " (30 C.2d 655.) (See Hamer v. Ross (1963) 59 C.2d 776, 789, 31 C.R. 335, 382 P.2d 375, citing the text; Mulkey v. Reitman (1966) 64 C.2d 529, 544, 50 C.R. 881, 413 P.2d 825 [following Blaney]; Fort v. Civil Service Com. of Alameda County (1964) 61 C.2d 331, 340, 38 C.R. 625, 392 P.2d 385, infra, §255 [where statute contains both valid and invalid restrictions on freedom of speech, and language does not permit severance, entire provision is void]; Santa Barbara School Dist. v. Superior Court (1975) 13 C.3d 315, 331, 118 C.R. 637, 530 P.2d 605 [effective clause]; Schenley Affiliated Brands Corp. v. Kirby (1971) 21 C.A.3d 177, 199, 98 C.R. 609, citing the text [some parts of statute were severable, others not]; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §212 et seq.)

In Calfarm Ins. Co. v. Deukmejian (1989) 48 C.3d 805, 258 C.R. 161, 771 P.2d 1247, the court held that the insurance restriction provision of Proposition 103 was invalid (see infra, §1083), but that the invalid provision was severable (48 C.3d 822):

(a) "First, the subdivision is mechanically and grammatically severable. It constitutes a distinct and separate provision of Proposition 103 which can be removed as a whole without affecting the wording of any other provision." (48 C.3d 822.)

(b) "Second, the subdivision is functionally severable. Because it provides an exception to the more general rate-setting standard of section 1861.05, its removal merely eliminates the exception, permitting the general standard to operate from the effective date of the initiative." (48 C.3d 822.)

(c) "Third, the remainder of the initiative, after deleting the insolvency standard, would likely have been adopted by the people had they foreseen the invalidity of the insolvency standard. The voters who enacted Proposition 103 would presumably prefer rate setting and regulation under the balance of the initiative to the method of setting insurance rates which existed before the initiative was enacted. There is no persuasive reason to suppose the insolvency standard was so critical to the enactment of Proposition 103 that the measure would not have been enacted in its absence." (48 C.3d 822.)

(d) The consumer advocacy provision of Proposition 103 is also invalid but severable. (48 C.3d 835, 836.) (See infra, §163; People's Advocate v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 316, 329, 333, 226 C.R. 640, infra, §162 [severability found where valid sections were discrete and capable of independent application, and would have been adopted even if invalidity of other sections had been foreseen]; Maribel M. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 1469, 1477, 72 C.R.2d 536 [applying Calfarm Ins. Co. criteria to invalid amendment to rule requiring any decision on merits to be rendered by written opinion after issuance of order to show cause or alternative writ, which conflicted with Welf.C. 366.26]; People v. Salazar-Merino (2001) 89 C.A.4th 590, 600, 107 C.R.2d 313 [P.C. 114, making it a felony to conceal one's true citizenship or alien resident status through use of false documents, is severable from unconstitutional portions of Proposition 187 (see infra, §731) because it reflects substantial portion of electorate's purpose in passing initiative].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Simple Clause. See McMahan v. San Francisco (2005) 127 C.A.4th 1368, 1374, 26 C.R.3d 509 [following Calfarm Ins. Co. v. Deukmejian (1989) 48 C.3d 805, 258 C.R. 161, 771 P.2d 1247, text, p. 212; invalid funding provision of "Care Not Cash" initiative was severable where it was grammatically separable, voters would have adopted initiative even if they had known that funding provision was invalid, and remaining provision could be implemented fully even if city could not be required to allocate fixed portion of its budget each year to services for indigents].

(2) Broad Provision. U.C.C. 1108 was renumbered U.C.C. 1105 in 2006.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

- C. Power To Declare Laws Unconstitutional.
- 9. Partial Unconstitutionality and Severability.
- c. Construction To Avoid Unconstitutionality.

[§ 108] Construction To Avoid Unconstitutionality.

The general rule that a statute will be interpreted if possible as constitutional is well settled. (See infra, §115 et seq.) A more subtle question is whether the court can construe a law contrary to the legislative intent at the time of enactment, to salvage what can be saved of the legislative purpose.

In Metromedia v. San Diego (1982) 32 C.3d 180, 185 C.R. 260, 649 P.2d 902, the Court held a municipal billboard regulation unconstitutional on the ground that its prohibition on noncommercial billboards violated the First Amendment. (See infra, §1067.) The case was then remanded to the California court to determine whether constitutionality could be saved by construction, i.e., by limiting its scope to prohibit only commercial signs. Held, this construction would not be proper. It would be inconsistent with the language and original intent of the ordinance; it would leave the city with one less effective in achieving the city's goals; and it would invite constitutional difficulties in distinguishing between commercial and noncommercial signs. (32 C.3d 191.)

Two justices dissented, asserting that (a) "courts are fully authorized to undertake precisely this kind of constitutionally compelled editing and interpreting in order to uphold a legislative scheme insofar as it is constitutionally permissible"; and (b) the choice between alternative schemes is a policy matter for the city. (32 C.3d 192, 195.) (See Kopp v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1995) 11 C.4th 607, 660, 47 C.R.2d 108, 905 P.2d 1248 [reformation of initiative provisions was not possible].)

10. State Constitutional Protection (Independent Grounds).
a. Nature of Doctrine.

[§ 109] Nature of Doctrine.

The California Constitution is a document of independent force, and the state Supreme Court is the ultimate interpreter of the meaning of that document. Hence, while state courts must enforce the minimum federal constitutional standards as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court, they remain free to interpret state constitutional provisions, including those similar to or the same as federal constitutional provisions, in a manner that will grant additional protection. Authoritative construction of the California Constitution is left to the Supreme Court, "informed but untrammelled by the United States Supreme Court's reading of parallel federal provisions." (Reynolds v. Superior Court (1974) 12 C.3d 834, 842, 117 C.R. 437, 528 P.2d 45; see 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §80 et seq.)

A definitive exposition of the doctrine was given in People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 C.3d 528, 119 C.R. 315, 531 P.2d 1099, holding a warrantless search by deputy sheriffs invalid under California precedents, despite its probable validity under U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

(a) The right of a state to impose higher constitutional standards cannot be seriously questioned. In the search and seizure area, California courts have often followed federal decisions as a matter of choice and not compulsion; and in both search and seizure and double jeopardy decisions our court has on occasion imposed a higher standard. (13 C.3d 548, 549, and footnote 17.)

(b) "The foregoing cases illustrate the incontrovertible conclusion that the California Constitution is, and always has been, a document of independent force. Any other result would contradict not only the most fundamental principles of federalism but also the historic bases of state charters. It is a fiction too long accepted that provisions in state constitutions textually identical to the Bill of Rights were intended to mirror their federal counterpart. The lesson of history is otherwise; the Bill of Rights was based upon the corresponding provisions of the first state constitutions, rather than the reverse." (13 C.3d 549.)

(c) "The federal Constitution was designed to guard the states as sovereignties against potential abuses of centralized government; state charters, however, were conceived as the first and at one time the only line of protection of the individual against the excesses of local officials. Thus in determining that California citizens are entitled to greater protection under the California Constitution against unreasonable searches and seizures than that required by the United States Constitution, we are embarking on no revolutionary course. Rather we are simply reaffirming a basic principle of federalism--that the nation as a whole is composed of distinct geographical and political entities bound together by a fundamental federal law but nonetheless independently responsible for safeguarding the rights of their citizens." (13 C.3d 550.)

(d) This conclusion was confirmed by the adoption in 1974 of Cal. Const., Art. I, §24, declaring that "[r]ights guaranteed by this Constitution are not dependent on those guaranteed by the United States Constitution." The ballot pamphlet to voters advised them that this provision was a reaffirmation of existing law. (13 C.3d 551.)

The doctrine has been applied in many other California cases. (See People v. Olivas (1976) 17 C.3d 236, 245, 246, 131 C.R. 55, 551 P.2d 375, infra, §779; Serrano v. Priest (1976) 18 C.3d 728, 764, 135 C.R. 345, 557 P.2d 929, infra, §805; Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 910, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, infra, §316; Rankins v. Commission on Professional Competence of Ducor Union School Dist. (1979) 24 C.3d 167, 154 C.R. 907, 593 P.2d 852, infra, §551; People v. Chavez (1980) 26 C.3d 334, 351, 161 C.R. 762, 605 P.2d 401; Santa Barbara v. Adamson (1980) 27 C.3d 123, 164 C.R. 539, 610 P.2d 436, infra, §1032; Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 252, 172 C.R. 866, 625 P.2d 779, infra, §578; People v. Bustamante (1981) 30 C.3d 88, 97, 177 C.R. 576, 634 P.2d 927; People v. Houston (1986) 42 C.3d 595, 609, 610, 230 C.R. 141, 724 P.2d 1166; People v. Mayoff (1986) 42 C.3d 1302, 1312, 233 C.R. 2, 729 P.2d 166.)

The independent grounds doctrine was limited by the adoption of Proposition 8, The Victims' Bill of Rights, which added Cal. Const., Art. I, §28. Under this Proposition, relevant evidence is admissible in criminal proceedings unless required to be excluded on federal constitutional grounds. (See Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §7 et seq.)

[§ 111] Specification of State Grounds.

In Michigan v. Long (1983) 463 U.S. 1032, 103 S.Ct. 3469, 3476, 77 L.Ed.2d 1201, 1214, the Court suggested a method of avoiding the practice of remanding a case for clarification of the constitutional basis of an opinion: "[W]hen ... a state court decision fairly appears to rest primarily on federal law, or to be interwoven with the federal law, and when the adequacy and independence of any possible state law ground is not clear from the face of the opinion, we will accept as the most reasonable explanation that the state court decided the case the way it did because it believed that federal law required it to do so. If a state court chooses merely to rely on federal precedents as it would on the precedents of all other jurisdictions, then it need only make clear by a plain statement in its judgment or opinion that the federal cases are being used only for the purpose of guidance, and do not themselves compel the result that the court has reached. In this way, both justice and judicial administration will be greatly improved. If the state court decision indicates clearly and expressly that it is alternatively based on bona fide separate, adequate, and independent grounds, we, of course, will not undertake to review the decision." (See Long Beach v. Bozek (1983) 33 C.3d 727, 190 C.R. 918, 661 P.2d 1072 [opinion after remand from U.S. Supreme Court to consider whether judgment was based on federal or state constitutional grounds or both; "We ... certify that our judgment is based on both the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and article I, section 3, of the California Constitution"]; 97 *Harv. The "plain statement rule" of Michigan v. Long applies in a case on federal habeas review as well as in a case on direct review. (*Harris v. 1. In General.

a. Federal and State Courts.

[§ 112] Federal and State Courts.

(1) Federal Constitution and Laws. On questions involving the interpretation of the federal Constitution and laws, or the constitutionality of any law, federal or state, under the federal Constitution, the U.S. Supreme Court has final authority, and its decisions will bind the courts of California. (United States v. Reynolds (1914) 235 U.S. 133, 35 S.Ct. 86, 90, 59 L.Ed. 162, 168; Brook v. Oakland (1911) 160 C. 423, 427, 117 P. 433; see *Arkansas v. It is sometimes stated that the decisions of other federal courts are also binding on state courts, but the prevailing view appears to be that these decisions are only entitled to great weight. (See 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §942.)

(2) California Constitution and Laws. In the interpretation of the California Constitution and statutes, and the determination of constitutionality under the California Constitution, the California courts have final authority, and the federal courts will accept the determination of the California Supreme Court. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes.

1. In General.

b. Strict or Liberal Construction of Constitution.

[§ 113] Strict or Liberal Construction of Constitution.

The question whether the Constitution should be interpreted strictly in accord with the "original intention" of the framers, or liberally to promote the broad social values sought by the framers, is an old one. (See 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §66 et seq.; for extensive commentary on question, see infra, §114.)

"The provisions of this Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words they are declared to be otherwise." (Cal. Const. Art. I, §26.) The effect of this section is said to be that the courts cannot consider the policy of a constitutional provision when its language is plain and positive. (Shay v. Roth (1923) 64 C.A. 314, 316, 221 P. 967; see People v. San Buenaventura (1931) 213 C. 637, 3 P.2d 3; People v. Santa Clara (1951) 37 C.2d 335, 341, 231 P.2d 826; State Bd. of Education v. Levit (1959) 52 C.2d 441, 460, 343 P.2d 8; Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 798, 799, 800, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934 [clear and unambiguous language controls; words should be given their ordinary meaning, and courts may not add language to provision that is plain and definite].)

However, a "liberal, practical common-sense construction" that will "meet changed conditions and the growing needs of the people," has been advocated for all constitutional provisions. (Alameda v. Sweeney (1957) 151 C.A.2d 505, 513, 312 P.2d 419; see ITT World Communications v. San Francisco (1985) 37 C.3d 859, 865, 210 C.R. 226, 693 P.2d 811 [natural and ordinary meaning of words, in favor of validity, against implied repeal of another constitutional provision]; Redevelopment Agency of Sacramento v. Malaki (1963) 216 C.A.2d 480, 487, 31 C.R. 92 [criticizing "plain meaning" rule]; Franchise Tax Bd. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 C.A.3d 1343, 1347, 261 C.R. 236 [constitutional provision must be construed with reference to its underlying purpose; provision prohibiting judicial action enjoining collection of taxes was not violated by statute that postpones collection of taxes during litigation].)

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes.

2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 115

[§ 115] In General.

(1) General Rules of Interpretation. In DeYoung v. San Diego (1983) 147 C.A.3d 11, 17, 194 C.R. 722, the court pointed out that the fundamental rules of statutory construction apply in interpreting provisions of a municipal charter (147 C.A.3d 17), and cited cases applying the following important rules:

(a) Ascertain the intent of the Legislature so as to effectuate the purpose of the law. (See Burden v. Snowden (1992) 2 C.4th 556, 562, 7 C.R.2d 531, 828 P.2d 672 [effectuate legislative intent]; Industrial Risk Insurers v. Rust Engineering Co. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1038, 1042, 283 C.R. 873 [effectuate apparent purpose, harmonize statutory sections relating to same subject, impute meaning that comports to legislative objective]; California Correctional Peace Officers Assn. v. Department of Corrections (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1331, 1340, 85 C.R.2d 797 [if earlier and later enactments present unavoidable conflict, most recent expression of legislative will prevails].)

(b) Give a provision a reasonable and common sense interpretation consistent with the apparent purpose, which will result in wise policy rather than mischief or absurdity. (See Wotton v. Bush (1953) 41 C.2d 460, 467, 261 P.2d 256 [consideration of objective sought to be achieved and evil to be prevented]; Granberry v. Islay Inv. (1984) 161 C.A.3d 382, 388, 207 C.R. 652 [avoid absurd result]; on disregarding words to avoid absurdity, see infra, §120.)

(c) Give significance, if possible, to every word or part, and harmonize the parts by considering a particular clause or section in the context of the whole. (See Moyer v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1973) 10 C.3d 222, 232, 110 C.R. 144, 514 P.2d 1224 [word susceptible of different meanings construed in conformity with general purpose of statute]; California Assn. of Psychology Providers v. Rank (1990) 51 C.3d 1, 18, 270 C.R. 796, 793 P.2d 2; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 77 [California Assn. of Psychology].)

(d) Take into account matters such as context, object in view, evils to be remedied, legislation on the same subject, public policy, and contemporaneous construction. (See Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 796, 797, footnote 5, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934 [state constitutional provision applies equally to nearly identical statutory provision]; infra, §123 et seq.; on implied amendment or repeal of conflicting statutes, see infra, §117.)

(e) Give great weight to consistent administrative construction. (See infra, §127.)

Where a statute specifically adopts the provisions of another statute, the provisions are incorporated in the form in which they existed at the time of adoption, and not as subsequently modified. The repeal of the original statute does not affect the adopting statute in the absence of clear expression to the contrary. (Palermo v. Stockton Theatres (1948) 32 C.2d 53, 58, 195 P.2d 1; see In re Jovan B. (1993) 6 C.4th 801, 816, 25 C.R.2d 428, 863 P.2d 673 [distinguishing Palermo; where it is unclear from words of incorporation whether adopting statute contemplates only time-specific incorporation, determining factor is legislative intent]; Sneed v. Saenz (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1220, 1238, 16 C.R.3d 563 [in interpreting welfare statute that did not specifically adopt calculation methodology of since-repealed statute in time-specific way, department was not bound to use that methodology].)

Many other cases discuss statutory construction. (See Monzon v. Schaefer Ambulance Service (1990) 224 C.A.3d 16, 30, 273 C.R. 615, quoting the text; Texas Commerce Bank v. Garamendi (1992) 11 C.A.4th 460, 471, 14 C.R.2d 854 [analysis and discussion of noscitur a sociis]; People v. Squier (1993) 15 C.A.4th 235, 241, 18 C.R.2d 536 [rule of strict interpretation of penal statutes does not apply in California]; Board of Education v. Sacramento County Bd. of Education (2001) 85 C.A.4th 1321, 1331, 102 C.R.2d 872 [whether time provisions in statute are mandatory or merely directory partially depends on purpose of statute]; Union Bank of Calif. v. Superior Court (2004) 115 C.A.4th 484, 489, 9 C.R.3d 137 [under Govt.C. 9607, repeal of statute that repealed former statute did not revive former statute or undo rights conferred by it]; infra, §116 et seq.; on liberal construction of statutes enacted in aid of self-executing constitutional provisions, see Chester v. Hall (1921) 55 C.A. 611, 617, 204 P. 237; Chesney v. Byram (1940) 15 C.2d 460, 101 P.2d 1106.) (See Uniform Statutory Construction Act, 14 U.L.A. (Master Ed.), §1 et seq.)

(2) Law Reviews and Texts. The following sources are illustrative of the commentary on the interpretation of statutes. (See 31 Cal. L. Rev. 203 [doctrine of latent ambiguities]; 83 *Harv. L. D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes.

2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes.

b. Initiative and Referendum Powers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 116

[§ 116] Initiative and Referendum Powers.

Several cases emphasize the policy of liberal construction of the constitutional and statutory provisions for the initiative and referendum in favor of the powers thus reserved to the people. (See McFadden v. Jordan (1948) 32 C.2d 330, 332, 196 P.2d 787, supra, §72 [initiative power was exceeded]; Blotter v. Farrell (1954) 42 C.2d 804, 809, 270 P.2d 481 [initiative power upheld]; Dye v. Council of Compton (1947) 80 C.A.2d 486, 490, 182 P.2d 623 [referendum power upheld]; Larson v. Duca (1989) 213 C.A.3d 324, 329, 261 C.R. 559 [court interpreting initiative measure must follow rule that electorate is deemed to know law prior to enactment of measure].)

In Hunt v. Riverside (1948) 31 C.2d 619, 191 P.2d 426, the court called attention to the opposing principle that, if applying the referendum power to a particular piece of legislation would have the inevitable effect of greatly impairing the efficacy of some other essential governmental power, it may be assumed that the people intended no such result. It was accordingly held that the referendum provisions of a city charter should not be construed to extend to an ordinance imposing a sales tax, because disruption in city fiscal administration would result from the uncertainty and delay of referendum proceedings. (31 C.2d 628.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes. 2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes. c. Conflicting Statutes.

[§ 117] Conflicting Statutes.

(1) Conflicting Statutes at Same Session. Unless there is an express provision to the contrary, it must be conclusively presumed that the statute that is enacted last or has the highest chapter number prevails over a conflicting statute that was adopted earlier or has a lower chapter number. (Govt.C. 9605; see In re Thierry S. (1977) 19 C.3d 727, 745, footnote 17, 139 C.R. 708, 566 P.2d 610 [highest chapter number rule manifests Legislature's intent and must be followed].)

(2) Implied Repeal of Conflicting Statutes. To overcome the strong presumption against the implied repeal of conflicting statutes, the two statutes "must be irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that the two cannot have concurrent operation. The courts are bound, if possible, to maintain the integrity of both statutes if the two may stand together." (Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control Dist. (1989) 49 C.3d 408, 419, 261 C.R. 384, 777 P.2d 157; see Stop Youth Addiction v. Lucky Stores (1998) 17 C.4th 553, 569, 71 C.R.2d 731, 950 P.2d 1086 [retailer failed to demonstrate that P.C. 308, prohibiting sales of cigarettes to minors, is irreconcilable with broad standing provision of Unfair Competition Law]; Medical Bd. of Calif. v. Superior Court (2001) 88 C.A.4th 1001, 1005, 1013, 106 C.R.2d 381 [B. & P.C. 141, permitting state licensing boards to impose discipline based on disciplinary action taken by another state, can be reconciled with more specific B. & P.C. 2305, mandating disciplinary action against medical licensees based on out-of-state discipline that "would have been grounds for discipline in California," by treating B. & P.C. 2305 as an exception to, but not replacement of, B. & P.C. 141]; Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Public Util. Com. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 881, 891, 5 C.R.3d 503 [statute requiring railroads to employ brakemen to work in obsolete position for 2 years before becoming conductors was repealed by implication by later enacted anti-featherbedding initiative, regardless of whether initiative expressly named statute or whether statute was inconsistent with initiative at time initiative was passed]; 92 Cal. L. Rev. 487 [Rethorizing the Presumption Against Implied Repeals].)

(3) Implied Amendment of Conflicting Statutes. The implied amendment of an existing statute is not favored. It "is to be employed frugally, and only where the later-enacted statute creates such a conflict with existing law that there is no rational basis for harmonizing the two statutes." (McLaughlin v. State Bd. of Education (1999) 75 C.A.4th 196, 219, 222, 89 C.R.2d 295.) Educ.C. 33050 provides that, except for specifically enumerated statutes, Education Code provisions may be waived. In McLaughlin, the court impliedly amended the statute to add Educ.C. 300-340 (Proposition 227, the "English Language in Public Schools" initiative) to the list of excepted statutes, i.e., statutes that may not be waived. Initiatives are held to a different standard than statutes enacted by the Legislature (75 C.A.4th 214), and the failure to specifically add the core provisions of the initiative to the list of exceptions to Educ.C. 33050 was due to "drafters' oversight" (75 C.A.4th 223). "[I]n light of the abolitionist tone of the proposition, including the ballot pamphlet materials, we believe the only reasonable conclusion is that the initiative's failure to conform section 33050 to the Chapter was simply the product of neglect." (75 C.A.4th 223.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1a) (New) Conflicting Amendments. Where a legislative body amends an ordinance that is also subject to amendment by a conflicting and irreconcilable initiative measure, the version of the ordinance passed later in time controls. (Garber v. Levit (2006) 141 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 7, 46 C.R.3d 348.) (2) Implied Repeal of Conflicting Statutes. See Stone Street Capital, LLC v. California State Lottery Com. (2008) 165 C.A.4th 109, 118, 80 C.R.3d 326, 4 Summary (10th), Secured Transactions in Personal Property, Supp., §164 [more specific provision of State Lottery Act prohibiting assignment of final three annual lottery payments could be harmonized as exception to more general U.C.C. provision codifying principle of free assignability of accounts].

2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes.

d. Construction in Favor of Constitutionality.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 118

[§ 118] Construction in Favor of Constitutionality.

(1) In General. A statute susceptible of two interpretations will if possible be construed as constitutional. (See Shealor v. Lodi (1944) 23 C.2d 647, 653, 145 P.2d 574; Palermo v. Stockton Theatres (1948) 32 C.2d 53, 60, 195 P.2d 1; Kopp v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1995) 11 C.4th 607, 47 C.R.2d 108, 905 P.2d 1248 [reformation of Proposition 73 to ensure its constitutionality would impermissibly intrude on policymaking functions reserved to Legislature and the People]; In re Marriage of Shupe (1983) 139 C.A.3d 1026, 1035, 189 C.R. 288; Summit Care-California v. Rev. 286 [Kopp]; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §172 et seq.)

And, to uphold their validity, statutes may be construed together with constitutional provisions. (People v. Globe Grain & Milling Co. (1930) 211 C. 121, 127, 294 P. 3; California Housing Finance Agency v. Elliott (1976) 17 C.3d 575, 593, 131 C.R. 361, 551 P.2d 1193 [construing statute to incorporate self-executing constitutional provision].)

A related rule is that a statute will normally be construed as prospective in effect, not only to avoid due process objections, but also to prevent hardship or unfairness from constitutionally valid retroactive application. (See infra, §633.)

(2) Avoiding Decision on Constitutionality. A court should not decide the question whether a statute is constitutional if alternative grounds are available to dispose of the issues in the case. (See California State Electronics Assn. v. Zeos Int. Ltd. (1996) 41 C.A.4th 1270, 1274, 49 C.R.2d 127 [sales by out-of-state computer manufacturer were not subject to warranty requirements of C.C. 1793.2(a)(1)(A) (see 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §317); hence, constitutionality of statute need not be decided]; 116 *Harv. Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes. 2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes. e. Facial Challenge.

[§ 119] Facial Challenge.

A facial challenge to a legislative act is "the most difficult challenge to mount successfully, since the challenger must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid." The fact that an act "might operate unconstitutionally under one set of circumstances is insufficient to render it wholly invalid," except in the limited context of an overbreadth challenge under the First Amendment. (United States v. Salerno (1987) 481 U.S. 739, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 2100, 95 L.Ed.2d 697, 707 [Bail Reform Act is not facially unconstitutional]; see In re Marriage of Siller (1986) 187 C.A.3d 36, 48, 50, 231 C.R. 757 [distinguishing between facial challenge and challenge to statute as applied].)

Even in the context of a First Amendment challenge, "[o]nly a statute that is substantially overbroad may be invalidated on its face." (Houston v. Hill (1987) 482 U.S. 451, 107 S.Ct. 2502, 2508, 96 L.Ed.2d 398, 410; see Williams v. Garcetti (1993) 5 C.4th 561, 578, 20 C.R.2d 341, 853 P.2d 507 ["Although the right of intimate family association is constitutionally protected, a statute that seeks to regulate parental behavior is not overbroad per se"]; People v. Rodriguez (1998) 66 C.A.4th 157, 166, 77 C.R.2d 676 [discussing facial unconstitutionality and First Amendment exceptions]; 30 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1 [Avoiding Serious Constitutional Doubts: The Supreme Court's Construction of Statutes Raising Free Speech Concerns]; infra, §408 et seq.)

In Welton v. Los Angeles (1976) 18 C.3d 497, 134 C.R. 668, 556 P.2d 1119, infra, §335, the court offered the following suggestions on construction of a statute or ordinance challenged for overbreadth: "Two principles of statutory construction govern whether a statute or ordinance suffering overbreadth may be construed so as to avoid conflict with the Constitution. First, the enactment may be validated if its terms are reasonably susceptible to an interpretation consistent with the Constitution . . . Second, the court should construe the enactment so as to limit its effect and operation to matters that may be constitutionally regulated or prohibited." (18 C.3d 505.) However, "[b]oth principles are limited by the further rule that judicial construction must not create uncertainty inhibiting exercise of a constitutional right." (18 C.3d 506.)

2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes.

f. Disregarding Words To Avoid Absurdity.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 120

[§ 120] Disregarding Words To Avoid Absurdity.

Unzueta v. Ocean View School Dist. (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1689, 8 C.R.2d 614, explores the meaning and effect of the rule that the literal meaning of the words of a statute may be disregarded to avoid "absurd results." (6 C.A.4th 1698.)

(a) Like beauty, absurdity "is in the eye of the beholder." (6 C.A.4th 1698.) As Lord Bramwell put it: "I should like to have a good definition of what is such an absurdity that you are to disregard the plain words of an Act of Parliament. It is to be remembered that what seems absurd to one man does not seem absurd to another. ... I think it is infinitely better, although an absurdity or an injustice or other objectionable result may be evolved as the consequence of your construction, to adhere to the words of an Act of Parliament and leave the legislature to set it right than to alter those words according to one's notion of an absurdity." (6 C.A.4th 1698.)

(b) "Each time the judiciary utilizes the 'absurd result' rule, a little piece is stripped from the written rule of law and confidence in legislative enactments is lessened. ... If the dissent had one additional vote, this court would sit as a 'super-Legislature' with more than veto power over legislation. The court would have the power to add and subtract from the plain language of a statute. Lord Bramwell would not be pleased with the dissent's definition of absurdity." (6 C.A.4th 1699.)

(c) "[E]xcept in the most extreme cases where legislative intent and the underlying purpose are at odds with the plain language of the statute, an appellate court should exercise judicial restraint, stay its hand, and refrain from rewriting a statute to find an intent not expressed by the Legislature." (6 C.A.4th 1700.)

The dissent found the majority holding unacceptable: "Absurdity--I know it when I see it. I agree with my colleagues that absurdity is in the mind of the beholder. Perhaps I am too prone to see it, but its specter haunts me in this case." (6 C.A.4th 1702.) "A mechanical, literal interpretation of the statute in the lifeless atmosphere of a vacuum creates a result contrary to public policy, contrary to legislative intent, contrary to common sense, and contrary to our shared notions of justice." (6 C.A.4th 1705.) (See California School Employees Assn. v. Governing Bd. of the Marin Community College District (1994) 8 C.4th 333, 339, 342, 33 C.R.2d 109, 878 P.2d 1321 [Educ.C. 88203 and 79020, providing that days appointed by President as days of "thanksgiving" are holidays for community college employees, construed to require that proclamation contemplated national holiday, since literal interpretation would result in absurd result that entitlement to holiday depends on President's fortuitous choice of words].)

g. Plain Meaning and Other Particular Rules.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 121

[§ 121] Plain Meaning and Other Particular Rules.

In examining and interpreting the words of a statute, courts are guided by the following rules:

(1) Plain meaning. Courts will adopt a literal interpretation unless it is repugnant to the obvious purpose of the statute. (Lungren v. Deukmejian (1988) 45 C.3d 727, 735, 248 C.R. 115, 755 P.2d 299; Duty v. Abex Corp. (1989) 214 C.A.3d 742, 749, 263 C.R. 13; see *Petaluma v. Rev. 569 [resurrection of plain meaning in California courts].)

(2) Ejusdem generis. Items of the same kind will be treated together. (See Harris v. Capital Growth Investors XIV (1991) 52 C.3d 1142, 1159, 278 C.R. 614, 805 P.2d 873; Moore v. Community Redevelopment Agency (2003) 108 C.A.4th 25, 38, 133 C.R.2d 324 [doctrine is one of statutory construction that cannot be used to defeat legislative intent].)

(3) Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. (See United Farm Workers v. Agricultural Lab. Rel. Bd. (1995) 41 C.A.4th 303, 316, 48 C.R.2d 696 [grant of power to Table Grape Commission to investigate and prosecute civilly certain violations of Food & Agriculture Code impliedly excluded commission from filing charges with Agriculture Labor Relations Board for violation of other statute]; In re Christopher T. (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1282, 1290, 71 C.R.2d 116 [discussing and defining rule]; *Dean v. (4) Last antecedent rule. Qualifying words or phrases should be applied to those immediately preceding them unless separated by a comma. (See Garcetti v. Superior Court (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1113, 1120, 102 C.R.2d 703.)

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes.

2. Rules for Interpretation of Statutes.

h. Application of Rules.

[§ 122] Application of Rules.

In Halbert's Lumber v. Lucky Stores (1992) 6 C.A.4th 1233, 8 C.R.2d 298, the court undertook a comprehensive analysis of the problem of statutory interpretation, commencing with a reference to an illuminating article by Llewellyn:

(a) "More than 40 years ago, Karl Llewellyn authored a now classic law review article in which he took great delight in listing, side by side, contradictory maxims of statutory interpretation. Llewellyn's thesis was that judges pick and choose among the rules to arrive at a result consonant with their own judicial temperament and philosophy." (6 C.A.4th 1237.)

(b) "At its logical extreme, Llewellyn's thesis would mean there is no law when it comes to the interpretation of law itself. It all depends on the 'felt need' emanating from the particular 'situation' and 'controversy' before the court. But the rules of statutory interpretation are not quite so plastic as Llewellyn's article might lead us to believe. There is order in the most fundamental rules of statutory interpretation if we want to find it. The key is applying those rules in proper sequence." (6 C.A.4th 1238.)

(c) "First, a court should examine the actual language of the statute. ... Judges, lawyers and laypeople all have far readier access to the actual laws enacted by the Legislature than the various and sometimes fragmentary documents shedding light on legislative intent. More significantly, it is the language of the statute itself that has successfully braved the legislative gauntlet. It is that language which has been lobbied for, lobbied against, studied, proposed, drafted, restudied, redrafted, voted on in committee, amended, reamended, analyzed, reanalyzed, voted on by two houses of the Legislature, sent to a conference committee, and, after perhaps more lobbying, debate and analysis, finally signed 'into law' by the Governor. The same care and scrutiny does not befall the committee reports, caucus analyses, authors' statements, legislative counsel digests and other documents which make up a statute's 'legislative history.'" (6 C.A.4th 1238.)

(d) "If the meaning is without ambiguity, doubt, or uncertainty, then the language controls. ... There is nothing to 'interpret' or 'construe.'" (6 C.A.4th 1239.) But if the meaning of the words is not clear, "courts must take the second step and refer to the legislative history." (6 C.A.4th 1239.)

(e) "The final step--and one which we believe should only be taken when the first two steps have failed to reveal clear meaning--is to apply reason, practicality, and common sense to the language at hand. If possible, the words should be interpreted to make them workable and reasonable ... , in accord with common sense and justice, and avoid an absurd result." (6 C.A.4th 1239.) (See People v. Duque (2003) 105 C.A.4th 259, 267, 129 C.R.2d 298 [statute that provides for forfeiture of office as penalty for PUC commissioner involuntarily holding stock in regulated company but provides no penalty for voluntary possession is not absurd when read with reference to entire scheme of law of which it is part]; 116 Harv. [§ 123] In General.

Sources of legislative and constitutional intent are numerous. (See People v. Avanesian (1999) 76 C.A.4th 635, 641, 90 C.R.2d 367 [editors' descriptive headings to statutes are private editorial creations that may not be relied on for statutory interpretation]; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §77 et seq.; 73 Am.Jur.2d (2001 ed.), Statutes §66 et seq.)

Among the permissible aids to construction are the following:

(1) Proceedings of the California constitutional convention. (See Older v. Superior Court (1910) 157 C. 770, 776, 109 P. 478; Story v. Richardson (1921) 186 C. 162, 165, 198 P. 1057; Wallace v. Superior Court (1956) 141 C.A.2d 771, 777, 298 P.2d 69.)

(2) Printed arguments to voters on a statute or constitutional amendment submitted by initiative or referendum. (See Lundberg v. Alameda (1956) 46 C.2d 644, 652, 298 P.2d 1 [held inconclusive]; White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 775, footnote 11, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, infra, §575 [quoted and relied on]; Lungren v. Deukmejian (1988) 45 C.3d 727, 738, 248 C.R. 115, 755 P.2d 299; Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 802, 803, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934 [ballot argument was relevant but inconclusive and provided insufficient basis to ignore unambiguous language of measure itself]; Robert L. v. Superior Court (2003) 30 C.4th 894, 906, 135 C.R.2d 30, 69 P.2d 951 [to determine voter intent, reviewing court may look at ballot's legislative analysis, which includes arguments in ballot pamphlet advanced by both proponents and opponents of measure]; California Bldg. Duca (1989) 213 C.A.3d 324, 329, 261 C.R. 559 [ballot summary and argument showed intent to broaden exception from tax reassessment]; Woo v. Superior Court (2000) 83 C.A.4th 967, 978, 100 C.R.2d 156 [voters approving revised charter did not intend to change term limits law to disqualify persons who had already served two terms before term limits were adopted, even though revised charter on its face disqualified persons who had ever served two terms; ballot pamphlet and recent history of term limits law led voters to believe law would be unchanged, and fundamental right to hold public office was at issue; distinguishing Delaney].)

(3) Declaratory initiative on meaning of earlier initiative. (See California Bldg. Industry Assn. v. Governing Bd., supra, 206 C.A.3d 232 [later initiative providing that neither it nor earlier measure could be construed to authorize new

(4) California Law Revision Commission Reports. (See Brian W. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 618, 622, 143 C.R. 717, 574 P.2d 788; Miro v. Superior Court (1990) 217 C.A.3d 464, 469, 266 C.R. 50 [report entitled to substantial weight where proposed statute is adopted without change].)

(5) Legislative counsel's digest. (See California Assn. of Psychology Providers v. Governing Bd. (1983) 141 C.A.3d 606, 613, 614, 616, 190 C.R. 453 [helpful, but must be disregarded where law is clear and no need for construction]; Planned Protective Services v. Gorton (1988) 200 C.A.3d 1, 14, 245 C.R. 790.)

(6) Attorney General's Opinion. (See infra, §127.)

(7) Prior judicial construction of an earlier constitutional provision. (See People v. Mims (1955) 136 C.A.2d 828, 831, 289 P.2d 539 ["where a provision of the earlier Constitution has been construed by the Supreme Court it must be presumed that the framers of the present Constitution in readopting it intended it to have the same effect"].)

(8) Prior judicial construction of a statute. (See Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified School Dist. (1978) 21 C.3d 650, 659, 147 C.R. 359, 580 P.2d 1155 [Legislature, in amending statute, intended to alter law].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes. 3. Aids to Interpretation. b. Legislative History. 1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 124

[§ 124] In General.

Legislative history of the adoption of a statute or proposed constitutional amendment is an important factor in interpretation. As the court said in Lewis v. Ryan (1976) 64 C.A.3d 330, 134 C.R. 355:

"In determining that issue, we apply the recognized approach of seeking the intent of the Legislature in enacting the statutory scheme so that the intent may be carried out by judicial construction . . . More precisely, we search for the manner in which the Legislature would have treated the problem in the case at bench had the Legislature foreseen it. In that search, we are cognizant of at least three judicial approaches applied singly or in some combination. One approach utilizes maxims of statutory construction which, by a process of selection, can support any result a court thinks appropriate . . . Another resolves the unforeseen problem in the way the court would have done had it been the Legislature and blessed with foresight equal to hindsight . . . The third approach seeks clues of legislative intent from legislative history and within the statutory scheme of which the legislation to be interpreted is a part . . . As seductive and uninhibited as the first and second approaches may be, we deem the third controlling upon us where clues to the legislative intent exist." (64 C.A.3d 333.)

However, legislative history is not relevant in interpreting a statute adopted by initiative; instead, the court must look to the voters' intent. (Robert L. v. Superior Court (2003) 30 C.4th 894, 904, 135 C.R.2d 30, 69 P.2d 951.) And the history of legislative intent provides no guidance to the voters' intent in later adopting a nearly identical constitutional provision, where none of the indicia of the Legislature's intent were before the voters. (Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 801, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934.)

In J.A. Jones Const. Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1568, 33 C.R.2d 206, the court noted formidable criticisms of the use of legislative history. This history represents the views of only a few of the persons, including lobbyists and committee staff people, involved in the legislative process, and the history is contaminated by documents that are aimed more at influencing the judiciary than explaining the bill to the rest of the Legislature. (27 C.A.4th 1577.) These criticisms do not warrant a blanket rule against use of legislative history. However, "the wisest course is to rely on legislative history only when that history itself is unambiguous." (27 C.A.4th 1578.)

The use of legislative history in interpreting statutes and constitutional amendments has been the subject of numerous law reviews. (See 25 Cal. L. Rev. 326 [congressional debates]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1005 [Why Learned Hand Would Never Consult Legislative History Today]; 12 Pacific L. J. 621 [history of "due process of law" as demonstrating irrelevance of legislative history]; 9 *So. Cal. Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

D. Interpretation of Constitutions and Statutes.

3. Aids to Interpretation.

c. Statement of Legislative Findings or Intent.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 126

[§ 126] Statement of Legislative Findings or Intent.

(1) In General. The views of the Legislature, as evidenced by passage of a law in accordance with a particular interpretation, are persuasive as to legislative intent. (See San Francisco v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1920) 183 C. 273, 279, 191 P. 26; Lundberg v. Alameda (1956) 46 C.2d 644, 652, 298 P.2d 1; Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Rank (1990) 51 C.3d 1, 15, 270 C.R. 796, 793 P.2d 2; Professional Engineers in Calif. Government v. Department of Trans. (1997) 15 C.4th 543, 569, 63 C.R.2d 467, 936 P.2d 473, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §19 [deference afforded to legislative findings does not foreclose court's independent judgment of facts bearing on issue of constitutional law; citing Turner Broadcasting System v. Federal Communications Com. (1994) 512 U.S. 622, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 2471, 129 L.Ed.2d 497, 532, infra, §375]; Sutter's Place v. Kennedy (1999) 71 C.A.4th 674, 691, 84 C.R.2d 84 [Legislature's declaration of urgency for particular legislation should be given deference]; and see United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. (1936) 299 U.S. 304, 57 S.Ct. 216, 224, 81 L.Ed. 255, 266 [long-continued legislative practice]; 110 Harv. L. Rev. 1359 [extrajudicial constitutional interpretation].)

Although the Legislature's interpretation of a constitutional term in an enacted ballot measure is relevant to assessment of the electorate's intention, this canon of construction must be used with caution when interpreting an initiative measure. The Legislature is not always enamored with initiative measures enacted by the voters, and it ought not to be able to frustrate the intent of the electorate by enacting statutes that frustrate the popular will. Consequently, although courts will examine statutes enacted in light of the subject constitutional provision, they will continue to give greater significance to the will of the electorate itself. (Hoogasian Flowers v. State Bd. of Equalization (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1264, 1277, 1278, 28 C.R.2d 686, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §139; see California Bldg. Industry Assn. v. Governing Bd. (1988) 206 C.A.3d 212, 231, 253 C.R. 497 [Legislature's interpretation of meaning of initiative measure indicated by statutes adopted to implement it].)

(2) Declaratory Statute. "[A]lthough construction of a statute is a judicial function, where a statute is unclear, a subsequent expression of the Legislature bearing upon the intent of the prior statute may be properly considered in determining the effect and meaning of the prior statute." (Tyler v. California (1982) 134 C.A.3d 973, 977, 185 C.R. 49; see California Emp. Stabilization Com. v. Payne (1947) 31 C.2d 210, 213, 187 P.2d 702; Redevelopment Agency of San Francisco v. Pacific Vegetable Oil Corp. (1966) 241 C.A.2d 606, 612, 50 C.R. 676; American Tobacco Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 C.A.3d 480, 489, 255 C.R. 280, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1535 [declaratory portion of statute harmonized with remainder]; for example of declaration of intent, see historical note to Rev.C. 2192.1 [statute is declaratory of existing law and was designed to avoid interpretation in federal decision]; on use of declaratory initiative, see California Bldg. Industry Assn. v. Governing Bd., supra, 206 C.A.3d 224.)

(3) Distinction: Statement of Individual Legislator. A statement of personal belief of an individual legislator as to legislative intent cannot be considered. (California Teachers Assn. v. San Diego Community College Dist. (1981) 28 C.3d 692, 701, 170 C.R. 817, 621 P.2d 856 [see concurring opinion strongly disagreeing with this view and citing long list of opinions in which these statements were used]; Walters v. Weed (1988) 45 C.3d 1, 10, 246 C.R. 5, 752 P.2d 443; San Francisco v. Superior Court (1982) 130 C.A.3d 481, 485, 181 C.R. 775; Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Friedman) (1985) 170 C.A.3d 744, 752, 216 C.R. 311; Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. v. Imperial Irr. Dist. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 1403, 1426, 96 C.R.2d 314 [material showing motive or understanding of individual legislator, including bill's author, is generally not considered because it fails to show Legislature's collective intent]; 15 U.S.F. [§ 127] Contemporaneous Administrative Construction.

Contemporaneous administrative construction of a constitutional provision or statute by the executive department is constantly invoked in determining legislative intent. (See Pocket Veto Case (1929) 279 U.S. 655, 49 S.Ct. 463, 469, 73 L.Ed. 894, 902; *Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. However, this contemporaneous construction will not be followed where it is clearly erroneous. (See *Mudd v. Where statutory language is clear and unambiguous, extrinsic indicia of intent should not be considered. (Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 785, 800, 801, 268 C.R. 753, 789 P.2d 934; Sacramento v. Public Employees' Retirement System (1994) 22 C.A.4th 786, 793, 27 C.R.2d 545; Ceridian Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd. (2000) 85 C.A.4th 875, 889, 102 C.R.2d 611.)

An unusual aspect of this rule was presented in Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Swoap (1985) 173 C.A.3d 1187, 219 C.R. 664. The 1985-1986 California State Budget originally contained §33.35, which restricted the use of family planning funds for organizations providing abortion-related services. The Legislature by a two-thirds majority voted to delete the provision, but by clerical error, the deletion was not made. The Governor, although requested by the Speaker of the Assembly to correct the bill, signed it, stating that he was opposed to use of public funds for these services. Petitioners, a coalition of family planning organizations and state officers, sought mandamus to compel respondent Secretary of Health and Welfare to refrain from enforcing the section. Held, the petition could not be granted on this showing.

The court pointed out that the issue was not one of interpretation to carry out legislative intent. The words of the section were clear, and extrinsic evidence could not be used to nullify the provision as enacted. (173 C.A.3d 1193, citing Sherman v. Story (1866) 30 C. 253, Yolo v. Colgan (1901) 132 C. 265, 64 P. 403, and People v. Santa Clara (1951) 37 C.2d 335, 338, 231 P.2d 826.) The appropriate remedy for mistakes in budget bills is a "cleanup bill" to correct the errors. (173 C.A.3d 1195.) (For the holding on violation of single subject rule, see infra, §132.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW E. Title and Subject of Statute. 1. Descriptive Title.

[§ 129] Descriptive Title.

"A statute shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. If a statute embraces a subject not expressed in its title, only the part not expressed is void." (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §9.) The requirement applies to statutes, and not to municipal ordinances. (Ex parte Haskell (1896) 112 C. 412, 421, 44 P. 725 [former Art. IV, §24].)

The most important decision on this requirement, applying former Article IV, §24, was Lewis v. Dunne (1901) 134 C. 291, 66 P. 478, holding invalid the revised 1901 Code of Civil Procedure. The objectionable title was: "An act to revise the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California by amending certain sections, repealing others and adding certain new sections." (For other examples of titles held defective, see Wallace v. Zinman (1927) 200 C. 585, 590, 254 P. 946; Clark v. Jordan (1936) 7 C.2d 248, 60 P.2d 457 [short title in initiative measure was misleading]; Balzano v. Traeger (1928) 93 C.A. 640, 646, 270 P. 249; Jackson v. Santa Monica (1936) 13 C.A.2d 376, 386, 57 P.2d 226.)

In most cases, however, the attack has failed. The courts have pointed out that the title need not be an abstract or index of the provisions of the statute, so long as it is reasonably indicative of the matter contained in it. (See Heron v. Riley (1930) 209 C. 507, 510, 289 P. 160; People v. Superior Court (1937) 10 C.2d 288, 296, 73 P.2d 1221; Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. v. Marquardt (1963) 59 C.2d 159, 172, 28 C.R. 724, 379 P.2d 28; Los Angeles v. Hurlbut (1941) 44 C.A.2d 88, 100, 111 P.2d 963; Ikuta v. Ikuta (1950) 97 C.A.2d 787, 791, 218 P.2d 854.)

Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(d), requires the Attorney General to "prepare a title and summary" before circulation of an initiative or referendum measure. (See Elec.C. 9001 et seq., 9086.) The test of sufficiency of the title and summary is the same as that for a statute. (See Amador Valley Joint Union High School Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1978) 22 C.3d 208, 243, 149 C.R. 239, 583 P.2d 1281; Tinsley v. Superior Court (1983) 150 C.A.3d 90, 108, 197 C.R. 643.) However, opponents lack standing under Elec.C. 9106 to challenge the accuracy of the title and summary of a proposed initiative measure before the initiative has qualified for the ballot. (Songstad v. Superior Court (2001) 93 C.A.4th 1202, 1208, 113 C.R.2d 729.) (On enforcement of duty to prepare title and summary, see infra, §131.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW
E. Title and Subject of Statute.
2. Reenactment Requirement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 130

[§ 130] Reenactment Requirement.

"A statute may not be amended by reference to its title. A section of a statute may not be amended unless the section is re-enacted as amended." (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §9; see Scott A. v. Superior Court (1972) 27 C.A.3d 292, 295, 103 C.R. 683.)

This provision prevents legislative changes by directing insertions or omissions, and requires that the entire context as amended be republished. However, where a statute is divided into sections, it is unnecessary to republish the entire act; republication of the particular sections affected is sufficient. (People v. Western Fruit Growers (1943) 22 C.2d 494, 501, 140 P.2d 13 [decided under former Art. IV, §24]; see White v. California (2001) 88 C.A.4th 298, 315, 105 C.R.2d 714 [Legislature did not violate Art. IV, §9 "when it added new code sections restating each of the statutes that would be changed by the enactment"].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

E. Title and Subject of Statute.

3. Single Subject Rule.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 131

[§ 131] In General.

A statute may only embrace one subject. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §9; see Evans v. Superior Court (1932) 215 C. 58, 8 P.2d 467 [decided under former Art. IV, §24; upholding 1931 Probate Code, despite inclusion of law of guardianship].)

In 1948, former Article IV, §1c (now Cal. Const., Art. II, §8(d)) was adopted to make the restriction applicable to statutes or constitutional amendments proposed by initiative. Because the purpose of this section is the same as that governing legislative acts, it is similarly construed. (See Perry v. Jordan (1949) 34 C.2d 87, 92, 207 P.2d 47; Amador Valley Joint Union High School Dist. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1978) 22 C.3d 208, 229 et seq., 149 C.R. 239, 583 P.2d 1281 [Article XIII A (Jarvis-Gann initiative) does not violate single-subject requirement]; Fair Political Practices Com. v. Superior Court (1979) 25 C.3d 33, 39 et seq., 157 C.R. 855, 599 P.2d 46 ["reasonably germane test" applies; rejecting contention that more restrictive test should be applied to initiative measures]; Brosnahan v. Brown (1982) 32 C.3d 236, 247, 186 C.R. 30, 651 P.2d 274, 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §104 [Proposition 8 (The Victims' Bill of Rights) upheld against single-subject challenge]; Tinsley v. Superior Court (1983) 150 C.A.3d 90, 105, 106, 197 C.R. 643 [Proposition 1 (Anti-Busing Amendment) upheld against single-subject challenge]; 14 Pacific L. J. 1095 [demise of single-subject rule]; 24 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 879 [Putting the "Single" Back in the Single-Subject Rule: A proposal for Initiative Reform in California]; 30 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 936 [initiatives and single-subject rule].) (On invalidity of initiative where constitutional "amendment" was so extensive as to constitute a proposed revision, see supra, §72.)

In Schmitz v. Younger (1978) 21 C.3d 90, 93, 145 C.R. 517, 577 P.2d 652, the Attorney General refused to prepare a title and summary of a proposed statewide ballot measure on the ground that it covered more than one subject. Held, mandamus granted to compel him to act as requested. Citing Farley v. Healey (1967) 67 C.2d 325, 62 C.R. 26, 431 P.2d 650, infra, §155, the court declared that the duty involved is ministerial, and must be performed when the proposed measure is in proper form and complies with procedural requirements. The Attorney General may challenge the validity of the measure by timely and appropriate legal action, but may not delay or impede the initiative process while that challenge is being considered. (21 C.3d 93.) Two justices joined in a strong dissent, arguing that the Attorney General should not be compelled to perform an illegal act (giving a title to a proposed measure that violates the Constitution). (21 C.3d 96.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

E. Title and Subject of Statute.

3. Single Subject Rule.

b. Rule Violated.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 132

[§ 132] Rule Violated.

In Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Swoap (1985) 173 C.A.3d 1187, 219 C.R. 664, supra, §128, the 1985-1986 California State Budget contained a provision (§33.35) restricting the use of family planning funds for organizations furnishing abortion-related services. Held, the provision violated the single subject rule. Annual budget acts are subject to the rule; hence, the bill may deal only with the one subject of appropriations to support the annual budget, and may not be used to grant authority to a state agency that the agency does not possess or to amend existing statutory law. (173 C.A.3d 1199, citing Association for Retarded Citizens v. Department of Developmental Services (1985) 38 C.3d 384, 394, 211 C.R. 758, 696 P.2d 150.) The section granted this authority, thus amending the family planning act, and was therefore unconstitutional. (173 C.A.3d 1201.) (See 38 Hastings L. J. 563 [case for subject veto].)

In Harbor v. Deukmejian (1987) 43 C.3d 1078, 240 C.R. 569, 742 P.2d 1290, infra, §173, the court held that Senate Bill 1379, dealing with many distinct and unrelated fiscal matters, violated the constitutional prohibition.

(a) The single subject and the title requirements are distinct and serve separate purposes. Hence, a statute may be held unconstitutional solely on the ground of violation of the single subject requirement. (43 C.3d 1096.) Senate Bill 1379 amends, repeals, or adds approximately 150 sections contained in more than 20 codes and legislative acts, and petitioners sought to sustain it under Evans v. Superior Court (1932) 215 C. 58, 8 P.2d 467, holding that the act adopting a Probate Code contained only one subject. (43 C.3d 1097.) But later cases have pointed out that measures containing unduly diverse or extensive provisions bearing no reasonable relation to each other cannot be joined. (43 C.3d 1099.) "[T]hese cases hold that a measure complies with the rule if its provisions are either functionally related to one another or are reasonably germane to one another or the objects of the enactment." (43 C.3d 1100.)

(b) Senate Bill 1379 complies with none of these standards. "Fiscal affairs" and "statutory adjustments" to the budget are too broad in scope if they encompass any substantive measure which has no effect on the budget. "If petitioners' position were accepted, a substantial portion of the many thousand statutes adopted during each legislative session could be included in a single measure even though their provisions had no relationship to one another or to any single object except that they would have some effect on the state's expenditures as reflected in the budget bill." (43 C.3d 1101.)

(c) This ruling, however, is to be applied prospectively. The practice of enacting budget implementation bills began in 1978, and between that time and 1984, several of these bills were passed, some of which suffer from the same defect as Senate Bill 1379. Thus, a substantial number of provisions in prior bills would be subject to challenges. (43 C.3d 1102.)

(d) The same prospective effect is to be given to the veto. The Governor would clearly have had the power to veto §45.5 if it had been passed as a separate bill, and his inability to do so was frustrated by the Legislature's inclusion of the section in a multisubject bill. "In these circumstances, an evenhanded respect for the executive and legislative branches of government leads us to invoke an exception to the general rule of retroactivity ... so as to achieve a result that most closely conforms to the outcome that would have occurred if both the Legislature and the Governor had complied with the law. Accordingly, the Governor's veto of section 45.5 will not be invalidated and only that section of Bill 1379 will be rendered inoperative." (43 C.3d 1102.)

California Trial Lawyers Assn. v. Eu (1988) 200 C.A.3d 351, 245 C.R. 916, involved a challenge to the Insurance Cost Control Initiative of 1988. The measure included provisions establishing no fault automobile insurance, reducing premiums, limiting attorneys' contingency fees, and requiring arbitration. Section 8, entitled "Regulation of campaign contributions," would have allowed those involved in the insurance industry to make campaign contributions and exempted elected officials receiving these contributions from conflict of interest rules. Held, the initiative violated the single subject rule.

(a) The connection between the stated object of the initiative--reducing insurance costs--and section 8 "is not readily apparent." (200 C.A.3d 359.) Whether guaranteeing the insurance industry the right to participate in the political process is logically related to reducing insurance costs may be questioned; but even if it is, there is no reasonable connection between exempting public officials from conflict of interest rules and controlling insurance costs. (200 C.A.3d 359.)

(b) A primary purpose of Cal. Const., Art. II, §8(d) (supra, §131) is to minimize confusion and deception both as to voters and signers of initiative petitions. (200 C.A.3d 360.) "In our view, section 8 of the initiative is a paradigm of the potentially deceptive combinations of unrelated provisions at which the constitutional limitation on the scope of initiatives is aimed. It is located, as previously described, near the middle of a 120 page document, and consists of two brief paragraphs which bear no connection to what precedes or follows." (200 C.A.3d 360.) This new section would be placed between sections in the Insurance Code dealing with fraudulent claims and administrative proceedings. "We believe it extremely unlikely that the average voter or signer of a sponsoring petition, or even one more conscientious and sophisticated, would take the time to study the initiative in such detail as to discover this obscure campaign funding provision." (200 C.A.3d 361.)

(c) "In the present case, not only is there a lack of any reasonably discernible nexus between the stated object of the initiative and the campaign spending and conflict of interest provisions of section 8, but the title and various descriptions of the initiative's contents give no clue that any such provisions are buried within. These flaws are fatal." (200 C.A.3d 361.)

(d) Cal. Const., Art. II, §8(d), in contrast to Cal. Const., Art. IV, §9 (supra, §129), dealing with legislative enactments, has no provision for severance. Hence, violation of the single subject rule cannot be cured by judicial surgery. (200 C.A.3d 362.)

Chemical Specialties Mfrs. Assn. v. Deukmejian (1991) 227 C.A.3d 663, 278 C.R. 128, held that Proposition 105, an initiative measure entitled "Public's Right To Know Act," violated the single subject rule. The court, discussing Harbor v. Deukmejian and California Trial Lawyers Assn. v. Eu, supra, observed that "the measure seeks to reduce toxic pollution, protect seniors from fraud and deceit in the issuance of insurance policies, raise the health and safety standard in nursing homes, preserve the integrity of the election process, and fight apartheid; well-intentioned objectives but not reasonably related to one another for purposes of the single-subject rule." (227 C.A.3d 671.)

"The unconstitutionality of Proposition 105 is also supported by a brief review of the history of the measure. Initially, the five parts to the initiative were introduced separately and rejected in our State Legislature. After the individual bills were defeated they were gathered together as one ballot initiative. While this 'logrolling' alone does not convince us of the invalidity of the initiative, it is but additional support that the initiative does not satisfy the purposes behind the single-subject requirement." (227 C.A.3d 672.)

Violations of the single subject rule have been found in additional cases. (See Homan v. Gomez (1995) 37 C.A.4th 597, 600, 601, 43 C.R.2d 647 [following Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Swoap; provision of budget act prohibiting certain prisoners from receiving family visits, thereby effecting substantive change in Department of Corrections regulations allowing these visits, violated single subject rule]; Senate of the State of Calif. v. Jones (1999) 21 C.4th 1142, 1160, 90 C.R.2d 810, 988 P.2d 1089 [following Chemical Specialties and California Trial Lawyers Assn.; initiative seeking, among other things, to transfer power to reapportion legislative districts to state Supreme Court and to revise provisions relating to compensation of state legislators and other state officials, violated single subject rule]; 33 McGeorge L. Rev. 779 [future of comprehensive criminal justice initiatives after Senate v. Jones].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

E. Title and Subject of Statute.

3. Single Subject Rule.

c. Rule Not Violated.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 133

[§ 133] Rule Not Violated.

In Insurance Industry Initiative Campaign Committee v. Eu (1988) 203 C.A.3d 961, 250 C.R. 320, the court held that the Insurance Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 1988 did not violate the single subject rule. (a) A section permitting banks to participate in the insurance industry is related to the goal of consumer protection and to the stated purpose of increasing competition. (203 C.A.3d 965.) (b) A section guaranteeing clients the right to negotiate legal fees, although not limited to cases involving insurance coverage, is relevant to the stated purpose of guaranteeing consumers fair compensation for legitimate insurance claims. (203 C.A.3d 966, 967.)

Raven v. Deukmejian (1990) 52 C.3d 336, 276 C.R. 326, 801 P.2d 1077, supra, §72, involved a constitutional challenge by mandamus to the validity of Proposition 115, the Crime Victims Justice Reform Act. Plaintiff taxpayers and voters attacked the measure as violative of the single subject rule and the rule requiring constitutional "revisions" to be accomplished by more formal procedures than are contemplated for mere constitutional "amendments" (supra, §72). Held, the measure did not violate the single subject rule, but did violate the constitutional revisions rule.

(b) "Thus, although the provisions of Proposition 115 seem somewhat disparate, as in Brosnahan they reflect a consistent theme or purpose to nullify particular decisions of our court affecting various aspects of the criminal justice system. We do not suggest, of course, that a measure addressing wholly diverse and unrelated subjects could be saved from a single-subject challenge by the mere fact of perceived public displeasure with court decisions or statutes treating those matters." (52 C.3d 348.)

One justice, concurring on the revision issue, dissented on the single subject issue, stressing "the monumental complexity and diversity of the 31 sections it contains." (52 C.3d 357.) (For listing of provisions, see majority opinion,

Kennedy Wholesale v. State Bd. of Equalization (1991) 53 C.3d 245, 279 C.R. 325, 806 P.2d 1360, rejected a challenge to Proposition 99, the Tobacco Tax and Health Protection Act of 1988 (Rev.C. 30121 et seq.; see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §387).

(a) "The primary stated objective of Proposition 99 ... is to reduce the economic costs of tobacco use in California. ... The measure represents a coherent effort to achieve this objective by (a) raising the tax on tobacco products and (b) directing the increased revenues to areas in which smoking has increased the state's costs." (53 C.3d 253.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that the measure violates the single subject rule because it does not guarantee that every expenditure from the fund will be related to tobacco use. "[I]t is possible to imagine expenditures that would fall within Proposition 99's spending categories without addressing tobacco-related problems. However, the measure's spending provisions direct new revenues more precisely to tobacco-related problems than if the electorate had simply omitted any such provisions. We do not believe the voters' failure to require even greater precision invalidates the measure, since it is well established that an initiative may have 'collateral effects' without violating the single-subject rule." (53 C.3d 254.)

(c) Plaintiff also argued that the measure is an example of "logrolling," or exploiting the initiative process by combining in a single measure several provisions that might not have commanded majority support if considered separately. The argument was based on the spending provisions, which plaintiff asserted were designed to bring together disparate interest groups such as antismoking forces, environmentalists, medical groups, and those concerned about medical care for the poor. (53 C.3d 255.) But there is no constitutional basis for a separate claim of logrolling. "The single-subject rule is the method by which the state Constitution guards against that hazard. Moreover, we have consistently held that the single-subject rule does not require a showing that each one of a measure's several provisions was capable of gaining voter approval independently of the remaining provisions." (53 C.3d 255.) (See 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 259 [Kennedy Wholesale].)

Many other cases have found no violation of the single subject rule:

Calfarm Ins. Co. v. Deukmejian (1989) 48 C.3d 805, 842, 258 C.R. 161, 771 P.2d 1247 [Proposition 103, insurance rate reduction initiative (see infra, §1083)].

Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 C.3d 492, 513, 286 C.R. 283, 816 P.2d 1309, infra, §269 [term limits initiative].

Watson v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1059, 1077, 1078, 266 C.R. 408 [initiative limiting campaign funding and contributions; provision prohibiting mass mailings at public expense did not violate single subject rule].

League of Women Voters v. Eu (1992) 7 C.A.4th 649, 666, 9 C.R.2d 416 [reviewing controlling cases].

San Mateo County Coastal Landowners' Assn. v. San Mateo (1995) 38 C.A.4th 523, 553, 45 C.R.2d 117 [under Raven, local coastal plan did not violate single subject rule].

Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 C.A.4th 972, 993, 68 C.R.2d 553 [Proposition 213, prohibiting uninsured motorists, drunk drivers, and fleeing felons from recovering noneconomic damages in actions arising out of motor vehicle accidents].

Manduley v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 537, 573, 117 C.R.2d 168, 41 P.3d 3, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §737 [Proposition 21, providing for prosecution of certain minors in adult criminal court without fitness hearing; all of its parts are reasonably related to its purpose of reducing juvenile and gang-related crime].

California Assn. of Retail Tobacconists v. California (2003) 109 C.A.4th 792, 811, 135 C.R.2d 224 [Proposition 10, increasing tobacco excise tax to help reduce tobacco use among teens and to fund early child development and antismoking programs; components of initiative had reasonable relationship and were reasonably germane to each other].

Shea Homes Ltd. Partnership v. Alameda (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1246, 1256, 2 C.R.3d 739 [local measures that constricted county's urban growth boundary, changed land use designations to restrict new housing, and altered county's solid waste management and planning practices; limiting landfills and requiring solid waste policies to conform with those of other county agencies were germane to measure's purpose of enhancing and protecting open space and agricultural lands].

San Joaquin Helicopters v. Department of Forestry & Fire Protection (2003) 110 C.A.4th 1549, 1556, 1559, 3 C.R.3d 246 [single subject of statute cannot be one of excessive generality; exemption of Department of General Services from processes, procedures, and policies of Administrative Procedure Act was reasonably germane to general subject of statute on operation and administration of Department with respect to state property].

No violation of single subject rule found: See Marathon Entertainment v. Blasi (2008) 42 C.4th 974, 989, 70 C.R.3d 727, 174 P.3d 741 [Talent Agencies Act regulates persons and entities providing talent agency services, which includes personal managers when they engage in that conduct]; *California Family Bioethics Council, LLC v. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW F. Uncertainty: Void for Vagueness. 1. Criminal Statutes.

[§ 134] Criminal Statutes.

(1) Statutes. A criminal statute that is so indefinite in its statement of the standard of guilt that it does not give adequate notice of the conduct prohibited violates due process under the "void for vagueness" doctrine. (See Connally v. General Const. Co. (1926) 269 U.S. 385, 46 S.Ct. 126, 127, 70 L.Ed. 322, 328; United States v. Lanier (1997) 520 U.S. 259, 117 S.Ct. 1219, 1228, 137 L.Ed.2d 432, 446 [fair warning is satisfied where unlawfulness under Constitution is apparent in light of preexisting law]; 82 Cal. L. Rev. 487 [symposium on void for vagueness doctrine]; 30 A.L.R.5th 683 [validity, construction, and application of hazing statutes]; on First Amendment challenge based on uncertainty and overbreadth, see infra, §408 et seq.) (For elaborate discussion of valid and invalid statutes, and methods of ascertaining meaning and thereby establishing necessary certainty, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §40 et seq.)

The "void for vagueness" doctrine was used to challenge statutes in the following cases:

Colautti v. Franklin (1979) 439 U.S. 379, 99 S.Ct. 675, 683, 685, 58 L.Ed.2d 596, 606, 608 [penal provisions of abortion law are void].

Burg v. Municipal Court (1983) 35 C.3d 257, 269, 198 C.R. 145, 673 P.2d 732, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §55 [Veh.C. 23152(b), prohibiting driving with blood alcohol level of 0.10% (now 0.08%), gives fair notice].

People v. Superior Court (Caswell) (1988) 46 C.3d 381, 390, 392, 250 C.R. 515, 758 P.2d 1046, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §49 [P.C. 647(d), prohibiting loitering about public toilet for purpose of lewd or lascivious or any unlawful act, provides adequate notice].

People v. Martin (1989) 211 C.A.3d 699, 705, 706, 259 C.R. 770 ["hazardous waste," as defined in Hazardous Waste Control Act (Health & Saf.C. 25100 et seq.), gives adequate notice to those who produce or handle such waste].

People v. Appel (1996) 51 C.A.4th 495, 504, 59 C.R. 2d 216, citing the text [term "waters of the United States," as used in Federal Water Pollution Control Act (now Clean Water Act) and incorporated into Water C. 13387, is not unconstitutionally vague].

Trinkle v. Stroh (1997) 60 C.A.4th 771, 779, 70 C.R.2d 661 [seizure of illegal gaming machines; plaintiff cannot complain of vagueness of penal statute if his conduct falls clearly within its bounds].

(2) Ordinances. The same rule applies to local ordinances. (See 72 A.L.R.5th 1 [loitering statutes and ordinances].) The "void for vagueness" doctrine was used to challenge ordinances in the following cases:

Chicago v. Morales (1999) 527 U.S. 41, 119 S.Ct. 1849, 1861, 1863, 144 L.Ed.2d 67, 83, 85 [anti-gang ordinance prohibiting loitering (remaining "in any one place with no apparent purpose") afforded too much discretion to police and too little notice to citizens]. (See 28 Pepperdine L. Rev. 221.)

Tobe v. Santa Ana (1995) 9 C.4th 1069, 1106, 1107, 40 C.R.2d 402, 892 P.2d 1145, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §62 [ordinance prohibiting camping and storage of personal property in public areas is not unconstitutionally vague when purpose clause is considered and terms are read in context; there is no possibility law enforcement agent would think picnic in public park is "camping" or leaving towel on beach or umbrella in library is "storage"].

Aaron v. Municipal Court (1977) 73 C.A.3d 596, 607, 140 C.R. 849 [prohibition of charitable solicitations without license; invalid].

People v. Stephenson (1978) 83 C.A.3d Supp. 8, 15, 148 C.R. 575 [requirement of permit to operate "social club"; invalid].

People v. Trantham (1984) 161 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 6, 8, 208 C.R. 535 [ordinance against person entering, remaining, staying, or loitering in public park between 10:30 p.m. and 5 a.m.; valid].

In re Timothy R. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 593, 601, 248 C.R. 721 [ordinance prohibiting presence on posted business or commercial premises except with written permission or "under claim or color of legal right" was; unconstitutionally vague].

People v. Scott (1993) 20 C.A.4th Supp. 5, 10, 26 C.R.2d 179 [ordinance prohibiting camping in city parks; adequate notice of what activities constituted "camping," even though ordinance did not specifically define that term].

Personal Watercraft Coalition v. Marin County Bd. of Supervisors (2002) 100 C.A.4th 129, 141, 122 C.R.2d 425 [absence of express language limiting reach of county ordinance banning use of personal watercraft only to unincorporated areas did not make ordinance vague; intention to limit ordinance to areas within county's jurisdiction is implicit in all county legislation].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statutes. See United States v. Williams (2008) 553 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 1846, 170 L.Ed.2d 650, 671, Supp., infra, §441 [federal statute prohibiting pandering and solicitation of child pornography was not impermissibly vague].

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW F. Uncertainty: Void for Vagueness. 2. Civil Statutes.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 135

[§ 135] Civil Statutes.

(1) In General. Occasionally, a similar objection of uncertainty results in invalidation of a civil statute that is too indefinite to enforce. (See A.B. Small Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co. (1925) 267 U.S. 233, 45 S.Ct. 295, 297, 69 L.Ed. 589, 593; Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction of Orange County, Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 278, 82 S.Ct. 275, 280, 7 L.Ed.2d 285, 292, infra, §409 [loyalty oath]; Seaboard Acceptance Corp. v. Shay (1931) 214 C. 361, 5 P.2d 882; Perez v. Sharp (1948) 32 C.2d 711, 728, 198 P.2d 17; Bess v. Park (1956) 144 C.A.2d 798, 805, 301 P.2d 978; Citizens for Jobs & the Economy v. Orange (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1311, 1334, 115 C.R.2d 90 [initiative that required voter ratification of any county act to approve military airport conversion project was too vague to be workable].)

Another objection may be that a statute delegating legislative power is too indefinite to be valid. (See 41 Cal. L. Rev. 530; infra, §166.)

(2) Valid Statutes. Most of the decisions find the statutes sufficiently certain. (See Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates (1982) 455 U.S. 489, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 1191, 71 L.Ed.2d 362, 371; Katz v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1973) 32 C.A.3d 679, 684, 108 C.R. 424 [Veh.C. 5105, authorizing Department of Motor Vehicles to refuse to issue personalized license plate bearing "connotations offensive to good taste and decency"]; Goldberg v. Barger (1974) 37 C.A.3d 987, 991, 112 C.R. 827 [Ins.C. 1668(d), authorizing denial of insurance agent's license where "applicant is not of good business reputation"]; Hall v. Bureau of Emp. Agencies (1976) 64 C.A.3d 482, 491, 138 C.R. 725 [grounds for suspension of employment agency license: "unprofessional conduct," unethical "business standards," "unfair or misleading practices," etc.]; Bamboo Bros. v. Carpenter (1982) 133 C.A.3d 116, 126, 183 C.R. 748; Rutherford v. California (1987) 188 C.A.3d 1267, 1276, 1278, 1279, 233 C.R. 781; Kahn v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1993) 16 C.A.4th 159, 164, 166, 20 C.R.2d 6 [discussing and following Katz v. Department of Motor Vehicles]; 34 Hastings L. J. 1273 [Hoffman Estates].)

A civil statute or ordinance may also be construed to overcome the charge of unconstitutional vagueness. (See Associated Home Builders v. Livermore (1976) 18 C.3d 582, 598, 135 C.R. 41, 557 P.2d 473, infra, §1031 [zoning ordinance].)

(1) In General. When an ordinance "regulates business behavior, constitutional requirements are more relaxed than they are for statutes that are penal in nature." (Amaral v. Cintas Corp. No. 2 (2008) 163 C.A.4th 1157, 1181, 1183, 78 C.R.3d 572, Supp., infra, §1004 [living wage ordinance applied to defendant company under service contract with city even though its employees worked outside boundaries of city; defendant's failure to ask anyone about proper application of ordinance undermined claim that ordinance was hopelessly ambiguous].) Correction: Page 247, sixth line of subdivision (1), "Seaboard Accepptance Corp." should be "Seaboard Acceptance Corp."

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW F. Uncertainty: Void for Vagueness. 3. Rules.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 136

[§ 136] Rules.

In Cranston v. Richmond (1985) 40 C.3d 755, 221 C.R. 779, 710 P.2d 845, plaintiff, a police officer of defendant city, led fellow officers on a high speed chase late at night, over wet and slippery streets, in a mechanically defective car. He was discharged under a city personnel rule for "conduct unbecoming an employee of the City Service." Held, the rule was not unconstitutionally vague.

(a) The rule must be judged in light of the specific facts of plaintiff's conduct (40 C.3d 768), and the required specificity may be provided by common knowledge and understanding of members of the particular vocation or profession to which it applies (40 C.3d 766).

(b) In Morrison v. State Bd. of Education (1969) 1 C.3d 214, 82 C.R. 175, 461 P.2d 375, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §301, the court noted that the proscription against "immoral" and "unprofessional" conduct appears in many statutes relating to a wide variety of occupations and professions. (40 C.3d 768.) Thus, the rule questioned here should be construed as if it read "conduct unbecoming a city police officer." (40 C.3d 769.) "Police officers, like teachers and veterinarians, will normally be able to determine what kind of conduct indicates unfitness." (40 C.3d 769.)

In Franklin v. Leland Stanford Junior University (1985) 172 C.A.3d 322, 218 C.R. 228, infra, §486, defendant university's general standards on professional conduct, clarified by a detailed policy on campus disruption, were held sufficiently certain to meet the constitutional challenge. (172 C.A.3d 347, 348.)

However, in People v. Carlson (1996) 45 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 4, 6, 53 C.R.2d 568, a regulation specifying caging requirements for "juvenile" and "large adult" native reptiles, but not defining "juvenile" or "large adult," was held to be unconstitutionally vague.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

A. In General.

1. Nature of Doctrine.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 137

[§ 137] Nature of Doctrine.

Both the state and the federal governments follow the principle of separation of powers into three departments. Generally speaking, one department cannot exercise or interfere with the functions of either of the others. (See Hornung v. Superior Court (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1095, 1099, 97 C.R.2d 382 [commissioners of Board of Prison Terms perform quasi-judicial function when they decide to grant or deny parole; therefore, court may not inquire into mental processes or motivation underlying their decisions]; 1 Rotunda, §3.12; 1 Tribe, §2-1 et seq.; 109 Harv. L. R. 2020 [executive review of court's extradition determination as violation of separation of powers]; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §246 et seq.)

The California Constitution expressly states the doctrine: "The powers of state government are legislative, executive, and judicial. Persons charged with the exercise of one power may not exercise either of the others except as permitted by this Constitution." (Cal. Const. Art. III, §3; see Parker v. Riley (1941) 18 C.2d 83, 89, 113 P.2d 873; Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 C.3d 130, 141, 93 C.R. 234, 481 P.2d 242.) The federal Constitution does not, but the principle has been declared to be implicit in it. (See Springer v. Government of Philippine Islands (1928) 277 U.S. 189, 48 S.Ct. 480, 482, 72 L.Ed. 845, 849; O'Donoghue v. United States (1933) 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740, 743, 77 L.Ed. 1356, 1360; Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chadha (1983) 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 2786, 77 L.Ed.2d 317, infra, §170; 114 Harv. L. Rev. 1551 [Powers of Congress and the Courts Regarding the Availability and Scope of Review]; 20 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1 [Special Issue on the subject]; 52 Hastings L. J. 47 [separation of powers and judicial review]; 53 Hastings L. J. 519 [erosion of doctrine under "congruence and proportionality" test]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1 [Symposium on doctrine]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 533 [separation of powers doctrine in the Supreme Court; review of background and recent cases]; 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1083 [Burger Court's approach]; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 66 [Separation of Powers and the Scope of Federal Equitable Remedies]; 51 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1079 [California's separation of powers].)

In Deukmejian v. Superior Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 632, 191 C.R. 905, an action was filed in Marin County against Governor Deukmejian and several corrections officials to alleviate overcrowding and other allegedly unconstitutional conditions in San Quentin State Prison, located in the county. The plaintiffs served a notice to appear on the Governor and the trial judge denied his motion to quash the notice. Held, mandamus issued to nullify the order. Under State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Superior Court (1978) 78 C.A.3d 641, 144 C.R. 320, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §30, a public officer should not be required to give evidence in his or her official capacity in the absence of compelling reasons. No compelling reasons were shown: The Governor's testimony was sought not because of his unique knowledge of conditions at the prison, but because his policies were alleged to have contributed to those conditions and his plans would be helpful. "It is assumed that the court may call the Governor 'on the carpet,' or at least compel him to work in a committee-like atmosphere with the court in order to solve prison problems. We disapprove such a blurring of the lines separating judicial and executive authority." (143 C.A.3d 635.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Zumbrun Law Firm v. California Legislature (2008) 165 C.A.4th 1603, 1614, 82 C.R.3d 525 [Legislature has power to engage in activities that are incidental or ancillary to lawmaking functions, including power to protect itself and its members from violence; hence, Legislature properly delegated incidental power to Joint Rules Committee to contract for construction of facilities to provide security on State Capitol grounds]; 1 Rotunda 4th, §3.12; 119 Harv. L. Rev. 2312 [Separation of Parties, Not Powers].

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

A. In General.

2. Exceptions and Distinctions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 138

[§ 138] Exceptions and Distinctions.

(1) Local Governments. The doctrine does not apply to local governments such as municipalities and counties; the Legislature may establish these governments without regard to separation of powers. (People v. Provines (1868) 34 C. 520, 534; Wulzen v. Board of Supervisors (1894) 101 C. 15, 25, 35 P. 353.)

(2) Administrative Agencies. The doctrine does not apply to administrative agencies that are vested with defined quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers. (Imperial Irr. Dist. v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (1990) 225 C.A.3d 548, 565, 275 C.R. 250; see; 16A Am. Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §§257, 263; infra, §§145, 146.)

(3) Federal Constitution. The federal Constitution has no application to delegations of power by state legislatures; hence any delegation consistent with the state Constitution will be valid. (Sandstrom v. California Horse Racing Bd. (1948) 31 C.2d 401, 412, 189 P.2d 17; see 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §254.)

(4) Federal Government Authorization. The federal government, in the absence of state legislation to the contrary, may authorize state courts to enforce federal laws. (See Miller v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1943) 22 C.2d 818, 850, 142 P.2d 297 [former federal Price Control Act]; Harris v. Superior Court (1921) 51 C.A. 15, 29, 196 P. 895 [former Prohibition Law].) But the federal government cannot by statute incorporate future state legislation, and thereby delegate federal legislative power to the state. (See Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart (1920) 253 U.S. 149, 40 S.Ct. 438, 441, 64 L.Ed. 834, 840; 13 Cal. L. Rev. 314.) It would seem to be equally clear that a state Legislature cannot adopt prospective federal legislation. (See In re Burke (1923) 190 C. 326, 327, 212 P. 193; 17 Cal. L. Rev. 555.)

(5) Authorization by California Constitution. In rare instances, the California Constitution has expressly authorized a delegation that might otherwise be subject to challenge. (See In re Phyle (1947) 30 C.2d 838, 850, 186 P.2d 134 [former delegation of quasi-judicial power to prison warden to make final determination of sanity of convicted prisoner].)

(6) Necessary Minor Delegations. Minor delegations or mingling of powers are sometimes necessary and unobjectionable. Thus, Parker v. Riley (1941) 18 C.2d 83, 113 P.2d 873, held that the creation of a commission on interstate cooperation (former Govt.C. 8000 et seq., repealed in 1981), to correlate information and make recommendations, composed of members of the Legislature, the Governor, and the Governor's appointees, did not violate the separation of powers provision. It was argued that certain of the commission's duties were executive, and could not be performed by legislators, but, since some duties were legislative, the same objection could be made to their performance by the executive. The court declared that the doctrine "has not been interpreted as requiring the rigid classification of all the incidental activities of government, with the result that once a technique or method of procedure is associated with a particular branch ... it can never be used thereafter by another"; and that incidental, subsidiary duties may properly be performed by different governmental agencies or branches. (18 C.2d 90.) (See California Assn. of Retail Tobacconists v. California (2003) 109 C.A.4th 792, 832, 135 C.R.2d 224 [commingling by initiative of executive and legislative powers in 9-member commission (4 legislative and 3 gubernatorial appointees plus Secretaries of Health and Human Services and of Education) did not violate separation of powers doctrine; statutes contained adequate executive controls to ensure that appointments did not impair executive's authority over commission].)

The same approach prevails on the federal level. "[T]he separate powers were not intended to operate with absolute independence." (United States v. Nixon (1974) 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3107, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039, 1063.) In approaching separation of powers questions, "the more pragmatic, flexible approach" of Madison and Story is used. (Nixon v. Administrator of General Services (1977) 433 U.S. 425, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 2789, 53 L.Ed.2d 867, 890.)

(6) Necessary Minor Delegations. Marine Forests Soc. v. California Coastal Com. (2005) 36 C.4th 1, 30 C.R.3d 30, 113 P.3d 1062, involved a constitutional challenge to provisions of the California Coastal Act (Pub.Res.C. 30300 et seq.) governing the appointment and tenure of members of the California Coastal Commission. The pertinent provisions specified, at the time the action was commenced, that one-third of the voting members must be appointed by the Governor, one-third by the Senate Rules Committee, and one-third by the Speaker of the Assembly. Each member served for 2 years and was eligible for another 2-year term, but each member served at the pleasure of the authority that appointed the member and was removable at any time. Plaintiffs claimed that this structure made the Commission a "legislative body," for purposes of the California separation of powers clause, which could not engage in executive or judicial functions. The trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of plaintiffs and enjoined the Commission from granting or denying permits or issuing and hearing cease and desist orders. The Court of Appeal affirmed, declaring that the provisions authorizing the Senate Rules Committee and the Speaker of the Assembly to remove a majority of the members at will created an improper subservience of the members to the legislative branch.

While appeal of the decision was pending, and in response to the Court of Appeal decision, the Legislature enacted and the Governor signed a bill amending the challenged provisions of the Coastal Act. The statute continues to provide for the Governor, the Senate Rules Committee, and the Speaker of the Assembly each to appoint one-third of the voting members, but the prescribed terms for those members appointed by the Senate Committee and the Speaker are now 4 years, and they are not removable at the pleasure of their appointing authority. Because of this statutory modification, the validity of the judgment granting injunctive relief necessarily rests on an assessment of the validity of the statute in its current version. Held, reversed. The current provisions of the Act governing membership selection and tenure do not violate the separation of powers clause of the California Constitution.

(a) Functions of Coastal Commission. The Commission performs an "executive" function in carrying out programs and policies established by the Legislature, and is considered to be part of the executive branch. However, it also performs a "quasi-legislative" function when engaging in rulemaking through the adoption of regulations, and a "quasi-judicial" function when passing on applications for permits, reviewing the validity of local coastal programs, and issuing cease and desist orders. (36 C.4th 25.)

who is to appoint the executive officers and commissioners, including the authority to provide for their appointment by the Legislature itself. (36 C.4th 31, 40.)

(c) Limitations on legislative power to appoint executive officials. There are limitations on legislative enactments authorizing the appointment of executive officers. (36 C.4th 43.) The proper standard to be applied in evaluating this legislation is whether it operates "to defeat or materially impair the executive branch's exercise of its constitutional functions." In applying this standard, "it is appropriate to consider whether the statutes either (1) improperly intrude upon a core zone of executive authority, impermissibly impeding the Governor (or another constitutionally prescribed executive officer), in the exercise of his or her executive authority or functions, or (2) retain undue legislative control over a legislative appointee's executive actions, compromising the ability of the legislative appointees to the Coastal Commission (or of the Coastal Commission as a whole) to perform their executive functions independently, without legislative coercion or interference." (36 C.4th 45.)

(d) No improper intrusion on executive authority. The Coastal Act, as amended, does not improperly intrude on a core zone of executive authority. Commission members are not intimate advisors of the Governor or other executive officer. They are members of an independent administrative agency charged with a broad variety of executive, quasi-legislative, and quasi-judicial functions. Land use planning within the coastal zone is not an area traditionally overseen by the executive branch. (36 C.4th 46.) And, "the balance of power between the Governor and the Commission does not depend upon the identity of the persons or entities who are statutorily authorized to appoint the individual members of the Commission." (36 C.4th 48.)

(e) No improper control by Legislature. The Coastal Act, as amended, does not compromise the ability of commission members to perform their duties independently and without improper control by the Legislature. The fact that the Legislature appoints the persons who it determines are best qualified to exercise the particular executive functions of the office does not mean that it has the authority to exercise those executive functions. (36 C.4th 48.) And the fact that the Legislature may reappoint a commission member does not constitute an impermissible measure of control over the incumbent member. (36 C.4th 49.) Further, the Act contains numerous provisions governing the conduct of commission business, including detailed substantive standards that members must apply through decisions that are subject to judicial review. (36 C.4th 50.)

(f) No proscription against Legislature appointing majority of commission members. The California separation of powers clause does not prohibit the Legislature from appointing a majority of the commission members. (36 C.4th 50.) And here, the two-thirds of commission members selected by the Legislature are not chosen by the Legislature as a whole. By dividing the appointment authority among the Governor, the Senate Rules Committee, and the Speaker of the Assembly, the voters, in enacting the Act, sought to disperse the appointment authority "to avoid a situation in which one official who might not be sympathetic to the purpose and objectives of the Coastal Act could attempt to subvert those aims by appointing a majority of Commission members who are hostile to those goals. In this regard, this aspect of the statutory scheme serves an objective that is analogous to one of the principal purposes of the separation of powers clause, the avoidance of an aggregation of power in a single entity or officer." (36 C.4th 51.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

A. In General.

3. Standing and Case-or-Controversy Requirement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 139

[§ 139] Standing and Case-or-Controversy Requirement.

(1) In General. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife (1992) 504 U.S. 555, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, deals with the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (ESA), which seeks to protect species of animals against threats to their continuing existence caused by man. The ESA instructs the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate by regulation a list of those species and their critical habitat. Initially a regulation stated that the obligations of consultation extend to actions taken in foreign nations; a revised regulation requires consultation only for actions taken in the United States. Respondents, organizations dedicated to wildlife conservation, filed this action against the Secretary seeking declaratory relief and an injunction. The district court granted the Secretary's motion to dismiss for lack of standing; the Court of Appeals reversed. On remand the district court denied the Secretary's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the Court of Appeals had already determined the standing question. Held, reversed; respondents lacked standing.

(a) The federal Constitution divides the powers conferred on the federal government into legislative, executive, and judicial powers, and it limits the jurisdiction of federal courts to "cases" and "controversies." These terms are not defined; "the Constitution's central mechanism of separation of powers depends largely upon common understanding of what activities are appropriate to legislatures, to executives, and to courts." (112 S.Ct. 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 363.) One of the landmarks setting apart the "cases" and "controversies" that are appropriately resolved through the judicial process is the doctrine of standing. "Though some of its elements express merely prudential considerations that are part of judicial self-government, the core component of standing is an essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III." (112 S.Ct. 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 364.)

(b) The irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three element. First, the plaintiff must have suffered an injury in fact--an invasion of a legally protected interest that is concrete and particularized, and actual or imminent. Second, there must be a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of. Third, it must be "likely," as opposed to merely "speculative," that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. (112 S.Ct. 2136, 119 L.Ed.2d 364.)

(c) The party invoking federal jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing these elements. At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice; but in response to a summary judgment motion, the plaintiff must set forth specific facts; and at the final stage those facts, if controverted, must be supported by the evidence adduced at trial. (112 S.Ct. 2137, 119 L.Ed.2d 364.)

(d) When, as in this case, a plaintiff's asserted injury arises from the government's allegedly unlawful regulation or lack of regulation of someone else, standing is more difficult to establish. "In that circumstance, causation and redressability ordinarily hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction--and perhaps on the response of others as well. The existence of one or more of the essential elements of standing 'depends on the unfettered choices made by independent actors not before the courts and whose exercise of broad and legitimate discretion the courts cannot presume either to control or to predict.' " (112 S.Ct. 2137, 119 L.Ed.2d 365.)

(2) California Law. The California Constitution contains no "case or controversy" requirement. Thus, a suit by a citizen in the undifferentiated public interest is justiciable in California. (See National Paint & Coatings Assn. v. California (1997) 58 C.A.4th 753, 761, 68 C.R.2d 360 [empowerment of private citizens to enforce Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act does not undermine or impair enforcement by executive branch].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

1. Judicial Power Is in Courts.

a. The Judiciary.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 140

[§ 140] In General.

(1) Judicial Powers. The judicial function is to declare the law and determine the rights of parties to controversies before the court. (Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Com. of Calif. (1916) 171 C. 706, 711, 154 P. 864; see 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §259 et seq.)

The entire judicial power of the state is vested in the constitutional courts (Cal. Const., Art. VI, §1; see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §167 et seq.), and the Legislature may not give true judicial powers to any other state board or tribunal. (Department of Public Works of Calif., Div of Water Rights v. Superior Court (1925) 197 C. 215, 221, 239 P. 1076; on quasi-judicial powers of administrative agencies, see infra, §146.) Of course, the Constitution may make exceptions, as in the enabling provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act (2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §2) and the Public Utilities Act (infra, §1085).

(2) Nonjudicial Powers. Courts cannot be compelled to exercise nonjudicial powers. (See Los Angeles v. South Gate (1930) 108 C.A. 398, 401, 291 P. 654.) They cannot, e.g., be forced to decide a question on which there is no dispute. (On necessity of justiciable controversy, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§73, 74.) This objection did not, however, invalidate the statute providing for quieting title when public records are lost (Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan (1906) 150 C. 289, 318, 88 P. 356), or the declaratory relief statute (Blakeslee v. Wilson (1923) 190 C. 479, 482, 213 P. 495). (See 11 Cal. L. Rev. 289; 69 Harv. L. Rev. 1305 [constitutionality of statutes providing for advisory opinions].)

In Mistretta v. United States (1989) 488 U.S. 361, 109 S.Ct. 647, 102 L.Ed.2d 714, the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 created a federal Sentencing Commission comprised of seven members, three of whom were federal judges, as an independent agency in the judicial branch. The members were appointed by the President for specific terms and were removable for good cause. The Commission was empowered to adopt sentencing guidelines for federal offenses. Held, the Act does not violate the principle of separation of powers.

(a) Separation of powers cases involving the judicial branch guard against two dangers: (1) that the judiciary be assigned or allowed tasks more appropriately accomplished by other branches; (2) that a law impermissibly threaten the institutional integrity of the judicial branch. (109 S.Ct. 660, 102 L.Ed.2d 737, 738.)

(b) There are activities that, although nonadjudicatory in nature, are so related to the mission of the judiciary that it is appropriate to assign them to the judicial branch; e.g., delegation to the judiciary of rulemaking power. (109 S.Ct. 661, 662, 663, 102 L.Ed.2d 739, 740, 741.)

(c) The sentencing function has long been a shared responsibility among the branches of government, and placing the Commission in the judicial branch properly recognizes the judiciary's traditional role in sentencing. (109 S.Ct. 664, 102 L.Ed.2d 742.) The political nature of the Commission's work does not alter this conclusion. (1) The Commission is an independent agency, not a court; and (2) judges already make sentencing decisions, so placing the Commission in the judicial branch does not increase its power. (109 S.Ct. 665, 666, 102 L.Ed.2d 744, 745.) "Given their limited reach, the special role of the Judicial Branch in the field of sentencing, and the fact that the Guidelines are promulgated by an independent agency and not a court, it follows that as a matter of 'practical consequences' the location of the Sentencing Commission within the Judicial Branch simply leaves with the Judiciary what long has belonged to it." (109 S.Ct. 667, 102 L.Ed.2d 746.)

(d) Requiring the judges on the Commission to share their power with nonjudges does not undermine the integrity of the judicial branch. (1) The Constitution does not prohibit federal judges from undertaking extrajudicial duties, and they frequently have done so. (109 S.Ct. 668, 669, 102 L.Ed.2d 747, 748.) (2) On the Commission, the judges exercise an administrative rather than a judicial power regarding a subject on which they are uniquely qualified. (109 S.Ct. 671, 102 L.Ed.2d 751.) (3) The particular judges serve voluntarily, so there is no threat to judicial independence or integrity. (109 S.Ct. 672, 102 L.Ed.2d 752.)

(f) The President's appointment and removal power over Commission members does not affect the tenure or compensation of the judges in their judicial role and poses no threat to the independence of the judiciary. (109 S.Ct. 674, 675, 102 L.Ed.2d 754, 755.) (See Kasler v. Lockyer (2000) 23 C.4th 472, 493, 97 C.R.2d 334, 3 P.3d 581, 2 Cal. Crim. III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

1. Judicial Power Is in Courts.

a. The Judiciary.

2. Compelling Payment of Judgment Against Executive.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 141

[§ 141] Compelling Payment of Judgment Against Executive.

In Mandel v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 531, 174 C.R. 841, 629 P.2d 935, plaintiff successfully prosecuted an action against the Governor and other executive officers to prevent closing of state offices for a 3-hour period on Good Friday, and an award of $ 25,000 in attorneys' fees was entered against the defendants and affirmed on appeal (Mandel v. Hodges (1976) 54 C.A.3d 596, 127 C.R. 244, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §221). The State Board of Control approved plaintiff's claim and included it in an omnibus claim bill introduced in the Legislature. The Legislative Analyst, ignoring the binding effect of the final judgment, opposed the claim on the ground that the fee was improperly awarded, and the Legislature deleted the item. Plaintiff then sought relief in the trial court, and that court entered an order directing the State Controller to pay the award out of funds in the current Budget Act for operating expenses of the principal defendant agency (Department of Health Services). Defendants appealed, contending that the order violated the separation of powers doctrine. Held, affirmed.

(a) Court may compel payment. Although a court cannot compel the Legislature to appropriate funds, it may order the State Controller or other similar official to make payment out of appropriated funds. (29 C.3d 539, 540, citing cases dealing with unconstitutional restrictions on payments to particular persons or classes of persons.) The latter decisions show that, if, in the absence of an "invalid restriction, appropriated funds are reasonably available for the expenditures in question, the separation of powers doctrine poses no barrier to a judicial order" directing payment of the funds. (29 C.3d 542.)

(b) Appropriated funds were available. The Budget Act appropriation for "services" and for "all other proper expenses" supported the trial judge's conclusion that appropriated funds were available; and payment of court-awarded attorneys' fees out of an agency's current operating expense budget has been a routine administrative practice. (29 C.3d 543, 544.)

(c) No valid exclusion of award. By deleting the item, the Legislature disregarded the finality of a court judgment, and asserted a power to readjudicate the merits of the judgment. This is a legislative usurpation of judicial power. "The recognition of such legislative authority would completely deprive court judgments of the respect and deference which the Constitution contemplates each branch of government will accord to final actions within the jurisdiction of a coequal branch, and would repose in the Legislature a combination of powers that the constitutional draftsmen specifically intended to forestall." (29 C.3d 549.)

(d) Methods of restricting costs of awards. The Legislature may enact a wide variety of legitimate controls, such as fixed or maximum hourly rates or limits on amounts awarded, limitation of cases in which fees may be awarded, or appropriation of a designated sum for payment of fees with provision for allocation of the money among eligible claimants if the sum proves insufficient. (29 C.3d 551.)

(e) Conclusion. The opinion concludes with an emphatic restatement of the basis of the decision: "In sum, individual citizens who litigate claims against the government in our state courts are constitutionally entitled to expect that when the government loses, the Legislature will respect the final outcome of such litigation. The Legislature is not a supercourt that can pick and choose on a case-by-case basis which final judgments it will pay and which it will reject. If that kind of arbitrary conduct by the Legislature were to be the law, our system of justice would be subordinated to the popular vote of legislators, and our constitutional bedrock principle of separation of powers would become a shattered mass of scattered fragments." (29 C.3d 552.)

Two justices dissented in separate opinions. (29 C.3d 552, 559.)

Mandel v. Myers was analyzed and distinguished in Estate of Cirone (1987) 189 C.A.3d 1280, 234 C.R. 749. Petitioners, executors of the estate of Cirone, objected to an inheritance tax on the ground that the initiative measure repealing the tax had become operative on the day of the decedent's death. The probate court sustained the objection, the state appealed, and petitioners prevailed. On remand, they obtained an award of $ 18,000 for attorneys' fees pursuant to C.C.P. 1021.5 (see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §225), based on an hourly charge of $ 150 and a multiplication factor of 1.5. The State Controller contended that the award exceeded the limitations of the Budget Act, but the court ordered the Controller to pay it. Held, reversed.

(a) "[T]he Legislature cannot be forced to appropriate more money when it decides to appropriate less money than necessary to satisfy a judgment in full. Furthermore, the Legislature can attach to its appropriations whatever terms and conditions it chooses so long as they are constitutionally permissible." (189 C.A.3d 1290.)

(b) The restriction here, that expenditures not exceed a maximum hourly rate of $ 90, does not invade the province of the judiciary. The attorney fee award was not modified; it came into existence after the establishment of the hourly rate restrictions that the Legislature had the power to impose. (189 C.A.3d 1291, 1292.) (See Kuykendall v. State Bd. of Equalization (1994) 22 C.A.4th 1194, 1206, 27 C.R.2d 783, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §321 [distinguishing Mandel v. Myers].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

1. Judicial Power Is in Courts.

b. Executive or Administrative Officers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 142

[§ 142] Executive or Administrative Officers.

Executive or administrative officers cannot exercise or interfere with judicial powers. (See Boags v. Municipal Court (1987) 197 C.A.3d 65, 67, 242 C.R. 681; 109 Harv. L. Rev. 2020 [executive review of court's extradition determination as violation of separation of powers].) Hence, the pardoning power of the Chief Executive is limited to cases of criminal contempt, and does not extend to persons convicted of civil contempt. (See Ex parte Grossman (1925) 267 U.S. 87, 45 S.Ct. 332, 333, 69 L.Ed. 527, 531.) And, in the absence of a judicial determination that a statute is unconstitutional, a local executive official charged with the ministerial duty of enforcing the statute lacks the authority to disregard its mandate based on the official's belief that it is unconstitutional. (Lockyer v. San Francisco (2004) 33 C.4th 1055, 1068, 1079, 1082, 17 C.R.3d 225, 95 P.3d 459 [local officials exceeded authority by altering state marriage license application form, issuing licenses to same-sex couples, and registering marriage certificates for those couples in violation of statutory restriction limiting marriage to man and woman].) (On delegation of quasi-judicial power to administrative agencies, see infra, §§145, 146.)

Likewise, the Legislature may not condition judicial action on the approval of an executive officer. (People v. Tenorio (1970) 3 C.3d 89, 94, 89 C.R. 249, 473 P.2d 993 [statutory prohibition against striking prior narcotics conviction except on motion of district attorney held invalid]; see People v. Superior Court (Romero) (1996) 13 C.4th 497, 509, 513, 53 C.R.2d 789, 917 P.2d 628, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §369 [discussing People v. Tenorio, and construing three strikes law to avoid separation of powers issues that would arise if trial court were precluded from dismissing prior felony allegations without consent of prosecutor].) Hence, a statute that allowed narcotic addicts otherwise ineligible for treatment under the rehabilitation program to become eligible with the concurrence of the district attorney was held a violation of the requirement that judicial power be vested in the judiciary. (People v. Navarro (1972) 7 C.3d 248, 258, 259, 102 C.R. 137, 497 P.2d 481.)

However, P.C. 739, providing that the district attorney may charge in an information any offense shown by the testimony taken before the committing magistrate, does not confer judicial powers on the district attorney; the information merely accuses the defendant and does not adjudicate his or her rights. (People v. Bird (1931) 212 C. 632, 639, 300 P. 23; see 18 Cal. L. Rev. 324; 19 Cal. L. Rev. 330, 645; 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §169 et seq.) Likewise, Welf.C. 707(d), giving prosecutors the discretion to file charges against certain minors directly in criminal court without prior adjudication of unfitness for disposition in juvenile court, is within the charging authority of the executive branch and does not violate the separation of powers doctrine. (Manduley v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 537, 554, 117 C.R.2d 168, 41 P.3d 3, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §737.)

The fact that an administrative officer exercises judgment and discretion in the performance of his or her duties does not make these actions or powers judicial in nature. (People v. Sun Pac. Farming Co. (2000) 77 C.A.4th 619, 636, 92 C.R.2d 115 [agency's ability to file lawsuit is not quasi-judicial power because, in filing suit, it does not adjudicate rights of parties]; see 20th Century Ins. Co. v. Quackenbush (1998) 64 C.A.4th 135, 141, 75 C.R.2d 113 [Insurance Commissioner did not invade power of judiciary by issuing and disseminating opinion letter regarding statute of limitations for filing claims for earthquake damage; Commissioner's statutory authority to provide information to public does not exclude subjects of pending litigation].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

1. Judicial Power Is in Courts.

c. The Legislature.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 143

[§ 143] In General.

(1) Nature of Limitation. The Legislature cannot exercise or place limitations on judicial powers. However, the Legislature may adopt reasonable regulations affecting a court's inherent powers, so long as the legislation does not defeat or impair the court's exercise or fulfillment of its constitutional power. (Superior Court v. Mendocino (1996) 13 C.4th 45, 57, 60, 66, 51 C.R.2d 837, 913 P.2d 1046 [Govt.C. 68108, authorizing county to close courts on unpaid furlough days, was not wrongful usurpation of judicial power because Legislature has historically designated legal holidays and other days on which courts are closed, and exercise of this power does not threaten integrity or independence of judicial process]; see Fleming v. Superior Court (1925) 196 C. 344, 349, 238 P. 88 [act prohibiting use of evidence obtained by speed traps is not infringement on judicial functions]; Johnson v. Superior Court (1958) 50 C.2d 693, 329 P.2d 5 [statute allowing peremptory challenge of judge for prejudice is valid]; People v. Superior Court (Mudge) (1997) 54 C.A.4th 407, 412, 62 C.R.2d 721, citing the text [C.C.P. 170.65, allowing joint stipulation of parties for disqualification of retired judge to try criminal case, is unconstitutional as impairment of Chief Justice's power to appoint retired judges]; Los Angeles County Employees Assn., SEIU, Local 660 v. Superior Court (2000) 81 C.A.4th 164, 176, 96 C.R.2d 418 [statutes providing civil service status to municipal court clerks did not violate separation of powers doctrine because employment status of clerks does not impair judiciary's functions; following Mendocino]; Case v. Lazben Financial Co. (2002) 99 C.A.4th 172, 185, 121 C.R.2d 405 [C.C.P. 1008, providing for reconsideration of orders on application of parties, permits trial court to reconsider its own interim orders sua sponte; otherwise, statute would defeat core function of judiciary to resolve specific controversies in violation of separation of powers doctrine]; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1090 [Mendocino]; on lack of congressional power to adopt Religious Restoration Act, see infra, §516.)

(2) Contempt. The courts have inherent power to punish for contempt and cannot be deprived of it. (Michaelson v. United States (1924) 266 U.S. 42, 45 S.Ct. 18, 20, 69 L.Ed. 162, 167; Lamberson v. Superior Court (1907) 151 C. 458, 461, 91 P. 100; In re McKinney (1968) 70 C.2d 8, 10, 73 C.R. 580, 447 P.2d 972; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §182.) And the former California statute imposing a penalty for refusal to grant a writ of habeas corpus was held unconstitutional, as an infringement of the immunity of judges exercising judicial functions. (See Oppenheimer v. Ashburn (1959) 173 C.A.2d 624, 633, 343 P.2d 931.) On the other hand, the Legislature may regulate the procedure to be followed in punishing for contempt. (Briggs v. Superior Court (1931) 211 C. 619, 627, 297 P. 3; see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §185.)

(3) Practice of Law. Although admission to the practice of law is a judicial function, it is subject to reasonable restrictions that the Legislature may place on it. (Brydonjack v. State Bar (1929) 208 C. 439, 443, 281 P. 1018; see O'Brien v. Jones (2000) 23 C.4th 40, 44, 57, 96 C.R.2d 205, 999 P.2d 95 [statute providing for appointment of three of five judges of State Bar Court by executive and legislative branches does not defeat or materially impair Supreme Court's authority over practice of law, and thus does not violate separation of powers doctrine, because safeguards and procedures ensure that nominees are qualified]; In re Paguirigan (2001) 25 C.4th 1, 7, 104 C.R.2d 402, 17 P.3d 758 [in enacting summary disbarment statute, Legislature did not significantly impair court's inherent power over attorney discipline]; 27 Golden Gate U. L. Rev. 601 [constitutionality of legislation to restructure State Bar; 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §357].)

(4) Jurisdiction. The extent of the Legislature's power to regulate the jurisdiction of the courts is unclear. Some regulation clearly is permissible, but the Legislature may not exercise its power so as to interfere with the independence of the judiciary. (See 1 Rotunda, §§2.10, 2.11; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 778 [validity of statutes precluding judicial review of administrative disbursement of benefits]; 105 *Harv. L. B. Judicial Power.

c. The Legislature.

2. Statutes Abrogating or Interpreting Prior Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 144

[§ 144] Statutes Abrogating or Interpreting Prior Law.

The Legislature sometimes passes acts stating what is the meaning or proper interpretation of a prior law. These declaratory statutes may be invalid if they operate retrospectively on existing causes of action to the impairment of vested rights; and they have been considered by some courts an exercise of judicial power in violation of the doctrine of separation of powers. But, where prospective, they are generally upheld. (See In re Coburn (1913) 165 C. 202, 210, 131 P. 352; Hunt v. Superior Court (1999) 21 C.4th 984, 1008, 90 C.R.2d 236, 987 P.2d 705 [statutory declaration interpreting prior statute contrary to case law was proper exercise of legislative power to enact law for future and it governed propriety of injunctive relief, which operates prospectively; following Mandel v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 531, 174 C.R. 841, 629 P.2d 935, supra, §141, and Western Sec. Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 C.4th 232, 62 C.R.2d 243, 933 P.2d 507, infra, §624]; Anderson v. Superior Court (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1240, 1250, 80 C.R.2d 891 [statute that prospectively abrogated effect of judicial decision relating to funding of federal program did not violate separation of powers provision].)

In Mendly v. Los Angeles (1994) 23 C.A.4th 1193, 28 C.R.2d 822, plaintiffs sought to enforce a stipulated judgment they had entered into with a county providing for setting general assistance levels at a higher level for 5 years. After entry of the judgment, the Legislature enacted a statute setting a formula for determining a sufficient level of aid, and an uncodified provision, indicating that it was the Legislature's intent to abrogate agreements such as plaintiffs' stipulated judgment. The trial judge denied plaintiffs' motion to enforce the judgment, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. After rejecting plaintiffs' argument that the legislation violated the Contract Clause, the court also rejected their separation of powers claim: "Appellants fail to establish that the instant stipulated judgment constituted a 'final judgment' for purposes of the separation of powers doctrine. ... [T]he instant judgment did not vest in appellants any rights that were not subject to alteration by the Legislature." The judicial authority embodied in the stipulated judgment was the authority to enforce a particular statute, and a court must be free to modify the terms of a consent decree when a change in law brings those terms into conflict with statutory objectives. (23 C.A.4th 1212; on Contract Clause issue, see infra, §1292.)

In Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm (1995) 514 U.S. 211, 115 S.Ct. 1447, 131 L.Ed.2d 328, P sued S in 1987 for violation of §10b-5 of the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934, based on acts committed in 1983 and 1984. In 1991, the district court dismissed the action with prejudice, following the Supreme Court's decision in Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson (1991) 501 U.S. 350, 111 S.Ct. 2773, 115 L.Ed.2d 321, holding that the limitations period for these actions was 1 year from discovery or 3 years from commission of the violation. After the judgment became final, Congress enacted §27A(b) of the 1934 Act, providing for reinstatement of actions commenced before Lampf but dismissed after it as time-barred, if the actions would have been timely under pre-Lampf state law. P's motion for reinstatement was denied on the ground that §27A(b) was unconstitutional, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, to the extent that it requires federal courts to reopen final judgments entered before its enactment, §27A(b) of the 1934 Act violates the separation of powers doctrine.

(a) Article III, in establishing a "judicial department" with the province and duty to say what the law is in particular cases and controversies, "gives the Federal Judiciary the power, not merely to rule on cases, but to decide them, subject to review only by superior courts in the Article III hierarchy." One of the judicial powers is to render dispositive judgments. "By retroactively commanding the federal courts to reopen final judgments, Congress has violated this fundamental principle." (115 S.Ct. 1453, 131 L.Ed.2d 342.)

(b) Section 27A(b) effects a clear violation of the separation of powers principle. "When retroactive legislation requires its own application in a case already finally adjudicated, it does no more and no less than 'reverse a determination once made, in a particular case.'" (115 S.Ct. 1456, 131 L.Ed.2d 346.)

(c) It is true that, when a new law makes clear that it is retroactive, an appellate court must apply it in reviewing judgments still on appeal, and must alter the outcome accordingly. This is because Article III creates not a batch of unconnected courts, but a judicial department, with inferior courts and one Supreme Court, and within the Article III hierarchy the decision of an inferior court is not the final word of the department as a whole. (115 S.Ct. 1457, 131 L.Ed.2d 347.) "Having achieved finality, however, a judicial decision becomes the last word of the judicial department with regard to a particular case or controversy, and Congress may not declare by retroactive legislation that the law applicable to that very case was something other than what the courts said it was." (115 S.Ct. 1457, 131 L.Ed.2d 348.)

(d) "We know of no previous instance in which Congress has enacted retroactive legislation requiring an Article III court to set aside a final judgment, and for good reason. The Constitution's separation of legislative and judicial powers denies it the authority to do so." (115 S.Ct. 1463, 131 L.Ed.2d 356.)

One justice concurred in the judgment. (115 S.Ct. 1463, 131 L.Ed.2d 356.) Two justices dissented. (115 S.Ct. 1466, 131 L.Ed.2d 360.) (See People v. Lynch (1999) 69 C.A.4th 313, 318, 81 C.R.2d 552 [Legislature cannot "readjudicate controversies that have been litigated in the courts and resolved by final judgment"]; 109 Harv. L. Rev. 229 [Plaut].)

In People v. Bunn (2002) 27 C.4th 1, 115 C.R.2d 192, 37 P.3d 380, and its companion case, People v. King (2002) 27 C.4th 29, 115 C.R.2d 214, 37 P.3d 398, the court examined successive versions of P.C. 803(g), which increases the time for prosecuting sex crimes against minors. The statute permits refiling charges previously dismissed by the courts as time-barred. The question was whether, and to what extent, Cal. Const., Art. III, §3, the California separation of powers clause, precludes application of the refiling provision. The court explained that "refiling legislation cannot be applied retroactively to reopen court cases that had already been dismissed, if the dismissals had become final judgments under the law of finality which then pertained, before the refiling provision became effective. In this sense, and for separation of powers purposes, such prior judgments are sacrosanct. On the other hand, as Plaut itself explained, any dismissal that was already subject to a particular refiling at the time the dismissal was entered or finally upheld cannot, to that extent, be deemed a final judgment immune from legislative interference. Hence, the refiling provision, as it existed at the time the dismissal was entered or finally upheld, may constitutionally permit reopening of the case." (27 C.4th 5.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

People v. Bunn: P.C. 803 was repealed and reenacted in 2005. P.C. 803(f) now provides for increasing the time for prosecuting sex crimes against minors.

See Perez v. Roe 1 (2006) 146 C.A.4th 171, 187, 52 C.R.3d 762 [following Plaut v. Spendthrift Farm (1995) 514 U.S. 211, 115 S.Ct. 1447, 131 L.Ed.2d 328, text, p. 261, and People v. Bunn; Legislature violated separation of powers doctrine by trying to revive sexual abuse actions that had already been finally resolved adversely to plaintiffs].

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

2. Delegation of Judicial Power.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 145

[§ 145] In General.

The growth of administrative law has resulted in modification of the strict doctrine that judicial powers cannot be delegated to a nonjudicial board or officer. An administrative board or officer may be invested with "quasi-judicial" power to determine facts and exercise discretion. (See New York v. Van De Carr (1905) 199 U.S. 552, 26 S.Ct. 144, 50 L.Ed. 305; Gaylord v. Pasadena (1917) 175 C. 433, 436, 166 P. 348; East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. v. Department of Public Works (1934) 1 C.2d 476, 479, 35 P.2d 1027; Rainey v. Michel (1936) 6 C.2d 259, 277, 57 P.2d 932 [powers to take over insolvent banks and determine necessity and amount of assessment on stockholders]; Roussey v. Burlingame (1950) 100 C.A.2d 321, 324, 223 P.2d 517; infra, §161.)

Thus, boards of medical and dental examiners may be empowered to hold hearings and revoke licenses for causes defined by law (Suckow v. Alderson (1920) 182 C. 247, 249, 187 P. 965; Purviance v. Compton (1928) 94 C.A. 277, 279, 271 P. 120; Jameson v. Board of Dental Examiners (1931) 118 C.A. 105, 108, 5 P.2d 47), and the Real Estate Commissioner has been validly invested with similar powers (Brecheen v. Riley (1921) 187 C. 121, 125, 200 P. 1042).

Quasi-judicial administrative decisions are reviewable only by mandamus. (See Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 C.3d 130, 137, 93 C.R. 234, 481 P.2d 242; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §257.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

B. Judicial Power.

2. Delegation of Judicial Power.

b. Valid Administrative Adjudication.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 146

[§ 146] Valid Administrative Adjudication.

McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 C.3d 348, 261 C.R. 318, 777 P.2d 91, explores in depth the nature and extent of administrative adjudication and the constitutional restraints on exercise of the process. The Santa Monica Charter Rent Control article, in addition to the usual regulatory provisions, authorizes a court action for damages by a tenant against the landlord for receipt of excess rent, to recover treble damages, costs, and attorneys' fees. The article also authorizes an alternative administrative remedy by a proceeding in which the Rent Control Board can determine violations, and the tenant can deduct the excess rent and treble damages from future rent payments. Tenants filed an administrative complaint against their landlord, and the board awarded them restitution of excess rent and treble damages, and authorized withholding of rent for the amounts. Plaintiff landlord sought administrative mandamus, and the trial judge, concluding that the administrative adjudication process violated the Judicial Powers Clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., Art. VI, §1), issued a peremptory writ, ordering the board to vacate its decision, and permanently enjoining the board from proceeding on any complaints for excess rents under the article. Held, reversed.

(a) Jersey Maid case not controlling. Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock (1939) 13 C.2d 620, 91 P.2d 577, held unconstitutional a provision allowing the Director of Agriculture to establish minimum prices for milk and resolve complaints by milk producers against milk distributors. (49 C.3d 357.) However, the Jersey Maid opinion is unclear in its holding and lacking in reasoning or in consideration of precedents from other jurisdictions or policy implications; and the intervening five decades of case law shows that it is out of step with every sister-state court that has considered administrative awards of "restitutive" damages. (49 C.3d 358.)

(b) Power to make "restitutive" money awards: California cases. While they furnish no direct authority, the professional licensing cases, rejecting "judicial power" challenges to administrative action so long as a judicial review was available, are persuasive. These decisions recognized what Professor Davis termed the "principle of check." As he put it: "We have had little or no concern for avoiding a mixture of three or more kinds of power in the same agency; we have had much more concern for avoiding or minimizing unchecked power. The very identifying badge of the modern administrative agency has been the combination of judicial power (adjudication) with legislative power (rulemaking)." (49 C.3d 361.) Thus, "although we acknowledge the constitutional importance of ensuring judicial review of administrative determinations, our prior cases do not stand for the proposition that an administrative agency may exercise all manner of 'judicial-like' power on the simple condition that judicial review of the administrative decision remains available. On the other hand, our prior licensing cases have accepted without constitutional debate the authority of licensing agencies to impose a restitutive award as a probationary term on a licensee, and these cases do not foreclose the possibility that, under appropriate circumstances, an agency without licensing power should likewise be allowed to make such restitutive awards." (49 C.3d 364.)

(c) Power to make "restitutive" money awards: sister state cases. The Judicial Powers Clause of the California Constitution has counterparts in most other state constitutions, but modern courts have not rigidly construed these provisions. Instead, the courts have recognized the necessity of administrative adjudication of certain disputes, subject to two limiting principles:

(1) Procedural: the principle of check, satisfied by availability of judicial review. (49 C.3d 365.) The decisions also reserve to the courts the "true" judicial power, upholding the agency's authority only if the administrative scheme respects the principle of check by providing for judicial review. (49 C.3d 373.)

(2) Substantive: the judicial powers are proper if they are needed to produce an efficient and effective administrative enforcement of the public interest. (49 C.3d 366.) The view embraced by sister states avoids "meaningless, wooden distinctions" between quasi-judicial and judicial powers, and the decisions "forthrightly recognize that administrative agencies do indeed exercise 'judicial-like' powers." But they also stress a crucial and workable limiting principle: "The agency may exercise only those powers that are reasonably necessary to effectuate the agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes." (49 C.3d 372.) At least nine states have upheld the remedial power. (49 C.3d 367.)

(d) Conclusion. Administrative adjudication and awarding of restitution does not offend the Judicial Powers Clause when these substantive and procedural limitations are respected. Thus, the "reasonable necessity/legitimate regulatory purpose" requirements will be applied "to guard against unjustified delegation of authority to decide disputes that otherwise belong in the courts. Specifically, we will inquire whether the challenged remedial power is authorized by legislation, and reasonably necessary to accomplish the administrative agency's regulatory purposes. Furthermore, we will closely scrutinize the agency's asserted regulatory purposes in order to ascertain whether the challenged remedial power is merely incidental to a proper, primary regulatory purpose, or whether it is in reality an attempt to transfer determination of traditional common law claims from the courts to a specialized agency whose primary purpose is the processing of such claims. Thus, for example, we would not approve the Board's adjudication of a landlord's common law counterclaims (extraneous to the Board's regulatory functions) against a tenant. Such adjudication would (i) not reasonably effectuate the Board's regulatory purposes--ensuring enforcement of rent levels--and (ii) it would shift the Board's primary purpose from one of ensuring the enforcement of rent levels, to adjudicating a broad range of landlord-tenant disputes traditionally resolved in the courts. Finally, we will continue to apply the 'principle of check' in order to reserve to the courts the 'true' judicial powers." (49 C.3d 374.) And in cases of this kind, in which a private party has a direct pecuniary interest, the independent judgment test may be the appropriate standard. (49 C.3d 375, footnote 36.)

(e) Application of limiting principles to this case.

(1) Permissible determination on excess rents. The board's determination that plaintiff charged excess rents, though judicial in nature, was incidental to the legitimate primary purpose of regulating rents. (49 C.3d 375.)

(2) No withholding of rent. However, the board's order violated the principle of check: (a) The order becomes final when made, and the tenant may then withhold rent; i.e., in a practical sense, it is a self-enforcing final order effective before the landlord has an opportunity to petition for judicial review and obtain a stay. (b) In addition, the order is made an affirmative defense to an unlawful detainer action based on the tenant's nonpayment of rent. (49 C.3d 376.)

(3) No power to award treble damages. The Charter authorized an award of treble damages (since deleted by amendment), and the board, under the substantive limitation test, cannot constitutionally impose these damages. Administrative agencies regularly exercise a range of powers to induce compliance with regulations (e.g., fines or penalties, costs, and attorneys' fees), and there is no reason to believe that these options are insufficient here. "Most significantly, however, we believe that the power to award treble damages in the present contest poses a risk of producing arbitrary, disproportionate results that magnify, beyond acceptable risks, the possibility of arbitrariness inherent in any scheme of administrative adjudication." (49 C.3d 379.)

(4) No constitutional right to jury trial. The sister state decisions are in agreement on the proposition that, when a challenged administrative power meets the substantive limitation set forth above, the state constitution's jury trial provision does not preclude administrative adjudication. (49 C.3d 380.) The federal courts hold that the Seventh Amendment guaranty does not attach to the administrative adjudication of "public rights." (49 C.3d 381.) "[W]e conclude that when, as here, a rent control board's adjudication of excess rent meets the substantive-limitations requirement imposed by our judicial powers clause, the Constitution's jury trial provision does not operate to preclude administrative adjudication." (49 C.3d 386.)

Two justices concurred (49 C.3d 386), and one justice dissented in part (49 C.3d 388). (See Bradshaw v. Park (1994) 29 C.A.4th 1267, 1275, 34 C.R.2d 872 [power of Director of Industrial Relations, under Lab.C. 3722(a), to adjudicate monetary penalties on employers who fail to secure workers' compensation insurance meets reasonably necessary/legitimate regulatory purpose prong of McHugh]; Miller v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1665, 1674, 58 C.R.2d 584 [Veh.C. 3050, enumerating list of duties of New Motor Vehicle Board, does not confer plenary power on board to adjudicate every matter between new car dealer and manufacturer]; Hardin Oldsmobile v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 585, 597, 60 C.R.2d 583 [assertion of jurisdiction by New Motor Vehicle Board violated Judicial Powers Clause because board had no statutory authority to preside over claims against manufacturer, including common law contract and tort claims seeking compensatory, treble, and punitive damages]; Santa Teresa Citizen Action Group v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Dev. Com. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1441, 1450, 130 C.R.2d 392 [California Supreme Court's summary denial of review of Energy Commission decision did not represent unconstitutional delegation of judicial power to executive agency; plaintiffs' constitutional claims were judicially reviewed on merits, thus satisfying separation of powers doctrine].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

1. Legislative Power Is in Legislature.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 147

[§ 147] In General.

(1) The power to make laws is vested in the legislative department. Legislative power cannot be delegated to courts or administrative officers; it must be exercised by the Legislature itself. (Schaezlein v. Cabaniss (1902) 135 C. 466, 67 P. 755; In re McLain (1923) 190 C. 376, 379, 212 P. 620 [statute empowering commission to fix speed limit on highway or bridge at less than legally established rate was invalid]; see San Diego County Water Authority v. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. (2004) 117 C.A.4th 13, 29, 11 C.R.3d 446 [courts cannot nullify law on basis of obsolescence in absence of constitutional objection]; 1 Tribe, §5-1 et seq.)

(2) The courts cannot interfere with the legislative process. (See Johnston v. Board of Supervisors (1947) 31 C.2d 66, 70, 187 P.2d 686; Santa Clara v. Superior Court (1949) 33 C.2d 552, 559, 203 P.2d 1.) A practical exception has been recognized, however, in court-ordered reapportionment of legislative districts. (See infra, §294.)

In Gilligan v. Morgan (1973) 413 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 2440, 37 L.Ed.2d 407, plaintiffs, students of Kent State University, brought a class action in the federal district court to enjoin the Governor and leaders of the National Guard from ordering troops to duty in civil disorders and from violating students' constitutional rights. Held, no justiciable controversy was presented. U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, vests in Congress the power to organize and govern the Militia (now the National Guard); Congress has enacted appropriate legislation, and has also authorized the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces to prescribe regulations for training and discipline. Thus, the relief sought would invade areas of responsibility in both the legislative and executive branches of government, responsible to the electorate. (93 S.Ct. 2446, 37 L.Ed.2d 413.)

(3) Legislative power cannot be given to private persons. (See 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1398.) However, in Brock v. Superior Court (1937) 9 C.2d 291, 71 P.2d 209, the court upheld an act that contemplated the assent of persons engaged in an industry to related marketing agreements. The court pointed to the analogy of local option statutes, and found no constitutional objection. (9 C.2d 299.) (See Highland Farms Dairy v. Agnew (1937) 300 U.S. 608, 57 S.Ct. 549, 81 L.Ed. 835 [delegation of power to milk commission to set minimum and maximum prices was not unlawful].) The Legislature may make the effective date of an act contingent on a future event, even though that event is the adoption of a constitutional amendment without which the Legislature would lack power to pass the statute. (Busch v. Turner (1945) 26 C.2d 817, 821, 161 P.2d 456.)

(4) Although the legislative power to punish for contempt is usually exercised by legislative committees (see infra, §164), the Legislature itself also has the power. (Groppi v. Leslie (1972) 404 U.S. 496, 92 S.Ct. 582, 585, 30 L.Ed.2d 632, 636, infra, §638.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Legislative power must be exercised by Legislature: See O'Connell v. Superior Court (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1452, 1476, 47 C.R.3d 147 [trial court had no power to impose own remedy for educational inequality by issuing statewide preliminary injunction enjoining enforcement of statute requiring students to pass state-mandated high school exit exam as requirement for receiving diploma]; 43 *San Diego L. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 148

[§ 148] Court Cannot Compel Legislative Action.

(1) In General. In City Council v. Superior Court (1960) 179 C.A.2d 389, 3 C.R. 796, petitioner city, in 1956, entered into a 10-year garbage removal contract with P's predecessor, which provided for adjustment of rates only by ordinance of the city council and amendment of the contract. P applied for rate increases, which the council refused. P then sought mandamus in the superior court to compel the city council to grant the higher rate, and the lower court issued an alternative writ. On petition for prohibition by the city council, held, writ granted.

(a) The contract called for quasi-legislative action to adjust rates; the mere ascertainment of facts as a basis did not render the process judicial. (179 C.A.2d 393.) While quasi-legislative action may sometimes be undone for fraud or arbitrariness, the court cannot compel affirmative legislative action. "The commanding of specific legislative action is beyond the power of the courts for it would violate the principle of division of powers of the three governmental departments." (179 C.A.2d 395.) This principle applies equally to legislative action by the state and municipalities. "The enactment of an ordinance or performance of any other legislative or quasi legislative function is but the exercise, through delegation, of a part of the legislative power of the state. It cannot be controlled by the courts." (179 C.A.2d 396.)

(b) The court noted that the lower court was attempting to compel amendment of a contract. The contract provision was a limitation on the council's power, and required a showing that an increase was essential to continued operation and reasonable return; it was not a grant to a contractor of an affirmative right to an increase on making the showing. A court may not compel a city to agree to amend a binding contract with a contractor, any more than the contractor can be subjected to a change by the city. (179 C.A.2d 401.) (See Contra Costa v. California (1986) 177 C.A.3d 62, 77, 222 C.R. 750 [requirement of exhaustion of remedies is based in part on separation of powers doctrine, and judicial action before legislative process is completed is in excess of jurisdiction].)

(2) Appropriation of Funds. The separation of powers doctrine prevents a court from directly ordering the Legislature to enact a specific appropriation. (See Sacramento v. California State Legislature (1986) 187 C.A.3d 393, 396, 231 C.R. 686.) However, "that doctrine does not preclude the judiciary from ordering that funds which have been appropriated should be paid without regard to an invalid legislative restriction." (Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights v. Cory (1982) 132 C.A.3d 852, 856, 183 C.R. 475, citing Mandel v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 531, 174 C.R. 841, 629 P.2d 935, supra, §141.)

In Sacramento v. California State Legislature, supra, the action was brought by plaintiff city to obtain reimbursement, pursuant to Cal. Const., Art. XIII B, §6, of costs expended in compliance with a state mandated unemployment insurance program. Plaintiff argued that the fundamental rule against ordering enactment of an appropriation should be subject to an exception where the Legislature's duty is ministerial. Held, no such exception can be created:

"The City suggests that the need for departing from precedent is great because otherwise the will of the electorate embodied in article XIII B, section 6, will be frustrated. The difficulty with the City's argument is that it applies in every instance in which a claim of this nature is tendered. Such a claim always rests on some mandatory constitutional provision; how else could we be called upon to check the Legislature? But this has never sufficed to breach the rule. If the electorate is willing it may directly enact an appropriation. In the absence of such an explicit expression of the People's will we will not indulge the presumption that we can discern it more faithfully and accurately than the political branches." (187 C.A.3d 397.)

(3) Sanctions Against Individual Legislators. Spallone v. United States (1990) 493 U.S. 265, 110 S.Ct. 625, 107 L.Ed.2d 644, involved the "most recent episode of a lengthy lawsuit in which the city of Yonkers was held liable for intentionally enhancing racial segregation in housing in Yonkers. The issue here is whether it was a proper exercise of judicial power for the District Court to hold petitioners, four Yonkers city council members, in contempt for refusing to vote in favor of legislation implementing a consent decree earlier approved by the city." (110 S.Ct. 628, 107 L.Ed.2d 650.)

The Court held that sanctions were properly imposed on the city; but it was an abuse of discretion to impose sanctions on the council members, who were not parties to the underlying action. (110 S.Ct. 633, 634, 107 L.Ed.2d 657, 658.) "The imposition of sanctions on individual legislators is designed to cause them to vote, not with a view to the interest of their constituents or of the city, but with a view solely to their own personal interests. ... Such fines thus encourage legislators, in effect, to declare that they favor an ordinance not in order to avoid bankrupting the city for which they legislate, but in order to avoid bankrupting themselves." (110 S.Ct. 634, 107 L.Ed.2d 658.) (See Steiner v. Superior Court (1996) 50 C.A.4th 1771, 1790, 58 C.R.2d 668 [Govt.C. 3060, providing for accusation against county officer for wilful or corrupt misconduct in office, violates separation of powers doctrine insofar as it is used to accuse county supervisors for acts or omissions committed as part of their legislative functions and that violate no penal statute]; 104 Harv. L. Rev. 296 [federal court's power to compel state legislative action; discussing Spallone].)

(4) Exception: Material Impairment of Required Functions. In Scott v. Common Council (1996) 44 C.A.4th 684, 52 C.R.2d 161, the trial court ordered defendant city council to reinstate and fund city attorney investigator positions, which had been eliminated in the annual budget, on the ground that the budget cuts prevented the city attorney from performing the duties prescribed in the city charter. Held, affirmed.

(a) The general rule that courts may not interfere with the legislative process must yield to the exception that interference is authorized when a legislative enactment violates some provision of the constitution, statute, or municipal charter. (44 C.A.4th 693, 694, citing Hicks v. Board of Supervisors (1977) 69 C.A.3d 228, 138 C.R. 101, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Criminal Procedure, §18.)

(b) "In the present economic climate, state, county and local governments are facing an unprecedented restriction of funds and they are constantly required to allocate scarce funds among competing government needs. The budget process is obviously an allocation process, and it is obviously a legislative process. However, in making allocation decisions, the legislative body cannot act in excess of its authority by first eliminating mandatory government functions, such as the investigative function of the city attorney in this case." (44 C.A.4th 697.)

(c) Here, there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's determination that the actions taken by the council eliminated the city attorney's ability to carry out the duties prescribed by the city charter. (44 C.A.4th 698.) (See Board of Supervisors v. Superior Court (1995) 33 C.A.4th 1724, 1740, 39 C.R.2d 906 [county board of supervisors could not be held in contempt of consent decree placing cap on detention center population because contempt order would invade board's discretion in allocating public funds, and there was no substantial evidence that board wilfully failed to appropriate resources to allow sheriff to comply]; California Teachers Assn. v. Ingwerson (1996) 46 C.A.4th 860, 867, 876, 53 C.R.2d 917 [court erred in requiring county to develop budget that did not reduce or freeze teachers' salaries, where school district faced severe economic problems, and officials did not act in unreasonable and arbitrary manner].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Appropriation of Funds. See San Diego v. California (2008) 164 C.A.4th 580, 594, 79 C.R.3d 489 [trial court erred in issuing writ ordering Legislature to appropriate funds in future state budgets to satisfy reimbursement obligations to counties and to pay those funds to counties].

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

1. Legislative Power Is in Legislature.

c. Court Cannot Inquire Into Legislative Motivation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 149

[§ 149] Court Cannot Inquire Into Legislative Motivation.

In Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Burroughs) (1975) 13 C.3d 721, 119 C.R. 631, 532 P.2d 495, Los Angeles County adopted an ordinance establishing salaries and wages for a majority of county employees. B filed a taxpayer's suit seeking a declaration of invalidity and an injunction restraining implementation, alleging that the Board of Supervisors enacted the ordinance under the duress and coercion of a threatened illegal strike. Then, pending the hearing on the preliminary injunction, B sought, on deposition, to question members of the board about discussions that took place during the executive sessions preceding negotiations with the employees' representatives. The deponents refused to answer, the trial judge ordered them to answer, and they sought prohibition. Held, writ granted.

(a) Evidence Code privilege is not significant. The parties in the lower court were concerned with Ev.C. 1040, the official information privilege, and Govt.C. 54957.6, authorizing executive sessions during labor negotiations. B argued that the conditional privilege was subject to the discretionary exception made by the trial judge in this case. This issue as to the proper application of Ev.C. 1040 need not be resolved. (13 C.3d 725, 726.)

(b) Principle prohibiting judicial inquiry into subjective motives or mental processes of legislators is fundamental. This principle, long established, is supported by many decisions. "The diverse character of such motives, and the impossibility of penetrating into the hearts of men and ascertaining the truth, precludes all such inquiries as impracticable and futile." (13 C.3d 726.) The principle applies to local legislators as well as to members of state Legislatures or Congress. (13 C.3d 726.) And it is, on one level, a corollary of the related principle that the validity of a legislative act does not depend on the subjective motivation of its draftsmen but on the objective effect of the legislative terms. (13 C.3d 727.)

(c) Distinction where agreement alone is involved. Grasko v. Los Angeles City Bd. of Education (1973) 31 C.A.3d 290, 297, 107 C.R. 334, invalidated an employment agreement on the ground that it resulted from an illegal teachers' strike. "[W]e entertain grave doubts" whether the holding is correct; and East Bay Mun. Employees Union v. Alameda (1970) 3 C.A.3d 578, 584, 83 C.R. 503, reached a contrary conclusion. (13 C.3d 728.)

(d) Proof where ulterior motive is relevant. Even where an ulterior purpose is relevant to the validity of the ordinance, the taxpayer must establish it by objective proof, not by inquiry into motivation. (13 C.3d 729.) Thus, in

Stahm v. Klein (1960) 179 C.A.2d 512, 4 C.R. 137, a civil service employee was allowed to challenge the validity of a municipal ordinance abolishing his position on the ground that it had been adopted in bad faith. This is one of the rare circumstances in which ulterior purpose is relevant to validity; i.e., legislative subterfuge cannot be used to strip an employee of his or her position. But the Stahm court made it clear that legislators could not be questioned and evidence or oral conversations could not be introduced. (13 C.3d 729, 730.)

(e) Conclusion. "It is simply unthinkable ... that members of legislative majorities should from time to time be subject to cross-examination in various courts over the country regarding their state of mind when they voted. That is no more representative government than it would be judicial process for judges to be subject to cross-examination by legislative committees about their state of mind in deciding cases. It seems almost anticlimactic to add that legislatures whose members were subject to call for testimony in this fashion would be hard put to find the time to legislate." (13 C.3d 731, quoting Professor Bickel.) (See San Francisco v. Cooper (1975) 13 C.3d 898, 913, 120 C.R. 707, 534 P.2d 403; Santa Cruz v. Superior Court (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1146, 1152, 1155, 48 C.R.2d 216 [although city planning director and commissioners were not legislators, inquiry into whether they had secret agreement with city council to refuse to consider certain zoning issues violated rule against inquiring into legislative motivation]; 15 San Diego L. Rev. 925 et seq. [symposium on legislative motivation]; 27 Stanf. L. Rev. 585 [conscientious legislator's duty to consider his or her motivation in assessing constitutionality of proposed legislation].)

In Board of Supervisors v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1616, 38 C.R.2d 876, an action challenging a board of supervisors' decision to consolidate court-related services in the county sheriff rather than the marshal's office, plaintiff judge's association sought discovery of extrinsic evidence on whether the supervisors, as required by statute, took into advisement the judges' recommendation. Held, this discovery would constitute an improper inquiry into the legislators' motives or mental processes. (32 C.A.4th 1623, 1626.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See King City v. Community Bank of Cen. Calif. (2005) 131 C.A.4th 913, 944, 32 C.R.3d 384 [rule that court may not inquire into subjective mental processes of legislators is restricted to cases where validity of statute or ordinance is being challenged, and does not prevent consultation of extrinsic evidence to construe enactment; hence, trial court erred in using rule to deny discovery relating to city council's approval of loan to redevelopment agency]; Nadler v. Schwarzenegger (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1327, 1336, 41 C.R.3d 92, Supp., infra, §301 [regardless of whether Assembly partially waived legislative privilege regarding consultant's declaration explaining considerations involved in redistricting, trial court did not err in denying motion to compel his deposition; court may not inquire into subjective motivations of legislative members]; Sutter's Place v. Superior Court (2008) 161 C.A.4th 1370, 1380, 75 C.R.3d 9 [Proposition 59, adopting Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(b), and establishing constitutional right of access concerning conduct of public business, did not eliminate mental processes rule].

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

1. Legislative Power Is in Legislature.

d. Speech or Debate Clause.

1. Nature of Immunity.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 150

[§ 150] Nature of Immunity.

(1) In General. U.S. Const., Art. I, §6, states that senators and representatives "shall not be questioned in any other place" for "any Speech or Debate in either House." (See 1 Rotunda, §8.6 et seq.; 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 217 [discussing whether clause provides immunity for congressional hiring practices].) There is no comparable evidentiary privilege for state legislators in federal criminal prosecutions. (United States v. Gillock (1980) 445 U.S. 360, 100 S.Ct. 1185, 63 L.Ed.2d 454.)

The constitutional provision received its first definitive construction in United States v. Johnson (1966) 383 U.S. 169, 86 S.Ct. 749, 15 L.Ed.2d 681. Johnson, a former Congressman, was found guilty of violating the federal conflict of interest statute and of conspiring to defraud the United States (18 U.S.C., §371). An important element in the case was proof of the allegation that he had agreed, for pay, to make a speech on the House floor favorable to independent savings and loan associations, which his client, a Maryland association, could circulate to allay apprehensions of potential depositors. Held, the Clause was a defense. The privilege was intended to preserve the independence of the legislative branch by preventing intimidation by the executive and accountability before a possibly hostile judiciary; and a criminal prosecution dependent on inquiries into the preparation and motives of a congressman's speech necessarily contravenes the constitutional provision. (86 S.Ct. 757, 15 L.Ed.2d 688.) The Court did not decide the validity of a prosecution founded on a narrowly drawn statute enacted in the exercise of congressional power to regulate the conduct of its members. (86 S.Ct. 758, 15 L.Ed.2d 690.)

(2) Private Civil Actions. In Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund (1975) 421 U.S. 491, 95 S.Ct. 1813, 44 L.Ed.2d 324, Congress authorized the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security to study the operation of the Internal Security Act of 1950. The committee began an inquiry into activities of respondent organization, and issued a subpoena duces tecum for its bank records. The organization and two members sued the chairman, members, and counsel of the subcommittee to enjoin implementation of the subpoena duces tecum as violative of First Amendment rights. Held, no injunction could be granted; the actions attacked were within the "legitimate legislative sphere" and therefore protected by the Speech and Debate Clause.

"The applicability of the Clause to private civil actions is supported by the absoluteness of the terms 'shall not be questioned,' and the sweep of the terms 'in any other Place.' In reading the Clause broadly we have said that legislators acting within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity 'should be protected not only from the consequences of litigation's results but also from the burden of defending themselves.' ... Just as a criminal prosecution infringes upon the independence which the Clause is designed to preserve, a private civil action, whether for an injunction or damages, creates a distraction and forces Members to divert their time, energy, and attention from their legislative tasks to defend the litigation. Private civil actions also may be used to delay and disrupt the legislative function. Moreover, whether a criminal action is instituted by the Executive Branch, or a civil action is brought by private parties, judicial power is still brought to bear on Members of Congress and legislative independence is imperiled." (95 S.Ct. 1821, 44 L.Ed.2d 336.) (See 95 S.Ct. 1825, 44 L.Ed.2d 341, where the court notes that the legislative inquiry was frustrated for nearly 5 years by this improper action.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 131; 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 35; 24 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 546; 25 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 796.)

(3) Waiver. In United States v. Helstoski (1979) 442 U.S. 477, 99 S.Ct. 2432, 61 L.Ed.2d 12, defendant, a former Congressman, voluntarily appeared before federal grand juries investigating political corruption, and repeatedly asserted that he would not request immunity and would not claim the privilege against self-incrimination. Held, the Speech and Debate Clause provides a separate and distinct protection calling for a clear and unambiguous expression of waiver, not shown here. (99 S.Ct. 2441, 61 L.Ed.2d 26.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

1. Legislative Power Is in Legislature.
 - d. Speech or Debate Clause.
2. No Immunity for Nonlegislative Activities.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 151

[§ 151] No Immunity for Nonlegislative Activities.

(1) In General. In Powell v. McCormack (1969) 395 U.S. 486, 89 S.Ct. 1944, 1956, 23 L.Ed.2d 491, 506, infra, §152, the Court held that nonlegislative activities of employees of a congressman are subject to judicial review; i.e., the purposes of the Speech or Debate Clause are fully achieved if legislators are relieved of the burden of defending themselves. (See Gravel v. United States (1972) 408 U.S. 606, 92 S.Ct. 2614, 33 L.Ed.2d 583, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §304 [same, grand jury investigation]; United States v. Brewster (1972) 408 U.S. 501, 92 S.Ct. 2531, 2537, 33 L.Ed.2d 507, 517 [Clause does not bar prosecution where government "does not rely on legislative acts or the motivation for legislative acts"]; Doe v. McMillan (1973) 412 U.S. 306, 93 S.Ct. 2018, 2030, 36 L.Ed.2d 912, 927 [House committee and its employees are immune from private suit for preparing and voting to publish congressional report; but public distribution by Public Printer and Superintendent of Documents is protected by immunity only if legitimate legislative purpose is served]; 1 Rotunda, §§8.7, 8.8; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 189 [Gravel]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1113 [Gravel and Brewster]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 221 [McMillan].)

(2) Public News Release. In Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979) 443 U.S. 111, 99 S.Ct. 2675, 61 L.Ed.2d 411, plaintiff, a research scientist, received substantial federal grants for studies seeking an objective measure of aggression. His work was concentrated on the behavior patterns of certain animals when exposed to aggravating stressful stimuli. NASA and the Navy were interested in the potential of this research for resolving problems of humans confined in close quarters for extended periods. Defendant, a U.S. Senator, initiated the "Golden Fleece of the Month Award," to publicize what he perceived to be the most egregious examples of wasteful governmental spending. He made an award to NASA and other government agencies funding plaintiff's research, and gave a speech printed in the Congressional Record describing plaintiff's work as "nonsense," and asserting that, in view of "the transparent worthlessness of Hutchinson's study of jaw-grinding and biting by angry or hard-drinking monkeys, it is time we put a stop to the bite Hutchinson and the bureaucrats who fund him have been taking of the taxpayer." Defendant then gave wide publicity to the award and speech in press releases and a newsletter, and his legislative assistant discussed the subject with the agencies that had sponsored the research. Plaintiff sued the Senator and his assistant for defamation, interference with contractual relationships, and invasion of privacy. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) The Speech and Debate Clause has been given a practical interpretation, going beyond the chamber to protect committee hearings and reports (Doe v. McMillan, Gravel v. United States, supra), but the objective of protecting only legislative activities remains. (99 S.Ct. 2683, 61 L.Ed.2d 426.) Thus, a member may be held liable for republishing defamatory statements originally made in either House. (99 S.Ct. 2684, 2685, 61 L.Ed.2d 426, 427, citing Gravel and Doe.)

(b) Valuable and desirable as it may be to transmit information to the public, the press releases and newsletters were not part of the deliberative process. Unlike committee reports, which are the collective expressions of opinions within the legislative process, the releases were primarily means of informing those outside the legislative forum, and represented the views of a single member. (99 S.Ct. 2686, 2687, 61 L.Ed.2d 429, 430.) (See 93 Harv. L. Rev. 161; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 325.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

1. Legislative Power Is in Legislature.

e. Qualifications of Members of Legislature.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 152

[§ 152] Qualifications of Members of Legislature.

(1) In General. Generally speaking, the Legislature has exclusive constitutional jurisdiction to determine qualifications of its members. (See Cal. Const., Art. IV, §5 ["Each house shall judge the qualifications and elections of its members"]; U.S. Const., Art. I, §5 [similar]; In re McGee (1951) 36 C.2d 592, 594, 597, 226 P.2d 1 [Legislature's jurisdiction extends to primary elections and cannot be delegated to courts]; California War Veterans for Justice v. Hayden (1986) 176 C.A.3d 982, 986, 987, 222 C.R. 512; 2 Rotunda, §9.1 et seq.; on validity of term limit laws, see infra, §§268, 269.)

Minimum qualifications for members of the House of Representatives and the Senate are 25 years of age for the House and 30 years of age for the Senate, 7 years for the House as a U.S. citizen and 9 years for the Senate, and an inhabitant of the state from which the member is elected. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §§2, 3.)

(2) Limitations on Power To Determine Qualifications. The power to determine qualifications of its members is not unlimited:

(a) Conditions violative of First Amendment protections are invalid. (See Bond v. Floyd (1966) 385 U.S. 116, 87 S.Ct. 339, 17 L.Ed.2d 235, infra, §484.)

(b) Qualifications beyond those specified in the Constitution may not be imposed. Thus, in Powell v. McCormack (1969) 395 U.S. 486, 89 S.Ct. 1944, 23 L.Ed.2d 491, petitioner Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., was elected to Congress from New York. A House Committee, after several hearings, found that he had the qualifications of U.S. Const., Art. I, §2, on age, citizenship, and residency, but that he had been guilty of misconduct. This included asserting an unwarranted immunity from process of the New York Courts, wrongful diversion of House funds for others and himself, and false reports on expenditures of foreign currency to the Committee on House Administration. The Committee voted for censure, fine, and deprivation of seniority. The House, 307 to 116, voted to exclude him and declare his seat vacant. Powell and voters of his district brought an action in the federal district court for a declaratory judgment. Held, he was entitled to the relief. U.S. Const., Art. I, §5, grants authority to expel a member by a two-thirds vote. But Powell was not seated or expelled; he was excluded; and this denial of membership was beyond the powers of the House. (89 S.Ct. 1979, 23 L.Ed.2d 508.) (See 81 Harv. L. Rev. 673 [discussion of problem prior to decision]; 17 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1

[symposium on Powell].)

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

a. In General.

1. Constitutional Authorization.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 153

[§ 153] Constitutional Authorization.

The initiative and referendum are obvious exceptions to the general rule that legislative powers are vested solely in the Legislature. Cal. Const., Art. II, §8, provides for submission, on petitions signed by a specified percentage of voters, of statewide initiative measures proposing statutes or constitutional amendments. Cal. Const., Art. II, §9, provides similarly for submission of statewide referendum measures to approve or reject statutes or parts of statutes. If approved by a majority of the voters, an initiative or referendum measure "takes effect the day after the election unless the measure provides otherwise." (Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(a) [initiative statute or referendum]; Art. XVIII, §4 [constitutional amendment].) (See Lawing v. Faull (1964) 227 C.A.2d 23, 26, 38 C.R. 417 [former constitutional provision, now Cal. Const., Art. II, §8(b), limiting percentage of voters required, was not applicable to chartered city]; 54 Cal. L. Rev. 1717; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 148; 70 Harv. L. III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

a. In General.

2. Statutory Procedure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 154

[§ 154] Statutory Procedure.

(1) In General. Elec.C. 9000 et seq. regulate the preparation, circulation, and submission to the voters of initiative and referendum measures, both on statewide and local levels. (See Midway Orchards v. Butte (1990) 220 C.A.3d 765, 778, 779, 269 C.R. 796 [statutory procedures for referenda on ordinances applied to referenda on resolutions]; People v. Scott (2002) 98 C.A.4th 514, 519, 119 C.R.2d 797 [fact that text of proposed initiative measure attached to circulated petitions differed from text in state ballot pamphlet was not fatal to validity of initiative; variations in text were not substantial, mostly correcting clerical and grammatical errors or conforming prior version to statutory amendments]; Alliance for a Better Downtown Millbrae v. Wade (2003) 108 C.A.4th 123, 131, 133 C.R.2d 249 [city clerk had no authority to reject initiative petition for noncompliance with Elec.C. 9201, 9207, based on extrinsic evidence; city clerk had ministerial duty to accept petition that, on its face, complied with Elections Code]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 434 [A Populist Critique of Direct Democracy]; 21 Pacific L. J. 119 [historical review and argument against limiting use of local initiatives and referenda]; 45 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1717 ["Protecting the People from Themselves," or How Direct Can Democracy Be?]; 45 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1735 [Practicing Theory: The Forgotten Law of Initiative Lawmaking]; on effect of Political Reform Act of 1974, see infra, §271 et seq.; on penal provisions relating to initiative and referendum (Elec.C. 18600 et seq.), see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Governmental Authority §§143, 144.)

(2) Verification of Signatures. The clerk must verify the validity of signatures on a petition. (See Wheelright v. Marin (1970) 2 C.3d 448, 454, 85 C.R. 809, 467 P.2d 537 [referendum: duties of clerk in examining signatures]; Gayle v. Hamm (1972) 25 C.A.3d 250, 255, 101 C.R. 628 [initiative: same]; Malick v. Athenour (1995) 37 C.A.4th 1120, 1126, 1127, 44 C.R.2d 281 [purpose of Elec.C. 105 and 9020, requiring signers of referendum to include printed name, is to assist in verification that signer is registered voter; clerk's automatic disqualification of persons who did not print each letter of name separately was arbitrary where other procedures were available to verify validity of signatures]; Mapstead v. Anchondo (1998) 63 C.A.4th 246, 258, 73 C.R.2d 602 [validity of signatures on petition].)

is to reduce confusion as to the contents of petitions, and the noncomplying petition failed to provide electors with the information needed to exercise their rights intelligently. (171 C.A.3d 1232, 1233.) (See Billig v. Voges (1990) 223 C.A.3d 962, 966, 273 C.R. 91 [petition that did not include full text of ordinance at issue was properly rejected; following Creighton]; Nelson v. Carlson (1993) 17 C.A.4th 732, 740, 21 C.R.2d 485 [no exception for bulky ordinances or resolutions]; Mervyn's v. Reyes (1998) 69 C.A.4th 93, 104, 81 C.R.2d 148 [following Creighton and Billig].)

(4) Accurate Title Is Required. The petition must include a descriptive title that will not mislead the voters. (See Hayward Area Planning Assn. v. Superior Court (1990) 218 C.A.3d 53, 58, 59, 266 C.R. 745 [failure to include title required by former Elec.C. 4052 (now Elec.C. 9238) did not invalidate petition, where heading of petition contained same information that would have been provided by title; doctrine of substantial compliance applied]; Lungren v. Superior Court (1996) 48 C.A.4th 435, 437, 441, 55 C.R.2d 690 [Attorney General complied with Elec.C. 9051 and 9052 by devising title to Proposition 209 that essentially recited its operative words verbatim; he was not required to include language stating that purpose was to prohibit affirmative action programs]; Hebard v. Bybee (1998) 65 C.A.4th 1331, 1342, 1343, 77 C.R.2d 352 [inaccurate title of ordinance in referendum petition was not cured by inclusion of complete text of ordinance and map elsewhere in petition; evidence of actual voter confusion was not necessary to determination that misstated title failed to satisfy reasonable objectives of statute]; Zaremborg v. Superior Court (2004) 115 C.A.4th 111, 118, 8 C.R.3d 723 [title and summary of referendum petition, though technically imprecise, was not fatally defective; summary stated major objectives of measure].)

(5) Miscellaneous Statutes. The failure to follow statutory procedure has been the basis for challenging a variety of ballot measures. (See Horwath v. East Palo Alto (1989) 212 C.A.3d 766, 775, 779, 261 C.R. 108 [city attorney's failure to prepare impartial analysis of initiative measure, as required by former Elec.C. 5011 (now Elec.C. 9280), did not invalidate ordinance, because deficient analysis did not affect outcome of election]; Ibarra v. Carson (1989) 214 C.A.3d 90, 95, 99, 262 C.R. 485 [under former Elec.C. 4003, 4005 (now Elec.C. 9205, 9207), proponents of municipal initiative measure must publish and post petition before circulating it for signatures; substantial compliance with posting requirement does not excuse premature circulation]; San Francisco Forty-Niners v. Nishioka (1999) 75 C.A.4th 637, 645, 646, 89 C.R.2d 388 [petition containing deliberate falsehoods concerning "purport" of initiative was unlawful under Elec.C. 18600, and writ of mandamus was properly issued to stop its circulation]; Holmes v. Jones (2000) 83 C.A.4th 882, 890, 100 C.R.2d 138 [Legislature did not intend that fiscal estimate or opinion required by Elec.C. 9005 be used in calculating 100-word limit of Elec.C. 9002]; People v. Orange (2003) 106 C.A.4th 914, 934, 131 C.R.2d 274 [following Horwath; successful challenge after election to county counsel's impartial analysis in ballot materials requires showing that analysis profoundly misled electorate, not just that it did not educate electorate on all legal nuances of measure]; Native American Sacred Site & Environmental Protection Assn. (NASSEPA) v. San Juan Capistrano (2004) 120 C.A.4th 961, 966, 16 C.R.3d 146 [under Elec.C. 9214, city's duty to either adopt voter-sponsored initiative or place it on ballot is ministerial and mandatory; city's failure to adopt initiative within statutory time period does not annul its duty in absence of compelling showing that case has been made for interfering with initiative power].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Costa v. Superior Court (2006) 37 C.4th 986, 1007, 1022, 1028, 39 C.R.3d 470, 128 P.3d 675 [where version of initiative measure submitted to Attorney General for preparation of title and summary differed from version circulated to public for signatures, preelection judicial review was appropriate, but disparities between two versions were not sufficient to justify withholding measure from ballot; discrepancies were inadvertent and did not mislead public or undermine applicable statutes]. (2) Verification of Signatures. See Friends of Bay Meadows v. San Mateo (2007) 157 C.A.4th 1175, 1189, 68 C.R.3d 916 [election officials properly invalidated signatures where second person wrote signer's name and address without signing as having witnessed signature, as required by Elec.C. 100.5; circulator is not qualified to witness signature and circulator's verification of each section of petition did not satisfy statute].

(3) Inclusion of Text of Resolution. See We Care--Santa Paula v. Herrera (2006) 139 C.A.4th 387, 390, 42 C.R.3d 577 [petition to amend general plan by requiring that increase in density for large projects be approved by voters did not need to include copy of land use portion of general plan; inclusion of full text of measure was sufficient because it did not change existing provisions of general plan]; Defend Bayview Hunters Point Committee v. San Francisco (2008) 167 C.A.4th 846, 858, 84 C.R.3d 486 [referendum petition on ordinance adopting redevelopment plan that failed to include copy of incorporated plan did not satisfy text requirement of Elec.C. 9238; omission of plan frustrated purpose of statutory requirement, which is to make sure prospective signers have adequate information on substance of proposed ordinance to make informed decision about whether to sign petition].(5) Miscellaneous Statutes. See MHC Financing Ltd. Partnership Two v. Santee (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1372, 1381, 23 C.R.3d 622 [city council that mistakenly adopted ordinance proposed by invalid initiative petition properly cured defects in enactment by adopting unaltered second version of petition initiative, as required by Elec.C. 9215, making it retroactive to date of first ordinance]; Preserve Shorecliff Homeowners v. San Clemente (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1427, 1430, 1448, 71 C.R.3d 332 [although circulators violated requirement in Elec.C. 9209 and 9238(c), that circulators be voters or be qualified to register as voters in city where they circulate petitions, trial court did not err in failing to invalidate petitions and in allowing referendum to go forward; that requirement is unconstitutional]; Widders v. Furchtenicht (2008) 167 C.A.4th 769, 776, 84 C.R.3d 428 [15-day time period in Elec.C. 9203 for city attorney to prepare ballot title and summary for initiative measure is not intended as statute of limitations on city attorney's right to seek judicial relief from duty to comply with statute].

On specific requirements for recall elections, see Elec.C. 11000 et seq.; Capo for Better Representation v. Kelley (2008) 158 C.A.4th 1455, 1464, 71 C.R.3d 354.

Witkin Summary of California Law

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

a. In General.

3. Initiative.

[§ 155] Initiative.

(1) In General. The constitutional provision for initiative and referendum is based on "the theory that all power of government ultimately resides in the people," and the Constitution thus recognizes a power reserved by the people, not a right granted to them; hence, the power is liberally construed in favor of its use. (Associated Home Builders v. Livermore (1976) 18 C.3d 582, 591, 135 C.R. 41, 557 P.2d 473, infra, §1031; Referendum Committee v. Hermosa Beach (1986) 184 C.A.3d 152, 161, 229 C.R. 51; see State Comp. Ins. Fund v. State Bd. of Equalization (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1295, 1301, 18 C.R.2d 526 [liberal construction]; 11 Hastings Const. L. Q. 43 [criticism of use of initiative to amend constitution]; 23 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1057 [modern state initiatives; voter confirmation and absence of deliberation and opportunity to compromise]; 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 185 [Direct Democracy and Civic Maturation]; 40 Hastings L. J. 1031 [interpreting purposes of initiatives]; 31 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 261 [distinguishing constitutional amendment from revision in California's initiative process]; 31 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1161 [symposium on California's initiative process]; 41 Santa Clara L. Rev. 937 [symposium on initiative process]; 71 So. Cal. L. Rev. 871 [interpretation of initiatives in California]; 54 Stanf. L. Rev. 569 [congressional reform of state initiative lawmaking to guarantee republican form of government]; 27 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 433 [criticism of abuses of initiative].)

(2) Scope of Power. Like statutes, initiatives are subject to state and federal constitutional limitations. Hence, the subject of the initiative must be within the power of the electorate to enact. (Legislature v. Deukmejian (1983) 34 C.3d 658, 674, 194 C.R. 781, 669 P.2d 17, supra, §103; American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations v. Eu (1984) 36 C.3d 687, 706, 708, 206 C.R. 89, 686 P.2d 609, supra, §103; see Bagley v. Manhattan Beach (1976) 18 C.3d 22, 26, 132 C.R. 668, 553 P.2d 1140, infra, §166 [initiative power cannot be exercised to adopt ordinance that would be beyond power of legislative body of city to enact]; DeVita v. Napa (1995) 9 C.4th 763, 772, 38 C.R.2d 699, 889 P.2d 1019, infra, §1017 [county general plan can be amended by initiative]; Citizens for Jobs and the Economy v. Orange (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1311, 1327, 115 C.R.2d 90 [distinguishing DeVita; initiative that required voter ratification of any county act to approve civilian airport project improperly restricted "power of future legislative bodies to carry out their duties, as prescribed to them by their own inherent police power"]; Pettye v. San Francisco (2004) 118 C.A.4th 233, 244, 12 C.R.3d 798 [trial court erred in holding that statute delegated exclusive authority to set general assistance standards to board of supervisors; local initiative power is not incompatible with state's interest in ensuring adequate general assistance benefits, as long as standards of aid and care meet statutory levels and further state objectives]; 74 Cal. L. Rev. 491 [using initiative power to control legislative procedure]; 51 So. Cal. L. Rev. 847 [constitutionality of budgeting by statewide statutory initiative].)

In Farley v. Healey (1967) 67 C.2d 325, 62 C.R. 26, 431 P.2d 650, petitioners obtained sufficient signatures of San Francisco voters to place an initiative measure on the ballot urging an immediate ceasefire and American withdrawal from Vietnam. On advice of the city attorney, defendant registrar of voters refused to qualify the measure. Held, mandamus granted. The power of initiative is broadly given by the charter, and the people may use it for this declaration of policy. (67 C.2d 328.) An elaborate dissent argues that the local initiative, regardless of charter language, is confined to municipal affairs, that this issue is exclusively one of federal power, and that the use of the election machinery at great public expense for the vote was improper and could lead to great abuses in similar situations. (See Gayle v. Hamm (1972) 25 C.A.3d 250, 255, 101 C.R. 628 [mandamus to compel certification of proposed ordinance barring airports within boundaries of incorporated city unless submitted to and approved by voters]; Bayless v. Limber (1972) 26 C.A.3d 463, 469, 102 C.R. 647 [mandamus to compel processing of initiative ordinance to prohibit oil well drilling within residential zones]; Duran v. Cassidy (1972) 28 C.A.3d 574, 580, 104 C.R. 793 [mandamus to compel acceptance of initiative petition prohibiting city ownership or operation of golf course]; 5 Cal. Western L. Rev. 148 [Farley].)

An initiative measure will not be declared invalid on the ground that it would impair a city's tax base and hence its power to raise tax revenues. Many initiative measures, e.g., zoning, might affect the property tax base; and "such speculative consequences do not constitute a prohibited interference by the initiative power with the function of a legislative body." (Birkenfeld v. Berkeley (1976) 17 C.3d 129, 144, 130 C.R. 465, 550 P.2d 1001.)

(3) Local Board Cannot Refuse To Place Qualified Initiative on Ballot. In Save Stanislaus Area Farm Economy v. Board of Supervisors (1993) 13 C.A.4th 141, 16 C.R.2d 408, plaintiffs, proponents of an initiative measure seeking to amend the general plan of the county, collected sufficient signatures to qualify for the general election ballot. However, the Board of Supervisors, finding various defects in the measure, voted to exclude it from the ballot. Plaintiffs then petitioned for mandamus to require the board to perform its ministerial duty, and the board in its answer contended that the measure was illegal. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs. Held, affirmed.

(a) The courts have repeatedly stated that local governments have the purely ministerial duty to place duly certified initiatives on the ballot, and cannot unilaterally refuse to do so. (13 C.A.4th 148, 149.) When faced with a measure believed to be invalid, the local governmental body may petition for mandamus to obtain a court order removing the measure from the ballot. (13 C.A.4th 149.)

(b) If the court decides against the local government and orders that the measure be placed on the ballot, in theory the local government could then file its writ petition for an adjudication that the measure is invalid. However, in the interests of equity and judicial economy, courts have allowed local governments to assert invalidity as a "defense" in the original writ proceeding. "But in doing so, neither courts nor litigants should lose sight of the fact that the burden of establishing this 'defense' falls squarely on the entity or person asserting the initiative's invalidity." (13 C.A.4th 150.)

(c) In exercising its discretion in preelection review of a qualified initiative, the trial court will remove the initiative only on a compelling showing, and will if possible resolve doubts in favor of the initiative power. (13 C.A.4th 150.) "In sum, the Board had a duty to place this initiative on the ballot unless it had obtained a court order barring the matter from the ballot. In a preelection challenge of a duly certified ballot initiative, the trial court determines whether the challenger has made a compelling showing that the initiative--and, indeed, of the whole practice of using initiatives to amend general plans--should await postelection review of an approved initiative." (13 C.A.4th 153.)

(4) Timing: At Which Election Should Initiative Be Put on Ballot. In Jeffrey v. Superior Court (2002) 102 C.A.4th 1, 125 C.R.2d 175, the court held that an initiative to change a city charter to provide for district elections and term limits for council members, which, if adopted, would take effect at the November 2004 election, was properly ordered for placement on the March 2004 ballot, even though it could have been placed on the November 2002 ballot. Elec.C.

1415 and 9255 both set minimum time limits and provide options for submitting proposals to the voters to amend or repeal city charters. However, neither statute sets a maximum time limit. (102 C.A.4th 4.) Elec.C. 36502 requires elections regarding term limits to be submitted to the voters at a "regularly scheduled election." (102 C.A.4th 7.) The March 2004 election is regularly scheduled and is not inconsistent with the initiative's effective date. (102 C.A.4th 9, 10.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 36 Golden Gate L. Rev. 185 [Separation of Powers and the California Initiative]; 78 So. Cal. L. Rev. 949, 985 [use of initiatives by political action committees and others to achieve nonpolicy-related goals]; 80 So. Cal. L. Rev. 299 [dual path initiative framework].

(2) Scope of Power. See Independent Energy Producers Assn. v. McPherson (2006) 38 C.4th 1020, 1030, 44 C.R.3d 644, 136 P.3d 178 [action claiming that initiative measure cannot lawfully be enacted through initiative process does not become moot if measure is approved by voters; hence, although preelection challenge is not presumptively improper, deferring judicial resolution until after election will usually be wiser course]; Totten v. Board of Supervisors of Ventura (2006) 139 C.A.4th 826, 839, 43 C.R.3d 244 [electorate in general law county lacked power to enact ordinance by initiative that prescribed minimum future annual budgets for county public safety agencies; board of supervisors had exclusive authority over county budget, and county budgets for public safety agencies are matter of statewide concern]; Widders v. Furchtenicht (2008) 167 C.A.4th 769, 784, 84 C.R.3d 428 [city attorney had no duty to prepare ballot titles and summaries under Elec.C. 9203 where proposed initiatives were facially unconstitutional because they did not propose actual legislation or purport to enact statutes].

The power of referendum is also liberally construed. (See Associated Home Builders v. Livermore (1976) 18 C.3d 582, 591, 135 C.R. 41, 557 P.2d 473, infra, §1031; Dye v. Board of Supervisors (1980) 107 C.A.3d 866, 871, 166 C.R. 100 [right of electorate of county is coextensive with right of people of state]; Midway Orchards v. Butte (1990) 220 C.A.3d 765, 778, 779, 269 C.R. 796 [because constitutional right to referendum is self-executing, Legislature cannot abridge right by failing to adopt procedures for its exercise; where no statutory procedure was provided for referenda against resolutions, court would apply statutes governing referenda against ordinances]; Browne v. Russell (1994) 27 C.A.4th 1116, 1120, 1123, 33 C.R.2d 29 [ordinance requiring that circulators of referendary petitions be city residents and registered voters is not violation of right to free speech]; Lindelli v. J. 591 [referendum power and public safety legislation].)

In Eastlake v. Forest City Enterprises (1976) 426 U.S. 668, 96 S.Ct. 2358, 49 L.Ed.2d 132, the Court rejected the claim that a zoning referendum constituted an improper delegation of legislative power. "A referendum cannot, however, be characterized as a delegation of power. Under our constitutional assumptions, all power derives from the people, who can delegate it to representative instruments which they create." (96 S.Ct. 2364, 49 L.Ed.2d 137.) Hence, a referendum "is a means for direct political participation, allowing the people the final decision, amounting to a veto power, over enactments of representative bodies." (96 S.Ct. 2362, 49 L.Ed.2d 137.) (See James v. Valtierra (1971) 402 U.S. 137, 91 S.Ct. 1331, 1333, 28 L.Ed.2d 678, 682 [Cal. Const., Art. XXXIV, subjecting public housing projects to referendum is valid]; Empire Waste Management v. L. Rev. 1384 [James]; 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 368 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

A rule enunciated for general law cities in Elec.C. 9241 prevents cities from repealing ordinances subject to referendum petitions and then essentially readopting them, for a period of 1 year after the date of repeal. The California Constitution imposes this rule on charter cities, notwithstanding the absence of an express provision addressing the matter. The rule is an implied element of the constitutional provisions reserving the referendum power. (Rubalcava v. Martinez (2007) 158 C.A.4th 563, 570, 572, 70 C.R.3d 225 [trial court erred in granting petition for mandamus and injunctive relief against city council of charter city where second ordinance was not essentially similar].)

5. Alternative and Complementary Measures.

[§ 157] Alternative and Complementary Measures.

(1) Alternative Measures. Cal. Const., Art. II, §11, permitting electors of local governments to exercise initiative and referendum powers, does not prevent presentation of alternative proposals on the same ballot. Under Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(b) and Elec.C. 9221, where two conflicting initiatives are approved, the one receiving the most votes prevails. (See Concerned Citizens v. Carlsbad (1988) 204 C.A.3d 937, 941, 942, 251 C.R. 583 [decided under former provision]; Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Assn. v. Roseville (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1178, 1188, 132 C.R.2d 1 [for rule of conflicting initiatives to apply, both initiatives must pass; thus, rule did not apply where initiative receiving most votes failed to receive two-thirds majority needed to pass, while conflicting initiative received necessary majority vote].)

(2) Simultaneous Passage of Complementary Measures. In the 1990 primary election, Proposition 114 was adopted, amending P.C. 190.2, the special circumstance provision of the 1978 death penalty initiative, by expanding the class of persons who qualified under the "peace officer" special circumstance; other changes to P.C. 190.2 were nonsubstantive. Proposition 115, adopted in the same election (see supra, §133) but with fewer affirmative votes, made comprehensive reforms to the criminal justice system. Among its changes was a substantial revision of P.C. 190.2 that included expansion of the felony-murder special circumstance. In Yoshisato v. Superior Court (1992) 2 C.4th 978, 9 C.R.2d 102, 831 P.2d 327, a criminal defendant argued that, under Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(b), the version of P.C. 190.2 adopted by Proposition 115 was not operative. Held, the changes made by Proposition 115 are operative.

(a) When two initiatives are presented to voters as "complementary or supplementary," rather than competing, measures, "the provisions of the measure receiving the lower number of affirmative votes are operative so long as they do not conflict with the provisions of the measure receiving the higher number of affirmative votes, and so long as those nonconflicting provisions are severable from any that do conflict." (2 C.4th 988.)

(b) Here, the propositions were presented as complementary rather than competing measures. (2 C.4th 989.) Hence, the provisions of Proposition 115 must be given effect to the extent they do not conflict with any substantive changes made by Proposition 114. (2 C.4th 991, 992.) (See People v. Barrow (1991) 233 C.A.3d 721, 723, 284 C.R. 679 [Proposition 8 is comprehensive scheme governing rights of crime victims, while Proposition 4 only relates to bail, and initiatives otherwise do not conflict; hence, fact that Proposition 4 received higher vote than Proposition 8 at same election rendered bail provisions, but not other provisions of Proposition 8, ineffective]; Sacramento County Deputy Sheriffs' Assn. v. Sacramento (2000) 85 C.A.4th 960, 967, 102 C.R.2d 523 [following Yoshisato].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

a. In General.

6. Amendment and Repeal.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 158

[§ 158] Amendment and Repeal.

(1) In General. "The Legislature may amend or repeal referendum statutes. It may amend or repeal an initiative statute by another statute that becomes effective only when approved by the electors unless the initiative statute permits amendment or repeal without their approval." (Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(c).)

A legislative amendment adopted without compliance with the amendment procedures of an initiative act is void. (Franchise Tax Bd. v. Cory (1978) 80 C.A.3d 772, 776, 145 C.R. 819.)

(2) Scope of Legislative Power. Amwest Surety Ins. Co. v. Wilson (1995) 11 C.4th 1243, 48 C.R.2d 12, 906 P.2d 1112, considers the scope of legislative authority where an initiative measure grants the Legislature the power to amend the measure "to further its purposes." Amwest involved Proposition 103, which imposed a rate rollback on all insurers and required prior approval of subsequent rate increases (see infra, §1083), and which provided that "[t]he provisions of this act shall not be amended by the Legislature except to further its purposes." In Calfarm Ins. Co. v. Deukmejian (1989) 48 C.3d 805, 258 C.R. 161, 771 P.2d 1247, infra, §1083, the Supreme Court held that portions of the Act were unconstitutional but severable and upheld the remainder of the initiative. The Legislature subsequently added Ins.C. 1861.135, exempting surety insurers from the rate rollback and rate approval provisions. Held, the statute is invalid because it does not further the purposes of Proposition 103. (11 C.4th 1247.)

(a) Under Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(c), the Legislature may not amend an initiative measure unless the electors approve or the measure itself permits amendment without approval. The power of the voters is absolute and includes the power to permit legislative amendment subject to conditions attached by the voters. (11 C.4th 1251.)

(b) Initiative measures commonly include a provision authorizing the Legislature to amend the initiative without voter approval only if the amendment furthers the purpose of the initiative; however, only one case, In re Nose (1924) 195 C. 91, 231 P. 561, has interpreted this language, and the discussion of the issue is so brief that it is difficult to draw a firm conclusion. (11 C.4th 1251, 1252.)

(c) The limitation imposed by Cal. Const., Art. II, §10(c) "must be strictly construed, but it also must be given the effect the voters intended it to have." (11 C.4th 1255, 1256.) Adoption of a deferential standard of review might cause the drafters of future initiatives to withhold legislative authority completely, a result that would diminish both the initiative and legislative processes. "Accordingly, starting with the presumption that the Legislature acted within its authority, we shall uphold the validity of section 1861.135 if, by any reasonable construction, it can be said that the statute furthers the purposes of Proposition 103." (11 C.4th 1256.)

(d) In determining the purposes of an initiative measure, the court may look to many sources, including the historical context and the ballot arguments, and is not limited to the express statement of purpose included in the initiative itself. (11 C.4th 1256.) Two major purposes of Proposition 103 were to reduce the rates for all insurance and to replace the former competitive system for regulating insurance with a system in which the Insurance Commissioner approves rates prior to their use. (11 C.4th 1259.)

(e) Plaintiff contends that Ins.C. 1861.135 furthers the purposes of Proposition 103 by clarifying whether surety insurance was meant to be included within the ambit of the initiative. (11 C.4th 1259.) But it was clear prior to the passage of Proposition 103 that the provisions regulating insurance rates applied to surety insurance. Proposition 103 fundamentally altered the method of regulating insurance rates but did not alter the types of insurance that were regulated. The provisions of Proposition 103 clearly applied to surety insurance, and the Legislature's action constituted an alteration rather than a clarification. (11 C.4th 1260, 1261.)

(f) Various other rationales have been advanced to show that Ins.C. 1861.135 furthers the purposes of Proposition 103. However, the voters intended Proposition 103 to apply broadly to various types of insurance, and excluding surety insurance from the rate regulatory provisions would not further the purposes of Proposition 103's broad reform. (11 C.4th 1261, 1265.)

(g) "The question before us is not whether exempting surety insurance from some of the provisions of Proposition 103 furthers the public good, but rather whether doing so furthers the purposes of Proposition 103. We hold that it does not. Because Proposition 103 expressly permits its provisions to be amended without voter approval, but only when to do so would further the purposes of the initiative, section 1861.135 is invalid." (11 C.4th 1265.) (See Flavell v. Albany (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1846, 1850, 25 C.R.2d 21 [ordinance that amended city's residential off-street parking requirements did not violate former Elec.C. 4013 (now Elec.C. 9217) by amending a prior initiative without voter approval, where ordinance complied with voters' mandate and harmonized initiative with other parts of city's zoning laws]; Mobilepark West Homeowners Assn. v. Escondido Mobilepark West (1995) 35 C.A.4th 32, 40, 43, 41 C.R.2d 393 [ordinance was invalid under Elec.C. 9217 as improper amendment, rather than clarification, of mobilehome rent control initiative]; Proposition 103 Enforcement Project v. Quackenbush (1998) 64 C.A.4th 1473, 1490, 76 C.R.2d 342 [statute permitting insurers, for rollback purposes, to deduct premium taxes, commissions, and brokerage expenses paid during rollback period was invalid because it amended initiative without furthering purposes of initiative; following Amwest]; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1134 [Amwest].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See MHC Financing Ltd. Partnership Two v. Santee (2005) 125 C.A.4th 1372, 1388, 23 C.R.3d 622 [city council mistakenly enacted first version of initiative-proposed ordinance, then it enacted second version to accurately reflect will of voters who signed initiative petition; doing so did not violate Elec.C. 9217, which prohibits amendment of voter-sponsored initiative ordinance].

(2) Scope of Legislative Power. See Foundation for Taxpayer & Consumer Rights v. Garamendi (2005) 132 C.A.4th 1354, 1366, 1371, 34 C.R.3d 354 [following Amwest Surety Ins. Co. v. Wilson (1995) 11 C.4th 1243, 48 C.R.2d 12, 906 P.2d 1112, text, p. 286; statute using absence of prior automobile insurance "in and of itself" as criterion in setting insurance rates is facially invalid; statute undermines one of major purposes of Proposition 103, to ensure that insurance is fair, available, and affordable for all Californians, and impermissibly infringes on Insurance Commissioner's power to adopt optional rating factors by regulation]; San Diego v. San Diego NORML (2008) 165 C.A.4th 798, 830, 81 C.R.3d 461 [Medical Marijuana Program Act (MMPA), enacted by Legislature to provide protections for medical marijuana users through use of identification card system, was not invalid amendment of Compassionate Use Act (CUA), which was adopted by initiative; MMPA did not add statutes or standards to CUA, and it had no impact on protections provided by CUA because use of identity card under MMPA was voluntary].

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

b. Exceptions to Initiative and Referendum Powers.

1. Urgency, Elections, and Tax Matters.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 159

[§ 159] Urgency, Elections, and Tax Matters.

(1) In General. Cal. Const., Art. II, §9(a), subjects the right of referendum to the following exceptions:

(a) Urgency measures.

(b) Statutes calling elections.

(c) Tax levies or appropriations for usual current expenses of the state.

Although the constitutional provision refers to statewide referenda on statutes, it has been construed to apply also to county referenda. (See Geiger v. Board of Supervisors (1957) 48 C.2d 832, 836, 313 P.2d 545; Community Health Assn. v. Board of Supervisors (1983) 146 C.A.3d 990, 993, 194 C.R. 557; Fenton v. Delano (1984) 162 C.A.3d 400, 405, 208 C.R. 486 [city ordinance imposing "fee" on users of gas, electricity, telephone, and cable television]; Westminster v. Orange (1988) 204 C.A.3d 623, 628, 631, 251 C.R. 511 [Govt.C. 53727(b), requiring voter approval of city tax measures, is unconstitutional]; 100 A.L.R.2d 314 [constitutional and statutory provisions excepting laws from referendum].)

(2) Initiative Power To Repeal Taxes. The prohibition against referenda on tax levies does not prohibit the use of a statewide initiative to repeal tax laws. (Carlson v. Cory (1983) 139 C.A.3d 724, 731, 189 C.R. 185.) On the other hand, the provision has been held applicable to a county initiative. (Community Health Assn. v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 146 C.A.3d 993 [county ordinance, adopted by initiative measure, was invalid as violative of Cal. Const., Art. II, §9(a)].)

In Rossi v. Brown (1995) 9 C.4th 688, 38 C.R.2d 363, 889 P.2d 557, the court, disapproving dicta in earlier decisions of the Court of Appeal, held that the constitutional prohibition against referenda on tax levies does not prohibit use of the initiative power to repeal taxes prospectively. Rossi involved an initiative measure that repealed a charter city's utility tax; both the trial court and the Court of Appeal held the measure invalid, reasoning that use of the initiative power in that manner was the functional equivalent of a prohibited referendum. Held, reversed.

(a) Cal. Const., Art. II, §9(a), expressly excludes tax measures from referendum, but there is no similar reservation on use of the initiative power. (9 C.4th 694, 697.) As the history of the initiative provision makes clear, the limitation on the referendum power does not extend to the use of the initiative to repeal taxes prospectively. (9 C.4th 699.)

(b) A referendum affects governmental operation differently than an initiative. When a referendum petition is qualified, the ordinance is suspended and does not become effective unless approved at the election. Therefore, if a tax measure were subject to referendum, the county's ability to adopt a balanced budget and raise funds for current operating expenses would be disrupted. (9 C.4th 702, 703.) An initiative prospectively repealing a tax measure, however, has no immediate impact on current budgetary operations and thus no potential for disrupting local government services. (9 C.4th 703, 704.)

(c) Dicta in Myers v. City Council of Pismo Beach (1966) 241 C.A.2d 237, 50 C.R. 402, and subsequent cases, to the effect that an initiative ordinance cannot be used as a backhanded referendum against a tax ordinance, are not sound. (9 C.4th 706, 707, 709.) Other cases, such as Carlson v. Cory, supra, have barred use of the local initiative power in a manner that interferes with the responsibility of the local legislative body for fiscal management. "None of those cases is comparable to this one, however, since none involved an initiative repeal of a tax ordinance that is prospective only, i.e., would not affect the current budget of the city or county." (9 C.4th 709.)

(d) "We agree with appellant, therefore, that the Court of Appeal erred in relying on cases in which an attempt was made to use the initiative to repeal tax ordinances of general law cities and those in which the proposed measure would affect the authority of the legislative body over fiscal management under a budget already adopted by that body. An initiative which repeals taxes prospectively, i.e., one in which the repeal does not become effective until a subsequent fiscal year, is not the 'functional equivalent' of a referendum. Our obligation to jealously guard the people's reserved right of initiative precludes the restriction on its exercise suggested by the Myers court and adopted here by the Court of Appeal." (9 C.4th 710, 711.) (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1419 [Rossi].)

Cal. Const., Art. XIII C, §3, adopted effective November 6, 1996, as part of Proposition 218 (see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §§141, 142), reinforces Rossi. The section provides that the initiative power may be used to affect (including reducing or repealing) local taxes, assessments, fees, and charges of all local governments. Neither the Legislature nor a local government charter may impose a signature requirement higher than that applicable to statewide statutory initiatives. However, Govt.C. 5854, added in 1997, stipulates that Cal. Const., Art. XIII C, §3 is not to be construed to mean that any owner of a municipal security, purchased before or after November 6, 1996, "assumes the risk of, or in any way consents to, any action by initiative measure that constitutes an impairment of contractual rights" protected by U.S. Const., Art. I, §10.

In Santa Clara County Local Trans. Authority v. Guardino (1995) 11 C.4th 220, 45 C.R.2d 207, 902 P.2d 225, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §134, the court held that Govt.C. 53722 (9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §§131, 133 et seq.), which requires that special taxes imposed by local governments and districts be approved by two-thirds of the electorate, is constitutional. The voter approval requirement is not a referendum, but rather is a condition precedent to enactment of a proposed statute; hence, the statute does not violate the constitutional prohibition against subjecting tax statutes to a referendum or the constitutional declaration that a referendum needs only a simple majority to pass. (11 C.4th 239, 240.)

(2) Initiative Power To Repeal Taxes. Cal. Const., Art. XIII C, §3: See Bighorn-Desert View Water Agency v. Verjil (2006) 39 C.4th 205, 218, 46 C.R.3d 73, 138 P.3d 220 [under Cal. Const., Art. XIII C, §32, local voters may not impose voter approval requirement on future increases in water delivery charges by water agency].

b. Exceptions to Initiative and Referendum Powers.

2. Matters of Statewide Concern.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 160

[§ 160] Matters of Statewide Concern.

Local initiative and referendum powers may be exercised only with respect to municipal affairs. Matters of statewide concern, delegated to local governments by the Legislature, are not subject to the initiative or referendum at the local level. (See Voters for Responsible Retirement v. Board of Supervisors (1994) 8 C.4th 765, 776, 780, 35 C.R.2d 814, 884 P.2d 645 [under Govt.C. 25123(e), ordinance adopting memorandum of understanding between county and employees' association, adding certain employees to retirement plan, is not subject to referendum because it relates to statutory scheme regulating collective bargaining between public employers and employees, an area of statewide concern]; Alexander v. Mitchell (1953) 119 C.A.2d 816, 820, 260 P.2d 261 [proposed ordinance to require referendum or initiative on any city parking lot project was invalid attempt to abrogate city's power of eminent domain]; Mervynne v. Acker (1961) 189 C.A.2d 558, 562, 11 C.R. 340 [proposed measure to repeal parking meter ordinances; interference with traffic control, occupied by state law granting power over parking meters to city council]; Walker v. Salinas (1976) 56 C.A.3d 711, 717, 718, 128 C.R. 832 [ordinance adopted under Community Redevelopment Law involves state policy and is not subject to referendum]; Friends of Mt. Diablo v. Contra Costa (1977) 72 C.A.3d 1006, 1010, 139 C.R. 469 [referendum power does not extend to supervisors' resolution where subject is "of such statewide concern as to convert the local legislative body into an administrative agent of the state"]; San Francisco v. Patterson (1988) 202 C.A.3d 95, 100, 248 C.R. 290 [proposed initiative ordinance to restrict power of school district to lease or sell property was invalid because education is matter of statewide concern, school district is state agency, and Education Code explicitly regulates sale of property by district]; Burbank v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (2003) 113 C.A.4th 465, 479, 6 C.R.3d 367 [statute conferring authority on matters of airport expansion or relocation specifically and exclusively on city council made subject matter one of statewide concern, precluding initiative measure on subject]; Malibu v. California Coastal Com. (2004) 121 C.A.4th 989, 998, 18 C.R.3d 40 [local coastal program drawn up by Coastal Commission under statutory mandate when plaintiff city failed to act was not subject to referendum].)

In Norlund v. Thorpe (1973) 34 C.A.3d 672, 110 C.R. 246, the Napa City Council adopted a resolution approving annexation of 99 acres of uninhabited territory. A referendum petition was submitted, and the council refused to file it on the ground that annexation of territory by a city is a matter of "statewide concern." Held, mandamus granted to compel consideration of the petition. The authority to annex is granted by legislation, and the general subject is covered by statute; but a single annexation by a particular city is not a matter of statewide concern. (34 C.A.3d 674.) However, in Ferrini v. San Luis Obispo (1983) 150 C.A.3d 239, 247, 248, 197 C.R. 694, the court held that the Legislature, by subsequently repealing the provisions relied on in Norlund, indicated its intent to overrule Norlund as precedent and to occupy the field of annexation of unincorporated areas.

In Committee of Seven Thousand v. Superior Court (1988) 45 C.3d 491, 247 C.R. 362, 754 P.2d 708, a municipal initiative was proposed that would prohibit a city council in Orange County from imposing a new fee or tax to finance highway construction without first submitting the new fee or tax to a vote of the electorate. Initiative opponents filed a petition for mandamus in the superior court to bar the proposed initiative from the ballot, and the writ issued. Initiative proponents then filed a petition for mandamus in the Court of Appeal, seeking reinstatement of the initiative to the ballot, and this petition was denied. Held, judgment affirmed. Govt.C. 66484.3, which permits city councils in Orange County to impose development fees to fund construction of major thoroughfares, conflicts with the proposed initiative. The "Legislature intended that the authority thus delegated be exercised by the local legislative bodies specifically and exclusively, thereby precluding use of the initiative and referendum in this limited area." (45 C.3d 512.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

b. Exceptions to Initiative and Referendum Powers.

3. Administrative Action.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 161

[§ 161] Administrative Action.

(1) In General. The initiative and referendum are devised for legislative acts; executive or administrative action is generally free from the exercise of those powers. (See Housing Authority of Eureka v. Superior Court (1950) 35 C.2d 550, 557, 219 P.2d 457; Simpson v. Hite (1950) 36 C.2d 125, 129, 222 P.2d 225 [referendum; selection of site for court buildings]; San Diego v. Dunkl (2001) 86 C.A.4th 384, 402, 103 C.R.2d 269 [proposed initiative, which sought to administratively negate legislative purpose of earlier city ordinance adopted by voters to enable funding and construction of downtown ballpark and redevelopment project, was beyond power of voters to adopt]; Citizens for Jobs and the Economy v. Orange (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1311, 1333, 115 C.R.2d 90 [following Dunkl; where first initiative declared legislative policy regarding conversion of military air base to civilian use, which conversion had been delegated to county by state and federal governments, second initiative that added voter approval and hearing requirements to implementing decisions of Board of Supervisors impermissibly negated legislative purpose of first initiative and restricted Board's administrative discretion].) But local councils and boards normally perform both legislative and executive functions, and the distinction is difficult to state and apply. (See 42 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Initiative and Referendum §§8, 11, 12.)

In Hughes v. Lincoln (1965) 232 C.A.2d 741, 43 C.R. 306, the court, upholding an initiative, threw some light on "the vague, legislative-administrative dichotomy" (232 C.A.2d 744). Defendant city adopted a resolution directing fluoridation of its water supply, subject to approval of the State Board of Public Health pursuant to a former statute. Sufficient signatures were obtained for an initiative ordinance to prohibit the fluoridation, but the city council refused to call an election. Held, order granting mandamus to compel the election affirmed.

(a) Tests. (1) Acts declaring a public purpose and making provision for its accomplishment are legislative; acts to carry out legislative policies and purposes already declared by the legislative body are administrative. (232 C.A.2d 745.) (2) If the matter is of statewide concern, a local board acting as the state's agent to implement state policy acts administratively; if the matter is of local concern, the action is legislative even though the state law authorizes or limits it. (232 C.A.2d 745.)

(b) Application of tests. The operation of water systems is a valid exercise of local police power. The statutory regulation of local water treatment is designed solely to assure purity and potability, and the statutes do not take any position on the new controversial goal of medication of public water supplies for a therapeutic purpose. Hence, the local legislative body may decide either to adhere to traditional goals or to fluoridate, and its decision is essentially legislative. "Thus, in deciding whether or not to fluoridate, a city council acts as the legislative exponent of local policy, not as the administrative instrumentality of state policy. The scheme of state legislation does not affect the intrinsically legislative character of a decision for or against fluoridation of municipal water supplies." (232 C.A.2d 748.)

(2) Rezoning of Property. In Lincoln Property Co. No. 41 v. Law (1975) 45 C.A.3d 230, 119 C.R. 292, a city annexed property and zoned it; thereafter a developer proposed a plan for a tract and the city council approved it by resolution. Plaintiffs filed a referendum petition attacking the resolution. Held, the original zoning change was a legislative act that could have been subjected to a referendum, but the subsequent resolution approving a development plan was administrative only, and not subject to referendum. (45 C.A.3d 234.)

In Southwest Diversified v. Brisbane (1991) 229 C.A.3d 1548, 1557, 280 C.R. 869, the court, citing Arnel Dev. Co. v. Costa Mesa (1980) 28 C.3d 511, 169 C.R. 904, 620 P.2d 565, infra, §1028, explained that zoning is generally regarded as a legislative act. However, in this case, "at the time the parcel was originally zoned, the legislative body treated the boundaries as provisional and subject to future adjustment according to prescribed standards and procedures. Moreover, the considerations that prompted the Arnel court to adopt a categorical rule are not present in the instant case. The court was concerned that a rule treating minor zoning actions as administrative would call for vague distinctions and deprive municipal governments of a 'test which distinguishes legislative from adjudicative acts with clarity and reasonable certainty.' ... Here, we perceive no difficulty in confining our holding to the unique circumstances of the case. By construing the revision of a zoning boundary pursuant to a previously adopted procedure as administrative action, we cast no doubt on the classification of zoning actions generally as legislative in nature." (229 C.A.3d 1558.) (See 29 San Diego L. Rev. 561.)

(3) Other Examples. In Merriman v. Board of Supervisors (1983) 138 C.A.3d 889, 188 C.R. 343, defendant board enacted an ordinance that made violations of the county building code punishable as infractions. Plaintiffs were proponents of a referendum petition seeking repeal of the ordinance or its submission to the voters. The board took no action, and petitioners sought mandamus, which the lower court denied on the theory that the challenged ordinance was administrative. Held, judgment denying writ reversed. The board acted under its police power in a legislative capacity; i.e., it created ways and means of accomplishing the policy underlying the State Housing Law. (138 C.A.3d 893.)

Many other cases deal with the legislative/administrative problem. (See Pacific Rock & Gravel Co. v. Upland (1967) 67 C.2d 666, 669, 63 C.R. 572, 433 P.2d 476 [referendum of city's adoption of ordinance granting railroad spur track franchise upheld]; O'Loane v. O'Rourke (1965) 231 C.A.2d 774, 783, 42 C.R. 283 [referendum of city's adoption of resolution for general zoning plan upheld]; Duran v. Cassidy (1972) 28 C.A.3d 574, 581, 104 C.R. 793 [initiative to prohibit golf course in existing public park adjacent to airport upheld]; Fishman v. Palo Alto (1978) 86 C.A.3d 506, 509, 150 C.R. 326 [resolution modifying plans regarding parking lot was administrative act; following Lincoln Property]; Board of Education v. Superior Court (1979) 93 C.A.3d 578, 582, 155 C.R. 839 [no referendum on closing high school]; W.W. Dean & Associates v. South San Francisco (1987) 190 C.A.3d 1368, 1376, 1377, 236 C.R. 11 [no referendum on amendment of development plan in accordance with Endangered Species Act].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

2. Initiative and Referendum.

b. Exceptions to Initiative and Referendum Powers.

4. Legislature's Constitutional Power Over Internal Affairs.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 162

[§ 162] Legislature's Constitutional Power Over Internal Affairs.

The constitutionality of the Legislative Reform Act of 1983, an initiative measure adopted in 1984, was considered in People's Advocate v. Superior Court (1986) 181 C.A.3d 316, 226 C.R. 640. The Act (1) regulated the selection by the Legislature of its officers, the appointments and powers of legislative committees, and the adoption by the Legislature of rules for its proceedings; and (2) limited the amount of money the Legislature could appropriate for its operations. Held, these provisions were unconstitutional.

(a) "The powers challenged by the Act are deeply rooted in constitutional soil. Since the inception of our state the power of a legislative body to govern its own internal workings has been viewed as essential to its functioning except as it may have been expressly constrained by the California Constitution." (181 C.A.3d 322.) This power is an integral part of the parliamentary common law implicit in the structure of our Constitution, and is explicitly recognized in Cal. Const., Article IV, §§7 and 11. (181 C.A.3d 322, 323.) First added almost 150 years ago, these provisions "are part of a constitutional structure of government by which the people have made statutes--even initiative statutes--subordinate to the Constitution." (181 C.A.3d 322.)

(b) Cal. Const., Art. IV, §§7(a) and 11, grant the Legislature power to adopt rules or resolutions for the selection of its officers and committees and the conduct of its proceedings. (181 C.A.3d 324.) The argument that statutes, including those adopted by initiative, may supersede these rules and resolutions, "presupposes that these subject matters are among those which may be regulated by statute. Therein lies the fallacy." (181 C.A.3d 325.) The power to adopt laws, as expressed in statutes, is shared by the Legislature, the Governor, and the electorate. The power to adopt rules governing the internal proceedings of the Legislature is "the exclusive prerogative of '[e]ach house' of the Legislature or the combined houses." The initiative power "does not extend to these matters." (181 C.A.3d 325.)

(c) The Legislature's practice of adopting statutes regulating its internal proceedings is of no significance. The substantive power exercised, not the form or label chosen, governs; and the adoption of a statute relating to internal proceedings is still an exercise of the rulemaking power under Cal. Const., Art. IV, §§7 and 11. (181 C.A.3d 326, 327.)

(d) The limitation on the amount of money that the Legislature may appropriate for its operations is invalid for other reasons. (1) It attempts "to govern the content of future legislation." (181 C.A.3d 328.) (2) It violates Cal. Const., Art. IV, §12, under which the Governor submits a budget bill and the Legislature, by adoption of the budget bill or by special measures, appropriates money for the support of state government. (181 C.A.3d 328, 329.) (See Watson v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1059, 1069, 1070, 266 C.R. 408 [initiative measure prohibiting legislators from sending mass mailings at public expense did not infringe on Legislature's power over its internal affairs]; on severability of invalid provisions from provisions that are not challenged, see supra, §106.)

5. Measure Identifying Person or Corporation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 163

[§ 163] Measure Identifying Person or Corporation.

"No amendment to the Constitution, and no statute proposed to the electors by the Legislature or by initiative, that names any individual to hold any office, or names or identifies any private corporation to perform any function or to have any power or duty, may be submitted to the electors or have any effect." (Cal. Const., Art. II, §12.)

In Calfarm Ins. Co. v. Deukmejian (1989) 48 C.3d 805, 258 C.R. 161, 771 P.2d 1247, infra, §1083, the court held that Ins.C. 1861.10(c), part of Proposition 103, violated this Article. The challenged provision reads as follows:

"(1) The commissioner shall require every insurer to enclose notices in every policy or renewal premium bill informing policyholders of the opportunity to join an independent, non-profit corporation which shall advocate the interests of insurance consumers in any forum. This organization shall be established by an interim board of public members designated by the commissioner and operated by individuals who are democratically elected from its membership. The corporation shall proportionately reimburse insurers for any additional costs incurred by insertion of the enclosure, except no postage shall be charged for any enclosure weighing less than 1/3 of an ounce. (2) The commissioner shall by regulation determine the contents of the enclosures and other procedures necessary for implementation of this provision. The legislature shall make no appropriation for this subdivision."

(a) "The consumer-advocacy provision 'identifies' a particular corporation--that one which is to be formed by an interim board of public members appointed by the Insurance Commissioner. ... [T]hat corporation is identified to perform a 'function,' to 'advocate the interests of insurance consumers in any forum.' ... We see no escape from the clear and explicit language of the state Constitution." (48 C.3d 832.)

(b) The contention that the proposed consumer-advocacy corporation would be a "nonprofit public benefit corporation," and not a "private" corporation within the meaning of Article II, §12 is unsound. "We reject the contention that the inclusion of nonprofit corporations is inconsistent with the purpose of the constitutional prohibition. It may be less likely that promoters seeking self-aggrandizement would employ a nonprofit corporation as a vehicle, but we still perceive a danger that supporters of a particular nonprofit organization might seek to obtain through the initiative some special privilege not afforded other organizations. One might even perceive this danger in the present case. There are several consumer advocacy corporations, and others could be formed. But Proposition 103 gives a kind of state imprimatur to one particular corporation--the one formed" under Ins.C. 1861.10(c)--and gives that organization alone the benefit of a low-cost or free statewide mailing to solicit memberships." (48 C.3d 834.)

(c) The contention that the constitutional provision is inapplicable because it was intended only to prevent a private person or corporation from being granted a constitutional right to a public office or function is likewise unsound. "We find no such limiting language in the constitutional provision itself. Moreover, the function to be performed by the consumer-advocacy corporation is in a sense a public function, that of representing consumers in ratemaking proceedings before the Insurance Commissioner, thereby assuring that the commissioner's decisions are based upon a truly adversary process in which the interests of both insurers and consumer are presented." (48 C.3d 835.)

Application of Cal. Const., Art. II, §12, is not limited to statewide initiatives. (See Pala Band of Mission Indians v. Board of Supervisors (1997) 54 C.A.4th 565, 580, 63 C.R.2d 148, infra, §1028; Citizens for Responsible Government v. Albany (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1199, 1229, 66 C.R. 2d 102 [distinguishing Pala; required election to approve development agreements for waterfront area was not initiative measure and was not subject to prohibition of Cal. Const., Art. II, §12].)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

3. Legislative Investigations.

a. Congressional Investigating Committees.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 164

[§ 164] Congressional Investigating Committees.

A limited but important entry by the Legislature into the field of judicial or executive power is the legislative committee, which may hold hearings, summon witnesses, punish for contempt, etc., in the course of an investigation in aid of legislation. Congressional committees have received extensive consideration by the courts in cases dealing with the scope of inquiry, procedure, contempt, and constitutional guarantees protecting witnesses. (See McGrain v. Daugherty (1927) 273 U.S. 135, 47 S.Ct. 319, 71 L.Ed. 580; United States v. Rumely (1953) 345 U.S. 41, 73 S.Ct. 543, 97 L.Ed. 770 [House Committee on Lobbying Activities]; Quinn v. United States (1955) 349 U.S. 155, 75 S.Ct. 668, 99 L.Ed. 964 [House Committee on Un-American Activities]; Wilkinson v. United States (1961) 365 U.S. 399, 81 S.Ct. 567, 5 L.Ed.2d 633; Braden v. United States (1961) 365 U.S. 431, 81 S.Ct. 584, 5 L.Ed.2d 653; Hutcheson v. United States (1962) 369 U.S. 599, 82 S.Ct. 1005, 8 L.Ed.2d 137; Gojack v. United States (1966) 384 U.S. 702, 86 S.Ct. 1689, 16 L.Ed.2d 870; 1 Rotunda, §8.1 et seq.; 51 Cal. L. Rev. 267, 296, 311; 70 Harv. L. Rev. 671 [comprehensive note]; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 100; 40 So. Cal. L. Rev. 189 [historical study]; on self-incrimination privilege, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §502.)

Barenblatt v. United States (1959) 360 U.S. 109, 79 S.Ct. 1081, 3 L.Ed.2d 1115, summarizes the basic principles: "The power of inquiry has been employed by Congress throughout our history, over the whole range of national interests concerning which Congress might legislate or decide upon due investigation not to legislate; it has similarly been utilized in determining what to appropriate from the national purse, or whether to appropriate. The scope of the power of inquiry, in short, is as penetrating and far-reaching as the potential power to enact and appropriate under the Constitution." (79 S.Ct. 1085, 3 L.Ed.2d 1120.)

But the power is not unlimited. "Since Congress may only investigate into those areas in which it may potentially legislate or appropriate, it cannot inquire into matters which are within the exclusive province of one or the other branch of the Government. Lacking the judicial power given to the Judiciary, it cannot inquire into matters that are exclusively the concern of the Judiciary. Neither can it supplant the Executive in what exclusively belongs to the Executive. And the Congress, in common with all branches of the Government, must exercise its powers subject to the limitations placed by the Constitution on governmental action, more particularly in the context of this case the relevant limitations of the Bill of Rights." (79 S.Ct. 1085, 3 L.Ed.2d 1120.)

The limitations were more pointedly declared in Watkins v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 178, 77 S.Ct. 1173, 1 L.Ed.2d 1273. "There is no general authority to expose the private affairs of individuals without justification in terms of the functions of the Congress. ... Nor is the Congress a law enforcement or trial agency. These are functions of the executive and judicial departments of government. No inquiry is an end in itself; it must be related to and in furtherance of a legitimate task of the Congress. Investigations conducted solely for the personal aggrandizement of the investigators or to 'punish' those investigated are indefensible." (77 S.Ct. 1179, 1 L.Ed.2d 1284.)

[§ 165] State and Municipal Investigating Committees.

(1) State Committees. Committees of the California Legislature exercise powers similar to those of federal legislative committees (supra, §164). (See In re Battelle (1929) 207 C. 227, 240, 277 P. 725; 18 Cal. L. Rev. 289; 39 Cal. L. (2) Municipal Committees. In Connecticut Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (2000) 23 C.4th 807, 98 C.R.2d 221, 3 P.3d 868, plaintiff insurers challenged subpoenas issued by a city council as part of its investigation into contamination of the city's water wells and potential methods to finance abatement. Plaintiffs claimed that the subpoenas were issued solely in the city's interests in future litigation, and that the city's asserted legislative interests were a sham. Held, the subpoenas were valid. "[W]hen a city's issuance of a subpoena is, in itself, a proper exercise of legislative power, the potential that the city also may use information gained by that subpoena in future litigation does not render the subpoena invalid." (23 C.4th 816.) Courts should not second-guess a city's legislative motive, and here, there was no legitimate basis on which to conclude that the city's action failed "to advance the legitimate legislative functions of appropriation and lawmaking." (23 C.4th 816.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

4. Delegation of Legislative Power.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 166

[§ 166] In General.

The rule against delegation of legislative power, like the companion rule that judicial power cannot be delegated (supra, §145), has yielded to the growing necessity for delegation to boards and officers of a large measure of discretionary power that is ordinarily considered legislative in character. (See infra, §167 et seq.) Nevertheless, delegation of an uncontrolled discretion is invalid; i.e., where the statute fails to set forth sufficiently definite standards, it is void. This was the result reached in the celebrated decision that invalidated the "codes of fair competition" established by the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933. (A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States (1935) 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 848, 79 L.Ed. 1570, 1586; see Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (1935) 293 U.S. 388, 55 S.Ct. 241, 79 L.Ed. 446.) (See 23 Cal. L. Rev. 435; 24 Cal. L. Rev. 184; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 863, 1055, 1263; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 751 [review of Schoenbrod, Power Without Responsibility: How Congress Abuses the People Through Delegation]; 16 Hastings Const. L. Rev. 312; 16 Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §332 et seq.)

California cases declare and apply the same test. (See People's Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. State Franchise Tax Bd. (1952) 110 C.A.2d 696, 700, 243 P.2d 902 [absolute discretion of Savings & Loan Commissioner to determine amount deductible from taxes attributable to withdrawable shares]; State Bd. of Dry Cleaners v. Thrift-D-Lux Cleaners (1953) 40 C.2d 436, 448, 254 P.2d 29 [price-fixing discretion of members of industry being regulated]; Allen v. California Bd. of Barber Examiners (1972) 25 C.A.3d 1014, 1017, 102 C.R. 368 [same]; Bayside Timber Co. v. Board of Supervisors of San Mateo (1971) 20 C.A.3d 1, 10, 97 C.R. 431 [discretion of timber owners and operators to formulate forest practice rules for protection of public interest in lands and wildlife].)

The rule also precludes delegation of legislative powers of a city. (Kugler v. Yocum (1968) 69 C.2d 371, 375, 71 C.R. 687, 445 P.2d 303, infra, §169, citing the text; see 58 Cal. L. Rev. 293.) In Bagley v. Manhattan Beach (1976) 18 C.3d 22, 132 C.R. 668, 553 P.2d 1140, petitioners sought to place an initiative measure on the ballot in a city election, which provided for binding arbitration in disputes between the city and the firemen's employee organization. Held, the proposed measure was invalid; the clear legislative intent, evidenced by Govt.C. 36506 and legislative rejection of numerous attempts to enact compulsory arbitration statutes in the area of public employee salaries, is that the city council must fix that compensation and cannot delegate the power to an arbitrator. (18 C.3d 26.) (See San Francisco Fire Fighters v. San Francisco (1977) 68 C.A.3d 896, 903, 137 C.R. 607 [following Bagley reasoning: city's charter did not authorize arbitration of fire department's rules and regulations]; Alameda County Land Use Assn. v. Hayward (1995) 38 C.A.4th 1716, 1724, 45 C.R.2d 752 [memorandum of understanding between county and two cities, under which they agreed that future general plan amendments regarding large parcel of land would be effective only if adopted by all three jurisdictions, was improper delegation of legislative powers].)

However, an important distinction is made in legislative authorization of decisionmaking authority by industrial or professional associations. There is no invalid delegation of legislative power unless the statute empowers the private industry to initiate or enact rules having legal force. (King v. Meese (1987) 43 C.3d 1217, 1234, 240 C.R. 829, 743 P.2d 859; see International Assn. of Plumbing & Mechanical Officials v. California Bldg. Standards Com. (1997) 55 C.A.4th 245, 255, 64 C.R.2d 129 [statute would not be construed to give private entity power to dictate applicable building code as this would be unlawful delegation of state's lawmaking authority].) In King, individual plaintiffs sought to restrain enforcement of the Financial Responsibility Act (see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §409), which makes it an infraction for a motorist stopped for a moving violation to fail to provide proof of financial responsibility. Plaintiffs contended that the Legislature unconstitutionally delegated its authority to the private insurance industry by requiring drivers to carry insurance, by allowing insurers to decide who will or will not be able to obtain private insurance and at what rates, and by failing to provide adequate guidelines to insurers in making their decisions.

The court said: "A statute that merely permits a private seller to decide to whom to sell, and at what price, is not unconstitutional." (43 C.3d 1234.) The opinion approved Wilkinson v. Madera Community Hosp. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 436, 192 C.R. 593, infra, §169, and disapproved Rosner v. Peninsula Hosp. Dist. (1964) 224 C.A.2d 115, 36 C.R. 332.

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

4. Delegation of Legislative Power.

b. Express Standards.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 167

[§ 167] Express Standards.

Where the Legislature lays down a sufficiently clear test or standard, the discretion to carry out the legislative purposes by rules and regulations may be given to a board or officer.

The theory was clearly expounded in the early case of J.W. Hampton, Jr. & Co. v. United States (1928) 276 U.S. 394, 48 S.Ct. 348, 72 L.Ed. 624. The "flexible tariff" act authorized the President to investigate the differences in cost of production of foreign and domestic articles in competition, and to increase or lower duties, within a range of 50% of the rates specified in the act, so as to equalize the conditions of foreign and domestic producers. It was further provided that he should be assisted by the Tariff Commission, that new rates should not be proclaimed until after a public hearing, and that changes should be terminated when differences no longer existed. Held, the delegation was proper; Congress had described its policy and plan, and authorized the executive branch to work out the difficult and complicated details so as to carry out the plan in conformity with the prescribed standard.

Yakus v. United States (1944) 321 U.S. 414, 64 S.Ct. 660, 88 L.Ed. 834, upheld the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942. The Court declared that the Constitution "does not require that Congress find for itself every fact upon which it desires to base legislative action," and that it is irrelevant that Congress itself might have prescribed maximum prices, for it "is not confined to that method of executing its policy which involves the least possible delegation of discretion to administrative officers." (64 S.Ct. 667, 668, 88 L.Ed. 848, 849.)

Another strong statement of the policy supporting general delegations was made in American Power & Light Co. v. Securities & Exchange Com. (1946) 329 U.S. 90, 67 S.Ct. 133, 91 L.Ed. 103. The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 was directed at the evil of pyramided corporate structures. The statute provided that the Securities & Exchange Commission should act so as to ensure that the corporate structure or continued existence of any company in a holding company system does not "unduly or unnecessarily complicate the structure" or "unfairly or inequitably distribute voting power among security holders." Held, there was no unconstitutional delegation. (a) Even considered alone, the quoted language has some meaning to those familiar with corporate realities. (b) More definite meaning, however, is given by the background of the Act, including the evils disclosed by the congressional investigations, and by the general policy declarations and regulations set forth elsewhere in the statute. (c) Nor is it a ground of constitutional objection that the Commission does not formulate detailed rules of thumb but proceeds to apply the legislative standards "by the more flexible case-by-case method." It is "constitutionally sufficient if Congress clearly delineates the general policy, the public agency which is to apply it, and the boundaries of this delegated authority. Private rights are protected by access to the courts to test the application of the policy in the light of these legislative declarations." (67 S.Ct. 142, 91 L.Ed. 116.)

Mistretta v. United States (1989) 488 U.S. 361, 109 S.Ct. 647, 102 L.Ed.2d 714, supra, §140, upheld the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984. The Act created a federal Sentencing Commission that adopted Sentencing Guidelines specifying a range of determinate sentences for all federal offenses.

(a) Except for two statutes invalidated in 1935, the Court has always upheld laws challenged on delegation grounds. (109 S.Ct. 655, 102 L.Ed.2d 731.) Here, Congress specified the goals and purposes of sentencing, prescribed the guidelines system as the specific tool to be used, directed the Commission to consider seven factors related to the offense and 11 related to the offender in formulating the guidelines, and provided even more detailed guidance for certain categories of offenses and offenders. (109 S.Ct. 655, 656, 657, 102 L.Ed.2d 732, 733.) "In other words, although Congress granted the Commission substantial discretion in formulating guidelines, in actuality it legislated a full hierarchy of punishment--from near maximum imprisonment, to substantial imprisonment, to some imprisonment, to alternatives--and stipulated the most important offense and offender characteristics to place defendants within these categories." (109 S.Ct. 657, 102 L.Ed.2d 734.)

(b) Although the statute grants the Commission significant discretion and requires it to exercise its judgment in classifying crimes and criminals, that delegation is permissible. "Developing proportionate penalties for hundreds of different crimes by a virtually limitless array of offenders is precisely the sort of intricate, labor-intensive task for which delegation to an expert body is especially appropriate." (109 S.Ct. 658, 102 L.Ed.2d 735.)

One justice dissented, arguing that, although Congress provided sufficient standards to guide the Commission, the statute was nevertheless an invalid delegation because the Commission's rulemaking function was purely legislative. (109 S.Ct. 675, 102 L.Ed.2d 756.) (See 103 Harv. L. Rev. 279.)

Other decisions, both federal and state, almost invariably uphold the delegation. (See United States v. Grimaud (1911) 220 U.S. 506, 31 S.Ct. 480, 55 L.Ed. 563; Lichter v. United States (1948) 334 U.S. 742, 68 S.Ct. 1294, 1311, 92 L.Ed. 1694, 1720 [delegation of power under Renegotiation Act to determine "excess profits" to be repaid to the government]; Touby v. United States (1991) 500 U.S. 160, 111 S.Ct. 1752, 114 L.Ed.2d 219 [federal Act authorizing Attorney General to add or remove controlled substances from statutory schedules did not violate nondelegation doctrine]; Bank of Italy v. Johnson (1926) 200 C. 1, 14, 251 P. 784; Wotton v. Bush (1953) 41 C.2d 460, 468, 261 P.2d 256; Duskin v. State Bd. of Dry Cleaners (1962) 58 C.2d 155, 160, 23 C.R. 404, 373 P.2d 468 [standard "need be sufficiently definite only to provide directives of conduct for the administrative body in exercising its delegated administrative or regulatory powers"].)

A far greater delegation to the President is permitted in foreign affairs; e.g., delegation of power to the President to declare an embargo. (United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. (1936) 299 U.S. 304, 57 S.Ct. 216, 225, 81 L.Ed. 255, 267; see infra, §1337.)

C. Legislative Power.

4. Delegation of Legislative Power.

c. Implied Standards.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 168

[§ 168] Implied Standards.

Even where the legislative measure contains no express standards, the courts will sometimes imply them; e.g., an ordinance conferring apparently uncontrolled discretion on an officer or board to grant or deny a permit or license will be construed as authorizing only a legal discretion. (See Roussey v. Burlingame (1950) 100 C.A.2d 321, 324, 223 P.2d 517 [ordinance giving city council power to rule on application for change of boundary lines of lot]; Davis v. Superior Court (1959) 175 C.A.2d 8, 19, 345 P.2d 513 [P.C. 4570, authorizing prison warden to restrict communications to and from prisoner, calls for reasonable discretion in administration of prison].)

This is particularly true where a potentially dangerous or highly regulated business is involved, as pointed out by In re Petersen (1958) 51 C.2d 177, 331 P.2d 24, infra, §715. The San Francisco Chief of Police was authorized by ordinance to grant exclusive taxi stands on the public streets, and gave all stands at major hotels and stores to Yellow Cab Co. In upholding the ordinance, the court invoked the presumption that the agency will duly perform its public duty. "In the present case it is clear that the purpose of controlling taxicab stands by issuance of permits is to make satisfactory and orderly taxicab service readily available to the public without unnecessary obstruction of traffic. This purpose supplies standards which the chief of police must observe in granting or denying the permits. It is difficult to see how, as a practical matter, any additional standards could be set forth which would promote the objective of the ordinance, and nothing would be accomplished by requiring that the standards which are implied must be made express." (51 C.2d 185.) (See critical dissent, 51 C.2d 186; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 590; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 448.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

4. Delegation of Legislative Power.

d. Adequate Safeguards Doctrine.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 169

[§ 169] Adequate Safeguards Doctrine.

"The need is usually not for standards but for safeguards . . . [T]he most perceptive courts are motivated much more by the degree of protection against arbitrariness than by the doctrine about standards." (Kugler v. Yocum (1968) 69 C.2d 371, 381, 71 C.R. 687, 445 P.2d 303.) Thus, standards are merely one method of assuring against unlawful delegation of power. (69 C.2d 381, footnote 8.)

In Kugler, a proposed initiative measure for an ordinance of the city of Alhambra provided that salaries of firemen should be fixed in accordance with those of Los Angeles county firemen. The city council refused to submit it to the electorate on the ground that it would limit future exercise of power by the council without charter amendment. (See dissent, 69 C.2d 384, supporting this view.) The trial judge granted mandamus to compel adoption of the ordinance or an election. Held, affirmed.

(a) Safeguards obviate need for standards. The purpose of the nondelegation doctrine is to assure that truly fundamental issues will be resolved by the Legislature and that the grant of authority is accompanied by safeguards adequate to prevent its abuse. (69 C.2d 376.) "This doctrine rests upon the premise that the legislative body must itself effectively resolve the truly fundamental issues. It cannot escape responsibility by explicitly delegating that function to others or by failing to establish an effective mechanism to assure the proper implementation of its policy decisions." (69 C.2d 376.)

(b) Application of the doctrine: Fundamental issue resolved. The ordinance resolves the "fundamental issue"--the policy that Alhambra wages for firemen must be on a parity with Los Angeles. The policy may be based on the belief that the city could not recruit them at lesser rates than in the adjoining county, or the fact that Los Angeles possesses superior ability to canvass comparable wages. Implementation of that policy, by filling in the facts and executing it, is not an exercise of legislative power. (69 C.2d 377.) Analogies may be found in the formulae, recognized as lawful, that tie adjustments in compensation for employees to future events such as the cost of living or average earnings or prevailing wages of a comparable occupation. The fact that a third party, whether private or governmental, performs some role in implementation of an established legislative scheme, is not an objection. (69 C.2d 379.)

(c) Application of the doctrine: Safeguards provided. The safeguards are economic. Los Angeles is no more anxious to pay exorbitant compensation than Alhambra, and competitive economic forces and bargaining power will tend to settle wages at a realistic level. (69 C.2d 382.)

(d) Conclusion. "Doctrinaire legal concepts should not be invoked to impede the reasonable exercise of legislative power properly designed to frustrate abuse. Only in the event of a total abdication of that power, through failure either to render basic policy decisions or to assure that they are implemented as made, will this court intrude on legislative enactment because it is an 'unlawful delegation,' and then only to preserve the representative character of the process of reaching legislative decision." (69 C.2d 384.)

In Wilkinson v. Madera Community Hosp. (1983) 144 C.A.3d 436, 192 C.R. 593, defendant community hospital refused to reappoint plaintiff doctor to the medical staff because he failed to maintain malpractice insurance with a "recognized insurance company" as required by defendant's rules. Plaintiff challenged the constitutionality of Health & Saf.C. 1319, authorizing a health facility to require professional liability insurance as a condition to being on the medical staff. Held, the statute is valid. Once the Legislature has established the law, it may delegate the authority to administer or apply it to governmental or private entities, provided that the delegation is accompanied by safeguards against arbitrary action. (144 C.A.3d 442, citing Kugler.) Health & Saf.C. 1319 may be read as containing the implied safeguard that hospitals may only impose reasonable insurance requirements, i.e., those that would guarantee that the hospital would be protected in the event the doctor was guilty of malpractice. (144 C.A.3d 444.)

Most delegations include adequate safeguards. (See State Bd. of Education v. Honig (1993) 13 C.A.4th 720, 751, 16 C.R.2d 727; Wilson v. State Bd. of Education (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1125, 1147, 89 C.R.2d 745 [following Honig; Charter Schools Act, Educ.C. 47600 et seq., does not offend nondelegation doctrine because it includes fixed standards and limits to safeguard chartering authority's decisionmaking process]; People v. Sun Pac. Farming Co. (2000) 77 C.A.4th 619, 634, 92 C.R.2d 115 [Pest Control Law provides adequate standards to guide citrus pest control districts in control and eradication of citrus pests]; Alexander v. State Personnel Bd. (2000) 80 C.A.4th 526, 538, 95 C.R.2d 324 [State Personnel Board's statutory authorization to conduct demonstration projects that required waiver of various provisions of Civil Service Act did not constitute improper delegation of power where adequate safeguards provided check on Board's power and projects were of limited duration].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Adequate safeguards: See Samples v. Brown (2007) 146 C.A.4th 787, 804, 809, 53 C.R.3d 216 [statutes requiring impoundment of vehicle driven by unlicensed driver or involved in speed contest provided sufficient guidance for implementation of legislative policy, including length of impoundment and early release].

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

C. Legislative Power.

5. Legislative Veto.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 170

[§ 170] Legislative Veto.

The legislative veto is a statutory provision permitting one or both Houses of Congress or its committees to annul by resolution an action or rule of the executive branch or an administrative agency. In Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chadha (1983) 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317, the Court held that the legislative veto provision in the Immigration and Nationality Act, invoked by one House of Congress to nullify an Attorney General's order suspending the deportation of a deportable alien, was unconstitutional.

"Since it is clear that the action by the House ... was not within any of the express constitutional exceptions authorizing one House to act alone, and equally clear that it was an exercise of legislative power, that action was subject to the standards prescribed by Art. I. The bicameral requirement, the Presentment Clauses, the President's veto, and Congress' power to override a veto were intended to erect enduring checks on each Branch and to protect the people from the improvident exercise of power by mandating certain prescribed steps. To preserve those checks, and maintain the separation of powers, the carefully defined limits on the power of each Branch must not be eroded. To accomplish what has been attempted by one House of Congress in this case requires action in conformity with the express procedures of the Constitution's prescription for legislative action: passage by a majority of both Houses and presentment to the President." (104 S.Ct. 2787, 77 L.Ed.2d 348, 349.) (For comment on the effect of this decision on congressional statutes containing legislative veto provisions, see 2 Rotunda, §10.8; 1 Tribe, §4-4; 21 Cal. Western L. Rev. 174; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 185; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 697.)

Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise (1991) 501 U.S. 252, 111 S.Ct. 2298, 115 L.Ed.2d 236, involved a Congressional Act authorizing transfer of operating control of two Washington, D.C., airports from the Federal Government to the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority (MWAA). The transfer was conditioned on creation by MWAA of a "Board of Review" composed of nine members of Congress vested with veto powers over decisions of MWAA's Board of Directors. Held, the condition violated the constitutional principle of separation of powers.

(a) "If the power is executive, the Constitution does not permit an agent of Congress to exercise it. If the power is legislative, Congress must exercise it in conformity with the bicameralism and presentment requirements of Art. I, §7." (111 S.Ct. 2312, 115 L.Ed.2d 259.)

(b) The statutory scheme "provides a blueprint for extensive expansion of the legislative power beyond its constitutionally-confined role. Given the scope of the federal power to dispense benefits to the States in a variety of forms and subject to a host of statutory conditions, Congress could, if this Board of Review were valid, use similar expedients to enable its Members or its agents to retain control, outside the ordinary legislative process, of the activities of state grant recipients charged with executing virtually every aspect of national policy." (111 S.Ct. 2312, 115 L.Ed.2d 259.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 206.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

D. Executive Power.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 171

[§ 171] In General.

Although an occasional decision deals with delegation of executive power (see Parker v. Riley (1941) 18 C.2d 83, 113 P.2d 873, supra, §138), the chief problems relate to the scope of the power. (See 1 Rotunda, §§6.1 et seq., 7.1 et seq.; 1 Tribe, §4-1 et seq.; 74 Harv. L. Rev. 684 [judicial review of administrative processes in which the President participates]; 1 Hastings Const. L. Q. 21 [The Executive Power in State and Federal Constitutions]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 865 [presidential defiance of "unconstitutional" laws]; 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 589 [challenging executive orders]; 34 McGeorge L. Rev. 65 [White House nondisclosure regarding Enron, and shaping of national energy policy]; on presidential pardoning power, see Schick v. Reed (1974) 419 U.S. 256, 95 S.Ct. 379, 42 L.Ed.2d 430, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §663; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 59; 2 Pepperdine L. Rev. 353 [pardon of Richard Nixon]; on executive privilege, see United States v. Nixon (1974) 418 U.S. 683, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §303.)

The scope of executive power often depends on the particular subject involved:

(1) Foreign Affairs. The President is primarily responsible for the conduct of foreign affairs, and presidential power is generally considered at its greatest in that area. (See 1 Rotunda, §6.1; 68 Cal. L. Rev. 1186; 9 Hastings Const. L. Q. 719; 17 Hastings Const. L. Q. 609 [executive power to implement antiterrorism programs]; 183 A.L.R. Fed 57 [International Emergency Economic Powers Act]; on federal power in foreign affairs, see infra, §1337 et seq.; on President's power to make treaties, see infra, §1338 et seq.)

In Dames & Moore v. Regan (1981) 453 U.S. 654, 101 S.Ct. 2972, 69 L.Ed.2d 918, the Court upheld the power of the President by executive orders to nullify attachments and liens on Iranian assets in the U.S. to give effect to an Executive Agreement between the U.S. and Iran. Crucial to the Court's decision "is the conclusion that Congress has implicitly approved the practice of claims settlement by executive agreement." (101 S.Ct. 2987, 69 L.Ed.2d 940.) The Court made it clear that it did not recognize a plenary power of the President to settle claims, but declared that (a) the settlement here had been determined to be necessary to resolution of a major foreign policy dispute, and (b) Congress acquiesced in the President's action. (101 S.Ct. 2991, 69 L.Ed.2d 945.) (See 95 Harv. L. Rev. 191 [criticizing Dames & Moore]; 15 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 249; 29 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 977.)

(2) Emergency or Inherent Power. The question whether the President has inherent or emergency powers has been much debated. (See 1 Rotunda, §6.1; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1102 [International Emergency Economic Powers Act]; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1 [the "stewardship" theory of extraconstitutional executive power in domestic affairs]; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1453 [The National Emergency Dilemma: Balancing the Executive's Crisis Powers With the Need for Accountability]; 56 So. Cal. L. Rev. 863 [Controlling Inherent President Power: Providing a Framework for Judicial Review].)

Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer (1952) 343 U.S. 579, 72 S.Ct. 863, 96 L.Ed. 1153, held that the President had no constitutional power to seize private property (steel mills) to prevent a labor dispute from stopping production. The order, the Court said, directed that a presidential policy be executed in a manner prescribed by the President; and the power to adopt these policies was in Congress alone. "In the framework of our Constitution, the President's power to see that the laws are faithfully executed refutes the idea that he is to be a lawmaker. The Constitution limits his functions in the lawmaking process to the recommending of laws he thinks wise and the vetoing of laws he thinks bad." (72 S.Ct. 867, 96 L.Ed. 1167.) (See 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 373 [Youngstown Revisited].)

(3) Impoundment of Funds. The questions whether, or to what extent, the President may impound and refuse to spend funds appropriated by Congress, and whether Congress may restrict the President's power in this area, have likewise received a great deal of attention but no definitive answers. (See 1 Rotunda, §7.4; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1505; 22 Stanf. L. Rev. 1240.)

(4) State Budgetary Restrictions. In Carmel Valley Fire Protection Dist. v. California (2001) 25 C.4th 287, 105 C.R.2d 636, 20 P.3d 533, plaintiff fire districts sought reimbursement for the cost of providing protective gear for firefighters as mandated by state safety laws. Plaintiffs claimed that Govt.C. 17581 and budget language suspending both the equipment mandate and reimbursement for its performance violated California's separation of powers clause (Cal. Const., Art. III, §3) by invading the power of the executive branch to carry out its duties under Cal/OSHA. Held, there is no separation of powers violation.

Govt.C. 17581 and the budget items in question were properly enacted. (25 C.4th 306, distinguishing Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chadha (1983) 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317, supra, §170.) Their "enactment expressed a legislative determination to suspend a regulation and thereby curtail the authority of the executive in pursuit of the legitimate goal of allocating scarce resources." (25 C.4th 308.) The statute and budget acts "had only a narrow impact upon the Department of Industrial Relations' regulatory scheme and ability to enforce health and safety regulations." (25 C.4th 308.) Although the districts purchased the protective gear at their own expense, they have the right under Govt.C. 17581(b) to impose local fees to recoup their costs. (25 C.4th 308.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See 1 Rotunda 4th, §§6.1 et seq., 7.1 et seq.(1) Foreign Affairs. See 1 Rotunda 4th, §6.1.

(2) Emergency or Inherent Power. See 1 Rotunda 4th, §6.1; 54 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1703 [Youngstown].

Under the Emergency Services Act, the Governor has the power to declare a state of emergency in cases of extreme peril to life, property, or state resources. The Act grants the Governor broad powers to deal with emergencies, including suspending regulatory statutes, commandeering private property or personnel, and making expenditures from available funds. (See Govt.C. 8550 et seq.; California Correctional Peace Officers Assn. v. Schwarzenegger (2008) 163 C.A.4th 802, 808, 812, 820, 77 C.R.3d 844 [Governor did not exceed powers under Emergency Services Act in declaring emergency based on prison overcrowding and in directing department of corrections to contract with private prisons to house inmates out of state].)(3) Impoundment of Funds. See 1 Rotunda 4th, §7.4.

(4) State Budgetary Restrictions. Govt.C. 17581(b) was relettered as Govt.C. 17581(c) in 2007.

Witkin Summary of California Law

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

D. Executive Power.

2. Appointment Power.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 172

[§ 172] Appointment Power.

(1) In General. The federal Constitution gives the power of appointment to the President, subject to the consent of the Senate. (U.S. Const., Art. II, §2, cl. 2; see 2 Rotunda, §9.4; 28 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1139 [discussing Lani Guinier confirmation fight and suggesting reform of executive confirmation process]; 36 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 583 [symposium on appointment of federal judges]; on recess appointments, see 2 Rotunda, §§9.8, 9.9; 10 Stanf. L. Rev. 124.) The Appointments Clause further provides that "Congress may by Law vest the appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments." (U.S. Const., Art. II, §2, cl. 2.)

In Freytag v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue (1991) 501 U.S. 868, 111 S.Ct. 2631, 115 L.Ed.2d 764, Congress established the United States Tax Court, and authorized its chief judge to appoint special trial judges. Held, this grant of authority did not violate the Appointments Clause.

"The Tax Court's exclusively judicial role distinguishes it from other non-Article III tribunals that perform multiple functions and provides the limit on the diffusion of appointment power that the Constitution demands. Moreover, since the early 1800s, Congress regularly granted non-Article III territorial courts the authority to appoint their own clerks of court, who, as of at least 1839, were 'inferior officers' within the meaning of the Appointments Clause. ... Including Article I courts, such as the Tax Court, that exercise judicial power and perform exclusively judicial functions among the 'Courts of Law' does not significantly expand the universe of actors eligible to receive the appointment power." (111 S.Ct. 2645, 115 L.Ed.2d 788.) (See Ryder v. United States (1995) 515 U.S. 177, 115 S.Ct. 2031, 2034, 2036, 132 L.Ed.2d 136, 141, 144 [appointment of civilian judges on Coast Guard Court of Military Review was in violation of Appointments Clause]; Edmond v. United States (1997) 520 U.S. 651, 117 S. Ct. 1573, 1582, 137 L.Ed.2d 917, 932 [appointment of judges of Coast Guard Court of Criminal Appeals by Secretary of Transportation is in conformity with Appointments Clause because those judges are "inferior officers" within meaning of clause]; 26 Hastings Const. L. Q. 935 [appointment of Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights]; on judicially appointed special prosecutor, see infra, §175.)

(2) Power of Removal. It has been held that the President has the exclusive power to remove purely executive officers so appointed. (Myers v. United States (1926) 272 U.S. 52, 47 S.Ct. 21, 71 L.Ed. 160 [postmaster].) But officers exercising quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions with fixed terms of office, such as members of the Federal Trade Commission, cannot be removed by the President except for causes provided by statute. (Humphrey's Executor v. United States (1935) 295 U.S. 602, 55 S.Ct. 869, 79 L.Ed. 1611; see Wiener v. United States (1958) 357 U.S. 349, 78 S.Ct. 1275, 2 L.Ed.2d 1377 [no power to remove member of War Claims Commission]; 49 Harv. L. Rev. 330 [Humphrey's Executor]; 72 Harv. L. Rev. 164 [Wiener]; 9 So. Cal. L. Rev. 71 [Humphrey's Executor]; 2 Rotunda, §9.10.)

(3) State Constitution. The power of the Governor to fill a vacancy in a constitutional office is subject to confirmation by both houses of the Legislature. (Cal. Const., Art. V, §5(b); see Lungren v. Deukmejian (1988) 45 C.3d 727, 735, 248 C.R. 115, 755 P.2d 299.)

The powers of California's Lieutenant Governor were defined in Brown v. Curb (1979) 26 C.3d 110, 160 C.R. 760, 603 P.2d 1357. The court held that (a) the Lieutenant Governor has authority to exercise all gubernatorial powers of appointment while the Governor is physically absent from the state; but (b) the Governor has authority to withdraw the appointment until its confirmation becomes effective. (26 C.3d 113, 120, 122.) (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 796; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 831.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

D. Executive Power.

3. Veto.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 173

[§ 173] Veto.

The power to veto bills is an exception to the rule against exercise of legislative power by the executive. (See Edwards v. United States (1932) 286 U.S. 482, 52 S.Ct. 627, 76 L.Ed. 1239; Wright v. United States (1938) 302 U.S. 583, 58 S.Ct. 395, 82 L.Ed. 439.) The power extends to a reapportionment bill. (Legislature v. Reinecke (1972) 6 C.3d 595, 601, 99 C.R. 481, 492 P.2d 385.)

The federal Line Item Veto Act was held unconstitutional as a violation of the Presentment Clause. (Clinton v. New York (1998) 524 U.S. 417, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 2108, 141 L.Ed.2d 393, 420; see 88 Cal. L. Rev. 181 [Line Item Veto Act]; 20 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 323 [same].) And it has been held in California that the Governor cannot approve a law subject to modifications; a bill must be accepted or rejected as a whole. (Lukens v. Nye (1909) 156 C. 498, 501, 105 P. 593; cf. De Asis v. Department of Motor Vehicles (2003) 112 C.A.4th 593, 601, 5 C.R.3d 231 [bill that was sent to Governor, but was retrieved by Chief Clerk, returned to Legislature, withdrawn from enrollment, and placed in Legislature's inactive file, did not become law because its retrieval deprived Governor of full 30-day period to deliberate on bill].) However, by special constitutional provision the Governor has the power to eliminate or reduce items of an appropriation. (See Reardon v. Riley (1938) 10 C.2d 531, 535, 76 P.2d 101; 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 321.)

This subject was fully explored in Harbor v. Deukmejian (1987) 43 C.3d 1078, 240 C.R. 569, 742 P.2d 1290. On June 15, 1984, the Legislature enacted a budget containing an item of over $ 1.5 billion for aid to families with dependent children (AFDC). Ten days later, it passed Senate Bill 1379, dealing with many fiscal matters, including $45.5, amending Welf.C. 11056 to allow AFDC benefits to be paid from the time the application is made rather than the date it is processed. In approving the budget, the Governor reduced the AFDC allotment by $ 9,776,000, and in approving Senate Bill 1379, he purported to veto $45.5 to conform to his action in reducing the AFDC allotment in the budget. Petitioner challenged this action, contending that the veto power did not extend to disapproving parts of bills that were not appropriation measures. Held, the Governor's veto was invalid.

(a) The Governor may veto a bill by returning it to the "house of origin," and it will then become law only if each house passes it by a two-thirds vote. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §10(a).)

(b) The Governor's veto power over appropriations is more extensive: The Governor may reduce or eliminate one or more items. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §10(b), now Art. IV, §10(e).) This distinction is generally recognized in state

Constitutions. (43 C.3d 1084, 1086.)

(c) The veto of §45.5 cannot be justified on the ground that the section is an "item of appropriation." It does not set aside money for the payment of any claim, and does not add any additional amount to funds already provided for; "[l]ike thousands of other statutes, it directs that a department of government act in a particular manner with regard to certain matters." (43 C.3d 1089.) Although it will require the expenditure of funds, it only expresses the Legislature's intention that the AFDC appropriation, whatever its amount, be used to provide benefits from the date of application. (43 C.3d 1090.)

(d) The veto cannot be justified on the theory that the section, standing alone, is a "bill" for the purpose of determining the scope of the veto power. This interpretation would place an intolerable burden on the relations between the executive and legislative branches of government. "[W]e reject, therefore, respondents' claim that the Governor should be empowered to make a determination as to how many subjects are contained in a bill presented to him for signature, and to veto parts of a bill which he determines constitute a separate subject therein." (43 C.3d 1093.)

(e) The veto could be justified on the ground that Senate Bill 1379 violates the constitutional single-subject rule. (See supra, §131.) However, to avoid serious consequences of this ruling, it should not be retroactively applied to §45.5. (43 C.3d 1101, 1102.)

III. SEPARATION OF POWERS

D. Executive Power.

4. Invalid Delegation of Executive Power.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 174

[§ 174] Invalid Delegation of Executive Power.

In Bowsher v. Synar (1986) 478 U.S. 714, 106 S.Ct. 3181, 92 L.Ed.2d 583, the Court examined the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 ("Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act"), which provided for across-the-board cuts in federal spending to reach a targeted deficit level. These "automatic" reductions were to be accomplished through the "reporting provisions" of the Act, requiring the Directors of the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office to submit deficit estimates and reduction calculations to the Comptroller General, whose specification of spending reductions was to be ordered by the President. This action was brought by Congressmen and others, challenging these statutory provisions as an unconstitutional grant of executive powers to the Comptroller General. Held, the legislation was unconstitutional; the Comptroller General, while appointed by the President, can be removed by a joint resolution of Congress or by impeachment, and Congress cannot retain the power of removal over an officer performing executive functions.

(a) "The Constitution does not contemplate an active role for Congress in the supervision of officers charged with the execution of the laws it enacts." (106 S.Ct. 3187, 92 L.Ed.2d 594.) Hence, Congress cannot reserve the power of removal of these officers, except by impeachment. (106 S.Ct. 3188, 92 L.Ed.2d 596.)

(b) Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chadha (1983) 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317, supra, §170, holding a one house "legislative veto" invalid, supports this conclusion. "To permit an officer controlled by Congress to execute the laws would be, in essence, to permit a congressional veto. Congress could simply remove, or threaten to remove, an officer for executing the laws in any fashion found to be unsatisfactory to Congress." (106 S.Ct. 3189, 92 L.Ed.2d 596, 597.)

(c) The executive nature of the Comptroller General's functions is clear from the provision of the Act that gives him or her the ultimate authority to determine the budget cuts to be made. (106 S.Ct. 3192, 92 L.Ed.2d 600.)

Two justices dissented. (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 220; 13 Hastings Const. L. Q. 185; 14 Hastings Const. L. Q. 205.)

5. Judicially Appointed Special Prosecutor.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 175

[§ 175] Judicially Appointed Special Prosecutor.

In Morrison v. Olson (1988) 487 U.S. 654, 108 S.Ct. 2597, 101 L.Ed.2d 569, the Court upheld the constitutionality of the independent counsel provisions of the Ethics in the Government Act of 1978 (28 U.S.C., §§49, 591 et seq.). The Act allows for the appointment of an "independent counsel" to investigate and, if appropriate, to prosecute certain high ranking governmental officials for violations of federal criminal laws, as follows:

(a) The Attorney General, after a preliminary investigation, may report to a court ("Special Division") that there are reasonable grounds for further investigation or prosecution, and the court must appoint an independent counsel and define his or her prosecutorial jurisdiction. (See 28 U.S.C., §§591(c), 592(c).)

(b) The authority and functions of the independent counsel, and his or her tenure and the procedures for termination of the office, are fully covered. (See 28 U.S.C., §594.)

(c) Provision is also made for congressional oversight of the independent counsel's activities. (See 28 U.S.C., §595.)

The constitutionality of the Act was challenged on several grounds, and the opinion, after a careful review of the statutory provisions and case law, rejected all attacks. "In sum, we conclude today that it does not violate the Appointments Clause for Congress to vest the appointment of independent counsels in the Special Division; that the powers exercised by the Special Division under the Act do not violate Article III; and that the Act does not violate the separation of powers principle by impermissibly interfering with the functions of the Executive Branch." (108 S.Ct. 2622, 101 L.Ed.2d 609.) (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 105; 16 Hastings Const. L. Q. 393, 603.)

"If the Judiciary may severely burden the Executive Branch by reviewing the legality of the President's official conduct, and if it may direct appropriate process to the President himself, it must follow that the federal courts have power to determine the legality of his unofficial conduct. The burden on the President's time and energy that is a mere by-product of such review surely cannot be considered as onerous as the direct burden imposed by judicial review and the occasional invalidity of his official actions." A. In General.

1. Restrictions on Federal and State Power.

a. Federal Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 177

[§ 177] Federal Constitution.

The federal government is restricted by the first eight Amendments to the Constitution, known as the Bill of Rights. The provisions of these Amendments apply only to the federal government, and do not restrict the states. (Barron v. Baltimore (1833) 32 U.S. 243, 8 L.Ed. 672, 675; Feldman v. United States (1944) 322 U.S. 487, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 1083, 88 L.Ed. 1408, 1413; Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 1675, 91 L.Ed. 1903, 1908; Wolf v. Colorado (1949) 338 U.S. 25, 69 S.Ct. 1359, 1360, 93 L.Ed. 1782, 1784; see 2 Rotunda, Chap. 14; 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 22; 41 So. Cal. L. Rev. 491 [review of Emerson, Political and Civil Rights in the United States]; 19 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 343 [review of documentary history of Bill of Rights]; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §407 et seq.)

Most of the fundamental rights are also protected against state action by the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution. (See infra, §§218 et seq., 694 et seq.)

The theory that the constitutional protections are not fully operative while an American citizen is outside the continental limits of the U.S., set forth as dictum by In re Ross (1891) 140 U.S. 453, 11 S.Ct. 897, 900, 35 L.Ed. 581, 586, was repudiated in Reid v. Covert (1957) 354 U.S. 1, 77 S.Ct. 1222, 1 L.Ed.2d 1148, infra, §1332, in the following language: "The United States is entirely a creature of the Constitution. Its power and authority have no other source. It can only act in accordance with all the limitations imposed by the Constitution. When the Government reaches out to punish a citizen who is abroad, the shield which the Bill of Rights and other parts of the Constitution provide to protect his life and liberty should not be stripped away just because he happens to be in another land." (77 S.Ct. 1225, 1 L.Ed.2d 1157.) And all of the safeguards exist: "[W]e can find no warrant, in logic or otherwise, for picking and choosing among the remarkable collection of 'Thou shalt not's' which were explicitly fastened on all departments and agencies of the Federal Government by the Constitution and its Amendments." (77 S.Ct. 1226, 1 L.Ed.2d 1159.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY A. In General. 2. Right To Petition Government.

[§ 180] Right To Petition Government.

The right to petition the Government for redress of grievances (U.S. Const., First Amend.; Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(a)) has occasionally been invoked in civil cases.

In Matossian v. Fahmie (1980) 101 C.A.3d 128, 161 C.R. 532, the court held that holders of alcoholic beverage licenses "have a right, in combination, to protest the granting, or transfer, of a similar license for the sole purpose of preventing or limiting competition." (101 C.A.3d 132.) The opinion points out that the right of petition to governmental agencies, like freedom of speech, press, or religion, has a paramount and preferred place in our democratic system (101 C.A.3d 135), and that it is not confined to religious or political matters (101 C.A.3d 136). Hence, "where, as here, a statute expressly invites or allows interested persons to protest, or give their views or opinions concerning, proposed or requested governmental administrative action, such persons singly or in combination have a lawful right to do so;" and "the law will not permit judicial or other inquiry into the person's purpose or motivation." (101 C.A.3d 137.) (See 4 Rotunda, §20.53; 36 Stanf. L. Rev. 1243; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §531 et seq.)

In Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 C.3d 527, 535, 183 C.R. 86, 645 P.2d 137, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §487, the California Supreme Court held that the right to petition a governmental entity gave rise to the defense of absolute privilege in a later action for malicious prosecution by the governmental entity. (See Long Beach v. Bozek (1983) 33 C.3d 727, 190 C.R. 918, 661 P.2d 1072 [memorandum opinion after reversal by U.S. Supreme Court, stating that California decision was based on both federal and state Constitutions; hence California Constitution furnished independent ground].) The court said:

"The right of petition is of parallel importance to the right of free speech and the other overlapping, cognate rights contained in the First Amendment and in equivalent provisions of the California Constitution. Although it has seldom been independently analyzed, it does contain an inherent meaning and scope distinct from the right of free speech. It is essential to protect the ability of those who perceive themselves to be aggrieved by the activities of governmental authorities to seek redress through all the channels of government. A tort action against a municipality is but one of the available means of seeking redress. If cities are permitted to bring malicious prosecution actions against those who have unsuccessfully sued them, the institution of legitimate as well as baseless legal claims will be discouraged." (31 C.3d 535.) (See Smith v. Silvey (1983) 149 C.A.3d 400, 406, 197 C.R. 15 [following Bozek; mobilehome park tenant dissatisfied with plaintiff's operation of park, made complaints to governmental agencies and brought legal action to force reinspection of park improvements]; 106 Harv. L. Rev. 1111 [A Petition Clause Analysis of Suits Against the Government: Implications for Rule 11 Sanctions]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 15 [examination of case law].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY A. In General. 3. Right To Bear Arms.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 181

[§ 181] Right To Bear Arms.

The Second Amendment to the federal Constitution provides: "A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." The California Constitution has no such provision, and in Presser v. Illinois (1886) 116 U.S. 252, 266, 6 S.Ct. 580, 29 L.Ed. 615, which preceded acceptance of the incorporation theory (infra, §218 et seq.), the Second Amendment was held not to apply to the states. (See In re Rameriz (1924) 193 C. 633, 651, 226 P. 914 [Second Amendment "applies only to the exercise of power by the federal government"]; 86 A.L.R.4th 931 [validity of state gun control legislation under state constitutional provisions securing right to bear arms].)

The major issue concerning the Second Amendment is whether it protects only the state governments from acts by the federal Government that would interfere with state militia and police forces, or whether there is an individual right to bear arms that restricts government from prohibiting private possession of at least some types of firearms. The U.S. Supreme Court has not decided the issue, but there is support in its opinions for the states' rights approach. (See United States v. Miller (1939) 307 U.S. 174, 59 S.Ct. 816, 819, 83 L.Ed. 1206, 1209 [federal government may by taxation regulate sawed-off shotguns]; Lewis v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 55, 65, footnote 8, 100 S.Ct. 915, 63 L.Ed.2d 198, [federal government may prohibit possession of firearms by felons]; 2 Rotunda §14.2, footnote 4; 2 *Hastings Const. SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In District of Columbia v. Heller (2008) 554 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 2783, 171 L.Ed.2d 637, the Court considered whether a District of Columbia ban on the possession of firearms in the home violated the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution. Defendant district made handgun possession a crime by requiring the registration of firearms generally, but then prohibiting the registration of handguns. The law also required residents to keep lawfully owned firearms, such as registered long guns, unloaded and disassembled or bound by a trigger lock or similar device, unless the guns were located in a place of business or were being used for lawful recreational activities. Plaintiff, a special police officer authorized to carry a handgun while on duty, applied for a registration certificate for a handgun that he wished to keep at home, but a certificate was denied. Plaintiff challenged the constitutionality of the law on Second Amendment grounds, seeking to enjoin defendant from enforcing the bar on the registration of handguns and the trigger lock requirement insofar as it prohibited the use of functional firearms within the home. The trial court dismissed plaintiff's complaint, but the Court of Appeals reversed and directed the trial court to enter summary judgment for plaintiff. Held, judgment of the Court of Appeals affirmed.

(a) Second Amendment language.

(1) Introduction. The Second Amendment provides: "A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." Defendant argues that the Second Amendment protects only the right to possess and carry firearms in connection with militia service, while plaintiff contends that it protects an individual right to possess firearms not connected with militia service, and to use those arms for traditionally lawful purposes, such as self-defense within the home. (128 S.Ct. 2788, 2789, 171 L.Ed.2d 648.) The prefatory clause, rather than limiting the operative clause grammatically, announces a purpose, and logic dictates that there must be a link between the stated purpose and the operative clause's command. Thus, the prefatory clause may resolve an ambiguity in the operative clause, but, apart from that clarifying function, the prefatory clause does not limit or expand the scope of the operative clause. (128 S.Ct. 2789, 171 L.Ed.2d 648, 649.)

(2) Operative clause: right of the people. The original Constitution and the Bill of Rights use the phrase "right of the people" or similar language three times other than in the Second Amendment. All three of these usages unambiguously refer to individual rights, not collective rights or rights that may be exercised only through participation in some corporate body. Three provisions of the Constitution refer to "the people" in a context other than rights. These provisions arguably refer to "the people" acting collectively, but they deal with the reservation of powers. (128 S.Ct. 2790, 171 L.Ed.2d 650.) In the six other provisions of the Constitution that mention "the people," the term unambiguously refers to all members of the political community, not to an unspecified subset. This contrasts markedly with the term "militia" in the prefatory clause, because the "militia" in colonial America consisted of a subset of "the people," i.e., those who were male, able bodied, and of appropriate age. Thus, reading the Second Amendment as protecting only the right to "keep and bear arms" in an organized militia fits poorly with the description in the operative clause of the holder of that right as "the people." (128 S.Ct. 2790, 2791, 171 L.Ed.2d 650, 651.)

(3) Operative clause: keep and bear arms.

(a) The term "arms" was applied, in colonial times as now, to weapons not specifically designed for military use and not employed in a military capacity. And the term is not limited to those arms that were in existence in the 18th century. Just as the First Amendment protects modern forms of communications, and the Fourth Amendment applies to modern forms of search, the Second Amendment extends, prima facie, to all instruments that constitute bearable arms. (128 S.Ct. 2791, 171 L.Ed.2d 651.)

(b) "Keep arms" was, in colonial times, a common way of referring to possession, and to "bear arms" simply meant "to carry." (128 S.Ct. 2792, 2793, 171 L.Ed.2d 651, 652.) Although the phrase "to bear arms" "implies that the carrying of the weapon is for the purpose of 'offensive or defensive action,' it in no way connotes participation in a structured military organization." (128 S.Ct. 2793, 171 L.Ed.2d 653.) The phrase also had an idiomatic meaning that was significantly different: to serve as a soldier, do military service, fight, or wage war. However, "bear arms" unequivocally had that idiomatic meaning only when followed by the preposition "against," followed by the target of the hostilities. Without that preposition, "bear arms" meant, as it continues to mean today, carrying a weapon on the person for the purpose of being ready for offensive or defensive action in case of a conflict with another person. (128 S.Ct. 2793, 2794, 171 L.Ed.2d 653, 654.)

(c) The first dissent places great weight on the inclusion of the following conscientious-objector clause in the original draft of the Second Amendment: "no person religiously scrupulous of bearing arms, shall be compelled to render military service in person." The dissent contends that this clause establishes that the drafters of the Second Amendment intended "bear Arms" to refer only to military service. This position is without merit. The clause was not meant to exempt from military service those who objected to going to war but had no scruples about personal gunfights. Rather, the most natural interpretation of the clause is that those opposed to carrying weapons for potential violent confrontation would not be compelled to render military service. (128 S.Ct. 2796, 171 L.Ed.2d 656.)

(4) Meaning of operative clause. This textual analysis shows that the Second Amendment guarantees the individual right to possess and carry weapons in case of confrontation, a preexisting right created in England in response to attempts by the Crown to disarm its enemies. (128 S.Ct. 2797, 2798, 171 L.Ed.2d 657, 658.) Thus, when King George III attempted to disarm the rebellious colonists, it was only natural that they invoked the right of Englishmen to bear arms, a right that had nothing to do with military service. However, the right to keep and bear arms is not unlimited, just as the right of free speech does not allow citizens to speak for any purpose. (128 S.Ct. 2799, 171 L.Ed.2d 659.)

(5) Prefatory clause: well-regulated militia. In colonial times, the militia was comprised of all males physically capable of acting in concert for the common defense (see United States v. Miller (1939) 307 U.S. 174, 59 S.Ct. 816, 83 L.Ed.2d 1206, text, p. 319). (128 S.Ct. 2799, 171 L.Ed.2d 659.) Defendant argues that, under the Militia Clauses of the Constitution (U.S. Const., Art. I, §8) militias were regulated military forces. This argument is incorrect, because it focuses on the wrong thing, i.e., the organized militia. Unlike armies and navies, which Congress is given the power to create, Article I assumes that the militia already is in existence. For example, U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, gives Congress the power to organize "the" militia, connoting a body already in existence, not to organize "a" militia, which is what one would expect if the militia were to be a federal creation. The "adjective 'well-regulated' implies nothing more than the imposition of proper discipline and training." (128 S.Ct. 2800, 171 L.Ed.2d 660.)

(6) Prefatory clause: being necessary for the security of a free state. In the 18th century, "a free state" was a term of art meaning "a free country" or "a free polity." (128 S.Ct. 2800, 171 L.Ed.2d 660.) Accordingly, when "state" is used in the Constitution to designate a particular state, rather than all the states, it is usually accompanied by a modifier, such as "each," "one," or "that." The militia was thought to be necessary to the security of a free state to repel invasions or insurrections, to render large standing armies unnecessary, and to resist tyranny. (128 S.Ct. 2800, 171 L.Ed.2d 661.)

(7) Relationship between prefatory clause and operative clause. The prefatory clause fits perfectly with the operative clause, given the history that the founding generation knew, i.e., that tyrants could eliminate a militia of all able-bodied men not by banning the militia, but by taking away their arms, thereby enabling a select militia or standing army to suppress political opponents. This is what had occurred in England and prompted codification, in the English Bill of Rights, of the right to bear arms. This was the reason that the right to keep and bear arms, unlike some other English rights, was codified in the United States Constitution. When viewed in light of this history, it is entirely sensible to conclude that the purpose of the Second Amendment's prefatory clause was to prevent elimination of the citizen militia. (128 S.Ct. 2801, 171 L.Ed.2d 661, 662.) Defendant claims that the organized militia, not the citizen militia, was the sole institutional beneficiary of the Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms. However, this interpretation does not assure the existence of a citizen militia as a safeguard against tyranny, because, under U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, "Congress retains plenary authority to organize the militia, which must include the authority to say who will belong to the organized force." In other words, if defendant is correct, the Second Amendment protects the people's right to use a gun in an organization from which Congress has plenary authority to exclude them, and thus guarantees a select militia of the sort that the English kings found useful in spreading tyranny. This is not the people's militia that was the concern of the founders. (128 S.Ct. 2802, 171 L.Ed.2d 662.)

(b) Supreme Court decisions arguably foreclosing interpreting Second Amendment as conferring individual right. United States v. Cruikshank (1875) 92 U.S. 542, 23 L.Ed 588, held that the Second Amendment applies only to the federal Government, and that the states are free to restrict or protect the right to bear arms for lawful purposes under their police powers. There was no claim in Cruikshank that persons had been deprived of their right to carry arms in a militia. Indeed, the discussion in Cruikshank makes little sense if the Second Amendment grants only the right to bear arms in a state militia. (128 S.Ct. 2813, 171 L.Ed.2d 674.) Presser v. Illinois (1886) 116 U.S. 252, 6 S.Ct. 580, 29 L.Ed. 615, text, p. 318, held that the Second Amendment does not prevent the prohibition of private paramilitary organizations, but says nothing about its meaning or scope. United States v. Miller, supra, upheld, against a Second Amendment challenge, federal convictions for transporting an unregistered short-barreled shotgun in interstate commerce. The basis of the opinion was that the type of weapon at issue was not eligible for Second Amendment protection. (128 S.Ct. 2813, 2814, 171 L.Ed.2d 675.) "We therefore read Miller to say only that the Second Amendment does not protect those weapons not typically possessed by law-abiding citizens for lawful purposes, such as short-barreled shotguns." Thus, nothing in the Supreme Court's precedents precludes the holding that the Second Amendment protects an individual right to possess firearms not connected with service in a militia. (128 S.Ct. 2815, 2816, 171 L.Ed.2d 677.)

(1) The inherent right of self-defense is central to the Second Amendment right. Yet defendant's handgun ban amounts to a prohibition of the class of arms that is overwhelmingly chosen by American society for that lawful purpose. Moreover, the prohibition extends to the home, where the need for defense of self, family, and property is most acute. Under any of the standards of scrutiny that have been applied to constitutional rights, banning from the home the most preferred firearm in the nation to keep and use for protecting one's home and family fails constitutional muster. (128 S.Ct. 2817, 171 L.Ed.2d 679.) In response to defendant's contention that it is permissible to ban the possession of handguns so long as the possession of other firearms, like long guns, is allowed, it is enough to note that the American people, for many reasons, have long considered the handgun to be the quintessential self-defense weapon: A handgun "is easier to store in a location that is readily accessible in an emergency; it cannot easily be redirected or wrestled away by an attacker; it is easier to use for those without the upper-body strength to lift and aim a long gun; it can be pointed at a burglar with one hand while the other hand dials the police." Defendant's requirement that handguns in the home be rendered inoperable at all times, thus making it impossible for citizens to use them for the core lawful purpose of self-defense, is also unconstitutional. (128 S.Ct. 2818, 171 L.Ed.2d 680.)

(2) The second dissent argues that, even assuming that the Second Amendment is a personal guarantee of the right to bear arms, defendant's law is valid, because it imposes a burden on gun owners that is proportionately no greater than restrictions in existence at the time the Second Amendment was adopted. However, the founding-era statutes cited to support this claim were fire and safety regulations not nearly as burdensome as one preventing citizens from using handguns in self-defense. (128 S.Ct. 2819, 171 L.Ed.2d 681.) Moreover, all of the earlier laws punished the violation with a small fine and forfeiture of the weapon, while defendant's law, by contrast, threatens citizens with a year in prison for a first offense. (128 S.Ct. 2820, 2821, 171 L.Ed.2d 682.)

(3) The second dissent proposes a judge-empowering interest-balancing inquiry that asks whether defendant's statute burdens a protected interest to an extent that is out of proportion to the statute's salutary effects. This is an improper approach. There is no other enumerated constitutional right whose core protection has been subjected to a freestanding interest-balancing approach. The very enumeration of a right takes out of the hands of government the power to decide on a case-by-case basis whether the right is really worth insisting upon. "A constitutional guarantee subject to future judges' assessments of its usefulness is no constitutional guarantee at all." (128 S.Ct. 2821, 171 L.Ed.2d 683.) Assuming that plaintiff is not disqualified from the exercise of Second Amendment rights, defendant must permit him to register his handgun and must issue him a license to carry it in the home. (128 S.Ct. 2822, 171 L.Ed.2d 683, 684.)

(d) Limitations. "Although we do not undertake an exhaustive historical analysis today of the full scope of the Second Amendment, nothing in our opinion should be taken to cast doubt on longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons and the mentally ill, or laws forbidding the carrying of firearms in sensitive places such as schools and government buildings, or laws imposing conditions and qualifications on the commercial sale of arms." (128 S.Ct. 2816, 171 L.Ed.2d 678.) The weapons protected by the Second Amendment are those in common use at the time of its passage. It may be objected that if weapons that are most useful in military service, i.e., M-16 rifles and the like, may be banned, then the Second Amendment right is completely detached from the prefatory clause. "But the fact that modern developments have limited the degree of fit between the prefatory clause and the protected right cannot change our interpretation of the right." (128 S.Ct. 2817, 171 L.Ed.2d 679.)

(e) Conclusion. "We are aware of the problem of handgun violence in this country, and we take seriously the concerns raised by the many amici who believe that prohibition of handgun ownership is a solution. The Constitution leaves the District of Columbia a variety of tools for combating that problem, including some measures regulating handguns. ... But the enshrinement of constitutional rights necessarily takes certain policy choices off the table. These include the absolute prohibition of handguns held and used for self-defense in the home. Undoubtedly some think that the Second Amendment is outmoded in a society where our standing army is the pride of our Nation, where well-trained police forces provide personal security, and where gun violence is a serious problem. That is perhaps debatable, but what is not debatable is that it is not the role of this Court to pronounce the Second Amendment extinct." (128 S.Ct. 2822, 171 L.Ed.2d 684.)

Four justices joined together in two dissenting opinions. One opinion concluded that the Second Amendment was adopted to protect the right of the people of each of the several states to maintain a well-regulated militia, and that there is no indication that the framers intended to enshrine the common law right of self-defense in the Constitution. (128 S.Ct. 2822, 171 L.Ed.2d 684.) The other opinion argued that, because the Second Amendment permits government to regulate the interests that it serves, the majority's view could not be correct unless it could show that defendant's regulation was unreasonable or inappropriate in Second Amendment terms, a showing that the majority failed to make. (128 S.Ct. 2847, 171 L.Ed.2d 710, 711.)

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY B. Citizenship. 1. Citizenship by Birth.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 182

[§ 182] Citizenship by Birth.

(1) Persons Born in U.S. The Fourteenth Amendment recognizes two types of citizenship, national and state, in the following provision: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." (See 66 Harv. L. Rev. 704; 3*C Am.Jur.2d* (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2680 et seq.) Thus, state citizenship is derived from national citizenship, although some distinctions are made in the statement of their respective rights and privileges. (Slaughter-House Cases (1872) 83 U.S. 36, 21 L.Ed. 394; see infra, §608 et seq.)

A person born in the U.S. may be a citizen, though his or her parents were aliens formerly ineligible to citizenship. (United States v. Wong Kim Ark (1898) 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ct. 456, 42 L.Ed. 890; see 107 Harv. L. Rev. 1026 [criticizing proposed constitutional amendment denying citizenship to American-born children of undocumented aliens]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 669 [discussing whether Fourteenth Amendment should be altered or repealed to deny automatic citizenship to American-born children of illegal aliens].)

(2) Persons Born Outside U.S. A legitimate child born abroad of a parent who is a citizen and has resided in the U.S. gets national citizenship. (See 8 U.S.C., §1401; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 704; on difference in status between person born here and person born and residing abroad, see Rogers v. Bellei (1971) 401 U.S. 815, 91 S.Ct. 1060, 28 L.Ed.2d 499, infra, §196.) However, illegitimate children born outside the U.S. are treated differently, depending on whether the citizen parent is the mother or the father. (See Miller v. Albright (1998) 523 U.S. 420, 118 S.Ct. 1428, 1440, 140 L.Ed.2d 575, 593 [upholding, without plurality opinion, distinction in treatment for citizenship purposes between illegitimate children born outside U.S. of U.S. citizen mothers and those of U.S. citizen fathers]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 202 [Miller]; 51 Hastings L. J. 557 [same]; 175 A.L.R. Fed 67 [validity and construction of 8 U.S.C., §1401(c)-(g), providing citizenship in certain circumstances to child born outside U.S., or found within U.S. and of unknown parentage].)

The lack of a plurality opinion in Miller v. Albright left open the question whether the statutory distinction between illegitimate children born outside the U.S. to U.S. citizen mothers and those of U.S. citizen fathers violates the equal protection guarantee of the Fifth Amendment. In Tuan Anh Nguyen v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (2001) 533 U.S. 53, 121 S.Ct. 2053, 150 L.Ed.2d 115, the Court held, in a 5-4 opinion, that the statute is constitutional. "Fathers and mothers are not similarly situated with regard to the proof of biological parenthood. The imposition of a different set of rules for making that legal determination with respect to fathers and mothers is neither surprising nor troublesome from a constitutional perspective." (121 S.Ct. 2060, 150 L.Ed.2d 127.) A father seeking to establish paternity has three options under 8 U.S.C., §1409: legitimation, paternity oath, and court order of paternity. The statute "is designed to ensure acceptable documentation of paternity." (121 S.Ct. 2060, 150 L.Ed.2d 127.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 376 [Tuan Anh Nguyen]; 178 A.L.R. Fed 25 [sex discrimination under Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses].)

B. Citizenship.

2. Citizenship by Naturalization.

a. Immigration.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 183

[§ 183] In General.

(1) Federal Law. Congress has the power to admit or deny admission to aliens, and to impose restrictions on admission. (See United States v. Shaughnessy (1950) 338 U.S. 537, 70 S.Ct. 309, 312, 94 L.Ed. 317, 324; Kleindienst v. Mandel (1972) 408 U.S. 753, 92 S.Ct. 2576, 33 L.Ed.2d 683 [Attorney General may bar temporary admission of foreign Marxist scholar despite desire of U.S. residents to hear and communicate with him]; Fiallo v. Bell (1977) 430 U.S. 787, 97 S.Ct. 1473, 1478, 52 L.Ed.2d 50, 56; 3A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §402 et seq.)

The law on immigration was revised by the McCarran-Walter or Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (8 U.S.C., §1101 et seq.), which establishes quotas for most immigrants, and specifies various grounds for exclusion (physical or mental defects, criminal activity, subversive activity, likelihood of becoming a public charge, etc.). Although the Act has been frequently amended, it continues to be the basic immigration law of the country. (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1334 [admission and exclusion of immigrants under Act]; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1352 [amendment by Refugee Act of 1980]; 3A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §5 et seq.)

The Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 includes: (a) an amnesty program under which certain illegal aliens who have been in the country illegally since January 1, 1982, may qualify for legalization of their status and permanent residence (8 U.S.C., §1255a); (b) a similar program for certain agricultural workers who worked in the United States for at least 90 days during the year ending May 1, 1986 (8 U.S.C., §1160); (c) prohibitions against and sanctions for employment of illegal aliens (8 U.S.C., §1324a; see infra, §188); and (d) prohibitions against unfair immigration-related employment practices (8 U.S.C., §1324b). (See McNary v. Haitian Refugee Center (1991) 498 U.S. 479, 111 S.Ct. 888, 112 L.Ed.2d 1005 [amnesty program]; Reno v. Catholic Social Services (1993) 509 U.S. 43, 113 S.Ct. 2485, 125 L.Ed.2d 38; 26 Cal. Western L. Rev. 149; 24 San Diego L. Rev. 277; 41 *Stanf. L. (2) Cooperation With Federal Agents. Govt.C. 53069.75 was enacted in 1993 as an urgency measure to comply with state law requirements mandated by 42 U.S.C., §3753, relating to eligibility for federal grants under the Omnibus

Control and Safe Streets Act. Under the statute, no local law may prohibit a peace or custodial officer from identifying and reporting to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service any person, pursuant to federal law or regulation, to whom both of the following apply:

(a) The person was arrested and booked, based on the arresting officer's probable cause to believe that the person arrested had committed a felony. (Govt.C. 53069.75(a).)

(b) "After the arrest and booking in subdivision (a), the officer reasonably suspects that the person arrested has violated the civil provisions of the federal immigration laws." (Govt.C. 53069.75(b).)

(3) Texts and Law Reviews. Commentary on immigration laws has been extensive. (See 3 Rotunda, §18.11; 81 *Cal. L. B. Citizenship.

2. Citizenship by Naturalization.

a. Immigration.

2. Scope of Power.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 184

[§ 184] Scope of Power.

The Immigration Act (supra, §183) formerly excluded aliens afflicted with psychopathic personality, sexual deviation, or mental defect. (Former 8 U.S.C., §1182(a)(4); see 8 U.S.C., §1182(a)(1) [inadmissibility for physical or mental disorder that poses danger to alien or to society].) In Boutilier v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1967) 387 U.S. 118, 87 S.Ct. 1563, 18 L.Ed.2d 661, petitioner, a Canadian, was a homosexual for some years before his entry. When he applied for citizenship, an arrest for sodomy came to light, and he revealed his history of homosexual behavior. After a hearing, he was ordered deported, and his petition for review was dismissed by the Court of Appeals. Held, affirmed.

The principal attack was on the vagueness of the language; i.e., the phrase is medically ambiguous and does not adequately warn an alien of the sexual condition that could lead to his or her deportation. But Congress used the term for the express purpose of excluding "persons having homosexual and perverted characteristics"; thus, the test is not what psychiatrists may think but what Congress intended. And petitioner was not being deported for conduct engaged in after entry, but rather for characteristics he possessed at the time of entry which made him inadmissible. The constitutional requirement of fair warning has no application to this situation; Congress has plenary power to make rules of exclusion of aliens with certain characteristics. (87 S.Ct. 1567, 18 L.Ed.2d 666.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1344 [use of statutory interpretation to circumvent specific holding of Boutilier]; 4 San Diego L. Rev. 148; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 246 [exclusion for "sexual deviation"]; 3 U.S.F. L. Rev. 374.)

In Fiallo v. Bell (1977) 430 U.S. 787, 97 S.Ct. 1473, 52 L.Ed.2d 50, the Court, quoting an earlier decision, declared that "over no conceivable subject is the legislative power of Congress more complete" than it is over the admission of aliens. "Our recent decisions have not departed from this long-established rule." (97 S.Ct. 1478, 52 L.Ed.2d 56.)

In Reno v. Flores (1993) 507 U.S. 292, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 123 L.Ed.2d 1, the issue was stated as follows: "Over the past decade, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) has arrested increasing numbers of alien juveniles who are not accompanied by their parents or other related adults. Respondents, a class of alien juveniles so arrested and held in INS custody pending their deportation hearings, contend that the Constitution and immigration laws require them to be released into the custody of 'responsible adults.'" (113 S.Ct. 1443, 123 L.Ed.2d 12.)

In rejecting the contention, the Court said: "We are unaware ... that any court--aside from the courts below--has ever held that a child has a constitutional right not to be placed in a decent and humane custodial institution if there is available a responsible person unwilling to become the child's legal guardian but willing to undertake temporary legal custody. ... Where a juvenile has no available parent, close relative, or legal guardian, where the government does not intend to punish the child, and where the conditions of governmental custody are decent and humane, such custody surely does not violate the Constitution. It is rationally connected to a governmental interest in 'preserving and promoting the welfare of the child,' ... and is not punitive since it is not excessive in relation to that valid purpose." a. Immigration.

5. Political Asylum for Refugees.

[§ 187] Political Asylum for Refugees.

Congress' power over admission of aliens includes the power to determine whether, and under what circumstances, to admit political refugees; and the federal Refugee Act of 1980 created a permanent mechanism to handle both the normal flow of refugees and emergencies involving large numbers of them. (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1352; 24 San Diego L. Rev. 449; 60 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1441; 3A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §1206 et seq.; 3B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §1892 et seq.) The Act provides as follows:

(1) The annual admission of a specified number of refugees, and admission of greater numbers when justified by humanitarian concerns. (8 U.S.C., §1157.)

(2) The Attorney General is required to establish a procedure under which refugees already in this country may apply for discretionary grants of asylum. (8 U.S.C., §1158.)

(3) A "refugee" is a person who "because of persecution or a well-founded fear of persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion," is unable or unwilling to return to or to avail himself or herself of the protection of his or her own country. (8 U.S.C., §1101(a)(42)(A).)

(4) Discretionary relief from deportation if the alien shows persecution or "a well-founded fear of persecution" on account of one of the specified grounds. (8 U.S.C., §1101(a)(42), 1158(a); see 8 U.S.C., §1225(b)(1)(B) [requiring alien to have "credible fear of persecution"].) The test focuses on the alien's subjective mental state and the "more likely than not" standard does not apply. (Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Cardoza-Fonseca (1987) 480 U.S. 421, 107 S.Ct. 1207, 1212, 94 L.Ed.2d 434, 447, 458; see 101 Harv. L. Rev. 340; 22 U.S.F. L. Rev. 385.) (See Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Elias-Zacarias (1992) 502 U.S. 478, 112 S.Ct. 812, 117 L.Ed.2d 38.)

In Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Aguirre-Aguirre (1999) 526 U.S. 415, 119 S.Ct. 1439, 143 L.Ed.2d 590, an illegal immigrant sought withholding of deportation based on his fear of persecution for earlier political activities. The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) did not decide whether the immigrant had established the requisite risk of persecution, because it determined that he was ineligible for withholding because he had committed a "serious nonpolitical crime" within the meaning of former 8 U.S.C., §1253(h)(2)(C) (see 8 U.S.C., §1158(b)(2)(A)), before his entry into this country. The Court of Appeals remanded, concluding that the BIA had applied an incorrect interpretation of the serious nonpolitical crime provision. Held, reversed and remanded.

The BIA properly applied the phrase "serious nonpolitical crime" by "weighing 'the political nature' of an act against its 'common-law' or 'criminal' character." (119 S.Ct. 1445, 143 L.Ed.2d 600.) However, the Court of Appeals held that the BIA must supplement this weighing test by examining additional factors such as (a) the political necessity and success of the immigrant's methods, (b) whether his acts were grossly out of proportion to their objective or were atrocious, and (c) the persecution he might suffer on return to his native country. (119 S.Ct. 1442, 143 L.Ed.2d 597.) This was error. The BIA's determination should have been given deference. (119 S.Ct. 1445, 1446, 143 L.Ed.2d 601.)

In Sale v. Haitian Centers Council (1993) 509 U.S. 155, 113 S.Ct. 2549, 125 L.Ed.2d 128, the issue was the validity of the Coast Guard's interception of vessels engaged in the illegal transportation of undocumented aliens to this country, and returning of those passengers to Haiti without first determining whether they might qualify as refugees. The Court held that neither former 8 U.S.C., §1253(h)(1) nor Article 33 of the United Nations Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees applied to action taken by the Coast Guard on the high seas. (113 S.Ct. 2552, 125 L.Ed.2d 137.) (See 107 Harv. L. Rev. 352 [Sale]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1071 [Fifth Amendment due process rights of interdicted Haitian refugees]; 33 *Hastings L. [§ 188] Employment of Unauthorized Aliens.

The Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (supra, §183) includes provisions that, for the first time, make employers subject to civil and criminal sanctions if they knowingly violate the law with respect to employment of unauthorized aliens. (8 U.S.C., §1324a; see Hoffman Plastic Compounds v. N.L.R.B. (2002) 535 U.S. 137, 122 S.Ct. 1275, 1284, 152 L.Ed.2d 271, 284 [allowing NLRB to award back pay to illegal alien who was fired for union organizing would be inconsistent with federal immigration policy expressed in IRCA]; 100 *Harv. (1) The Act makes it unlawful for an employer knowingly to hire or to retain an unauthorized alien (8 U.S.C., §1324a(a)), and requires employers to comply with an employment verification system under which the employer must verify that a new employee is not an unauthorized alien by examining a specified document or documents submitted by the employee (8 U.S.C., §1324a(b)). Good faith compliance with the verification system requirements is an affirmative defense to a charge that the employer has violated the employment prohibitions. (8 U.S.C., §1324a(a)(3).)

(2) The Attorney General must establish procedures for complaints and investigations of violations. Civil penalties may include both cease and desist orders and monetary sanctions against employers. (8 U.S.C., §1324a(e).) Criminal penalties (imprisonment, fine, or both) and injunctions may be sought if an employer "engages in a pattern or practice of violations." (8 U.S.C., §1324a(f).)

(3) An "unauthorized alien" is defined as one who is neither "lawfully admitted for permanent residence" nor "authorized to be so employed by this Act or by the Attorney General." (8 U.S.C., §1324a(h)(3).)

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 189

[§ 189] In General.

Naturalization is the process by which an alien may become a citizen; i.e., "the conferring of nationality of a state upon a person after birth, by any means whatsoever." (8 U.S.C., §1101(a)(23).) The federal Constitution provides that Congress has the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, cl. 4; see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2770 et seq.)

"The sole power to naturalize persons as citizens of the United States is conferred upon the Attorney General." (8 U.S.C., §1421(a).) However, the oath of allegiance may be administered by a district court or a state court having unlimited law and equity jurisdiction. (See 8 U.S.C., §1421(b).) (On naturalization procedure, see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2963 et seq.; on derivative citizenship of children without formal naturalization, and petition by parent to naturalize child, see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2877 et seq.)

Naturalized citizens cannot hold the office of President (U.S. Const., Art. II, §1, cl. 4) and are subject to denaturalization proceedings (see infra, §193). Apart from these exceptions, the rights of citizenship of the native born and the naturalized person "are of the same dignity and are coextensive." (Schneider v. Rusk (1964) 377 U.S. 163, 84 S.Ct. 1187, 1189, 12 L.Ed.2d 218, 220, infra, §196; see Afroyim v. Rusk (1967) 387 U.S. 253, 87 S.Ct. 1660, 1665, 18 L.Ed.2d 757, 763, infra, §197.)

2. Eligibility.

aa. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 190

[§ 190] In General.

(1) Conditions. The Immigration Act (supra, §183) prescribes various conditions of eligibility for naturalization. (See 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2770 et seq.; 87 Cal. L. Rev. 1017 [meaningful oath requirement for mentally disabled citizenship applicants]; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 707 et seq.) The most important are:

(a) Literacy. (8 U.S.C., §1423(a); see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2839 et seq.)

(b) Attachment to principles of Constitution and nonmembership in subversive organizations. (8 U.S.C., §1424; see 18 A.L.R.2d 268 [oath of allegiance or loyalty]; 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §§2832 et seq., 2850 et seq.; on subversive activity as ground for deportation, see infra, §476.)

(c) Continuous residency of 5 years after lawful admission and physical presence for half of this period preceding the application. (8 U.S.C., §1427(a); see 66 Harv. L. Rev. 713; 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2784 et seq.)

(d) Good moral character. (8 U.S.C., §1427(a); see 22 A.L.R.2d 244; 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2813 et seq.; infra, §191.)

(e) Willingness to bear arms or perform noncombatant services. (8 U.S.C., §1448(a); see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2916 et seq.; infra, §192.)

(2) Ineligibility. Conviction of murder, claim of exemption from military service on ground of alienage, conviction of desertion, or leaving the country to avoid the draft, render a person permanently ineligible. (8 U.S.C., §§1101(f)(8), 1425, 1426; see 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §§2816, 2892 et seq.; infra, §§191, 192.)

The immigration law originally excluded aliens of certain races; these were the "ineligible aliens" against whom our former Alien Land Law operated (see infra, §722). Subsequent amendments enlarged the eligible classes until only Japanese were excluded. (See 66 Harv. L. Rev. 706.) The Act removed all of these exclusions: "The right of a person to become a naturalized citizen ... shall not be denied ... because of race." (8 U.S.C., §1422.)

The Immigration Act (supra, §183) requires proof of good moral character for 5 years preceding the filing of the petition. (See supra, §190.) It also specifies categories of conduct, any of which defeats a claim of good moral character, including giving "false testimony for the purpose of obtaining any benefits" under the Act. (8 U.S.C., §1101(f) [list not exclusive].)

In Berenyi v. District Director, Immigration & Naturalization Service (1967) 385 U.S. 630, 87 S.Ct. 666, 17 L.Ed.2d 656, petitioner, in a preliminary proceeding on his naturalization petition, was asked whether he had ever been a member of or associated with the Communist Party. He answered no, under oath. In the final hearing, the Government produced two witnesses who identified him as a Communist in Hungary, and petitioner produced witnesses in rebuttal. The district judge, evaluating the testimony, found that petitioner had testified falsely, and denied his application. Held, affirmed; unlike a denaturalization or deportation case, in which a heavy burden rests on the Government, this case involved no constitutional issue calling for independent determination of the facts by the Supreme Court. (87 S.Ct. 670, 17 L.Ed.2d 661.)

Aliens who desert or depart from the country to avoid military service or the draft, or who are relieved of military service because of their alien status, are permanently ineligible to become citizens. (See supra, §190; Astrup v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1971) 402 U.S. 509, 91 S.Ct. 1583, 29 L.Ed.2d 68 [ineffective claim of exemption from draft does not result in ineligibility].)

Litigation under a former Immigration Act established the right of conscientious objectors to naturalization despite their unwillingness to bear arms. (See Girouard v. United States (1946) 328 U.S. 61, 66 S.Ct. 826, 90 L.Ed. 1084.) The present Act accordingly recognizes the right to show religious opposition by clear and convincing proof, but requires that the applicant in these cases swear either to perform noncombatant service in the armed forces or work of national importance under civilian direction. (8 U.S.C., §1448(a); see In re Jost (1953) 117 C.A.2d 379, 382, 256 P.2d 71 [burden of proof not met].) (See 196 A.L.R. A naturalized citizen may be deprived of citizenship in a "denaturalization proceeding," i.e., an action by the Government to set aside the decree of naturalization for fraud or other grounds existing at the time it was rendered. (8 U.S.C., §1451; see United States v. Zucca (1956) 351 U.S. 91, 76 S.Ct. 671, 100 L.Ed. 964 [affidavit of good cause is jurisdictional prerequisite to action]; *United States v. The action is brought in the federal district court where the naturalized citizen resides. (8 U.S.C., §1451(a).) When citizenship is revoked, the court where the judgment is rendered must order cancellation of the certificate of naturalization and send a certified copy of the order and judgment to the Attorney General. (8 U.S.C., §1451(f).)

The federal proceeding was held exclusive in Bindczyck v. Finucane (1951) 342 U.S. 76, 72 S.Ct. 130, 132, 96 L.Ed. 100, 103, on the theory that jurisdiction exercised by different state courts would destroy the uniformity contemplated by Congress.

B. Citizenship. 3. Denaturalization. b. Proof of Grounds.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 194

[§ 194] Proof of Grounds.

The principal ground of denaturalization is fraud, consisting of wilful misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact. (8 U.S.C., §1451(a); see 23 U.S.F. L. Rev. 415 [standards for denaturalization and deportation of persons accused of crimes prior to entry]; 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §3040 et seq.)

Decisions, both prior to and after the present Act, place a heavy burden of proof on the Government. (See Schneiderman v. United States (1943) 320 U.S. 118, 63 S.Ct. 1333, 1336, 87 L.Ed. 1796, 1802 [proof was insufficient to show that active member of Communist Party was not attached to principles of Constitution when naturalized in 1927]; Baumgartner v. United States (1944) 322 U.S. 665, 64 S.Ct. 1240, 88 L.Ed. 1525 [proof was insufficient to show fraud of pro-German applicant in swearing allegiance]; Nowak v. United States (1958) 356 U.S. 660, 78 S.Ct. 955, 2 L.Ed.2d 1048 [answer to ambiguous question regarding political affiliations was insufficient]; *Chaunt v. B. Citizenship.

4. Expatriation.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 195

[§ 195] In General.

(1) Right To Give Up Citizenship. The right of a person to give up citizenship by birth or naturalization has long been recognized. (See Savorgnan v. United States (1950) 338 U.S. 491, 70 S.Ct. 292, 295, 94 L.Ed. 287, 294; cf. Mandoli v. Acheson (1952) 344 U.S. 133, 73 S.Ct. 135, 97 L.Ed. 146 [child born here and taken by parents to Italy did not lose citizenship by remaining there after majority]; on rejection of doctrine by some countries, see Coumas v. Superior Court (1948) 31 C.2d 682, 685, 192 P.2d 449 [citizen of Greece, naturalized in U.S., retained Greek citizenship under Greek law].)

(2) Statutory Provisions. Acts that, if performed voluntarily "with the intention of relinquishing United States nationality," will result in a loss of American citizenship. (8 U.S.C., §1481; see 39 Cal. Western L. Rev. 263 [involuntary expatriation of native-born citizens]; 3C Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §3080 et seq.) These include:

(a) Expatriation by foreign naturalization or oath of allegiance after attaining the age of 18. (14 U.S.C., §1481(a)(1), (2); see Savorgnan v. United States, supra; 15 A.L.R.2d 550.) Even prior to the amendment in 1986 that added the language requiring expatriation to be voluntary and intentional, the Government was required to prove voluntary renunciation. (See Kawakita v. United States (1952) 343 U.S. 717, 72 S.Ct. 950, 959, 96 L.Ed. 1249, 1261; Nishikawa v. Dulles (1958) 356 U.S. 129, 78 S.Ct. 612, 2 L.Ed.2d 659; *Vance v. (b) Expatriation by serving in the armed forces of a foreign state if (1) the armed forces are engaged in hostilities against the U.S., or (2) the person serves as a commissioned or noncommissioned officer. (8 U.S.C., §1481(a)(3).)

(c) Expatriation by "accepting, serving in, or performing the duties of any office, post, or employment" for a foreign government or one of its subdivisions if, after attaining the age of 18, the person (1) acquires the nationality of the foreign nation, or (2) an oath of allegiance for the position is required. (8 U.S.C., §1481(a)(4).)

(d) Expatriation by a formal renunciation of nationality pursuant to a prescribed form. (8 U.S.C., §1481(a)(5), (6).)

(e) Expatriation by conviction for "any act of treason against, or attempting by force to overthrow, or bearing arms against the United States," or for violating specified laws "by engaging in a conspiracy to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them." (8 U.S.C., §1481(a)(7).)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY

B. Citizenship.

4. Expatriation.

b. Acts Not Resulting in Expatriation.

1. Residence in Foreign Country.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 196

[§ 196] Residence in Foreign Country.

(1) Naturalized Citizens. 8 U.S.C., §§1484, 1485 formerly provided that a naturalized citizen would lose his or her citizenship by continuous residence for 3 years in a foreign state of which the person was formerly a national or that was his or her birthplace (with an exception for U.S. employment). This provision was held unconstitutional in Schneider v. Rusk (1964) 377 U.S. 163, 84 S.Ct. 1187, 12 L.Ed.2d 218.

Plaintiff, a German national, acquired derivative American citizenship at age 16 through the naturalization of her mother. Later plaintiff went to Germany, married a German national, had children, continuously lived there for 8 years, and admitted that she had no intention of returning to this country. The U.S. denied her a passport on the ground that she had lost her citizenship. Held, she was a citizen.

(a) The power of Congress to take away citizenship for activities of the citizen is subject to the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause, and although that Amendment contains no express statement on equal protection, due process forbids unjustifiable discrimination. (84 S.Ct. 1190, 12 L.Ed.2d 222; see infra, §694.)

(b) "This statute proceeds on the impermissible assumption that naturalized citizens as a class are less reliable and bear less allegiance to this country than do the native born. This is an assumption that is impossible for us to make. ... A native-born citizen is free to reside abroad indefinitely without suffering loss of citizenship. The discrimination aimed at naturalized citizens drastically limits their rights to live and work abroad in a way that other citizens may. It creates indeed a second-class citizenship. Living abroad, whether the citizen be naturalized or native born, is no badge of lack of allegiance and in no way evidences a voluntary renunciation of nationality and allegiance. It may indeed be compelled by family, business, or other legitimate reasons." (84 S.Ct. 1190, 12 L.Ed.2d 222.)

Three dissenting justices argued that the practice of expatriating naturalized citizens who voluntarily return to their native lands to reside has been consistently approved by the courts and by the United Nations Convention; that state nationals abroad are a source of much international friction, complicating foreign relations; and that plaintiff's dilemma was of her own choosing, deliberately created. She "wishes to retain her citizenship on a standby basis for her own benefit in the event of trouble. There is no constitutional necessity for Congress to accede to her wish." (84 S.Ct. 1195,

(2) Distinction: Citizens by Birth Abroad. Citizenship at birth is accorded by the Fourteenth Amendment to those born here, and by statute to those born abroad of a citizen parent who has resided here. (See supra, §182.) Those who become citizens at birth abroad may also be citizens or nationals of the country of birth. Formerly, statutes provided that dual nationals would be expatriated if (a) they failed to live here continuously for a specified period between ages 14-18, or (b) they resided in their country of nationality for 3 years after age 22 without taking a prior oath of allegiance to the U.S., or (c) their parent lost U.S. citizenship and they failed to establish residence here before age 25.

In Rogers v. Bellei (1971) 401 U.S. 815, 91 S.Ct. 1060, 28 L.Ed.2d 499, plaintiff, age 31, born in Italy of an Italian father and American citizen mother, had resided here only a few months on five brief visits. In this action for an injunction and declaratory relief, he attacked the continuous residency requirement which was then 5 years. Held (5-4), the statutory condition subsequent was valid.

(a) Schneider v. Rusk, supra, and Afroyim v. Rusk (1967) 387 U.S. 253, 87 S.Ct. 1660, 18 L.Ed.2d 757, infra, §197, were inapplicable; in both cases, the citizen had resided here "for years," had "acquired citizenship here by the naturalization process," and was "covered explicitly by the Fourteenth Amendment's first sentence." Plaintiff, in contrast, was not naturalized in the U.S. and had not been subject to U.S. jurisdiction. Hence, he was not "a Fourteenth-Amendment-first-sentence citizen." (91 S.Ct. 1065, 1067, 28 L.Ed.2d 504, 507.)

(b) Given the legitimate concern of Congress over problems of dual nationality, the condition subsequent imposed for retention of statutory citizenship is not unreasonable. (91 S.Ct. 1069, 28 L.Ed.2d 510.)

(c) However: "The plaintiff is not stateless. His Italian citizenship remains. He has lived practically all his life in Italy. He has never lived in this country; although he has visited here five times, the stipulated facts contain no indication that he ever will live here. He asserts no claim of ignorance or of mistake or even of hardship. He was warned several times of the provision of the statute and of his need to take up residence in the United States prior to his 23d birthday." (91 S.Ct. 1071, 28 L.Ed.2d 512.)

The dissenting justices, asserting that the Fourteenth Amendment provides a comprehensive definition of American citizenship, condemned the "narrow view" that plaintiff "was not naturalized 'in the United States,' " and contended that the majority opinion relegated children born to Americans abroad "to the permanent status of second-class citizenship, subject to revocation at the will of Congress." (91 S.Ct. 1073, 28 L.Ed.2d 514.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1596; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 64; 2 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1003; 5 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 589.)

The statutory provisions relating to dual nationals and divestiture of their nationality were subsequently repealed, and no comparable statutory provisions now exist.

2. Voting in Foreign Election.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 197

[§ 197] Voting in Foreign Election.

In Perez v. Brownell (1958) 356 U.S. 44, 78 S.Ct. 568, 2 L.Ed.2d 603, the constitutionality of the former statutory provision for involuntary expatriation by voting in a foreign election was upheld under the power to regulate foreign relations. (See 72 Harv. L. Rev. 167.) In Afroyim v. Rusk (1967) 387 U.S. 253, 87 S.Ct. 1660, 18 L.Ed.2d 757, Perez was overruled.

(a) The theory that Congress has general power to take away an American's citizenship without his or her assent, as an implied attribute of sovereignty, is unsound; the Constitution does not grant this power expressly and none can be implied. (87 S.Ct. 1663, 18 L.Ed.2d 761.)

(b) Forfeiture is contrary to sound policy: "Citizenship is no light trifle to be jeopardized any moment Congress decides to do so under the name of one of its general or implied grants of power. In some instances, loss of citizenship can mean that a man is left without the protection of citizenship in any country in the world--as a man without a country. Citizenship in this Nation is a part of a cooperative affair. Its citizenry is the country and the country is its citizenry. The very nature of our free government makes it completely incongruous to have a rule of law under which a group of citizens temporarily in office can deprive another group of citizens of their citizenship." (87 S.Ct. 1668, 18 L.Ed.2d 767.)

(c) "We hold that the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to, and does, protect every citizen of this Nation against a congressional forcible destruction of his citizenship, whatever his creed, color, or race. Our holding does no more than to give to this citizen that which is his own, a constitutional right to remain a citizen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship." (87 S.Ct. 1668, 18 L.Ed.2d 767.)

The dissent attacked the majority's historical survey as "incomplete," and described its reliance on the language of the Fourteenth Amendment as an "arcane observation that the 'citizenry is the country and the country is its citizenry.'" (87 S.Ct. 1669, 18 L.Ed.2d 768.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1591; 4 Cal. Western L. Rev. 157; 81 Harv. L. Rev. 126; 2 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1003.)

[§ 198] Desertion or Draft Evasion.

(1) Desertion. In Trop v. Dulles (1958) 356 U.S. 86, 78 S.Ct. 590, 2 L.Ed.2d 630, petitioner was convicted of desertion in 1944, and was denied a passport in 1952 under the former statute providing for involuntary expatriation in this event. In his action for declaratory relief, the Government's motion for summary judgment was granted. Held, reversed, by a court divided in its reasons. (a) Four justices thought the provision was a cruel and unusual punishment, violative of the Eighth Amendment. (78 S.Ct. 598, 2 L.Ed.2d 642.) (b) Two of the same four also found unconstitutionality in the statutory delegation to the military of discretionary authority to restore citizenship by allowing the convicted soldier to return to duty. (78 S.Ct. 600, 2 L.Ed.2d 644.) (c) A fifth justice thought the statute could not be justified by the war power. "Congress' asserted power to expatriate the deserter bears to the war powers precisely the same relation as its power to expatriate the tax evader would bear to the taxing power." (78 S.Ct. 605, 2 L.Ed.2d 649.) Four justices dissented. (78 S.Ct. 605, 2 L.Ed.2d 649.) (See 72 Harv. L. Rev. 168.)

(2) Draft Evasion. In Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez (1963) 372 U.S. 144, 83 S.Ct. 554, 9 L.Ed.2d 644, two native born Americans challenged the constitutionality of the statute providing for involuntary expatriation of those who depart from or remain outside the U.S. to avoid military service in time of war or national emergency. M, a dual Mexican national, was convicted of that offense and was ordered deported. C, not a dual national, refused to report for induction; he was indicted but not tried, and later was denied a renewal of his passport. Held, the statute was unconstitutional: (a) in providing for expatriation without any requirement of an administrative or judicial hearing (83 S.Ct. 565, 567, 9 L.Ed.2d 658, 660); and (b) as an additional punishment for draft avoidance in a special category of cases, without providing the safeguards of a criminal prosecution (83 S.Ct. 568, 9 L.Ed.2d 662).

The dissent argued that the statute was not inherently penal in nature, and that the provisions were rationally related to the war power. (83 S.Ct. 584, 589, 9 L.Ed.2d 679, 685.) (See Rusk v. Cort (1962) 369 U.S. 367, 82 S.Ct. 787, 7 L.Ed.2d 809 [procedure for asserting rights as citizen when denied them abroad]; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 195 [Rusk]; 77 *Harv. L. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY C. Unreasonable Search and Seizure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 199

[§ 199] Unreasonable Search and Seizure.

The Fourth Amendment to the federal Constitution provides that the people are entitled "to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures," and that "no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." Almost an identical guarantee is contained in Cal. Const., Art. I, §13. The protection extends to corporations as well as to natural persons. (Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States (1920) 251 U.S. 385, 40 S.Ct. 182, 64 L.Ed. 319.)

The most important application of the right is in connection with the admissibility of evidence obtained, or the attempted production or discovery of evidence, by unconstitutional means. The right of privacy is one of the fundamental rights protected against state action by the Due Process Clause, and the admission of evidence obtained in violation of the guarantee is a denial of due process. (See Mapp v. Ohio (1961) 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 1691, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081, 1090.) The ramifications of this subject are extensive, and have been fully treated in 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §§1 et seq., 29 et seq. (On "special needs" searches generally, see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §292 et seq.; on objections to substance abuse testing generally, see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §321 et seq.; on substance abuse testing as violation of California's right to privacy, see infra, §592 et seq.)

Under the "independent grounds doctrine," more exacting search and seizure standards were imposed in some situations by application of the California Constitution's guarantee. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §30.) However, Proposition 8 (Cal. Const., Art. I, §28(d)) abolished the independent grounds basis for exclusion of evidence, leaving the federal Constitution as interpreted by controlling federal decisions as the sole basis for exclusion. (See 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §13.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Independent grounds: Cal. Const., Art. II, §28(d), was relettered as Cal. Const., Art. II, §28(f), in 2008.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY D. Slavery and Involuntary Servitude. 1. General Rule: No Imprisonment for Debt.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 200

[§ 200] General Rule: No Imprisonment for Debt.

(1) Federal Constitution. Slavery and involuntary servitude are prohibited by the federal Constitution, except as a punishment for crime. (U.S. Const., Thirteenth Amendment; see 4 Rotunda, §19.6 et seq.; 30 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 809, 977 [mandatory community service program for high school students as violation of Thirteenth Amendment prohibition of involuntary servitude]; 68 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1391 [same]; 28 U.S.F. L. Rev. 517 [same]; 28 Pacific L. J. 977, 1015 [unconstitutionality of slavery]; 36 San Diego L. Rev. 397 [Thirteenth Amendment strategy to abolish sweatshops in garment industry]; 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Involuntary Servitude and Peonage §3 et seq.)

(2) California Constitution. The California Constitution also prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude, except to punish crime. (Cal. Const., Art. I, §6.) And "[a] person may not be imprisoned in a civil action for debt or tort, or in peacetime for a militia fine." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §10; see 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §627.)

The California Constitution formerly contained an exception for "fraud," which was deleted as superfluous in 1974. The change was not intended to have any substantive effect. (People v. Bishopp (1976) 56 C.A.3d Supp. 8, 14, 128 C.R. 923, infra, §201.)

The constitutional protection cannot be evaded by the legislative device of making the mere nonpayment of a debt a crime. Hence, a criminal statute may be examined to determine whether the prohibited conduct comes within one of the exceptions to the guarantee. (See In re Trombley (1948) 31 C.2d 801, 804, 193 P.2d 734, infra, §201; People v. Rohe (1952) 114 C.A.2d 605, 610, 250 P.2d 647; People v. Oester (1957) 154 C.A.2d Supp. 888, 890, 316 P.2d 784, infra, §202.)

(3) Peonage. The most important example of conduct prohibited by the Thirteenth Amendment is peonage, i.e., compulsory service of a servant to discharge a debt owed to the master. In the typical case, a servant engages to work, receives an advance on future wages, and is convicted under the statute for quitting work prior to repayment of the advance. The Constitution and the federal Anti-Peonage Act render this kind of statute void. (Bailey v. Alabama (1911) 219 U.S. 219, 31 S.Ct. 145, 151, 55 L.Ed. 191, 200; Pollock v. Williams (1944) 322 U.S. 4, 64 S.Ct. 792, 796, 88 L.Ed. 1095, 1098, 1103; see 45 Am.Jur.2d (1999 ed.), Involuntary Servitude and Peonage §13 et seq.)

(4) Crime of Obtaining Money or Property by Fraud. The constitutional guarantee does not render invalid the various statutes making it criminal to obtain money or property by fraud. (See People v. Perry (1931) 212 C. 186, 195, 298 P. 19 [regulation of fraudulent "cash buyers" of deciduous fruits].) Some of the "peonage" statutes were phrased in this language, i.e., they made it criminal to induce a prospective employer to pay advances in reliance on a promise to perform labor, without an intention to perform the promise; and it has been suggested that such a statute might be upheld if not accompanied by unfair presumptions of unlawful intent. (See Pollock v. Williams, supra, 64 S.Ct. 802, 88 L.Ed. 1106.)

[§ 201] Economic Oppression.

An exception to the constitutional prohibition is recognized where the debtor (e.g., an employer) makes unfair use of his or her superior economic position in refusing to pay a needy creditor (e.g., an employee). This abuse was brought within the former "fraud" proviso of the California Constitution by In re Trombley (1948) 31 C.2d 801, 193 P.2d 734. Lab.C. 216(a) makes it a misdemeanor where an employer, "[h]aving the ability to pay, wilfully refuses to pay wages due and payable after demand has been made." Petitioner, convicted under this section, sought habeas corpus, attacking constitutionality on the ground that the statute did not expressly require an intent to defraud. Held, the statute was valid without this provision; it applies only where an employer who (1) is able to pay, (2) intentionally refuses to pay wages that (3) he or she knows are due.

The court explained the theory of its holding as follows: "The historical background of section 15 of article I [now Art. I, §10] and similar constitutional guarantees of other states clearly shows that the provisions were adopted to protect the poor but honest debtor who is unable to pay his debts, and were not intended to shield a dishonest man who takes an unconscionable advantage of another. ... It has long been recognized that wages are not ordinary debts ... and that, because of the economic position of the average worker and, in particular, his dependence on wages for the necessities of life for himself and his family, it is essential that he receive his pay when it is due. An employer who knows that wages are due, has ability to pay them, and still refuses to pay them, acts against good morals and fair dealing, and necessarily intentionally does the act which prejudices the rights of his employee. Such conduct amounts to a 'case of fraud' within the meaning of the exception to the constitutional prohibition." (31 C.2d 809.) (See People v. Howard (1969) 70 C.2d 618, 623, 75 C.R. 761, 451 P.2d 401 [following Trombley, and upholding P.C. 484b, on obtaining money for construction and wilful failure to use it for payment of laborers and materialmen]; People v. Alves (1957) 155 C.A.2d Supp. 870, 320 P.2d 623 [following Trombley, and upholding Lab.C. 227, punishing wilful failure to make payments into employees' health and welfare fund]; 78 A.L.R.3d 563 [validity and construction of statute providing criminal penalties for failure of contractor who has received payment from owner to pay laborers or materialmen].)

People v. Bishopp (1976) 56 C.A.3d Supp. 8, 128 C.R. 923, held that an employer could be prosecuted for violation of Lab.C. 216(a), supra. The court thought that In re Trombley, supra, was dispositive despite the elimination of the fraud exception from the revised constitutional provision. "It is apparent from Trombley's analysis of the historical background of the constitutional provision that the reach of the provision is no greater than to 'protect the poor but honest debtor' and that the provision was historically not intended to shield one who wilfully and intentionally committed a fraud by refusing to pay just debts." (56 C.A.3d Supp. 14.)

If, however, the statute does not require a showing of intent to defraud, or wilfulness or ability to pay, it will not be sustained. (See People v. Holder (1921) 53 C.A. 45, 50, 199 P. 832 [statute prohibiting contractor from using money received under contract for purposes other than payment of laborers and materialmen]; In re Trombley, supra, 31 C.2d 808 [distinguishing Holder case and In re Crane (1914) 26 C.A. 22, 145 P. 733, on this ground]; People v. Rohe (1952) 114 C.A.2d 605, 609, 250 P.2d 647 [statutes making it criminal for broker or dealer to fail to account and pay promptly for farm products after delivery].)

In People v. Bell (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1030, 53 C.R.2d 156, defendants were convicted of rent skimming in violation of C.C. 890 et seq. (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §234). That law prohibits a person from using rent money during the first year after acquiring property without first applying the money, or an equivalent amount, to payment of encumbrances on the property. Under specified circumstances, violation is a felony misdemeanor. Defendants claimed that their felony punishment amounted to imprisonment for debt. The court rejected the claim. The court canvassed the California cases in which similar claims have been made and concluded that the constitutional provision does not apply in cases of "fraud." (45 C.A.4th 1043, 1045.) In this context, fraud "includes any situation in which a person is able but does not make a payment required by law, that is, he willfully does not make the required payment. ... Since the statutes only criminalize the willful diversion of specific funds actually in the possession of the defendant, they do not violate the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt." (45 C.A.4th 1045, 1046.)

b. Criminal Nonpayment of Fee or Tax.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 202

[§ 202] Criminal Nonpayment of Fee or Tax.

(1) Crime: Activity Without Required Payment or Deposit. Statutes that make it a crime to engage in certain business or professional activities without paying a license tax are familiar. The punishment is not for failure to pay a debt but for carrying on the activity without a license. (See In re Johnson (1920) 47 C.A. 465, 467, 190 P. 852.) This principle has been applied to the requirement of the Financial Responsibility Law that an uninsured driver must, after an automobile accident, deposit security or surrender his or her license. (Veh.C. 16020 et seq., 16070.) In People v. White (1952) 109 C.A.2d 296, 240 P.2d 728, the conviction of defendant for driving while his license was so suspended was affirmed. His imprisonment "was not for debt nor for his failure to deposit security following the accident ... but rather, it was for his affirmative act in driving his automobile at a time when he was forbidden to do so." (109 C.A.2d 297.)

(2) Wilful Failure To Pay Taxes. The suggestion that the constitutional guarantee does not apply to the collection of taxes was repudiated in People v. Oester (1957) 154 C.A.2d Supp. 888, 891, 316 P.2d 784. The court pointed out that the cases cited for this proposition deal with business activity conducted without payment of a tax. But although mere failure to pay a tax cannot be made criminal, the statute is valid if it meets the test of the "fraud" exception (In re Trombley (1948) 31 C.2d 801, 193 P.2d 734, supra, §201), by embodying the element of wilful refusal or wilful neglect. Unemp.Ins.C. 2110, providing a criminal penalty against an employer who "knowingly withholds" workers' contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Fund, "and willfully fails or is willfully financially unable to pay such deductions," was accordingly upheld. The court construed the term "willfully" as modifying "financially unable," hence applying to an employer who wilfully divests himself or herself of the withheld contributions. (See 48 A.L.R.3d 1324 [Constitutional Provision Against Imprisonment for Debt as Applicable to Nonpayment of Tax].)

[§ 203] Other Exceptions.

(1) Crime: Violation of Property Right. Where a debt is secured by a mortgage or other lien on property, a statute may make it criminal to dispose of the security. The crime is the violation of the creditor's property interest, and not the mere failure to pay a debt. (See P.C. 538 et seq.; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §20.)

(2) Imprisonment for Contempt. Where the obligation, although in form a money debt, is created by an order of court to fulfill an obligation created by law rather than contract, the sanction of contempt may be imposed for disobedience. The common examples are refusals to comply with an order to pay spousal or child support. (See Miller v. Superior Court (1937) 9 C.2d 733, 737, 72 P.2d 868; Moss v. Superior Court (1998) 17 C.4th 396, 401, 71 C.R.2d 215, 950 P.2d 59, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §437 [wilful failure of parent to seek and accept employment commensurate with parent's skills and ability in order to comply with child support order]; 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §437; 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §258 et seq.; 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §334.)

(3) Lawful Compulsory Service. Traditionally, certain types of service, or service under special circumstances, may be made compulsory. Thus, the services of a seaman, and the military and naval services, may be compelled for the period of the enlistment or contract. (Robertson v. Baldwin (1897) 165 U.S. 275, 17 S.Ct. 326, 328, 41 L.Ed. 715, 717; see Butler v. Perry (1916) 240 U.S. 328, 36 S.Ct. 258, 60 L.Ed. 672 [enforcement of common law power to compel work on public roads and highways without compensation].)

(4) Criminal Conviction for Nonsupport of Child. P.C. 270 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §143 et seq.) is valid. The statutory obligation of a parent to support a minor child is not a debt, and a prosecution under P.C. 270, like a contempt proceeding, is not a civil action for debt. (Lyons v. Municipal Court (1977) 75 C.A.3d 829, 840, 142 C.R. 449.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY E. Protection to Persons Accused of Crime. 1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 204

[§ 204] In General.

Persons accused of crime may invoke a number of important protections under the federal and state Constitutions. All except two are considered in detail in California Evidence, 4th Edition, and California Criminal Law, 3d Edition. The following outline will indicate the scope of the protections and the place of treatment:

(1) Prohibition of excessive bail. (U.S. Const., Eighth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §12; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §90.)

(2) Writ of habeas corpus. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §9, cl. 2; Cal. Const., Art. I, §11; see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Writs, §10 et seq.)

(3) Speedy and public trial. (U.S. Const., Sixth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§273 et seq., 351 et seq.)

(4) Right to counsel. (U.S. Const., Sixth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §143 et seq.)

(5) Right to compel attendance of witnesses. (U.S. Const., Sixth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §6 et seq.)

(6) Right to be confronted with adverse witnesses. (U.S. Const., Sixth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 3 Cal. Evidence (4th), Presentation at Trial, §14 et seq.)

(7) Right to view the scene of a crime, when the jury is taken there. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Demonstrative, Experimental, and Scientific Evidence, §28.)

(8) Protection against unreasonable search and seizure. (U.S. Const., Fourth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §13; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §29 et seq.)

(9) Privilege against self-incrimination. (U.S. Const., Fifth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §355 et seq.)

(10) Right to jury trial. (See infra, §§208, 213.)

(11) Defense of once in jeopardy. (U.S. Const., Fifth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §15; see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Defenses, §103 et seq.)

(12) Protection against cruel and unusual punishments. (U.S. Const., Eighth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §17; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §109.)

(13) Protection against excessive fines. (U.S. Const., Eighth Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §17; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §§207, 208.)

(14) Prohibition of ex post facto laws. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §9, cl. 3, Art. I, §10; Cal. Const., Art. I, §9; see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §10 et seq.)

(15) Prohibition of bills of attainder. (See infra, §205 et seq.)

Many of these rights and some others are considered so fundamental that they are protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment against infringement by state action. (See infra, §220.) However, a few procedural "rights" have not been held sufficiently "fundamental" to come within the protection of the Due Process Clause; e.g., (1) charge by indictment--information may be substituted (Cal. Const., Art. I, §14; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §169); (2) appeal from judgment of conviction (see 6 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Appeal, §5 et seq.).

2. Bill of Attainder.

a. Nature of Prohibition.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 205

[§ 205] Nature of Prohibition.

A bill of attainder is a legislative act that inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. Both Constitutions prohibit this kind of statute. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §9, cl. 3, Art. I, §10; Cal. Const., Art. I, §9; see Pierce v. Carskadon (1872) 83 U.S. 234, 21 L.Ed. 276 [state statute deprived persons who supported the confederacy in the Civil War of the right to bring certain actions in the courts]; United States v. Brown (1965) 381 U.S. 437, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 1711, 14 L.Ed.2d 484, 487, infra, §206; Nixon v. Administrator of General Services (1977) 433 U.S. 425, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 2803, 53 L.Ed.2d 867, 907; 2 Rotunda, §15.9(c); 2 Tribe, §10-4 et seq.; 5 Hastings Const. L. Rev. 641 [discussing whether utility is protected individual]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §671 et seq.)

In United States v. Lovett (1946) 328 U.S. 303, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 1078, 90 L.Ed. 1252, 1259, a congressional committee investigated alleged un-American activities of federal employees. The Appropriation Act was thereafter amended to provide that no further salary or other compensation should be paid to three named individuals unless they should thereafter be reappointed and confirmed by the Senate. Held, the provision was unconstitutional. Its effect was to permanently prevent these persons from ever holding a government job; and, whether accomplished by direct prohibition or, as here, indirectly by cutting off their pay, this was punishment of a severe type. The doctrine of Cummings v. Missouri (1866) 71 U.S. 277, 18 L.Ed. 356, was restated as follows: "[L]egislative acts, no matter what their form, that apply either to named individuals or to easily ascertainable members of a group in such a way as to inflict punishment on them without a judicial trial are bills of attainder prohibited by the Constitution." (66 S.Ct. 1079, 90 L.Ed. 1259.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY
E. Protection to Persons Accused of Crime.
2. Bill of Attainder.
b. Crime of Communist Holding Union Office.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 206

[§ 206] Crime of Communist Holding Union Office.

The rule stated in United States v. Lovett (1946) 328 U.S. 303, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 90 L.Ed. 1252, supra, §205, was given a far-reaching application in United States v. Brown (1965) 381 U.S. 437, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 14 L.Ed.2d 484. Section 504 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C., §504) replaced the Taft-Hartley Act's non-Communist oath with a prohibition against a Communist serving as a union officer. Brown, an avowed and long time Communist, and an elected officer of the I.L.W.U., was convicted under the Act. Held, the statute was an unconstitutional bill of attainder.

(a) The constitutional provision is "an implementation of the separation of powers, a general safeguard against legislative exercise of the judicial function, or more simply--trial by legislature." (85 S.Ct. 1711, 14 L.Ed.2d 488.)

(b) Section 504 is, under the Lovett test, a bill of attainder. "The statute does not set forth a generally applicable rule decreeing that any person who commits certain acts or possesses certain characteristics (acts and characteristics which, in Congress' view, make them likely to initiate political strikes) shall not hold union office, and leave to courts and juries the job of deciding what persons have committed the specified acts or possess the specified characteristics. Instead, it designates in no uncertain terms the persons who possess the feared characteristics and therefore cannot hold union office without incurring criminal liability--members of the Communist Party." (85 S.Ct. 1715, 14 L.Ed.2d 492.)

(c) American Communications Assn., C.I.O. v. Douds (1950) 339 U.S. 382, 70 S.Ct. 674, 94 L.Ed. 925, infra, §484, is not controlling, for the statutes are different, and the prohibited punishment need not be retribution--it may be deterrent and preventive. (85 S.Ct. 1720, 14 L.Ed.2d 496, 497.)

(d) The Lovett case cannot be distinguished on the ground that there three identified individuals were singled out; the Constitution is also violated by a bill of attainder directed against a group by description. (85 S.Ct. 1721, 14 L.Ed.2d 499.)

(e) The conclusion hedges slightly: "We do not hold today that Congress cannot weed dangerous persons out of the labor movement, any more than the Court held in Lovett that subversives must be permitted to hold sensitive government positions. Rather, we make again the point made in Lovett: that Congress must accomplish such results by rules of general applicability. It cannot specify the people upon whom the sanction it prescribes is to be levied. Under our Constitution, Congress possesses full legislative authority, but the task of adjudication must be left to other tribunals." (85 S.Ct. 1722, 14 L.Ed.2d 499.)

Four dissenters argue that the opinion is illogical and unsound; it overrules the Doubs case; it invalidates conflict-of-interest statutes denying positions of public importance to groups of persons identified by their business affiliations; it also invalidates statutes disqualifying felons from occupying certain positions; and that section 504 is not an invalid punitive measure but a reasonable and valid regulation. (85 S.Ct. 1727 et seq., 14 L.Ed.2d 501 et seq.) (See 55 Cal. L. Rev. 212; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 120.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY E. Protection to Persons Accused of Crime. 2. Bill of Attainder. c. Valid Legislation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 207

[§ 207] Valid Legislation.

(1) Punishment Is Test. "In determining whether legislation which bases a disqualification on the happening of a certain past event imposes a punishment, the Court has sought to discern the objects on which the enactment in question was focused. Where the source of legislative concern can be thought to be the activity or status from which the individual is barred, the disqualification is not punishment even though it may bear harshly upon one affected. The contrary is the case where the statute in question is evidently aimed at the person or class of persons disqualified." (Flemming v. Nestor (1960) 363 U.S. 603, 80 S.Ct. 1367, 1374, 4 L.Ed.2d 1435, 1446.) Hence, statutory penalties imposed for a proper public purpose are not objectionable. (See Department of Social Welfare v. Gardiner (1949) 94 C.A.2d 431, 432, 210 P.2d 855.)

(2) Denial of Benefit. In Flemming v. Nestor, supra (a 5-4 decision), appellee, an alien immigrant, came here in 1913 and became eligible for Social Security benefits in 1955. But the statute was amended in 1954 to provide for termination of benefits for aliens deported for specified reasons, including Communist Party membership; and petitioner was deported in 1956 for such membership from 1933 to 1939. Held, the statute was not a bill of attainder; the sanction was merely the denial of a noncontractual governmental benefit, not an affirmative disability or restraint. (80 S.Ct. 1376, 4 L.Ed.2d 1448.)

In Selective Service System v. Minnesota Public Interest Research Group (1984) 468 U.S. 841, 104 S.Ct. 3348, 82 L.Ed.2d 632, section 1113 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1983 (50 U.S.C. Appx., §462(f)), which denies federal financial assistance to male students who fail to register for the draft, was upheld. As in Flemming v. Nestor, the sanction was not a punishment but the mere denial of a noncontractual governmental benefit. Moreover, the deprivation was not permanent. Students may become eligible for aid by registering later. (104 S.Ct. 3356, 82 L.Ed.2d 644.) Thus, "Congress sought, not to punish anyone, but to promote compliance with the draft registration requirement and fairness in the allocation of scarce federal resources." (104 S.Ct. 3357, 82 L.Ed.2d 646.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 87.)

(3) Loyalty Regulations. Garner v. Board of Public Works of Los Angeles (1951) 341 U.S. 716, 71 S.Ct. 909, 913, 95 L.Ed. 1317, 1322, infra, §482, held that governmental employees may be subjected to the requirements of a loyalty oath and affidavit of non-membership in the Communist Party. These regulations merely impose standards of qualification and eligibility for employment.

The attack on a statute requiring registration of the Communist Party was rejected in Communist Party of the United States of America v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1961) 367 U.S. 1, 81 S.Ct. 1357, 6 L.Ed.2d 625, infra, §477. "The Act is not a bill of attainder. It attaches not to specified organizations but to described activities in which an organization may or may not engage. The singling out of an individual for legislatively prescribed punishment constitutes an attainder whether the individual is called by name or described in terms of conduct which, because it is past conduct, operates only as a designation of particular persons. ... The Subversive Activities Control Act is not of that kind. ... Present activity constitutes an operative element to which the statute attaches legal consequences, not merely a point of reference for the ascertainment of particular persons ineluctably designated by the legislature." (81 S.Ct. 1405, 6 L.Ed.2d 683.) (See De Veau v. Braisted (1960) 363 U.S. 144, 80 S.Ct. 1146, 1155, 4 L.Ed.2d 1109, 1120, supra, §66 [statute involved no further implications of guilt]; but see supra, §206.)

(4) Failure To Appropriate Funds. Legislative failure to appropriate funds for salary increases of public employees (here, increases for academic personnel of University of California and California State Colleges, requested by Regents and Trustees) is not punishment within the meaning of the Constitution. (California State Employees' Assn. v. Flournoy (1973) 32 C.A.3d 219, 225, 108 C.R. 251 [distinguishing United States v. Lovett (1946) 328 U.S. 303, 66 S.Ct. 1073, 90 L.Ed. 1252, supra, §205, which contemplated salary appropriations and expressly forbade their use as compensation to named employees].)

(2) Action Based on Statute. The constitutional guarantee is applicable to actions for damages where the cause of action is based on statute but involves rights and remedies of the sort typically enforced in an action at law. (*Curtis v. (3) Landlord's Summary Proceeding Against Tenant. On the analogy of a common law action to recover possession of real property, the tenant defendant in a summary statutory eviction proceeding was held entitled to a jury trial. (Pernell v. Southall Realty (1974) 416 U.S. 363, 94 S.Ct. 1723, 1729, 1734, 40 L.Ed.2d 198, 208, 213 [District of Columbia statute].)

United States v. Wood (1936) 299 U.S. 123, 57 S.Ct. 177, 179, 81 L.Ed. 78, 80, held that federal Government employees could be made eligible for jury service in criminal cases in the District of Columbia without violating the guarantee. And in Frazier v. United States (1948) 335 U.S. 497, 69 S.Ct. 201, 205, 93 L.Ed. 187, 196, a conviction for violation of the federal Narcotics Act was upheld, although the jury was composed solely of these employees. Several decisions have held the selection of juries improper, not on constitutional grounds, but in the exercise of the Supreme Court's "power of supervision over the administration of justice in the federal courts." (See Glasser v. United States (1942) 315 U.S. 60, 62 S.Ct. 457, 471, 86 L.Ed. 680, 707 ["blue-ribbon" juries]; *Thiel v. Southern Pac. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

F. Jury Trial.

1. In Federal Courts.

b. Exceptions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 211

[§ 211] Exceptions.

(1) In General. The purpose of the constitutional amendments was not to enlarge the right to a jury trial, but to protect the right in cases in which it was then recognized, and in similar future cases. Thus, suits in equity and admiralty were exceptions to the rule requiring a jury trial previous to the adoption of the Constitution, and the requirement does not apply to them. (Parsons v. Bedford, Breedlove & Robeson (1830) 28 U.S. 433, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L.Ed. 732, 737; see 73 Harv. L. Rev. 186.) Likewise, offenses against the law of war may be tried by a military commission. (Ex parte Quirin (1942) 317 U.S. 1, 63 S.Ct. 2, 16, 87 L.Ed. 3, 18.) (For proposal to eliminate jury trials in complex civil litigation, see 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 189.)

(2) Criminal Contempt. Traditionally, trials for criminal contempt have been held outside the constitutional guarantee. (See In re Debs (1895) 158 U.S. 564, 15 S.Ct. 900, 910, 39 L.Ed. 1092, 1106; United States v. Barnett (1964) 376 U.S. 681, 84 S.Ct. 984, 990, 12 L.Ed.2d 23, 31.) But the rule today is that there is a federal constitutional right to a jury trial in criminal contempt cases involving serious punishment. (See Bloom v. Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 194, 88 S.Ct. 1477, 1480, 20 L.Ed.2d 522, 526; cf. Frank v. United States (1969) 395 U.S. 147, 89 S.Ct. 1503, 1505, 23 L.Ed.2d 162, 166 [contempt conviction for violating injunction, 3 years probation; held a petty offense and no jury required]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §439.) However, the imposition of a fine, even as high as $ 10,000, against an unincorporated labor union, does not constitute serious punishment, and no jury trial is required. (Muniz v. Hoffman (1975) 422 U.S. 454, 95 S.Ct. 2178, 2190, 45 L.Ed.2d 319, 335.)

(3) Petty Offenses. In certain classes of minor or "petty" criminal offenses, triable prior to the adoption of the Constitution before inferior officers or tribunals, and involving punishment by a fine only, the constitutional guarantee does not apply, i.e., they are not "crimes" within the meaning of Article III. This was held to be the case where a statute made it an offense knowingly to purchase oleomargarine or receive it for sale and fixed a penalty of $ 50. (Schick v. United States (1904) 195 U.S. 65, 24 S.Ct. 826, 827, 49 L.Ed. 99, 101.)

In District of Columbia v. Colts (1930) 282 U.S. 63, 51 S.Ct. 52, 75 L.Ed. 177, defendant was charged in a police court with violating a statute by operating a motor vehicle on certain streets at over 22 miles an hour "in such a manner as to endanger property and individuals," the offense being punishable by either fine or imprisonment. Held, he was entitled to a jury trial; the crime was "malum in se," a grave and not a petty offense. (51 S.Ct. 53, 77 L.Ed. 209, 221.)

But in District of Columbia v. Clawans (1937) 300 U.S. 617, 57 S.Ct. 660, 81 L.Ed. 843, defendant was convicted of engaging in the business of a dealer in secondhand personal property without a license. The maximum punishment prescribed by the statute was a $ 300 fine or 90 days' imprisonment, and there was no absolute right of appeal. Held, a jury trial could be denied. The offense was not indictable at common law, but was merely an infringement of local police regulations, and the penalty was not so serious as to preclude summary proceedings. (57 S.Ct. 662, 81 L.Ed. 846.) (See 13 So. Cal. L. Rev. 33; 17 So. Cal. L. Rev. 41.)

(4) Statutory Public Rights Adjudicated by Administrative Agency. The federal Occupational Safety and Health Act (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §364 et seq.) created a new statutory duty to maintain safe and healthful working conditions and a new administrative agency--the Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission. The government was authorized to enforce the Act by proceedings before the Commission to obtain abatement orders and civil penalties. In Atlas Roofing Co. v. Occupational Safety & Health Review Com. (1977) 430 U.S. 442, 97 S.Ct. 1261, 51 L.Ed.2d 464, petitioners were charged with serious violations, and after a hearing were assessed civil penalties of $ 5,000 and $ 600. They sought judicial review, contending that a proceeding by the government to collect a statutory penalty is in substance a common law suit for a money judgment, and that to commit the adjudication to an administrative agency without a jury trial was a violation of the Seventh Amendment. Held, the Seventh Amendment was not applicable.

(a) The earlier cases, as explained in Curtis v. Loether (1974) 415 U.S. 189, 94 S.Ct. 1005, 1009, 39 L.Ed.2d 260, 266, supra §208, and Pernell v. Southall Realty (1974) 416 U.S. 363, 94 S.Ct. 1723, 1729, 1734, 40 L.Ed.2d 198, 208, 213, supra, §208, held that when Congress creates new statutory "public rights," it may assign their adjudication to an administrative agency with which a jury trial would be incompatible. (97 S.Ct. 1269, 51 L.Ed.2d 475.)

(b) Fact-finding was not the exclusive province of the jury at the time of adoption of the Seventh Amendment; courts of equity and admiralty decided fact questions. And the Seventh Amendment was declaratory of the existing law, requiring only that a jury trial in suits at common law be "preserved." (97 S.Ct. 1271, 51 L.Ed.2d 478.)

(c) "[T]he right to a jury trial turns not solely on the nature of the issue to be resolved, but also on the forum in which it is to be resolved. Congress found the common law and other existing remedies for work injuries resulting from unsafe working conditions to be inadequate to protect the Nation's working men and women. It created a new cause of action, and remedies therefor, unknown to the common law, and placed their enforcement in a tribunal supplying speedy and expert resolutions of the issues involved. The Seventh Amendment is no bar to the creation of new rights or to their enforcement outside the regular courts of law." (97 S.Ct. 1271, 51 L.Ed.2d 479.) (See 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1013 [validity of public rights doctrine in light of historical rationale of Seventh Amendment].)

Witkin Summary of California Law IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY

F. Jury Trial.

1. In Federal Courts.

c. Waiver of Jury.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 212

[§ 212] Waiver of Jury.

(1) Effective Waiver in Criminal Trial. The defendant's waiver of a jury trial, or his or her agreement to less than 12 jurors, will be effective where it is knowingly and intelligently made in open court. (See Patton v. United States (1930) 281 U.S. 276, 50 S.Ct. 253, 254, 263, 74 L.Ed. 854, 857, 870 [trial by 11 jurors]; Adams v. United States (1942) 317 U.S. 269, 63 S.Ct. 236, 240, 87 L.Ed. 268, 272 [personal waiver by intelligent defendant]; 97 A.L.R.3d 1253 [validity of accused's waiver of unanimous verdict].)

(2) No Absolute Right To Waive in Criminal Trial. The federal Constitution merely provides that the trial "shall be by jury." (U.S. Const., Art. III, §2.) The Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure allow the defendant to waive a jury with the approval of the court and consent of the government. In Singer v. United States (1965) 380 U.S. 24, 85 S.Ct. 783, 13 L.Ed.2d 630, petitioners, charged with 30 counts of mail fraud, offered to waive a jury "for the purpose of shortening the trial." The judge was willing but the government refused, and defendant was tried by a jury and convicted of 29 counts. On certiorari, he contended that the constitutional right of trial by jury carried with it the correlative right of waiver and trial by the judge alone if he desired it. Held, conviction affirmed. Neither the English common law nor the colonial experience justifies this interpretation of the constitutional guarantee. Nor is there any due process objection. The ability to waive a constitutional right does not ordinarily carry with it the right to insist on the opposite; e.g., a defendant may waive his or her right to public trial but cannot insist on a private trial; the defendant may waive his or her right to confrontation but cannot compel the government to try the case by stipulation. Moreover, the trial is an adversary proceeding, and the government as a litigant has a legitimate interest in seeing that the case is tried before the tribunal the Constitution regards as most likely to produce a fair result.

The Court added a qualifying dictum: "We need not determine in this case whether there might be some circumstances where a defendant's reasons for wanting to be tried by a judge alone are so compelling that the Government's insistence on trial by jury would result in the denial to the defendant of an impartial trial." (85 S.Ct. 791, 13 L.Ed.2d 639.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 174; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 189.)

F. Jury Trial.

2. In State Courts.

a. Right to Jury Trial.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 213

[§ 213] Right to Jury Trial.

The same is true of criminal contempt where it involves a serious punishment. (Bloom v. Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 194, 88 S.Ct. 1477, 1480, 20 L.Ed.2d 522, 526, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §439; see 82 Harv. L. Rev. 153.)

(2) California Constitution. The California Constitution provides that the common law right of trial by jury is secured, subject to the following qualifications: (a) In civil actions and cases of misdemeanor, the parties may agree on any number less than 12; (b) in civil actions, three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict; (c) in any action, civil or criminal, a jury trial may be waived. (Cal. Const., Art. I, §16; on the right and waiver in criminal cases, see

5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§435 et seq., 452 et seq.; on the right and waiver in civil cases, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§89, 113 et seq.)

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1989) 49 C.3d 1230, 265 C.R. 144, 783 P.2d 731, 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §199, the court held that a defendant in a contempt proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Law (P.C. 11225 et seq.) was entitled to a jury trial. The Constitution does not distinguish between "serious" and "petty" criminal offenses, and the right to a jury extends to all misdemeanors. Hence, a proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Law, with a maximum penalty of fine or county jail sentence comparable to that imposed for a misdemeanor, calls for a jury trial. (49 C.3d 1244.)

F. Jury Trial.

2. In State Courts.

b. Nature of Guarantee.

1. California Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 214

[§ 214] California Constitution.

(1) Kind of Jury Trial. The type of jury trial guaranteed by the California Constitution is that which existed at common law, and the Legislature cannot abridge it. The essential elements of a jury in a criminal trial for a felony are (a) the number (12 persons), (b) impartiality, and (c) unanimity of verdict. (People v. Galloway (1927) 202 C. 81, 92, 259 P. 332; People v. Superior Court (Thomas) (1967) 67 C.2d 929, 932, 64 C.R. 327, 434 P.2d 623; see Dorshkind v. Harry N. Koff Agency (1976) 64 C.A.3d 302, 308, 134 C.R. 344 [trial jury's selection of its own foreman is element of constitutional right]; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §437.)

(2) Juror Qualifications. Although in People v. Powell (1891) 87 C. 348, 354, 25 P. 481, it was said that the California Constitution guarantees a right to a jury selected from the "vicinage or county," there is no such express requirement in the Constitution, and later decisions have repudiated the theory. (See People v. Prather (1901) 134 C. 386, 66 P. 483; People v. Richardson (1934) 138 C.A. 404, 406, 32 P.2d 433; 27 West L.A. L. Rev. 165 [Seventh Amendment and jury from the vicinage].) The qualifications of jurors are subject to legislative control. (In re Mana (1918) 178 C. 213, 214, 172 P. 968; see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §442 et seq.; 7 *Cal. - F. Jury Trial.
 - 2. In State Courts.
 - b. Nature of Guarantee.
 - 2. Federal Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 215

[§ 215] Federal Constitution.

(1) In General. The right to a jury in criminal cases, as an element of federal due process (see supra, §213), does not require a jury of 12 members. (Williams v. Florida (1970) 399 U.S. 78, 90 S.Ct. 1893, 1898, 26 L.Ed.2d 446, 452, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §440 [state criminal jury of six members upheld].) Nor does it require a unanimous verdict. (Apodaca v. Oregon (1972) 406 U.S. 404, 92 S.Ct. 1628, 1632, 32 L.Ed.2d 184, 189, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §441 [10-2 verdict upheld]; see Johnson v. Louisiana (1972) 406 U.S. 356, 92 S.Ct. 1620, 1624, 32 L.Ed.2d 152, 157, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §441 [9-3 verdict upheld]; on size of jury, see also supra, §210 and infra, §216; 11 Pacific L. J. 967 [arguing that deaf persons should be eligible to serve on juries].)

(2) Fair Cross Section of Community. A "fair cross section of the community" on venires, panels, or lists from which trial juries are drawn is a fundamental element of the constitutional right to a jury trial. "The purpose of a jury is to guard against the exercise of arbitrary power--to make available the commonsense judgment of the community as a hedge against the overzealous or mistaken prosecutor and in preference to the professional or perhaps overconditioned or biased response of a judge. ... This prophylactic vehicle is not provided if the jury pool is made up of only special segments of the populace or if large, distinctive groups are excluded from the pool. Community participation in the administration of the criminal law, moreover, is not only consistent with our democratic heritage but is also critical to public confidence in the fairness of the criminal justice system. Restricting jury service to only special groups or excluding identifiable segments playing major roles in the community cannot be squared with the constitutional concept of a jury trial." (Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 95 S.Ct. 692, 698, 42 L.Ed.2d 690, 698, infra, §767; see 89 Harv. L. Rev. 95.)

3. Jury of Less Than Six Is Invalid.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 216

[§ 216] Jury of Less Than Six Is Invalid.

In Ballew v. Georgia (1978) 435 U.S. 223, 98 S.Ct. 1029, 55 L.Ed.2d 234, the Court held unconstitutional a Georgia statute dealing with a nonpetty offense (misdemeanor of distributing obscene materials, possible penalty of over 6 months' imprisonment) and providing for trial by a jury of five persons. The validity of a six-member jury had been upheld in Williams v. Florida (1970) 399 U.S. 78, 90 S.Ct. 1893, 26 L.Ed.2d 446, supra, §215; the issue of whether a smaller number would satisfy the constitutional guarantee had been left open. (98 S.Ct. 1034, 55 L.Ed.2d 241.) But the Court here, mainly relying on empirical data in a large number of scholarly writings (see 98 S.Ct. 1034, 55 L.Ed.2d 241, footnote 10), found a substantial threat to the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment guarantees by reason of the following:

First, progressively smaller juries are less likely to foster effective group deliberation. (98 S.Ct. 1035, 55 L.Ed.2d 242.)

Second, there are doubts as to the accuracy of the results achieved by smaller and smaller panels. (98 S.Ct. 1036, 55 L.Ed.2d 243.)

Third, verdicts in criminal cases will vary as juries become smaller and the variance amounts to an imbalance to the detriment of the defense. (98 S.Ct. 1037, 55 L.Ed.2d 244.)

Fourth, smaller juries raise problems of representation of minority groups in the community. (98 S.Ct. 1037, 55 L.Ed.2d 244.)

Fifth, research has revealed disparities in verdicts reached by larger and smaller juries. (98 S.Ct. 1037, 55 L.Ed.2d 245.)

The Court concludes: "We readily admit that we do not pretend to discern a clear line between six members and five. But the assembled data raise substantial doubt about the reliability and appropriate representation of panels smaller than six. Because of the fundamental importance of the jury trial to the American system of criminal justice, any further reduction that promotes inaccurate and possibly biased decisionmaking, that causes untoward differences in verdicts, and that prevents juries from truly representing their communities, attains constitutional significance." (98 S.Ct. 1038, 55 L.Ed.2d 246.) The states use juries of less than 12 primarily for administrative reasons, and the savings in a reduction from six to five would be minimal. Hence, no sufficient interest of the state justified the reduction. (98 S.Ct. 1041, 55 L.Ed.2d 249.) (See Burch v. Louisiana (1979) 441 U.S. 130, 99 S.Ct. 1623, 60 L.Ed.2d 96, 103 [conviction by nonunanimous six-person jury in state criminal trial for nonpetty offense was invalid]; Brown v. Louisiana (1980) 447 U.S. 323, 100 S.Ct. 2214, 2221, 65 L.Ed.2d 159, 167 [Burch rule is retroactive].)

F. Jury Trial. 2. In State Courts. c. Exceptions.

[§ 217] Exceptions.

(1) Criminal Trial for Petty Offense. Petty offenses are not within the federal constitutional requirements for jury trial. (See Baldwin v. New York (1970) 399 U.S. 66, 90 S.Ct. 1886, 1888, 26 L.Ed.2d 437, 440, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §438 [divided court recognizing petty offense exception, but holding that possibility of 1-year sentence requires jury trial]; Blanton v. North Las Vegas, Nevada (1989) 489 U.S. 538, 109 S.Ct. 1289, 1293, 1294, 103 L.Ed.2d 550, 556, 558 [offense punishable by sentence of 6 months or less is presumed to be petty; additional penalties for first offense of driving under the influence (90-day license suspension, $ 1,000 fine, alternative of 48 hours community service in distinctive clothing) not severe enough to make offense "serious"].) However, there is no "petty offense" exception in the California Constitution. (See Mitchell v. Superior Court (1989) 49 C.3d 1230, 1242, 265 C.R. 144, 783 P.2d 731, supra, §213.)

(2) Trial for Infraction. "Infractions" not punishable by imprisonment (P.C. 19c) are outside the jury trial guarantee. (People v. Oppenheimer (1974) 42 C.A.3d Supp. 4, 11, 116 C.R. 795 [violation of Veh.C. 21453, failure to stop for traffic signal].)

(3) Juvenile Court Proceeding Involving Charge of Crime. There is no constitutional right to a jury trial in juvenile court even though the minor is brought before the court on a charge of commission of a criminal act. (See McKeiver v. Pennsylvania (1971) 403 U.S. 528, 91 S.Ct. 1976, 1986, 29 L.Ed.2d 647, 661.)

(4) Paternity Suit. There is no right to a jury in an action to establish paternity and enforce child support. (El Dorado v. Schneider (1987) 191 C.A.3d 1263, 1280, 237 C.R. 51.)

(5) Equity Suits. There is no right to a common law jury in suits in equity. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §113 et seq.; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §101 et seq.)

(6) Special Proceedings. Special proceedings, as distinguished from actions, do not require a jury trial. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§13, 14; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §104.)

(7) Special Constitutional Tribunals. The federal Constitution does not prevent the states from abolishing jury trials in civil cases, and in California, this has been done for two important types of proceedings by amendment of our Constitution to provide for special tribunals: (a) The Workers' Compensation Appeals Board. (Cal. Const., Art. XIV, §4; see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §2.) (b) The Public Utilities Commission. (Cal. Const., Art. XII, §5, 6; see infra, §1084.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY
G. Fundamental Rights Under Due Process Clause.
1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 218

[§ 218] In General.

Most of the rights and liberties regarded as fundamental are protected against national interference by the federal Constitution, and against state interference by state Constitutions. Occasionally, however, cases arise in which the highest state court refuses to give relief against what appears to be a denial of these rights or liberties. In a number of instances, particular rights and liberties have been held by the U.S. Supreme Court to constitute elements of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment, and hence available in state proceedings regardless of whether they are specified in the state Constitution, and irrespective of any limitations imposed by state law or applied by state courts. The ultimate result is to permit a review, and if necessary an independent examination of the record, by the U.S. Supreme Court, of state court decisions in these cases. (See Palko v. Connecticut (1937) 302 U.S. 319, 58 S.Ct. 149, 82 L.Ed. 288; Benton v. Maryland (1969) 395 U.S. 784, 89 S.Ct. 2056, 2062, 23 L.Ed.2d 707, 716; infra, §219 et seq.)

In Palko v. Connecticut, supra, 58 S.Ct. 152, 82 L.Ed. 292, the test laid down was whether the particular right is basic in a free society--"of the very essence of a scheme of ordered liberty"--so that to abolish it is to violate a "principle of justice so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental." Thus, there was no fixed catalogue of fundamental rights, for the line was not permanently drawn at any one time. A flexible and progressive course of decision was to be expected, the rules being developed by the traditional method of "inclusion and exclusion." (Wolf v. Colorado (1949) 338 U.S. 25, 69 S.Ct. 1359, 1361, 93 L.Ed.2d 1782, 1785; see Bartkus v. Illinois (1959) 359 U.S. 121, 79 S.Ct. 676, 678, 3 L.Ed.2d 684, 687.)

Within this test the states were free to develop their own procedures. (See Bute v. Illinois (1948) 333 U.S. 640, 68 S.Ct. 763, 772, 92 L.Ed. 986, 995 ["the Fourteenth Amendment does not ... have the effect of requiring the several states to conform the procedure of their state criminal trials to the precise procedure of the federal courts, even to the extent that the procedure of the federal courts is prescribed by the Federal Constitution or Bill of Rights"]; Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 1678, 91 L.Ed. 1903, 1912.; Williams v. New York (1949) 337 U.S. 241, 69 S.Ct. 1079, 1085, 93 L.Ed. 1337, 1344.) (On repudiation of Palko test, see infra, §219.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY
G. Fundamental Rights Under Due Process Clause.
2. Incorporation Theory.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 219

[§ 219] Incorporation Theory.

(1) Early Rejection of Incorporation Theory. The argument has been constantly made that every restriction on the federal government contained in the Bill of Rights (first eight amendments) is, by virtue of the Fourteenth Amendment, also a restriction on the states. "The notion that the 'due process of law' guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment is shorthand for the first eight amendments of the Constitution and thereby incorporates them has been rejected by this Court again and again, after impressive consideration. ... The issue is closed." (Wolf v. Colorado (1949) 338 U.S. 25, 69 S.Ct. 1359, 1360, 93 L.Ed. 1782, 1785; see Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 1676, 91 L.Ed. 1903, 1909; Bartkus v. Illinois (1959) 359 U.S. 121, 79 S.Ct. 676, 678, 3 L.Ed.2d 684, 687.)

(2) View of Later Decisions. The Supreme Court's majority has steadily added rights to the list brought under the Fourteenth Amendment (see infra, §220 et seq.), and a strong minority has argued for full incorporation. (See Malloy v. Hogan (1964) 378 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1489, 1491, 12 L.Ed.2d 653, 656.)

In Pointer v. Texas (1965) 380 U.S. 400, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 13 L.Ed.2d 923, the Court held that the Sixth Amendment right of confrontation was protected (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §531). In light of "opinions holding various provisions of the Bill of Rights applicable to the States by virtue of the Fourteenth Amendment," statements made "generally declaring that the Sixth Amendment does not apply to the States can no longer be regarded as the law." (85 S.Ct. 1069, 13 L.Ed.2d 927.) (See Klopper v. North Carolina (1967) 386 U.S. 213, 87 S.Ct. 988, 995, 18 L.Ed.2d 1, 10 [concurring opinion criticizing doctrine].)

(3) Repudiation of Palko Test. Palko v. Connecticut (1937) 302 U.S. 319, 58 S.Ct. 149, 152, 82 L.Ed. 288, 292, supra, §218, was repudiated, and its test virtually abolished, in Benton v. Maryland (1969) 395 U.S. 784, 89 S.Ct. 2056, 2070, 23 L.Ed.2d 707, 724: "[W]e today find that the double jeopardy prohibition of the Fifth Amendment represents a fundamental ideal in our constitutional heritage, and that it should apply to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment. Insofar as it is inconsistent with this holding, Palko v. Connecticut is overruled." (89 S.Ct. 2062, 23 L.Ed.2d 716.) Palko represented the approach of earlier cases already overruled. Hence: "The validity of petitioner's larceny conviction must be judged not by the watered-down standard enunciated in Palko, but under this Court's interpretations of the Fifth Amendment double jeopardy provision." (89 S.Ct. 2063, 23 L.Ed.2d 717.) (See 2 Rotunda, §15.6; 2 Tribe, §11-2 et seq.)

IV. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS GENERALLY
G. Fundamental Rights Under Due Process Clause.
3. Rights of Criminal Defendants.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 220

[§ 220] Rights of Criminal Defendants.

The rights of criminal defendants protected by the Due Process Clause from impairment in federal or state criminal trials are principally covered in California Criminal Law and California Evidence. The following are illustrative:

(1) Protection against admission of illegally obtained evidence. (Mapp v. Ohio (1961) 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081; see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §5.)

(15) Right to a hearing before revocation of probation or parole. (People v. Youngs (1972) 23 C.A.3d 180, 188, 99 C.R. 901, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §580 [probation]; *Morrissey v. G. Fundamental Rights Under Due Process Clause.
4. Fundamental Civil Rights.
a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 221

[§ 221] In General.

The following are significant rights and liberties held to be fundamental and therefore within the protection of the Due Process Clause, either under the earlier Palko test (supra, §218) or the expanded approach of later decisions (supra, §219). Each is separately considered at an appropriate place in this chapter or in other works:

(7) The right to practice a profession or to work. (Endler v. Schutzbank (1968) 68 C.2d 162, 169, 65 C.R. 297, 436 P.2d 297; *Sail'er Inn v. [§ 222] Freedom From Unnecessary Confinement.

In O'Connor v. Donaldson (1975) 422 U.S. 563, 95 S.Ct. 2486, 45 L.Ed.2d 396, Donaldson was civilly committed to confinement in the Florida State Hospital in 1957, in proceedings initiated by his father, who thought his son had "delusions." At the hearing, he was found to be suffering from "paranoid schizophrenia." For 15 years thereafter, Donaldson repeatedly and unsuccessfully sought release, and then brought this action for damages under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (infra, §816), against the hospital superintendent. The evidence at the trial showed that the hospital staff had the power to release a nondangerous patient, even if he had been lawfully committed and remained mentally ill; that Donaldson posed no danger to others or to himself at any time in his life; that responsible persons frequently sought his release and offered to assume responsibility for his welfare; that he was capable of earning his living and did, in fact, obtain a job immediately on his release; that his confinement was a simple regime of enforced custodial care, with no program of treatment of his supposed illness. The jury awarded compensatory damages of $ 38,500, and punitive damages of $ 10,000. Held, Donaldson's constitutional right was violated, but the trial court erred in failing to instruct on defendant's good faith reliance on state law (see supra, §105; 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §348).

(a) The Court of Appeals took the broad position that a mentally ill person in confinement has a constitutional right to receive treatment. This issue was not reached because the record showed no justification for continued confinement. And, even if confinement was initially ordered by a court on a constitutionally adequate basis, it could not constitutionally continue after that basis no longer existed. (95 S.Ct. 2493, 45 L.Ed.2d 406.)

(b) A finding of mental illness alone cannot justify indefinite custodial confinement of a person who is dangerous to no one and can live safely in freedom. (95 S.Ct. 2493, 45 L.Ed.2d 406.)

(c) The state may not confine the mentally ill merely to ensure them a living standard superior to that they enjoy in the private community; a person may prefer his home to the comforts of an institution. (95 S.Ct. 2493, 45 L.Ed.2d 407.)

(d) The state may not "fence in" the harmless mentally ill solely to save its citizens from exposure to them, any more than it could incarcerate the physically unattractive or socially eccentric. (95 S.Ct. 2494, 45 L.Ed.2d 407.) (See 13 Cal. Western L. Rev. 168 [criticizing O'Connor Court's refusal to recognize constitutional right to treatment]; 89 Harv.

In Youngberg v. Romeo (1982) 457 U.S. 307, 102 S.Ct. 2452, 73 L.Ed.2d 28, the Court considered "for the first time the substantive rights of involuntarily-committed mentally retarded persons under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution." (102 S.Ct. 2457, 73 L.Ed.2d 36.) The Court's conclusion, based on a weighing of the interests, was this:

(a) The state owes a duty to provide adequate food, shelter, clothing, and medical care. It also has the duty to provide reasonable safety for all residents within the institution. It may not restrain residents except to the extent that professional judgment deems this necessary to assure safety or to provide needed training. (102 S.Ct. 2462, 73 L.Ed.2d 42.)

(b) "In this case, therefore, the state is under a duty to provide respondent with such training as an appropriate professional would consider reasonable to ensure his safety and to facilitate his ability to function free from bodily restraints. It may well be unreasonable not to provide training when training could significantly reduce the need for restraints or the likelihood of violence." (102 S.Ct. 2462, 73 L.Ed.2d 42.) (See 96 Harv. L. 4. Fundamental Civil Rights.
b. Rights of Mentally Ill Persons.
3. Statutory Rights.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 224

[§ 224] Statutory Rights.

Except as specifically limited by federal or state law, persons with mental illness have "the same legal rights and responsibilities guaranteed all other persons" by the federal and state Constitutions and laws. "No otherwise qualified person by reason of having been involuntarily detained for evaluation or treatment under provisions of this part or having been admitted as a voluntary patient to any health facility," as defined in Health & Saf.C. 1250, "in which psychiatric evaluation or treatment is offered shall be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity, which receives public funds." (Welf.C. 5325.1.)

The Legislature intends that persons with mental illness have rights including, but not limited to, the following:

- (1) A right to treatment services that "promote the potential of the person to function independently. Treatment should be provided in ways that are least restrictive of the personal liberty of the individual." (Welf.C. 5325.1(a).)
- (2) "A right to dignity, privacy, and humane care." (Welf.C. 5325.1(b).)
- (3) "A right to be free from harm, including unnecessary or excessive physical restraint, isolation, medication, abuse, or neglect. Medication shall not be used as punishment, for the convenience of staff, as a substitute for program, or in quantities that interfere with the treatment program." (Welf.C. 5325.1(c).)
- (4) "A right to prompt medical care and treatment." (Welf.C. 5325.1(d).)
- (5) "A right to religious freedom and practice." (Welf.C. 5325.1(e).)
- (6) "A right to participate in appropriate programs of publicly supported education." (Welf.C. 5325.1(f).)
- (7) "A right to social interaction and participation in community activities." (Welf.C. 5325.1(g).)
- (8) "A right to physical exercise and recreational opportunities." (Welf.C. 5325.1(h).)

(9) "A right to be free from hazardous procedures." (Welf.C. 5325.1(i).) (On commitment under Lanterman-Petris-Short Act, Welf.C. 5000 et seq., see 3 *Cal. The Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act authorizes the Attorney General to institute a civil action for equitable relief when he or she has reasonable cause to believe that a state or local government is depriving an institutionalized person of his or her civil rights. In *Cleveland Bd. of Education v. On the constitutional right, the opinion states: "This Court has long recognized that freedom of personal choice in matters of marriage and family life is one of the liberties protected by the Due Process Clause." And "overly restrictive maternity leave regulations can constitute a heavy burden on the exercise of these protected freedoms." (94 S.Ct. 796, 39 L.Ed.2d 60.)

d. Distinction: Corporal Punishment of Pupil.

[§ 226] Distinction: Corporal Punishment of Pupil.

In Ingraham v. Wright (1977) 430 U.S. 651, 97 S.Ct. 1401, 51 L.Ed.2d 711, Florida junior high school students brought civil rights actions challenging the constitutionality of state-authorized corporal punishment, consisting of paddling, as a means of maintaining school discipline. Held, dismissal of action affirmed.

(a) The common law sanctioned the use of reasonable but not excessive force to discipline a child. The early cases viewed the authority of the teacher as deriving from the parents; but the modern view is that the state itself may impose this punishment as part of the educational process. Only a few states have elaborated on the common law test of reasonableness, e.g., by providing for approval or notification of the child's parents. (97 S.Ct. 1407, 1408, 51 L.Ed.2d 724, 725.)

(b) The Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishments is inapplicable. It has always been regarded as referring to criminal punishment; and the school child, unlike a prisoner, has little need for this protection, for the schools are open to public scrutiny, the child is free to return home at the end of the school day, and the school is subject to supervision by the community. (97 S.Ct. 1410, 1412, 51 L.Ed.2d 727, 729.)

(c) The more important challenge is on due process grounds.

(1) Due process is required when a decision of the state implicates an interest within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment. One liberty interest is in freedom from bodily restraint and punishment; and this interest is at stake when school authorities, acting under color of state law, decide to punish a child by restraint and infliction of physical pain. (97 S.Ct. 1414, 51 L.Ed. 732.)

(2) The common law remedies for excessive punishment constitute due process of law. (a) The child's liberty interest is subject to the historical limitation that no recovery can be had where the force was reasonable, and therefore privileged. (97 S.Ct. 1415, 51 L.Ed.2d 733.) (b) Florida law recognizes the common law right of action for damages for excessive punishment, and also imposes criminal sanctions where malice is shown. (97 S.Ct. 1415, 51 L.Ed.2d 734.) (c) In light of history and the current problems of school discipline, advance procedural safeguards--i.e., notice and hearing prior to the imposition of punishment--cannot be considered essential to due process. (97 S.Ct. 1418, 51 L.Ed.2d 737.)

G. Fundamental Rights Under Due Process Clause.
4. Fundamental Civil Rights.
e. (New) Marriage Between Persons of Same Sex.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 226A

[§ 226A] (New) Marriage Between Persons of Same Sex.

(1) Historical Development. Lockyer v. San Francisco (2004) 33 C.4th 1055, 17 C.R.3d 225, 95 P.3d 459, text, §142, held that approximately 4,000 same-sex marriages performed in San Francisco were void because public officials acted unlawfully in issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples in the absence of a judicial determination that the California statute limiting marriage to the union between a man and a woman was unconstitutional. The decision did not determine whether a statutory scheme that gives same-sex domestic partners virtually all the "substantive benefits and privileges" of married persons, but limits marriage to opposite-sex couples, violates the state's Constitution. While Lockyer was pending, a number of same-sex couples and the City and County of San Francisco filed a lawsuit alleging that Family C. 308.5, limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples, applied only to marriages solemnized outside of California and that, in any event, the statute was unconstitutional. These cases were coordinated, together with two cases seeking an immediate stay to stop the issuance of marriage licenses to same-sex couples in San Francisco, into a single proceeding, In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 C.4th 757, 76 C.R.3d 683, 183 P.3d 384. The trial court determined that denying same-sex couples the right to marry violates the Equal Protection Clause of the California Constitution. The Court of Appeal reversed. Held, reversed. In limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples, the California statutory scheme violates both the fundamental right to marry protected by the due process (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a)) and privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1) provisions of the California Constitution and the Equal Protection Clause (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a)).

(a) California statutes governing marriage. "From the beginning of California statehood, the legal institution of civil marriage has been understood to refer to a relationship between a man and a woman." (43 C.4th 792.) Family C. 308.5 (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §44), an initiative statute approved by the voters in 2000, provides that "[o]nly marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California." (43 C.4th 796.) There has been disagreement whether the statute applies only to out-of-state marriages or whether it also applies to marriages performed in California. Although the immediately preceding statute, Family C. 308 (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §44), relates specifically to out-of-state marriages, Family C. 308.5 does not contain limiting language. Because Family C. 308.5 applies both to marriages that are "recognized" and "valid" in California, the average voter is likely to have understood the statute to apply to both in-state and out-of-state marriages. (43 C.4th 798.) Moreover, nothing in the background of the initiative indicates that it was intended to leave the Legislature free to authorize the marriage of same-sex couples. (43 C.4th 799.) Discrimination in the treatment of in-state and out-of-state marriage "would be difficult to square with governing federal constitutional precedents." (43 C.4th 800.) Hence, the statute cannot properly be interpreted to apply only to marriages performed outside of California. (43 C.4th 797.)

(b) California domestic partnership legislation. With a few exceptions (43 C.4th 805, footnote 24) under the California Domestic Partner Rights and Responsibilities Act of 2003 (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §25 et seq.), the rights and responsibilities of domestic partners are virtually the same as those of spouses. (43 C.4th 802.) The Act does not purport to, and could not, modify the applicable provisions of federal law, which defines marriage, for purposes of federal law, as the union of a man and a woman. This would not change if California designated the official union of these couples a marriage rather than a domestic partnership. (43 C.4th 806.)

(c) Marriage as fundamental right under California Constitution.

(1) Fundamental nature of right to marry. Under California case law, the right to marry is "beyond question" a fundamental right protected by the California Constitution. (43 C.4th 809.) Meyer v. Nebraska (1923) 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625, 67 L.Ed. 1042, text, §1071, discussed the right to marry as an aspect of the fundamental substantive "liberty" protected by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. In Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, text, §558, that right was identified as a component of the "right to privacy" protected by the United States Constitution. Since the 1972 addition of privacy to the inalienable rights protected by Cal. Const., Art. I, §1 (see text, §178), the state constitutional right to marry is both a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause and an interest in personal autonomy protected by the Privacy Clause of the California Constitution. (43 C.4th 810.)

(2) Nature of right at issue. The California Supreme Court in Perez v. Sharp (1948) 32 C.2d 711, 198 P.2d 17, text, §747, characterized the constitutional right that the plaintiffs sought as the right to marry "the person of one's choice," rather than the "right to interracial marriage." And in Lawrence v. Texas (2003) 539 U.S. 558, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 156 L.Ed.2d 508, text, §573, the United States Supreme Court concluded that, in its prior decision in Bowers v. Hardwick (1986) 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 92 L.Ed.2d 140, text, §573, it had erred in characterizing the right sought by plaintiffs as the right to engage in intimate homosexual conduct. (43 C.4th 811.) The constitutional right at issue "should be understood in a broader and more neutral fashion so as to focus upon the substance of the interests that the constitutional right is intended to protect." Here, plaintiffs are not seeking to create a new constitutional right to same-sex marriage, but rather to come under the umbrella of the existing constitutional right to marry. (43 C.4th 812.)

(3) Importance of marriage to society and individual. Meyer v. Nebraska, supra, included the rights to marry, establish a home, and bring up a family, as within the scope of the liberty interest of the Due Process Clause. Perez v. Sharp, supra, described marriage as a "fundamental right of free men." Perez and other California cases have recognized marriage as the means available to the individual to establish a family, which is the basic unit and core of our society. (43 C.4th 813.) The right to establish a legally recognized family with the person of one's choice is of fundamental significance to both society and the individual. (43 C.4th 814.) Because the right to marry not only serves the interests of society, but implicates the due process and equal protection rights of the individual, the right is not one that exists only if the Legislature chooses to establish and retain it. (43 C.4th 818.)

(4) Private and public nature of right. While the right to marry includes the "negative" right to be free of governmental intrusion into marriage, i.e., the right of marital or familial privacy, it also includes a "positive" right to have the state take affirmative action to acknowledge and support the family unit. It obligates the state to grant public recognition to the couple's familial relationship. (43 C.4th 819.) "In light of the fundamental nature of the substantive rights embodied in the right to marry--and their central importance to an individual's opportunity to live a happy, meaningful, and satisfying life as a full member of society--the California Constitution properly must be interpreted to guarantee this basic civil right to all individuals and couples, without regard to their sexual orientation." (43 C.4th 820.)

(5) Relationship of tradition and fundamental rights. While traditionally in this state marriage has been limited to a union between a man and a woman, tradition alone has not been viewed as sufficient justification for perpetuating, without examination, the denial of fundamental constitutional rights. (43 C.4th 820.) Once a fundamental right has been recognized, it cannot be denied to a group on the ground that the group has historically been denied that right. (43 C.4th 824.) California recognizes that gay individuals are entitled to the same legal rights and the same respect and dignity afforded all other individuals, and they are entitled to protection from discrimination on the basis of their sexual orientation. (43 C.4th 823.)

(6) Effect of decision on opposite-sex couples. Unlike the decisions in Johnson v. Calvert (1993) 5 C.4th 84, 19 C.R.2d 494, 851 P.2d 776, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §22, and Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 C.4th 932, 72 C.R.2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, Supp., §35, where the grant of a party's right would necessarily reduce or diminish the rights of others, the grant of the right to marry to same-sex couples will not impair the constitutional rights that opposite-sex couples have traditionally possessed. (43 C.4th 824, 825.)

(7) Effect of ability to procreate. That only a man and a woman can produce children biologically does not require that the constitutional right to marry be limited to opposite-sex couples. The constitutional right to marry has never been limited to those who are physically capable of producing children. (43 C.4th 825.) And while marriage may afford protection for the children of opposite-sex couples who are produced by those couples accidentally, no case discussing the right to marry has suggested that the constitutional right to marry is possessed only by individuals who are at risk of unintended pregnancy. (43 C.4th 826.) Moreover, past cases like Griswold v. Connecticut, supra, which upheld a married couple's right to use contraception to prevent procreation, make clear that the right to marry is not confined to or restrictively defined by that purpose alone. (43 C.4th 827.)

(8) Impact on biological parenthood. Allowing same-sex couples to marry does not "sever the link that marriage provides between procreation and child rearing." It simply confirms that a stable two-parent family, supported by state recognition and protection, is as important for children being raised by same-sex couples as for those being raised by opposite-sex couples, whether they are biological or adoptive parents. (43 C.4th 828.)

(9) Effect of reserving different names for same rights. Assigning the new and unfamiliar term "domestic partnership" to same-sex couples while reserving the historic and highly respected designation "marriage" to opposite-sex couples risks "denying the official family relationship of same-sex couples the equal dignity and respect that is a core element of the constitutional right to marry." (43 C.4th 831.)

(d) Effect of equal protection on statutory scheme.

(1) Standard of review. Under the conventional standard for reviewing economic and social welfare legislation in which classes are treated differently, the distinctions drawn must bear some rational relationship to a conceivable legitimate state purpose. The statute is presumed constitutional and the burden of demonstrating the invalidity of the classification rests on the party challenging it. In cases involving suspect classifications or bearing on fundamental interests, on the other hand, the classification is subject to a higher standard of strict scrutiny, and the state bears the burden of demonstrating that it has a compelling interest that justifies the law and that the distinctions drawn by the law are necessary to further that purpose. (43 C.4th 832.)

(2) No sex discrimination. While California cases have long established that statutes discriminating on the basis of sex or gender are subject to strict scrutiny, the statutory scheme under consideration here does not so discriminate. Persons of either gender are permitted to marry only persons of the opposite gender and are thus treated equally. (43 C.4th 833.)

(3) Sexual orientation is suspect classification. The statutory provisions restricting marriage to the union between a man and a woman do not merely have a disparate impact on gay persons. They classify and prescribe distinct treatment on the basis of sexual orientation, even though they do not explicitly ban marriage to a person of the same sex. (43 C.4th 833.) "By limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples, the marriage statutes, realistically viewed, operate clearly and directly to impose different treatment on gay individuals because of their sexual orientation." (43 C.4th 839.) "[T]he most important factors in deciding whether a characteristic should be considered a constitutionally suspect basis for classification are whether the class of persons who exhibit a certain characteristic historically has been subjected to invidious and prejudicial treatment, and whether society now recognizes that the characteristic in question generally bears no relationship to the individual's ability to perform or contribute to society." Thus, as stated in Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529, text, §765, "courts must look closely at classifications based on that characteristic lest outdated social stereotypes result in invidious laws or practices." Sexual orientation clearly comes within this rationale. (43 C.4th 843.)

(4) Intermediate scrutiny rejected. Although an intermediate scrutiny has been suggested, California cases, unlike federal cases, have continued to review those statutes that impose differential treatment on the basis of race or gender under strict scrutiny. (43 C.4th 843.) There is no reason to apply a less rigorous standard to cases involving sexual orientation. (43 C.4th 844.)

(5) Violation of privacy. Strict scrutiny also applies because the classification drawn by the statutes impinges on the constitutionally protected privacy interest of same-sex couples. Denying these couples access to the established institution of marriage impinges on their right to have their family relationship accorded the respect and dignity equal to that accorded to the relationship of opposite-sex couples. (43 C.4th 845.) In light of the historical discrimination against gay people, there is a significant risk that the institution of domestic partnership will be viewed as a mark of second-class citizenship. And while marriage is well understood by the public generally, domestic partnership is not, which will result in difficulties for same-sex couples and their children not experienced by opposite-sex families. (43 C.4th 846.) In the numerous settings in which people are asked whether they are single or married, domestic partners will be forced to disclose their sexual orientation, even though that information is irrelevant in the setting in question. (43 C.4th 847.)

(6) The state's interest. The state does not have a compelling interest in reserving the designation of marriage to opposite-sex couples, nor is the statutory restriction necessary to serve a compelling state interest. Extending the designation to same-sex couples will not deprive opposite-sex couples or their children of the rights and benefits conferred by the marriage statutes. Nor will permitting same-sex couples to marry alter the nature of the institution or impinge on religious freedoms, as no religious officiant will be required to solemnize such a marriage. (43 C.4th 854.)

(7) Role of court. While the separation-of-powers doctrine prohibits a court from "redefining" marriage based on the court's view that public policy or the public interest would be better served by the revision, the long-standing definition of marriage is not exempt from constraints imposed by the California Constitution, nor is the court precluded from determining that constitutional question. (43 C.4th 849.) There are many examples of legal doctrines, like coverture and recrimination, that were once viewed as central to marriage that have been subjected to judicial scrutiny, and then modified or invalidated, when their fairness or continuing validity was challenged. (43 C.4th 850.)

(8) Effect of initiative. The fact that Family C. 308.5 was enacted as an initiative measure does not shield it from constitutional scrutiny or justify a more deferential standard of review. Past cases have uniformly applied the same constitutional limitations applicable to statutes adopted by the Legislature to measures enacted through the initiative process when they violated guarantees provided by the United States or California Constitution. (43 C.4th 852.)

(e) The remedy. In view of the societal importance given to the designation of marriage, extending the designation of marriage to same-sex couples, rather than denying it to all couples, is the remedy most consistent with the state's general legislative policy. (43 C.4th 856.) The language in Family C. 300 limiting marriage to a union "between a man and a woman" must be stricken from the statute, making marriage available to both same-sex and opposite-sex couples. Family C. 308.5, not being capable of any constitutional interpretation, cannot stand. (43 C.4th 857.)

One justice concurred (43 C.4th 857), and three justices concurred and dissented in two opinions (43 C.4th 860, 878).

See 59 Hastings L. J. 843 [Formalism: From Racial Integration to Same-Sex Marriage]; 1 A.L.R. Fed 2d 1 [Marriage Between Persons of Same Sex--United States and Canadian Cases].

(2) Amendment of Constitution. Proposition 8, adopted by the voters in the November, 2008, general election, adds Cal. Const., Art. I, §7.5, to the California Constitution. It provides: "Only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California." The validity of this provision is being considered by the California Supreme Court.

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
V. SUFFRAGE

A. Nature of Right To Vote.
1. Federal Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 227

[§ 227] Federal Constitution.

(1) In General. The federal Constitution does not guarantee the right of suffrage as a necessary incident of citizenship, nor does it compel a fixed method of choosing state or local officers or representatives. (See Rodriguez v. Popular Democratic Party (1982) 457 U.S. 1, 102 S.Ct. 2194, 2199, 72 L.Ed.2d 628, 634 [statute may permit filling of legislative vacancies by appointment]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1117.) The only express provision in the original Constitution is in Article I, §2, stating the right of a qualified person to vote at a congressional election. (See United States v. Classic (1941) 313 U.S. 299, 61 S.Ct. 1031, 85 L.Ed. 1368 [Congress could make criminal acts of individuals who falsely counted and wilfully altered ballots in Louisiana primary election]; 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 99.)

(2) Constitutional Amendments. The Fifteenth Amendment provides: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." This was intended to give Blacks the right to vote, but it does not do so directly; it merely prohibits discrimination on these grounds. The same is true of the Nineteenth Amendment, prohibiting discrimination "on account of sex." (See Minor v. Happersett (1874) 88 U.S. 162, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L.Ed. 627; Pope v. Williams (1904) 193 U.S. 621, 24 S.Ct. 573, 48 L.Ed. 817.) Likewise, the Twenty-Fourth Amendment prohibits denial of the right to vote in federal elections by reason of failure to pay a poll tax (see infra, §243), and the Twenty-Sixth Amendment prohibits denial of the right to persons 18 years of age or older on account of age (see infra, §237).

In addition to these constitutional amendments, the U.S. Supreme Court has relied on the Fourteenth Amendment to fashion a fundamental "right to vote," which is a "shorthand" reference to "the protected right, implicit in our constitutional system, to participate in state elections on an equal basis with other qualified electors whenever the State had adopted an elective process for determining who will represent any segment of the State's population." (San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez (1973) 411 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 36 L.Ed.2d 16, 44, footnote 78; see Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 1378, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, 523, infra, §299; Rodriguez v. Popular Democratic Party (1982) 457 U.S. 1, 102 S.Ct. 2194, 2199, 72 L.Ed.2d 628, 634; 3 Rotunda, §18.31; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1118; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 163 [Equal Protection: Analyzing the Dimensions of a Fundamental Right--The Right To Vote]; 27 U.S.F. L. Rev. 737 [Symposium on vote dilution].)

Further, the First Amendment establishes the right of every citizen to engage in political activity, and this has been said to encompass "a citizen's right to vote, a candidate's capacity to gain a place on the ballot, and the constituent's chance to contribute to a chosen candidate." (Lubin v. Wilson (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1422, 1428, 284 C.R. 70 [citing Tribe].)

(3) Statutes and Decisions. Statutes and judicial decisions supplement the constitutional prohibitions against racial and other discrimination. (See infra, §228 et seq.) But reasonable regulations of voting procedure, as in the provisions for absentee ballots (see infra, §234), are valid. Thus, in McDonald v. Board of Election Commrs. of Chicago (1969) 394 U.S. 802, 89 S.Ct. 1404, 22 L.Ed.2d 739, appellants, charged with crimes, were in jail awaiting trial (their offenses were nonbailable or they were unable to raise bail). The Illinois statute permitted persons physically handicapped to obtain absentee ballots, but made no provision for the "judicially incapacitated, pretrial detainee." Held, the failure of the state to extend the privilege to persons jailed was not a violation of appellants' constitutional rights. (a) The right to vote itself was not restricted. (b) The distinctions drawn by the statute were not arbitrary; absentee ballots in a jail might involve the risk of local officials attempting to influence the vote, with resulting injury to discipline. (89 S.Ct. 1409, 22 L.Ed.2d 746.)

The McDonald case was distinguished in O'Brien v. Skinner (1974) 414 U.S. 524, 94 S.Ct. 740, 38 L.Ed.2d 702. The Court limited the prior holding to a failure of proof; i.e., the appellants did not show that they were absolutely barred, for there was a possibility that the state might furnish some alternative means. In the instant case, New York statutes, as construed by its highest court, actually denied convicted misdemeanants and pretrial detainees the right to register and vote in their own counties, while persons awaiting trial in a county other than their residence were permitted to register by mail and vote by absentee ballot. This was held to be a denial of equal protection. (94 S.Ct. 743, 38 L.Ed.2d 707.) (See Bush v. Gore (2000) 531 U.S. 98, 121 S.Ct. 525, 530, 148 L.Ed.2d 388, 399 [state court erred in ordering recount of certain votes in presidential election in absence of procedure that comported with minimal constitutional standards]; 114 *Harv. Witkin Summary of California Law

- A. Nature of Right To Vote.
- 2. Federal Voting Rights Act.
 - a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 228

[§ 228] In General.

(1) Purpose and Scope. Prior Civil Rights Acts (see infra, §814 et seq.), requiring case by case litigation to enforce the voting rights of individuals, failed to produce any substantial results in this area. Accordingly, Congress enacted the Voting Rights Act of 1965. (42 U.S.C., §1973 et seq.)

Section 2 of the Act contains a general prohibition against discriminatory voting practices (42 U.S.C., §1973; see infra, §229), and section 3 provides for proceedings to enforce the right to vote (42 U.S.C., §1973a). Its principal innovations, however, were its remedial provisions: (a) Section 4, prohibiting any tests or devices as prerequisites for voting in certain states and political subdivisions (42 U.S.C., §1973b; see infra, §§230, 231); and (b) section 5, requiring preclearance for voting law changes in those jurisdictions (42 U.S.C., §1973c; see infra, §232). The Act also provides for the assignment of federal voting examiners under sections 3 and 4 and other steps to insure nondiscriminatory registration and voting, including contempt proceedings and criminal prosecution for violations. (42 U.S.C., §1973d et seq.) (See South Carolina v. Katzenbach (1966) 383 U.S. 301, 86 S.Ct. 803, 812, 15 L.Ed.2d 769, 779 [summarizing provisions, and setting forth entire Act in Appendix]; N.A.A.C.P. v. New York (1973) 413 U.S. 345, 93 S.Ct. 2591, 37 L.Ed.2d 648 [Supreme Court's jurisdiction on appeal by associations denied right to intervene in Voting Rights Act action]; 108 Harv. L. Roemer (1991) 500 U.S. 646, 111 S.Ct. 2096, 114 L.Ed.2d 691; Chisom v. Roemer (1991) 501 U.S. 380, 111 S.Ct. 2354, 115 L.Ed.2d 348; Houston Lawyers' Assn. v. Attorney General of Texas (1991) 501 U.S. 419, 111 S.Ct. 2376, 115 L.Ed.2d 379; Lopez v. Monterey (1996) 519 U.S. 9, 117 S.Ct. 340, 136 L.Ed.2d 273; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 409 [Chisom v. Roemer]; 33 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 51 [Voting Rights Act litigation and Los Angeles County judicial elections].)

The remedial provisions of the Act were extended by the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970, 1975, and 1982. The Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970, also (a) lowered the minimum voting age in state and federal elections from 21 to 18 (see infra, §237), (b) barred the use of literacy and other tests in all state and federal elections (42 U.S.C., §1973(b); see infra, §240), and (c) forbade the use of state residency requirements to disqualify voters from voting for presidential and vice-presidential electors (42 U.S.C., §1973aa-1; see infra, §244). The Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1975 extended the protections of the Act to "language minorities." (42 U.S.C., §§1973, 1973b(f).)

(2) Validity. In South Carolina v. Katzenbach, supra, the Court held that a number of challenged sections were properly enacted to carry out the responsibilities of Congress under the Fifteenth Amendment, §2. The court first reviewed the history of devices for racial discrimination in voting in certain southern states, and the ineffectiveness of litigation attacking them. (86 S.Ct. 808, 15 L.Ed.2d 775.) Then it declared that, although the Amendment is self-executing and permits judicial attack on discriminatory state procedures, legislation is also expressly authorized. This legislation need not be confined to prohibitions against violation of the Amendment, but may, as here, give new remedies. (86 S.Ct. 817, 15 L.Ed.2d 785.) "After enduring nearly a century of widespread resistance to the Fifteenth Amendment, Congress has marshalled an array of potent weapons against the evil, with authority in the Attorney General to employ them effectively. ... We here hold that the portions of the Voting Rights Act properly before us are a valid means for carrying out the commands of the Fifteenth Amendment." (86 S.Ct. 823, 15 L.Ed.2d 792.) (See Allen v. State Bd. of Elections (1969) 393 U.S. 544, 89 S.Ct. 817, 22 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §232; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 165 [Katzenbach].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

- A. Nature of Right To Vote.
- 2. Federal Voting Rights Act.
 - b. Prohibited Practices.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 229

[§ 229] Prohibited Practices.

Section 2 of the Act (42 U.S.C., §1973), mirroring the Fifteenth Amendment (supra, §227), originally prohibited imposition of a voting qualification, practice, or procedure to deny or abridge the right to vote on account of race or color. In 1975, the prohibition was extended to protect "language minorities." (See supra, §228; 117 Harv. L. Rev. 2621 [coalitions and governance under Section 2].)

In Mobile v. Bolden (1980) 446 U.S. 55, 100 S.Ct. 1490, 64 L.Ed.2d 47, the Court held that proof of discriminatory purpose was necessary to establish a violation of section 2 and of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. However, in response to Mobile, Section 2 was amended in 1982 to prohibit any voting qualification, practice, or procedure "which results" in a denial or abridgement of the right to vote on account of race or color or minority language status. (42 U.S.C., §1973(a).) And, as amended, Section 2(b) provides a "totality of circumstances" test under which the "extent to which members of a protected class have been elected" is "one circumstance," but "nothing in this section establishes a right to have members of a protected class elected in numbers equal to their proportion in the population." (42 U.S.C., §1973b.)

These statutes are often applied in minority vote dilution cases. (See Thornburg v. Gingles (1986) 478 U.S. 30, 106 S.Ct. 2752, 2763, 92 L.Ed.2d 25, 37 [factors to be considered]; *Grove v. c. Remedial Provisions.

1. States and Political Subdivisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 230

[§ 230] States and Political Subdivisions.

(1) In General. The Act lays down a formula for defining the states and political subdivisions to which the new remedial provisions (see infra, §§231, 232) apply. It covers states and political subdivisions in which the Attorney General determined that tests or devices (see infra, §231) were in effect, and the Director of the Census determined that less than 50% of voting-age residents registered as of November 1, 1964, November 1, 1968, or November 1, 1972, or voted in the 1964, 1968, or 1972 presidential elections. (42 U.S.C., §1973b(b).) (On meaning and scope of "political subdivision," see United States v. Board of Commrs. of Sheffield, Alabama (1978) 435 U.S. 110, 98 S.Ct. 965, 55 L.Ed.2d 148; Dougherty County, Georgia, Bd. of Education v. White (1978) 439 U.S. 32, 99 S.Ct. 368, 375, 58 L.Ed.2d 269, 281, infra, §232 [term broadly construed to apply to all entities having power over any aspect of electoral process; here, county board of education].)

A determination or certification of the Attorney General or Director of the Census is not reviewable by any court. (42 U.S.C., §1973b(b); see Briscoe v. Bell (1977) 432 U.S. 404, 97 S.Ct. 2428, 53 L.Ed.2d 439.)

(2) Bail-Out Provision. A jurisdiction subject to the remedial provisions may seek to exempt itself from 42 U.S.C., §1973b and the preclearance requirement of 42 U.S.C., §1973c (see infra, §232) by bringing a declaratory judgment action before a three-judge panel of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, and proving that no "test or device" has been used during the preceding 10 years "for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color" or because of membership in a language minority group. (42 U.S.C., §1973b(a); see Rome v. United States (1980) 446 U.S. 156, 100 S.Ct. 1548, 1557, 64 L.Ed.2d 119, 133 [political unit of covered jurisdiction, such as a city, is not "political subdivision" under statute, and cannot independently bring bail-out action].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

- A. Nature of Right To Vote.
- 2. Federal Voting Rights Act.
 - c. Remedial Provisions.
- 2. Tests and Devices Suspended.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 231

[§ 231] Tests and Devices Suspended.

The Act prohibits a jurisdiction that is subject to the remedial provisions from denying any citizen "the right to vote in any federal, state, or local election because of his failure to comply with any test or device." (42 U.S.C., §1973b(a)(1).) "Test or device" is defined as "any requirement that a person as a prerequisite for voting or registration for voting (1) demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter, (2) demonstrate any educational achievement or his knowledge of any particular subject, (3) possess good moral character, or (4) prove his qualifications by the voucher of registered voters or members of any other class." (42 U.S.C., §1973b(c).)

The Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1975 extended the protections of the Act to "language minorities." (42 U.S.C., §1973b(f)(2).) For determining whether a jurisdiction was covered as of November, 1972, the term "test or device" was expanded to include English-only registration and voting materials. Covered jurisdictions are required to provide materials (or assistance if the language is only oral) in the language of the minority group. (42 U.S.C., §1973b(f)(3), (f)(4).)

Generally, any political subdivision in which more than 5% of the voting-age citizens are members of a "single language minority," with a illiteracy rate higher than the national rate, must provide voting notices, forms, instructions, assistance, or other materials and ballots in the minority language. (42 U.S.C., §1973aa-1a, effective until 2007.)

[§ 232] Preclearance for Changes in Voting Regulations.

(1) In General. Section 5 of the Act requires federal approval (by the Attorney General or district court for the District of Columbia) of state laws that alter "any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting" from that in force or effect on November 1, 1964, 1968, or 1972. (42 U.S.C., §1973c; see Allen v. State Bd. of Elections (1969) 393 U.S. 544, 89 S.Ct. 817, 22 L.Ed.2d 1 [statutes changing from district voting to at-large voting for county supervisors, changing office of county superintendent of education from elective to appointive in certain counties, and increasing requirements for independent candidate to gain position on general election ballot]; Hadnott v. Amos (1969) 394 U.S. 358, 89 S.Ct. 1101, 22 L.Ed.2d 336 [statute authorizing disqualification of candidate who did not file declaration of intention]; Perkins v. Matthews (1971) 400 U.S. 379, 91 S.Ct. 431, 27 L.Ed.2d 476 [location of polling place; annexations increasing number of eligible voters]; Young v. Fordice (1997) 520 U.S. 273, 117 S.Ct. 1228, 1235, 1236, 137 L.Ed.2d 448, 458 [minor and major changes in voting procedure must be precleared, even when changes are made to comply with federal law, so long as they reflect policy choices made by state or local officials; it does not matter for preclearance requirement whether change works in favor of, against, or is neutral in impact on ability of minorities to vote]; 91 Cal. Ashcroft* (2003) 539 U.S. 461, 123 S.Ct. 2498, 2510, 2511, 2512, 156 L.Ed.2d 428, 449, 451, 453 ["plan that merely preserves 'current voting strength' is entitled to §5 preclearance"; in retrogression inquiry, court must look at totality of circumstances, which includes examining whether new plan adds or subtracts "influence districts," where minority voters can play substantial, if not decisive, role in electoral process]; 117 Harv. L. Rev. 2598 [Ashcroft]; 25 Am.Jur.2d (2004 ed.), Elections §58 et seq.; on annexation reducing relative political strength of minority race, see Richmond v. United States (1975) 422 U.S. 358, 95 S.Ct. 2296, 2302, 45 L.Ed.2d 245, 254 [distinguishing Perkins v. Matthews]; Port Arthur v. United States (1982) 459 U.S. 159, 103 S.Ct. 530, 74 L.Ed.2d 334 [distinguishing Richmond]; Pleasant Grove v. United States (1987) 479 U.S. 462, 107 S.Ct. 794, 798, 93 L.Ed.2d 866, 877 [following Richmond]; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 211 [Richmond].)

In Dougherty County, Georgia, Bd. of Education v. White (1978) 439 U.S. 32, 99 S.Ct. 368, 58 L.Ed.2d 269, a black employee of a county board of education became a candidate for public office, and the board then adopted a rule requiring an employee who does so to take a leave of absence without pay for the duration of his political activity. Held, preclearance under 42 U.S.C., §1973c was required. The board contended that its rule was simply a means of getting a full day's work for a full day's pay. This was a mischaracterization. The rule was not a neutral personnel practice governing absenteeism generally, but was specifically addressed to the electoral process. And it had precisely the inhibiting effect on candidacy of a large filing fee. (99 S.Ct. 373, 59 L.Ed.2d 279.) Hence, it was a "standard, practice, or procedure" with respect to voting. (99 S.Ct. 375, 59 L.Ed.2d 281.)

In Presley v. Etowah County Com. (1992) 502 U.S. 491, 112 S.Ct. 820, 117 L.Ed.2d 51, the Court held that preclearance was not required for changes in the decisionmaking authority of elected members of certain county commissions. "Our prior cases hold, and we reaffirm today, that every change in rules governing voting must be precleared. ... Neither the appellants nor the United States has pointed to anything we said ... to suggest that Congress meant other than what it said when it made §5 applicable to changes 'with respect to voting' rather than, say, changes 'with respect to governance.' " (112 S.Ct. 832, 117 L.Ed.2d 68.) (See 106 Harv. L. Rev. 367 [Presley].)

Changes that enhance the position of racial minorities do not violate 42 U.S.C., §1973c unless the new apportionment itself discriminates on the basis of race or color. (Beer v. United States (1976) 425 U.S. 130, 96 S.Ct. 1357, 1364, 47 L.Ed.2d 629, 639; see United Jewish Organizations of Williamsburg v. Carey (1977) 430 U.S. 144, 97 S.Ct. 996, 1007, 51 L.Ed.2d 229, 244; Lockhart v. United States (1983) 460 U.S. 125, 103 S.Ct. 998, 74 L.Ed.2d 863 [applying Beer standards]; Miller v. Johnson (1995) 515 U.S. 900, 115 S.Ct. 2475, 2490, 2491, 132 L.Ed.2d 762, 782, 783, infra, §296 [desire to satisfy preclearance demands is not compelling interest for racial gerrymandering, where challenged plan is not reasonably necessary under Voting Rights Act]; 91 Harv. L. Rev. 284, 1847 [race-conscious reapportionment]; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 103.)

(2) Procedure for Preclearance. Preclearance for a voting law change may be obtained in one of two ways:

(a) The state or political subdivision may submit it to the Attorney General, who generally has 60 days to interpose an objection. (42 U.S.C., §1973c; see Allen v. State Bd. of Elections, supra, 89 S.Ct. 822, 22 L.Ed.2d 7; Lopez v. Monterey, supra, 117 S.Ct. 349, 136 L.Ed.2d 286 [three-judge district court lacks authority to consider discriminatory purpose or nature of voting changes; goal of district court facing Section 5 challenge is to ensure that covered jurisdiction submits election plan to appropriate federal authorities for preclearance as expeditiously as possible]; on effect of Attorney General's failure to object, see Morris v. Gressette (1977) 432 U.S. 491, 97 S.Ct. 2411, 53 L.Ed.2d 506.)

(b) The state or political subdivision may institute a declaratory judgment action in the District of Columbia. Under this alternative, the change may not be implemented until the court enters judgment that it "will not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote." (42 U.S.C., §1973c; see Allen v. State Bd. of Elections, supra, 89 S.Ct. 822, 22 L.Ed.2d 7.)

The Attorney General or an individual may bring an injunctive action to prohibit the enforcement of a new regulation where the state has failed to obtain approval. (See Allen v. State Bd. of Elections, supra, 89 S.Ct. 829, 22 L.Ed.2d 14.) Moreover, "[n]either an affirmative indication by the Attorney General that no objection will be made, nor the Attorney General's failure to object, nor a declaratory judgment entered under this section shall bar a subsequent action to enjoin enforcement of such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure." (42 U.S.C., §1973c.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

A. Nature of Right To Vote.

3. California Law.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 233

[§ 233] In General.

(1) California Constitution. Cal. Const., Art. II, §2, secures the right to vote at all elections to citizens of the state. This provision is self-executing, and the right cannot be abridged by legislation. (See Communist Party of United States of America v. Peek (1942) 20 C.2d 536, 542, 127 P.2d 889; Arapajolu v. McMenamin (1952) 113 C.A.2d 824, 830, 249 P.2d 318 [former version of Art. II, §1].) Moreover, the Legislature is specifically barred from imposing any property qualification on the right to vote or hold office. (Cal. Const., Art. I, §22.)

Prior to its revision in 1972, the California Constitution provided, in former Article II, §1, that "no alien ineligible to citizenship, no idiot, no insane person, no person convicted of any infamous crime, no person hereinafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, and no person who shall not be able to read the Constitution in the English language and write his or her name" could vote.

The English literacy requirement was held unconstitutional (see infra, §242), and the provision on disenfranchisement of felons was judicially challenged (see infra, §246). Cal. Const., Art. II, §4 requires that the Legislature "prohibit improper practices that affect elections" and "provide for the disqualification of electors while mentally incompetent or imprisoned or on parole for the conviction of a felony." (On disqualification of the mentally incompetent, see Elec.C. 2201(b) [cancellation of registration], Elec.C. 2208 [disqualification for mental incompetency], Elec.C. 2209 [annual review of disqualified voter's status, restoration of rights], Elec.C. 2210 [disqualification contests; restoration of rights], Elec.C. 2211 [person not guilty by reason of insanity or incompetent to stand trial; mentally disordered sex offender]; 80 A.L.R.3d 1116; on constitutionality of condition of citizenship, see infra, §731.)

(2) Rights of Employees. Voting rights of employees are protected by special statutes requiring time off with pay to vote, and prohibiting dismissal of an employee absenting himself or herself on election day to serve as an election officer. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §§253, 423; infra, §1111.)

(3) Illegal voting. In Gooch v. Hendrix (1993) 5 C.4th 266, 19 C.R.2d 712, 851 P.2d 1321, the court held that, under former Elec.C. 20024 (now Elec.C. 16203), an election may be annulled on clear and convincing evidence of illegal voting when it appears that the illegal votes affected the outcome of the election, even though it cannot otherwise be determined precisely for whom the illegal votes were cast. (5 C.4th 269; see 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1024.)

Gooch was distinguished in Bradley v. Perrodin (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1153, 131 C.R.2d 402. The court held that an election may be annulled when the successful candidate is found to have committed an offense against the elective franchise, even if the number of unqualified voters fraudulently registered or the number of votes unlawfully solicited "were too few to have changed the outcome of the election." (106 C.A.4th 1167.) However, the trial court here erred in declaring another candidate elected after shifting legal votes between the two candidates. "Having annulled the winning candidate's election for misdeeds that did not change the election results, the court should have annulled and set aside the runoff election" under Elec.C. 16603. (106 C.A.4th 1170.) (On election contests generally, see Elec.C. 16000 et seq.)

(4) California Voting Rights Act. Elec.C. 14025 et seq. limits the use of at-large elections for the election of public officials in political subdivisions where an at-large method "impairs the ability of a protected class to elect candidates of its choice or its ability to influence the outcome of an election, as a result of the dilution or abridgment of the rights of voters who are members of a protected class." (Elec.C. 14027; on determination of violation of protected class voter rights, see Elec.C. 14028.) A "protected class" is made up of voters of a race, color, or language group as defined in the federal Voting Rights Act (42 U.S.C., §1973 et seq.). (Elec.C. 14026(d).) District-based elections may be imposed as a remedy for violation of the Act. (Elec.C. 14029.)

(5) California Voter Bill of Rights. Elec.C. 2300 states that all voters must be U.S. citizens, and lists the rights of voters. The list must be printed in the voter pamphlet and made available to the public on election day. (Elec.C. 2300(a), (d).) (See 77 So. Cal. L. Rev. 151 [arguing for reenfranchisement of noncitizen legal permanent residents].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) California Constitution. See 93 Cal. L. Rev. 271 [noncitizen voting rights in local school board elections].(3) Illegal Voting. On election contests, see Supp., infra, §270A.

(4) California Voting Rights Act. The California Voting Rights Act is constitutional. (Sanchez v. Modesto (2006) 145 C.A.4th 660, 680, 51 C.R.3d 821 [Act is not subject to strict scrutiny and it passes rational basis review].)(6) (New Online Voter Registration. A person with a valid California driver's license or state identification card will be permitted to register to vote online once the Secretary of State certifies that the state has a statewide voter registration database that complies with the federal Help America Vote Act of 2002. (Elec.C. 2196, added in 2008.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

A. Nature of Right To Vote.

3. California Law.

b. Secrecy, Absentee Ballots, and Voting by Mail.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 234

[§ 234] Secrecy, Absentee Ballots, and Voting by Mail.

"Voting shall be secret." (Cal. Const., Art. II, §7.) The Elections Code permits absentee voting and mail ballot elections in a number of situations, and both methods are widely used. (See Elec.C. 300, 320, 3000 et seq. [application and voting procedures], Elec.C. 300(b), Elec.C. 3100 et seq. [special absentee voters: armed forces members and their spouses, those temporarily living outside the United States, those serving on U.S. merchant ships], Elec.C. 323, 3300 et seq. [implementing 42 U.S.C., §1973dd et seq., by providing procedures for residents and former residents living outside U.S. to vote in federal elections], Elec.C. 3200 [permanent absent voter]; Elec.C. 4000 et seq. [mail ballot elections], 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 953 [legal obstacles to voting over Internet]; 58 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1261 [voting by mail].)

In Peterson v. San Diego (1983) 34 C.3d 225, 193 C.R. 533, 666 P.2d 975, defendant city adopted an ordinance approving a lease in connection with construction of a convention center. A referendum petition was filed, and the city counsel authorized a special municipal election for approval of the lease, to be conducted by mail ballot pursuant to former Elec.C. 1350 (now Elec.C. 4100), requiring the same procedures as for absentee voting. Plaintiff sought to enjoin the election as violative of the constitutional provision for voting secrecy. Held, the election is valid.

(a) Mail ballot voting (1) is often more convenient than voting at the polling place and increases voter participation; and (2) can provide significant economies by permitting special elections with relatively little cost to ascertain voter sentiment on pending issues. (32 C.3d 229, 230.)

(b) The right to vote is fundamental (see supra, §233), and reasonable efforts by the Legislature to facilitate and increase its exercise must be upheld. The secrecy provision of the Constitution was never intended to preclude absentee and mail ballot voting. (34 C.3d 230.) While mail balloting may provide a greater opportunity for fraud than voting booth elections, there has been no showing of significant wrongdoing in either absentee or mail ballot voting, and there are adequate statutory provisions to protect the integrity of elections. (34 C.3d 231.)

(c) The interest in permitting absentee balloting because otherwise absentees would be unable to vote is not present in mail balloting; but the interest in securing citizen participation in representative government is equally applicable to both. (34 C.3d 231.) (See 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 635 [Peterson].)

In Wilks v. Mouton (1986) 42 C.3d 400, 229 C.R. 1, 772 P.2d 187, the court decided two other issues involving absentee voting: (a) Despite the constitutional requirement of secrecy, absentee ballots may be cast in the presence of or with the assistance of third persons. (42 C.3d 409.) (b) Former Elec.C. 1013 (now Elec.C. 3017), requiring return by mail or in person, is directory in nature; hence, noncompliance did not nullify the vote where the third party delivered the ballot at the voter's request and after the voter had signed and sealed the envelope. (42 C.3d 411.)

The 1987 Legislature amended the statute "to clarify the potential ambiguity contained in Wilks v. Mouton." (See Stats. 1987, Chap. 22, §1.) The provisions of the statute "are mandatory, not directory, and no ballot shall be counted if it is not delivered in compliance with this section." However, an ill or disabled voter may designate a relative, as specified in the statute, or "a person residing in the same household as the absent voter," to return the ballot. (Elec.C. 3017.)

The Elections Code was amended in 2007 to redesignate, in most cases, an "absent" voter or an "absentee ballot" as a "vote by mail" voter or a "vote by mail" ballot. (See, e.g., Elec.C. 300 and 3000 et seq.)

See Bridgeman v. McPherson (2006) 141 C.A.4th 277, 283, 45 C.R.3d 813 [relying on Peterson v. San Diego (1983) 34 C.3d 225, 193 C.R. 533, 666 P.2d 975, text, p. 377; secret ballot guarantee is not violated by statute permitting citizens outside country to vote by fax and, in doing so, to sign oath waiving right to secret ballot]; 29 A.L.R.6th 343 [validity and construction of early voting statutes]. Elec.C. 3017: As amended in 2007, Elec.C. 3017 now refers to a "vote by mail" voter instead of an "absent" voter.

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

A. Nature of Right To Vote.

3. California Law.

c. Write-in Voting.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 235

[§ 235] Write-in Voting.

In Canaan v. Abdelnour (1985) 40 C.3d 703, 221 C.R. 468, 710 P.2d 268, the court, in an elaborate opinion reviewing the case law, concluded that a ban on write-in voting at a general election, imposed by a municipal code provision of a charter city, was unconstitutional. The opinion adopts the First Amendment balancing process set forth in Anderson v. Celebrezze (1983) 460 U.S. 780, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 75 L.Ed.2d 547, infra, §262. (40 C.3d 712, 713.) On that analysis, the court states its conclusion as follows:

"The right to seek public office and the right to the unrestricted exercise of the franchise are fundamental. They are protected by the First Amendment and article I, section 2 of the California Constitution. San Diego's prohibition on write-in voting impermissibly restricts the exercise of those rights. Not only does the ban prevent voters from casting their ballots for the candidates of their choice, it renders the election process too restrictive. The ban may stifle political association and expression during the election season and leave the voters without meaningful options on election day." (40 C.3d 727.)

One justice dissented, adopting the superseded opinion of the Court of Appeal, and concluding that the ordinance was nondiscriminatory and placed only a de minimis burden on the electoral process. (40 C.3d 728.) (See Burdick v. Takushi (1992) 504 U.S. 428, 112 S.Ct. 2059, 119 L.Ed.2d 245 [upholding Hawaii's prohibition on write-in voting as part of the state's comprehensive election scheme affording adequate ballot access]; Oxnard Harbor Dist. v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 259, 268, 19 C.R.2d 819 [U.S. Supreme Court has rejected argument that law imposing burden on right to vote must be subject to strict scrutiny; citing Burdick]; 44 Hastings L. J. 727 [background of right to write-in; Burdick criticized]; 69 A.L.R.4th 948 [validity of state or local ban on write-in votes].)

In Edelstein v. San Francisco (2002) 29 C.4th 164, 126 C.R.2d 727, 56 P.3d 1029, the court held that a city charter provision prohibiting write-in voting in runoff elections for municipal offices did not violate California's free speech clause, Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a). The court did not decide whether a total ban on write-in voting would violate the state Constitution. (29 C.4th 183.)

(a) Elec.C. 15340, authorizing write-in voting in "any election," does not prohibit the ban because the runoff election was the second part of the same election and voters had the opportunity to write-in their candidates in the first round of voting. (29 C.4th 173.)

(b) The U.S. Supreme Court in Burdick, supra, and the California Supreme Court in Canaan, supra, came to opposite conclusions regarding the use of write-in voting in general elections. These different conclusions were based on how the courts approached "the preliminary question whether a ban on write-in voting is a severe restriction on voting rights" and their "differing assessments of the importance of the expressive function of voting." (29 C.4th 180, 181.) Burdick, assigning a lower value to the expressive function of voting, upheld a total ban, while Canaan, assigning a high value to the expressive function, struck down a less restrictive ban. (29 C.4th 181.)

(c) "By focusing on the expressive element of write-in voting, we do not mean to suggest that registering a protest is the only practical significance of write-in voting." (29 C.4th 182.) "However, if the function of the election process, generally, is to winnow out and finally reject all but the chosen candidates, not simply to provide an outlet for political expression ... , a fortiori, that is the function of a runoff election." (29 C.4th 182.) Permitting write-in votes in the runoff would defeat the purpose of having a runoff, i.e., "to ensure that the winning candidate receives a majority of the votes." (29 C.4th 182.) The prohibition here "was not a severe restriction on voting rights." It "imposed only a limited burden on voters' rights to make choices and to associate through the vote." (29 C.4th 182.) Canaan is overruled to the extent, "but only to the extent," it is inconsistent. (29 C.4th 183.)

[§ 236] New Citizen Voting.

Elec.C. 331 and 3500 et seq. provide for the voting rights of new citizens. A "new citizen" is "any person who meets all requirements of an elector of, and has established residency in, the State of California, except that he or she will become a United States citizen after the 15th day prior to an election but on or before the seventh day prior to that election." (Elec.C. 331; on proof of citizenship and residency, see Elec.C. 3501.)

A new citizen may register and vote at any time between the 14th and the 7th days before an election. (Elec.C. 3500.) The ballots of new citizens must "be received and canvassed at the same time and under the same procedure as absent voter ballots" (Elec.C. 3502), and the county elections official must keep open to public inspection a list of all persons who have registered as new citizens (Elec.C. 3503).

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

As amended in 2007, Elec.C. 3052 now refers to "vote by mail" ballots instead of "absent" voter ballots.

[§ 237] 18-Year- Old Voters.

(1) Twenty-Sixth Amendment. The Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970 lowered the voting age to 18 years for both national and local elections. (See supra, §228.) It was, however, held unconstitutional as to local elections. (Oregon v. Mitchell (1970) 400 U.S. 112, 91 S.Ct. 260, 27 L.Ed.2d 272; see 85 Harv. L. Rev. 152.) Thereafter, in March, 1971, Congress submitted the Twenty-Sixth Amendment to the states, and its ratification by the 38th state took place on June 30, 1971. Section 1 of the Amendment states: "The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age."

(2) Determination of Residence. In Jolicoeur v. Mihaly (1971) 5 C.3d 565, 96 C.R. 697, 488 P.2d 1, petitioners, unmarried minors 18 years of age, sought to register to vote in the jurisdiction they claimed as their actual permanent residence. Respondents, registrars of voters, relying on California statutes interpreted in an Attorney General's Opinion, contended that for voting purposes, the residence of an unmarried minor is his or her parents' home. Held, mandamus granted to compel determination of each petitioner's residence in the manner used to determine residence of adults.

(a) Construction of Twenty-Sixth Amendment. The Amendment prohibits state abridgment of the right to vote on account of age. The word "abridge," as defined in various cases, covers a burden placed on the exercise of the right. Here, compelling young people living apart from their parents to travel to the parents' district to register and vote or to register and vote as absentees, is a burden that cannot be justified by the presumption of a minor's residence with his or her parents. (5 C.3d 571.) And the legislative history of the Amendment dispels any doubt that it was intended to compel adult treatment of 18-year-olds for voting purposes. Congressmen stressed the themes that today's youth is better informed and more mature than any other generation's, that there are many military deaths in the 18-20 age group, and that youth's idealism should be channelled within the political system. (5 C.3d 572.) "Respondents' refusal to treat petitioners as adults for voting purposes violates the letter and spirit of the Twenty-sixth Amendment." (5 C.3d 575.)

(b) Construction of Elections Code. Former Elec.C. 14282 (now Elec.C. 349) states the general rule that residence is a fixed habitation; former Elec.C. 14255 (now Elec.C. 14251) provides that doubt is to be resolved in favor of the challenged voter; former Elec.C. 14283 (now Elec.C. 2025) and former Elec.C. 14290 (now Elec.C. 2029) provide that soldiers, students, inmates of institutions, and wives living apart, may acquire domiciles where they live. A presumption that a given class of persons are not residents of the place in which they live would contravene both the text and spirit of the Code; and there are strong policy reasons in favor of having citizens vote where they know the issues and have an interest in their solution. (5 C.3d 576, 578.)

(c) Construction of Government Code and Civil Code. Govt.C. 244, providing that an unmarried minor's residence is that of his or her parents and cannot be changed by his or her own act, has not been literally applied. Thus, the child's residence does not follow that of a parent who abandons the child. (5 C.3d 581, citing Guardianship of Brazeal (1953) 117 C.A.2d 59, 61, 254 P.2d 886; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, Supp., §§151C, 151D.) And the emancipation statute (now Family C. 7504) must be considered in applying the Government Code section. A minor over 18 and living apart from his or her parents considers his or her own house a permanent home; and when the minor was given the right to vote, the minor was emancipated for all purposes relating to voting. (5 C.3d 581.)

(d) Conclusion. "We hold today that both the Twenty-sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution and California law require respondent registrars to treat all citizens 18 years of age or older alike for all purposes relating to voting. We do not imply that registrars may not question a citizen of any age as to his true domicile. ... We hold only that registrars may not specially question the validity of an affiant's claim of domicile on account of his or her age or occupational status." (5 C.3d 582.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 806; 9 San Diego L. Rev. 329; 44 A.L.R.3d 797 [residence of students for voting purposes].)

A-1. (New) Valid Restriction: Identification.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 237A

[§ 237A] (New) Valid Restriction: Identification.

In Crawford v. Marion County Election Bd. (2008) 553 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 1610, 170 L.Ed.2d 574, the Court upheld the constitutionality of the Indiana voter identification law against a facial attack. The law requires voters to present government-issued photo identification before voting in person. The lead opinion of three justices adopted the balancing approach of Anderson v. Celebrezze (1983) 460 U.S. 780, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 75 L.Ed.2d 547, text, §262, for testing burdens on the electoral process. Anderson calls for weighing the asserted injury to the right to vote against the relevant and legitimate interests put forward by the state to justify the burden imposed. (128 S.Ct. 1616, 170 L.Ed.2d 583, 584.) The state interests must be sufficiently weighty to justify the restriction. Here, the state identified three neutral and strong interests: (a) deterring and detecting voter fraud; (b) improving and modernizing election procedures; and (c) safeguarding voter confidence. (128 S.Ct. 1617, 1624, 170 L.Ed.2d 584, 591.) Most voters in Indiana already had a government-issued photo identification card, and the burden of obtaining a free card on those who did not was, in most instances, minimal. (128 S.Ct. 1620, 170 L.Ed.2d 588.)

Three justices concurred in the judgment. They would have decided the case based on the approach used in Burdick v. Takushi (1992) 504 U.S. 428, 112 S.Ct. 2059, 119 L.Ed.2d 245, text, §235. Burdick "calls for application of a deferential 'important regulatory interests' standard for nonsevere, nondiscriminatory restrictions, reserving strict scrutiny for laws that severely restrict the right to vote." (128 S.Ct. 1624, 170 L.Ed.2d 592.)

Three justices dissented in two opinions. (128 S.Ct. 1627, 1643, 170 L.Ed.2d 592, 612.) (See 121 Harv. L. Rev. 1737 [role of public opinion in challenge to voter identification requirements].)

B. Invalid Restrictions.

1. Segregated Districts.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 238

[§ 238] Segregated Districts.

In Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960) 364 U.S. 339, 81 S.Ct. 125, 5 L.Ed.2d 110, the Alabama Legislature redefined the boundaries of the city of Tuskegee. Formerly a square, it became an irregular 28-sided figure. Petitioners, black citizens, asserted that this removed all but a few of its 400 black voters while keeping every white voter. Held, these allegations, if proved, would establish a violation of the Fifteenth Amendment, and the lower court erred in dismissing for lack of jurisdiction.

(b) Second, the state's power over political subdivisions is not absolute. "When a State exercises power wholly within the domain of state interest, it is insulated from federal judicial review. But such insulation is not carried over when state power is used as an instrument for circumventing a federally protected right." (81 S.Ct. 130, 5 L.Ed.2d 117.)

(c) Third, in the latter situation, the doctrine of unconstitutional conditions (infra, §812) applies: "Acts generally lawful may become unlawful when done to accomplish an unlawful end," and "constitutional power cannot be used by way of condition to attain an unconstitutional result." (81 S.Ct. 130, 5 L.Ed.2d 117.) Here, the complaint showed that the legislation was solely concerned with fencing black citizens out of town to deprive them of their constitutional right to vote. (See 75 Harv. L. Rev. 78, 136; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 179.)

In Wright v. Rockefeller (1964) 376 U.S. 52, 84 S.Ct. 603, 11 L.Ed.2d 512, plaintiffs challenged the 1961 apportionment of New York County's 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th districts (Manhattan). Statistical evidence was presented, but the federal district court held that plaintiffs had failed to prove that the districts were intentionally drawn on racially segregated lines. This finding was accepted, and judgment dismissing the complaint was affirmed. The dissenters (two justices) contended that a sufficient prima facie case was made and not rebutted by the state. (See 78 Harv. L. Rev. 252.)

[§ 239] Required Designation of Race.

A Louisiana statute requiring that a candidate's racial designation be stated on his or her declaration of candidacy and appear on the ballot, was upheld in a federal district court on the theory that all candidates, white and black, were treated alike. (See 15 Stanf. L. Rev. 339.) But in Anderson v. Martin (1964) 375 U.S. 399, 84 S.Ct. 454, 11 L.Ed.2d 430, the U.S. Supreme Court held the statute unconstitutional. "[B]y placing a racial label on a candidate at the most crucial stage in the electoral process--the instant before the vote is cast--the State furnishes a vehicle by which racial prejudice may be so aroused as to operate against one group because of race and for another. ... The vice lies not in the resulting injury but in the placing of the power of the State behind a racial classification that induces racial prejudice at the polls." (84 S.Ct. 456, 11 L.Ed.2d 432.)

3. English Literacy Tests.

a. Discrimination Against Blacks.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 240

[§ 240] Discrimination Against Blacks.

(1) Statutes With Grandfather Clauses. Early legislation in southern states imposed literacy tests but added a "Grandfather Clause," exempting persons who had been entitled to vote on January 1, 1866, "and their lineal descendants." The clause, intended to allow illiterate white persons to vote, was held unconstitutional. (Guinn v. United States (1915) 238 U.S. 347, 35 S.Ct. 926, 931, 59 L.Ed. 1340, 1348.)

(2) Other Discriminatory Statutes or Practices. A reasonable English literacy test applicable to all voters was originally thought to be valid. (See Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections (1959) 360 U.S. 45, 79 S.Ct. 985, 990, 3 L.Ed.2d 1072, 1077 [upholding North Carolina statute requiring applicant for registration to "be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language"; because ability to read and write has some relation to standards designed to promote intelligent use of ballot, state "might conclude that only those who are literate should exercise the franchise"].) But discriminatory statutes or other election practices designed to hamper the right of black citizens to vote were held unconstitutional.

In United States v. Mississippi (1965) 380 U.S. 128, 85 S.Ct. 808, 13 L.Ed.2d 717, the Attorney General brought an action against the state of Mississippi, members of the state board of election commissioners, and county registrars of voters. The complaint alleged that in 1890 a majority of the qualified voters in the state were Blacks, but the state Constitution specified, as a prerequisite for voting, the ability to read or understand or interpret any of its provisions. A 1954 amendment established all three as requisites. In 1960, a qualification of "good moral character" was added, and provision was made for destroying voting records where no appeal was taken. Further repressive statutes were adopted in 1962, including a requirement that forms be filled out properly without any assistance. Held, the complaint sufficiently alleged a common purpose running through the state's legal and administrative history to adopt whatever expedient seemed necessary to establish white political supremacy. (85 S.Ct. 816, 13 L.Ed.2d 727.)

The factual background was similar in Louisiana v. United States (1965) 380 U.S. 145, 85 S.Ct. 817, 13 L.Ed.2d 709. The voting test required the applicant to state a "reasonable interpretation" of any clause in the Louisiana or federal Constitutions, and gave registrars virtually uncontrolled discretion in administering the test, with the result that practically no Blacks were permitted to vote. The district court held the test unconstitutional, enjoined its future use, and the state appealed. Held, affirmed: "As the evidence showed, colored people, even some with the most advanced education and scholarship, were declared by voting registrars with less education to have an unsatisfactory understanding of the constitution of Louisiana or of the United States. This is not a test but a trap, sufficient to stop even the most brilliant man on his way to the voting booth." (85 S.Ct. 822, 13 L.Ed.2d 714.)

After the action in Louisiana was filed, the state, in 1962, adopted a new registration plan, allegedly establishing an objective test with indiscriminately drawn cards containing multiple choice questions. But the district court properly held that since white voters had already been allowed to register on less rigorous terms than black, the new test could not be used without a complete reregistration of voters. (85 S.Ct. 823, 13 L.Ed.2d 715.) (See Gaston County, North Carolina v. United States (1969) 395 U.S. 285, 89 S.Ct. 1720, 23 L.Ed.2d 309 [literacy test was invalid because, as result of prior school segregation, black residents of voting age did not have adequate opportunity to meet test].)

In Hunter v. Underwood (1985) 471 U.S. 222, 105 S.Ct. 1916, 85 L.Ed.2d 222, a provision of the Alabama Constitution of 1901, disenfranchising persons convicted of "any crime ... involving moral turpitude" (i.e., including misdemeanors), while racially neutral on its face, violated equal protection because the evidence showed that discrimination against Blacks was the original motivating factor.

(3) Statutes Prohibiting Discrimination. The 1965 Voting Rights Act (see supra, §228 et seq.) prohibited discriminatory use of literacy tests wherever they had been used in the past. In 1970, Congress enacted a nationwide ban on all literacy tests. (See supra, §231.) This ban was upheld in Oregon v. Mitchell (1970) 400 U.S. 112, 91 S.Ct. 260, 27 L.Ed.2d 272, where the court emphasized the national scope of the problem: "[C]oncern with educational inequality was perhaps uppermost in the minds of the congressmen who sponsored the Act. ... Faced with this and other evidence that literacy tests reduce voter participation in a discriminatory manner not only in the South but throughout the Nation, Congress was supported by substantial evidence in concluding a nationwide ban on literacy tests was appropriate to enforce the Civil War amendments." (91 S.Ct. 269, 27 L.Ed.2d 286.) (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 129; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 153; 27 Stanf. L. Rev. 609.)

1. Federal Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 241

[§ 241] Federal Law.

Section 4(e) of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C., §1973b(e)) prohibits denial of the right to vote for inability to read and write English to a person who has completed the 6th grade in an American-flag school (only in Puerto Rico). In Katzenbach v. Morgan (1966) 384 U.S. 641, 86 S.Ct. 1717, 16 L.Ed.2d 828, the court held that this was a proper exercise of congressional power, and, under the Supremacy Clause, it nullified New York's English literacy requirement.

(a) First, New York contended that the power of Congress under section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment is only exercisable where the state law would be unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause itself. But this is unsound. Regardless of whether the literacy requirement violates the Equal Protection Clause, Congress, under the Fourteenth Amendment, §5, and the Fifteenth Amendment, §2, has the same broad powers as expressed in the Necessary and Proper Clause of Article I, §8 (infra, §1293); i.e., to employ any means appropriate to a legitimate end. (86 S.Ct. 1723, 16 L.Ed.2d 833.)

(b) Second, the challenged provision was designed to relieve discrimination against the Puerto Rican community; and it is no objection that it is limited to American-flag schools, with which Congress was perhaps more familiar. (86 S.Ct. 1727, 16 L.Ed.2d 837.) (See 80 Harv. L. Rev. 169; 25 Stanf. L. Rev. 885; 27 Stanf. L. Rev. 603 [Congressional Power To Interpret Due Process and Equal Protection].)

The problem of Katzenbach v. Morgan, was presented in broader form, but not resolved, in Cardona v. Power (1966) 384 U.S. 672, 86 S.Ct. 1728, 16 L.Ed.2d 848. Plaintiff, in New York, was denied the right to vote because, although literate in Spanish, she was not literate in English. The case arose before the enactment of section 4(e), and the judgment against her was reversed for a consideration of her rights under the Act. (86 S.Ct. 1729, 16 L.Ed.2d 850.) Two justices thought that while a literacy test may be valid, in this multilingualistic nation, it cannot constitutionally be a single-language test. (86 S.Ct. 1730, 16 L.Ed.2d 851.) (See 80 Harv. L. Rev. 170.)

The 1975 Amendments extended the protections of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 to "language minorities." (See supra, §228 et seq.; 30 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 277 [discussing legitimacy of English as official language].)

[§ 242] California Law.

In Castro v. California (1970) 2 C.3d 223, 233, 85 C.R. 20, 466 P.2d 244, the court distinguished Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections (1959) 360 U.S. 45, 79 S.Ct. 985, 3 L.Ed.2d 1072, supra, §240 (where the appellant made no claim of literacy in any language), and also disparaged its approach, observing that later U.S. Supreme Court decisions have scrutinized restrictions more strictly and have applied more stringent equal protection standards.

Castro involved a challenge to former Cal. Const., Art. II, §1, providing that no person who is unable to read the Constitution in the English language could exercise the privileges of an elector, and also to several implementing Election Code sections. Petitioners, adult native-born American citizens residing in Los Angeles, were fully qualified to vote except for their inability to read English. They were, however, literate in Spanish, and had access to numerous newspapers and magazines in that language that covered the subjects on which voters should be informed. They were denied registration solely because of inability to pass the English literacy test. Held, the requirement was unconstitutional.

(a) The question whether the state's interest in an informed electorate necessitates a literacy requirement today, when nonwritten modes of communication are widely available, was not involved, since petitioners were literate, and written material was available to them on matters of national, state, and local political concern. (2 C.3d 239.)

(b) The cost and administrative complexity of a bilingual electoral system is not relevant to the constitutional issue; it may be assumed that voters literate in Spanish can prepare themselves in advance by studying sample ballots with the aid of translators. (2 C.3d 242.)

(c) Although inquiry into the motive of those who framed the provisions is hazardous, history shows that fear and hatred played a significant role in their passage. (2 C.3d 231.) "[I]t would indeed be ironic that petitioners, who are the heirs of a great and gracious culture, identified with the birth of California and contributing in no small measure to its growth, should be disenfranchised in their ancestral land, despite their capacity to cast an informed vote." (2 C.3d 243.)

(d) As applied to petitioners and other residents of Los Angeles literate in Spanish, the English literacy requirement was a violation of equal protection. (2 C.3d 242.) However, the holding is not confined to Los Angeles County. "We do not intend to introduce into our jurisprudence the anomalies of geographically determined degrees of constitutional protection or county-by-county adjudications of eligibility to vote. Voter qualifications have traditionally been matters of statewide concern and application." Accordingly, the requirement cannot be applied to any California citizens literate in Spanish. (2 C.3d 242.) "Our holding, of course, will apply to any case in which otherwise qualified prospective voters, literate in a language other than English, are able to make a comparable demonstration of access to sources of political information." (2 C.3d 242.) (See 59 Cal. L. Rev. 124.)

4. Poll Tax.

[§ 243] Poll Tax.

(1) Federal Elections. The Twenty-Fourth Amendment, which became effective February 4, 1965, provides in Section 1: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax." Section 2 authorizes Congress to enforce the Article by appropriate legislation.

The Amendment was construed and applied in Harman v. Forssenius (1965) 380 U.S. 528, 85 S.Ct. 1177, 14 L.Ed.2d 50. On its adoption, Virginia retained its poll tax for state elections, but for federal elections gave the voter the option to pay a poll tax or file a notarized certificate of residence each year. Held, this was unconstitutional.

(a) Purpose of the Amendment. The considerations leading to its adoption were (1) the tax disenfranchised the poor; (2) taxes were required long before elections and were left unpaid by many who did not plan ahead; (3) it was a vehicle for fraudulent manipulation by machines making block payments; (4) it was used to discriminate against black voters. (85 S.Ct. 1184, 14 L.Ed.2d 59.)

(b) Unconstitutional condition in Virginia statute. The Amendment covers not only denial but abridgment of the right to vote, and the statute imposed a material requirement on those who refused to surrender their right to vote without payment of the tax. This requirement of annual reregistration was for some more burdensome than mailing the poll tax payment on receipt of a bill. But even if less onerous, it was still invalid, for a state may not impose this requirement solely because of refusal to waive constitutional immunity from the tax. The remote administrative benefit--proof of residence, serving the same purpose as a poll tax--could not justify the enactment; reregistration, purging of lists, and challenges have been found to be adequate in the other 46 states without poll taxes. (85 S.Ct. 1186, 14 L.Ed.2d 60.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 139.)

5. Residence.

a. Discriminatory Provisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 244

[§ 244] Discriminatory Provisions.

(1) Discrimination Against Military Personnel. A state may impose a bona fide reasonable residence qualification for voting, and various state laws of this kind have been enacted to meet the problem of transient military personnel.

In Carrington v. Rash (1965) 380 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 775, 13 L.Ed.2d 675, the Texas Constitution provided that a member of the armed services who moved his or her home to Texas during the course of military duty could never vote there so long as he or she remained in the service. Petitioner, an Army sergeant, entered the service in 1946 from Alabama. He became permanently domiciled in Texas in 1962, acquired a home where he lived with his wife and children, had a small business, paid property taxes, and had an automobile registered there. Held, the Texas law was unconstitutionally applied to him. The Court rejected two theories advanced in support of the law:

First, that the state has a legitimate interest in immunizing its elections from concentrated balloting of servicemen, whose collective voice may overwhelm a small civilian community on such matters as local police administration, school teaching policies, or bond issues. The Court responded that the state may not constitutionally "fence out" a class of persons because of the way its members may vote. (85 S.Ct. 779, 13 L.Ed.2d 679.)

Second, that because of the transient nature of military service in a particular state, servicemen will not have the same interest in politics and the same willingness to invest in the future of the area as permanent residents. The Court responded that the state has tests to determine the bona fides of a claim of residence, and gives civilians the opportunity to prove it; the state cannot do less with servicemen. "By forbidding a soldier ever to controvert the presumption of non-residence, the Texas Constitution imposes an invidious discrimination in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment." (85 S.Ct. 780, 13 L.Ed.2d 680.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 141.)

(2) Resident of Federal Enclave. In Evans v. Cornman (1970) 398 U.S. 419, 90 S.Ct. 1752, 26 L.Ed.2d 370, appellants were residents of the National Institutes of Health, a federal enclave located in Maryland. It was purchased with consent over 30 years ago, and, under U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, cl. 17, Congress has exclusive legislative jurisdiction over it. (See supra, §27.) However, Congress has in recent years permitted the states to extend important aspects of state powers over federal enclaves. Thus, its residents are subject to Maryland income, gasoline, sales, and use taxes, to unemployment and workers' compensation laws, to automobile registration and drivers' permit laws, and to state court proceedings. In other words, Maryland treats residents of the enclave as state residents, and in nearly every election they have a stake equal to that of other Maryland residents. Held, under Carrington v. Rash, supra, they have a right to vote in local state elections, and the attempt to deny their right was a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

(3) Homeless Person. In Collier v. Menzel (1985) 176 C.A.3d 24, 221 C.R. 110, plaintiffs, identifying themselves as "homeless" citizens and indigents of Santa Barbara County, submitted affidavits of registration to vote, listing as their residence "100 Montecito Street." Defendant County Clerk rejected their affidavits on the ground that the place was a city park in which sleeping overnight was prohibited by ordinance. The lower court denied mandamus and plaintiffs appealed. Held, reversed; plaintiffs were entitled to register and vote.

(a) Although the right to vote is guaranteed by the Constitution, proper registration is a condition to its exercise; and under former Elec.C. 17 (now Elec.C. 321), an elector must be a resident of an election precinct. (176 C.A.3d 30.) For voting purposes, residence depends on a fixed habitation and an intention of remaining at that place. (176 C.A.3d 31.) But a dwelling or habitation need not be a structure under former Elec.C. 207 (now Elec.C. 2027); it may be a vehicle or a camp ground. (176 C.A.3d 31.) Thus, the designation of the public park was sufficient, and the intent to remain there was shown by plaintiffs' signed affidavits. (176 C.A.3d 31.) And despite the lack of a postal address for the park, plaintiffs gave defendant a post office box number, thereby fulfilling the additional requirement of a mailing address of former Elec.C. 500(d) (now Elec.C. 2150(a)(4)). (176 C.A.3d 32.)

(b) The fact that the park was legally forbidden for use as a residence does not affect plaintiffs' right to vote, for their intent to remain in the park is legally independent of any intent to violate the ordinance. "We do not hold that respondent cannot enforce its ordinance making it illegal to live in a public park. We do hold that so long as petitioners actually reside there, they may register to vote in that precinct." (176 C.A.3d 32.)

(c) Defendant's refusal to allow plaintiffs to register was a denial of equal protection. Registration laws that deny classes of residents the right to vote receive strict scrutiny (176 C.A.3d 33), and defendant has not shown a compelling interest in rejecting the affidavits. Neither the prevention of fraud (176 C.A.3d 34) nor administrative feasibility (176 C.A.3d 35) justifies defendant's action. "Denying the opportunity to vote to a resident merely because he or she cannot afford housing denies a citizen's vote on the basis of economic status and is therefore an impermissible basis for determining the entitlement to vote." (176 C.A.3d 37.)

(4) Voters Who Leave Domiciles Without Establishing New Domiciles. In Walters v. Weed (1988) 45 C.3d 1, 246 C.R. 5, 752 P.2d 443, students at U.C. Santa Cruz lived and registered to vote on the university campus. When they returned to school in the autumn of 1983, they abandoned their campus domiciles, and at the time of the election, had not established new domiciles. They voted in their former campus precincts in a contested city council election, and the validity of their votes was challenged on the basis of former Elec.C. 200 (now Elec.C. 349). Held, the votes were valid.

(a) Conflicting statutory provisions. Former Elec.C. 200(b) states that "[a]t a given time, a person may only have one domicile." Former Elec.C. 202(b) (now Elec.C. 2021) provides that a person does not gain a domicile in a precinct into which the person comes for temporary purposes merely. Former Elec.C. 205 (now Elec.C. 2024) states that "[t]he mere intention to acquire a new domicile, without the fact of removal, avails nothing." Govt.C. 243 and 244 set forth the rules for determination of domicile (referred to as "legal residence" or "residence"). These statutes rest on the established principle that every person has in law a domicile, and that a domicile is not lost until a new one is acquired. (45 C.3d 7.)

(b) Reconciliation of conflict. Former Elec.C. 200(b) "declares that in order to establish one's domicile, one must have a fixed habitation, the intent to remain and, when absent, the intent to return. On the other hand, the remaining statutes in the scheme comprise a legislative mandate that everyone be domiciled somewhere and that the act of leaving one's domicile without the act and intention of establishing a new one does not extinguish the old." (45 C.3d 8.) The trial court attempted to reconcile the conflicting statutes by stating the following rule: "Even if a voter has left his residence with the intention not to return to it, that residence remains his domicile as long as he has not acquired a new one." (45 C.3d 8.) This is the logical and correct view. The former domicile is the only location where the student has satisfied the statutory requirements; it is consistent with the statutory principle that one's domicile is unaffected by one's relocation without the intent to establish a new domicile; and "it ensures the continued integrity of the legislative mandate" codified in Govt.C. 244 that no one can be without a domicile. (25 C.3d 12.)

(c) Policy considerations. The Court of Appeal decision invalidating the votes would have disenfranchised the students. "[A]nyone who moved from one domicile and had not yet established another would be left without a domicile and thus would be unable to vote anywhere during the period of travel. University students would be especially hard hit, as it is not uncommon for them to relocate at summer's beginning or end, precisely when voter registration periods close. In communities with large student populations and low vacancy rates, the student's search for a new domicile can be particularly exasperating--and time-consuming. ... Such a result is, in itself, intolerable; it also conflicts with our holding that no construction of an election law should be indulged that would disenfranchise any voter if the law is reasonably susceptible to any other meaning ... , and it ignores our holding that students 18 years of age or older must be treated the same as other California residents for voter registration purposes." (45 C.3d 13, 14, citing Otsuka v. Hite (1966) 64 C.2d 596, 51 C.R. 284, 414 P.2d 412, infra, §246, and Jolicoeur v. Mihaly (1971) 5 C.3d 565, 96 C.R. 697, 488 P.2d 1, supra, §237.)

A strong dissent of three justices, analyzing the statutes in their historical perspective, concludes with the observation that "[t]he construction adopted by the majority is both completely unrealistic and contrary to legislative intent." (45 C.3d 25.)

5. Residence.

b. Period of Residence.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 245

[§ 245] Period of Residence.

(1) Traditional Lengthy Residence Requirements. Former Cal. Const., Art. II, §1, contained residence requirements that were struck down in a series of decisions:

(a) One year in state. In Keane v. Mihaly (1970) 11 C.A.3d 1037, 90 C.R. 263, the court held the former voting requirement of 1-year residence in the state an unconstitutional denial of equal protection. The older standard was that a regulatory provision was valid unless it amounted to an irrational or unreasonable discrimination. The new standard calls for a showing of necessity to promote a compelling state interest. (11 C.A.3d 1041.) The principal state interest urged is the necessity for informed voting; but today channels of information make a long period wholly unnecessary. (11 C.A.3d 1044.) The other interest--preventing fraudulent declarations--does not require any period and there is no showing that it was used for this purpose. (11 C.A.3d 1045.) (See Dunn v. Blumstein (1972) 405 U.S. 330, 92 S.Ct. 995, 1003, 31 L.Ed.2d 274, 285 [reaching same conclusion on Tennessee statute, and emphasizing not only right to vote but right to travel, both constitutionally protected]; Young v. Gness (1972) 7 C.3d 18, 22, 101 C.R. 533, 496 P.2d 445 [approving Keane].)

(b) Ninety days in county. In Dunn v. Blumstein, supra, the Tennessee 3-month county residence requirement was held invalid on the same reasoning as that which nullified California's 1-year requirement. And in Young v. Gness, supra, the court applied the Dunn holding to California's 90-day county residence requirement. (7 C.3d 22.) (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 104; 13 Santa Clara Lawyer 334.)

(c) Fifty-four days in precinct. The voting precinct residence requirement of 54 days and former Elec.C. 203, providing for closing registration 54 days before the election, were also held unconstitutional in Young v. Gness, supra. (7 C.3d 27.)

(2) Thirty-Day or Fifty-Day Requirements. A residence requirement of 30 days was authorized for presidential elections by a 1970 amendment to the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (supra, §228). This provision, coupled with the right to an absentee ballot for those who move within the period, was upheld in Oregon v. Mitchell (1970) 400 U.S. 112, 91 S.Ct. 260, 27 L.Ed.2d 272. (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 152.)

Although 30 days is not a constitutional maximum, 50 days comes close to one. (See Marston v. Lewis (1973) 410 U.S. 679, 93 S.Ct. 1211, 35 L.Ed.2d 627 [Arizona's 50-day residence requirement was tied to closing of registration, and state relied on volunteer registrars whose work was reviewed by election officials; upheld]; Burns v. Fortson (1973) 410 U.S. 686, 93 S.Ct. 1209, 1210, 35 L.Ed.2d 633, 635 [closing of registration 50 days before a general election "approaches the outer constitutional limits in this area"].)

(3) Current California Requirements. Former Cal. Const., Art. II, §1, was amended in 1972 to delete the traditional requirements that were held invalid, and Cal. Const., Art. II, §3, delegates the power to define residency to the Legislature. The statutes provide that (a) to vote, one must be "a resident of an election precinct at least 15 days prior to an election" (Elec.C. 321); (b) registration must cease 14 days preceding the election (Elec.C. 2107); and (c) a person who is registered in a precinct but moves within 14 days prior to an election may vote in that election in the precinct from which he or she has moved (Elec.C. 2035).

Electors who move from one voter precinct to another more than 29 (now 15) days prior to an election, and who fail to reregister or otherwise notify the registrar of voters of a change of address, may properly be denied the right to vote. (Kagan v. Kearney (1978) 85 C.A.3d 1010, 1019, 149 C.R. 867.)

V. SUFFRAGE

B. Invalid Restrictions.

6. Disenfranchisement for Criminal Conviction.

a. Former California Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 246

[§ 246] Former California Law.

(1) California Constitution and Statutes. Former Cal. Const., Art. II, §3, stated that the Legislature "shall provide" that no person convicted of "an infamous crime" or of "embezzlement or misappropriation of public money" shall exercise the privilege of an elector; and the statutes made the required provision. (For prohibitions in other states, see 36 A.L.R.2d 1238 [what constitutes "conviction"]; 39 A.L.R.3d 303 [effect of conviction under federal or other state's law]; 25 Stanf. L. Rev. 845.)

In Truchon v. Toomey (1953) 116 C.A.2d 736, 737, 254 P.2d 638, the court declared that every felony is an infamous crime. But in Otsuka v. Hite (1966) 64 C.2d 596, 51 C.R. 284, 414 P.2d 412, the California Supreme Court, in an exhaustive opinion, rejected this broad interpretation as possibly unconstitutional, and declared that the prohibition "must be limited to conviction of crimes involving moral corruption and dishonesty, thereby branding their perpetrator as a threat to the integrity of the elective process." (64 C.2d 599.) Plaintiffs were conscientious objectors in World War II, who served federal prison terms for violation of the Selective Service Act. Over 20 years later, they brought this action to compel registration. Held, judgment denying relief reversed.

(a) Constitutional right to vote. Though not expressly declared in the First Amendment, the right to vote has been judicially described as fundamental to our democratic system, and not "a creature of the California Constitution." The state must therefore show a compelling interest in abridging it, and restrictions must be drawn with narrow specificity. (64 C.2d 601.)

(b) The compelling state interest. The restriction rests on the presumption that a person convicted of an offense indicative of moral turpitude is morally corrupt, and might sell or barter his or her vote or engage in other election frauds. Preserving the purity of the ballot by avoiding this danger is a sufficient state interest. (64 C.2d 602.)

(c) Scope of the classification. If, as Truchon v. Toomey held, the term "infamous crime" extends to any felony, it would include many that do not involve corruption, and the prohibition would have no reasonable relation to the purpose of protecting the integrity of the elective process. (64 C.2d 605.) The proper approach is to inquire into the nature of the offense, and determine whether its elements "are such that he who has committed it may reasonably be deemed to constitute a threat to the integrity of the elective process." (64 C.2d 611.)

(d) Application of the test. It was conceded that plaintiffs acted pursuant to high religious and humanitarian motives. Hence, it could not reasonably be said that their violation of the Selective Service Act "branded them as morally corrupt and dishonest men convicted of an 'infamous crime' " within the meaning of the constitutional provision. (64 C.2d 615.) (See 14 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 699.)

(2) Disenfranchisement Unconstitutional: California Decision. The constitutional basis of disenfranchisement statutes has been vigorously challenged. (See 25 Stanf. L. Rev. 845.) And in Ramirez v. Brown (1973) 9 C.3d 199, 107 C.R. 137, 507 P.2d 1345, the court held the California provision unconstitutional.

(a) The test applied in Otsuka, supra, was that of "reasonable relationship" between the restriction and the state interest. In recent years, however, the test of a restriction on the right to vote has become more strict. It is constitutionally permissible only if it is necessary to promote the interest, and to be necessary, it must be the least burdensome alternative. (9 C.3d 207 et seq., citing Kramer v. Union Free School Dist. No. 15 (1969) 395 U.S. 621, 89 S.Ct. 1886, 23 L.Ed.2d 583, infra, §304; Castro v. California (1970) 2 C.3d 223, 85 C.R. 20, 466 P.2d 244, supra, §242; and other cases.)

(b) In early days, the disenfranchisement provision may have been necessary to minimize election frauds, but statutory regulations and technological developments of the past hundred years "have radically diminished the possibility of election fraud in California." (9 C.3d 214.) And penal sanctions are numerous and adequate. (9 C.3d 214.)

(3) Disenfranchisement Constitutional: U.S. Supreme Court Decision. In Richardson v. Ramirez (1974) 418 U.S. 24, 94 S.Ct. 2655, 41 L.Ed.2d 551, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the California decision in Ramirez v. Brown. The Court concluded that legislative and judicial history supported the constitutionality of this restriction on the franchise, and that the argument for a modern view of rehabilitation of felons should be addressed to the legislatures. (94 S.Ct. 2671, 41 L.Ed.2d 571.) Three justices dissented. (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 101.)

The U.S. Supreme Court decision left open for further consideration by the California Court whether a lack of uniformity in county election officials' enforcement was itself a denial of equal protection. But in the 1974 election, the California Constitution was amended to delete the provision on disenfranchisement of felons, and to provide merely for temporary "disqualification" during imprisonment or parole. (See infra, §247.) Hence, on remand, the California Supreme Court dismissed the proceedings as moot. (Ramirez v. Brown (1974) 12 C.3d 912, 117 C.R. 562, 528 P.2d 378.)

[§ 247] California Constitutional Revision.

Former Cal. Const., Art. II, §3, was amended in 1974, and in 1976 was renumbered as Cal. Const., Art. II, §4. This section requires the Legislature to "provide for the disqualification of electors while ... imprisoned or on parole for the conviction of a felony." (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 1300 [argument against disenfranchisement of ex-felons]; 26 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 157 [same].)

In Flood v. Riggs (1978) 80 C.A.3d 138, 145 C.R. 573, the confusing legislative and judicial history on this subject was reviewed, and the following holding was stated: Cal. Const., Art. II, §4, is self-executing; hence, a person convicted of any felony in this state, a sister state, or federal jurisdiction is temporarily barred from voting while serving a sentence of imprisonment or undergoing an unexpired term of parole. (80 C.A.3d 155, 156.) "We realize that our conclusion will inevitably result in denial of the precious right of suffrage, albeit temporarily, to a significant number of persons who, like appellant, have successfully reentered society as law-abiding citizens leading useful and productive lives. Whatever may be the more enlightened view concerning restoration of the right of franchise to paroled felons during their period of rehabilitation, it is in nature a policy question to be decided by the people and not for the courts 'to choose one set of values over [an]other.' " (80 C.A.3d 155.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Cal. Const., Art. II, §4, applies only to persons confined in state prison or on parole. It does not disenfranchise felony probationers and those convicted of felonies but sentenced to county jail. (League of Women Voters of Calif. v. McPherson (2006) 145 C.A.4th 1469, 1483, 52 C.R.3d 585.)

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

1. Regulation of Primary Elections.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 248

[§ 248] In General.

The growth of political parties and the importance of primary elections have led to many legislative attempts at regulation. Under Cal. Const., Art. II, §5, the Legislature may provide for primary elections for partisan offices. This provision is implemented by Elec.C. 5100, which excludes groups with negligible support by prescribing percentage restrictions on a party's right to participate; e.g., a small percentage of the vote at the preceding gubernatorial election, a petition signed by a percentage of the voters, etc. (On associational rights of political parties, see infra, §388.)

In upholding the constitutionality of this legislation, the court said in Christian Nationalist Party v. Jordan (1957) 49 C.2d 448, 453, 318 P.2d 473: "The number of citizens which constitutes a substantial group for purposes of an election law is not, of course, an absolute matter but a relative one which is to be measured in the light of the size of the entire voting population. Otherwise, a statute of the type before us would soon prove ineffective in a state which, like ours, is experiencing rapid growth. The standards for qualification ... , being stated in percentages of the total vote, are designed to respond to fluctuations in the size of the electorate, and they are set forth in the form of alternatives, so that provision is made for established parties, regardless of prior success, as well as for entirely new political groups." (See 70 A.L.R.2d 1162.)

However, the imposition of arbitrary and unreasonable conditions may be an unconstitutional deprivation of the right of suffrage. Thus, in Communist Party of the United States of America v. Peek (1942) 20 C.2d 536, 127 P.2d 889, the statute imposed an absolute requirement of a certain number of registered voters before the preceding primary election (2 years past). Held, this "test cannot possibly avoid impairing constitutional rights of suffrage by barring from the ballot political parties which represent substantial numbers of citizens." (20 C.2d 554.) (See Green Party of Calif. v. Jones (1995) 31 C.A.4th 747, 752, 37 C.R.2d 406 [trial judge erred in ordering Secretary of State to conduct primary elections in accordance with party's election rules, which, although designed to prevent minority control of access to ballot, conflicted with Elections Code; as remedy, rules were uncertain at best and did not outweigh state's interest in maintaining uniform ballot procedures]; Peace & Freedom Party v. Shelley (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1237, 1241, 8 C.R.3d 497 [Legislature's decision to exclude voters on inactive file of registered voters from calculation to determine whether political party has sufficient support to qualify for participation in primary election, pursuant to Elec.C. 5100, furthers state's compelling interest in protecting integrity of electoral process and is constitutional]; 88 Harv. Witkin Summary of California Law

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

1. Regulation of Primary Elections.

b. Federal Cases.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 249

[§ 249] Federal Cases.

In MacDougall v. Green (1948) 335 U.S. 281, 69 S.Ct. 1, 93 L.Ed. 3, an Illinois statute provided that a petition to form a new political party must be signed by at least 25,000 qualified voters, 200 of whom must come from each of at least 50 (out of 102) counties. Petitioners, seeking a ballot place for the Progressive Party, contended that this statute discriminated against urban residents. They pointed out that Cook County alone had 52% of the state's registered voters and that 87% of the voters resided in the 49 most populous counties. The court refused relief.

MacDougall was overruled in Moore v. Ogilvie (1969) 394 U.S. 814, 89 S.Ct. 1493, 23 L.Ed.2d 1. The use of nominating petitions by independents to obtain a place on the ballot is an integral part of the Illinois elective system; hence, it must pass the test of the Equal Protection Clause. And the law, applying an arbitrary formula to both sparsely settled counties and populous counties, discriminates in favor of rural sections.

In Williams v. Rhodes (1968) 393 U.S. 23, 89 S.Ct. 5, 21 L.Ed.2d 24, an Ohio law required minority parties either to obtain 10% of the vote in the last gubernatorial election, or to submit petitions equal to 15% of the votes cast in that election. Held, the statute was a denial of equal protection.

(a) U.S. Const., Art. II, §1, provides for appointment of electors as directed by the Legislature. But this does not give the state "absolute power" of regulation. Once the means of selection is determined to be by election, "no State can pass a law regulating elections that violates the Fourteenth Amendment's command" (the Equal Protection Clause). (89 S.Ct. 10, 21 L.Ed.2d 30.)

(b) Ohio's restrictions heavily burdened two fundamental rights: The right of individuals to associate for the advancement of political beliefs, and the right of qualified voters to cast their votes effectively. (89 S.Ct. 10, 21 L.Ed.2d 31.)

(c) The state's asserted compelling interests were not sufficient to justify imposition of the burdens:

(1) Promotion of the two-party system. Ohio "does not merely favor a 'two-party system'; it favors two particular parties--the Republicans and the Democrats, and in effect tends to give them a complete monopoly." (89 S.Ct. 11, 21

(2) Assurance of majority rule. "Concededly, the State does have an interest in attempting to see that the election winner be the choice of a majority of its voters. But to grant the State power to keep all political parties off the ballot until they have enough members to win would stifle the growth of all new parties working to increase their strength from year to year." (89 S.Ct. 11, 21 L.Ed.2d 32.)

(3) Assurance of choice of leadership. "[A]ny leader who attempts to capitalize on the disaffection of ... a group is forced to submit to a primary in which other, possibly more attractive, leaders can raise the same issues and compete for the allegiance of the disaffected group." But while this goal may be desirable, Ohio's system cannot achieve it; its system "denies the 'disaffected' not only a choice of leadership but a choice of issues as well." (89 S.Ct. 11, 21 L.Ed.2d 32.)

(4) Avoidance of confusion from large numbers of parties. "[T]he experience of many other States, including Ohio prior to 1948, demonstrates that no more than a handful of parties attempts to qualify for ballot positions even when a very low number of signatures, such as 1% of the electorate, is required." (89 S.Ct. 12, 21 L.Ed.2d 33.) (See American Party of Texas v. White (1974) 415 U.S. 767, 94 S.Ct. 1296, 39 L.Ed.2d 744 [upholding validity of Texas regulations]; Munro v. Socialist Workers Party (1986) 479 U.S. 189, 107 S.Ct. 533, 537, 93 L.Ed.2d 499, 508 [upholding validity of Washington restrictions]; 83 Harv. L. Rev. 86 [Williams v. Rhodes]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 91 [American Party]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1130 [Williams v. Rhodes]; 22 Stanf. L. Rev. 165 [same].)

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

1. Regulation of Primary Elections.

c. Independent Candidates.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 250

[§ 250] Independent Candidates.

(1) Validity of Regulations. In Storer v. Brown (1974) 415 U.S. 724, 94 S.Ct. 1274, 39 L.Ed.2d 714, the court examined several provisions of the California Elections Code.

(a) The Code denied a ballot place to an independent candidate if (1) he or she voted with a qualified political party in the immediately preceding primary, or (2) was registered with that party within 1 year prior to the immediately preceding primary (former Elec.C. 6830). Held, this part of the statute was valid. "It protects the direct primary process by refusing to recognize independent candidates who do not make early plans to leave a party and take the alternate course to the ballot. It works against independent candidates prompted by short-range political goals, pique or personal quarrel. It is also a substantial barrier to a party fielding an 'independent' candidate to capture and bleed off votes in the general election that might well go to another party." (94 S.Ct. 1281, 39 L.Ed.2d 726.)

(b) The Code further required that an independent candidate's nominating papers be signed by no less than 5% nor more than 6% of the entire vote cast in the preceding general election in the area, and that the signatures be obtained during a 24-day period following the primary and ending 60 days prior to the general election (former Elec.C. 6831, 6833); also, under former Elec.C. 6830(c), none of the signatures could be of persons who voted at the primary. Held, this part of the Code was of questionable validity, and the case was remanded to the district court to permit further findings as to the extent of the burden imposed on independent candidates for President. (94 S.Ct. 1284, 39 L.Ed.2d 729.) (See Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party (1997) 520 U.S. 351, 117 S.Ct. 1364, 1375, 137 L.Ed.2d 589, 605 [statute prohibiting candidate from appearing on ballot as candidate of more than one party did not violate candidate's associational rights; distinguishing Storer]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 91, 1121 [Storer]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 309 [Timmons].)

The Elections Code has since been repealed and reenacted. The valid requirement that an independent candidate not have been registered with a qualified party for a period prior to the preceding primary is now in Elec.C. 8550(f). However, the time has been increased to the 13 months preceding the general election or, in the case of a special congressional or legislative election, decreased to the 3 months preceding the filing of the declaration of candidacy. (See Elec.C. 8350, exempting candidates for presidential elector, the House of Representatives, and the Senate from filing declaration of intention to become candidate.)

The "questionable" requirements have been altered; the requirements as to the number of signatures and the period within which to file them have been liberalized, and voting with a qualified party at the primary no longer disqualifies the candidate nor those who would sign his or her petition. Under these amendments, nominating papers for statewide offices must include the signatures of not less than 1% of the registered voters in the state, and for other offices, not less than 3% of the registered voters in the area. (Elec.C. 8400.) Nominating papers generally must be delivered to the county election official between 188 and 88 days before the election. (Elec.C. 8403.)

(2) Signatures Requirement. Elec.C. 10704, interpreted as requiring independent candidates for a special primary election to submit 500 valid signatures pursuant to Elec.C. 8400, while qualified party candidates need submit only 40 (see Elec.C. 8062) is valid; i.e., it is not an excessive requirement for demonstrating a popular political base, and does not deny equal protection. (Kellam v. Eu (1978) 83 C.A.3d 463, 469, 147 C.R. 884 [decided under former versions of these statutes].)

In Illinois State Bd. of Elections v. Socialist Workers Party (1979) 440 U.S. 173, 99 S.Ct. 983, 59 L.Ed.2d 230, the Illinois Election Code made different provisions for political parties and independent candidates in statewide elections and elections for office in political subdivisions. In statewide elections, they had to obtain signatures of 25,000 qualified voters; in local elections, 5% of the number of voters at the previous election. In the Chicago 1977 election, the result was that independent candidates and new parties had to get considerably more than 25,000 signatures. Held, applying the strict test of compelling state interest, this requirement was not the least restrictive means of protecting the state's objectives, and was unconstitutional. (99 S.Ct. 991, 992, 59 L.Ed.2d 241, 242.) (See Norman v. Reed (1992) 502 U.S. 279, 112 S.Ct. 698, 707, 116 L.Ed.2d 711, 725 [discussing and applying Illinois State Bd. of Elections].)

(3) Designation of Candidate as "Independent." Elec.C. 13105 provides that candidates of qualified political parties are listed on the ballot as candidates of their parties; but one who has qualified by virtue of an independent nomination is listed as "Independent" instead of with the name of a political party. In Libertarian Party v. Eu (1980) 28 C.3d 535, 546, 170 C.R. 25, 620 P.2d 612, the court, following Storer v. Brown, supra, upheld a former version of the statute against an equal protection challenge.

(4) Condition of Write-in Candidacy. Elec.C. 8605, requiring that a write-in candidate in a party's primary election must have received at least 1% of the votes cast for the office at the preceding general election, is valid. (Fridley v. Eu (1982) 131 C.A.3d 100, 104, 182 C.R. 232 [decided under former Elec.C. 6661(a)].)

(5) Runoff Elections. Former Elec.C. 7203 prevented an independent candidate in a special election from participating in a runoff election when no candidate received a majority vote in the primary. In Libertarian Party v. Eu (1978) 83 C.A.3d 470, 474, 147 C.R. 888, the court held that this exclusion of all candidates not affiliated with an established political party was unconstitutional. Elec.C. 10706(b) now provides that each qualified independent candidate will be on the ballot for the runoff election unless two or more are registered as "affiliated with the same political body," in which case only the one with the greatest primary vote will be on the ballot.

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

1. Regulation of Primary Elections.

d. Enrollment Deadline.

[§ 251] Enrollment Deadline.

In Rosario v. Rockefeller (1973) 410 U.S. 752, 93 S.Ct. 1245, 36 L.Ed.2d 1, a New York law required voters to enroll in the party of their choice 30 days before the November general election to be eligible to vote in the next primary election. Petitioners, who could have met the cut-off date, waited too long. Held, the statute was constitutional.

(b) The time period between the enrollment deadline and the next primary election is lengthy, but is not arbitrary; its legitimate purpose is to inhibit "raiding," a practice in which voters of one party designate themselves as voters of another to influence the other's primary. (93 S.Ct. 1251, 36 L.Ed.2d 8.)

Four justices dissented. They found no justification for an enrollment deadline 8 or 11 months prior to election, and contended that, under the strict test of a statute restricting exercise of a fundamental right, the deterrence of "raiding" cannot be considered a compelling state interest. (93 S.Ct. 1255, 36 L.Ed.2d 14.)

In Kusper v. Pontikes (1973) 414 U.S. 51, 94 S.Ct. 303, 38 L.Ed.2d 260, the court held the Illinois antiraiding statute unconstitutional, distinguishing Rosario v. Rockefeller. The Illinois law prohibited a person from voting at a party's primary if he or she voted at the primary of another party within the preceding 23 months. (a) Under the New York law, the voter was not prevented from participating in the party primary of his or her choice at the next election; the voter merely had to meet the time limit on enrollment. (b) Under the Illinois statute, the voter was "locked" into his or her preexisting party affiliation from one primary to the next, and could break the "lock" only by foregoing voting in any primary for almost 2 years. (94 S.Ct. 309, 38 L.Ed.2d 269.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1163.)

V. SUFFRAGE
C. Political Parties and Candidates.
2. Rights of Blacks.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 252

[§ 252] Rights of Blacks.

The failure of efforts to prohibit Blacks from voting (see supra, §238 et seq.) led to abortive attempts to exclude them from Democratic Party primaries in states where the result of the primary determined the election.

(1) State legislation of this type was held unconstitutional as a denial of privileges and immunities of U.S. citizenship (infra, §608). The Court declared that this violation of the Fourteenth Amendment made it unnecessary to consider the Fifteenth Amendment. (Nixon v. Herndon (1927) 273 U.S. 536, 47 S.Ct. 446, 71 L.Ed. 759.)

(2) The same conclusion was reached in Nixon v. Condon (1932) 286 U.S. 73, 52 S.Ct. 484, 487, 76 L.Ed. 984, 990, where individuals acted under the authority of state legislation. The statute provided that the state executive committee of each political party should have the power to prescribe the qualifications of its members, and the executive committee of the Democratic Party ruled that only "white Democrats" could participate in the primary elections. Held, the exclusion of Blacks was unconstitutional. Although the political party was private in origin, the executive committee had, independently of the party itself, been invested by statute with authority to act as an instrument or agency in carrying out the functions of government. Hence, the principles of Nixon v. Herndon were applicable.

(3) In Grove v. Townsend (1935) 295 U.S. 45, 55 S.Ct. 622, 624, 79 L.Ed. 1292, 1294, the state Democratic Party Convention, acting under its own rules, and without relying on any statutory authority, denied Blacks the privilege of membership in the party. The Court held that there was no violation of the Constitution, for the party convention was not an agency of the state. But in Smith v. Allwright (1944) 321 U.S. 649, 64 S.Ct. 757, 88 L.Ed. 987, the Grove case was overruled. "[W]hen primaries become a part of the machinery for choosing officials ... the same tests to determine the character of discrimination or abridgement should be applied to the primary as are applied to the general election," and the right to vote cannot be nullified by a state "through casting its electoral process in a form which permits a private organization to practice racial discrimination in the election." (64 S.Ct. 765, 88 L.Ed. 998.)

(4) In Terry v. Adams (1953) 345 U.S. 461, 73 S.Ct. 809, 97 L.Ed. 1152, the Jaybird Democratic Association, a Texas county organization open only to whites, held a pre-primary election in May to pick a white candidate. In the regular July Democratic primary, Blacks could vote but never effectively. Held, this was an unconstitutional attempt to circumvent the Fifteenth Amendment. "The use of the county-operated primary to ratify the result of the prohibited election merely compounds the offense. ... The effect of the whole procedure, Jaybird primary plus Democratic primary plus general election, is to do precisely that which the Fifteenth Amendment forbids--strip Negroes of every vestige of influence in selecting the officials who control the local county matters that intimately touch the daily lives of citizens." (73 S.Ct. 813, 97 L.Ed. 1160.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1155; 117 Harv L. Rev. 2318 [presidential nomination process]; 57 So. Cal. L. Rev. 213.)

3. Political Activities of Public Employees.

a. Federal Employees.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 253

[§ 253] Federal Employees.

(1) Former Provisions. The federal Hatch Act (5 U.S.C., §7301 et seq.) formerly prohibited officers and employees in the executive branch from taking "an active part in political management or in political campaigns." (See former 5 U.S.C., §7324(a)(2); 4 Rotunda, §20.52.)

The validity of the Hatch Act was sustained, against a challenge based on the First, Ninth, and Tenth Amendments, in United Public Workers of America (C.I.O.) v. Mitchell (1947) 330 U.S. 75, 67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754. "Congress may regulate the political conduct of Government employees 'within reasonable limits,' even though the regulation trenches to some extent upon unfettered political action. ... When actions of civil servants in the judgment of Congress menace the integrity and the competency of the service, legislation to forestall such danger and adequate to maintain its usefulness is required." (67 S.Ct. 571, 91 L.Ed. 774.)

The Hatch Act was again sustained in United States Civil Service Com. v. National Assn. of Letter Carriers, AFL-CIO (1973) 413 U.S. 548, 93 S.Ct. 2880, 37 L.Ed.2d 796, against a challenge for overbreadth.

(a) The interests promoted by the Act are (1) impartial execution of the laws without partisan bias or favoritism; (2) avoidance of even an appearance of bias or favoritism; (3) avoidance of the use of state power to build partisan political power; and (4) insulation of public employees from partisan political pressure. (93 S.Ct. 2890, 37 L.Ed.2d 809.)

(b) The provisions of the Act and the rulings of the Civil Service Commission are sufficiently clear, and the Commission has established a procedure for an employee to seek advice and remove doubts as to a proposed course of conduct. (93 S.Ct. 2897, 37 L.Ed.2d 817.) And even if the provisions forbidding partisan campaign endorsements and speechmaking were in some respects unconstitutionally overbroad, the remainder of the Act "covers a whole range of easily identifiable and constitutionally proscribable partisan conduct on the part of federal employees." (93 S.Ct. 2898, 37 L.Ed.2d 817.)

Three justices dissented, pointing out that the Act incorporates many prior rulings of the Civil Service Commission and contending that the new three-volume work of the Commission contains ambiguous rulings that have a "chilling effect" on First Amendment rights. (93 S.Ct. 2905, 37 L.Ed.2d 826.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 141.)

(2) Statutory Revision. In 1993, Congress adopted the Hatch Act Reform Amendments. (See 5 U.S.C., §7301 et seq.) The new Act encourages public employees to participate in the political process, except as expressly prohibited. (See 5 U.S.C., §§7321, 7323.) Generally, a public employee may not engage in political activities while engaged in the following:

(a) Being on duty. (5 U.S.C., §7324(a)(1).)

(b) Being in a "room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by an individual employed or holding office" in the federal government or a federal agency or instrumentality. (5 U.S.C., §7324(a)(2).)

(c) Wearing an identifying uniform or official insignia. (5 U.S.C., §7324(a)(3).)

(d) Using a government vehicle. (5 U.S.C., §7324(a)(4); for other prohibited activity, see 5 U.S.C., §7323.)

Penalties for violation of the Act include the employee's removal or suspension without pay for at least 30 days. (See 5 U.S.C., §7326.)

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 254

[§ 254] In General.

The Hatch Act (supra, §253) applies as well to state and local employees whose principal employment is in connection with an activity financed by federal loans or grants, and prohibits them from running for elective office. (See Lee v. Civil Service Com. (1982) 129 C.A.3d 9, 11, footnote 1, 180 C.R. 822.)

California statutory regulations also cover the political activities of public employees. (See Govt.C. 3201 [matter of statewide concern], Govt.C. 3202 [definitions], Govt.C. 3203 [no restrictions except as provided by this code or federal law], Govt.C. 3204 [unlawful use of influence], Govt.C. 3205 [political solicitation within local agency prohibited], Govt.C. 3206 [political activities while in uniform prohibited], Govt.C. 3207 [permitted local rules and regulations], Govt.C. 3208 [no other restrictions on state employees except as provided by Govt.C. 19990 (conduct conflicting with duties)], Govt.C. 3209 [soliciting during nonworking hours to support or defeat ballot measures affecting public employment permitted]; 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §279.)

California statutes prohibit public office holders and seekers from offering or arranging for any increase in compensation for a state or local agency employee in exchange for a contribution or loan to a committee controlled by the office holder or seeker. (Govt.C. 3205.5.) And officers, employees, and consultants of local agencies are prohibited from spending or authorizing the expenditure of agency funds to support or oppose a candidate or ballot measure. (Govt.C. 54964.) However, a "local agency" does not include school or community college districts. (Govt.C. 54964(b)(4).) The statute does not prohibit spending funds for informational activities if specified conditions are met. (Govt.C. 54964(c).) (On requirement that judges take leave of absence to run for public office, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §61; on statutes of other states, see *Broadrick v. 3. Political Activities of Public Employees.

b. California Employees.

2. Case Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 255

[§ 255] Case Law.

Political rights of California public employees have been the subject of a number of decisions.

Fort v. Civil Service Com. of Alameda (1964) 61 C.2d 331, 38 C.R. 625, 392 P.2d 385, involved a county charter provision that no officer or employee in the classified civil service may take part in a "political campaign or election" other than to cast a vote or privately express an opinion. Petitioner, director of the Center for Treatment of Alcoholism, acted as chairman of a speakers' bureau for his own county's campaign committee in a gubernatorial election, and was dismissed. Held, the provision was unconstitutional and he was entitled to reinstatement.

(a) Rights of public employees. Although there is no constitutional right to public employment, a person cannot properly be barred or removed from public employment arbitrarily or in disregard of his or her constitutional rights. (61 C.2d 334.)

(b) Political activity is a fundamental right. "The freedom of the individual to participate in political activity is a fundamental principle of a democratic society and is the premise upon which our form of government is based." (61 C.2d 334.)

(c) The charter provision violated that right. It was so broad as to cover any political activity, partisan or not, including support of propositions that affect the employee, and perhaps even membership in a political organization or attendance at political gatherings; and it applied to all elections, national and state. (61 C.2d 335, 336.)

(d) A narrowly drawn statute may be valid. The (former) Hatch Act, prohibiting active participation in partisan politics, was held in United Public Workers of America (C.I.O.) v. Mitchell (1947) 330 U.S. 75, 67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754, supra, §253, to be a reasonable restriction to protect against the dangers in discharging an official duty. (61 C.2d 336.) And state laws, such as Govt.C. 3201 et seq. (supra, §254), are also sufficiently restricted in scope to be sustainable. (61 C.2d 340.) "No one can reasonably deny the need to limit some political activities such as the use of official influence to coerce political action, the solicitation of political contributions from fellow employees, and the pursuit of political purposes during those hours that the employee should be discharging the duties of his position. A strong case, we think, can also be made for the view that permitting a public employee to run or campaign against his own superior has so disruptive an effect on the public service as to warrant restriction. It is, of course, possible to draw a restrictive provision narrowly in order to deal specifically with such abuses." (61 C.2d 338.)

(e) A statute too broad in scope cannot stand. Where First Amendment rights are involved, the state regulation can prevail only if (1) there is a compelling interest in the limitation, and (2) the restriction is drawn with narrow specificity. (61 C.2d 337.) There cannot be wholesale restrictions on political activities merely because the persons affected are public employees, of whom today there are reportedly 12 million in the country. (61 C.2d 337.)

In Kinnear v. San Francisco (1964) 61 C.2d 341, 38 C.R. 631, 392 P.2d 391, the San Francisco charter contained a provision forfeiting the office of an appointive officer or employee who became a candidate for election to any public office. Plaintiff, a permanent civil service deputy sheriff, filed a declaration of candidacy for the office of sheriff, and was notified of automatic forfeiture. Held, the provision was too broad. It related to all public offices, partisan or nonpartisan, and national, state, and local. No compelling interest of the county was shown to justify so sweeping a restriction of the fundamental right. (61 C.2d 343.)

In Belshaw v. Berkeley (1966) 246 C.A.2d 493, 54 C.R. 727, defendant city had a regulation that employees should conduct themselves in a manner as "to reflect no discredit" on the city, and the fire department had a regulation prohibiting adverse criticism of superiors and public disapproval of policies and practices. Petitioner, a fireman, was suspended after he wrote a letter to the local newspaper criticizing the city manager and other officials for alleged discrimination in pay between policemen and firemen. Held, mandamus granted to expunge the order of suspension; these rules violated his constitutional right of free speech. (246 C.A.2d 497.)

In Bagley v. Washington Township Hosp. Dist. (1966) 65 C.2d 499, 55 C.R. 401, 421 P.2d 409, plaintiff was hired by defendant hospital district as a nurse's aide. A number of citizens, including district employees, were dissatisfied with the board's policies. They commenced a recall campaign aimed at some directors, and plaintiff actively participated in the campaign on off-duty hours. The hospital administrator gave written notice that this activity was unlawful and grounds for dismissal under Govt.C. 3205, prohibiting political solicitation within local agencies. Plaintiff sued to enjoin the district from threatening reprisals for his activity. She was discharged, and amended her complaint to seek reinstatement and damages. Held, the restraints were unconstitutional.

Defendant contended that, where no civil service or merit system is in force, employees serve at the pleasure of the agency and may be discharged without cause. The court's answer was unequivocal: "Despite the antiquity of this argument, its reasoning today stands utterly discredited." (65 C.2d 503.) The doctrine of unconstitutional conditions (see infra, §813) negatives any such broad power, and the Fort case makes it clear that a governmental agency that would require a waiver of constitutional rights as a condition of public employment must prove three things: (a) That the restraints rationally relate to the enhancement of the public service; (b) that the public benefits outweigh the resulting impairment of rights; and (c) that no alternatives less subversive of rights are available. These tests were not met here. (65 C.2d 509.) (See Rosenfield v. Malcolm (1967) 65 C.2d 559, 562, 55 C.R. 505, 421 P.2d 697 [Fort and Bagley applied to nullify dismissal of assistant health officer with probationary status who joined organization devoted to eradication of racial discrimination]; 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1083 [Bagley]; 55 Cal. L. Rev. 1069 [Rosenfield].)

In Eldridge v. Sierra View Local Hosp. Dist. (1990) 224 C.A.3d 311, 273 C.R. 654, plaintiff, a nurse employed by defendant hospital district, announced her candidacy for a vacant position on the district's board of directors. The board, believing that the two positions were incompatible and fraught with conflicts of interest, adopted a bylaw providing that such an employee could not assume office without resigning from employment. Plaintiff nevertheless accepted the elective office and the board terminated her employment. She sought mandamus to compel reinstatement, claiming violation of her civil rights, and the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Held, reversed.

(a) Govt.C. 3203 states that, except for exceptions under state or federal law, "no restriction shall be placed on the political activities of any officer or employee of a state or local agency." (224 C.A.3d 317.) And Govt.C. 3201 declares that "political activities of public employees are of significant statewide concern." (224 C.A.3d 317.) Defendant contended that its bylaw did not violate Govt.C. 3203 because it did not prevent plaintiff from holding office. But Fort, supra, rejected a similar argument in a constitutional context; and "the principle set forth in Fort applies to the exercise of a clearly defined statutory right to be free from interference with political rights (§3203), particularly where the statutory provision finds its genesis in constitutional principles." Hence the hospital could not burden the exercise of the statutory rights in Govt.C. 3203 with the penalty of loss of employment. (224 C.A.3d 319.)

(b) Conflict of interest situations may arise after a person takes office; but "the effect of a person" with a conflict participating in a decision is to subject him or her to fines and penalties, and render void the action in which the person participated, not to disqualify him or her from holding office. (224 C.A.3d 320.)

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

4. Federal Regulation of Campaigns.

a. Election Campaign Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 256

[§ 256] Election Campaign Act.

The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (FECA), as amended in 1974, regulated many aspects of federal election campaigns. (See Buckley v. Valeo (1976) 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 694, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, 759 [Appendix setting forth major provisions].) In an elaborate per curiam opinion in Buckley, the Court considered the constitutionality of the following major provisions of the Act and statutes providing for public financing of presidential election campaigns:

(a) Contribution limitations. Provisions limiting contributions by individuals and groups to candidates and authorized campaign committees, limiting contributions by political committees, limiting volunteers' incidental expenses, and imposing a limitation on total annual contributions by a contributor are valid. (96 S.Ct. 612, 631, 46 L.Ed.2d 690.) (See 4 Rotunda, §20.51.)

(b) Reporting and disclosure requirements. Provisions requiring political committees to report their contributors, and requiring individuals and groups to report contributions to or expenditures on behalf of candidates are valid. (96 S.Ct. 621, 46 L.Ed.2d 711.) (See 4 Rotunda, §20.51.)

(c) Public financing of presidential election campaigns. Provisions for the public financing of presidential election campaigns from general revenues in the aggregate amount designated by individual taxpayers were upheld. (96 S.Ct. 633, 46 L.Ed.2d 725.) (On provision making it a criminal offense for independent political committees to expend funds to further election of presidential candidate receiving public financing, see infra, §258.)

(d) Composition of the Federal Election Commission. Provisions for the appointment of the majority of the members of the Commission by the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House were violative of the Appointments Clause and the doctrine of separation of powers. (96 S.Ct. 670, 46 L.Ed.2d 739.)

(e) Expenditure limitations. "[T]he limitations on campaign expenditures, on independent expenditures by individuals or groups, and on expenditures by a candidate from his personal funds are constitutionally infirm." (96 S.Ct. 694, 46 L.Ed.2d 758.)

(f) Underlying theory. The underlying theory of the decision appears in the following statement: "A restriction on the amount of money a person or group can spend on political communication during a campaign necessarily reduces the quantity of expression by restricting the number of issues discussed, the depth of their exploration, and the size of the audience reached. This is because virtually every means of communicating ideas in today's mass society requires the expenditure of money. The distribution of the humblest handbill or leaflet entails printing, paper, and circulation costs. Speeches and rallies generally necessitate hiring a hall and publicizing the event. The electorate's increasing dependence on television, radio, and other mass media for news and information has made these expensive modes of communication indispensable instruments of effective political speech." (96 S.Ct. 634, 46 L.Ed.2d 687.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 171 [Buckley]; 50 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. [same].)

In response to Buckley, Congress enacted the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, eliminating the provisions found unconstitutional and making other changes. The Amendments also codified all election law provisions in Title 2 of the United States Code (2 U.S.C., §431 et seq.), except for the Presidential Campaign Fund Act (26 U.S.C., §9001) and the Hatch Act (supra, §253). The FECA has been amended several times since 1976. (See 116 Harv. L. Rev. 2610 [using campaign donations to influence lawmaking]; 73 Cal. L. Rev. 1045; 91 Cal. L. Rev. 643 [symposium on campaign finance reform]; 10 Hastings Const. L. Q. [Symposium on campaign finance reform]; 40 San Diego L. Rev. 19 [Campaign Finance Reform]; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1 [Buckley and 1976 amendments]; 50 Stanf. L. Rev. 837 [mandating donor anonymity to disrupt market for political influence]; 50 Stanf. L. Rev. 893 [The Democratic Paradox of Campaign Finance Reform]; 31 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1065, 1083 [political money and freedom of speech]; 50 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1141 [increasing voter competence through increased campaign finance disclosure]; on access to broadcast facilities of candidates seeking federal office, see CBS v. Federal Communications Commission (1981) 453 U.S. 367, 101 S.Ct. 2813, 69 L.Ed.2d 706; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 221 [CBS].)

Due to continuing circumvention of FECA limitations on the sources and amounts of contributions, and the need to protect elections from the appearance of corruption, Congress adopted the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA), which contains a series of amendments to the FECA and the federal Communications Act. (See McConnell v. Federal Election Com. (2003) 540 U.S. 93, 124 S.Ct. 619, 719, 773, 157 L.Ed.2d 491, 613, 673 [Appendices setting forth major provisions].) In a three-part opinion written by different justices, McConnell considered constitutional challenges to the new provisions, holding as follows:

(a) Soft-money restrictions. The principal purpose of Title I of the BCRA is to plug the "soft-money loophole." (124 S.Ct. 654, 157 L.Ed.2d 542.) Soft money consists of contributions to political parties for activities intended to influence state or local elections, which funds were not subject to the FECA. (124 S.Ct. 648, 157 L.Ed.2d 535.) The BCRA prohibits: (1) national party committees, their agents, and federal candidates and officeholders from soliciting, receiving, directing, or spending soft money, (2) state and local party committees from using soft-money funds for activities affecting federal elections, (3) political parties from soliciting and donating funds to tax exempt organizations that engage in electioneering, and (4) state and local candidates from raising and spending soft money to fund advertisements and other public communications that promote or attack federal candidates. These provisions are valid. (124 S.Ct. 654, 686, 157 L.Ed.2d 542, 576.)

(b) Disclosure requirements for funding electioneering communications. Title II of the BCRA expands the reach of FECA disclosure requirements to "electioneering communications," which encompass any "broadcast, cable, or satellite communication" that refers to a clearly identified candidate for federal office within a specified time before an election. (124 S.Ct. 686, 157 L.Ed.2d 577.) This provision and other amendments specifying significant disclosure requirements for funding electioneering communication, and restricting that funding by corporations and labor unions, are valid. (124 S.Ct. 694, 698, 157 L.Ed.2d 585, 589.)

(c) Restrictions on party spending during preelection period. The provision requiring parties to choose between coordinated and independent expenditures after they nominate a candidate for federal office constitutes an unconstitutional burden on the parties' right to make unlimited independent expenditures. (124 S.Ct. 700, 157 L.Ed.2d 592.)

(d) Restrictions on contributions by minors. The provision prohibiting minors from making contributions to candidates or political parties violates the First Amendment rights of minors. (124 S.Ct. 711, 157 L.Ed.2d 603.)

(e) Records of broadcasting requests. Provisions requiring broadcasters to keep records of politically related broadcasting requests publicly available are not unduly burdensome and are valid. (124 S.Ct. 712, 157 L.Ed.2d 605.)

Three justices filed separate opinions in which they concurred and dissented in part (124 S.Ct. 720, 729, 742, 157 L.Ed.2d 614, 624, 638), and two justices filed separate opinions in which they dissented in part (124 S.Ct. 777, 784, 157 L.Ed.2d 678, 687).

See 5 Rotunda 4th, §20.51; 58 Stanf. L. Rev. 1499 [proposal for taking FECA online]; 19 A.L.R. Fed 2d 1 [Validity, Construction, and Application of Campaign Finance Laws--Supreme Court Cases]. Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act: In Federal Election Com. v. Wisconsin Right to Life (2007) 551 U.S. 449, 127 S.Ct. 2652, 168 L.Ed.2d 329, plaintiff nonprofit advocacy corporation challenged the constitutionality of §203 of the BCRA, which prohibits the use of corporate or union treasury funds to pay for an "electioneering communication" broadcast within a specified time before an election. Plaintiff was forced to pull its ads before the blackout period commenced to avoid violating §203. The ads, while complaining about United States Senators using a filibuster to block the appointment of judicial nominees, called on viewers to complain about the filibuster to a specific senator who was running in the state Democratic primary. On remand, the District Court held that §203 was unconstitutional as applied to plaintiff's ads. Held, affirmed. In the lead opinion, two justices agreed that §203 was unconstitutional as applied because the ads did not constitute express advocacy, or its functional equivalent, and defendants failed to identify a sufficiently compelling interest to justify burdening plaintiff's speech. (127 S.Ct. 2667, 2671, 168 L.Ed.2d 346, 350.) In an opinion concurring in the judgment, three justices stated that the holding in McConnell v. Federal Election Com. (2003) 540 U.S. 93, 124 S.Ct. 619, 157 L.Ed.2d 491, text, p. 410, "that § 203 is facially valid because the vast majority of pre-election issue ads can constitutionally be proscribed," was wrong, and should not be enforced. (127 S.Ct. 2684, 2686, 168 L.Ed.2d 365, 368.) Four justices dissented, stating that §203 is constitutional and that McConnell should be upheld. (127 S.Ct. 2687, 168 L.Ed.2d 368.) (See 121 Harv. L. Rev. 285 [Wisconsin Right to Life].)

In Davis v. Federal Election Com. (2008) 554 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 2759, 171 L.Ed.2d 737, plaintiff candidate for the United States House of Representatives challenged the constitutionality of §319(a) of the BCRA, which raised campaign limits for the non-self-financing candidate when a self-financing candidate's expenditure of personal funds caused the "opposition personal funds amount" threshold of $ 350,000 to be exceeded. The provision operated, under certain circumstances, to impose different campaign limits on candidates competing for the same congressional seat. The District Court held that plaintiff had standing but rejected his claims on the merits. Plaintiff filed a direct appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Held, reversed. §319(a) is an unconstitutional burden on plaintiff's First Amendment Right to spend his own money for campaign speech, and §319(b), which implements the asymmetrical contribution limits through compelled disclosures, also is unconstitutional. (128 S.Ct. 2771, 2775, 171 L.Ed.2d 751, 755.) §319(a) cannot stand unless its burden on campaign speech is justified by a compelling state interest. That burden is not justified here by any governmental interest in eliminating corruption or the perception of corruption. (128 S.Ct. 2772, 171 L.Ed.2d 752.) Leveling the electoral opportunities for candidates with differing levels of wealth is not a legitimate governmental interest that justifies the asymmetrical limits. (128 S.Ct. 2773, 171 L.Ed.2d 753.) Four justices concurred and dissented in part in two opinions. (128 S.Ct. 2777, 2782, 171 L.Ed.2d 757, 763.)

b. Contributions From Corporations or Labor Organizations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 257

[§ 257] Contributions From Corporations or Labor Organizations.

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act prohibits any corporation or labor organization from making "a contribution or expenditure" in connection with an election for federal office. (2 U.S.C., §441b; Cort v. Ash (1975) 422 U.S. 66, 95 S.Ct. 2080, 2091, 45 L.Ed.2d 26, 39 [no private right of action by shareholder against corporation; decided under predecessor statute]; see United States v. International Union United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW-CIO) (1957) 352 U.S. 567, 77 S.Ct. 529, 1 L.Ed.2d 563; 4 Rotunda, §20.51; 71 Harv. L. Rev. 120; 46 Cal. L. Rev. 439; 20 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1327; 2 Western State L. Rev. 33; 190 A.L.R. Fed 169 [validity and application of 2 U.S.C., §441b].)

In Pipefitters Local Union No. 562 v. United States (1972) 407 U.S. 385, 92 S.Ct. 2247, 33 L.Ed.2d 11, a union established a separate political fund under its control, and collected contributions from members at rates based on hours worked. The union and three officers were convicted of conspiracy to violate the Act. Held, reversed for failure of the trial judge to instruct that the jury must find that contributions were actually or in effect union dues or assessments.

(a) The statute does not prohibit unions from making contributions in federal elections through a political fund if the contributions are volunteered. (92 S.Ct. 2257, 33 L.Ed.2d 23.) This construction is confirmed by the 1972 amendment, enacted after the convictions. (92 S.Ct. 2261, 33 L.Ed.2d 27.)

(b) The fund need not be entirely free from union influence. It must be separate only in the sense that there must be "a strict segregation of its monies from union dues and assessments." And solicitation by union officials is permissible, if "conducted under circumstances plainly indicating that donations are for a political purpose and that those solicited may decline to contribute without loss of job, union membership, or any other reprisal within the union's institutional power." (92 S.Ct. 2264, 33 L.Ed.2d 30.) This construction is also confirmed by the 1972 amendment. (92 S.Ct. 2267, 2270, 33 L.Ed.2d 34, 37.)

In Federal Election Com. v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life (1986) 479 U.S. 238, 107 S.Ct. 616, 93 L.Ed.2d 539, the court held the statute unconstitutional as applied to a nonprofit corporation (MCFL) formed for the purpose of promoting "pro-life" causes through educational and political activities.

(a) Corporate spending on political activity is regulated because of concern that wealth amassed in the economic arena might be used in the political arena, even though a corporation's wealth may be no indication of the power of its ideas. (107 S.Ct. 627, 93 L.Ed.2d 555.)

(b) "Regulation of corporate political activity thus has reflected concern not about use of the corporate form per se, but about the potential for unfair deployment of wealth for political purposes. Groups such as MCFL, however, do not pose that danger of corruption. MCFL was formed to disseminate political ideas, not to amass capital. The resources it has available are not a function of its success in the economic marketplace, but its popularity in the political marketplace." (107 S.Ct. 628, 93 L.Ed.2d 557.) As applied to MCFL, §441b is therefore unconstitutional, "for it infringes protected speech without a compelling justification for such infringement." (107 S.Ct. 631, 93 L.Ed.2d 560.) (See Federal Election Com. v. Beaumont (2003) 539 U.S. 146, 123 S.Ct. 2200, 2209, 156 L.Ed.2d 179, 192 [statutory prohibition of contributions by corporations applies to nonprofit advocacy corporations]; 101 Harv. L. c. Restrictions on Political Committees.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 258

[§ 258] Restrictions on Political Committees.

In Federal Election Com. v. National Conservative Political Action Committee (1985) 470 U.S. 480, 105 S.Ct. 1459, 84 L.Ed.2d 455, the Court sustained a challenge to the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act (26 U.S.C., §9001 et seq.). This statute offered presidential candidates of major political parties the option of receiving public financing for their general election campaigns. If a candidate elected public financing, it was a criminal offense for independent "political committees" to expend more than $ 1,000 to further that candidate's election. Held, the provision is unconstitutional on its face.

"[P]reventing corruption or the appearance of corruption are the only legitimate and compelling governmental interests thus far identified for restricting campaign finances. In Buckley we struck down the FECA's limitation on individuals' independent expenditures because we found no tendency in such expenditures, uncoordinated with the candidate or his campaign, to corrupt or to give the appearance of corruption. For similar reasons, we also find §9012(f)'s limitation on independent expenditures by political committees to be constitutionally infirm." (105 S.Ct. 1459, 84 L.Ed.2d 469; citing Buckley v. Valeo (1976) 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, supra, §256.)

"Even were we to determine that the large pooling of financial resources by NCPAC and FCM did pose a potential for corruption or the appearance of corruption, §9012(f) is a fatally overbroad response to that evil. It is not limited to multimillion dollar war chests; its terms apply equally to informal discussion groups that solicit neighborhood contributions to publicize their views about a particular Presidential candidate." (105 S.Ct. 1469, 84 L.Ed.2d 470.)

Three justices dissented. (On regulation of campaign expenditures by political action committees, see 99 Harv. L. Rev. 223; 71 Cal. L. Rev. 673.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

5. Candidates.

a. Residence Requirement.

1. Invalid Period.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 259

[§ 259] Invalid Period.

In California counties governed by the general law (Govt.C. 25041), a candidate for county supervisor formerly had to be a resident of the county for 1 year. In Zeilenga v. Nelson (1971) 4 C.3d 716, 94 C.R. 602, 484 P.2d 578, petitioner, a candidate in Butte County with 1.5 years residence, challenged a local charter requirement of 5 years. Held, the charter provision was unconstitutional.

(a) The right to hold public office by election or appointment is a fundamental right of citizenship protected against invidious discrimination. (4 C.3d 720.)

(b) The public interest in having "a knowledgeable candidate" does not justify this long period. Sheehan v. Scott (1905) 145 C. 684, 686, 79 P. 350, upholding a 5-year requirement in the San Francisco charter, was decided in the "horse and buggy days." With today's public transportation and rapid dissemination of news, this type of period is simply "a built-in device to prevent competition against the county's oldtimers." (4 C.3d 722.) Sheehan is therefore overruled. (4 C.3d 718.)

(c) Lindsey v. Dominguez (1933) 217 C. 533, 535, 20 P.2d 327, upheld a 2-year qualification for city council members in Los Angeles. This case was decided before the new compelling interest test was announced in Carrington v. Rash (1965) 380 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 775, 13 L.Ed.2d 675, supra, §244, and Keane v. Mihaly (1970) 11 C.A.3d 1037, 90 C.R. 263, supra, §245, as well as before the new era of communications. Hence, "We express no opinion on its validity today." (4 C.3d 723, footnote 3.) (See Camara v. Mellon (1971) 4 C.3d 714, 94 C.R. 601, 484 P.2d 577 [on authority of Zeilenga, 3-year requirement of Santa Cruz charter for city council candidate was invalid]; Martinez v. Newton (1973) 8 C.3d 756, 758, 106 C.R. 105, 505 P.2d 529 [4-year requirement of Santa Barbara charter for city council candidate was invalid]; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 819; 45 So. Cal. L. Rev. 996.)

The problem was reexamined in Thompson v. Mellon (1973) 9 C.3d 96, 107 C.R. 20, 507 P.2d 628, but a sharply divided court failed to reach agreement on a test for the validity of these requirements. Thus, the decision is authority only for the holding that a 2-year period is invalid, and the validity of periods less than that is uncertain. The case arose when Santa Cruz, in response to Camara, supra, reduced the time period to 2 years. Held, the provision was unconstitutional, and mandamus issued to compel filing of petitioner's nomination papers. (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1225; 62 Cal. L. Rev. 450; 65 A.L.R.3d 1048 [Validity of Requirement that Candidate or Public Officer Have Been Resident of Governmental Unit for Specified Period].)

In Smith v. Evans (1974) 42 C.A.3d 154, 116 C.R. 684, the court held unconstitutional a Chico city charter requirement of 1-year residency for city council candidates.

(a) Prior decisions on candidates and voters. Thompson v. Mellon did not have a majority against a 1-year requirement. (42 C.A.3d 157.) Gage v. Allison (1971) 22 C.A.3d 85, 87, 99 C.R. 95, upheld a 1-year requirement for county supervisorial candidates, but relied on Lindsey v. Dominguez, which was dissipated as authority by Zeilenga v. Nelson. (42 C.A.3d 157.) Voter cases, dealing with a closely related right, reject 1-year requirements. (42 C.A.3d 158, citing Dunn v. Blumstein (1972) 405 U.S. 330, 92 S.Ct. 995, 31 L.Ed.2d 274 and Keane v. Mihaly, supra.)

(b) Tests and factors. Even under the less stringent "reasonable necessity" test, the requirement is invalid when the three factors are considered:

(1) First factor: residential requirement as an adjunct of the election machinery. Although the objective of voter identification laws (to prevent voting by ineligible and repeaters) and that of candidate identification laws (to attain an informed electorate) are different, the dictum in the first Thompson opinion, that 30 days is enough, is consistent with the administrative necessities of the election process. (42 C.A.3d 160.)

(2) Second factor: knowledge of community conditions and issues. This is the one most frequently advanced, but a 1-year waiting period "distributes eligibility and ineligibility among the aware and unaware alike." (42 C.A.3d 161.) It ignores individual qualities of candidates and the nature of problems faced by them. "Familiarity with community issues and problems need not await the lapse of time. In today's communities many local issues are not local at all; rather, they emerge as standard and recurring symptoms of American social history. Urban decay and suburban sprawl, racial and ethnic integration, law enforcement, education, public transit, the tax rate--these are some of the characteristic problems of American communities generally. In any one voting enclave the characteristic issues are likely to outnumber the unique issues. Many newcomers arrive with ready-made sensitivity and awareness of these characteristic problems. Their imported ideas may be more efficacious than homegrown ideas. A one-year candidate residence requirement fails as a practical fulfillment of the public need for knowledgeable candidates." (42 C.A.3d 161.)

(3) Third factor: interest of those disadvantaged by the classification. (a) To the prospective candidate the 1-year requirement imposes a practical limitation far more extensive than the minimum; staggered terms of office, deadlines for filing, and elections in odd-numbered years, mean that a candidate will often have to wait 3 or 5 years. (42 C.A.3d 162.) (b) The electorate also suffers. Voters desiring fresh faces and fresh ideas have narrowed choices; and the waiting period penalizes the fundamental right to travel. "Citizen participation in the political process through voting and candidacy is the elemental, indispensable and abiding need of a democratic republic. Durational residence tests impose 'dead periods' upon the exercise of political rights. They interrupt an abiding civic need. In a relatively rural society of relative population stability, these parochial restrictions dealt the body politic only a feeble loss. Today the republic is urbanized and industrialized, featured by the incessant relocation of citizens from one state or community to another. In this era of heightened mobility, repeated and widespread interruptions of political rights inflict exacerbated injury upon the body politic. The dead periods caused by durational residence laws affect more people frequently. The fluidity of our times sensitizes the equal protection guaranty into vigorous negation of restrictions which the quiet past might have tolerated." (42 C.A.3d 163.)

a. Residence Requirement.

2. Valid Period.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 260

[§ 260] Valid Period.

(1) In General. In Johnson v. Hamilton (1975) 15 C.3d 461, 125 C.R. 129, 541 P.2d 881, the court held invalid the provisions of the Long Beach charter requiring 1-year residency in the city and 6-months residency in the district.

(a) Strict scrutiny test applies. The burden is on the state to show that a compelling interest justifies the law and that the distinctions drawn are necessary to further its purpose. (15 C.3d 466, 468; see infra, §704.)

(b) Invalidity of long periods. Under the principles set forth in Thompson v. Mellon (1973) 9 C.3d 96, 107 C.R. 20, 507 P.2d 628, supra, §259, and Smith v. Evans (1974) 42 C.A.3d 154, 116 C.R. 684, supra, §259, there is no compelling interest justifying the restrictions in question. (15 C.3d 472, disapproving Gage v. Allison (1971) 22 C.A.3d 85, 87, 99 C.R. 95, supra, §259.)

(c) Validity of 30-day period. There are compelling reasons for requiring candidates to establish residence within a reasonable and fixed time prior to the election, not more than 30 days. (15 C.3d 472.) "A 30-day prefiling residence requirement seems reasonably necessary and convenient to accommodate the needs of election officials in their task of timely verification of the candidate's true residence prior to the preparation and distribution of ballots. Accordingly, we hold that any durational residence requirement for candidates for local office in excess of the foregoing period is violative of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (15 C.3d 472.)

Two justices, concurring with reluctance under the compulsion of U.S. Supreme Court decisions, saw in this decision and in Dunn v. Blumstein (1972) 405 U.S. 330, 92 S.Ct. 995, 31 L.Ed.2d 274, supra, §245, "the danger of roving candidates picking their elections and bringing their voters with them." They assert that, in rural areas with small voter bases, it is possible for imported voters to outvote an existing majority of bona fide residents. (15 C.3d 473.)

(2) Codification. A candidate must have been a registered voter of the district that he or she "seeks to represent for at least 30 days immediately preceding the deadline for filing nomination documents." (Govt.C. 25041; see Daniels v. Tergeson (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1204, 1207, 1210, 259 C.R. 879 [Govt.C. 25041 is constitutional and requires strict compliance with 30-day period; candidate who registered 28 days before election was ineligible].)

5. Candidates.

b. Filing Fee.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 261

[§ 261] Filing Fee.

(1) Bullock v. Carter Rule. Filing fees for candidates, often substantial in amount, have been subjected to strong constitutional attack. (See Bullock v. Carter (1972) 405 U.S. 134, 92 S.Ct. 849, 31 L.Ed.2d 92; Brown v. Chote (1973) 411 U.S. 452, 93 S.Ct. 1732, 36 L.Ed.2d 420 [challenge of former Elec.C. 6552, 6553 (now Elec.C. 8103, 8104), requiring fee from candidate for House of Representatives of one percent of salary of office; preliminary injunction upheld, but case remanded to consider constitutional issues on better record].)

In Bullock v. Carter, supra, the court examined a Texas law under which primary elections were financed by large fees fixed by the county executive committee of the political party. In the Democratic primary election of 1970, the system was challenged by several candidates, including one seeking the office of county commissioner (fee set at $ 1,424.60) and one seeking the office of county judge (fee set at $ 6,300). Held, the law was unconstitutional.

(a) The filing fee requirement, though limited to party primaries, was state action. (92 S.Ct. 854, 31 L.Ed.2d 98.)

(b) The initial impact of the fee is felt by aspirants for office, but its effect in excluding office seekers lacking personal wealth or affluent backers tends to deprive some voters of the opportunity to vote for a candidate of their choice. Thus, the scheme has a "real and appreciable impact on the exercise of the franchise," and is subject to the close scrutiny rule of the poll tax case (supra, §243). (92 S.Ct. 856, 31 L.Ed.2d 100.)

(c) The state's interest in regulating the number of candidates, to deter frivolous or fraudulent filings, cannot justify a totally arbitrary system that excludes legitimate as well as frivolous candidates. (92 S.Ct. 857, 31 L.Ed.2d 101.)

(d) The other state interest--relieving the state treasury of the cost of conducting primary elections--also does not meet the test of necessity for this invasion of voters' rights. "It seems appropriate that a primary system designed to give the voters some influence at the nominating stage should spread the cost among all of the voters in an attempt to distribute the influence without regard to wealth." (92 S.Ct. 858, 31 L.Ed.2d 102.)

(e) Reasonable filing fees are valid; but "[b]y requiring candidates to shoulder the costs of conducting primary elections through filing fees and by providing no reasonable alternative means of access to the ballot, the State of Texas has erected a system which utilizes the criterion of ability to pay as a condition to being on the ballot, thus excluding some candidates otherwise qualified and denying an undetermined number of voters the opportunity to vote for candidates of their choice." (92 S.Ct. 859, 31 L.Ed.2d 103.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1371.)

Lubin v. Panish (1974) 415 U.S. 709, 94 S.Ct. 1315, 39 L.Ed.2d 702, took the Bullock rule a step further. Petitioner, seeking election to the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors, stated under oath that he had no assets or income and could not pay the filing fee of $ 701.60; thus, his claim of indigency challenged the validity of any filing fee--reasonable or unreasonable. The court reaffirmed the legitimate state interest in keeping ballots within manageable size, and in eliminating frivolous candidacy, but flatly declared that "the process of qualifying candidates for a place on the ballot may not constitutionally be measured solely in dollars." (94 S.Ct. 1320, 39 L.Ed.2d 709.)

"The absence of any alternative means of gaining access to the ballot inevitably renders the California system exclusionary as to some aspirants. As we have noted, the payment of a fee is an absolute, not an alternative, condition, and failure to meet it is a disqualification from running for office. Thus, California has chosen to achieve the important and legitimate interest of maintaining the integrity of elections by means which can operate to exclude some potentially serious candidates from the ballot without providing them with any alternative means of coming before the voters. Selection of candidates solely on the basis of ability to pay a fixed fee without providing any alternative means is not reasonably necessary to the accomplishment of the State's legitimate election interests. Accordingly, we hold that in the absence of reasonable alternative means of ballot access, a State may not, consistent with constitutional standards, require from an indigent candidate filing fees he cannot pay." (94 S.Ct. 1320, 39 L.Ed.2d 709.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1144.)

Following the Lubin decision, the California Supreme Court rejected the contention that Bullock invalidated only unreasonable fees, and concluded that the California Elections Code fee provisions were unconstitutional. (Knoll v. Davidson (1974) 12 C.3d 335, 349, 116 C.R. 97, 525 P.2d 1273; see Donovan v. Brown (1974) 11 C.3d 571, 573, 115 C.R. 41, 524 P.2d 137.)

(2) Alternatives to Fee Requirements. Lubin points out that there are tests of the seriousness of a candidacy that can be validly imposed; e.g., a required number of voters signing a petition on behalf of the candidate. (94 S.Ct. 1321, 39 L.Ed.2d 710.) The California Legislature responded in 1974 by amending the Elections Code to permit a candidate, in lieu of paying the statutory filing fee (see Elec.C. 8103, 8104), to submit a petition containing a specified number of signatures of registered voters. (See Elec.C. 8106; Govt.C. 16100.6; Bill v. Williams (1977) 70 C.A.3d 531, 139 C.R. 19 [attack on predecessor signature statute rejected]; 6 Pacific L. J. 319.)

In Green v. Layton (1975) 14 C.3d 922, 123 C.R. 97, 538 P.2d 225, the court considered the validity of the following provisions in the election regulations of the city of Los Angeles. (a) The candidate must file a declaration of intention to run. (b) He or she may pay a $ 300 filing fee, at least half at the time of filing the declaration. (c) In lieu of the filing fee, the candidate may submit a petition containing 500 signatures (in addition to those on the nominating petition). If the candidate decides to follow the "in lieu" procedure, he or she must declare this choice in writing at the time of filing the declaration, and the choice is irrevocable. Petitioners did not challenge the reasonableness of the signature requirements or the necessity of indicating their preference. However, when their nominating petitions were rejected because of insufficiency of the signatures, they sought to pay the filing fee. Respondent clerk refused to accept the fee. Held, the irrevocable choice requirement could not be justified by the slight administrative convenience gained, and it bore no relationship to measuring the seriousness of a candidate's purpose. One who gathers a substantial number of signatures and who thereafter offers to pay a fee instead of gathering additional names has demonstrated his or her intentions to at least as great a degree as the candidate who chooses to pay a fee. (14 C.3d 927.)

d. Disqualification of Recalled Officer.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 263

[§ 263] Disqualification of Recalled Officer.

Former Elec.C. 27521, disqualifying a recalled city officer of a general law city from running for the same office for a period of 1 year, was held invalid in De Bottari v. Melendez (1975) 44 C.A.3d 910, 119 C.R. 256.

(a) The interest of the state in the stability of municipal government might be furthered by preventing too frequent recalls. (44 C.A.3d 910.) But the 1-year period is excessive, as compared with the 6-month limitation on new recall proceedings. (44 C.A.3d 922.) If the danger is repeated recalls, the appropriate remedy is limiting the frequency of the recall itself, not barring the candidacy of the recalled official. (44 C.A.3d 922.)

(b) There are no similar disqualifications in the statutes on recalled school, county, or state officials; and although it is common knowledge that recall elections are frequent in school districts, "the Legislature has apparently not felt it necessary to the stability of governing boards of school districts that a recalled school official be disqualified from being a candidate for one year, six months, or any period at all." (44 C.A.3d 923.) (For constitutional provisions governing recalls, see Cal. Const., Art. II, §13 et seq.)

e. Payment of Costs of Election Pamphlet.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 264

[§ 264] Payment of Costs of Election Pamphlet.

In East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. v. Appellate Department (1979) 23 C.3d 839, 153 C.R. 597, 591 P.2d 1249, an election was held for the Board of Directors of East Bay Municipal Utility District, and, pursuant to former Elec.C. 10012 (now Elec.C. 13307), the District billed each candidate a pro rata share of the expense of the voter pamphlet containing the statements of qualifications for the office. Certain candidates, not claiming indigency, nevertheless refused to pay, and the District sued to collect and obtained judgment. Held, the judgment was valid.

(a) Knoll v. Davidson (1974) 12 C.3d 335, 116 C.R. 97, 525 P.2d 1273, held that a governmental agency cannot constitutionally require prepayment of costs as a condition to printing statements of qualifications; but the court recognized that the agency may bill the candidate for his or her pro rata share of the actual costs after the pamphlet has been printed and distributed. This view is reaffirmed: "Inequality is eliminated when all candidates are permitted to make a statement of qualifications without prepayment. Equal protection does not further require that candidates be relieved of their pro rata costs of publication any more than they are entitled to relief from other personal costs of candidacy." (23 C.3d 843.)

(b) The charge is not precluded by the provision in Cal. Const., Art. II, §3, stating that the Legislature must provide for free elections. "A 'free election' does not mandate a free ride from all election campaign expense and particularly not from the pro rata cost of publicizing personal qualifications for the office one seeks." (23 C.3d 845.)

Two justices joined in a brief dissent, asserting that "an election is not free, within the meaning of article II, section 3, if a government is allowed to assess any of its costs to the candidates." (23 C.3d 846.) (See Mackey v. Panish (1980) 106 C.A.3d 7, 12, 164 C.R. 771 [following East Bay Mun. Util. Dist.].)

f. Content of Candidate's Statement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 265

[§ 265] Content of Candidate's Statement.

Each candidate for nonpartisan elective office may prepare a candidate's statement including his or her name, age, and occupation, and a brief description of the candidate's education and qualifications. (Elec.C. 13307.) The list of items in the statute is not intended to be restrictive; the candidate's statement may include other information regarding his or her qualifications. (Loza v. Panish (1980) 102 C.A.3d 821, 824, 162 C.R. 596 [decided under predecessor statute]; Hammond v. Agran (1999) 76 C.A.4th 1181, 1189, 90 C.R.2d 876 [following Loza v. Panish; candidates' ideas and views that do not include attacks on opponents may constitute "qualifications" for purposes of candidates' statements in voter pamphlets]; for additional restrictions on statements of candidates for judicial office, see Elec.C. 13308.)

A former version of the statute also provided that the clerk "shall reject" a statement that "contains any obscene, vulgar, profane, scandalous, libelous or defamatory matter, or any language which in any way incites, counsels, promotes or advocates hatred, abuse, violence or hostility toward, or which tends to cast ridicule or shame upon any person or group of persons by reason of sex, race, color, religion or manner of worship, or any language or matter the circulation of which through the mails is prohibited by Congress." This provision was held to be a violation of the constitutional right of freedom of expression (Loza v. Panish, supra, 102 C.A.3d 826) and was deleted from the statute in 1983.

One who knowingly makes a false statement of a material fact with intent to mislead the voters is subject to a $ 1,000 fine. (Elec.C. 18351.)

[§ 266] Candidate's Preelection Promise.

In Brown v. Hartlage (1982) 456 U.S. 45, 102 S.Ct. 1523, 71 L.Ed.2d 732, Brown, a candidate for county commissioner, announced during his campaign that he intended to serve at a salary less than that fixed by law. The Kentucky court of appeals held that this was a violation of the state Corrupt Practices Act, prohibiting a promise in consideration for a vote. Held, the statute as thus construed was an unconstitutional restriction on First Amendment freedom of speech.

(a) The First Amendment protects political discussion, and a candidate, like any other person, has the right to advocate his or her own election. (102 S.Ct. 1529, 71 L.Ed.2d 742.) Some kinds of promises, e.g., those that amount to buying votes, may be declared illegal; but others, even though appealing to a voter's own self-interest, may be legitimate exercises of the constitutional right. "So long as the hoped-for personal benefit is to be achieved through the normal processes of government, and not through some private arrangement, it has always been, and remains, a reputable basis upon which to cast one's ballot." (102 S.Ct. 1530, 71 L.Ed.2d 743.)

(b) "Brown's statement can only be construed as an expression of his intention to exercise public power in a manner that he believed might be acceptable to some class of citizens. If Brown's expressed intention had an individualized appeal to some taxpayers who felt themselves the likely beneficiaries of his form of fiscal restraint, that fact is of little constitutional significance. The benefits of most public policy changes accrue not only to the undifferentiated 'public,' but more directly to particular individuals or groups. Like a promise to lower taxes, to increase efficiency in government, or indeed to increase taxes in order to provide some group with a desired public benefit or public service, Brown's promise to reduce his salary cannot be deemed beyond the reach of the First Amendment, or considered as inviting the kind of corrupt arrangement the appearance of which a State may have a compelling interest in avoiding." h. Party's Endorsement of Candidate.

[§ 267] Party's Endorsement of Candidate.

Unger v. Superior Court (1984) 37 C.3d 612, 209 C.R. 474, 692 P.2d 238, construed Cal. Const., Art. II, §6, which provides that "[j]udicial, school, county, and city offices shall be nonpartisan." Held, this general declaration does not prohibit political parties from endorsing, supporting, or opposing candidates for nonpartisan office. The only limitation on the conduct of political parties in elections for nonpartisan office is the Elections Code provision (now Elec.C. 334) that a political party may not nominate a candidate for a nonpartisan office. (37 C.3d 615, 617.) Two assigned justices joined in a strong dissenting opinion. (37 C.3d 625.)

Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Cen. Committee (1989) 489 U.S. 214, 109 S.Ct. 1013, 103 L.Ed.2d 271, held that former Elections Code provisions banning the governing bodies of political parties from endorsing or opposing candidates in primary elections, and making it a misdemeanor for a candidate to claim this kind of endorsement, were unconstitutional.

(a) The ban on primary endorsements directly burdens both speech and association. It prohibits a party from informing voters whether a candidate is qualified or adheres to party tenets and also prevents the party and its members from identifying the persons who constitute the association and best represent its beliefs. (109 S.Ct. 1020, 1021, 103 L.Ed.2d 282, 283.)

(b) The state failed to show that the ban is necessary to maintain a stable political system, and its claim that the ban advances party stability is untenable. A state may prevent disruption of a party from without but has no interest in preventing disruption from within. (109 S.Ct. 1022, 103 L.Ed.2d 284, 285.)

(c) The claim that the ban on endorsements protects voters from confusion and undue influence is not supported by any evidence. (109 S.Ct. 1023, 103 L.Ed.2d 285, 286.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 973 [Ninth Circuit case]; on power of Republican state central committee to prohibit county central committees from endorsing or opposing candidates in primary elections for partisan office, see Elec.C. 7389.)

In Renne v. Geary (1991) 501 U.S. 312, 111 S.Ct. 2331, 115 L.Ed.2d 288, a First Amendment constitutional challenge to Cal. Const., Art. II, §6, was brought by voters, party central committees, and committee members in the federal district court. The Supreme Court held that the question whether the provision violated the First Amendment was not justiciable; the standing of the challengers was questionable, and there was no ripe controversy. (111 S.Ct. 2338, 2339, 115 L.Ed.2d 301, 302.) (For discussion of Proposition 198 on open primaries, and associational rights of political parties generally, see infra, §388.)

6. Term Limits.

a. United States Congress.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 268

[§ 268] United States Congress.

(1) Term Limits Are Unconstitutional. In United States Term Limits v. Thornton (1995) 514 U.S. 779, 115 S.Ct. 1842, 131 L.Ed.2d 881, Arkansas attempted to make anyone elected to three terms in the House of Representatives from Arkansas, or two terms in the Senate from Arkansas, ineligible for those offices. Held, the reasoning of Powell v. McCormack (1969) 395 U.S. 486, 89 S.Ct. 1944, 23 L.Ed.2d 491, supra, §152, extends to the states; neither Congress nor the states may adopt qualifications different from those prescribed in the Constitution.

After an exhaustive review of the cases, the legislative history, and learned comment, the Court rejected arguments that (a) under the Tenth Amendment, the power to adopt qualifications for Congress was reserved to the states, and (b) the adoption of term limits was consistent with the form of government. With respect to the first requirement, the Court said: "In short, as the Framers recognized, electing representatives to the National Legislature was a new right, arising from the Constitution itself. The Tenth Amendment thus provides no basis for concluding that the States possess reserved power to add qualifications to those that are fixed in the Constitution. Instead, any state power to set the qualifications for membership in Congress must derive not from the reserved powers of state sovereignty, but rather from the delegated powers of national sovereignty. In the absence of any constitutional delegation to the States of power to add qualifications to those enumerated in the Constitution, such a power does not exist." (115 S.Ct. 1856, 131 L.Ed.2d 901, 902.)

With respect to the second argument, the Court said: "We are, however, firmly convinced that allowing the several States to adopt term limits for congressional service would effect a fundamental change in the constitutional framework. Any such change must come not by legislation adopted either by Congress or by an individual State, but rather--as have other important changes in the electoral process--through the Amendment procedures set forth in Article V. The Framers decided that the qualifications for service in the Congress of the United States be fixed in the Constitution and be uniform throughout the Nation. That decision reflects the Framers' understanding that Members of Congress are chosen by separate constituencies, but that they become, when elected, servants of the people of the United States. They are not merely delegates appointed by separate, sovereign States; they occupy offices that are integral and essential components of a single National Government. In the absence of a properly passed constitutional amendment, allowing individual States to craft their own qualifications for Congress would thus erode the structure envisioned by the Framers, a structure that was designed, in the words of the Preamble to our Constitution, to form a 'more perfect union.'

A dissenting opinion, joined by three justices, argued that "[n]othing in the Constitution deprives the people of each State of the power to prescribe eligibility requirements for the candidates who seek to represent them in Congress." (115 S.Ct. 1975, 131 L.Ed.2d 926.) (See 29 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1163 [term limits and Tenth Amendment; discussing Thornton]; 24 Pepperdine L. Rev. 649 [Thornton]; for discussion of Proposition 140, the term limits initiative for elected state officials, see infra, §269.)

(2) Proposed Constitutional Amendment. Elec.C. 10204.1 et seq., the Congressional Term Limits Act, enacted in 1998 as Proposition 225, call for a Constitutional amendment limiting the terms of office for the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, and for printing a notation next to nonsupporting candidates' names that they "disregarded voters' instructions on term limits" or that they "declined to pledge to support term limits." Proposition 225 was held unconstitutional in Bramberg v. Jones (1999) 20 C.4th 1045, 86 C.R.2d 319, 978 P.2d 1240. The proposition conflicts with the amendment process authorized by Article V of the federal Constitution; it instructs and attempts to coerce "California's congressional and state legislators in the exercise of their federal and constitutional functions of preparing and ratifying amendments to the United States Constitution." (20 C.4th 1048.) (See Cook v. Gralike (2001) 531 U.S. 510, 121 S.Ct. 1029, 1038, 149 L.Ed.2d 44, 57 [following Thornton; state law requiring statement on ballot next to names of candidates who do not support term limits is unconstitutional attempt to "dictate electoral outcomes"]; 33 *U.C. C. Political Parties and Candidates.

6. Term Limits.

b. State Government.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 269

[§ 269] State Government.

The Political Reform Act of 1990, amending various sections of the Constitution, was adopted at the November 6, 1990, general election as Proposition 140. The basic provisions are as follows:

(1) Statement of purpose and findings. "To restore a free and democratic system of fair elections, and to encourage qualified candidates to seek public office, the people find and declare that the powers of incumbency must be limited." (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §1.5.)

(2) Term limitations. Persons elected or appointed on or after November 6, 1990, to the office of Governor (Cal. Const., Art. V, §2), Lieutenant Governor, Attorney General, Controller, Secretary of State, or Treasurer (Cal. Const., Art. V, §11), Superintendent of Public Instruction (Cal. Const., Art. IX, §2), the State Board of Equalization (Cal. Const., Art. XIII, §17), or the State Senate (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §2(a)) are limited to two terms. Members of the Assembly are limited to three terms. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §2(a).)

(3) Budgetary limitations. "[T]he total aggregate expenditures of the Legislature for the compensation of members and employees of, and the operating expenses and equipment for, the Legislature" may not exceed $ 950,000 per member for the forthcoming fiscal year, or 80% of the amount expended for these purposes in the preceding year, whichever is less. (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §7.5.)

(4) Pension limitations. The state will contribute the employer's share to the federal Social Security system on behalf of participating legislators elected or serving on or after November 1, 1990, but "[n]o other pension or retirement benefit shall accrue as a result of service in the Legislature, such service not being intended as a career occupation." However, "[t]his Section shall not be construed to abrogate or diminish any vested pension or retirement benefit which may have accrued under an existing law." (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §4.5.)

Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 C.3d 492, 286 C.R. 283, 816 P.2d 1309, involved constitutional challenges to Proposition 140. Petitioners (including the Legislature and individual legislators, citizens, voters, and taxpayers) sought mandamus to prevent enforcement. Respondents were public officials responsible for implementing, enforcing, or applying the measure. The intervenor was the organization that sponsored the measure (Californians for a Citizen Government). The Supreme Court, taking original jurisdiction over the writ proceeding, held that, except as to pension restrictions affecting incumbent legislators, the measure was valid.

(a) Lifetime ban on consecutive terms. Respondent contended that the term limitation is directed only at the incumbent office holder, and that a former legislator might run for a new term of office if he or she is not currently holding that office. Although the language of the measure is ambiguous, the legislative history supports the conclusion that the term limitations extend over the lifetime of each affected office holder. (54 C.3d 504, 505, 506.)

(b) Constitutional amendment. Petitioners contended that the measure effected a constitutional revision rather than a mere amendment, and hence was improperly adopted under the holding in Raven v. Deukmejian (1990) 52 C.3d 336, 276 C.R. 326, 801 P.2d 1077, supra, §72. They argued that the term and budgetary limitations would make it impossible for the Legislature to discharge its traditional duties, and that Proposition 140 has achieved a qualitative revision of the Constitution. (54 C.3d 507.) This is unsound: "Proposition 140 on its face does not affect either the structure or the foundational powers of the Legislature, which remains free to enact whatever laws it deems appropriate. The challenged measure alters neither the content of those laws nor the process by which they are adopted. No legislative power is diminished or delegated to other persons or agencies. The relationships between the three governmental branches, and their respective powers, remain untouched." (54 C.3d 509.)

(c) Single subject requirement. Petitioners contended that the measure violates the single subject provision (see supra, §131) by combining such "disparate" subjects as term and budgetary limitations and pension restrictions, and that it is broader than mere reform of the legislative branch because it also imposes term limitations on various constitutional officers. But the single subject provision does not require that each of the provisions of a measure effectively interlock in a functional relationship; it is enough that they are reasonably related to a common theme or purpose. (54 C.3d 513.) And "[t]he unifying theme or common purpose of Proposition 140 is incumbency reform, a subject not excessively general when compared with prior measures upheld by this court." (54 C.3d 512.)

(d) Effect on voting and candidacy rights. Petitioners argued that the lifetime term limitations, under which office holders are forever banned from running for the office they held, substantially burdens two fundamental rights--the right to vote and the right to be a candidate for public office--and therefore violate the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the federal Constitution. However, under the balancing test of Anderson v. Celebrezze (1983) 460 U.S. 780, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 75 L.Ed.2d 547, supra, §262, the provisions are valid:

(1) Character and extent of injury to protected rights.

First, the effect on candidates: Petitioners assert that qualified persons will be "purged" solely to seat "massive numbers" of inexperienced "newcomers." (54 C.3d 517.) Respondents characterize the term limitations as additional candidacy requirements, akin to age, integrity, training or residency, which have generally been upheld. (54 C.3d 518.) Respondents also stress three features of the measure that mitigate the severity of the lifetime ban: (a) An incumbent is not barred from seeking any other public office; (b) the term limitations arise only after the incumbent has held office for a significant period; and, (c) except for some incumbent senators, past terms do not count in calculating the limitation. (54 C.3d 518.)

Second, the effect on voters: Petitioners assert that voters are denied the right to vote for persons who arguably possess the best qualifications; respondents note that voter choice is not restricted on the basis of content of expression, political affiliation, or inherently arbitrary factors such as race, religion, or sex; thus, First Amendment protection of political expression and promotion of the marketplace for ideas continue unabated. (54 C.3d 519.)

"In sum, although Proposition 140 does affect the rights of voters and candidates to a degree, there are several mitigating aspects, including the voters' continued right to vote for any qualified candidates, as well as the candidates' ability to run for other public offices, their entitlement to a significant period of service in office before the time limitations apply, and the 'prospective' application of the limitation provisions." (54 C.3d 519.)

(2) Interests of the State. These interests are set forth in the legislative statement of purpose, and are recognized in judicial decisions. Thus, in Maloney v. McCartney (W.Va., 1976), the court said: "The universal authority is that restriction upon the succession of incumbents serves a rational public policy and that, while restrictions may deny qualified men an opportunity to serve, as a general rule the over-all health of the body politic is enhanced by limitations on continuous tenure." (54 C.3d 520.) "Maloney's ... analysis is quite pertinent to our determination whether permanent incumbency limitations are supported by legitimate and compelling considerations. We conclude they are so supported." (54 C.3d 522.)

(3) Necessity of imposing restrictions. Petitioners contend that a lifetime ban on candidacy was unnecessary, and that other less "drastic" alternatives would have been sufficient to promote the state interests. Respondents' answer is correct. "Whether by reason of superior fund raising ability, greater media coverage, larger and more experienced staffs, greater name recognition among the voters, favorably drawn voting districts, or other factors, incumbents do indeed appear to enjoy considerable advantages over other candidates." (54 C.3d 523.)

(4) Validity of voting and candidacy restriction. "In sum, it would be anomalous to hold that a statewide initiative measure aimed at 'restor[ing] a free and democratic system of fair elections,' and 'encourag[ing] qualified candidates to seek public office' ... is invalid as an unwarranted infringement of the right to vote and to seek public office. We conclude the legitimate and compelling interests set forth in the measure outweigh the narrower interests of petitioner legislators and the constituents who wish to perpetuate their incumbency." (54 C.3d 524.)

(e) Not a bill of attainder. Under the accepted tests (54 C.3d 526; see infra, §205), the measure does not constitute an unlawful bill of attainder. "Although it is unquestionable the proponents sought to limit the terms of incumbent legislators, including such long-term legislators as Brown and Roberti, we find no evidence of an intent to single out and punish those individuals for any supposed misconduct on their part." (54 C.3d 527.)

(f) Invalid impairment of contract. Cal. Const., Art. IV, §4.5, provides that no other pension or retirement benefit shall accrue as a result of service in the Legislature; and petitioners contend that this constitutes an improper impairment of their vested contractual right to continued participation in the Legislators' Retirement System (LRS). Their position is supported by California cases holding that both the federal and state contract clauses protect the vested pension rights of public officers and employees from unreasonable impairment. (54 C.3d 528; see infra, §1286.) "We conclude that incumbent legislators had a vested right to earn additional pension benefits through continued service. ... We also conclude that the pension restriction of Proposition 140 must be deemed an impairment, not a mere 'modification' or 'adjustment,' of the vested pension rights of incumbent legislators." (54 C.3d 530.) This invalid provision, however, fulfills the three criteria for severability: it is "grammatically, functionally, and volitionally" severable. (54 C.3d 535.)

One justice, concurring in the holding on impairment of contract, dissented from the rest of the judgment, arguing that Proposition 140 violates the single subject rule and amounts to an unconstitutional revision of the Constitution. (54 C.3d 536.) (See Schabarum v. California Legislature (1998) 60 C.A.4th 1205, 1221, 70 C.R.2d 745, supra, §88 [budget for Legislative Counsel may be excluded from "net operating expenses and equipment for" Legislature within meaning of budgetary limitation provisions of Proposition 140]; Schweisinger v. Jones (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1320, 1325, 81 C.R.2d 183 [under term limit provisions, service of any part of term counts as service of full term, except where person is elected or appointed to unexpired term of less than half of full term]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 953; 30 McGeorge L. Rev. 235; 23 Pacific L. J. 1677; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 353; 112 A.L.R.5th 1; on term limits for elected municipal officials, see infra, §999.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Rippon v. Bowen (2008) 160 C.A.4th 1308, 1319, 1321, 73 C.R.3d 421 [challenge to constitutionality of term limits was foreclosed by Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 C.3d 492, 286 C.R.283, 816 P.2d 1309, text, p. 426, which decided question whether Proposition 140 constituted constitutional amendment or revision; although labeled "as applied" challenge based on effects of term limits on Legislature, same facial challenge was made in Eu; additional evidence was irrelevant to determine whether Proposition on its face necessarily and inevitably changed basic form of government].

V. SUFFRAGE

C. Political Parties and Candidates.

7. Ballot Regulations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 270

[§ 270] Ballot Regulations.

(1) Candidate Designations. Elec.C. 10101 states that the Elections Code applies to all municipal elections except where the charter provides otherwise. Elec.C. 10102, a later addition, states that the ballot designation section (Elec.C. 13107) applies to municipal elections even of a chartered city. Under Elec.C. 13107(a)(3), a candidate may designate his or her profession, vocation, or occupation. Rees v. Layton (1970) 6 C.A.3d 815, 86 C.R. 268, involved the Los Angeles Charter, which provided that no candidate except an incumbent should have any designation after his or her name. Thus, the charter and state law were inconsistent. Petitioners, candidates for city offices, challenged the charter on grounds of state preemption and denial of equal protection. Held, the charter provision was invalid. (a) The conduct of municipal elections is a municipal affair, and the charter therefore prevailed over the general law. (6 C.A.3d 820; see infra, §§993, 997.) (b) However, the charter gave an unfair advantage to incumbents, without rational basis, and therefore violated the equal protection guarantee. (6 C.A.3d 823.)

In Andal v. Miller (1994) 28 C.A.4th 358, 34 C.R.2d 88, a state senator's election opponent challenged the senator's ballot designation as "Senator/Peace Officer." Held, mandamus issued directing the words "peace officer" to be stricken. The Elections Code permits the designation of a candidate's principal professions, vocations, or occupations. The senator had recently been appointed as a reserve deputy sheriff, but he had done nothing pursuant to the appointment and would not be compensated for his service in the position. Hence, "peace officer" was not one of the senator's principal professions, vocations, or occupations. (28 C.A.4th 363, 367.) (See Andrews v. Valdez (1995) 40 C.A.4th 492, 494, 495, 46 C.R.2d 744 [ballot designation accurately listing candidate for municipal judge as "administrative law judge" was not misleading].)

(2) Giving Incumbents First Place. The contention that giving incumbents first place on the ballot results in an unconstitutional preference was left open in Mexican-Amer. Political Assn. v. Brown (1973) 8 C.3d 733, 106 C.R. 12, 505 P.2d 204, where the court denied a writ of mandamus on the ground that the existence of the alleged preference was a question of fact to be decided in the trial court. (See 45 So. Cal. L. Rev. 365.) But in Gould v. Grubb (1975) 14 C.3d 661, 122 C.R. 377, 536 P.2d 1337, the court, applying the "strict test" of equal protection (see infra, §704), held that the procedure was invalid.

(a) The evidence showed that the top ballot position gives an incumbent a significant advantage. (14 C.3d 668.) Hence, this procedure violates the equal protection clause, for no sufficient state interest justifies it. Identification of the incumbent is adequately made by the ballot designation. (14 C.3d 672, 674.)

(b) An alphabetical order ballot, although not irrational, and promotive of some efficiency, would also be impermissible: It would give a substantial advantage to candidates whose names begin with early letters of the alphabet. (14 C.3d 675.)

(c) A rotational method is the most equitable, is feasible, and would be valid. (14 C.3d 676.) However, other nondiscriminatory means may be found by the legislative bodies, including a lottery system. (14 C.3d 676.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 329.)

(3) Randomized Alphabet. Former Elec.C. 3020 et seq. (now Elec.C. 13111 et seq.) were added after Brown and Gould to provide for the listing of candidates in accordance with a "randomized alphabet." (See Bradley v. Perrodin (2003) 106 C.A.4th 1153, 1163, 1173, 131 C.R.2d 402, supra, §233 [runoff election is merely second round of voting in single election; thus, clerk need not request new randomized alphabet for runoff election that has no new filing period or new candidates; error in order of listing names, in absence of fraud and resulting purely from unintentional clerical error, is not valid ground for election contest under Elec.C. 16100].)

(4) Foreign-Language Ballots. Counties subject to the minority-language provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 are required to provide voting notices, forms, instructions, assistance, and other materials and ballots in the minority language. (See supra, §228 et seq.) Other counties are required to post and provide facsimile ballots, with the ballot measures and ballot instructions, printed in Spanish and, "if a significant and substantial need is found by the clerk," in other languages as well. (Elec.C. 14201 [posting], Elec.C. 14219 [providing].)

(5) Restrictions on Language Used. The use of partisan language to elaborate on prescribed ballot language may be sufficiently egregious to fall outside the limits of substantial compliance with statutory requirements. (See Citizens for Responsible Government v. Albany (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1199, 1224, 1228, 66 C.R.2d 102 [city failed to substantially comply with ballot requirement regarding approval of licensing of new gaming club where, in asking voters whether they favored or disfavored allowing club, city added language that proposed club would provide revenue to city, create jobs, and provide access to regional trail and waterfront; decided under former B. & P.C. 19819].)

There is no requirement of relevancy in Elec.C. 9295, governing the content of voter pamphlets in municipal elections. The statute merely requires that an argument be "for or against any city measure." And a trial court may strike a statement only if it is "false, misleading, or inconsistent." Thus, for a partisan statement in a ballot argument to be properly stricken as irrelevant, "it must have absolutely no relationship to the city measure at issue." However, partisan language in the ballot itself may be stricken as a violation of equal protection and freedom of speech. (Huntington Beach City Council v. Superior Court (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1417, 1422, 1423, 1433, 115 C.R.2d 439 [striking many words and sentences in ballot and voter pamphlet as misleading]; see Horneff v. San Francisco (2003) 110 C.A.4th 814, 821, 2 C.R.3d 79 [trial court erred in ordering amendment of impartial digest prepared for voter information pamphlet; purpose of digest is to provide simplified summary of measure, not complete catalogue of every detail, and digest fairly stated chief purpose and points of measure without addition of auxiliary material].)

(6) Fee for Printing Ballot Argument. Gebert v. Patterson (1986) 186 C.A.3d 868, 231 C.R. 150, invalidated a local regulation requiring the proponent of a ballot argument to pay a $ 500 fee for publishing the argument in the voter's handbook. The court observed that the issue was closely analogous to that in cases involving equal protection challenges to filing fees (see supra, §261). "By permitting individuals to submit ballot arguments for publication in the voter's information pamphlet, the City and County of San Francisco has created a forum for the exercise of political expression. But San Francisco Administrative Code section 5.74 limits admission to this forum to those who pay $ 500. By doing so, the ordinance denies equal access to a political arena as guaranteed by the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, but also impedes free expression as guaranteed by the First Amendment." (186 C.A.3d 876.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Candidate Designations. No designation will appear under a candidate's name on the ballot if the candidate fails to include a ballot designation worksheet with the nomination documents. (Elec.C. 13107.3, added in 2007.)

See Cook v. Superior Court (2008) 161 C.A.4th 569, 579, 73 C.R.3d 895 [Secretary of State, not local official, makes determinations about candidate designations in congressional primaries].(4) Foreign-Language Ballots. When it is necessary to translate the ballot title and condensed statement into a language other than English, the Secretary of State must provide the translation and local officials must use that translation. (Elec.C. 9054, added in 2006.)

(5) Restrictions on Language Used. See Monette-Shaw v. San Francisco Bd. of Supervisors (2006) 139 C.A.4th 1210, 1217, 43 C.R.3d 659 [language in nonpartisan digest included in city voter pamphlet, which conflicted with ballot proposition submitted to voters, did not create ambiguity requiring city to disregard plain language of ballot proposition]; Martinez v. Superior Court (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1245, 1248, 48 C.R.3d 660 [ballot title need not be most accurate, most comprehensive, or fairest language that is possible, but it must not be false, misleading, or partial to one side].

8. (New) Election Contests.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 270A

[§ 270A] (New) Election Contests.

(1) In General. An elector may seek mandamus "alleging that an error or omission has occurred, or is about to occur, in the placing of any name on, or in the printing of, a ballot, sample ballot, voter pamphlet, or other official matter, or that any neglect of duty has occurred, or is about to occur." (Elec.C. 13314; see 8 Cal. Proc. (5th), Extraordinary Writs, §87.)

(2) Grounds for Post-Election Contest. An elector of a city or county, or of a political subdivision of either, may contest an election held there for any of the following reasons:

(a) The precinct board or a member of the board is guilty of "malconduct." (Elec.C. 16100(a); on what constitutes malconduct, see Elec.C. 16201; on effect of malconduct, see Elec.C. 16202.)

(b) The person declared elected was not, at the time of the election, eligible for that office. (Elec.C. 16100(b).)

(c) The defendant has bribed or rewarded an elector or member of a precinct board, has offered a bribe or reward to procure his or her election, or has committed an offense against the elective franchise, as defined in Elec.C. 18000. (Elec.C. 16100(c).)

(d) Illegal votes were cast. (Elec.C. 16100(d); on effect of illegal votes, see Elec.C. 16203; Gooch v. Hendrix (1993) 5 C.4th 266, 19 C.R.2d 712, 851 P.2d 1321, text, §233.)

(e) Eligible voters attempted to vote but were denied their right. (Elec.C. 16100(e); on effect of denial of right to vote, see Elec.C. 16204.)

(f) The precinct board, in conducting the election or in canvassing the returns, made errors sufficient to change the result of the election regarding a person who was declared to be elected. (Elec.C. 16100(f).)

(g) There was an error in the vote-counting programs or summation of ballot counts. (Elec.C. 16100(g).)

These grounds for a post-election contest are exclusive. (McKinney v. Superior Court (2004) 124 C.A.4th 951, 958, 960, 21 C.R.3d 773 [post-election challenge must be based on statutory grounds or on violation of constitutional rights;

plaintiff had preelection remedy to challenge eligibility of write-in candidate and could not contest election based on theory that allowing write-in candidate on ballot in run-off election affected election results; only if ineligible candidate is declared winner could post-election challenge be brought[.] (On form of contest statement, see Elec.C. 16400 et seq.; on contest procedures, see Elec.C. 16500 et seq.)

(3) Appeal of General Election Contest. Election contests should normally be reviewed by appeal to the Court of Appeal. (Nguyen v. Superior Court (2007) 150 C.A.4th 1006, 1010, 58 C.R.3d 802 [speedy writ proceeding generally is not necessary in election contests; removing sitting official from office should be taken only on complete record of proceedings in trial court, with time to prepare briefs and for adequate reflection by appellate court].) These appeals are given preference in hearing in the Court of Appeal. (C.C.P. 44.) During the pendency of proceedings on appeal, and until final determination, the person declared elected by the superior court is entitled to the office as if no appeal had been taken. (Elec.C. 16900.)

(4) Contest of Primary Election. A candidate at a primary election may contest the right of another candidate to be nominated to the same office by filing an affidavit alleging any of the following grounds:

(a) The defendant is not eligible for the office. (Elec.C. 16101(a).)

(b) The defendant has committed an offense against the elective franchise, as defined in Elec.C. 18000 et seq. (Elec.C. 16101(b).)

(c) A sufficient number of votes were illegal, fraudulent, forged, or otherwise improper, and the defendant would not have received as many votes as the contestant had those votes not been counted. (Elec.C. 16101(c).)

(d) A sufficient number of eligible voters who attempted to vote were denied their right to vote, and the defendant would not have received as many votes as the contestant had those voters been permitted to vote. (Elec.C. 16101(d).)

(e) Due to mistake, error, or misconduct, the votes in a precinct were so incorrectly counted as to change the election result. (Elec.C. 16101(e)); on contests involving recount, see Elec.C. 16460 et seq., 16540, 16640 et seq.)

A nomination must be annulled or set aside for an irregularity or for improper conduct only if it appears that illegal votes in the precinct were given to the defendant, which if taken from him or her, would reduce the number of his or her "legal votes below the number of votes given to the contestant." (Elec.C. 16300.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

D. California Political Reform Act.

1. In General.

a. Nature and Purpose of Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 271

[§ 271] Nature and Purpose of Act.

The Political Reform Act of 1974, an initiative measure adopted June 4, 1974, and extensively amended (Govt.C. 81000 et seq.), regulates a number of aspects of the election process for state and local officials. (See comprehensive study in 7 Southwestern L. Rev. 453, with Appendices showing changes made in other laws; 6 Pacific L. J. 631; 7 Pacific L. J. 847; for discussion of constitutional problems, see 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 165; 8 Pacific L. J. 939; 94 A.L.R.3d 944.)

Chapter 1 of the Act recites findings of greatly increased costs of election campaigns, with the adverse effects of large contributions from wealthy individuals and organizations, and the inadequacy of existing laws to cope with objectionable political practices. (Govt.C. 81001.) Accordingly, the following purposes of the enactment are declared in Govt.C. 81002:

(1) "Receipts and expenditures in election campaigns should be fully and truthfully disclosed in order that the voters may be fully informed and improper practices may be inhibited." (Govt.C. 81002(a).)

(2) "The activities of lobbyists should be regulated and their finances disclosed in order that improper influences will not be directed at public officials." (Govt.C. 81002(b).)

(3) "Assets and income of public officials which may be materially affected by their official actions should be disclosed and in appropriate circumstances the officials should be disqualified from acting in order that conflicts of interest may be avoided." (Govt.C. 81002(c).)

(4) "The state ballot pamphlet should be converted into a useful document so that voters will not be entirely dependent on paid advertising for information regarding state measures." (Govt.C. 81002(d).)

(5) "Laws and practices unfairly favoring incumbents should be abolished in order that elections may be conducted more fairly." (Govt.C. 81002(e).)

(6) "Adequate enforcement mechanisms should be provided to public officials and private citizens in order that this title will be vigorously enforced." (Govt.C. 81002(f).)

The objectives of the act--to inform the electorate and prevent corruption of the political process--promote a compelling state interest and are valid regulations of the right to engage in political expression and association. (Socialist Workers 1974 Calif. Campaign Committee v. Brown (1975) 53 C.A.3d 879, 888, 125 C.R. 915; see Governor Gray Davis Com. v. American Taxpayers Alliance (2002) 102 C.A.4th 449, 471, 125 C.R.2d 534 [organization that had aired television advertisement critical of Governor's handling of energy crisis was not subject to reporting requirements of Act; although advertisement criticized Governor, it did not contain express language of advocacy subject to regulation, no campaign or election was mentioned, no election was imminent, and no call for his defeat was expressed].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

D. California Political Reform Act.

1. In General.

c. Enforcement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 273

[§ 273] Enforcement.

(1) In General. Chapter 11 (Govt.C. 91000 et seq.) sets forth detailed procedures to enforce the provisions of the Act. (See 7 Southwestern L. Rev. 519, 521, 534.) In applying the statutory remedies and sanctions, consideration must be given to whether "a violation is inadvertent, negligent or deliberate, and the presence or absence of good faith." (Govt.C. 91001(c).) Nothing in the Chapter exempts any person from applicable provisions of any other laws of the state. (Govt.C. 91014.) Govt.C. 91000 et seq. are not applicable to violations of Govt.C. 83116.5 (liability for causing another to violate the Act). (Govt.C. 91015; see McCauley v. BFC Direct Marketing (1993) 16 C.A.4th 1262, 1268, 1269, 20 C.R.2d 498 [under Govt.C. 83116.5 and 91015, liability of campaign manager for violations of reporting requirements must be addressed in administrative action, not in action by private citizen; however, because campaign treasurer has statutory duty to report expenditures, he or she may be held liable in action by private citizen]; McCauley v. Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Assn. (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1255, 1264, 80 C.R.2d 900 [Political Reform Act did not apply to mailers sent after election that solicited money to refill coffers after campaign to defeat proposition].)

(2) Criminal Penalties. A knowing and wilful violation of any provision of the Act is punishable as a misdemeanor. (Govt.C. 91000(a).) In addition to other penalties provided by law, a conviction for each violation is punishable by a fine of up to $ 10,000, or three times the amount the defendant "failed to report properly or unlawfully contributed, expended, gave or received," whichever is greater. (Govt.C. 91000(b).) A convicted person is disqualified from holding elective office or acting as a lobbyist for a period of 4 years after conviction unless the court holds otherwise. (Govt.C. 91002; see People v. Ballard (1980) 104 C.A.3d 757, 764, 164 C.R. 81 [Govt.C. 91002 is constitutional].) (See Govt.C. 91000(c) [4-year statute of limitations]; Govt.C. 91001(a) [powers of Attorney General and district attorneys]; Govt.C. 91001.5 [powers of elected city attorney of charter city].)

(3) Civil Damages and Penalties. A person who intentionally or negligently violates a reporting requirement of the Act is liable in a civil action, brought by the civil prosecutor or by a person residing within the jurisdiction, for not more than the amount or value that was not properly reported. (Govt.C. 91004.) A person who makes or receives a contribution, gift, or expenditure in violation of specified statutory provisions is liable in a civil action brought by the civil prosecutor or by a person residing within the jurisdiction for an amount up to $ 1,000, or three times the amount of the unlawful contribution, gift, or expenditure, whichever is greater. (Govt.C. 91005(a).) A designated employee or public official, other than an elected state officer, who realizes an economic benefit as a result of specified violations or conflicts of interest, is liable in a civil action brought by the civil prosecutor or by a person residing within the jurisdiction for an amount up to three times the value of the benefit. (Govt.C. 91005(b).)

The court may award a prevailing plaintiff or defendant, other than an agency, costs of litigation, including reasonable attorneys' fees. On motion of any party, a court must require a private plaintiff to post a bond in a reasonable amount at any stage of the litigation to guarantee payment of costs. (Govt.C. 91012; see Rhodes v. Superior Court (1979) 90 C.A.3d 484, 489, 153 C.R. 495 [bond provision meets procedural due process requirements]; People v. Roger Hedgecock for Mayor Committee (1986) 183 C.A.3d 810, 815, 817, 228 C.R. 424 [prevailing defendant is entitled to attorneys' fees only if suit is frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation]; Dunn v. Jurupa Unified School Dist. (2000) 79 C.A.4th 957, 961, 962, 94 C.R.2d 529 [Govt.C. 91012 does not require finding that action is frivolous before requiring bond to be posted; fact that agency, which is precluded from recovering costs, defends individual does not preclude individual from recovering costs and thus does not affect individual's right to require posting of bond].)

Numerous other statutes govern civil enforcement of the Act. (See Govt.C. 91001(b) [powers of civil prosecutor, Attorney General, district attorneys, and Commission]; Govt.C. 91001.5 [powers of elected city attorney of charter city]; Govt.C. 91003.5 [agency discipline]; Govt.C. 91005.5 [civil action for violation of provision containing no specific penalty]; Govt.C. 91006 [joint and several liability]; Govt.C. 91007 [request to civil prosecutor to act before filing private civil action]; Govt.C. 91008 [handling of multiple actions]; Govt.C. 91008.5 [civil action after Commission has issued order for same violation]; Govt.C. 91009 [determining liability and 50% award of recovery to plaintiff]; Govt.C. 91010 [audit as prerequisite to request to civil prosecutor under Govt.C. 91007]; Govt.C. 91011 [statute of limitations]; Govt.C. 91013 [fees for late filing of statement or report]; Govt.C. 91013.5 [civil action to collect unpaid penalties or fees].)

(4) Injunctive Relief. Any person residing in the jurisdiction may sue for injunctive relief to enjoin violations or to compel compliance with the Act. However, the court, in its discretion, may require any plaintiff other than the Commission to file a complaint with the Commission prior to seeking injunctive relief. The court may award costs of litigation, including reasonable attorneys' fees, to a prevailing plaintiff or defendant. (Govt.C. 91003(a); see Downey Cares v. Downey Community Dev. Com. (1987) 196 C.A.3d 983, 993, 242 C.R. 272 [mandamus invalidating city ordinance which amended city's redevelopment plan, and substantial award of attorneys' fees to opponents of plan; upheld under Govt.C. 91003(a)].) A court may restrain the execution of an official action where specified violations have occurred. (Govt.C. 91003(b).) (See Vernon v. Central Basin Mun. Water Dist. (1999) 69 C.A.4th 508, 517, 81 C.R.2d 650 [Govt.C. 91003(a) authorizes injunctive relief against future conduct by official that would violate Govt.C. 87100, "independently of whether the official action taken as a result of the unlawful conduct should be set aside" under Govt.C. 91003(b)].)

In Kunec v. Brea Redevelopment Agency (1997) 55 C.A.4th 511, 64 C.R.2d 143, the court held that a property owner had standing to challenge the fairness of a redevelopment agency's authorization to condemn his commercial property even though he did not reside in the city when the agency adopted its resolution of necessity. There is no durational residency requirement in Govt.C. 91003, and the property owner resided in the city during the pendency of the action. (55 C.A.4th 518.) The Political Reform Act (PRA) "on its face is intended to extend standing, not limit it . . . It would be Kafkaesque to say that the person most directly affected--the condemnee whose property would be taken--lacks standing to claim the action is void because of PRA violations." (55 C.A.4th 519.)

2. Fair Political Practices Commission.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 274

[§ 274] Fair Political Practices Commission.

Chapter 3 (Govt.C. 83100 et seq.) establishes the Fair Political Practices Commission. (See 7 Southwestern L. Rev. 520, 536.)

(1) Membership and Appointment. There are five members of the Commission. The Governor must appoint the chairman and one member, and the Attorney General, Secretary of State, and Controller each appoints one member. No more than three may be members of the same political party, and the Governor's appointees cannot be members of the same political party. (Govt.C. 83100, 83101, 83102.) The members serve 4-year terms. (Govt.C. 83103.) (On qualifications, conflicting activities, and removal, see Govt.C. 83105; on principal office and meetings, see Govt.C. 83110.)

(2) Duties and Powers. The Commission has primary responsibility for the administration of the Act (Govt.C. 83111), including adjusting the contribution and voluntary expenditure limitations (Govt.C. 83124). It may adopt rules and regulations (Govt.C. 83112), prescribe forms, and prepare manuals (Govt.C. 83113). It may conduct investigations (Govt.C. 83115), hold hearings (Govt.C. 83116), compel attendance of witnesses and production of evidence (Govt.C. 83118), and give immunity to witnesses compelled to testify (Govt.C. 83119).

(3) Hearings and Orders. When the Commission determines that there is probable cause to believe that a violation of the Act has occurred, it may hold a hearing on notice, in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §79 et seq.). On a decision that the violation has occurred, it may order the violator to do any or all of the following: (a) to cease and desist; (b) to file required reports or other material; or (c) to pay a penalty of up to $ 5,000. (Govt.C. 83116.) (On liability for violations by persons with filing or reporting responsibilities and persons compensated for planning, organizing, or directing campaigns, see Govt.C. 83116.5; McCauley v. J. 663.)

(4) Statute of Limitations. An administrative action brought pursuant to Govt.C. 83100 et seq. must be commenced within 5 years after the date on which the violation occurred. (Govt.C. 91000.5.)

(5) Advisory Opinions. On request of any person, the Commission may issue an advisory opinion, which is a public record and may be published. One who acts in good faith on an opinion is not subject to civil or criminal penalties. (Govt.C. 83114.) The opinions are published online on the Fair Political Practices Commission website. (See www.fppc.ca.gov.)

(6) Division of Local Enforcement. The Commission must establish a division of local enforcement to administer, interpret, and enforce provisions of the Act relating to local government agencies. (Govt.C. 83123; see Govt.C. 82041 ["local government agencies" defined].)

3. Campaign Disclosure.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 275

[§ 275] In General.

Chapter 4 (Govt.C. 84100 et seq.) lays down strict rules on disclosure of campaign funds. (See 12 Pacific L. J. 425; 7 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 507, 530; on filing required statements and disclosures online, see Govt.C. 84600 et seq.)

(1) Committee Organizational Statement. A committee, broadly defined as any person or combination of persons who, in specified amounts, directly or indirectly receives contributions, makes independent expenditures, or makes contributions to or at the behest of candidates or committees (Govt.C. 82013), must have a treasurer who handles contributions and expenditures. (Govt.C. 84100.) If an individual or group becomes a committee by virtue of having received or made expenditures of $ 1000 or more in a calendar year, the committee must file an organizational statement giving prescribed information with the Secretary of State. (Govt.C. 84101(a)(c), 84102.) (On statements of slate mailer organizations, see Govt.C. 84108; infra, §276.)

A copy of the report must be filed with any local filing officer with whom the committee is required to file campaign reports pursuant to Govt.C. 84215. (Govt.C. 84101(a)(c).)

Committees that qualify before an election but after the closing date for the last campaign statement required under Govt.C. 84200.7, and 84200.8 (infra, §276), must also file the information to be in the organizational statement with the officer who will receive the original of campaign statements, by facsimile statement, guaranteed overnight delivery, or personal delivery within 24 hours after qualifying. (Govt.C. 84101(b).) A committee that does not support or oppose candidates or ballot measures as its primary activity must provide "a brief description of its political activities, including whether it supports or opposes candidates or measures and whether such candidates or measures have common characteristics such as a political party affiliation." (Govt.C. 84102(d).)

(2) Other Required Disclosures.

(a) A candidate or committee receiving a contribution of $ 5,000 or more from any person must inform the contributor that he or she may be required to file campaign reports. (Govt.C. 84105; see 16 Pacific L. J. 663.)

(b) A "sponsored committee" (see Govt.C. 82048.7) must use only one name in its organizational statement, and must identify itself with that name whenever identification is required. (Govt.C. 84106.)

(c) The name of the committee must include or be accompanied by the name of the person or entity that controls the committee. (Govt.C. 84106.5.)

(d) A committee that is primarily formed to support or oppose a ballot measure must so identify itself in all required self-references. (Govt.C. 84107.)

(e) Disclosure must be made in the advertisement itself when a spokesperson is paid $ 5,000 or more to appear in an advertisement supporting or opposing a ballot measure. (Govt.C. 84511.) (See 48 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 265, 285 [disclosure of contributions and expenditures funding "sham issue advocacy" (advertising that lacks words of express advocacy, but that is intended to influence election)].)

(3) Exemptions Prohibited. The Commission has no power to exempt a person, candidate, or committee from the campaign disclosure requirements of the Act. (Govt.C. 84400; see 9 Pacific L. J. 513.)

b. Campaign Statements.

[§ 276] Campaign Statements.

(1) Semiannual Statements. Committees receiving $ 1,000 or more in a calendar year (Govt.C. 82013(a)), elected officers, and candidates must file semiannual campaign statements, except as provided. (Govt.C. 84200(a); see Govt.C. 84202.7 [time limitations for filing campaign statements].) The following exceptions are stated:

(a) A candidate need not file a statement for a period in which he or she has filed a declaration pursuant to Govt.C. 84206 (infra, this section). (Govt.C. 84200(a)(1).)

(b) Elected officers whose salaries are less than $ 200 per month, judges, judicial candidates, and their controlled committees need not file a statement for any period in which they have not made or received contributions or made expenditures. (Govt.C. 84200(a)(1).)

(c) A judge who is not listed on the ballot during a calendar year need not file a statement for any 6-month period in that year if the judge (1) has received no contributions, and (2) made no expenditures during the year except for contributions from his or her personal funds to other candidates or committees totaling less than $ 1,000. (Govt.C. 84200(a)(3).)

(d) Committees pursuant to Govt.C. 82013(b) or 82013(c) are required to file the semiannual statement if they made contributions or independent expenditures, including payments to a slate mailer, during the period. (Govt.C. 84200(b).)

(2) Statewide Direct Primary Election Statements. Campaign statements are required in connection with a statewide direct primary held in March of an even-numbered year, and any other election held on the same day. (Govt.C. 84200.3, 84200.4.)

(3) Preelection Statements. In addition to the campaign statements, elected officers, candidates, and committees must file preelection statements. (See Govt.C. 84200.5; Govt.C. 84200.7 [time limitations for filing preelection statements]; Govt.C. 84200.8 [additional time limitations for filing preelection statements].)

(4) Additional Special Statements and Reports. All candidates and committees must file the following special statements and reports: (a) Supplemental preelection statements when required by Govt.C. 84202.5; (b) late contribution reports when required by Govt.C. 84203; (c) independent expenditure reports when required by Govt.C. 84203.5; and (d) late independent expenditure reports when required by Govt.C. 84204. (Govt.C. 84200.6.)

Committees formed primarily to support or oppose ballot measures must file quarterly campaign statements. (Govt.C. 84202.3(a).) However, this statute does not apply to any semiannual period in which the committee is required to file preelection statements under Govt.C. 84200.5(a), (b), (c) (Govt.C. 84202.3(b)) or to the period following the election, unless the committee makes contributions or expenditures to support or oppose another ballot measure (Govt.C. 84202.3(c)). (See Yes on Measure A v. Lake Forest (1997) 60 C.A.4th 620, 625, 70 C.R.2d 517 [city's preelection challenge to ballot measure based on claim of unconstitutionality or illegality is not attempt to influence electorate, and expenditure reporting requirements of Political Reform Act do not attach].)

(5) Alternative Forms. The following alternative forms are authorized: (a) combined statements and reports (Govt.C. 84205); (b) short forms (Govt.C. 84206); and (c) consolidated statements (Govt.C. 84209).

(6) Content of Statements. Campaign statements must include prescribed information, including the total amounts of contributions and expenditures, the total amounts received from those giving $ 100 or more and from those giving less, the cash balances at the beginning and end of the period, information as to persons contributing or loaning $ 100 or more, information as to persons liable for loans, the total amount of expenditures to those receiving $ 100 or more and to those receiving less, information as to persons receiving an expenditure of $ 100 or more, additional information from certain committees and candidates, and information as to the person or committee filing the report. (Govt.C. 84211; see Fair Political Practices Com. v. Suitt (1979) 90 C.A.3d 125, 132, 153 C.R. 311 [legislative caucus's contribution of services of state-paid employee is required to be reported]; *Thirteen Committee v. (7) Slate Mailers. Several statutory provisions regulate slate mailers and slate mailer organizations. (See Govt.C. 82048.3 ["slate mailer" means mass mailing that "supports or opposes a total of four or more candidates or ballot measures"]; Govt.C. 82048.4 ["slate mailer organization" defined]; Los Angeles Taxpayers Alliance v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1214, 1222, 18 C.R.2d 472 [in determining whether mass mailing supports or opposes four or more candidates within meaning of Govt.C. 82048.3, opponents of candidates supported in mailing are not counted; hence, mailing that supported three candidates for separate offices and expressly opposed one candidate's opponent did not constitute slate mailer].)

(8) Miscellaneous Statutes. Other statutes relating to campaign statements include: Govt.C. 84213 [verification of statements]; Govt.C. 84215 [filing; copies]; Govt.C. 84216 [loans constituting contributions; reporting requirements]; Govt.C. 84216.5 [loans of campaign funds; reporting requirements]; Govt.C. 84217 [Secretary of State's distribution of federal statements]; Govt.C. 84306 [prompt reporting of contributions]; Govt.C. 84308(c) [contributions to agency officers (infra, §278)].

The Act sets forth certain filing requirements and prescribes the contents of required statements and reports. (See Govt.C. 84108 [statement of organization]; Govt.C. 84218(a) [semiannual campaign statement]; Govt.C. 84218(b) [preelection statement]; Govt.C. 84219 [contents of campaign report]; Govt.C. 84220 [report of payments above specified amount]; Govt.C. 84221 [termination of filing obligations]; Govt.C. 84305.5 [contents and required warning for slate mailer organization primarily formed to support or oppose ballot measures].)

c. Anonymous Mass Mailings.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 277

[§ 277] Anonymous Mass Mailings.

The Act prohibits a candidate or committee from sending a mass mailing that is not properly identified with the name, address, and city of the sender. (Govt.C. 84305.) This provision was challenged by G, a city council candidate, in Griset v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1994) 8 C.4th 851, 35 C.R.2d 659, 884 P.2d 116. Held, the statute does not violate the First Amendment rights of candidates or their committees.

(a) The U.S. Supreme Court has not addressed the precise issue involved here--whether a prohibition on anonymous mass mailings by candidates or their committees violates the First Amendment. (8 C.4th 856.) However, prior decisions have established (1) that governmental limitations on the right to remain anonymous while exercising First Amendment rights must be carefully examined; and (2) that the interest in conducting fair and honest elections and in providing voters with the information necessary to make an informed choice may justify a requirement that persons identify themselves when they engage in speech designed to influence the outcome of elections. (8 C.4th 859.)

(b) Govt.C. 84305 implicates First Amendment rights because it prohibits anonymous political speech. (8 C.4th 860.) Whether the statute may be upheld only if it meets the compelling governmental interest test, or whether the lesser degree of scrutiny applied to a statute prohibiting write-in voting in Burdick v. Takushi (1992) 504 U.S. 428, 112 S.Ct. 2059, 119 L.Ed.2d 245, is appropriate, need not be decided. Under either test, the statute as applied here is valid. (8 C.4th 861.) The state's interest in a well-informed electorate is compelling, and the restraint imposed--a requirement of identification for a narrow range of public speech--is carefully limited. (8 C.4th 862.)

(c) Relying on Schuster v. Municipal Court (1980) 109 C.A.3d 887, 167 C.R. 447, infra, §469, G argues that the statute's failure to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech renders it unconstitutional. However, the theory that only false or defamatory speech can be subject to compelled disclosure cannot be reconciled with the decision in Buckley v. Valeo (1976) 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, supra, §256, which upheld disclosure requirements not aimed at false or defamatory speech. (8 C.4th 864, 865.)

(d) The identification requirement of Govt.C. 84305 does not necessarily reduce the quantity of expression; it merely requires candidates and the committees they control to identify themselves in their mass mailings to prospective voters. The statute is narrowly tailored to serve the compelling state interest of providing voters with information to assist them in making their choice at the polls, the ultimate expression of their First Amendment rights. Accordingly, as applied to candidates and their controlled committees, the statute does not violate the First Amendment. (8 C.4th 866.)

d. Prohibited Practices.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 278

[§ 278] Prohibited Practices.

Govt.C. 84300 et seq. list a number of prohibitions relating to campaign disclosure:

(1) No contribution of $ 100 or more may be made or received in cash (Govt.C. 84300(a)), and no expenditure of $ 100 or more may be made in cash (Govt.C. 84300(b)). Contributions of $ 100 or more, other than in-kind contributions, must be made only by a written instrument containing the names of the donor and payee and drawn from the donor's or intermediary's account (Govt.C. 84300(c)), and the value of all in-kind contributions of $ 100 or more must be reported to the recipient on his or her written request (Govt.C. 84300(d)).

(2) No contribution may be made in a name other than the person's legal name. (Govt.C. 84301.)

(3) No person may make a contribution as an agent without disclosing his or her own name, address, and occupation, and those of his or her employer. (Govt.C. 84302.)

(4) No campaign expenditure of $ 500 or more may be made by an agent or independent contractor unless it is reported by the candidate or committee on whose behalf it was made. (Govt.C. 84303.)

(5) No person may make an anonymous contribution of $ 100 or more in a calendar year. (Govt.C. 84304.)

(6) No contribution may be commingled with the personal funds of the recipient or any other person. (Govt.C. 84307; see People v. Ballard (1980) 104 C.A.3d 757, 766, 164 C.R. 81 [predecessor statute prohibited commingling by candidates for political office, as well as other persons, and was not unconstitutionally vague].)

(7) No officer of an agency may accept, solicit, or direct a contribution of more than $ 250 from parties, participants (if the officer knows or has reason to know of a "financial interest"), and their agents, to any agency proceeding involving a license, permit, or other entitlement; the prohibition continues until 3 months after a final decision is rendered. (Govt.C. 84308(b); for definitions, see Govt.C. 84308(a).) And the parties to the proceeding, and their agents, are prohibited from making these contributions. (Govt.C. 84308(d).) If the officer has wilfully or knowingly received a contribution of more than $ 250 within the preceding 12 months from a party, participant, or agent, who the officer knows or has reason to know has a financial interest, the officer must disclose it on the record and may not participate in or influence the decision, unless he or she returns the contribution within 30 days after the officer knows or should have known of the contribution and the agency proceeding. (Govt.C. 84308(c).)

(8) No person may receive or personally deliver, or attempt to deliver, a contribution in specified state buildings. (Govt.C. 84309.)

4. Lobbyists.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 279

[§ 279] In General.

Chapter 6 (Govt.C. 86100 et seq.) deals with "lobbyists," "lobbying firms," and "lobbyist employers." (See 17 Pacific L. J. 614.)

(1) Definitions. The terms are defined as follows:

(a) "Lobbyist" is defined as any individual who receives $ 2,000 or more "in economic consideration in a calendar month, other than reimbursement for reasonable travel expenses, or whose principal duties as an employee are, to communicate directly or through his or her agents with any elective state official, agency official, or legislative official for the purpose of influencing legislative or administrative action." (Govt.C. 82039(a).) However, no person is a lobbyist by reason of activities described in Govt.C. 86300 (elected public official acting in official capacity or public employee acting in scope of employment; newspaper, periodical, broadcaster, etc., publishing comment or advertisements, or appearing before legislative committee or state agency; person representing church or religious society to protect right to practice its doctrines). (Govt.C. 82039(a).) A partner, owner, officer, or employee of a business entity that qualifies as a "lobbying firm" under Govt.C. 82038.5(a)(1) is a "lobbyist." (Govt.C. 82038.5(a)(1).)

(b) "Lobbying firm" is defined as any "business entity, including an individual contract lobbyist," that either (1) "receives or becomes entitled to receive any compensation, other than reimbursement for reasonable travel expenses, for the purpose of influencing legislative or administrative action on behalf of any other person" (Govt.C. 82038.5(a)(1)), or (2) "receives or becomes entitled to receive any compensation, other than reimbursement for reasonable travel expenses, to communicate directly with any elective state official, agency official, or legislative official for the purpose of influencing legislative or administrative action on behalf of any other person, if a substantial or regular portion of the activities for which the business entity receives compensation is for the purpose of influencing legislation or administrative action" (Govt.C. 82038.5(a)(2)). No business entity is a lobbying firm by reason of activities described in Govt.C. 86300, supra. (Govt.C. 82038.5(b).)

(c) "Lobbyist employer" means any person other than a "lobbying firm" who (1) employs "one or more lobbyists for economic consideration, other than reimbursement for reasonable travel expenses, for the purpose of influencing legislative or administrative action," or (2) contracts "for the services of a lobbyist firm for economic consideration, other than reimbursement for reasonable travel expense, for the purpose of influencing legislative or administrative action." (Govt.C. 82039.5.)

(2) Registration. Lobbying firms and lobbyist employers that employ lobbyists must register with the Secretary of State. (Govt.C. 86100(b)(c).) Individual lobbyists must prepare lobbyist certifications (Govt.C. 86103), which are filed as part of the registration by their lobbying firm or lobbyist employer. (Govt.C. 86100(a).) (See Govt.C. 86101 [period within which to register]; Govt.C. 86102 [registration fee]; Govt.C. 86104 [contents of registration of lobbying firm]; Govt.C. 86105 [contents of registration of lobbyist employer]; Govt.C. 86106 [renewal of registration]; Govt.C. 86107 [amended registration statements; notice of termination]; Govt.C. 86108 [Secretary of State must print all registration information]; Govt.C. 86109 [Secretary of State must publish directory of lobbyists, lobbying firms, and lobbyist employers].)

(3) Accounts and Expenses. Lobbyists, lobbying firms, and lobbyist employers with reportable receipts, payments, and incurred expenses must "keep detailed accounts, records, bills, and receipts as shall be required by regulations adopted by the commission to expedite the performance of all obligations imposed." (Govt.C. 86110.)

(4) Reports. Elaborate provision is made for periodic reports by lobbyists (Govt.C. 86113), lobbying firms (Govt.C. 86114), and by lobbyist employers and specified persons who make payments to influence legislation (Govt.C. 86115 [who must file]; Govt.C. 86116 [information required]). Further, state and local agencies must disclose all payments of $ 250 or more. (Govt.C. 86116.5.) (See Govt.C. 86117 [filing dates]; Govt.C. 86118 [filing with Secretary of State]; Govt.C. 86112.5 [person who files report must provide specified information to beneficiaries of gifts listed in report]; Govt.C. 86112.3 [written invitation to elected state official from person who files report must disclose that attendance constitutes acceptance of reportable gift].)

Former Govt.C. 86107(d), (e) and 86109(d), (e), which required lobbyists to report transactions with officials, including transactions entirely unrelated to lobbying activities, were declared invalid as an unnecessary curtailment of the right to petition. (Fair Political Practices Com. v. Superior Court (1979) 25 C.3d 33, 48, 49, 157 C.R. 855, 599 P.2d 46.) The current statutes require reports of every "activity expense," which is defined in Govt.C. 86111(a) as an expense or payment that "benefits in whole or in part any elective state official, legislative official, agency official, state candidate" or a member of his or her immediate family; however, campaign contributions are excluded (see infra, §280).

See 35 A.L.R.6th 1 [validity and construction of state and municipal enactments regulating lobbying].(2) Registration. Govt.C. 86102 was repealed in 2008. Govt.C. 20600, added in 2008, requires lobbyists to pay a nonrefundable fee to the Secretary of State every 2 years.

Lobbyists and lobbying firms are prohibited from making gifts aggregating more than $ 10 per month to legislative and agency officials, elected state officers, and state candidates. And lobbyists and lobbying firms are prohibited from doing anything with the purpose of placing these persons under obligation to the lobbyist, lobbying firm, or lobbyist's or firm's employer. (Govt.C. 86205(a).) Also prohibited are various kinds of fraudulent or deceptive acts (Govt.C. 86205(b), (c), (d), (e)), and contingent fees (Govt.C. 86205(f)). (See *People v. Under former Govt.C. 86202, lobbyists were prohibited from making or arranging contributions to state officials and the committees supporting them, but this prohibition was declared invalid prior to its repeal in 1984. Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

D. California Political Reform Act.

5. Conflicts of Interest.

a. Prohibited Acts.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 281

[§ 281] In General.

Chapter 7 (Govt.C. 87100 et seq.) covers conflicts of interest. (See 7 Pacific L. J. 847.)

(1) General Prohibition. Except where required by law (Govt.C. 87101), no state or local public official may make, participate in making, or in any way attempt to use his or her official position to influence a governmental decision in which the official knows or has reason to know that he or she has a financial interest. (Govt.C. 87100; see Hamilton v. Los Gatos (1989) 213 C.A.3d 1050, 1059, 261 C.R. 888 [under Govt.C. 87100, city council member who was prohibited from participating in closed session because of conflict of interest was also prohibited from obtaining record of closed session]; on prohibition regarding officers and employees of local agencies spending agency funds to support or oppose candidate or ballot measure, see supra, §254.)

(2) Financial Interest. As used in Govt.C. 87100, an official has a "financial interest" if "it is reasonably foreseeable that the decision will have a material financial effect, distinguishable from its effect on the public generally, on the official, a member of his or her immediate family," or on specified business, property, and commercial interests. (Govt.C. 87103; see Woodland Hills Residents Assn. v. City Council (1980) 26 C.3d 938, 946, 164 C.R. 255, 609 P.2d 1029, infra, §669 [campaign contributions are expressly excluded from the definition of "financial interest" by Govt.C. 87103(c) and 82030(b); thus city council members could consider subdivision application even though they had received contributions from the applicants]; Smith v. Superior Court (1994) 31 C.A.4th 205, 211, 36 C.R.2d 897 [even though member of county board of supervisors and his wife were county physicians, member could vote to appeal federal injunction that halted construction of replacement county hospital where he worked, because it was not "reasonably foreseeable," within meaning of Govt.C. 87103, that injunction would affect security of their employment]; BreakZone Billiards v. Torrance (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1205, 1228, 97 C.R.2d 467 [following Woodland Hills].)

In Witt v. Morrow (1977) 70 C.A.3d 817, 139 C.R. 161, a city council member was enjoined from participating in decisions concerning a shopping center project. He was an officer of, and attorney for, a nonprofit corporation owning property across the street from the proposed center, and received a fixed monthly salary from the corporation. Held, affirmed. The fact that an employee's salary is fixed does not make his or her financial interest too remote. (70 C.A.3d 822.) "It is not just actual improprieties which the law seeks to forestall but also the appearance of possible improprieties. Any employee, in the private or public sector, wishes to keep his job and maintain good relations with his employer. A person who must make decisions which may affect his employer's purse is in a situation where he may not give full consideration to the merits of the decision." (70 C.A.3d 823.)

In Consumers Union of United States v. California Milk Producers Advisory Bd. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 433, 147 C.R. 265, Govt.C. 87103 was construed to permit participation of industry representatives in decisions of regulatory boards and commissions. "Merely because a board member derives income from within a given industry, he or she does not lose the ability to be objective. Nor does that person lose the capacity to make decisions beneficial to the public's interest. The public interest emerges from the competing interests of various groups in our society, including those from a given industry. The act does not disallow that board member, who has knowledge and a comprehension of how the industry interacts with society, from participating in governmental decisions which affect that industry." (82 C.A.3d 448.)

(3) Loans. Govt.C. 87460 prohibits the receipt of personal loans by public officials and elected officers from specified government officers, employees, members, and consultants, and from persons who have contracts with the state or governmental agency over which the public official's or elected officer's agency has direction or control. (Govt.C. 87460(a).) The prohibition does not apply to (a) loans made to the campaign committee of an elected officer or candidate for elective office, (b) loans from specified family members, and (c) loans that do not exceed $ 250. (Govt.C. 87460(e); see Govt.C. 87461 [requirement of writing for loans of $ 500 or more]; Govt.C. 87462 [when loan becomes gift].)

(4) Action as Agent or Attorney. No public official of a state agency may, for compensation, act as an agent or attorney for, or otherwise represent, another person by appearing formally or informally before, or by communicating orally or in writing to, the official's agency, its officers or employees, if done for the purpose of influencing a decision on a contract, grant, loan, license, permit, or other entitlement for use. (Govt.C. 87104(a); see Govt.C. 87104(b) [definition of "public official"].)

(5) State Administrative Officials. "[N]o state administrative official shall make, participate in making, or use his or her official position to influence any governmental decision directly relating to any contract where the state administrative official knows or has reason to know that any party to the contract is a person with whom the state administrative official, or any member of his or her immediate family, has engaged in any business transaction or transactions on terms not made available to members of the public, regarding any investment or interest in real property, or the rendering of goods or services totaling in value one thousand dollars ($ 1,000) or more within 12 months prior to the time the official action is to be performed." (Govt.C. 87450(a); see Govt.C. 87400 [defining "state administrative official"].)

5. Conflicts of Interest.

b. Disclosures.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 283

[§ 283] Disclosures.

Govt.C. 87200 et seq., covering disclosures, are applicable to elected state officers, judges and commissioners of courts of the judicial branch of government, members of specified state commissions, specified local officers, and candidates for any of these offices. (Govt.C. 87200.)

(1) Statements of Investments, Real Property Interests, and Income. Statements disclosing investments, interests in real property, and income received during the preceding 12 months are required of (a) every person elected, appointed, or nominated to an office specified in Govt.C. 87200 (Govt.C. 87202(a)), and (b) every candidate for these offices "other than a justice of an appellate court or the Supreme Court" (Govt.C. 87201).

(2) Statement of Business Positions. Every person specified in Govt.C. 87200 must disclose any business position held in a business entity that has an interest in real property in the jurisdiction, or does business or plans to do business in the jurisdiction, or has done business in the jurisdiction at any time during the preceding 2 years. (Govt.C. 87209.)

(3) Financial Interest. A public official identified in Govt.C. 87200 who has a financial interest described in Govt.C. 87100 (supra, §281) must (a) publicly identify the interest, (b) recuse himself or herself, and (c) leave the room while the matter is discussed and voted on, although the official may speak on the issue when the general public does so. (Govt.C. 87105.)

(4) Supplemental and Departing Statements. Supplemental statements disclosing investments, interests in real property, and income are required annually as specified by commission regulations (Govt.C. 87203), and on leaving office (Govt.C. 87204). (For contents of statement on investments and interests in real property, see Govt.C. 87206; for contents of statement on income, see Govt.C. 87207; on disclosure of identity of donor, see Govt.C. 87210.)

Prior to amendment in 1984, Govt.C. 87207(b) required lawyers and brokers to identify persons who paid them $ 1,000 or more, while it required members of all other businesses and professions to identify persons who paid them $ 10,000 or more. This provision was held unconstitutional in Hays v. Wood (1979) 25 C.3d 772, 160 C.R. 102, 603 P.2d 19. (a) The underinclusiveness of a classification must have a rational basis. (25 C.3d 791.) (b) A lawyer's special role in the private sector, often representing private interests in dealings with government, does not support the assumed conclusion that he or she will be more likely than other professionals to have conflicts of interest. (25 C.3d 792.) (c) The possible abuse of retainer fees is only one of many means to effect a bribe of a public official. (25 C.3d 794.) (d) The classification cannot be supported on the ground that more disclosure may be required from attorneys to ensure that they are acting for the public rather than private interests. (25 C.3d 795.)

(5) Substitute Statements. Statements under Govt.C. 87201 and 87202 may be substituted for one another, and a statement under Govt.C. 87203 may be substituted for either, if the statement is filed for the same jurisdiction within 60 days prior to the time the person filed as a candidate or assumed office. (Govt.C. 87201, 87202(a); see Govt.C. 87208 [incorporation by reference]; Govt.C. 87350 [multiagency statement for designated employee of more than one joint powers insurance agency].) Elected state officers who assume office in December or January must file a statement under Govt.C. 87203, rather than under Govt.C. 87202(a). (Govt.C. 87202(b).)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Statements of Investments, Real Property Interests, and Income. Govt.C. 87302.3, added in 2007, provides for disclosure of investments, business and real property interests, and income by a candidate for an elective office that is designated in a conflict of interest code (see text, §284).

5. Conflicts of Interest.

c. Conflict of Interest Codes.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 284

[§ 284] Conflict of Interest Codes.

Every state or local government agency must adopt and promulgate a "Conflict of Interest Code," which has the force of law. (Govt.C. 87300, 87301.) It must (1) enumerate the positions within the agency involving decisionmaking, (2) require statements at prescribed times and under specified circumstances from designated employees (other than those specified in Govt.C. 87200) disclosing reportable investments, business positions, interests in real property, and income, and (3) set forth the circumstances for disqualification from making or participating in decisions. (Govt.C. 87302.)

The proposed code must be submitted by the agency to a "code reviewing body," which, depending on the agency, could be the Commission, board of supervisors, city council, Attorney General, Chief Justice or presiding justices, State Bar Board of Governors, or the Judicial Council (see Govt.C. 82011). The code-reviewing body must (a) approve the code, (b) revise it and approve it as revised, or (c) return it to the agency for revision and resubmission. (Govt.C. 87303.) If the code reviewing body fails to act within 6 months, judicial relief may be sought (Govt.C. 87305), and any action of a code reviewing body is subject to judicial review (Govt.C. 87308).

No code or amendment may be approved by the code reviewing body or upheld by a court if it fails (1) "to provide reasonable assurance that all foreseeable potential conflict of interest situations will be disclosed or prevented;" (2) "to provide to each affected person a clear and specific statement of his duties under the Code;" or (3) "to adequately differentiate between designated employees with different powers and responsibilities." (Govt.C. 87309.)

A code may not provide for a case-by-case determination whether a particular interest falls within objectively defined categories that require disclosure; Govt.C. 87302(b) requires disclosure of all covered interests. The provisions of Govt.C. 87103 (supra, §281), which permit participation when the disclosed interest does not differ from that of the public generally, have no application to the disclosure requirements of the Act. (Metropolitan Water Dist. v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1977) 73 C.A.3d 650, 657, 658, 141 C.R. 8.)

Uncompensated members of the Commission on California State Government Organization and Economy (see Govt.C. 8501 et seq.) are not exempt from the disclosure requirements of the Act. While the duties of the Commission are facially advisory only, its discretionary investigative powers and its influence on state agencies render its functions decisionmaking in nature. (Commission on Calif. State Government Organization & Economy v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1977) 75 C.A.3d 716, 721, 723, 724, 142 C.R. 468.)

5. Conflicts of Interest.

d. Restrictions on Former Officials.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 285

[§ 285] Restrictions on Former Officials.

(1) Administrative Officials. Govt.C. 87400 et seq. restrict the activities of former state administrative officials (defined in Govt.C. 87400(b)) who, for compensation, represent any person, other than the state, before a court or state administrative agency (defined in Govt.C. 87400(a)) in connection with any judicial, quasi-judicial, or other proceeding (defined in Govt.C. 87400(c)). (See Govt.C. 87401.)

The former official is prohibited from making either a formal or informal appearance in the proceeding, or from submitting an oral or written communication for compensation, if (a) the state is a party or has a direct and substantial interest, and (b) the proceeding is one in which the official participated (defined in Govt.C. 87400(d)). (Govt.C. 87401.) Indirect participation through assisting the representation is also prohibited. (Govt.C. 87402.)

However, the former official (1) may give a statement based on his or her own special knowledge, if the official receives no compensation other than that regularly provided for witnesses; (2) may provide communications solely to furnish information, if the official has outstanding and otherwise unavailable qualifications, is acting with respect to a matter requiring these qualifications, and is serving the public interest thereby; or (3) may appear or submit communications in a completed proceeding in which the court or agency has retained jurisdiction, if at least 5 years have elapsed since the official left the government, and the public interest would not be harmed. (Govt.C. 87403.)

On petition of any interested party, the court or the presiding or other officer may, after notice and an opportunity for hearing, exclude any person violating Govt.C. 87400 et seq. from further participation in the proceeding, or from assisting or counseling any other participant. (Govt.C. 87404.)

(2) Legislators, Elected Officials, and Officers and Employees of Administrative Agencies. For a period of 1 year after leaving office or employment, (a) former members of the Legislature are prohibited from representing any other person before the Legislature for the purpose of influencing legislative action (Govt.C. 87406(b)); (b) former elected officials are prohibited from representing any other person before any state administrative agency for the purpose of influencing any administrative action (Govt.C. 87406(c)); and (c) former officers and employees of administrative agencies are prohibited from representing any other person before any state administrative agency for the purpose of influencing any administrative or legislative action (Govt.C. 87406(d)). However, an appearance before a state administrative agency "does not include an appearance in a court of law, before the administrative law judge, or before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board." (Govt.C. 87406(c), (d).) (See Govt.C. 87406.1 [imposing similar restrictions on former board members and designated former officers and employees of air pollution control and air quality management districts].)

(1) Honoraria. Chapter 9.5 (Govt.C. 89500 et seq.) prohibits the acceptance of an honorarium by local elected officeholders, elected state officers, designated candidates for office, members of state or local boards or commissions, and designated employees of state and local agencies. (Govt.C. 89502; see Govt.C. 89502(d) [exclusions].) "Honorarium" is defined as a "payment made in consideration for any speech given, article published, or attendance at any public or private conference, convention, meeting, social event, meal, or like gathering." (Govt.C. 89501.)

(2) Gifts. The Act limits the amount local elected officeholders, elected state officers, designated candidates for office, members of state or local boards or commissions, and designated employees of state and local agencies may accept as gifts. Gifts valued in excess of $ 250 generally may not be accepted from any single source in any calendar year. (Govt.C. 89503; see Govt.C. 89503(e) [exclusions].)

(3) Travel Expenses. Payment or reimbursement for travel expenses that are reasonably related to a legislative or governmental purpose or public policy issue is not limited if (a) the travel is in the United States in connection with a speech given by the designated official, employee, or candidate, and the expenses are limited to the day before, the day of, and the day after the speech, or (b) the travel is provided by a government or governmental agency or authority, an educational institution, a nonprofit organization, or a person domiciled outside the U.S. who qualifies for tax exempt status. (Govt.C. 89506(a).) Except as provided in Govt.C. 89506(a), a gift of travel is subject to the limitations of Govt.C. 89503. (Govt.C. 89506(b); see Govt.C. 89506(c) [exclusions].)

7. Limitations on Campaign Spending and Contributions.

a. Statutory Development.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 287

[§ 287] Statutory Development.

Former Govt.C. 85300 et seq. imposed limits on expenditures for candidates and measures. (See 6 Pacific L. J. 631; 7 Southwestern L. Rev. 470, 484.) The limitations were held unconstitutional as violative of the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of speech in Citizens for Jobs & Energy v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1976) 16 C.3d 671, 675, 129 C.R. 106, 547 P.2d 1386, and the statutes were repealed in 1977. The limitations on expenditures for circulation of statewide petitions were held invalid in Hardie v. Eu (1976) 18 C.3d 371, 376, 134 C.R. 201, 556 P.2d 301. A local measure prohibiting a business organization from making a contribution to a candidate or political committee supporting or opposing a candidate or a measure was held unconstitutional in Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Berkeley (1976) 60 C.A.3d 123, 127, 131 C.R. 350. And a provision of the same municipal election reform act limiting the size of contributions to committees formed to support or oppose ballot measures was ultimately held unconstitutional as an infringement on both the right of association and the right of expression in Citizens Against Rent Control/Coalition for Fair Housing v. Berkeley (1981) 454 U.S. 290, 102 S.Ct. 434, 439, 70 L.Ed.2d 492, 501. (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 161 [Citizens Against Rent Control]; 15 Hastings Const. L. Q. 155 [proposed ballot initiative to limit campaign spending].)

Since voters adopted the Political Reform Act in 1974 (see supra, §271), they have attempted to put further limitations on campaign contributions and expenditures.

(1) Propositions 68 and 73. In June, 1988, voters approved Propositions 68 and 73, which limited campaign spending and contributions. Both measures were codified as Govt.C. 85100 et seq. Proposition 73 received the most votes and thus prevailed. (See Taxpayers to Limit Campaign Spending v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1990) 51 C.3d 744, 274 C.R. 787, 799 P.2d 1220 [rejecting claim that reconcilable portions of Proposition 68 should be saved]; 20 Pacific L. J. 615.) Proposition 73 became operative on January 1, 1989. The initiative limited contributions but not expenditures. (See Gerken v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1993) 6 C.4th 707, 717, 25 C.R.2d 449, 863 P.2d 694 [rejecting claim that Proposition 68 should be revived because Proposition 73 had been invalidated in federal court proceedings]; Kopp v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1995) 11 C.4th 607, 660, 47 C.R.2d 108, 905 P.2d 1248 [no reformation of invalid portions of Proposition]; 20 Pacific L. J. 616.)

(2) Proposition 208. Proposition 208 was adopted by the voters in November, 1996. In setting new contribution limits and a voluntary ceiling on expenditures, it repealed most of the provisions of Proposition 73. (See Californians for Political Reform Foundation v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1998) 61 C.A.4th 472, 71 C.R.2d 606 [upholding emergency regulation excepting payments by sponsoring organization to establish and administer its political action committee from statutory definition of "contribution"]; infra, §288.)

(3) Proposition 34. Proposition 34 was adopted by the voters in November, 2000. It establishes limits on campaign contributions and loans, and sets voluntary limits on the total expenditures of candidates for elective state offices. Proposition 34 repeals and replaces many of the provisions of both Propositions 73 and 208. (See 33 McGeorge L. Rev. 279 [campaign finance reform and Proposition 34]; infra, §289 et seq.)

b. Filing and Account Requirements.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 288

[§ 288] Filing and Account Requirements.

(1) Statement of Intent. A person who intends to be a candidate for elective state office must file an original statement of intent with the Secretary of State before soliciting or receiving contributions or loans. (Govt.C. 85200.) A candidate for any other elective office must file the statement of intention as provided in Govt.C. 84215(c), (d), (e). (See supra, §276.)

(2) Filing Requirements. Both candidates for elective state office and committees primarily formed to support a ballot measure that must file reports pursuant to Govt.C. 84605 must file "online or electronically" with the Secretary of State a report disclosing receipt of contributions of $ 1,000 or more received during an election cycle. These reports must be filed within 24 hours of receipt of the contributions. (Govt.C. 85309(a), (b).) Within 10 business days of receipt, these candidates and committees must file, online or electronically, reports disclosing contributions of $ 5,000 or more "received at any other time than during an election cycle." (Govt.C. 85309(c), (d).) (On Online Disclosure Act, see Govt.C. 84600 et seq.)

(3) Campaign Contribution Account. The candidate must open one campaign contribution account at a financial institution in the state, must deposit all contributions, loans, and personal funds to be used in the campaign into this account, and must make all campaign expenditures from the account. (Govt.C. 85201(a), (c), (d), (e); see Govt.C. 85200 [terms "contribution" and "loan" do not include payments from candidate's personal funds for candidate filing fee or statement of qualifications fee]; Govt.C. 85201(f) [payment for filing fee and statement of qualifications from personal funds need not be deposited in account before expenditure]; 23 Pacific L. J. 631.)

These requirements do not apply to a candidate who will not receive contributions and who makes expenditures from personal funds of less than $ 1,000 in a calendar year; payment for the filing fee and statement of qualifications fee is not included in calculating total expenditures. (Govt.C. 85201(g).) However, a candidate who raises or spends less than $ 1,000 in a calendar year, and who does not qualify as a committee under Govt.C. 82013, must establish a campaign contribution account pursuant to Govt.C. 85201(a), but is not required to file a committee organizational statement as required by Govt.C. 84101, or other bank account informational statement. (Govt.C. 85201(h).)

(4) Who May Contribute. Campaign contributions may be accepted only from persons, political committees, and small contributor committees. (Govt.C. 85301 et seq.) Public moneys may not be spent or accepted. (Govt.C. 85300; see Govt.C. 85206 [definition of "public moneys"].) Foreign governments and foreign principals are prohibited from making contributions or expenditures, and persons and committees are prohibited from soliciting or accepting contributions, in connection with the qualification or support of, or opposition to, any state or local ballot measure. (Govt.C. 85320.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Filing Requirements. A committee that is required to file reports pursuant to Govt.C. 84605 and that makes independent expenditures of $ 1,000 or more during an election cycle in connection with a candidate or a state ballot measure must file, online or electronically, a report with the Secretary of State disclosing the expenditure within 24 hours of the time it is made. (Govt.C. 85500(a); see Californians for Fair Representation--No on 77 v. Superior Court (2006) 138 C.A.4th 15, 25, 41 C.R.3d 148 [expenditures for radio and television advertisements by supporters of ballot measure during 90-day period before election qualified as independent expenditures that were required by Govt.C. 85500(a) to be reported within 24 hours if $ 1,000 or more].)

A committee that is required to file reports pursuant to Govt.C. 84605 must file a report with the Secretary of State disclosing contributions or expenditures totaling $ 5,000 or more to support or oppose the qualification or passage of a state ballot measure. The report must be filed online or electronically within 10 business days of making the contribution or expenditure. (Govt.C. 84204.5, added in 2006.)(4) Who May Contribute. Govt.C. 85300 was repealed in 2008. [§ 289] Contribution Limits.

Proposition 34 (see supra, §287) establishes the following limits for contributions:

(1) A person other than the candidate may not make a contribution to a candidate for Governor totaling more than $ 20,000, to a candidate for any other statewide elective office of more than $ 5,000, and to a candidate for any other elective state office of more than $ 3,000, per election. These limits also apply to the candidates' ability to accept contributions from any person. (Govt.C. 85301.)

(2) A small contributor committee, as defined in Govt.C. 85203, may not make any contribution to a candidate for Governor totaling more than $ 20,000, to a candidate for any other statewide elective office of more than $ 10,000, and to a candidate for any other elective state office of more than $ 6,000, per election. These limitations also apply to the candidates' ability to accept contributions from small contributor committees. (Govt.C. 85302.)

(3) A person may not make a contribution to any committee, other than a political party committee as defined in Govt.C. 85205, totaling more than $ 5,000 per calendar year for the purpose of making contributions to candidates for elective state office. (Govt.C. 85303(a).) A person may not make a contribution to any political party committee totaling more than $ 25,000 to make contributions for the support or defeat of candidates for elective state office. (Govt.C. 85303(b).) However, except as provided in Govt.C. 85310, a person's contributions to a committee or political party committee are not limited if they are used for purposes other than making contributions to candidates for elective state office. (Govt.C. 85303(c).)

(4) A candidate for elective state office may transfer contributions in excess of any amount necessary to defray the candidate's expenses for election-related activities or holding office to a political party committee provided they are used for purposes consistent with Govt.C. 89519(b)(4) (infra, §291). (Govt.C. 85303(d).) Further, a "candidate may transfer campaign funds from one controlled committee to a controlled committee for elective state office of the same candidate." (Govt.C. 85306(a).)

(5) A candidate for elective state office may not personally loan his or her campaign an amount exceeding $ 100,000, and may not charge interest on the loan. (Govt.C. 85307(b).) "Contributions made by a husband and wife may not be aggregated." (Govt.C. 85308(a).) A contribution made by a child under 18 is presumed to be a contribution from the child's parent or guardian. (Govt.C. 85308(b).)

(6) A candidate or committee must return any contribution of $ 100 or more when the contributor's name, address, occupation, and employer are not on file. (Govt.C. 85700.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 291

[§ 291] Use of Funds.

(1) In General. Govt.C. 89510 et seq. impose limitations on the use of campaign funds. (For definitions, see Govt.C. 89511.) The statutes apply to expenditures by candidates, elected officers, and committees. (Govt.C. 89511(a); see Schroeder v. Irvine City Council (2002) 97 C.A.4th 174, 185, 118 C.R.2d 330 [city's expenditures to increase voter registration and participation, which did not support or oppose candidate or cause, were not unlawful political expenditures under Political Reform Act].) Expenditures by a candidate that are "reasonably related to a political purpose" and by an officer that are "reasonably related to a legislative or governmental purpose" are allowed. (Govt.C. 89512.)

The statute describes in detail the circumstances under which expenditures for specific purposes will be deemed to meet the "reasonably related" test. (See Govt.C. 89513 [travel, lodging, professional services, fines or penalties, clothing, tickets to fundraising events, personal gifts, and loans]; Govt.C. 89514 [attorneys' fees and other litigation costs]; Govt.C. 89515 [charitable donations]; Govt.C. 89516 [vehicle expenses]; Govt.C. 89517 [purchase, lease, or refurbishing of property]; Govt.C. 89518 [compensation for performance of duties].)

(Govt.C. 89519(b); see Govt.C. 89519(a) [defining "surplus campaign funds"].) V. SUFFRAGE

E. Code of Fair Campaign Practices.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 292

[§ 292] Code of Fair Campaign Practices.

The fair campaign practices statutes provide for voluntary subscription by a candidate for public office to a Code of Fair Campaign Practices (Elec.C. 20400, 20444); require the Secretary of State to supply printed forms to county clerks (Elec.C. 20444); and require the county clerk to give blank forms to candidates and inform them that subscription is voluntary (Elec.C. 20440). Subscribed forms are public records open for public inspection (Elec.C. 20443), and must be retained by the clerk until 30 days after the election (Elec.C. 20442).

The text of the Code is set forth in Elec.C. 20440:

"CODE OF FAIR CAMPAIGN PRACTICES

There are basic principles of decency, honesty, and fair play which every candidate for public office in the State of California has a moral obligation to observe and uphold, in order that, after vigorously contested, but fairly conducted campaigns, our citizens may exercise their constitutional right to a free and untrammelled choice and the will of the people may be fully and clearly expressed on the issues.

THEREFORE:

(1) I SHALL CONDUCT my campaign openly and publicly, discussing the issues as I see them, presenting my record and policies with sincerity and frankness, and criticizing without fear or favor the record and policies of my opponents or political parties which merit such criticism.

(2) I SHALL NOT USE OR PERMIT the use of character defamation, whispering campaigns, libel, slander, or scurrilous attacks on any candidate or his or her personal or family life.

(3) I SHALL NOT USE OR PERMIT any appeal to negative prejudice based on race, sex, religion, national origin, physical health status, or age.

(4) I SHALL NOT USE OR PERMIT any dishonest or unethical practice which tends to corrupt or undermine our American system of free elections, or which hampers or prevents the full and free expression of the will of the voters including acts intended to hinder or prevent any eligible person from registering to vote, enrolling to vote, or voting.

(5) I SHALL NOT coerce election help or campaign contributions for myself or for any other candidate from my employees.

(6) I SHALL IMMEDIATELY AND PUBLICLY REPUDIATE support deriving from any individual or group which resorts, on behalf of my candidacy or in opposition to that of my opponent, to the methods and tactics which I condemn. I shall accept responsibility to take firm action against any subordinate who violates any provision of this code or the laws governing elections.

(7) I SHALL DEFEND AND UPHOLD the right of every qualified American voter to full and equal participation in the electoral process.

I, the undersigned, candidate for election to public office in the State of California or treasurer or chairman of a committee making any independent expenditures, hereby voluntarily endorse, subscribe to, and solemnly pledge myself to conduct my campaign in accordance with the above principles and practices."

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

The text of the Code of Fair Campaign Practices set out in Elec.C. 20440 was amended in 2006. Most of the amendments are nonsubstantive. For instance, commas were deleted in the preamble following "observe and uphold" and "vigorously contested." In Paragraph (1), "such" was changed to "this." In paragraphs (1), (4), and (6), "which" was changed to "that." Paragraph (3) was more extensively amended. It now provides:

"(3) I SHALL NOT USE OR PERMIT any appeal to negative prejudice based on a candidate's actual or perceived race, religious creed, color, national origin, ancestry, physical disability, mental disability, mental condition, marital status, age, sexual orientation, sex, including gender identity, or any other characteristic set forth in Section 12940 of the Government Code, or association with another person who has any of the actual or perceived characteristics set forth in Section 12940 of the Government Code."

F. Regulation of Political Advertising.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 293

[§ 293] Regulation of Political Advertising.

The Truth in Political Advertising Act was enacted in 1998. (Elec.C. 20010.) It prohibits the production, distribution, publication, or broadcast, with actual malice, of campaign material that contains (1) "a picture or photograph of a person or persons into which the image of a candidate for public office is superimposed" or (2) "a picture or photograph of a candidate for public office into which the image of another person or persons is superimposed." "Actual malice" means knowledge that a person's image has been superimposed to create a false representation, or a reckless disregard of whether or not it creates a false representation. "Campaign material" includes printed matter, television commercials, and computer images. (Elec.C. 20010(a).)

A superimposed picture or photograph may be used if it includes an adjacent statement, in specified size type, that "[t]his picture is not an accurate representation of fact." (Elec.C. 20010(b).)

Any registered voter may seek a temporary restraining order and an injunction prohibiting the publication, distribution, or broadcast of offending campaign material, and a candidate whose likeness appears in an offending picture or photograph may bring a civil action for damages in an amount equal to the cost of producing, distributing, or broadcasting the offending campaign material, in addition to attorneys' fees and costs. (Elec.C. 20010(c).)

The Act does not apply to a licensee under the federal Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C., §151 et seq.), nor to the publisher or employee of a newspaper, magazine, or other regularly published periodical the primary purpose of which is not the publication of campaign advertising or communication. (Elec.C. 20010(d).) (See 78 Proof of Facts 3d 1 [Equal Opportunity for Broadcast Time for Political Candidates].)

G. Reapportionment.

1. Justiciable Issue.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 294

[§ 294] In General.

In Baker v. Carr (1962) 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, the Court, in a striking break with tradition, held that the issue of discriminatory apportionment of election districts, formerly thought to be a nonjusticiable "political question" (see supra, §87), was justiciable and was properly raised in a voters' representative suit. The action was brought by Tennessee voters in the federal district court under the Civil Rights Acts (42 U.S.C., §§1983, 1988; infra, §814 et seq.). The complaint alleged that the 1901 Tennessee statute apportioning members of the Legislature among the state's 95 counties denied them equal protection of the laws. The three-judge district court, relying on Colegrove v. Green (1946) 328 U.S. 549, 66 S.Ct. 1198, 90 L.Ed. 1432, supra, §88, dismissed the action for lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter and failure to state a cause of action. Held, reversed for trial of the issue: "[W]e hold today only (a) that the court possessed jurisdiction of the subject matter; (b) that a justiciable cause of action is stated upon which appellants would be entitled to appropriate relief; and (c) ... that the appellants have standing to challenge the Tennessee apportionment statutes." (82 S.Ct. 699, 7 L.Ed.2d 674.)

(a) The federal district court had jurisdiction of the subject matter. A substantial claim of violation of the Constitution was asserted, the subject was within the federal judicial power, and even in Colegrove v. Green, the court's jurisdiction was recognized. (82 S.Ct. 700-703, 7 L.Ed.2d 674-677.)

(b) Plaintiffs had standing to sue. The question of standing is, essentially, whether the plaintiffs alleged "such a personal stake in the outcome of the controversy as to assure that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court so largely depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions." (82 S.Ct. 703, 7 L.Ed.2d 678.) The right to vote free of arbitrary impairment by state action is a recognized constitutional right, entitled to protection against a false tally, refusal to count votes, or ballot stuffing. Plaintiffs asserted a plain, direct and adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes, and an injury suffered by the legislative classification that unjustifiably disfavored the voters in their counties and favored those in other counties. (82 S.Ct. 705, 7 L.Ed.2d 680.)

(c) Plaintiffs stated a justiciable cause of action. The fact that the suit sought protection of a political right did not mean that it presented a nonjusticiable political question. "[I]t is the relationship between the judiciary and the coordinate branches of the Federal Government, and not the federal judiciary's relationship to the States, which gives rise to the 'political question.' " In other words, nonjusticiability "is primarily a function of the separation of powers."

(82 S.Ct. 706, 7 L.Ed.2d 682.) The elements of such a nonjusticiable question are "a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; or a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; or the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; or an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question." (82 S.Ct. 710, 7 L.Ed.2d 686.) In brief, the doctrine is one of "political questions," not "political cases"; the courts cannot reject a bona fide controversy as to whether some "political" action exceeds constitutional authority. (82 S.Ct. 710, 7 L.Ed.2d 686.)

(d) The Guaranty Clause cases, i.e., those dealing with the guarantee of a republican form of government (supra, §87), are distinguishable. The Clause does not present "judicially manageable standards" that a court can apply to identify a state's lawful government. (82 S.Ct. 714, 7 L.Ed.2d 689.)

(e) The Court summed up the answers to the "political question" objection in these words: "The question here is the consistency of state action with the Federal Constitution. We have no question decided, or to be decided, by a political branch of the government coequal with this Court. Nor do we risk embarrassment of our government abroad, or grave disturbance at home if we take issue with Tennessee as to the constitutionality of her action here challenged. Nor need the appellants, in order to succeed in this action, ask the Court to enter upon policy determinations for which judicially manageable standards are lacking. Judicial standards under the Equal Protection Clause are well developed and familiar, and it has been open to courts since the enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment to determine, if on the particular facts they must, that a discrimination reflects no policy, but simply arbitrary and capricious action." (82 S.Ct. 715, 7 L.Ed.2d 691.)

Three concurring opinions were filed. (82 S.Ct. 723, 727, 736, 7 L.Ed.2d 700, 705, 713.) Two dissenting opinions asserted that the majority reversed a uniform course of decision and failed to offer guidelines for remedies that they authorized. (82 S.Ct. 737, 771, 7 L.Ed.2d 706, 751.) (On distinction, for purposes of review by U.S. Supreme Court, between legislatively enacted and judicially imposed reapportionments, see Wise v. Lipscomb (1978) 437 U.S. 535, 98 S.Ct. 2493, 57 L.Ed.2d 411.)

Commentary on reapportionment has been extensive. (For analyses of this extraordinary decision and speculation as to its effects, see 76 Harv. L. Rev. 54; 78 Harv. L. Rev. 149; 50 *Cal. L. G. Reapportionment.

1. Justiciable Issue.

b. Gerrymandering.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 295

[§ 295] In General.

While irregular districts for the purpose of excluding black voters were struck down in Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960) 364 U.S. 339, 81 S.Ct. 125, 5 L.Ed.2d 110, supra, §238, and reapportionment based on population has been required (see infra, §297 et seq.), the basic question has remained: whether true "gerrymandering"--the deliberate and arbitrary distortion of political boundaries for political purposes--presented a justiciable issue; and if so, what was required to establish a violation of equal protection. (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 878 [Federal Court Involvement in Redistricting Litigation]; 116 Harv. L. Rev. 593, 649, 684 [gerrymandering and political cartels]; 117 Harv. L. Rev. 1196 [partisan gerrymandering as federalism injury]; 40 Hastings L. J. 1067 [The Lack of Judicial Direction in Political Gerrymandering]; 4 Pepperdine L. Rev. 243; 42 Stanf. L. Rev. 1549 [judicial restraint as justifying intervention to remedy partisan gerrymandering]; 50 Stanf. L. Rev. 607, 779 [gerrymandering]; 33 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1 [entire issue].)

In Davis v. Bandemer (1986) 478 U.S. 109, 106 S.Ct. 2797, 92 L.Ed.2d 85, the Indiana Legislature approved a legislative district reapportionment plan recommended by a conference committee consisting entirely of Republicans. Democratic members were excluded from the mapmaking process and had only 40 hours to examine the plan. In this action by Democrats against state officials, plaintiffs alleged that the reapportionment plan violated their right to equal protection. A three-judge federal district panel held that the issue was justiciable and that plaintiffs had made a sufficient showing of intentional discrimination based on political affiliation to justify injunction and other relief. Held, reversed, by a divided court. The lead opinion held that (a) political gerrymandering cases are justiciable under the Equal Protection Clause, but (b) plaintiffs had not made the necessary threshold showing of discriminatory vote dilution to make a prima facie case of violation of equal protection. (106 S.Ct. 2807, 2816, 92 L.Ed.2d 102, 112.) Three justices thought that partisan gerrymandering claims of major political parties raised a nonjusticiable political question. (106 S.Ct. 2816, 92 L.Ed.2d 112.) (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 153.)

Bandemer was overruled in Vieth v. Jubelirer (2004) 541 U.S. 267, 124 S.Ct. 1769, 158 L.Ed.2d 546, where another divided Court held that political gerrymandering claims are nonjusticiable. The legacy of the Bandemer test "is one long record of puzzlement and consternation" that "has been criticized for its indeterminacy by a host of academic commentators." (124 S.Ct. 1779, 158 L.Ed.2d 561.) Plaintiffs' suggested "predominant intent" standard is equally unworkable, partly because it "is impossible to assess the effects of partisan gerrymandering, to fashion a standard for evaluating a violation, and finally to craft a remedy." (124 S.Ct. 1782, 158 L.Ed.2d 563.) The fact that the four dissenting justices came up with three different standards, all of which are different from the two standards proposed in Bandemer and the one imposed by plaintiffs here, goes to show that "there is no constitutionally discernible standard" to determine political gerrymandering claims. (124 S.Ct. 1784, 158 L.Ed.2d 566.)

V. SUFFRAGE

G. Reapportionment.

1. Justiciable Issue.

b. Gerrymandering.

2. To Benefit Racial Minority Groups.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 296

[§ 296] To Benefit Racial Minority Groups.

(1) In General. In Shaw v. Reno (1993) 509 U.S. 630, 113 S.Ct. 2816, 125 L.Ed.2d 511, the Court introduced its opinion as follows: "This case involves two of the most complex and sensitive issues this Court has faced in recent years: the meaning of the constitutional 'right' to vote, and the propriety of race-based state legislation designed to benefit members of historically disadvantaged racial minority groups." (113 S.Ct. 2819, 125 L.Ed.2d 520.)

The first of two majority-black districts is centered in the northeast portion of North Carolina. It moves southward until it tapers to a narrow bank, then with finger-like extensions, reaches far into the southernmost part of the state. The second is approximately 160 miles long, and "winds in snake-like fashion" through tobacco country, financial centers, and manufacturing areas "until it gobbles in enough enclaves of black neighborhoods." (113 S.Ct. 2820, 2821, 125 L.Ed.2d 521.) Appellants, five North Carolina residents, filed this action against state and federal officials, claiming that the state had created an unconstitutional racial gerrymander. Held, appellants stated a claim under the Equal Protection Clause. (113 S.Ct. 2824, 125 L.Ed.2d 525.)

(a) "A reapportionment plan that includes in one district individuals who belong to the same race, but who are otherwise widely separated by geographical and political boundaries, and who may have little in common with one another but the color of their skin, bears an uncomfortable resemblance to political apartheid. It reinforces the perception that members of the same racial group--regardless of their age, education, economic status, or the community in which they live--think alike, share the same political interests, and will prefer the same candidates at the polls. We have rejected such perceptions elsewhere as impermissible racial stereotypes. ... By perpetuating such notions, a racial gerrymander may exacerbate the very patterns of racial bloc voting that majority-minority districting is sometimes said to counteract." (113 S.Ct. 2827, 125 L.Ed.2d 529.)

(b) "The message that such districting sends to elected representatives is equally pernicious. When a district obviously is created solely to effectuate the perceived common interests of one racial group, elected officials are more likely to believe that their primary obligation is to represent only the members of that group, rather than their constituency as a whole. This is altogether antithetical to our system of representative democracy." (113 S.Ct. 2827, 125 L.Ed.2d 529.)

(c) "For these reasons, we conclude that a plaintiff challenging a reapportionment statute under the Equal Protection Clause may state a claim by alleging that the legislation, though race-neutral on its face, rationally cannot be understood as anything other than an effort to separate voters into different districts on the basis of race, and that the separation lacks sufficient justification. It is unnecessary for us to decide whether or how a reapportionment plan that, on its face, can be explained in nonracial terms successfully could be challenged. Thus, we express no view as to whether 'the intentional creation of majority-minority districts, without more' always gives rise to an equal protection claim. ... We hold only that, on the facts of this case, plaintiffs have stated a claim sufficient to defeat the state appellees' motion to dismiss." (113 S.Ct. 2828, 125 L.Ed.2d 530.)

(2) Necessary Proof. In Miller v. Johnson (1995) 515 U.S. 900, 115 S.Ct. 2475, 132 L.Ed.2d 762, the Court considered the type of proof necessary to show racial gerrymandering under Shaw. Miller involved a Georgia congressional districting plan with three majority-black districts; the plan was adopted after the Justice Department refused to preclear, under the Voting Rights Act, two earlier plans that each contained only two majority-black districts. The new Eleventh District, which joined metropolitan black neighborhoods together with poor black coastal areas 260 miles away, was challenged as a racial gerrymander; the district court agreed, holding that evidence of the Georgia Legislature's purpose, as well as the district's irregular borders, showed that race was the overriding and predominant force in the districting determination. Held, affirmed.

(a) A threshold showing of bizarreness is not required when a district is challenged on the ground of racial gerrymandering. "Shape is relevant not because bizarreness is a necessary element of the constitutional wrong or a threshold requirement of proof, but because it may be persuasive circumstantial evidence that race for its own sake, and not other districting principles, was the legislature's dominant and controlling rationale in drawing its district lines. The logical implication, as courts applying Shaw have recognized, is that parties may rely on evidence other than bizarreness to establish race-based districting." (115 S.Ct. 2486, 132 L.Ed.2d 777.)

(b) "The distinction between being aware of racial considerations and being motivated by them may be difficult to make. This evidentiary difficulty, together with the sensitive nature of redistricting and the presumption of good faith that must be accorded legislative enactments, requires courts to exercise extraordinary caution in adjudicating claims that a state has drawn district lines on the basis of race. The plaintiff's burden is to show, either through circumstantial evidence of a district's shape and demographics or more direct evidence going to legislative purpose, that race was the predominant factor motivating the legislature's decision to place a significant number of voters within or without a particular district. To make this showing, a plaintiff must prove that the legislature subordinated traditional race-neutral districting principles, including but not limited to compactness, contiguity, respect for political subdivisions or communities defined by actual shared interests, to racial considerations." (115 S.Ct. 2488, 132 L.Ed.2d 779, 780.)

(c) The district court's finding that race was the predominant factor motivating the Eleventh District's drawing was not clearly erroneous. In addition to evidence of the district's shape and racial demographics, there was evidence that the Georgia Legislature was motivated by an overriding desire to create a third majority-black district in order to comply with the Justice Department's maximization demands. (115 S.Ct. 2488, 2489, 132 L.Ed.2d 780.)

(d) Because race was the predominant factor in drawing the Eleventh District, Georgia's redistricting plan is subject to strict scrutiny and can be upheld only if it is narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling interest. (115 S.Ct. 2490, 132 L.Ed.2d 782.) There is a significant state interest in eradicating the effects of past racial discrimination, but Georgia does not argue that as its motive. Georgia's true interest was to satisfy the Justice Department's preclearance demands. But compliance with federal antidiscrimination laws cannot justify race-based districting where, as here, the challenged plan is not reasonably necessary under those laws. (115 S.Ct. 2490, 2491, 132 L.Ed.2d 782, 783.) (See United States v. Hays (1995) 515 U.S. 737, 115 S.Ct. 2431, 132 L.Ed.2d 635 [state residents living in one congressional district lacked standing to raise racial gerrymandering claim with respect to different congressional district]; Shaw v. Hunt (1996) 517

Vera* (1996) 517 U.S. 952, 116 S.Ct. 1941, 135 L.Ed.2d 248 [Texas redistricting plan that created three minority districts violated Fourteenth Amendment because districts were not narrowly tailored to serve compelling state interest]; 109 Harv. Rev. 915 [hybrid nature of political rights].)

(3) Burden of Proof. In Easley v. Cromartie (2001) 532 U.S. 234, 121 S.Ct. 1452, 149 L.Ed.2d 430, the Court addressed the burden of proving that racial considerations are "dominant and controlling," as required by Miller. Where majority-minority districts "are at issue and where racial identification correlates highly with political affiliation, the party attacking the legislatively drawn boundaries must show at the least that the legislature could have achieved its legitimate political objectives in alternate ways that are comparably consistent with traditional districting principles. That party must also show that those districting alternatives would have brought about significantly greater racial balance." (121 S.Ct. 1466, 149 L.Ed.2d 453.) This burden was not met here. (121 S.Ct. 1466, 149 L.Ed.2d 453.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 386 [Easley]; 29 Hastings Const. L. Q. 61 [Colorblind Redistricting: Racial Proxies as a Solution to the Court's Voting Rights Act Quandary].)

V. SUFFRAGE

G. Reapportionment.

2. Discriminatory Weighted Voting.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 297

[§ 297] Discriminatory Weighted Voting.

Another unprecedented step was taken in Gray v. Sanders (1963) 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821, which invalidated county unit voting in primary elections. Under Georgia law, candidates for Senator and Governor in statewide primaries were chosen on a system under which the winner of the majority of popular votes in a particular county carried the county and received its two votes for the nomination. The result was a heavily weighted rural vote (e.g., one unit vote in E County represented 938 residents, while one in F County represented 92,721 residents). An action for an injunction and declaratory relief was brought by a qualified voter. At the time of the hearing in the three-judge federal district court, Georgia amended the statutes to establish a "bracket system," which gave additional unit votes to larger counties, based on certain multiples of increased population. The district court held that the modified system was insufficient to meet constitutional objections, although the decision did not completely outlaw any weighting of votes. After the decision, the state Democratic Committee voted to hold the 1962 primary election on a popular basis.

The Supreme Court held preliminarily that the practice of the Democratic Party was state action under United States v. Classic (1941) 313 U.S. 299, 61 S.Ct. 1031, 85 L.Ed. 1368, and Smith v. Allwright (1944) 321 U.S. 649, 64 S.Ct. 757, 88 L.Ed. 987, that the voter, whose vote was impaired, had standing to sue under Baker v. Carr (1962) 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, supra, §294; and that the proceeding was not rendered moot by the 1962 change, for the unit law was still in effect and could be followed in future elections. (83 S.Ct. 805, 806, 9 L.Ed.2d 827.) On the merits, the court reasoned as follows:

(a) The right of a state to choose one house of a bicameral legislature without regard to population is not questioned. (83 S.Ct. 806, 9 L.Ed.2d 828.) (But see infra, §299, for rejection of this view.)

(b) The method of the electoral college, which the district court thought permissible in justifying equivalent weighting of votes, is improper in a statewide election in a state. (83 S.Ct. 807, 9 L.Ed.2d 829.)

(c) States can within limits (not defined) specify qualifications of voters in both state and federal elections, e.g., by literacy tests. But they cannot abridge the voting right of a Black or a woman (Fifteenth, Nineteenth Amendments), and a system that weighted the white or male vote more heavily than the black or female would be unconstitutional. (83 S.Ct. 808, 9 L.Ed.2d 829.) The same principle applies to favoring the rural over the urban vote. "How then can one person be given twice or 10 times the voting power of another person in a statewide election merely because he lives in a rural area or because he lives in the smallest rural county? Once the geographical unit for which a representative is to be chosen is designated, all who participate in the election are to have an equal vote--whatever their race, whatever their sex, whatever their occupation, whatever their income, and wherever their home may be in that geographical unit." (83 S.Ct. 808, 9 L.Ed.2d 829.)

(d) The only weighting of votes sanctioned by the Constitution concerns matters of representation (such as allocation of senators irrespective of population) and the constitutionally established electoral college for choice of a President. In elections, once the class of eligible voters is determined, the Constitution requires equality of voting power--"one person, one vote." (83 S.Ct. 809, 9 L.Ed.2d 830.) (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 132; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1228; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1182.)

In Fortson v. Morris (1966) 385 U.S. 231, 87 S.Ct. 446, 17 L.Ed.2d 330, a 5-4 opinion, the majority confined the holding of Gray v. Sanders to voters' rights. In Georgia's 1966 election for Governor, none of the three candidates received a majority. The General Assembly, pursuant to a state constitutional directive, elected the Governor from the two receiving the highest votes. Held, a state may elect a Governor initially by a vote of the Legislature, and it may use this method as an alternative to a costly reelection. (87 S.Ct. 448, 17 L.Ed.2d 333.)

3. Congressional Districts.

[§ 298] Congressional Districts.

(1) In General. Wesberry v. Sanders (1964) 376 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 526, 11 L.Ed.2d 481, interpreted the crucial provision of Article I, §2, of the federal Constitution: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen ... by the People of the several states." While it may not be possible to draw congressional districts with mathematical precision, the plain objective of the Constitution is that there must be equal representation for equal numbers of people in the House. Accordingly, Georgia's apportionment of districts was held invalid on a showing that the Fifth District had only one Congressman, while others, with much less population, also had one Congressman each. (84 S.Ct. 535, 11 L.Ed.2d 492.) Three justices dissented, taking the position that the constitutional provision gives the courts no mandate to require that congressional districts be equal in population. (84 S.Ct. 536, 11 L.Ed.2d 494.) (See 78 Harv. L. Rev. 244; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 1228; 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 67; on Congressional apportionment of number of seats allowed to each state, see United States Dept. of Commerce v. Montana (1992) 503 U.S. 442, 112 S.Ct. 1415, 1429, 118 L.Ed.2d 87, 105 [discussing history, various apportionment methods, and difficulties in achieving mathematical equality; Congress has "measure of discretion that is broader than that accorded to the States in the much easier task of determining district sizes within state borders"].)

Two subsequent decisions held to the tight line laid down in Wesberry v. Sanders:

In Kirkpatrick v. Preisler (1969) 394 U.S. 526, 89 S.Ct. 1225, 22 L.Ed.2d 519, a Missouri statute created districts that were unequal. The most populous district was 3.13% above the mathematical ideal, and the least populous 2.83% below. The district court found that the legislature had not in fact relied on the census figures, and had rejected a plan that provided for smaller variances. Missouri argued that the variances were so small as to be considered de minimis, and hence that they met the "as nearly as practicable" standard of Wesberry, and that there were other justifications for the variances, including representation of distinct interest groups, integrity of county lines, compactness of districts, population trends, high proportion of military personnel and other nonvoters in some districts, and political realities of "legislative interplay." Held, the district court's refusal to approve the statute was proper.

(a) No fixed variance is de minimis. The "as nearly as practicable" approach requires "a good faith effort to achieve precise mathematical equality." (89 S.Ct. 1228, 22 L.Ed.2d 524.) Missouri did not make this effort.

(b) The other justifications were unacceptable: (1) Specific interest orientations are "antithetical" to the basic premises of equal representation. (2) "Legislative interplay," i.e., compromise resulting from partisan politics, cannot justify improper apportionment; and the same is true of avoidance of fragmenting political subdivisions--this also is merely "practical politics." (3) Taking a count of nonvoters was haphazard--no attempt was made to ascertain the number of eligible voters and apportion accordingly. (4) Anticipated population shifts must be documented in a scientific, not an ad hoc manner. (5) The attempt to ensure geographically compact districts, based solely on the appearance of the map, cannot justify variances. (See Karcher v. Daggett (1983) 462 U.S. 725, 103 S.Ct. 2653, 77 L.Ed.2d 133 [following Kirkpatrick]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 135 [Karcher].)

In Wells v. Rockefeller (1969) 394 U.S. 542, 89 S.Ct. 1234, 22 L.Ed.2d 535, the heart of the redistricting scheme was to treat seven sections of the state as homogeneous regions, dividing each region into districts of virtually identical population. Thirty-one districts were constructed on that principle; the 10 remaining were composed of grouping of whole counties. Held, this was not a good faith effort to achieve precise mathematical equality. It created equal districts only within each of "seven sub-states," to keep regions with distinct interests intact. To accept the scheme would permit groups of districts with defined interest orientations to be over-represented at the expense of districts with different interest orientations. "Equality of population among districts in a sub-state is not a justification for inequality among all the districts in the State." (89 S.Ct. 1237, 22 L.Ed.2d 539.)

(2) California Constitutional Provision. Cal.Const., Art. XXI, §1, specifies that, in the year after the national census is taken at the beginning of each decade, boundary lines for senatorial, assembly, and congressional districts must be adjusted so that each district of a particular type is "reasonably equal." (Cal.Const., Art. XXI, §1(b).) Every district must be contiguous. (Cal.Const., Art. XXI, §1(c).) The geographical integrity of cities, counties, and geographic regions must "be respected to the extent possible without violating" other constitutional mandates. (Cal.Const., Art. XXI, §1(e).) (See 10 San Diego L. Rev. 757 [California reapportionment problems].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See 79 So. Cal. L. Rev. 165 [evaluating California's proposed redistricting commission]. (2) California Constitutional Provision. An amendment to Cal. Const., Art. XXI, was adopted by the voters at the November 2008, general election. The redistricting of senatorial, assembly, and congressional districts must be performed by an independent Citizens Redistricting Commission made up of five Republicans, five Democrats, and four persons not affiliated with either major party. (Cal. Const., Art. XXI, §2, added in 2008.) The new redistricting provisions are implemented by Govt.C. 8251 et seq., added in 2008. The Commission must draw the districts based on strict, nonpartisan rules designed to ensure fair representation, including an open hearing process for public input. (See Govt.C. 8253.)

G. Reapportionment.

4. State Legislative Districts.

a. Reynolds v. Sims.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 299

[§ 299] Reynolds v. Sims.

In Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, the requirement of equality was extended to districting for both houses of a state legislature. Alabama voters of Jefferson County brought a class suit in the federal district court. They showed that the constitutional and legislative provisions on apportionment were based on a 1900 federal census, and the Legislature had consistently failed to reapportion. The district court took judicial notice of the essential facts of nonreapportionment, and withheld immediate orders pending action by the Alabama Legislature. But the plans proposed, like the original, kept the basic idea of one senator for each senatorial district, regardless of population, and also kept the House of Representatives with unequal voting power (ratios of up to 41-1 in Senate, 16-1 in House). The district court found the plans unconstitutional, ordered a temporary reapportionment plan, and retained jurisdiction to hear plaintiff's application for an injunction until the provisionally reapportioned Legislature had an opportunity to provide for true reapportionment in 1965. Held, affirmed, in an exhaustive opinion.

(a) The constitutional right to vote. The federal Constitution protects the right of all qualified citizens to vote in state as well as federal elections, and the right is denied by dilution of the weight of a vote. (84 S.Ct. 1378, 12 L.Ed.2d 523.)

(b) Principles established by prior reapportionment cases. (1) Baker v. Carr (1962) 369 U.S. 186, 82 S.Ct. 691, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, supra, §294, held that the Equal Protection Clause provides standards to be applied by lower courts. (84 S.Ct. 1379, 12 L.Ed.2d 524.) (2) Gray v. Sanders (1963) 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821, supra, §297, and Wesberry v. Sanders (1964) 376 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 526, 11 L.Ed.2d 481, supra, §298, though dealing with different problems, established the basic principle of equality of voters within a state. (84 S.Ct. 1381, 12 L.Ed.2d 526.)

(c) Basic consideration controlling instant case. Voting rights are individual and personal; legislators represent people, not areas or economic interests. Hence, "each and every citizen has an inalienable right to full and effective participation in the political processes of his State's legislative bodies. Most citizens can achieve this participation only as qualified voters through the election of legislators to represent them. Full and effective participation by all citizens in state government requires, therefore, that each citizen has an equally effective voice in the election of members of his state legislature. Modern and viable state government needs, and the Constitution demands, no less." (84 S.Ct. 1383, 12 L.Ed.2d 529.)

(d) The constitutional principle. "We hold that as a basic constitutional standard, the Equal Protection Clause requires that the seats in both houses of a bicameral state legislature must be apportioned on a population basis. Simply stated, an individual's right to vote for state legislators is unconstitutionally impaired when its weight is in a substantial fashion diluted when compared with votes of citizens living in other parts of the State." (84 S.Ct. 1385, 12 L.Ed.2d 531.)

(e) Rejection of the federal analogy. The system of the two federal houses is "ingrained in our Constitution, as part of the law of the land. It is one conceived out of compromise and concession indispensable to the establishment of our federal republic." (84 S.Ct. 1388, 12 L.Ed.2d 534.)

(f) The equality principle applies to a bicameral legislature. The Equal Protection Clause necessarily requires that both houses be apportioned on a population basis; otherwise the right would be effectively thwarted. "[W]e can perceive no constitutional difference, with respect to the geographical distribution of state legislative representation, between the two houses of a bicameral state legislature." (84 S.Ct. 1389, 12 L.Ed.2d 536.) The concept of bicameralism is not rendered anachronistic and meaningless by this holding. A prime reason for bicameralism today is to insure mature and deliberate consideration of measures. Although apportionment will be the same, there may be differences in the composition of the two bodies: different constituencies, single or multimember districts, terms of different length, numerical size of the bodies, etc. (84 S.Ct. 1389, 12 L.Ed.2d 536.)

(g) Standards to be worked out by lower courts. Periodic revision--usually decennial reapportionment--is a rational approach; if accomplished with less frequency, it is constitutionally suspect. (84 S.Ct. 1393, 12 L.Ed.2d 541.) And the federal district court acted with proper judicial restraint, in ordering its own temporary plan into effect for current elections, and in retaining jurisdiction to hear the matter of a final injunction. (84 S.Ct. 1394, 12 L.Ed.2d 541.)

The dissenting opinion vigorously attacks the majority's historical analysis and its declaration of constitutional principles, arguing that the decision places basic aspects of state political systems under "pervasive overlordship of the federal judiciary" (84 S.Ct. 1396, 12 L.Ed.2d 543); that no principle of logic or politics establishes its exclusion of factors formerly deemed proper in establishing districts (84 S.Ct. 1413, 12 L.Ed.2d 562); that the problems are not amenable to the development of fixed standards; that judicial entry into this realm "is profoundly ill-advised and constitutionally impermissible", and that the validity of our political system is weakened by reliance on the judiciary for political reform (84 S.Ct. 1414, 12 L.Ed.2d 563).

b. Subsequent United States Supreme Court Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 300

[§ 300] Subsequent United States Supreme Court Decisions.

In Fortson v. Dorsey (1965) 379 U.S. 433, 85 S.Ct. 498, 13 L.Ed.2d 401, the challenge was to Georgia's attempt to solve its problem by a constitutional amendment authorizing legislative creation of senatorial districts as a unit. The 1962 reapportionment statute apportioned the 54 seats among the 159 counties, as follows: (a) 33 senatorial districts were made up of one to eight counties each, voters in these districts to elect senators by a district-wide vote; (b) 21 districts were allotted in groups of from two to seven among the seven most populous counties, voters to join with those of the other districts of the counties in county-wide votes. Held, this complies with Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, supra, §299. Equal protection does not necessarily require formation of single-member districts, and the Georgia plan resulted in "substantial equality of population" among the 54 districts. The contention that county-wide voting in multidistrict counties could, as a matter of mathematics, result in nullification of the unanimous choice of the voters of a district, was rejected as ignoring practical realities. (85 S.Ct. 500, 13 L.Ed.2d 404.)

In WMCA v. Lomenzo (1964) 377 U.S. 633, 84 S.Ct. 1418, 12 L.Ed.2d 568, the New York legislative apportionment was held unconstitutional. An analysis of the state Constitution, statutes, and practice disclosed formulae that "demonstrably include a built-in bias against voters living in the State's more populous counties." (84 S.Ct. 1428, 12 L.Ed.2d 580.) A strong dissent attacked the majority holding, stating that the Court's view that each state's bicameral electoral constituencies must be apportioned on a population basis is "woefully wrong." It was not the colonial system, the national government system, the practice of states before the Fourteenth Amendment, or the practice of states today. (84 S.Ct. 1430, 12 L.Ed.2d 582.)

The special problem of Hawaii was considered in Burns v. Richardson (1966) 384 U.S. 73, 86 S.Ct. 1286, 16 L.Ed.2d 376. Under the Hawaiian Constitution, three small counties elected 15 state senators; the fourth, with 79% of the total population, elected only 10, but that county had 36 of 51 seats in the lower House, apportioned on the basis of registered voters. On order of the federal district court, the Legislature submitted an interim plan allocating to the most populous county 19 of the 25 senatorial seats on the basis of registered voters, to be elected from multimember districts. Held, the interim plan was valid.

(a) Multimember districts are not inherently unconstitutional; they are invalid only if the apportionment would minimize or cancel out the voting strength of racial or political elements of the population. (86 S.Ct. 1294, 16 L.Ed.2d 388.)

(b) The registered voter basis is, under proper circumstances, a valid measure. The Equal Protection Clause does not require the use of total population figures derived from the federal census; e.g., the states need not include aliens, transients, or short-term or temporary residents. (86 S.Ct. 1296, 16 L.Ed.2d 390.)

(c) The use of registered or actual voters as a basis is susceptible of improper influences by those in political power, and to sudden and substantial fluctuations caused by such fortuitous factors as a peculiarly controversial election issue or a particularly popular candidate. (86 S.Ct. 1297, 16 L.Ed.2d 391.) However, total population figures would also constitute a distorted reflection of the distribution of state citizenry, for tourists and the military are largely confined to particular areas of Oahu. Hence, a finding that registered-voter distribution does not approximate total population distribution is insufficient to establish constitutional deficiency. "It is enough if it appears that the distribution of registered voters approximates distribution of state citizens or another permissible population base." (86 S.Ct. 1298, 16 L.Ed.2d 392.)

(d) "We are not to be understood as deciding that the validity of the registered voters basis as a measure has been established for all time or circumstances . . . Use of presidential election year figures might both assure a high level of participation and reduce the likelihood that varying degrees of local interest in the outcome of the election would produce different patterns of political activity over the State. Other measures, such as a system of permanent personal registration, might also contribute to the stability and accuracy of the registered voters figure as an apportionment basis. Future litigation may reveal infirmities, temporary or permanent, not established by the present record." (86 S.Ct. 1299, 16 L.Ed.2d 393.) (For cases upholding multimember districts, see Whitcomb v. Chavis (1971) 403 U.S. 124, 91 S.Ct. 1858, 29 L.Ed.2d 363; Mahan v. Howell (1973) 410 U.S. 315, 93 S.Ct. 979, 35 L.Ed.2d 320; Georgia v. United States (1973) 411 U.S. 526, 93 S.Ct. 1702, 36 L.Ed.2d 472; Gaffney v. Cummings (1973) 412 U.S. 735, 93 S.Ct. 2321, 37 L.Ed.2d 298; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 135 [Whitcomb v. Chavis]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 85 [Mahan v. Howell]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 85 [Gaffney v. Cummings]; on compensatory apportionment, see 25 Stanf. L. Rev. 84.)

Many other decisions have, on various grounds, held apportionment plans invalid. (See Maryland Committee for Fair Representation v. Tawes (1964) 377 U.S. 656, 84 S.Ct. 1429, 12 L.Ed.2d 595 [Maryland]; Davis v. Mann (1964) 377 U.S. 678, 84 S.Ct. 1441, 12 L.Ed.2d 609 [Virginia]; *Roman v. Other cases have upheld apportionment plans. (See Mobile v. Bolden (1980) 446 U.S. 55, 100 S.Ct. 1490, 64 L.Ed.2d 47, supra, §229 [city's system of government by at-large, multimember commission upheld]; *Brown v. V. SUFFRAGE

G. Reapportionment.

4. State Legislative Districts.

c. California Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 301

[§ 301] California Decisions.

(1) Invalidity of Former Districts. Shortly after the rendition of the U.S. Supreme Court decisions requiring substantial equality in voting districts (see supra, §§299, 300), the California legislative districting was challenged in the federal district court and the California Supreme Court. The federal district court directed reapportionment of Senate districts by July 1, 1965 (see 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 726), but the California Supreme Court then took jurisdiction and made its own order directing action. (Silver v. Brown (1965) 63 C.2d 270, 46 C.R. 308, 405 P.2d 132.) (For California constitutional provision mandating adjustment of district boundaries after each national census, see Cal.Const., Art. XXI, §1, supra, §298.)

In Silver v. Brown, petitioners sought mandamus to compel the Governor, Secretary of State, and members of the Senate and Assembly to reapportion districts in compliance with the Equal Protection Clause. The court reviewed the legislative and judicial history of this controversy and set forth definitive standards for legislative action, with an alternative plan of its own.

(a) Invalidity of present districting. The federal district court decision, affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court without opinion, conclusively determined the invalidity of the existing apportionment of Senate districts. (63 C.2d 275.) The apportionment of Assembly districts is likewise invalid; of the 80, 24 depart from the ideal by more than 15%, and a minority of 44.83% of the voters could elect a majority of assembly members. (63 C.2d 276.) And (former) Cal. Const., Art. IV, §6, cannot be wholly reconciled with the equality requirement (e.g., in its prohibitions against more than one Senate district in a county and against certain joinder of counties). Hence, some of its provisions must be disregarded. (63 C.2d 279.)

(b) Judicial declaration of standards. Although the U.S. Supreme Court has not demanded rigid mathematical equality, its decisions do require substantial equality. Hence, "we deem it only fair to the Legislature to set forth limits within which an apportionment would at least carry a strong presumption of validity under the equal protection clause and beyond which it would be seriously suspected. Those limits are that no district depart from the ideal size by more than 15 per cent and that a majority of the members of each house be elected by the voters of districts containing at least 48 per cent of the total population." (63 C.2d 279.)

(c) Legislative implementation. "The makeup and apportionment of the Legislature involve peculiarly political questions that are not appropriate for this court to decide. They are far better entrusted to the collective political wisdom of the Legislature subject to the power of initiative and referendum reserved to the people. Our function under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court is to assure adherence to the requirements of the equal protection clause, not to resolve the purely political questions also inherent in legislative apportionment." (63 C.2d 280.)

(d) Reservation of jurisdiction. The court set its deadline of December 9, 1965, and reserved jurisdiction (1) to review reapportionment legislation, and (2) in the event of failure to enact valid legislation, to order into effect, for a 2-year period, its own temporary plan, set forth in an Appendix to the opinion. (63 C.2d 282, 283.)

In a later opinion, Silver v. Brown (1966) 63 C.2d 841, 48 C.R. 609, 409 P.2d 689, the 1965 reapportionment of the Senate and Assembly was upheld. (See 40 So. Cal. L. Rev. 646 [criticizing Silver cases and proposing new reapportionment section for California Constitution].)

(2) Reapportionment Commission and Court Order To Reapportion. Former Cal.Const., Art. IV, §6, adopted in 1926, provided for legislative reapportionment and for the creation of a "Reapportionment Commission" of designated state officers in the event of failure of the Legislature to act. The Legislature did act, and, although its reapportionment was eventually held invalid, the Commission was not required to act. (See Yorty v. Anderson (1963) 60 C.2d 312, 33 C.R. 97, 384 P.2d 417.)

In 1971, the Legislature passed reapportionment bills which the Governor vetoed. The Commission then asserted authority to reapportion. In Legislature v. Reinecke (1972) 6 C.3d 595, 99 C.R. 481, 492 P.2d 385, the court held that the Commission had no power to act, and that the only proper course was to adopt the legislative plan as the court's plan for the imminent 1972 elections. But jurisdiction was retained to draft a new reapportionment if the Legislature did not act by the close of its 1972 regular session. (6 C.3d 603.) (See Legislature v. Reinecke (1972) 7 C.3d 92, 101 C.R. 552, 496 P.2d 464 [at request of state Senate, court will refrain from exercising jurisdiction if Legislature in 1972 enacts valid statutes]; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 605.)

(3) Court Reapportionment in 1973. The 1972 Legislature did not enact reapportionment statutes, and the court appointed special masters to undertake a study and make a recommendation to the court. In 1973, while the study was in progress, the Legislature did adopt statutes but these were vetoed by the Governor. The Masters' Report was filed in August 1973, briefs and communications from various interested groups were received, and in Legislature v. Reinecke (1973) 10 C.3d 396, 110 C.R. 718, 516 P.2d 6, the court approved the Report by ordering judgment final forthwith. The opinion reviews in summary form the goal of the Masters, the criteria used by them, the principal objections to their reapportionment plan, and their resolution of conflicts among the criteria. The entire Report is set forth in a 42-page Appendix. (10 C.3d 408.)

(a) Goal sought. "[I]nnumerable districts ideal for particular communities can be constructed if each is considered in isolation but when the entire state is divided into a specified number of districts, that which may appear ideal for one place or another must be subordinated to the goal of fair and reasonable reapportionment of the whole state. That is the goal sought and upon which the recommendations to the Court are based." (10 C.3d 403.)

(b) Criteria used. "(1) The districts in each plan should be equal in population, with strict equality in the case of congressional districts and reasonable equality in the case of legislative districts. (2) The territory included within a district should be contiguous and compact. (3) Insofar as practical, counties and cities should be maintained intact. (4) Insofar as possible, the integrity of the state's basic geographical regions should be preserved. (5) The community of interests of the population of an area should be considered in determining whether the area should be included within or excluded from a proposed district so that all of the citizens of the district may be represented reasonably, fairly and effectively. (6) State senatorial districts should be formed by combining adjacent assembly districts, and, to the degree practicable, assembly district boundaries should be used as congressional district boundaries. (7) The basis for reapportionment should be the 1970 census, and in counties where census tracts exist, such tracts should be used as the basic unit for district formation." (10 C.3d 402.) (For detailed discussion and citation of authorities, see Appendix, 10 C.3d 410.)

(c) Rejection of criterion favoring incumbents. Although there are values in maintaining relationships between incumbents and their constituencies, these should not call for design of district boundaries to preserve the status quo and thereby promote the reelection of incumbents; in nearly all cases "incumbent-neutral districting" will permit an incumbent to seek reelection in a new district that will contain a substantial part of his or her former constituency. (10 C.3d 403.)

(d) Staggered terms. The state Senate is constitutionally organized with 40 4-year terms, 20 to begin every 2 years. Adherence to this staggered term arrangement following reapportionment is not unconstitutionally discriminatory. (10 C.3d 406.)

(e) Durational residence requirements are inapplicable. Cal.Const. Art. IV, §2(c), imposes a 1-year district residence requirement for candidates for the Legislature. This provision contemplates that districts will be established at least a year before the election, and, since this will not be true when the reapportionment plan goes into effect, the constitutional provision by its own terms is inapplicable. Hence, a candidate will be eligible if he or she becomes a resident of the district by January 28, 1974 (the first day for filing the declaration of intention under former Elec.C. 25500, now Elec.C. 8022). (10 C.3d 406.)

(4) Court Reapportionment in 1981. The 1981 reapportionment statutes were the subject of elaborate majority and dissenting opinions in Assembly of Calif. v. Deukmejian (1982) 30 C.3d 638, 180 C.R. 297, 639 P.2d 939.

(5) Court Reapportionment in 1991. In Wilson v. Eu (1991) 54 C.3d 471, 286 C.R. 280, 816 P.2d 1306, petitioner, Governor of California, brought mandamus proceedings against respondent Secretary of State, to resolve the impasse created by the failure of the Legislature to pass legislative and congressional reapportionment bills acceptable to him in time for the 1992 primary and general elections. The Supreme Court issued the writ, declaring that "it is now incumbent on this court to exercise its original jurisdiction and arrange for the drafting and adoption of appropriate reapportionment plans." (54 C.3d 472.) The opinion provides for the appointment of three Special Masters authorized (a) to employ counsel, experts, and other necessary personnel, (b) to hold public hearings on proposed plans of reapportionment, and thereafter (c) to file their report and recommendations to the court no later than November 29, 1991. (54 C.3d 473.) "If at any time during these proceedings congressional and legislative reapportionment plans are validly enacted, this court will entertain an application to dismiss these proceedings." (54 C.3d 474.)

The recommendations of the Special Masters were adopted by the Supreme Court in Wilson v. Eu (1992) 1 C.4th 707, 4 C.R.2d 379, 823 P.2d 545. The majority opinion describes the procedure followed in public hearings leading to the Report and Recommendations (1 C.4th 713), and reviews some of the highlights of the Report (1 C.4th 714). An Appendix sets forth the Report and Recommendations. (1 C.4th 741.)

The opinion concludes: "We specifically endorse the Masters' analyses and recommendations regarding the proper weight and application of the various reapportionment criteria. Although we likewise approve the Masters' interpretation and application of the Voting Rights Act, we acknowledge that any questions arising thereunder are essentially ones of federal law, and that any definitive answers to these complex questions ultimately must be provided by the United States Supreme Court. We are satisfied that, by reason of the Masters' successful efforts to maximize the actual and potential voting strength of all geographically compact minority groups of significant voting age population, a federal Voting Rights Act challenge would lack merit." (1 C.4th 729.)

(6) (New) Court Reapportionment in 2001. "[A] reapportionment plan enacted by the Legislature and approved by the Governor is entitled to significant judicial deference." Although the California Constitution calls for respecting the geographical integrity of cities and counties, this standard is flexible, and the dictates of federal principles of equal protection and the Voting Rights Act must be considered. (Nadler v. Schwarzenegger (2006) 137 C.A.4th 1327, 1337, 1339, 1344, 41 C.R.3d 92 [in challenging reapportionment plan, plaintiff has burden of demonstrating that adopted plan poses total and fatal conflict with applicable constitutional provisions; Legislature may properly choose plan that minimizes chance of challenge based on Voting Rights Act].)

(7) (New) California Constitutional Provision. Under Cal. Const., Art. XXI, as amended in 2008, the redistricting of state legislative districts must be performed by an independent Citizens Redistricting Commission made up of an equal number of Republicans and Democrats, with participation of independent voters. (See Supp., supra, §298.)

5. County Supervisorial Districts.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 302

[§ 302] County Supervisorial Districts.

Boundaries of county supervisorial districts must be adjusted following each decennial federal census to make the districts nearly equal in population, and considering other factors such as topography, contiguity, and community of interests. (Elec.C. 21500; see Elec.C. 21500.1 [board must hold at least one public hearing on any proposed adjustment].) In several cases, however, it was found that gross inequalities were present and that the boards refused to take steps to redistrict. Accordingly, writs of mandamus issued, directing redistricting, with reserved jurisdiction in the event of noncompliance within a reasonable time. (See Griffin v. Board of Supervisors of Monterey County (1963) 60 C.2d 318, 320, 33 C.R. 101, 384 P.2d 421 [Monterey County]; Henderson v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 883, 37 C.R. 438, 390 P.2d 206 [Marin County; memorandum decision]; Miller v. Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County (1964) 61 C.2d 885, 37 C.R. 440, 390 P.2d 208 [Santa Clara County; memorandum decision]; for examples of redistricting plans held valid, see Griffin v. Board of Supervisors of Monterey County (1964) 60 C.2d 751, 36 C.R. 616, 388 P.2d 888 [Monterey County redistricting upheld]; Griswold v. San Diego (1973) 32 C.A.3d 56, 107 C.R. 845.)

In Miller v. Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County (1965) 63 C.2d 343, 46 C.R. 617, 405 P.2d 857, the court, reviewing the Santa Clara redistricting under its reserved jurisdiction, found that too great a disparity still existed, and directed reapportionment that would eliminate any district with more than 23% or less than 17% of the overall population. The same general standards, and similar methods of implementation, apply to legislative and local reapportionment: "Although we are not here dealing with voting apportionment at the level of the state legislature ... no reason appears why equal protection assures representative voting to the electors of the State of California as a whole but not of the County of Santa Clara." (63 C.2d 348.) (See 4 Santa Clara Lawyer 201 [Miller].)

Avery v. Midland County, Texas (1968) 390 U.S. 474, 88 S.Ct. 1114, 20 L.Ed.2d 45, applied the one man-one vote principle of Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, supra, §299, to the election of local government officials. "[I]t is now beyond question that a state's political subdivisions must comply with the Fourteenth Amendment." (88 S.Ct. 1118, 20 L.Ed.2d 49.) (See Abate v. Mundt (1971) 403 U.S. 182, 91 S.Ct. 1904, 29 L.Ed.2d 399 [plan upheld]; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 118 [Avery]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 146 [Abate]; 23 Hastings L. G. Reapportionment.

6. City Council Districts.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 303

[§ 303] City Council Districts.

In Calderon v. Los Angeles (1971) 4 C.3d 251, 93 C.R. 361, 481 P.2d 489, the court nullified a Los Angeles city charter provision for 15 city council districts based on the number of voters rather than people.

(a) One man-one vote principle. The language of Supreme Court decisions has not been precise: inhabitant, citizen, resident, and voter have been used interchangeably. (4 C.3d 255.) And cases use population and voter standards as similar when they are quite distinct. But in Burns v. Richardson (1966) 384 U.S. 73, 86 S.Ct. 1286, 16 L.Ed.2d 376, supra, §300, the court recognized the distinction, and laid down the principle that a voter standard is valid only if it produces a distribution of legislators not substantially different from that which would have resulted from a population standard. (4 C.3d 256.)

(b) Principle applies to city councils. The one man-one vote principle and the Burns rule apply to apportionment of voting districts for council seats. (4 C.3d 257.) And, in addition to the controlling decisions, considerations of policy favor this result. Persons who may not be voters are nonetheless interested in having representatives to communicate with (4 C.3d 259), and a showing was made of severe underrepresentation of districts with heavy concentrations of Blacks and Mexican-Americans (4 C.3d 260).

(c) Validity of a properly devised voter-based apportionment. The Burns factors are guidelines. (1) Voter registration must show a significant correlation to population distribution, (2) reapportionment must take place frequently, (3) registration statistics from presidential elections should be used to reduce the likelihood of fluctuations in local interest and erratic patterns of political activity, and (4) a system of permanent personal registration must be introduced. (4 C.3d 265.)

(d) Allowable deviation. The charter permits districts to deviate by not more than 10%. Early decisions did not insist on mathematical exactness, but "in recent years the Supreme Court has shown a steadfast determination to tolerate progressively smaller deviations from numerical equality." (4 C.3d 266, citing Kirkpatrick v. Preisler (1969) 394 U.S. 526, 89 S.Ct. 1225, 22 L.Ed.2d 519, supra, §298 [invalidating congressional districting with 3.13% above and 3.84% below], and Wells v. Rockefeller (1969) 394 U.S. 542, 89 S.Ct. 1234, 22 L.Ed.2d 535, supra, §298 [rejecting 6% variance].) To choose a mathematical cutoff point is not only difficult, but encourages draftsmen to employ the acceptable variations as a starting point, instead of striving for equality. (4 C.3d 269.) Here, as a result of the permitted

10% variation, at least five of the 15 districts deviate nearly 5 to 8%. (4 C.3d 270.) The city must therefore abandon the mathematical yardstick; but whether it substitutes its former "as nearly as practicable" standard or merely deletes numerical reference is in its discretion. It need only apportion to produce districts of "substantially equal" population. If it does, "it will satisfy the constitutional imperative, regardless of the precise wording of its charter." (4 C.3d 271.)

(e) Conclusion. "In summary, we hold that on the record before us, the judgment on the pleadings in favor of the City cannot be sustained for two reasons: first, the registered voter apportionment standard appears constitutionally faulty in view of the substantial variance between population and registered voters on a per-district basis; and second, the 10 percent provision authorizes too great a deviation from equality." (4 C.3d 271.) (See Elec.C. 21620 [where governing body of chartered city is nominated by districts, these must be of nearly equal population]; Board of Estimate of New York v. Morris (1989) 489 U.S. 688, 109 S.Ct. 1433, 1436, 1443, 103 L.Ed.2d 717, 725, 733 [Board of Estimate, composed of three citywide members with two votes each and elected presidents of five city boroughs with widely disparate populations, violates equal protection; city showed no justification for 78% deviation]; Castorena v. Los Angeles (1973) 34 C.A.3d 901, 110 C.R. 569 [valid ordinance adopted in response to Calderon]; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 793 [Calderon]; 23 *Hastings L. V. SUFFRAGE

H. Restricted Eligibility in Local Elections.

1. School District Elections.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 304

[§ 304] School District Elections.

In Sailors v. Board of Education of Kent County (1967) 387 U.S. 105, 87 S.Ct. 1549, 1552, 18 L.Ed.2d 650, 653, a county school board was chosen by delegates from local boards. The Court, assuming arguendo that an elective board would have to meet the requirements of Gray v. Sanders (1963) 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821, supra, §297, and Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, supra, §299, nevertheless declared: "We find no constitutional reason why state or local officers of the nonlegislative character involved here may not be chosen by the governor, by the legislature, or by some other appointive means rather than by an election."

However, in Kramer v. Union Free School Dist. No. 15 (1969) 395 U.S. 621, 89 S.Ct. 1886, 23 L.Ed.2d 583, eligible voters in a rural school district in New York were those who owned or leased property or had a child in school. The object of the law was to limit electors to persons primarily interested in the district. Held, this was a denial of equal protection. It disenfranchised other interested persons, such as clergy, military personnel living on tax-exempt property, boarders and lodgers, and parents without property whose children were too young for school. (89 S.Ct. 1891, 23 L.Ed.2d 591.) (See 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1493 [State Restrictions on Municipal Elections: An Equal Protection Analysis]; 20 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1116 [Kramer].)

In Hadley v. Junior College Dist. of Metropolitan Kansas City, Missouri (1970) 397 U.S. 50, 90 S.Ct. 791, 25 L.Ed.2d 45, defendant district's trustees had general governmental powers, including the power to levy taxes, issue bonds, hire and fire teachers, condemn, etc. The court observed that, although these powers were not as broad as in Avery v. Midland County, Texas (1968) 390 U.S. 474, 88 S.Ct. 1114, 20 L.Ed.2d 45, supra, §302, they had sufficient impact to compel application of the Avery principle. No valid constitutional distinction can be drawn on the basis and purpose of the election; the principle, that voting should be apportioned according to population on an equal basis as far as practicable, applies in congressional, state legislative, and local elections. (90 S.Ct. 794, 25 L.Ed.2d 50.)

The opinion concludes with a sweeping declaration: "We therefore hold today that as a general rule, whenever a state or local government decides to select persons by popular election to perform governmental functions, the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that each qualified voter must be given an equal opportunity to participate in that election, and when members of an elected body are chosen from separate districts, each district must be established on a basis that will insure, as far as is practicable, that equal numbers of voters can vote for proportionally equal numbers of officials." (90 S.Ct. 795, 25 L.Ed.2d 50.)

Three justices dissented, arguing that it is necessary to preserve flexibility in design of local governmental units that serve specialized functions and must meet particular local conditions. (90 S.Ct. 797, 25 L.Ed.2d 52.)

V. SUFFRAGE

H. Restricted Eligibility in Local Elections.

2. Special District Elections.

a. Valid Provisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 305

[§ 305] Valid Provisions.

A number of California cases deal with unsuccessful challenges to special districts.

In Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 C.2d 627, 75 C.R. 766, 451 P.2d 406, a municipal improvement district was created in 1960, comprising 418 uninhabited acres. Subsequent annexation increased the acreage to 2,600. The statute provided that the owners were to have voting power at the outset, with a gradual shift to resident voters by the close of 1971. Held, this was a proper provision. (70 C.2d 637.) Three justices dissented, contending that the one man-one vote rule of Avery v. Midland County, Texas (1968) 390 U.S. 474, 88 S.Ct. 1114, 20 L.Ed.2d 45, supra, §302, should be applied to discrimination here between voters who owned and those who did not own property in the district, as well as between small and large landowners. (70 C.2d 640.) (See Burrey v. Embarcadero Mun. Imp. Dist. (1971) 5 C.3d 671, 97 C.R. 203, 488 P.2d 395, infra, §306 [statute was unconstitutional where there was no prompt shift to voting based on residency].)

In Schindler v. Palo Verde Irr. Dist. (1969) 1 C.A.3d 831, 82 C.R. 61, defendant irrigation district, like many other districts formed by special act, was governed by a board of trustees elected by landowners in the district. A landowner was entitled to one vote for each $ 100 of assessed value of his or her property. Plaintiff landowner, conceding the validity of the property qualification, contended that the apportionment of voting rights discriminated against small landowners. He sought a decree giving landowners the alternatives of cumulative voting, or one vote for each landowner, or division of the district into seven parts with one trustee elected from each. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) The one man-one vote principle was not involved; there was no claimed dilution of voter influence through improper districting. (1 C.A.3d 836.) The same constitutional standards of fairness should govern distribution of the election franchise for school district elections as in Kramer v. Union Free School Dist. No. 15 (1969) 395 U.S. 621, 89 S.Ct. 1886, 23 L.Ed.2d 583, supra, §304, and elections in special entities exercising other limited governmental functions. The fact that the service is one that could be provided by a private agency is not a valid ground of distinction. (1 C.A.3d 837.)

(b) The statute met the Kramer test. The state has a compelling interest in reclamation of waste lands through flood protection, drainage, and irrigation works; the grant of the election franchise to landowners was essential to creation and functioning of the district; and, since benefits and burdens accrue to each landowner in proportion to the extent of land owned, the statute fairly distributes voting influence among those primarily interested in direct proportion to his or her stake in the district. (1 C.A.3d 839.) (See Girth v. Thompson (1970) 11 C.A.3d 325, 331, 89 C.R. 823 [irrigation district; following Schindler]; but see comment in Burrey v. Embarcadero Mun. Imp. Dist., supra, 5 C.3d 682, footnote 8.)

Riverside v. Whitlock (1972) 22 C.A.3d 863, 99 C.R. 710, involved the Majority Protest Act of 1931. Under the statute, if owners of more than half the land in an assessment district make written protests, the project has to be abandoned unless the protests are overruled by a four-fifths vote of the legislative body. In this action, appellants contended that the statutory scheme is in effect a referendum, subject to the one man-one vote principle, and that use of the land area as the measure of sufficiency of a protest discriminates against small landowners and excludes resident nonlandowners. The court held that, in special assessment proceedings, an election is not provided or constitutionally required. The proceeding is not one for the formation of a public entity to exercise general governmental powers; the district simply denotes the land area benefited and to be assessed. Landowners have no constitutional right to abate the proceeding by protests; this right is purely a creature of statute. There are no general obligation bonds; because only landowners directly benefited are charged with the cost, and in proportion to the benefit conferred, there is a rational basis for making the decision subject to protest in the manner specified. (22 C.A.3d 876.) (See Oxnard Harbor Dist. v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 259, 269, 271, 19 C.R.2d 819 [applying rational basis standard, Govt.C. 57075(a)(3), permitting annexation to or detachment from district without election unless 25% of registered voters file written protests, is constitutional].)

In Salier Land Co. v. Tulare Lake Basin Water Storage Dist. (1973) 410 U.S. 719, 93 S.Ct. 1224, 35 L.Ed.2d 659, the Court considered a challenge to the California Water Storage District Act (Water C. 41000, 41001). The Act provides that only landowners may vote in a water storage district election, and votes are apportioned according to the assessed value of land owned. The particular district consisted of 193,000 acres, with a resident population of 77 persons, including 18 children, most of whom worked for the four corporations that farmed 85% of the land. Several of the smaller landowners had only one vote, while the largest corporation had 37,825. Held, the Act was valid.

(a) By reason of its special limited purpose and the disproportionate effect of its activities on landowners as a group, the district was not subject to the rulings in Phoenix v. Kolodziejski (1970) 399 U.S. 204, 90 S.Ct. 1990, 26 L.Ed.2d 523, infra, §307, Cipriano v. Houma (1969) 395 U.S. 701, 89 S.Ct. 1897, 23 L.Ed.2d 647, and Kramer, supra, and accordingly, the requirement of Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, supra, §299, did not apply. (93 S.Ct. 1229, 35 L.Ed.2d 666.)

(b) There was no denial of equal protection to residents. Assessments against the landowners were the sole means of meeting expenses of the district, and it was therefore not inequitable to give the franchise to landowners and not to residents. (93 S.Ct. 1231, 35 L.Ed.2d 668.)

(c) It was likewise proper to deny the franchise to lessees, who might be mere month-to-month tenants, subject to manipulation by large landowners. The Legislature might also have felt that landowners would be unwilling to join in the forming of a water storage district if the lessees, whose fortunes were not tied to the land, were to have a major vote. (93 S.Ct. 1232, 35 L.Ed.2d 668.)

(d) Apportionment of votes on the basis of assessed value of land holdings was valid in placing the benefits and burdens in proportion to this value. (93 S.Ct. 1233, 35 L.Ed.2d 670.) (See Associated Enterprises v. Toltec Watershed Imp. Dist. (1973) 410 U.S. 743, 93 S.Ct. 1237, 35 L.Ed.2d 675 [upholding Wyoming statute authorizing creation of watershed district by weighted vote of landowners dependent on acres owned]; Philippart v. Hotchkiss Tract Reclamation Dist. 799 (1976) 54 C.A.3d 797, 801, 127 C.R. 42 [following Schindler and Salier]; Ball v. James (1981) 451 U.S. 355, 101 S.Ct. 1811, 68 L.Ed.2d 150; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 181 [Ball v. James]; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 31 [Salier]; 7 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 227 [same]; 6 Pacific L. J. 318 [same]; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 507 [constitutionality of voting inequity: case of special purpose districts].)

In Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. v. Bolen (1992) 1 C.4th 654, 3 C.R.2d 843, 822 P.2d 875, plaintiff transit district (SCRTD) was the agency for construction of a mass rapid transit system in southern California and particularly Los Angeles County. To help defray part of the cost the Legislature authorized SCRTD to establish special benefit assessment districts surrounding planned subway stations along the rapid transit corridor. (1 C.4th 660.) In this action by the district against its secretary to require certification of the district board resolutions, the trial court granted mandamus to compel certification, the Court of Appeal reversed, and the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The issue raised was whether the one man-one vote rule of Reynolds v. Sims, applied, or whether the circumstances called for the exception set forth in Avery v. Midland County, for special-purpose units of government. (1 C.4th 664.)

(a) "The political entities constitutionally relevant to the challenged voting scheme are the limited-purpose benefit districts, the organizing principle of which is the recoupment of some of the added economic value conferred on commercial property resulting from its proximity to the transit stations. The narrow purpose for which the districts are established is reflected in a voting scheme that limits the franchise to those who will directly and primarily enjoy the benefits of transit station siting and shoulder the reciprocal burden of assessments--owners of commercial property within the two proposed districts. In light of that congruence, we are satisfied that the governmental units at issue lack the indicia of 'general governmental powers' and, on this leg of the equal protection inquiry, qualify as the sort of 'special-purpose units of government' that are not subject to the strict requirements of Reynolds." (1 C.4th 670.)

(b) The challenged voting classification was supported by a "genuine difference in the relevant interests" of those enfranchised and those excluded. (1 C.4th 670.)

(c) Special assessment districts in recent years have been used to finance "the construction of massive urban rapid transit systems, the extraordinary capital costs of which have heightened pressure for the exploration of novel forms of financing. Grounded in the fact that the installation of a transit station and related facilities at a point along a rapid transit corridor enhances the value of real property in the immediate vicinity by generating intensified commercial activity, the special assessment has been promoted as a means by which transit authorities can recoup some of the value added to the surrounding real property and the resulting 'windfall' enrichment of property owners." (1 C.4th 661.)

Two justices joined in a dissent. (1 C.4th 681.) (See Not About Water Committee v. Board of Supervisors (2002) 95 C.A.4th 982, 999, 1001, 116 C.R.2d 526 [following Bolen; one man-one vote standard was not applicable to formation of water district that lacked general governmental powers; use of weighted voting scheme in balloting on assessment district was compelled by Cal. Const., Art. XIII D, §4(e)]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 270 [Bolen].)

H. Restricted Eligibility in Local Elections.

2. Special District Elections.

b. Invalid Provisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 306

[§ 306] Invalid Provisions.

A successful challenge was made in Burrey v. Embarcadero Mun. Imp. Dist. (1971) 5 C.3d 671, 97 C.R. 203, 488 P.2d 395. Defendant district was created by legislative authorization to bring municipal improvements to an uninhabited area and to facilitate the development of a private small craft harbor. The district had most of the powers of a city; e.g., it could operate a police force and fire department, create public utilities, condemn, tax, and incur bonded indebtedness. Its directors, however, were elected on the basis of landownership, with the result that control of the district was in the hands of the developing landowner for an indefinite period. Petitioners, residents of the district, attacked the voting scheme as giving too much power to one class of voters and as precluding nonlandowning residents from voting. Held, the provisions were unconstitutional.

(a) One man-one vote principle applies. The powers of defendant district were greater than those in Hadley v. Junior College Dist. of Metropolitan Kansas City, Missouri (1970) 397 U.S. 50, 90 S.Ct. 791, 25 L.Ed.2d 45, supra, §304, and close to those in Avery v. Midland County, Texas (1968) 390 U.S. 474, 88 S.Ct. 1114, 20 L.Ed.2d 45, supra, §302. Hence, the one person-one vote rule must apply. (5 C.3d 677.)

(b) Invalid weighting of votes by landownership. The weighting by district malapportionment (Reynolds v. Sims (1964) 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362, 12 L.Ed.2d 506, supra, §299) or by landownership (this case) is unconstitutional. It makes no difference to the voter "whether it is his next door neighbor, a stranger in another district, or a nonresident land developer" whose vote gets substantially more weight than his or her own. (5 C.3d 678.) Indeed, inequality based on landownership is even more questionable than that based on district apportionment; affluence of the voter cannot be an electoral standard. "Like the feudal landlords of old, the land-wealthy developer, under the EMID's voting system, controls the destiny of the EMID community while the 'land poor' residents have no effective vote in selecting those who will be governing the affairs with which they are so vitally concerned." (5 C.3d 679.) The result is that the developer corporation, holding more than 65% of the assessed valuation of land, can guarantee that its candidates will win and that the district will issue general obligation bonds if it desires. "Instead of 'one person, one vote' we have here a case of 'one corporation, 285,689 votes.'" (5 C.3d 679.)

(c) Invalid exclusion of nonlandowner residents. Under the principles of Kramer v. Union Free School Dist. No. 15 (1969) 395 U.S. 621, 89 S.Ct. 1886, 23 L.Ed.2d 583, supra, §304, Cipriano v. Houma (1969) 395 U.S. 701, 89 S.Ct.

1897, 23 L.Ed.2d 647, and Phoenix v. Kolodziejski (1970) 399 U.S. 204, 90 S.Ct. 1990, 26 L.Ed.2d 523, infra, §307, nonlandowner residents are as interested as landowners in public utilities, the tax rate, sewage services, police and fire protection, and the power to pass regulations having the force of law. (5 C.3d 681.) No compelling state interest justifies their exclusion. Exclusion may be proper at the beginning of the project, to insure the carrying out of the subdivision and development. But later, when the district begins to serve as a general governmental unit, voting power must shift to the resident registered voters. (5 C.3d 681.) The statutory shift provided in Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 C.2d 627, 75 C.R. 766, 451 P.2d 406, supra, §305, was lacking here. And the argument that gradual selling of property will bring about an even spread of voting is unsound. The developer could retain large parcels, such as the proposed yacht harbor, shopping center, or other business properties, long after the community had developed. (5 C.3d 683.)

(d) Conclusion. "The Legislature has seen fit to create a district with extensive and pervasive powers over the land and the people within it. Its concurrent failure to provide a voting system which early transfers the voting power from those who presently hold it under sections 20 and 24 of the act to its proper recipients, the interested, affected and otherwise qualified voters within the district, renders those sections unconstitutional." (5 C.3d 683.) "We do not, by this holding, foreclose alternative legislative schemes which facilitate the development of the district without conflicting with the provisions of this decision." (5 C.3d 684, footnote 12.)

The property qualification for a candidate for director of an irrigation district in Water C. 21100 was held unconstitutional as to the Imperial Irrigation District in Choudry v. Free (1976) 17 C.3d 660, 131 C.R. 654, 552 P.2d 438.

(1) Decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, e.g., Kramer, Phoenix, Cipriano, supra, and Hill v. Stone (1975) 421 U.S. 289, 95 S.Ct. 1637, 44 L.Ed.2d 172, have invalidated statutes requiring property qualifications for voting in special purpose districts. "The consistent theme of these cases is that in order to deny the franchise to some voters the excluded class must be substantially less affected by the results of the election than those who are entitled to vote. In applying this rule, it was held that all voters have an important interest in the benefits of adequate service and favorable rates of a utility district (Cipriano), that both property owners and those who do not own property are called upon either directly or indirectly to pay for the improvements acquired from the proceeds of bonds (Phoenix, Hill), and that those who do not own property may have as direct an interest in school affairs (Kramer) or in a library (Hill) as those who do." (17 C.3d 666.)

(2) Salyer Land Co. v. Tulare Lake Basin Water Storage Dist. (1973) 410 U.S. 719, 93 S.Ct. 1224, 35 L.Ed.2d 659, supra, §305, is distinguishable: (a) The water storage district involved there did not have as extensive powers as an irrigation district (17 C.3d 667); (b) in Salyer, assessments against land were the sole means by which the district's expenses were paid; an irrigation district may collect charges from nonlandowners for the sale of domestic water, electric power, sewage disposal, and other services, and is authorized to pay its bonds from revenues other than assessments (17 C.3d 667); (c) in Salyer, there were only 77 residents; here, there were 100,000 urban residents (17 C.3d 668).

(b) Right to hold office as director. The Legislature did give nonlandowners the right to vote, thus indicating that they have an appreciable stake in the affairs of the district. And, applying the strict scrutiny test for the classification (17 C.3d 664, 668; see infra, §704), no compelling state interest is furthered by excluding nonlandowners from eligibility to the office of director. The statute therefore "deprives both candidates and voters" in the district of equal protection of the laws. (17 C.3d 668.)

(c) Scope of decision. The court confined its decision to the Imperial Irrigation District, which has more residents, land, and employees than the others (17 C.3d 669). Three justices joined in a concurring opinion suggesting that the constitutionality of Water C. 21100 as to other districts should be determined in light of the principles announced in Salyer (17 C.3d 670).

I. General Bond Elections.

1. Vote Restricted to Property Taxpayers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 307

[§ 307] Vote Restricted to Property Taxpayers.

May a state restrict to real property taxpayers the right to vote in elections to approve issuance of general obligation bonds to finance municipal improvements such as city sewers, parks, playgrounds, police and public safety buildings, and libraries? In Phoenix v. Kolodziejewski (1970) 399 U.S. 204, 90 S.Ct. 1990, 26 L.Ed.2d 523, the court held that kind of restriction is unconstitutional, but made its decision prospective. (90 S.Ct. 1996, 26 L.Ed.2d 530.) The court rejected the argument that, because general obligation bonds are supported by taxes mainly imposed on property owners, nonproperty owners may properly be excluded from the franchise. All residents of a city have an interest in the public facilities to be constructed with the proceeds of the bond issue; other revenues may be reached to support the bonds; and, in the case of rental and commercial property, the tax burden may be shifted to persons other than the landowners. (90 S.Ct. 1994, 26 L.Ed.2d 528.) (See Cipriano v. Houma (1969) 395 U.S. 701, 89 S.Ct. 1897, 23 L.Ed.2d 647 [Louisiana law providing that only property taxpayers could vote in election to approve issuance of revenue bonds by municipal utility is invalid]; Hill v. Stone (1975) 421 U.S. 289, 95 S.Ct. 1637, 1642, 44 L.Ed.2d 172, 179 [following Phoenix and Cipriano].)

V. SUFFRAGE

I. General Bond Elections.
2. Requirement of More Than Majority.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 308

[§ 308] Requirement of More Than Majority.

(1) In General. Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §18 (formerly Art. XI, §18) provided that general obligation bond proposals of counties, cities, and school districts must be approved by a two-thirds majority of the voters in a popular referendum. In Westbrook v. Mihaly (1970) 2 C.3d 765, 87 C.R. 839, 471 P.2d 487, this provision was held to be a violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (a) The provision had its origin in the financial depression and was designed to curtail governmental mismanagement in authorizing indebtedness. (2 C.3d 777.) But it creates two classes of voters: those who favor a proposed bond issue and those who oppose it; and one group has a weighted vote. (2 C.3d 782.) (b) No compelling state interest justifies this discrimination; it is not necessary to insure fiscal security. (2 C.3d 792.) (See 4 U.S.F. L. Rev. 309 [before the decision]; 59 Cal. L. Rev. 140.)

However, the U.S. Supreme Court reached the opposite conclusion in Gordon v. Lance (1971) 403 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 1889, 29 L.Ed.2d 273. The West Virginia Constitution and statutes require 60% of the voters in a referendum election for approval of a bond issue of political subdivisions. This was challenged by parties on the basis of six defeats in school bond issues, each by reason of less than 60% vote although a majority favored the bonds. The West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals held the provision violative of the Equal Protection Clause. Held, reversed; the provisions were constitutional.

(a) Reliance on Gray v. Sanders (1963) 372 U.S. 368, 83 S.Ct. 801, 9 L.Ed.2d 821, supra, §297, and Cipriano v. Houma (1969) 395 U.S. 701, 89 S.Ct. 1897, 23 L.Ed.2d 647, is misplaced. No independently identifiable group favors bonded indebtedness over other forms of financing, hence no sector of the population is "fenced out," as in Carrington v. Rash (1965) 380 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 775, 13 L.Ed.2d 675, supra, §244. (91 S.Ct. 1892, 29 L.Ed.2d 275.)

(b) Although any departure from strict majority rule gives disproportionate power to the minority, "there is nothing in the language of the Constitution, our history or our cases that requires that a majority always prevail on every issue." (91 S.Ct. 1892, 29 L.Ed.2d 276.) Thus, there is no constitutional barrier to selection of a governor by a state Legislature after no candidate receives a majority of the vote; the federal Constitution itself requires more than a majority vote on some issues, e.g., impeachment and ratification; the Bill of Rights wholly removes areas of legislation from the concept of majoritarian supremacy; and constitutions of many states prohibit or severely limit the power of the Legislature to levy new taxes or create bonded indebtedness, thereby insulating entire areas from majority control. (91 S.Ct. 1892, 29 L.Ed.2d 277.)

(c) As long as these "provisions do not discriminate against or authorize discrimination against any identifiable class they do not violate the Equal Protection Clause. We see no meaningful distinction between such absolute provisions on debt, changeable only by constitutional amendment, and provisions that legislative decisions on the same issues require more than a majority vote in the legislature." (91 S.Ct. 1892, 29 L.Ed.2d 272.) (See Coffineau v. Eu (1977) 68 C.A.3d 138, 143, 138 C.R. 90 [former Govt.C. 34507, requiring two-thirds vote to change name of general law city, was valid, under reasoning of Gordon v. Lance]; 10 Cal. Western L. Rev. 551, 572 [Gordon v. Lance]; 83 Harv. L. Rev. 1911 [Gordon v. Lance decision in lower court]; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1095 [Coffineau].)

Following Gordon v. Lance, the U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to the losing parties in Westbrook, and remanded the case to the California Supreme Court; the California court then denied the petition for mandamus by minute order without opinion.

In Santa Clara County Local Trans. Authority v. Guardino (1995) 11 C.4th 220, 254, 258, 45 C.R.2d 207, 902 P.2d 225, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §134, the court held that the rule of Gordon v. Lance is not limited to bond elections, but applies equally to tax elections. Hence, Govt.C. 53722 (9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §§131, 133 et seq.), requiring that local special taxes be approved by two-thirds of the electorate, does not deny proponents of special taxes equal protection of the law.

(2) Proposition 39. Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §18, amended by Proposition 39 in 2000, provides for approval by 55% of school district or county voters on a proposition to incur indebtedness through general obligation bonds for the acquisition or lease, construction, rehabilitation, or replacement of school facilities, furnishings, or equipment. (Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §18(b); on majority vote for bonds issued to repair or replace school buildings declared to be structurally unsafe, see Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §18(a).)

Witkin Summary of California Law

V. SUFFRAGE

J. Incorporation of City or Annexation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 309

[§ 309] Incorporation of City or Annexation.

(1) Incorporation. In Curtis v. Board of Supervisors (1972) 7 C.3d 942, 104 C.R. 297, 501 P.2d 537, 63.6% of the landowners, representing 42.8% of the assessed land valuation within a proposed new city, petitioned the county board of supervisors for an incorporation election. The board refused, relying on former Govt.C. 34311, which provided that written protests of landowners representing 51% of the assessed valuation may block incorporation for a 1-year period. Held, mandamus issued to compel incorporation proceedings; the statute was a denial of the equal protection guarantees of both the federal and state Constitutions.

(a) Classifications affecting the right to vote are subject to the strict test, imposing the burden on the state to establish that a compelling interest justifies the law, and that the distinction drawn is necessary for the achievement of its purpose. (7 C.3d 951.)

(b) The landowner's interest in the power of the prospective city to tax and regulate use of land is not a compelling state interest. (7 C.3d 956, citing Kramer v. Union Free School Dist. No. 15 (1969) 395 U.S. 621, 89 S.Ct. 1886, 23 L.Ed.2d 583, supra, §304, Cipriano v. Houma (1969) 395 U.S. 701, 89 S.Ct. 1897, 23 L.Ed.2d 647, and Phoenix v. Kolodziejewski (1970) 399 U.S. 204, 90 S.Ct. 1990, 26 L.Ed.2d 523, supra, §307.)

(c) Gordon v. Lance (1971) 403 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 1889, 29 L.Ed.2d 273, supra, §308, is distinguishable. It involved no classification of voters, but only "the quantification of votes required to incur public indebtedness." (7 C.3d 958.)

(d) The issue of incorporation affects nonlandowners as well as landowners. All residents share a substantial interest in the government of their state, city, county, school district, and other agencies of general governmental power. (7 C.3d 959, 960, citing Burrey v. Embarcadero Mun. Imp. Dist. (1971) 5 C.3d 671, 97 C.R. 203, 488 P.2d 395, supra, §306.)

(e) Although this case deals with a new situation--creation of a governmental entity--the same general principle applies; nonlandowners cannot be excluded from the group empowered to decide on incorporation, and no compelling interest is served by allocating power within that group on the basis of assessed value of land. (7 C.3d 960.)

(f) The contention that the statute merely provides for concurrent approval of both residents and landowners is unsound; it gives the latter not only a voice but a veto. (7 C.3d 962.) And it irrationally allocates power among landowners on the basis of land alone, though taxes are based on land and improvements. (7 C.3d 963.) "The practical effect of the classification of section 34311 is that a city cannot be formed in Rancho Palos Verdes, or in many other areas of the state, without the tacit consent of the relatively few owners of large tracts of land. The present case presents a spectacle where the desires of the 63 percent of the resident landowners who signed the petition for incorporation would be overridden by a protest composed primarily of nonresident and absentee corporate owners. Thus under a literal application of section 34311 the right of the residents of a region to self-government, to establish and enjoy the amenities of civic life, would be subordinated to a few persons whose economic interests lie in maintaining low property taxes and lax land use regulations. The perpetuation of this condition cannot realistically nor constitutionally be described as a compelling interest of the State of California." (7 C.3d 965.) (See 6 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 240.)

In response to the Curtis decision, the 1973 Legislature amended former Govt.C. 34303 to provide that proceedings could be initiated by a petition of either 25% of the registered voters or 25% of the qualified owners representing 25% of the assessed value of the land. (See Govt.C. 57108, 57109 [providing for initiation of proceedings for incorporation or district merger by 10% of registered voters or 10% of qualified owners representing 10% of assessed value of land].)

In Board of Supervisors v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1992) 3 C.4th 903, 13 C.R.2d 245, 838 P.2d 1198, the court considered the constitutionality of former Govt.C. 57103 (now Govt.C. 57118). This provision of the Cortese-Knox Act requires that all voters in an election to incorporate a city reside in the territory to be incorporated. Held, the statute did not violate the Equal Protection guaranties of the federal or California Constitutions, either on its face or as applied to the proposed incorporation. In reaching this conclusion the court rejected the strict scrutiny standard and applied the deferential rational basis test.

(a) "When a law impinges on certain fundamental rights--and the right to vote may be the most fundamental of all ... --it will ordinarily be subject to strict judicial scrutiny. Under this very severe standard, a discriminatory law will not be given effect unless its classification bears a close relation to the promoting of a compelling state interest, the classification is necessary to achieve the government's goal, and the classification is narrowly drawn to achieve the goal by the least restrictive means possible." (3 C.4th 913.) (On strict scrutiny test generally, see infra, §704.)

(b) "For most legislation, however, a court will apply the rational basis test. The 'standard formulation of the text for minimum rationality' ... is whether the classification is 'rationally related to a legitimate governmental purpose.' ... Put another way, the classification must bear some fair relationship to a legitimate public purpose." (3 C.4th 913.)

(c) Govt.C. 57103 (now Govt.C. 57118) does not compel the strict scrutiny test.

(1) The statute touches on the right to vote, but that fact does not necessarily require the application of strict scrutiny; the compelling interest measure must be applied if a classification has a "real and appreciable impact" on the equality, fairness, and integrity of the electoral process. The impact of Govt.C. 57103 falls well short of the "real and appreciable," for "individual interests in voting are much attenuated by the state's plenary power to oversee and regulate the formation of its political subdivisions, and the same power entitles the state to identify as differing in degree the interests of those who may vote under section 57103 and those who may not." (3 C.4th 914.)

(2) "In our federal system the states are sovereign but cities and counties are not; in California as elsewhere they are mere creatures of the state and exist only at the state's sufferance. ... Accordingly, the United States Supreme Court has long recognized the states' plenary power to create and dissolve their political subdivisions." (3 C.4th 914.)

(3) Prior decisions of this court are not controlling. (3 C.4th 918.) In Citizens Against Forced Annexation v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1982) 32 C.3d 816, 187 C.R. 423, 654 P.2d 193, "a bare majority" concurred in the reasoning, and "we conclude in hindsight that the reasoning in that case was questionable." (3 C.4th 920.) "[U]nder applicable precedent we should apply a deferential standard in evaluating the classification set forth on the face of section 57103. The Legislature's traditional power to regulate the formation of political subdivisions allows it to decide that the county residents living outside the territory to be incorporated have a lesser degree of interest in the proposed incorporation than those within, in which case the classification must be denied effect only if it lacks a rational basis." (3 C.4th 922.)

(4) "[S]ection 57103 is fairly related to the Legislature's declared purpose, for, if large, relatively disinterested majorities could veto incorporations decided through the Cortese-Knox Act's elaborate process, the result might well hinder orderly growth and development." (3 C.4th 923.) The Act's accommodation of competing local interests may be imperfect, but that is not enough, by itself, to offend constitutional principles. (3 C.4th 924.)

(2) Annexation. In Levinsohn v. San Rafael (1974) 40 C.A.3d 656, 658, 115 C.R. 309, the court followed Curtis, and struck down statutes giving veto power to persons holding 50% or more of the assessed value of the land sought to be annexed. (See Citizens Against Forced Annexation, supra [upholding statute limiting franchise in annexation election to residents of territory to be annexed; reasoning of case questioned in Board of Supervisors, supra]; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1571 [right to vote in municipal annexations]; 20 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1116 [annexation elections].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Annexation. See Citizens for Responsible Open Space v. San Mateo County Local Agency Formation Com. (2008) 159 C.A.4th 717, 731, 71 C.R.3d 813 [in action to invalidate annexation of land to open space district, trial court erred in excluding protests by registered voters that did not include residence address within annexation area].

K. Referendum on County Charter.

[§ 310] Referendum on County Charter.

In Lockport v. Citizens for Community Action at Local Level (1977) 430 U.S. 259, 97 S.Ct. 1047, 51 L.Ed.2d 313, the Court upheld a New York law providing that a new county charter requires approval in a referendum election by separate majorities of voters who live in cities within the county and those who live outside the cities. The court distinguished cases requiring equality in voting for legislators, as inapplicable to the situation involved in a "single-shot" referendum. (97 S.Ct. 1052, 51 L.Ed.2d 321.) "[T]he challenged provisions of New York law rest on the State's identification of the distinctive interests of the residents of the cities and towns within a county rather than their interests as residents of the county as a homogeneous unit. This identification is based in the realities of the distribution of governmental powers in New York, and is consistent with our cases that recognize both the wide discretion the States have in forming and allocating governmental tasks to local subdivisions, and the discrete interests that such local governmental units may have qua units." (97 S.Ct. 1054, 51 L.Ed.2d 323.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY A. Nature of Guarantees. 1. Constitutional Provisions. a. Federal Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 311

[§ 311] Federal Constitution.

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble." Although the First Amendment is a limitation only on Congress, it is now settled that the liberties of speech, press, and assembly are fundamental rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, which restricts the states. Hence, even in the absence of state constitutional protections, a state law infringing on any of these rights is a violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (Fiske v. Kansas (1927) 274 U.S. 380, 47 S.Ct. 655, 657, 71 L.Ed. 1108, 1111; Near v. Minnesota (1931) 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 633, 75 L.Ed. 1357, 1371; Grosjean v. American Press Co. (1936) 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 446, 80 L.Ed. 660, 665; Intel Corp. v. Hamidi (2003) 30 C.4th 1342, 1364, 1 C.R.3d 32, 71 P.2d 296, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §720 ["use of government power, whether in enforcement of a statute or ordinance or by an award of damages or an injunction in a private lawsuit, is state action that must comply with First Amendment limits"]; Sun Co. of San Bernardino v. Superior Court (1973) 29 C.A.3d 815, 821, 105 C.R. 873, infra, §415; see 4 Rotunda, §20.1 et seq.; 2 Tribe, §12-1 et seq.; 16A Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §450 et seq.; Cal. Civil Practice (2003 ed.), Civil Rights Litigation, §4:1 et seq. [text and forms]; supra, §218 et seq.; for law reviews, see infra, §313.)

In Sipple v. Des Moines Register & Tribune Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 143, 147 C.R. 59, the court rejected the notion that the constitutional guarantee of free press requires a stricter rule on contacts sufficient for in personam jurisdiction over an out-of-state newspaper. The court examined recent declarations of courts and scholars (82 C.A.3d 148 et seq.), and concluded that newspapers have no greater First Amendment rights than individuals. (82 C.A.3d 149, 150.) The decision, however, was that defendants' activities were not sufficient to support California jurisdiction. (82 C.A.3d 152.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY A. Nature of Guarantees. 1. Constitutional Provisions. b. California Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 312

[§ 312] California Constitution.

(1) Constitutional Provisions. "Every person may freely speak, write and publish his or her sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this right. A law may not restrain or abridge liberty of speech or press." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a).) "The people have the right to instruct their representatives, petition government for redress of grievances, and assemble freely to consult for the common good." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(a).) (See Cal. Const., Art. I, §3(b) [people's right of access to public meetings and writings of public officials and agencies].)

(2) Broad Construction. The language of California's free speech provisions is different than that of the First Amendment (see supra, §311), and they have been construed by our courts as "more protective, definitive and inclusive of rights to expression of speech" than their federal counterparts. (See Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 908, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, infra, §316; Spiritual Psychic Science Church v. Azusa (1985) 39 C.3d 501, 519, 217 C.R. 225, 703 P.2d 1119, infra, §356; Blatty v. New York Times Co. (1986) 42 C.3d 1033, 1041, 232 C.R. 542, 728 P.2d 1177, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §765; Los Angeles Alliance for Survival v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 352, 365, 93 C.R.2d 1, 993 P.2d 334, infra, §349; Gerawan Farming v. Lyons (2000) 24 C.4th 468, 491, 509, 101 C.R.2d 470, 12 P.3d 720, infra, §333 [although plaintiff grower's right to free speech under First Amendment was not implicated by marketing order compelling growers to fund generic advertising, marketing order does implicate plaintiff's right to free speech under Cal. Const., Art. I]; U.C. Nuclear Weapons Labs Conversion Project v. Lawrence Livermore Laboratory (1984) 154 C.A.3d 1157, 1163, 201 C.R. 837, infra, §395; Cal. Civil Practice (2003 ed.), Civil Rights Litigation, §4:1 et seq. [text and forms].)

In Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 C.A.3d 370, 392, 206 C.R. 866, the trial court enjoined defendant publishers of a business telephone directory from publishing any "concept" statement on editorial policy in the directory. Held, the order violated the free speech guarantee of both the federal and California Constitutions.

(a) The California provision is comprised of three subparts: "(1) an affirmation that all persons may freely speak, write and publish their 'sentiments,' (2) a provision allowing for liability once that right is abused, and (3) a prohibition against laws which infringe freedom of speech or the press." Only the third subpart is paralleled in the First Amendment. (160 C.A.3d 392.)

(b) Although the section does not use the term "prior restraint," the plain meaning of the first sentence is that "sentiments" are protected from any prepublication sanctions. (160 C.A.3d 393.) "Sentiments" include statements of editorial thought, emotion, and opinion; hence, statements of editorial opinion may not be restrained prior to publication. (160 C.A.3d 395.)

(3) No Money Damages. Nothing in the language or history of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), indicates an implied right to seek money damages for its violation. (Degrassi v. Cook (2002) 29 C.4th 333, 342, 344, 127 C.R.2d 508, 58 P.3d 306, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §17 [action claiming that defendants interfered with plaintiff's functioning and effectiveness as legislator did not support recognition of constitutional tort for damages; plaintiff had meaningful alternative remedies]; Motevalli v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2004) 122 C.A.4th 97, 119, 18 C.R.3d 562 [following Degrassi; provisional teacher whose contract was not renewed had no right under California Constitution to recover damages for deprivation of free speech rights].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Broad Construction. See Gallo Cattle Co. v. Kawamura (2008) 159 C.A.4th 948, 955, 72 C.R.3d 1, Supp., infra, §339 [nothing in language or history of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, suggests that California should reject reasoning of U.S. Supreme Court in determining free speech issues arising under California Constitution relating to assessments on milk producers for generic advertising].

In Marsh v. Alabama (1946) 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265, the entire area of an Alabama town was owned by a private corporation, which had given notice of a rule against solicitation. Petitioner, a member of Jehovah's Witnesses, attempted to distribute literature on a sidewalk, and was convicted under a state statute of the crime of remaining on the premises of another after being warned not to do so. Held, the conviction violated the Fourteenth Amendment.

If a municipal ordinance were involved, the regulation would clearly be invalid; and the fact that a single company has legal title to all the town cannot justify a different holding. United States citizens live in company-owned towns; they must make decisions affecting the welfare of the community and nation, and in order to act as good citizens must be able to obtain uncensored information. "Whether a corporation or a municipality owns or possesses the town the public in either case has an identical interest in the functioning of the community in such manner that the channels of communication remain free." CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

- A. Nature of Guarantees.
- 2. Rights on Private Property.
 - b. Shopping Center.
- 1. Under Federal Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 315

[§ 315] Under Federal Constitution.

In Diamond v. Bland (1970) 3 C.3d 653, 91 C.R. 501, 477 P.2d 733 (Diamond I), defendants owned a huge shopping center located in a nonresidential area in the city of San Bernardino. It contained three major department stores and 72 single businesses, all fronting on a "common aisleway" of a pedestrian mall. Defendants' regulations prohibited any activity except business to take place on its premises. Plaintiffs, seeking signatures for initiative petitions on anti-pollution measures, violated the regulations by soliciting signatures, collecting donations, and distributing literature from a card table in the mall area. They were ordered to leave on pain of arrest for trespass. They did so and then brought this action for injunctive and declaratory relief. Held, judgment denying injunction reversed.

(a) "We start from the premise that peaceful and orderly solicitation of signatures, discussion of issues, and distribution of information are First Amendment protected activities which may not be prohibited broadly and absolutely on public streets, parks, and similar public places traditionally associated with the exercise of First Amendment rights." (3 C.3d 657.) This general principle was applied to privately owned property treated as publicly held, in a company town, in Marsh v. Alabama (1946) 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265, supra, §314. In Amalgamated Food Employees Union Local 590 v. Logan Valley Plaza (1968) 391 U.S. 308, 88 S.Ct. 1601, 1609, 20 L.Ed.2d 603, 614, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §648, the court invoked Marsh to invalidate a shopping center's blanket prohibition of picketing on its premises. (3 C.3d 658, 659.) "The implication is clear from Logan that modern-day shopping centers, serving as the business districts for the surrounding residential communities, have important public functions, and their owners may not rely on their private ownership to justify blanket prohibitions on First Amendment activities that could lawfully be conducted on public property. Indeed, in many instances the contemporary shopping center serves as the analogue of the traditional town square." (3 C.3d 660.)

(b) The Logan Valley decision and California cases have established the right of union picketing in a shopping center and on a privately owned sidewalk in front of a supermarket. (See infra, §397.) These cases upheld activities related to the normal use of the shopping center. The instant case involves the distinct problem of nonbusiness-related First Amendment activities, but the distinction is not controlling. (3 C.3d 661.)

(c) Plaintiff's interest is more substantial. Although the shopping center is not the only effective site for their activities, it is a most effective and desirable one--a place to reach thousands of persons daily to disseminate their ideas. And, as pointed out in Schwartz-Torrance Inv. Corp. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers' Union, Local No. 31 (1964) 61 C.2d 766, 40 C.R. 233, 394 P.2d 921, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §648, and Logan Valley, the interest of a property owner is largely theoretical. (3 C.3d 662.)

(d) Persuasive authority rejects the distinction. In re Hoffman (1967) 67 C.2d 845, 64 C.R. 97, 434 P.2d 353, held that an ordinance could not prevent distribution of antiwar leaflets at a private railway station; i.e., the bare title of owners was not a sufficient interest to outweigh the interest in exercise of First Amendment rights. Defendant's contention that a shopping center is not as noisy or crowded as a railway station makes only a difference of degree; the shopping center does not need the quiet of a public library or courthouse. (3 C.3d 665.)

(e) Reasonable regulations of time, place, and manner, similar to those now applied to business promotions and displays, and not repressive in scope, can be devised, and are proper. But, unless there is obstruction of or undue interference with normal business operations, the bare title of the property owners does not outweigh "the substantial interest of individuals and groups to engage in peaceful and orderly First Amendment activities on the premises of shopping centers open to the public." (3 C.3d 666.)

The U.S. Supreme Court came to the opposite conclusion in Lloyd Corp., Ltd. v. Tanner (1972) 407 U.S. 551, 92 S.Ct. 2219, 33 L.Ed.2d 131. Petitioner owned a 50-acre shopping center bounded by four public streets. Its 60 commercial tenants were all located within a single multi-level complex with a series of interior malls. The area was posted as private property, and handbill distribution was prohibited. Respondents attempted to distribute leaflets protesting the draft and the Vietnam War. They were prevented from doing so, and obtained a judgment for injunctive and declaratory relief in the federal district court. Held, reversed.

(a) Marsh and Logan Valley are distinguishable. The first concerned a company owned town--"an anachronism ... now rarely found." (92 S.Ct. 2223, 33 L.Ed.2d 138.) The second involved peaceful picketing of one store when it would have been difficult to communicate with patrons on the public street. (92 S.Ct. 2225, 33 L.Ed.2d 139.) Logan Valley did not extend the Marsh doctrine to a general principle that a center's walkways are functionally equivalent for First Amendment purposes to municipally owned streets and sidewalks. The holding was carefully limited to situations in which the picketing was "directly related in its purpose to the use to which the shopping center property was being put" and where "no other reasonable opportunities for the pickets to convey their message as to their intended audience were available." (92 S.Ct. 2226, 33 L.Ed.2d 140.)

(b) The basic issue is whether respondents may distribute handbills on the center's property contrary to its policy against all handbilling. The First and Fourteenth Amendments safeguard the rights of free speech and assembly by limiting state action, and the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clauses protect rights of property. Thus, while the First Amendment enjoys a preferred position, "this Court has never held that a trespasser or an uninvited guest may exercise general rights of free speech on property privately owned and used nondiscriminatorily for private purposes only." (92 S.Ct. 2228, 33 L.Ed.2d 142.)

(c) The argument that, by reason of its size, the center served the same purposes as the business district in a city, likewise "reaches too far." "The essentially private character of a store and its privately owned abutting property does not change by virtue of being large or clustered with other stores in a modern shopping area." (92 S.Ct. 2229, 33 L.Ed.2d 142.)

In Diamond v. Bland (1974) 11 C.3d 331, 113 C.R. 468, 521 P.2d 460 (Diamond II), the matter in Diamond I again came before the trial court. (3 C.3d 653.) The judge dissolved the injunction on the authority of Lloyd Corp., Ltd. v. Tanner. Held, affirmed.

"Lloyd's rationale is controlling here. In this case, as in Lloyd, plaintiffs have alternative, effective channels of communication, for the customers and employees of the center may be solicited on any public sidewalks, parks and streets adjacent to the Center and in the communities in which such persons reside. Unlike the situation in Marsh and Logan, no reason appears why such alternative means of communication would be ineffective, and plaintiffs concede that, unlike Logan, their initiative petition bears no particular relation to the shopping center, its individual stores or patrons. Under these circumstances, we must conclude that defendants' private property interests outweigh plaintiffs' own interests in exercising First Amendment rights in the manner sought herein." (11 C.3d 335.)

A dissenting opinion argued that the prior California decision can and should rest on the California Constitution. (11 C.3d 335.) (See Hudgens v. N.L.R.B. (1976) 424 U.S. 507, 96 S.Ct. 1029, 1036, 47 L.Ed.2d 196, 206 [rationale of Logan Valley did not survive Court's decision in Lloyd].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

2. Rights on Private Property.

b. Shopping Center.

2. Under California Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 316

[§ 316] Under California Constitution.

Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, approached the subject of free speech in a different way. Plaintiff high school students attempted to solicit signatures in defendant's central courtyard for a petition to the White House opposing a United Nations resolution. Defendant's policy was to prohibit any publicly expressive activity not directly related to the commercial purposes of the center, and plaintiffs were ordered to leave. They did so and then brought this action to enjoin defendant from denying access to its property for the purpose of circulating their petition. Held, judgment denying injunction reversed.

(a) Lloyd Corp., Ltd. v. Tanner (1972) 407 U.S. 551, 92 S.Ct. 2219, 33 L.Ed.2d 131, supra, §315, did not recognize property rights protected by the federal Constitution; it was decided on the basis of the First Amendment. Hence, it does not preclude state regulation of private property which protects the rights of free speech and petition to the government. (23 C.3d 904, 907.)

(b) Cal. Const., Art. I, §§2, 3 (supra, §312) are broader provisions than those in the First Amendment. (23 C.3d 908.) And the dissenting opinion in Diamond II points out that shopping centers are an essential and invaluable forum for exercising the rights of free speech and petition. Hence, these two sections of the California Constitution "protect speech and petitioning, reasonably exercised, in shopping centers even when the centers are privately owned." (23 C.3d 910, overruling Diamond v. Bland (1974) 11 C.3d 331, 113 C.R. 468, 521 P.2d 460, supra, §315.) (23 C.3d 910.)

Three justices dissented. "The lesson to be learned from Lloyd is unmistakable and irrefutable: A private shopping center owner is protected by the federal Constitution from unauthorized invasions by persons who enter the premises to conduct general 'free speech' activities unrelated to the shopping center's purposes and functions. Nor is the foregoing principle in any way diminished or affected by the fact that the claimed free speech rights are purportedly sanctioned by the California Constitution, given the overriding supremacy of the federal Constitution." (23 C.3d 914.) (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 641; 10 Golden Gate L. Rev. 805; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 245; 52 A.L.R.5th 195 [Validity, Under State Constitutions of Private Shopping Center's Prohibition or Regulation of Political, Social, or Religious Expression or Activity].)

The California Supreme Court's majority view was upheld, and the dissenters' position rejected, in Pruneyard Shopping Center v. Robins (1980) 447 U.S. 74, 100 S.Ct. 2035, 64 L.Ed.2d 741. "[N]either appellants' federally recognized property rights nor their First Amendment rights have been infringed by the California Supreme Court's decision recognizing a right of appellees to exercise state protected rights of expression and petition on appellants' property." (100 S.Ct. 2044, 64 L.Ed.2d 756.) (See 94 Harv. L. Rev. 169; 21 Santa Clara L. Rev. 801.)

In H-CHH Associates v. Citizens for Representative Government (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1193, 238 C.R. 841, plaintiff owners of a shopping center adopted elaborate rules to govern "political petitioning" on the premises, and the trial court granted an injunction against defendant association prohibiting political activity in violation of the center's rules. The Court of Appeal reversed, after a review of Pruneyard and other leading cases (193 C.A.3d 1206 et seq.), holding that "much of plaintiffs' application procedure, encompassing the registration form, the unwritten rules mandating written application and conferring unbridled discretion to deny an application on the basis of general subjective criteria only and rule 1 requiring a designated 'responsible person's acceptance of all liability,' is overbroad and therefore constitutionally invalid." (193 C.A.3d 1311.) The court also suggested the type of objective written standard for this kind of regulation that would withstand constitutional scrutiny. (193 C.A.3d 1212.)

In Savage v. Trammell Crow Co. (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1562, 273 C.R. 302, defendant, the manager of a private shopping center, adopted rules that banned leafletting in its parking lot but allowed use of the center's sidewalks for political expression. Plaintiff sought an injunction to allow him to distribute religious literature in the parking lot. Injunctive relief was denied, and judgment for defendant was rendered on demurrer. Held, affirmed in part and reversed in part.

(a) Under Pruneyard, a private property owner may establish reasonable time, place, and manner rules, provided they are content-neutral, narrowly tailored, and leave ample alternative means of communication. (223 C.A.3d 1572, 1573.) The restrictions on leafletting meet all these requirements: The ban was adopted to prevent litter and traffic problems in the parking lot; it was content-neutral; and leafletters were allowed the alternative of handing out leaflets on the center's sidewalks. (223 C.A.3d 1574, 1575, 1576.)

(b) However, the ban on religious activity at the center violated Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a). Neither federal nor state cases make any material distinction between political and religious expression, Pruneyard does not support a distinction, and for California to grant use of a forum for political but not religious expression would violate the federal Constitution. (223 C.A.3d 1578, 1579, 1580.)

In Westside Sane/Freeze v. Ernest W. Hahn (1990) 224 C.A.3d 546, 274 C.R. 51, the court said: "This appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction arises from appellants' tenacious, erroneous view that the California constitutional rights of free speech and petition at shopping centers ... are limited to activity connected with enrollment of signatures on petitions." (224 C.A.3d 549.) In rejecting this view, the court declared that Pruneyard recognizes the right to free speech independent of physical petitioning. (224 C.A.3d 554, 555, 556.) (See Union of Needletrades, Industrial & Textile Employees, AFL-CIO v. Superior Court (1997) 56 C.A.4th 996, 1016, 1019, 65 C.R.2d 838 [discussing H-CHH Associates, and distinguishing Forsyth, Georgia v. Nationalist Movement (1992) 505 U.S. 123, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101, infra, §456; requirement of insurance by picketers of stores in shopping malls was valid where decision whether to require insurance was based on objective criteria; prior identification of picketers was necessary to decision regarding insurance]; Slauson Partnership v. Ochoa (2003) 112 C.A.4th 1005, 1029, 5 C.R.3d 668 [trial court did not err in limiting defendant's protest against adult strip club located in center of mini-mall to demonstrating on public sidewalk; protestors had violated terms of stipulated injunction giving them generous access to property by accosting patrons, defacing property, and yelling on bullhorns after midnight in residential area].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v. N.L.R.B. (2007) 42 C.4th 850, 69 C.R.3d 288, 172 P.3d 742, the court answered a question from the United States Court of Appeals: whether, under California law, a shopping mall may enforce a rule prohibiting speech that advocates the boycott of a mall tenant. Union employees of a newspaper publishing company sought to hand out leaflets in front of a department store in the mall urging customers to boycott the store because it advertised in their employer's newspaper. Mall officials asked the leafleters to leave because they had not obtained a permit in advance, which would have been futile because a mall rule prohibited speech urging a boycott of the stores in the mall. Held, the shopping center rule violated Cal. Const., Art. I, §2.

(a) As pointed out in Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, text, p. 504, the free speech provision of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, is broader than that in the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Pruneyard held that a shopping mall is a public forum in which people may exercise their free speech rights under the California Constitution. (42 C.4th 857, 862.)

(b) The mall rule prohibiting speech that advocates a boycott is not a permissible time, place, and manner restriction because it is not content neutral. The rule bans speech urging a boycott because of its content. Hence, it is subject to strict scrutiny. The rule cannot "be justified by legitimate concerns that are unrelated to content. Peacefully urging a boycott in a mall does not by its nature cause congestion, nor does it promote fraud or duress" like the solicitations in Los Angeles Alliance for Survival v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 352, 93 C.R.2d 1, 993 P.2d 334, text, §349. (42 C.4th 867.) Also, unlike the ordinance in Alliance, which restricted the solicitation of funds in public places, the rule here is concerned with the impact the speech has on its listeners, not with its intrusive nature. The mall seeks to prohibit speech urging a boycott solely because it disagrees with the message of the speech, which might persuade some customers not to patronize its stores. (42 C.4th 868.) Maximizing profits of the stores in the mall is not a compelling interest compared to the union's right to free expression. (42 C.4th 869.)

(c) H-CHH Associates v. Citizens for Representative Government (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1193, 238 C.R. 841, text, p. 506, which predated Alliance, permitted a shopping center to prohibit the solicitation of contributions on its premises simply because the solicitation competed with its tenants for the funds of patrons. (42 C.4th 868.) This decision was incorrect because the restriction was too broad, and the decision is disapproved to the extent it states a contrary view. (42 C.4th 868, 869, footnote 12.)

Three justices dissented, stating that they would overrule Pruneyard. (42 C.4th 870.)

After reviewing prior federal and state cases, the court concluded that the bank was a "modest retail establishment" to which Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, supra, §316, does not apply, and affirmed the trial court's issuance of a preliminary injunction. (44 C.A.4th 1625, 1631.) f. Private Residential Housing Project.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 320

[§ 320] Private Residential Housing Project.

In Laguna Publishing Co. v. Golden Rain Foundation (1982) 131 C.A.3d 816, 182 C.R. 813, defendant Golden Rain owned the streets, sidewalks, and other common areas of Leisure World, a private residential, walled community where only resident-approved access was permitted through guarded security gates. For years, Golden West Publishing Corp. had been accorded the exclusive privilege of entry to distribute its unsolicited give-away newspaper, Leisure World News. Plaintiff Laguna Publishing Co. was denied the privilege of access to distribute its similar newspaper, Laguna News Post, and brought this action for injunctive relief and damages. Held, exclusion of plaintiff's newspaper was an unconstitutional discrimination calling for injunctive relief, and damages might also be recoverable on a proper showing.

(a) Robins v. Pruneyard Shopping Center (1979) 23 C.3d 899, 153 C.R. 854, 592 P.2d 341, supra, §316, held that the limitations on plaintiff's free speech rights were impermissibly proscribed because the public had been invited onto the private property. (131 C.A.3d 838.) The instant case includes two ingredients not found in Pruneyard: (1) While the public is not invited, there is substantial traffic into Leisure World of vendors and service persons whom the residents do invite, including the carriers of newspapers to which the residents have subscribed. (2) The other give-away paper has been given unrestricted entry even though it has not been invited by any resident. (131 C.A.3d 839, 840.)

(b) "[K]eeping in view the greater status of the rights of free speech and free press existing under the California Constitution as delineated in Pruneyard, and keeping in mind also that discriminatory proscription of free speech on private property may even be questionable under the federal Constitution, as suggested by Lloyd, we hold that Golden Rain, acting with the implicit sanction of the state's police power behind it, impermissibly discriminated against the free speech and free press rights of plaintiff, guaranteed to it under the state Constitution, by excluding it from Leisure World after it, Golden Rain, without authority from the residents of Leisure World, had chosen to permit the unsolicited delivery of the Leisure World News to the residents of Leisure World." (131 C.A.3d 844; referring to Lloyd Corp., Ltd. v. Tanner (1972) 407 U.S. 551, 92 S.Ct. 2219, 33 L.Ed.2d 131, supra, §315.)

(c) "[I]f this activity represents an unacceptable intrusion upon the privacy of the residents of Leisure World, a privacy which it is argued they paid for when they bought homes there, then Golden Rain should cease its discrimination and exclude all newspapers to which individual residents have not personally subscribed." (131 C.A.3d

(d) This holding will not result in requiring unrestricted admission of such uninvited persons as religious evangelists, political campaigners, assorted salespeople, and signature solicitors; it will compel admission only of those who wish to deliver a newspaper that is a competitor of Leisure World News for the same advertising dollars. The property owners will otherwise remain in complete control of admission to Leisure World. (131 C.A.3d 845.) Nothing in the record indicates that the owners of the residences have taken any position on the distribution of give-away newspapers. The discriminatory exclusion was imposed solely by the owner of the common areas, without concern for the preferences of the residents. (131 C.A.3d 847.)

(e) Independently of the new California constitutional right of privacy (see infra, §575), the early case of Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 C.A. 285, 297 P. 91, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §664, upheld a tort action on the ground that the right of privacy was guaranteed by Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. (131 C.A.3d 852.) Hence, plaintiff had a right to sue for damages suffered by its exclusion from Leisure World. (131 C.A.3d 853, 857.)

One justice concurred and dissented, disagreeing with the holding on the right of action for damages. (131 C.A.3d 857.) (See San Jose v. Superior Court (Thompson) (1995) 32 C.A.4th 330, 38 C.R.2d 205, infra, §398 [picketing at private residence]; Golden Gateway Center v. Golden Gateway Tenants Assn. (2001) 26 C.4th 1013, 1033, 1035, 111 C.R.2d 336, 29 P.3d 797 [Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), does not afford tenant's association right to distribute unsolicited newsletters to individual apartments in privately owned apartment buildings from which general public is excluded; no majority on issue whether California Free Speech Clause protects only against state action]; 54 Hastings L. Rev. 1745 [Golden Gateway]; 32 Southwestern U. L. Rev 383 [same]; 51 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1437 [access for solicitors in common interest communities].)

The methodology used by the court in Laguna Publishing to suggest that damages might be recoverable for a violation of plaintiff's free speech and press rights under the California Constitution was disapproved in Katzberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2002) 29 C.4th 300, 328, 127 C.R.2d 482, 58 P.3d 339, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §17, to the extent it is inconsistent with that opinion. (On right to recover damages under California Constitution, see supra, §312.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

3. Right of Private Corporation.

a. Impermissible Restriction.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 321

[§ 321] Impermissible Restriction.

In First Nat. Bank of Boston v. Bellotti (1978) 435 U.S. 765, 98 S.Ct. 1407, 55 L.Ed.2d 707, a Massachusetts statute (1) prohibited banks and business corporations from making expenditures "for the purpose of ... influencing or affecting the vote on any question submitted to the voters, other than one materially affecting any of the property, business or assets of the corporation," and (2) stated that no question submitted to the voters "solely concerning the taxation of the income, property or transactions of individuals shall be deemed materially to affect the property, business or assets of the corporation." The legislation was admittedly "tailor-made" to prevent corporate campaign contributions opposing a graduated income tax constitutional amendment, which had repeatedly failed to survive a referendum. Criminal penalties of fine or imprisonment were provided for violation of the statute. Plaintiffs, two national banking corporations, and three business corporations, seeking to publicize their views on the proposed amendment, brought an action to have the statute declared unconstitutional. The Massachusetts court upheld the law, distinguishing First Amendment rights of natural persons from those of corporations. Held, reversed.

(a) Nature of First Amendment protection. The Amendment guarantees the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all matters of public concern; and if the speakers were not corporations no one would suggest that the state could silence their proposed speech, which is of the type that is indispensable to decisionmaking in a democracy. (98 S.Ct. 1416, 55 L.Ed.2d 718.) "The individual's interest in self-expression is a concern of the First Amendment separate from the concern for open and informed discussion, although the two often converge." (98 S.Ct. 1416, 55 L.Ed.2d 718, footnote 12.)

(b) Effect of corporate identity of speaker. The state court reasoned that the corporation's First Amendment rights derive from its property rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. This is unsound:

(1) The First Amendment liberty of speech and press is within the "liberty" safeguarded by the Fourteenth Amendment. (98 S.Ct. 1417, 55 L.Ed.2d 719, citing Grosjean v. American Press Co. (1936) 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660, 668, infra, §362, which rejected the very reasoning of the Massachusetts court.)

(2) Defendant contends that First Amendment rights have been afforded only to corporations engaged in the communications business and to the commercial speech of business corporations; but the cases do not rely on these factors of the business of the corporation or the subject of the communication. (a) The press cases emphasize the role of the institution in informing the public and providing a forum for discussion, but the press does not have a monopoly on either the First Amendment or the ability to enlighten. The decisions involving corporations in the business of communication or entertainment are based not only on the role of the First Amendment in fostering individual self-expression "but also on its role in affording the public access to discussion, debate, and the dissemination of information and ideas." (98 S.Ct. 1419, 55 L.Ed.2d 721, 722.) (b) The commercial speech cases also show that the First Amendment goes beyond protection of the press and self-expression of individuals. "A commercial advertisement is constitutionally protected not so much because it pertains to the seller's business as because it furthers the societal interest in the 'free flow of commercial information.' " (98 S.Ct. 1419, 55 L.Ed.2d 722; see infra, §325.)

(3) The legislation therefore improperly restricts communication by a corporation on certain referendum subjects, and also improperly singles out one kind of ballot question (individual taxation) on which corporations are not permitted to speak. "[T]he legislature is constitutionally disqualified from dictating the subjects about which persons may speak and the speakers who may address a public issue. ... If a legislature may direct business corporations to 'stick to business,' it also may limit other corporations--religious, charitable, or civic--to their respective 'business' when addressing the public." (98 S.Ct. 1420, 55 L.Ed.2d 723.)

(c) Asserted governmental interests necessitating the legislation.

(1) The Massachusetts court, under its theory that the First Amendment did not apply, failed to apply the strict scrutiny test; but that test applies, and the burden is on the state to show a compelling interest. (98 S.Ct. 1421, 55 L.Ed.2d 724.)

(2) The first interest advanced is that of the state in sustaining the active role of the individual citizen in the electoral process. It is contended that corporate participation in discussion of a referendum issue would exert an undue influence on the outcome and destroy public confidence in the democratic process. There has been no such showing, and the decisions of this Court do not support the argument. The risk of corruption in cases involving candidate elections is not present in a popular vote on a public issue. "To be sure, corporate advertising may influence the outcome of the vote; this would be its purpose. But the fact that advocacy may persuade the electorate is hardly a reason to suppress it." (98 S.Ct. 1423, 55 L.Ed.2d 726, 727.) The people, in making their judgment, may consider the sources and credibility of the advocate; and any danger that they cannot evaluate the information given by plaintiffs is a danger contemplated by the framers of the First Amendment. (98 S.Ct. 1424, 55 L.Ed.2d 728.)

(3) The second interest urged is the protection of corporate shareholders whose views may differ from those expressed by the corporate management. This purpose is belied by the provisions of the statute:

First, it is under-inclusive. Corporate activity designed to pass or defeat legislation is permitted, even though corporations may engage in lobbying more often than they take positions on ballot questions submitted to the voters; and corporate activity is permitted until an issue becomes the subject of a referendum. Moreover, the statute does not restrict entities or organized groups with large resources, in which minorities may have interests comparable to those of corporate shareholders; e.g., business trusts, real estate investment trusts, and labor unions. (98 S.Ct. 1425, 55 L.Ed.2d 728.)

Second, it is over-inclusive. It would prohibit a corporation from supporting or opposing a referendum proposal even if its shareholders unanimously authorized the expenditure. And minority shareholders have power, through election of directors, intra-corporate remedies, and derivative suits, to challenge corporate disbursements made for improper purposes. (98 S.Ct. 1426, 55 L.Ed.2d 729.)

Hence, assuming that protection of shareholders is a compelling interest, there is no substantially relevant correlation between the interest asserted and the state's effort to prohibit plaintiffs from speaking. (98 S.Ct. 1426, 55 L.Ed.2d 730.)

Four justices dissented. (98 S.Ct. 1439, 1442, 55 L.Ed.2d 744, 747.) (See Barnes v. State Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. (1993) 16 C.A.4th 365, 374, 377, 20 C.R.2d 87 [rejecting claim that corporate right of free speech does not extend to mutual insurance company]; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 163 [Bellotti]; 13 U.S.F. L. In Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce (1990) 494 U.S. 652, 110 S.Ct. 1391, 108 L.Ed.2d 652, the Michigan Campaign Finance Act prohibited corporations from using corporate treasury funds for independent expenditures in support of or in opposition to any candidate in elections for state office. The Michigan Chamber of Commerce, a nonprofit corporation, challenged the law as a violation of its First Amendment rights. Held, the statute was constitutional as applied to the chamber; it was narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest. (110 S.Ct. 1396, 1397, 1398, 108 L.Ed.2d 663, 664, 665.) The Court rejected the contention that the statute cannot constitutionally be applied to a "nonprofit ideological corporation" like a chamber of commerce, observing that the chamber's members are somewhat similar to shareholders of a business corporation. (110 S.Ct. 1399, 108 L.Ed.2d 666.)

"Michigan identified as a serious danger the significant possibility that corporate political expenditures will undermine the integrity of the political process, and it has implemented a narrowly tailored solution to that problem. By requiring corporations to make all independent political expenditures through a separate fund made up of money solicited expressly for political purposes, the Michigan Campaign Finance Act reduces the threat that huge corporate treasuries amassed with the aid of favorable state laws will be used to influence unfairly the outcome of elections." CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

A. Nature of Guarantees.

4. Entertainment and Symbolic Speech.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 323

[§ 323] Entertainment and Symbolic Speech.

The First Amendment extends to all forms of expression designed to communicate ideas.

(1) Entertainment. Dancing, music, theatrical performances, and motion pictures are within the protection of the First Amendment. (See Ward v. Rock Against Racism (1989) 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2753, 105 L.Ed.2d 661, 674, infra, §464 [music as protected speech]; In re Giannini (1968) 69 C.2d 563, 569, 72 C.R. 655, 446 P.2d 535, infra, §453 [dancing]; Burton v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1968) 68 C.2d 684, 68 C.R. 721, 441 P.2d 281, infra, §371 [motion pictures]; Barrows v. Municipal Court (1970) 1 C.3d 821, 83 C.R. 819, 464 P.2d 483, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §114 [theatrical performance]; Olivia N. v. National Broadcasting Co. (1977) 74 C.A.3d 383, 388, 141 C.R. 511, Olivia N. v. National Broadcasting Co. (1981) 126 C.A.3d 488, 492, 178 C.R. 888, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §915 [television broadcast of film]; Morris v. Municipal Court (1982) 32 C.3d 553, 564, 568, 186 C.R. 494, 652 P.2d 51, infra, §454 [nonobscene nude dancing]; McCollum v. CBS (1988) 202 C.A.3d 989, 998, 249 C.R. 187, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §916; 84 Cal. L. Rev. 1499 [hate speech, pornography, and problem for artistic expression]; 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 453 [Ward v. Rock Against Racism]; 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 529 [Olivia N.]; 66 So. Cal. L. Rev. 2583 [Bach, Beethoven and the (Home) Boys: Censoring Violent Rap Music in America]; 25 U.S.F. L. Rev. 627 [Ward v. Rock Against Racism].)

(2) Symbolic Speech. The First Amendment also protects symbolic expression of ideas. (Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, infra, §492 [wearing armbands]; Texas v. Johnson (1989) 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342, infra, §474 [flag burning].) (See 15 Hastings Const. L. Q. 587 [Symbolic Expression Reconsidered]; 17 Hastings Const. L. Q. 369 [Pure Symbols and the First Amendment]; 4 Rotunda, §§20.48, 20.49.)

In Schacht v. United States (1970) 398 U.S. 58, 90 S.Ct. 1555, 26 L.Ed.2d 44, a federal statute prohibited the wearing of an American military uniform by a person not a member of the armed forces, but a final clause allowed an actor to do so if the portrayal did not "tend to discredit" the armed forces. Defendant actor wore a uniform in an anti-war street skit, and was convicted. Held, reversed; a conviction for an expression critical of the government's war policy and armed forces, while permitting the same type of expression praising them, violates the First Amendment; hence the final clause was unconstitutional. (See Kahn v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1993) 16 C.A.4th 159, 166, 20 C.R.2d 6.)

(3) Permissible State Regulation. "[A]s the mode of expression moves from the printed page to the commission of public acts which may themselves violate valid penal statutes, the scope of permissible state regulation significantly increases." (California v. LaRue (1972) 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 396, 34 L.Ed.2d 342, 351, infra, §453 [regulations prohibiting live sexual entertainment and films in bars]; see United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473 [burning draft card]; 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 29 [LaRue and O'Brien]; 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 969 [same].) Thus, a statute regulating collection agencies may be validly applied to a business that sells collection forms to creditors, because the forms are tools of a trade, not expressions of ideas. (Powers v. Floersheim (1967) 256 C.A.2d 223, 233, 63 C.R. 913.) And an "escort bureau" (business furnishing escorts) is not a constitutionally protected activity. (People v. Katrinak (1982) 136 C.A.3d 145, 152, 154, 185 C.R. 869.)

In People v. Morone (1983) 150 C.A.3d Supp. 18, 198 C.R. 316, defendants operated a business in which patrons were provided with rooms to assemble, discuss, and practice "swinging" (free heterosexual activity between temporary, uncommitted partners of the opposite sex). They were convicted of the misdemeanor of conducting a "health club" without a license, and challenged the application of the law on First Amendment grounds. Held, conviction affirmed. The guarantees of freedom of speech and association do not embrace purely physical activity such as "swinging." The First Amendment protects the right of patrons to discuss the philosophy of swinging, but when speech and nonspeech elements are combined in the same course of conduct, the nonspeech element may be regulated. Here, the nonspeech element appears in the use of a jacuzzi, showers, saunas, and bedding, at a commercial establishment. (150 C.A.3d Supp. 22.)

In Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence (1984) 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221, a United States Park Service regulation prohibiting camping in certain areas was held properly applied to prohibit demonstrators from sleeping in a park in connection with a demonstration intended to call attention to the plight of the homeless. "Expression, whether oral or written or symbolized by conduct, is subject to reasonable time, place, or manner restrictions. We have often noted that restrictions of this kind are valid provided that they are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information." (104 S.Ct. 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 227.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 216.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

a. In General.

1. Historical Development.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 324

[§ 324] Historical Development.

(1) Valid Regulation of Commercial Solicitation. In Pittsford v. Los Angeles (1942) 50 C.A.2d 25, 31, 122 P.2d 535, an ordinance prohibited distribution of commercial advertising on city streets, expressly exempting religious, political, and sociological material. Held, it was validly applied to the "candid camera" business of snapping a picture of a pedestrian and offering him or her an order blank. (See Valentine v. Chrestensen (1942) 316 U.S. 52, 62 S.Ct. 920, 86 L.Ed. 1262; Jamison v. Texas (1943) 318 U.S. 413, 63 S.Ct. 669, 87 L.Ed. 869.)

In re Mares (1946) 75 C.A.2d 798, 171 P.2d 762, following the theory of the Pittsford case, upheld a San Francisco ordinance prohibiting the solicitation of magazine subscriptions on public streets and sidewalks. The court thought that the accosting of pedestrians and the consequent interruption of traffic on busy sidewalks was an evil that could be so regulated, although the noncommercial solicitation of subscriptions by religious groups could not be prohibited (see infra, §521). (75 C.A.2d 800.) (See People v. Uffindell (1949) 90 C.A.2d Supp. 881, 882, 202 P.2d 874 [ordinance prohibiting deposit of advertising matter in parked motor vehicle]; In re Porterfield (1946) 28 C.2d 91, 101, 168 P.2d 706 [freedom of speech does not protect "commercial activities to which speech is only an incident or means"].)

In Breard v. Alexandria (1951) 341 U.S. 622, 71 S.Ct. 920, 95 L.Ed. 1233, the same theory was applied in upholding an ordinance prohibiting house-to-house magazine solicitors. The Court distinguished Martin v. Struthers (1943) 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 87 L.Ed. 1313, infra, §521, as involving no element of the commercial, and recognized that the case called for a balancing of the conveniences between some householder's desire for privacy and the publisher's right to distribute publications in a way thought productive of the best results. "[T]hose communities that have found these methods of sale obnoxious may control them by ordinance. It would be, it seems to us, a misuse of the great guarantees of free speech and free press to use that guarantee to force a community to admit the solicitors of publications to the home premises of its residents." (71 S.Ct. 934, 95 L.Ed. 1249.) (See Varanelli v. Structural Pest Control Bd. (1969) 1 C.A.3d 217, 226, 81 C.R. 492 [Structural Pest Control Act (B. & P.C. 8500 et seq.) validly applied to door-to-door solicitors of free structural pest control inspections]; 65 Harv. L. Rev. 137 [Breard]; 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 109 [same].)

(2) Valid Regulation of Newspaper Advertising. In Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Com. on Human Relations

(1973) 443 U.S. 376, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669, petitioner, a newspaper, printed "help wanted" notices in sex-designated columns pursuant to its advertisers' requests, although it added a general notice that, unless a specific ad indicated otherwise, readers should not assume that the jobs listed were limited to one sex. A city ordinance prohibited publication of advertisements discriminating on the basis of sex, and the City Commission on Human Relations ordered petitioner to classify its advertisements without reference to sex. Held, the order, as restricted to advertisements within the scope of the ordinance, was valid.

(a) Under Valentine v. Chrestensen, supra, purely commercial advertisements are not protected by the First Amendment, although the question is not resolved by the mere form of the message, for under New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, infra, §426, an advertisement can be addressed to social and political issues. Here, however, it is clear that the advertisements come within the Chrestensen category. "None expresses a position on whether, as a matter of social policy, certain positions ought to be filled by members of one or the other sex, nor does any of them criticize the Ordinance or the Commission's enforcement practices. Each is no more than a proposal of possible employment. The advertisements are thus classic examples of commercial speech." (93 S.Ct. 2559, 37 L.Ed.2d 677.)

(b) The ordinance did not unconstitutionally restrict petitioner's editorial judgment on placement of the advertisement. "Nothing in a sex-designated column heading sufficiently dissociates the designation from the want-ads placed beneath it to make the placement severable for First Amendment purposes from the want-ads themselves. The combination, which conveys essentially the same message as an overtly discriminatory want-ad, is in practical effect an integrated commercial statement." (93 S.Ct. 2560, 37 L.Ed.2d 678.)

(c) There is no merit in the suggestion that the distinction between commercial and other speech should be abrogated in this case because of the importance of exchange of the information. "Any First Amendment interest which might be served by advertising an ordinary commercial proposal and which might arguably outweigh the governmental interest supporting the regulation is altogether absent when the commercial activity itself is illegal and the restriction on advertising is incidental to a valid limitation on economic activity." (93 S.Ct. 2561, 37 L.Ed.2d 679.)

Four dissenting justices objected to extension of the Chrestensen doctrine to the area of editorial layout, and also viewed the Commission's orders as an impermissible prior restraint. (93 S.Ct. 2562, 37 L.Ed.2d 681.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 153; 26 Hastings L. J. 745.)

(3) Valid Regulation of Street Activities. In San Francisco Street Artists Guild v. Scott (1974) 37 C.A.3d 667, 112 C.R. 502, plaintiffs, wishing to sell paintings and sculptures and other artistic creations on San Francisco streets, were denied peddlers' permits. They challenged the ordinance forbidding unlicensed peddling as a violation of First Amendment rights. Held, the ordinance was valid, under Pittsford and Mares, supra. The court distinguished the right to use the streets for dissemination of information, or for expression of political, economic, religious, or social tenets: "[T]he sale of the described artifacts does not reach this high level of expression, even though the items sold may have about them something of the personality of their creators. A good deal of the merchandise sold in department stores, small shops, art galleries, and other commercial establishments is of artistic value and communicates to the purchaser the maker's concepts over and above whatever utilitarian value the articles may have. To hold that First Amendment rights attach to the kind of merchandising described in the pleadings would be to open large segments of public property to private enterprise, because where First Amendment rights are present controls must be held to a minimum." (37 C.A.3d 671.)

(4) Invalid Regulations. In Bigelow v. Virginia (1975) 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600, a Virginia statute made it a misdemeanor, by sale or circulation of a publication, to encourage the procuring of an abortion. Defendant, editor of a weekly newspaper, published an advertisement of "Women's Pavilion," a legal institution in New York City, offering appropriate medical help for women with unwanted pregnancies. Held, the statute, as applied in this case, infringed First Amendment rights. (a) Defendant had standing to challenge the constitutionality of the statute, because he complained of an injury to himself as an editor and publisher of a newspaper. (95 S.Ct. 2230, 44 L.Ed.2d 609; see supra, §85.) (b) Valentine v. Chrestensen, supra, as interpreted in later cases, does not support the broad proposition that regulation of commercial advertising is immune from constitutional challenge. (95 S.Ct. 2232, 44 L.Ed.2d 610.) (c) Both Chrestensen and Pittsburg Press, supra, are distinguishable. The advertisement in the instant case contained factual information of potential interest and value to a diverse audience about legally sanctioned activity in another state. (95 S.Ct. 2233, 44 L.Ed.2d 612.) (d) If the Virginia statute were upheld, that state could exert its power over a wide variety of national publications or interstate newspapers, and other states might do the same, thereby impairing the proper functioning of these publications. (95 S.Ct. 2236, 44 L.Ed.2d 615.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 111; 12 A.L.R.4th 851 [validity of restrictions on distribution of commercial advertising to private residences after Bigelow v. Virginia].)

In Young v. Municipal Court (1971) 16 C.A.3d 766, 94 C.R. 331, a Sacramento ordinance prohibited peddling or giving away goods or wares "along or upon" public roads and highways in the unincorporated area of the county. The legislative finding on which it was based declared that hawking articles on public streets interferes with traffic flow and creates danger. Petitioner was arrested for sitting on a sidewalk and displaying an activist periodical for sale to passing motorists. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutionally overbroad. (a) It covered peddling not only on busy avenues but also on quiet residential streets with little automobile traffic; (b) it prohibited pedestrian-addressed activities when a restriction on vehicle-addressed activities would have served its purpose. (16 C.A.3d 770.)

In People v. Singer (1975) 50 C.A.3d Supp. 9, 123 C.R. 460, a Los Angeles ordinance prohibited commercial activity at the Los Angeles International Airport without a permit from a board; and the latter granted Host, a concessionaire, the exclusive license to sell newspapers at the airport. Held, the ordinance was void. "The city has, in effect, attempted to give Host the power to limit distribution to such newspapers as it selects, including selection on the basis of 'the content of the ideas sought to be expressed.' ... Such discretion cannot be constitutionally imparted to Host." (50 C.A.3d Supp. 13.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

a. In General.

2. Virginia State Board Case.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 325

[§ 325] Virginia State Board Case.

In Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council (1976) 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346, the Court held that commercial speech, in this case advertising the prices of prescription drugs, was within the protection of the First Amendment and not subject to prohibition by state law. A Virginia statute made it unprofessional conduct for a licensed pharmacist to advertise the price or terms for drugs dispensed only by prescription. This action was brought by consumers of prescription drugs to enjoin the state regulatory board from enforcing the regulation. The district court declared the statute void and issued the injunction. Held, affirmed.

(a) Right of recipient of communication. The challenge to constitutionality was properly made by the plaintiffs as recipients of the information. Prior decisions have made it clear that "the protection afforded is to the communication, to its source and to its recipients both." (96 S.Ct. 1823, 48 L.Ed.2d 355, citing Lamont v. Postmaster General of the United States (1965) 381 U.S. 301, 85 S.Ct. 1493, 14 L.Ed.2d 398, infra, §370.) Hence: "If there is a right to advertise, there is a reciprocal right to receive the advertising, and it may be asserted by these appellees." (96 S.Ct. 1823, 48 L.Ed.2d 355.)

(b) Prior decisions on commercial speech. Valentine v. Chrestensen (1942) 316 U.S. 52, 62 S.Ct. 920, 86 L.Ed. 1262 and Breard v. Alexandria (1951) 341 U.S. 622, 71 S.Ct. 920, 95 L.Ed. 1233, supra, §324, indicated that commercial speech is not protected by the First Amendment; and in later opinions the court sometimes stressed the fact that the communications involved were not "purely commercial." But the simplistic approach of Breard, criticized by some members of the Court, was avoided in Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Com. on Human Relations (1973) 443 U.S. 376, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669, supra, §324; and in Bigelow v. Virginia (1975) 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600, supra, §324, "the notion of unprotected 'commercial speech' all but passed from the scene." (96 S.Ct. 1824, 48 L.Ed.2d 357.)

(c) Issue presented in this case. The element of "public interest" in the commercial publication in Bigelow is not involved here. "Our pharmacist does not wish to editorialize on any subject, cultural, philosophical, or political. He does not wish to report any particularly newsworthy fact, or to make generalized observations even about commercial matters. The 'idea' he wishes to communicate is simply this: 'I will sell you the X prescription drug at the Y price.'" (96 S.Ct. 1825, 48 L.Ed.2d 358.)

(d) Interests involved: parties and society.

(1) The advertiser's interest is purely economic. But this does not disqualify him from First Amendment protection: Participants in a labor dispute have economic interests, but both employee and employer have First Amendment rights of expression on the merits of their particular dispute. (96 S.Ct. 1826, 48 L.Ed.2d 359.)

(2) The particular consumer's interest in the free flow of commercial information "may be as keen, if not keener by far, than his interest in the day's most urgent political debate." The suppression of prescription drug price information has its harshest effects on the poor, the sick, and the aged; and, with drug prices varying as strikingly as they do, information "could mean the alleviation of physical pain or the enjoyment of basic necessities." (96 S.Ct. 1826, 1827, 48 L.Ed.2d 359, 360.)

(3) Society may have a strong interest in the free flow of commercial information, and no line can be drawn between publicly "interesting" or "important" commercial advertising and the opposite kind. "So long as we preserve a predominantly free enterprise economy, the allocation of our resources in large measure will be made through numerous private economic decisions. It is a matter of public interest that those decisions, in the aggregate, be intelligent and well informed." And "it is also indispensable to the formation of intelligent opinions as to how that system ought to be regulated or altered." (96 S.Ct. 1827, 48 L.Ed.2d 360.)

(e) Asserted justifications for advertising ban. The supporters of the legislation argue that it is necessary for the maintenance of a high degree of professionalism on the part of licensed pharmacists, and that price advertising may place in jeopardy the pharmacist's expertise, lower the quality of their professional services, and impair the stable pharmacist-customer relationships. These considerations were formerly held sufficient to sustain advertising bans attacked on due process and equal protection grounds, but they are inadequate to overcome a First Amendment challenge. The state regulatory agencies can see that professional standards are observed, and the paternalistic approach of the legislation--based on the advantages of keeping people in ignorance of the entirely lawful terms that competing pharmacists are offering--is unacceptable. "In this sense, the justifications Virginia has offered for suppressing the flow of prescription drug price information, far from persuading us that the flow is not protected by the First Amendment, have re-enforced our view that it is. We so hold." (96 S.Ct. 1830, 48 L.Ed.2d 363.)

(f) Permitted regulations of commercial speech. Some forms of regulation are constitutional; e.g., time, place, and manner restrictions that leave alternative channels for communication available, and prohibition of false or deceptive advertising, or advertising of illegal transactions. (96 S.Ct. 1830, 48 L.Ed.2d 363; see infra, §334.)

(g) Other professions: questions left open. This case deals solely with the regulation of commercial advertising by pharmacists. "Although we express no opinion as to other professions, the distinctions, historical and functional, between professions, may require consideration of quite different factors. Physicians and lawyers, for example, do not dispense standardized products; they render professional services of almost infinite variety and nature, with the consequent enhanced possibility for confusion and deception if they were to undertake certain kinds of advertising." (96 S.Ct. 1831, 48 L.Ed.2d 365, footnote 25.)

Two justices filed brief concurring opinions (96 S.Ct. 1831, 1832, 48 L.Ed.2d 365, 366); one dissenter doubted the standing of plaintiffs to raise the issue, and thought that the majority had unduly extended First Amendment protections (96 S.Ct. 1835, 48 L.Ed.2d 370). (See Board of Med. Examiners v. Terminal-Hudson Electronics (1977) 73 C.A.3d 376, 385, 140 C.R. 757 [statutes prohibiting price advertising by registered dispensing opticians; following Virginia State Bd.]; 90 Harv. L. [§ 326] No Least-Restrictive-Means Test.

In Board of Trustees of the State University of New York v. Fox (1989) 492 U.S. 469, 109 S.Ct. 3028, 106 L.Ed.2d 388, the question was "whether governmental restrictions upon commercial speech are invalid if they go beyond the least restrictive means to achieve the desired end." (109 S.Ct. 3030, 106 L.Ed.2d 398.) The Court rejected this test.

(a) "We have refrained from imposing a least-restrictive-means requirement--even where core political speech is at issue--in assessing the validity of so-called time, place and manner restrictions. We uphold such restrictions so long as they are 'narrowly tailored' to serve a significant governmental interest, ... a standard that we have not interpreted to require elimination of less restrictive alternatives. ... Similarly with respect to Government regulation of expressive conduct, including conduct expressive of political views," regulation must be narrowly tailored to serve an important or substantial state interest, and must not burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further that interest. While these rules do not govern here, "we think it would be incompatible with the asserted 'subordinate position [of commercial speech] in the scale of First Amendment values' to apply a more rigid standard in the present context." (109 S.Ct. 3033, 106 L.Ed.2d 402.)

(b) "In sum, while we have insisted that 'the free flow of commercial information is valuable enough to justify imposing on would-be regulators the costs of distinguishing ... the harmless from the harmful,' ... we have not gone so far as to impose upon them the burden of demonstrating that the distinguishment is 100% complete, or that the manner of restriction is absolutely the least severe that will achieve the desired end. What our decisions require is a 'fit' between the legislature's ends and the means chosen to accomplish those ends, ... a fit that is not necessarily perfect, but reasonable; that represents not necessarily the single best disposition but one whose scope is 'in proportion to the interest served,' ... ; that employs not necessarily the least restrictive means but ... a means narrowly tailored to achieve the desired objective. Within those bounds we leave it to governmental decisionmakers to judge what manner of regulation may best be employed." (109 S.Ct. 3034, 106 L.Ed.2d 404.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

b. Restrictions on Advertising and Publicity.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 328

[§ 328] In General.

In United States v. Edge Broadcasting Co. (1993) 509 U.S. 418, 113 S.Ct. 2696, 125 L.Ed.2d 345, the issue was "whether federal statutes that prohibit the broadcast of lottery advertising by a broadcaster licensed to a State that does not allow lotteries, while allowing such broadcasting by a broadcaster licensed to a State that sponsors a lottery, are ... consistent with the First Amendment." (113 S.Ct. 2700, 125 L.Ed.2d 351.)

In holding the statutes valid, the Court analyzed and applied the four-factor test for commercial speech set forth in Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 557, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341, infra, §358. (113 S.Ct. 2703, 125 L.Ed.2d 355.) And in response to respondent Edge's claim that the statutes violated Central Hudson only as applied to it, the Court criticized "the piecemeal approach" as vitiating the Government's ability to accommodate states with differing policies. (113 S.Ct. 2708, 125 L.Ed.2d 360.) "Edge has chosen to transmit from a location near the border between two jurisdictions with different rules, and rests its case on the spillover from the jurisdiction across the border. Were we to adopt Edge's approach, we would treat a station that is close to the line as if it were on the other side of it, effectively extending the legal regime of Virginia inside North Carolina. One result ... might well be that additional North Carolina communities, farther from the Virginia border, would receive broadcast lottery advertising from Edge. Broadcasters licensed to these communities, as well as other broadcasters serving Elizabeth City, would then be able to complain that lottery advertising from Edge and other similar broadcasters renders the federal statute ineffective as applied to them. Because the approach Edge advocates has no logical stopping point once state boundaries are ignored, this process might be repeated until the policy of supporting North Carolina's ban on lotteries would be seriously eroded. We are unwilling to start down that road." (113 S.Ct. 2708, 125 L.Ed.2d 360, 361.)

Two justices joined in a brief concurring opinion (113 S.Ct. 2708, 125 L.Ed.2d 361), and two others joined in a dissenting opinion (113 S.Ct. 2708, 125 L.Ed.2d 361). (See Kaufman v. ACS Systems (2003) 110 C.A.4th 886, 911, 2 C.R.3d 296 [restrictions on advertisers' use of unsolicited faxes did not violate advertisers' free speech rights; government has substantial interest in regulating fax advertisements, which tie up fax machines, interfere with receipt of legitimate messages, and unfairly shift cost of advertising to consumer].)

Other cases have held the manner of regulation unconstitutional. (See Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products Corp. (1983) 463 U.S. 60, 103 S.Ct. 2875, 2880, 77 L.Ed.2d 469, 483 [federal statute prohibiting mailing of unsolicited advertisements for contraceptive held unconstitutional]; Thompson v. Western States Med. Center (2002) 535 U.S. 357, 122 S.Ct. 1497, 1504, 152 L.Ed.2d 563, 574 [under Central Hudson test, federal ban on advertising of pharmacies' drug compounding services, i.e., mixing medicines tailored to needs of individual patients, is unconstitutional; Government had means other than restricting speech to achieve interest in preventing large scale manufacturing of unapproved drugs]; 37 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1389 [Thompson].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

b. Restrictions on Advertising and Publicity.

2. Advertising by Lawyers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 329

[§ 329] Advertising by Lawyers.

In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona (1977) 433 U.S. 350, 97 S.Ct. 2691, 53 L.Ed.2d 810, the Arizona Supreme Court Disciplinary Rule against advertising by attorneys (taken from former A.B.A. Rule 2-101(B); see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §§482, 577) was challenged as a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the First Amendment. The Court rejected the antitrust attack, holding that the state-action exemption applied to this regulation imposed by the Arizona Supreme Court. (97 S.Ct. 2697, 2698, 53 L.Ed.2d 822.) The First Amendment challenge was upheld under the reasoning of Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council (1976) 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346, supra, §325. However, Virginia State Bd. reserved judgment as to other professions, and the instant case deals expressly with restrictions on price advertising by attorneys.

(a) Justifications for restrictions insufficient. The following justifications were examined and rejected:

First, the adverse effect on professionalism; i.e., the argument that price advertising will bring about commercialization, adversely affect the profession's service orientation, erode the client's trust, and tarnish the dignified public image of the profession. Answer: "[W]e find the postulated connection between advertising and the erosion of true professionalism to be severely strained. At its core, the argument presumes that attorneys must conceal from themselves and from their clients the real-life fact that lawyers earn their livelihood at the bar. We suspect that few attorneys engage in such self-deception." Also, the ABA Code (former E.C. 2-19; see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §426) advises that an attorney should promptly reach a clear agreement with his or her client as to the fee. "If the commercial basis of the relationship is to be promptly disclosed on ethical grounds, once the client is in the office, it seems inconsistent to condemn the candid revelation of the same information before he arrives at that office." (97 S.Ct. 2701, 53 L.Ed.2d 826.) Moreover, the absence of advertising may be seen to reflect the profession's failure to reach out and serve the community; and cynicism may be created by the fact that the profession has publicly eschewed advertising "while condoning the actions of the attorney who structures his social or civic associations so as to provide contacts with potential clients." (97 S.Ct. 2702, 53 L.Ed.2d 828.)

Second, the inherently misleading nature of attorney advertising; i.e., that services are so individualized as to prevent informed comparison, the consumer is unable to determine in advance what services he or she needs, and advertising will highlight irrelevant factors and fail to show the relevant factor of skill. Answer: "The only services that lend themselves to advertising are the routine ones: the uncontested divorce, the simple adoption, the uncontested personal bankruptcy, the change of name, and the like." And the argument that advertising does not provide a consumer with complete information assumes that the public is not sophisticated enough to realize the limitations of advertising, and is better kept in ignorance than trusted with correct but incomplete information. The preferred remedy is more disclosure, rather than less; it is the bar's role to assure that the public is sufficiently informed. (97 S.Ct. 2704, 53 L.Ed.2d 828.)

Third, the adverse effect on the administration of justice; i.e., that advertising stirs up litigation. Answer: "[W]e cannot accept the notion that it is always better for a person to suffer a wrong silently than to redress it by legal action." The middle 70% of our population is not being served adequately by the legal profession, in part because of the fear of the cost and the inability to locate a suitable lawyer. Advertising is the traditional mechanism in a free-market economy for a supplier to inform a potential purchaser of the availability and terms of exchange, and a rule allowing restrained advertising would be in accord with the bar's obligation to facilitate the process of intelligent selection of lawyers and to assist in making legal services fully available. (97 S.Ct. 2705, 53 L.Ed.2d 831.)

Fourth, the undesirable economic effects of advertising; i.e., that it will increase overhead costs with a resulting increase in fees, and will create a substantial entry barrier deterring or preventing young attorneys from penetrating the market. Answer: Both arguments are unpersuasive. It is entirely possible that advertising will serve to reduce the cost of legal services, and the ban in fact serves to perpetuate the market position of established attorneys. (97 S.Ct. 2706, 53 L.Ed.2d 831.)

Fifth, the adverse effect of advertising on the quality of service; i.e., that the attorney will provide a standard package at a set price regardless of whether it fits the client's needs. Answer: Restraints on advertising are an ineffective way of deterring shoddy work, and the advertisement of a standardized fee does not necessarily mean that the services offered are undesirably standardized. "Even if advertising leads to the creation of 'legal clinics' like that of appellants'--clinics that emphasize standardized procedures for routine problems--it is possible that such clinics will improve service by reducing the likelihood of error." (97 S.Ct. 2706, 53 L.Ed.2d 832.)

Sixth, the difficulties of enforcement: i.e., that, because the public may be particularly susceptible to misleading or deceptive advertising, a regulatory agency will be required and the overseeing of advertising will be burdensome. Answer: It is incongruous for the opponents of advertising to extol the altruism of the profession while asserting that its members will seize the opportunity to mislead. Most lawyers will abide by their oaths, and it will be in their interest--as in other cases of misconduct--to assist in weeding out the few who abuse their trust. (97 S.Ct. 2706, 2707, 53 L.Ed.2d 832, 833.)

(b) Overbreadth analysis inapplicable. In the usual case involving an unconstitutional restraint on speech, it is unnecessary to show that the specific acts of the challenger are protected by the First Amendment. But the overbreadth doctrine (see infra, §408) should not be applied to professional advertising, and it is therefore necessary to consider appellants' advertisement to see whether it is misleading and therefore unprotected. On an examination (see Appendix, 97 S.Ct. 2710, 53 L.Ed.2d 837), it is clear that the advertisement contains nothing that would justify its suppression. (97 S.Ct. 2708, 53 L.Ed.2d 835.)

(c) Permissible limitations on advertising. This holding does not preclude restraints on false, deceptive, or misleading advertising, such as claims as to quality of services, which are not susceptible to measurement or verification, or on in-person solicitation. "[W]e recognize that many of the problems in defining the boundary between deceptive and nondeceptive advertising remain to be resolved, and we expect that the bar will have a special role to play in assuring that advertising by attorneys flows both freely and cleanly." (97 S.Ct. 2709, 53 L.Ed.2d 836.) Also, there may be reasonable restrictions on the time, place, and manner of advertising; and the special problems of advertising on the electronic broadcast media will warrant special consideration. (97 S.Ct. 2709, 53 L.Ed.2d 836.)

Four justices concurred in part and dissented in part in three opinions. (97 S.Ct 2709, 2711, 2719, 53 L.Ed.2d 838, 839, 849.) (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 198.)

In Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Assn. (1978) 436 U.S. 447, 98 S.Ct. 1912, 56 L.Ed.2d 444, the Court upheld state disciplinary rules prohibiting personal solicitation of professional employment by lawyers. However, In re Primus (1978) 436 U.S. 412, 98 S.Ct. 1893, 56 L.Ed.2d 417, distinguishing Ohralik, reversed a disciplinary judgment where there was no solicitation for pecuniary gain but an offer of free legal assistance in connection with an allegedly unconstitutional invasion of a right--an expression of personal political beliefs. (For full discussion of opinions, see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §§586, 587; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 185; 13 Hastings Const. L. Q. 487.)

In Zauderer v. Office of Disciplinary Counsel of Supreme Court of Ohio (1985) 471 U.S. 626, 105 S.Ct. 2265, 85 L.Ed.2d 652, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §578, the Court held that an attorney cannot be disciplined for soliciting legal business through printed advertising that contains truthful and nondeceptive legal advice on a specific legal problem and uses accurate and nondeceptive illustrations. (105 S.Ct. 2276, 2280, 2281, 85 L.Ed.2d 665, 670, 671.) (See 99 Harv. L. Rev. 193; 13 Hastings Const. L. Q. 487.) (Cf. Leoni v. State Bar (1985) 39 C.3d 609, 217 C.R. 423, 704 P.2d 183, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §579 [California's (former) disciplinary Rule 2-101(A) upheld as permissible regulation of misleading advertising; see 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §482 et seq.].)

Zauderer was followed by a divided court in Shapero v. Kentucky Bar Assn. (1988) 486 U.S. 466, 108 S.Ct. 1916, 100 L.Ed.2d 475, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §578, holding invalid a Kentucky rule prohibiting the mailing or delivery of written advertisements "precipitated by a specific event or occurrence involving or relating to the addressee or addressees as distinct from the general public." Petitioner, a member of the bar, proposed to send a letter to potential clients who have had foreclosure suits filed against them, advising them that they could have foreclosure postponed, and to call his office for free information. "The First Amendment does not permit a ban on certain speech merely because it is more efficient; the State may not constitutionally ban a particular letter on the theory that to mail it only to those to whom it would most interest is somehow inherently objectionable." (108 S.Ct. 1921, 100 L.Ed.2d 484.)

The opinion concludes: "[S]o long as the First Amendment protects the right to solicit legal business, the State may claim no substantial interest in restricting truthful and nondeceptive lawyer solicitations to those least likely to be read by the recipient." (108 S.Ct. 1924, 100 L.Ed.2d 488.) (See People v. Morse (1993) 21 C.A.4th 259, 266, 25 C.R.2d 816 [permanent injunction enjoining attorney from mailing solicitations to public concerning homestead declarations without complying with B. & P.C. 17537.6, which prohibits untrue or misleading statements in such solicitations, did not violate his right to free speech]; In re Morse (1995) 11 C.4th 184, 199, 203, 44 C.R.2d 620, 900 P.2d 1170, 1 Cal. 3. Publicizing Services of Legal Clinic.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 330

[§ 330] Publicizing Services of Legal Clinic.

In Jacoby v. State Bar (1977) 19 C.3d 359, 138 C.R. 77, 562 P.2d 1326, decided before Bates v. State Bar of Arizona (1977) 433 U.S. 350, 97 S.Ct. 2691, 53 L.Ed.2d 810, supra, §329, the court expressed similar views (19 C.3d 378 et seq.), but did not actually reach the issue of the constitutionality of (former) Rule 2-101, which prohibited professional advertising. (19 C.3d 363, 380.) Petitioners opened a law office called the "Legal Clinic of Jacoby and Meyers" to provide low cost legal services to people unable to meet indigency standards of legal aid programs but not affluent enough to retain most law firms. They instituted a number of cost-saving measures, which attracted the attention of the media, and petitioners participated in interviews and conferences with news reporters. As a result, articles appeared in newspapers and magazines describing the operation. The State Bar Disciplinary Board recommended a brief suspension from practice, on a finding that petitioners' conduct was principally directed to solicitation of clients. Held, the finding was unsupportable, and the conduct was not subject to discipline.

(a) The basic issue, whether a lawyer may be prohibited from participating in the preparation of a news article about himself or herself, has had little judicial attention, and must be decided on an analysis of principles developed in First Amendment cases. First, lawyers have the same freedom as other citizens. "Petitioners have a right not only to respond to questions from the media on important issues, but also a right to seek out the media to express their views." (19 C.3d 368.) Second, society has a right to hear their beliefs; i.e., the protection of the First Amendment is given to both the source and the recipients of the communication. (19 C.3d 368.) "[T]he threat of discipline has in many cases deterred lawyers from talking to journalists, and hence has prevented laymen from learning important facts about the legal profession. While this aura of secrecy may create a mystique about lawyers, surely it is preferable to encourage freedom of information." (19 C.3d 369.)

(b) The State Bar, citing Belli v. State Bar (1974) 10 C.3d 824, 112 C.R. 527, 519 P.2d 575, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §581, contended that a communication is outside the scope of First Amendment protection if it contains any language that can objectively be viewed as directed toward solicitation of clients. But Belli, read in connection with Bigelow v. Virginia (1975) 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600, supra, §324, requires consideration of the communication in its entirety. (19 C.3d 370, 371.) "If the State Bar's interpretation of Belli were adopted, a lawyer speaking to the media would be compelled to measure his every word. As even the most articulate political candidates have not infrequently discovered, slips of the tongue and remarks later reconsidered are not uncommon in press interviews. While this fact of life has rarely discouraged office seekers, it might have a more sobering effect on attorneys, whose gaffes could cause them not mere political embarrassment but loss of livelihood. Lawyers by training are a cautious breed. If they are aware that any statements they make to the press will be scrutinized line by line by bar authorities in order to uncover a subtle intent to solicit business, their reaction will be predictable: they will avoid the 'prohibited zone' by simply declining press interviews altogether Such a result is unacceptable in a free society." (19 C.3d 371.)

(c) The State Bar argued that petitioners continued to engage in interviews even though articles had focused on them rather than on the general concept of the legal clinic. The underlying assumption of this argument--that the First Amendment protects only abstract discussion--has long been repudiated; and news reporters naturally sought to attract reader interest in an important public issue by reporting on the actual operation of petitioners' legal clinic. "That petitioners may also have suspected the resulting publicity could attract clients does not strip their communication of First Amendment protection. To hold otherwise would subject to motivational scrutiny lawyers who write books about their major cases--all of which, by their accounts, resulted in glorious victories, or at least valiant defeats; attorneys who stand as candidates in political campaigns which have little chance of success but inevitably make their names known to the public; and lawyers who participate in community activities likely to engender favorable publicity." (19 C.3d 373.)

(d) Even to the extent that petitioners' statements could be interpreted as subtle solicitation, they still have First Amendment value, under the decisions on furnishing group legal services (see infra, §383) and on prescription drug advertising (see supra, §325). (19 C.3d 374, 375.)

4. Advertising by Gambling Casino.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 331

[§ 331] Advertising by Gambling Casino.

In Posadas De Puerto Rico Associates v. Tourism Co. of Puerto Rico (1986) 478 U.S. 328, 106 S.Ct. 2968, 92 L.Ed.2d 266, the Puerto Rico Legislature, to promote tourism and obtain additional revenue, legalized certain forms of casino gambling, but prohibited advertising of these gambling facilities to residents of Puerto Rico. Plaintiff, doing business in Puerto Rico as Condado Holiday Inn Hotel and Sands Casino, sought a declaratory judgment that the statute and regulation impermissibly suppressed commercial speech. The Puerto Rico superior court entered a judgment narrowly construing the statute to permit certain kinds of advertising and the Puerto Rico Supreme Court dismissed plaintiff's appeal. The U.S. Supreme Court, accepting the narrowing construction, rejected the constitutional challenge.

(1) Advertising of casino gambling concerns a lawful activity and is not misleading or fraudulent. (106 S.Ct. 2976, 92 L.Ed.2d 280.)

(2) Puerto Rico has a substantial interest at stake: reduction of demand for casino gambling by its residents. This is the same concern that has motivated the vast majority of the 50 states to prohibit casino gambling. (106 S.Ct. 2976, 92 L.Ed.2d 280, 281.)

(3) The challenged restrictions directly advance the government's interests. (106 S.Ct. 2977, 92 L.Ed.2d 281.) The argument that the restrictions are underinclusive because other traditional kinds of gambling may be advertised to residents is misplaced. The Legislature's interest is not necessarily to reduce demand for all games of chance, but to reduce demand for casino gambling; i.e., the Legislature reasonably concluded that the risks associated with casino gambling were significantly greater than those associated with the more traditional kinds. (106 S.Ct. 2977, 92 L.Ed.2d 281.)

(4) Plaintiff contended that a program aimed at discouraging casino gambling would be an adequate, less extensive means of accomplishing the legislative objective, but it was for the Legislature to decide whether this "counterspeech" policy would be as effective as a restriction on advertising. (106 S.Ct. 2978, 92 L.Ed.2d 282.)

(b) Carey v. Population Services, Int. (1977) 431 U.S. 678, 97 S.Ct. 2010, 52 L.Ed.2d 675 and Bigelow v. Virginia (1975) 421 U.S. 809, 95 S.Ct. 2222, 44 L.Ed.2d 600, supra, §324, are distinguishable. In these cases, the underlying conduct that was the subject of the advertising restrictions (contraceptives, abortion clinic) was constitutionally protected; here, casino gambling by residents could have been prohibited, and the greater power to ban includes the lesser power to prohibit advertising. (106 S.Ct. 2979, 92 L.Ed.2d 283.)

(d) Plaintiff also contends that having chosen to legalize casino gambling for residents, the Legislature cannot use restrictions on advertising to reduce the demand for casino gambling. The answer is that, because the government could prohibit the conduct, it may take the less intrusive step of allowing it with restrictions on advertising. (106 S.Ct. 2979, 92 L.Ed.2d 284.)

Four justices dissented in two opinions disagreeing with the majority on all points. (106 S.Ct. 2980, 2986, 92 L.Ed.2d 285, 292.) (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 172.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

6. Required Funding for Generic Advertising.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 333

[§ 333] Required Funding for Generic Advertising.

In Glickman v. Wileman Bros. & Elliott (1997) 521 U.S. 457, 117 S.Ct. 2130, 2141, 138 L.Ed.2d 585, 604, a case of first impression, fruit producers and handlers challenged mandatory financial contributions for generic advertising intended to stimulate consumer demand for an agricultural product in a regulated market. Held, the contributions are consistent with the regulatory goals of the overall statutory scheme and do not abridge freedom of speech. The Court of Appeals' reliance on the test outlined in Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 557, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341, infra, §358, was inconsistent with the nature and purpose of the collective action program at issue. (117 S.Ct. 2141, 138 L.Ed.2d 603.)

Four justices dissented in two separate opinions. (117 S.Ct. 2142, 2155, 138 L.Ed.2d 605, 621.) (See United States v. United Foods (2001) 533 U.S. 405, 121 S.Ct. 2334, 2338, 150 L.Ed.2d 438, 445 [distinguishing Glickman; federal statute mandating assessments for generic mushroom advertising that was not part of comprehensive regulatory scheme was unconstitutional under First Amendment]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 319 [Glickman]; 186 A.L.R. Fed 533 [Act advancing generic advertising of beef].)

In Gerawan Farming v. Lyons (2000) 24 C.4th 468, 101 C.R.2d 470, 12 P.3d 720 (Gerawan I), another case of first impression, the court considered whether a marketing order issued by California's Secretary of Food and Agriculture, which compelled funding of generic advertising by plum producers and handlers, violated plaintiff grower's free speech rights under either the First Amendment or Cal. Const., Art. I. Held, judgment on the pleadings vacated and case remanded. No right to freedom of speech is implicated under the First Amendment, but the order does implicate a right to free speech under Article I.

(a) First Amendment.

(1) The First Amendment right to freedom of speech provides limited protection to commercial speech. It "affords such protection as it does to 'truthful and nonmisleading ... messages about lawful products and services.' ... It affords none whatsoever to other sorts of messages about other sorts of products and services." (24 C.4th 487, quoting 44 Liquormart v. Rhode Island (1996) 517 U.S. 484, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 134 L.Ed.2d 711.) "Just as speech results from what a speaker chooses to say and what he chooses not to say, so too it results from what speech a speaker chooses to fund and what speech he chooses not to fund." (24 C.4th 488.) It would appear that, "without more, the First Amendment's right to freedom of speech would not allow compelling one who engages in commercial speech to fund speech in the form of advertising what he would otherwise not, when his message is about a lawful product or service and is not otherwise false and misleading." (24 C.4th 499.) However, Glickman concluded that the marketing order involved in that case did not violate the First Amendment right to freedom of speech by compelling funding of generic advertising. (24 C.4th 500.) In other words, there is "no First Amendment right to be free of coerced subsidization of commercial speech" whatsoever." (24 C.4th 502, quoting Glickman, dissenting opinion.) "Although the soundness of the Glickman majority's analysis is open to serious question, its authority is not." (24 C.4th 505.)

(2) Here, plaintiff fails to allege facts that would implicate its First Amendment right to freedom of speech under Glickman. (24 C.4th 505.) (a) Plaintiff failed to allege facts that would establish that the marketing order imposed any restraint on its freedom of speech. The fact that the compelled funding reduces the amount of money available to plaintiff for its own advertising is not enough. (b) Plaintiff failed to allege facts that would establish that the marketing order compels it to engage in any speech. The marketing program does not require plaintiff to speak itself, nor to be publicly identified or associated with the marketing board's message. (c) Plaintiff failed to allege facts that would establish that the marketing program compels it to fund any political or ideological speech. Any objection to generic advertising as promoting socialistic or collectivist programs must be dismissed as "trivial." (24 C.4th 506.)

(b) California Constitution.

(1) The right to freedom of speech under the California Constitution is broader and greater than under the First Amendment. (24 C.4th 491; see supra, §312.) Unlike the First Amendment, Cal. Const., Art. I, §2 "specifies a 'right' to freedom of speech explicitly and not merely by implication" (24 C.4th 491); it is unbounded in range, running "against the world, including private parties as well as governmental actors" (24 C.4th 492); and it is unlimited in scope (24 C.4th 493). Further, from the history of Article I, there is "no reason to reject protection for commercial speech, at least in the form of truthful and nonmisleading messages about lawful products and services." (24 C.4th 496.)

(2) Here, plaintiff alleges facts "to the effect that it produces and handles plums; plums constitute a lawful product; it has developed, and uses, a brand for marketing purposes; it engages in commercial speech about its own branded plums through advertising; its message is not false or misleading; it is nevertheless compelled by the California Plum Marketing Program to fund commercial speech in the form of generic advertising about plums as a commodity against its will; and the compulsion of funding reduces the amount of money available for its own advertising." These "factual allegations are sufficient at least to implicate its article I right to freedom of speech." (24 C.4th 510.) The advertising "is intended not to prevent or correct any otherwise false or misleading message in the interest of consumer protection, but solely to develop and promote sales in the interest of producer welfare." (24 C.4th 510.)

Three justices joined in a lengthy dissent, writing that the challenged marketing program should be upheld under both the federal and state Constitutions. (24 C.4th 517.)

In Gerawan Farming v. Kawamura (2004) 33 C.4th 1, 14 C.R.3d 14, 90 P.3d 1179 (Gerawan II), the Court of Appeal on remand held that the generic advertising program for plums was unconstitutional because "it was not supported by a valid governmental interest, owing to the fact that it had to be approved by a private association." The California Supreme Court reaffirmed its holding in Gerawan I that the generic advertising program does not violate the First Amendment. (33 C.4th 20.) However, the court held that other issues could not be decided on the pleadings, and remanded the case for further factfinding on whether the program violates Cal. Const., Art. I, and whether the advertising program constitutes government speech.

(a) The intermediate scrutiny standard articulated in Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 557, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341, infra, §358, applies to the determination whether the program violates Cal. Const., Art. I. "[T]he compelled funding of commercial speech neither warrants application of the strictest scrutiny reserved for such matters as the censorship or compelled utterance of noncommercial speech ... , nor can it pass muster simply because it is rationally based." (33 C.4th 22.)

(b) The first prong of the Central Hudson test is satisfied. The right not to contribute financially to a commercial message is protected by the First Amendment, and plaintiff seeks to exercise a right that has nothing to do with untruthful or misleading speech on its part. (33 C.4th 22.) However, further fact-finding is necessary to determine whether (1) the government has a substantial interest in promoting generic advertising schemes, (2) the scheme directly advances the asserted governmental interest, and (3) the scheme is not more extensive than necessary to serve that interest. (33 C.4th 23.)

(c) The fact that the marketing program must be approved by the growers does not by itself constitutionally invalidate the program. The government still must show that the program "serves a substantial public interest and not merely private interests." (33 C.4th 26.)

(d) As suggested in United Foods, whether the fact that the Secretary of Food and Agriculture must ultimately approve the generic advertising makes the speech that of the government partially depends on whether the approval is pro forma. (33 C.4th 27.) If the message is decided by the Secretary pursuant to statutorily derived regulatory authority, the speech may be considered government speech. (33 C.4th 28.)

Three justices concurred and dissented in two opinions. (33 C.4th 28, 33.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

b. Restrictions on Advertising and Publicity.

7. Deceptive or Misleading Advertising.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 334

[§ 334] Deceptive or Misleading Advertising.

(1) In General. B. & P.C. 17500 et seq., prohibiting false advertising, do not violate the First Amendment. (People v. Superior Court (Olson) (1979) 96 C.A.3d 181, 195, 157 C.R. 628; see People v. Anderson (1991) 235 C.A.3d 586, 589, 591, 286 C.R. 734 [P.C. 653w, requiring disclosure of origin of sound recording when possessed or distributed for gain, is constitutional; state has compelling interest in protecting public from false and deceptive practices of "bootleggers," and statute proscribes only commercial speech, as to which state need only show reasonable relationship between statute and state interest].)

In Ibanez v. Florida Dept. of Business & Professional Regulation, Bd. of Accountancy (1994) 512 U.S. 136, 114 S.Ct. 2084, 129 L.Ed.2d 118, defendant was an attorney practicing law in Florida. She was also a Certified Public Accountant (CPA) and a Certified Financial Planner (CFP), and her advertising and other communications with the public referred to her credentials as a CPA and a CFP. Although the communications were apparently truthful, the state accountancy board reprimanded her for engaging in "false, deceptive, and misleading" advertising. Held, the board failed to carry its burden of showing that defendant's actions were either inherently or potentially misleading, and the board's censure is therefore incompatible with the First Amendment. (114 S.Ct. 2086, 129 L.Ed.2d 123.)

In Kasky v. Nike (2002) 27 C.4th 939, 119 C.R.2d 296, 45 P.3d 243, defendant athletic shoe and apparel manufacturer, in response to adverse publicity, made allegedly false and misleading statements defending its labor practices in advertisements, press releases, and letters to newspapers and universities. Held, the statements are commercial speech that may be regulated.

(a) "When a court must decide whether particular speech may be subjected to laws aimed at preventing false advertising or other forms of commercial deception, categorizing a particular statement as commercial or noncommercial speech requires consideration of three elements: the speaker, the intended audience, and the content of the message." (27 C.4th 960.) Here there is a commercial speaker communicating with actual and potential purchasers of its products about working conditions and labor practices in its own business operations. (27 C.4th 963.)

(b) Government regulation of defendant's speech about working conditions in its factories "is consistent with traditional governmental authority to regulate commercial transactions for the protection of consumers by preventing false and misleading commercial practices. Trade regulation laws have traditionally sought to suppress and prevent not only false or misleading statements about products or services in themselves but also false or misleading statements about where a product was made ... , or by whom." (27 C.4th 964.)

(c) Defendant's speech is not removed from the category of commercial speech even though it is intermingled with noncommercial speech. To the extent defendant's press release and letters discuss policy questions such as the degree to which domestic companies should be responsible for working conditions in factories located in other countries, or what standards ought to be observed in these factories, the statements are noncommercial speech. A content-based regulation of noncommercial messages would be subject to the strict scrutiny test for fully protected speech. But defendant "may not 'immunize false or misleading product information from government regulation simply by including references to public issues.'" (27 C.4th 966, quoting Bolger v. Youngs Drug Products Corp. (1983) 463 U.S. 60, 103 S.Ct. 2875, 77 L.Ed.2d 469.)

Three justices dissented in two opinions, stating that the majority denies defendant the same First Amendment protection its critics enjoy (27 C.4th 970, 971), and that defendant's "commercial statements about its labor practices cannot be separated from its noncommercial statements about a public issue, because its labor practices are the public issue." (27 C.4th 977, 980.) The U.S. Supreme Court initially granted certiorari, but the writ was later dismissed as "improvidently granted." (Nike v. Kasky (2003) 539 U.S. 654, 123 S.Ct. 2554, 156 L.Ed.2d 580.) (See Nagel v. Twin Laboratories (2003) 109 C.A.4th 39, 48, 134 C.R.2d 420 [following Nike; list of product ingredients on label and website is commercial speech that is not protected by First Amendment]; Bernardo v. Planned Parenthood Federation of America (2004) 115 C.A.4th 322, 343, 9 C.R.3d 197 [distinguishing Nike; statements on defendant birth control organization's website that were not made in connection with offer to sell abortion services and did not propose commercial transaction, but rather were educational in nature, asserting defendant's position on disputed scientific and medical issues, did not constitute commercial speech and were protected by First Amendment].)

(2) Use of Trade Name. In Friedman v. Rogers (1979) 440 U.S. 1, 99 S.Ct. 887, 59 L.Ed.2d 100, Texas enacted a statute prohibiting the practice of optometry under an assumed name, trade name, or corporate name. Held, the regulation was constitutional.

(a) Both Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council (1976) 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346, supra, §325, and Bates v. State Bar of Arizona (1977) 433 U.S. 350, 97 S.Ct. 2691, 53 L.Ed.2d 810, supra, §329, dealt with truthful advertising; and both opinions emphasized that some forms of commercial speech regulation are permissible, e.g., restrictions on false, deceptive, and misleading speech. (99 S.Ct. 894, 59 L.Ed.2d 109.)

(b) Use of a trade name is a different form of commercial speech from that considered in Virginia State Bd. and Bates. A trade name conveys no information about the price and nature of the services until it acquires meaning over a period of time, and it can be used to mislead the public. Thus, the trade name of an optometrical practice can remain unchanged despite changes in the staff on whose skill and care the public depends; and an optometrist may assume a new trade name if negligence or misconduct casts a shadow over the old one. Also, by using different trade names at shops under his or her common ownership, an optometrist can give the public the false impression of competition among the shops. (99 S.Ct. 895, 896, 59 L.Ed.2d 111, 112.)

(c) The state's interest in protecting the public from the deceptive and misleading use of optometrical trade names is substantial. And the incidental effect on the content of commercial speech is slight, for the optometrist may advertise his or her services, prices, and method of operation. Thus, the statute does not stifle commercial speech, but "ensures that information regarding optometrical services will be communicated more fully and accurately to consumers than it had been in the past." (99 S.Ct. 897, 59 L.Ed.2d 113, 114.)

(3) False Representation of Professional Status. In Moore v. California State Bd. of Accountancy (1992) 2 C.4th 999, 9 C.R.2d 358, 831 P.2d 798, plaintiffs, not licensed by the State Board of Accountancy as public accountants, nevertheless used the terms "accountant" and "accounting" in referring to the services they offered to the public. The trial court granted the board's request for an injunction under B. & P.C. 5058. The Court of Appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

(a) "California's statutory scheme reserves the practice of public accountancy to the Board's licensees--persons who have been certified as qualified to offer and perform the full gamut of accounting services, and whose education, experience, and ethical qualifications have been established as a prerequisite to licensing. To protect members of the public from the unlicensed practice of public accountancy, section 5058 prohibits the use by an unlicensed person of any designation or term describing the person's profession, or service he or she offers, that is likely to cause a layperson to believe that the provider is licensed." (2 C.4th 1004.)

(b) The board's Regulation 2, implementing the catchall language of B. & P.C. 5058, declares that the generic terms "accountant" and "accounting" are likely to be confused with "certified public accountant" and "public accountant." This regulation appears reasonably necessary to effectuate the purpose and intent behind B. & P.C. 5058. (2 C.4th 1015.) Also, the administrative construction for nearly half a century, and the Legislature's presumed awareness of it, supports this view. (2 C.4th 1017, 1019.)

(c) The statute "may constitutionally ban only those uses of the generic terms 'account' and 'accounting' that stand to potentially mislead the public regarding the user's licensee or nonlicensee status." The evidence here supports the long-standing interpretation of B. & P.C. 5058 "as including within its ban the unqualified use of those terms as potentially misleading, to the public's detriment. In contrast, where the generic terms are used in conjunction with a modifier or modifiers that serve to dispel any possibility of confusion--for example, an express disclaimer stating that the 'accounting' services being offered do not require a state license--their use in such a context may not be constitutionally enjoined." (2 C.4th 1023.)

Three justices dissented in two opinions (2 C.4th 1025, 1027.) (See 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 811 [Moore].)

(4) False Representation on Book or Videotape Cover. In Keimer v. Buena Vista Books (1999) 75 C.A.4th 1220, 1231, 89 C.R.2d 781, the court held that the First Amendment did not protect a publisher from an action under the Unfair Trade Practices Act for false advertising on book and videotape covers that reiterates protected false statements contained in the books and videotapes themselves.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 335

[§ 335] In General.

(1) Cases Holding Manner of Regulation Unconstitutional. The principles of Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council (1976) 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346, supra, §325, were applied in Welton v. Los Angeles (1976) 18 C.3d 497, 134 C.R. 668, 556 P.2d 1119. A Los Angeles ordinance prohibited the sale of merchandise on the street and the sale of a news publication or other printed matter on the roadway of a street, but permitted the sale of news publications on a sidewalk or parkway. Petitioner published a copyrighted map depicting the addresses and routes to movie star homes, and sold the maps to the public on the parkway of a street. She sought declaratory relief, and the trial court held that her activity was commercial speech unprotected by the First Amendment. She was then held in contempt for violation of an injunction against sale of her maps. Held, on habeas corpus, the ordinance was unconstitutionally applied to her.

(a) Under Virginia State Bd., the commercial character of her speech did not remove it from First Amendment protection; and the fact that the map lacked opinion or information of social worth was irrelevant. It was as much entitled to protection as a political pamphlet. (18 C.3d 504.)

(b) The police power may be exercised to control street traffic (18 C.3d 504, citing the text), and the ordinance was therefore valid in its prohibition of the sale of printed matter on the roadway (that part of the street travelled by vehicles). (18 C.3d 505.) But the prohibition of the sale of printed matter on sidewalks and parkways, places historically associated with the exercise of First Amendment rights, was not a proper exercise of police power. (18 C.3d 505.) The ordinance was upheld, however, by construing it to eliminate the overbreadth. (18 C.3d 506, 507; see supra, §119.)

In Linmark Associates v. Willingboro (1977) 431 U.S. 85, 97 S.Ct. 1614, 52 L.Ed.2d 155, the council of the township of Willingboro, a racially integrated residential community, became concerned about a decline in its white population, attributed to "panic selling" by whites who feared that an increase in the black population threatened real estate values. The council adopted an ordinance prohibiting posting "For Sale" or "Sold" signs on all but model homes. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional.

(a) The argument that the ordinance did not prohibit but merely regulated the time, place, and manner of speech is unpersuasive. (1) Although in theory sellers are free to employ other alternatives, their options realistically are relegated to newspaper advertising and listing with real estate agents--both more costly and sometimes less effective than a sign in front of the house. (97 S.Ct. 1618, 52 L.Ed.2d 162.) (2) The ordinance is not genuinely concerned with either the place or manner of speech, for it does not prohibit all lawn signs, and seeks neither an aesthetic objective nor the protection of privacy. "Willingboro has proscribed particular types of signs based on their content because it fears their 'primary' effect--that they will cause those receiving the information to act upon it." (97 S.Ct. 1619, 52 L.Ed.2d 163.)

(b) The argument that the goal of the ordinance is to promote racially integrated housing does not serve to distinguish Virginia State Bd. (1) The record does not show that the prohibition is necessary to assure that the community remains integrated. (2) More important, however, is the fact that the information which residents are prevented from obtaining is of vital interest to them, bearing on one of the most important decisions they have a right to make: where to live. "If dissemination of this information can be restricted, then every locality in the country can suppress any facts that reflect poorly on the locality, so long as a plausible claim can be made that disclosure would cause the recipients of the information to act 'irrationally.'" Virginia Pharmacy denies government such sweeping powers." (97 S.Ct. 1620, 52 L.Ed.2d 164.) (See 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 398; on right to post residential signs generally, see infra, §354.)

People v. Moon (1978) 89 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 152 C.R. 704, applied the Linmark reasoning to a city ordinance prohibiting parking a vehicle on a street "for the principal purpose of demonstrating it or displaying it for sale." (a) The seller of an automobile has few realistic options; he or she is relegated almost exclusively to newspaper advertising, which is more costly and less likely to communicate the facts concerning the vehicle. (89 C.A.3d Supp. 4.) (b) The ordinance was not concerned with the place of communication, for other kinds of advertising on vehicles--political, philosophical, religious, etc.--are permitted. (89 C.A.3d Supp. 4.) (c) The ordinance as drafted was over-broad and not necessary to protect the aesthetic interests of the city or to achieve better traffic management. (89 C.A.3d Supp. 6.) (See Spiritual Psychic Science Church v. Azusa (1985) 39 C.3d 501, 511, 217 C.R. 225, 703 P.2d 1119, infra, §356 [ordinance prohibiting fortune-telling]; Anderson v. Department of Real Estate (1979) 93 C.A.3d 696, 702, 705, 155 C.R. 307 [licensing requirements for "advance fee rental agents" were held invalid as applied to activity involving only ascertainment of available housing, publication of lists, and solicitation of customers].)

(2) Cases Holding Manner of Regulation Constitutional. In Loska v. Superior Court (1986) 188 C.A.3d 569, 233 C.R. 213, a municipal ordinance prohibited the sale or resale or offer to sell or resell tickets of admission to a public assemblage in any public place. Held, construing it narrowly, the ordinance was constitutional. The "offer to sell" is commercial speech, and involves a lawful activity. (188 C.A.3d 582.) Prohibition where the solicitation and the completed transaction occur on public property by a ticket seller in the business of ticket selling directly advances the city's asserted interest in preventing counterfeiting, but it would be unconstitutional to prohibit an individual ticket holder from disposing of his or her extra ticket at face value or below anywhere on public property. (188 C.A.3d 583.) Hence, to save the ordinance, it must be construed to apply only to ticket sellers in the business where both the solicitation and proposed sale are on public property. (188 C.A.3d 584.) (See Redwood Empire Publishing Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1989) 207 C.A.3d 1334, 1341, 1343, 255 C.R. 514 [regulation defining newspapers and periodicals, for purpose of sales tax exemption, to exclude publications with more than 90% advertising, is constitutional]; Xiloj-Itzep v. Agoura Hills (1994) 24 C.A.4th 620, 636, 29 C.R.2d 879 [ordinance prohibiting solicitation from persons travelling in vehicles on city streets was constitutional, because it was content-neutral, served legitimate public safety interest, was narrowly tailored to achieve its purpose, and left alternative avenues of communication].)

2. Moratorium on Solicitation of Accident Victims.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 336

[§ 336] Moratorium on Solicitation of Accident Victims.

In Florida Bar v. Went For It (1995) 515 U.S. 618, 115 S.Ct. 2371, 132 L.Ed.2d 541, the Court upheld Florida Bar rules prohibiting personal injury lawyers from sending targeted direct-mail solicitations to victims and their relatives for 30 days following an accident or disaster.

(a) Under Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 557, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341, infra, §358, a restriction on truthful commercial speech is permissible if the government (1) asserts a substantial interest, (2) demonstrates that the restriction directly and materially advances that interest, and (3) shows that the regulation is narrowly drawn. (115 S.Ct. 2376, 132 L.Ed.2d 549.)

(b) The interests asserted by the Florida Bar--protecting the privacy and tranquility of personal injury victims and their loved ones against intrusive, unsolicited contact by lawyers, and, by so doing, preventing the erosion of public confidence in the legal profession that these intrusions engender--are substantial. (115 S.Ct. 2376, 132 L.Ed.2d 550.)

(c) The harms targeted by the ban are quite real, as demonstrated by a Bar study containing extensive statistical and anecdotal data showing that the public views direct-mail solicitations in the immediate wake of accidents as an intrusion on privacy that reflects poorly on the profession. (115 S.Ct. 2377, 132 L.Ed.2d 551.)

(d) "The Bar's rule is reasonably well-tailored to its stated objective of eliminating targeted mailings whose type and timing are a source of distress to Floridians, distress that has caused many of them to lose respect for the legal profession." (115 S.Ct. 2380, 132 L.Ed.2d 555.) The ban is of limited duration--30 days--and ample alternatives exist for receipt of information during that time. (115 S.Ct. 2380, 2381, 132 L.Ed.2d 555, 556.)

Four justices dissented, arguing that attorneys who communicate their willingness to assist potential clients are engaged in protected speech, and that the majority's opinion undercuts this guarantee in an important class of cases at the expense of victims most in need of legal assistance. (115 S.Ct. 2381, 132 L.Ed.2d 556.) (See 109 Harv. L. Rev. 190; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1143.)

5. Commercial Speech.

c. Other Restrictions.

3. Solicitation by Accountant.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 337

[§ 337] Solicitation by Accountant.

In Edenfield v. Fane (1993) 507 U.S. 761, 113 S.Ct. 1792, 123 L.Ed.2d 543, the Court held that Florida's prohibition of personal solicitation of clients by certified public accountants was unconstitutional. Plaintiff, a licensed CPA in New Jersey, often obtained business clients by making unsolicited telephone calls to arrange meetings and explain his services and expertise. This practice was permitted under New Jersey law, but when plaintiff moved to Florida he found that the Board of Accountancy had a comprehensive rule prohibiting direct personal solicitation. He sued the board, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Held, summary judgment for plaintiff affirmed.

(a) "Whatever ambiguities may exist at the margins of the category of commercial speech, ... it is clear that this type of personal solicitation is commercial expression to which the protections of the First Amendment apply. ... There are, no doubt, detrimental aspects to personal commercial solicitation in certain circumstance, ... but these detriments are not so inherent or ubiquitous that solicitation of this sort is removed from the ambit of First Amendment protection." (113 S.Ct. 1797, 123 L.Ed.2d 551.) "Unlike many other forms of commercial expression, solicitation allows direct and spontaneous communication between buyer and seller. A seller has a strong financial incentive to educate the market and stimulate demand for his product or service, so solicitation produces more personal interchange between buyer and seller than would occur if only buyers were permitted to initiate contact. Personal interchange enables a potential buyer to meet and evaluate the person offering the product or service, and allows both parties to discuss and negotiate the desired form for the transaction or professional relation. Solicitation also enables the seller to direct his proposals toward those consumers who he has a reason to believe would be most interested in what he has to sell. For the buyer, it provides an opportunity to explore in detail the way in which a particular product or service compares to its alternatives in the market. In particular, with respect to nonstandard products like the professional services offered by CPAs, these benefits are significant." (113 S.Ct. 1797, 123 L.Ed.2d 552.)

(b) However, commercial speech is "linked inextricably" with the commercial arrangement that it proposes; so the State's interest in regulating the underlying transaction may give it a concomitant interest in the expression itself. "For this reason, laws restricting commercial speech, unlike laws burdening other forms of protected expression, need only be tailored in a reasonable manner to serve a substantial state interest in order to survive First Amendment scrutiny." (113 S.Ct. 1798, 123 L.Ed.2d 552.)

(c) The board has not demonstrated that, as applied in the business context, the ban on CPA solicitation advances its asserted interest in any direct and material way; it presents no studies suggesting that personal solicitation of prospective business clients by CPA's creates the dangers of fraud, overreaching, or compromised independence that the board claims to fear. (113 S.Ct. 1800, 123 L.Ed. 555.)

(d) The board, relying on Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Assn. (1978) 436 U.S. 447, 98 S.Ct. 1912, 56 L.Ed.2d 444, supra, §329, seeks to justify the ban as a prophylactic rule. But Ohralik does not support blanket bans on personal solicitation by all types of professionals; its holding was narrow and depended on certain unique features of in-person solicitation by lawyers that were present in the circumstances of that case. (113 S.Ct. 1802, 123 L.Ed.2d 557.) If Ohralik were read in the manner the board proposes, "the protection afforded commercial speech would be reduced almost to nothing; comprehensive bans on certain categories of commercial speech would be permitted as a matter of course." (113 S.Ct. 1803, 123 L.Ed.2d 559.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1143 [state of commercial speech doctrine after Edenfield v. Fane].)

A. Nature of Guarantees.

5. Commercial Speech.

c. Other Restrictions.

4. Unlawful Conduct.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 338

[§ 338] Unlawful Conduct.

(1) In General. It is not an abridgment of freedom of speech or press "to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written or printed." (National Subscription Television v. Formula Int. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 308, 313, 200 C.R. 213 [quoting U.S. Supreme Court].)

In National Subscription Television, plaintiff National operated a subscription television business using a scrambled signal and furnishing decoders to provide intelligible reception. Defendant Formula, a retail distributor of electronic parts, sold decoder kits containing components and assembly instructions. The lower court granted an injunction, and defendant appealed, contending that it merely sold individual parts with an independent dissemination of technical information on assembly. Held, injunction affirmed. Under federal statutes, the unauthorized sale of assembled decoders is unlawful, and the assembly instructions were merely incidental to sale of the kits. (153 C.A.3d 313.) (See 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 839 [Subscription Television Decoders: Can California Prohibit Their Manufacture and Sale?].)

(2) Adult Bookstore and Prostitution. Arcara v. Cloud Books (1986) 478 U.S. 697, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 92 L.Ed.2d 568, is another illustration of unlawful conduct connected with protected speech. Defendant operated an "adult" bookstore selling sexually explicit books and magazines with booths available for viewing sexually explicit movies. No obscenity charge was made, but the district attorney brought this statutory action to close down the store on a showing that solicitation of prostitution was occurring on the premises. Held, the First Amendment did not bar the closure. Under the test laid down in United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473, the New York statute authorizing summary closure, although incidentally restricting speech (by imposing a burden on defendant's bookselling activities), was valid. "The legislation providing the closure sanction was directed at unlawful conduct having nothing to do with books or other expressive activity. Bookselling in an establishment used for prostitution does not confer First Amendment coverage to defeat a valid statute aimed at penalizing and terminating illegal uses of premises." (106 S.Ct. 3178, 92 L.Ed.2d 578.) (See People v. Morone (1983) 150 C.A.3d Supp. 18, 198 C.R. 316, supra, §323.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

6. Government Speech.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 339

[§ 339] In General.

In 1971, the Legislature created the Commission on the Status of Women with specified duties (see Govt.C. 8240 et seq.). In 1972, the Legislature ratified the proposed Equal Rights Amendment (see infra, §762). In 1976, plaintiffs filed a complaint against the Commission alleging that it unlawfully promoted the ratification in California and elsewhere. In Miller v. Miller (1978) 87 C.A.3d 762, 151 C.R. 197, the court held that the Commission's advocacy lacked specific legislative authorization. The 1982 Legislature then enacted Govt.C. 8246: The Commission "is expressly authorized to inform the Legislature of its position on any legislative proposal pending before the Legislature and to urge the introduction of legislative proposals." (Govt.C. 8246(a).) "The commission is expressly authorized to state its position and viewpoint on issues developed in the performance of its duties and responsibilities as specified in this chapter." (Govt.C. 8246(b).)

In Miller v. California Com. on Status of Women (1984) 151 C.A.3d 693, 198 C.R. 877, plaintiffs attacked the activities of the Commission on the constitutional grounds of equal protection (infra, §762 et seq.) and free speech. The trial judge granted the requested relief, ordering that the Commission refrain from expressing to the Legislature or the public any opinion on issues of women's education and employment problems, needs, and opportunities. Held, reversed. The main argument of plaintiffs, that to permit the Commission to speak its views on controversial "women's issues" infringes their First Amendment right to freedom of speech, is unsound.

(a) The government may not compel citizens to express a view or suppress their views; but it may add its own voice on issues. "The first amendment does not, for example, prevent government from promoting respect for the flag by proclaiming Flag Day or by using public property to display the flag." (151 C.A.3d 700, quoting Tribe.) If the government (i.e., the Governor and legislative leaders) cannot appoint a commission to speak on the topic of women's status, it may not address any other "controversial" topic, and cannot govern. (151 C.A.3d 701.)

(b) This is not a case in which the government has established a forum for speech and is precluding expression of some points of view. (151 C.A.3d 701.) Nor is this a case in which government speech drowns out private communication. "The speech activities of the commission are in essence these: responses to inquiries; lobbying legislators; circulation of a newsletter to persons and groups that ask to receive it, and issuance of press releases on 'women's issues.' Granting that the commission has engaged in advocacy and promotion of its views in the course of these activities, neither the scale of that speech nor the vehicles employed appear likely to drown out plaintiffs' contrary views. That the imprimatur of government has conferred an advantage upon the commissioners is undeniable. That advantage, however, has not risen to the level of drowning out plaintiffs." (151 C.A.3d 702.)

(c) "We perceive no reason grounded in plaintiffs' right to freedom of speech to uphold or extend the judgment's mandate of neutrality in these circumstances. Plaintiffs' generalized umbrage is aimed at the ideological content of the commission's speech and not with the concept of a commission speaking about the status of women. To the extent plaintiffs take offense from the ideas of equality of social and economic opportunity for women their remedy is amendment of the constitution, to reflect their views. To the extent they accept these ideas but desire to change the tone of the commission's speech, i.e., to emphasize how measures which may enhance the ability of women to choose to enter the work force may implicate other values, they must seek redress from the Legislature and the public officers to whom that body has granted the power to appoint members of the commission." (151 C.A.3d 702.) (See League of Women Voters v. Countywide Criminal Justice Coordination Committee (1988) 203 C.A.3d 529, 540, 250 C.R. 161 [creation by county board of supervisors of committee to improve criminal justice, and committee's appointment of subcommittee to draft and seek sponsor for initiative measure, with accompanying expenditure of public funds, were lawful]; 93 Harv. Keene* (1987) 481 U.S. 465, 107 S.Ct. 1862, 95 L.Ed.2d 415; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 209; 17 Southwestern L. Rev. 373.)

In Lebron v. National R. Passenger Corp. (1995) 513 U.S. 374, 115 S.Ct. 961, 130 L.Ed.2d 902, the Court held that AMTRAK was a governmental entity for First Amendment purposes. "[W]here, as here, the Government creates a corporation by special law, for the furtherance of governmental objectives, and retains for itself permanent authority to appoint a majority of the directors of that corporation, the corporation is part of the Government for purposes of the First Amendment." (115 S.Ct. 974, 130 L.Ed.2d 922.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Johanns v. Livestock Marketing Assn. (2005) 544 U.S. 550, 125 S.Ct. 2055, 161 L.Ed.2d 896, the Court distinguished United States v. United Foods (2001) 533 U.S. 405, 121 S.Ct. 2334, 150 L.Ed.2d 438, which invalidated the compelled funding of what was presumed to be private speech due to the lack of a comprehensive regulatory scheme. (See text, §333.) Here, the Court upheld compelled exactions from beef producers that were used by the Beef Board to fund generic advertising of beef because the ads constituted government speech. The message of the promotional campaigns was controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary, who was accountable to Congress, imposed the assessments, appointed the members of the board, and approved each promotional campaign and its content. Thus, the message set out in the promotions was "from beginning to end the message established by the Federal Government." (125 S.Ct. 2062, 161 L.Ed.2d 907.) "Citizens may challenge compelled support of private speech, but have no First Amendment right not to fund government speech. And that is no less true when the funding is achieved through targeted assessments devoted exclusively to the program to which the assessed citizens object." (125 S.Ct. 2063, 161 L.Ed.2d 908.)

One justice concurred in the judgment, disagreeing that the beef ads were government speech, but stating that they qualified as permissible economic regulation. (125 S.Ct. 2067, 161 L.Ed.2d 913.) Three justices dissented, also disagreeing that the beef ads constituted government speech, and asserting that, under United Foods, the mandatory assessment provisions of the Beef Act are unconstitutional. (125 S.Ct. 2068, 161 L.Ed.2d 913.) (See 119 Harv. L. Rev. 277 [Johanns]; 44 Cal. Western L. Rev. 329 [Listener Interests in Compelled Speech Cases]; 31 Hastings Const. L. Q. 71 [special public purpose forum and endorsement relationships].)

Johanns applies to free speech rights under the California Constitution. (Gallo Cattle Co. v. Kawamura (2008) 159

C.A.4th 948, 955, 72 C.R.3d 1 [nothing in language or history of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, or in California doctrine, suggests that Johanns should be rejected].)

6. Government Speech.

b. Funding Restrictions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 340

[§ 340] Funding Restrictions.

In Rust v. Sullivan (1991) 500 U.S. 173, 111 S.Ct. 1759, 1772, 114 L.Ed.2d 233, 255, infra, §568, the Court held that government regulations that limit the ability of Title X fund recipients to provide abortion counseling do not violate the First Amendment.

Rust was distinguished in Legal Services Corp. v. Velazquez (2001) 531 U.S. 533, 121 S.Ct. 1043, 149 L.Ed.2d 63. The Court considered the constitutionality of a government restriction applicable to legal aid providers receiving federal funds, which prohibited representation involving challenges to existing welfare laws. The restriction would prevent an attorney from arguing that a state statute conflicts with a federal statute or that either a state or federal statute is unconstitutional. Held, the funding condition is unconstitutional.

(a) The government may advance its own idea or position through the disbursement of public funds. (121 S.Ct. 1048, 149 L.Ed.2d 72, citing Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of the University of Virginia (1995) 515 U.S. 819, 115 S.Ct. 2510, 132 L.Ed.2d 700, infra, §341.) However, "[n]either the latitude for government speech nor its rationale applies in every instance." (121 S.Ct. 1049, 149 L.Ed.2d 72.) The program here was designed to use the legal profession and state judiciaries "to accomplish its end of assisting welfare claimants in determination or receipt of their benefits. The advice from the attorney to the client and the advocacy by the attorney to the courts cannot be classified as governmental speech even under a generous understanding of the concept. In this vital respect this suit is distinguishable from Rust." (121 S.Ct. 1049, 149 L.Ed.2d 73.)

(b) The funding restriction distorts the legal system by altering the traditional role of attorneys and the courts. On determining that a question of statutory validity is present in any case, the government-funded attorney must cease representation. (121 S.Ct. 1050, 149 L.Ed.2d 74.) If the attorney withdraws, it is unlikely the client will find other representation or receive vital information respecting his or her constitutional or statutory rights. (121 S.Ct. 1051, 149 L.Ed.2d 75.) "By seeking to prohibit the analysis of certain legal issues and to truncate presentation to the courts, the enactment under review prohibits speech and expression upon which courts must depend for the proper exercise of the judicial power." (121 S.Ct. 1051, 149 L.Ed.2d 752.)

(c) Through the funding restriction, the government asks us "to permit Congress to define the scope of the litigation

it funds to exclude certain vital theories and ideas. The attempted restriction is designed to insulate the Government's interpretation of the Constitution from judicial challenge. The Constitution does not permit the Government to confine litigants and their attorneys in this manner Where private speech is involved, even Congress' antecedent funding decision cannot be aimed at the suppression of ideas thought inimical to the Government's own interest." (121 S.Ct. 1052, 149 L.Ed.2d 77.)

Four justices dissented, stating that there is no difference between this statutory scheme and the one upheld in Rust. Further, the dissent objected to the majority's refusal to address the question of severability, which allowed "the program to go forward under a version of the statute Congress never enacted." (121 S.Ct. 1053, 149 L.Ed.2d 77.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 426 [Velazquez]; 51 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 705 [same].)

A. Nature of Guarantees.

6. Government Speech.

c. Viewpoint Discrimination.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 341

[§ 341] Viewpoint Discrimination.

(1) Use of School Facilities. In Lamb's Chapel v. Center Moriches Union Free School Dist. (1993) 508 U.S. 384, 113 S.Ct. 2141, 124 L.Ed.2d 352, the New York Education Law authorized local school boards to adopt regulations for the use of school property for specified purposes when the property was not in use for school purposes. The list did not include meetings for religious purposes, and the Moriches School District adopted a rule providing that the school premises "shall not be used by any group for religious purposes." Petitioner church brought this action challenging the constitutionality of the district's refusal of its request to use the school facilities for a religious oriented film dealing with family and child-rearing issues faced by parents. Held, the district's rule violated the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment.

(a) The district, like the private owner of property, may legally preserve the property under its control for the use to which it is dedicated, and need not have permitted after-hours use for any of the uses permitted by the state education law. (113 S.Ct. 2146, 124 L.Ed.2d 360.) But the district did open its property for two of the permitted uses; and the film involved here dealt with a subject otherwise permissible under the district rule. (113 S.Ct. 2147, 124 L.Ed.2d 362.) Hence, the applicable principle is that the government may not regulate speech in ways that favor some viewpoints or ideas at the expense of others. (113 S.Ct. 2147, 124 L.Ed.2d 362.)

(b) The district also contended that to permit use of its property for religious purposes would violate the Establishment Clause (see infra, §507). This contention is answered by Widmar v. Vincent (1981) 454 U.S. 263, 102 S.Ct. 269, 70 L.Ed.2d 440, infra, §509: "The showing of this film would not have been during school hours, would not have been sponsored by the school, and would have been open to the public, not just to church members. The District property had repeatedly been used by a wide variety of private organizations. Under these circumstances, as in Widmar, there could have been no realistic danger that the community would think that the District was endorsing religion or any particular creed, and any benefit to religion or to the Church would have been no more than incidental." (113 S.Ct. 2148, 124 L.Ed.2d 363.) (See Good News Club v. Milford Cen. School (2001) 533 U.S. 98, 121 S.Ct. 2093, 2100, 2103, 150 L.Ed.2d 151, 162, 166 [school's exclusion of religious club from use of its facilities pursuant to its community use policy constituted impermissible viewpoint discrimination; following Lamb's Chapel and Widmar]; 115 Harv. L. Rev. 396 [Good News Club]; 34 Golden Gate L. Rev. 217 [same].)

(2) Use of Student Funds for Religious Newspaper. In Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of the University of Virginia (1995) 515 U.S. 819, 115 S.Ct. 2510, 132 L.Ed.2d 700, the University of Virginia, a state institution, maintained a Student Activities Fund (SAF), which supported a broad range of extracurricular student activities and was funded by mandatory student fees. Student groups that qualified as "Contracted Independent Organizations" (CIOs) could seek payment from the SAF to outside contractors for the printing costs of the groups' publications. CIOs were required to include in their dealings with third parties and in written materials a disclaimer stating that they were independent of the university and that the university was not responsible for them. Wide Awake Productions (WAP), a qualified CIO, requested payment for the costs of printing its newspaper, "Wide Awake: A Christian Perspective at the University of Virginia." The request was denied solely because the paper "primarily promoted or manifested a particular belief in or about a deity or an ultimate reality" and thus was a "religious activity" excluded from SAF support under university guidelines. WAP sued under 42 U.S.C., §1983, claiming violation of its First Amendment right to freedom of speech, but both the district court and the Court of Appeals ruled in favor of the University. Held, reversed.

(a) The state may create a limited public forum and may confine use of that forum to the limited purposes for which it was created. Thus the state may reserve a forum for certain groups or for the discussion of certain topics. The state may not, however, exclude speech where exclusion is not reasonable in light of the forum's purpose, nor may it discriminate against speech on the basis of its viewpoint. (115 S.Ct. 2516, 132 L.Ed.2d 715.) "Thus, in determining whether the State is acting to preserve the limits of the forum it has created so that the exclusion of a class of speech is legitimate, we have observed a distinction between, on the one hand, content discrimination, which may be permissible if it preserves the purposes of that limited forum, and, on the other hand, viewpoint discrimination, which is presumed impermissible when directed against speech otherwise within the forum's limitations." (115 S.Ct. 2517, 132 L.Ed.2d 715.)

(b) The University argues that the distinction here is based on content, not viewpoint. Viewpoint discrimination is a subset of content discrimination, and the distinction is not precise. However, "the University does not exclude religion as a subject matter but selects for disfavored treatment those student journalistic efforts with religious editorial viewpoints. Religion may be a vast area of inquiry, but it also provides, as it did here, a specific premise, a perspective, a standpoint from which a variety of subjects may be discussed and considered. The prohibited perspective, not the general subject matter, resulted in the refusal to make third-party payments, for the subjects discussed were otherwise within the approved category of publications." (115 S.Ct. 2517, 132 L.Ed.2d 716.)

(c) The University seeks to distinguish this case from Lamb's Chapel by urging that this case involves providing funds rather than access to facilities. The state may regulate the content of expression when it is the speaker or when it enlists private entities to convey its own message. (115 S.Ct. 2518, 2519, 132 L.Ed.2d 717, 718.) "It does not follow, however, ... that viewpoint-based restrictions are proper when the University does not itself speak or subsidize transmittal of a message it favors but instead expends funds to encourage a diversity of views from private speakers. A holding that the University may not discriminate based on the viewpoint of private persons whose speech it facilitates does not restrict the University's own speech, which is controlled by different principles." (115 S.Ct. 2519, 132 L.Ed.2d 718.)

(d) The University's argument that money is scarce and physical facilities are not, and hence that viewpoint discrimination in the funding of speech is permissible, is wrong. Scarcity of resources may require that they be rationed on some acceptable neutral principle; but scarcity does not give the state the right to exercise viewpoint discrimination that is otherwise impermissible. (115 S.Ct. 2519, 132 L.Ed.2d 719.)

(e) The Court of Appeals holding was based on the necessity of avoiding a violation of the Establishment Clause. However, the program at issue is neutral toward religion. The SAF was created not to promote religion, but to provide a forum for diverse forms of student speech. "WAP did not seek a subsidy because of its Christian editorial viewpoint; it sought funding as a student journal, which it was." (115 S.Ct. 2522, 132 L.Ed.2d 722.) Neutrality also appears from the fact that the university has taken pains to disassociate itself from the private speech involved in this case. (115 S.Ct. 2522, 2523, 132 L.Ed.2d 723.)

(f) No public funds flow directly into WAP's coffers. The mere fact that public moneys are involved does not preclude the government from providing access to services on a religion-neutral basis to groups that use those services for sectarian purposes. There is no difference between a school using its funds to operate a facility to which students have access, and a school paying a third-party contractor to operate the facility on its behalf. Here, the university provides routine, secular printing services to a broad spectrum of student newspapers, and any benefit to religion is incidental. (115 S.Ct. 2523, 132 L.Ed.2d 724, 725.)

Two justices wrote concurring opinions. (115 S.Ct. 2525, 2528, 132 L.Ed.2d 726, 730.) Four justices dissented, expressing the view that the Court, for the first time, was approving direct funding of core religious activities, in violation of the Establishment Clause. (115 S.Ct. 2533, 132 L.Ed.2d 737.) (See 109 Harv. L. Rev. 210; 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1049; 52 Stanf. L. Rev. 929; 27 West L.A. L. Rev. 489.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

7. Political Speech.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 342

[§ 342] In General.

In Boos v. Barry (1988) 485 U.S. 312, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333, Congress enacted provisions of the District of Columbia Code, (1) prohibiting the display of any sign within 500 feet of a foreign embassy if the sign tends to bring the foreign government into "public odium" or "public disrepute" (the display clause), and (2) prohibiting any congregation of three or more persons within 500 feet of a foreign embassy (the congregation clause). Congress acted pursuant to its authority under U.S. Const., Art. I, §8, cl. 10, to "define and punish ... Offenses Against the Law of Nations." Petitioners, three individuals, carried signs critical of the governments of the Soviet Union and Nicaragua on the public sidewalks within 500 feet of the embassies of these governments, and attempted to congregate with others within 500 feet of official foreign buildings. Held, the display clause was unconstitutional, but the congregation clause, narrowly construed, was valid.

(a) Nature and effect of the display clause. (1) The display clause prohibits petitioners from engaging in "classically political speech." (108 S.Ct. 1162, 99 L.Ed.2d 343.) (2) It bars this speech on public streets and sidewalks, traditional public fora. (108 S.Ct. 1162, 99 L.Ed.2d 343.) (3) It is content-based: Whether individuals may picket in front of a foreign embassy depends entirely on whether their picket signs are critical of the foreign government or not. (108 S.Ct. 1162, 99 L.Ed.2d 343.) The contention that it is content-neutral because the government itself is not selecting between viewpoints is not persuasive. "The display clause determines which viewpoint is acceptable in a neutral fashion by looking to the policies of foreign governments. While this prevents the display clause from being directly viewpoint-based, ... it does not render the statute content-neutral. ... Here the government has determined that an entire category of speech--signs or displays critical of foreign governments--is not to be permitted." (108 S.Ct. 1163, 99 L.Ed.2d 343.)

(b) Governmental interest and strict scrutiny requirement. As a content-based restriction on political speech in a public forum, the statute must be subjected to the most exacting scrutiny. (198 S.Ct. 1164, 99 L.Ed.2d 345.)

(1) The governmental interest in protecting the dignity of foreign diplomatic personnel has a long history and noble purpose, particularly in today's global economy; and the concept of reciprocity gives us an additional parochial reason to protect foreign diplomats in this country. (108 S.Ct. 1164, 1165, 99 L.Ed.2d 345, 346.) However, to protect First Amendment freedoms, our own citizens must tolerate insulting and even outrageous speech; and "[w]e are not persuaded that the differences between foreign officials and American citizens require us to deviate from these principles here." (108 S.Ct. 1164, 99 L.Ed.2d 345.)

(2) No agreement with a foreign nation can confer power on Congress free from constitutional restraints. (108 S.Ct. 1165, 99 L.Ed.2d 346.) "Thus, the fact that an interest is recognized in international law does not automatically render that interest 'compelling' for purposes of First Amendment analysis. We need not decide today whether, or to what extent, the dictates of international law could ever require that First Amendment analysis be adjusted to accommodate the interests of foreign officials. Even if we assume that international law recognizes a dignity interest and that it should be considered sufficiently 'compelling' to support a content-based restriction on speech," this statute is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. (108 S.Ct. 1165, 99 L.Ed.2d 347.)

(3) As Congress itself has recognized in the enactment of an analogous statute, the availability of alternatives demonstrates that the display clause "is not crafted with sufficient precision to withstand First Amendment scrutiny." (108 S.Ct. 1168, 99 L.Ed.2d 350.)

(c) Congregation clause, narrowly construed, is valid. The federal courts have the power to adopt narrowing constructions of federal legislation, and the construction adopted by the Court of Appeals in this case was proper. The clause merely regulates the place and manner of certain demonstrations, and does not prohibit peaceful congregations; its reach is limited to groups posing a security threat. These two limitations make it consistent with the First Amendment. (108 S.Ct. 1169, 99 L.Ed.2d 350.)

(d) No denial of equal protection. Petitioners contended that both clauses improperly exclude labor picketing from their prohibitions. However, (1) the congregation clause, as narrowly construed by the Court of Appeals, does not prohibit picketing; it merely regulates the place and manner of certain demonstrations; and (2) the statute evinces an intent to protect only "bona fide" labor disputes, not violent conduct. (108 S.Ct. 1170, 99 L.Ed.2d 351.) (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 1904.)

In Republican Party of Minnesota v. White (2002) 536 U.S. 765, 122 S.Ct. 2528, 153 L.Ed.2d 694, the Court struck down the Minnesota Supreme Court's "announce clause," which prohibited judicial candidates from stating their views on disputed political issues. This restriction on speech about judges' qualifications for public office calls for application of the strict scrutiny test. (122 S.Ct. 2534, 153 L.Ed.2d 704.)

(a) The State failed to carry its burden that the announce clause serves its asserted interest in preserving the impartiality, or appearance of impartiality, of the judiciary. (122 S.Ct. 2535, 153 L.Ed.2d 705.) Debate on the qualifications of candidates is central to our electoral process and free speech rights. "We have never allowed the government to prohibit candidates from communicating relevant information to voters during an election." (122 S.Ct. 2538, 153 L.Ed. 2d 709.)

(b) Even if the First Amendment were to allow greater regulation of judicial election campaigns than legislative ones, the announce clause would still fail "strict scrutiny because it is woefully underinclusive, prohibiting announcements by judges (and would-be judges) only at certain times and in certain forms." And "this underinclusiveness cannot be explained by resort to the notion that the First Amendment provides less protection during an election campaign than at other times." (122 S.Ct. 2539, 153 L.Ed.2d 710.)

Four justices dissented in two opinions. (122 S.Ct. 2546, 2550, 153 L.Ed.2d 718, 722.) (See Huntington Beach City Council v. Superior Court (2002) 94 C.A.4th 1417, 1428, 115 C.R.2d 439 [Elec.C. 9295, governing content of voter pamphlet arguments, only allows trial court to strike statements that are "false, misleading, or inconsistent" with statutory requirements; statute implies some minimal relevancy requirement, but free speech demands that this requirement be "extremely light burden to carry"]; 116 Harv. Witkin Summary of California Law

A. Nature of Guarantees.

7. Political Speech.

b. Advertising on Public Transit Vehicles.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 343

[§ 343] Advertising on Public Transit Vehicles.

(1) Restrictions on Particular Political Speech. In Wirta v. Alameda-Contra Costa Transit Dist. (1967) 68 C.2d 51, 64 C.R. 430, 434 P.2d 982, defendant district operated buses for transportation of passengers within Alameda and Contra Costa counties and from those counties to San Francisco. The district leased advertising space above the passengers' seats to Metro Corp., which re-leased to advertisers. The district's agreement with Metro provided that political advertisements and those on controversial subjects were not acceptable unless approved by the district, and the district's policy was to permit only commercial advertising and political advertising in connection with an election, with space available to opposing candidates or sides. Plaintiffs, officers of Women for Peace, an unincorporated association, offered an advertisement on ending the Vietnam war, and, on refusal, brought this action for an injunction. The trial judge granted a preliminary injunction to restrain defendants from refusing the advertisement. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendants, having opened a forum for expression of ideas by providing advertising facilities, cannot for reasons of administrative convenience decline to accept those expressing opinions and beliefs within the ambit of First Amendment protection. (68 C.2d 55, citing Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885, infra, §394.) The restriction here was broader than in Danskin. The vice was not in preferring one point of view over another, but in choosing between classes of ideas entitled to constitutional protection, sanctioning the expression of only those selected and banning all others--a most pervasive form of censorship. (68 C.2d 56.)

(b) Commercial messages may be regulated or prohibited, where protected ideas may not. (See supra, §324 et seq.) Here, perversely, the policies were reversed, with preference given to commercial advertising over nonmercantile messages. (68 C.2d 57.) The dangers of this policy are great: e.g., a cigarette company could advertise the desirability of smoking its brand, but a cancer society would not be entitled to caution that smoking is dangerous. (68 C.2d 57.)

(c) The district's contention that the only problem was equal protection, and that its classification was reasonable, was unsound. The general reasonableness test cannot be applied to First Amendment freedoms. (68 C.2d 60.)

(d) The district's final contention was that its overriding consideration was to keep the government out of partisan affairs, and that compelling it to accept everything would be difficult. But while practical problems may be vexatious they cannot be controlling. (68 C.2d 61.)

(e) "Transit advertising is an acceptable and effective means of communication. A regulation which permits those who offer goods and services for sale and those who wish to express ideas relating to elections access to such forum while denying it to those who desire to express other ideas and beliefs, protected by the First Amendment, cannot be upheld." (68 C.2d 63.)

The dissenting opinion of three justices challenged the majority's assumption that the district had opened up the advertising spaces as a forum for ideas, arguing that only commercial advertising, not First Amendment rights, was involved; that the district was established to meet transportation needs, and is not like a public park, school, street, or meeting hall; that advertising was sought simply to increase revenues; and that the policy decision to avoid controversial ideas that might antagonize or lead to disorder was within its discretion. (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 1379; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 1659; 5 San Diego L. Rev. 380.)

(2) Restrictions on All Political Speech. In Lehman v. Shaker Heights (1974) 418 U.S. 298, 94 S.Ct. 2714, 41 L.Ed.2d 770, the U.S. Supreme Court reached a conclusion directly opposite to that in Wirta. Petitioner, a candidate for the Ohio State Legislature, sought to purchase advertising space in defendant city's public transit system. The city's refusal was based on a fixed policy to allow only commercial advertising, and it was shown that in 26 years of its operation no political advertising had been permitted. Held, there was no unconstitutional denial of First Amendment rights.

(a) There is a difference between advertising in newspapers or other periodicals and in billboards or streetcars. The streetcar audience is a captive audience. And the city, engaged in a commercial venture, must provide satisfactory service to commuters, and has discretion to make reasonable choices concerning the type of advertising that may be displayed. (94 S.Ct. 2717, 41 L.Ed.2d 777.) Revenue earned from long-term commercial advertising could be jeopardized by requiring display of political advertisements. "Users would be subjected to the blare of political propaganda. There could be lurking doubts about favoritism, and sticky administrative problems might arise in parcelling out limited space to eager politicians." (94 S.Ct. 2718, 41 L.Ed.2d 778.)

(b) There was no meeting hall, park, street corner, or other open space involved; i.e., there was no "First Amendment forum." "The city consciously has limited access to its transit system advertising space in order to minimize chances of abuse, the appearance of favoritism, and the risk of imposing upon a captive audience. These are reasonable legislative objectives advanced by the city in a proprietary capacity." (94 S.Ct. 2718, 41 L.Ed.2d 778.)

Four justices dissented, arguing that the city created and opened up a forum and was thereafter barred from discriminating solely on the basis of message content. (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 149; 28 Stanf. L. Rev. 117.)

Lehman was followed in Women's Int. League for Peace & Freedom, Fresno Branch v. Fresno (1986) 186 C.A.3d 30, 237 C.R. 577. A Fresno municipal code section prohibited all political advertising on municipally owned and operated buses. Plaintiff, seeking to display its advertisement opposed to war, brought an action to enjoin enforcement of the section, and the trial judge declared it unconstitutional. Held, reversed.

(a) The city "decided to permit commercial advertising which it could regulate as nonprotected expression, but tried to avoid controversy by excluding all protected forms of political communication. ... Thus the ultimate question: To avoid the constitutional challenge, must City prohibit all commercial advertising to avoid opening the forum on buses?" (186 C.A.3d 41.)

(b) "Courts are well aware that public transportation exposes passengers to increasingly unpleasant experiences. Sensitivity to the safety and personal feelings of passengers may permit reasonable restrictions against forms of activity and expression which may come into conflict with the constitutionally protected privacy rights of the passengers. In this case the public entity chose to avoid advertisements which could not be restricted." (186 C.A.3d 41.)

(c) "Assuming City's decision to limit advertising sign space to commercial material requires a strict scrutiny review, we have no hesitancy to find the privacy rights of the 'captive audience' justified the exclusion within transit buses of all forms of expression which could not otherwise be restricted. California has constitutionally memorialized the right to privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1), and although that right is not absolute ... , its role in public transportation deserves fair consideration." (186 C.A.3d 41.) Hence, "we hold that the area within a transit bus is not a public forum worthy of constitutional protection under the California Constitution." (186 C.A.3d 41; see infra, §346.) (See 17 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 287.)

[§ 344] Restrictions on Initiatives.

In Meyer v. Grant (1988) 486 U.S. 414, 108 S.Ct. 1886, 100 L.Ed.2d 425, a Colorado statute made it a felony to pay circulators of initiative petitions. Proponents of an initiative measure to remove carriers from the jurisdiction of the state Public Utilities Commission concluded that they needed assistance of paid personnel to obtain the required number of signatures within the allotted time, and brought an action in the federal district court for a declaratory judgment. Held, the statute was an unconstitutional limitation on political speech.

(a) "The circulation of an initiative petition of necessity involves both the expression of a desire for political change and a discussion of the merits of the proposed change. Although a petition circulator may not have to persuade potential signatories that a particular proposal should prevail to capture their signatures, he or she will at least have to persuade them that the matter is one deserving of the public scrutiny and debate that would attend its consideration by the whole electorate. This will in almost every case involve an explanation of the nature of the proposal and why its advocates support it. Thus, the circulation of a petition involves the type of interactive communication concerning political change that is appropriately described as 'core political speech.' " (108 S.Ct. 1891, 100 L.Ed.2d 434.)

(b) "The refusal to permit appellees to pay petition circulators restricts political expression in two ways: First, it limits the number of voices who will convey appellees' message and the hours they can speak and, therefore, limits the size of the audience they can reach. Second, it makes it less likely that appellees will garner the number of signatures necessary to place the matter on the ballot, thus limiting their ability to make the matter focus of statewide discussion." (108 S.Ct. 1892, 100 L.Ed.2d 435.)

(c) "That appellees remain free to employ other means to disseminate their ideas does not take their speech through petition circulators outside the bounds of First Amendment protection. Colorado's prohibition of paid petition circulators restricts access to the most effective, fundamental, and perhaps economic avenue of political discourse, direct one-on-one communication. That it leaves open 'more burdensome' avenues of communication, does not relieve its burden on First Amendment expression. ... The First Amendment protects appellees right not only to advocate their cause but also to select what they believe to be the most effective means for so doing." (108 S.Ct. 1893, 100 L.Ed.2d 436.) (See 30 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1539 [negative political advertising]; 21 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 185 [The Case For Re-Regulation of Campaign Broadcasting]; 30 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 663 [Political Money and Freedom of Speech]; 28

West L.A. L. Rev. 1 [protecting free expression in election campaign context].)

Buckley v. American Constitutional Law Foundation (1999) 525 U.S. 182, 119 S.Ct. 636, 142 L.Ed.2d 599, held that three state regulations on the initiative process excessively restricted political speech: (a) Requiring initiative petition circulators to be registered voters impermissibly limits the number of message carriers in the ballot access arena without sufficient cause. (119 S.Ct. 644, 142 L.Ed.2d 611.) (b) Requiring circulators to wear name badges impermissibly discourages participation by forcing name identification without sufficient cause. (119 S.Ct. 646, 142 L.Ed.2d 614.) (c) Requiring paid circulators and their income from circulation to be listed impermissibly forces paid circulators to surrender the anonymity enjoyed by their volunteer counterparts. (119 S.Ct. 648, 142 L.Ed.2d 617.) (See 113 Harv. L. Rev. 286 [Buckley].)

7. Political Speech.

d. Restrictions on Electioneering.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 345

[§ 345] Restrictions on Electioneering.

(1) Invalid Provision. In Mills v. Alabama (1966) 384 U.S. 214, 86 S.Ct. 1434, 16 L.Ed.2d 484, an Alabama statute made it a crime "to do any electioneering or to solicit any votes" in support of or opposition to a candidate or proposition on the day of the election. On the day of a Birmingham election on a proposition relating to the form of local government, defendant, editor of the local newspaper, published an editorial strongly urging adoption of the mayor-council form. He was convicted of violation of the law. Held, reversed.

The Alabama Supreme Court thought that this obvious limitation on free speech was minor in character and a reasonable protection of the public against last-minute charges and countercharges that cannot be answered in time. But the law left people free to make campaign charges up to the last minute of the day before election, too late for reply, and silenced the press at a time when it could be most effective. "[N]o test of reasonableness can save a state law from invalidation as a violation of the First Amendment when that law makes it a crime for a newspaper editor to do no more than urge people to vote one way or another in a publicly held election." (86 S.Ct. 1437, 16 L.Ed.2d 489.)

(2) Valid Provision. In Burson v. Freeman (1992) 504 U.S. 191, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed.2d 5, the Court pointed out that Mills did not involve the extent of a state's power to regulate conduct in and around the polls. Here, the issue was whether a Tennessee statute prohibiting the solicitation of votes and the display or distribution of campaign materials within 100 feet of the entrance to a polling place violates the First Amendment. (112 S.Ct. 1848, 119 L.Ed.2d 11.) The Tennessee Supreme Court held that the statute was not narrowly tailored to protect the state's interest. Held, reversed.

(a) As a facially content-based restriction on political speech in a public forum, the statute must be subjected to exacting scrutiny; and this case presents the Court with a particularly difficult reconciliation: "the accommodation of the right to engage in political discourse with the right to vote--a right at the heart of our democracy." (112 S.Ct. 1851, 119 L.Ed.2d 14.)

(b) "[A]n examination of the history of election regulation in this country reveals a persistent battle against two evils: voter intimidation and election fraud. After an unsuccessful experiment with an unofficial ballot system, all 50 states, together with numerous other western democracies, settled on the same solution: a secret ballot secured in part by a restricted zone around the voting compartments. We find that this wide-spread and time-tested consensus demonstrates that some restricted zone is necessary in order to serve the States' compelling interest in preventing voter intimidation and election fraud." (112 S.Ct. 1855, 119 L.Ed.2d 19.)

(c) This is the "rare case in which we have held that a law survives strict scrutiny. ... Here, the State, as recognized administrator of elections, has asserted that the exercise of free speech rights conflicts with another fundamental right, the right to cast a ballot in an election free from the taint of intimidation and fraud. A long history, a substantial consensus, and simple common sense show that some restricted zone around polling places is necessary to protect that fundamental right. Given the conflict between these two rights, we hold that requiring solicitors to stand 100 feet from the entrances to polling places does not constitute an unconstitutional compromise." (112 S.Ct. 1857, 119 L.Ed.2d 22.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

7. Political Speech.

e. Distinction: Nonpublic Forum.

[§ 346] Distinction: Nonpublic Forum.

In Clark v. Burleigh (1992) 4 C.4th 474, 14 C.R.2d 455, 841 P.2d 975, the court reviewed the constitutionality of a statute prescribing the content of the candidate's statement that a candidate for local office may prepare and file for inclusion in the voter's pamphlet. "The statute provides that such a statement must be limited to the candidate's name, age, occupation, and a brief description of the candidate's own background and qualifications, and must not refer to those of other candidates for the office." Held, the statute violates neither the free speech guaranty of the First Amendment nor the Fourteenth Amendment's guaranty of equal protection of the laws. (4 C.4th 478.)

In June, 1990, an election was scheduled in Monterey County to fill a position on the superior court. Judge S, the incumbent, filed for reelection; municipal Judge B filed for the same office. In Judge B's candidate's statement, contrary to the restrictions laid down in former Elec.C. 10012.1 (now Elec.C. 13308), he made a number of derogatory references to Judge S and his decisions. The registrar of voters, although authorized to determine whether a candidate's statement violates the statute, instead filed an action for declaratory relief. Judge B filed a cross-petition for mandamus to compel publication of his statement. The trial judge concluded that the statement violated the statute and that the statute was constitutional, but nevertheless merely struck from the statement the references to Judge S and directed the registrar to print the remainder. Judge B appealed, and a divided Court of Appeal held the statute unconstitutional and reversed the judgment. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal with directions to affirm the judgment of the trial court.

(a) The statute limits what a candidate for local judicial office may say in a statement distributed to the electorate, and therefore implicates the candidate's First Amendment rights. But the determination that the statement is protected political speech merely begins the inquiry, for protected speech is not equally permissible in all places and at all times. The U.S. Supreme Court has adopted a forum analysis as a means of determining when the Government's interest in limiting use of its property to its intended purpose outweighs the interest of those wishing to use the property for other purposes. (4 C.4th 482, citing Cornelius v. N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense & Educational Fund (1985) 473 U.S. 788, 105 S.Ct. 3439, 87 L.Ed.2d 567, infra, §347.)

(b) For purposes of forum analysis the U.S. Supreme Court has divided all public property into three categories:

(1) The traditional public forum; e.g., public streets and parks. Laws regulating the content of speech in these forums are subject to strict scrutiny. (4 C.4th 482, citing Cornelius, supra.)

(2) The "designated public forum" or "limited public forum," where the state property has been opened for expressive activity by part or all of the public. Regulation of speech in this forum is likewise subject to strict scrutiny. (4 C.4th 483, and footnote 8.)

(3) All remaining public property, a category usually referred to as the "nonpublic forum." The challenged regulation need only be reasonable, as long as it is not an attempt to suppress the speaker's activity due to disagreement with his or her view. (4 C.4th 483, and footnote 9, citing International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness v. Lee (1992) 505 U.S. 672, 112 S.Ct. 2701, 120 L.Ed.2d 541 (ISKCON), infra, §348.)

(c) "To apply the public forum doctrine a court proceeds in a series of steps. In step one the court defines the 'forum' by deciding whether the forum is the entire property to which access is sought or only a portion of that property. In step two the court decides whether the forum thus defined is a traditional 'public forum,' a 'designated public forum,' or a 'nonpublic forum.' If it is either of the first two kinds of forums, in step three the court decides whether the challenged law restricts the content of speech in that forum or only its time, place, or manner. And in step four the court tests the challenged law by the standard that governs both the class of forum it has selected in step two and, if relevant, the type of speech restriction it has identified in step three." (4 C.4th 484.)

(d) Beginning with step one: The forum is not the voter's pamphlet as a whole but simply the candidate's statement. Judge B sought access only to the specific portion of the pamphlet represented by his candidate's statement. (4 C.4th 485.)

(e) Step two involves the question whether the forum is public or nonpublic in nature. (4 C.4th 485.) On a review of recent case law (4 C.4th 485), the reasoning of ISKCON is applicable: "The question is whether the Legislature, by creating the statutory 'candidate's statement,' intentionally opened a public forum that candidates for local judicial office may use for the purposes of attacking their opponents. Under the foregoing precedents the answer is no. There is no doubt that the Legislature has not explicitly authorized the candidate's statement to be used for such expressive activity. And there is no showing of a legislative policy or practice consistent with an intent to permit such use." On the contrary, the statute specifically lists the permissible contents (candidate's name, age, occupation, and brief description of candidate's education and qualifications in no more than 200 words). "The negative implication of this specific list, of course, is that the Legislature did not intend the statutory candidate's statement to contain any other material." (4 C.4th 488.)

(f) The last step is to test the challenged law by the standard governing the class of forum:

(1) In the nonpublic forum, the state may reserve the forum for its intended purposes, communicative or otherwise, as long as the regulation on speech is reasonable and not an effort to suppress expression merely because public officials oppose the speaker's view. (4 C.4th 491, discussing Cornelius and other decisions.) The reasoning of these cases is applicable to the case at bar. "Elections for local judicial offices are normally low-profile events. They are frequently uncontested; even if contested, they usually arouse minimal public interest. The voters have little knowledge of the requirements of the job and still less of the qualifications of the candidates; in turn, the candidates frequently have neither the inclination nor the time to inform the voters by means of a traditional political campaign, and in any event may lack the means of doing so--e.g., campaign staff, fundraising committees, media advisers, and so on. To help fill this informational void the Legislature created the statutory candidate's statement. From its terms and conditions we may reasonably infer that its primary purpose is to give the voters at least a minimal amount--200 words' worth--of basic information about the background and qualifications of little-known candidates. In light of that purpose it is plainly reasonable for the Legislature to provide ... that the statement should not also be used by the candidates as a partisan campaign device to attack their opponents." (4 C.4th 493.)

(2) To so misuse a statutory statement could well impair its effectiveness. The voters could be distracted or confused by the mixed messages; the statement is so brief that to the extent a candidate devotes it to attacking others it would convey even less factual information about the candidate; and because the statements remain confidential until publication, all candidates would have an incentive to misuse them by attacking their opponents to avoid the possibility of unanswered attacks by others. (4 C.4th 493.)

(3) The statute restricts only one channel of communication with the voters; substantial alternative channels are open to the candidates, e.g., advertisements or interviews in local newspapers or on local radio and television programs, direct mailings, neighborhood distribution of handbills, and personal appearances at local functions. (4 C.4th 494.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 620 [Clark].)

Other decisions have addressed nonpublic forum issues. (See Arkansas Education Television Commonwealth v. Forbes (1998) 523 U.S. 666, 118 S.Ct. 1633, 1643, 140 L.Ed.2d 875, 889 [following Cornelius; candidate debate at government-owned television station was nonpublic forum; although station could not exclude candidate for his viewpoint, it could do so based on voters' lack of interest in his candidacy]; DiLoreto v. Board of Education of Downey Unified School Dist. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 267, 280, 87 C.R.2d 791 [high school was nonpublic forum, as matter of law; under Establishment Clause considerations, officials could ban advertisement reciting Ten Commandments on baseball field fence]; San Francisco Forty-Niners v. Nishioka (1999) 75 C.A.4th 637, 648, 89 C.R.2d 388 [extending Clark to initiative petition; state has legitimate interest in preserving integrity of initiative process from intentional falsehoods designed to mislead voters]; Reeves v. Rocklin Unified School Dist. (2003) 109 C.A.4th 652, 663, 135 C.R.2d 213 [because high schools are nonpublic forums, antiabortion leafleteers who would have been disruptive of normal school activities were properly denied access to school property]; 27 *Pepperdine L. VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

8. Charitable Appeals for Funds.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 347

[§ 347] In General.

(1) Charitable and Religious Activity Distinguished. In Gospel Army v. Los Angeles (1945) 27 C.2d 232, 163 P.2d 704, the Los Angeles Municipal Code regulated the business of junk and secondhand dealers by a permit requirement, and regulated solicitation of money contributions by requirements of license, bond, and information about the solicitor or promoter. Plaintiff, a religious association, collected salvage for resale and solicited funds from the public. All net proceeds from these operations were used for religious and charitable purposes, including payment of compensation of the solicitors. Held, the regulations could validly be applied to plaintiff. Many activities of religious organizations are secular in nature; and, though the practice of charity may be regarded as a religious duty, it is not exclusively a religious activity, and the protection of the public against fraud in this field requires these regulations.

The court added this warning: "Religious organizations engage in various activities such as founding colonies, operating libraries, schools, wineries, farms, industrial and other commercial enterprises. Conceivably they may engage in any worldly activity, but it does not follow they may do so as specially privileged groups, free of the regulations that others must observe. If they were given such freedom, the direct consequence of their activities would be a diminution of the state's power to protect the public health and safety and general welfare. With that power so easily diminished, there would soon cease to be that separation of church and state underlying the constitutional concept of religious liberty." (27 C.2d 245.) (See Rescue Army v. Municipal Court of Los Angeles (1946) 28 C.2d 460, 471, 171 P.2d 8 [upholding permit requirement for soliciting charitable contributions by means of receptacles in public places]; Hillman v. Britton (1980) 111 C.A.3d 810, 811, 818, 821, 168 C.R. 852 [ordinance violating procedural and substantive due process]; People v. Knueppel (1980) 117 C.A.3d 958, 173 C.R. 466 [virtually uncontrolled discretion in police chief to deny permit]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 1649 [right of charity to engage in door-to-door solicitation of funds].)

(2) Solicitation of Funds as Protected Speech. "Prior authorities ... clearly establish that charitable appeals for funds, on the street or door to door, involve a variety of speech interests--communication of information, the dissemination and propagation of views and ideas, and the advocacy of causes--that are within the protection of the First Amendment." (Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment (1980) 444 U.S. 620, 100 S.Ct. 826, 833, 63 L.Ed.2d 73, 89 [ordinance prohibiting solicitation of contributions by charitable organizations that do not use at least 75% for charitable purposes, held unconstitutionally overbroad]; see 13 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 953.)

In Riley v. National Federation of the Blind of North Carolina (1988) 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669, a North Carolina statute regulated the solicitation of charitable contributions by professional fundraisers. The Act (a) prohibited charging unreasonable fees, (b) required disclosure to potential donors of the percentage of charitable contributions collected during the previous 12 months that were actually turned over to charity, and (c) imposed a license requirement. The Court, citing Village of Schaumburg, supra, and Secretary of State of Maryland v. Joseph H. Munson Co. (1984) 467 U.S. 947, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 81 L.Ed.2d 786, held the statute unconstitutional in all three respects. (108 S.Ct. 2676, 101 L.Ed.2d 693.) (See United States v. Kokinda (1990) 497 U.S. 720, 110 S.Ct. 3115, 3125, 3126, 111 L.Ed.2d 571, 588, 590 [regulation prohibiting solicitation of funds on postal premises is constitutional]; People v. Orange County Charitable Services (1999) 73 C.A.4th 1054, 1078, 1079, 87 C.R.2d 253 [distinguishing Riley; requiring commercial fundraiser to disclose fund raising expense percentages, which it is required by law to keep, to prospective donors on request is not violation of free speech rights]; 19 Hastings Const. L. Q. 167 [Kokinda]; 64 So. Cal. L. Rev. 605 [Village of Schaumburg]; 24 U.S.F. L. Rev. 205 [Riley]; 24 U.S.F. L. Rev. 571 [Fundraising in the 1990's: State Regulation of Charitable Solicitation After Riley].)

(3) Restrictions on Fund Raising Drives. In Cornelius v. N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense & Educational Fund (1985) 473 U.S. 788, 105 S.Ct. 3439, 87 L.Ed.2d 567, an Executive Order, designed to prevent disruption of the work environment of federal employees, placed limits on the number and kinds of charitable organizations allowed to participate in the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC). Respondent, seeking to solicit funds for legal defense and political advocacy, was excluded. Held, although charitable solicitation is protected speech, the federal workplace is only a "nonpublic forum," and access to it may be refused on reasonable grounds. "We conclude that the Government does not violate the First Amendment when it limits participation in the CFC in order to minimize disruption to the federal workplace, to ensure the success of the fund-raising effort, or to avoid the appearance of political favoritism without regard to the viewpoint of the excluded groups." (108 S.Ct. 3455, 87 L.Ed.2d 587.) (See 99 Harv. L. Rev. 202 [Cornelius].)

(4) Distinction: Liability for Intentional Misrepresentations. There is no blanket exemption under the First Amendment from liability for fraud by a fundraiser who intentionally misleads prospective donors on the amount of proceeds that will actually go to charitable purposes. (Illinois v. Telemarketing Associates (2003) 538 U.S. 600, 123 S.Ct. 1829, 1841, 155 L.Ed.2d 793, 811.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

8. Charitable Appeals for Funds.

b. Solicitation Inside Airport Terminal.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 348

[§ 348] Solicitation Inside Airport Terminal.

In International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness v. Lee (1992) 505 U.S. 672, 112 S.Ct. 2701, 120 L.Ed.2d 541 (ISKCON), the issue was "whether an airport terminal operated by a public authority is a public forum and whether a regulation prohibiting solicitation in the interior of an airport terminal violates the First Amendment." (112 S.Ct. 2703, 120 L.Ed.2d 547.) Petitioner ISKCON is a nonprofit religious corporation whose members perform the ritual of sankirtan: going into public places, disseminating religious literature, and soliciting funds to support the movement. Respondent Lee was the police superintendent of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which operates three major airports in the greater New York City area. The Port Authority adopted a regulation forbidding within the terminals the repetitive solicitation of money or distribution of literature. However, solicitation and distribution on the sidewalks outside the terminal buildings were permitted.

Petitioner brought suit under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (see infra, §816) seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The district court granted petitioner summary judgment; the Court of Appeals concluded that the ban on solicitation was reasonable, but the ban on distribution was not; the Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Appeals judgment sustaining the ban on solicitation.

(a) The solicitation at issue is a form of speech protected under the First Amendment; but the government need not permit all forms of speech on property that it owns and controls. "Where the government is acting as a proprietor, managing its internal operations, rather than acting as lawmaker with the power to regulate or license, its action will not be subjected to the heightened review to which its actions as a lawmaker may be subject." (112 S.Ct. 2705, 120 L.Ed.2d 549.)

(b) The cases reflect a "forum-based" approach for assessing restrictions that the Government seeks to place on the use of its property. "Under this approach, regulation of speech on government property that has traditionally been available for public expression is subject to the highest scrutiny. Such regulations survive only if they are narrowly drawn to achieve a compelling state interest. ... The second category of public property is the designated public forum, whether of a limited or unlimited character--property that the state has opened for expressive activity by part or all of the public. ... Regulation of such property is subject to the same limitations as that governing a traditional public forum. ... Finally, there is all remaining public property. Limitations on expressive activity conducted on this last category of property must survive only a much more limited review. The challenged regulation need only be reasonable, as long as the regulation is not an effort to suppress the speaker's activity due to disagreement with the speaker's view." (112 S.Ct. 2705, 120 L.Ed.2d 550.)

(c) The airport terminals are not public fora. "[T]he tradition of airport activity does not demonstrate that airports have historically been made available for speech activity. Nor can we say that these particular terminals, or airport terminals generally, have been intentionally opened by their operators to such activity; the frequent and continuing litigation evidencing the operators' objections belies any such claim. ... In short, there can be no argument that society's time-tested judgment, expressed through acquiescence in a continuing practice, has resolved the issue in petitioner's favor." (112 S.Ct. 2706, 120 L.Ed.2d 551.)

(d) Petitioner points to the variety of speech activity that it claims historically occurred at various "transportation nodes" such as rail stations, bus stations, wharves, and Ellis Island. But these sites traditionally have had private ownership, and the practices of privately held transportation centers do not bear on the government's regulatory authority over a publicly owned airport. (112 S.Ct. 2707, 120 L.Ed.2d 551.) And the relevant unit for our inquiry is an airport, not "transportation nodes" generally. "When new methods of transportation develop, new methods for accommodating that transportation are also likely to be needed. And with each new step, it therefore will be a new inquiry whether the transportation necessities are compatible with various kinds of expressive activity." (112 S.Ct. 2707, 120 L.Ed.2d 551.)

(e) The restrictions here challenged, therefore, need only satisfy a requirement of reasonableness; and under this standard the prohibition on solicitation passes muster:

(1) "Solicitation requires action by those who would respond: The individual solicited must decide whether or not to contribute (which itself might involve reading the solicitor's literature or hearing his pitch), and then, having decided to do so, reach for a wallet, search it for money, write a check, or produce a credit card. ... Passengers who wish to avoid the solicitor may have to alter their path, slowing both themselves and those around them. The result is that the normal flow of traffic is impeded. ... This is especially so in an airport, where 'air travelers, who are often weighted down by cumbersome baggage ... may be hurrying to catch a plane or to arrange ground transportation.' ... Delays may be particularly costly in this setting, as a flight missed by only a few minutes can result in hours worth of subsequent inconvenience." (112 S.Ct. 2708, 120 L.Ed.2d 553.)

(2) "In addition, face-to-face solicitation presents risks of duress that are an appropriate target of regulation. The skillful, and unprincipled, solicitor can target the most vulnerable, including those accompanying children or those suffering physical impairment and who cannot easily avoid the solicitation. ... The unsavory solicitor can also commit fraud through concealment of his affiliation or through deliberate efforts to shortchange those who agree to purchase. ... Compounding this problem is the fact that, in an airport, the targets of such activity frequently are on tight schedules. This in turn makes such visitors unlikely to stop and formally complain to airport authorities. As a result, the airport faces considerable difficulty in achieving its legitimate interest in monitoring solicitation activity to assure that travelers are not interfered with unduly." (112 S.Ct. 2708, 120 L.Ed.2d 553.)

(3) "The Port Authority has concluded that its interest in monitoring the activities can best be accomplished by limiting solicitation and distribution to the sidewalk areas outside the terminals. ... This sidewalk area is frequented by an overwhelming percentage of airport users. ... Thus the resulting access of those who would solicit the general public is quite complete." (112 S.Ct. 2708, 120 L.Ed.2d 553, 554.) (See 106 Harv. L. Rev. 279; 26 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 241.)

In Lee v. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness (1992) 505 U.S. 830, 112 S.Ct. 2709, 120 L.Ed.2d 669, the Court in a per curiam opinion held invalid the ban on distribution of literature in the Port Authority. Four justices dissented. (112 S.Ct. 2710, 120 L.Ed.2d 672.)

Several separate opinions were filed. (See 112 S.Ct. 2711, 120 L.Ed.2d 554 [one justice concurring in one, and concurring in the judgment in another]; 112 S.Ct. 2715, 120 L.Ed.2d 559 [four justices concurring in the judgment]; 112 S.Ct. 2724, 120 L.Ed.2d 570 [three justices concurring in the judgment in one, and dissenting in the other].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

8. Charitable Appeals for Funds.

c. Distinction: Begging or Soliciting Alms.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 349

[§ 349] Distinction: Begging or Soliciting Alms.

(1) In General. It is a misdemeanor to accost other persons in a public place or any place open to the public "for the purpose of begging or soliciting alms." (P.C. 647(c).) The statute has been upheld against challenges based on the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause. (See Ulmer v. Municipal Court (1976) 55 C.A.3d 263, 266, 127 C.R. 445; 2 Cal Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §61.)

People v. Zimmerman (1993) 15 C.A.4th Supp. 7, 19 C.R.2d 486, follows Ulmer (15 C.A.4th Supp. 11), and explains the distinction between valid charitable appeals and prohibited begging: "Charitable appeals 'involve a variety of speech interests,' including 'communication of information, the dissemination and propagation of views and ideas, and the advocacy of causes.' " (15 C.A.4th Supp. 13, quoting Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment (1980) 444 U.S. 620, 100 S.Ct. 826, 63 L.Ed.2d 73, supra, §347.) "Unlike begging or soliciting alms, charitable solicitations are 'characteristically intertwined with informative and perhaps persuasive speech seeking support for particular causes or for particular views on economic, political, or social issues. ... Thus, the nexus between charitable solicitations and the communication of information and advocacy of causes implicates interests protected by the First Amendment. ... On the other hand, with or without words, the object of begging ... is the transfer of money. Speech simply is not inherent to the act; it is not of the essence of the conduct. ... Thus, for purposes of protection under the First Amendment, charitable solicitations are distinguishable from begging and soliciting alms.' " (15 C.A.4th Supp. 13.)

"Since begging and soliciting alms is not constitutionally protected activity, the statute does not impinge upon a fundamental right. Additionally, beggars do not constitute a suspect class for purposes of equal protection analysis. Thus, the 'rational relationship' test applies here." (15 C.A.4th Supp. 13.) Ulmer indicates that the Legislature determined that the act of accosting others in a public place constitutes a public nuisance; hence, "the statute bears a rational relationship to the state's legitimate interest in protecting its citizens from intimidation, harassment, and other improprieties which may accompany such confrontation." (15 C.A.4th Supp. 14.) (See 23 Hastings Const. L. Q. 557 [constitutionality of aggressive panhandling legislation]; 28 U.S.F. L. Rev. 309 [First Amendment rights of beggars]; 7 A.L.R.5th 455 [laws regulating begging, panhandling, or similar activity by poor or homeless persons].)

(2) California Constitution. In Los Angeles Alliance for Survival v. Los Angeles (2000) 22 C.4th 352, 93 C.R.2d 1, 993 P.2d 334, on a certified question from the Ninth Circuit, the court concluded that defendant city's antipanhhandling ordinance was content neutral for purposes of the California liberty of speech clause, Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a). Thus, the ordinance "should be evaluated under the intermediate scrutiny standard applicable to time, place, and manner regulations, rather than under the strict scrutiny standard." (22 C.4th 357.) The ordinance bans two categories of solicitation: (1) in all public places, "aggressive" soliciting, which includes actions intended to cause fear of bodily harm or intimidation, intentional touching or blocking, and violent or threatening gestures or language, and (2) all solicitation in certain defined places, including within 15 feet of automated teller machines, in parking lots after dark, in public transportation vehicles, and in restaurant dining areas. (22 C.4th 363.)

(a) Merely because Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a) is worded more expansively and has been interpreted as being more protective than the Free Speech Clause of the First Amendment, "does not mean that it is broader than the First Amendment in all its applications." (22 C.4th 367.)

(b) A restriction is content neutral if it is justified without reference to content. (22 C.4th 367, citing Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence (1984) 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221, supra, §323.) The three U.S. Supreme Court opinions that have addressed content neutrality in the context of solicitation all have classified these laws as content neutral. (22 C.4th 368, discussing Heffron v. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness (1981) 452 U.S. 640, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298, infra, §521; United States v. Kokinda (1990) 497 U.S. 720, 110 S.Ct. 3115, 111 L.Ed.2d 571; International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness v. Lee (1992) 505 U.S. 672, 112 S.Ct. 2701, 120 L.Ed.2d 541, supra, §348.) These cases "establish that a restriction on solicitation for immediate donation or exchange of funds may be found to be content neutral for purposes of the First Amendment even if the measure regulates such solicitation while leaving other types of speech untouched, so long as the regulation predominantly is addressed to the inherently intrusive and potentially coercive nature of that kind of speech, and not to the content of the speech." (22 C.4th 372.)

(c) Alternatives for Calif. Women v. Contra Costa (1983) 145 C.A.3d 436, 193 C.R. 384, infra, §352, relying on a literal interpretation of the phrase "content neutral," invalidated an ordinance banning door-to-door charitable solicitation after 7:00 p.m. In so doing, the court ignored a considerable body of California cases that have failed to hold regulations singling out solicitation as constitutionally suspect. (22 C.4th 374.) Further, the court ignored the theoretical underpinnings of the content-based doctrine and the reasons content-based distinctions are constitutionally suspect. (22 C.4th 376.) Thus, with respect to Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a), Alternatives is disapproved. (22 C.4th 374.)

Two justices dissented in separate opinions. (22 C.4th 379, 383.) (See 29 Western State L. Rev. 147 [Los Angeles Alliance].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees. 9. Right To Circulate or Distribute. a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 350

[§ 350] In General.

In Schneider v. New Jersey (1939) 308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 146, 151, 84 L.Ed. 155, 165, municipal ordinances prohibiting the distribution of handbills to persons in streets, parks, or cars were held invalid. The object, to prevent littering of streets with discarded papers, must be accomplished by means other than denial of the constitutional right to distribute literature to those willing to receive it.

The Schneider doctrine, that an anti-littering ordinance must be narrowly confined to littering, was the basis of an elaborate opinion in Van Nuys Publishing Co. v. Thousand Oaks (1971) 5 C.3d 817, 97 C.R. 777, 489 P.2d 809. Defendant city adopted an ordinance prohibiting distribution of any written material by depositing it on property without first obtaining permission of the owner or occupant. Held, it was unconstitutionally overbroad.

(a) The control of littering, i.e., strewing papers on lawns or sidewalks, is a legitimate objective of a narrowly drawn ordinance. (5 C.3d 821.)

(b) The present ordinance goes beyond activities constituting littering. It prohibits all distribution, even by entering on property to deliver papers to persons there, or by taking care to secure papers and avoid littering. (5 C.3d 822.)

(c) The Schneider case barred distribution on public streets, while the present ordinance only precludes distribution at private residences. But the Schneider doctrine nevertheless applies, for house-to-house distribution has also been recognized as a means of implementing the First Amendment right of communication. (5 C.3d 823, citing Martin v. Struthers (1943) 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 87 L.Ed. 1313, infra, §521.)

(d) The chief contention of defendant was that the ordinance did not, as in Schneider, prohibit distribution, but merely conditioned it on prior consent of the occupant; and that the constitutional right is only to distribute material to willing recipients, not to force ideas on unwilling subjects. Di Lorenzo v. Pacific Grove (1968) 260 C.A.2d 68, 74, 67 C.R. 3, so held, but the case is wrong and is disapproved (5 C.3d 827, footnote 6) for two reasons:

(1) Where private residences are involved, a requirement of prior consent involves so many possible visits of a time-consuming and expensive nature as to amount in practice to a complete curtailment of this kind of communication; and in political campaigns it would virtually eliminate distribution of literature. (5 C.3d 824.)

(2) The distributor is entitled to an opportunity to win the attention of persons and thus obtain willing listeners. Hence, the initial burden should be on the homeowner to express an objection, in order to sustain constitutionality of the ordinance. (5 C.3d 826, 827, citing Rowan v. United States Post Office Dept. (1970) 397 U.S. 728, 90 S.Ct. 1484, 25 L.Ed.2d 736, infra, §370.)

(e) Martin v. Struthers and Rowan v. United States Post Office Dept., supra, establish guidelines for a constitutional ordinance prohibiting distribution to a home in defiance of the owner's previously expressed will: "The homeowner can, of course, express his objection to distribution in a variety of ways; he might, for example, post a sign on his property or, in the case of 'regular' distributors, write or telephone the disseminator to instruct him to discontinue delivery. Alternatively, the city might adopt the Rowan procedure as a model, and establish a municipal office both to channel complaints to offending distributors and to monitor distributors' responses." (5 C.3d 827.) (On door-to-door soliciting generally, see infra, §352.)

A. Nature of Guarantees.

9. Right To Circulate or Distribute.

b. Newsracks.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 351

[§ 351] Newsracks.

(1) Newsracks on Public Sidewalks. Newspaper vending boxes on public sidewalks are a means of distribution that cannot be wholly prohibited; but reasonable regulations on the time, place, and manner of their use are valid. (Kash Enterprises v. Los Angeles (1977) 19 C.3d 294, 302, 305, 138 C.R. 53, 562 P.2d 1302.)

In Kash, the court found the regulations valid, but held invalid provisions for seizure and removal without a hearing on the merits on two grounds: (a) violation of the constitutional right to procedural due process (see infra, §657 et seq.), and (b) violation of "First Amendment due process." The latter holding was based on the principle that a summary seizure provision must be narrowly drafted to minimize interference with First Amendment rights. (19 C.3d 309.) The court pointed out that removal was authorized for any violation of the regulations, however minor, and concluded that this "creates a very real risk that individual enforcement officers may consider a variety of extraneous factors, including the contents of a newsrack, in determining whether or not a particular rack should be removed from a public sidewalk." (19 C.3d 312.) Thus, the failure of the ordinance to limit the officer's seizure authority to situations in which immediate removal is mandated by public need, brought it into conflict with the First Amendment. (19 C.3d 313.) (See Gluck v. Los Angeles (1979) 93 C.A.3d 121, 134, 155 C.R. 435 [following Kash]; 18 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1087 [Kash].)

Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co. (1988) 486 U.S. 750, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771, held unconstitutional a local ordinance giving the mayor unfettered discretion over which publishers may place newsracks on public property and where the newsracks may be placed. (108 S.Ct. 2152, 100 L.Ed.2d 792.) Three justices dissented. (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 251.)

Sebago v. Alameda (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1372, 259 C.R. 918, held unconstitutional an ordinance restricting the sale of adult newspapers or periodicals from newsracks in defendant city. "The ordinance does not meet the constitutional requirement that it be a content-neutral regulation aimed at preventing secondary effects of adult newsracks in the surrounding neighborhood or be a content-based regulation justified by a compelling state interest." (211 C.A.3d 1377.)

(a) Controlling cases. Kash and Lakewood, supra, hold that First Amendment protections are applicable to the public distribution of newspapers and periodicals through newsracks. (211 C.A.3d 1381.) Renton v. Playtime Theatres (1986) 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29, infra, §443, holds that content-neutral time, place, and manner regulations are acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. (211 C.A.3d 1382, 1383.)

(b) Alameda's content-based regulation. The ordinance identifies as one of its aims the prevention of urban blight, and the city contends that newsracks from which adult newspapers are sold create the same secondary effects as adult bookstores and theaters. But newsracks are different from adult bookstores and theaters. There are no flashing lights or gaudy displays, no steady stream of lingering customers; and the product is not intended to be consumed at the site of its purchase. (211 C.A.3d 1384.)

(c) No constitutional justification for ordinance. Because the ordinance is content-based, the city must show that it is necessary to serve a compelling state interest and is narrowly drawn to achieve that end. It has not made this showing; the newspaper involved is neither obscene nor harmful to minors under state law. (211 C.A.3d 1386, citing Sable Communications of Calif. v. Federal Communications Com. (1989) 492 U.S. 115, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93, infra, §447.) "If such a publication is not harmful to minors, there cannot possibly be a compelling state interest in protecting them from it, sufficient to justify a content-based infringement of the First Amendment. Indisputably, Alameda has a compelling interest in protecting minors from unsupervised access to harmful adult bookstore materials, but this ordinance is not narrowly drawn to achieve that end." (211 C.A.3d 1386.) Additionally, the relationship between the ordinance and the asserted governmental interest is tenuous. The ordinance merely moves the newsracks away from residential areas, and "[a]ny determined teenager can seek out the relocated newsracks." (211 C.A.3d 1386.) (See Berry v. Santa Barbara (1995) 40 C.A.4th 1075, 1080, 1087, 1088, 47 C.R.2d 661 [upholding ordinance requiring that publications publicly displaying material harmful to minors be placed in blinder racks, but construing ordinance to include scienter requirement and holding that blinders are required only if front page itself contains harmful matter].)

In Cincinnati v. Discovery Network (1993) 507 U.S. 410, 113 S.Ct. 1505, 123 L.Ed.2d 99, the city had given permission to respondents to install a number of newsracks at approved locations for advertising promotional material. In 1990 the city notified respondents that the permits were revoked because each publication was a "commercial handbill" within the meaning of the Municipal Code and could not be distributed on public property. Respondents brought an action in the federal district court, which held that the city had not met its burden of establishing "a reasonable fit" between the legislative ends and the means chosen to accomplish them. (113 S.Ct. 1509, 123 L.Ed.2d 106.) The Court of Appeals agreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals, holding that the city's newsrack policy was neither content-neutral nor narrowly tailored:

"Cincinnati has enacted a sweeping ban that bars from its sidewalks a whole class of constitutionally protected speech. ... The regulation is not a permissible regulation of commercial speech, for on this record it is clear that the interests that Cincinnati has asserted are unrelated to any distinction between 'commercial handbills' and 'newspapers.' Moreover, because the ban is predicated on the content of the publications distributed by the subject newsracks, it is not a valid time, place or manner restriction on protected speech. For these reasons, Cincinnati's categorical ban on the distribution, via newsrack, of 'commercial handbills' cannot be squared with the dictates of the First Amendment." (113 S.Ct. 1517, 123 L.Ed.2d 117.) (See 107 Harv. L. Rev. 224 [Cincinnati].)

(2) Newsracks in Stores. In Judlo v. The Vons Cos. (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1020, 259 C.R. 624, plaintiff J, publisher of the Desert Weekly, a giveaway paper, was permitted by the manager of defendant's chain grocery store to place its newsrack inside the store. When newsracks in front of the store reached a volume deemed unsightly by defendant's management, local managers were told to select newsracks to remain and reject others. The local manager selected newsracks for certain major newspapers and rejected others, including plaintiff's publication. In this action the trial judge granted a preliminary injunction against removal of plaintiff's newsrack until trial or court approval of a nondiscriminatory plan of selection. Held, reversed. Defendant's decision to permit placement of some newsracks on its property did not create a public forum requiring it to allow other newspapers the same privilege. (211 C.A.3d 1027, 1028.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 352

[§ 352] Door-to-Door.

In Alternatives for Calif. Women v. Contra Costa (1983) 145 C.A.3d 436, 193 C.R. 384, a county ordinance prohibited door-to-door soliciting in the unincorporated area of the county between 7 p.m. and 8 a.m. Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation organized and operated for charitable and political purposes, distributes information on social welfare issues concerning women and children, and solicits funds by door-to-door canvassing. It brought this action seeking injunctive relief against enforcement of the ordinance. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional.

(a) The First Amendment protects the door-to-door dissemination of information, printed matter, and ideas, and also the solicitation of financial contributions in conjunction with those activities. (145 C.A.3d 448, 451, citing Martin v. Struthers (1943) 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 87 L.Ed. 1313, infra, §521, and Van Nuys Publishing Co. v. Thousand Oaks (1971) 5 C.3d 817, 97 C.R. 777, 489 P.2d 809, supra, §350.)

(b) The county's interests can be advanced by less restrictive means, including (1) enforcement of existing laws against fraud, trespass, breach of the peace, and any other substantive offenses; (2) adoption of registration and identification procedures to protect against spurious solicitors; and (3) punishment of those who call at a home in defiance of the previously expressed will of the occupant. (145 C.A.3d 449.) (See Fresno v. Press Communications (1994) 31 C.A.4th 32, 39, 36 C.R.2d 456 [city ordinance that prohibited any advertisement, unauthorized newspaper, or campaign material, under certain conditions, from being distributed to any business or residence, but that did not cover other forms of speech, was content-based, and city failed to meet its burden of showing content-neutral justification for it; hence, it was unconstitutional on its face]; 75 *Harv. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

10. Right To Post.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 353

[§ 353] In General.

(1) Posting on Utility Poles. In Dulaney v. Municipal Court (1974) 11 C.3d 77, 112 C.R. 777, 520 P.2d 1, a San Francisco ordinance made it unlawful to affix a notice or poster on utility poles without permission first obtained from the owner and from the city Department of Public Works. Petitioners were arrested for posting a notice on a city-owned pole announcing an antiwar rally and march. Held, prohibition granted to prevent criminal proceedings.

(a) Theory of "opening the forum." In making the poles accessible for posting notices where consent of the owner and the Department is obtained, the city opened a forum as in Marsh v. Alabama (1946) 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265, supra, §314, Wirta v. Alameda-Contra Costa Transit Dist. (1967) 68 C.2d 51, 64 C.R. 430, 434 P.2d 982, supra, §343, and Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885, infra, §394. (11 C.3d 82.)

(b) Posting as form of expression. Although the ordinance regulates only the posting, not the content, of the notices, it still conflicts with the constitutional protection of dissemination; i.e., posting is not unlike picketing and distribution or circulation of printed matter (see supra, §352; infra, §§360, 396 et seq.). "[T]he posting of notices on utility poles is a form of expression coming within the protective umbrella of the First Amendment." (11 C.3d 84.)

(c) Test of regulation. Applying the balancing test of Dillon v. Municipal Court (1971) 4 C.3d 860, 94 C.R. 777, 484 P.2d 945, infra, §456, the ordinance is invalid. It establishes a licensing scheme by requiring a permit for posting, but states no conditions or standards for granting permission. (11 C.3d 86.) In other words, having made the poles available for an exercise of First Amendment rights, the city may not regulate their use by a standardless licensing scheme that allows officials unbounded discretion in granting or denying permits. (11 C.3d 88.)

Three dissenting justices thought the ordinance should be construed to apply only to unprotected commercial material, and should be held unconstitutional only in the part requiring prior consent from the city Department; it would then be a valid regulation imposing sanctions for trespass on private property without the owner's prior consent. (11 C.3d 89.)

(2) Posting Signs on Public Property. Sussli v. San Mateo (1981) 120 C.A.3d 1, 173 C.R. 781, upheld the validity of a city ordinance prohibiting the posting of signs on public property, noting that 48 California cities had adopted such regulations. Plaintiff, a candidate for the City Council, had posted signs supporting his candidacy. He contended that the absolute ban of the ordinance was an infringement of the First Amendment right of free speech. The court, rejecting the attack, reasoned as follows:

(a) The courts, following a balancing approach, must determine whether the exercise of police power to prohibit the means or mode of communication was justified by sufficiently important governmental interests involved. (120 C.A.3d 6.)

(b) The government has the burden of establishing that the regulation was narrowly drawn to serve a compelling state interest. (120 C.A.3d 9.) That burden was met here. "In weighing the competing interests at stake, we attach special significance to the compelling interest of the public in maintaining some semblance of visual harmony in the areas where they live. Thousands of tattered derelict signs from past elections testify to the difficulty of protecting public property from unsightly signs even where laws forbid public posting. Without such laws one foresees an absolute end to the already eroded aesthetic integrity of public places in a tidal wave of publicly sponsored graffiti." (120 C.A.3d 9.) "The rational basis for differentiating between political signs relating to specific elections and those which pertain to the conduct of government in general seems tenuous at best. ... If the subject ordinance falls, it is difficult to rationalize a valid basis for prohibiting the public posting of signs ranging from 'Question Authority' to 'Save the Red Brigade' or 'Down with the Shah.' It is, indeed, probable that the county could then be required to provide public space for any noncommercial message, such as 'Roommate Desired' or 'Merry Christmas.'" (120 C.A.3d 10, footnote 10.)

A strong dissenting opinion argues that the ordinance, with its sweeping prohibition of all posters and signs, temporary or otherwise, on any public property, is an invalid restriction on a long established method of political expression, and that the city could have achieved its objectives by a more narrowly drawn ordinance relating to public placement of temporary political signs. (120 C.A.3d 13.)

(3) Posting Signs on Private Property. In Indio v. Arroyo (1983) 143 C.A.3d 151, 191 C.R. 565, plaintiff city attempted to apply its sign regulation ordinance to an outdoor mural on a private business establishment. The mural depicted aspects of Mexican heritage, including social advancements of Mexican people in contemporary society. Held, the mural was ideological expression, entitled to a high degree of constitutional protection, and the ordinance was overbroad as applied to it. "The city's legitimate interest in its esthetic environment cannot be a justification for suppressing the rights of those private persons who seek to improve that environment." (143 C.A.3d 158, 159.)

In Gonzales v. Superior Court (1986) 180 C.A.3d 1116, 226 C.R. 164, a city ordinance banned temporary noncommercial signs announcing or pertaining to specific events (e.g., an election), but allowed permanent signs and various commercial signs. Petitioner had four signs critical of city government in his car legally parked on a state highway in the city. The city confiscated the signs, and petitioner sought mandamus directing the lower court to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance. Held, writ granted; the ordinance was unconstitutional on its face.

(a) By opening a traditional public forum to the display of some signs, the city could not justify its purported interests in aesthetics and traffic safety by banning certain other noncommercial signs. (180 C.A.3d 1121, 1123, 1126.) And the ordinance also attempted to restrict noncommercial messages on private property (the car). (180 C.A.3d 1124.)

(b) The ordinance allowed a single governmental official to determine what signs would be permitted by a permit system; this prior restraint was an unconstitutional restriction of free speech. (180 C.A.3d 1124, 1128.) (See infra, §360.)

b. Residential Signs.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 354

[§ 354] Residential Signs.

In Ladue v. Gilleo (1994) 512 U.S. 43, 114 S.Ct. 2038, 129 L.Ed.2d 36, a city ordinance, with limited exceptions, prohibited homeowners from displaying signs on their property. Gilleo, a resident, challenged the ordinance, claiming that it violated her right to free speech by prohibiting her from displaying an antiwar sign from her home. Held, the ordinance is unconstitutional.

(b) Assuming that the ordinance's various exemptions are free of impermissible content or viewpoint discrimination, the ordinance is too broad. The city "has almost completely foreclosed a venerable means of communication that is both unique and important. It has totally foreclosed that medium to political, religious, or personal messages. Signs that react to a local happening or express a view on a controversial issue both reflect and animate change in the life of a community. Often placed on lawns or in windows, residential signs play an important part in political campaigns, during which they are displayed to signal the resident's support for particular candidates, parties, or causes. They may not afford the same opportunities for conveying complex ideas as do other media, but residential signs have long been an important and distinct medium of expression." (114 S.Ct. 2045, 129 L.Ed.2d 47.)

(c) Ordinances that ban an entire medium of expression are of particular concern and have been held invalid in prior decisions. "Although prohibitions foreclosing entire media may be completely free of content or viewpoint discrimination, the danger they pose to the freedom of speech is readily apparent--by eliminating a common means of speaking, such measures can suppress too much speech." (114 S.Ct. 2045, 129 L.Ed.2d 47.)

(d) The ordinance cannot be justified as a mere time, place, or manner regulation. Displaying a sign from one's own residence often carries a distinct message that cannot be conveyed by other means or by a sign in another location. Residential signs offer a cheap and convenient form of communication, and the intended audience--one's neighbors--cannot be reached nearly as well by other means. (114 S.Ct. 2046, 129 L.Ed.2d 48.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

11. Other Areas.

a. Ban on Receipt of Honoraria.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 355

[§ 355] Ban on Receipt of Honoraria.

In United States v. National Treasury Employees Union (1995) 513 U.S. 454, 115 S.Ct. 1003, 130 L.Ed.2d 964, Congress, on the recommendation of two commissions, passed the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 (5 U.S.C. Appx., §101 et seq.), which in conjunction with a 25% pay increase for members of Congress, federal judges, and executive employees above a GS-15, prohibits the receipt of honoraria by practically all federal employees while they are members, officers, or employees. Honorarium is defined as the receipt of money or a thing of value for an appearance, speech, or article, regardless of whether the speech or the article, or the person paying for it, has any connection with the employee's official duties. However, if a series of appearances, speeches, or articles is given, such a connection must exist. (5 U.S.C. Appx., §505(3).) The Act provides that executive employees, instead of being subject to it, are governed by rules issued by the Office of Government Ethics (OGE), which are more liberal in that they permit reimbursement for certain expenses relating to appearances, speeches, or articles, and exclude such activities as giving a sermon or reading a work of fiction. Violations are punishable by recovery of $ 10,000 or the amount of the honorarium, whichever is larger.

Plaintiffs were two unions and several individual employees of the executive branch. One of the unions was certified as a representative of the class composed of all executive branch employees below the grade GS-16, all of whom, but for the Ethics Reform Act, would receive honoraria. Both the trial judge and the Court of Appeals held that the statute was unconstitutional as applied to all executive branch employees, and the latter went so far as to rewrite 5 U.S.C. Appx., §501(b) to exclude such employees. Held, judgment affirmed insofar as it prohibits enforcement against plaintiffs, but reversed insofar as it grants relief to parties not before the Court.

(a) Balancing test.

(1) Past federal employees such as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Herman Melville, Walt Whitman, and Bret Harte have received honoraria while making significant contributions to the marketplace of ideas. As announced in cases like Pickering v. Board of Education of Township High School Dist. 205, Will, Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 563, 88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §283, the test is the balancing of the right of the employee, as a citizen, to comment on matters of public concern, weighed against the interest of the Government, as an employer, in promoting the efficiency of the services that it performs through its employees. If the speech is on a private matter, the test is not applied, and the Government's burden is easy, but when the speech involves a matter of public concern, the Government bears a difficult burden of proof. Here, clearly protected speech is involved because it relates to matters of general interest instead of to a private matter, such as the employees' job. (115 S.Ct. 1012, 1013, 130 L.Ed.2d 978, 979.)

(2) The sweep of the statute makes the government's burden especially difficult because it involves the wholesale ban of future speech of a large number of employees instead of the past speech of a single employee. This is so even though greater weight is usually given to Congressional judgment than to a single executive's disciplinary action. It should be noted that, while the ban on honoraria does not actually ban any speech, it does place a powerful burden on expressive activity, a burden that is heavier on lower paid employees than on higher paid policymakers, who will probably continue to speak so long as travel is reimbursed. It should also be noted that the ban poses a heavy burden on the public's right to know what the employee would otherwise have said. In other words, "we cannot ignore the risk that it might deprive us of the works of a future Melville or Hawthorne." (115 S.Ct. 1013, 130 L.Ed.2d 981.)

(3) The Government attempted to meet its burden by arguing that the receipt of honoraria would interfere with the efficiency of public service, relying on United Public Workers of America (C.I.O.) v. Mitchell (1947) 330 U.S. 75, 67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754, supra, §90, which upheld the Hatch Act's prohibition on all partisan political activity by federal employees. However, that Act was designed to protect the rights of workers. The Government did not show how a ban on the receipt of honoraria would protect employees, instead of threaten their morale and liberty. (115 S.Ct. 1010, 130 L.Ed.2d 982.)

(4) The Government's main concern was that the receipt of honoraria would involve an actual or apparent abuse of power. This might be true of members of Congress and high-ranking judiciary and executive officials who have the power to do favors for those who pay them honoraria. The Government failed to extend this concern to lower ranking executive employees who lack the power to do favors for those who pay them to speak. It is difficult to see how receipt of an honorarium by a mechanic would involve an actual or apparent abuse of power. (115 S.Ct. 1016, 130 L.Ed.2d 983.)

(5) The Government argued that honoraria were so threatening to the efficiency of the federal service that a total ban was necessary. However, the ban is not total. Honoraria are banned for a series of appearances, speeches, or articles only if they are connected with the employee's work. The Government's only argument for having a total ban is that the administrative costs are lower than they would be if a nexus had to be found in each case, a position that is hardly a justification for the blanket suppression of speech and one that undermines the argument that a nexus requirement is too difficult to enforce. Also, the Government claimed that speech posed a special threat to efficiency. However, the commissions' recommendations show a judgment that compensation for an appearance, speech, or article poses no greater danger than compensation for other services that an employee might perform in his or her free time. Congress, however, chose to restrict only speech, instead of other activities, a result that is anomalous considering the favored position of speech in the constitutional firmament. (115 S.Ct. 1016, 1017, 130 L.Ed.2d 984.)

(6) The OGE regulations limit the definition of "appearance, speech, or article" by excluding a number of activities that are not related to one's work. This diminishes the Government's arguments that such an exclusion, i.e., for speech not related to work, cannot be made, and that honoraria for lower level employees for speech totally unrelated to their jobs jeopardizes the efficiency of the federal service. (115 S.Ct. 1018, 130 L.Ed.2d 985.)

(7) Finally, the fact that the Ethics Act singles out expressive activity heightens the Government's burden. It is not enough for the Government to show mere speculation that serious harm might result. It must show a reasonable ground to fear that serious harm will result if free speech is practiced, and that the danger will be averted by the statute in question. (115 S.Ct. 1017, 130 L.Ed.2d 985.)

(b) Remedy.

(1) The solution of the trial judge and the Court of Appeals was to enjoin the receipt of honoraria against the entire executive department, regardless of whether the speech was, or was not, connected to an employee's job. For the following reasons, the judgment is modified to apply only to those parties before the Court: "First, ... we neither want nor need to provide relief to nonparties when a narrower remedy will fully protect the litigants. ... In this case, granting full relief to respondents--who include all Executive Branch employees below Grade GS-16--does not require passing on the applicability of §501(b) to senior executives who received a 25 percent salary increase that offsets the honoraria ban's disincentive to speak and write. Second, the Government conceivably might advance a different justification for an honoraria ban limited to more senior officials, thus presenting a different constitutional question than the one we decide today. ... Third, as the Court of Appeals recognized, its remedy required it to tamper with the text of the statute, a practice we strive to avoid." (115 S.Ct. 1018, 1019, 130 L.Ed.2d 986, 987.)

(2) The obligation to avoid judicial legislation makes it necessary to reject the government's second suggestion, i.e., that the remedy be modified by crafting a nexus requirement for the honorarium. "We cannot be sure that our attempt to redraft the statute to limit its coverage to cases involving an undesirable nexus between the speaker's official duties and either the subject matter of the speaker's expression or the identity of the payor would correctly identify the nexus Congress would have adopted in a more limited honoraria ban. ... The process of drawing a proper nexus, even more than the defense of the statute's application to senior employees, would likely raise independent constitutional concerns whose adjudication is unnecessary to decide this case. We believe the Court of Appeals properly left to Congress the task of drafting a narrower statute." (115 S.Ct. 1019, 130 L.Ed.2d 987.)

A concurring and dissenting justice agreed that the honoraria ban was unconstitutional, but thought that the remedy was painted with too broad a brush. (115 S.Ct. 1019, 130 L.Ed.2d 988.) Three dissenting justices thought that there were compelling governmental reasons for the ban. (115 S.Ct. 1024, 130 L.Ed.2d 994.) (See 109 Harv. L. Rev. 200.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

11. Other Areas.

b. Fortune-Telling.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 356

[§ 356] Fortune-Telling.

In Spiritual Psychic Science Church v. Azusa (1985) 39 C.3d 501, 217 C.R. 225, 703 P.2d 1119, the court held that fortunetelling was protected speech, and that an ordinance prohibiting it was a violation of the California Constitution's free speech guarantee (Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, supra, §312).

An ordinance of defendant city provided: "No person shall practice or profess to practice or engage in the business or art of astrology, augury, card or tea reading, cartomancy, clairvoyance, crystal gazing, divination, fortune telling, hypnotism, magic, mediumship, necromancy, palmistry, phrenology, prophecy, or spiritual reading, or any similar business or art, who either solicits or receives a gift or fee or other consideration for such practice, or where admission is charged for such practice." Plaintiff Stevens, an ordained minister of plaintiff church, told fortunes at her place of business, charging a fee for the service. Defendant city revoked the church's business license, and threatened to prosecute Stevens. The church and Stevens then brought this action for injunctive relief. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional.

(a) Fortune-telling as protected speech. Defendant city conceded that Stevens could practice fortune-telling and solicit funds for the church's religious activities, but contended that engaging in the business of telling fortunes for money was commercial activity. This is unsound:

(1) Fortune-telling "involves the communication of a message directly from the fortune-teller to the recipient." This communication between persons "is at the very core of what is known as speech." (39 C.3d 508, 519.) And speech does not lose its protected character when engaged in for profit. (39 C.3d 509.)

(2) The city contended that if it is speech, it is commercial speech that is not entitled to the same high level of protection as noncommercial speech. This is likewise unsound. Commercial speech "has but one purpose--to advance an economic transaction. By contrast, noncommercial speech encompasses activities extending beyond that purpose." (39 C.3d 511.) The art of fortune-telling involves the passing of ideas and information--valid, questionable, or false--between the fortune-teller and the client; and the consideration is not the object of the communication. "When Stevens charges a fee for fortunetelling, she sells her services, not an advertisement of her services. ... If we were to accept the City's theory, a lecture for or against Marxism, abortion, nuclear power, or racial supremacy would be commercial speech if people paid an admission charge to hear it, because the lecture would complete the transaction." (39 C.3d 511.)

(3) The city further contended that fortune-telling is not constitutionally protected speech because it does not concern or affect the political process. This argument fails to comprehend the broad scope and purpose of the constitutional guaranty. "First, it is impossible to say that fortunetellers impart no political message in their communications. In their vision of the future there may be a view of society as they perceive it may one day be. Such a communication conceivably could contain the spark of a political flame. Second, fortune-telling may fire the imagination and stimulate discussion of the future. That some--even a majority--may find this mode of communication distasteful, ridiculous or even corrupt is irrelevant to constitutional concerns." (39 C.3d 512.)

(b) Distinction: unprotected speech. The city contends that fortunetelling is inherently deceptive and therefore is within the "fraud" exception (see infra, §424). But this does not save the ordinance:

(1) Many fortune-tellers have no belief in their power to predict the future, and if they obtain consideration for their services, their activity could be deemed fraudulent. However, some believe they possess the power to predict, and when they impart their beliefs to others, they are communicating protected opinions. (39 C.3d 515.) Moreover, many other persons purport to predict the future: e.g., "astrology columnists in daily newspapers, economists who prognosticate interest rates and other business conditions, investment counsellors who forecast stock market trends, sportswriters and oddsmakers who predict the winners of athletic contests, horserace handicappers, pollsters who forecast election returns, and clergymen who describe the concept of a hereafter." (39 C.3d 515.)

(2) It is within the legislative province to prohibit fraudulent fortunetelling; but a regulation is invalid for overbreadth "if it prohibits protected expression, even though it also guards the public from fraud." (39 C.3d 515.) Here, "the prohibition against 'spiritual reading' could encompass Bible lessons, the bar against 'hypnotism' could include hypnosis as an accepted technique of the psychotherapist, the banning of 'magic' could prevent numerous popular theatrical performances, and the prohibition of 'prophecy' could interfere with many religious services." (39 C.3d 516.)

(c) Balancing test for regulation not aimed at communicative element. The city's objective--prohibiting fraud in telling fortunes--can be achieved by means less drastic than this overbroad ordinance, e.g., by such a statute as P.C. 332. (39 C.3d 518.) Thus: "Any marginal interest the City may have in more complete and convenient regulation in this area by a total ban on fortunetelling for compensation is outweighed by the interest in free and open speech on all subjects." (39 C.3d 519.)

(d) No room for judicial construction. An overbroad statute may sometimes be construed to avoid unconstitutionality. (39 C.3d 519.) This is not possible here. "Although the ordinance in the case at bar contains an obvious defect that could be cured by limiting its reach to fraudulent activity carried out by fortunetellers, we would abuse our power by adding such language to the measure. This is not a case like Welton, in which the ordinance could stand on its own without the invalid reference. Before us now is an enactment that is invalid in its essence; we would be required to rewrite it in order to save it. This we may not do." (39 C.3d 520, citing Welton v. Los Angeles (1976) 18 C.3d 497, 134 C.R. 668, 556 P.2d 1119, supra, §335.)

[§ 357] Police Surveillance of College.

White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, involved a question of first impression. Plaintiff, a professor at U.C.L.A., filed a taxpayer's suit to enjoin defendant Chief of Police of Los Angeles from spending money for an intelligence gathering program. The complaint alleged that members of the police department registered as students at U.C.L.A., attended classes, and joined student organizations, and then made reports of discussions heard, which became part of police dossiers; and that this covert surveillance pertained to no illegal activity. Held, plaintiff had standing to sue (see supra, §88), and the complaint stated a cause of action.

(a) Normal undercover police operations, employed to detect criminal activity, are regularly sanctioned; but limitations imposed by the Fourth Amendment on improper surveillance (e.g., of private residences or public restrooms) have been repeatedly stated. (13 C.3d 766; see Wirin v. Parker (1957) 48 C.2d 890, 313 P.2d 844, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §354, and People v. Triggs (1973) 8 C.3d 884, 106 C.R. 408, 506 P.2d 232, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §207.)

(b) Police surveillance violates the First Amendment if it chills protected activity. And the threat is "considerably exacerbated" when it focuses on university classrooms and their environs. The protection of constitutional freedoms "is nowhere more vital than in the community of American schools." (13 C.3d 769.)

(c) "The crucible of new thought is the university classroom; the campus is the sacred ground of free discussion. Once we expose the teacher or the student to possible future prosecution for the ideas he may express, we forfeit the security that nourishes change and advancement. The censorship of totalitarian regimes that so often condemns developments in art, science and politics is but a step removed from the inchoate surveillance of free discussion in the university; such intrusion stifles creativity and to a large degree shackles democracy." (13 C.3d 770.)

(d) In view of the substantial chilling effect, the activity may be sustained only if defendant can demonstrate a compelling state interest that justifies the deterrent and that cannot be served by alternative means less intrusive on fundamental rights. Because this case arises on demurrer, the interest has not been shown here. (13 C.3d 772, 773.) (For alternative ground of invasion of right of privacy, see infra, §575.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

A. Nature of Guarantees.

11. Other Areas.

d. Promotional Advertising by Public Utility.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 358

[§ 358] Promotional Advertising by Public Utility.

(1) Billing Inserts Discussing Controversial Issues of Public Policy. In Consolidated Edison of New York Co. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 530, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 65 L.Ed.2d 319, a utility placed material in its monthly electric bills arguing the benefits of nuclear power. The Public Service Commission issued an order prohibiting any bill inserts expressing opinions "on controversial issues of public policy." Held, the order was unconstitutional. Pointing out that members of the "captive audience" may escape exposure to objectionable material "by transferring the bill insert from envelope to wastebasket" (100 S.Ct. 2336, 65 L.Ed.2d 331), the Court concluded:

"The Commission's suppression of bill inserts that discuss controversial issues of public policy directly infringes the freedom of speech protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The state action is neither a valid time, place or manner restriction, nor a permissible subject-matter regulation, nor a narrowly drawn prohibition justified by a compelling state interest." (100 S.Ct. 2336, 65 L.Ed.2d 332.) (See Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Util. Com. (2000) 85 C.A.4th 86, 93, 102 C.R.2d 20 [following Consolidated Edison; statute prohibiting utilities from inserting political literature in billing envelopes is facially unconstitutional]; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 1221 [Consolidated Edison].)

(2) Promotional Advertising by Electrical Utility. In Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Service Com. of New York (1980) 447 U.S. 557, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341, the Commission prohibited all advertising promoting the use of electricity, declaring it contrary to the national policy of conserving energy. Held, the total ban was unconstitutional. The Court first set forth the four-part analysis used in commercial speech cases: "At the outset, we must determine whether the expression is protected by the First Amendment. For commercial speech to come within that provision, it at least must concern lawful activity and not be misleading. Next, we ask whether the asserted governmental interest is substantial. If both inquiries yield positive answers, we must determine whether the regulation directly advances the governmental interest asserted, and whether it is not more extensive than is necessary to serve that interest." (100 S.Ct. 2351, 65 L.Ed.2d 351.)

The Court concluded that the Commission had not demonstrated that its interest in conservation cannot be protected adequately by more limited regulation; e.g., by restricting the format and content of the advertising by a requirement that the advertisements include information about the relative efficiency and expense of the offered services under current conditions and for the foreseeable future. (100 S.Ct. 2354, 65 L.Ed.2d 354.) (See 94 Harv. L. Rev. 34, 159.)

(3) Compelled Distribution of Other Material. The issue in Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Util. Com. of Calif. (1986) 475 U.S. 1, 106 S.Ct. 903, 89 L.Ed.2d 1, arose out of the utility's distribution of a newsletter ("Progress") in its monthly billing envelope, including in it political editorials, feature stories on matters of public interest, tips on energy conservation, and information about utility services and bills. The Public Utilities Commission determined that there was extra space in the envelope for other materials, i.e., space that would not increase postage cost, and it ordered the utility to permit TURN--a ratepayers' organization representing a significant group of the utility's residential customers--to use the extra space four times a year for any material it wished to enclose. The California Supreme Court denied review. Held, the order was an infringement of the utility's First Amendment rights.

(a) The utility's newsletter, like a small newspaper, includes discussion of matters of public concern that are protected by the First Amendment. (106 S.Ct. 907, 89 L.Ed.2d 7.)

(b) Compelled access penalizes the expression of points of view and forces speakers to alter their speech to conform with an agenda they do not set. The concerns that required invalidation of the right-of-reply statute in Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. Tornillo (1974) 418 U.S. 241, 94 S.Ct. 2831, 41 L.Ed.2d 730, infra, §364, apply to the utility as well as to the institutional press. (106 S.Ct. 909, 89 L.Ed.2d 8, 9.) The state is not free either to restrict the utility's speech to certain topics or views or to force it to respond to views that others may hold; and under Tornillo, a forced access rule that would accomplish these purposes indirectly is similarly forbidden. (106 S.Ct. 909, 89 L.Ed.2d 9, 10.)

(c) The Commission's order requires the utility to assist in disseminating TURN's view; it does not equally constrain both sides of the debate about utility regulation. This kind of favoritism goes beyond the fundamentally content-neutral subsidies sustained in Buckley v. Valeo (1976) 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 694, 46 L.Ed.2d 659, 759, supra, §256. (106 S.Ct. 911, 89 L.Ed.2d 11.) The order also impermissibly requires the utility to associate with speech with which it may disagree, and forces it to respond. "That kind of forced response is antithetical to the free discussion that the First Amendment seeks to foster." (106 S.Ct. 912, 89 L.Ed.2d 12, citing Wooley v. Maynard (1977) 430 U.S. 705, 97 S.Ct. 1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752, infra, §557.)

(d) "We conclude that the Commission's order impermissibly burdens appellant's First Amendment rights because it forces appellant to associate with the view of other speakers, and because it selects the other speakers on the basis of their viewpoints. The order is not a narrowly tailored means of furthering a compelling state interest, and it is not a valid time, place, or manner regulation." (106 S.Ct. 914, 89 L.Ed.2d 15.) (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 182; 21 San Diego L. Rev. 391 [Access to Public Utility Communications: Limits Under the Fifth and First Amendments]; 41 San Diego L. Rev. 483 [criticizing reasoning and holding of Pacific Gas & Elec.]; 27 Santa Clara L. Rev. 485 [same].)

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

a. General Principle.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 359

[§ 359] General Principle.

The constitutional guarantee clearly protects against previous restraints on publication or speech, thus preventing censorship or prohibition of publication by injunction. (Near v. Minnesota (1931) 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357; Staub v. Baxley (1958) 355 U.S. 313, 78 S.Ct. 277, 2 L.Ed.2d 302; New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 13 C.3d 652, 658, 119 C.R. 468, 532 P.2d 116, infra, §361; Tily B. v. Newport Beach (1998) 69 C.A.4th 1, 10, 81 C.R.2d 6 [city's licensing scheme for restaurants was unconstitutional prior restraint as applied to bar and restaurant seeking to offer nude entertainment, but amendment of ordinance cured defect and city was not required to issue use permit; following *Perrine v. In Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe (1971) 402 U.S. 415, 91 S.Ct. 1575, 29 L.Ed.2d 1, plaintiff was a racially integrated community organization in the Austin neighborhood of Chicago. Defendant was a real estate broker. Plaintiff charged him with "panic peddling" or "blockbusting," i.e., frightening white residents by warning of black infiltration of the residential area and thereby securing listings to sell to Blacks. Plaintiffs and others urged defendant to sign an agreement not to solicit listings in the community, and when he refused they distributed leaflets in the city of Westchester, defendant's residence, describing his activities. The trial judge found that the distribution was peaceful, but nevertheless concluded that it was coercive and an invasion of privacy, and therefore granted an injunction against distribution in the city of Westchester. Held, reversed. "No prior decisions support the claim that the interest of an individual in being free from public criticism of his business practices in pamphlets or leaflets warrants use of the injunctive power of a court." (91 S.Ct. 1578, 29 L.Ed.2d 6.)

Rowan v. United States Post Office Dept. (1970) 397 U.S. 728, 90 S.Ct. 1484, 25 L.Ed.2d 736, infra, §370, is distinguishable. The right of privacy protected there was that of a houseowner attempting to stop the flow of information into his own household; here, defendant attempted to stop the flow of information to the public. (91 S.Ct. 1578, 29 L.Ed.2d 6.)

DVD Copy Control Assn. v. Bunner (2003) 31 C.4th 864, 4 C.R.3d 69, 75 P.3d 1, involved a preliminary injunction prohibiting defendant from continuing to post plaintiff's trade secrets on his Internet website. Held, the injunction did not violate the First Amendment or California's Free Speech provision, Cal. Const., Art. I, §2.

(a) Assuming that the injunction was properly issued under California's trade secret law, the injunction was content neutral and not subject to strict scrutiny under the test stated in Madsen v. Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §401. (31 C.4th 877.) The injunction sought to protect plaintiff's property interest in information, not to suppress the content of defendant's speech. (31 C.4th 878.) It achieved the requisite balance, and burdened no more speech than was necessary to serve governmental interests in protecting trade secrets. (31 C.4th 880.)

(b) Bartnicki v. Vopper (2001) 532 U.S. 514, 121 S.Ct. 1753, 149 L.Ed.2d 787, infra, §431, is distinguishable. There, privacy concerns gave way to the public's interest in matters of public importance. (31 C.4th 883.) Here, defendant did not post plaintiff's trade secrets "to comment on any public issue or to participate in any public debate." The posted information was highly technical and targeted a limited audience of computer encryption enthusiasts. (31 C.4th 884.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.
- b. Requirement of License or Permit.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 360

[§ 360] Requirement of License or Permit.

The requirement of a license or permit to speak or to distribute literature is invalid if used as a means of prohibition or censorship.

In Lovell v. Griffin (1938) 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949, defendant distributed a religious tract in violation of an ordinance prohibiting distribution of any kind of circulars or literature without prior written permission from the city manager. Held, the ordinance was void, because (a) it was not limited to literature that was obscene, or advocated unlawful conduct, and (b) it was not limited to improper methods of distribution, such as those involving disorderly conduct, molestation of people, or misuse or littering of streets. The Court also made it clear that liberty of circulating is as essential as liberty of publishing. (See 12 So. Cal. L. Rev. 466.)

In Staub v. Baxley (1958) 355 U.S. 313, 78 S.Ct. 277, 2 L.Ed.2d 302, a city ordinance required that anyone soliciting membership for an organization or union that charged membership fees or dues should apply for a permit from the mayor and council, which could refuse it if they did not approve of the applicant, the organization, or the latter's effect on the welfare of the citizens. Appellant, a union organizer, talked to a number of employees about joining the union, and was convicted of violation of the ordinance. Held, reversed. The ordinance, giving uncontrolled discretion to the city officials to grant or withhold a permit, was an unconstitutional censorship or prior restraint on freedom of speech. (78 S.Ct. 284, 2 L.Ed.2d 313.)

In Perrine v. Municipal Court (1971) 5 C.3d 656, 97 C.R. 320, 488 P.2d 648, a Los Angeles County ordinance prohibited operation of a bookstore without a license from the county Public Welfare Commission. One of the grounds for discretionary denial was prior conviction or commission of one of many listed crimes. Petitioner, an existing bookstore operator, admitted a prior conviction for selling obscene matter, and was denied a license without an explanatory opinion. He nevertheless continued to operate, was arrested and charged with a misdemeanor, and sought prohibition to prevent the trial. Held, writ issued.

(a) The ordinance contained no standards, and gave the Commission unlimited authority to deny the application of an applicant who met all the conditions. (5 C.3d 662.)

(b) Even if limited to disqualification for actual conviction of crime it would still be invalid. There is no reasonable relation between qualifications to operate a bookstore and past conviction of one of a vast number of offenses (sex crimes and crimes of violence against the person, including trivial assaults and batteries). (5 C.3d 663.) "The penalty for violating section 311.2 does not include a forfeiture of First Amendment rights, and the risk that criminal sanctions will be insufficient to deter future violations of that section cannot justify the county's attempted forfeiture of those rights on the theory that past violators are unfit to operate bookstores." (5 C.3d 662.)

The dissent argued that an operator of a bookstore is in daily contact with the public, including young people, and that the municipality should not be required to rely exclusively on enforcement of obscenity laws in controlling distribution of obscene matter. (5 C.3d 665.)

Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D-4, LLC (2004) 541 U.S. 774, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84, upheld a city ordinance requiring adult business licenses for adult book, novelty, and video stores. The ordinance did not seek to censor material, and it set objective criteria for determining when a license "shall" be denied. (124 S.Ct. 2225, 159 L.Ed.2d 93.) Thus, the ordinance was not unconstitutional in failing to provide an unusually speedy review procedure as required in Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, infra, §371. "Colorado's ordinary judicial review procedures suffice as long as the courts remain sensitive to the need to prevent First Amendment harms and administer those procedures accordingly." (124 S.Ct. 2224, 159 L.Ed.2d 92.)

Many other cases condemn the use of licenses as a means of censorship. (See Saia v. New York (1948) 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 92 L.Ed. 1574, infra, §464; People v. Fogelson (1978) 21 C.3d 158, 167, 169, 145 C.R. 542, 577 P.2d 677 [Los Angeles ordinance giving licensing authorities unlimited discretion to grant or deny permission to solicit on city property; challenged by member of Hare Krishna religious group and held unconstitutional]; EWAP v. Los Angeles (1979) 97 C.A.3d 179, 187, 158 C.R. 579 [following Perrine v. Municipal Court]; Barry v. Oceanside (1980) 107 C.A.3d 257, 261, 263, 165 C.R. 697 [same]; Vo v. Garden Grove (2004) 115 C.A.4th 425, 435, 9 C.R.3d 257 [part of ordinance requiring existing CyberCafes to apply for conditional use permit by certain date was invalid where city administrator has unbridled discretion to grant or deny application]; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 701 [Fogelson]; for cases applying same principle to absolute prohibition, see supra, §350 et seq.; to peaceable assembly, see infra, §392; on expedited review of issuance or denial of permit or other entitlement for expressive conduct protected by First Amendment, see C.C.P. 1094.8, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, Supp., §125B.) (On requiring personal identification as precondition of right to communicate, see Talley v. California (1960) 362 U.S. 60, 80 S.Ct. 536, 4 L.Ed.2d 559, infra, §466; Huntley v. Public Util. Com. (1968) 69 C.2d 67, 69 C.R. 605, 442 P.2d 685, infra, §467.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

c. Invalid Restraint by Injunction.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 361

[§ 361] Invalid Restraint by Injunction.

In Wilson v. Superior Court (1975) 13 C.3d 652, 119 C.R. 468, 532 P.2d 116, Wilson was a candidate for Assessor of Los Angeles. In 1974, he distributed a leaflet entitled "Newsletter" in which he reprinted portions of articles from the Los Angeles Times, undated, relating that his opponent, the incumbent assessor Watson, had been indicted for bribery. The Newsletter printed the actual date of another reprinted article in a blurred fashion making it difficult to read. The Newsletter also solicited funds for Wilson's campaign "to prevent the type of corruption" suffered over the years. In fact, the articles had appeared in the Times in 1966 and 1967, and Watson had been acquitted at the trial.

Watson sued for libel and slander and an injunction. The trial judge issued a temporary restraining order and afterwards a preliminary injunction, despite some amendments Wilson made--putting in dates in figures, and stating the fact of Watson's acquittal. The judge's theory was that Wilson's publication must present a fair and balanced presentation of the facts, with the source and date of the article. Held, reversed.

(a) Invalidity of prior restraints. Many authorities (see supra, §359) establish the principle that, under the federal Constitution, "the truth or falsity of a statement on a public issue is irrelevant to the question whether it should be repressed in advance of publication." (13 C.3d 658.) "A protective provision more definitive and inclusive than the First Amendment is contained in our state constitutional guarantee of the right of free speech and press." (13 C.3d 658, quoting Cal. Const., Art. I, §2: "Every person may freely speak, write and publish his or her sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of this right. A law may not restrain or abridge liberty of speech or press.")

(b) Preliminary injunction is prior restraint. The injunction, prohibiting publication of any articles except in a fair and balanced manner, was clearly an invalid prior restraint. "The concept that a statement on a public issue may be suppressed because it is believed by a court to be untrue is entirely inconsistent with constitutional guarantees and raises the spectre of censorship in a most pernicious form." (13 C.3d 659.) Libel cases (infra, §425) are distinguishable; and the "clear and present danger" doctrine (infra, §407) is no more applicable than in the Pentagon Papers case (New York Times Co. v. United States (1971) 403 U.S. 713, 91 S.Ct. 2140, 29 L.Ed.2d 822, infra, §363). "We think it evident that if publication of the Pentagon Papers did not constitute a sufficiently serious threat to justify creation of an exception to the established principles set forth above, the circulation of election campaign charges, even if deemed extravagant or misleading, does not present a danger of sufficient magnitude to warrant a prior restraint." (13 C.3d 660.)

(c) Principles applied. The circumstances of this case demonstrate the wisdom of the rule against prior restraints. In the contempt proceeding, Wilson said he did not know where he stood, and requested the court's guidance on what kind of publication would be acceptable; thus, he was placed in the position of speculating on his attempts to comply. "The result was not merely a theoretical chilling of his right to publish, but actual acquiescence by him, under threat of contempt, in refraining from future publication of any of the four versions of the circular. ... By the restraining order the court also devised for itself an intolerable role: it was called upon to determine whether various versions of the Newsletter presented 'too narrow a view of the truth' and whether successive publications were 'substantially similar' to the original circular. It even went so far as to specify such details of publication as the size of type which would give a 'fair' presentation. The court thus aggressively assumed the role of governmental censor, approving its version of a 'fair' presentation, and disapproving a 'too narrow view of the truth.'" (13 C.3d 661.)

(d) Exceptional situations. Extraordinary circumstances may justify a prior restraint; e.g., disclosure of military secrets in time of war, and utterance of words that may have the effect of force. Also, restraint may be justified to protect private rights (see infra, §424), or to prevent deceptive commercial practices. "However, we have not discovered any case upholding the power of a court to restrain publication of a statement regarding the official conduct of a public officer on the ground that the statement was not wholly true or was presented in a deceptive manner." (13 C.3d 662.)

(e) Conclusion. "We hold, therefore, that the preliminary injunction violated petitioner's rights of freedom of expression under the United States Constitution, and for an independent ground, under the broader terms of the California Constitution." (13 C.3d 662.)

In Gilbert v. National Enquirer (1996) 43 C.A.4th 1135, 51 C.R.2d 91, plaintiff, a well-known actress, brought a defamation and invasion of privacy action against her ex-husband regarding remarks in a newspaper article that had been critical of her performance as a mother. The article had allegedly been published in answer to earlier articles that had praised plaintiff as a mother and had been derogatory towards defendant. Claiming that defendant threatened to reveal private information about plaintiff unless he was dismissed without prejudice, plaintiff, without notice to defendant, obtained a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction. Finding that plaintiff's privacy rights outweighed defendant's First Amendment rights, and that defendant's motives were mainly financial and retaliatory, the trial judge made the preliminary injunction apply to all disclosures regarding plaintiff, whenever or to whomever made, except as necessary to prepare a defense in the case. Held, preliminary injunction reversed.

(a) Prior restraints are disfavored and presumptively invalid. They have been declared invalid in circumstances more urgent than these and, in addition, are not permitted to stop the publication of defamatory statements. (43 C.A.4th 1144.)

(b) Plaintiff argued that the preliminary injunction was necessary to maintain the sanctity of the former marital relationship. However, the injunction applied to any information concerning plaintiff's substance abuse and sexual relationships obtained at any time during defendant's union with plaintiff, was not limited to communications made during the marriage itself, and arguably covered statements made to defendant by the parties' son upon returning from plaintiff's home. Hence, the restriction was too broad. While defendant may, in later tort actions, be held responsible for abusing the right to speak freely, he has the initial right to say what he chooses without censorship. (43 C.A.4th 1145.)

(c) Unlike In re Marriage of Candiotti (1995) 34 C.A.4th 718, 40 C.R.2d 299, a child custody case where information obtained during discovery was properly restrained, this case did not involve child custody or visitation. However, even if this were a family law action, the preliminary injunction went beyond precluding defendant from making disparaging remarks about plaintiff in their child's presence. Defendant, instead, was restrained from talking privately to anyone concerning his dissatisfaction with plaintiff as a parent. (43 C.A.4th 1146.)

(d) Plaintiff was a well-known actress. While public figures do not relinquish all privacy rights, the public's heightened interest in their personal activities is a factor to be weighed in balancing the competing interests, especially where there have been other articles on this subject at the public figure's behest. (43 C.A.4th 1146.) (See 31 Western State L. Rev. 79 [constitutionality of pager ban provision in gang injunction].)

A number of additional decisions deal with invalid restraint by injunction:

Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 C.A.3d 370, 397, 206 C.R. 866 [expression of religious opinion].

KCST-TV Channel 39 v. Municipal Court (1988) 201 C.A.3d 143, 145, 246 C.R. 869 [order temporarily prohibiting television station from exhibiting drawing of criminal defendant, lawfully made by artist during court hearing, was invalid prior restraint].

Paradise Hills Associates v. Procel (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1528, 1545, 1547, 1 C.R.2d 514 [signs on home disparaging plaintiff developer are protected speech to extent they provide truthful information and opinions about plaintiff's business, and any injunction issued in future must clearly and narrowly define scope of proscribed activities].

San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. United States Citizens Patrol (1998) 63 C.A.4th 964, 972, 74 C.R.2d 364 [portions of preliminary injunction effectively banning citizens' group from engaging in any speech or expressive activities inside airport terminals unrelated to transacting business with airline or other airport tenant unnecessarily burdened group's free speech rights].

Levy v. Santa Monica (2004) 114 C.A.4th 1252, 1255, 1260, 8 C.R.3d 507 [enjoining council member, under charter provision requiring council members to deal with administrative services solely through City Manager and not to give orders to subordinates of City Manager, from speaking with planning department employees on behalf of constituent, would be invalid prior restraint].

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

Additional decisions:

Huntingdon Life Sciences v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA (2005) 129 C.A.4th 1228, 1265, 29 C.R.3d 521, 6 Cal. Proc. (5th), Provisional Remedies, §318 [preliminary injunction precluding animal rights organization from coming within 100 feet of plaintiff's employees or their real property was overbroad; there was no evidence that defendant was involved in trespass or vandalism, and injunction could be tailored to prohibit continuing threats of violence on defendant's website].

Balboa Island Village Inn v. Lemen (2007) 40 C.4th 1141, 1155, 57 C.R.3d 320, 156 P.3d 339 [although injunction here was overbroad, injunction limited to prohibiting defendant from repeating statements about plaintiff that already had been determined at trial to be defamatory would not infringe defendant's free speech rights].

Evans v. Evans (2008) 162 C.A.4th 1157, 1169, 76 C.R.3d 859 [relying on and distinguishing Balboa Island Village Inn; preliminary injunction prohibiting ex-wife from publishing "false and defamatory" statements on Internet was constitutionally invalid because it had not yet been determined at trial that statements were defamatory; restrictions prohibiting ex-wife from publishing husband's confidential information on Internet and limiting her contact with sheriff's department, his employer, to 911 calls were overly broad].

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

d. Discriminatory Special Tax.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 362

[§ 362] Discriminatory Special Tax.

Another type of indirect prohibition or censorship was condemned in Grosjean v. American Press Co. (1936) 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 449, 80 L.Ed. 660, 668. A high state tax on gross receipts of newspapers of over 20,000 circulation, the object of which appeared to be to curtail their distribution and hence to limit the dissemination of information to the public, was held unconstitutional. (See 4 Rotunda, §20.22; 19 Hastings Const. L. Q. 535 ["Small Numbers" and Strict Scrutiny: Differential Taxation of the Press].)

In Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minnesota Commr. of Revenue (1983) 460 U.S. 575, 103 S.Ct. 1365, 75 L.Ed.2d 295, Minnesota, which exempted newspapers from its sales tax, imposed a use tax on the cost of paper and ink products consumed in production. Appellant Star Tribune, which paid two-thirds of the total tax collected from the newspapers in the state, challenged its constitutionality. Held, the tax violated the First Amendment. Grosjean, involving a deliberate attempt to limit the circulation, was not controlling. (103 S.Ct. 1369, 75 L.Ed.2d 301.) But by creating the special use tax, the state singled out the press for special treatment, and this burden on rights protected by the First Amendment was not justified by any compelling governmental interest. (103 S.Ct. 1372, 137, 75 L.Ed.2d 303, 308.) (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 172.)

Minneapolis Star was followed in Alameda v. Premier Communications Network (1984) 156 C.A.3d 148, 202 C.R. 684. Plaintiff city imposed license taxes of various types on many kinds of businesses. The tax on television subscription service businesses was different from and more burdensome than that imposed on the great majority of other businesses. Held, it was an unconstitutional infringement on free speech; the only governmental interest asserted was the generation of revenue, and that interest cannot, standing alone, justify special treatment of a segment of the media that disseminated protected speech. (156 C.A.3d 156.) (See Arkansas Writers' Project v. Ragland (1987) 481 U.S. 221, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 1727, 95 L.Ed.2d 209, 216 [following Minneapolis Star]; Times Mirror Co. v. Los Angeles (1987) 192 C.A.3d 170, 182, 237 C.R. 346 [distinguishing Alameda v. Premier Communications; tax for revenue only, press was not singled out for differential treatment].)

In United Artists Communications v. Montclair (1989) 209 C.A.3d 245, 257 C.R. 124, a city imposed an admissions tax on a broad range of events, but because events held for charitable purposes or by nonprofit organizations were exempt, 90% of the tax would be paid by two movie theaters and two adult bookstores. Held, following Minneapolis

Star and Festival Enterprises v. Pleasant Hill (1986) 182 C.A.3d 960, 227 C.R. 601, the tax as applied to plaintiff theater owners was unconstitutional. It "appears to apply to a broad range of businesses, but in reality its burden falls disproportionately upon businesses engaged in protected speech." (209 C.A.3d 252.)

In Leathers v. Medlock (1991) 499 U.S. 439, 111 S.Ct. 1438, 113 L.Ed.2d 494, Arkansas extended its sales tax to distribution of cable television and satellite services while exempting the print media. Held, the tax was valid.

(a) Grosjean, Minneapolis Star, and Arkansas Writers' Project demonstrate that differential taxation of First Amendment speakers is constitutionally suspect when it threatens to suppress the expression of particular ideas or viewpoints. (111 S.Ct. 1443, 113 L.Ed.2d 503.)

(b) Here, however, the tax is one of general applicability. There is no indication that the state has targeted cable television in a purposeful attempt to interfere with its First Amendment activities; nor is the tax structured so as to raise suspicion that it was intended to do so. (111 S.Ct. 1444, 113 L.Ed.2d 504.) And the tax is not content-based. (111 S.Ct. 1445, 113 L.Ed.2d 505.) (See Sacramento Cable Television v. Sacramento (1991) 234 C.A.3d 232, 240, 286 C.R. 470 [following Leathers].)

[§ 363] In General.

In Near v. Minnesota (1931) 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 633, 75 L.Ed. 1357, 1371, a statute authorized the abatement by injunction, as a public nuisance, of a "malicious, scandalous and defamatory" newspaper or other periodical. On a full review of the principles and authorities, the court held it an unconstitutional "previous restraint" or censorship.

In Winters v. New York (1948) 333 U.S. 507, 68 S.Ct. 665, 667, 92 L.Ed. 840, 847, reversing a conviction under a statute prohibiting the distribution of magazines stressing crime news, the court said: "We do not accede to appellee's suggestion that the constitutional protection for a free press applies only to the exposition of ideas. The line between the informing and the entertaining is too elusive for the protection of that basic right. Everyone is familiar with instances of propaganda through fiction. What is one man's amusement, teaches another's doctrine. Though we can see nothing of any possible value to society in these magazines, they are as much entitled to the protection of free speech as the best of literature."

The heavy burden on the Government to show justification for a prior restraint was again stressed in New York Times Co. v. United States (1971) 403 U.S. 713, 91 S.Ct. 2140, 29 L.Ed.2d 822. The United States sought to enjoin the New York Times and the Washington Post from publishing a classified study entitled "History of U.S. Decision-Making Process on Viet Nam Policy." In a per curiam opinion, the court held that the burden had not been met, and therefore that no injunction could issue. Differing reasons were given in six concurring opinions, and three justices filed individual dissents. (See Sun Co. of San Bernardino v. Superior Court (1973) 29 C.A.3d 815, 829, 105 C.R. 873, infra, §415; 4 Rotunda, §20.17; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 25, 199 [New York Times]; 64 Cal. L. Rev. 108 [Government Information Leaks]; 5 Loyola L.A. VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

e. Restrictions on Newspapers and Magazines.

2. Requirement of Free Space.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 364

[§ 364] Requirement of Free Space.

The Florida "right of reply" statute was held unconstitutional in Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. Tornillo (1974) 418 U.S. 241, 94 S.Ct. 2831, 41 L.Ed.2d 730. The court reviewed the arguments of proponents of an enforceable right of access to the press, and took note of the dangers of monopoly control and lack of public responsibility, but nevertheless concluded that governmental coercion violated the First Amendment. "The Florida statute operates as a command in the same sense as a statute or regulation forbidding appellant from publishing specified matter." Faced with the criminal penalties that might be imposed (the statute made violation a misdemeanor), "editors might well conclude that the safe course is to avoid controversy and that, under the operation of the Florida statute, political and electoral coverage would be blunted or reduced." (94 S.Ct. 2389, 41 L.Ed.2d 741.)

An additional freedom objection was also found: "Even if a newspaper would face no additional costs to comply with a compulsory access law and would not be forced to forego publication of news or opinion by the inclusion of a reply, the Florida statute fails to clear the barriers of the First Amendment because of its intrusion into the function of editors. A newspaper is more than a passive receptacle or conduit for news, comment, and advertising. The choice of material to go into a newspaper, and the decisions made as to limitations on the size of the paper, and content, and treatment of public issues and public officials--whether fair or unfair--constitutes the exercise of editorial control and judgment. It has yet to be demonstrated how governmental regulation of this crucial process can be exercised consistent with First Amendment guarantees of a free press as they have evolved to this time." (94 S.Ct. 2389, 41 L.Ed.2d 741.) (See 4 Rotunda, §20.18; on access to state-owned communications media, see 26 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1410.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

e. Restrictions on Newspapers and Magazines.

3. Other Restrictions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 365

[§ 365] Other Restrictions.

(1) Censorship of Prisoners' Newspaper. In Bailey v. Loggins (1982) 32 C.3d 907, 187 C.R. 575, 654 P.2d 758, the court examined the power of the Department of Corrections to censor items in an inmate newspaper edited and published at the state prison and financed by the inmate welfare fund. The lead opinion of two justices resolved: "The department regulations and practices evidence an intention to allow publication of a prison newspaper which serves several purposes: aiding the education and morale of the prisoners; providing information from the administration and on events within the institution; and providing a limited forum in which prisoners can express their views and opinions on matters affecting them. Consequently, although the department retains greater powers to regulate and censor than would be appropriate outside the prison walls, it does not have total or arbitrary power, but must exercise its authority even-handedly and with sensitivity to the values protected by the First Amendment and corresponding California constitutional and statutory provisions." (32 C.3d 921.)

Two justices concurred in separate opinions (32 C.3d 923), and two dissented (32 C.3d 923, 928). (See Diaz v. Watts (1987) 189 C.A.3d 657, 665, 234 C.R. 334 [extended analysis of Bailey, concluding that "at least five justices interpret the constitutional and statutory law as permitting broad discretionary control and censorship of prison newspapers by prison authorities based on their perceived need for prison security, public safety, and valid penological purposes"]; 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 599 [Bailey]; on other restrictions on prisoners, see infra, §387.)

(2) Prohibiting Illustration of Federal Currency. In Regan v. Time (1984) 468 U.S. 641, 104 S.Ct. 3262, 82 L.Ed.2d 487, federal statutes restricting the use of photographic reproductions of currency were held invalid in part and valid in part. (a) The purpose requirement was invalid as an overbroad regulation of the content or subject matter of speech. (104 S.Ct. 3267, 82 L.Ed.2d 494.) (b) The color and size limitations were reasonable regulations of the manner of publication. (104 S.Ct. 3271, 3272, 82 L.Ed.2d 499, 501.) (c) The valid provisions were severable. (104 S.Ct. 3269, 3272, 82 L.Ed.2d 496, 501.)

(3) Valid Regulations. In Associated Press v. N.L.R.B. (1937) 301 U.S. 103, 57 S.Ct. 650, 654, 81 L.Ed. 953, 960, an editorial employee of petitioner was discharged for union labor activity, and respondent board ordered his reinstatement. Petitioner contended that its widespread news service required complete freedom of control over editorial employees to prevent news distortion, and that any regulation limiting that control infringed freedom of the press. Held, the objection was unsound. Newspapers are subject to regulation, being answerable for libel, contempt of court, and violation of antitrust laws; they may be subjected to equitable and nondiscriminatory taxes; and the present regulation, having no relation to the impartial distribution of the news, is valid. (See Lorain Journal Co. v. United States (1951) 342 U.S. 143, 72 S.Ct. 181, 187, 96 L.Ed. 162, 172; 51 Harv. L. Rev. 163 [Associated Press]; 66 Harv. L. Rev. 139 [Lorain Journal].)

A newspaper or periodical may also be required to publish a statement of the names of the editor, publisher, owner, stockholders, principal creditors, etc., as a condition to obtaining second-class mailing privileges. (Lewis Publishing Co. v. Morgan (1913) 229 U.S. 288, 33 S.Ct. 867, 57 L.Ed. 1190.)

P.C. 409.5(d) permits members of the press to enter a disaster site that has been closed to the public. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (4th), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §15.) However, press access may be restricted if the presence of news personnel will interfere with emergency operations or the investigation of a crime. (Leiserson v. San Diego (1986) 184 C.A.3d 41, 51, 52, 229 C.R. 22 [facts were insufficient to justify denial of access to airplane crash site on basis of interference with emergency operations, but sufficient to warrant exclusion on grounds that crime was being investigated]; see 47 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 243 [Breaking News: Proposing a Pooling Requirement for Media Coverage of Live Hostage Situations].)

[§ 366] Distinction: Action for Breach of Promise of Confidentiality.

In Cohen v. Cowles Media Co. (1991) 501 U.S. 663, 111 S.Ct. 2513, 115 L.Ed.2d 586, plaintiff, a supporter of the independent Republican candidate for governor of Minnesota, offered reporters of defendant newspapers information on the prior criminal record of the Democratic candidate on condition that plaintiff's identity not be disclosed. The reporters orally agreed, but later, after an investigation, defendant ran a story on the campaign that identified plaintiff as the source of the court records. Plaintiff was then discharged by his employer. Plaintiff sued for damages for breach of the promise, relying on the state's promissory estoppel law. The state court held that the First Amendment precluded recovery. Held, reversed.

(a) A private cause of action for promissory estoppel involves "state action"; i.e., the application of state rules of law in state courts in a manner alleged to restrict First Amendment freedoms constitutes state action under the Fourteenth Amendment. (111 S.Ct. 2517, 115 L.Ed.2d 596.)

(b) However, generally applicable laws do not offend the First Amendment simply because their enforcement against the press has incidental effects on its ability to gather and report the news. (111 S.Ct. 2518, 115 L.Ed.2d 596.) And the Minnesota doctrine of promissory estoppel is a law of general applicability. (111 S.Ct. 2518, 115 L.Ed.2d 597.)

(c) Plaintiff is not attempting to use a promissory estoppel cause of action to avoid the strict requirements for a defamation claim. He is not seeking damages for injury to reputation, but for loss of his job and his lowered earning capacity. (111 S.Ct. 2519, 115 L.Ed.2d 598.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 277; 20 Pepperdine L. The court concluded that (a) there was no clear and present danger that circulation of these books would encourage crime or juvenile delinquency; (b) the exemptions of true stories, religious writings, and newspaper strips were unreasonable and discriminatory; (c) the definition of the crime and standards of guilt were fatally uncertain. 1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 368

[§ 368] Censorship by Listing.

In Bantam Books v. Sullivan (1963) 372 U.S. 58, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584, the Rhode Island Legislature created a Commission with the duty to "investigate and recommend the prosecution" of violations of the obscenity laws. The Commission's practice was to notify a distributor that certain designated books or magazines had been found objectionable for sale to youths under 18, and to remind the distributor of its duty to recommend prosecution. The distributor, to avoid trouble, would invariably stop circulation of the works and return unsold copies to the publishers. Four publishers of listed books sued to enjoin the Commission from so acting. Held, they were entitled to relief.

(a) The state's contention that the Commission neither regulated nor suppressed, but simply exhorted booksellers and advised them of their legal rights, and had no power to apply formal legal sanctions, was rejected. "[T]he Commission deliberately set about to achieve the suppression of publications deemed 'objectionable' and succeeded in its aim." (83 S.Ct. 637, 9 L.Ed.2d 591.)

(b) The contention that the bookseller voluntarily complied was likewise rejected as contrary to the facts. "People do not lightly disregard public officers' thinly veiled threats to institute criminal proceedings against them if they do not come around. ... The Commission's notices, phrased virtually as orders, reasonably understood to be such by the distributor, invariably followed up by police visitations, in fact stopped the circulation of the listed publications ex proprio vigore. It would be naive to credit the state's assertion that these blacklists are in the nature of mere legal advice, when they plainly serve as instruments of regulation independent of the laws against obscenity." (83 S.Ct. 638, 9 L.Ed.2d 592.)

(c) The vice of the system was that the Commission superimposed its regulation on the state's criminal regulation of obscenity, making the latter largely unnecessary, and in doing so eliminated the safeguards of the criminal process. There was no judicial supervision of the notices or judicial review of the determinations, and the publisher or distributor was not even entitled to notice and hearing. "We hold that the system of informal censorship disclosed by this record violates the Fourteenth Amendment." (83 S.Ct. 640, 9 L.Ed 594.) (On test of obscenity, see infra, §436 et seq.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

f. Restrictions on Books.

3. Income From Work Describing Crime.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 369

[§ 369] Income From Work Describing Crime.

Simon & Schuster v. Members of the New York State Crime Victims Bd. (1991) 502 U.S. 105, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476, deals with the New York "Son of Sam" law. In 1977, New York was terrorized by a serial killer popularly known as the Son of Sam. When David Berkowitz was identified as the killer and apprehended, the rights to his story were worth a substantial amount. The New York Legislature then enacted a statute requiring that an accused or convicted criminal's income from works describing his or her crime be deposited in an escrow account, and that the funds be made available to the victims of the crime and the criminal's other creditors. Held, the New York law was inconsistent with the First Amendment.

(a) A statute is presumptively inconsistent with the First Amendment if it imposes a financial burden on speakers because of the content of their speech. This notion is one manifestation of a far broader principle: Regulations that permit the Government to discriminate on the basis of the content of the message are unconstitutional. (112 S.Ct. 508, 116 L.Ed.2d 486, 487, citing Leathers v. Medlock (1991) 499 U.S. 439, 111 S.Ct. 1438, 113 L.Ed.2d 494, supra, §362.) "In the context of financial regulation, it bears repeating, as we did in Leathers, that the Government's ability to impose content-based burdens on speech raises the specter that the Government may effectively drive certain ideas or viewpoints from the marketplace." (112 S.Ct. 508, 116 L.Ed.2d 487.)

(b) "The Son of Sam law is such a content-based statute. It singles out income derived from expressive activity for a burden the State places on no other income, and it is directed only at works with a specified content." (112 S.Ct. 508, 116 L.Ed.2d 487.) To justify this differential treatment, the state must show that its regulation is necessary to serve a compelling state interest, and is narrowly drawn to achieve that end. (112 S.Ct. 509, 116 L.Ed.2d 488.)

(c) The state has a compelling interest in ensuring that victims of crime are compensated by those who harm them. (112 S.Ct. 509, 116 L.Ed.2d 489.) And it has a compelling interest in depriving criminals of the profits of their crimes. But the state has no greater interest in compensating victims from the proceeds of a criminal's storytelling than from any of the criminal's other assets. (112 S.Ct. 510, 116 L.Ed.2d 489.) "In short, the State has a compelling interest in compensating victims from the fruits of the crime, but little if any interest in limiting such compensation to the proceeds of the wrongdoer's speech about the crime. We must therefore determine whether the Son of Sam law is narrowly tailored to advance the former, not the latter, objective." (112 S.Ct. 511, 116 L.Ed.2d 470.)

(d) As a means of ensuring that victims are compensated from the proceeds of crime, the Son of Sam law is significantly overinclusive. It applies to works on any subject, provided that they express the author's thoughts or recollections about the crime, however tangentially or incidentally; and it thereby encompasses a potentially very large number of works. (112 S.Ct. 511, 116 L.Ed.2d 490.) Thus, should a prominent figure write an autobiography at the end of his or her career, and include in any early chapter a brief recollection of having stolen a nearly worthless item as a youthful prank, the board could control his or her entire income from the book for 5 years, and would make that income available to all of the author's creditors, despite the fact that the statute of limitations for this minor incident had long since run. (112 S.Ct. 512, 116 L.Ed.2d 491.)

(e) "The Federal Government and many of the States have enacted statutes designed to serve purposes similar to that served by the Son of Sam law. Some of these statutes may be quite different from New York's, and we have no occasion to determine the constitutionality of these other laws. We conclude simply that in the Son of Sam law, New York has singled out speech on a particular subject for a financial burden that it places on no other speech and no other income. The State's interest in compensating victims from the fruits of crime is a compelling one, but the Son of Sam law is not narrowly tailored to advance that objective. As a result, the statute is inconsistent with the First Amendment." (112 S.Ct. 512, 116 L.Ed.2d 491.)

A concurring justice took the position that the regulation of content has the full protection of the First Amendment, and that this is a sufficient reason for holding the statute unconstitutional. Hence, it is both unnecessary and incorrect to make the inquiry into the state's compelling interest. (112 S.Ct. 512, 116 L.Ed.2d 492.) (See 60 A.L.R.4th 1210.)

In Keenan v. Superior Court (2002) 27 C.4th 413, 117 C.R.2d 1, 40 P.3d 718, the court followed the analysis of Simon & Schuster in striking down California's Son of Sam law, C.C. 2225(b)(1) (see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §67). The statute "imposes a content-based financial penalty on protected speech." (27 C.4th 418.) It "penalizes the content of speech to an extent far beyond that necessary to transfer the fruits of crime from criminals to their uncompensated victims. Even if the fruits of crime may include royalties from exploiting the story of one's crimes," C.C. 2225(b)(1) does not confine itself to that income, but confiscates all a convicted felon's proceeds from speech or expression on any theme or subject that includes the story of the felony, except by passing mention. By this financial disincentive, the statute, like its New York counterpart, "discourages the creation and dissemination of a wide range of ideas and expressive works which have little or no relationship to the exploitation of one's criminal misdeeds." (27 C.4th 431.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

g. Restrictions on Mail.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 370

[§ 370] Restrictions on Mail.

(1) Post Office Censorship of Foreign Subversive Mail. In Lamont v. Postmaster General of the United States (1965) 381 U.S. 301, 85 S.Ct. 1493, 14 L.Ed.2d 398, the Court examined a 1963 federal statute providing that unsealed mail coming from a foreign country, which the Secretary of the Treasury determines to be Communist political propaganda, must be detained by the Postmaster General on arrival, with notification of the addressee as to each piece, which he or she may obtain on request. The act was held unconstitutional under the principles declared in Lovell v. Griffin, Georgia (1938) 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949, supra, §360, and Thomas v. Collins (1945) 323 U.S. 516, 65 S.Ct. 315, 89 L.Ed. 430, infra, §465. "Just as the licensing or taxing authorities ... sought to control the flow of ideas to the public so here federal agencies regulate the flow of mail." (85 S.Ct. 1496, 14 L.Ed.2d 402.) The affirmative obligation to request delivery would certainly have a deterrent effect, particularly on those in sensitive positions whose livelihood depends on security clearance. (85 S.Ct. 1496, 14 L.Ed.2d 402.)

Two concurring justices were more definitive: The issue, they thought, was not the senders' rights but the receivers' rights. "The dissemination of ideas can accomplish nothing if otherwise willing addressees are not free to receive and consider them. It would be a barren market-place of ideas that had only sellers and not buyers." (85 S.Ct. 1497, 14 L.Ed.2d 403.)

(2) Post Office Censorship of Obscene Mail. A federal statute authorized the Postmaster General, on satisfactory evidence to (a) halt use of the mails for obscene matter by returning letters to the sender marked "Unlawful," and (b) forbid payment of a money order to that person. An administrative hearing and appeal were provided by regulations. (Former 39 U.S.C., §3006; see 39 U.S.C., §3007 [authorizing detention of mail of persons conducting schemes or devices to obtain money by false representations, or of persons conducting lotteries].) In Blount v. Rizzi (1971) 400 U.S. 410, 91 S.Ct. 423, 27 L.Ed.2d 498, the statute was held unconstitutional.

(a) A scheme of administrative censorship must place the burden of initiating judicial review and proving that the material is not constitutionally protected expression on the censor; it must require prompt judicial review; and it must limit advance restraint to the shortest possible fixed period. (91 S.Ct. 428, 27 L.Ed.2d 503, citing Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, infra, §371.)

(b) The present statute has none of these safeguards. The burden of initiating judicial proceedings is on the distributor, the injunction may be granted merely on a showing of probable cause, and there is no requirement of a prompt final judicial determination. (91 S.Ct. 431, 27 L.Ed.2d 506.) (See Manual Enterprises v. Day (1962) 370 U.S. 478, 82 S.Ct. 1432, 1437, 8 L.Ed.2d 639, 647 [reversing ban on shipment of magazines found obscene in administrative hearing]; 11 A.L.R.3d 1276 [effect of objectionable material on envelope, postcard, or wrapper]; on test of obscenity, see infra, §436 et seq.; on permissible censorship of fraudulent matter, see infra, §424.)

(3) Distinction: Addressee's Right To Prevent Delivery. Congressional concern over mailing of obscene matter led to the enactment of 39 U.S.C., §3008, which established a procedure for the addressee to request an order directing the sender to refrain from further mailing of any kind. In Rowan v. United States Post Office Dept. (1970) 397 U.S. 728, 90 S.Ct. 1484, 25 L.Ed.2d 736, persons engaged in mail order business and in buying and selling mailing lists challenged the constitutionality of the section. Held, it was valid.

(a) Today's mail is overwhelmingly composed of material from persons not known; and a householder, who may bar solicitors, hawkers, and peddlers from his or her property, has the same right to bar an equivalent trespass by unwanted mail. "Nothing in the Constitution compels us to listen to or view any unwanted communication, whatever its merit; we see no basis for according the printed word or pictures a different or more preferred status because they are sent by mail. The ancient concept that 'a man's home is his castle' into which 'not even a king may enter' has lost none of its vitality, and none of the recognized exceptions includes any right to communicate offensively with another." (90 S.Ct. 1490, 25 L.Ed.2d 743.)

(b) The statute extends, and properly, to any material. "If this prohibition operates to impede the flow of even valid ideas, the answer is that no one has a right to press even 'good' ideas on an unwilling recipient. That we are often 'captives' outside the sanctuary of the home and subject to objectionable speech and other sound does not mean we must be captives everywhere." (90 S.Ct. 1491, 25 L.Ed.2d 744.) (See 84 Harv. L. Rev. 117.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

h. Restrictions on Motion Pictures and Plays.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 371

[§ 371] Restrictions on Motion Pictures and Plays.

(1) Constitutionally Protected Entertainment. In Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Com. of Ohio (1915) 236 U.S. 230, 35 S.Ct. 387, 59 L.Ed. 552, the Court took the position that a state could require distributors of motion pictures to submit them to a state agency for censorship. As a result, this kind of censorship became widespread.

The underlying basis of this decision, that moving pictures were entertainment and not protected by the First Amendment, was shaken by dicta in Winters v. New York (1948) 333 U.S. 507, 68 S.Ct. 665, 92 L.Ed. 840, supra, §363, and was repudiated in Joseph Burstyn v. Wilson (1952) 343 U.S. 495, 72 S.Ct. 777, 96 L.Ed. 1098. A New York statute made it unlawful to exhibit or sell, etc., a motion picture film without a license, and the licensing agency (a division of the department of education) had authority to ban a picture that was "obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, sacrilegious" or tending to corrupt morals or incite to crime. A license was refused to show "The Miracle," an Italian film, on the determination that it was "sacrilegious." The New York court upheld this action and the Supreme Court reversed. "[M]otion pictures are a significant medium for the communication of ideas," protected by the free speech and free press guarantees, and the inconsistent view of the Mutual Film Corp. case is no longer law. (72 S.Ct. 780, 781, 96 L.Ed. 1105.)

The Court observed that there is no absolute freedom to exhibit motion pictures, and that it was unnecessary to decide whether, by a clearly drawn statute, a state could censor obscene films. The basis of censorship here, however, was unconstitutional; "the state has no legitimate interest in protecting any or all religions from views distasteful to them which is sufficient to justify prior restraints upon the expression of those views." (72 S.Ct. 782, 96 L.Ed. 1108.)

(2) Valid Censorship Procedures. In Times Film Corp. v. Chicago (1961) 365 U.S. 43, 81 S.Ct. 391, 5 L.Ed.2d 403, the Chicago Municipal Code required submission of motion pictures to the Commissioner of Police for a permit prior to public exhibition. His refusal, with an appeal to the mayor, was final. The Code called for refusal where the picture was immoral or obscene, portrayed depravity or criminality of a class, tended to produce a breach of the peace, etc. Petitioner applied for a permit to show the film "Don Juan," but refused to submit it for examination, and brought suit in the federal district court to require issuance of the permit. Thus, neither the standards of the ordinance nor the content of the film were in issue; petitioner challenged the constitutionality of the Code provision on its face as a prior restraint or censorship. Held, it was not void on its face.

Petitioner argued that all prior restraints or censorship necessarily violate the First Amendment, and that the only constitutional procedure open to the state is criminal prosecution after exhibition. The Court squarely rejected this contention as "without sanction in our cases." (81 S.Ct. 394, 5 L.Ed.2d 407.) "Chicago emphasizes here its duty to protect its people against the dangers of obscenity in the public exhibition of motion pictures. To this argument petitioner's only answer is that regardless of the capacity for, or extent of such an evil, previous restraint cannot be justified. With this we cannot agree." (81 S.Ct. 395, 5 L.Ed.2d 407.) Because of the restricted issue raised, the Court cautioned that "we are dealing only with motion pictures and, even as to them, only in the context of the broadside attack presented on this record." (81 S.Ct. 395, 5 L.Ed.2d 408.)

Strong dissenting opinions (four justices) described the practices of existing movie boards and warned of the dangers of the practice. "The perniciousness of a system of censorship is that the exhibitor's belief that his film is constitutionally protected is irrelevant. Once the censor has made his estimation that the film is 'bad' and has refused to issue a permit, there is ordinarily no defense to a prosecution for showing the film without a license. Thus, the film is not shown, perhaps not for years and sometimes not ever." (81 S.Ct. 408, 5 L.Ed.2d 421.) (See People v. Mitchell Bros.' Santa Ana Theater (1981) 118 C.A.3d 863, 173 C.R. 476 [procedure for preliminary injunction to abate nuisance under C.C.P. 527 was sufficient]; 34 So. Cal. L. Rev. 362 [Times Film].)

(3) Invalid Censorship Procedures. In Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, there was no issue of obscenity; the film was admittedly one that would have been licensed for exhibition. But appellant refused to submit it to the Maryland State Board of Censors, attacking the statute on the ground that its procedure failed to give adequate judicial protection to the freedom to exhibit. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) The Times Film case established the validity of a properly drawn movie censorship law. (85 S.Ct. 736, 740, 13 L.Ed.2d 651, 656.)

(b) The Maryland law did not contain the procedural safeguards of a valid statute, in particular, that the burden of proving the film objectionable must rest on the censor. The Maryland law placed the burden on the exhibitor to initiate judicial proceedings challenging the ruling of the Board, and exhibition was prohibited pending judicial review, which might take months. This was a fatal defect. "[W]hile the State may require advance submission of all films, in order to proceed effectively to bar all showings of unprotected films, the requirement cannot be administered in a manner which would lend an effect of finality to the censor's determination whether a film constitutes protected expression. ... To this end, the exhibitor must be assured, by statute or authoritative judicial construction, that the censor will, within a specified brief period, either issue a license or go to court to restrain showing the film. Any restraint imposed in advance of a final judicial determination on the merits must similarly be limited to preservation of the status quo for the shortest fixed period compatible with sound judicial resolution. Moreover, we are well aware that, even after expiration of a temporary restraint, an administrative refusal to license, signifying the censor's view that the film is unprotected, may have a discouraging effect on the exhibitor. ... Therefore, the procedure must also assure a prompt final judicial decision, to minimize the deterrent effect of an interim and possibly erroneous denial of a license." (85 S.Ct. 739, 13 L.Ed.2d 654.)

In Burton v. Municipal Court (1968) 68 C.2d 684, 68 C.R. 721, 441 P.2d 281, an ordinance required a permit from the Board of Police Commissioners to engage in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The permit could be denied if the applicant lacked "good moral character" or was "unfit to be trusted," or if the "general welfare of the public" required denial. Held, the ordinance was void. "It is difficult to conceive more pervasive indicia of censorship under the cloak of regulation of business activity." (68 C.2d 695.) (See Interstate Circuit v. Dallas (1968) 390 U.S. 676, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 20 L.Ed.2d 225 [ordinance giving board power to classify picture as "not suitable for young persons," was unconstitutionally vague]; Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad (1975) 420 U.S. 546, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 [applying principles of Freedman v. Maryland to petitioner's rejected application to present musical play "Hair"]; FW/PBS v. Dallas (1990) 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 606, 107 L.Ed.2d 603, 620 [following Freedman; ordinance failed to provide reasonable time for grant or denial of license and for prompt judicial review of adverse decision]; People v. Library One (1991) 229 C.A.3d 973, 986, 280 C.R. 400 [applying Freedman and FW/PBS holdings to refusal

[§ 372] In General.

(1) Rights of Viewers and Listeners. Although broadcasting is a medium protected by the First Amendment, its special characteristics justify differences in First Amendment standards. Hence, an F.C.C. order requiring a station to furnish a person attacked with a tape or summary of the broadcast, and to provide time for response, without proof of inability to pay, did not invade First Amendment freedom. "It is the right of the viewers and listeners, not the right of the broadcasters, which is paramount." (*Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.
 - i. Restrictions on Radio and Television.
2. Cable Television and Satellite Broadcasting.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 373

[§ 373] Cable Television and Satellite Broadcasting.

(1) Cable Television. Cable television has been the subject of extensive statutory regulation. (See Federal Communications Com. v. Midwest Video Corp. (1979) 440 U.S. 689, 99 S.Ct. 1435, 59 L.Ed.2d 692 [F.C.C. lacked authority to promulgate mandatory access regulations for cable systems]; Federal Communications Com. v. Florida Power Corp. (1987) 480 U.S. 245, 107 S.Ct. 1107, 1113, 94 L.Ed.2d 282, 291 [F.C.C. order under 47 U.S.C., §224, Pole Attachments Act, limiting rates utility can charge cable companies for using utility poles, is not taking of property without compensation in violation of Fifth Amendment]; Denver Area Educational Telecommunications Consortium v. Federal Communications Com. (1996) 518 U.S. 727, 116 S.Ct. 2374, 135 L.Ed.2d 888 [provision of Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 permitting cable operator to prohibit indecent programming on leased access channels was valid under First Amendment; provisions permitting cable operator to prohibit indecent programming on public access channels, and requiring segregation and blocking of patently offensive programming on leased access channels, was invalid]; 110 Harv. L. Rev. 246 [Denver]; 33 Hastings L. J. 1009 [Midwest Video Corp.]; 17 Southwestern L. Rev. 321 [Florida Power Corp.]; on restrictions on sexually oriented programming, see infra, §374.)

The Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 (47 U.S.C., §521 et seq.), as amended in 1992 and 1996, establishes a national policy concerning cable communications, particularly by providing guidelines for the exercise of federal, state, and local authority. (See 47 U.S.C., §521 [statutory purposes]; 47 U.S.C., §522 [definitions]; 47 U.S.C., §531, 47 U.S.C., §532 [use of cable channels]; 47 U.S.C., §533 [ownership restrictions]; 47 U.S.C., §534 et seq. [carriage requirements]; 47 U.S.C., §541 et seq. [franchising and regulation of cable systems]; 47 U.S.C., §551 [protection of subscriber privacy]; 47 U.S.C., §552 [consumer protection]; 47 U.S.C., §553 [unauthorized reception of cable service]; 47 U.S.C., §554 [equal employment opportunity]; 47 U.S.C., §555 [judicial proceedings]; 47 U.S.C., §555a [limitation of franchising authority liability]; 47 U.S.C., §§556, 557 [coordination of federal, state, and local authority]; 47 U.S.C., §§558, 559 [criminal and civil liability]; 47 U.S.C., §560, 47 U.S.C., §561 [scrambling of channels]; New York v. Beach Communications (1993) 508 U.S. 307, 113 S.Ct.

In Weaver v. Jordan (1966) 64 C.2d 235, 49 C.R. 537, 411 P.2d 289, Proposition 15 (the "Free Television Act"), an initiative measure adopted in the November, 1964, general election, prohibited the home subscription television business. Accordingly, defendant Secretary of State refused to accept articles of incorporation from plaintiff seeking to engage in the business. Held, the Act was unconstitutional.

(a) The free speech guarantee safeguards both the content of communication and the means employed for dissemination. Communication by motion picture, radio, and television are protected; distribution and reception are covered, and amusement and entertainment, as well as exposition of ideas, are included. (64 C.2d 241.)

(b) The Act attempted to totally prohibit home subscription television when a charge is made to home viewers, thus amounting to total censorship in advance. There is no danger under the clear and present danger test (infra, §407). The supposed evil--adverse effect on existing television business--is debatable and in part illusory; if monopoly practices actually occur regulation can be instituted, but the power to regulate does not necessarily mean the power to prohibit. (64 C.2d 244.) (See 53 Cal. L. Rev. 1378 [before the decision]; 4 San Diego L. Rev. 162 [on the decision].)

(2) Satellite Broadcasting. The transmission and reception of satellite signals has also been the subject of statutory regulation. (See 47 U.S.C., §605 [unauthorized publication or use of communications]; P.C. 593e [prohibiting unauthorized interception or decoding of subscription television service transmission]; People v. Babylon (1985) 39 C.3d 719, 727, 216 C.R. 123, 702 P.2d 205 [P.C. 593e does not prohibit sale of equipment designed to receive in intelligible form unencoded microwave transmissions broadcast by multipoint distribution service]; California Satellite Systems v. Nichols (1985) 170 C.A.3d 56, 61, 216 C.R. 180 [preliminary injunction properly issued to restrain sale or distribution of equipment capable of intercepting programs sent by microwave signal; sale constituted probable violation of 47 U.S.C., §605]; 195 A.L.R. Fed 565 [applicability of 47 U.S.C., §605 to sale and use of cable decoding equipment].)

(3) Law Reviews. Cable television and satellite broadcasting have generated much commentary. (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 565 [argument for minimal regulation of cable networks designed to serve business, government, and professional communities]; 81 Cal. L. Rev. 1103 [Broadcasting and Speech]; 81 Cal. L. Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.
- i. Restrictions on Radio and Television.
3. Sexually Oriented Programming.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 374

[§ 374] Sexually Oriented Programming.

In United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group (2000) 529 U.S. 803, 120 S.Ct. 1878, 146 L.Ed.2d 865, an entertainment group challenged the constitutionality of §505 of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 (47 U.S.C., §561) as violative of the First Amendment. That section requires cable television operators providing channels "primarily dedicated to sexually-oriented programming" either to "fully scramble or otherwise fully block" those channels or to limit their transmission to the hours of 10 p.m. and 6 a.m., when children are not likely to be viewing. Because signal scrambling is imperfect, the majority of cable operators adopted the second approach, eliminating altogether the transmission of the targeted programming outside the prescribed hours in affected cable service areas. The District Court said that there were less restrictive alternatives to §505 and declared the statute unconstitutional. Held, affirmed.

(a) Effect of content-based restrictions. Section 505 is a content-based restriction singling out "sexually explicit adult programming." It also singles out particular programmers, applying only to channels "primarily dedicated to sexually-oriented programming." (120 S.Ct. 1885, 146 L.Ed.2d 878.) Because the statute "burdens speech because of its content, it must receive strict scrutiny." (120 S.Ct. 1887, 146 L.Ed.2d 880.) And the usual presumption of constitutionality afforded to congressional enactments is reversed. (120 S.Ct. 1888, 146 L.Ed.2d 882.)

(b) Availability of less restrictive alternative. With adequate publicity, §504 of the Act provides a less restrictive alternative to the content-based restriction of §505. Section 504 requires a cable operator to scramble or block channels a subscriber does not want to receive. (120 S.Ct. 1884, 146 L.Ed.2d 877.) Cable systems are able to block unwanted channels on a household-by-household basis. Targeted blocking "enables the Government to support parental authority without affecting the First Amendment interests of speakers and willing listeners--listeners for whom, if the speech is unpopular or indecent, the privacy of their own homes may be the optimal place of receipt. Simply put, targeted blocking is less restrictive than banning, and the Government cannot ban speech if targeted blocking is a feasible and effective means of furthering its compelling interests." (120 S.Ct. 1887, 146 L.Ed.2d 881.)

(c) Government's failure to meet burden of proof. The Government "failed to establish a pervasive, nationwide problem justifying its nationwide daytime speech ban." (120 S.Ct. 1891, 146 L.Ed.2d 885.) Further, the Government failed to prove that §504, with adequate notice, would be an ineffective alternative. (120 S.Ct. 1891, 146 L.Ed.2d 885.)

"It is no response that voluntary blocking requires a consumer to take action, or may be inconvenient, or may not go perfectly every time. A court should not assume a plausible, less restrictive alternative would be ineffective; and a court should not presume parents, given full information, will fail to act." (120 S.Ct. 1892, 146 L.Ed.2d 886.)

Two justices concurred in two separate opinions. (120 S.Ct. 1894, 146 L.Ed.2d 889.) Four justices joined in a dissent (120 S.Ct. 1898, 146 L.Ed.2d 893), with one also filing a separate dissent (120 S.Ct. 1895, 146 L.Ed.2d 890).

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

i. Restrictions on Radio and Television.

4. Must-Carry Requirements.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 375

[§ 375] Must-Carry Requirements.

In Turner Broadcasting System v. Federal Communications Com. (1994) 512 U.S. 622, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497, cable programmers and operators challenged the constitutionality of the must-carry provisions of §§ 4, 5 of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992 (47 U.S.C., §§534, 535), under which cable television systems must devote a specified portion of their channels to transmission of local commercial and broadcast stations. Held, "the appropriate standard by which to evaluate the constitutionality of must-carry is the intermediate level of scrutiny applicable to content-neutral restrictions that impose an incidental burden on speech." (114 S.Ct. 2469, 129 L.Ed.2d 530, citing United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473, and Ward v. Rock Against Racism (1989) 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661, infra, §464.)

(a) Cable programmers and operators are entitled to First Amendment protections. By requiring cable systems to set aside a portion of their channels for local broadcasters, the must-carry rules regulate cable speech in two ways: They reduce the number of channels over which cable operators have unfettered control, and they limit the channels available to cable programmers. (114 S.Ct. 2456, 129 L.Ed.2d 514.)

(b) The Government argues that the less rigorous First Amendment standard that applies to broadcast television should also apply to cable television. However, the physical limitations that justify that review--the dual problems of spectrum scarcity and signal interference--do not exist in cable television. Hence, the more relaxed standard of Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Com. (1969) 395 U.S. 367, 89 S.Ct. 1794, 23 L.Ed.2d 371, supra, §372, is inapt in judging cable regulation. (114 S.Ct. 2456, 2457, 129 L.Ed.2d 514, 515.) Because the must-carry provisions impose special obligations and burdens on cable operators and programmers, some measure of heightened First Amendment scrutiny is demanded. (114 S.Ct. 2458, 129 L.Ed.2d 517.)

(c) The must-carry rules are content-neutral. On their face, they distinguish only on the basis of the manner in which messages are transmitted, not on the basis of the messages themselves. (114 S.Ct. 2460, 129 L.Ed.2d 519.) The purpose for the rules is also content-neutral. Congress' overriding objective was to prevent cable operators from exploiting their economic power at the expense of broadcasters, and thus to preserve access to free television programming for all Americans, especially those without cable. (114 S.Ct. 2461, 2462, 129 L.Ed.2d 520, 522.)

(d) It is claimed that the must-carry provisions compel cable operators to transmit speech not of their choosing, but the must-carry rules are content-neutral in application and will not force cable operators to alter their own messages. (114 S.Ct. 2464, 2465, 129 L.Ed.2d 524, 526.) Also, cable operators have far greater control than newspapers over access to the relevant medium. "When an individual subscribes to cable, the physical connection between the television set and the cable network gives the cable operator bottleneck, or gatekeeper, control over most (if not all) of the television programming that is channeled into the subscriber's home. Hence, simply by virtue of its ownership of the essential pathway for cable speech, a cable operator can prevent its subscribers from obtaining access to programming it chooses to exclude. A cable operator, unlike speakers in other media, can thus silence the voice of competing speakers with a mere flick of the switch." (114 S.Ct. 2466, 129 L.Ed.2d 526.)

(e) The claim is also made that the must-carry provisions favor broadcast programmers over cable programmers. But this preference is based not on the content of the programming, but on the belief that broadcast programming is in economic peril. (114 S.Ct. 2466, 2467, 129 L.Ed.2d 527, 528.)

(f) It is also claimed that the rules single out certain members of the press for disfavored treatment. However, the differential treatment is justified by the cable operators' bottleneck monopoly and the dangers posed to broadcast television, and the must-carry provisions are structured so that they pose no risk of undermining First Amendment interests. (114 S.Ct. 2467, 2468, 129 L.Ed.2d 528, 529.)

(g) "In sum, the must-carry provisions do not pose such inherent dangers to free expression, or present such potential for censorship or manipulation, as to justify application of the most exacting level of First Amendment scrutiny." Hence, the O'Brien intermediate level of scrutiny is appropriate. (114 S.Ct. 2469, 129 L.Ed.2d 530.)

(h) Under O'Brien, a content-neutral regulation will be upheld if it furthers an important governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of speech, and if the incidental restriction on speech is no greater than is essential to furtherance of that interest. The regulation need not be the least speech-restrictive means available. (114 S.Ct. 2469, 129 L.Ed.2d 530.) The governmental interests asserted here--preserving the benefits of free, over-the-air programming, promoting the widespread dissemination of information from a variety of sources, and promoting fair competition in television programming--are, in the abstract, sufficiently important to justify the must-carry rules. (114 S.Ct. 2469, 2470, 129 L.Ed.2d 530, 531.)

A dissent joined by four justices argued that, in reserving over one-third of the cable channels for broadcasters, the must-carry rules reflected a content-based preference requiring strict scrutiny, and that they were unconstitutional under the rule of Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Public Util. Com. of Calif. (1986) 475 U.S. 1, 106 S.Ct. 903, 89 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §358. (114 S.Ct. 2475, 2479, 129 L.Ed.2d 538, 542.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 261; 29 U.S.F. L. Rev. 999.)

Turner was affirmed on appeal after remand. (See Turner Broadcasting System v. Federal Communications Com. (1997) 520 U.S. 180, 117 S.Ct. 1174, 1190, 1199, 137 L.Ed.2d 369, 392, 404 [substantial evidence on remand supported conclusion that real threat justified enactment of must-carry provisions; burden imposed by must-carry rules is narrowly tailored to preserve multiplicity of broadcast stations for 40% of American households without cable]; 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 78 [discussing both Turner decisions].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

1. Freedom From Previous Restraint.

i. Restrictions on Radio and Television.

6. Prohibition of Editorializing.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 377

[§ 377] Prohibition of Editorializing.

In Federal Communications Com. v. League of Women Voters of Calif. (1984) 468 U.S. 364, 104 S.Ct. 3106, 82 L.Ed.2d 278, Pacifica Foundation, a nonprofit corporation operating noncommercial educational broadcasting stations, challenged the constitutionality of § 399 of the federal Public Broadcasting Act (47 U.S.C., §390 et seq.). The section forbade any noncommercial educational broadcasting station that "receives a grant" of federal funds from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting "to engage in editorializing." Held, the ban on editorializing was a violation of the First Amendment.

(a) Power of Congress to regulate broadcasting. This power to assure a balanced presentation of information on issues of public importance is now well established; and regulations not allowed with respect to the print media are justified by differences in the characteristics of the new media. (104 S.Ct. 3116, 82 L.Ed.2d 290.) However, restrictions have been upheld only when narrowly tailored to further a substantial governmental interest. (104 S.Ct. 3118, 82 L.Ed.2d 292.)

(b) Editorializing as protected speech. The expression of editorial opinion "lies at the heart of First Amendment protection." (104 S.Ct. 3118, 82 L.Ed.2d 292.) And the statutory ban "is defined solely on the basis of the content of the suppressed speech." (104 S.Ct. 3119, 82 L.Ed.2d 294.)

(c) Availability of less restrictive means of satisfying governmental interest. The asserted purposes of the ban are "first, to protect noncommercial educational broadcasting stations from being coerced, as a result of federal financing, into becoming vehicles for governmental propagandizing or the objects of governmental influence; and second, to keep these stations from becoming convenient targets for capture by private interest groups wishing to express their own partisan viewpoints." (104 S.Ct. 3120, 82 L.Ed.2d 295.) But the governmental interest can be satisfied by less restrictive means. "To address this important concern, Congress could simply require public broadcasting stations to broadcast a disclaimer every time they editorialize which would state that the editorial represents only the view of the station's management and does not in any way represent the views of the Federal Government or any of the station's other sources of funding." (104 S.Ct. 3126, 82 L.Ed.2d 301.)

(d) Scope of holding. "We do not hold that the Congress or the FCC are without power to regulate the content, timing, or character of speech by noncommercial educational broadcasting stations. Rather, we hold only that the specific interests sought to be advanced by §399's ban on editorializing are either not sufficiently substantial or are not served in a sufficiently limited manner to justify the substantial abridgement of important journalistic freedoms which the First Amendment jealously protects." (104 S.Ct. 3129, 82 L.Ed.2d 305, 306.)

Four justices dissented, mainly on the ground that Congress properly placed the condition against editorializing on the grant of public funds. (104 S.Ct. 3129 et seq., 82 L.Ed.2d 306 et seq.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 205.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

2. Freedom of Association.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 378

[§ 378] In General.

(1) First and Fourteenth Amendments. Freedom of association in organizations, and the related right to refuse disclosure of membership, are well established First Amendment rights. "Effective advocacy of both public and private points of view, particularly controversial ones, is undeniably enhanced by group association, as this Court has more than once recognized by remarking upon the close nexus between the freedoms of speech and assembly. ... It is beyond debate that freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas is an inseparable aspect of the 'liberty' assured by the Due Process Clause." (N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, infra, §379; see Healy v. James (1972) 408 U.S. 169, 92 S.Ct. 2338, 2346, 33 L.Ed.2d 266, 280, infra, §488 ["While the freedom of association is not explicitly set out in the Amendment, it has long been held to be implicit in the freedoms of speech, assembly and petition"]; Roberts v. United States Jaycees (1984) 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 3259, 82 L.Ed.2d 462, infra, §389 [constitutional guaranty includes freedom of "intimate association" and freedom of "expressive association"]; Los Altos v. Barnes (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1193, 1201, 5 C.R.2d 77, infra, §1033 [zoning ordinance permitting home occupations in residential zones but prohibiting employment of assistants and requiring that occupations be carried on only by occupants does not violate right of free association]; Hart v. Cult Awareness Network (1993) 13 C.A.4th 777, 787, 16 C.R.2d 705, infra, §903 [distinguishing Roberts v. United States Jaycees, supra; application of Unruh Civil Rights Act here would violate constitutionally protected freedom of association].)

(2) Incidental and Unsubstantial Impact. An incidental and unsubstantial impact on the right of association will not support a First Amendment challenge. Thus, in Lyng v. International Union, United Auto., Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers of America, UAW (1988) 485 U.S. 360, 108 S.Ct. 1184, 99 L.Ed.2d 380, Congress amended the Food Stamp Act (7 U.S.C., §2011 et seq.) to provide that no household will become eligible to participate in the food stamp program during the time that any member of the household is on strike and the allotment of food stamps will not increase because the income of the striking member has decreased. Held, the amendment was valid.

(a) The statute does not directly and substantially interfere with the associational rights of plaintiff union members and their unions. "It does not 'order' appellees not to associate together for the purpose of conducting a strike, or for any other purpose, and it does not 'prevent' them from associating together or burden their ability to do so in any significant manner." (108 S.Ct. 1189, 99 L.Ed.2d 388.) Any impact on associational rights results from the Government's refusal to extend food stamp benefits to those on strike. Denying these benefits exerts pressure on them to abandon their union, but the strikers' right of association does not require the Government to furnish funds to maximize the exercise of that right. (108 S.Ct. 1190, 99 L.Ed.2d 389.)

(b) The statute does not abridge plaintiffs' right to express themselves about union matters free of coercion by the Government. "[I]t does not 'coerce' belief, and it does not require appellees to participate in political activities or support political views with which they disagree. It merely declines to extend additional food stamp assistance to striking individuals merely because their decision to strike inevitably leads to a decline in their income. And this Court has explicitly stated that even where the Constitution prohibits coercive governmental interference with specific individual rights, it 'does not confer an entitlement to such funds as may be necessary to realize all the advantages of that freedom.' " (108 S.Ct. 1191, 99 L.Ed.2d 390.) (See Bailey v. National City (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1319, 1330, 277 C.R. 427 [rule regulating only right of "intimate" association did not permit overbreadth challenge based on violation of First Amendment freedoms]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 242 [Lyng].)

(3) Substantial Impact. In Louisiana v. N.A.A.C.P. (1961) 366 U.S. 293, 81 S.Ct. 1333, 6 L.Ed.2d 301, the Attorney General of Louisiana sued to enjoin the N.A.A.C.P. from doing business in the state, and the N.A.A.C.P. sought a declaratory judgment of unconstitutionality of the Louisiana statute under which he acted. This statute prohibited any "non-trading" association from doing business in Louisiana if affiliated with an out-of-state association having any subversive person as an officer or director, and required annual affidavits on this subject. The N.A.A.C.P. was a New York corporation with 48 directors, 20 vice-presidents, and 10 chief executive officers, only a few of whom worked in Louisiana. The district court found that it would be impossible for local officers to comply. Held, the statute was invalid. "It is not consonant with due process to require a person to swear to a fact that he cannot be expected to know ... or alternatively to refrain from a wholly lawful activity." (81 S.Ct. 1335, 6 L.Ed.2d 303.)

In N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1964) 377 U.S. 288, 84 S.Ct. 1302, 12 L.Ed.2d 325, such charges as furnishing funds to black students to enroll at the University, and allegedly false statements about state officials, were found wholly insufficient to justify ouster of the association from the state. (84 S.Ct. 1311, 1315, 12 L.Ed.2d 336, 338.) (See 16 Hastings L. J. 491.)

(4) Texts and Law Reviews. Freedom of association has been the subject of extensive commentary. (See 4 Rotunda, §20.41 et seq.; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1130 [National Security Interest and Civil Liberties]; 86 Cal. L. Rev. 1131 [gay student groups and the First Amendment]; 91 Cal. L. Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

2. Freedom of Association.

b. Confidentiality of Membership.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 379

[§ 379] In General.

In N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, the State of Alabama sought to enjoin petitioner, a nonprofit membership corporation, from allegedly doing business as a foreign corporation without complying with its qualification statute. Prior to the hearing, the lower court, on the state's motion, ordered production of petitioner's membership lists. Petitioner showed that revealing the identity of its black members would expose them to economic reprisal, loss of employment, and other public hostility, and the state failed to show any important bearing of the lists on the issues. Held, the production order was a violation of the constitutional rights of the members. The Court stressed the "vital relationship between freedom to associate and privacy in one's associations" (78 S.Ct. 1172, 2 L.Ed.2d 1499), and declared that the claimed immunity "is here so related to the right of the members to pursue their lawful private interest privately and to associate freely with others in so doing as to come within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment." (78 S.Ct. 1174, 2 L.Ed.2d 1502.) (See 72 Harv. L. Rev. 193.)

In Bates v. Little Rock (1960) 361 U.S. 516, 80 S.Ct. 412, 4 L.Ed.2d 480, two Arkansas cities, authorized by statute to levy license taxes on businesses or occupations, had a general license tax that excepted charitable corporations. In 1957, they amended the ordinances to require that any organization operating in the municipalities supply information on officers, members, contributors, etc. Petitioners, custodians of N.A.A.C.P. records, furnished all information except members and contributors, and were convicted of violation. Held, reversed; the amendments were unconstitutional.

(a) "It is now beyond dispute that freedom of association for the purpose of advancing ideas and airing grievances is protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from invasion by the States." (80 S.Ct. 416, 4 L.Ed.2d 485.)

(b) The record shows that compulsory disclosure of the lists would subject members to harassment, threats of bodily harm, and economic pressures, and would discourage membership. "Thus, the threat of substantial government encroachment upon important and traditional aspects of individual freedom is neither speculative nor remote." (80 S.Ct. 417, 4 L.Ed.2d 486.)

(c) The mere assertion in the preamble of the ordinance that this is an adjunct to the taxing power does not prove the necessary relationship where the action threatens constitutionally protected freedom. There is no suggestion that the N.A.A.C.P. type of activity would or ever did fall into the occupational classifications for which a license is required. Hence the municipalities have failed to demonstrate a controlling justification for this deterrence of free association. (80 S.Ct. 417, 419, 4 L.Ed.2d 487, 488.)

In Shelton v. Tucker (1960) 364 U.S. 479, 81 S.Ct. 247, 5 L.Ed.2d 231, an Arkansas statute compelled every teacher, as a condition of employment in a state supported school or college, to file an annual affidavit listing every organization to which he or she belonged or regularly contributed within the past 5 years. Plaintiffs, schoolteachers and a college professor, refused to file. Held, the statute was unconstitutional.

(a) The state may investigate the competence and fitness of teachers (see infra, §480); hence, unlike the disclosure requirement in N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama and Bates v. Little Rock, this inquiry was relevant. But to compel a teacher to disclose every associational tie is to impair his or her right of free association, "a right closely allied to freedom of speech and a right which, like free speech, lies at the foundation of a free society." (81 S.Ct. 251, 5 L.Ed.2d 236.) The statute does not make the information confidential; there is evidence that it will be publicly disclosed; and even if there were not, the pressure on a teacher to avoid ties that might displease authorities would be heavy, making for caution and timidity. (81 S.Ct. 251, 5 L.Ed.2d 236.)

(b) Despite the proper purpose, the statutory means of accomplishing it was invalid. A teacher was required to reveal his or her church, political party, every political organization, in short, "every conceivable kind of associational tie--social, professional, political, avocational, or religious." (81 S.Ct. 252, 5 L.Ed.2d 237.) "The unlimited and indiscriminate sweep of the statute now before us brings it within the ban of our prior cases. The statute's comprehensive interference with associational freedom goes far beyond what might be justified in the exercise of the State's legitimate inquiry into the fitness and competence of its teachers." (81 S.Ct. 253, 5 L.Ed.2d 238.) (See 75 Harv. L. Rev. 127.)

In Gibson v. Florida Legislative Investigation Committee (1963) 372 U.S. 539, 83 S.Ct. 889, 9 L.Ed.2d 929, a Florida legislative investigating committee, inquiring into Communist infiltration into organizations, called the president of the Miami N.A.A.C.P. as a witness, and ordered him to bring his membership records. He answered questions concerning 14 alleged Communists, denying that they were N.A.A.C.P. members, but he refused to produce the records on the ground that this would violate the associational rights of members and prospective members. Held, contempt adjudication reversed. "This Court has repeatedly held that rights of association are within the ambit of the constitutional protections afforded by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. ... And it is equally clear that the guarantee encompasses protection of privacy of association in organizations such as that of which the petitioner is president." (83 S.Ct. 892, 9 L.Ed.2d 934.) The test for a governmental interest in an investigation of this kind is whether there is some relationship between the branch of the N.A.A.C.P. and Communist activities; and the hearsay testimony that in years past some 14 asserted Communists or sympathizers attended occasional meetings of the branch (which had a total membership of about 1,000) utterly failed to demonstrate the existence of that relationship. (83 S.Ct. 898, 9 L.Ed.2d 940.)

2. Private Social Club.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 380

[§ 380] Private Social Club.

In Pacific-Union Club v. Superior Court (1991) 232 C.A.3d 60, 283 C.R. 287, plaintiff State Franchise Tax Board filed a petition for an administrative subpoena to obtain Pacific-Union Club's private membership list. The club is a purely private social organization that maintains a restaurant and other club facilities for the exclusive use of members and guests. Members are prohibited from conducting business on the premises, and must certify that charges for use of the facilities were not incurred for business purposes. The board adopted a regulation that business expense tax deductions will not be allowed with respect to payments to a club which restricts membership on the basis of age, sex, race, religion, color, ancestry, or national origin. The club admittedly discriminates on the basis of age by requiring prospective members to be at least 25. Plaintiff sought the records to enable it to determine whether members took improper tax deductions. The trial judge granted enforcement of the subpoena, and the club sought mandamus to compel the court to vacate the order. Held, writ granted.

(a) Under Roberts v. United States Jaycees (1984) 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 82 L.Ed.2d 462, infra, §389, there are two kinds of freedom of association: intimate and expressive; but only the freedom of intimate association is pertinent here. The club does not claim that it engages in any expressive activities such as advocacy of social or political points of view; its sole stated purpose is the promotion of friendship and camaraderie. (232 C.A.3d 71.)

(b) As a purely private social group it is entitled to protection of the freedom of intimate association. Unlike the Jaycees and Rotary, the club has a small fixed membership with no formal national organization; and it exists solely for the enjoyment of social intercourse among members carefully chosen for their congeniality and social compatibility. (232 C.A.3d 73, 74.)

(c) The protection extends to the nondisclosure of the membership list. "If prospective members of an organization know that they will be subject to random tax audits solely by virtue of their membership, they may decline to become a member of the group." (232 C.A.3d 76.) The board's assertion that the names and addresses will be kept confidential and used only for legitimate tax collection purposes is not persuasive. "[T]he Club's main privacy objection is to the dissemination to the Board itself, who will use the heretofore confidential information to conduct a tax audit on selected Club members. The right to privacy exists to permit the citizen to shield him or herself from the prying eyes of government agents; government intrusion must have some other justification than the promise that the information will not be shared with other citizens." (232 C.A.3d 77.)

(d) There is no compelling state interest to justify disclosure. The board has no evidence or reason to suspect that club members are violating the regulation; it "candidly admits that it wants the membership list so it can determine whether or not a violation occurred by conducting random audits of members of the Club." (232 C.A.3d 79.) And, even assuming a compelling state interest, the board failed to show why less intrusive measures, such as changes in state tax forms, could not be employed. (232 C.A.3d 80.)

(e) "We conclude that the Club is constitutionally entitled to protect its membership list from disclosure to the government on the circumstances here presented, where the Board has neither met its burden of showing a compelling state interest nor established that the elephant gun of membership list disclosure is the only way to bring down the flea of the occasional tax cheat." (232 C.A.3d 81.)

3. Membership Applications.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 381

[§ 381] Membership Applications.

In Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 C.A.3d 358, 282 C.R. 1, plaintiff City of San Francisco sued defendant Olympic Club for an injunction against membership practices said to discriminate on the bases of sex and race in violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (infra, §898). In an effort to investigate the claims of racial discrimination, plaintiff asked defendant for a list of names and business addresses of the 41 applicants who were rejected for membership between 1980 and 1989. Defendant resisted, asserting the privacy rights of the rejected applicants. The trial judge ordered defendant to turn over names and addresses under protective order preventing the city from divulging the information. Defendant sought mandamus. Held, the order for disclosure was within the court's discretion, but it should be amended to require prior notice to and opportunity for individual rejected applicants to object to disclosure.

(a) "Associational privacy rights extend to applications for membership. The right to apply for membership without governmental scrutiny is a natural adjunct to the right of associational privacy. Government access to lists of applicants could easily threaten associational freedom as could access to an organization's membership list." (229 C.A.3d 361.)

(b) An intrusion on associational privacy may be permitted only on a demonstration of a compelling state interest, and the scope of the compelled disclosure must be narrowly circumscribed. (229 C.A.3d 362, citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, infra, §382.) Such an interest is shown here. In the absence of an admission by the club, the city has a need to discover whether the rejected applicants were barred because of race. (229 C.A.3d 363.)

(c) In ordinary civil litigation, a plaintiff's need for information will not easily override a third party's privacy rights. But an Unruh Act suit is not ordinary civil litigation. By authorizing the city attorney to sue on behalf of the People, the Legislature "has signaled that enforcement of the law should not depend upon willingness of individual victims of discrimination to come forward." (229 C.A.3d 363.)

(d) "We conclude that the balance here favors disclosure provided that the lower court properly protects the rejected applicants from disclosure of their identity beyond the lawsuit and permits them to apply for such further protections as they consider appropriate." (229 C.A.3d 364.) "The trial court should require the Club to send a letter to rejected applicants informing them that the City is seeking to contact them about their applications and advising them to petition the court for protective orders if they seek anonymity. ... Those who successfully seek protective orders will be removed from the list of names and addresses furnished by the Club to the City." (229 C.A.3d 365.)

2. Freedom of Association.

b. Confidentiality of Membership.

4. Limited Right of Discovery.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 382

[§ 382] Limited Right of Discovery.

(1) Development of Law. In Bakman v. Superior Court (1976) 63 C.A.3d 306, 133 C.R. 703, plaintiffs, 70 homeowners, brought an action against defendant city of Fresno, on theories of inverse condemnation and nuisance, seeking damages for diminution of the market value of their properties, personal injuries, and emotional distress, allegedly caused by the operation of the city's air terminal. Defendant city served interrogatories on plaintiffs asking for the names and addresses of persons who attended meetings that gave rise to the lawsuit, and of every organization involved in the controversy. Plaintiffs refused to answer on the ground that the inquiries violated their First Amendment right to freedom of association. The lower court overruled their objection, and they sought relief by extraordinary writ. Held, prohibition denied.

(a) The constitutional right of association is well recognized (see supra, §378), and the lower court's order requiring them to answer the interrogatories was state action. (63 C.A.3d 312, 313.)

(b) However, the discovery statutes have an important public purpose, and defendant city properly invoked the procedure for the purpose of obtaining the names of witnesses or other evidence that could be used in its defense to the action. (63 C.A.3d 314.) Plaintiffs themselves had no valid objections in their own right; by bringing the lawsuit they subjected themselves to the discovery process. (63 C.A.3d 314.)

(c) Persons who do not bring a lawsuit may, under some circumstances, object to disclosure of membership in an association or group. (See supra, §379.) But this constitutional privilege must yield here to a more compelling state purpose. The persons attending the meetings were engaged in generating a lawsuit and were potential witnesses; the disclosure of their names would result in no more burden or harassment than that suffered by any witness at a deposition or trial. Any minimal deterring effect on the right of freedom of association was outweighed by the objects of the Discovery Act. (63 C.A.3d 316.)

The Supreme Court denied a hearing in Bakman, but in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 862, footnote 5, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, the court overruled it by a 4-3 decision.

(2) No Blanket Waiver of Rights. The facts of Britt were similar to those of Bakman: Plaintiffs, 936 owners and residents of homes located near the San Diego International Airport, sued the San Diego Unified Port District for damages for diminution of property values, personal injuries, and emotional distress allegedly caused by noise, vibrations, air pollution, and smoke. Defendant sought extensive discovery of plaintiffs' local political activities, including membership in organizations opposed to the Port District operations, meetings attended, persons in attendance, content of discussion, financial contributions to these organizations, etc. Interrogatories were also served that called for a complete account of plaintiffs' lifetime medical histories. The trial judge ordered plaintiffs to answer. Held, mandamus granted to prevent enforcement of the order.

(a) Nondisclosure as part of constitutional right. The right of lawful associational activity includes the right to protection against disclosure of affiliations and activities when disclosure threatens the free exercise of the right. (20 C.3d 852, discussing N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, supra, §379.) This rule applies not only to members of groups espousing unorthodox or unpopular views; all legitimate organizations are entitled to this protection. (20 C.3d 854.) Here, an individual's participation in the advocacy organizations could raise the ire of municipal authorities or others with substantial interests in the airport operations. Hence, "we reject defendant's contention that the 'nondissident' nature of the private associations in question immunizes the present discovery order from First Amendment attack." (20 C.3d 855.)

(b) Test for compelled disclosure. The government bears the burden of demonstrating the justification for compelled disclosure by showing a compelling state purpose and a narrowly circumscribed disclosure that avoids undue interference with the rights. Defendant has failed to show justification for the wide-ranging inquiries. (20 C.3d 855.)

(c) Private lawsuit contention. Defendant argues that the general rule does not apply to discovery in a private lawsuit as distinguished from a governmental inquiry; and that California cases establish a policy in favor of broad discovery. However, the chilling effect on First Amendment rights is not diminished simply because the disclosure is compelled in a litigation-oriented discovery order; indeed, the threat may be more severe, since the party directing the inquiry may attempt to harass his or her opponent and gain strategic advantage by probing deeply into confidential areas. (20 C.3d 856, 857.)

(d) Waiver contention. Defendant contends that by bringing the lawsuit plaintiffs have waived their right to associational privacy, just as a plaintiff may waive his or her evidentiary privilege by raising a particular issue. While a plaintiff may well waive this right to some extent by bringing an action, the waiver did not justify the extensive discovery here: (1) The disclosures sought reached far beyond the privacy interests of plaintiffs, and directly impinged on the constitutional rights of nonparties who had spoken at or attended meetings. (2) Even as to plaintiffs, the order was impermissibly overbroad. When the associational activities are directly relevant to a plaintiff's claim, disclosure, narrowly drawn to assure maximum protection of the constitutional right, is proper. Here, however, plaintiffs' complaints do not relate to or put in issue any aspect of their private associational conduct; i.e., they do not seek damages for injury to their associational interests, do not claim that they were injured as a result of pursuing associational activities, and do not request any relief with respect to defendant's relationship with the associations. (20 C.3d 859.)

(e) Relevancy to defenses contention. Defendant argues that its inquiry meets the "compelling interest" standard because plaintiffs' associational activities may be relevant to the defenses of statute of limitations, res judicata, and failure to mitigate damages. The argument is based on speculation (20 C.3d 860, footnote 4); but even if it be assumed that an order for limited disclosures directed to these issues might be proper, the order involved was not so limited. Its very breadth shows that the trial court did not heed the requirement of precision of disclosure to prevent undue curtailment of the constitutional right. (20 C.3d 861.)

(f) No right to medical histories. The unlimited disclosure of lifetime medical histories is improper on statutory grounds, i.e., the waiver of physician-patient and psychotherapist-patient privileges extends only to information relating to medical conditions in question. (20 C.3d 862.)

Three justices joined in a dissent, stressing the court's prior approval of broad discovery in civil cases (20 C.3d 866), distinguishing N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (20 C.3d 868), and strongly approving the reasoning and conclusion in Bakman (20 C.3d 871, 877). (See Church of Hakeem v. Superior Court (1980) 110 C.A.3d 384, 389, 390, 168 C.R. 13 [following Britt; desire of dissident members of church to obtain list in furtherance of plaintiff's class action was not sufficient showing of compelling state interest]; Bodenheimer v. Superior Court (1980) 108 C.A.3d 885, 889, 167 C.R. 26 [distinguishing Britt; questions asked of petitioner--whether he was member of association and knew any members--were closely related to issues in defamation action against association and others].)

c. Furnishing Attorneys for Group Members.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 383

[§ 383] Furnishing Attorneys for Group Members.

In N.A.A.C.P. v. Button (1963) 371 U.S. 415, 83 S.Ct. 328, 9 L.Ed.2d 405, Virginia tried to stop the N.A.A.C.P. from furnishing its staff counsel for Blacks in civil rights litigation. The statute, an amendment to the "runner or capper" law, included in the definition an agent for an organization that retained a lawyer in connection with an action to which it was not a party. Held, the statute was unconstitutional. The argument that the state was merely regulating unlawful practice of the law by members of the legal profession was found untenable. And the contention that "solicitation" is outside the area of protected freedoms was also rejected: "[A]bstract discussion is not the only species of communication which the Constitution protects; the First Amendment also protects vigorous advocacy, certainly of lawful ends, against governmental intrusion." (83 S.Ct. 336, 9 L.Ed.2d 416.)

The litigation encouraged by the N.A.A.C.P. is not a technique for resolving private differences, but a form of political expression, and the N.A.A.C.P. is not the only group to turn to the courts when unable to attain its objectives through the ballot. "The NAACP is not a conventional political party; but the litigation it assists, while serving to vindicate the legal rights of members of the American Negro community, at the same time and perhaps more importantly, makes possible the distinctive contribution of a minority group to the ideas and beliefs of our society. For such a group, association for litigation may be the most effective form of political association." (83 S.Ct. 337, 9 L.Ed.2d 417.) (For additional ground of "void for vagueness," see infra, §408.)

In Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Virginia (1964) 377 U.S. 1, 84 S.Ct. 1113, 12 L.Ed.2d 89, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, founded in 1883 as a fraternal and mutual benefit society, was instrumental in obtaining enactment of the Safety Appliance Act and the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Thereafter, to meet the additional evils of persuasive claims adjusters and incompetent or otherwise unsatisfactory plaintiffs' lawyers, the organization set up its Department of Legal Counsel. In 16 regions, on advice of local lawyers and judges, a lawyer or firm was chosen, and, after injury or death of a worker, the local Brotherhood official would recommend that counsel to the worker or his or her survivors. The Virginia State Bar obtained an injunction against this channeling of claims to selected lawyers. Held, reversed; the injunction violated First Amendment freedoms.

(a) The First Amendment guarantees the right of workers to gather and advise one another, and thus, through the Department of the Brotherhood, to advise concerning the need for legal service and a lawyer who can be relied on. (84

(b) This right cannot be infringed by a state acting under its power to regulate law practice. The activity is not ambulance chasing; railroad workers in making the recommendations are not engaging in the practice of law or in soliciting business. Laymen cannot be expected to know how to protect their rights against carefully counseled adversaries, and the state can no more prevent them from using their cooperative plan to advise one another than it could use more direct means to bar them from resorting to the courts. (84 S.Ct. 1117, 12 L.Ed.2d 94.) (See 11 A.L.R.3d 1206.)

The Trainmen theory was extended in United Mine Workers of America, Dist. 12 v. Illinois State Bar Assn. (1967) 389 U.S. 217, 88 S.Ct. 353, 19 L.Ed.2d 426. In 1912, the United Mine Workers Union established the following system to protect its members from abuse in handling their workers' compensation claims (particularly large attorneys' fees): The Union employed an attorney on a salary basis. Injured employees reported to that attorney, who made their applications and attempted to reach settlement. If this could not be had, the attorney represented the employee at the hearing. The employee was free to obtain his or her own counsel, make his or her own decision on settlement, and received the entire amount paid by settlement or award--the attorney's compensation was solely the union salary. Thus, unlike the Trainmen situation, this plan involved actual hiring of an attorney by the Union. Held, nevertheless, the activity could not be enjoined as illegal practice. "We hold that the freedom of speech, assembly, and petition guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments gives petitioner the right to hire attorneys on a salary basis to assist its members in the assertion of their legal rights." (88 S.Ct. 355, 19 L.Ed.2d 430.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 138.)

In a later decision, the Court restated its view as follows: "The common thread running through our decisions in NAACP v. Button, Trainmen, and United Mine Workers is that collective activity undertaken to obtain meaningful access to the courts is a fundamental right within the protection of the First Amendment. However, that right would be a hollow promise if courts could deny associations of workers or others the means of enabling their members to meet the costs of legal representation. That was the holding in United Mine Workers, Trainmen, and NAACP v. Button." (United Trans. Union v. State Bar of Michigan (1971) 401 U.S. 576, 91 S.Ct. 1076, 1082, 28 L.Ed.2d 339, 347.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

2. Freedom of Association.

d. Patronage Appointment of Public Employees.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 384

[§ 384] Patronage Appointment of Public Employees.

The long-established practice of selecting public employees for noncivil service positions solely from members of the successful political party was challenged in Elrod v. Burns (1976) 427 U.S. 347, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d 547. The newly elected Sheriff of Cook County, Illinois, was a Democrat who replaced a Republican. He discharged the noncivil service Republican employees, who brought this action for declaratory and injunctive relief. A plurality (three justices) held that the practice was an unconstitutional interference with freedom of association, under the principle declared in Keyishian v. Board of Regents of University of State of New York (1967) 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629, infra, §483, and Perry v. Sindermann (1972) 408 U.S. 593, 92 S.Ct. 2694, 33 L.Ed.2d 570, infra, §691. The following excerpts from the plurality opinion indicate the scope of the proposed new doctrine:

(a) Violation of First Amendment rights. "Patronage practice falls squarely within the prohibitions of Keyishian and Perry. Under that practice, public employees hold their jobs on the condition that they provide, in some acceptable manner, support for the favored political party. The threat of dismissal for failure to provide that support unquestionably inhibits protected belief and association, and dismissal for failure to provide support only penalizes its exercise. The belief and association which Government may not ordain directly are achieved by indirection. And regardless of how evenhandedly these restraints may operate in the long run, after political office has changed hands several times, protected interests are still infringed and thus the violation remains." (96 S.Ct. 2683, 49 L.Ed.2d 557.)

(b) Test of valid restriction on First Amendment rights. "[I]f conditioning the retention of public employment on the employee's support of the in-party is to survive constitutional challenge, it must further some vital government end by a means that is least restrictive of freedom of belief and association in achieving that end, and the benefit gained must outweigh the loss of constitutionally protected rights." (96 S.Ct. 2685, 49 L.Ed.2d 559.)

(c) Patronage practice does not meet test. "Though there is a vital need for government efficiency and effectiveness, such dismissals are on balance not the least restrictive means for fostering that end. There is also a need to insure that policies which the electorate has sanctioned are effectively implemented. That interest can be fully satisfied by limiting patronage dismissals to policymaking positions. Finally, patronage dismissals cannot be justified by their contribution to the proper functioning of our democratic process through their assistance to partisan politics since political parties are nurtured by other, less intrusive and equally effective methods. More fundamentally, however, any contribution of patronage dismissals to the democratic process does not suffice to override their severe encroachment on First Amendment freedoms." (96 S.Ct. 2689, 49 L.Ed.2d 565.)

Two concurring justices refused to join in the constitutional declaration, and in a brief statement, expressed the view that under Perry v. Sindermann "a nonpolicymaking, nonconfidential government employee" cannot be discharged from a job he or she is satisfactorily performing on "the sole ground of his political beliefs." (96 S.Ct. 2690, 49 L.Ed.2d 566.)

Three justices joined in a strong dissent against holding unconstitutional "a practice as old as the Republic, a practice which has contributed significantly to the democratization of American politics." (96 S.Ct. 2691, 49 L.Ed.2d 567.) And, assuming that the constitutional issue must be reached, "I would hold that a state or local government may elect to condition employment on the political affiliation of a prospective employee and on the political fortunes of the hiring incumbent." (96 S.Ct. 2697, 49 L.Ed.2d 574.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 186; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 767.)

Branti v. Finkel (1980) 445 U.S. 507, 100 S.Ct. 1287, 63 L.Ed.2d 574, following Elrod, held that "the continued employment of an assistant public defender cannot properly be conditioned upon his allegiance to the political party in control of the county government." (100 S.Ct. 1295, 63 L.Ed.2d 584.) (See O'Hare Truck Service v. Northlake (1996) 518 U.S. 712, 116 S.Ct. 2353, 2361, 135 L.Ed.2d 874, 886 [extending Elrod and Branti to political association rights of independent contractors working for government].)

In Rutan v. Republican Party of Illinois (1990) 497 U.S. 62, 110 S.Ct. 2729, 111 L.Ed.2d 52, the Governor of Illinois issued an executive order prohibiting state officials from hiring new employees, filling vacancies, creating new positions, or taking similar action without the governor's "express permission." The order was challenged on the ground that the governor granted permission to fill positions on the basis of an applicant's support of the Republican Party, and hence, he was operating a political patronage system. Held, the rule of Elrod and Branti, holding patronage appointment practices unconstitutional, "extends to promotion, transfer, recall, and hiring decisions based on party affiliation and support." (110 S.Ct. 2739, 111 L.Ed.2d 69.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 227 [Rutan].)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection. 2. Freedom of Association. e. Agency Shop for Public Employees.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 385

[§ 385] Agency Shop for Public Employees.

(1) In General. In Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Education (1977) 431 U.S. 209, 97 S.Ct. 1782, 52 L.Ed.2d 261, Michigan enacted legislation authorizing an agency shop for local governmental employees. Under this arrangement an employee could elect not to join a union, but was required to pay the union, as a condition of employment, a service fee equal to union dues. Plaintiff employees challenged the legislation and the agency shop clause in the union's collective bargaining agreement as violative of the First Amendment freedom of association. Held, the agency shop provision was valid, but plaintiffs were entitled to a remedy against use of their contributions to support causes they opposed.

(a) Validity of union shop. Railway Employees' Dept. v. Hanson (1956) 351 U.S. 225, 76 S.Ct. 714, 100 L.Ed. 1112, infra §1318, and International Assn. of Machinists v. Street (1961) 367 U.S. 740, 81 S.Ct. 1784, 6 L.Ed.2d 1141, are controlling on one of the basic issues: Where union dues are not used to force ideological conformity or otherwise to impair the free expression of employees, the requirement of financial support of the collective-bargaining agency does not violate the First Amendment. (97 S.Ct. 1791, 52 L.Ed.2d 276.) A union-shop arrangement fairly distributes the cost of activities among those who benefit, and counteracts the incentive that employees might otherwise have to become "free riders." (97 S.Ct. 1792, 52 L.Ed.2d 277.)

(b) Impact on First Amendment interests. An employee might have ideological objections to a wide variety of union activities; e.g., to a medical benefits plan that does not square with his or her view on abortion, or to a limitation on the right to strike; and to be compelled to help finance the union might well be thought to interfere with the employee's freedom to associate for the advancement of his or her ideas or to refrain from doing so. But Hanson and Street determined that this interference "is constitutionally justified by the legislative assessment of the important contribution of the union shop to the system of labor relations established by Congress." (97 S.Ct. 1793, 52 L.Ed.2d 276.) Michigan's legislation, modeled after federal law and involving similar governmental interests, is likewise valid. "Thus, insofar as the service charge is used to finance expenditures by the union for the purposes of collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance adjustment, these two decisions of this Court appear to require validation of the agency-shop agreement before us." (97 S.Ct. 1794, 52 L.Ed.2d 278.)

(c) Similarity of public and private employment. The fact that Hanson and Street dealt with private employment does not call for a different holding; i.e., the public employee does not have a weightier First Amendment interest than a private employee. The public employee is free to express his or her views in opposition to union policy, and to participate in the full range of political activities open to other citizens. (97 S.Ct. 1796, 52 L.Ed.2d 280.) Although public employee unions may attempt to influence governmental policy making, the characterization of this activity as "political" does not raise the ideas and beliefs of public employees onto a higher plane than those of private employees. (97 S.Ct. 1797, 52 L.Ed.2d 281.) Thus, the differences between public and private sector collective bargaining "do not translate into differences in First Amendment rights." (97 S.Ct. 1798, 52 L.Ed.2d 282.)

(d) Use of nonmembers' fees for purposes other than collective bargaining. This issue was not decided in Hanson or Street, and plaintiffs' contention that they may prevent the union's spending of part of their fees for political purposes is sound. A state cannot compel an individual to affirm a religious belief or to associate with a political party as a condition of public employment. (97 S.Ct. 1799, 1800, 52 L.Ed.2d 283, citing Torcaso v. Watkins (1961) 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 6 L.Ed.2d 982, infra, §514; Elrod v. Burns (1976) 427 U.S. 347, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d 547, supra, §384.) Similarly, plaintiffs cannot be required to contribute to support of an ideological cause as a condition of holding their jobs. (97 S.Ct. 1799, 1800, 52 L.Ed.2d 283.) The union may spend funds for this purpose, but the expenditures must be financed from charges paid by employees who do not object to advancing those ideas. (97 S.Ct. 1800, 52 L.Ed.2d 284.) The line between collective bargaining activities and ideological activities unrelated thereto will be difficult to draw, and cannot be drawn in the instant case which came up on the pleadings without a record. (97 S.Ct. 1800, 52 L.Ed.2d 285.) Because the union has an internal remedy for dissenters, further judicial proceedings should be deferred pending the voluntary utilization of that remedy as a means of settling the dispute. (97 S.Ct. 1802, 1803, 52 L.Ed.2d 287.) (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 188; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 341; 66 Cal. L. Rev. 767 [right of ideological nonassociation; comment on Elrod and Abood].)

(2) Chargeable Activities. Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Assn. (1991) 500 U.S. 507, 111 S.Ct. 1950, 114 L.Ed.2d 572, summarizes the guidelines set forth in prior cases: "[C]hargeable activities must (1) be 'germane' to collective bargaining activity; (2) be justified by the government's vital policy interest in labor peace and avoiding 'free riders'; and (3) not significantly add to the burdening of free speech that is inherent in the allowance of an agency or union shop." (111 S.Ct. 1959, 114 L.Ed.2d 589.)

Under these guidelines, a public sector local union may use dissenting members' fees for otherwise chargeable activities of the union's state and national affiliates--even if those activities are not performed for the direct benefit of the local bargaining unit--where there is some indication that the payment is for services that may ultimately inure to the benefit of members of the local union. (111 S.Ct. 1961, 114 L.Ed.2d 592.)

(3) Procedural Safeguards. The qualification stated in Abood, supra, upholding the constitutional right of nonunion employees to prevent the union's spending of part of their service fees for political purposes, was applied in Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1, AFT, AFL-CIO v. Hudson (1986) 475 U.S. 292, 106 S.Ct. 1066, 89 L.Ed.2d 232. "[T]he constitutional requirements for the Union's collection of agency fees include an adequate explanation of the basis for the fee, a reasonably prompt opportunity to challenge the amount of the fee before an impartial decisionmaker, and an escrow for the amounts reasonably in dispute while such challenges are pending." (106 S.Ct. 1078, 89 L.Ed.2d 249.)

In Jerabek v. Public Emp. Relations Bd. (1991) 2 C.A.4th 1298, 4 C.R.2d 181, the court upheld provisions of the Ralph C. Dills Act (Govt.C. 3512 et seq., 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §604 et seq.) for escrow of agency fees in dispute. The opinion discusses Abood, Hudson, and related decisions, and concludes that the regulations at issue comport with those decisions. "Any funds collected under the concurrent notice provision ... are placed in an escrow account pending objection by nonmembers. At no time does the union have access to these funds to use them for political, ideological, or other nonrepresentational purposes. Consequently, the evil discussed in Abood, Ellis, and Hudson, the involuntary subsidization of ideological activity, is not implicated." (2 C.A.4th 1306.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Affirmative Authorization To Use Nonmembers' Dues for Political Purposes. In Davenport v. Washington Education Assn. (2007) 551 U.S. 177, 127 S.Ct. 2372, 168 L.Ed.2d 71, the State of Washington and fee-paying nonmembers of a public employees union claimed that the union violated a statute prohibiting labor organizations from using agency shop fees paid by nonmembers for election-related purposes, without the affirmative consent of those nonmembers. The Supreme Court of Washington held that the affirmative authorization requirement violated the First Amendment. Held, judgment vacated and case remanded. A state may require that public-sector unions receive affirmative authorization from nonmembers before spending their agency fees for election-related purposes. (127 S.Ct. 2383, 168 L.Ed.2d 83.) This holding is limited to public-sector unions because the collection of fees by private-sector unions is governed by private contractual arrangements that present a different constitutional question. (127 S.Ct. 2382, 168 L.Ed.2d 82.)

(a) There is no constitutional requirement that a nonmember must shoulder the burden of objecting before a union can use his or her agency fees for purposes impermissible under Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Education (1977) 431 U.S. 209, 97 S.Ct. 1782, 52 L.Ed.2d 261, text, p. 633. The First Amendment is not necessarily implicated every time governments place limitations on a union's entitlement to agency fees above and beyond what is required in Abood and Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1, AFT, AFL-CIO v. Hudson (1986) 475 U.S. 292, 106 S.Ct. 1066, 89 L.Ed.2d 232, text, p. 635. Hudson outlined a minimum set of procedures by which a public-sector union could meet its requirement under Abood. Here, the "mere fact that Washington required more than the Hudson minimum does not trigger First Amendment scrutiny. The constitutional floor for unions' collection and spending of agency fees is not also a constitutional ceiling for state-imposed restrictions." (127 S.Ct. 2379, 168 L.Ed.2d 79.)

(b) Given the unique context of public-sector agency-shop arrangements, which essentially give private entities the power to tax government employees, the content-based nature of the statute does not violate the First Amendment. (127 S.Ct. 2378, 2382, 168 L.Ed.2d 79, 82.) The statute is a reasonable viewpoint-neutral limitation on Washington's authorization allowing public-sector unions to collect and spend the money of government employees. (127 S.Ct. 2381, 168 L.Ed.2d 82.) Correction: Page 633, first line of second paragraph, "Railway Employees' Dept." should read "Railway Employes' Dept."

f. Politically Motivated Economic Boycott.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 386

[§ 386] Politically Motivated Economic Boycott.

In N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co. (1982) 458 U.S. 886, 102 S.Ct 3409, 73 L.Ed.2d 1215, black citizens of Port Gibson, Mississippi, and other areas of Claiborne County presented white elected officials with a list of demands for racial equality and integration. No satisfactory response was received, and at a local N.A.A.C.P. meeting several hundred black persons voted to place a boycott on white merchants in the area, and proceeded to do so. After the boycott had been in effect for over 3 years, several merchants filed suit in the state court against organizations and individuals to recover damages for losses sustained and to enjoin further boycott activity. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and the Mississippi Supreme Court upheld the judgment on the ground that some of the defendants engaged in acts of violence and intimidation, making the entire boycott illegal; hence, defendants were liable for the tort of malicious interference with business. Held, reversed; imposition of liability was a violation of defendants' First Amendment rights.

(a) The boycott, supported by speeches and nonviolent picketing, was protected speech or conduct. "The black citizens named as defendants in this action banded together and collectively expressed their dissatisfaction with a social structure that had denied them rights to equal treatment and respect." (102 S.Ct. 3423, 73 L.Ed.2d 1232.) The elements of speech, assembly, association, and petition are inseparable; and through exercise of these First Amendment rights defendants sought to bring about political, social, and economic change. (102 S.Ct. 3425, 73 L.Ed.2d 1235.)

(b) Governmental regulation that has an incidental effect on First Amendment freedoms may be justified in certain narrowly defined instances; e.g., unfair trade practices and secondary boycotts by labor unions. (102 S.Ct. 3425, 73 L.Ed.2d 1235.) But "we do not find a comparable right to prohibit peaceful political activity such as that found in the boycott in this case." (102 S.Ct. 3426, 73 L.Ed.2d 1236.) An intent to influence government action cannot be held unlawful even though defendants foresaw that some economic injury would result. "The right of the States to regulate economic activity could not justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically-motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Constitution itself." (102 S.Ct. 3426, 73 L.Ed.2d 1236.)

(c) Tort liability can be imposed for business losses caused by violence and threats of violence. But "the presence of activity protected by the First Amendment imposes restraints on the grounds that may give rise to damage liability and on the persons who may be held accountable for those damages." (102 S.Ct. 3428, 73 L.Ed.2d 1238.) (1) The state may not award compensation for the consequences of nonviolent protected activity. Only losses proximately caused by unlawful conduct may be recovered. (2) The state may not impose liability on an individual solely because of his or her association with another. (102 S.Ct. 3429, 73 L.Ed.2d 1240.) "For liability to be imposed by reason of association alone, it is necessary to establish that the group itself possessed unlawful goals and that the individual held a specific intent to further those illegal aims." (102 S.Ct. 3430, 73 L.Ed.2d 1241.)

(d) The judgment against Charles Evers, Field Secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., was improperly based on his speeches supporting the boycott. "The lengthy addresses generally contained an impassioned plea for black citizens to unify, to support and respect each other, and to realize the political and economic power available to them. In the course of those pleas, strong language was used. If that language had been followed by acts of violence, a substantial question would be presented whether Evers could be held liable for the consequences of that unlawful conduct." (102 S.Ct. 3434, 73 L.Ed.2d 1246.) But "[s]trong and effective extemporaneous rhetoric cannot be nicely channeled in purely dulcet phrases. An advocate must be free to stimulate his audience with spontaneous and emotional appeals for unity and action in a common cause. When such appeals do not incite lawless action, they must be regarded as protected speech." (102 S.Ct. 3434, 73 L.Ed.2d 1246.)

(e) The judgment against the N.A.A.C.P. was improperly derived from the liability of Evers. "To impose liability without a finding that the NAACP authorized--either actually or apparently--or ratified unlawful conduct would impermissibly burden the rights of political association that are protected by the First Amendment." (102 S.Ct. 3435, 73 L.Ed.2d 1248.)

(f) Although "the taint of violence colored the conduct of some of the petitioners," the burden of demonstrating that it colored the entire effect was not satisfied by evidence that violence occurred or even that violence contributed to the success of the boycott. "A massive and prolonged effort to change the social, political, and economic structure of a local environment cannot be characterized as a violent conspiracy simply by reference to the ephemeral consequences of relatively few violent acts." (102 S.Ct. 3437, 73 L.Ed.2d 1249.) (See Environmental Planning & Information Council v. Superior Court (1984) 36 C.3d 188, 197, 203 C.R. 127, 680 P.2d 1086, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §761 [following Claiborne]; Lam v. Ngo (2001) 91 C.A.4th 832, 845, 111 C.R.2d 582 [following Claiborne; protest organizer could not be held liable for protesters' tortious acts in absence of evidence of his authorization, direction, or ratification of their activities]; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 171 [Claiborne]; 22 San Diego L. Rev. 555 [consumer boycotts and freedom of association].)

Claiborne Hardware was distinguished in Federal Trade Com. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn. (1990) 493 U.S. 411, 110 S.Ct. 768, 107 L.Ed.2d 851, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §566. The Court held that a boycott by a group of lawyers appointed to represent indigent defendants in criminal cases was an illegal restraint of trade. In rejecting the First Amendment defense, the Court pointed out the Blacks who joined the Claiborne Hardware boycott sought no special advantage for themselves, but only equal treatment to which they were constitutionally entitled; here, the immediate objective of the lawyers was to increase their compensation. (110 S.Ct. 777, 107 L.Ed.2d 868.)

g. Restrictions on Prisoners' Rights.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 387

[§ 387] Restrictions on Prisoners' Rights.

In Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners' Labor Union (1977) 433 U.S. 119, 97 S.Ct. 2532, 53 L.Ed.2d 629, a "Prisoners' Labor Union" was incorporated in North Carolina, with the stated goal of forming unions at every prison and jail in the state, and to work towards improvement of correctional practices and policies. After it had gained 2,000 members in 40 prison units, the State Department of Corrections, though tolerating membership or belief in the union, prohibited inmate solicitation of other inmates, meetings between members, and bulk mailings from outside sources. Held, the regulations were constitutional.

(a) Lawful incarceration brings about the necessary withdrawal or limitation of many privileges and rights, including those derived from the First Amendment. (97 S.Ct. 2538, 2540, 53 L.Ed.2d 638, 639; see infra, §405.)

(b) The restrictions on solicitation and group meetings are rationally related to the reasonable objectives of prison administration. "It is clearly not irrational to conclude that individuals may believe what they want, but that concerted group activity, or solicitation therefor, would pose additional and unwarranted problems and frictions in the operation of the State's penal institutions." (97 S.Ct. 2540, 53 L.Ed.2d 640.)

(c) Because other avenues of outside informational flow by the union remain available, the prohibition of bulk mailings is reasonable. (97 S.Ct. 2541, 53 L.Ed.2d 642.)

(d) The contention that the prohibition of union meetings and bulk mail distribution denied equal protection because these rights had been extended to Jaycees, Alcoholics Anonymous, and the Boy Scouts is unsound. A prison is not a "public forum," and the prison administrators could reasonably conclude that the prisoners' union required different treatment from the other groups. (97 S.Ct. 2543, 53 L.Ed.2d 645.)

In Thornburgh v. Abbott (1989) 490 U.S. 401, 109 S.Ct. 1874, 104 L.Ed.2d 459, the Court upheld as facially valid a regulation authorizing federal prison officials to reject incoming publications found to be detrimental to prison security. The test to be applied is whether a regulation is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests. (109 S.Ct. 1876, 104 L.Ed.2d 467.) "We deal here with incoming publications, material requested by an individual inmate but targeted to a general audience. Once in the prison, material of this kind reasonably may be expected to circulate among prisoners, with the concomitant potential for coordinated disruptive conduct. Furthermore, prisoners may observe particular material in the possession of a fellow prisoner, draw inferences about their fellow's beliefs, sexual orientation, or gang affiliations from that material, and cause disorder by acting accordingly. ... In the volatile prison environment, it is essential that prison officials be given broad discretion to prevent such disorder." (109 S.Ct. 1881, 104 L.Ed.2d 472, 473.) (See 103 Harv. L. Rev. 239 [restrictions on prisoners' rights to receive publications]; 17 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1011 [Thornburgh].)

2. Freedom of Association.

h. Rights of Political Parties.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 388

[§ 388] Rights of Political Parties.

(1) In General. "The right to associate with the political party of one's choice is an integral part of this basic constitutional freedom." (Cousins v. Wigoda (1975) 419 U.S. 477, 95 S.Ct. 541, 547, 42 L.Ed.2d 595, 603, quoting Kusper v. Pontikes (1973) 414 U.S. 51, 94 S.Ct. 303, 38 L.Ed.2d 260, supra, §251.) In Cousins, the Court held that the Illinois Election Code could not be applied to determine a challenge of a group of delegates to the Democratic Party national convention. The interest of a state in protecting the integrity of its electoral process was considered insufficient to justify interference with the process of selecting candidates for national office. Hence, the convention itself was the proper forum to settle intra-party disputes as to which delegates should be seated. (95 S.Ct. 549, 42 L.Ed.2d 605.) (See Democratic Party of the United States v. Wisconsin (1981) 450 U.S. 107, 101 S.Ct. 1010, 67 L.Ed.2d 82 [state cannot compel party to honor primary results reached contrary to party rules]; Tashjian v. Republican Party of Connecticut (1986) 479 U.S. 208, 107 S.Ct. 544, 554, 93 L.Ed.2d 514, 530 [Connecticut statute requiring voters in party primary to be registered members of that party, violated freedom of association by forbidding party to permit independents to vote]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 241 [Wisconsin].)

(2) California Law. California statutes that dictate the organization and composition of governing bodies of political parties and require geographical rotation of their chair violate the right of free association. (Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Cen. Committee (1989) 489 U.S. 214, 109 S.Ct. 1013, 1024, 1025, 103 L.Ed.2d 271, 286, 288, supra, §267.)

In California Democratic Party v. Jones (2000) 530 U.S. 567, 120 S.Ct. 2402, 147 L.Ed.2d 502, plaintiff political parties challenged the constitutionality of Elec.C. 2001. That statute, adopted as part of Proposition 198 in 1996, changed California's partisan primary from a closed primary to a blanket primary, permitting voters to choose among the candidates, regardless of party affiliation, with the candidate of each party winning the greatest number of votes becoming the nominee of that party. The purpose of the proposition was to favor nominees with "moderate" positions. Held, the statute is unconstitutional.

The processes by which political parties select their nominees are not wholly public affairs that states may regulate freely. (120 S.Ct. 2407, 147 L.Ed.2d 508.) Representative democracy "is unimaginable without the ability of citizens to band together in promoting among the electorate candidates who espouse their political views." (120 S.Ct. 2408, 147

L.Ed.2d 509.) A corollary of this right to associate is the right not to associate, and in no area is a "political association's right to exclude more important than in the process of selecting its nominee. ... [I]t is the nominee who becomes the party's ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party's views." (120 S.Ct. 2408, 147 L.Ed.2d 510.)

One justice concurred and one justice dissented. (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 269 [California Democratic Party]; 29 Pepperdine L. Rev. 319 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. See Clingman v. Beaver (2005) 544 U.S. 581, 125 S.Ct. 2029, 2039, 161 L.Ed.2d 920, 935 [upholding Oklahoma's semi-closed primary system in which only members of political party and voters registered as Independents are permitted to vote in party's primary]; 119 Stanf. L. Rev. 268 [Clingman].

In Washington State Grange v. Washington State Republican Party (2008) 552 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 1184, 170 L.Ed.2d 151, plaintiff political parties challenged an initiative changing Washington's primary election system. The initiative provided for a "blanket" primary in which candidates for office are identified on the ballot by self-designated "party preference"; voters may vote for any candidate, regardless of party designation, and the two highest vote-getters for each office, regardless of party preference, advance to the general election. A party may not prevent a candidate, who might not be affiliated with the party and whose beliefs might be repugnant to it, from designating that party on the ballot. Plaintiffs immediately challenged the law on its face as a burden on their associational rights, and they received an injunction against its implementation. The Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, reversed. The initiative does not impose a severe burden on plaintiffs' associational rights. (128 S.Ct. 1195, 170 L.Ed.2d 165.)

(a) In a facial challenge, the Court must be careful not to go beyond the statute's facial requirements and speculate about hypothetical or imaginary cases. Here, the state has had no opportunity to implement the initiative, and its courts have had no opportunity "to construe the law in the context of actual disputes arising from the electoral context, or to accord the law a limiting construction to avoid constitutional questions." (128 S.Ct. 1190, 170 L.Ed.2d 160.)

(b) A similar system was struck down in California Democratic Party v. Jones (2000) 530 U.S. 567, 120 S.Ct. 2402, 147 L.Ed.2d 502, text, p. 639, as an unconstitutional burden on the associational rights of political parties by forcing them to associate with voters who did not share their political beliefs. Jones suggested that a nonpartisan blanket primary would be constitutional, but the Court had no occasion to determine the issue here, which is "whether a primary system that indicates each candidate's party preference on the ballot, in effect, chooses the parties' nominees." (128 S.Ct. 1192, 170 L.Ed.2d 162.) Unlike the California primary, Washington's initiative does not, by its terms, choose the parties' nominees. "The law never refers to the candidates as nominees of any party, nor does it treat them as such. To the contrary, the election regulations specifically provide that the primary 'does not serve to determine the nominees of a political party but serves to winnow the number of candidates to a final list of two for the general election.' ... Whether parties nominate their own candidates outside the state-run primary is simply irrelevant. In fact, parties may now nominate candidates by whatever mechanism they choose because" the initiative repealed prior regulations governing party nominations. (128 S.Ct. 1192, 170 L.Ed.2d 162.)

(c) Plaintiffs' associational rights are not burdened by the assumption that the candidates on the general election ballot are the nominees of their preferred parties. There is no basis to presume that voters will be confused or misinterpret a candidate's designation of party-preference to mean that the candidate is the party's chosen nominee or that the party associates with or approves the candidate. (128 S.Ct. 1193, 170 L.Ed.2d 163.) Further, the state ballot ultimately might include prominent disclaimers explaining that the self-designated party preference is not an official party endorsement, and the state might choose to educate the public regarding the new ballots through advertising and the distribution of explanatory materials. (128 S.Ct. 1194, 170 L.Ed.2d 164.)

2. Freedom of Association.

i. Exclusion of Women From Membership.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 389

[§ 389] Exclusion of Women From Membership.

(1) In General. In Roberts v. United States Jaycees (1984) 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 82 L.Ed.2d 462, the Court held that the Minnesota Human Rights Act, prohibiting discrimination by a place of public accommodation on the basis of sex, was validly applied to compel the United States Jaycees to accept women as regular members. The Jaycees, founded in 1920 as the Junior Chamber of Commerce, is a national nonprofit membership corporation with 7,400 local chapters affiliated with 51 state organizations. Regular membership is limited to young men between 18 and 35, and others--principally women and older men--are given only associate membership with limited privileges. The Minnesota Department of Human Rights ordered the national organization to cease discrimination on the basis of sex, and the Minnesota Supreme Court, answering a certified question, ruled that the Jaycees organization was a "place of public accommodation" within the meaning of the state statute. The district court upheld the Department's order, the Court of Appeals reversed, but the Supreme Court held that the order did not violate the Jaycees' constitutional freedom of association.

(a) Two types of freedom of association. "In one line of decisions, the Court has concluded that choices to enter into and maintain certain intimate human relationships must be secured against undue intrusion by the State because of the role of such relationships in safeguarding the individual freedom that is central to our constitutional scheme. In this respect, freedom of association receives protection as a fundamental element of personal liberty. In another set of decisions, the Court has recognized a right to associate for the purpose of engaging in those activities protected by the First Amendment--speech, assembly, petition for the redress of grievances, and the exercise of religion. The Constitution guarantees freedom of association of this kind as an indispensable means of preserving other individual liberties." (104 S.Ct. 3249, 82 L.Ed.2d 471.) "[T]he nature and degree of constitutional protection afforded freedom of association may vary depending on the extent to which one or the other aspect of the constitutionally protected liberty is at stake in a given case." (104 S.Ct. 3249, 82 L.Ed.2d 471.) The two aspects of the constitutional guarantee may be called (1) the freedom of "intimate association" and (2) the freedom of "expressive association." (104 S.Ct. 3250, 82 L.Ed.2d 471.)

(b) No effect on freedom of intimate association. The local chapters are large and basically unselective groups, and much of the activity of the association involves the participation of strangers. Hence, the chapters lack the distinctive characteristics that might afford constitutional protection to the decision of its members to exclude women. (104 S.Ct.

(c) Justifiable abridgment of freedom of expressive association. Infringement of this right may be justified by compelling state interests unrelated to the suppression of ideas, which cannot be achieved through means significantly less restrictive of associational freedoms. (104 S.Ct. 3252, 82 L.Ed.2d 475.) The Minnesota statute is an example of public accommodation laws adopted by some states a decade before their federal counterpart, the Civil Rights Act of 1875 (infra, §814). By prohibiting gender discrimination in places of public accommodation, it protects its citizens from a number of serious social and personal harms. (104 S.Ct. 3253, 82 L.Ed.2d 476.) And it imposes no serious burdens on the male members' freedom of expressive association. "The Act requires no change in the Jaycees' creed of promoting the interests of young men, and it imposes no restrictions on the organization's ability to exclude individuals with ideologies or philosophies different from those of its existing members. ... Moreover, the Jaycees already invite women to share the group's views and philosophy and to participate in much of its training and community activities." (104 S.Ct. 3254, 82 L.Ed.2d 477.) Even if enforcement "causes some incidental abridgment of the Jaycees' protected speech, that effect is no greater than is necessary to accomplish the State's legitimate purposes." (104 S.Ct. 3255, 82 L.Ed.2d 478.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 195 [Jaycees]; 28 U.S.F. L. Rev. 1009 [criticizing intimate association test as insufficient to remedy discrimination against women by private clubs].)

(2) Effect of Violation of Unruh Civil Rights Act. In Warfield v. Peninsula Golf & Country Club (1995) 10 C.4th 594, 42 C.R.2d 50, 896 P.2d 776, the court, after holding that the country club in question engaged in sufficient transactions with nonmembers to qualify as a business establishment (infra, §899), addressed the question whether application of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (C.C. 51) to require admission of women to an all-male club violated either the right of association or the right to privacy of the members. Held, it did not.

(a) Using the freedom of intimate association and the freedom of expressive association dichotomy developed in the Jaycees case, the court said: "To begin with, defendant country club does not contend that it was organized for, or regularly engages in, the type of expressive activities that fall within the protection of the First Amendment. Thus, application of section 51 to the club will have no appreciable effect on its members' freedom of expressive association." (10 C.4th 628, 629.)

(b) "Second, it is clear any claim that application of section 51 infringes upon club members' freedom of intimate association is untenable when the characteristics and the nature of the activities of defendant club are compared with the characteristics and activities of the organizations involved in the Roberts, Rotary Club, and New York State Club Assn. decisions. As an initial matter, the size of defendant's membership--700 members--is considerably larger than that of most of the local clubs involved in the Rotary Club case, and also falls well above the 400-member threshold established by the city ordinance at issue in the New York State Club Assn. case; indeed, because members' spouses and children under age 21 generally share the benefits of membership, the 700-member figure significantly understates the number of persons with unrestricted access to the club. Furthermore, as with the organizations involved in all three of the foregoing United States Supreme Court decisions, the premises and activities of defendant club are not narrowly restricted to club members (or their families). Instead, numerous nonmembers--invited guests, participants in sponsored events, and patrons of the golf and tennis pros--regularly are present at the club and, along with club members, make use of the club facilities. Finally, and perhaps most significantly, defendant club--like the organizations involved in the Roberts and Rotary Club cases--cannot persuasively claim that elimination of the men-only requirement for proprietary membership fundamentally will alter the nature of the club or its specific purposes. The club's golf, tennis, and other recreational and social facilities generally have been open to women, and women routinely have held nonproprietary classes of membership within the club." (10 C.4th 629; citing Roberts v. United States Jaycees, supra, Board of Directors of Rotary Int. v. Rotary Club of Duarte (1987) 481 U.S. 537, 107 S.Ct. 1940, 95 L.Ed.2d 474, infra, §902, and New York State Club Assn. v. New York (1988) 487 U.S. 1, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §890.)

(c) Although the California constitutional right to privacy "provides protection that is distinct from, and in some respects greater than, that provided by the federal Constitution ... defendant has cited no authority that suggests the state constitutional provision properly should be interpreted to provide protection to the discriminatory membership policies of a large private country club, such as defendant, greater than the protection afforded by the federal Constitution. ... Particularly in light of the size of the club's membership, the regular business transactions in which the club engages with nonmembers, and the absence of any conflict between the inclusion of women and the nature or purpose of the club, we hold that application of the nondiscrimination provisions of the Unruh Civil Rights Act does not violate the members' right of privacy embodied in Article I, section 1, of the California Constitution." (10 C.4th 630.) (See 26 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 167 [Warfield]; 30 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 909 [same]; on Unruh Civil Rights Act generally, see infra, §898 et seq.)

j. Exclusion of Group From Parade.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 390

[§ 390] Exclusion of Group From Parade.

In Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston (1995) 515 U.S. 557, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487, the issue was "whether Massachusetts may require private citizens who organize a parade to include among the marchers a group imparting a message the organizers do not wish to convey." Held, "such a mandate violates the First Amendment." (115 S.Ct. 2340, 2341, 132 L.Ed.2d 495.)

In Hurley, the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council, an unincorporated association of individuals, organized and conducted the annual St. Patrick's Day-Evacuation Day Parade in Boston. The council refused a place in the 1993 parade to GLIB, an organization of gay, lesbian, and bisexual descendants of Irish immigrants formed for the purpose of marching in the parade to express its members' pride in their identity, to show that there are such individuals in the community, and to support the like persons who sought to march in the New York St. Patrick's Day Parade. GLIB filed suit in state court, alleging that denial of its application to march violated the Massachusetts public accommodations law, which prohibits discrimination on account of sexual orientation. The state trial and appellate courts, finding that there was a lack of selectivity in choosing participants and that the parade lacked any expressive purpose, and thus that the parade did not involve First Amendment rights, held that exclusion of GLIB because of the sexual orientation of its members violated the state statute. The Supreme Court granted certiorari to address the First Amendment issue.

(a) A "parade" consists of marchers making some sort of collective point, not just to each other but to bystanders along the way, and thus is inherently expressive. Moreover, the protected expression in a parade is not limited to its banners and songs, but includes symbolic acts. (115 S.Ct. 2345, 132 L.Ed.2d 500.)

(b) The council is rather lenient in admitting participants. "But a private speaker does not forfeit constitutional protection simply by combining multifarious voices, or by failing to edit their themes to isolate an exact message as the exclusive subject matter of the speech. Nor ... does First Amendment protection require a speaker to generate, as an original matter, each item featured in the communication." (115 S.Ct. 2345, 132 L.Ed.2d 501.)

(c) GLIB's participation was equally expressive, since it was formed for the very purpose of marching in the parade to celebrate its members' sexual identities and for related purposes. (115 S.Ct. 2346, 132 L.Ed.2d 501.) "GLIB understandably seeks to communicate its ideas as part of the existing parade, rather than staging one of its own." (115

(d) The Massachusetts law is well within a legislature's power to enact and does not, as a general matter, violate the First or Fourteenth Amendments. (115 S.Ct. 2346, 132 L.Ed.2d 502.) Here, however, the law has been applied in a peculiar manner. GLIB seeks admission as its own parade unit carrying its own banner. "Since every participating unit affects the message conveyed by the private organizers, the state courts' application of the statute produced an order essentially requiring petitioners to alter the expressive content of their parade." (115 S.Ct. 2347, 132 L.Ed.2d 503.)

(e) The effect is that the sponsors' speech itself is declared to be the public accommodation, and any group protected by the state law may join in and help shape that speech. "But this use of the State's power violates the fundamental rule of protection under the First Amendment, that a speaker has the autonomy to choose the content of his own message." (115 S.Ct. 2347, 132 L.Ed.2d 503.)

(f) "Petitioners' claim to the benefit of this principle of autonomy to control one's own speech is as sound as the South Boston parade is expressive. Rather like a composer, the Council selects the expressive units of the parade from potential participants, and though the score may not produce a particularized message, each contingent's expression in the Council's eyes comports with what merits celebration on that day. Even if this view gives the Council credit for a more considered judgment than it actively made, the Council clearly decided to exclude a message it did not like from the communication it chose to make, and that is enough to invoke its right as a private speaker to shape its expression by speaking on one subject while remaining silent on another." (115 S.Ct. 2348, 132 L.Ed.2d 504.) (See 49 Stanf. L. Rev. 143 [Hurley].)

k. Exclusion of Homosexual Scoutmaster.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 391

[§ 391] Exclusion of Homosexual Scoutmaster.

In Boy Scouts of America v. Dale (2000) 530 U.S. 640, 120 S.Ct. 2446, 147 L.Ed.2d 554, plaintiff scoutmaster's membership in defendant organization was revoked because of his avowed homosexuality. Held, the application of New Jersey's public accommodation law to membership in defendant organization violated the First Amendment.

(a) Expressive activity required. "The forced inclusion of an unwanted person in a group infringes the group's freedom of expressive association if the presence of that person affects in a significant way the group's ability to advocate public or private viewpoints." (120 S.Ct. 2451, 147 L.Ed.2d 563.) Although the First Amendment's protection of expressive association is not reserved for advocacy groups, to come within its ambit, a group still must engage in some form of expression, whether public or private. (120 S.Ct. 2451, 147 L.Ed.2d 563.) Defendant is a private, nonprofit organization with the general mission "to instill values in young people." (120 S.Ct. 2452, 147 L.Ed.2d 563.) Scoutmasters help to inculcate youth members with defendant's values, both expressly and by example. "It seems indisputable that an association that seeks to transmit such a system of values engages in expressive activity." (120 S.Ct. 2452, 147 L.Ed.2d 564.)

(b) Content of message is contrary to mission. Defendant's official position has long been that homosexuals do not provide a role model consistent with the organization's mission. (120 S.Ct. 2453, 147 L.Ed.2d 565.) Plaintiff is a gay rights activist whose presence in defendant organization "would, at the very least, force the organization to send a message, both to the youth members and the world, that the Boy Scouts accepts homosexual conduct as a legitimate form of behavior." (120 S.Ct. 2454, 147 L.Ed.2d 566.) Just as in Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston (1995) 515 U.S. 557, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487, supra, §390, where the presence of a gay rights group marching in Boston's St. Patrick's Day parade would have interfered with the parade organizer's choice not to propound a particular point of view, plaintiff's presence here would interfere with defendant's "choice not to propound a point of view contrary to its beliefs." (120 S.Ct. 2454, 147 L.Ed.2d 566.)

(c) Public accommodation law is inapplicable. New Jersey's interests, embodied in its public accommodation law, do not justify the significant burden plaintiff's retention as an assistant scoutmaster would have on defendant's right to freedom of expressive association. (120 S.Ct. 2457, 147 L.Ed.2d 569.)

Four justices joined in a lengthy dissent. (120 S.Ct. 2459, 147 L.Ed.2d 572.) Three of the dissenters joined in a further dissent (120 S.Ct. 2478, 147 L.Ed.2d 594) to clarify that their opinion is based on defendant's failure to make out an expressive association claim, not because of what it "may espouse, but because of its failure to make sexual orientation the subject of any unequivocal advocacy, using the channels it customarily employs to state its message." (120 S.Ct. 2479, 147 L.Ed.2d 595.) (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 259 [Boy Scouts]; 74 So. Cal. L. Rev. 119 [same]; 76 So. Cal. L. Rev. 521 [same]; 53 Stanf. L. Rev. 767 [same]; on applicability of Unruh Civil Rights Act to exclusion from Boy Scouts of gays, atheists, and agnostics, see infra, §904.)

1. (New) Exclusion From Subsidized Program.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 391A

[§ 391A] (New) Exclusion From Subsidized Program.

In Evans v. Berkeley (2006) 38 C.4th 1, 40 C.R.3d 205, 129 P.3d 394, defendant city excluded the Sea Scouts, a volunteer organization affiliated with the Boy Scouts of America, from a free berth program for nonprofit community service organizations. Defendant had adopted a resolution requiring that access to its marina facilities not be predicated on, among other things, a person's religion or sexual orientation. Although there was no evidence of past discrimination in the use of the berths by the Sea Scouts, defendant asked the group to provide a "local policy statement" of nondiscrimination because of concern that the Boy Scouts had a national policy of discrimination against homosexuals and atheists. Defendant deemed the group's written assurance to be insufficient, and discontinued the subsidy. Members of the group sued, claiming that defendant's action violated their rights to free speech, association, and equal protection. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer. The Court of Appeal, concluding that the complaint established no constitutional violation, affirmed. Held, affirmed.

(a) Against First Amendment challenges, the Supreme Court has "approved programs of governmental financial assistance that limit the expressive activities for which the funds may be used" or that condition financial assistance on an advance agreement that an organization will not discriminate in government-assisted programs. (38 C.4th 11, 12.) For example, in Rust v. Sullivan (1991) 500 U.S. 173, 111 S.Ct. 1759, 114 L.Ed.2d 233, text, §568, the Court rejected a challenge to federal regulations prohibiting abortion counseling in programs supported by federal family planning funds. (38 C.4th 11.) And in Grove City College v. Bell (1984) 465 U.S. 555, 104 S.Ct. 1211, 79 L.Ed.2d 516, text, §853, the Court rejected a challenge to federal regulations conditioning receipt of federal education funds on a school's assurance that it will not discriminate on the basis of sex in any government-funded program. (38 C.4th 12.)

(b) There are two exceptions to the rule that "the government's refusal to subsidize exercise of a First Amendment right does not infringe that right": (1) where the purpose of the funding restriction is the suppression of a disfavored viewpoint (38 C.4th 13) and (2) where the restriction goes beyond the government-funded expressive activity of the recipient and attempts to limit other expressive activities (38 C.4th 14). Neither of these exceptions is applicable here. (38 C.4th 13.)

(c) Defendant's requirement that an organization receiving a subsidized berth agree in advance not to discriminate in the administration of its program does not infringe on plaintiffs' speech or associational rights. Plaintiffs were not required to espouse or to denounce a particular viewpoint or to break an affiliation. Plaintiffs only had to assure defendant of their adherence to defendant's policies in connection with the use of defendant's facilities. (38 C.4th 11.)

(d) Plaintiffs were not being punished for being affiliated with the Boy Scouts. "To require a group operating as part of an organization with an official policy of discrimination that it agree in advance not to discriminate in the use" of defendant's free facilities is a reasonable and narrowly tailored step to implement defendant's diversity and nondiscrimination provisions. The fact that other groups that were not affiliated with the Boy Scouts "were not required to give local policy statements assuring nondiscrimination does not show unequal treatment." (38 C.4th 18.)

[§ 391B] (New) Exclusion of Group From Street Fair.

In U.S. Western Falun Dafa Assn. v. Chinese Chamber of Commerce (2008) 163 C.A.4th 590, 77 C.R.3d 710, the court applied the holding in Hurley v. Irish-Amer. Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston (1995) 515 U.S. 557, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487, text, §390, to an action alleging violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act based on the denial by defendant chamber of commerce of plaintiff's applications to participate in defendant's street and flower fairs held during Chinese New Year festivities. Even though there were commercial aspects to the fairs, defendant's purpose in holding them was to educate the public on Chinese history and culture. Hence, the festivities, which included a parade with lion dancers and fireworks, exhibitions of Chinese music, puppet shows, and martial arts displays, were expressive activities. Plaintiff's participation also would have been expressive in attempting to educate the public regarding its own beliefs, political views, and practices. (163 C.A.4th 602.) Although plaintiff had a right to attend the festivities and express its views verbally or through signs or pamphlets, it had no right to be a participant in defendant's expressive activity. (163 C.A.4th 606.)

3. Right of Peaceable Assembly.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 392

[§ 392] In General.

In De Jonge v. Oregon (1937) 299 U.S. 353, 57 S.Ct. 255, 81 L.Ed. 278, a statute made it criminal to assist in conducting a meeting of an organization that teaches criminal syndicalism. Defendant spoke at a meeting called by the Communist Party to protest police actions during a maritime strike. The meeting was public, orderly, attended chiefly by nonparty members, and no criminal syndicalism was advocated. Defendant was convicted on the theory that the Communist Party as an organization advocated criminal syndicalism, and that one who assisted in its meeting violated the law, though the meeting itself was conducted without unlawful activity. Held, as so construed, the statute was an invasion of the rights of free speech and free assembly. The two rights are cognate and equally fundamental; hence "peaceable assembly for lawful discussion cannot be made a crime. The holding of meetings for peaceable political action cannot be proscribed. Those who assist in the conduct of such meetings cannot be branded as criminals on that score." (57 S.Ct. 260, 81 L.Ed. 284.) (See Herndon v. Lowry (1937) 301 U.S. 242, 57 S.Ct. 732, 739, 81 L.Ed. 1066, 1075; Thomas v. Collins (1945) 323 U.S. 516, 65 S.Ct. 315, 324, 89 L.Ed. 430, 442, infra, §465; 65 So. Cal. L. Rev. 2599 [Herndon].)

In Hague v. Committee for Industrial Organization (1939) 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954, 83 L.Ed. 1423, the mayor and other local officials were enjoined from interfering with activities of plaintiffs, labor organizers, who sought to hold public meetings to disseminate information on labor unions. The majority justices split on the governing theory, some holding it a violation of privileges and immunities of U.S. citizens, and others holding it a denial of due process of law to any persons.

In Carroll v. President & Commrs. of Princess Anne (1968) 393 U.S. 175, 89 S.Ct. 347, 21 L.Ed.2d 325, petitioners, members of a "white supremacist organization," held a public assembly in the town of Princess Anne, Maryland. The speakers used inflammatory language toward Blacks and Jews, and announced another rally for the following night. Respondent officials then obtained an ex parte restraining order from the circuit court of the county restraining petitioners for 10 days from holding meetings that "will tend to disturb and endanger the citizens of the County." Held, reversed. Where a First Amendment freedom is involved, prior restraint by ex parte order can only be justified by a showing that it is impossible to serve or notify opposing parties and give them an opportunity to participate. (89 S.Ct. 351, 21 L.Ed.2d 331.) (See 4 Rotunda, §20.53 et seq.; 34 San Diego L. Rev. 921 ["Freedom of Assembly" and the Right to Passage in Modern English Legal History]; 45 So. Cal. L. B. Scope of Protection.

3. Right of Peaceable Assembly.

b. Public Forum.

1. United States Supreme Court Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 393

[§ 393] United States Supreme Court Decisions.

In Kunz v. New York (1951) 340 U.S. 290, 71 S.Ct. 312, 95 L.Ed. 280, a New York City ordinance prohibited street religious meetings without a permit, which was granted in the discretion of the police commissioner. Petitioner, a Baptist minister, had previously ridiculed and denounced other religions in offensive terms. He was denied a new permit, and arrested for holding a meeting without one. Held, reversed. The power to punish for breaches of the peace was not involved, for this was suppression and "we have consistently condemned licensing systems which vest in an administrative official discretion to grant or withhold a permit upon broad criteria unrelated to proper regulation of public places." (71 S.Ct. 315, 95 L.Ed. 284.) (On requirement of license to speak as invalid prior restraint generally, see supra, §360.)

The condemnation was even stronger in Niemotko v. Maryland (1951) 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 325, 95 L.Ed. 267, where there was no ordinance but merely a practice of authorizing park meetings by administrative officials. Defendants, members of Jehovah's Witnesses, were denied a permit solely because of their religious beliefs. The court observed that the "possibility of abuse" of a regulatory statute or ordinance lacking in standards had occurred here by a clearly unwarranted discrimination against a group. (See 65 Harv. L. Rev. 136.)

In Edwards v. South Carolina (1963) 372 U.S. 229, 83 S.Ct. 680, 9 L.Ed.2d 697, petitioners, 187 Blacks, marched peaceably on to the South Carolina State House grounds carrying placards protesting against discrimination. A crowd gathered, but police protection was ample and no violence was threatened, nor was there any interference with traffic. The police ordered petitioners to disperse on pain of arrest, and they responded with a "religious harangue" and singing of patriotic and religious songs, accompanied by stamping of feet and clapping of hands. They were then arrested. Held, judgments of conviction of breach of the peace reversed. "The circumstances in this case reflect an exercise of these basic constitutional rights in their most pristine and classic form"; i.e., they peaceably assembled at the site of the state government to express their grievances. (83 S.Ct. 683, 9 L.Ed.2d 702.) "The Fourteenth Amendment does not permit a State to make criminal the peaceful expression of unpopular views." (83 S.Ct. 684, 9 L.Ed.2d 703.)

The Edwards case was followed in Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 536, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d 471. Defendant, a minister and field secretary of CORE, and adviser to a general protest demonstration by college students, was convicted of three statutory crimes: (1) breach of the peace, (2) obstructing public passages, and (3) picketing a courthouse (see infra, §462). Held, reversed.

(a) As in Edwards, and Terminiello v. Chicago (1949) 337 U.S. 1, 69 S.Ct. 894, 93 L.Ed. 1131, infra, §458, the breach of the peace statute was unconstitutionally broad, and the record revealed no conduct for which defendant could constitutionally be punished. The meeting was an orderly and peaceable expression of views. (85 S.Ct. 462, 463, 13 L.Ed.2d 482.)

(b) A properly drawn statute prohibiting wilful obstruction of the free use of a public sidewalk or street may validly vest discretion in local administrative officials if it is exercised without discrimination; i.e., there is no unlimited right to hold a peaceful public meeting at any public place and at any time. (85 S.Ct. 464, 13 L.Ed.2d 484.) But the Louisiana act was administered by allowing meetings only on prior application, granted or withheld in the uncontrolled discretion of the local authorities. This permitted them to censor ideas, and was invalid. (85 S.Ct. 466, 13 L.Ed.2d 486.)

In Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham (1965) 382 U.S. 87, 86 S.Ct. 211, 15 L.Ed.2d 176, petitioner was standing on the sidewalk with 10 or 12 companions in connection with black boycotting of stores in Birmingham. They were ordered by a policeman to clear the sidewalk. Petitioner and others remained, and he was convicted under an ordinance prohibiting refusal to comply with a lawful direction of a police officer. Held, reversed. This ordinance, taken at face value, was unconstitutional. The Alabama appellate court narrowly construed it to apply only to orders of traffic officers; but there was nothing in the record to show that the officer was directing traffic, or that petitioner was in or around a vehicle. Hence, the case was one of no evidence to support the conviction, a denial of due process. (86 S.Ct. 215, 15 L.Ed.2d 180.) (See Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham (1969) 394 U.S. 147, 89 S.Ct. 935, 942, 22 L.Ed.2d 162, 171 [obviously unconstitutional ordinance could not support conviction, despite efforts of state supreme court to construe it constitutionally]; Gregory v. Chicago (1969) 394 U.S. 111, 89 S.Ct. 946, 22 L.Ed.2d 134 [police ordered peaceful demonstrators to disperse because onlookers became unruly; conviction reversed].)

In United States v. Grace (1983) 461 U.S. 171, 103 S.Ct. 1702, 75 L.Ed.2d 736, a federal statute prohibited display of a flag, banner, or device adapted to bring into public notice any party organization or movement, "in the Supreme Court Building or grounds." Held, the statute was unconstitutional as applied to activity on the public sidewalks surrounding the court building. The Court took note of its prior decisions in Adderley v. Florida (1966) 385 U.S. 39, 87 S.Ct. 242, 17 L.Ed.2d 149, infra, §463, and Greer v. Spock (1976) 424 U.S. 828, 96 S.Ct. 1211, 47 L.Ed.2d 505, infra, §1325, holding that publicly owned property does not become a "public forum" simply because members of the public are permitted to come and go at will, but distinguished Greer on the ground that the streets and sidewalks at issue there were located within an enclosed military reservation, while here they are like any other sidewalks in Washington, D.C. Hence, they are public forums for First Amendment purposes. (103 S.Ct. 1707, 1708, 75 L.Ed.2d 744, 745.) (See Thomas v. Chicago Park Dist. (2002) 534 U.S. 316, 122 S.Ct. 775, 780, 151 L.Ed.2d 783, 791 [content-neutral permit scheme regulating speech in public park did not need to adhere to procedural requirements of Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, supra, §371]; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1773 [Regulation of Demonstrations]; 85 *Harv. L. 2. California Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 394

[§ 394] California Decisions.

In Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885, the court, elaborately reviewing all of the important U.S. Supreme Court decisions on the subject, upheld the rights of free speech and assembly for political dissenters. The Civic Center Act (now Educ.C. 38130 et seq.) required that school boards allow the free use of school auditoriums, but prohibited their use by organizations seeking forcible overthrow of the government. Petitioners, affiliated with the American Civil Liberties Union, sought the use of a school auditorium for meetings to discuss the "Bill of Rights in Postwar America." Permission was denied when they refused to sign an affidavit of nonadvocacy and nonaffiliation with subversive organizations. Held, the statute was unconstitutional, and mandamus should issue to compel granting of use of the hall.

(a) No matter how objectionable the groups or doctrines may be, free speech and assembly cannot be prohibited unless they come within the rule of clear and present danger (infra, §407). "[D]octrines advocating the overthrow of the government by force do not of themselves constitute a substantial danger, and ... the state is therefore not justified in suppressing the freedom of speech of those who happen to be members of an organization committed to such doctrines." (28 C.2d 543.)

(b) The fact that "subversive elements" are allowed to meet anywhere but in a school building shows that the Legislature did not believe that these meetings would create a clear and present danger to the community, but merely believed that "the privilege of free assembly in a school building should be denied to those whose convictions and affiliations it does not tolerate." (28 C.2d 545.)

(c) Although the state need not make school buildings available for public meetings, it cannot impose unconstitutional conditions on their use (infra, §813). (See 35 Cal. L. Rev. 120.)

The Danskin view was restated and followed in American Civil Liberties Union of Southern Calif. v. Board of Education of Los Angeles (1961) 55 C.2d 167, 171, 10 C.R. 647, 359 P.2d 45. Former Educ.C. 16564 (now Educ.C. 38135) prohibited use of school buildings by an organization seeking overthrow of the government, etc., and former Educ.C. 16565 (now Educ.C. 38136), the implementing section, required a statement of information from an applicant that the organization does not advocate the government's overthrow, etc., and is not a Communist-front organization required to be listed with the Attorney General. Petitioners, seeking use of a school building to hold monthly public meetings on "The Bill of Rights in 1960," refused to furnish the statement. Held, mandamus issued to compel defendant Board to grant their application.

(a) De Jonge v. Oregon (1937) 299 U.S. 353, 57 S.Ct. 255, 81 L.Ed. 278, supra, §392, and Danskin establish the rule that a subversive organization may nevertheless meet for lawful purposes. These statutes clash with the rule, for any prohibited organization is prevented from holding a peaceful public meeting to discuss lawful subjects because it cannot without perjury furnish the statement. "The present statute thus has the same vice which caused us to strike down its predecessor section in Danskin. It closes the doors to public meetings of the proscribed organizations, while leaving them open to all others, even though the particular meeting may be for an entirely lawful purpose. It thus, somewhat more indirectly, prevents assembly and free speech in school buildings by certain organizations because it disapproves of the organizations and not because of what those organizations may have intended to say or do therein. This is exactly the type of regulation held unconstitutional by us in Danskin and by the United States Supreme Court in De Jonge." (55 C.2d 175.)

(b) Even without the requirement of a statement, former Educ.C. 16564 is an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech and assembly. The Legislature has provided that the school board, on a finding that its civic center will be used for overthrow, etc., can deny use of the center. "This amounts to a censorship in advance of the right of assembly and free speech upon the mere determination of a probability of its future misuse. Prior censorship upon such a prophetic finding can certainly only be justified, if at all, upon the clearest sort of showing that such misuse will with reasonable certainty occur. The state and the federal government can, as the federal government has done in the Smith Act, make the actual commission of such acts criminal. It seems obvious that attempts at censorship by prior restraint should be more closely scrutinized to detect constitutional infirmity than such post hoc methods of restraint by criminal sanction. The danger of censorship in advance is that, in attempting to prevent the commission of forbidden acts in advance, it will also prevent lawful assemblies and the lawful exercise of free speech upon an erroneous (even if plausible) finding in advance that the applicant intends to engage in lawful assembly and unlawful speech." (55 C.2d 179.)

In American Civil Liberties Union of Southern Calif. v. Board of Education of Los Angeles (1963) 59 C.2d 203, 28 C.R. 700, 379 P.2d 4, the Board, after the first decision, adopted a rule calling for no information but only for a statement that the property would not be knowingly used for the commission of any illegal act. Held, the rule was valid. It did not impose any censorship, for the matter to be presented at the meeting was not subject to disclosure; and it was not more objectionable than a requirement that an applicant for a permit to parade agree in advance to comply with existing regulatory ordinances. (59 C.2d 212.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

3. Right of Peaceable Assembly.

c. Semipublic Forum.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 395

[§ 395] Semipublic Forum.

In U.C. Nuclear Weapons Labs Conversion Project v. Lawrence Livermore Laboratory (1984) 154 C.A.3d 1157, 201 C.R. 837, the court, reviewing federal and state cases, approved the broad concept of a "semi-public forum," mainly on the basis of Cal. Const., Art. I, §2 (see supra, §312).

Lawrence Livermore Laboratory is owned by the federal government and run by the University of California under contract with the U.S. Department of Energy. It develops nuclear weapons and also does non-weapons-related research. Plaintiff Project is an unincorporated association that opposes the work of the Laboratory in the area of developing nuclear weapons and nuclear power. The Project requested permission to place literature and give periodic slideshows in the Visitors Center of the Laboratory, and use of the Laboratory's Auditorium for presentation of a program without the sponsorship of a Laboratory employee. On denial of these requests, the Project brought this action, and the superior court granted an injunction in accordance with the requests. Held, affirmed.

(a) The "public forum" concept "is a continuum, with public streets and parks at one end and government institutions like hospitals and prisons at the other." (154 C.A.3d 1164.) Streets and parks are "quintessential public forums"; use of other public property may be limited to activities "compatible with the intended purpose of the property." (154 C.A.3d 1165.)

(b) The primary purpose of the Center is to inform the public about the work of the Laboratory, and "it is difficult to see how dissemination of literature critical of the government's nuclear policy (and the Laboratory's role in that policy) could interfere with that purpose." (154 C.A.3d 1166.) "Visitors are allowed to roam freely around the Center, to pick up literature, study posters and other displays, and presumably to discuss all they are exposed to." (154 C.A.3d 1168.) Thus, the Project's right to access to the Center is protected by Cal. Const., Article I, §2, as a use compatible with the purpose and function of the Center. "Moreover, we consider it critically important for a government facility whose primary purpose is to describe and explain government activity or policy (which certainly includes the work of the Laboratory) to accommodate a meaningful exchange of views by the public." (154 C.A.3d 1169.)

(c) The Auditorium is neither a traditional public forum nor a "semi-public forum"; it is closer to the end of the continuum where prisons and hospitals would be placed. But the Laboratory allows outside groups to use the Auditorium after normal working hours and on weekends for various purposes, so long as a Laboratory employee "sponsors" the outside group. This opened the forum; and even a content-neutral procedure regulating time, place, and manner of the activity must be fairly administered. Here, the condition of "sponsorship" is without standards or guidelines, and this unfettered discretion has the potential for becoming a means of suppressing a particular point of view. (154 C.A.3d 1172.)

(d) "A standardless policy like the employee-sponsorship requirement violates the free speech and assembly provisions of the state and federal Constitutions because it operates as a prior restraint on speech, since employees are free to decline sponsorship for any reason, including disagreement with the content (beliefs, political views, goals) of a group's proposed expressive activity. In addition, the policy has a significant 'chilling' effect on the exercise of free speech rights. It is probably inevitable that even an employee sympathetic to the views of an outside group critical of the employer would not feel free to ask that employer for permission for the group to present a program on the employer's property. And finally, the policy violates the equal protection provisions of the California and United States Constitutions because it allows the Laboratory to discriminate arbitrarily and capriciously against any given group seeking use of the auditorium even with employee sponsorship." (154 C.A.3d 1172.)

One justice, agreeing with the decision as to the Auditorium, dissented from the holding on the Visitors Center. (154 C.A.3d 1173.) (See 52 Stanf. L. Rev. 929 [limited public forum].)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 396

[§ 396] In General.

In Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley (1972) 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212, Mosley picketed a Chicago high school carrying a sign charging discrimination against Blacks. The city then adopted an ordinance prohibiting all picketing within 150 feet of a school except "peaceful picketing of any school involved in a labor dispute." Held, the ordinance was a denial of equal protection. It described permissible picketing in terms of its subject matter; but picketing for nonlabor objectives cannot be subjected to this discriminatory treatment. "Some labor picketing is peaceful, some disorderly; the same is true for picketing on other themes. ... In seeking to restrict nonlabor picketing which is clearly more disruptive than peaceful labor picketing, Chicago may not prohibit all nonlabor picketing at the school forum." (92 S.Ct. 2293, 33 L.Ed.2d 220.) (See Grayned v. Rockford (1972) 408 U.S. 104, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 2298, 33 L.Ed.2d 222, 227 [following Mosley; picketing of school by 200 persons to support black student demands]; 62 A.L.R.3d 227 [consumer picketing to protest products, prices, or services]; on politically motivated economic boycott, see supra, §386; on picketing at abortion clinics, see infra, §399 et seq.)

3. Right of Peaceable Assembly.

d. Picketing Generally.

2. By Labor Organizations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 397

[§ 397] By Labor Organizations.

(1) Protected Against Injunction. Peaceful picketing by labor organizations is regarded as an exercise of the rights of free speech and assembly. Hence, subject to certain restrictions on the object and means, it is protected against injunction by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. (See Thornhill v. Alabama (1940) 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 744, 84 L.Ed. 1093, 1102; Amalgamated Food Employees Union, Local 590 v. Logan Valley Plaza (1968) 391 U.S. 308, 88 S.Ct. 1601, 1609, 20 L.Ed.2d 603, 614, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §648 [shopping center]; Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters (1978) 436 U.S. 180, 98 S.Ct. 1745, 56 L.Ed.2d 209, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §650 [picketing on private property]; In re Blaney (1947) 30 C.2d 643, 650, 184 P.2d 892; 36 Cal. L. Rev. 1; Schwartz-Torrance Inv. Corp. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers' Union, Local No. 31 (1964) 61 C.2d 766, 769, 40 C.R. 233, 394 P.2d 921, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §648 [shopping center]; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 206 [Sears, Roebuck & Co.]; on picketing generally, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §643 et seq.; for restricted view of Logan Valley holding, see supra, §315.)

(2) Invalid Temporary Restraining Order. In United Farm Workers v. Superior Court (1975) 14 C.3d 902, 911, 122 C.R. 877, 537 P.2d 1237, B Co., operating fruit orchards, filed a complaint against the farmworkers union alleging mass picketing, trespass, and threats of violence to nonunion workers, endangering a $ 500,000 apple crop. An ex parte temporary restraining order limiting picketing was obtained by B Co. without any attempt to give notice to the union or its counsel. Held, the order was a violation of the defendants' constitutional right of freedom of speech.

(a) Procedural defects in issuance of ex parte orders. As pointed out in Carroll v. President & Commrs. of Princess Anne (1968) 393 U.S. 175, 89 S.Ct. 347, 21 L.Ed.2d 325, supra, §392, ex parte proceedings (1) lack adequate factual and legal presentation of both sides, and (2) often result in overbroad orders framed with the assistance of only one party. (14 C.3d 908, 909.) Thus, in the instant case, the order prevented pickets from entering the company's property on which the farm labor camp was situated, and limited picketing on unproved allegations of violence. (14 C.3d 910.)

(b) Unconstitutionality of orders. An injunction may lie after a hearing on a showing of acts of violence or physical intimidation or other unlawful objects or activity. (14 C.3d 911, 912.) But short of a trial of the issues, picketing may be curtailed or prohibited only after notice and opportunity for hearing, or a reasonable and good faith effort to give it. The possibility of "great or irreparable injury" is not enough to justify the brief delay required for notice and hearing. (14 C.3d 912.) The ex parte order is in violation not only of the federal Constitution's First and Fourteenth Amendments, but also of Cal. Const. Art. I, §2 (supra, §§311, 312). (14 C.3d 912.)

(c) Effect on procedure to obtain injunctive relief. This constitutional requirement must be read into the procedure prescribed by C.C.P. 527, for all cases involving First Amendment rights. (14 C.3d 913.) However, the prescribed procedure "remains adequate in all other instances, i.e., when a party seeks a temporary restraining order that is outside the area of First Amendment freedoms and does not substantially affect rights" defined in Cal. Const., "Art. I, §2. (14 C.3d 913, footnote 12.)

One justice briefly concurred only in the holding as to picketing in labor disputes, objecting to the "sweeping extension" to all free speech cases. (14 C.3d 914.) Two other justices joined in a concurrence and dissent that (1) argued against limiting the notice requirement to First Amendment freedom cases, and (2) disagreed with the majority's view on access to the farm labor camp. (14 C.3d 915, 919.) (See 64 Cal. L. Rev. 369.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

B. Scope of Protection.

3. Right of Peaceable Assembly.

d. Picketing Generally.

3. Residential Picketing.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 398

[§ 398] Residential Picketing.

(1) In General. In Carey v. Brown (1980) 447 U.S. 455, 100 S.Ct. 2286, 65 L.Ed.2d 263, an Illinois statute prohibited picketing of residences or dwellings, but exempted "peaceful picketing of a place of employment involved in a labor dispute." Held, the statute, like the ordinance in Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley (1972) 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212, supra, §396, was a denial of equal protection. "On its face, the act accords preferential treatment to the expression of views on one particular subject; information about labor disputes may be freely disseminated, but discussion of all other issues is restricted. The permissibility of residential picketing under the Illinois statute is thus dependent solely on the nature of the message being conveyed." (100 S.Ct. 2290, 65 L.Ed.2d 269.) The court made it clear, however, that residential picketing was not beyond the reach of uniform and nondiscriminatory regulation. (100 S.Ct. 2295, 65 L.Ed.2d 265.)

A complete ban on residential picketing was upheld in Frisby v. Schultz (1988) 487 U.S. 474, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420. The town board of Brookfield, Wisconsin, adopted an ordinance providing that "It is unlawful for any person to engage in picketing before or about the residence or dwelling of any individual in the Town." Its primary purpose was "the protection and preservation of the home." Appellees, individuals strongly opposed to abortion, picketed the home of a doctor who performed abortions in clinics in neighboring towns, and brought an action in the federal district court under the federal Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C., §1983) seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The district court granted an injunction, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, reversed; the ordinance was sufficiently narrow in scope to survive facial challenge.

(a) "To ascertain what limits, if any, may be placed on protected speech, we have often focused on the 'place' of that speech, considering the nature of the forum the speaker seeks to employ. ... Specifically, we have identified three types of fora: 'the traditional public forum, the public forum created by government designation, and the nonpublic forum.' " (108 S.Ct. 2499, 101 L.Ed.2d 428.)

(b) The public street is a traditional public forum, even though it runs through a residential neighborhood; hence, the antipicketing ordinance must be judged against the stringent standards established for restrictions on speech in that kind of forum. (108 S.Ct. 2500, 101 L.Ed.2d 429.) Accordingly, the questions are whether the ordinance is narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, and whether it leaves open ample alternative channels of communication. Here, it is obvious that the narrow ban on focused picketing in front of a particular residence preserves ample alternative channels of communication. (108 S.Ct. 2501, 101 L.Ed.2d 431.)

(c) The ordinance also serves a significant government interest. "One important aspect of residential privacy is protection of the unwilling listener. ... [A] special benefit of the privacy all citizens enjoy within their own walls, which the State may legislate to protect, is an ability to avoid intrusions." (108 S.Ct. 2502, 101 L.Ed.2d 431.)

(d) The ordinance is narrowly tailored to protect only unwilling recipients of the communications. "[T]he picketing is narrowly directed at the household, not the public. The type of picketers banned ... generally do not seek to disseminate a message to the general public, but to intrude upon the targeted resident, and to do so in an especially offensive way. Moreover, even if some such picketers have a broader communicative purpose, their activity nonetheless inherently and offensively intrudes on residential privacy." (108 S.Ct. 2503, 101 L.Ed.2d 433.)

Three justices dissented. (108 S.Ct. 2506, 2509, 101 L.Ed.2d 436, 439.) (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 261; 113 A.L.R.5th 1 [validity and construction of statute or regulation forbidding or limiting peaceful residential picketing].)

(2) Buffer Zone. In San Jose v. Superior Court (Thompson) (1995) 32 C.A.4th 330, 38 C.R.2d 205, plaintiff picketers were charged with violating an ordinance of defendant city that prohibited picketing within 300 feet of a targeted residence. Held, the statute was constitutional.

(a) Madsen v. Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §401, is not controlling. That case involved an injunction, instead of an ordinance, as was involved here. Ordinances represent a legislative choice regarding particular societal interests, while injunctions are remedies for violations, or threatened violations, of a legislative or judicial decree. While the former asks whether time, place, and manner regulations are narrowly tailored to fit a significant governmental interest, the latter applies the more stringent standard of inquiring whether there are alternative measures that would have less impact on protected speech. (32 C.A.4th 336, citing Ward v. Rock Against Racism (1989) 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661, infra, §464.)

(b) The ordinance in question is content-neutral in that it applies to all targeted picketing, no matter what the cause. Also, there were alternative forms of communication for plaintiffs to get their message across. The ordinance is valid, therefore, if it achieves a substantial governmental interest. The regulation does not have to be the least restrictive on speech of the alternatives available, but instead, has to be one that achieves a substantial governmental interest that could not be achieved as effectively without the regulation. (32 C.A.4th 337.)

(c) The substantial governmental interest that the ordinance furthers is the prohibition of targeted picketing within 300 feet of the home targeted. This type of picketing has been described by the U.S. Supreme Court as highly offensive conduct that disturbs the right of privacy and is not designed to reach the public at large. Hence, it is not entitled to the same level of First Amendment protection as speech designed to reach a wider audience. (32 C.A.4th 336, citing Frisby, supra.)

(d) The ordinance in question created a 300-foot buffer zone to protect residential privacy. This compares with buffer zones created by both California and out-of-state statutes and ordinances for various purposes, as well as with notice requirements in land use statutes, i.e., that notice be given to all houses within 300 feet of a home subject to a land use decision. These buffer zones vary from 200 to 1,000 feet, so 300 feet is not out of the ordinary. However, it is not the job of the courts to write the law. So long as the ordinance is not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the objective, it will be upheld. Put another way, an ordinance will not be invalidated just because there might be a less restrictive means. "[I]t is not the court's job to draw the line, and ... it is not a question of constitutional dimension whether the boundary line of the buffer zone could be somewhat tighter." (32 C.A.4th 338.)

(e) Madsen's distinction between reviewing an injunction and an ordinance is not arbitrary, but is a statesmanlike expression of the judiciary's role of review, considering the separation of powers. In other words, the judiciary does not have plenary powers of review over the Legislature, but injunctions are written by trial courts and reviewed by the reviewing courts. Accordingly, a much broader review power may come into play when a court is reviewing an injunction, instead of an ordinance. (32 C.A.4th 342.)

(f) The present case involved a 300-foot buffer zone, while Frisby banned picketing "before or about" a residence. The more definite zone is preferable, because it informs both picketers and the police of what could be done. (32 C.A.4th 337.) (See Planned Parenthood Assn. v. Operation Rescue (1996) 50 C.A.4th 290, 301, 57 C.R.2d 736 [injunction ordering protesters to stay at least 250 feet away from doctor's residence was not sufficiently precise where site of doctor's apartment in complex was not established and it could not be determined where measurement was to be taken from; restriction also denied protesters opportunity to deliver message to intended target and shifted burden of adverse consequences to doctor's neighbors].)

[§ 399] Earlier Cases.

In Chico Feminist Women's Health Center v. Scully (1989) 208 C.A.3d 230, 256 C.R. 194, plaintiff center operated an abortion clinic in the city of Chico. Defendants, Chico citizens, picketed the center on Saturdays, when abortions were performed, and made attempts to ascertain the identities of the clients. Plaintiff sought an injunction against this picketing on the ground that the identities were protected by the constitutional right of privacy. Held, assuming that the clients had a limited privacy interest on the public streets, an injunction against picketing in a "public forum" (the street) would be improper. Frisby v. Schultz (1988) 487 U.S. 474, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420, supra, §398, states the principle that in a public forum a regulation must leave open ample alternative channels of communication, and an alternative channel does not exist if a speaker's target audience is altogether insulated from the speaker's message. (208 C.A.3d 244, 245, 246.) That is the case here. Plaintiff made no showing that defendants had any means of reaching their target audience if they were excluded from the vicinity on Saturdays. (208 C.A.3d 246.)

In Feminist Women's Health Center v. Blythe (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1543, 22 C.R.2d 184 (Blythe I), plaintiff clinic, located on the second floor of a medical building, provided abortions and other gynecological health care. Defendants engaged in repeated antiabortion demonstrations at the clinic; among other things, defendants blocked or impeded the entrance to the building and parking lot, making it difficult or impossible for patients to enter the clinic. Plaintiff obtained a permanent injunction prohibiting defendants (1) from any activity within a specified "speech free zone" in front of and on either side of the front door, (2) blocking ingress or egress to the building or parking lot, (3) making loud noise that interfered with clinic operations, or (4) harassing patients or staff in various specified ways. Held, affirmed.

(a) Defendants' exclusion from the parking lot is reasonable. The lot is private property, it is restricted to tenants and clients, and the building it serves is a small medical building, not a shopping mall or large retail establishment. (17 C.A.4th 1557, 1558.)

(b) The designation of a "speech free zone" is proper in light of the evidence. The exclusion from this zone is content-neutral and serves both the property rights of the clinic and the privacy rights of its patients. The presence of antiabortion activities directly in front of the clinic might force patients to go elsewhere or the clinic to discontinue its services, thus compromising a woman's right to effectuate her abortion decision. (17 C.A.4th 1559.) Patients approaching the clinic must still pass areas where the defendants are permitted. Thus, the speech free zone is narrowly tailored to protect patients' privacy interests while leaving defendants ample alternatives for communication. (17 C.A.4th 1560.)

In Real v. Feminist Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 1249, 114 S.Ct. 2776, 129 L.Ed.2d 888, the U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment, and remanded Blythe for consideration in light of Madsen v. Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §401. In Feminist Women's Health Center v. Blythe (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1641, 1652, 1653, 39 C.R.2d 189 (Blythe II), the court, concluding that Madsen did not alter the outcome, republished its prior opinion with modifications occasioned by Madsen. (See infra, §402; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1856 [protesting outside medical facilities]; 29 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 471 [Free Speech, Abortion Access, and the Problem of Judicial Viewpoint Discrimination]; on First Amendment rights at private medical clinics and other businesses generally, see supra, §315 et seq.)

2. Shasta-Diablo Case.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 400

[§ 400] Shasta-Diablo Case.

In Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo v. Williams (1994) 7 C.4th 860, 30 C.R.2d 629, 873 P.2d 1224 (Planned Parenthood I), the court stated: "We are confronted in this matter with a collision between competing constitutional interests involving a subject of exceptional public concern. The precise question is whether, in granting and upholding a permanent injunction against anti-abortion protesters, the trial court and Court of Appeal properly balanced the free speech and assembly rights of the protesters, against the health and safety interests of women attempting to obtain medical services, including clinical abortions, in a private medical facility. We conclude that the injunction, as modified by the Court of Appeal, is constitutional and therefore shall affirm the judgment." (7 C.4th 864.)

Respondent clinic, located in a one-story building, operated a family planning clinic that provided a range of services, including abortions. Petitioners regularly gathered at the clinic to demonstrate against abortion; the number of demonstrators varied from 6 to as many as 100. They picketed on the sidewalk in front of the clinic as well as in the adjoining parking lot, delayed cars entering the lot, and pursued patients walking from their cars to the clinic or on the sidewalk. The picketers pressed antiabortion literature and plastic replicas of fetuses on patients attempting to enter the clinic, harassed clinic staff, photographed staff and patients, and recorded the license numbers of cars entering the lot. Plaintiff obtained a permanent injunction that, as modified by the Court of Appeal, enjoined petitioners from: (1) blocking entrances or exits to the clinic building; (2) recording the license numbers of cars; (3) photographing people entering or leaving the clinic; and (4) shouting at or touching physicians, staff, or patients, or making noise that could be heard inside the clinic. The injunction also restricted picketing to the public sidewalk across the street from the clinic building. The validity of the sidewalk exclusion was the sole issue on review. Held, the exclusion was valid.

(a) The public sidewalk directly in front of the clinic constitutes a public forum. Thus, the question is whether the restriction on picketing on that sidewalk is content-neutral, narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and permits ample alternative channels of communication. (7 C.4th 869.)

(b) The place restriction here is content-neutral--it restricts all picketing to the sidewalk across the street and makes no reference whatsoever to content. (7 C.4th 869.) The injunction was impelled by petitioners' antiabortion protests and applies only to those activities, but that is because they were the only ones found to have harassed clinic patients and staff. (7 C.4th 870.) The place restriction itself focuses exclusively on the manner and location of the expressive activities, insulating the clinic's patients and staff from close physical contact with petitioners--not from the content of their speech. A similar injunction might just as readily apply to pro-choice demonstrations or to other disruptive protests in close physical proximity to the clinic. (7 C.4th 871.)

(c) "The more difficult question is whether the interests served by the injunction are consonant with its scope. Is the place restriction narrowly tailored to advance significant governmental interests, and does it allow adequate alternative avenues of communication? On balance, we conclude that the place restriction serves a significant governmental interest in safeguarding the health and safety of the clinic's patients, and is narrowly tailored to further that interest. We also conclude that the restriction allows petitioners adequate alternative means of conveying their anti-abortion message." (7 C.4th 872.)

(d) The principle that permits regulation of disruptive expression outside of schools, courthouses, and individual residences applies equally to permit regulation of conduct incompatible with the health and safety of patients in a medical facility. (7 C.4th 872.) "This interest is particularly acute in the context of family planning clinics that perform the most intimate of medical services, including abortions. The constitutional right of privacy that guarantees a woman's freedom to choose an abortion ... defines an equally substantial governmental interest in assuring that they are performed in a safe and suitable environment." (7 C.4th 873.)

(e) The state's interest in protecting the health and safety of women seeking abortions extends beyond the clinic. Physical or emotional intimidation of patients outside the doctor's office poses serious health risks and may affect a patient's subsequent well-being. (7 C.4th 873, 874.) For that reason, "a considerable number of courts have upheld time, place and manner restrictions designed to temper the confrontational tactics of anti-abortion demonstrators and thereby alleviate the emotional distress and resulting health risks experienced by women entering and leaving family planning clinics." (7 C.4th 874.) And in the present case, "it was precisely the health and well-being of the clinic's patients that constituted the court's primary concern." (7 C.4th 875.) Therefore, "the place restriction serves a substantial governmental interest in protecting the patients' physical and emotional health and safety." (7 C.4th 876.)

(f) The state must choose a narrowly tailored means, but not necessarily the "least restrictive means," to achieve its interest. (7 C.4th 876.) Here, the threatening and intimidating behavior of the pickets was plainly inappropriate and not conducive to the health of the clinic's patients, and confining the demonstrations to an alternative site across the street responded most effectively to this threat by creating a "clear zone" for the patients. "Clear zones" have been sanctioned in a variety of demonstration contexts, including antiabortion protests. (7 C.4th 877.) Although they differ in their particular facts and geographic circumstances, these cases "all embrace, however, the principle that a 'clear zone' or 'free zone' around a health clinic that does not foreclose alternative, albeit less confrontational, means of communication present a narrowly tailored scheme for furthering the state's substantial interest in assuring the health and safety of women seeking abortions or other treatment." (7 C.4th 877, 878.)

(g) Finally, the place restriction allows adequate alternative avenues of communication. "The alternative site across the street from the clinic affords petitioners a vantage from which to picket and demonstrate that is reasonably close to the clinic and, judging from the photographic exhibits in the record, within plain view of their target audience, the clinic patients and staff. As noted above, petitioners do not contend that their signs cannot be seen or that their presence and views cannot readily be perceived by persons entering and leaving the clinic. Should anyone wish to be 'counseled' by or otherwise converse with petitioners, it is a short walk across the street." (7 C.4th 880, 881.)

One justice dissented, arguing that the majority's factual picture was "incomplete and misleading," and concluding that, while the decision to establish a buffer zone around the clinic was proper, the absolute prohibition of speech within that zone was not. (7 C.4th 883.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1190.)

In Williams v. Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo (1994) 513 U.S. 956, 115 S.Ct. 413, 130 L.Ed.2d 329, the U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment, and remanded the case for consideration in light of Madsen v.

Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, infra, §401. In Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo v. Williams (1995) 10 C.4th 1009, 43 C.R.2d 88, 898 P.2d 402 (Planned Parenthood II), the court reconsidered the matter and reaffirmed the judgment. (See infra, §402; 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 627 [Planned Parenthood; suffocation of free speech in California].)

3. Madsen Case.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 401

[§ 401] Madsen Case.

In Madsen v. Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, petitioners, who had been engaged in picketing a Florida abortion clinic operated by respondents, were enjoined from blocking or interfering with public access to the clinic and from physically abusing persons entering or leaving the clinic. Later, when respondents sought to broaden the injunction, the trial judge found that, despite the initial injunction, protesters continued to impede access to the clinic. In numbers ranging from a handful to 400, the demonstrators congregated on the street leading to the clinic and in the clinic's driveways, approached vehicles heading to the clinic, and made noise that could be heard in the clinic. They also picketed clinic employees' residences and gave their neighbors literature identifying the employees as baby killers. The trial judge found that the protests generally caused increased stress and anxiety among, and thus increased the health risks to, the patients, and that its original injunction had been insufficient to protect the health, safety, and rights of women seeking medical services. The court issued an amended injunction that (1) excluded demonstrators from a 36-foot buffer zone around the clinic entrances and driveway and on adjacent private property; (2) prohibited demonstrators from making noises within earshot of, or using images observable by, patients inside the clinic; (3) prohibited protesters within a 300-foot zone around the clinic from approaching patients who did not consent to talk; and (4) created a 300-foot buffer zone around the residences of clinic staff. Held, the restrictions are partially unconstitutional.

(a) The fact that the injunction restricts only the speech of antiabortion protesters does not make it content-based. An injunction, by its very nature, applies to and regulates the activities, and perhaps the speech, of a particular group. It does so, however, because of the group's past actions in the context of a specific dispute. Here, the court imposed restrictions on petitioners not because of their message, but because they repeatedly violated the court's original order. (114 S.Ct. 2523, 129 L.Ed.2d 606.) Hence, the injunction is not subject to the heightened scrutiny that applies to content-based restrictions. (114 S.Ct. 2524, 129 L.Ed.2d 607.)

(b) The differences between a generally applicable ordinance and an injunction—including the greater risk of censorship and discrimination posed by an injunction—require more stringent application of First Amendment principles to an injunction. (114 S.Ct. 2524, 129 L.Ed.2d 607.) Close attention to the fit between an injunction's objectives and its restrictions on speech is also consistent with the general rule that injunctive relief should be no more burdensome than necessary. "Accordingly, when evaluating a content-neutral injunction, we think that our standard time, place, and manner analysis is not sufficiently rigorous. We must ask instead whether the challenged provisions of the injunction burden no more speech than necessary to serve a significant government interest." (114 S.Ct. 2525, 129 L.Ed.2d 608.)

(c) The combination of governmental interests involved here--protecting a pregnant woman's freedom to seek lawful medical services, ensuring public safety and order, promoting the free flow of traffic on public streets and sidewalks, protecting citizens' property rights, and assuring the medical privacy of clinic patients--is quite sufficient to justify an appropriately tailored injunction. (114 S.Ct. 2526, 129 L.Ed.2d 609, 610.)

(d) The 36-foot buffer zone around the clinic entrances and parking lot is valid. This zone requires petitioners to move to the other side of the street. However, given the narrow confines around the clinic and the failure of the first injunction to protect access, the impracticality of allowing petitioners to stand in the middle of the street, and the fact that petitioners were still no more than 10 to 12 feet from cars approaching and leaving the clinic and could still be seen and heard from the parking lots, the buffer zone, on balance, burdened no more speech than necessary to protect access to the clinic and promote an orderly flow of traffic. (114 S.Ct. 2526, 2527, 129 L.Ed.2d 610, 611.)

(e) The injunction included private property abutting the clinic in the 36-foot buffer zone. However, patients and staff do not have to cross the private property to reach the clinic, and there was no evidence that petitioners' activities on private property obstructed access or blocked vehicular traffic. Thus, this portion of the zone fails to serve significant government interests and is invalid. (114 S.Ct. 2528, 129 L.Ed.2d 611, 612.)

(f) The limited noise restrictions burden no more speech than necessary to ensure the health and well-being of the clinic's patients. Noise control is particularly important around medical facilities, and the First Amendment does not demand that patients undertake Herculean efforts to escape the cacophony of political protests. (114 S.Ct. 2528, 129 L.Ed.2d 612.)

(g) The blanket ban on all "images observable" is overbroad. Threats may be proscribed, but a prohibition on display of threatening signs would achieve this goal. And if a patient is bothered by an image, the clinic could pull its curtains. (114 S.Ct. 2529, 129 L.Ed.2d 612, 613.)

(h) The prohibition on uninvited approaches within 300 feet of the clinic burdens more speech than necessary to prevent intimidation and insure access. Lacking evidence that the protesters' speech is independently proscribable or is so infused with violence as to threaten physical harm, the provision cannot stand. (114 S.Ct. 2529, 129 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(i) The ban on picketing within 300 feet of the residences of clinic staff is too broad. The zone approved in Frisby v. Schultz (1988) 487 U.S. 474, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420, supra, §398, was much smaller, and the prohibition there was limited to focused picketing in front of a particular residence. Here, a limitation on the time, duration, and number of pickets outside a smaller zone would appear to be sufficient. (114 S.Ct. 2529, 2530, 129 L.Ed.2d 613, 614.)

One justice, dissenting in part, expressed the view that injunctive relief should be judged by a more lenient standard than legislation. (114 S.Ct. 2531, 129 L.Ed.2d 615, 616.) Three justices, dissenting in part, believed that injunctive restrictions on speech should be subjected to strict scrutiny, and that the injunction was unconstitutional in its entirety. (114 S.Ct. 2534, 2538, 129 L.Ed.2d 620, 624.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 271 [Madsen]; 25 Golden Gate L. Rev. 543 [same]; 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 94 [same]; 24 Pepperdine L. [§ 402] Subsequent Cases.

In Real v. Feminist Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 1249, 114 S.Ct. 2776, 129 L.Ed.2d 888, and Williams v. Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo (1994) 513 U.S. 956, 115 S.Ct. 413, 130 L.Ed.2d 329, the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgments, and remanded Feminist Women's Health Center v. Blythe (1993) 17 C.A.4th 1543, 22 C.R.2d 184 (Blythe I), supra, §399, and Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo v. Williams (1994) 7 C.4th 860, 864, 30 C.R.2d 629, 873 P.2d 1224 (Planned Parenthood I), supra, §400, for consideration in light of Madsen v. Women's Health Center (1994) 512 U.S. 753, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593, supra, §401. In Feminist Women's Health Center v. Blythe (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1641, 1652, 1653, 39 C.R.2d 189 (Blythe II), the court concluded that "application of the standard of review set forth in Madsen does not alter the outcome we reached in Feminist Women's Health Center v. Blythe," and republished its prior opinion with modifications occasioned by the holdings in Madsen.

In Planned Parenthood Shasta-Diablo v. Williams (1995) 10 C.4th 1009, 1012, 43 C.R.2d 88, 898 P.2d 402 (Planned Parenthood II), the court concluded that the injunction upheld in Planned Parenthood I "is equally valid under the new standard set forth in Madsen."

(a) On the threshold issue of content neutrality, the analysis in Planned Parenthood I is entirely consistent with that in Madsen. (10 C.4th 1019.) The target of the injunction was "petitioners' physical tactics, not their anti-abortion message." (10 C.4th 1020.)

(b) Planned Parenthood I and Madsen are also consistent on the nature and purpose of the place restrictions. The facts of the two cases are strikingly similar, although the buffer zone here was approximately 60 feet as compared to 36 feet in Madsen. (10 C.4th 1020.) "Thus, the 2 restrictions were essentially equivalent in size and function, the disparity between 36 and 60 feet--or approximately 8 yards--representing a relatively small difference in degree, attributable solely to the differing widths of the streets in question." (10 C.4th 1021.)

(c) Madsen thus supports the conclusion that the buffer zone here was justified by at least two significant governmental interests: (1) ensuring safety and order in the relatively restricted physical area surrounding the clinic, and (2) protecting unfettered access to and egress from the clinic. (10 C.4th 1021, 1022.)

(d) Finally, the buffer zone burdened no more speech than necessary to accomplish the state's interests, and thus satisfied the "somewhat more stringent" test articulated in Madsen. The physical layout of the clinic was such that one or two pickets could effectively block passage along the sidewalk and impede traffic. The preliminary injunction, which had allowed four picketers to remain on the sidewalk, had failed to protect the state's interests in protecting unimpeded access to the clinic and the well-being of patients. The buffer zone ameliorated the confrontational tactics of petitioners, but afforded them a reasonable vantage point from across the street to communicate their viewpoint. On balance, therefore, the buffer zone burdened no more speech than necessary to achieve the interests at stake. (10 C.4th 1023, 1024.) (See San Jose v. Superior Court (Thompson) (1995) 32 C.A.4th 330, 38 C.R.2d 205, supra, §398 [upholding ordinance limiting residential picketing, as applied to abortion picketers who were not allowed within 300 feet of abortion clinic staff members' homes]; Planned Parenthood Assn. v. Operation Rescue (1996) 50 C.A.4th 290, 301, 57 C.R.2d 736 [15-foot buffer zone in front of clinic did not burden more speech than was necessary to prevent intimidation and permit access, but prohibition against approaching any clinic staff member, patient, or companion once that person has made it clear that she does not wish to be approached was unduly restrictive]; 51 Hastings L. J. 411 [The Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act and The Nuremberg Files Web Site: Is the Site Properly Prohibited or Protected Speech?]; 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1026 [Planned Parenthood II]; 28 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 627 [Planned Parenthood]; 29 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 471 [Free Speech, Abortion Access, and the Problem of Judicial Viewpoint Discrimination].)

In Schenck v. Pro-Choice Network of Western New York (1997) 519 U.S. 357, 117 S.Ct. 855, 137 L.Ed.2d 1, the Court applied Madsen. Held, a 15-foot buffer zone around abortion clinics' entrances, parking lots, and driveways did not burden more speech than necessary, but a 15-foot floating buffer zone around people entering and leaving the clinics was an unconstitutional burden on free speech. (117 S.Ct. 867, 868, 137 L.Ed.2d 21, 23.) A "cease and desist" exception for sidewalk counselors within a fixed buffer zone was a valid limitation based on previous harassment and intimidation of patients. (117 S.Ct. 870, 137 L.Ed.2d 26.) (See 111 Harv. L. Rev. 339 [Schenck]; 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 98 [same]; 50 Stanf. L. Rev. 179 [same].)

In Hill v. Colorado (2000) 530 U.S. 703, 120 S.Ct. 2480, 147 L.Ed.2d 597, the Court applied Madsen and upheld Colorado's eight-foot buffer zone, distinguishing it from the floating buffer zone condemned in Schenck. The Colorado statute regulates speech-related conduct within 100 feet of the entrance to any health care facility. Within that zone, it is unlawful for any person to "knowingly approach" within eight feet of another person, without that person's consent, "for the purpose of passing a leaflet or handbill to, displaying a sign to, or engaging in oral protest, education, or counseling with such other person." (120 S.Ct. 2484, 147 L.Ed.2d 606.)

(a) Content neutrality. The statute is "content neutral." (1) It does not regulate speech; (2) it was not adopted because of any disagreement with the message it conveys; and (3) "the State's interests in protecting access and privacy, and providing the police with clear guidelines, are unrelated to the content of the demonstrators' speech." (120 S.Ct. 2491, 147 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(b) Balancing of rights. The right of every person "to be let alone" and the right of "passage without obstruction" must be balanced with other persons' freedom to communicate. Here, the statute only applies to communications that interfere with these rights rather than those involving willing listeners. (120 S.Ct. 2490, 147 L.Ed.2d 612.)

(c) Statute is narrowly tailored to serve competing interests. The 8-foot zone does not apply to demonstrators with signs who remain in place, and it should not affect the readers' ability to read the signs. Neither does it apply to speakers who remain in place. Unlike the 15-foot zone in Schenck, the 8-foot zone allows the speaker to communicate at a "normal conversational distance." (120 S.Ct. 2495, 147 L.Ed.2d 618, quoting Schenck.) Further, the statute places no limitations on the number, size, or content of the signs, nor on the number of speakers or the noise level. (120 S.Ct. 2495, 147 L.Ed.2d 618.)

Four justices concurred. (120 S.Ct. 2499, 147 L.Ed.2d 623.) Two justices joined in a lengthy dissent (120 S.Ct. 2503, 147 L.Ed.2d 627), reasoning that the statute is content-based, requiring application of the strict scrutiny test (120

4. Right To Travel.

a. Interstate Travel.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 403

[§ 403] Interstate Travel.

Early cases based the right of interstate travel on the Commerce Clause and the privileges and immunities of national citizenship. (See Edwards v. California (1941) 314 U.S. 160, 62 S.Ct. 164, 86 L.Ed. 119, infra, §§608, 1298.) Later cases invoked it in support of the right of indigents to relocate to obtain better welfare benefits, free from local legislative residence requirements (see Shapiro v. Thompson (1969) 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 1329, 22 L.Ed.2d 600, 612, infra, §735), and to strike down local voting residence requirements (see supra, §245). (See 1 Hastings Const. L. Q. 153 [environmental rights and free travel rights]; 26 Hastings L. J. 849 [right to travel and exclusionary zoning]; 9 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 192 [same]; 41 Stanf. L. Rev. 1557 [State Parochialism, the Right to Travel, and the Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV]; 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1129 [strict scrutiny of right to travel]; 5 U.S.F. L. Rev. 330 [anti-hitchhiking laws].)

In Jones v. Helms (1981) 452 U.S. 412, 101 S.Ct. 2434, 69 L.Ed.2d 118, a Georgia statute made abandonment of a dependent child a misdemeanor, but raised the offense to a felony if a parent committed the offense within the state and then left the state. Held, the statute was valid. Unlike the situation in Edwards v. California, supra, the defendant parent had committed a crime in Georgia that qualified his right thereafter freely to travel interstate. "Thus, although a simple penalty for leaving a State is plainly impermissible, if departure aggravates the consequences of conduct that is otherwise punishable, the state may treat the entire sequence of events, from the initial offense to departure from the State, as more serious than its separate components." (101 S.Ct. 2441, 69 L.Ed.2d 127.) And the statute did not deny equal protection, for it applied equally to all parents residing in Georgia. (101 S.Ct. 2442, 69 L.Ed.2d 128.)

Attorney General of New York v. Soto-Lopez (1986) 476 U.S. 898, 106 S.Ct. 2317, 90 L.Ed.2d 899, held that a New York State's civil service veterans' preference, granted only to those veterans who were residents of the state when they entered military service, was unconstitutional. The lead opinion of four justices attempts to clarify the constitutional foundation of the right to travel (or "migrate").

(a) "The textual source of the constitutional right to travel, or, more precisely, the right of free interstate migration, ... has been variously assigned to the Privileges and Immunities Clause of Art. IV, ... and to the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. ... The right has also been inferred from the federal structure of government adopted by our Constitution. ... However, in light of the unquestioned historic acceptance of the principle of free interstate migration, and of the important role that principle has played in transforming many States into a single Nation, we have not felt impelled to locate this right definitely in any particular constitutional provision." (106 S.Ct. 2320, 90 L.Ed.2d 905.)

(b) "A state law implicates the right to travel when it actually deters such travel, ... when impeding travel is its primary objective, ... or when it uses 'any classification which serves to penalize the exercise of that right.' ... Our right to migrate cases have principally involved the latter, indirect manner of burdening the right. More particularly, our recent cases have dealt with state laws that, by classifying residents according to the time they established residence, resulted in the unequal distribution of rights and benefits among otherwise qualified bona fide residents." (106 S.Ct. 2321, 90 L.Ed.2d 905, 906.)

(c) "Because the creation of different classes of residents raises equal protection concerns, we have also relied upon the Equal Protection Clause in these cases. ... Thus, in several cases, we asked expressly whether the distinction drawn by the State between older and newer residents burdens the right to migrate. Where we found such a burden, we required the State to come forward with a compelling justification." (106 S.Ct. 2321, 90 L.Ed.2d 906.)

(d) The New York limitation of civil service employment preference effectively penalizes otherwise qualified resident veterans, and the state "has not met its heavy burden of proving that it has selected a means of pursuing a compelling state interest which does not impinge unnecessarily on constitutionally protected interests." Hence, it violates the constitutionally protected rights to migrate and to equal protection of the law. (106 S.Ct. 2325, 90 L.Ed.2d 911.)

Three justices dissented. (106 S.Ct. 2328, 2329, 90 L.Ed.2d 914, 915.)

A number of cases have rejected right-to-travel claims (See Tobe v. Santa Ana (1995) 9 C.4th 1069, 1096, 1102, 1104, 40 C.R.2d 402, 892 P.2d 1145, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §62 [ordinance prohibiting camping and storage of personal property in public areas does not unconstitutionally restrict right of homeless to travel]; Tolces v. Trask (1999) 76 C.A.4th 285, 289, 90 C.R.2d 294 [suspending driver's license for nonpayment of child support under Welf.C. 11350.6 does not infringe on right to travel; suspension only limits mode of transportation]; Niedle v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (2001) 87 C.A.4th 283, 288, 104 C.R.2d 534 [application of statute providing that employer is not liable for out-of-state vocational rehabilitation services unless they are more cost-effective than in-state services, to deny benefits to former resident for rehabilitation services that were more expensive in new home state than in California did not impede her right to travel; right does not obligate state to continue providing same benefits to former resident who has moved to another state]; 77 Cal. L. Rev. 595 [discussing intrastate travel as included in right to travel and arguing that "antihomeless" ordinances prohibiting sleeping in outdoor public areas are unconstitutional].)

B. Scope of Protection.

4. Right To Travel.

b. International Travel.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 404

[§ 404] International Travel.

(1) In General. "The right to travel is a part of the 'liberty' of which the citizen cannot be deprived without the due process of law of the Fifth Amendment." (Kent v. Dulles (1958) 357 U.S. 116, 78 S.Ct. 1113, 1118, 2 L.Ed.2d 1204, 1210; see 95 Harv. L. Rev. 201; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 839.) However, the foregoing case, dealing with the asserted discretion of the Secretary of State to deny passports to American Communists, found no clear congressional intent to confer this broad discretion and therefore did not reach the constitutional issue.

The right was more fully explored in later cases. In Aptheker v. Secretary of State (1964) 378 U.S. 500, 84 S.Ct. 1659, 12 L.Ed.2d 992, the challenge was to a provision of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950, providing that when a Communist organization is registered, or ordered to register by final order of the board, it is unlawful for any member of the organization, with knowledge or notice of registration or the order, to apply for or use a passport. In October, 1961, the board made its order directing the Communist Party of the United States to register. Before issuance of the order, appellants, Elizabeth Flynn, Chairman of the Party, and Herbert Aptheker, editor of its organ "Political Affairs," both native-born citizens and residents, held valid passports. The Passport Office revoked them on advice of the State Department, and appellants sued for declaratory and injunctive relief in the district court. Held, the provision was unconstitutional.

(a) The right to travel is guaranteed by the Due Process Clause. (84 S.Ct. 1663, 12 L.Ed.2d 997.) And its unwarranted restriction cannot be justified on the theory that the restricted person may give up his or her membership in the organization, for freedom of association is itself a constitutional right. (84 S.Ct. 1664, 12 L.Ed.2d 998.)

(b) Although the Congressional purpose--protection of national security--is proper, restrictions that stifle personal liberties cannot be imposed where the purpose may be achieved by less drastic means. (84 S.Ct. 1665, 12 L.Ed.2d 999.)

(c) The restrictions imposed by §6 of the Act were too broad. They prohibited travel anywhere in the world outside the Western Hemisphere; they applied to a person regardless of lack of knowledge of the Communist nature of an organization and irrespective of his or her degree of activity and commitment to its aims; and they applied to a person regardless of the purpose of the travel. (84 S.Ct. 1666, 12 L.Ed.2d 1000.)

Hence, §6 was unconstitutional "on its face." "The section, judged by its plain import and by the substantive evil which Congress sought to control, sweeps too widely and too indiscriminately across the liberty guaranteed in the Fifth Amendment. The prohibition against travel is supported only by a tenuous relationship between the bare fact of organizational membership and the activity Congress sought to proscribe. The broad and enveloping prohibition indiscriminately excludes plainly relevant considerations such as the individual's knowledge, activity, commitment, and purposes in and places for travel. The section therefore is patently not a regulation 'narrowly drawn to prevent the supposed evil,' ... yet here, as elsewhere, precision must be the touchstone of legislation so affecting basic freedoms." (84 S.Ct. 1668, 12 L.Ed.2d 1002.)

(2) Restrictions on Travel to Particular Country. A different result was reached in Zemel v. Rusk (1965) 381 U.S. 1, 85 S.Ct. 1271, 14 L.Ed.2d 179, which was decided before the 1978 addition to the Passport Act (22 U.S.C., §211a), expressly providing for travel restrictions under specified conditions. The Act provides that the Secretary of State may grant and issue passports under rules prescribed by the President. Before 1961, no passport was required for Western Hemisphere travel. When we broke diplomatic relations with Cuba, the Department of State prohibited travel there except under passports specifically endorsed as in the best interest of the United States. Here, appellant sought validation of his passport for the purpose of satisfying his curiosity about Cuban affairs, and brought this action for declaratory relief and injunction when refused. Held, the statute authorized this refusal, and is constitutional.

(a) Kent v. Dulles, supra, is distinguishable. It held that a passport could not be denied because of the political beliefs or associations of the applicant. Here, the denial was not because of anything connected with appellant but because of foreign policy considerations affecting all citizens. (85 S.Ct. 1279, 14 L.Ed.2d 188.)

(b) The State Department has concluded that a major Cuban goal is exportation of its Communist revolution to the rest of Latin America, and the United States and other OAS countries have taken measures to discourage travel, which is an important element in spreading of subversion. Also, the duty of the President to protect American citizens unlawfully arrested abroad must be considered; the conduct of Cuba justifies the fear of involving this nation in dangerous international incidents. (85 S.Ct. 1280, 14 L.Ed.2d 189.)

(c) The argument that the refusal infringes on the First Amendment by interfering with the flow of information is untenable. The Secretary's refusal is an inhibition of action, and cannot be distorted into an inhibition of information. "The right to speak and publish does not carry with it the unrestrained right to gather information." (85 S.Ct. 1281, 14 L.Ed.2d 190.)

Three dissenting justices in separate opinions respectively challenged the delegation of this legislative power to the executive, objected to the indiscriminate restrictions, and disputed the statutory authorization of the executive ruling. (85 S.Ct. 1282 et seq., 14 L.Ed.2d 192 et seq.) (See United States v. Laub (1967) 385 U.S. 475, 87 S.Ct. 574, 17 L.Ed.2d 526; Regan v. Wald (1984) 468 U.S. 222, 104 S.Ct. 3026, 3039, 82 L.Ed.2d 171, 187 [upholding treasury regulation prohibiting travel-related economic transactions with Cuba]; 79 Harv. L. Rev. 123 [Zemel]; 19 Stanf. L. Rev. 1369 [Laub]; 8 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 401 [Area Restrictions and the Right to Travel Abroad]; 13 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 470 [Zemel].)

(3) Restrictions on Collection of Benefits While Abroad. Califano v. Aznavorian (1978) 439 U.S. 170, 99 S.Ct. 471, 58 L.Ed.2d 435, upheld the constitutionality of federal Supplementary Security Income legislation to aid the needy aged, blind, and disabled. The challenge was to a provision that benefits are not to be paid for any month that the recipient spends entirely outside the United States. Held: (a) Freedom of interstate travel is virtually unqualified; freedom to travel abroad, though recognized, is no more than an aspect of the "liberty" protected by the Due Process Clause. (99 S.Ct. 475, 58 L.Ed.2d 441.) Hence, unless the limitation imposed is wholly irrational, it is constitutional despite its incidental effect on international travel. (99 S.Ct. 475, 58 L.Ed.2d 442.) (b) Unlike the limitations in Kent, Aptheker, and Zemel, supra, the challenged legislation merely withdraws a governmental benefit during and shortly after an extended absence from this country. Congress may have decided to limit payments to those who need them in the United States, or may have wanted to increase the likelihood that the money would be spent here. These objectives furnish a rational basis for the provision. (99 S.Ct. 475, 476, 58 L.Ed.2d 442, 443.)

(4) National Security and Foreign Policy Considerations. In Haig v. Agee (1981) 453 U.S. 280, 101 S.Ct. 2766, 69 L.Ed.2d 640, Philip Agee, an American citizen formerly employed by the Central Intelligence Agency, began a campaign in European countries to expose CIA officers and agents and drive them out of the countries in which they were operating. He revealed identities of undercover agents and other classified information in violation of his express contract, prejudicing the ability of the United States to obtain intelligence. While he was residing in West Germany, the Secretary of State revoked his passport. Held, this action was within the statutory authority of the Secretary of State and was not violative of Agee's constitutional rights.

(a) "Revocation of a passport undeniably curtails travel, but the freedom to travel abroad with a 'letter of introduction' in the form of a passport issued by the sovereign is subordinate to national security and foreign policy considerations; as such it is subject to reasonable governmental regulation. The Court has made it plain that the freedom to travel outside the United States must be distinguished from the right to travel within the United States." (101 S.Ct. 2781, 69 L.Ed.2d 661.)

(b) Agee's acts were not within the First Amendment protections. They jeopardized the national security and endangered the interests of other countries, creating serious problems for American foreign relations and foreign policy. Restricting his foreign travel was the only avenue open to the government to limit those activities. (101 S.Ct. 2782, 69 L.Ed.2d 663.) Kent, supra, involving denials of passports solely on the basis of political belief, is distinguishable. (101 S.Ct. 2780, 69 L.Ed.2d 660.) (See 10 Hastings Const. L. Q. 187 [Haig]; 56 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1321 [same].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

1. General Principles and Tests.

a. Rights Are Not Absolute.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 405

[§ 405] Rights Are Not Absolute.

The rights of free speech, press, and assembly are not absolute, and have been traditionally regulated in certain well defined fields. (See infra, §412 et seq.) As the court said in Konigsberg v. State Bar (1961) 366 U.S. 36, 81 S.Ct. 997, 1006, 6 L.Ed.2d 105, 116, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §391:

"At the outset we reject the view that freedom of speech and association ... as protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments, are 'absolutes.' ... Throughout its history this Court has consistently recognized at least two ways in which constitutionally protected freedom of speech is narrower than an unlimited license to talk. On the one hand certain forms of speech, or speech in certain contexts, have been considered outside the scope of constitutional protection. ... On the other hand, general regulatory statutes, not intended to control the content of speech but incidentally limiting its unfettered exercise, have not been regarded as the type of law the First or Fourteenth Amendments forbade Congress or the States to pass, when they have been found justified by subordinating valid governmental interests, a prerequisite to constitutionality which has necessarily involved a weighing of the governmental interest involved." (See 4 Rotunda, §20.7; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 755 [Supreme Court's balancing test]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1189, 1284 [security classifications and emergency powers]; 33 Golden Gate L. Rev. 1 [monetary damages for true threats by antiabortion activists]; 23 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 763 [balancing process]; 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 979 [Harm, Liberty, and Free Speech]; 52 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 231 [evaluating true threats under First Amendment]; 30 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 405 [National Security Controls on the Dissemination of Privately Generated Scientific Information]; 32 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 904 [acts of civil disobedience as protected expression].)

In considering the validity of a particular regulation, three important general principles have been applied:

(1) Preferred position of freedoms. In balancing competing public and private interests, First Amendment interests must be given preference. (See infra, §406.)

(2) Clear and present danger test. To justify a restriction of First Amendment rights, there must be a clear and present danger of serious public harm. (See infra, §407.)

(3) Uncertainty and overbreadth. Any restriction of First Amendment rights must be clear and confined to an area of legitimate public concern. (See infra, §408.)

b. Preferred Position of Freedoms.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 406

[§ 406] Preferred Position of Freedoms.

In balancing the various public and private interests involved, the freedoms of the First Amendment (as incorporated into the Fourteenth) must be given a preferred position. (See Marsh v. Alabama (1946) 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 280, 90 L.Ed. 265, 270, supra, §314; Saia v. New York (1948) 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 1151, 92 L.Ed. 1574, 1578, infra, §464; Kovacs v. Cooper (1949) 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 454, 93 L.Ed. 513, 523, infra, §464; New York Times Co. v. United States (1971) 403 U.S. 713, 91 S.Ct. 2140, 29 L.Ed.2d 822, supra, §363; *Los Angeles Teachers Union, Local 1021, Amer. Federation of Teachers v. This means that, "even though the governmental purpose be legitimate and substantial, that purpose cannot be pursued by means that broadly stifle fundamental personal liberties when the end can be more narrowly achieved." (Shelton v. Tucker (1960) 364 U.S. 479, 81 S.Ct. 247, 252, 5 L.Ed.2d 231, 237, supra, §379.)

C. Limitations on the Rights. 1. General Principles and Tests. c. Clear and Present Danger Test.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 407

[§ 407] Clear and Present Danger Test.

In Schenck v. United States (1919) 249 U.S. 47, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470, 473, an Espionage Act case, the court laid down the rule that, to justify deprivation of the constitutional right, it must appear that the utterances involve "a clear and present danger" of serious substantive evils. Although this view was not always followed at first, later cases have established it as a major test of statutory regulation in this field.

In Bridges v. California (1941) 314 U.S. 252, 62 S.Ct. 190, 194, 86 L.Ed. 192, 203, it was said that "the substantive evil must be extremely serious and the degree of imminence extremely high before utterances can be punished."

In Thomas v. Collins (1945) 323 U.S. 516, 65 S.Ct. 315, 322, 89 L.Ed. 430, 440, the court was even more emphatic, declaring that the restriction "must be justified by clear public interest, threatened not doubtfully or remotely, but by clear and present danger. ... Only the gravest abuses, endangering paramount interests, give occasion for permissible limitation."

In Pennekamp v. Florida (1946) 328 U.S. 331, 66 S.Ct. 1029, 90 L.Ed. 1295, infra, §412, a contempt case, the Court conceded that as to what constitutes a clear and present danger to the fair administration of justice, "no definition could give an answer" (66 S.Ct. 1038, 90 L.Ed. 1304), and explained its application of the test as follows: "Whether the threat to the impartial and orderly administration of justice must be clear and present or a grave and immediate danger, a real and substantial threat, one which is close and direct or one which disturbs the court's sense of fairness depends upon a choice of words. Under any one of the phrases, reviewing courts are brought in cases of this type to appraise the comment on a balance between the desirability of free discussion and the necessity for fair adjudication, free from interruption of its processes." (66 S.Ct. 1032, 90 L.Ed. 1298.)

In Sun Co. of San Bernardino v. Superior Court (1973) 29 C.A.3d 815, 105 C.R. 873, infra, §415, the court took note of criticisms of the test as giving either too much or too little protection to free speech, and approved the following statement of a commentator: "[T]he clear-and-present danger test is an oversimplified judgment unless it takes account also of a number of other factors: the relative seriousness of the danger in comparison with the value of the occasion for speech or political activity; the availability of more moderate controls than those which the state has imposed; and perhaps the specific intent with which the speech or activity is launched." (29 C.A.3d 827.)

The clear and present danger test has been discussed in many other cases. (See West Virginia State Bd. of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 1186, 87 L.Ed. 1628, 1638, infra, §536; Craig v. Harney (1947) 331 U.S. 367, 67 S.Ct. 1249, 91 L.Ed. 1546, infra, §412; Terminiello v. Chicago (1949) 337 U.S. 1, 69 S.Ct. 894, 93 L.Ed. 1131, infra, §458; Dennis v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 494, 71 S.Ct. 857, 864, 95 L.Ed. 1137, 1151, infra, §471; Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 542, 171 P.2d 885, supra, §394; Katzev v. Los Angeles (1959) 52 C.2d 360, 366, 341 P.2d 310, supra, §367; People v. American Auto Ins. Co. (1955) 132 C.A.2d 317, 322, 282 P.2d 559, infra, §412.)

Commentary on the clear and present danger test has been extensive. (See 4 Rotunda, §20.12 et seq.; 2 Tribe, §12-9 et seq.; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 1159 [Advocacy of Unlawful Conduct and the First Amendment: In Defense of Clear and Present Danger]; 32 *McGeorge L. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 408

[§ 408] In General.

(1) Fair Notice and Improper Application of Statute. The "void for vagueness" rule establishes a test of certainty in the statutory criteria of guilt under a criminal statute (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §40; supra, §134), which is particularly important in regulations affecting First Amendment freedoms. "A failure of a statute limiting freedom of expression to give fair notice of what acts will be punished and such a statute's inclusion of prohibitions against expressions, protected by the principles of the First Amendment, violates an accused's rights under procedural due process and freedom of speech or press." (Winters v. New York (1948) 333 U.S. 507, 68 S.Ct. 665, 667, 92 L.Ed. 840, 846; see Papachristou v. Jacksonville (1972) 405 U.S. 156, 92 S.Ct. 839, 843, 31 L.Ed.2d 110, 115 [vagrancy ordinance].)

The uncertainty challenge is usually coupled with the objection of overbreadth, i.e., that the statute punishes constitutionally protected conduct as well as acts that may validly be prohibited. A statute found to be substantially overbroad is subject to facial invalidation. (See Houston v. Hill (1987) 482 U.S. 451, 107 S.Ct. 2502, 2508, 96 L.Ed.2d 398, 408; 4 Rotunda, §§20.8, 20.9; 2 Tribe, §12-27 et seq.; on standing to raise overbreadth, see supra, §79.)

Thus, in N.A.A.C.P. v. Button (1963) 371 U.S. 415, 83 S.Ct. 328, 9 L.Ed.2d 405, supra, §383, a Virginia statute making the solicitation of civil rights cases unlawful was held fatally uncertain. As construed by the state court it would have prohibited any arrangement by which prospective litigants were advised to seek other assistance of particular attorneys, so that a person who advised another that his or her legal rights had been infringed and referred that person to an attorney would be guilty of a crime. The mere existence of this kind of statute could eliminate all legal activity on behalf of civil rights. (83 S.Ct. 338, 340, 9 L.Ed.2d 417, 418.) Nor did it make any difference that the statute was challenged in an action for an injunction against its enforcement rather than a criminal prosecution for its violation. "The objectionable quality of vagueness and overbreadth does not depend upon absence of fair notice to a criminally accused or upon unchanneled delegation of legislative powers, but upon the danger of tolerating, in the area of First Amendment freedoms, the existence of a penal statute susceptible of sweeping and improper application." (83 S.Ct. 338, 9 L.Ed.2d 418.)

(2) Gang Activity. Ordinances limiting the associational rights of gang members have been challenged on grounds of overbreadth. (See Chicago v. Morales (1999) 527 U.S. 41, 119 S.Ct. 1849, 1857, 144 L.Ed.2d 67, 76 [declining to apply overbreadth doctrine to anti-loitering law because it did not have sufficiently substantial impact on conduct protected by First Amendment]; People v. Acuna (1997) 14 C.4th 1090, 1113, 60 C.R.2d 277, 929 P.2d 596, 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §73 [examining overbreadth and vagueness standards as applied to preliminary injunction prohibiting association by gang members in defined area]; In re Englebrecht (1998) 67 C.A.4th 486, 495, 498, 79 C.R.2d 89 [following Acuna on validity of nonassociation provision of preliminary injunction; however, restriction on gang members' possession of pagers and beepers in target area was overbroad]; People v. Englebrecht (2001) 88 C.A.4th 1236, 1261, 106 C.R.2d 738 [following Acuna; injunction limiting associational rights, dress, and hand signals of gang members in specific geographic area was not overly broad]; Vo v. Garden Grove (2004) 115 C.A.4th 425, 439, 444, 9 C.R.3d 257 [ordinance placing daytime curfew on minors' use of Internet at CyberCafes during school hours, requiring CyberCafes to have adult employee on premises at all times and uniformed security guard during certain hours, and requiring video surveillance, is content neutral time, manner, and place restriction narrowly tailored to serve significant government interest in curbing escalating violence and gang activity in and around CyberCafes]; 72 A.L.R.5th 1 [loitering statutes and ordinances].)

(1) Fair Notice and Improper Application of Statute. See 5 Rotunda 4th, §§20.8, 20.9. (2) Gang Activity. See People v. Colonia Chiques (2007) 156 C.A.4th 31, 46, 67 C.R.3d 70 [curfew provision of gang injunction that prohibited "being outside" during curfew hours without defining "outside," and that provided exception for "legitimate meeting or entertainment activity" without defining those terms, was unconstitutionally vague]; 35 Hastings Const. L. Q. 287 [gang injunctions: selective enforcement as way to defeat discrimination].

2. Invalid Regulations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 409

[§ 409] Invalid Regulations.

In Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction of Orange County, Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 278, 82 S.Ct. 275, 7 L.Ed.2d 285, a Florida statute required every public employee to execute a written oath that he or she had never lent his or her "aid, support, advice, counsel or influence to the Communist Party." Failure to subscribe was subject to the penalty of immediate discharge. Held, the statute was void. The court, illustrating its "extraordinary ambiguity," observed that it could conceivably be applied to one who voted for a candidate endorsed by the party, to a lawyer who represented the party or its members, or to a journalist who defended their constitutional rights. (82 S.Ct. 280, 7 L.Ed.2d 291.)

The Cramp case was followed in Baggett v. Bullitt (1964) 377 U.S. 360, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 12 L.Ed.2d 377, involving a Washington state oath for teachers. The teacher was required to swear that he was not a "subversive person" and did not advise or teach another to commit or aid in revolution, etc. Holding the requirement void for vagueness, the court said: "Persons required to swear they understand this oath may quite reasonably conclude that any person who aids the Communist Party or teaches or advises known members of the Party is a subversive person because such teaching or advice may now or at some future date aid the activities of the Party." (84 S.Ct. 1320, 12 L.Ed.2d 383.) The court found further uncertainty as to whether the statute covered support for Communist candidates for office, legal representation of a Communist, etc. (84 S.Ct. 1320, 12 L.Ed.2d 383.)

The dissenters thought that the oath was narrower than that condemned in the Cramp case, and that Gerende v. Board of Supervisors of Elections of Baltimore City (1951) 341 U.S. 56, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745, infra, §484, was controlling. "It is unfortunate that Gerende is overruled so quickly." (84 S.Ct. 1328, 12 L.Ed.2d 391.) "Where does this leave the constitutionality of the Smith Act?" (84 S.Ct. 1329, 12 L.Ed.2d 392.)

In Coates v. Cincinnati (1971) 402 U.S. 611, 91 S.Ct. 1686, 29 L.Ed.2d 214, a city ordinance made it a criminal offense for "three or more persons to assemble ... on any of the sidewalks ... and there conduct themselves in a manner annoying to persons passing by." Held, it was void on its face. (a) It was unconstitutionally vague, for it specified no standard of conduct and did not indicate what activities were regulated. (91 S.Ct. 1688, 29 L.Ed.2d 217.) (b) It was unconstitutionally broad in punishing protected conduct, i.e., free assembly and association; these cannot be prohibited merely because they may be annoying to some. (91 S.Ct. 1689, 29 L.Ed.2d 218.)

In People v. Tisbert (1992) 11 C.A.4th Supp. 1, 14 C.R.2d 128, a Los Angeles county ordinance regulated solicitation on county property. Defendant set up a table near the entrance to a courthouse to collect signatures for proposed ballot initiatives. He was charged with a misdemeanor, and appealed from his conviction. Held, reversed. The ordinance was not narrowly tailored to protect the county's interests, but instead authorized the county to determine which types of solicitation would be allowed, based on the specific content of the solicitation. (11 C.A.4th Supp. 4.) The court relied mainly on People v. Fogelson (1978) 21 C.3d 158, 145 C.R. 542, 577 P.2d 677, supra, §79, and Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 559, 85 S.Ct. 476, 13 L.Ed.2d 487, infra, §462, and the opinion concludes with this observation: "[T]he most egregious portion of the ordinance is the provision which allows solicitation for 'other causes deemed meritorious by the board of supervisors.' ... The ordinance contains no specific limitations or standards to safeguard against the unfettered discretion the county could exercise in determining which causes are 'unmeritorious.' " (11 C.A.4th 7.)

Many other cases invoke one or both of the two tests in holding regulations invalid. (See Gooding v. Wilson (1972) 405 U.S. 518, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 31 L.Ed.2d 408, infra, §458 ["opprobrious words or abusive language tending to cause a breach of peace"; overbroad]; Hynes v. Mayor & Council of Borough of Oradell (1976) 425 U.S. 610, 96 S.Ct. 1755, 1761, 48 L.Ed.2d 243, 253 [ordinance requiring advance notice to police department by any person desiring to engage in door to door solicitation for charitable cause or political campaign; vague]; Board of Airport Commrs. of Los Angeles v. Jews for Jesus (1987) 482 U.S. 569, 107 S.Ct. 2568, 96 L.Ed.2d 500 [airport board resolution banning "First Amendment activities" in central terminal area; overbroad]; In re Porterfield (1946) 28 C.2d 91, 110, 168 P.2d 706 [ordinance requiring license for solicitation of union memberships; definite standards lacking]; Katzev v. Los Angeles (1959) 52 C.2d 360, 341 P.2d 310, supra, §367 [ordinance prohibiting sale of "crime comic book" failed to define crime and standards of guilt with certainty]; Van Nuys Publishing Co. v. Thousand Oaks (1971) 5 C.3d 817, 97 C.R. 777, 489 P.2d 809, supra, §350 [ordinance prohibiting deposit of literature on property of another without prior consent; overbroad]; Young v. Municipal Court (1971) 16 C.A.3d 766, 769, 94 C.R. 331, supra, §324 [blanket prohibition of all peddling on public streets; overbroad]; Ketchens v. Reiner (1987) 194 C.A.3d 470, 475, 477, 239 C.R. 549 [Education Code provisions on insulting and abusing teacher; denial of preliminary injunction reversed on ground that plaintiffs would probably prevail in their challenge]; Gatto v. Sonoma (2002) 98 C.A.4th 744, 774, 120 C.R.2d 550 [dress code for entry into county fair that prohibited wearing apparel "intended to provoke, offend, or intimidate others ... including offensive slogans, insignia or 'gang colors' " is unconstitutionally vague and overbroad in failing to provide ascertainable standards and in failing to specify types of apparel that justify restriction].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See ARP Pharmacy Services v. Gallagher Bassett Services (2006) 138 C.A.4th 1307, 1315, 1320, 42 C.R.3d 256 [C.C. 2527, which requires drug claim processors to obtain and transmit drug processing cost reports to their clients, is unconstitutional content-based regulation of compelled speech; statute did not satisfy strict scrutiny required for regulation of speech because it was not narrowly tailored to accomplish compelling state interest of encouraging insurers to pay pharmacists fair rate for drug-dispensing services, and it did not have least restrictive impact on processors' right to free speech].
